PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table in both official languages the Government's response to petitions Nos. 332-2953, 332-2954, 332-2956 to 332-2958 inclusive, 332-2960 to 332-2963 inclusive and 332-2965.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-55

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour this morning, perhaps quite appropriately since we are debating Bill C-55 at report stage, to present a number of petitions which come basically from across the country. I have petitions from London, Ontario, and Medicine Hat, Alberta. I have another one from the City of North York. The next are from the Vancouver and Edmonton areas. I have a petition signed by over 100 people from the City of Victoria, British Columbia, and the last petition originates from my own riding of York West.

Essentially, the petitioners call upon the Government to delete the prescreening stage of Bill C-55, together with the deletion of the safe third country provision. The petitioners feel that these two mechanisms should be deleted, and they are petitioning for a stronger mechanism for appeal so that Bill C-55 will be in line with the Canadian law and justice system. In fairness to the refugees who are deserving of our protection, the petitioners humbly pray that this House of Commons delete the pre-screening, safe third country provisions and beef up the appeal system.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by over 100 residents of Canada who oppose Bill C-55. They urge Parliament and the Government to withdraw it on the grounds that it will in fact keep away or send away many real refugees because of the defects in it.

Although the petition was written prior to the Bill being presented, it is still relevant after the amendment process. The petitioners point out the error of the safe third country concept and the lack of an appeal process. They state that there was a better system proposed two years ago by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

They therefore request withdrawal of the Bill and replacement of it by a Bill that would provide fair, quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such a hearing and the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 with regard to a matter which is before the House of Commons today. The petitioners are from eastern Canada, western Canada and central Canada.

They remind the House of Commons that the standing committee of Parliament dealing with immigration has proposed a new procedure for refugees. They suggest that if it is adopted it would fairly and effectively solve the problems of back-logs and the unsubstantiated claims. They indicate that it has the support of a variety of groups, including the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress and a whole set of other groups, as well as individuals who are knowledgeable on the matter of refugees.

Therefore they are asking the House of Commons to withdraw Bill C-55 from discussion and substitute it with legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board that is independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada and, of course, the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

DND MODERN DEFLATOR

Question No. 177—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Has the Department of National Defence kept a DND model deflator for several years for use in computing real increases or decreases in defence spending and, if so, for each of the years 1970-71 to date, what percentage did the deflator show?

2. Did the departmental estimates switch from the DND deflator rate to the GNE deflator rate and, if so, in what year?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence):

1. Yes. Percentage increases in brackets indicate years of negative real growth.

POINT OF ORDER

PETITIONS—ALLEGED MISREPRESENTATION BY MEMBERS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have raised a similar point of order on numerous occasions when members of the Opposition in spurious attempts to whip up some enthusiasm for their position table petitions that are incorrectly addressed. I refer in particular to one that has just been tabled by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) who said in his remarks that there were over 100 signatures on a petition from Victoria. In fact, there are only 27 names on the petition.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. McKinnon: I might also ask about the peculiarity of a petition dated August 18 not being tabled until over one month later. That certainly does not seem to be urgent action on the part of the Member to look after the interests of some constituents of mine.

I most particularly wish that these Members would quit exaggerating the number of names on petitions. It is misleading to the House, if anyone were to believe them.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I have received over 100 petitions, and a number of them came from the riding of the hon. gentleman. Specifically, there is one petition from Victoria that has over 100 signatures on it. The hon. gentleman may be right when he says that the petition tabled this morning has only 27 signatures. However, there is one petition that I will table in the House that shows clearly that there are over 100 signatures on it of people from the riding of the hon. gentleman.

The reason I tabled the petition today is that it is more appropriate to table it now rather than in the month of August when we were discussing Bill C-84. I thought it more appropriate to table the petition when the House is deliberating on Bill C-55. In August, Bill C-55 was still at committee stage and we did not have an opportunity to deliberate on it in the House. I thought it would be appropriate for the aspirations of his constituents in terms of their sentiments and wishes that the petition be tabled when the attention of the House was specifically and squarely on Bill C-55.

I believe that I have not done a disservice to the riding of the hon. gentleman. What I did is perhaps something that he has not done, that is, bring to the floor of the House of Commons the sentiments and concerns that are very real for the constituents of Victoria. I make no apology for presenting the petition this morning.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) has made a very good point. I would like to draw the attention of my friend, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) to the fact that a petition is presented to the House and the appropriate Ministry is required under Standing Order 106(8) to respond to every petition referred to it within 45 days.

Surely, if we have written the rules as we have to require that the Government and the Ministry involved prepare a response and respond to the petitioners, that has nothing to do with when the House debates a particular law. It is a petitioner, a citizen of Canada, who has decided to sign a petition and to ask the Government for its reasoning with respect to certain matters. The Standing Orders require the Government to respond, which we have done.

I submit that it is an abuse of the process to infer that there are hundreds of names when there are not, and to suggest that there is any relationship between the petition and the debating of a certain law. That argument does not follow. If the reason for a petition is to beg the Government not to proceed with something, then surely that should take place in advance of discussing a particular Bill in the House. I think, with respect to my colleague's argument, that it does not hold water on that basis.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I rise again on the same point of order. I wish to apologize to the House if I in any way misled it when I said that there were something in the order of 27 names of people from Victoria on the petition. Only two of them have their addresses down as Victoria. I do not think that accurately represents those petitioners. If the Hon. Member is not going to take the time to read petitions and to see from where they come and learn to differentiate between Vancouver and Victoria, then he ought to ask someone else to table the petition on his behalf.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I understand the embarrassment of the Member of Parliament for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) in not bringing some of those aspirations to the floor. I appreciate and know what the Hon. Member is feeling. I would ask him to look at those seven petitions, count up the number of petitioners from his constituency, together with those that I will be presenting this week. We will then see who is correct and what the numbers total. Perhaps the Hon. Member will have some meetings in his constituency office when he returns this weekend.

With respect to the arguments of the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis), he is quite correct when he states that the Government has 45 days to respond. That does not mean that the Government has to take 45 days; it has up to 45 days to respond.

However, if the Government was responsive and wished to react genuinely to some of the concerns and aspirations that we are tabling through the petitions of Canadians, obviously it would be appropriate for those responses to be tabled during the parliamentary debate at report stage on Bill C-55. We have heard from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Friesen), and the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner). If they are in the Chamber and look at the hundreds of people who have signed petitions, then I do not think it would be very responsible for the Minister of State to take the full 45 days.

Certainly, put together—an emotional debate during report stage and third reading, complemented with the aspirations of the petitioners—there is no reason why the Government would want to take 45 days. Obviously the Government must look at the petitions and say, "Look, Mr. Minister, there seems to be some widely-held concerns of Canadians from Victoria to Newfoundland".

Presenting petitions at the same time that we are debating is the fruition of democracy at work. If the Government is guided by a spirit of democracy then it would take those petitions very seriously, make the necessary changes in the legislation, and then we would have participatory democracy rather than ramming and jamming something through a committee on Bill C-84.

The organizations mentioned by the Hon. Member for Victoria had no possible chance of participating in Ottawa. That is why today the Senate is holding hearings. Some of the regional groups from Victoria and eastern Canada will now be able to attend at committee and participate rather than having a committee hearing witnesses from Toronto, Ottawa, and Montreal. Canada is much larger than that. We are giving that opportunity in the Senate to the organizations from Victoria.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) has a helpful suggestion. Perhaps Mr. Speaker should rule that petitions be submitted only at the time the subject of those petitions is being debated in the House, and at no other time. That may help us.

Mr. Gauthier: Tell that to the petitioners.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair can comment that there are times when helpful suggestions are given that may have another purpose.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I was not planning to enter this interchange, but the latest interjection by the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) concerned me. There is a long list of ways that the present Government has muzzled Parliament. There is a long list of ways the Government has not enabled the people of Canada to be heard where it has cut off debate prematurely. I am concerned with the suggestion of the Hon. Member that we now muzzle petitioners. Canadians have the right to present their views before Parliament and before the Government.

I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that you do not give any consideration to the suggestion by the Hon. Member for Surrey—

White Rock—North Delta when he suggests that we do not allow Canadians to petition the House of Commons. That is a most inappropriate suggestion which has no place in a free democratic society.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has heard the interventions of all Hon. Members. This is not the first time that this matter has been raised. Briefly, the issue is, is it appropriate for a Member to receive a petition and then delay for some period of time before presenting it to the House.

The reason that question is posed is that under the Standing Orders, as the Hon. Minister has pointed out, when the petition is presented to the House, the Government is then under a very severe stricture in terms of the number of days allowed to the Government within which it must answer the petition. Of course, that is a matter of considerable interest to the Chair. I must point out that the Standing Orders do not require any particular time within which that petition must be presented by the Member who receives the petition. In fact, there is no procedural rule demanding that an Hon. Member present the petition.

It is common sense in the general suggestion that it is probably in the interests of the petitioners that, in view of the fact that they are expecting a response from the Government, petitions be filed with the House within a reasonable period of time. That is not an order.

The Chair finds some concern in the other point made by the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). His suggestion is that sometimes when an Hon. Member is presenting a petition and rises to describe the contents or, in this case, the number of petitioners who signed the petition, and the place from which those people came, there may sometimes be inaccuracies in the representations made in the House.

I am sure that the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) did not intend in any way to deliberately mislead the House. He has spoken on the matter. However, all Hon. Members presenting petitions might take note of today's intervention by the Hon. Member for Victoria and try to ensure that, as much as is possible, the representations made when petitions are presented hew closely to the factual situation. I know that all Hon. Members would wish to do so.

The Hon. Member for York Centre.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

NATIONAL SECURITY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise with fresh evidence of mismanagement and incompetence within the Department of the Solicitor General. Last week I mentioned one situation, and today I rise to speak on another, namely, the revelation this morning that has shaken public confidence in the RCMP for mishandling national security informer evidence which may have averted two tragedies.

In light of the submissions that I made last week which have been resolved or settled in the public mind in no way at all, compounded by this morning's revelations which suggest mismanagement and bad direction of the RCMP, I ask again for an emergency debate.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) is clearly a Member of this House who has had experience as a Minister in this area, and who has been following it very carefully. I wonder if I could ask the Hon. Member to clarify the revelation to which he refers. What is the nature of the incident, and when did it take place?

Mr. Kaplan: This morning on the national radio edition of the CBC it was revealed that an informer identified as Paul Besso claims to have told his handler in the RCMP both of the assassination plot against the Punjabi Minister who visited Canada and was nearly murdered, and the downing of the Air India jet, and the possibility of planting bombs on that jet plane.

These revelations are extremely important coming as they do on the heels of revelations last week about information being given to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service which was unheeded. The emergency arises because the public is entitled to be confident that the national security of the country is being protected by the Government. The clear evidence is that in two of the key agencies responsible for Canada's national security there is considerable disorder.

Mr. Speaker: I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for whom the Chair has great respect, especially on these matters. I am very conscious of the fact that a few days ago a similar motion was made and at that time the Chair did not accede to it.

The reform committee, in dealing with matters of emergency debates, was very clear in the fact that in its wisdom it was not appropriate for the Speaker to give reasons for either allowing an emergency debate or rejecting one. The wisdom of that committee lay in the fact that any reasons the Speaker gives from time to time builds up a kind of jurisprudence of its own and becomes the subject of debate in the Chamber. As a consequence, tempted though I may be to give reasons, I will follow the wisdom of the reform committee and not do so.

However, I draw to the attention of all Hon. Members the following words in the rule.

> The right to move the adjournment of the House for the above purpose is subject to the following conditions:
> (a) the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration;

I have commented at another time on what is an urgent consideration.

The Hon. Member certainly proposes a matter of extreme importance, but I am not satisfied today that it is a matter of urgency. As I said to the Hon. Member when he rose and put forward a very precise and cogent request a few days ago, in deciding that it is not appropriate at this time does not mean that the door is closed. This is a matter of ongoing importance to the entire country. Most certainly there may be circumstances under which it would be appropriate for the Hon. Member or other Hon. Members to raise the matter again.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, September 21, consideration of Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motions Nos. 18 and 21 (Mr. Marchi, p.9156).

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, just to close off the comments, yesterday in debate the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) was pointing out under the provisions of these motions that the Bill did not fulfil the requirements of the Convention and that in fact it contravened the Convention. I would point out again that the UNHCR representative here in Ottawa testified before the committee that the Bill did not contravene the Convention. Given an opportunity to choose between taking the word of the Hon. Member for York West or that of the UNHCR representative, I think I will take the UNHCR. The fact is that the Hon. Member for York West seems to be operating under the notion that if he repeats an error often enough it will become true.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on Motion No. 18?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Marchi moved:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 19 to 29 at page 14.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion, and on Motion No. 21, stand deferred.

The next grouping will include Motions Nos. 22, 23, 24, and 30, which will be debated together but voted upon separately.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out line 25 at page 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"country that complies with".

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out line 29 at page 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"a member, and would be allowed to return to that country, if removed from Canada, and has the right to have the claim determined therein;".

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 29 to 41 at page 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"a member, and the adjudicator and member of the Refugee Division are satisfied that the person,

(i) has a right to have the claim determined on the merits in that country;

(ii) would be protected from refoulement to the country where persecution is feared if found to be a Convention refugee by that country;

(iii) would be granted adequate protection and firm resettlement by that country, if found to be a Convention refugee by that country; and

(iv) has no significant ties to Canada, based on duration of time in Canada or close family or friendship ties, such that the choice of Canada as the country of refuge is not logical nor justifiable."

Motion No. 30

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by adding immediately after line 5 at page 16 the following:

"The adjudicator and member of the Refugee Division who determines a claimant to be ineligible under paragraph 48.01 (1)(b) shall also during that same inquiry specify the prescribed country to which the claimant may be removed."

He said: Mr. Speaker, these four amendments concern the question of what has been called "safe third country", although that wording does not appear in the present clause as amended by the Government.

What I am concerned about in general is that a person might be sent back to a so-called safe third country and might not be safe. He might not be safe because that country might not accept him and might send him on to somewhere else. If the country sends him back to Canada, there may be provisions for dealing with his situation justly under the revised laws. However, if a country does not send him back to Canada, but sends him on to still another country, we do not know what will happen.

There is no guarantee in the clause as it is written that the person will be accepted by that country either allowing him to stay as a permanent resident, which would have an effect similar to being accepted as a refugee, or allowing him to make a refugee claim.

I have tried several ways of dealing with this question, and two of them are reflected in Motions Nos. 23 and 24, and there is a slightly different way reflected in Motion No. 30.

• (1140)

Before going to that, I wish to deal with the fact that the Government appears to want to reduce its obligation under the United Nations Convention regarding the protection of refugees. At the beginning of the committee clause by clause debate the Government introduced something like the present clause on page 14 of the Bill, Section 48.01(1)(b). It said that the claimant would be returned to a country:

> —that has been prescribed as a country that complies with Article 33 of the Convention—

Later in the day the Government changed that and only wanted to concern itself with whether the country complies with Article 33 of the Convention. I have explained this point previously in another connection but the point is important. Allowing a person protection means essentially and basically not forcing him to go back to the country in which he is being persecuted in the case of a refugee, and not doing so to a person who claims to be a refugee unless the claimant is allowed to state his claim and is found to be not a refugee. In the case of a refugee or a possible refugee, the rule is not to send him back to his country.

The most obvious way of sending him back to his country is to handcuff him, put him under guard and compel him to depart or in some way legally compel him to depart. A less obvious way of sending a claimant back to his country is to make sure that he lives in such miserable conditions in the country in which he has sought protection that he is indirectly forced to return; for instance, if he is not allowed to earn a living, if he is not allowed liberty and kept in detention for no reason other than that he claimed refugee status or for other trivial reasons. In other words, if a person is not allowed to live something like a normal life—he does not have to live like a prince—then he is not really receiving the protection of the country.

I have already listed Articles of the Convention which ensure a person protection under the law, liberty of movement, the right to earn a living and other normal rights of residence in such a country that are also supposed by the same Convention to be assured. But our Government has very carefully said, "We don't care whether the person can really live in that country so long as we can dump his body back inside those other borders and we can wash our hands of him". That is why in Motion No. 22 I proposed that we change line 25 so that it reads,"a country" that has been prescribed as "a country that complies with the Convention"—the whole Convention, not just one Article of it.

Clause 23 and Clause 24 attempt more positively to get at the same point. In Clause 23 I propose that a person "would be allowed to return to that country, if removed from Canada, and has the right to have the claim determined therein".

I do not think we should send a person back. I know all of the witnesses who spoke to our committee were concerned with this. We should not send a person back to a country unless we know positively that he will be accepted and either allowed to remain or allowed to have his claim determined there, preferably allowed to return and have his claim determined. That is what I asked for in Clause 23.

In other words, if somebody comes from the United States to Canada and says, "I am a refugee from El Salvador", we will be sending him back to the United States. The Government has never assured us that it will not, but the Government ought to be responsible for knowing that the United States will either let him live in the U.S. or have his claim determined there. We know that the Americans' way of determining a Salvadran's claim is very different from determining a claim of someone from say a country like Poland. At least our Government should be held responsible for making sure that the person has that minimal right even in the United States. There has been some legal amelioration of that practice in the United States. I hope the Americans will give more just treatment to Salvadoran claimants in the future, although that remains to be seen.

I wish to speak about Clause 30 in particular, Mr. Speaker. This would amend the matter, I think, adequately. I still do not think the safe third country system is a workable one in the way it is being used. When the adjudicator and the refugee division member have examined a person and decided that he should be returned, say to the country from which he came, which may not be the country of his persecution, they should make sure, as it says here, that they send him to that country and not leave it up to some immigration officer or enforcement officer to figure out what country they might send that person to. Motion No. 30 reads:

> The adjudicator and member of the Refugee Division who determines a claimant to be ineligible under paragraph 48.01(1)(b) shall also during that same inquiry specify the prescribed country to which the claimant may be removed.

There is a small typographical error in line 2. The word determines should be the word "determined" since it applies to the adjudicator and member of the refugee division collectively. Their decision that a person is ineligible would have to be made by the two of them together. It could not be made by either of them without concurrence of the other, according to the Bill. That is quite agreeable to this side of the House.

They should also then have this responsibility so that if a person is returned to a country where he is not safe, at least it is the adjudicator and the member of the refugee division who have taken that responsibility. Better still, if when they announce that a person is to be returned to country x, the claimant and the claimant's lawyer, if he has one present, should have an opportunity to object in that hearing, in that decision-making body, where it is on the public record.

In other words, this decision is one that should be made at the same level of responsibility as the decision to send a person away. The decision to choose which country a person may be sent to should be part of that decision. Those people who may be more qualified to make them, than say an enforcement officer, should be held responsible on the record for at least what happens in the sending away of a person, even if we do not know what will happen when that person arrives in the other country.

I would support, since I can speak only once about the four motions, any and all of these motions. I would ask the House to do so. Although they will be voted on in sequence, I think the last one perhaps would mend the problem in a minimal way if the other three are not acceptable.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, in the last few comments of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), I think he was dealing with Motion No. 30 which has to do with the need to specify the country of return for someone who is determined to be ineligible to enter Canada on the basis of having prior protection.

I would direct the Member's attention to government Motion No. 53, and I think we are in accord. What the Member is trying to achieve through Motion No. 30 is part of what the Government is trying to achieve through Motion No. 53. It certainly was an item that we discussed at great length in committee. We had some difficulty in arriving at the kind of draft we thought would fit. I do not believe the Member's drafting of Motion No. 30 is quite as solid as the Government's drafting of Motion No. 53, which is a little broader and covers all the situations that I think need to be covered. However, I believe we are in accord on the basic thrust of the motions.

In Motion No. 22, the Member is attempting to remove the phrase which we inserted during committee hearings after a great deal of thought and on the basis of a great deal of testimony.

The issue of prior protection hinges on the notion of refoulement and the notion of protection. Many of us expressed concern about this. In my initial speech at second reading I expressed my concern about the work of Cabinet and the need for Cabinet to determine the list. The committee deliberately specified that Cabinet must attend to Article 33. The statutory power and regulatory authority relates to Article 33, which is the obligation under the Convention to non-refoulement in a direct or indirect way.

While I respect my colleague from Spadina, I think it is a mistake for the House to accept Motion No. 22 and remove those words "Article 33". I think it is very important that Cabinet be conscious that the countries they put on the list must have an unblemished record in terms of meeting their Convention obligations related to non-refoulement.

Motion No. 23 is essentially designed to achieve something very similar to what the Member is trying to achieve in Motion No. 30 and which I believe will be achieved if the House supports Motion No. 53. There is no basic quarrel with that.

Motion No. 24, however, is the most disturbing of his amendments. The first line of his amendment would remove some lines of the Bill and thereby obliterate the notion of safe third country and the whole notion of eligibility and credibility. I do not understand how one can argue in committee for the need for speed, then attempt to move an amendment that would make speed impossible. We either believe or do not believe that 75 per cent to 80 per cent of the claimants who came to our shores in the last 18 months have no need for the protection of Canada. If we believe that 75 per cent to 80 per cent of those claimants in the last 18 months have no need for the protection of Canada, then we must have a speedy and cost efficient system to deter future abuses like that. Speed is the deterrent and if the House were to accept Motion No. 24 that speed would be lost.

While the additions the Member is trying to make look attractive on paper, they would essentially eliminate the possibility of putting any country on the list and allowing that list to function. It is essentially a redefinition of the Member's view of the obligations of all the countries that signed the Accord. Surely the United Nations system allows sovereign countries to remain sovereign and to meet their obligations within their own systems. I do not think it is appropriate that this House pass a piece of legislation that would require those sovereign countries in Europe and other places to redesign their total domestic law to conform to something the Member would like to see happen. If this is an issue about which we feel strong, perhaps it should be raised with the UNHCR and in committee meetings around the world. Surely, however, it would be premature and inappropriate to include a provision in the Bill which would make it inoperable in terms of one of its major principles.

I urge the House to vote favourably for Motion No. 53 when it comes up for discussion later because I believe it accomplishes what the Member is seeking in at least part of his assertions. I urge the House to reject Motions Nos. 22, 23, 24 and 30 on the grounds that I have outlined.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am surprised, to put it mildly, at the comments of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). For some time he was a member of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration and knows of the report that was tabled. Surely he knows that there is very little relationship between what is contained in this Bill and what the Standing Committee recommended.

The Standing Committee was comprised of an overwhelming majority of government Members. It considered in great depth the whole question of immigration and made some very excellent recommendations. Now we see the recommendations and proposals of the standing committee virtually rejected.

The Member for Calgary West, rather than urging the Government to at least consider with some sympathy the recommendations of the standing committee, is saying that the House should reject these amendments which I believe try to amend the Bill to include some of those recommendations.

Let us consider some of the recommendations made by the committee in its report which was tabled in November, 1985, and was based on a study asked for by the then Minister of State for Immigration. This report contains a proposal for a swift, fair system of refugee status determination. The committee proposed that a refugee claimant be sent directly to the refugee board first, without a lot of immigration procedures. The board could decide on that status, being trained and authorized to do so, and the Immigration Department could take over from there and either admit the person on refugee grounds or, if there were no other humanitarian grounds, expel the person from the country. The Government would have been required to reply in four months.

The Government has never dealt with this report. Instead, it introduced this Bill last May. According to this legislation, a refugee claimant is first sent to an immigration inquiry to determine whether there is any reason not to remove him or her. The immigration adjudicator, a member of the refugee division, may only examine the eligibility and credibility of the claimant. This means that they do not judge the merits of his or her claim, only whether he or she could have been safe in another country through which they passed and should be removed to that country, or whether the country from which the claimant is fleeing is in fact one that does not produce refugees. On either of these grounds, they may prohibit him or her from going to the Refugee Division to state their whole claim.

We oppose this Bill and these provisions because it will prevent most claimants from having access to an otherwise good refugee determination system.

We also oppose the harsh restrictions on time to find a lawyer, except for ones paid for and provided by the Minister, and the severe restrictions on the right of appeal to court.

I have another reason for opposing this Bill. I am somewhat hesitant to say it publicly, but I think it needs to be said. We have a long record in this country which is documented so vividly in the book: "None Is Too Many", written by Irving Abella. That book demonstrated conclusively that, unfortunately, there were and are officials with a great deal of power in the Immigration Department who were and are prejudiced against certain types of people, such as non-whites.

We have a perfect example of that in this new committee which has been given some prominence because of the membership of former Justice Clyne of British Columbia. That committee was organized by a former senior official in the department and it is saying our immigration policy has to be changed so that we permit only people who are acceptable to those whose views are such that anyone to the left of Genghis Khan is a communist and therefore undesirable. They want this country to adopt the immigration policy it had for many years until, I suppose, the late 1950s or early 1960s. That policy was that the only people acceptable to this country as immigrants or refugees were white people.

It is time not only that we have a good law but that the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) exercise his authority and take steps to see that we get rid of those kinds of people in our Immigration Department. There is no place there for people with those kinds of views, and I am satisfied there are still too many of them.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the cumulative effect of Motions Nos. 22, 23, 24 and 30 with respect to the safe country concept. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) made reference to the fact that the Government made amendments to this legislation to try to better define the safe third country concept and then suggested we would be able to deport, as it were, individuals to countries which subscribe to Article 33 of the UN Convention.

For the benefit of my colleagues and for those who may be watching this debate, Article 33(1) says that "No contracting state shall expel or return a refugee in any manner whatsoever to the frontiers of territories where his life or freedom would be threatened on account of his race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group, or political opinion."

It is very curious, however, that the Government of Canada was not prepared to say that we would not deport individuals to countries who do not subscribe to the entire Convention. There are some 46 Articles in the Convention and the Government of Canada very conveniently sought to limit it to those countries who subscribe to Article 33. Article 32 talks about expulsion. Other Articles talk about the rights of individuals not to be returned indirectly or directly to a place of torture. Article 33 is quite limited because it does not suggest that a safe country, on paper at least, may not be safe by the end of an individual's journey.

I think we can best look at the concern involved by looking at the country to the south of us. Some time ago I received a letter from an individual connected with the Anglican Church and its efforts to help refugees. I was told a story which shows the faults of the safe third country concept advocated by the Conservative Government. Essentially it was a story of a mother with three children whose husband was murdered in El Salvador because he was involved in the labour movement there. After he was murdered the mother and three children were told by officials that if they did not leave El Salvador they would face the same fate. The mother wasted very little time and escaped. Many of her fellow villagers who unfortunately did not escape faced that very same fate.

The mother and her children went to the U.S. where, because of that country's policy on Central America, they had to hide in the basement of an Anglican Church for fear they would be deported to El Salvador and certain death. The U.S. Anglican Church contacted the Canadian Anglican Church and asked if they could help this mother and three children. The church here co-operated, brought those people to the Canadian border, and they are now living safely in Canada.

What would have happened to that family if Bill C-55 was the law of the land? They would have been asked at our border where they were coming from. They would have had to answer that they were coming from the United States. Our officials would then have gone through their little directory of safe third countries and noted that the U.S. is on that list. They would then have said, "we are sorry, the U.S. is on our safe third country list, and with all due respect we suggest you go back there". Keep in mind that she was hiding in the basement of an Anglican Church in the U.S.

I am sure that according to the provisions of Article 33 of the UN Convention the U.S. would not have tortured that woman, probably not have imprisoned her, would not have treated her in a brutal physical manner. What they might have done was say, "we are sorry, but for us El Salvador is safe. You do not face any problems there. It is not our problem and therefore we will provide you with a ticket on the first airplane back to your country". That is what would have happened and the statistics bear that out.

The vast majority, some 95 per cent, of refugee applicants from Central America are deported from the U.S. Why? Because of that country's foreign policy and not because of its refugee policy. Ronald Reagan has a vision of Central America such that it dictates who is and who is not a bona fide refugee.

In this case Canada would have said we have satisfied ourselves. We did not send them back to El Salvador, we just sent them back to the U.S. That is the Pontius Pilate routine of washing your hands of the problem.

Why can the Government of Canada not take it one step further and include the other 45 Articles which deal with protection of refugees? If it did, we would have to ask ourselves with respect to this mother and three children whether the U.S. is going to keep them in that country. Are we sure they will not be put on a plane to El Salvador? Are we sure, based on all the statistics, that we can guarantee the safety of this mother and her children and sleep easy at night? If those answers are unclear, how can the Government espouse its morality of offering individuals protection in the United States when it knows that we would indirectly be guilty if that mother and her three children ended up in the same town from which officials told her to escape? This one example illustrates the mistake of this policy.

I have advocated personally to the Minister, and through my motion yesterday, that if the Government cannot accept deletion of the safe third country concept, it should allow the refugee division to draft the list of safe third countries. In that way Parliament and Canadians can at least be assured that the most knowledgeable, apolitical, and concerned people would be drafting the safe third country list rather than the Cabinet which would be under international and domestic political and diplomatic pressures.

I call upon the Government again today to support the principles of these four amendments with regard to the safe third country concept. We are not saying that everyone who comes here is legitimate, but let us not make a mistake in judgment on individuals who legitimately need our protection.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has done excellent work in committee. He stayed to the very end and never missed a meeting, unless for debate in the House. No one can fault him for not having shown genuine interest in the welfare of refugees. That goes without contradiction. He is the one member of the opposition Parties who has shown that consistent interest. His motion has been clinically analyzed and dissected by my friend, the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Prior to committee stage the Bill did contain the term "safe third country". As a result of committee stage hearings that term was dropped and a more definite term was adopted which incorporated Article 33 of the Convention. As a result of what we heard from witnesses in committee we changed the terminology in order to assure the people working with refugees that the people they are concerned about would be protected under this provision and to assure the refugee claimant that this provision would protect them.

Some of the things which the Hon. Member for Spadina asks are impossible to provide. They would make the system unworkable because they, in effect, give the claimant a choice in where he would be sent. How could we ask any government official to give a claimant a choice of destination?

The Member has said frequently that this Bill could return genuine refugees. I think that in a few very rare cases that is true. The question is to where. We and the U.N. High Commission are satisfied that if they are returned they will not be returned to a place where they would be persecuted. They will be protected. That is the point which must be emphasized.

While I respect the desire of the Member for Spadina to expand the provisions and give unlimited protection to refugee claimants, I hope he will accept that it is not Canada's obligation to ensure that every other country in the world fulfils the Convention provisions in the same way as does Canada in order for it to be a safe third country. I think that is an unreasonable request to make. In order to make the determination system work it is mandatory to reject these provisions.

A few minutes ago we heard the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) casting aspersions on the Immigration Department and officers within it with regard to racism. That is intolerable. Members of his Party always trumpet themselves as being the civil libertarians of the world who believe that everyone has a right to dignity and fair trial and the right not to be castigated by such wild accusations. My friend, the Member for Spadina, did much the same yesterday when he made references to colour. This Party wants to present itself as the enlightened group, but almost at the first opportunity it makes remarks which reflect on the character and motivation of others. That is really not becoming to them.

We must reject these provisions because they are unworkable. I think the country and the refugees will understand that when they see this Bill working very well.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the Member has criticized some of the comments I made I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is possible, as the Hon. Member knows, only if there is unanimous consent to that effect. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) to ask a question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in debate on these motions put forward by my good friend the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). These motions accept a determination of the Government to have persons who may very well have genuine claims for refugee status shunted off to safe third countries. The Hon. Member for Spadina is endeavouring to ensure that if the Government is determined to establish that sort of procedure there be safeguards.

I want to speak very strongly in support of these attempts to strengthen the Bill to ensure that there are safeguards which the Government did not accept in committee and which, in spite of the protestations of the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), are not in the Bill. Particularly for those persons who are watching this debate elsewhere and do not have the text of the motions before them, to have an Hon. Member suggest that the Government's Motion No. 53 provides for matters the Hon. Member for Spadina has put forward may sound very convincing, but it does not take a lengthy consideration of the motion to see that it is not so.

Perhaps, since I am endeavouring to provide what other persons in other parts of the country may not have, I will read part of Motion No. 53:

> That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 17.
> (b) by striking out line 3 at page 26 and substituting the following therefor:
> "public in Canada.
> (2) Notwithstanding subsections 54(2) and (3), no person who has been determined not to be eligible to have a claim to be a Convention refugee determined by the Refugee Division on the basis that the person is a person described in paragraph 48.01(1)(b) shall be removed from Canada to any country other than the country from which the person came to Canada as determined for the purposes of that paragraph unless
> (a) the person is determined not to have a credible basis for the claim on a hearing under section 48.03;or
> (b) the person, following a reference of the claim to the Refugee Division pursuant to subsection 48.03(5), is finally determined under this Act not to be a Convention refugee."

That motion standing in the name of the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) says absolutely nothing about the safeguards which my friend, the Hon. Member for Spadina, is trying to include in the Bill. There is no safeguard that the country that has been singled out as a safe third country, to which this person is to be sent, will in fact provide properly for that person.

Surely, it is a little less than proper debate for the Hon. Member for Calgary West to put forward that the Government has in fact responded to this concern. What he suggested was that the proposals the Hon. Member for Spadina is putting forward would interfere with the speedy administration of claims, or the desire to put forward claims, by possible refugees. This only strengthens the concern I expressed yesterday about the freighting of human beings which the Government seems ready to establish. We are going to be air freighting people back to one country or another, and the Member suggests that a proposal that we have some sort of assurance that persons who want to put forward a claim within our borders are going to be all right somewhere else is going to get in the way of the speedy process the Government wants. But the people of Canada, who are concerned about the provision for refugees would not necessarily want that air freighting done. The suggestion by the Parliamentary Secretary in his argument that this assurance would make the whole process unworkable only underscores this fact. He, of course, supports the Government's efforts to create a process to get people out of Canada by this process of freighting human beings as fast as we can, and suggests that any proposal put forward to be provide for humanity is going to make the thing inhumane.

There is a real danger of sort of a sleight of hand in this debate that may well strike some viewers as verging towards the dishonourable. I want to note in that particular regard, the suggestion made yesterday in debate that the Bill was not in violation of the Convention of the United Nations. I use for that purpose testimony within the committee by a Canadian authority on these matters, Professor James Hathaway, who was asked about this very specific point and responded at page 38 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-55:

As regards Mr. Van der Veen's remarks, I think you mis-characterized them. I have discussed the evidence with Mr. Van der Veen.

That is Mr. Van der Veen of the United Nations Human Rights Commission.

He did not say that the legislation complied with international law. He made the statement that the UNHCR had not taken the position that it was contrary to international law. Those are two very different things.

He made some observations on the dependence of the United Nations on the funding of member countries, including Canada. He then goes on to say:

The aide-mémoire, with which all of you are familiar, is an incredibly strong statement.

I have spent the last six years of my life ploughing through tens of thousands of pages of UNHCR documents and I have yet to see the language of a critique addressed to a western country that even comes close to this degree of specificity. While it may not say that the bill violates international law, that aide-mémoire makes very specific recommendations for changes in order to bring this bill into compliance with the international standards set out by the executive committee.

On that point, I think it is imperative to note, since we are referring to primary sources in the convention, that Article 35 of the convention obliges us to co-operate with the UNHCR. That is a very unusual provision in an international convention, extremely unusual.

We have set up the executive committee to facilitate that collaboration. Canada has been a long and devoted member of that committee. Canada, along with the others, unanimously developed certain standards, which we are now not respecting.

He concludes with some observations on the practice of states being important to the development of international law. There is surely the truest observation, the truest appreciation of what the United Nations really thinks about this matter of how Canada is treating refugees, and to quote two lines from the official's testimony is quite unfair. It is, therefore, essential that we take very seriously the kinds of proposals the Hon. Member for Spadina has put forward.

As the Parliamentary Secretary has recognized, the Hon. Member was there from beginning to end, other than his having to speak in the House at some point. He was there early and he was there late. He was there listening carefully and gathering those impressions that are necessary in deciding how we should regard this particular Bill. When the Hon. Member puts motions forward, even if government Members regard them as making speedy operation of the new system unworkable, and even if it is going to make it unworkable as a whole, those it seems to me are words of praise for procedures that are designed to ensure that Canada will live up to the United Nations Convention, a Convention to which we are signatories and with which we have worked over the years.

Surely, with legislation of this sort, with procedures of this sort in effect, we deserve to be booted off the committee to wait for a new government to establish proper standards for this country, standards of humanity for refugees, to ensure that this country really lives up to our traditions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motions Nos. 22, 23, 24, and 30 have been grouped for debate but will be voted on separately.

The first question is on Motion No. 22 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. Shall the recorded division stand deferred?

Mr. Friesen: There are only three Members standing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are only three Members standing. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 22 (Mr. Heap) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 23 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 23 (Mr. Heap) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 24 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 24 (Mr. Heap) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 30 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 30 (Mr. Heap) negatived.

• (1230)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next grouping includes Motions Nos. 25, 31, 32 and 33. They are grouped for debate but will be voted on separately.

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie) moved:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 37 to 41 at page 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"(ii) by an adjudicator and a member of the Refugee Division as not being eligible to have the claim determined by that Division, other than a claimant declared ineligible pursuant to paragraph (a) who has been returned to Canada by the country which has issued the valid and subsisting travel document by that country pursuant to Article 28 of the Convention or a claimant declared ineligible pursuant to paragraph (b) who has been returned to Canada by the prescribed country, or as not having a credible basis for the claim."

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by adding immediately after line 5 at page 16 the following:

"(6) Notwithstanding paragraphs (1)(c), (1)(e) and (3), a person is eligible to have a claim determined by the Refugee Division if the claim is based on facts that arose since the claimant's most recent departure from Canada, and in the opinion of the adjudicator and the member of the Refugee Division considering the claim, the claim is not manifestly unfounded."

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 6 to 26 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"(6) In determining whether a claim to be a Convention refugee is manifestly unfounded, the adjudicator and the member of the Refugee Division shall consider whether the claim is:

(a) clearly fraudulent; or

(b) not related to the criteria for granting refugee status in the Convention."

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 6 to 26 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"(6) In determining whether a claimant has a credible basis for the claim to be a Convention refugee, the adjudicator and the member of the Refugee Division shall consider any evidence adduced by the claimant at the inquiry or hearing and may consider any other evidence, including;

(a) the factual basis of the claim, and

(b) the record with respect to human rights of the country that the claimant left, or outside of which the claimant remains, by reason of fear of persecution."

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, once again I am pleased to take part in the debate, particularly because for some time now I have been able to express my views on Bill C-55. I repeat that as far as I am concerned we should not even be debating Bill C-55 as it is now drafted.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I think I have to clarify many things before I mention something about the motion that I want to be accepted. I was elected very democratically in the riding of La Prairie, Quebec. I came to the House of Commons to find out that there are a great many committees here. There was one committee in particular in which I was very interested. I refer to the McGrath Committee.

The McGrath Committee was convened so that back-benchers would have the right to participate more in the workings of the Government in terms of the legislative work that the Government has to do while in power instead of twiddling their thumbs on the back benches.

When I came to this place I joined the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. Within two months I was elected Vice-Chairman of that committee. I participated very strongly in the workings of the committee since over one-third of the population of my riding does not speak French or English. They are of ethnic origin. As far as I am concerned Bill C-55 is definitely not what we should have in order to define the status of refugees.

If one reads the comments of many experts in the field of refugees one will find a comment that I myself read three or four times before I got up to speak on this matter. I refer to a comment of Mr. Pierre Duquette, a well-known Montreal lawyer in the field of refugee matters.

[Translation]

And unless I am mistaken I believe Mr. Duquette once worked for the Minister of State for Immigration. Surely if he had been hired it was because he was highly qualified indeed.

Mr. Duquette states:

[English]

"In comparison with the current situation, Bill C-55 will put peoples' lives in danger". He suggests that all decisions should be published. He also stated that if the Government wants to leave the Convention, then it should say so openly.

I have been saying that if we are to accept refugees then we should have a fast, fair and just process. Do we have a fast, fair and just process when the refugee to be is screened before he has the right to express himself? Do we have a fair process when a person can be refused by an adjudicator and a member of the division without really explaining himself because he has status in another country? That person can then be deported by the Government back to this country and that country does not want him. He is told, "Go back to Canada". When he comes into Canada he again faces another clause read by the adjudicator who says:

claim already rejected in Canada.

[English]

What are we to do with a person who was rejected once because he comes from a safe country and this safe country does not want him? Will we keep sending people back and forth between countries? I really do not understand the true meaning of the word "fair".

I could give ample examples of specialists who do not agree with this Bill. For instance, the Coalition for a Just Immigration and Refugee Policy stated that the approach in Bill C-55 is incorrect because it is not workable and puts genuine refugees in danger and will not survive challenge in the courts.

Rabbi Plaut is a well-known expert on refugee matters. He was asked to conduct a royal commission on refugee matters, which he did. He has said that Bill C-55 has the wrong focus because its aim is deportation instead of status determination. He also states that the process will not be shorter but longer and more complex. Rabbi Plaut is against Bill C-55 on the grounds that a determination system should be fair for genuine refugees. These are the comments of a man who has been involved for over 35 years, if I recall correctly, with refugee matters. He is a man who is recognized by all Canadians as the best expert, and he is against Bill C-55. Yet there are still some people who want to pass Bill C-55 the way it is.

The Bill has to have a great many changes made to it. As a matter of fact, 77 amendments have been proposed to it at report stage. I have not been in the House of Commons for too long but I am told that there have not been very many Bills to which 77 amendments have been proposed at report stage. So there must be something wrong with Bill C-55. I think that whoever will vote for Bill C-55 should make an examen de conscience.

In June the House of Commons voted on capital punishment. We were told that it was to be a vote according to our conscience. Some Members voted yes for the return of capital punishment, while others voted no. After the vote on Bill C-55 is taken I am anxious to see if some of the people who voted against capital punishment will have voted in favour of this Bill. Capital punishment was used to punish people who were against society, people such as murderers and those who did not want to follow what society asked of them. But Members voted against the return of capital punishment so that we would not have to kill these people. They will now vote and cause thousands and thousands of people to be sent back to their home country where they will be killed or tortured. But it does not matter because they are not people from our country; they are people from other countries.

I hope that whoever votes in favour of Bill C-55 will examen de conscience and think twice before making the decision to vote yes.

Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 25 states: That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 37 to 41 at page 14 and substituting the following therefor: . . . I hope my colleague in the House will vote in favour of adding this subclause:

> "(ii) by an adjudicator and a member of the Refugee Division as not being eligible to have the claim determined by that Division, other than a claimant declared ineligible pursuant to paragraph (a) who has been returned to Canada by the country which has issued the valid and subsisting travel document by that country pursuant to Article 28 of the Convention or a claimant declared ineligible pursuant to paragraph (b) who has been returned to Canada by the prescribed country, or as not having a credible basis for the claim."

I hope my colleagues will support this amendment. We are in some sort of a bind because Bill C-55 is before the House. But the main amendment which should have been made and considered would have been to refer this measure back to the House just so we could have made sure it would be fair, fast and efficient.

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in debating Motions Nos. 25, 31, 32, and 33, we are mainly concerned with the question of the applicant's credibility, but not exclusively.

Although I support Motion No. 25, on which the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) has spoken, I wish to use what time I have on the other three motions.

Unfortunately, Motion No. 31 has a misprint which probably came from my office. It arises from the confusion between the two versions of the Bill that were printed as of September 15. Therefore, I must seek unanimous consent of the House to amend my motion to read:

> "(6) Notwithstanding paragraphs 1(c), 1(f), and (5), . . . "

There were changes made between the two printings which require this change.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have unanimous consent to amend his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Heap: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank all Hon. Members for their assistance.

On this motion, I am attempting to protect a claimant who came to Canada, left, and returned. Under categories 1(c), 1(f), and (5), the claimant would be excluded from consideration. I am not arguing against those categories as such, I am arguing that if the claimant offers evidence that something has happened since he was last in Canada, for example, perhaps he returned to his own country and got it in the neck from whoever it was that he thought may persecute him, and who Canada did not think would persecute him, but he returned and it did happen. If the claimant can present any such evidence he should be considered.

Notwithstanding those exclusionary clauses 1(c), 1(f) and (5), a person is eligible to have a claim determined by the refugee division if the claim is based on facts that arose since the claimant's most recent departure from Canada and, in the opinion of the adjudicator or the member of the refugee division considering the claim, the claim is not manifestly unfounded.

It is a simple matter, it speaks for itself, and I believe it is generally in keeping with the clause as it stands. It does not ask for a major departure. It asks that there be the opportunity, probably in a very few cases, to take account of events that may have happened to that person since he was previously in Canada.

In Motion No. 32, I wish to suggest a fairer test of credibility than the Government has offered in order that a claimant would not be rejected merely by having the merits of his claim examined by people who are not, as a body, competent to do that, or officially asked to examine the merits of his claim. I have proposed what is well known in international law, and frequently used in Canadian discussion, although I do not think that it appears in Canadian law, as the manifestly unfounded claim.

There are two grounds on which the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, and many other countries, agree that a claim is not worthy of further consideration if it is found to be manifestly unfounded. First, it may be manifestly unfounded because all the facts stated by the claimant, even if they are true, have nothing to do with refugee status. To get into the ball park, a claimant must show that he has reason to fear persecution for one of five reasons: nationality, race, religion, political orientation, or membership in a certain group. That could be a class or any type of group.

If the claimant states that he came here because he cannot stand his in-laws at home, or because there is no work at home, we may be sympathetic, but he is not a refugee under the UN Convention. He is not a refugee from persecution as defined therein.

The other ground would be if the statements were clearly fraudulent. In Canada, and elsewhere, the manner in which that is often expressed is that if any reasonable person listening to the facts does not believe them—two and two do not make six; if the claimant came from Amsterdam, he did not come from Calcutta; the story does not hang together—and it is plain that the essential facts presented on his persecution would not be believed by any reasonable person, that is a semi-subjective judgment, but it is one that has strong support internationally.

Mr. Girard, the head of the Refugee Status Task Force has stated that that is a very weak test and that they wished a stronger one. He did not explain why they wished a stronger one, he just stated that they wished a stronger one. I believe that there is no good reason that Canada should wish a stronger test, that is, a more restrictive test than has been found workable by our colleagues in the United Nations, and our colleagues who support the United Nations High Commission and is strongly recommended by the UNHCR.

A while ago the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary commented on whether the UNHCR found Canada in contravention of the Convention. Of course, it is quite true that they did not. They do find that we need to make improvements in this Bill. This is their diplomatic way of putting it. We need to make improvements in the Bill in order to fully comply with the Convention. According to their aide-mémoire of some months ago, this would be one of the tests which needs improvement. They are a body that can only work by eliciting co-operation. They are not in a position to act like policemen or judges and state, "You have contravened it, you go to jail". They have no enforcement powers. They rely upon persuasion, and they have asked us to bring the test more into line with the standards that they recommend.

To put the question "are we in contravention" is to put an irrelevant and, by its nature, misleading question to the UNHCR representative. They had already made their position very plain, that the law needs improvement in this respect.

Finally, in Motion No. 33 I have made a further attempt or an alternative attempt, in case it better suited Hon. Members opposite, to amend the same procedure by asking the officers to consider any evidence, including that in subsection (a) or that in subsection (b), but not to rely upon the record of other people who came from the same country where the person fears persecution. That is not a test which is respected internationally. That is not a test which can be seriously applied when things change as fast as they do now.

If there is a blow-up in country x, and a change of government with violence, and that country is on our safe country list, it will not be changed that fast by the Cabinet. What I am asking is that consideration be given to not relying on the record of the country from which the person is fleeing or the record of acceptance by Canada of refugee applicants from that country.

The United Nations has made headway in international law in the 1948 UN declaration for human rights by establishing that individuals have rights over and against those of states. That is new in international law. Until then it was only the rights of states. The UN Convention on refugees enlarges on that point and says that a refugee claimant as an individual who has rights which very slightly limit the rights of sovereign states.

What they are saying on this point is that we should examine the person's case individually and not treat him collectively by saying, "Well, you come from country x so we know you are not a refugee".

Sometimes Hon. Members opposite undertake to defend the rights of individual human beings and suggest that democratic socialists do not respect the rights of individuals. It is very ironic that it is Hon. Members opposite, government Members, who in this passage wish to deny the right of the individual to state his claim and to submerge him in some collectivity by identifying him only by the country from which he has fled.

I hope that Motion No. 33 will be supported by the House.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 25 was moved by the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) and seconded by the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour). I want to assure both Hon. Members that the issue which they raised in Motion No. 25 was carefully considered and discussed in committee, and that the amended Bill reported back to the House takes care of their concern. However, since the two of them suggest that they might find disposition, at least on the government side, for unanimous consent to withdraw the motion if they chose to do so—and I do not see either of them in the House at the moment—at a later stage, it really is not relevant because the amended Bill has taken care of the "refugee in orbit" phenomenon to which their amendment was addressed.

Motion No. 31 brought forward by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) provides an opportunity system for bogus claimants once again. I think everyone who is knowledgeable about this matter is concerned about changing circumstances. In terms of true refugees, those will occur rarely.

The humanitarian and compassionate provision under the Act provides a mechanism for taking care of unique situations. I believe that our history shows that we have taken care of them in the past and that we will take care of them in the future.

We must be careful in the scheme of this Act not to provide another legal opportunity for bogus claimants to delay their removal from the country. What Motion No. 31 would really do is enable another legal process to occur, which would be used by bogus claimants almost as a matter of habit and would not occur in terms of legitimate claimants very often at all.

In committee we discussed the intent of Motion No. 32. Certainly we heard a lot of testimony which wanted us to use the concept of "manifestly unfounded". The committee listened carefully to all the testimony and indicated that the basic problem with the original drafting was that perhaps it was not assertive enough in terms of the rights of legitimate claimants.

The redrafted version brought back to the House has that characteristic. If there is anything in the evidence or testimony which might lead the refugee division to conclude that the person was a legitimate refugee, then we want that case to go forward.

In both Motions Nos. 32 and 33 the Hon. Member is removing the obligation to provide evidence of refugee board hearings about similar cases in similar countries. If we look at it from a barrier point of view, surely the Hon. Member's arguments have some cogence. If we look at it from the point of view of how the clause is now worded to protect better our rights and obligations under the Charter, the removal of the principle wherein the Crown must provide evidence would take protection away from legitimate refugees. It is there so that the rights to a hearing of a refugee claimant, that frightened individual who comes from another country and meets a stranger who becomes his duty counsel, are protected by the evidentiary requirement that the Crown must provide evidence on prior determination hearings and their consequences.

I think the Hon. Member will find that that particular evidentiary requirement will be the mechanism which enables people to go forward quickly to a refugee board hearing, the kind which the Hon. Member indicated that he would value.

It would be a sad mistake for the House to take that obligation away from the Crown. It is perhaps one of the most solid pieces of this legislation in terms of providing protection for legitimate refugees. On that basis I urge the House to vote against Motions No. 32 and 33.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, again I appreciate the opportunity to join in debate on these motions, particularly Motions Nos. 31, 32, and 33 in which the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) is trying to ensure protection for persons who have been sent out of the country, returned to a supposed safe third country and returned again to Canada. Each of these motions deal with very precise matters. They open possibilities in the law and are very important.

If, for example, a claimant has some experience, having left Canada, which could create a new situation and wishes to present it to immigration officers, it is most important that the law include provisions which will ensure that the officers consider the particular information.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has been trying to assure us that the evidentiary provisions, the rules which prevail in the country, should provide that protection. However, I suspect that these officers are less trained in judicial proceedings and more urged on to deportation action and so on these days than we might well like. In those circumstances, it seems to me very important to have these possibilities provided.

I say quite explicitly that the Hon. Member has offered assurances on other items before. He indicated to the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) that Motion No. 25 might be withdrawn and so on. These proposals do not impress me very much.

I want to say about these matters and the others that I think there is a very jealous regard for humanity, for the lives and safety of these potential claimants or quite possible refugees. We want to be absolutely certain that nothing will go awry.

May I call it one o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

IMMIGRATION

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO FORMER B.C. SUPREME COURT JUDGE CONDEMNED

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the statement attributed to J. V. Clyne in the Vancouver Sun of September 19 that he would like to see Canada remain white to safeguard the country's heritage must be vigorously rejected and condemned from the floor of this House. Explicit in that notion is that Canada's interest is best served by the white race. If that were not offensive enough, what is implicit in former Judge Clyne's statement is that one race, white in this case, is superior to others.

As we take pride in the Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms adopted in 1982, we know we have an obligation to respect and practise the principles contained in that Charter. What is disturbing about Mr. Clyne's statement is that it comes from a former Supreme Court Judge and Chancellor of the University of British Columbia who should know the spirit, if not the letter, of the Charter.

We do not want in the Canada of today and of our children to be trapped by a distinction between white and non-white Canadians. If the future of Canada is to be a great one, it will be because we will look at ourselves not in racial terms but as a cohesive, varied society drawing strength from diversity and not from domination of one race over another.

MOTOR SAFETY

MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY ACT—APPLICATION TO ALL-TERRAIN VEHICLES URGED

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, in Canada between January, 1982, and September, 1986, there were roughly 2,000 injuries and 109 fatalities resulting from accidents involving off-road vehicles. Many of these accidents involved young Canadians in their early teens. In Saskatchewan last week an unfortunate incident occurred in which a 14-year-old boy died in an accident involving an all-terrain vehicle.

These alarming statistics give rise to the need for federal and provincial legislation dealing with motor vehicle safety policies. It is my understanding that Transport Canada has submitted a proposal to amend the Motor Vehicle Safety Act to include within it legislation dealing with all-terrain vehicles. This proposal is intended to make the use of protective equipment mandatory, and increase public awareness of the dangers involved in using these off-road vehicles on public roads where, incidentally, a high number of accidents occur.

I urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to proceed expeditiously in regard to these matters and to work in concert with regional transport officials, giving priority to the concerns of minimum age requirements and the provision of public awareness programs focusing on driver responsibility and the safe use of off-road vehicles.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

PRESENCE OF PCBS IN WATER PUMPS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it has been recently brought to our attention that certain domestic submersible well pumps manufactured between 1964 and 1980 with oil-filtered motors contain dangerous PCBs. The PCBs which have been found in certain pumps' capacitors or cooling oil pose a serious threat to drinking water because of their toxicity and tendency to accumulate in organisms.

Where wells have been abandoned, where pumps have stood idle for long periods of time or where pumps have malfunctioned there exists a serious threat that PCBs will enter the groundwater thereby spreading the threat of contamination.

Considering that many of the pumps containing PCBs are imports, the federal Government should take immediate action to evaluate these imported products and launch an immediate initiative to provide testing of groundwater for PCBs. At the moment in parts of Canada the only way to check for PCBs in groundwater is for an individual to remove his submersible pump, have it destroyed and then examined for PCBs. This is costly and mitigates against people volunteering to have their pumps destroyed in order to be tested. Surely the threat of PCBs to our groundwater is serious enough to warrant a government sponsored and funded initiative.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ASSIST

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, "Persons with disabilities have the right to participate in all aspects of the economic, social and cultural life of Canada". Following the Prime Minister's "Declaration on the Decade of Disabled Persons" in 1985 was the announcement of the federal-provincial-territorial meeting of responsible Ministers earlier this year.

Considerable progress has been achieved by the Government toward this objective. This includes housing and transportation measures, improvements in employment opportunities, and economic incentives, such as increases in Canada Pension Plan disability benefits and greater deductions for income tax purposes. We still have a long way to go but our Government has certainly started off on the right track.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

HEALTH ISSUES AFFECTING NATIVE CANADIANS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, Canadians were touched by the moving sincerity of the visit of Pope John Paul II to Fort Simpson in the Northwest Territories.

The Pope championed the cause of our native peoples in seeking self-government and a just land claims settlement.

Unfortunately, these goals are still some way off from attainment. In the meantime, natives of Canada continue to suffer social, economic and health problems which most other Canadians would find unacceptable, according to the Canadian Public Health Association.

In the Association's most recent journal, they also point out that only 50 per cent of native on-reserve houses have running water and sewage disposal, that 10 per cent to 15 per cent of natives suffer from diabetes compared to a rate of 2.2 per cent for the rest of Canadians, and that infectious and parasitic diseases remain as significant risks to the northern Canadian population.

Clearly, in the spirit of Pope John Paul's visit the federal Government must do significantly more to address these public health issues which are affecting our native Canadians.

Yet too often the outcome is simply the movement of natives from reserves to central cities where the federal Government refuses to accept responsibility.

Perhaps the Pope's visit will remind the Government how much still needs to be done with our native population right now.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S POSITION ON FLOW THROUGH SHARES

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the three words "flow through shares" themselves generate visions of economic development in the northern regions of our country. The same three words send shivers down the spines of the socialist Members opposite.

Last December the finance critic for the New Democratic Party rose in the House and stated that no one but the rich benefit from flow through shares. I challenged his statement during that debate on Bill C-23 and I challenged his ignorance of the North again in January.

Now I understand that this same critic has stated that the NDP actually endorses flow through shares. What has caused this 180-degree change in direction?

Could it be that the NDP saw the screaming headlines and negative editorials from across the North? Could the NDP have been talking with the United Steelworkers whose employers depend so dearly on continued exploration and development? Could that Member and his Party be attempting to mend the damage done by their policy against flow through shares?

They were against flow through shares nine months ago, and for them today. Where will the NDP be tomorrow? Can the NDP finance critic tell the House?

COMMUNICATIONS

MINISTER'S RESPONSE TO COMMITTEE REPORTS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, five months after the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture submitted to the House its extensive fifth and sixth reports on specialty services and broadcasting legislation, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) chose this morning to elaborate on her four and one-half page meagre response.

In her original non-comprehensive report she raised four questions, while supplying negligible responses. This morning was an elaboration of her abdication of ministerial responsibility and lack of vision, when she read a 28-page report containing 27 new questions.

Among them she posed the earth-shattering question: "What is a television program?" while asking for further guidance on the impact of technology, and how to find incentives for Canadian programming content. These are all interesting but not germane to the major concerns of this $8 billion industry.

The Minister's fascination with technology has prompted her to forget that it is only a means to an end and not an end in itself.

The Minister seems to expect that time, the CRTC, and 25 applications for specialty service licences will stand still while she makes up her mind about the kind of broad general policy she believes should guide us and viewers and what they see on our TV screen. At this critical juncture in the broadcast industry's history, we need more answers from the Minister, not more questions.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

WHYCOCOMAGH INDIAN BAND—SETTLEMENT OF LAND CLAIM ADVOCATED

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to conclude negotiations with the Whycocomagh Indian Band Council.

The claim itself was admitted in 1984. There is no dispute as to the liability of the Government of Canada to these native people for land that was wrongly taken. A lengthy and detailed appraisal process has been agreed to and settled. It is now time for the Government to make an offer.

This band has strong leadership. Chief Googoo and his council want to invest the proceeds from the settlement in developments that will benefit their membership. This will also benefit the entire region.

These people have been patient. It is now time for real action. To date, successive changes by the Department of Justice as to which lawyer will handle the file have frustrated efforts to conclude the matter. Internal bureaucratic transfers and promotions do not justify these delays.

I look forward to news from the Department that bona fide negotiations have been resumed and that a bona fide offer has been made to my constituents.

NATURAL RESOURCES

NECHAKO RIVER—CRITICISM OF AGREEMENT ON WATER FLOW LEVELS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, while the out-of-court settlement between Alcan and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) preserves the Nanika River which flows into the Morice and Skeena systems, it does so at a very high cost to the Nechako, one of the main tributaries of the Fraser River. The agreement will reduce water flow on the Nechako to 58 per cent of the minimum flow required for Chinook salmon.

Alcan has made vague promises about industrial development in northern British Columbia but it has no plans to develop a new smelter in the area, and the agreement has absolutely no job guarantee. At the same time the agreement ignores the present or potential needs of downstream users such as irrigation farmers. The Water Control Board does not have a representative on it of the commercial fishing industry.

At the very least the Minister should ask the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans to travel to northern British Columbia and hold hearings on the agreement. We must make sure that vital public questions about fishing runs on the Nechako, job guarantees, and downstream users have adequate answers.

HOUSING

SAGUENAY—LAC-SAINT-JEAN REGION—WAITING LISTS—GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, last Friday 80-odd representatives of the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean housing municipal offices gathered for a regional conference in Alma in my riding.

The representatives took this opportunity to emphasize the problem of waiting lists. Like them I consider that the shortage of low-priced housing units is very serious, and I would suggest it is particularly important to raise the issue in this year of the homeless.

Still it is interesting to note that our Government has made a tremendous effort since 1984, so much so that in the riding I represent we have invested in excess of $6 million to build or manage this kind of housing units for families and elderly people. I intend to continue to defend the rights of these people so that additional funds be earmarked for my riding.

IMMIGRATION

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO FORMER B.C. SUPREME COURT JUDGE CONDEMNED

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, this Party, and I certainly hope all members of the other two Parties do likewise, feels ashamed and degraded that a former judge of the B.C. Supreme Court should advocate in this day and age that our immigration policy should cater to non-coloured immigrants. What arrogance to suggest that a country, which originally belonged to the native Indian people, and which has been developed by people from many races, should cater only to Caucasian immigrants.

We in British Columbia are proud of the contribution of all our citizens. We oppose discrimination, both subtle and, as in this unfortunate case, obvious. Chinese Canadians built our railways and then their families were excluded by legislation at the beginning of the century. Japanese Canadians also contributed greatly to our culture and economy, yet we discriminated against them as well. Indo Canadians built our forest industry. It is time that we recognized all our citizens and chastized such persons as Mr. J. V. Clyne.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

CORPORATE CONCENTRATION—PRINCIPAL GROUP BANKRUPTCY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on a matter which will significantly affect Canada in coming years, that is, corporate concentration. That results when a firm or conglomerate dominates the market in which it operates. The causes of this domination range from relative efficiency to collusion among a small number.

The recent collapse of the Principal Group clearly illustrates that corporate paper games are severely damaging to the individual, to the credibility of financial institutions, and to government. These corporate actions do not create economic growth or jobs, they just make the whole economic pie smaller as specific interests gain control over a greater piece.

I call upon the Government of Canada to take specific action with regard to the collapse of the Principal Group, and also to curb these corporate concentration games being played by a select few.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

AIR-INDIA CRASH—ALLEGED ADVANCE WARNING

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is with regard to the destruction of Air-India Flight 182 off the coast of Ireland over two years ago. According to an ex-RCMP informer the RCMP and the Security Intelligence Service had advance warning with regard to the bombing of Air-India Flight 182 which claimed the lives of 329 individuals.

Mr. Paul Besso, a former member of the Canadian Armed Forces, claims that he was personally present and carried a listening device given to him by the RCMP when several individuals discussed bombing the Air-India plane.

In view of these most serious allegations by an ex-RCMP informer, will the Prime Minister of Canada immediately initiate a Royal Commission inquiry into the bombing of Air-India Flight 182 and also into the behaviour and conduct of officials of the Government of Canada in advance of June 23, 1985?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have on a number of earlier occasions in this House, I would like to refer to the response of the Minister of Transport at that time as reported in Hansard of June 25, 1985. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, from time to time there were requests for additional security by Air-India authorities. There were extra RCMP deployed both at Toronto and at Mirabel, as there has been for some time. I should point out to the House that there was no indication that there was a specific threat to Flight 182—

I fully reinvestigated the matter this morning. That statement stands. It was true then and is still true right now.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO INFORMER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are wondering why the Government of Canada has refused to initiate a Royal Commission inquiry into this particular tragedy. There was a Royal Commission inquiry into the Hinton rail disaster, there was a Royal Commission inquiry investigating the Ocean Ranger tragedy, and there was a Royal Commission inquiry costing Canadian taxpayers close to $5 million into the conduct of a former Minister of the Crown.

Yet, with regard to the most serious, most gruesome, and most hideous crime in Canadian history, the murder of 329 individuals, the Canadian Government is refusing to come clean and have a full and complete investigation. Canadians are wondering whether the Government is hiding something.

Mr. Besso—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Nunziata: —also indicated to me that while a paid informer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police he handled explosives. He said:

> Between a week and three days before Air-India flight went down, I was told by two Sikhs that—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: It is not the place of the Speaker to comment upon the substance of a question except to say that all Hon. Members know that this is a matter of considerable concern to all Members in this House and to the Canadian public. I would expect that as the Member is the lead Member for the Official Opposition he would be given a courteous hearing. The Hon. Member will put his question.

• (1420)

Mr. Nunziata: Is the Prime Minister aware of Mr. Besso's statement, and I quote:

> Between a week and three days before Air-India flight went down, I was told by two Sikhs that Air-India was a definite target of theirs, that they wanted to do in a plane, an Air-India plane.

Is the Prime Minister aware of that particular statement by Mr. Besso?

Mr. Mazankowski: Why don't you finish the quote?

Mr. Nunziata: And can he comment on whether or not he was made aware of Mr. Besso's statement?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, again we have another example of selective reading by the Hon. Member. Why does he not go on and finish the statement where it is alleged Mr. Besso said:

> Now I wasn't told a specific flight or day or anything like that—?

Again, I repeat the statement made by the then Minister of Transport who said: "I should point out to the House that there was no indication that there was a specific threat to Flight 182".

I re-examined the matter fully this morning. The Commissioner of the RCMP was also involved. I can tell the Hon. Member that this statement stands. It was true then and it is true now.

EXAMINATION OF LUGGAGE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): The Solicitor General knows and the Prime Minister knows that in June of 1985 there was one Air-India flight a week.

Mr. Gauthier: One!

Mr. Nunziata: The Government admits it received advance warning. Air-India, in its statement of claim, is alleging negligence on behalf of the Government of Canada. It says it gave written notice. Mr. Besso says he was a paid informer and that in fact there are tapes showing there was advance warning to the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Nunziata: If in fact—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member, with good reason, has been given considerable latitude on preamble. Perhaps he could put his final question.

Mr. Nunziata: Again my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. If in fact there was warning in advance of something happening, or something about to happen, to an Air-India flight, would the Prime Minister of Canada tell us why each and every piece of luggage was not hand-searched? Why was it that 75 per cent of the luggage went through an X-ray scanner and the remaining 25 per cent was simply X-rayed by a hand-held wand? If in fact there was advance warning—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Nunziata: —why did the Government not insist that each and every piece of luggage be hand-searched?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, again I would like to quote from a statement, this time from the Royal Commission conducted in India. At page 154 of his judgment, the judge stated:

> Air-India had also requested and had received and arranged for extra security for the month of June, 1985.

As the Hon. Member well knows, not only is there an ongoing civil action, which is sub judice, but there is an extremely active criminal investigation into this heinous crime. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to do anything that would in any way impede the successful completion of this investigation.

Some Hon. Members: Resign!

POLITICAL RESPONSIBILITY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General concerning another aspect of the problem.

This informer, Paul Besso, revealed his identity as a police informer because the RCMP failed to keep their promise to provide him with new identification papers and protection as witness after he infiltrated a terrorist group. The Government had been aware of problems related to this program since last December when a Nova Scotia informer, Leonard Mitchell, was denied the protection of a false identity as an informer.

The Minister should have corrected the problem last December. Is he now prepared to accept his political responsibility in this case? Does he now intend—as he did in the case of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, when he shifted blame on the shoulders of Ted Finn—to shift the blame on to the RCMP Commissioner?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this Minister has at all times shouldered his responsibility.

• (1425)

Mr. Kelleher: I have stood here day after day, as is expected of me, and I have answered fully and frankly every proper and sensible question put to me.

With respect to Mr. Besso, as I am sure the Hon. Member well knows, he has commenced a civil action against the RCMP for services rendered. That is presently pending and is now before the courts. He has his remedies which may be available to him in that action.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ACTIONS OF RCMP

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister wants the House to accept that the only political responsibility of a Minister is to answer questions and never to resign. In the case of the security service it was the director who had to resign. Who will take the responsibility in connection with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for this serious failing that has been revealed?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will be the first to admit that a Minister's responsibility is to do more than to stand here and to answer questions fully and frankly in the House. I have also been doing the other bit. Each and every time that a problem has arisen within the Force, immediately upon it coming to my attention I have taken prompt and efficient action to remedy any problems.

If the Hon. Member has some specific allegations to make, then why does he not come forward and give them to me and I will see that they are looked into fully?

Mr. Kaplan: I just did!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that he is prepared to take all the actions appropriate to his sense of responsibility. I want to follow up on what he said earlier.

Mr. Besso's accusation, as everyone knows, is extremely serious. He has said that he provided information which in his judgment, presumably, was sufficient to have headed off the destruction of this Air-India aircraft and saved, presumably, all those lives. He has further added that there is documentary proof of his allegation to be found in RCMP files. The Minister categorically said just a few minutes ago that he checked this out, that he has come back and is satisfied that there was no wrong-doing or incompetence.

Can the Minister tell us if he checked with Mr. Besso or did he simply check with the RCMP, about whom Mr. Besso was making those charges?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have made it quite clear that the then Minister of Transport made a statement in 1985, and again I quote: "I should point out to the House that there was no indication that there was a specific threat to Flight 182".

I fully reinvestigated this matter this morning with the assistance of the Commissioner of the RCMP with respect to this particular story. What I am saying quite clearly and plainly to the House is that that statement still stands. It was true then and it is true now as I stand here. I do not see how I can be more clear than that.

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, with respect, the question is not one of clarity, the question is one of competence. That is what is at stake here.

Since the accusation was made about the incompetence of the RCMP and since the person making the accusation said that documentary evidence exists that supports his case, does the Minister not feel in terms of his obligation to the House that he has an obligation to check for the evidence that Mr. Besso says is available, and not just ask the RCMP?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am answering the accusation. I went to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I went to the Commissioner. We fully discussed it. We looked into the allegations. The RCMP reviewed their files. They were in touch with their officers on the West Coast. I am telling the Hon. Member that I accept the evidence, the integrity and honesty of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelleher: —over a person who is an alleged informer and who was looking to receive services for something he told us. That is not true or accurate.

• (1430)

AVAILABILITY OF EVIDENCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): With respect, I think that the Minister has just proven beyond any question that he is totally incompetent in terms of getting to the bottom of the problem.

In fairness to the integrity and reputation of the RCMP, and all the RCMP people who wish to do a good job—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: What arrogance.

Mr. Broadbent: I remind the Conservatives that there was incompetence in the RCMP in the past, and they know it very well. I wish to ask the Minister—

Mr. Siddon: Are you questioning the Commissioner's—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Did you never hear of the McDonald report?

Mr. Broadbent: Read the McDonald report some time.

Mr. Hees: You would have never said those things!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the seriousness of the allegations, does the Minister think it appropriate to request the Commissioner of the RCMP to bring to his attention the evidence that Mr. Besso stated is available?

Mr. Hees: That is what he said.

Mr. Broadbent: No, he did not.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, of course it is a serious allegation. I am not suggesting for a moment it is not. Perhaps the Hon. Member is not, but I am very concerned about the integrity of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and their reputation.

Mr. Riis: Why the cover-up?

Mr. Kelleher: That is why, immediately, I went to the Commissioner, bright and early this morning—

Mr. Broadbent: You are so thick.

Mr. Kelleher: This is why he has spoken—

Mr. Mazankowski: You don't trust the RCMP?

Mr. Kelleher: —to his officers. They have fully reviewed the file in question, and they have come back, and I told you that the statement that was made in 1985 was true then, and it is still true now as a result of their reinvestigation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Get Bob White to investigate.

Mr. Broadbent: He will do it about 10 times as fast.

Mr. Mazankowski: Self-appointed guardian of the RCMP? You have come a long way.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONSULTANTS' REPORT ON MANAGEMENT OF MANITOBA REGION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs.

The Coopers & Lybrand Consulting Group has now confirmed in its report that indeed there was serious mismanagement in the Manitoba region of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs.

We wish to know from the Minister how he intends to clean up this disgraceful mess in Manitoba. When will the Minister show some interest in his job and meet with the bands in Manitoba and work with them to develop a financial regime that is more appropriate to the goals of self-government?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am a bit disappointed. I thought a Member with his concern and time in the House would have read the report.

Mr. Penner: I read it in detail.

Mr. McKnight: A Member with the time and concern that the Hon. Member has would have read the report and the allegations that were made. I as Minister asked the Office of the Comptroller General to investigate those allegations, and I as Minister asked the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to investigate accusations of criminal activity. The report that has been put forward does not, as the Hon. Member states, talk about gross negligence within the region.

Mr. Penner: Serious mismanagement.

Mr. McKnight: I have received the report. I will be working with the Office of the Comptroller General on those recommendations. Hopefully, by working together we will be able to rectify any and all financial problems that may be associated with the Department, and Indian bands and tribal councils in Manitoba.

Mr. de Corneille: Your time has come.

DEPARTMENT'S SERVICE TO INDIAN PEOPLE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): The Minister knows that the phrase I used was "serious mismanagement". The Minister ought to know by now that both he and his Department are more part of the problem than they are the solution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: I wish to quote from Hansard what his predecessor stated in June, 1986, when he was talking about departmental mismanagement, "—it is a matter that obviously needs to be investigated in all regions of the country—"

I wish to know what the Minister plans to do in order to ensure that his Department, where it is still needed, begins to serve Indian people instead of always looking after itself?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I wish to read briefly from the report, "although the region satisfactorily complies with most parliamentary and government policies and requirements where it—" meaning the Department, "delivers services directly to Indians, it fails to fully comply with these policies and requirements where administrative responsibilities have been devolved to Indian bands, tribal councils or their representatives".

We are being criticized for transferring resources and funds to Indian Governments to allow them to administer those funds. The Hon. Member is suggesting that the Department should be more rigid, more paternalistic—

Mr. Penner: You know better than that.

Mr. McKnight: —more demanding of Indian Governments. We will comply, but we will not stifle the ability of Indian people to govern themselves with the funds provided.

AIR-INDIA CRASH—INFORMER'S ALLEGATIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General.

Last week we learned in the House that CSIS negligence and failure to inform their political masters may well have led to the possible death of a visiting cabinet Minister.

Today we learned that the RCMP may have been negligent in failing to inform those who were responsible for the possible attack on Air-India which led to the deaths of 329 people.

Does the Minister agree that Paul Besso did alert the RCMP to the possibility, in general terms, of an attack on Air-India, several days before that attack? I am not talking here about the specific flight or date, but if the Minister accepts that, how can he possibly explain the failure of those responsible to ensure the safety of those 329 passengers?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, naturally I will attempt to answer the question. Again let me repeat what was stated by the Hon. Minister of Transport in June of 1985: "I should point out to the House that there was no indication that there was a specific threat to Flight 182".

I am aware of the story to which the Hon. Member refers.

Mr. de Corneille: Resign!

Mr. Kelleher: I am aware of the statements he is alleged to have made. I have fully reinvestigated the matter—

Mr. Broadbent: Have you looked at the evidence? You haven't even looked at the evidence.

Mr. de Corneille: Resign!

Mr. Kelleher: I have fully reinvestigated the matter this morning.

Mr. Rodriguez: Thanks, Sherlock.

Mr. Kelleher: I have fully investigated the matter again this morning. I have fully discussed it with the Commissioner of the RCMP who has gone through the files again, and discussed it with his people.

Mr. Riis: Sounds like a cover-up, Jim.

Mr. Kelleher: The statement that was made in June of 1985 was true then, and it's still true now notwithstanding the story that has appeared.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, this Minister has to be the most appalling example of incompetence that this House has seen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member has strong views, but I know that the Hon. Member would wish to use a preamble to set the facts upon which he bases his question. The Hon. Member will put his question.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER EXAMINE DOCUMENTATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister a very straightforward question.

In view of the serious allegations by Paul Besso suggesting that he informed the RCMP several days ahead of time of the possibility, in general terms, of an attack on an Air-India flight, I wish to ask the Minister why has he not personally reviewed the documentation which Besso turned over to the RCMP? Why has the Minister not personally reviewed that documentation, listened to the wire-taps himself, and examined this very serious allegation? Why is the Minister failing to accept his responsibility, and in the process casting a shadow over the RCMP? Why will the Minister not act?

Mr. Jelinek: Don't you trust the RCMP?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): I don't think it should be the obligation of the Solicitor General to start involving himself personally in investigations and reading all of the evidence, because the first thing that I would then hear from the Hon. Member is of the political interference by the Solicitor General.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1440)

Mr. Kelleher: The Hon. Member tries to have it both ways. He wants to be in a position to charge me either with political interference or not involving myself.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM

PAY-OUT FORMULA

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Is it true if there is a future pay-out to farmers under the Special Canadian Grains Program, the formula will be based upon actual production for eastern farmers and upon an area average production for western farmers? If so, why?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's continuing interest in the economic well-being of Canadian farmers. No doubt his question is prompted by the third meeting of series two which we held in Winnipeg on August 27. It was attended by about 50 farm leaders.

A suggestion was put forth by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture after a great deal of consultation with other farm groups. It met with overwhelming approval. I believe there were one or two dissenting associations. I told them that if it met the test of fairness and equity, we would give it very serious consideration. That is exactly the process we are going through at the moment.

HIRING OF STRIKE-BREAKERS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Yesterday the Minister certainly clarified the position of the Government with regard to the use of strike-breakers in the coming mail strike.

Now we know that Canada Post is allowed to advertise for strike-breakers and to train them, and that it is planning to use them to deliver mail during a strike, with the agreement of the Government, despite the dismal failure of the previous attempt to use strike-breakers which led to violence on the picket lines and an embitterment of the climate around the negotiating table.

Will the Minister not order Canada Post immediately to cease hiring strike-breakers—

Some Hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Scabs, that is what they are. If the Minister will not ask Canada Post to stop hiring scabs and, rather, to negotiate honestly without confrontation, are Canada Post and the Government really serious about delivering the mail?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, again we have the Liberal Party giving contrary advice. The former Postmaster General, the Hon. Member for Papineau, says that what the Government should do is cut the umbilical cord, stop directing Canada Post in its operations, and let Canada Post operate.

That is what we are endeavouring to do in the circumstance. They must obey the law. The law provides that they can have strikes and that the employer can continue to operate if possible, within the law. Canada Post will obey the law.

If members of the Liberal Party are suggesting that there has been bad faith at the negotiating table with respect to Canada Post, let them provide me with that evidence and I will raise it with management, but there is no such evidence to imply that.

If members of the Liberal Party are suggesting that Canada Post should acquiesce to the union totally or shut down the Post Office in view of a strike, let them take that position publicly and defend it to the public that has to go without postal service.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): If government Members feel content to follow suit with the management of Gainers by hiring strike-breakers and scabs, let them do it. Now we know that they want to do it.

REQUEST THAT CANADA POST BE ORDERED TO NEGOTIATE IN GOOD FAITH

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, in fact the Minister is acting as though he did not fullly grasp the implications, and that is what is likely to happen when scabs are hired. Yet the Minister did see that it led to violence the last time. The Minister knows the climate at the bargaining table has grown worse. This is why I want to convey to the Minister the message of thousands of Canadians who feel that the Government is taking the wrong approach. What I want to tell the Minister is this: Wait a minute, you are taking chances! And I want to ask the Minister to direct Canada Post forthwith to negotiate in good faith, not under the sword of Damocles of scabs, but to negotiate in good faith, without confrontation so as to reach a negotiated settlement. It is the only way to ensure mail delivery.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that of course Canada Post should negotiate in good faith; so should CUPW. Both parties should be negotiating, trying to seek a solution to the dispute without resorting to a strike.

Nobody wants a strike. It is absurd to suggest that anybody wants a strike. It is also absurd to suggest that one should acquiesce in the face of violence. It is absurd to suggest that something went wrong with the system in terms of the previous LCUC negotiations, because a negotiated settlement resulted which was satisfactory to both sides. Those who engaged in violence are facing charges before the courts, and properly so.

I think we would be doing the public a favour if we counselled non-violence to everybody—obey the law—and in the meantime tried to reach a negotiated settlement without a strike.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTO PACT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Southam Press reports government officials as ready to change the Auto Pact, despite the Industry Minister telling Canadian auto workers and producers just a week and a half ago that the pact was not even on the table.

This looks to me like a desperate last minute effort to pull out a free trade deal which will save the Prime Minister's face—

Mr. Speaker: I ask Hon. Members to be careful in their preambles to be setting the fact pattern for a question, not just making an announcement, no matter how interesting that announcement might be. The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Langdon: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your interest.

Why is the Prime Minister prepared to trade away this pact which has benefited so many workers across the country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not at all the intention of the Government to trade away the Auto Pact. It was the Government of Canada which negotiated the Auto Pact itself—the federal Government, 22 years ago—and the NDP was quite strongly opposed to the Auto Pact at that time.

Had we followed the protectionist advice of the NDP and the United Auto Workers at that time, there would have been no Auto Pact which has brought such benefits to Canada and to Ontario.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The premise of the Hon. Member's question is quite false and totally misleading. I have already responded to the Leader of the Opposition with regard to automotive issues as raised at the First Ministers' Conference.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT IS WILLING TO DESTROY AUTO PACT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Why is the Prime Minister willing to destroy the Auto Pact, which has created jobs in so many communities? Why is he willing to do so?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question was false in English and it is also false in French.

[English]

MARKETING OF POTASH—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION IN SASKATCHEWAN

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade I should like to direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary.

In view of the legislation being enacted in the Province of Saskatchewan on control of potash marketing, has the federal Government given consideration to the constitutional and legal implications of this legislation, particularly in respect of trade?

If so, would the Parliamentary Secretary be willing to make a statement in the House?

• (1450)

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that the federal Government supports Saskatchewan's right to act in the interests within its own jurisdiction. As we know in Canada, the Saskatchewan Government is responsible for the natural resources of the province.

The people of Saskatchewan are being hammered right now, not only on potash but on uranium and subsidized wheat. We share their outrage at the unwarranted attacks by the Americans on trade. Our Government will continue to support their fight in any way we can.

AUTO PACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a supplementary question with the Prime Minister on the matter of the present negotiations being conducted with the United States on the trade package.

It is clear the Government is backtracking on a number of previous commitments it made to protect Canadian interests. Statements were made in the past that the Auto Pact would not even be talked about but we know it is on the table today being negotiated.

Has the Prime Minister given clear instructions to our chief negotiator that, as the Americans bring this pact forward for negotiation, we will not in any way allow the safeguard provisions of the Auto Pact to be negotiated away considering that it is the primary provision which guarantees jobs for Canadian workers in the auto industry?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the statement in regard to backtracking is quite misleading. There has been no change whatever in the position of the Government of Canada from the very beginning. The principles that the Minister for International Trade and I have laid out on behalf of the Government of Canada have been consistently followed by Ambassador Simon Reisman and his very excellent and worthy group of officials who are, at this very moment, conducting very delicate and complex negotiations on behalf of the people of Canada. I know my hon. friend would want to do nothing that would undermine their efforts.

AUTO PACT SAFEGUARDS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in defence of those interests and in defence against the undermining that appears to be taking place, did the chief negotiator have clear instructions from the Government of Canada? As we are now negotiating the Auto Pact, which the Prime Minister said we would not do, is it clear that the Government will not negotiate away the safeguard provision which is the guarantee in the Auto Pact that jobs will be protected in Canada? Why doesn't the Prime Minister simply say that those safeguards will be safeguarded?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the statement is inaccurate and misleading. We are not now negotiating the Auto Pact.

Mr. Axworthy: It is on the table today.

Mr. Mulroney: Now the Member says it is on the table. The Member just said "We are now negotiating the Auto Pact".

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, today. Right now.

Mr. Mulroney: I am—

Mr. Axworthy: Right now.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry put a question, and while I know other Hon. Members would like to put questions as well, perhaps there could be a proper turn for them to ask their questions. In the meantime perhaps the Right Hon. Prime Minister can be given a chance to answer.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the statement of my hon. friend is inaccurate and completely misleading. This Government in the area of automotive products and the Auto Pact has defended consistently and, I think, well, the interests of Canada and the Province of Ontario in regard to the importance of that very critical trading instrument. It is indeed a model for other sectors of the growth economy.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It is not free trade.

Mr. Mulroney: We have indicated many times that the Americans are quite satisfied with the Auto Pact and very pleased with the way it has developed. If, however, they have some ideas that can contribute to jobs, greater wealth, greater prosperity for both sides, then, of course, we will listen. Surely my hon. friend would not want us to turn away an opportunity for greater jobs and prosperity. That matter has not yet been broached by the Americans at the table. If indeed it is, I will be happy to confirm it. But I can tell my hon. friend that the statement he made some moments ago is false and misleading, no doubt inadvertently.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that I am immensely relieved.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—WOMEN'S EQUALITY RIGHTS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and all the provincial Premiers have said that in drafting the Constitutional Accord they had no intention whatever of putting in question women's hard fought for, hard-won equality rights. Why then should there be any difficulty at all for First Ministers making explicit in the Accord what they say they intended?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say respectfully to my hon. friend, who exemplifies the very best of the fight over the years for equality, that at all times that important concept has been protected and defended during the Meech Lake Accord discussions. My understanding is that the weight of the evidence fully supports that view.

I think my hon. friend can be fully satisfied, and I think my hon. friend has indicated her satisfaction in the past, with the value of this approach and the fact that it in no way erodes or diminishes those rights.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the First Ministers will not clarify in the Accord what they say they intended to put there on women's equality rights.

REQUEST FOR MEETING OF CONSTITUTIONAL EXPERTS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, representatives of national women's organizations have requested a meeting of their constitutional experts with the Government's constitutional advisers to discuss the potential effect of the Accord on women's equality rights.

Will the Prime Minister facilitate such a meeting between the constitutional experts in the national women's organizations and the Government's experts, and will he do so this week?

Mr. Broadbent: Say yes.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of meetings in this regard. As I say, the weight of the evidence clearly supports the view subscribed to by the majority in the Meech Lake Accord report.

Ms. Jewett: I am asking for a meeting.

Mr. Mulroney: It is indicated here that the New Democratic Party members of the joint committee do not believe that the linguistic duality of the distinct society interpretation clause abrogates, supersedes or overrides—

Ms. Jewett: I am asking about a meeting.

Mr. Mulroney: —sexual equality rights or any other rights guaranteed by the Charter. I share that view.

Ms. Jewett: Why don't you answer the question?

Mr. Mulroney: In the process of completing the Constitutional Accord which brings Quebec in, it also allows us to have many meetings dealing with some fundamental issues. I will be happy to meet with my hon. friend or to follow up on any suggestion that is made at that time. But I think first things first. I think we must proceed with the Accord and take some important decisions in regard to the nationhood of Canada.

Ms. Jewett: You didn't listen to the question.

Mr. Broadbent: He didn't get the question.

PROTECTION OF WOMEN'S RIGHTS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, yesterday when discussing the Meech Lake Accord the Prime Minister stated in the House with respect to rights provided in the Canadian Charter:

> —fundamental assurances can be given as to the protection of those rights without any changes being made in the wording of the distinct society clause.

What fundamental assurance is the Prime Minister referring to? Assurances of politicians are not binding in a court so why won't the Prime Minister commit them to writing in the Accord itself for the judges and the courts to follow, to ensure that individual rights and freedoms guaranteed to all Canadians, including women, are not affected by the Meech Lake Accord?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): That matter has been frequently and appropriately responded to by me and others in this House.

Mr. Speaker: The Member for Mount Royal on a short supplemental.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that that is not the view of everyone in Canada and I will proceed to ask a supplementary question.

The Prime Minister knows that by including multicultural and aboriginal rights in Section 16 of the Meech Lake Accord he may be excluding or diminishing other rights. Why will the Prime Minister not clarify that the Accord does not take away rights granted to Canadians in the Charter? Why will he not include a brief statement that the Meech Lake Accord does not weaken the Charter of Rights? Why don't you answer the concerns of Canadians in that regard?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says that the Meech Lake Accord does not reflect the views of everyone in Canada. I am aware of that.

Mrs. Finestone: I asked about the Charter of Rights.

Mr. Mulroney: Perhaps my hon. friend should keep Party disputes off the floor of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Cheap shot.

Mr. Penner: Tell us about Pat Nowlan.

An Hon. Member: What are the assurances you were talking about yesterday?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure Hon. Members would want to extend the appropriate courtesies. I would ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister to answer the question and ask Hon. Members to give the Prime Minister a chance to answer.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I say with respect that we do not accept in any way the legal opinion of my hon. friend. That opinion has not been accepted by the majority of members of the Meech Lake Accord report which is submitted here.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Who are they?

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend, the Opposition House Leader, says: "Who are they?". They are right here, where it is signed under "those for" and signed under "those against", but the Liberals are listed under "abstentions".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR-INDIA CRASH—INFORMER'S ALLEGATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Earlier today he said something deeply disturbing about his responsibility as a Minister. It concerns the allegation by Mr. Besso, who claims that he will submit to a lie detector test to support his claims that the RCMP had relevant information before the Air-India crash that we were discussing earlier, and that will support his claim that the RCMP has documentary evidence that he provided. He is willing to do this.

The Minister said earlier that for him to pursue it further would be to indulge in some kind of political interference. I have a copy of the Act. Section 5 of the Act, dealing with his responsibilities, states that: "The Governor in Council may appoint an officer to be known as the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who, under the direction of the Minister, has the control and management of the Force in all matters connected therewith".

Considering that this holds the Minister responsible for the direction, presumably to be involved if there have been allegations of mismanagement, will the Minister exercise his responsibility to the House properly and investigate directly the serious allegations that have been made about the RCMP?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will try once again to make myself quite clear to the Hon. Member. I did discharge my duties. I did pursue it further. I went to the Commissioner of the RCMP and asked him to reinvestigate the matter. He contacted the officers in charge. He has fully discussed it with them, both on the West Coast and here.

The Commissioner has discharged his duty to me and I to the Canadian people. I have looked into it fully. I guess the difference is that I have faith and trust in the integrity of the RCMP and the Hon. Member does not.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not understand the seriousness of the situation? He is asking the RCMP to be the judge in their own case, which is a violation of all serious administrative practice. Since the serious accusation has been made about RCMP incompetence that could have led to the deaths of hundreds, does the Minister not agree that he should accept his responsibility as described in the Act and look at the evidence directly, and then make a judgment? If he does not, will he do the proper thing and resign his office right now?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat that there is absolutely no evidence to indicate from any source that there was any specific threat against Flight 182. There were certainly allegations made that some harm might come to Air-India flights. Those were taken and considered and, as we have already stated, additional security was indeed supplied by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police both at Mirabel and at Toronto.

Everything that should have been done was in fact done, and we again reinvestigated the matter this morning. The story stands. It was true then, and it is true now.

AIRPORTS

FINGERPRINTING OF EMPLOYEES—TESTING OF DRUG SNIFFING DOGS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Transport but in his absence I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will know that next week Transport Canada, in an effort to crack down on the bungling of security at airports across the country, will be requiring cleaning personnel and everyone working in all airports to begin being fingerprinted.

At the same time he should be aware that there are reports from Edmonton International Airport that, as a result of the policies of the Government's customs intelligence division, customs officers have actually been planting drugs in the luggage of passengers who are embarking on international flights in order to check the olfactory sense of drug sniffing dogs, to see if they can actually sniff drugs. Does he not think it is a little ridiculous that, on the one hand, the cleaning staff will now be fingerprinted while, on the other, the Government is allowing the security intelligence service of Customs actually to plant drugs in the luggage of passengers who are embarking on international flights, thus placing those passengers in an untenable position?

Mr. Benjamin: Sniff that one out.

Mr. Axworthy: The Government is going to the dogs.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the very serious allegations that the Hon. Member has outlined. I am sure that the Hon. Minister of Transport will want to look into them.

Mr. Axworthy: Speaking of dogs.

Mr. Mazankowski: On his behalf, I will take that question as a representation. I should point out that in May of 1986, the Department of Transport, under the authority of the Treasury Board, increased the funding for airport security by some $33.6 million, with additional resources. I believe that the security and surveillance system at our airports has one of the highest standards in the world. I know all Members will join me in supporting their efforts in that regard.

CLARIFICATION BY MEMBERS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that at page 9150 of yesterday's Hansard I may have inadvertently left the impression that I accused some specific individual in this House of a deliberate attempt to deceive. I want to say categorically that it was not my intention. If people have been hurt by that, I apologize. If I ever come to the point where I think it is happening, I will be very specific about it. It was not my intention and I apologize.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has risen on a point of order of his own volition, which may very well obviate the necessity of hearing another point. However, there is an Hon. Member who has given me notice of an application. The Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) on the same point.

[Translation]

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, I fully understand the explanation of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). He spoke about an individual, but I would have liked him to mention the name of this individual because I was personally involved. I do not believe that his excuses were personal. They were very general. I would therefore like him to explain his point of order. Who exactly did he attack?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to limit any Hon. Member's right in this Chamber when it comes to a matter upon which the Hon. Member may feel grieved. I would invite the Hon. Member for Calgary West to rise, perhaps just for a moment, and be absolutely specific. I think that might end the matter.

• (1510)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I did not have the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) in mind. I had no specific Member of the House in mind. I did not put my remarks in that context and I am sorry offence was taken. I do apologize and I will try to be more careful with the way I string my thoughts together in future.

Mr. Speaker: I think that is about as abject as we are likely to get in this Chamber.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED MISUSE OF THE WORD PARLIAMENTARY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wish to raise before the House and Your Honour an action which I believe to be in contempt of Parliament, thereby impeding this House in the performance of its function and affecting the privileges of all Members of Parliament. Let me say at the outset that if you deem I have a prima facie case of privilege, I am prepared to move the appropriate motion to refer the subject matter to the appropriate parliamentary committee.

The issue I raise concerns what I believe to be a misuse of the word "parliamentary" by the Progressive Conservative Party or an agent of that organization in the offering of a service to be known as the Parliamentary News Service. I bring to your attention the communiqué released by one Ken Lawrence on behalf of the Parliamentary News Service which says:

> We are the mechanism to get you and the Progressive Conservative MPs together.

It goes on to describe other ways in which Conservative Members of Parliament are to be communicated with by means of this so-called Parliamentary News Service.

Erskine May's Twentieth Edition, speaking to the issue of contempt of Parliament, at page 143 states:

> It may be stated generally that any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent for the offence.

Clearly we are talking about a situation which has never arisen before. I also want to bring to your attention the definition of privilege which is important to your adjudication of this case. It is described at page 11 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition:

> They are enjoyed by individual Members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members; and by each House for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity.

I submit that an organization should not refer to goods or services as parliamentary, thereby leading the people of Canada to believe that a service originates from Parliament Hill when such is not the case. I cite some rulings for your information.

On May 6, 1985, the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer) raised before this House what he said was a misuse of the words "Member of Parliament", by a former MP. The Speaker said at that time, and I quote from page 4439 of Hansard:

> It should go without saying that a Member of Parliament needs to perform his functions effectively and that anything tending to cause confusion as to a Member's identity creates the possibility of an impediment to the fulfilment of that Member's functions.

If it was true that anything that confused people as to a Member of Parliament's identity could be an offence, then by extension I say to you that anything that confuses the identity of what is parliamentary or Parliament itself would have to be adjudicated in a similar manner.

I also want to bring to your attention the case of Sperry & Hutchison, a firm that used Hansard for publicity in the past and was deemed to have been in contempt of this House. Therefore, if the use of a parliamentary document for something that was not parliamentary was deemed to be an offence, the word "parliamentary" I submit should be treated in the same matter.

In 1983 there occurred an incident where advertisements were placed in the Ottawa Citizen and two other newspapers by an individual named Harry Rosen which depicted Parliament Hill and a caption with the words:

> Madam Speaker, I move we adjourn so we can all go to the opening of Harry's new store!

Counsel, on behalf of the Speaker, wrote to Mr. Rosen and the newspapers in question ordering them to cease and desist. I have a copy of that advertisement and it was designed in such a way as to confuse people into believing that parliamentarians had said or were purported to have said that they were doing something they were not in fact doing in Parliament.

I am not saying that all unauthorized usage of the word "parliamentary" is improper. That would be ludicrous and I am sure you would agree. However, in my view it is improper to attempt to mislead people into believing something belongs to Parliament when it does not. For that reason I think you should investigate the case I am bringing before you.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, on October 29, 1980, as shown on page 4214 of Hansard, the Speaker had this to say about contempt of Parliament:

> I can assure all Hon. Members that the dimension of contempt of Parliament is such that the House will not be constrained in finding a breach of privileges of Members, or of the House.

This is what Madam Speaker said on October 29, 1980.

[English]

Perhaps Joseph Maingot, Q.C., in his book Parliamentary Privilege in Canada said it best when, on page 196, he stated:

> Contempt is whatever House finds as contempt.

While we are dealing here with an issue which has not occurred before, I submit that it cannot be argued by anyone as not being contempt simply because the issue has not been brought to the attention of Parliament. Indeed, what I am describing is the service of a satellite to broadcast propaganda on behalf of a political Party. That could be offensive in itself, but to do so under the name of this Parliament I believe is in contempt of this House.

I also believe there could be potential breaches of Acts of Parliament such as the Parliament Hill Act, the Trade Marks Act, and the PC Party may even be guilty of what lawyers call "passing off"; trying to make someone believe that a service is something other than what it really is.

In summary, I submit that the dignity of this institution is such that we have the authority to stop anyone and anything attempting to diminish the authority and dignity of the Parliament of our country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for giving me the opportunity to put my case before the House.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member has raised this important matter today. I suspect many of us have been in our constituencies over the weekend and have been approached by constituents asking about this new service emanating from Parliament Hill and whether it was a parliamentary service or whether it was what has been referred to at times as "Tory TV" or the "Tory Good News Network" or other such terms.

I think the issue at hand is very serious. As Members of Parliament, we are all too well aware that Parliament means certain things to Canadians. The institution, which includes the House of Commons and the Senate, is clearly understood by Canadians. Parliamentary traditions, institutions, practices and procedures are well known to Canadians to a greater or lesser degree. Parliament is symbolized as a place where different views from across Canada come together and are debated and where decisions are ultimately made.

The dictionary describes Parliament simplistically as an assembly which makes a country's laws. This is the assembly, the House of Commons and, unfortunately, the Senate. I say "unfortunately" because I do not know if that is the appropriate continuance.

The people of Canada have come to respect what they refer to as Parliament. Parliament has become a very important symbol for free people everywhere.

I hate to mention this to you, Mr. Speaker, but it relates to whether or not a question of privilege exists. On the weekend people reminded me that there are official news agencies in countries around the world through which the official news is related. I do not need to cite the specific names of these news agencies as we are all well aware of them. Last week it was announced that there would now be an "official view" of the news, which would be the Government's view, not Parliament's or the Opposition's, but the Government's view of the news.

I do not think this will fool Canadians. They realize that this is much more than a press release. All Members of Parliament give press releases to the media with which it does as it wishes. The media may take excerpts from them, ignore them, or use them later in editorial comment or whatever. We do not expect the media to publish our news releases verbatim as though they are the news. Yet, that is what the Parliamentary News Service is attempting to do.

This is a matter of extreme importance. If we really believe that the word "parliament" refers to the place where free and open debate takes place and decisions are ultimately made on legislation, it is very important to bring to a close quickly the matter of a Parliamentary News Agency as a reflection of the views of Parliament when it is in fact the propaganda vehicle of a political party on Parliament Hill. That is very clear.

I believe that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has raised a most important point with regard to the integrity of Parliament. If we believe, as we say we do, that Parliament is the ultimate forum where the points of view of Canadians are debated, then it must be free of any impression that it is the voice of any single political party or single ideological view which then becomes the true news. Such is not the case. I believe that my hon. friend has brought to the floor a very important point. I look forward to a number of other interjections on this important matter.

I have spoken with a number of constituents on this matter and know that ordinary Canadians are concerned that the news will be manipulated. This adds to a cynical view which, unfortunately, growing numbers of Canadians have of the Government of Canada. I do not want them to have that view of the institution of Parliament because I believe that people distinguish clearly between the political parties in Parliament and the institution of Parliament. We must take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that Parliament continues to mean what it always has, a forum of free and open debate in a democratic society.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to continue to publicize the efforts of Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament to bring the Liberal Party, kicking and screaming, into the electronic age. If we have time, we might get to the NDP too.

The Hon. Member who raised the question of privilege is claiming that he is prevented from discharging his duties.

Mr. Boudria: Not necessarily.

Mr. Lewis: I submit that that is what a question of privilege is.

Mr. Boudria: You don't know your rules if that is what you think.

Mr. Lewis: There is the odd rule I have missed, I admit, but there is the odd thing the Hon. Member has missed as well and I will get to that in a minute.

We have no difficulty with the New Democratic Party using the word "communique" in its generic sense, even though the Hon. Member who wrote this particular communique imparts a lot of information and makes a lot of comments that are clearly not true. We have not raised a question of privilege on that.

The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) uses the words "communique" and uses the print media as a form of communication. We understand that and have never complained about the Opposition using the print media to further its cause. That is part of the game, whether done individually or as a political party. When we do that we do not breach the privileges of the Hon. Member.

The Hon. Member's biggest complaint is with the use of the word "parliamentary". Let us review the word "parliamentary". Are we going to stop Mr. Pierre G. Normandin who publishes the Canadian Parliamentary Guide? I apologize for using an exhibit, Mr. Speaker, but I took these exhibits right from the Table. On the table is the Canadian Parliamentary Guide. Does it breach the Hon. Member's privilege because it uses the word "parliamentary"? Carswell publishes Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms. Is that an abuse of the word "parliamentary" and of the Member's privileges?

Let me go on to London's Butterworths printers which publishes A Parliamentary Dictionary. I wonder whether tomorrow, in an effort to delay debate, there will be a question of privilege because Butterworths is using the word "parliamentary". The next example is really bad because it uses the word "Canadian" too, that is, the Canadian Parliamentary Handbook. This is clearly an abuse perhaps even worthy of shutting down the House. This is published by Borealis Press, Ottawa, Canada. Where is the abuse of the Member's privileges in that?

I go now right to the foundation of parliamentary practice, Erskine May abusing the Hon. Member's parliamentary privilege by using the word "parliamentary". This Member's privileges have been so badly abused through the use of the word "parliamentary" that it is a wonder he can even walk let alone function as a Member of Parliament.

I invite the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party to join us in the twenty-first century where we use electronics—the radio, electronic mail and computers, rather than only paperwork. I do not knock paperwork, but the radio has been around for awhile and television even came in the other day. When is the Hon. Member going to avail himself of the tools of communications? I am sorry to see that the New Democratic Party uses the word "new" in their official party name. I know we have described them as Luddites from time to time, but this is awful.

Mr. Boudria: You use the word "progressive" in your name.

Mr. Lewis: They also join in this argument that the Member's privileges have been breached.

Is the Hon. Member saying that he never uses television or radio in order to espouse his causes? We have no difficulty with the Parliamentary News Service, just as we would have no difficulty if the New Democratic Party or the Liberal Party ever had the expertise, the gumption, or even the story to tell in order to raise their own parliamentary news service.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I just want to participate in this because I have never heard such unadulterated horse feathers in all my life. First, the Parliamentary Secretary rose and accused us of using "New" Democratic Party—

An Hon. Member: The Minister.

Mr. Rodriguez: Pardon me, the Minister. I would not want to violate his privilege. In the same fashion, how can those Members opposite call themselves "Progressive" Conservatives? It is a contradiction in terms.

Let us make a distinction between that and what the Minister says when he tells us we have Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms. One could hardly accuse Beauchesne of propagating Tory propaganda. I understand the problem with which that Party is faced. It has bungled miserably, and members of the press, who observe impartially in this House, are reporting exactly what they see and hear.

The Conservative Party wants to circumvent this truth that emanates from Parliament Hill, reported by an impartial press. What it wants to do, of course, is to put out its own propaganda, its own "parliamentary" news. That is a clear violation because it is not parliamentary in the sense that people in Canada understand the term "parliamentary". It is simply Conservative propaganda, telling one side of the issue, not accessible to members of either opposition Party in this House or to the independent Member. At the very least, it is false advertising to call it the parliamentary news. It is simply Tory propaganda to circumvent what has been reported about the bungling of the Government on issue after issue.

I think the Hon. Member raised a very good point in terms of privilege with respect to the use of the word "parliamentary". I hardly think that when Beauchesne writes in impartial terms about parliamentary rules, the conduct and behaviour of Members of the House and what constitutes privilege, one can actually say he is abusing the privilege of any Member of this House. In fact, it is an erudite study of the way in which the rules of any Parliament should be conducted.

What the Tories are doing has nothing to do with Erskine May, Beauchesne, or with any of the educated parliamentary tomes written by people who are knowledgeable. What the Tories are simply doing is misleading the Canadian public by putting out their garbage called "Parliamentary News Service" which it is not, but it is certainly a violation of the privileges of Hon. Members, I would argue.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): As you know, Mr. Speaker, I very seldom rise to participate in procedural debate, but I would like very briefly to make procedural points, strictly unpolitical points.

The Minister of State referred his arguments to the Parliamentary Guide , Beauchesne and so on. I make the very simple argument with respect to the Parliamentary Guide that the word "Parliamentary" refers equally to all of us. It mentions all Members of Parliament, be they in the House of Commons or the Senate. We are all treated equally, which is the point the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) was trying to make. However, we do not all have equal access to the new parliamentary service. I think the use of the word "parliamentary" is what really bothers us.

Second, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms refers to all of us with respect to how we conduct ourselves in this place. Therefore, I do not think a very strong argument has been made by the Minister of State. The parliamentary dictionary refers to all of us, to parliamentary terms and references and so on. It does not refer to one particular political Party, be it my Party or the other two Parties. It is the same with the Canadian Parliamentary Handbook, and Erskine May as well.

I make the argument that what the Minister is referring to is the use of the word "parliamentary" in books and references which refer to all of us equally. The central argument in terms of procedure is whether or not the use of the word "parliamentary" is proper in terms of how it infringes upon our privileges to represent our people.

I say to you very clearly, Mr. Speaker, that the word "parliamentary" will lead people to a certain perception that this service is available to all of us because it is a parliamentary news service. That service is not available to me. It is available to the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) but not available to me as the Member for Yorkton—Melville. I would suggest that you take a very serious look at this issue, Mr. Speaker, because I think in a way it misleads the people of Canada.

The last point I want to make is that in some ways it is almost like a copyright or patent. The word "parliamentary"—I do not want to use the word "sacred"—is a very important word to describe the activities of all of us who are elected here as equals. When one political Party, be it my Party or any other, starts to use that word in terms of getting out its own message, I think it infringes upon the rights of all of us, regardless of which Party we come from, in a similar way that a copyright or patent might do. It is the word "parliamentary" in the name that really concerns me.

I would not object to this news service in the procedural sense if it were called the "The Government Members' News Service", "The Conservative Government News Service", or the "P.C. Government News Service". That is a different thing because its title conveys very clearly that it is a news service of one particular political Party.

I know that the wise Member sitting in the back, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), certainly agrees with me because he is giving me his very wise and shrewd look. I am sure that if he were not a Member of the Ministry, he would rise in the House and make the very same arguments I make today. I know he supports me. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to look very seriously at the arguments we have made.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take up what the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) just said. He referred to the fact that "parliamentary" refers to all of us. I think it may be a significant point, especially when I look at the communiqué of the New Democratic Party which has its logo appropriately at the top of the page and the words: "The New Democrats". At the bottom it has the logo of the House of Commons.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): No.

Mr. Friesen: I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that while the bottom of the page may refer to all of us, the top of the page certainly does not, especially when the news release indicates that: "Mr. Broadbent will address delegates of the Nova Scotia NDP convention in Halifax". That is something that is not of great interest to all of us.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It should be.

Mr. Friesen: He purports, by using the House of Commons logo, to make it something of general interest to all of the House of Commons. I assume he avoided the word "parliamentary" because that Party has rejected the other place, otherwise they would have incorporated both.

I then refer to a news release communiqué put out by "John Nunziata, official Opposition critic for the Solicitor General", appropriately in red. It has the House of Commons logo on it, plus the words "House of Commons". I would suggest that this is not something of terribly great interest to the entire House or to the entire general public, but it does give the impression when the Hon. Member uses the House of Commons logo, that it has the imprimatur of the entire House of Commons. It seems to me that there is a blatant misuse of what is probably House of Commons stationery, but what is certainly the logo and the rights of all Members, when those Members try to give the impression that this is a House of Commons matter when what the New Democratic Party put out was propaganda about the tour its Leader was putting on in Nova Scotia.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the bogus issue the Hon. Member raised ought to be dispensed with as quickly as possible.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) has raised a very important topic this afternoon in his question of privilege. I think we all understand the battle the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has had with the CBC and the media generally. We may even sympathize with him. However, we do not agree that he should be using the name "Parliamentary News Service" to overcome those difficulties.

It seems to me that the name "Parliamentary New Service" sounds a lot like the CBC News Service. So when a listener in some remote part of the country is listening to a report which is called "Parliamentary News Service", he would not realize that this is part of the Government's propaganda machine. The fact that government Members opposite are guffawing at the prospect of the CBC News Service being confused with the Parliamentary News Service, which they are trying to put forward, shows exactly the problem.

It seems to me that a person watching the Parliamentary News Service will see Ken Lawrence, who is a regular member of the Press Gallery who has been running programs from a TV news service which he operates or for which he has worked, suddenly presenting favourable stories on the Government. However, there is a conflict there in that he is not a regular member of the Press Gallery in the normal sense of the word. He is a person working for the PC Party and promoting its position. It seems to me that it is easy for people to be confused since everyone is not closely watching these things the way that Members of the House watch them.

I think the Hon. Member's question of privilege bears close study by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. I hope that Your Honour will find that there is a prima facie case of privilege so that this matter can be referred to the committee where it can be fully aired.

When the committees of the House were set up at the start of this session of Parliament there was small representation on most of those committees by members of the Official Opposition and members of the New Democratic Party. Those committees were usually composed of between 12 and 15 members. We fought very hard to ensure that there had to be at least one member from the Opposition at those committee hearings. If that were not the case, then a committee composed of only government Members would travel across the country or hold public hearings here in Ottawa portraying itself as a committee of the House of Commons when in fact the Parliament of Canada, the House of Commons, includes both government Members and opposition Members.

There is the same type of conflict in the use of the name "Parliamentary News Service". It seems to me that if Your Honour rules that there is a question of privilege here with respect to the word "Parliamentary" then it should not be used and the Government should go back to calling this service the "PCP News Service", "Information Tory", "Prop Can", or whatever. It seems to me that there is still the question of regular members of the Press Gallery being there and working as supposed impartial journalists while being paid by one political Party and portraying their news reports as balanced news reports.

I hope that the Chair will look closely at this matter. It is a serious one, one that needs to be ventilated and examined at this time. This is a service which has been put forward as a service to embellish or help the Government's position while taking advantage of the word "Parliamentary" which would suggest that it is impartial and represents both sides of the House, not just the government side.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to what has been said. If I may, I would like to make a few extemporaneous comments. I believe that—

[English]

I believe that the matter under consideration is very important. We would probably like to reflect much longer on this issue. If Members of Parliament would like to reflect more on the issue then I am sure that Your Honour may very much welcome the suggestion to take this matter under serious consideration and reserve your decision.

In listening to all the points of view expressed today I find there could be some implication with respect to the Election Expenses Act, as has been suggested in many newspapers. However, I do not think that we should prolong unduly this debate today. Your Honour may like to take this matter under consideration to return at another time to the House with what is your customary Solomon-like decision.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to leave any false impressions. I will take a minute or two of the time of the House to reiterate again that all use of the word "parliamentary" is improper. In reviewing my notes I see that earlier in the debate—and I invite the Speaker to verify this at the appropriate time—I was not saying that all unauthorized use of the word "parliamentary" is improper but, indeed, that it is improper when such words are used in an attempt to mislead the people of Canada into believing that something is parliamentary or belonging to this institution when such is not the case. There is a significant difference between that and a person publishing a parliamentary guide or another tome or volume designed to assist Members of Parliament or anyone else to understand how this place functions.

I also said very clearly in my remarks that not only was this question of privilege not specific with respect to my own privileges as a Member of this House but that it is within our collective privileges as parliamentarians, as well as the privileges of this institution, to operate not only without personal instruction to myself but that the House should be unhindered in the way that it functions. I also said very clearly that I believe that the actions taken were in contempt of Parliament. I have reflected upon that and I still believe that such is the case.

I have indicated to Your Honour, with the citation of appropriate decisions of the Speaker in the past, actions which I believe are similar or by extension should be applicable in this particular case to determine that in fact this action by Ken Lawrence Enterprises working for the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada is improper and should not be allowed to continue.

Again, I would ask that Your Honour take the matter under advisement and give it your usual full consideration with a view to referring it to the appropriate committee. Again, I will move the appropriate motion at the time that Your Honour makes his decision on what I believe is a very important case, a case without precedent. After all, we are dealing with something that did not exist a number of years ago but which is nevertheless a very fundamental issue in terms of how Parliament will be able to function in the future without being impeded by anyone or anything.

I repeat what I said earlier. I believe it is our duty as parliamentarians to uphold the dignity and the authority of this great institution. I am sure Your Honour will consider that point when you render your decision.

Mr. Speaker: First, I want to assure the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) that the Chair is as aware as is he that this is a novel question for the Chair to have to consider. However, the fact that it has not come before us before takes nothing away from the issue and the necessity to make a decision on it.

I want to thank all Hon. Members for their contributions to the debate on this issue. I will, as I often do, take the very wise advice of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) who can teach us a great deal about procedure in this place. I think that he has given the Chair very wise counsel. I will take the matter away and think long and hard about it. I thank the Hon. Member.

It will probably be at least a few days before the Chair returns on this matter. Again, I take the matter as something which is, as I have said, new, but that does not lessen the importance of the interventions that remain. I listened to them very carefully. I will, of course, review Hansard. I hope that I will be able to come back with a report to the House which is appropriate under all the circumstances. Again, I thank all Hon. Members.

PRIVILEGE

QUALITY OF HOUSE OF COMMONS TRANSLATION SERVICES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to raise a question of privilege. It is a rather different type of question of privilege which relates to the translation services required by Members of Parliament.

At the outset, I wish to note that Beauchesne's Fifth Edition elucidates the matter of privilege to which I wish to relate my comments on the services that we require.

Citation 16 states:

> Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals.

It further states:

> The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers". They are enjoyed by individual Members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members;

In Citation 75 it states:

> Many of the privileges of the House extend also to its committees . . . Committee reports and the verbatim transcripts of committee hearings are documents published under the authority of the House and are entitled to the same absolute privilege as House documents.

Noting these particular citations from Beauchesne, I wish to consider several instances that have arisen in the last months, one during the past 10 days, in which the translation services of the House of Commons and of the committees of the House have been hard pressed to fulfil their obligations, and to enable Members of Parliament to complete their work and carry out their duties.

For some time there has been concern about this issue on the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages. As a member of that commmittee, I have been concerned about this issue. Last spring when the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism was hard at work on a report for which various drafts had to be considered, the provision of translation of documents into the other official language was not always available. Quite definitely that impeded the work of the committee.

During the last 10 days, as the Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord was endeavouring to conclude its work and make the results available to the public in a report published in both official languages, difficulties arose in completing the work. The committee was forced to delay for one week the tabling of the report in the House.

In the course of those delays, there were reflections made upon the quality of the work. Without wishing to endorse those particular observations, which came from a member in the other place who is a very keen phraser and definer of terms, and who is very concerned about the quality of the work, let me say that It is quality of the work that is an essential aspect of this matter of translation services.

In the past, the question of translation services has been raised. In 1968 a Member raised the inadequacy of translation services as a question of privilege. I note in all candour that Speaker Lamoureux did not find it a prima facie case of privilege.

I would appreciate your consideration of this, Mr. Speaker, in your understanding and appreciation of the importance of these services. To of us who are still too close to being unilingual in English and perhaps have a greater appreciation of the importance of the Translation Bureau there is objective evidence for concern in this matter.

The Translation Bureau was created in 1934. It experienced a budget freeze during its fiftieth anniversary year in 1984. At that time there were 1,150 translators at work in the bureau. In the three years that followed there has been a decline of 150 translators who are available. That is a decline of over one-eighth in the number of persons available. In January, 1986, no fewer than 82 translators were declared surplus to the operations of the Translation Bureau.

I would submit that at that time difficulties were beginning to appear. The present difficulties, which are the basis for my question of privilege, are the end result of a decade-long process of reduction of staff and contracting out of translation work that has been going on since 1978.

Demand for translation services has markedly increased from some 254 million words annually to 320 million words. On the other hand, by 1987 the staff has declined from some 2,000 person years to 1,450 person years. That is a decline of more than one-quarter. At the same time, the volume of work contracted out has doubled to 60 million words. In comparing 60 million to 320 million words in total there is recognition of the fact that approximately one-fifth of the quantity has been contracted out. The result is that there are now some 278 contractors to whom the Translation Bureau looks for assistance.

Unfortunately, the result has been a decline in quality. Quality has been sacrificed to quantity in the enormous amount of work to be done. There is less checking of the work of the translators, which creates the possibility that our work may be immediately impeded. We will not understand the proceedings in committee and we will waste time in our deliberations. Our own words going forth may be misunderstood in one part of the country because they have been improperly translated.

The work-load that has fallen on the shoulders of the translators who remain has had a serious effect on morale. There is a resentment about the fact that their work is professional work and it has not been appreciated.

Although this is less germane to the question of privilege, the costs have been rising. In the capital area the costs of contracting out have been increasing substantially, particularly during the past summer when the House was sitting in August and committees were at work. Even during the spring, the Assistant Deputy Minister responsible for this area conceded that the costs of contracting out were beginning to exceed the cost of work done in house. That strikes me as a most serious situation. Inefficiency is created or resulting from a situation which costs us more than it would to do this work properly within the Translation Bureau.

This is an important matter of national culture. I wish to conclude by pointing out that this country has been practising institutional bilingualism for almost 20 years. It requires the provision of high quality translation, interpretation and terminology services by the federal Government. Any breakdown in such arrangements, as the basis for our institutional bilingualism, 19 years after the Official Languages Act was passed, and following the previous ruling by Speaker Lamoureux in 1968, I would submit, can be regarded as a question of privilege.

I would appreciate your careful consideration of the question, Mr. Speaker. I am prepared to move the necessary motion if, in your insight and wisdom, you find this to be a genuine question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to participate very briefly in this debate. Unlike the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) I did not have time to get prepared to debate the matter at length. What I do know and what all Members of the House know is that it is an important question. But there are also very special considerations that must be kept in mind when discussing translation versus interpretation, and in this case I do not think the Hon. Member is referring to the quality of interpretation in the House. I think it is a facility of which we are very proud and which all Members view as an outstanding service.

Of course the matter of translation has always come under the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) who, through his department, is responsible for providing translation services for the House of Commons. This service is not provided by the Chair, but by a Government department, namely the Secretary of State. To the extent that I can appreciate it, service has long been of exceptional quality and, to me anyway, a source of inspiration in terms of the translation of the remarks made by Hon. Members in this House.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, we went through exceptional times this summer. The House was recalled on August 11. The Committee on the Constitution held hearings and, like the Hon. Member, I agree that there were some delays related to translation.

The point which should be made is that as a client of the Department of the Secretary of State, whose services the House of Commons has purchased over the years, we have had some difficulties in terms of the two main problems to which the Hon. Member alluded. Of course, one problem is the cut-backs in the public servants who are usually attached to the translation service. There have been some serious cut-backs, which have reduced the translation capacity, although at times, I must admit, I have many good words for the high quality which has been maintained in many circumstances.

There is also the fact that much of the work is now being contracted out by the Secretary of State Department according to a policy which the Government has espoused over the three years that it has been in power. It believes that a lot of contracting out saves money and is a way of cutting expenditures. I do not believe that. I do not believe that it maintains quality. I do not believe that it does anything for the services which are essential to the operation of the House.

Therefore, the contracting out and cut-backs in public servants have had a direct effect upon the work-load of translators who are sometimes expected to produce much more than the usual 1,100 to 1,500 words per day. Anyone can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that is very difficult in the field of policy, politics, or the very technical language sometimes used in the House.

I commend the Hon. Member for raising this point with the House. I cannot say that it is a question of privilege, but it is very important to say to the Government of the day that indeed it should recognize the importance of Parliament and the importance of the services rendered to Parliament.

We should not cut back or reduce those services on the basis of some false economic theory which says that we should not give to public servants the amount of work which would normally be acquired but that we should contract it out because it cannot be done in-house. That is wrong.

I also think that cutting back on public servants whose work-load is increasing day in and day out is wrong. It is wrong for the Government to maintain those two policies—one of cutting back on public servants and the other of cutting back on the amount of work being done.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are not surprised to see me rise to take part in this debate. On several occasions in the past I raised this issue from a constructive perspective.

[English]

Every time we talk about bilingual services or bilingualism, I know that an aura of nervousness hovers over the House. I have always tried over the years to be very cool about the matter. This is why I often raised the question with you, Mr. Speaker, and with previous Speakers as gently and as fairly as I could in private. Very rarely did I participate in a debate of this kind in the House, but I did so eventually in public because we needed action.

I know that Your Honour is very sensitive to this question. I have had the honour of discussing it with you often. I have always said to many of my colleagues: "Try to put yourself in our shoes".

For instance, in my office all my staff is totally bilingual. This represents a major difficulty in recruitment for the same salary for the same services.

I say that in English, but I will repeat it in French. I have the same version for those who say that I would not dare to repeat it in French.

I insist upon serving my electorate in both languages, which is their right from a federal Member. A large portion of my electorate expects me to communicate with them in English. Your Honour understands the immense difficulty which this represents.

As soon as I came to the Hill—and it has been the story of my life for 23 years—I was very happy to chair most of my committees, by choice, in English. I chose to do that. It is my privilege.

I would say in French that it was my privilege, that it was my choice, and that it was my wish.

I learned English at no expense to the country. When I make a mistake, there is always a fine gentleman or lady to remind me of how to say it in English. I learned it. It did not cost Canadian taxpayers a penny.

However, as I said, I did it by choice. If I were obliged to chair a meeting or to work in English, I imagine that there would be quite a fight. Because the choice is there for me, I take it.

I may look very gentle and calm, but I must say that I am getting very impatient. There will have to be effort and understanding, at least within the boundaries of the Hill.

What made me rise today is that I know Your Honour is very sensitive to the issue and that you are doing something about it privately at the moment. I know that, and it is good for the public to know that you have had many representations, Mr. Speaker.

I should not look for supplementary work, but I am willing to accept a mandate some day from Your Honour to chair again a committee which I had the privilege to chair—the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services—and to look in private at what are the frustrations of various Members in various committees concerning bilingualism. I say willingly that I would accept such a mandate so that we will not have this kind of discussion too often in the House of Commons.

[Translation]

I simply wanted to say that I took a few notes while my colleagues were speaking, including my colleague from Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). It is not easy to manage in a bilingual country, but when we consider all the attendant benefits it is not so much a question of the huge outlay involved to enable Members, if they are unilingual francophones—most Members of the majority realize that many of their new colleagues who first came here after the 1984 election—and this was a rather new phenomenon—were unilingual francophones, because indeed there are unilingual francophones.

[English]

As I was saying in French, there is a phenomenon in Canada which may not be understood. There are millions of people who function intelligently in French, who are totally unilingual, and who are equally good Canadians as the millions of people who function exclusively in English. However, one must understand—and my colleagues and Your Honour understand it—that there is no doubt that these people are frustrated.

I may be more patient because I have been around here for some time. If I compare my twenty-fourth year with my first year, I have to be honest and say that many changes have taken place. Therefore, because of that, I am more patient. However, my colleagues who have just arrived here, and rightly so, do not understand why I am so patient. It is because I know the differences between 24 years ago and now. This is no excuse for not having the necessary service. It is tough enough to function in one language and to be an expert in almost every domain instantly. This leads one to see how tough it is to do it in both languages. I do not complain. I just want to make sure that Members who have these kinds of frustrations will have the services.

I repeat again, Mr. Speaker, that when we talk about this question of translation, interpretation, French and English—and I would like the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey) to be very serious because it is a serious matter—it is too easy to explode on these questions and it is not in the best interests of Canada nor in the best interests of the relationship between French and English-speaking Canadians. That is why I have always had this approach.

I can be much more flamboyant denouncing a system which does not work as well as we would like, but if I did that I know I would not be producing anything. I am offering my help, but if it does not help you, Mr. Speaker, you could ask others who might be able to do so. I want, however, for people to take the matter seriously within the confines of this Parliament, especially the various Ministers who are responsible, namely, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski), because I know the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is very sensitive to questions of reconciliation and understanding. If it is true—and I know it is true—action will have to be taken.

I will conclude by saying that I am getting rather fed up at having to stand up in my country having to talk about such a subject. Those who are unilingual English-speaking take it for granted, but I have to get up time and time again to repeat the same thing time and time again. I would prefer to devote that time to other matters which are much more important, such as foreign affairs, Quebec or British Columbia difficulties, rather than having to use half of my time defending this position while my colleagues, who happily function only in English, can focus their attention on other subjects because this problem is not their major preoccupation. I do not mind that, but I hope they will understand that for some of us it is a loss of energy having to participate and make representation.

You can see, Mr. Speaker, that I had better sit down because I am getting impatient, but I know these things are in your good hands. I know you will react to this and later on we will not have to come back to it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I believe this is an important subject, and therefore I am very grateful to Hon. Members for their contribution, among others the hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp), the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), and more particularly the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). This is not a new issue but it is very important and, as the hon. Member for Saint-Denis pointed out, it has been raised before in the House. It also happens to be a very serious problem for the Chair, and I consider it is very important that all Members of the House enjoy similar privileges. It is clear that because of the delay—as raised in the question of privilege of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay Nipigon—the privileges are not similar, it is not the same thing.

So the matter is serious and unpleasant, and I can appreciate the concern and preoccupation of francophone Members.

All documents and complete files are immediately available to Hon. Members who speak only English, but the situation is not the same in the case of francophone Members.

I thank my colleagues for their comments. I think this is a very important issue and I will defer my ruling to make an exhaustive study of the problem.

Again I thank the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon for raising the issue because, as I have said, it is a very important matter.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 25 (Mr. Jourdenais, p. 9180), Motion No. 31 (Mr. Heap, p. 9180) (as amended), Motion No. 32 (Mr. Heap, p. 9180) and Motion No. 33 (Mr. Heap, p. 9180).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has debated Motions Nos. 25, 31, 32 and 33 which had been grouped for debate, but they will be voted on separately.

The first question is on Motion No. 25 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the recorded division stand deferred.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 31 as amended standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the recorded division stand deferred.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 32 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the recorded division stand deferred?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 33 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the recorded division on the motion stand deferred?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

Motion No. 35

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 15 to 26 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) the disposition under this Act of claims to be Convention refugees made by other persons who alleged fear of persecution in that country, is of the opinion that there is any credible evidence on which the refugee Division might determine the claimant to be a Convention Refugee, the adjudicator or member shall determine that the claimant has a credible basis for the claim."

He said: Mr. Speaker, regarding this motion, if it is in order and if there is unanimous consent, I would like to propose a deferral of consideration.

I find that, in the haste of preparing this motion, there were some details of the wording which perhaps would be better done in a different way. If I could have some time to consult about this, I would like to seek the consent of the House to make certain very small but possibly necessary changes to the wording of this motion. Therefore, if it is appropriate, I move:

That this motion be deferred to the call of the Chair.

Is that the appropriate phrase and procedure, Mr. Speaker?

• (1620)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In order for the Hon. Member to be able to take the motion up later, he needs the unanimous consent of the House. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion No. 37 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) and Motions Nos. 53, 57 and 70, standing in the name of the Minister sponsoring the Bill, will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by adding immediately after line 33 at page 16 the following:

"(8) Where a person claims to be a Convention Refugee and is denied access to the procedures outlined in Sections 45 to 48 and 70 and 71 pursuant to Section 48.l, the Minister shall notify the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees of this fact; and

(9) a person to whom subsection 48.01. (1) applies shall be provided a reasonable opportunity to contact the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees".

Hon. Jake Epp (for the Minister of State (Immigration)) moved:

(a) by striking out line 18 at page 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"55.(1) Notwithstanding subsections 54(2)"

(b) by striking out line 3 at page 26 and substituting the following therefor:

"public in Canada.

(2) Notwithstanding subsections 54(2) and (3), no person who has been determined not to be eligible to have a claim to be a Convention refugee determined by the Refugee Division on the basis that the person is a person described in paragraph 48.01(1)(b) shall be removed from Canada to any country other than the country from which the person came to Canada as determined for the purposes of that paragraph unless

(a) the person is determined not to have a credible basis for the claim on a hearing under section 48.03; or

(a) by striking out line 35 at page 32 and substituting the following therefor:

"any representative or agent of the United Nations"

(b) by adding immediately after line 16 at page 35 the following therefor:

"(12) If the Refugee Division determines that a claimant is not a Convention refugee and does not have a credible basis for the claim to be a Convention refugee, the Refugee Division shall so indicate in its decision on the claim."

(c) by striking out lines 36 to 39 at page 39 and substituting the following therefor:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 19 by adding immediately after line 38 at page 43 the following:

"(1.1) Notwithstanding subsection (1), no appeal lies to the Federal Court of Appeal from a decision of the Refugee Division under section 71.1 on a claim, if the Refugee Division, pursuant to subsection 71.1(12), has indicated in the decision that the claimant has no credible basis for the claim."

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I have proposed Motion No. 37 in order to take account of an aspect of the Bill which I believe does not fully meet the goals and standards of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees. The general situation is that in Canada, as in other countries, there can be a conflict between a duty to protect the country from the entry of a person who should not be admitted and the duty under the Convention which we have signed to recognize a refugee or, more particularly, give a refugee claimant a chance to state his claim.

It is possible that a person can be both inadmissible under the sections with which we are concerned here and also be a refugee.

Some may take the view that it does not make any difference and we should not bother finding out if the person is a refugee if we are not going to admit him. That is not the view of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees who believes that it is necessary, as a principle, that the matter be pursued and that a person who claims to be a refugee should be examined and a determination made whether he or she is a refugee.

However, it has been decided in Bill C-55, as in Bill C-84, that we will not do it this way. When a person is determined to fall into those inadmissible classes, that person is excluded from the refugee status process. Section 48.01(1) states that a person is not eligible to have the claim determined by the refugee division if he falls within the criteria under paragraphs 48.1(1)(a),(b),(c),(d),(e) and (f). Paragraph 48.01(1)(e) states:

(i) a person described in paragraph 19(1)(e),(f)(g) or (j),

Which are the criminal types, and:

27(1)(c) or (2)(c),—

Which is close enough for our purposes to be treated in exactly the same way.

I am asking that we add the simple rider that at least we will get in touch with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees with respect to a person who might be a refugee.

Therefore, I have suggested a Subsection (8) which states:

Where a person claims to be a Convention Refugee and is denied access to the procedures outlined in Sections 45 to 48 and Sections 70 and 71 pursuant to Section 48.1 the Minister shall notify the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees of this fact;—

This could either involve a phone call to someone in Ottawa or a letter to someone in Geneva.

My motion No. 37 would also add:

There may be another country that does not view the situation the same way as Canada and by whose standards that person would not be inadmissible. The United Nations High Commission for Refugees is in the business of determining where such a person might be admissible. Therefore, part of the purpose of my motion is that we amend the clause simply by adding those two paragraphs in order to recognize that the United Nations might be willing and able to help this person find another country. Otherwise, he might be returned to the country from which he says he is fleeing on account of persecution.

If he is a security risk to us, that may not necessarily be sufficient reason to have him go to death or imprisonment on grounds that are not related to that security risk, which could be the case. That is a matter in which the United Nations High Commission specializes and that is the main point I wanted to make.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has referred to Motion No. 53. I believe it does go part way in the right direction, but not as far as some other amendments which have been defeated. It is good as far as it goes, so I hope it will have the support of the House.

Motion No. 57 would give the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees the right not only to send a representative, which I take to be a full-time employee, but also an agent, which could be a part-time person on contract, which gives him more flexibility and an opportunity to be present at these refugee division hearings. I think that is clearly a useful motion.

I do not agree with paragraph (b). It authorizes the refugee division to classify a rejected claim as having no credible basis. If that were just a matter of words, I would not mind, even though I disagree with the phrase "credible basis"; I think it is too harsh and I would have preferred had they said "manifestly unfounded". I can see the difference between saying that this was a "maybe" case but we decided no, and saying that this case has no merit whatever. Where the hurt comes in is as a basis for Motion No. 70, which I consider quite harmful because it denies the right of appeal to claimants whose claims were classified as not having a credible basis. They have already been through that screening once or they would not be at the refugee division.

It seems to me that if the initial inquiry said that they have a credible basis, but the refugee division decided in a full hearing they do not, then there is room for a difference of opinion. In fact, there would be a difference of opinion and there would also be room for error. I believe it is unreasonable to deny that claimant the right of appeal, however limited it is, which is available to the rest.

We have to remember that a mistake here is not like a mistake in granting a building permit or driving licence. A mistake in turning away a claimant who is a real refugee could result in death or imprisonment unjustly. Therefore I think we should not be in such a hurry to cut off the few claimants who are likely to get through determination and then be found not to have a credible basis for their claim. I hope we defeat Motion No. 70.

I want to hear further debate on Motion No. 57 since, as I say, it contains a good one and a bad one as it looks to me right now.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille)—External Affairs—Mozambique—Request for more assistance/Request for co-ordinated measures to aid African front-line states; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Energy—Price of natural gas in Manitoba/Government position; the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Trade—Canada-United States negotiations—Domestic price of wheat/Canadian position.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motions No. 37 (Mr. Heap, p. 9207), Motion No. 53 (Mr. Weiner, p. 9207), Motion No. 57 (Mr. Weiner, p. 9207), and Motion No. 70 (Mr. Weiner, p. 9208).

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if I can say en passant, I find the remarks of the Hon. Member rather mystifying when he says that the person could be sent back to imprisonment or death. I think he will accept the fact that we have included protection under Article 33 of the Convention, which would forestall just that kind of eventuality.

Let me begin at the beginning with Motion No. 37 which stands in the name of the Hon. Member. He will recall that in committee we already made provision for the UNHCR representative to be present at the proceedings. In this subsequent amendment we refined that provision. The motion put forward by the Hon. Member would require the Minister to notify the office of the UNHCR every time a criminal, terrorist or subversive is denied access to the refugee determination system and to give all other ineligible claimants an opportunity to contact the UNHCR. That has the consequence of putting an obligation on the Minister and also on the UNHCR.

I do not know if that is the intent of the Hon. Member, but since we have already provided protection under Article 33 of the Convention, I would think the Hon. Member would accept that we have taken care of those people he sees as being at risk.

Motion No. 53 standing in the name of the Government deals with Clause 17. The change is simply to make the text of Section 55, as found in the reported Bill, subsection 55(1), in order to accommodate the following subsection. At committee stage a difficulty in the interpretation of the proposed amendment to Section 55 was identified. Officials undertook to identify a solution to the problem. This amendment resolves the problem in that subsection 55(2) will ensure that a person denied access to the refugee division because he or she comes from a country which complies with Article 33 of the Convention can be returned only to that country. The individual may choose to go elsewhere. This limitation will cease to be in effect when the claimant has been reintroduced into the refugee determination system pursuant to Section 48.03, and the adjudicator and refugee division member have either determined there is no credible basis for the claim, or referred the claimant to the refugee division which has determined that the claimant is not a Convention refugee.

Motion No. 57 deals with Clause 18. This amendment will provide a consistent wording between subsection 71(3) and subsection 48(5). Subsection 48(5), added by the committee, allows the presence of agents of the UNHCR at inquiries. It is recognized that the UNHCR does not have representative offices in most Canadian cities. In recognition of that fact, it will be possible, with the consent of the claimant, for local agents of the UNHCR to attend hearings before the refugee board as well as to attend inquiries.

Notwithstanding the screening mechanisms in place before the adjudicator and refugee division member, it is possible that some claims referred to the refugee division will be completely without merit. This amendment will enable members of the panel of the refugee division which hears the claim to indicate in their reasons that there is no credible basis for the claim. Consequential effects on the appeal rights of those claimants will be covered in an amendment to Clause 19. The division is not required to make the second determination in every case. The provision can be used to correct the most obvious abuses of the refugee determination system that pass initial screening at inquiry. The amendment corrects a clerical error in that it deletes reference to a provision of Bill C-84. All of the consequential amendments following from Bill C-84 are dealt with, conditional on the passage of that Bill, in Clause 35.

Motion No. 70 deals with Clause 19. This amendment is consequential on amendment (B) to Clause 18. Where a claimant is determined by a panel of the refugee division not to have a credible basis for the claim, the claimant will not have the right of appeal, pursuant to Section 83.3, to the Federal Court of Appeal. The unsuccessful claimant will still be able to undertake an application for leave to seek judicial review pursuant to Section 28 of the Federal Court Act. It should be noted that judicial review under Section 28 is considered on the same grounds as the appeal pursuant to Section 83.3. The major difference between the two routes for redress is that pursuant to Section 28 of the Federal Court, the court cannot substitute its decision for that of the original decision-maker.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am just wondering if the Parliamentary Secretary knows what he just read to the House of Commons. It seemed to be drafted by the same people who put this Bill together.

First, on Motion No. 37, I would like to signal our support proposed by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). I believe it has its origin in some of the testimony provided to us by Joe Stern of the Refugee Advisory Committee. He said it would be important for our refugee determination system to have at least a safeguard where an individual is barred from proceeding in the determination system for a series of reasons. It would be helpful if the Government, through the Minister, got in touch with the local UNHCR representative or in fact their office in Geneva, for the very same reasons that the Hon. Member stipulated earlier. The UNHRC would be in a good position, since it administers the Geneva Convention on a daily basis, to take a second look at the case of that individual and perhaps find a home for him rather than sending him back from where he came to face possible persecution or death.

That is a check and balance which I do not think is too onerous for the Government to accept. There would be no onus upon the UNHRC to find a home for such an individual, but the UNHRC would have that opportunity. If a decision is made against an individual, he or she will be leaving the country anyway. The UNHRC may be able to find a home for that individual in a country which Canada has not checked out, thereby ensuring that person's safety. I do not think that is too much to ask the Government to accept. I seriously suggest that Members on the government side take a hard look at Motion No. 37 because I believe it is meritorious.

We will not oppose Motion No. 53, but that does not mean that we are satisfied with what it does in terms of cleaning up a portion of the Bill which we find repugnant. The Parliamentary Secretary suggested that Motion No. 53 would do that job. We very strongly disagree with that, and that is one of the reasons we moved amendments to remove the safe third country concept and the pre-screening provisions. We believed that by doing that we would offer maximum protection without prejudging. In order for that amendment to be successful the Government must show enough movement for subsequent amendments to be meaningful. I do not think the Government did that. I do not think the Minister signalled that at committee.

With all due respect to those who drafted them, the amendments with regard to the key areas of pre-screening, safe third countries, and appeal do not measure up to amendments to which witnesses wanted the Government to agree. Other groups suggested from the very outset that the Bill was so badly drafted that it was unamendable. Motion No. 53 is better than that which now exists but is a lot worse than it could have been.

Motion No. 57 is problematic, and I seek the advice of the Chair as to whether we could split Motion No. 57 into two parts. We find no problem with the provision to allow a UNHRC representative to act as an observer at the refugee board. In fact, we would go even further and suggest that the UNHRC representative should be in a position to present evidence at the refugee board hearing. However, the second part of the same amendment which says that the representative shall indicate the decision if the claimant is not a Convention refugee or does not have a credible basis for a claim, is problematic.

It goes without saying that Motion No. 70 is problematic because we do not believe in the credible basis test. Most of the witnesses who came before the committee pointed out problems associated with the credible basis test for a claim. The Canadian Bar Association, the Inter-Church Committee, the UNHRC, the Coalition for a Just Immigration and Refugee Policy, the Mennonite Central Committee, Rabbi Plaut, Ken Zaifman, the Hispanic Congress, Pierre Duquette, the Montreal Refugee Coalition, Amnesty International, the Nanaimo Immigrant Settlement Society, Professor Angus, Professor Hathaway, the Eelam Tamil Society, the Canadian Bar Association, the Sikh Professional Association of Canada and Mr. Arthur Helton all said that the "credible basis" definition is very vague and that the preferred definition would be "manifestly unfounded". It has a definition under the Convention which is well accepted and well understood. However, the credible basis test is not defined and is therefore very dangerous.

The credible basis test looks at the statistics of other applicants from the same country. Therefore, an individual claim can be judged on group claims made previously. It is not healthy to have that in the equation because the Convention is based on the circumstances of an individual. The system should not tolerate claimants who make fraudulent claims and misleading statements and tell frivolous stories. However, the fact that individuals from a certain part of the world made frivolous claims should not impact upon an individual from the same country who arrives subsequently.

I do not believe there is any legislation on the federal books today which uses groupings of statistics to impact on individual cases, whether geographically, culturally or by profession. Our system is to look at the merits of an individual case. However, the credible basis test in this Bill takes into account previous applications made by people from the region from which a claimant has come. Therefore, Motion No. 70 is in opposition to our way of thinking.

I would ask the Chair whether it is possible for Motion No. 57 to be divided into two portions so that we can vote in favour of or against having a UNHRC representative present at the hearings and in favour of or against the decision being made on the question of credible basis. We would like to vote in favour of one and against the other.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member has asked for the guidance of the Chair. If the Member would be willing to move an amendment to Motion No. 57, he may achieve the results he wishes.

Mr. Marchi: In compliance of the advice of the Chair I would like to move that Motion No. 57(a) be voted upon separately from Motion No. 57(b).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would invite the Hon. Member to come to the Table. In the meantime, we will proceed with the debate. The Hon. Member's rights are reserved concerning the amendment on Motion No. 57.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this motion in particular because Hon. Members will recall that Motion No. 65 and Motion No. 69 were entered in my name. Motion No. 69 is identical to the Minister's motion No. 70 and was stood down by the Speaker. On closer examination, I discovered in Motion No. 57 there was a one word difference between the Minister's motion and my motion, at least in paragraph (b) in my Motion No. 65. Therefore, I asked and received the consent of the House to stand down my Motion No 65 as well.

Motion No. 65 and Motion No. 69 were linked in my mind—now it would be Motion No. 57 and Motion No. 70—and I have heard the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) and the Hon. Member from York indicate that they do not intend to vote for those motions. I think that is the thrust of what they had to say. I would like to express as clearly and as cogently as I can that I think they are making a mistake. The philosophy of the Bill, from the time it was first introduced into the House, I think is clear and consistent. We need as quickly as possible to sort out those who are the bogus claimants from those who are people with legitimate refugee claims.

It is also clear from the structure of the Bill that we must do that in an atmosphere where the benefit of the doubt at all times goes to the claimant.

It is inherent in the Bill that in the case of the two-person refugee panel or in the inquiry at the first stage with the adjudicator and refugee board member, in any split between those two people at either level, the benefit of the doubt goes to the claimant.

The committee worked very hard on the notion of credible claim. We made a lot of amendments to the structure of that and the way that it sits. I think that during the inquiry it is a very important principle for the protection of refugees that the benefit of the doubt on the issue of credibility in the inquiry be given to the claimant, that the claimant go forward to a hearing and that the hearing be full and complete.

If the refugee board itself, after that very thorough examination of all the evidence put forward by the claimant, in a non-adversarial manner, concludes that the claim was not well-founded in the first place, the consequences of that decision should be the same as if that decision had been reached in the inquiry. If we approve Motion No. 57 and Motion No. 70 as a pair, we will have accomplished that in statute law.

It will be an encouragement, I believe, in all cases of doubt as to whether or not the person might be a claimant, that they "shall" move the case forward to a full refugee board hearing. I think that those human beings who serve the functions of adjudicator and refugee board member at inquiry, will be able to do that in all cases of doubt when they have the assurance that when the claim is fully heard, if indeed it was not credible to begin with, if indeed it was not founded, that they can so designate on the decision at the refugee board hearing, and the consequences for removal will be the same as if it had been decided in the inquiry itself, and that is speedy removal for those who attempt to abuse the system.

During the inquiry people may present false evidence that leads the inquiry to conclude, because they did not discern it as being false, that the person indeed might be a refugee. On fuller examination some six, eight or 10 weeks later, it may be readily apparent that the information provided to the inquiry was false. There should be absolutely nothing to be gained by that claimant through the presentation of that false evidence. Surely, it is common sense that if that kind of thing is discovered, the board itself should be able to reach the decision, not only that this person is not a refugee, but that the claim was not well-founded in the very beginning.

I would also like to deal very briefly with Motion No. 53 and Motion No. 37. I hope the House will support both parts of Motion No. 53. It is an important motion related to safe third country. In committee we tried wording of one kind and another to make it very clear under statute law that people who came from a country of prior protection could be returned to the country of prior protection and nowhere else. Motion No. 53 is essential. It is the chosen wording that will accomplish that task. When people come from prior a country of protection, they can be returned to the country of prior protection and nowhere else. That is a very important principle. The wording of Motion No. 53 gives effect to it, and it is a very necessary part of the Bill.

In terms of Motion No. 37 put forward by the Hon. Member for Spadina, I do not think there is any disagreement in the House that, in the case of people denied entry to determination on the basis of security and criminality, it would be a wise idea for us to inform the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. It goes on today and it is not part of statute law. I suggest it will go on tomorrow and it need not be part of statute law. Indeed, there may be advantages for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to have informal information about a situation rather than formal information. Therefore, I think handling that matter administratively is preferable to trying to handle it statutorily.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment proposed by the colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). I do that because it makes such eminent sense to me. The intention of the amendment as proposed is to mitigate a departure from the principle of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees which we believe is contained in Bill C-55. Section 48.01(1)(e) starting at the bottom of page 14, excludes certain classes of persons from access to the refugee status determination procedure, persons who may engage in spying, subversion or violence and war criminals or persons convicted in Canada of a very serious crime.

The UNHCR does not ask us to accept such persons for landing, but does ask us to determine whether they are refugees and, in that case, act in the light of that recognition. One practical application is to allow time to inquire, with their help, whether another country may accept and protect a person which Canada does not wish to keep. This amendment would not delete or reverse the clause in the Bill, but it would perhaps prevent a real refugee from being returned to the country that was persecuting him or her. It may cost something for detaining that person, but in only a few cases. I think this makes sense.

I want to take the opportunity to say something about some remarks I made earlier today, to which the Parliamentary Secretary took exception and for which he criticized me for, as he said, dealing with individuals.

Let me make clear first of all that in my dealings with representatives of the Department of Immigration here in Ottawa and in Winnipeg, I have met with nothing but co-operation, help and fairness. When it has turned down a case I have been asked to take up with the Department, the explanations given to me have been reasonable. The officials have pointed out that the law or the regulations did not permit the request, and explained why. I have no complaints. The fact is the Department is made up of human beings with all sorts of points of view. There have been and are people in the Department who have prejudices against certain individuals or certain groups because of their race or religion.

I will be very happy to expand on this at the next sitting of the House.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have not checked with my colleagues but I think that there would be a disposition to have a voice vote on this set of motions tonight rather than to carry them over until the morning.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member who just had the floor wants to terminate his remarks today or whether there is another Member in the House who has not spoken on this set of amendments and who wishes to speak. I have spoken, but I am not sure that there are not other colleagues on other sides who wish to speak on this issue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There has been a proposal asking for unanimous consent to proceed to a voice vote. Do I have the unanimous consent of the House in that respect?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I could finish my remarks now if the House wants to let me finish. That is all right with me. However, I certainly want to finish.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the House allows the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) to proceed with the remainder of his speech, he has to two minutes left and the House could then proceed with a voice vote. Would there then be unanimous consent to start Private Members' Hour at approximately 5:10 and extend it until 6:10?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed. Thus, Private Members' Hour will start for a full 60 minutes after we proceed with the voice vote on the motions that are now on the floor of the House.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make sure that I have clearly understood what you have just said. It means that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) would close the debate on the motion, if I heard the Chair properly, and no one else could speak on it. There may be some others in the House who may want to speak to this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I asked if someone else wishes to speak—

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Things are going very smoothly and we are making progress on this Bill. There may be others who might want to speak. We are now moving into Private Members' Hour. I wonder if it might not be in the best interests of us all just to set this matter aside until we resume tomorrow and pick up where we left off. I am afraid that if we start moving into Private Members' Hour there may be others who want to speak. Before we know it, we will begin to set some kind of precedent, which I do not think is in the best interests of the procedures of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.05 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration for a full hour of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

THE SENATE

SUGGESTED EQUAL PROVINCIAL AND TERRITORIAL ELECTED REPRESENTATION

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Taylor:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing the appropriate measures to abolish the Senate and create a new Senate composed of Senators elected by the people of Canada on the basis of equal representation for each province and territory, and to initiate discussions to that end with provincial and territorial governments at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I move:

> That the House now hear from the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that the motion put forward by my hon. friend is out of order, since the Hon. Member from the Liberal Party had been recognized in his place and had already begun to make his remarks. I believe that a point of order suggesting that another Hon. Member be now heard is in fact out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. To facilitate the business of the House and notwithstanding the high esteem I have for the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling), an outstanding Member of the Committee on External Affairs for a good many years, I regret to say that the motion presented is certainly out or order because the Hon. Member, as pointed out by the spokesman for the third Party in the House, did say he had begun his remarks. You had recognized him and he was delivering his speech.

[English]

I say, with great respect to my hon. friend who wants to participate, that he will have to wait and speak after the Hon. Member whom the Chair has recognized has spoken.

Mr. Clinch: On a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no need for me to hear the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Clinch) on a point of order.

I recognized the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), yet at the same time the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) was on his feet. I recognized that Hon. Member on a point of order. Therefore I find the motion in order. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare the motion carried, on division.

Motion (Mr. Stackhouse) agreed to.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, in order to refresh the memory of Hon. Members in the House, Motion No. 18 states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing the appropriate measures to abolish the Senate and create a new Senate composed of Senators elected by the people of Canada on the basis of equal representation for each province and territory, and to initiate discussions to that end with provincial and territorial governments at the earliest opportunity.

Coming from the Province of Ontario as I do, which has slightly over nine million people and well over one-third of the entire population of Canada, I believe that I can hardly be criticized too much for stating that the idea of equal representation from each of the provinces and the territories seemed to me to be absolutely ludicrous. When I think of the Province of Prince Edward Island, which in size is not as big as my own riding of Parry Sound—Muskoka, although I will admit that it has a few more people in it, I am quite sure that the people will not accept this motion in its original form. I assume that the great Province of Quebec, whose population is over six million, compared to, I believe, Prince Edward Island's population of 120,000—

• (1710)

Mr. Darling: The Hon. Member for Malpèque (Mr. Gass) states that the population is approximately 128,000.

When one considers the population in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories, which is considerably less, I think you will agree that this motion should not carry as it is.

In view of that, I am pleased to present the following amendment:

> That the motion (M-18) of Mr. Taylor seconded by Mr. McCuish, be amended by deleting all the words after "new Senate" and by adding the following words:
> "after referring to a Conference of First Ministers such matters as the method of selection, the strength of representation of the provinces and territories, and the powers to be assigned thereto."

If this amendment were adopted, the amended motion would read:

> That, in the opinion of this House the government should consider the advisability of introducing the appropriate measures to abolish the Senate and to create a new Senate after referring to a Conference of First Ministers such matters as the method of selection, the strength of representation of the provinces and territories, and the powers to be assigned thereto.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will continue the debate, and in one minute I will make a decision on whether the motion is in order.

I realize the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) wishes me to rule immediately on it because the speech is over.

Mr. Gauthier: May I ask for the indulgence of the Chair. I was ready to speak on this debate, and for some reason that is still unclear to me, some Members did not wish me to speak at this time.

I wish to read the amendment carefully before speaking to it. It has an impact, and it does have some importance. This is Private Members' Hour, therefore, we on this side have not been duly recognized. The last five speakers were from the Tory Party. I was not being unreasonable by standing in my place hoping to be recognized.

I do wish to give you time to look at the motion, decide whether it is appropriate and in order. If so, I wish to have a copy sent to me immediately in order that I can address the important amendment before us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair does find the motion to be in order and will make sure that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier receives a copy immediately.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, may I say from the outset that the motion under consideration, Motion M-18 as amended, is an interesting proposition for us in the Canadian minority. I guess I am not revealing a secret by stating publicly that I am in favour of an elected Senate, I am for a Senate which is representative of Canada, and I am for a Senate which will be elected within our federal system and which will have a very specific mandate, very definite and very clear powers which, I hope, will be distinct from ours in the House of Commons. Because I am not the first one to say so, Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of studies, commissions, special committees, for instance the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform in January 1984, co-chaired by Senator Gildas Molgat and the Hon. Paul Cosgrove, M.P. The Pepin-Robarts Commission, the Task Force on Canadian Unity, also examined the question. The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs under the chairmanship of Senator Carl Goldenberg released a report on this question in 1980, and generally speaking most of them were in favour of an elected Senate.

The motion calls for an elected Senate, but as I understand it, the amendment, which I do not have before me, would have us refer the whole issue to a federal-provincial conference to determine the specifics of this reform, including the method of electing the senators, their exact role, as well probably as the powers of the new Senate.

I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker, because I agree that we must act quickly in this regard, and because I am firmly convinced that the Senate must represent minority interests in this country, whether regional, linguistic or sexual, and I am thinking especially of the need for women senators, for representatives of the native people and of the many groups of new Canadians of all races and cultures who should also be represented in this elected Senate.

How can this be done? That is the problem, Mr. Speaker, and I agree with the Hon. Member that it would perhaps be appropriate to ask the first Ministers to examine this issue in depth at one of their meetings.

[English]

Indeed, the amendment in one swoop takes away the Triple E Senate, which I think my hon. friend, who moved the motion, believes in and strongly supports. I know for a fact that many of his western friends support a Triple E Senate, which is effective, elected, and equal. We could debate those three points logically and rationally in the House and what we mean by equal representation, effective representation, and the manner in which the Senate is to be elected. The whole process of election by province is a problem in itself.

My friend from Parry Sound alluded to the imbalance in population. Would the question of equal representation be based on population, or would it be strictly on a provincial basis? The Hon. Member who moved the motion made the strong recommendation that we ask the Government to consider the advisability of introducing the appropriate measures to abolish the Senate and replace it.

The original motion made a lot of sense. As a matter of fact, I was going to attempt to amend it further by including the word "effective" which he believes to be important. There have been statements made by the Hon. Carl Goldenberg when he made his study of the whole question of the Senate. He stated that the Senate has not always been the protector of minorities. The Senate did not speak when Japanese Canadians were interned during the last war. The Senate did not stand up for them at that time. The Senate did not stand up for Ontario during the 1911-1917 period when French was abolished as the language of instruction. The Senate did not stand up, at least as far as I know.

Sometimes the Senate does its work very nicely. I refer Hon. Members to the following report:

[Translation]

—the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. I could read passages of this report at great length, Mr. Speaker, for instance where it says on page 29 that the Senate has not played a major role in protecting linguistic or other minorities. Certain critics have accused the Senate of not having defended efficiently the interests of racial, religious or linguistic minorities, and I could go on, Mr. Speaker. I am one of those who would prefer an elected Senate. There is no longer any argument about this point. There have been studies and commissions and too many people have supported this view.

Mr. Prud'homme: Our party took this position last November.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, as the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis has just reminded me, our own party, the Liberal Party, officially endorsed last November during its national convention in Ottawa the idea of an elected Senate. This is quite clear and simple. It now seems that we should sit down and determine the specifics of this elected Senate to have a truly effective elected Senate which can defend the interests of our minorities and regions, as there are many Canadians who, God knows, do not have the same opportunities as the people of Southern Ontario, for instance, as regards job creation and economic development in general. I think that is an essential role the Senate must play, and I will vote with my colleague in support of the motion and the amendment aimed at referring the whole question to a group of provincial premiers gathered in a conference.

[English]

I will read the amended motion again because I think it is worth putting it into context:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing the appropriate measures to abolish the Senate and to create a new Senate after referring to a Conference of First Ministers such matters as the method of selection, the strength of representation of the provinces and territories, and the powers to be assigned thereto.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Earlier today, Mr. Speaker, we had a short debate initiated by a Member who was complaining about the Translation of the documents I am looking at, on something as important as this, and here I want to draw your attention—

[English]

I will say it in English because I do not want to be misunderstood by my hon. friend, and if I have a friend in the House it is he. He has nothing to do with the fact that the motion is strictly in English. It is his right to work in his own language and to table it, but if there is a place where services should be available, it is in the House.

It has nothing to do with the fact that the motion was put in English, because that is the way the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling) works better. If I had to present the same kind of resolution, I would have put it in French, because one is more precise when one functions in one's own language. It is not for me to do the work in order for the House to function better; it is not for me to do the double work.

This is the time for me to raise this point of order on the same day as the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) raised a question of privilege in the debate of which I participated. I said that I was tired of coming back to this question time and time again.

This is no reflection upon Mr. Speaker, upon Mr. Deputy Speaker, or upon the Hon. Member. However, I would hope that the question will be raised again with Mr. Speaker.

It is a very important motion. By the way, I intend to vote for it, but I like to make sure exactly what I am voting for. It is better for me in my language. The Hon. Member knows what he is proposing. I would like to vote for it, so now I have to study it very carefully and decide whether that is the meaning I really want.

I am sure this is a point of order. Once again we are not equipped, and we should be equipped at least within the boundaries of Parliament if not within Canada. If it is not all across Canada or across Ontario or in Quebec, it should be at least within the boundaries of the fence surrounding Parliament that we should be equipped quickly.

If I must propose something in French or in English, my hon. friend who speaks French or English better should be equipped quickly, so that he will be on the same footing as I am when reading what is about to take place in the House. I just wanted to put that point before you, Mr. Speaker.

And I hope my message will be conveyed to whomever it may concern.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) for his representations. I believe he has others.

[English]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I have the floor, but I would like to move a subamendment. However, I suppose Your Honour will rule me out of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member knows the procedure quite well.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the additional comments which will be made by my hon. friend in a moment or two. I am certain that he will have an appropriate amendment to make.

I am pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words with regard to Motion M-18. We have seen quite a change of venue this afternoon. The original proposal was for consideration to be given to a Triple E Senate with equal representation from each province, whether the province was British Columbia, Prince Edward Island, or the Territories.

That approach has some interesting connotations, yet we have heard from many constituents about the validity of giving equal weight to an area of Canada with a few thousand people as opposed to a few million people. I ask in all innocence: Is that the best way to proceed?

What has necessitated this discussion and has resulted in the amendment of the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling) was the fact that there are other alternatives. Perhaps a Triple E Senate is one way to enhance regional voices in the decision-making of Parliament, but there are other ways of recognizing regional voices.

It is fair to say that we have some very fundamental questions before us today. For example, why do we have a Senate? Of course there are two fundamental reasons. One is that it is a Chamber of sober second thought. However, when we look at the record we see that that has not in fact occurred. By and large the Senate has been a rubber stamp for government business over the years.

As a matter of fact, if we look at the business conducted by the Senate, we find a list of how long the Senate sat each day. Month after month the average day's sitting was a little over an hour. The Upper House sits a little over an hour per day, while the House of Commons sits for many, many hours.

If I think back to legislation on which so-called sober thought was given, I can think of very few pieces of legislation when regional representation, the second reason for the Senate, came into play.

As I said, the Senate was to provide sober second thought and a forum for regional voices. However, what we are hearing in the Senate today are not regional voices but partisan political voices wherein the Liberal Senators are doing one thing and the Conservative Senators are doing another. Of course there are no New Democrat Senators, perhaps for some obvious reasons.

The Senate has become partisan, as one would expect of an Upper House. Therefore, if we are to have regional voices in our Upper House, is an elected Senate the appropriate way to accomplish that? Is a Triple E Senate the appropriate way to accomplish that? I think there are many doubts that this would accomplish the theory of what the Upper House is all about.

By the way, without any reflection upon the individual involved, I noticed today that there was a Senator who showed up only once in three years, three years of being a Senator and receiving his remuneration, and he managed to show up on one day. We have the famous Senator from British Columbia, Senator Lawson, who shows up to collect his pay cheque every now and then, and that is about it.

We have some real abuses in that House. On the other hand, we recognize that there are some outstanding individuals who make a contribution in their own way. However, as far as the question of the Senate being overworked is concerned, when we look at the amount of time spent by the Senate we find that it does not come out that way.

As a parliamentarian from western Canada I am concerned that the regional voices from western, northern, and eastern Canada are lost in the present decision-making of Parliament. The overwhelming numbers in central Canada dominate the issues of the day and the general sway of events moves us, in terms of the issues and concerns relevant in central Canada, away from the regions of the West, the North and the East. For that reason there has been a cry for a change in the way Parliament is set up. The Triple-E Senate has been proposed and, as I say, there are many other institutions that I could talk about, for instance, CRTC and the various boards which all lack western representation in terms of fair representation, but that goes beyond this debate.

In an effort to provide as many open doors as possible, my hon. friend from Parry Sound—Muskoka has broadened the debate to go beyond the Triple-E Senate. I think that is valuable. I think we need to go even further than that, Mr. Speaker. I do not think we need to have any limitations. Our country is the second largest country in the world geographically and we need to ensure that those vast regions play a role in the national decision-making when it comes to the federal Government and Parliament. I do not think we want to close the door on any one of those possibilities.

Therefore, I move, seconded by my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap):

That the amendment be amended by deleting all of the words at the end of the amendment by adding the following:

"or initiate discussions with the provinces and territories as to how regional interests can be more adequately integrated into the legislative process of the federal Government.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We could debate procedure all afternoon, but I would like to say that in my evaluation it will be very difficult for you to accept such a subamendment. I could go on for very long, but this amendment is not in the nature of a subamendment. A subamendment has to be very restrictive and address itself to the amendment. The amendment is very well done by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling). His was a real amendment, but the one moved by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is not a subamendment. It is much larger.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are taking that under advisement together with all your advisers. In my very humble evaluation, Your Honour, I do not think this is a subamendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will take this into consideration for a few seconds.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I submit that in my opinion the amendment to the amendment is out of order. It does not fulfil the requirements of the subamendment.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to my hon. colleagues, the amendment does amend the amendment. It does not change the amendment. It recognizes the value of the amendment and simply provides, if you like, a variety in expanding the general mandate expected. I think you will find the subamendment to be in order. There is no reason it would be out of order. If we are going to get into a debate on the propriety of the subamendment, I would ask Hon. Members to quote the appropriate citation they are using, because it is obvious that the subamendment is, in fact, just that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley).

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure and an honour to rise this afternoon on the question of Senate reform. Having recently witnessed amendments and amendments to amendments I think it is very fitting that this is happening this afternoon because it identifies the long history of Senate reform in Canada.

It has been said by many wags over the years that on July 1, 1867, Canada's founding as a country was commemorated through the British North America Act which brought into being the legislative, judicial and executive functions of Government. On July 2, they all got together on how to change the Senate. It does not quite go back that far, but within seven years of Confederation, it is noteworthy that the first serious attempts were made to amend the Senate that had been created.

Our challenge as Canadians from all parts of the country is obvious in trying to evaluate the role of the Senate as we see it today. As is clear to anyone who sits in this Chamber, I think the way the Senate represents the interests of Canada is questionable at best.

As it is not appropriate to comment with disdain on the other place, I think recent events will indicate to us that the Senate does not speak for the regions of Canada or for the aspirations of the different sectors of Canadian society as well as it should. Beginning at this point we should ask ourselves, should there be a Senate? When one talks about the very existence of the Senate, we can look at the amendments we have been moving today. There are Members, particularly in the New Democratic Party, who have risen and said that the Senate should be abolished altogether. I do not agree with that, Mr. Speaker. As a western Canadian I see the need for the House of sober second thought, as it was phrased in 1867. I see the need for a senior assembly or Senate, but how we effect this institution is of prime importance to all of us.

I am interested in the amendment by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling). It refers to having a conference of First Ministers deal with the question of Senate reform and "such matters as to the method of selection, the strength of representation of the provinces, the territories and the powers assigned thereto". I agree in substance and specifically with this amendment because it provides us with the will to change the Senate. It allows us the flexibility in the method of changing the Senate.

Since 1968 there have been 16 concrete proposals federally and provincially by interest groups on ways to amend the Senate. We have had the Canada West Foundation model, the Canadian Bar Association model and a number of other models involving such things as a provincial House of Assembly. It is clear that we must find a way in which to change the Senate.

I think that by following through on the initiatives taken in the Meech Lake Accord and keeping Senate reform at the top of the agenda, if the House were to pass the motion as amended that we refer the question of the conference of First Ministers to deal with the questions of representation, powers and method of selection, this would be a significant first step by Members of this House in saying that while we all may have different views and different methods of balancing the Senate, we agree with changing the Canadian Senate.

If you go back to the 16 models since 1968 for Senate reform, there are a number of them which fall into a general category that involves abolishing the Senate and starting from the ground up. Obviously in the few short moments remaining, there is not enough time to comment specifically on whether we should abolish it altogether or simply try to convince the First Ministers of Canada to make a couple of concrete amendments to our Constitution to amend the powers of our Senate as it exists.

As a western Canadian I have some very strong and personally held views on Senate reform. First, there is the question of representation. It is fashionable, in fact it is very popular in western Canada to support what is called the Triple-E Senate. While those who support the Triple-E Senate certainly have the interests of western Canada and the regions at heart, we have to ask ourselves as western Canadians a few fairly tough questions. Triple E, of course, stands for elected, effective and equal. I think we should move with the greatest of haste to an elected Senate. I think that in a sense would make it more effective. I do worry about the equality of having 10 provinces all with literally the same numbers of Senators. It is often fashionable as well to say, "Well, they do it in the United States". Between tiny Rhode Island and the State of California, which is larger than all of Canada in population, there exist 48 other states with other Senators, 96 in all, who represent the interests of those 48 states. It is not practical to say that in Canada Prince Edward Island should have as many Senators as Ontario. We must consider that there are eight provinces between those two extremes in population.

While I am not ruling out an equal Senate, I believe that it is time, as Canadians who aspire to speak for all regions, to look at this question of balance.

In addition to a balanced Senate, we should examine how we want the process of Senate reform to take place. I know very few Canadians who do not agree with an elected Senate. I suggest that if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premiers could meet, with this question of Senate reform at the top of their agenda, they could even consider for the short term keeping the Senate largely the way it is now, made up of 104 members based on the four regions, with 24 Senators from each region and other Senators representing Newfoundland and later entrants to Canada.

I ask Members to consider a formula by which we can elect a Senate with the same number of 104 Senators. One formula which has been suggested is that of proportional representation. As a western Canadian I would far rather see a form of proportional representation rather than "the first past the post" system we use in this House.

That form of proportional representation would balance the same regions we have now. We would have a Senate that represents the political Parties in a completely different configuration in each of the regions, with Senators who legitimately speak as elected representatives. Of course, under my system we would still have Parties, but I would hope that because we would have Senators elected on a slate, by region and by province, the interests of those Senators for regions and provinces would come first.

While political considerations would be factored into any legitimate disagreement with the House of Commons, those Senators would still speak as representatives of strong regions of Canada. That is just one example. There are many considerations when one examines the many possibilities and combinations for Senate reform.

Let us consider the motion we are debating here today. It calls for a conference of First Ministers and for this conference to establish the parameters, the powers, the representation, and the means of selection. I do not believe any Member of the House would disagree with that very generally worded motion.

I would call upon members of all Parties to consider this as a very loud cry from the House of Commons to get serious about Senate reform. We can leave the specifics to other times. There have been a number of thoughtful representations made over the years by joint House of Commons and Senate committees, interest groups, and other public advocacy centres. All of the provinces have spoken very strongly in the past about Senate reform. However, I believe as a Member of this House that we should pass this motion calling on the First Ministers to work toward arriving at that formula.

Canada is a country with five main regions, with one-third of Canadians who represent neither of the two official founding cultures, and a further third of the people who represent the French language. We live in a country that is very diverse and very challenging. Certainly, the present method of Senate appointments and Senate structure does not accommodate the regions and does not accommodate the unique interests that make up this country, and certainly does not accommodate in a democratic sense the grass root thoughts of most Canadians.

Let us consider this motion as an opportunity to ask serious questions about the Senate. I certainly favour the effective and elected portion of a Triple E Senate. We can have an effective Senate if we elect it. I think we can leave the question of representation to the First Ministers and joint parliamentary committees in order to determine a way to forge a proper balance of the Senate representing the regions of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) on a point of order. First, I want to ask if the Hon. Member is aware that the amendment in fact adds words to the amendment of the Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling). It does not delete anything. I think there has been some confusion because a document was circulated in the House which in fact deleted and would have made the amendment out of order.

The amendment that was proposed does in fact add words, and the Chair intends to rule it in order. The Chair is willing to hear the Member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to refer to the admissibility of the proposed subamendment. I submit with respect that it is contrary to the intent of Citation 438 of Beauchesne, that it enlarges upon the scope of the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling). It indeed brings in foreign matter in so far as the amendment is quite clear in referring the substance of the motion to a First Ministers' conference. The subamendment begins to deal with a much larger frame of reference, namely provinces and territories, without designating whether the reference is to governments or to legislatures or any other body so named.

Therefore, it is really enlarging upon the scope of the amendment in a most amorphous way and is contrary to the intention of Beauchesne. For that reason, like the Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), I submit that the subamendment is not in order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to reinforce the argument just put. Indeed, the subamendment does not meet with my interpretation of the rules and procedures of the House. The Member quoted correctly Citation 438 of Beauchesne.

If you examine the subamendment closely, it adds: "Initiate discussions with the provinces and territories".

Citation 438 states:

> The purpose of a subamendment (an amendment to an amendment) is to alter the amendment; it should not enlarge upon the scope of the amendment but it should deal with matters that are not covered by the amendment;—

I submit that the subamendment tabled by the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) enlarges the mandate and therefore would not be proper as to form, nor in keeping with Beauchesne's rules of procedure.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) rising on a point of order? Very well.

[English]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I think we want to proceed with the debate because it is very interesting and important. However, I rose on a point of order on intuition, and I still believe I was right in expressing my views as to the acceptability of the subamendment. I share the opinion expressed by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse).

While I will abide by your ruling, I still believe that this is not a proper subamendment.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we are anxious to get on with the debate, but I simply draw your attention to the fact that the subamendment was made in the context of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 441(3) which states:

> A subamendment which proposes an alternative to the original amendment is in order provided it is relevant to the question.

Of course, in this case, it is certainly relevant to the question and provides an alternative to the original. It was in that context that the subamendment was suggested, following the strict interpretation of Beauchesne.

• (1750)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has studied the subamendment and, with respect to the contrary opinions submitted by some Members of the House, finds it to be in order. Debate.

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, had I moved the motion I would have presented it in French and shortened it, because I would have proposed that the Senate be abolished, quite simply, and the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) would not have felt the need to raise the point of order which led to this series of points of order.

That being so, I could very easily have provided him with a translation, something which my colleague from Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling) was not in a position to do. So, in English, it would have read:

[English]

"I propose that the Senate be abolished".

So, Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes or even the few seconds I have left I will explain why I would abolish the Senate. We have seen that every now and then, for political reasons, as the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) pointed out earlier, or for other reasons, whenever it is convenient or useful, a Member will drag out the issue of abolishing or changing the Senate.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Senate has been in existence for 120 years and has yet to play the role which the Fathers of Confederation intended it to play. I do not have time to read what they said about the Senate. Anyway, in his remarks a moment ago the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) referred to the many studies, the many commissions and the many reports concerning changes to or abolition of the Senate.

Now we are talking about an elected Senate. I want to say to my colleague—

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to make a mistake, but I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean that, in spite of what the motion of the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka said originally, with this amendment, if we read exactly what is before us, we find no mention of an elected Senate.

My point of order is this.

[English]

My point of order is the following. The Hon. Member is talking about a motion for an elected Senate. The way it has been amended and subamended, nowhere do we talk about an elected Senate. This is regrettable.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis seems to have been thinking of something else when I spoke about the motion. For my part, I propose that the Senate be abolished. This is what I said. First, I would like the Senate to be abolished.

Mr. Speaker, when a building has never properly met the needs for which it was built, instead of being renovated, it is simply pulled down and rebuilt. As long as the Senate has not been pulled down and rebuilt, there will not be—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the debate.

[English]

On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I ask the right to close the debate.

I would like, first to thank all those who participated in the discussion and moved amendments. The motion is important.

The basis of the House of Commons is representation by population. There is no reason why the Senate should have the same basis. That would mean people in the far-flung corners of this country would not have representation.

I cannot agree with the motion moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling). It retains the election of Senators but leaves out an essential part of my motion, namely equal representation for each province and territory. An elected Senate would be an improvement as Senators would then be responsible to the people who elect them. However, without equal representation from each province and territory, the West and the Maritimes may not be equal partners in Confederation. That is an important point. Without equal representation for each province and territory in the Senate, as they have in the House, some future Government could well pass another "National Energy Program" designed to destroy one part of this nation.

I believe Canada's salvation depends on all provinces and territories having equal representation with elected Senators from each province and territory. Then, with the powers of the House of Commons, we can have a united nation where every region can play its part in Confederation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the time provided for debate has expired.

The question is on the amendment to the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

• (1810)

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, this being Private Members' Hour, in keeping with our practice this session when dealing with recorded divisions in relation to Private Members' Business, having discussed it with my colleagues from the other Parties, I think you will find there is unanimous consent to proceed with the taking of the votes row by row starting on your right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to proceed row by row?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will then proceed as follows: As is customary, Members in favour of the subamendment will be asked to indicate their position first, followed by Hon. Members who are opposed. I will ask all Members in the first row to my right who are in favour of the subamendment to rise together, whereupon their names will be called by the Clerk beginning with the Hon. Member seated closest to the Chair. When the name of the Member in the row has been called and recorded, that Member will resume his or her seat.

When the taking of names of Hon. Members in the first row to my right has been completed, I will ask Members in the second, third, fourth and fifth row to my right to proceed in a similar manner. I will then ask Members in the first row to my left, regardless of their Party affiliation, who are in favour of the subamendment to rise and remain standing until their names have been called, and we will carry on similarly with the other rows on my left.

[Translation]

When the votes of all those who are for the sub-amendment have been recorded, I shall ask those who are against the sub-amendment to rise. We shall then start with the first row to my right, continuing with all the other rows to my right. Afterwards, we shall begin once more with the rows to my left. I repeat that the names will be called beginning with the Hon. Member seated closest to the Chair and going down to the end of the row. This will be done to my right without distinction of functions and to my left regardless of party affiliation.

• (1820)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment carried.

The next question is on the motion of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), as amended.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion, as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Prud'homme: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1835)

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Taylor), as amended, which was agreed to on the following division:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—MOZAMBIQUE—REQUEST FOR MORE ASSISTANCE—REQUEST FOR CO-ORDINATED MEASURES TO AID AFRICAN FRONT-LINE STATES

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, on August 21 I asked the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), to inform the House of Commons regarding the Government's proposals to help strengthen and diversify the economies of Mozambique as well as the other front-line states bordering South Africa. The reply of the Deputy Prime Minister was totally inadequate. It lacked content or information of any kind.

I feel it is necessary to reiterate to the Secretary of State for External Affairs the crisis situation in Mozambique. South Africa has mounted a deliberate campaign of aggression aimed at destabilizing the independent nations of southern Africa to make them more dependent than ever on trade and transportation links with South Africa. With this strategy in mind, Mozambique warrants special attention because it is a major transportation and communications link to all the front-line states. South Africa invades Mozambique periodically, while bands of terrorists it sponsors roam the countryside spreading terror and destruction. As a result of these repeated attacks, the Government of Mozambique has been unable to deal with the unprecedented drought and floods that have plagued Mozambique throughout this decade.

The destruction of the economy and the communications system has made Mozambique the runaway winner of the International Index of Human Suffering, which is devised from a rating of human misery in more than 100 countries. Mozambique rated 95 out of the highest possible level of suffering, which is 100.

Statistics released by UNICEF in January of this year revealed the startling fact of the human tragedy in Mozambique. The 1983-84 famine in Mozambique resulted in the death of at least 100,000 people. The contributing factors which resulted in the famine other than weather or agricultural policy was the dislocation of rural life and food production in southern Mozambique by South African-sponsored rebels. The 1986 statistics state that approximately 140,000 children both from Mozambique and Angola have died from war and destabilization-related causes. In view of this tragic situation in Mozambique, it is clear that these people require more than emergency food aid and some $24 million from CIDA.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs in a letter in response to my question of August 21 failed to provide any long-range proposals to help Mozambique rebuild its economy. Ottawa has responded in terms of emergency aid, but humanitarian assistance without attacking the root of the problem is futile. The amount of money given to Mozambique is pitiful compared to some of the other front-line states. I am speculating that the reason for this is the Marxist slant of the Mozambique Government. In spite of that Government's political ideology, men, women and children are suffering at the hands of South African-backed rebels.

Mozambique desperately requires help to rebuild its economy by way of defending its borders. Mozambique is a virtually poverty-stricken country. Part of this problem lies in the fact that 42 per cent of its budget goes to its defence in an effort to prevent South African-backed rebels from destroying its transportation links.

I have repeatedly asked the Minister to assist Mozambique in a manner that will benefit the people economically. It does not make sense to give small amounts of money for rebuilding when rebels keep destroying the reconstruction. The Minister has stated that he is committed to hastening the end of apartheid, but still has given no firm proposal as to how this end will be achieved. The Canadian High Commissioner in Britain stated that the Government of Canada may provide non-lethal military aid by way of jeeps and boots, but that will only allow the people of Mozambique to die with their boots on.

The Secretary General of the Commonwealth, Mr. Ramphal, has also stated that both the Commonwealth and Canada will have to be more serious about meeting the needs of the front line states.

Mozambique needs economic stability and secure borders. I have suggested that the Minister undertake to get the Commonwealth to support the stationing of Commonwealth or United Nations peacekeeping forces in Mozambique to prevent further raids, and block South African weapons and supplies from reaching the roving bands of terrorists operating within Mozambique.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has not provided any concrete responses or proposals to the House regarding a role Canada will play, if any, in helping Mozambique. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs now inform the House of the Government's intention to help derail South Africa's plan to destabilize the front line states and how such a plan will help Mozambique strengthen its economy and internal stability?

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada is well aware of the grave situation in Mozambique. The Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) travelled to Maputo last year following the tragic death of President Samora Machel. The Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) and a Canadian fact-finding mission reported to the Government on areas where they thought Canada could be of greater assistance to Mozambique. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) also visited Mozambique this summer. This is to say that we are closely monitoring the situation there and have responded generously to their needs.

This year CIDA will spend approximately $33 million in Mozambique. This includes $15 million worth of food aid; $1 million to the United Nations Disaster Relief Organization; $450,000 to UNHCR for its work with refugees; assistance through the Southern African Development Co-Ordination Conference for the rehabilitation of the Nacala Railway; assistance to NGO projects and a bilateral rural development program administered by CUSO.

Mozambique is suffering from drought largely exacerbated by civil strife. The well-being of Mozambique is crucial to its neighbours who depend on vital transport links via Mozambique to the Indian Ocean. We know this and that is why Mozambique is currently one of the largest recipients of Canadian aid in sub-Saharan Africa.

ENERGY—PRICE OF NATURAL GAS IN MANITOBA/GOVERNMENT POSITION.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on September 16 I asked a question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) concerning the discrepancies in the price of natural gas being sold in Canada by the producing provinces, principally Alberta. I did this in light of the promises made by the Prime Minister during the 1984 election campaign, specifically in Prince Albert, where he promised that Canadian gas sold to Canadians will never cost more to Canadians than it does to Americans.

The example I cited is the fact that as of November 1 this year, natural gas from Alberta passing along the pipeline across Manitoba into Minnesota will be sold in that state at a price of $1.80 per thousand cubic feet. The same gas, having already passed through Manitoba, will cost Manitobans $3 per thousand cubic feet.

The answer I received from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was very unclear, to say the least. He spoke of a National Energy Board ruling which is consistent with the market-oriented policies of the Government. Further, he spoke of provisions within the ruling which provide adequate protection for consumers. Some joke.

Let us examine both of the points he made. The dispute between producing and consuming provinces is not new. Certainly the Manitoba Government has made its concerns known to Alberta for some time and the federal Government knows about this.

As I indicated in my question on September 16, the Prime Minister made a commitment in Prince Albert in the 1984 campaign that Canadian gas sold to Canadians will never cost them more than it costs Americans. We now have some evidence on that point from the National Energy Board. Its report released in August showed that B.C. gas buyers paid five cents more per gigajoule than U.S. customers paid for the same gas. This difference contravened the deregulation agreement of October 31, 1985, which said "the price of exported natural gas shall not be less than the price charged to Canadians" when terms of sale are the same. When asked about the discrepancy, the NEB said "We are watching and monitoring the situation". Isn't that nice? They said "The story may well change in the next reporting period." In other words, "wait until next year".

What is missing here is any sense of fairness to Canadians. When the Alberta export price to the U.S. is $2.19 a gigajoule and small volume users in Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec are being charged $2.59 to $2.79 a gigajoule, then it is clear that consumers and small users are not benefiting from so-called deregulation. As a matter of fact, the Ottawa Board of Education is losing an estimated $27,000 a month because the Alberta Government has yet to approve a supply deal which that board negotiated with an Alberta producer.

These small users try to take advantage of market pricing, which the Deputy Prime Minister talked about, by forming large buying groups and dealing with gas brokers in Alberta. Yet they are being denied gas because the Alberta Government will not grant removal permits to so-called core market users.

There we have the supposed market system, a willing seller and a willing buyer, being frustrated. The truth of the matter is that cheaper gas applies only to large industrial users, some of whom have won discounts of as much as 66 per cent. The small user, public institutions and similar organizations are supposed to be the captive market that pays as much as they did before. The Alberta Government justifies this by saying these customers must pay for security of supply, a security which has been substantially decreased by the continual dropping of natural gas reserves required by the NEB before exports are permitted.

Clearly there is a day of reckoning coming. The first part is perhaps simpler. Customers who cannot get cheaper gas because of the Alberta Government may very well get other compensation in the form of rebates and non-price favours from suppliers. Alberta may well find the market will work despite its attempts to maintain higher prices for certain classes of users.

Second, we have the long-term impact. We are exporting relatively cheap gas from Alberta and British Columbia. When that gas is gone we will be captives to expensive gas from the high Arctic. The NEB insist that proven reserves more than take into account the total use in Canada and our exports. This is the same agency that predicted 300 years of gas in the 1960s and then found we had substantially less only a few years later. It is even now predicting a possible shortage by 1996.

It is time for the Government to live up to its election promises, let the market work and let consumers purchase gas at the cheapest price they can negotiate with suppliers.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member began his statement by quoting from the Prince Albert declaration because it was this Government's determination to dismantle the NEP which enabled the oil and gas industry to become emancipated and begin serving the Canadian consumer and providing for Canada's future energy self-sufficiency. I want to remind the Member of the day last week when he asked the question in the House. I refer to page 8997 of Hansard which reads:

HON. DON MAZANKOWSKI (DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER, PRESIDENT OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL AND PRESIDENT OF THE TREASURY BOARD): Mr. Speaker, I think we all know the position of the New Democratic Party. It would like to control market prices and production and phase out any export of natural gas or oil from the country.

MR. BROADBENT: Another lie. Keep it up. Do you ever tell the truth? Just once tell the truth.

MR. RIIS: It is not true.

I have the policy handbook of the New Democratic Party dated 1986 which is prefaced with the indication that it is still up to date. At page 156, item (4) says:

Our current surplus of conventional natural gas should not be exported.

At page 159 under "Public Ownership" it says:

Recent developments have confirmed the necessity of asserting public control over the oil industry in Canada. Only under government ownership and control can all Canadians be assured of a secure supply of petroleum products at a fair price.

At page 160, item (f) says:

We therefore recommend the phasing out of such exports between now and 1980—

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was right, and I am waiting for the Leader of the New Democratic Party to withdraw his remarks. It is a good thing that the Government did dismantle the National Energy Program and we are now beginning to see the benefits of that.

With regard to prices paid in the British Columbia market, the export price for B.C. gas has been quite volatile, responding to competition from residual fuel oil and U.S.-produced gas in the Pacific northwest. While recent information indicates that B.C. consumers have paid more for gas than those in the adjacent U.S. market, this relationship between domestic and export prices for B.C. gas is likely to reverse quite dramatically over the next review period to reflect the decline of export sales during the summer months.

In his question in the House on September 16 the Hon. Member was referring to an export price on interruptible sales with respect to those in Manitoba. Some of those interruptible sales are of a very erratic nature—on one month and off the next. This is not the type of service that Manitoba wants. Manitoba wants and requires firm service. It is a logical fact of life in the natural gas business that long-term dependable firm service commands a higher price than that of short-term interruptible service.

I am sure that the House will be interested to know that during 1986 the average price paid by residential consumers of natural gas in Manitoba was $5.49 Canadian per thousand cubic feet versus $6.88 Canadian per thousand cubic feet paid by North Dakota residential consumers. While more recent figures are unavailable at this time, we are confident that over time Canadian consumers will continue to reap the benefits of deregulation.

TRADE—CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS DOMESTIC PRICE OF WHEAT/CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on September 15 I asked a question of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) with regard to the free trade negotiations with the United States. The provincial Premiers had met with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) the previous evening and had commented that there was a great deal of pessimism about the free trade talks. There seemed to be no decision in sight on a number of key issues, including agricultural subsidies.

I asked what commitment the Minister could make with regard to the Canadian Wheat Board and the domestic price of wheat to guarantee that these two important elements of the Canadian western economy would not be bartered away.

In the interview which Premier Bourassa gave to the press after the meeting with the Prime Minister, Premier Bourassa said that there were different formulas they were discussing to reach an agreement but that they had agreed not to talk about them publicly while the negotiations were under way.

It seems clear to me from the comments of Premier Bourassa that the Government is considering various bargaining positions, perhaps including bargaining away the domestic price of wheat, which is earning close to $300 million a year in additional revenues for Canada's wheat producers. There are a number of such issues in our agricultural economy which the Americans want to get rid of. Our concern is that they will be bargained away in order to get a bi-national disputes handling mechanism.

In my second question to the Minister I inquired if the Minister could make it clear that agricultural programs such as our supply management systems marketing boards and support programs will not be bartered away in the final hours of negotiations. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary this evening will be able to give a clear commitment that the Government in those final negotiating hours, which we assume will come a week from this Sunday, will not bargain away the Canadian Wheat Board, Canada's right to set its domestic price of wheat and the supply managements system, the marketing boards and the systems for quotas and tariffs which underpin the supply management programs we have for the dairy and poultry industry, because we have a better system than does the United States.

The United States Undersecretary of State for Agriculture has made it very clear that the United States will not have a trade deal without agriculture being in it. It will not have a trade deal without doing away with the supply management systems we have in this country for poultry, for dairy products and for other commodities. They want that out of there.

I was simply asking for the Minister to make a commitment that the Government would not bargain these away in the final hours of negotiation. Her only comment was that it has to be a good deal for Canada. There is a small percentage of people in agriculture, yet it is vitally important, and if they were to be sold out it would not be a good deal for our farmers.

The Minister made the very profound comment that there is no agreement until there is an agreement. That is fairly self-evident. The Minister says the suggestion that there are trade-offs is simply not true. Clearly, from the comments made by Premier Bourassa, the Government is definitely considering trade-offs.

I simply ask the Government not to trade away our supply management, our Wheat Board, our ability to have a domestic price of wheat, because if it does, it will not be serving the national good. It certainly will not be serving agriculture because the programs and mechanisms we have in this place for providing an adequate income to our dairy, poultry and wheat producers and to our farmers, in my opinion, are better than those in the United States and we should not be trading them away, regardless of how hard the United States trade negotiator pressures in the final hours of negotiation. I certainly hope the Parliamentary Secretary can give those assurances this evening which the Minister failed to give on the floor of the House of Commons on September 15.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by correcting the Hon. Member. The Minister has given those assurances a number of times, as has the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

By now everyone should be aware that the Canada-United States trade negotiations are in their final, most critical and most sensitive stage. Our negotiators are in almost constant session with the U.S. negotiators and Ministers are meeting frequently on the issue. In this situation it would not be helpful nor in Canada's interest for me to comment publicly on the specific positions or issues.

However, with regard to the specific question about the Canadian Wheat Board, I would like to recall that the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and other cabinet Ministers, including the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), have repeatedly made this Government's position clear on marketing boards. We have repeated the message many times: Canada will retain the right to decide, in Canada, what types of marketing systems are best for Canadian agriculture. We are not about to dismantle the Canadian Wheat Board, or any other marketing boards.

I remind all Hon. Members of the resolution passed overwhelmingly in the House on March 16 which states:

> That this House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States, as part of the government's multilateral trade policy, while protecting our political sovereignty, social programs, agricultural marketing systems, the auto industry, and our unique cultural identity.

We are engaged in a comprehensive trade negotiation with the United States in which we are discussing all barriers to trade. There is nothing surprising about the U.S. making requests for us to modify some of our domestic trade mechanisms. However, Canada's response to specific requests will depend on whether there is a good package for agriculture.

We will not sign any deal unless it is a good deal for Canada and Canadian farmers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 7.07 p.m.

WOMEN

DISCRIMINATION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, it seems that, last week, a woman teacher in a Medicine Hat school had to resign because she was a single mother. This young woman had to leave her job because she did not meet the current standards of the school.

At a time when there is virtually no access to information on contraception, when subsidies for plannned parenthood have been drastically cut back and when there are no services for single mothers, a young mother has accepted her responsibilities as concerns her pregnancy and her child, and the puritanical attitude of those around her are taking away her means of subsistance. This is blatant discrimination. What are we doing about the unknown men who father children continuously and are never brought to account?

I ask the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Porter) and the other Members from Alberta to help this young woman find a new job. It is time to put an end to the balkanization of human rights according to the provinces where people live. It is up to the Members from Alberta to take action, otherwise we shall be embarrassed of being Canadians.

AIR CANADA

SUSPENSION OF NON-STOP SERVICE BETWEEN EDMONTON AND OTTAWA

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, Air Canada has once again chosen to suspend temporarily daily non-stop service between Edmonton and the nation's capital. Passengers are to be rerouted through Toronto.

In the past Edmontonians have found this four-month period of suspension inconvenient and expensive. Interim measures force travellers to depart earlier, only to arrive in Ottawa at three o'clock in the afternoon. By the time one claims his or her luggage and cabs it downtown it is closer to four o'clock. How much business can one do at this late time of the day? Not much.

This inconvenience and annoyance are generously extended to our fellow Canadians flying into Edmonton from Whitehorse and Yellowknife who also have business in Ottawa. So you see, Mr. Speaker, the residents of three provincial and territorial capitals for a four-month period do not have daily, direct service to the nation's capital. It is a shame—and this is a national, publicly owned airline!

MARINE SAFETY

RETENTION OF STAFFED WEST COAST LIGHTSTATIONS DEMANDED

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the Leblond report which cost the taxpayers $30,000 and recommends West Coast lightstations be automated is a complete farce. The report was commissioned after a massive public outcry against the Coast Guard's plan to automate those lightstations.

The Leblond report was bought and paid for by the Coast Guard. The report ignores public input and demeans the dedicated work of lightkeepers on the West Coast.

Virtually all municipalities, regional boards and user groups on the coast of British Columbia demanded not only that lightkeepers remain but that they be equipped and trained to provide a wide and effective range of safety services. The Leblond report instead recommends that one-half the lightkeepers be rapidly eliminated and the rest be removed when their function can be transferred or contracted out.

The Leblond report belongs in the scrap heap. We demand a moratorium on any Coast Guard action to automate and destaff those lightstations. We demand an appointment of an impartial inquiry commission and a study into lightstation operations with publicly acceptable terms of reference.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, since our party took over the reins of the Canadian Government in September 1984, the economy of our country has been doing well. Everyone agrees that the performance of our Government is exceptional.

According to the OECD, the rate of growth of production and employment in 1986 has been higher in Canada than in all other major industrialized countries. Again according to the OECD, by taking the action required to meet the objectives of its budgetary strategy, the Government has guaranteed the credibility of its budgetary management, which explains the success of its economic policy.

Mr. Speaker, I emphasize that both the media and the OECD recognize the economic performance of this Government. Moreover, the Minister of Finance recently revealed that our deficit last year was lower than expected.

I believe that it is important to underline that the Conservative economic policy is working for the good of all Canadians.

SENIOR CITIZENS

REQUIREMENTS OF A CHANGING SOCIETY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, as Canada's population ages, demands are increasing on our society to provide adequate care and reasonable lifestyle choices for our elderly. Estimates from an International Monetary Fund study show that by the middle of the next century there will be 32.5 elderly Canadians for every 100 Canadians of working age. The greatest pressure on our society's ability to face the challenge is expected to come between the years 2011 and 2031.

The Government must begin, and begin now, to improve the quality of life for today's senior citizens and prepare for the demands of the future. There are no easy solutions for dealing with the requirements of a changing society. The time has clearly arrived, however, for the Government to take some concrete action and devote more attention to the elderly of today and tomorrow.

FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY

ACTIVITIES OF SEA SHEPHERD SOCIETY

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I rise again today to condemn the actions of the Canadian Citizens Animal Rights Group, the Sea Shepherd Society. You might recall, Mr. Speaker, last November it was Paul Watson's organization that destroyed two whaling vessels and an Icelandic processing plant, causing $2.8 million in damage.

His criminal actions have continued. This time he has struck on Canadian soil. Over the past couple of months numerous furriers in Vancouver have been victims of vandals who have caused tens of thousands of dollars in damage. This weekend three people have been arrested for their part in the recent bomb attacks which have damaged stores and destroyed many priceless furs. The three individuals, two Americans and one British, have admitted to being members of the Sea Shepherd Society.

We as Canadians should be ashamed of this group's actions. Speaking for the many native groups and northern Canadians whose livelihoods depend on the fur industry, I hope Canadian justice will come to bear on these three vandals.

ACID RAIN

NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO PROTECT ENVIRONMENT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, decaying forests caused by acid rains spell disaster for Canada. Polluting emissions from the United States have irremediably ravaged one third of Quebec's Eastern Townships maple groves.

Eastern Townships producers are busy felling dead trees. Our symbol, the maple leaf, is dying at the same time. Like other Canadians, Quebec agricultural producers have come to appreciate the environmental hazards inherent in a free trade deal. They are asking that adequate measures be taken to protect the environment.

[English]

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has said to the Special Committee on Acid Rain that acid rain was the litmus test of the Government's ability to deal with the Americans generally. It is all too evident now that the Government has failed the test.

Three years have been lost in the battle against acid rain by a Government more concerned to placate President Reagan than to protect our environment.

If we are to survive as a people, the Government must change its priorities and make the environment number one.

POLITICAL PARTIES

SOCIALIST PARTY'S POLICY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the socialist leader does not agree with his first Quebec lieutenant on the selection of candidates for his Party in that province.

Whereas the national leader wants to scrutinize the credentials of members and candidates, the provincial lieutenant retorts: "Why scrutinize the credentials of Quebec candidates, a procedure which has never been followed in the other provinces?" Why set criteria in Quebec and none elsewhere?

A party which is for social programs without taxes, for full employment without a business community, for a duly protected public without jails, for independent citizens without armed forces, and for international leadership without allies should not have any difficulty lining up candidates without membership and without ideas, candidates capable of blending quickly within the socialist party incongruity.

In the odd Quebec riding the socialist party will certainly find eccentric people oblivious to the future, unwitting dreamers who will close ranks under the banner of a party which says both everything and nothing.

TRADE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we heard the unprecedented statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that the Auto Pact was not on the table. At the same time we heard from the chief negotiator that the Auto Pact was on the table.

Only a few short hours ago we heard press reports that Canada had suspended negotiations. Then we heard that Canada had not suspended negotiations. Then we heard that the chief negotiator for Canada is temporarily coming back to Ottawa to consult with the Prime Minister to find out exactly what our position is.

When hundreds of thousands of jobs in the automobile and related steel and other industries hang in the balance, I do not think we should have the kind of statements made by the Prime Minister that we heard in the House yesterday, and the kind of mass confusion that seems to reign over the Canadian position on the free trade question.

We want clarity, we want truth from the Prime Minister, and we want him to stand up and confess once and for all that the Auto Pact has always been on the table. It has been part of his hidden agenda. In fact he is prepared to sacrifice Canadian jobs at any cost, because he said himself that his own political career is on the line.

FINANCE

PROTECTION OF CREDIT CARD USERS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, later this afternoon, with your permission, I will ask the House to give first reading to a Bill which will protect Canadian credit card users against excessive, unjust, and avaricious charges.

Credit cards have become the great new financial fact of our time, with about 17 million being used in Canada alone and about 10 million Canadians paying interest charges.

For years banks, trust companies, gasoline companies, and department stores have kept their charges far above what was required to pay costs and make a fair profit.

The wisdom of the House in making a significant study of this problem last spring has been recently indicated by the British Government undertaking a major investigation of credit card charges in the United Kingdom. Legislation on the same issue is now before the United States Congress. This Canadian House can once again show leadership on behalf of the Canadian people.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

BRAZEAU TRANSPORT—ACQUISITION AND CLOSURE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, on May 8, Brazeau Transport Inc., a New Brunswick trucking company, was purchased by Cabano/D'Anjou Trucking Company of Quebec. Cabano/D'Anjou announced that Brazeau Transport would cease all its operations one month later in the Maritimes, throwing out of work 90 employees in five different communities with 20 minutes' notice.

Following the abrupt dismissal of these employees, many of whom are represented by the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers, they applied to the CLRB for successor rights.

In response to that application, Cabano/D'Anjou admitted that it had, and I quote, "acquired certain assets of Brazeau Transport—for the purpose of eliminating Brazeau as a competitor in the trucking industry" in the Maritimes. Such a blunt admission should leave the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) to investigate this matter to discern whether or not any laws have been broken. It also throws the Minister of Transport's (Mr. Crosbie) claim of increased competition under deregulation into the realm of pure fantasy.

Cabano/D'Anjou has also shown how deregulation encourages concentration in transport industries rather than enhancing competition as the Conservatives claim, and as the Liberals and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) have claimed before them.

EMPLOYMENT

HELP WANTED INDEX—INCREASE IN NUMBER OF ADVERTISEMENTS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, a local business in my community may have to close its doors forever in a few weeks because it cannot hire the employees it desperately needs. According to one of the owners: "I had an ad in the Toronto Star and didn't get one response. I'll take anything".

This is a dramatic illustration of the message being given by the recent Statistics Canada help wanted index, which reached its highest level ever in August of this year. Help wanted advertising in Atlantic Canada is up 72 per cent to its highest level in 20 years. In Quebec it is up 85 per cent, in Ontario help wanted advertising is up 154 per cent, on the Prairies 51 per cent, and in British Columbia 83 per cent.

During the last election campaign our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised jobs, jobs, jobs. In fact 907,000 jobs have been created since September 4, 1984. As far as Canadian workers are concerned, Mr. Speaker, these Tory times are tremendous times.

RESEARCH

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF LABORATORY CENTRE FOR DISEASE CONTROL FROM NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION TO WINNIPEG—NEGATIVE EFFECTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in March 1987, we learned that a new laboratory centre for disease control had been planned in the Ottawa area for 1990. That new $93 million research centre would allow scientists to do research on viruses and bacteria, and this as we know requires specialized equipment. But we now learn as of this week that the Tory Health Minister intends to transfer the laboratory centre to Winnipeg, his home province.

Besides adding to the costs, which are estimated by some to be in the order of up to $30 million, such a transfer would have a negative impact on the National Capital area's scientific community at which this Tory Government seems to have been nagging these last few years. This same Minister who favors the transfer has commended that group of scientists for their contribution to the AIDS vaccine. Without questioning in any way the qualifications of Winnipeg scientists, it therefor seems illogical that the Minister would transfer that laboratory centre to Winnipeg with the sole purpose of gathering the support of Manitoba electors, for strictly partisan reasons. We should not make an area poorer by cutting down on its jobs, under the pretence of making another area richer. The disease control research centre was meant for Ottawa and must remain in Ottawa.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—SUSPENSION OF TALKS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister confirm that Ambassador Reisman has broken off negotiations with the United States on the trading relationship between our two countries? Will he give the House of Commons the reasons for Mr. Reisman's return to Ottawa?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will confirm to the House what I have just had the occasion to put out publicly. Ambassador Reisman has suspended negotiations with the Americans and he is en route to Ottawa. He will be meeting me tonight and will be reporting to the Cabinet tomorrow.

Obviously the negotiations and the response from the American side are deemed to be unsatisfactory on some very important issues. For this reason it was believed to be quite advisable for us to take counsel together.

INSTRUCTIONS TO CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister be willing to take the House into his confidence and tell us what will be the nature of his instructions to Mr. Reisman? Will the Prime Minister give Canadians the assurance that there will be no further cave-in—

Some Hon. Members: Further cave-in?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —and give us a commitment that he will yield no further on no other issues to the Americans in order to keep these negotiations going and back on track? Will he give us that commitment?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have just suspended negotiations, and the Leader of the Opposition is worrying about how we keep them going.

An Hon. Member: Who is caving in?

Mr. Mulroney: There is no doubt that the Government has been seeking, and continues to seek, a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States. We believe that it is very much in the national interest that this initiative should have been launched, as indeed it was.

• (1420)

Ambassador Reisman is at the table in Washington. He reports back to me and to the Minister for International Trade and the Cabinet his concerns about some fundamental issues that are not being properly addressed by the Americans. At this juncture, negotiations are suspended. I will be meeting with him and I will be happy, at an appropriate time, to make a more complete statement.

REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY DEBATE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the negotiations are indeed off, the Prime Minister and his Government have blown the last three years. As well, he has damaged our credibility with the United States and with the entire trading world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): During the course of these negotiations he has yielded on lumber, on publishing, on pharmaceutical prices, and on the foreign investment policy of the Government.

We are not waiting for an eventual report. Will the Prime Minister meet with us tonight in the House of Commons for an emergency debate in order to bring Canadians into his confidence and let them find out what is happening to this disastrous course he has the Government on?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it will come as a surprise to the entire country to realize the depth of concern of the Leader of the Opposition over the fact that our relationships with the United States might have been damaged or somehow affected while he has been undermining every conceivable relationship we could have had for two years. The Leader of the Opposition is giving a brand new dimension to hypocrisy since the Liberals have been sabotaging every single thing we have been trying to do to create jobs in this area for Canada. He should be ashamed of himself.

Two years ago I set out in the House of Commons the parameters for trade talks, the objectives we sought and the manner in which we proposed to seek them. We believe very much that that was in the Canadian national interest. We were satisfied then that protectionism would cause the damage that it is in the process of causing, and that a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States, properly arrived at, would give Canada the necessary shield it requires to make sure we create jobs and do not lose jobs to this pernicious kind of international economic activity. That is why we had the vision and the courage to take risks to create a stronger Canada and did not retreat into the protectionism advanced by the Liberals non-stop in the House of Commons for two and a half years.

DEADLINE FOR COMPLETING TALKS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it is incredible that the Prime Minister is trying to continue this silly posturing of his at a time when he has put the country in such a precarious position and has made us so vulnerable—

Mr. Speaker: I have to ask Hon. Members, when they are putting questions, to confine as much as is reasonable their preambles to the basis of fact upon which the questions are being put and not to start off with comments which are clearly argumentative. The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has just announced that the talks have been suspended. As he well knows, the deadline for the talks was October 5, less than two weeks away. Can we take from his statement that the suspension of the talks means that we will not be meeting the October 5 deadline and therefore the whole fast-track procedure with the United States is now dead?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I have indicated the reasons why the talks are suspended. I have just explained it to the Leader of the Opposition. Ambassador Reisman will be coming back and providing us with the information upon which other decisions might be made. I have set out the parameters of a trade negotiation with the United States which we believe is very much in the national interest and very productive of jobs and new opportunities.

When this matter was first raised in the House two years ago, on September 26, 1985, I indicated:

> We must all be aware that international negotiations are complex and extremely challenging. Success is not a sure thing—

We knew that. We also knew that Canada's economy and future economic prospects required the daring and vision to try to bring about new wealth and prosperity. We indicated Canada would only sign an agreement that was acceptable to the national interest and we would never commit to anything else.

We believe now that it is time to look at some questions that Ambassador Reisman wants to raise. The talks are suspended, and I will report more fully to the House at an appropriate time.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, let us get back to what is going to follow from this day. The Prime Minister just said that further decisions will have to be made. Translated, that means further concessions will have to be made.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: We want guarantees that if the Americans have rejected the deal up to this point, the Government will make no further concessions or surrenders of the Canadian national interest. Can we get that assurance from the Prime Minister today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the statement of my hon. friend is silly and vexatious and he knows it. He also knows full well, because he has been involved in international negotiations himself, that the parties seek to achieve an agreement. If they can, one is initialled. If not, then it is set aside. Until such time as a comprehensive agreement is concluded there are no commitments or concessions individually binding on either side.

Ambassador Reisman was present at the beginning of GATT. He was a Deputy Minister of Finance. He negotiated the Auto Pact 22 years ago. We sought him out because of his great competence in international negotiations, particularly in trade and commercial matters. He surrounded himself with the very best and most competent group of public servants available in Canada. They have been involved in hard and complex international negotiations for two years pursuant to a mandate this Government gave them. One of the specific terms of the mandate was that if at any point in time you, Simon Reisman, feel that the national interest requires you to break off these negotiations and come home, you do exactly that, because we will never sign an agreement that is not in Canada's national interest.

REQUEST THAT TALKS BE TERMINATED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. He has reported that the negotiations between Canada and the U.S. have been suspended, not terminated. His Government has already made concessions in the energy sector, publishing, investment criteria; the Auto Pact was put on the table, and today there is a report that Canada has made concessions on regional development. Does the Prime Minister not realize that a deal made in desperation is bound to be a bad deal for Canada and therefore he should tell the Americans the talks are not suspended but terminated?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know my hon. friend never wanted the talks to begin. I know he is an apostle of protectionism and reactionism. We know that is the tradition of the NDP. The same people who opposed the Auto Pact are now opposing a comprehensive trade agreement.

I want to set my hon. friend straight. I want there to be no doubt in his mind. He refers to concessions in energy and investment. He is referring to the fact that we scrapped the NEP and FIRA. We did not do that because we were doing the Americans a favour. We did that because we were building a stronger Canada.

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WISHES TO TELL AMERICANS THAT DISCUSSIONS ARE TERMINATED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): M. Speaker, my question again is directed to the Prime Minister. The Canadian Government has made concessions that bear heavily on Quebec's farming community and energy industries; they will have a very negative impact on Quebecers and other Canadians. Would the Prime Minister now tell the Americans that those talks are now ended, finished?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Member who just spoke, being a hostage to central Canada's major unions, really does not speak in the national interest, and much less in that of Québec. I just had a conversation with Quebec's Premier, and I assure you the suggestion that our negotiations had a negative impact on Quebec's agriculture or energy is strongly denied by Quebec's Premier, Mr. Bourassa, who has put it squarely to everyone who will listen that an agreement of that nature is in Canada's national interest and more especially in the specific interests of all Quebecers. It is time the NDP Leader understood that Quebecers really are for that pact and for that exercise initiated by the Canadian Government.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, month after month and week after week, as Canadians in every part of our country have grown to understand what is at stake in these talks, which is the ultimate loss of Canadian sovereignty and control of our own economic destiny, they have, in increasing numbers, opposed these across-the-board discussions.

Will the Prime Minister now do the correct thing, that is, stand up for Canadians and tell the Americans that we will pursue bilateral matters with them and have multilateral trade around the world, but will not sell out our sovereignty to the United States? We want these talks terminated.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that the talks have been suspended for the moment for the reasons which I have explained. I set out in the House, I think quite carefully, the objectives which the duly elected Government of Canada was seeking.

I indicated at the time, with regard to protectionism, that the answer to this problem lies in sound agreement, legally binding, between trading partners to secure and remove barriers to their mutual trade. That is our approach to world trade as well. It is obvious that we must find special and direct means of securing and enhancing the annual $155 billion of two-way trade with the United States.

There are millions of jobs that depend directly on our secure access to the market of the United States. There are Canadian workers, in Oshawa and elsewhere, whose futures depend upon that security of access to the most dynamic market in the world. That requires investment as well.

That is why we have been trying to secure a comprehensive trade arrangement which, as the Economic Council of Canada predicted, could provide hundreds of thousands of new jobs. I do not think the people of Canada will ever fault a Government for trying to bring new prosperity to all Canadians.

UNITED STATES POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. He said in an earlier reply that the response from the U.S. side was unsatisfactory on some very important issues. Does this not mean that the only way the talks with the United States can continue is if the Canadian Government decides that the U.S. position is no longer unsatisfactory and caves in to these U.S. demands? Is that not the clear and only meaning of what the Prime Minister said? If that is the case, why is he continuing these talks which are not in Canada's interests?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it would not occur to the Hon. Member that there might be a change of view on the American side, that the United States of America might conclude, as The Economist from London concluded this week, that:

> If the talks fail in those circumstances, the failure will say—

—to the United States—

> —forget the new deal that America wants with the 91 other members of GATT, if it cannot even negotiate the basic ingredients with its friend and neighbour to the north.

They are saying that the onus is on the United States of America. They know that Canada has tried vigorously, effectively, and well to conclude this arrangement, and the burden is now on the United States to deliver on its end of the bargain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I will direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. If there is any real basis for his statement that there could be a change in the American position, why has it not happened until now? Why was it necessary for Ambassador Reisman to suspend the talks and come back for discussions which have been going on for two weeks if all this was so simple and obvious? Rather than quoting The Economist, why does the Prime Minister not quote himself when he was running for the leadership of his Party and was opposed to free trade? Why does he not remember those few words he ever used that made any sense?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was not particularly simple or obvious. It is complex, challenging, and very difficult. It requires courage, leadership, and a firm resolve to represent Canada's interests. While the member of the Liberal Party fails to recognize it, I would urge him to read the editorial in The Economist entitled: "Go for it, Canada", because a comprehensive free trade arrangement on terms set out by Canada is very much in the national interest and, moreover, can provide the kind of international leadership that is required in the area of liberalized trade that will serve the entire free world.

REQUEST THAT NEGOTIATIONS BE ABANDONED

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I want to offer the Prime Minister my sympathy as his dream goes up in flames.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: I will ask the Prime Minister point blank whether, for the sake of our pride as a country, he will not now abandon these negotiations for good. Otherwise, last minute concessions will hurt this country badly.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for the sympathy and the expressions of affection. The answer is no.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister always takes a while to realize when he has hit a brick wall.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PLACE EMPHASIS ON GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, will the Government now abandon these negotiations and adopt a new economic policy that stresses GATT, that builds our own industrial base, and that spreads our trade potential across this country so everybody gets a chance to share in it?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose my hon. friend is referring to the NDP economic policy which was described by their former Research Director, Jim Laxer, as a hodge-podge and mish-mash of economic nonsense which would probably destroy the economy of Canada.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

AIR-INDIA CRASH—CABINET COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, if I might, I have a question for the Prime Minister with regard to the bombing of Air-India. Following that tragedy the Prime Minister requested and received a report from the Cabinet Committee on Security and Intelligence. In the report dated September 24, 1985, it says that "there was a severely heightened threat" in respect of Air-India prior to the bombing of Air-India Flight 182.

Can the Prime Minister explain the inconsistency between this report and the position of his Solicitor General which tends to diminish the severity of the advance warning of the threat to Air-India?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that indeed there are no inconsistencies. I am afraid I must go back and repeat what I have been saying for the past several days and indeed the past week. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister, then Minister of Transport, stated in the House on June 25, 1985:

> Mr. Speaker, from time to time there were requests for additional security by Air-India authorities. There were extra RCMP deployed both at Toronto and at Mirabel, as there has been for some time. I should point out to the House that there was no indication that there was a specific threat to Flight 182—

SECURITY PRECAUTIONS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the particular report that went to the Prime Minister went on to say that the x-raying of checked luggage on the doomed Air-India flight was "undertaken imperfectly". The report goes on to say that there were "shortcomings in security" with regard to Air-India Flight 182.

My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is he satisfied in view of the advance warnings with regard to a possible threat to Air-India that there was sufficient security surrounding Air-India Flight 182?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, again I want to quote from the Royal Commission of India that investigated this report. It is stated at page 154:

> Air-India, as required by Canadian regulation, had a security programme. Because of the threat level assessed against the Airline, Air-India had more extensive security measures than almost any other Canadian or international airline. These measures were generally in accordance with the recommended procedures of the ICAO Security Manual for risk flights. Air-India had also requested and had received and arranged for extra security for the month of June, 1985. For Air-India Flight 181/182, Air-India provided a security officer from its New York Office to oversee the security at Toronto and Montreal.

INDIAN CABINET MINISTER'S VISIT TO BRITISH COLUMBIA—SERVICE'S PRIOR KNOWLEDGE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is well aware of the fact that CSIS officers in British Columbia knew several days ahead of time of the visit of a Punjabi cabinet Minister and indeed overheard threats at least that this individual might be subject to being beaten.

In view of the fact that CSIS did not inform the RCMP of this very serious matter, and in view of the fact that the Minister in question was seriously injured, what action is the Minister finally taking to ensure that those responsible for this very grave mistake are finally appropriately disciplined? When will the Minister finally act?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member well knows, there is an ongoing criminal investigation into this matter regarding the Sidhu shooting. Nine men were originally charged, four of whom have already been convicted of attempted murder.

There has been a stay of proceedings in this case for one year and, while it may not matter to the Hon. Member, it certainly matters to this Minister. I will not be discussing publicly anything that could in any way jeopardize the conduct and investigation of this terrible crime.

Mr. Robinson: The Minister refuses to accept his responsibility to ensure that there is proper discipline.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ESTABLISH PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the history of bungling, of dangerous incompetence, and trench warfare between the RCMP and CSIS, does the Minister not recognize the lack of confidence on the part of the international community in our intelligence agencies? In view of this lack of confidence by the international community, will the Minister not do the right thing and order a full parliamentary inquiry into the actions of the intelligence community in Canada?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect, I feel the Hon. Member is doing a disservice to this country and to its intelligence service and, I may say, to the RCMP as well.

Shortly after this incident occurred, the Hon Member knows that my predecessor immediately asked the Inspector General to report on this matter. A report indeed was received, recommendations were made, and those recommendations were basically implemented. I am satisfied that we have a good security system in place in this country, that is well managed, and of which every Canadian can be proud.

HEALTH

MEDICATION FOR SENIOR CITIZENS—ALLEGED OVER-PRESCRIPTION

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the Hon. Minister is aware, there was a recent medical conference in Toronto at which the Chairman of the Gerontology Research Council of Ontario stated that his organization wants to identify the elderly who are at high risk to adverse drug reaction, and to determine the proper dosages of drugs for these individuals.

What is being done by the federal Government to address these concerns, and is the Department of National Health and Welfare checking into the allegations that over-prescription of medications for the elderly is occurring in some isolated incidents?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Department has been monitoring that conference as well as the issue very carefully. We did not identify in the drugs strategy specifically the abuse of licit drugs among the elderly—specifically that age group—but we identified the problem in respect of the drug strategy.

We are making more explicit information relating to drug abuse available to the elderly, especially in the Province of Alberta, for example, where a system has been instituted with respect to the manner in which drugs are dispensed. As well, the Department is considering what type of consideration should be given in the Psychotropic Substance Control Act with respect to the abuse of licit drugs.

There are a number of issues relating to that conference. We are looking at those recommendations very carefully. We want to respond federally as best we can in the legislative sense and otherwise, as well as with the provinces.

TRADE

FREE TRADE—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Today in the House, in an attempt to let Canadians in on the fact that the free trade negotiations by his Government are a total failure, the Prime Minister quoted from the English publication The Economist.

I would therefore ask the Prime Minister why he does not tell Canadians that, when he was seeking the leadership of his Party, he was dead set against free trade, whereas now he is trying to quote from The Economist. Why this complete about-face right in front of the Canadian people?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is mistaken and, inadvertently to be sure, she is misleading Hon. Members. Should she care to read my statements, all my statements, she will conclude that we are indeed seeking every opportunity to create the hundreds of thousands of new jobs which Canada needs.

Some people have said that the unemployment rate is too high. In Ontario for example, since we took office the unemployment rate dropped from 9.7 to 5.8 per cent, I believe, lowest in Canada, while unemployment in Newfoundland and British Columbia is still in excess of 15 per cent. Therefore the unemployment rate is very low in southern Ontario and higher elsewhere.

We believe that our attempt to negotiate a free trade agreement will even out economic opportunities and reduce unemployment in the regions of Canada. This simply has to be a highly commendable objective for all Members of this House.

FREE TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION WHEN ELECTED PARTY LEADER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister misled the House when he said that the Auto Pact was not on the table. Now he is trying to convince us . . . Again I ask him: It it not a fact that when he was seeking the leadership of his Party he compared free trade with the United States to a fly sleeping with an elephant? Were these not his own words when he ran for the leadership of the Conservative Party, or does he change his ideas and his values every day?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as usual the Hon. Member is quoting out of context and seeks to give an altogether different interpretation to a statement which was made in 1983.

DUTY IMPOSED BY UNITED STATES ON CANADIAN POTASH

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. It concerns the devastating duty of up to 85 per cent imposed by the Americans on Canadian potash. In light of the fact that on September 7 The Financial Post reported that the Minister "reportedly refused to take part in Saskatchewan's efforts to make a deal with Washington regarding potash", will the Minister explain to the House why she refused to stand up for Canadian potash industries? Why has she refused to be involved with Saskatchewan in defending the industry, the workers, and the Canadian people on this important issue? Why did she not stand up for us on this issue?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is wrong. We have been supporting Saskatchewan's efforts to fight this harassment in terms of its potash. We have determined that its move to control production is within its jurisdiction, as I have told the House. Our Justice Department has confirmed that it is within its jurisdiction. We have hired special legal counsel in Washington to go through the hundreds of pages of computer print-outs of the decision to see at what point there is a basis for intervention.

I have been in touch with the Minister of Economic Development for Saskatchewan as recently as Monday. I spoke to Premier Devine before entering the House today. We are doing everything we possibly can to assist the province which is being hammered on many economic fronts, a province which is not getting a lot of help from the Opposition.

MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister's involvement before the Commerce decision of August 21 might have resulted in a lower duty. In light of that I want to ask her why it was only three and a half weeks ago that the Government hired the Washington law firm of O'Melveny & Myers to assist with the potash issue? Why was this not done long before the August 21 decision of the American Department of Commerce to impose a duty of up to 85 per cent on Saskatchewan potash? Why did it take so long for the Minister to act? Why did she not act before? Why did she not stand up for Saskatchewan before that decision was made, and not after?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have already told the House that our position before this decision was handed down was that this case should never have been brought forward. I have told the House and the Hon. Member that the two companies which brought this case account for something in the order of only 5 per cent of the U.S. market, that the U.S., by far, cannot meet its demands in this area, and that under any trade remedy law, or any GATT situation, this case should never have been brought forward. That representation was made to the Americans through our embassy.

Mr. Nystrom: Not by you.

Miss Carney: The Hon. Member says: "Not by you." Of course it was made by me. That is part of our function in the Department of International Trade.

I want to point out that these are private companies. There is only limited room for government intervention in the case of private companies. We did make all the representation that we possibly could, and we are giving our full support to the Province of Saskatchewan.

PUBLIC WORKS

LEASING OF TRADE NEGOTIATOR'S OFFICES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns the Gervais Desrochers free trade office sweetheart deal.

I have a press release in hand dated May 24, 1985, which states that the same individual, Gervais Desrochers, received a Transport Canada contribution of $75,000 to study the development of an airport in Joliette, Quebec, even though the media reported shortly thereafter that the individual had no experience in that field. The latest revelation now tells us that the same gentleman received an extra $50,000 from the Met Life free trade office deal.

Will the Prime Minister tell the House when he first became aware of these kinds of schemes to give Conservative Party friends money? What concrete measures has he taken or does he intend to take to ensure that this type of deal no longer occurs? It will not be tolerated by the people of Canada.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that I have investigated the circumstances giving rise to the Met Life deal. All of the negotiations with officials of Public Works were directly with Met Life. There were no other parties involved. The lease was pursued according to the ordinary standards set by Treasury Board.

REQUEST THAT ROYAL COMMISSION BE ESTABLISHED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Once again the media reported yesterday that a friend of the Conservative Party had pocketed 5 per cent of the price of a transaction.

In view of the fact that in May 1986 Mr. Pierre O'Neil raised a similar issue in Le Devoir, in view of the Brodilaf case in Drummondville, in view of the charges that were made, the Wajax investigation by CIDA, last night's scandal and how many others, I now ask the Prime Minister whether he is ready to order an immediate Royal Commission of inquiry. For the umpteenth time, I am urging him to set up that royal commission of inquiry on this Government's contract awarding policy.

Is he waiting for the Canadian people to reject him completely before doing anything?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am able to advise the House that the rent paid and the lease negotiated between Public Works and Met Life for Mr. Reisman and his officials represent the norm. It was approved by Treasury Board. There is no disfavour, discolour or any other difficulty that the Hon. Member can bring to the attention of the House.

IMPORTANCE OF TRADITIONAL HUNTING IN JAMES BAY AREA

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Minister is very much aware of how important traditional hunting is to the native people of Canada. Is he also aware of the problems facing native people on the James Bay coast in regard to traditional hunting this year? Can the Minister inform the House and the native people of the James Bay area what steps his Department is taking in regard to ensuring that traditional hunting will continue?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member shares the concern for treaty rights of the aboriginal people of Canada and the right to hunt and fish. He should be aware that on September 21 officials of my Department met with members of the Nishnawbe-Aski Band, the Ministry of Natural Resources of the Province of Ontario, and the RCM Police. At that time discussions took place to re-emphasize the practice of past years. I can assure the Hon. Member that the solutions that are necessary under the legislation concerning migratory birds are solutions we have to work at jointly.

I can assure the Hon. Member that every effort will be made to assure that this action does not recur.

POSSIBILITY OF STRIKE—ADVERTISEMENTS SEEKING TEMPORARY WORKERS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. With the issuance of the conciliator's report, the clock is ticking on a strike at the Post Office. In this context Canada Post is advertising for temporary workers, which is giving the clear signal that it expects a strike. It is creating the impression that it is spoiling for a fight.

I would like to know from the Minister whether this sort of attitude on behalf of Canada Post is one that he thinks will be conducive to collective negotiations in bringing about a settlement?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what is not conducive to a negotiated settlement is the false accusations of the Hon. Member. Right now, or very shortly, the parties will be back at the negotiating table negotiating on the basis of the conciliation commissioner's report. Early statements by both sides indicate that the commissioner's report contains the basis for a settlement.

I suggest that we would both be acting more responsibly if we encouraged the parties at the table to find a negotiated settlement since that would be in the best interests of everybody, including Canadians not directly involved.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister likes to look at the Post Office as a private business. I am wondering if he is aware that large corporations such as Chrysler do not use replacement workers and do not provoke strikes. Will he not take that attitude with the Post Office?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member has been. The statements about a strike have been coming from the union. It is not a corporation which calls a strike. Corporations can legally call lock-outs, which it is not calling. It is the union which calls a strike. I hope that he and I agree that a strike is in nobody's interests and that both parties should be negotiating at the table. If that is so, why does he not stick to that rather than trying to be provocative here?

GOVERNMENT'S APPROACH TO SITUATION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Maybe the Minister does not realize it, but he is actually trying to cause a strike. We have both parties showing moderation and both parties appearing to be open to a negotiated settlement. The Minister does not appear to remember that the last time, during the letter carriers' strike, it was when he suspended the use of strike breakers that mediator Bill Kelly was able to bring the parties together and to reach a settlement.

Why will the Government not do it right from the beginning, that is, refrain from using the provocative approach, stop saying it is going to use strike breakers, and encourage negotiations?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member fails to recognize is that the Government has in fact taken the advice of his colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau, the former Postmaster General, and is leaving these negotiations up to Canada Post. Our instructions—and they do not need to be given—are that they must obey the law. The law provides for legal strikes and it provides for the corporation to continue operation if it can. It is the form of economic warfare that sometimes results from these negotiations.

We both want a negotiated settlement. The negotiations are going on. In the meantime, for us to become directly involved as a Government would be counter productive to the goal I hope both the Hon. Member and I would like to see achieved, a negotiated settlement.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SHOW MODERATION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, what is hard to understand is that the Minister cannot exercise as much moderation as the parties in dispute. By insisting on repeating that the Government wants to reserve the right to use strikebreakers, scabs, he is adding oil to the fire. The parties involved already are ready to negotiate. Why does the Government not show as much moderation as the parties themselves? Why is the Government not removing that sword of Damocles, those threats hovering over the workers' heads?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is a peculiar definition of the sword of Damocles. The sword of Damocles is the threat the union always has legally to call a strike unless management agrees to its demands. Management, on the other hand, is at the table saying we are not prepared to acquiesce or cave in under these kinds of threats and we have other alternatives. That is the nature of labour negotiations.

I hope in fact we can reach a negotiated settlement without going through a strike. In the LCUC situation, a strike became necessary to cause both parties to realize they would have to agree finally, which they did. Let us hope it does not have to come to that.

The Hon. Member continually suggests that the Government should get involved and intervene. I do not know why he gives that advice which is contrary to everything his Party has been saying up to now.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question.

AGRICULTURE

EDMONTON FOOD PRODUCTION INSPECTION PLANT LABORATORY

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister recently announced he plans to phase out the laboratory services of Agriculture Canada's food production inspection plant in my riding of Edmonton East. His plans are to create centralized laboratories across the country, including two in the National Capital, but not one in Edmonton. This is the second federal laboratory being closed in Edmonton.

While I appreciate that changes will have little impact on the level of service, can the Minister say why the Edmonton site will be closed? And what will be done to the federal employees affected?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the concern of my hon. colleague and his interest with respect to this particular issue. However, I must indicate to my hon. colleague that he has really nothing to fear. There will be a transfer of a few PYs from the Edmonton office to Saskatoon. This will lead to improved efficiency, better management and improved service.

With respect to the future of the Edmonton office, we will continue to retain there some 208 PYs and we will continue to invest over $21 million in that Edmonton office. It is a measure, I might say, that is consistent with the recommendations in the Auditor General's report.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of order with respect to House business. I want to ask either the Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski) or the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) the Deputy Government House Leader whether in view of the fact the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is going to report to full Cabinet tomorrow morning on his conversations with Ambassador Reisman, and in view of the fact, that, as I understand to be the case, there will be a telephone conference this afternoon with the Provincial Premiers on the same matter—and I am talking about the suspension of the free trade discussions with the United States—will the Government agree to have an emergency debate later today in order to enable Members of Parliament and, through them, the Canadian people, to have at least the same information as the Provincial Premiers about what has been happening and what the Government is likely to do?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member was in the House when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) responded to those questions. I think he clearly indicated that Mr. Reisman would be returning to Ottawa this afternoon and there will be a briefing of the latest status of events. Full Cabinet will be briefed tomorrow and at an appropriate time a further statement will be made.

The Prime Minister has issued a statement outlining what is taking place based upon the evidence and knowledge that is currently available. If there are any further reports to be made, I think he has given that undertaking.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED UNACCEPTABILITY OF MOTION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I gave you notice in writing this morning, I believe. My question of privilege, by our orders and customs, should be raised immediately upon becoming aware of the matter. It relates to last night's debate during Private Members' Hour and concerns the ruling of the Chair at that time with regard to who had the floor at the beginning of that hour.

I refer to page 9213 of Hansard. The Deputy Speaker was in the Chair, and once the motion had been put to the House, recognized the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). Hansard records myself at that time saying "Mr. Speaker". I, therefore, had been recognized and had taken the floor. At that point the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) rose on a point of order and moved "That the House now hear from the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka".

My point of privilege is that the motion at that time was not receivable because, indeed, I had the floor. I had been recognized and had spoken. The motion, of course, is always in order when one has the floor. There are precedents on which this is based. I can go back to 1982 and to 1983 with respect to questions raised in the House by the House Leader at the time, Mr. Nielsen. I can quote from decisions made by Speaker Sauvé and I can also bring to the Chair's attention citations and all kinds of information to support my contention that, indeed, yesterday my privileges as a Member of the House were breached.

I object because I think that once one has the floor it is to one's advantage to make his argument and use that time to his best interests.

[Translation]

I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the second paragraph of citation 302 of the fifth edition of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms reads as follows:

> (2) A motion that a Member "be now heard" must be moved before the Member recognized has begun speaking.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that I had been recognized, that I had begun speaking, and I can quote Hansard once again and name witnesses, Members who were here and heard me: the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) was here as was the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, and both of them confirmed that I had begun my remarks on the motion before us.

I am stressing the importance of that decision, Mr. Speaker, because, as was known to the House, it was my intention to move an amendment in the course of my most relevant remarks on the motion. Because I was refused the floor yesterday, I lost that opportunity to put forward an amendment to the motion that I considered very important and I was prevented from pursuing the matter according to my plans and way of thinking.

Mr. Speaker, I admit it is sometimes noisy in the House, that there are times when the Chair has trouble hearing what is going on, but I know there was not too much noise yesterday, there were not too many of us, I was alone at my place, and it is quite possible the Chair did not hear me speak, which would be the only reason why the Chair was able to give the floor to the Hon. Member for Scaborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) and not to me.

Mr. Speaker, to make everything very clear and to avoid any confusion in the future, I would like you to confirm what happened yesterday. According to Hansard for September 22, 1987, on page 9213, I had already been recognized, but I was then prevented unfairly from speaking. In my opinion, my privileges have been violated and I would like the Chair to look at this whole issue very closely to provide guidance to the House for the future, as the then Speaker of the House, Mrs. Sauvé, ruled a few years ago that a motion that another Member be now heard is out of order once another Member has been recognized.

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a very brief submission on this matter. I appreciate that my colleague feels very strongly about it. I was in the House yesterday when it happened, although I was not in my seat, and I would submit that my colleague's argument is very subjective. I think it borders very closely on reflections upon the actions of the Speaker, although he has very carefully avoided that reflection by asking that Your Honour perhaps re-rule.

I do not think I could really add anything more to the situation than the case that was made yesterday. There may be a temptation for me to enter into a long argument with my hon. friend, but I think the call made by the Speaker yesterday was correct. Weighing all the facts at the time, I think it was a call which could only be made by the person who was there. It is very difficult to start re-examining this type of call after the fact.

I think the time to make the point of order was then. With all due respect to my colleague, I think he is late in making it now, and I have no further submissions.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has referred to my participation in the debate yesterday.

As reported at page 9213 of Hansard, Mr. Deputy Speaker commented that while he "recognized the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), . . . at the same time the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) was on his feet".

I think that adds substance to what the House Leader has just said, namely, that it was a very difficult call for the Deputy Speaker to make, two Members being on their feet at the same time.

In recognizing me on a point of order and in accepting the motion which I presented, the Speaker was acting within reason. I regret very much that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier lost the opportunity he had, as I am sure he would have regretted my losing the chance I was seeking.

However, I would add further that it is my understanding that according to Beauchesne's, when an Hon. Member has a question of privilege to raise he is required to raise it as soon after the experience as possible. This question of privilege should have been raised yesterday.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in the debate on this question of privilege. I think it is important that we recognize from the beginning that we are not challenging the decision of the Speaker. We had an opportunity to do that yesterday. As a matter of fact, as Hansard indicates, the points were made yesterday.

What is important is that we are seeking clarification. Citation 302(2) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition indicates:

> A motion that a Member "be now heard" must be moved before the Member recognized has begun speaking.

Of course we had to wait until we saw the official Hansard on our desks today, and this is the first opportunity for the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) to raise the matter.

Hansard makes very clear that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier had begun speaking. As a matter of fact, it is in there. It reads: "Mr. Speaker—", and at that time the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) rose on a point of order. It seems to me that it is very clear.

I think it is important to indicate that we are not challenging the decision of His Honour. That decision was made and accepted yesterday. The point was raised and ruled upon yesterday, and we are simply seeking clarification.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I was in the House yesterday, and with all due respect for the occupant of the Chair at the time, who has all my admiration, I would like to say that, contrary to what the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) has just said, the two Members did not rise at the same time. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) had been recognized and had already begun by saying: "Mr. Speaker . . . " He was beginning his speech. Then, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West rose on a point of order. I was here, and when the Hon. Member for Scarborough West says that the two Members rose at the same time, I must say that he is misleading the House.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) has indicated that his remembrance of certain events is not the same as that of the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) and has suggested that what the Hon. Member for Scarborough West has said is misleading.

The Hon. Member for Bourassa has not said that it was intentionally misleading. He was just pointing out a difference of opinion and a difference of remembrance, and that is the way the Chair takes it.

However, in view of what the Hon. Member for Bourassa has said, I will hear the Hon. Member for Scarborough West for a few minutes and then I will seek some guidance from my esteemed colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I only draw to your attention again that I was quoting the comments of Mr. Deputy Speaker yesterday. I draw the attention of the Hon. Member to the quotation at page 9213 of Hansard wherein Mr. Deputy Speaker said:

> I recognized the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), yet at the same time the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) was on his feet.

We had both risen, and I sat down when reference was made to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, who then said: "Mr. Speaker". It was then that I rose again and raised my point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: That is the whole point; I had been recognized and started to speak.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I am thinking more of the future than of yesterday. Some of us remember that a very acrimonious debate took place many years ago—the flag debate. That was a long time ago. That debate was between a very highly esteemed friend of mine, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, and the Right Hon. Mike Pearson. A very acrimonious debate took place. In case this sort of thing takes place again in the future on an important issue, even though last night was important, I would like some precise guidance from Your Honour—not today, we are not in a hurry—on how to interpret the rules.

Your Honour can see the television tapes since we now have that service, and without putting any shadow of doubt or blame on Mr. Deputy Speaker, for whom we hold the highest esteem, I would like your guidance on what to do when an event like yesterday takes place.

I was very active yesterday, for reasons I do not now remember, probably preparing myself for caucus this morning, but to the best of my recollection the Deputy Speaker had recognized the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). It was then that other Members wanted to be recognized. By recognizing someone else, and that someone else putting forward an amendment it was impossible for us to put our amendment forward—it was an important one. We wanted to say "an elected Senate". That is what we believe and that is what we wanted to put forward, but what we wanted to do is not relevant to this question.

We would like you in the days to come to reflect and let us know precisely how we should behave in the future. At the same time that you do so, could you also look into something that is of importance to me, the question of what is a subamendment. For the 15 years that I have chaired committees, I must have chaired erroneously. The Hon. ex-Minister of National Defence I am sure will say that I try to be very fair, but when I chair, my definition of a subamendment is much more narrow than the one put forward yesterday. If Your Honour would like to look into both points I would appreciate it very much.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I just want to be sure it is understood why I raised my point. Hansard is utilized by all of us in the House to justify positions, to justify debate, to justify previous rulings and to justify the interpretation of certain rulings in the House. If Hansard remains as it reads today, Mr. Speaker, then I say that it has rewritten our rules. It is not the way the rules have been interpreted over the past few years.

I would like the Chair to make it clear to us that in the future when a motion "that a Member now be heard" is put it cannot be put if the floor has been given and taken by another Member. That is all I am asking. In one year or one month somebody could use this argument and say, "Mr. Speaker, I have a precedent", which I think would be a wrong precedent to use.

Mr. Speaker: I am going to abide by the good advice of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and reserve on this matter. I think it is in the interest of Hon. Members and also for the public to understand clearly what has happened.

There has been a time honoured rule dating back into history that when a Speaker has recognized an Hon. Member, another Hon. Member can rise and say, "Mr. Speaker, I move that some other Hon. Member be heard". It has also been decided by Speakers and by rulings, to which the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) very correctly referred, that the motion that another Hon. Member be heard must be made by that particular Member before the original Member has actually started to speak.

This may all seem difficult to understand at times but, as I have said in the past, the origin of this rule goes back several hundred years. It had to do with the rights of all Hon. Members, and there may well be two reasons for it, one of which, of course, was that at times a Speaker might be deliberately not recognizing a Member, and that was a device to give an ignored Member the floor. It also may well have been a means of appealing a ruling of the Speaker. As Hon. Members will know, rightly or wrongly, some time ago appeals against the ruling of a Speaker were abolished by our rules. But this particular procedural rule is in a sense an appeal against the original choice of the Speaker because the motion to hear another Hon. Member is votable.

As Hon. Members know, and as sometimes the public may discern, this particular rule is used as a tactical measure, sometimes to delay and sometimes to prevent somebody from getting an amendment in before somebody else gets it in. The effect of what happened last night was that the Member for Ottawa—Vanier did not put forward an amendment, but an amendment was put forward by a Member from the government side.

The difficulty in this—and I am going to address this because I do not think it is easy—is that in the rulings that have come down through the ages which say the Chair, the person occupying the Speaker's position at that particular moment, must somehow or other be very careful to be able to hear the first Member who has been recognized. Sometimes that is not easy. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier said that last night it was not particularly noisy in the Chamber. It may well not have been, but it becomes a physically difficult thing for a Speaker to handle well.

As Hon. Members will remember, some months ago I certainly found myself in the midst of a most difficult situation when there were a number of Members rising with a great deal of enthusiasm. It was somewhat difficult for me to be able to discern which of all those Hon. Members I ought to recognize. There was some comment about what I finally did, which I think was, of course, helpful to all of us, and I think Hon. Members will feel that I took those comments graciously.

In view of what happened last night, I will try to find a definitive way of dealing with this. I take very seriously and with much appreciation the comments by Hon. Members, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis and the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, that this is not an attempt to try to undo what happened last night, but an attempt rather to ensure that it will not happen again. I take the point raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier in that spirit. I do not have to wait for my ruling to say to him that he has outlined the procedural law absolutely correctly.

I thank Hon. Members for their restraint and helpfulness in this intervention and I will report back to the House in due course.

PRIVILEGE

CRTC—ALLEGED ERRONEOUS INFORMATION—CLOSING DATE

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege on the basis that my ability to represent my constituents properly has been impaired by the actions of a commission of government, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission.

On the basis of disinformation or misinformation provided to me, to my office staff, to one of my constituents by the CRTC, specifically relating to the closing date for the filing of comments or intervention in an application for a rate increase by Shaw Cable, now before the CRTC, my capacity to represent my constituents properly has been denied.

That is the nature of the question. I now wish to provide the Chair with the reasons I have been denied the right of every Member of Parliament to properly represent constituents, a denial of natural justice.

How is a Member of Parliament expected to know of a rate application increase or of any other application to the CRTC? Until August of last year, a Member of Parliament learned of this in two ways. One was by reading an advertisement placed by the CRTC in a local newspaper of the area involved, and the second was by way of a CRTC notice circulated to Members of Parliament. How do we know now that there are rate applications before the CRTC? We know only by way of a notification to subscribers. I am not a subscriber of Shaw Cable of Trail, Castlegar or Nelson.

It is important to note the times that have elapsed. When I learned of the application in question, I was advised by my constituent, Alderman Eric O'Dell of Warfield, of the following. In a phone conversation with a staff member of the CRTC, whose name I have but will not at this time place on the record, Mr. O'Dell was advised that the closing date of August 20 for this particular rate application was no longer valid and was incorrect. The same day, this was reaffirmed by another staff member and the same information provided to Mr. O'Dell who has been actively assisting me in this rate application.

I then called the CRTC on August 21 to ascertain the closing date. I was advised by a staff member that I as a Member cannot intervene until the application has been gazetted. I would be advised of that date.

On September 4, I asked for additional information and was advised that it was the computer that would have to be accessed to provide it. On August 24, the same staff member advised that two key people in finance at CRTC had not been contacted but that I would have all the information the following morning.

On August 25, the same staff member phoned my office and said: "I am still waiting for the information, there are seven applications, I will get back to you tomorrow". On August 26, the same staff member phoned and said that Shaw Cable had followed all the regulations and the decision will be made on November 1, 1987, and that a letter should be sent if I want to object.

On August 27, on the assumption that I had time to read two volumes of data filed by Shaw Cable and to consult with my constituent, I arranged to meet with my constituent the following week.

On Friday, September 4, an official of the CRTC phoned me late in the afternoon to advise me that the closing date for filing was August 20, 1987 and that, no, they would not likely accept my intervention or comment. Recall that this was virtually two weeks after I had begun my initial inquiries. I advised that I would write the CRTC and request that they receive my submission. The letter was dictated, typed and mailed on Monday, September 7. I need not remind the Chair that September 7 was Labour Day.

On September 22, two weeks later, I received a written response from the CRTC, signed by Fernand Bélisle and dated September 17. The letter was received in my office on September 22. One paragraph of the letter is central to the issue and reads as follows:

> As you are aware, your first telephone call to the Commission expressing your intention to comment, on August 21, was made the day after the cut-off date for the receipt of comments. Furthermore, your letter asking for a time extension so that you might prepare a submission was sent 14 days after the period for comment, which is set out in the Cable Television Regulations, 1986.

The point is that I endured two weeks of delay by the CRTC in trying to obtain the very information that I sought the day after the closing date, after having been informed by my constituent who had been informed by two CRTC officials that the August 20 date was not valid.

The CRTC created the delays through its own abysmal record of disinformation or misinformation beginning on August 21 and ending on September 4, precisely 15 days later. It was like Big Brother, except nobody was listening.

I would like to end this litany at this point, but I must make one final comment. A cable company has months to prepare itself for an application. Once submitted and subscribers notified, the subscriber has 30 days to comment. The CRTC then has three months or more to provide a decision. The people most affected by the decision have 30 days, in theory. One of my constituents did not receive an undated notice of an application for a rate increase until July 30. That left 21 days to reply.

Municipal councils in my riding are voicing their concerns by way of a supplemental attached to the submission of Alderman O'Dell because they did not have an opportunity to deal with it earlier because of the timing of council meetings and the time allowed, 30 days, and in most cases less than 20 days. The CRTC has agreed to accept the supplementals of those municipal councils attached to the submission of Alderman O'Dell after August 20. It is not, however, prepared to receive my submission. That is the full measure of the issue and it speaks volumes on the cavalier and inefficient manner of the operations of the CRTC. It is, damn the public and full speed ahead.

In conversations, officials of the CRTC have told me that perhaps they should revert back to notifying Members of Parliament and perhaps they should make it the responsibility of the cable company to notify Members of Parliament. They are fully aware that the system that is now in place does not work. It works unfairly against a Member of Parliament and may well deny him the opportunity to represent his constituents. It works against the public and it works against municipal councils which also serve the public.

I am sure of one thing, Mr. Speaker, and that is that your ruling will be appropriate. I am not sure if I have a valid question of privilege, but I feel that you are the only one to whom I may appeal over the actions of a Government commission, which has in my view denied me my basic, natural rights to represent my constituents and, by doing so, has affected the rights of every Member of Parliament to do the same.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) for the very clear and succinct way in which he put forward his argument on a matter that is of concern not only to the Hon. Member but obviously to his constituents. The Chair will consider carefully the Hon. Member's comments and I hope I will be able to return to the Chamber with a reply which will be helpful.

The Hon. Member has said that it may not be a question of privilege; it may not be. It most certainly is a complaint, and the Hon. Member has recognized that one of the few recourses available when one has such a complaint is to bring it the Chair. The Chair cannot always resolve the matter but I know the Hon. Member will appreciate that he has had an opportunity to set out the situation and the complaint with, I might say, great clarity. I will report back as soon as is reasonable.

CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-266, an Act to provide for the limitation of interest rates and fees in relation to credit card accounts.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, this Bill will provide for the imposition of a floating rate a certain number of percentage points above the Bank of Canada discount rate averaged for the previous month. The rate will vary depending on whether the company does or does not charge entry, renewal, and user transaction fees. There will be a different rate for petroleum product companies and retail and department stores.

This Bill is intended to provide the necessary protection to the millions of people who use such credit cards and is in line with legislation in other jurisdictions. Experience over the past several years has shown that moral suasion is not enough and such legislation is in order. I hope this Bill comes before the House for second reading before long and will receive all-Party support.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I am pleased to present a petition on behalf of a number of Canadians concerned with the way the Government is dealing with Bill C-55.

They draw our attention to the fact that a standing committee of Parliament proposed a new procedure for refugees which, if adopted, would fairly and effectively solve the problems of both backlogs and unsubstantiated claims. They indicate it has the support of all Parties as well as the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress, and a variety of other groups and individuals. They simply ask that the House withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation which reflects the recommendations of the standing committee.

OPPOSITION TO DESTAFFING OF WEST COAST LIGHTHOUSES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and pleasure to present a petition concerning the government proposal to destaff West Coast lighthouses. The petition includes the signatures of residents from Port Hardy to Victoria. They have a serious concern about safety and other problems which will occur if the lighthouses lose their staff. They also ask that a moratorium be placed on any action by the Coast Guard on destaffing until such time as another and more impartial inquiry can be held into this matter.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by many people from the Windsor area of Ontario concerning Bill C-55. They say the Bill will end Canada's traditional commitment to assisting refugees and end up keeping most legitimate refugee claimants out of the country. They also dispute the procedures set out in Bill C-55 as not really being legally proper and suggest that the House adopt some of the recommendations of the standing committee.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of Edmonton, Banff, Saskatoon and other Canadian cities who are opposed to Bill C-55 on the ground that it will turn away many legitimate refugees. It ignores some of the main recommendations of the parliamentary committee report of two years ago which have the support of groups such as the churches and bar associations and the CLC.

They humbly pray that the Government will withdraw Bill C-55 and bring in legislation that will provide fair and quick oral hearings of all claims of refugees, a refugee board to hear the claims independent of the commission, and universal access to such hearings. In duty-bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty, pursuant to Standing Order 106, of presenting to the House for its swift consideration two sets of petitions.

The first petitions are from Canadians in the Cities of Chatham, Fredericton and Toronto and from the Kitchener-Waterloo area. The petitioners are very concerned about Bill C-55, the refugee determination Bill, as it presently stands. They are asking the Government to delete the safe third country and prescreening provisions and to amend the appeal mechanism by removing it from the Federal Court and placing it with a separate body or another member of the refugee board.

The petitioners believe that if the Government makes these three changes which have been requested by virtually every organization appearing before the committee, we will have a refugee determination system that will be effective and fair and will dissuade those who wish to abuse the system.

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the second set of petitions I have comes from Canadians in Yellowknife, my own constituency of York West, other parts of Metropolitan Toronto, and from the Cities of Barrie, Woodbridge, and Richmond Hill. These petitioners address the Meech Lake Accord, specifically as it relates to multiculturalism. Multiculturalism was not recognized in Clause 1 of the Accord as a fundamental characteristic of Canada. One-third of Canadians are neither English nor French in origin. Since we have had a policy of multiculturalism since 1971, the petitioners are asking the Government, and particularly the Ministers, to ensure that our multicultural heritage will be properly recognized within Clause 1. They hope that the Liberal amendments presented this week will become reality.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, September 22, consideration of Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislation committee, and Motion No. 37 (Mr. Heap, p.9207), Motion No. 53 (Mr. Weiner, p.9207), Motion No. 57 (Mr. Weiner, p.9207), and Motion No. 70 (Mr. Weiner, p.9208).

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, during debate yesterday the Parliamentary Secretary criticized some remarks I made saying, in part, as reported on page 9178 of Hansard:

> A few minutes ago we heard the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) casting aspersions on the Immigration Department and officers within it with regard to racism.

He went on to suggest that that was not becoming.

I did not cast aspersions on all members of the department, but I did say that some members, and certainly some former members, in particular the former director of the Immigration Service, John Kimble Abbott, who now heads up the so-called Immigration Association of Canada, have publicly said many things which can only be described as racist. I will quote from a questionnaire they put out which asked the following question:

> Absorptive capacity is the rate of immigration a country can absorb without dramatically changing its population composition and nature.

They are, of course, indicating that they do not want people who are not white. Another question asked was:

> Do you, yourself, think the size and content of immigration should be permitted to change our ethnic and cultural balance, or not?

What is the intent of that question, Mr. Speaker? Another question was:

> Would you, or would you not, favour a policy where the main selection of immigrants is made from countries with cultures similar to Canada to ensure compatibility and integration?

What else but opposition to non-white immigration could these questions indicate? I could go on, Mr. Speaker. This committee is headed by a man who, on an earlier occasion, suggested that if we permitted the entry into Canada of 50,000 Vietnamese boat people, since they would want to bring in their families, we would be facilitating the entry into Canada of 750,000 of those people. We know how ridiculous that charge was and of course that did not happen.

The fact that a former director of the Immigration Service, a former justice of the Supreme Court in British Columbia, J. V. Clyne, and Mr. Stephen Roman, himself an immigrant to this country, are expressing and publishing those kinds of opinions in newspapers across Canada shows that there were and are some prejudiced people in Canada and in the department. They ought not be there. The Minister should take steps to ensure that such people are not in a position to keep people out of Canada for reasons of their colour or religion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motions Nos. 37, 53, 57 and 70 have been grouped for debate but will be voted on separately.

The first question is on Motion No. 37 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The recorded division shall stand deferred.

The next question will be on Motion No. 53, standing in the name of the Minister of State (Immigration) (Mr. Weiner).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Motion No. 53 (Mr. Weiner) agreed to on division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 57.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There were discussions yesterday with the Parliamentary Secretary and the Member of Parliament for Spadina (Mr. Heap). It was agreed that Motion No. 57 would be divided into two parts and we would take a separate vote on Motion No. 57(A) and (C) and on Motion No. 57(b).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreeable to everyone?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1600)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Therefore, Mr. Weiner moved:

(a) by striking out line 35 at page 32 and substituting the following therefor:

"any representative or agent of the United Nations"

(c) by striking out lines 36 to 39 at page 39 and substituting the following therefor:

"40(1) has been issued, or".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion 57(a) and (c) (Mr. Weiner) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Weiner moved:

(b) by adding immediately after line 16 at page 35 the following therefor:

"(12) If the Refugee Division determines that a claimant is not a Convention refugee and does not have a credible basis for the claim to be a Convention refugee, the Refugee Division shall so indicate in its decision on the claim."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Weiner moved:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 19 by adding immediately after line 38 at page 43 the following:

"(1.1) Notwithstanding subsection (1), no appeal lies to the Federal Court of Appeal from a decision of the Refugee Division under section 71.1 on a claim, if the Refugee Division, pursuant to subsection 71.1(12), has indicated in the decision that the claimant has no credible basis for the claim."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) raised a question about amending Motion No. 35. The Government would certainly be willing to accept his amended motion. I believe he left a copy with the Chair. There would be agreement on this side to accept that in the name of the Hon. Member of Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) have the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw Motion No. 35 and replace it with the motion he is proposing?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

Motion No. 35A

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 in the English version, by striking out line 20 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"is of the opinion that there is any credible or"

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my gratitude to a number of people, including some who are not here, for the Government's willingness to agree to include the word "any".

The concern here is that in the preliminary screening, where the credibility of the claimant is being examined, many Canadians felt that the wording was too restrictive. It states at page 16, at approximately line 20, that if the adjudicator or member of the refugee division, after considering certain facts, is of the opinion that there is credible or trustworthy evidence on which the refugee division might determine the claimant to be a Convention refugee, they shall determine that the claimant has a credible basis for the claim.

It was felt that in essence the hearing that was supposed to be done later, if the claimant was passed through to the refugee division, was being heard before the adjudicator and the refugee board member in the first instance. They had to decide whether he had a credible claim and that there was a danger, if not a probability, that in fact a refugee claimant might be rejected because his claim was not credible enough.

The Hon. Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) has spoken on that matter very often since May, in public and sometimes in Parliament, and has said that if there is any shred of credible evidence that he has a claim he will be sent to the refugee division. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) made a very similar point yesterday in speaking to another motion.

I believe it is the contention of the Hon. Minister and other Hon. Members on that side that the intention of the clause always was to allow the person to proceed if any bit of credible evidence could be found in his testimony to support his claim. However, the feeling was that the judge will not decide, whenever this gets to court, as it will, on what is the Minister's intention, but will decide on what is written in the law.

Therefore, I am asking that the law be written so that the claimant will be sent on to the refugee division if there is any credible or trustworthy evidence to support his claim.

I point out that by agreeing to this, the Government has taken a further step to bring this Bill into line with the principles of the United Nations, as discussed with us by the representative of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees. He also explained this when he came before the committee as a witness.

A memoir of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, dated June 18, 1987, states that if the notion of credible basis is retained for screening purposes, the UNHCR recommends that it be redefined so it preserves the relative weight of evidence concerning individual circumstances and concerning the human rights record and the disposition of similar cases.

In other words, they are asking that the individual be heard and if there is any shred of evidence given by the individual, as the Minister said earlier, that his case be sent on for review by the refugee board and not be found ineligible to appear before the board.

I appreciate the agreement of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to this amendment.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Hon. Member's motion, because it touches upon motions that we introduced in the last few days and discussions we had with respect to the prescreening stage and the problems one can envision with what is a credible basis.

What is the definition of a credible basis? How much weight should be placed on this particular aspect of the system, rather than allowing individuals to go directly to the refugee board?

Currently, there is no universally accepted definition under the Geneva Convention for a credible basis but there is a definition for "manifestly unfounded", which is very clear, precise, and well accepted.

I believe the Hon. Member is posing a motion that is valid and quite sensible. If there is a trace of credibility, if there is a trace of authenticity to an individual's claim, then that should automatically be the business and the subject of a review before the refugee board.

We have suggested in the past, as have organizations, that if a claimant comes to our shores and makes an application for refugee status, then that should be the subject of an oral hearing before the new refugee board. Groups and individual Members of Parliament, including myself, have advocated that, since it would be the most fair process to follow. It would ensure that we would not be barring or returning an individual who may be a legitimate and bona fide refugee.

When I say "may" I mean exactly that, since neither we nor the two officers at the border should be the judges of that claim. That should be a subject matter for the refugee board to determine with its two officers who are knowledgeable on refugee related matters to make a judgment. That is what the entire refugee determination system means. The word "determination" is critical. The critical aspect of determination should be handled by the refugee board which is knowledgeable and competent.

We also believe that it would be the expeditious thing to do, in order to alleviate the growing and very difficult backlog that has been created over the last number of years in which we see that the backlog becomes increasingly greater. As soon as the Government, as it has done in the past, invokes quasi-amnesty through an administrative review, then by the time we are finished debating Bill C-55 there will be another monstrous backlog that the Government will have to address in order to allow the new refugee determination system not to be paralysed from the very outset, but to start in fact with the decks cleared of this great and huge backlog.

We are therefore suggesting from the point of view of speed that it would be an additional bureaucratic layer to have a hearing or a prescreening at the outset and then, if it is determined that a person should move on, another oral hearing in front of the refugee board. We are suggesting that there is no need for the same claimant to have two separate hearings. We are suggesting that he should be able to tell his story once, that being before the competent board.

The Government argues that it wants this measure to expedite matters and suggests that it wishes to have it to deal with those who wish to abuse our system by having two hearings. No refugee coming to a refugee prescreening stage would want to give part of a story. If one is a legitimate refugee, then one will want to put all the facts, all the circumstances and all the other intervening variables on the table so that the case may have a good chance of being approved.

If that is the reality, and there is no doubt that that will be the reality for claimants at a prescreening process, then we are suggesting that there is no need for a prescreening. What we need is a competent board to offer a proper and effective hearing and to review the individual merits and circumstances of a case. If the individual is refused at that stage, then Parliament, the Government and Canadians can at least be assured that the decision was rendered by a competent body rather than having a guilty conscience by having two screening officers send an individual away from the country and us worrying about whether or not that individual was in fact a legitimate refugee.

The motion makes a great deal of sense. It speaks to the validity of having the refugee body be the judge and jury rather than having two officers at the border prescreening and making a judgment thus rendering the refugee board null and void with respect to that one claimant.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly in support of Motion No. 35A and to express some appreciation for the willingness of the Government to include the word "any" in the wording. It is a rather crucial point. When we have a very bad piece of legislation, a piece of legislation that will screen out many people who will not have a chance to make their claims, what this wording will do is minimize slightly that screening-out procedure. Now, excessive procedures will not be even more excessive than they might otherwise have been.

What this means is that the issue of credibility will be given a fair chance. A refugee who supposedly has a shred of credible evidence will have a chance to present that evidence and to have it evaluated. It will not be excluded automatically. It will not be excluded on the say-so of officials. The intention, one which has been expressed by Ministers, is that refugees who do have some kind of supporting evidence will have that evidence evaluated and at least have a chance to make their case. It is a very small amendment. It does not change the nature of the Bill. However, we certainly welcome it in that it goes in the right direction.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 35A standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion 35A (Mr. Heap) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next motion is Motion No. 40 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

Motion No. 40

(a) by striking out line 40 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"their decision and their reasons in writing as soon as possible after"

(b) by striking out line 18 at page 17 and substituting the following therefor:

"and the reasons therefor in writing as soon as possi-"

(c) by striking out line 10 at page 18 and substituting the following therefor:

"decision and the reasons therefor in writing as soon"

(d) by striking out line 27 at page 18 and substituting the following therefor:

"decision and the reasons therefor in writing as soon".

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I paid close attention to Motion No. 40. I think Your Honour might find that in subclause (b) and subclause (d) that the lines specified for removal cannot be correct. They do not sensibly fit in in the text. I think that if the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has a correction to offer, then it might be appropriate to proceed. If he does not have a correction, then it might make more sense for the House to proceed to the next grouping while the numbers are looked at. If we are to accept the motion as it is presently written it would not make sense if it were adopted.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I thank the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) for bringing this matter to the attention of the House. He has told me that he reads over all the amendments very carefully, and he has just proved that.

Indeed, there is a typographical error here. I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House to amend my motion to read as follows:

I think the Hon. Member for Calgary West will find the words he is looking for at that line. Part (d) should read:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) have the unanimous consent of the House to make the proposed changes to his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Spadina.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I thank Hon. Members for their assistance. This motion obviously makes one point in four places, and there are more places in which it might be made, too, but these are the ones that came to my attention.

It is during the preliminary hearing or screening, as it is sometimes called, that people are to be tested for eligibility and credibility. We have, therefore, two pairs of alternate decisions that may be made by the adjudicator and the refugee board. They both may find him not to be eligible, or one might find him to be eligible. If he passed that test, they might both find him not to be credible, or one might find him to be credible. So there are four possible decisions reflected in Motion No. 40(a), (b), (c) and (d). The Government introduced the amendment with the underlying words, "that they shall give their decision and the reasons therefore", for which I am grateful, but I am asking also that the reasons be in writing.

My reason is that it is not only fairly customary in judicial or semi-judicial proceedings, but it will greatly expedite the action of review, if that is sought by the claimant. If the claimant receives a negative decision on either his eligibility or credibility, the Bill provides within very limited circumstances that he may have a review of that decision. However, his lawyer, the lawyer he has chosen or one provided by the Minister, unless he has chosen to go without a lawyer, will want to know the reasons for the decision in order to deal with them.

Rather than having to make a special application to get a copy of the reasons, I think it would be much more reasonable for the lawyer to receive them automatically. In other words, the reasons would be provided in writing. I am advised by persons experienced in cases before the Immigration Department that this is not an onerous requirement. I hope we will not hear from the opposite side of the House that this will cause weeks and months and years of delay and allow in 50,000 bogus refugees. I believe it is a very limited request we are making, and a very customary one.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I just want to put on the record that the Bill already requires that reasons be given. I think there was general agreement with the standing committee when it held its hearings in December that since we will have electronic recordings going on at the same time, that that would be adequate. Those who met at that meeting thought it would be adequate. Actually, that would be to the advantage of the claimant because he can use the recording immediately rather than waiting for a printed transcript. I do not credit the Hon. Member's premonition that we would be afraid of massive backlogs as a result of this. However, it would be to the claimants advantage to depend on the recording and be able to work with his counsel, who will be with him at the time in any case, and he could proceed with his appeal at any time. We think this particular amendment would work to the claimant's disservice and we should not support this motion.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I do not see what the Government's problem is, if it wants to have the rule of law properly applied. If it simply wants to rely on a transcript, there may be delays in getting the transcript. The transcript may not be complete. Who pays for the transcript? How long would it take to get the transcript? If one needs reasons at the end of the transcript that consist of one page, one might have to purchase the whole transcript of 100 pages, which becomes prohibitive. There are all sorts of technical points I could make to show why the Government is being unfair.

Why not allow this motion? Reasons in writing may force the person who is making the adjudication to actually put down full and complete reasons for the decision rather than dismissing the application too lightly. This is a quasi-judicial procedure in the sense that there is appeal from it, although it is limited as the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) pointed out. Appeal, of course, is a judicial procedure. One wants to have the proper means to make that appeal and part of having the proper means is to have a reason for the decision from which one can appeal. Does that not make sense? So why is the Government being so tight on this issue, or is it just part of the way it has approached this whole Bill, and that is to slam the iron fist down and to heck with the rule of law?

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I think it is bad enough that the Government is imposing a prescreening stage. It is bad enough that the Government is saying that, notwithstanding that we have a refugee board, it is going to make a judgment anyway before one even gets a chance to go to the refugee board. That is the larger problem. That is the area on which the Government should have moved.

Given that the Government seems determined to have a prescreening stage, a pre-judgment, if you will, at the very least what the Government should do is offer a written decision that would reveal the reasons for refusing that individual claimant to proceed any further in the refugee determination system. I believe that is the very least the Government can offer, given that there is a possible appeal and also given that the Government wishes to move so quickly at this stage that the claimant may not have the possibility of having his or her legal counsel of choice, but rather a counsel appointed by the Government.

One can envisage the circumstances. If I was a claimant and I had to go through the proceedings in a number of days, and my solicitor of choice was not available to defend me, then at the very least, following my particular case, I should be able to offer a written reason for the decision to my proper legal counsel so that he or she may prepare the defence at appeal time.

It is not a question of simply saying it is on tape and the claimant should be happy. I think if we are going to treat this matter in an acceptable way, with the possibility that the legal counsel of choice will not be present at the first stage, but may be in fact working on behalf of the claimant at appeal time, at the very least we should try to maintain the standards of our judicial system and have it applied to the prescreening stage so that all decisions may be routed in the written decisions, and have the Government stand by those remarks, if they are in fact appealed.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am rather perplexed as to why the Government will not accept this very simple and staightforward amendment. It is necessary for reasons to be given both in the case of eligibility and credibility so the reasons will be there. The Government says they will be there on tape. What is the lawyer and the refugee to do, go around with a tape recorder with a little cassette if the decision is unfavourable and the matter will be appealed? Limited as the grounds of appeal are, there are some. The possibility of appeal is there. How is the refugee to take advantage of it?

Normally, one cannot proceed with a piece of tape. A transcript will be needed. Who is going to make the transcript? There is then going to be a delay to get a transcript. As has been mentioned, if the reasons are not given in some succinct fashion, the refugee may have to get a transcript over a very much longer period of the hearing, which will be expensive and cause further delays.

It seems to me there are very good reasons for ensuring that there are written reasons as to eligibility and credibility and that the claimant should have access to these. There is a possibility that the person will not have his or her preferred lawyer there, that they may have to make do with one appointed by the Minister since so little time is provided for the refugee to get legal assistance. There may then be a change in lawyer which will cause further complications.

This seems to me to be a very reasonable amendment to facilitate things. Poor as the procedure which is being allowed is, it should at least be made to be workable within the constraints. It seems to me this is a very simple and straightforward amendment and I would ask government Members to support it.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Government has decided on prescreening. What the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) is trying to do with his eminently reasonable amendment is to make the best out of this decision of having the prescreening. In other words, he is saying let us have a prescreening system which is the fairest possible.

How can a potential refugee who does not speak or understand a word of English or French make out when a verbal decision is handed to him or her, without having an opportunity to show the decision to someone who may want to help? Therefore, the request for a written record seems to be eminently sensible and fair. If an officer at the border decides in the negative, the decision should be available not only by word of mouth.

After all, we are dealing with human lives in this Bill. All this amendment is attempting to put in place is a technique of putting on paper the thoughts of the representative of the Government judging the person. What is wrong with a request that says "put it on paper"? That is what makes it so difficult to understand the answer given by the Parliamentary Secretary. It is a legitimate request because in the end the person can, if he or she wants help, at least show the grounds on which he or she was refused.

Therefore, the amendment ought to carry and not be rejected because it is so fundamental, simple, and reasonable. If the cause of refugees is close to the heart of the Government, as is being claimed, then it has an opportunity to prove that it wants to facilitate the system in its fairness as well. We cannot have a fair system if it is only based upon oral or verbal communications. There must be a little piece of paper on which the decision is recorded so that the life of the individual involved can be examined as to whether or not there should be a subsequent step by way of a decision which is not only communicated by word of mouth.

If anyone in this room were a potential refugee, I do not think he or she would want to be put in a position of having to face a decision which is only communicated by word of mouth and not on a piece of paper. That is not good enough, and that is why the amendment is sensible and desirable.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, two of the four clauses would require Canadian taxpayers to have typed up a transcript which would never be used for anything. This amendment would require us to give typewritten reasons for people to go forward to a de novo hearing. There is no place for such a transcript in that hearing. There is no need for it; it is an expenditure that is not worth-while.

The other two clauses would require the taxpayers of the country to have typed up reasons, which have been given orally or verbally in the presence of counsel and everyone else, and with cassettes being available, for abusers of the system. There is a certain direct cost involved in that, but there is even a larger cost in Canadian taxpayers continuing to support abusers over a longer period of time.

Surely the Chamber has come to the conclusion that abusers should be removed speedily. Every group that appeared before us testified to that effect. If there is any evidence that a person might have a credible claim, we put an amendment where the Crown does not even contest the issue of credibility. It can simply be asserted that it is credible, and it goes forward to a de novo hearing.

Why would we want taxpayers to pay for the typing up of a transcript which in half the cases—and hopefully it will be 90 per cent of the cases ultimately after we have removed the abuse—will never be used? Why would we go to the expense of keeping people in the country for an extra week or two weeks when there is no credibility to the claim, when a decision has been made and there is no evidence of any kind that is credible or trustworthy which might indeed enable us to classify them as refugees?

That is what this amendment deals with, and I urge Hon. Members to reject it.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, at times one gets the impression that the Government is committed to an almost infantile level of negativism. In rejection of a very simple amendment it gives bumbling, inarticulate, inexplicable, and incomprehensible reasons—"My God, somebody might have to type up something!"

Earlier I heard my colleague say that he hoped the Government would not suggest that the amendment would cause the appearance of a backlog of thousands of illegitimate refugees. What we hear is reasoning which demonstrates that the procedure the Government would adopt in lieu of written reasons would in fact cause precisely that kind of delay.

Then we have the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) who is worried about somebody having to type; about the fantastic cost of typing up reasons which, by the way, would perhaps cost less than a whole tape; and about according to illegitimate refugees some special privileges in the context of a procedure in which he has utter trust, in spite of the fact that we assert that the pre-screening process, in and of itself, does not serve to establish what it claims will be established.

My colleague indicated that it was a method of imposing some means of discipline, of articulating, and of justifying reasons, and that it was necessary for people, in terms of the slight appeal procedures provided them, to have a clear statement for either himself, herself, or the person's lawyer.

This is elementary. What is wrong with the Government that it has such a total commitment to unfairness? What is the source of its congenital negativism? Surely it is a simple amendment which ought to be entertained with enthusiasm, if not with understanding.

I urge upon the other side to attempt to be just a little more understanding of what is being asked for here and the situation being created by this legislation.

I was just reminded of the utterances of Mr. Clyne whose point of view, if adopted by the country, may require me to seek refugee status someplace else. If I had to face that kind of set of requirements to gain admission, in those circumstances I think I would be frightened.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 40, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The recorded division shall stand deferred.

The House will now proceed to Motions Nos. 43 and 44, which will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

Motion No. 43

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out line 2 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"allowed to return and remain in that country."

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out line 3 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1)(b), or (1)(d),".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to Motion No. 43 and, following our disposal of Motion No. 43, I would seek leave to withdraw Motion No. 44 since its effect is very close to that of Motion No. 43.

However, what I am seeking in Motion No. 43 is the safety of a person who is returned to the country from which he came to Canada. In the original version of the Bill it was called a safe third country. At page 14 of the Bill, Section 48.01, which is the description of a person who is ineligible, reads:

(1) A person who claims to be a Convention refugee is not eligible to have the claim determined by the Refugee Division if

—(b) the claimant came to Canada from a country, other than the country of the claimant's nationality or, where the claimant has no country of nationality, the country of the claimant's habitual residence, that has been prescribed as a country that complies with Article 33 of the Convention either universally or with respect to persons of a specified class of persons of which the claimant is a member;

The problem with that clause is that a person may be sent back to a country and not really accepted by that country. If the country bounces the person right back to Canada, the Government has introduced into the present version of the Bill a procedure for bringing him back into the process of refugee claim determination. That is good.

I am very glad the Government has made that amendment in the present version of the Bill, but it does nothing for the case of a person who is not accepted by a country and who is not returned to Canada. We do not know what is going to happen. We do know from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and from other sources, that there are currently thousands of refugees who are described as refugees in orbit. They are sent from this country to that, from that country to another, and so on. Refugees were sent from Denmark to Turkey. They had come from Turkey to Denmark. Turkey found out that they had come to Turkey from Iran and Turkey sent them back to Iran. Denmark did not send them to Iran directly. It was not expected that that Turkey would do what it did. People probably expected Turkey would allow them to stay there. But there is no guarantee.

I am concerned that it has not been possible so far to find an agreement within Parliament here, within the committee, between the Opposition and the Government on words that would ensure that, when a person is sent from Canada to the country from which that person came, the individual will either be allowed to remain in that country, meaning, in my opinion, allowed to live there, not to be detained as a prisoner or starved for want of being able to earn a living. In the previous amendment that was defeated I asked for those other points, but what I am asking now is that a person be allowed to remain in the country from whence he came and that Canada would then be responsible for making sure before long so that he would be allowed to remain.

This is a point on which the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees commented in his aide-mémoire in June. In paragraph 6 he refers to Section 48.01 which sets out access criteria which must be met if an applicant for refugee status is to have his or her claim referred to the refugee division. He goes on to say:

In the general context of returns to "safe" or intermediate countries, UNHCR would reiterate the guiding principle that every State party to the 1951 Convention/1967 Protocol—

That is us, Mr. Speaker. We are party to it.

—should examine all such applications for refugee status as are made on its territory.

That is exactly what in this Section Canada would be choosing not to do, in Section 48.01(1)(b) which I read. Canada would be saying that it will not examine a person's claim. Canada will send him or her back to where they came from. Suppose the country a person came from takes the same attitude as Canada. Suppose it follows our lead, the country that was given the Nansen Medal last year for its good treatment of refugees. Suppose the country says "We won't keep the individual. We will send him somewhere else". It could be a country where the person fears persecution and where, in fact, he might be persecuted. Therefore, I am asking that we bring this law into some degree of compliance with the United Nations Convention, as asked for by its representative.

There is another point which the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has raised as well. In paragraph 17 of the same aide-mémoire we find:

UNHCR warmly welcomes incorporation of the principle of non-refoulement in Section 55, and trusts that its extension to all persons found ineligible will be considered.

Article 55 is a good article as the UNHCR has commented, but it does not go far enough. Article 55 says, in effect, that no person who is described in Section 48.01(1)(a) shall be removed from Canada to a country where that person's life or freedom would be threatened and so on. That is good as far as it goes. It refers, and I quote Section 48.01(1):

> (a) the claimant has been recognized by any country, other than Canada, as a Convention refugee—

They are to send this person back to some other country but not to the country from which the individual has been found to be a refugee. The UNHCR has asked that that non-refoulement principle be applied to all people who are found ineligible under Section 48.01. Non-refoulement means that we do not send a person back to the country of persecution directly or indirectly, even through another country. It also means that we do not send him or her back when we have not determined that he or she is not a refugee. In other words, if we have not listened to the claim, we do not know if the individual is a refugee or not and we do not send him or her away if there is a chance that the country to which we send the person would send him or her back to the place where the individual was claiming to be persecuted.

I ask that we comply with the UNHCR's request based on the Convention which we signed 20 years ago.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary made much in the committee and in Parliament here of the fact that he asked the UNHCR representative whether UNHCR found Canada in contravention of the Convention. The answer was no, but the UNHCR representative did not say that this law fully complies with the Convention. The UNHCR representative made a number of requests that he said would bring the law into compliance. This is the diplomatic way in which the UNHCR normally deals with countries that are signatories to the Convention because it does not have any power of enforcement. It cannot take Canada to court and enforce a decision compelling Canada to comply with the Convention and its articles. It can only request, and it has requested us. I hope the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will respect the request of the UNHCR. It simply means that Canada would have to find out whether a person will be allowed to remain in that other country.

We will hear from the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), I am afraid, about all the bogus refugees who will be allowed to eat off the fat of the land here while Canada is trying to find out whether Germany, France or Sweden will take a person back. I think that will be stretching the point, but we will have to put up with it for a little while, I guess. I would ask that, after the Parliamentary Secretary has had his fun, he support this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) have the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw Motion No. 44?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 44 (Mr. Heap) withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate on Motion No. 43, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, before the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has his fun, let me add a comment to the debate on this motion on behalf of my Party.

No one disagrees that if a refugee claimant asks for protection in Canada and we discover that he clearly enjoys the protection of refugee status under another country, that person should be returned to the country that has offered him protection. If it is found, through the determination system, that an individual had access to the refugee determination system of another country and that could be proven, there would be no argument against suggesting that the claimant return to that country because we have a long enough list of individuals who do not have any protection from any country. I think it is our responsibility to offer protection to those who do not have any other protection. Those who seek protection for the first time should be the priority, and rightfully so.

In the course of debate, the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) said on a number of occasions, both in committee and in the House of Commons, that he would look for guarantees. If Canada were to send an individual back to his second country, the Minister said that there would be some kind of guarantee. He also used the word "agreement" in response to a question I put in the House of Commons, but later in committee changed his tune and said that he would be looking for arrangements. Quite obviously an arrangement is something very different from a guarantee or an agreement.

If all the countries on the list of safe countries guaranteed that they would respect the safety and protection of a claimant, then the Government would be able to sell its policy to Canadians from coast to coast. However, it simply wishes to have a safe country concept without telling us which countries will be on the list. It will not tell us how those countries will get on such a list. The Government will not tell us if the United States of America will be considered safe for Central Americans or if Great Britain will be considered safe for Tamil refugees. On top of that, the Government says that it will only return an individual to a country.

The Government is asking for too much. The Government is asking for our trust and confidence, but it is not deserving of that trust and confidence because there are too many questions and gaps and there are too many places where a fatal mistake could be made. One such mistake would be too many.

This motion suggests that the clause read that a person be returned to and remain in a particular country, rather than just be returned to that country. A claimant can be returned to West Germany, Holland or Great Britain, but those countries may not offer refugee status, may not offer a chance to apply under their refugee determination systems, may not grant visitor status or may not grant landed immigrant status. Upon a claimant's return, they may simply send him to another country, and many refugee groups have called that sending refugees into orbit.

The United Nations High Commission for Refugees is not the only group that has asked for that clarification. If the Government does not like the word "remain", perhaps it might like the word "admitted". Many different witnesses in addition to the United Nations High Commission have promoted that concept. The Canadian Bar Association has commented on that concept. The Inter-Church Committee suggested that the word "arrangements" is vague and that refugees will be put in orbit.

The Halifax Refugee Assistance Group has spoken on this issue. The Mennonite Central Committee said that there would be a problem if claimants were sent back to these countries because they may not have access to the determination systems there and will not have to be away longer than 90 days.

Rabbi Plaut, Pierre Duquette, representatives of Amnesty International, Professor Hathaway and representatives of the Canadian Bar have all suggested quite strongly that simply returning someone is not a guarantee that that person will be able to stay, as the Minister of State suggested. Return is not necessarily admission to a country. When all the verbiage is stripped away, this is in essence a lack of commitment on behalf of the Government to go the extra distance that would ensure that a returned person would not be put into an eternal orbit or sent back to the very land from which he wished to escape.

Through this motion, we are asking the Government to live up to its commitments and not simply state that it has good intentions. It should put its intentions into law so that the legislation will match the intentions. Canada is not governed by intentions or by speeches made by the Minister; it is governed by the letter of the law.

As Bill C-55 stands, it leaves a lot to be desired. It is not enough to say that we are protecting refugees by returning them to a safe country. The concept is weak and the terminology is weak. I hope that the Hon. Member for Calgary West will clarify the Government's position on that.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that someone from the Opposition would have mentioned the reality, which is that this clause is very, very positive for Convention refugees. We are putting into statute law the right of anyone determined to be a Convention refugee to apply for landed immigrant status in this country.

Historically, such applications have been made, but no one has ever had the right to make them. Relatives will not have that right. The only ones who will have the right by statute law to apply for landed immigrant status in Canada through an immigration officer will be those we determine to be Convention refugees. That is the essence of the clause.

One begins to wonder if anyone read the clause or attended the hearings to hear the testimony on it. The Bill is very complex.

The amendment proposes that we add to the clause the word "remain". What does that mean? Does it mean remain for 10 minutes, for 10 days, for 10 years, for 10 lifetimes? Is the addition of the word "remain" a clarification or an added confusion? I simply suggest that it is an added confusion. The amendment would provide a legal opportunity for someone to have a right whom we do not want to have that right for a particular reason.

Let us say, for example, some persons are born in a country like the U.S.S.R. They lived there on a Green Card for 40 or 50 years. Then they decide all of a sudden they would like to be Canadian citizens. They come across the border, where we conduct a refugee hearing. We say we cannot send them back to the U.S.S.R. Should we immediately give them the very special privilege to apply for landed immigrant status in Canada? Or should we have the power under the Act simply send them to the U.S. where they have a viable Green Card? That is the kind of situation we are dealing with.

Citizenship in many nations of the world is conferred at birth. It exists for life and cannot be revoked. You cannot even deny it or give it up. Whatever your country of origin, you will have a right to the Canadian refugee determination system. That is appropriate and that is what universality is all about. We may indeed decide it would be inappropriate and a default under the Convention to send them back to the country of origin. Yet surely we should retain the right to send them back to the country they lived in permanently, which they have not fled, and in which they make no claim to be persecuted. They make no claim on us to protect them from that country and that country is willing to have them back.

This would not be a large category. It may never be invoked. However, do you want to leave another loophole that will perhaps turn Canadians against refugees because they do not understand the difference between people who need protection and those who do not? Or should we try to close off all the loopholes so that we are left with a system which helps us determine who is a Convention refugee so we can offer them the very special privilege of this clause, new in Canadian statute law, of applying for landed immigrant status inside the country?

I suggest to Members of the House that we do not need the word "remain". By putting it in we simply create another loophole for a bogus claimant to make a legal argument on what the word "remain" means. Without greater specificity, it means a lack of clarity for the clause. It does not change the nature of the clause, it simply adds another loophole. On that basis I think we should reject it.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, this amendment is crucial to the Bill and the change to the refugee determination system. A number of years ago Canada signed the UN Convention on Refugees. We undertook certain obligations. We have an obligation not to send people back to countries where they have reasonable grounds to fear persecution. We are not to do that directly or indirectly. Because the Government is not prepared to look at other measures to do what it should be doing, stopping bogus refugee claimants, it is trying to stop certain people from being able to make refugee claims and send them back to a so-called safe third country. The argument is that genuine refugees are not being sent back to a place where they will be tortured or murdered. The Government is doing indirectly what it will not do directly, and that is not acceptable.

Mr. Friesen: You are totally wrong.

Ms. McDonald: My colleague from Spadina gave an example of a refugee turned back from Denmark to Turkey and then from Turkey to Iran. Denmark would not have sent the refugee directly back to Iran, but it did indirectly. Closer to home we have plenty of examples. Canada will not send refugee claimants back to El Salvador or Guatemala, but will send them back to the U.S. and the U.S. is sending refugee claimants back to those two countries. We know that some people being returned are tortured and killed. It is inexcusable for the Government to hide behind this indirect procedure.

We have had some people say "remain" may not be the right word. What does that mean? How long do we mean? If the Government has a better word, let us hear it. This is absolutely crucial. We are serious about this amendment. If the Government agrees on the principle but just quibbles with the word, let us have a better word. We are certainly willing to listen. What I fear is that it is not just a quibble about the word, it is a quibble about the real intent of having proper protection for refugees. This strawman of someone being born in the Soviet Union and coming via the United States to Canada is a preposterous example. The U.S. would not return such a person to the Soviet Union, but it does return people to Latin American countries which are run by dictatorships and which are torturing and killing civilians.

Obviously this Bill was designed with geography in mind. Latin American refugee claimants are very likely to come through another country, namely the U.S. Just look at the map. They are not very likely to be coming directly. Yet their needs are just as great. They are just as genuine refugees because they come from another country as they would be if they came directly.

We should not be doing indirectly what in conscience we could not do directly. That is why this amendment is absolutely crucial and if the Government has any intention of living up to its word not to send back refugees to countries where they will be liable to torture and murder, then it ought to accept this amendment as well.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to adopt the very reasonable words and logical argument used by the Hon. Member who just spoke. I found the comments of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) to be rather picky. Quite frankly, I thought it was rather hypocritical to say that this amendment would create another loophole which would turn Canadians against refugees. It is the Government that tried to ride this wave of hysteria, which came over this country after the East Indian boat people landed in the Maritimes, to a higher standing in the Gallup poll. It never got anywhere. It was shameless. Thankfully, Canadians have not rewarded them for it.

Part of the Government's reaction to this clause is indicative of the way it has approached this Bill. It is not a fair Bill and it has been approached with hysteria and panic. That is reflected in the Bill to the point where a nun even appeared on television and suggested that through this Draconian Bill she might have to go to jail if she continued to help South American refugees. That is the end of the road this Government is on. The Canadian people will subsequently reward government Members in the election for that direction.

It is preposterous to make these picky arguments about whether a person remains for 10 minutes or 10 generations. "Remain" means stay. That is pretty obvious.

As to the Hon. Member's example of the Green Card, that reminded me of the song "Back in the U.S.S.R.". What did that mean? I think that was a strange example. The reality is what is happening with the Central American refugees. They are the ones who will be hurt and may die as a result of unamended clauses like this. In order to get rid of bogus refugees the Government could have adopted the system suggested by the Commons committee.

This clause should be adopted. The Government is being picky in not doing so. The Government's example is bad. This is a good amendment and the remarks of the Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) were right on. Let us get on with it and adopt this small but very important amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The recorded division stands deferred.

Motions Nos. 45, 47, 48 and 49 all deal with Clause 14 and will be grouped for debate but will be voted on separately.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

Motion No. 45

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 20 ands 21 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"that neither the applicant nor the applicant's spouse, dependent child nor dependent parent is a person".

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (Laprairie) moved:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out line 22 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"described in paragraph 19(1)(c),"

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

Motion No. 48

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 22 and 23 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"described in paragraph 19(1)(b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g) or (j), or 27(2)(c) or (a)".

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out line 29 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) five years or more may be imposed, but the Minister may issue a permit or permits to enable the applicant, with his family if accompanying, to enter and remain in Canada for such period of time as the Minister may determine."

He said: Mr. Speaker, we now get away, for a while at least, from the technicalities of this law and get to a fairly simple point, that is, whether a person who otherwise would be landed will be barred because of his family. This amendment asks that we correct that type of injustice part way. I would like to correct it all the way, but I failed in committee. In committee I wanted to amend page 19 at lines 20 and 21 by dropping the reference to the family so that it would say "if the immigration officer is satisfied that the applicant" is not a person described in paragraph 19(1)(a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g) or (j) or 27(2)(c). However, I was defeated in that. I am not now asking for the same thing, only for part of it.

With some regret I suggest that we replace the words "that neither the applicant nor any member of the applicant's family is a person described" in that way, with the words "that neither the applicant, nor the applicant's spouse, dependent child nor dependent parent" is a person described in that way.

The term "family", referring to any member of the applicant's family, is a rather flexible term even within the Immigration Act and regulations because the Minister may, from time to time, add to or take away from the term "family" a certain family category. He has that power under the regulations. There is immediate family as well as more distant relatives.

Therefore, I am suggesting that we should make this exclusion applicable only to a person whose spouse, dependent child or dependent parent falls under these prohibitions. We do not want to break up husband and wife or separate parent from dependent child or adult child from dependent parent. Others are more separable. I will, therefore, for the purpose of this motion, concede that if a person who individually should be landed, which is what this clause is dealing with, has a dependent of that sort, that dependent may exclude the person from being landed. Surely it should not be applied to anyone who is not a dependent in that specified sense.

I agree with the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) that this Bill, on this and one or two other limited points, is a distinct advance in humaneness over the previous legislation. The finding that once a person is found to be a refugee he has the right to be landed is an advance. However, we do qualify and limit that right. This paragraph reads:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, an immigration officer to whom an application is made under subsection (1) shall grant landing to the applicant—

That is good, but it goes on to say:

> —if the immigration officer is satisfied that neither the applicant nor any member of the applicant's family is a person described in paragraph 19(1)(a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g) or (j) or 27(2)(c)—

What are Subparagraphs 19(1)(a) and (b)? They are grounds, in the present legislation, upon which a person may be found inadmissible. Section 19(1) provides that:

> No person shall be granted admission if he is a member of any of the following classes:
> (a) persons who are suffering from any disease, disorder, disability or other health impairment as a result of the nature, severity or probable duration of which, in the opinion of a medical officer concurred in by at least one other medical officer,
> (i) they are or are likely to be a danger to public health or to public safety, or
> (ii) their admission would cause or might reasonably be expected to cause excessive demands on health or social services;

If a refugee's dependent is suffering from some illness of this sort the refugee cannot be landed.

Such a case, to which I have referred before, has been brought to our attention. It was brought to our attention by the Mennonite Central Committee in correspondence in the spring and was reiterated by them when they were testifying before the committee two weeks ago. In Southeast Asia a family had waited for some years in a refugee camp and had finally been selected to be brought to Canada. About two days before they were to take a plane to Canada, an X-ray revealed that one adult son of the family had a spot on his chest that might indicate tuberculosis. Therefore, he and the rest of the family were excluded from coming to Canada. I am not sure whether the rest of the family had the choice to leave him behind and chose not to, or whether they were not given that choice. In effect, it would be a pretty poor choice for them. After living as a family of refugees, to leave one of their members behind is almost no choice at all.

A few weeks later, that young man hanged himself so as not to be the burden preventing his family from being relocated to Canada.

The Mennonite Central Committee, which has a great deal of experience in handling refugee affairs, pointed this out as a very tragic application of our law in this respect, especially in comparison to the United States where, in a case like that, they would have brought the person along and given him treatment since tuberculosis of that small degree can usually be treated with today's modern methods. That deals with one of the clauses of exclusion.

Another clause is 19(1)(b) which states:

> Persons who there are reasonable grounds to believe are or will be unable or unwilling to support themselves and those persons who are dependent on them for care and support, except persons who have satisfied an immigration officer that adequate arrangements have been made for their care and support;

Therefore, either sickness or any kind of disability resulting in an inability to earn a living can be a ground for excluding a refugee if such a person is in the refugee's family.

While I would like to wipe out that whole exclusion, I cannot do so because of the action of the committee. However, I hope we would not exclude such a person if the sick person or person unable or unwilling to earn a living is not at least a dependent parent or dependent child. This is a matter of simple humanity.

We are not supposed to be dealing with regular immigrants. In fact, it seems that the practice of our overseas officers, with whatever instructions they have from headquarters, is increasingly to treat refugee claimants as though they were simply applicants for immigration to Canada. They are being asked about their education, skills and health, and whether they will be economically advantageous to the Canadian economy. Rather than that they are supposed to be considering human need.

Sometimes a refugee or members of a refugee's family have suffered very severely. Sometimes they have been wounded or tortured, physically or mentally. Sometimes they are half starved and have not had proper health care to prevent infections and so on. Not all refugees are in perfect shape when they apply to come to Canada. It is inhumane to exclude a bona fide refugee because a son, daughter, husband or parent is sick. That is bad enough, but it would also be inhumane to exclude a person because one's brother falls under one of these other categories under paragraphs (c), (d), (e) and so on.

When one considers the situation in the world now, we must follow the United Nations request and treat the case individually rather than collectively. Some of us joined the Army in the 1940s to fight against this kind of collective treatment, and we would like to defend the rights of the individual as in this clause.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the amendment moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). It involves a very important principle and I heartily concur with his analysis in terms of individual rights and the importance of dealing with people as individuals. It is quite spooky when one considers people being condemned on the basis of the situation of a relative.

The Member for Spadina has already pointed out how he was unsuccessful in achieving significant amendments on this point in committee. What he is trying now, and what I am supporting, is a much lesser amendment. However, something is better than nothing in order to reduce the damaging effect of the Government's intentions to proceed in this respect.

This Bill is primarily a disaster. It is an extremely unfortunate Bill which will cause a great deal of harm. However, scattered throughout the Bill are some good points in its various clauses.

One of them is the right to landed status for people who are judged to be refugees. While there will not be many people judged to be refugees because many will be screened out before they even have a chance to make an application, they will have a little more protection than they received in the past. They will have the opportunity to apply for landed status.

However, what will happen next? The situation of family members then comes into play. As the Hon. Member for Spadina has noted, refugees who come to Canada to apply for refugee status are often in very bad shape. They have been through a great deal in their own country and may have suffered further in transit to Canada. It should not be surprising that some relatives will not be in the best of health and could be suffering from torture or physical and mental abuse. I believe a bit of compassion is in order at this stage.

I heartily urge the Government to see the merits of this amendment, in one area where it has done something right in permitting landed status to a certain, albeit small class of people. It should not close the door to them on account of the status of a relative.

Why should the Government not go the next step in this very limited area and accept the amendment of the Hon. Member for Spadina?

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to speak in favour of the amendment. However, I have some misgivings due to the nature of the Government's legislation. It is disgusting that the Government would deny refugees from landing in Canada by claiming that a family member had a disability or an illness, especially a treatable illness. The Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) used the example of a minor case of tuberculosis.

Members opposite preach about the sanctity of the family. It is absolutely astounding that they can turn around and destroy an individual and a family unit on the basis that a qualified refugee cannot enter the country because a family member may not meet a requirement that is defined in the legislation. The Government ought to rethink its position completely.

Conservative candidates will eventually have to justify this disgusting aspect of the legislation that discriminates against families and places in jeopardy people who would qualify but for the status of a family member. There is not a single Member in the House who for years has not fought the iniquitous sections of this legislation that separate families. There are cases in which an individual member of a family has come here, has worked and has attained citizenship and who attempts to unite the family in Canada, and is sometimes successful. Sometimes in the long timeframe, in attempting to accomplish that end, several of the children, or even one of the children, may be barred because of age. In such a case one of the children must be left behind. These are tragic situations which happen to those families.

I notice that the Government when proposing these Draconian pieces of legislation concerning immigrants and refugees was proposing to remove that one very, very grim piece of the Immigration Act. At the present time I have some misgivings in supporting my colleague's amendment. It really is a second-best situation. The Government has forced a situation in which the House would consider passing legislation that would not allow families to be united when, say, the head of the family can be established. We will wind up not permitting that because another member of the family may have some problem that could be and is accommodated easily in Canada.

I support the amendment, but it is with a great deal of sorrow. What we should be doing is putting forward a first-class piece of legislation which supports the family unit and which allows a person who qualifies as a refugee not to be rejected on the basis that he cannot bring his family in because of some obscure problem in that particular section of the Act which excludes individuals.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I see that my colleagues were very anxious to hear my remarks. Hopefully they will accept what I have to tell the Canadian people.

[English]

As far as I am concerned, the more I listen to the debate on Bill C-55 the more I think that the Bill is not the proper tool needed for the fair, fast and efficient refugee determination system that we need in Canada. Just to give an example, the pre-screening test is inhumane since we will know in advance whoever comes in will not be—

—will not be—I am switching to French, I lost the English text—will not be selected because they have already been mentioned in the Bill. They will not want to hear a claimant whose refugee status has already been recognized in another country, they will not let him plead his case to show that he is a genuine refugee. There are four or five different categories. Surely those who have read the Bill are aware and know that this measure is inhumane. The Bill is so very much unlike what it should be, and again I use the famous words fast, fair and efficient.

I will give an example to show how this 62-page Bill is not what is required for a claimant, for someone arriving from a country he had to flee lest he be killed, tortured, or threatened with death.

On page 44, for example, a clause provides: You may—if you have been rejected in terms of the new refugee classification—you may apply for leave to appeal after 15 days after appearing before a judge if, for very special reasons, he has ruled that you were not in a position to file an appeal within the prescribed 15-day delay. The other clause, on page 4, stipulates 15 days.

Mr. Speaker, we sat on the committee and heard many department officials, and if ever a refugee is turned down and department officials have done their work very quickly and issue a deportation order against the claimant, I wonder what will happen when he will appear before a judge and give very specific evidence that he was unable to appear before the famous 15-day delay, as specified in the clause on page 4, which is contrary to the clause on page 44.

Again I say that this Bill is not what we need to judge or select genuine refugees seeking asylum in Canada.

Again, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-55 includes something like 20 to 25 per cent of the contents of the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. As a Member I would like to know who suggested to the Government the other clauses, the other provisions in this disputed Bill. The Department's senior officials, the Deputy Minister? His assistant or assistants? Having been here for three years now, a question comes to my mind, Mr. Speaker: Why do we have committees? Why do we sit on committees, call witnesses, experts? Is it to be told how we should make laws for the well-being of the Canadian people? For hours and hours on end, we heard experts, witnesses who have been working for years on refugee or immigration matters, people like Rabbi Plaut, lawyer Pierre Duquette, and many others.

Since the very beginning, Mr. Speaker, I have been suggesting that the legislation should be rejected. I sent to many non-Government organizations, and to many Members of this House a document entitled "An Alternative Formula for Refugee Determination". I am convinced, after hearing experts, after sitting down, after discussing, I can guarantee you—not because it comes from me—that the new formula I will put forward would have been accepted by everyone. When I say everyone, some 150 to 175 organizations are opposed to our legislation, Bill C-55, because it is an inhumane legislation, a legislation that should never have existed.

Mr. Speaker, this morning I received a telegram from an organization which I respect and which all of us in this House should respect—it came from Mr. Donald Anderson, Secretary General to the Canadian Council of Churches. That message, that telegram did not come from a nobody. He suggests, concerning Bill C-55:

[English]

> We appreciate government work to try to improve Bill C-55. Unfortunately our deep concerns remain. How can we know if a person claiming to be a refugee needs our help if we do not hear their problems? Each person claiming to be a refugee should have a right to have their individual circumstances assessed and their case decided on its merits before competent independent decision makers. To us, this is the intent of the Convention and Protocol.
> Immigration programs may legitimately choose who comes on humanitarian grounds and may set priorities on countries they may come from. We understand the attractiveness of this approach. Bill C-55 provides for exclusion of people not on the basis of their individual circumstances, but by a political cabinet decision that the country they transited before arriving in Canada is deemed to adhere to Clause 33 of the Convention, that is, it is deemed the transit country will not return the person in any manner whatsoever to a country where he or she may face persecution.
> This is a far shot from our obligation to give an individual who arrives in Canada a fair hearing of his or her claim to need our protection.
> Also, there is no meaningful appeal to any of the critical decisions made which can remove claimants from Canada in proposed inquiries or hearings.
> We cannot accept legislation which sets aside a claimant's right to just procedures in the name of administrative convenience. We urge you to reconsider, to abandon this Bill C-55 and to speedily replace it with one conforming with the principles of allowing every claimant a hearing on the merits and a meaningful appeal. There are alternative processes we can surely all support.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, thank you for signalling that I have little time left. I would have appreciated having 45 or 50 minutes. But when we see people, organizations like The Coalition for a Just Immigration and Refugee Policy state:

• (1740)

The coalition for a just immigration and Refugee Policy sees the approach to Bill C-55 as incorrect because it is not workable, it puts genuine refugees in danger and will not survive challenge in the courts.

[Translation]

We have already been told on four, five, six, seven, ten occasions that this famous Bill will be challenged in the courts. I can already foresee a backlog of some 25,000, 30,000 or 40,000 claimants seeking refugee status. I will refrain from trying to make political gains with this, Mr. Speaker, although I am very tempted to do so, but it will be very nice, come election time, to have some 50,000 people claiming refugee status—their brothers and uncles will love us.

To return to Motion No. 47—

[English]

People determined to be Convention refugees in Canada may nevertheless be denied landing on the grounds that they are medically inadmissible or because they have reasonable grounds to believe they will be unavailable or unwilling to support themselves.

To expedite matters, I should like everybody to vote on Motion No. 47.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my intervention is going to be rather short. I think my colleagues have covered the arguments in support of this amendment which stands on its own. My contribution, as I look at the existing language used in reference to the new language we are being asked to consider today, is where it states that neither the applicant nor any member of the applicant's family is a person described in paragraphs 19(1)(a),(b), and so on. The definition of "member of the family" which the Government appears to find offensive in terms of determining who can or who cannot come into the country, is defined under Section 19 of the present Act. It refers to an individual with a disability. I want to read it because the existing language is extremely insulting, if not insensitive, to disabled people. It says: "Persons who are suffering from any disease, disorder, disability or other health impairment". That in itself flies in the face of everything that has been said about the nature of disabled Canadians since I came into this House.

There was an all-Party committee that still exists in the House, with the agreement and support of all Members on all sides of the House, and which has been in existence since 1980. That committee produced a report, and I could show you stacks of subsequent reports, which all argue that there must a change in the attitude of people in society towards those individuals who are disabled.

The key argument which we had been using to try to persuade policy makers is that people who are disabled are not ill. All disability is not related to health problems necessarily. A person with a physical disability should not be considered someone who, for some reason, has a disease, disorder or other health impairment. Very often that disability is not even related to a health problem. It is certainly not related to a disease or disorder very often. Many people are born with disabilities and they are not health related. More often than not an individual can quite properly function in the mainstream of Canadian society if we give them some assistance.

I would certainly urge the Government—and the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has clearly stated his commitment towards improving the lot of disabled individuals in Canadian society—to take a hard look at how it has defined disability under the existing Act which, of course, will be incorporated into this new piece of legislation that the House is being asked to consider.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, the clause is being misinterpreted. What the clause says is that we will confer on immigration officers in Canada the same duties and powers that they would have if they were serving abroad, specifically for the purpose of dealing with refugee claimants. The clause says nothing at all about refusing landing to a handicapped person or an indigent person. It simply confers powers on immigration officers inside the country to act as if they were abroad for the purpose of granting a landed immigration visa.

The powers of the Minister to issue permits are the same as if the situation were abroad or in Canada. The power of Cabinet to land someone on a permanent basis is not disturbed. All the clause does, I repeat, is to confer on officers in Canada the same powers they would have if they were abroad to issue a landed immigrant visa for a specific class of persons who are determined to be Convention refugees.

It is in accord with the committee's desire and idea that people who are determined to be Convention refugees do not have to wait a year and a half or two years for the normal process under the law, but that we find a faster way for them to be landed. That is the purpose of the clause.

The first amendment promoted by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) would make it more difficult for more people because of the definitional change. I would urge Hon. Members to keep it as it is. It does a very positive thing for people who are refugees. It does nothing negative to anyone. It simply makes a more positive world for people who need our help, humanity and compassion. That is what it does. That is what it says.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question will be put separately on Motions Nos. 45, 47, 48 and 49. The first question is on Motion No. 45 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The recorded division stands deferred.

[Translation]

The next question is on Motion No. 47 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the recorded division be deferred?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

• (1750)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 48, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The recorded division shall stand deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 49, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The recorded division shall stand deferred.

We will now deal with Motions Nos. 55 and 56, which will be debated together, and a vote on Motion No. 55 will be applied to Motion No. 56.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

Motion No. 55

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 17 by striking out line 27 at page 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"48.01(1)(a) and (b) shall be removed from".

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 17 by adding immediately after line 3 at page 26 the following:

"55(2) Subsection 55(1) does not apply to persons found to be not eligible on the basis of paragraph 48.01(1)(b) if they are subsequently determined under this Act not to be a Convention refugee."

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier in the House today we approved Motion No. 53. I think it was carried unanimously. Since I think it takes care of the concerns contained in Motions Nos. 55 and 56, I wonder whether the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) might in fact withdraw the motions with unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Heap: The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), being younger than I, got up faster than I did.

I was about to say that in view of the fact that Motion No. 53 has been adopted and that I believe it covers the same ground and accomplishes the same purpose, I seek leave to withdraw Motions Nos. 55 and 56.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather the Hon. Member has leave to withdraw Motions Nos. 55 and 56.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions Nos. 55 and 56 (Mr. Heap) withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now deal with Motions Nos. 65 and 67 which will be debated together but voted on separately.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think I withdrew Motion No. 65 at an earlier point, so we are just dealing with Motion No. 67 now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is correct. We will now deal with Motion No. 67.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West) moved:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 19 by striking out lines 23 to 45 at page 43 and lines 1 to 25 at page 44 and substituting the following therefor:

"83.3 An appeal lies to the Federal Court of Appeal from a decision of the Refugee Division under section 71.1 on a claim or under section 71.3 on an application, on any ground of appeal that involves a question of law, a question of fact, or a question of mixed law and fact."

He said: Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 67 addresses the third area of major concern of the Liberal Party in respect of Bill C-55.

Most of the organizations and countless numbers of witnesses who appeared before the committee basically articulated their concerns on three elements—pre-screening, safe country, and appeal. Motion No. 67 deals with the appeal mechanism. The current appeal as proposed would have an appeal with leave to the Federal Court only on points of law. Not only is the Federal Court the wrong body—and that belief is universally held—but it is also wrong to suggest that it only be done with leave, at the choice of the court. To make matters worse, it will only be on points of law rather than on points of fact and points of circumstance surrounding the claimant.

Therefore, Motion No. 67 is a secondary motion. The first motion which was defeated earlier would have suggested a different appeal mechanism, that is to say, an appeal to a separate body, to the deputy chairman of the refugee board, or to a group of refugee board members who did not hear the particular claim. We were trying to ensure that there would be maximum opportunity for the claimant to make a proper appeal. We must keep in mind that we are—

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), but I think the content of Motion No. 68 is very similar to the content of Motion No. 67. I wonder whether those two motions could be debated together, and that is why I thought it was best to interrupt with that suggestion. They are almost identical in some of the wording, and I think it might be appropriate to consider the two ideas in the one debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Of course to do that I would need unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, amendment No. 68 is standing in my name. Personally, I see no objection.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to group Motions Nos. 67 and 68?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie) moved:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 19 by striking out lines 28 to 38 at page 43 and substituting the following therefor:

"any ground of appeal that involves a question of law, a question of fact, or a question of mixed law and fact."

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) on debate.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the appeal mechanism should reflect the life and death situation with which we are dealing. As the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) reminded the House moments ago, we are dealing with human beings. We are dealing with a situation where a mistake could possibly end up being a fatal mistake, and no one in the House would like to be in the business of making such mistakes.

From time to time we pass legislation or motions which can be corrected later and therefore are not as important, but in this case we are dealing with a system which should ensure the safety and lives of human beings, the essence of existence on this planet. Therefore I think it is worth-while for a progressive society like Canada to ensure that its system and process, leaving aside the substantive elements of the circumstance, places the highest and best morality on the preservation of one's life and safety.

Having had the first motion defeated, we are at least suggesting that the Government should amend its procedures for appeal to the Federal Court. Effectively it should do two things. First, it should remove the words "without leave" which would make an appeal automatic. Second—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the Parliamentary Secretary is seeking the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry for interrupting the Hon. Member, but I would like to point out to my colleagues that if we could grant unanimous consent not to see the clock for a little while after 6 p.m., I think we could at least take care of the motions through to Motion No. 74.

Mr. Marchi: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock a.m. tomorrow.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Pursuant to Standing Order 106, Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure and honour today to present petitions which bear the signatures of a great many residents of my Ottawa-Vanier riding and who humbly sheweth that:

Whereas, since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers 24 new taxes or tax increases, in particular on medical and dental supplies, snack foods, candy and soft drinks;

Whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal has studied the possibility of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services, including food; and whereas food constitutes a vital element of day-to-day life and imposition of this tax would have the effect of seriously penalizing certain categories of taxpayers, such as the aged, families, the unemployed, low income taxpayers, youth;

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by residents of Ottawa and area. The petitioners call upon the Parliament of Canada to ensure that the Government withdraws Bill C-55 and substitutes legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board that is independent of the Immigration Commission. The petitioners feel that universal access to such hearings should be assured for every applicant in Canada, and also the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of Canada that has been duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions. The petitioners request that Parliament reverse the new restrictive immigration regulations and allow all legitimate refugees to find asylum in our democratic country, and be granted an oral hearing before an independent judicial body that will determine the legitimacy of each claim.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to do these things, and in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise to present a petition from Canadians who note that Bill C-55 threatens Canada's traditional commitment to assisting refugees. It sets out measures designed to keep most refugee claimants out of the country, as opposed to ensuring that genuine refugee claimants are given protection.

Therefore, the petitioners call for withdrawal of Bill C-55 and request that other measures be implemented to assure quick oral hearings in order that refugee claimants can appeal to a refugee board which is independent of the Immigration Commission, and that there is universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada with the right of appeal.

FERMI II NUCLEAR REACTOR—REVIEW PROCESS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present, the first of which is the first in a large number of petitions. In this case it is signed by 258 people from my constituency who are protesting the Fermi II nuclear reactor which is just 10 miles from their border and has an abysmal safety record.

They demand that the Government interact with the U.S. Government in order to establish a fair and safe review process which will include Canadians and operate independently before Fermi II is allowed to operate at full capacity.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is in reference to Bill C-55 and is signed by residents of Vancouver.

It objects to many of the principles within the existing Bill and calls upon the Government to withdraw Bill C-55 and to substitute therefor legislation which would see to it that fair and quick oral hearings of claims are available for all potential refugees.

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON AUTOMATION OF LIGHTHOUSES—WEST COAST

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition from residents of Sointula, British Columbia who indicate a serious concern about the bias and inaccurate reporting produced by the Leblond Commission into the automation of West Coast lighthouse stations.

They request a moratorium on any action by the Coast Guard to proceed with automation. They also request the appointment of a truly independent commission of inquiry with terms of reference drawn by user groups in consultation with the Government of Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS FOR FISHERMEN

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which I want to present on behalf of several hundred people on the northern peninsula of Newfoundland in the area of St. Anthony.

Because of the repeated failure of the inshore fishery over the past five years, they call upon the Government and Parliament to support an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act whereby their best 10 weeks of benefits can be counted, rather than their last 10 weeks, for the purposes of unemployment insurance.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHING AGREEMENT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, ironically enough, I have a further petition from hundreds of people from all over the riding of Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador, calling upon the Government to cancel immediately the present agreement with France which will see the disposition of fish off the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador.

They also call upon the Government to find immediately other means to come to an agreement with the French other than the giveaway of fish which are so important to these people.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have a further petition from residents of Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador, calling upon the Parliament and Government of Canada to reject the corporate plan proposed by Canada Post Corporation, and to instruct that corporation to proceed with mail delivery to all Canadian taxpayers without discrimination and to concentrate its efforts on improving service.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and, indeed, it is an honour to rise pursuant to Standing Order 106 to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of British Columbia who are asking the Government to allow all legitimate refugees to find asylum in our democratic country of Canada.

After a number of "whereases" in the petition, which I will not take up the time of the House by reading—Your Honour can look at them later—they ask Canada to allow all legitimate refugees from Chile and other hostile countries to gain asylum here.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the pleasure and duty to present petitions concerning two very important issues. The first one concerns the refugee system and Bill C-55.

I have petitions signed from residents of Edmonton, Toronto, Ottawa, Vancouver, and the City of Mississauga, concerning the prescreening stage, the implementation of a safe third country concept, and a weak appeal mechanism to the Federal Court with leave on only points of law.

The petitioners ask the Government to amend or eliminate the conditions of its refugee legislation and to eliminate the three elements of prescreenng, safe third country, and the Federal Court appeal. They ask for a refugee determination system which is fair, accessible, and expedient.

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the second set of petitions is from residents of St. John's, Newfoundland; the City of Sudbury in northern Ontario; the suburbs of Don Mills and the City of Scarborough in the Metropolitan Toronto region.

These residents are concerned about the lack of recognition of Canada's multicultural heritage and reality as a fundamental characteristic of the country in the opening clause of the Meech Lake Accord.

Given the fact that a third of Canadians are of neither French nor English origin, they ask the Government to urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to amend the constitutional accord by entrenching our nation's multicultural heritage as a fundamental characteristic in the opening clause of the Constitution.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 184.

[Text]

U.S. SUPERCOMPUTING RESEARCH CENTRE

Question No. 184—Mr. Nunziata:

Has the Government been approached by the United States Government with respect to participating in the United States Supercomputing Research Centre, and, if so, what are the terms of this arrangement?

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the Ministry of State for Science and Technology is concerned, the Canadian Government has not been approached by the United States Government regarding participation in a United States Supercomputing Research Centre. In fact, we have no knowledge of the existence of such a centre. However, the U.S. National Science Foundation supports a national network of supercomputers for advance scientific and engineering research, principally in the academic community. In addition, several U.S. government departments maintain supercomputer facilities for in-house research. Notable among these is the Department of Energy, which maintains a number of national laboratories equipped with supercomputers. More recently, the Department of Defense has proposed a domestic effort to establish a supercomputer "test-bed" for advance systems associated with the Strategic Defense Initiative. This proposal has not yet received funding.

Canadian government officials are aware of the importance of supercomputing in large scale scientific and engineering problems and are actively considering our national needs for such computers.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

SUSPENSION OF FREE TRADE TALKS

Mr. Speaker: I want to bring to the attention of Hon. Members the fact that the Chair has received two applications under Standing Order 29 for a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing an urgent matter.

I should advise the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) that his application was received first and that I will hear him. However, naturally I want to extend courtesy to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) whose application came in only a few minutes later. I will certainly hear him as well.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 29, I seek leave for an emergency debate on the suspension of the free trade talks.

The Government has made a free trade agreement the heart of its economic policies. Now the chief negotiator, Simon Reisman, says that in his view the talks are over. This has crucial significance for the country. In effect the Government has hit a brick wall.

I believe that we must debate what the Government plans to do next to stop any desperate last minute give-aways to the United States. We must also debate the new trade directions which we should take to make up for the wasted time this free trade thrust has cost Canada.

In short, we need an emergency debate to inform the country and to start the process of repairing the damage.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have to express to Your Honour the importance of the subject. The Government itself has identified free trade negotiations as its number one economic priority and has heralded it as the one and only economic program which it has put forward in a significant way to try to deal with the questions of unemployment and other economic problems in the country. The fact that the talks were halted yesterday, and as far as the chief negotiator is concerned they are over, obviously throws everything into total confusion and chaos.

Your Honour will recognize that over the past several months we have attempted in this House to ask the Government constantly, publicly and in Parliament to share its knowledge and information, to tell us what the demands were, what the negotiated stances were and what those unacceptable essential ingredients were that were the stalling point in the talks. It is very important that information be shared with Canadians.

It is our understanding that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or his Ministers spoke to the provincial Premiers. It would seem, for the honour and dignity of this House, that we should be given the same opportunity to understand at least what it is and why it is that the Government has taken this drastic and Draconian step.

I simply bring to your attention, Sir, that there is no other opportunity other than the time afforded to us in Question Period, and while that is an event of great interest and undertaking, it is not always designed to get the fullest exposure of ideas or the proper dialogue. There is no Bill in the House that will allow us to debate the subject. No opposition days have been called and we have no opportunity at this immediate time to address this very crucial and very singular issue.

It is also fair to say that there is no topic dominating the Canadian consciousness more at the present time than this, and there is no question respecting our international standing with greater significance. Therefore I think the matter is very clearly an issue for Parliament to exercise its rightful obligations, and this is the forum where the proper expression and exposure can take place.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank both the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) for bringing the matter to the Chair's attention yesterday and for their comments this morning.

As Hon. Members know, the reform committee insisted that it was inappropriate for Speakers to give reasons for their decisions on these applications. I might say to Hon. Members that that does not mean that within the head of the Speaker there are no reasons. Naturally, these decisions are not made on a whimsical basis.

I have given this matter a great deal of consideration and I agree with both Hon. Members that the issue is of extreme importance. At the moment it is not my disposition to order an emergency debate for today, but that does not mean it might not be ordered at some other time. I think it is fair to say that I might be in a better position to consider the matter again after today's proceedings.

POINTS OF ORDER

ALLEGED FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH S. O. 99(2)—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I want to draw to the attention of Hon. Members that the Chair is now ready to rule on a point of order raised on August 12, 1987, by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) about the Government's response to the report of the Special Committee on Child Care and the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) on September 9 last relating to the Government's response to the fifth and sixth reports of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. Because both points of order deal with the interpretation of Standing Order 99(2) the Chair wishes to comment on both points in the same ruling, but because of certain differences of form and content, I will deal with them in the order in which they were raised.

On August 12, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East took the position that the document tabled by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in response to the Special Committee on Child Care and entered in Votes and Proceedings of Tuesday, August 11, 1987, did not meet the requirements of Standing Order 99(2) which reads as follows:

> Within 150 days of the presentation of a report from a standing or special committee, the government shall, upon the request of the committee, table a comprehensive response thereto.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East claimed that the response of the Minister was interim in nature and did not fulfil the essential condition of the standing order that it be comprehensive. A number of other Hon. Members expressed the same concern.

[Translation]

The question before the Chair is whether the Minister's response adequately meets the requirements of the Standing Orders, namely whether or not it is a comprehensive response. This is not the first time the Chair has been asked to rule on the quality of a Government response. In earlier rulings on similar points of order the Chair expressed the view that the very fact of establishing what constitutes a comprehensive response would be tantamount to ruling on the acceptability of the response, something which the Chair simply cannot do.

[English]

There are, however, certain details of this matter which differentiate it from previous cases. The Chair has read the letter from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). It plainly states at the beginning that it is an "interim response" and goes on in the second to last paragraph to affirm that a "comprehensive announcement" on the National Strategy on Child Care will be made in the fall. In essence, this is an open admission that the response in question is not as comprehensive as required by the terms of Standing Order 99(2).

The Chair finds itself in some difficulty on this matter since there has obviously been a specific and clear breach of rules by the Minister. Nonetheless, there are reasons in this particular case why the Chair feels inclined to give the benefit of the doubt to the Minister.

As the Minister pointed out to the House, divided constitutional jurisdiction and unresolved intergovernmental discussions and negotiations are involved in this issue. This would suggest that the Minister is not entirely at fault in these particular circumstances and that efforts are being made to address the committee's recommendations. Furthermore, the Minister did report back to the House within the specified period, albeit in a form not provided for in this standing order.

Having said that I would like, however, to remind all Hon. Members that government responses to committee reports are an important element of the reform process and one which the Chair feels should be respected.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), a distinguished member of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons, in his intervention on this matter, made the point that having the Government make its position clear at a predetermined time with respect to the recommendations of particular committees is an essential ingredient of the reform process. He went on to argue that if technical responses became the habit in this place then the spirit of reform will have been lost. The Chair feels that there is considerable merit to this observation and reminds all Hon. Members of the need to make every effort to interpret our rules in as reasonable and as straightforward a way as possible.

[Translation]

The Chair wants to make another comment which was not made in the course of the debate. The Committee on Child Care was a special committee and, unlike a standing committee, it was dissolved after tabling its final report to the House, pursuant to the current practice. Committee Members, therefore, had no recourse other than raising the issue in the House. Although the rule does not provide for sanctions against Ministers who would choose to disregard these provisions, the Chair considers that breaching this rule with respect to a special committee report is more serious, for it might enable the Government to delay indefinitely its response to special committee reports.

[English]

The point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal on the surface seems to be a similar case. But a close scrutiny of the issues demonstrated fundamental differences. First, the matter pertains to a standing committee of the House and not a special committee. Second, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) in tabling a response to the fifth and sixth reports of the Communications Committee was not offering to give an interim response but attempting to comply with the provisions of Standing Order 99(2). Third, the complaints of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal, the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) and the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) revolve around the issue of the "lack of comprehensiveness" of the Minister's response.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton South, who is the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, eloquently summarized the frustration of the committee members and urged the Chair to reconsider an earlier ruling of June 29, 1987, when the Chair ruled that:

> —the nature of the response must be left to the discretion of the Government. If Hon. Members are dissatisfied, there are other avenues available to them through which they can pursue the matter.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Edmonton South would know that the Chair is always reluctant to reconsider earlier rulings. Still I can elaborate on what I said in June by attempting to be more specific and providing an explanation which might be more useful in this case.

• (1130)

What I said on June 29, 1987, and what Mr. Speaker Bosley said on April 26, 1986, still applies to this case. It is not for the Chair to pronounce on the quality of the government response. The word "comprehensive" in the standing order is not without meaning, however. A simple yes or a curt no to all of a committee's recommendations could be a comprehensive response indeed. Neither response might be satisfactory, depending on one's point of view.

Under the new rules, and particularly Standing Order 96(2), standing committees now have extensive new powers and the Committee on Communications and Culture can pursue the matter of the quality of the Minister's response with her. I understand that that process has already begun.

The statute law, the programs and policy objectives, the expenditure plans, management and organization and operation of government departments are permanently and fully accessible to the committee. That is the other avenue to which I alluded on June 29, 1987. No longer do standing committee members need to raise in the House such issues and no longer do they need a specific House order to proceed. The proper place to raise these matters is in the committee which ultimately can use its power to report to the House if it feels its privileges have been offended.

The reform of the standing committees is an important and fundamental aspect of the renewal of our parliamentary system of Government. The principle of accountability has been enhanced to a degree never achieved before. Having been given such enlarged mandates, committees should proceed judiciously and responsibly. Standing Committee members should avoid raising disputes in the House unless a standing committee has reported that its business is being systematically frustrated and its privileges are consequently affected.

[Translation]

As to special committees, since their mandate expires with the tabling of their reports the Chair will always be prepared to entertain such grievances as that submitted by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East even though the Chair has no direct authority to order the Government to provide comprehensive responses.

[English]

These are very important matters that relate to our new rules and the Chair hopes its comments can and will be helpful.

The House resumed from Wednesday, September 23, consideration of Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 67 (Mr. Marchi, p. 9261), and Motion No. 68 (Mr. Jourdenais, p. 9262).

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, when we left off yesterday we were discussing Motion No. 67 which stands in my name. Motion No. 67 was moved after the defeat of a number of other motions designed to upgrade the appeal mechanism. Motion No. 67 attempts to have the Government reconsider the appeal mechanism.

The Government currently favours an appeal mechanism whereby an appeal may be made to the Federal Court only by leave and only on points of law. We suggest that that needs to be upgraded. After all, we are dealing with appeals that affect the life and safety of claimants. Motion No. 67 would have the end result of having appeals go to the Federal Court automatically without the need for leave and, perhaps more important, it would have the end result of allowing the Federal Court to deal with appeals on points of circumstance and fact rather than on points of law only.

If the Federal Court were only allowed to deal with appeals on points of law, then the stories of refugee claimants and possible errors that may have been made by the refugee board in analysing those stories would not be taken into consideration. The appellant would not be allowed to tell the Federal Court his or her own story. His or her solicitor would not be able to present new evidence to the Federal Court.

As it stands now, the Federal Court will only be allowed to determine whether or not points of law have been followed by the refugee board in making its ultimate determination. However, points of law are not the real crux of the matter. The significant element of any appeal is a review based on a claimant's story or on new evidence which has come to light since the hearing before the refugee appeal board. This new evidence may be much more convincing and may lead to the rendering of a different determination. That is why Motion No. 67 asks the Government to try to put itself in the place of a refugee claimant who has gone through the refugee board process and been refused by the refugee board but who knows deep inside that his story is in fact true. That individual would want a second attempt to present his version of the truth. If we allow for appeals on points of law only, we will not put into the system the safeguard which may prevent the horrible torture, persecution, imprisonment or death of an individual who will be sent packing.

This motion meets with the approval of virtually every witness who came before the legislative committee studying Bill C-55. Most organizations wanted a second appeal structure and favoured a separate appeal body within the refugee division rather than appeal to the Federal Court. Some even favoured a written review by a refugee board member who did not hear the claim but was part of the refugee division.

It was the agreement of the greatest number of witnesses who came before us that there was a need to place importance on the appeal system. Many judged the fairness and compassion of the system on how it treated appeals. They felt that a system was only as good and as foolproof as its appeal mechanism. Therefore, Motion No. 67 deals with the appeal mechanism.

Motion No. 67 is the last motion we on the Liberal side have placed on the Order Paper. It was the feeling of our Party that if this legislation was to stand and the Government would not follow the advice of the many groups that suggested that the Bill was too badly drafted, we must make significant and substantial changes to three particular areas of the Bill.

The three areas of the Bill that require modification are the prescreening mechanism, the safe third country concept and the appeal mechanism. It is our contention that by changing those three areas, this piece of legislation will be made much more acceptable.

It is also our contention that if there are not substantial changes to these three areas, the other amendments that are to be debated and the other amendments that have already been approved are secondary. They are important and valuable in their own right, and the drafters of various amendments did put in time and energy to draft them, but in comparison to the larger premises of the Bill, they are of secondary importance.

If we are to keep applicants away from the refugee board, if we are to send them into orbit through a safe third country and if we are not to offer them a proper appeal, what is the value of crossing the t's and dotting the i's on other parts of the Bill? Having said that, it is my hope that government Members see fit to accept Motion No. 67.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this motion because, as the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) said, it has the support of the great majority of witnesses who came before the committee. One of the most important of those was the representative and legal advisor of the UNHCR. The UNHCR reminded us that the Convention we signed asks that when a claim is heard and the decision is to reject it, the person shall have a chance for a review. It used the word "review" in a very general sense because it is dealing with 100 or more signatory countries and it is not trying to fit in with the precise technical terms of any one of those countries.

However, the main element in any refugee case is not a point of law, it is a point of fact: did certain things happen to that person; are certain things in danger of happening if they return to their country, and so on. Those are questions of fact, not law. Therefore, when the Convention asks for a review it does not mean just a technical review on points of law, which is all that the present Bill provides.

I want to refer to what the UNHCR said on this point. First, it credits some of the points that the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) and the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have made. It said:

> UNHCR notes with appreciation that unanimity is required for negative decisions on admissibility. The Office nevertheless again recalls Executive Committee Conclusion No. 30(XXXIV) in which the substantive element in screening processes was recognized; it was there recommended that unsuccessful applicants be enabled to obtain review, even if in a simplified procedure, before rejection at the frontier or removal from the territory.

That means review by a body authorized for that special purpose as explained elsewhere, such as a review of the decision by the refugee board. That is, if the refugee division's decision were reviewed. It also points out:

> The Office recognizes that this is compensated for to a degree by the requirement of unanimity for negative decisions, and by the availability of judicial review, at least in respect of those claimants who, having reached the Refugee Division stage, may remain in Canada pending a final determination.

It continues:

> The Office observes that decentralization of the refugee process and increased resources should expedite decision-making. Yet, in the absence of some central review, these advantageous developments may be dissipated through loss of consistency and uniformity, with an increased possibility of erroneous decisions.
> For these practical reasons, UNHCR would urge that further attention be given to ways and means of institutionalizing central review, for example, by drawing on current practices in the Immigration Appeal Board and other tribunals.

In other words, a mere review on points of law is not enough when we are going to have decision makers spread all across this country, each one doing the best he or she can but with no mechanism for ensuring conformity and therefore equity in their decisions.

This question was raised not only by the UNHCR but by a great many witnesses before the committee. There was a rather disconcerting moment in committee when it was considering another amendment relating to this section which would have deleted certain words that restrict the scope of the hearing, words relating to a capricious decision. If there was an error in fact caused by a capricious decision, I asked that the court be allowed to review it. The Government refused to accept that amendment and in explaining the refusal the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary referred to the section which deals with a decision based on an erroneous finding of fact that the refugee board made in a perverse or capricious manner or without regard to the material before it. The Parliamentary Secretary said:

> This particular section is lifted right out of the Federal Court Act, and if you took away the phrase Mr. Heap wants us to delete then it would change the parameters.

Whatever that means.

Whether intentionally or unintentionally, I do not know, the remark by the Parliamentary Secretary, no doubt on the advice of Mr. Gerrard and Ms. Beaupré, the department staff present, was misleading because the words he refers to in the Federal Court Act are words for judicial review. Yet the Government is calling this an appeal. Judicial review is limited, yes, by the Federal Court Act to points of law and to a point of fact that becomes a point of law. Yet when I asked for further explanation, Ms. Beaupré could not tell me all that was in the Act. She said that the words I wanted to take out are definitely in the section dealing with judicial review, and to quote:

> I am not aware that the provision on appeals to the Federal Court of Appeal from trial division decisions has those words.

The Government makes a statement which turns out to be inaccurate, and when we ask the staff the Government brings to the hearing, the experts, Mr. Gerrard and Ms. Beaupré, to give us the details, they say they do not know. That is not a very fair way to argue.

I appeal to the Government to reconsider its position on this point. The UNHCR has asked that we have a review. The Government turned down all requests for a system of review on the grounds that it would lengthen the process. We heard a speech many times from the Hon. Member for Calgary West about how such a change would open the door to thousands of bogus refugees who would delay the whole process for weeks and months and years and cause it to break down again. By his own words that is not true. He has told us that about 80 per cent of the applicants would be found to be bogus at the screening stage, not at the end. Only a relatively small number of applicants will get to the refugee division. Of those, some will be found to be genuine and they will not appeal. Some may accept a negative decision. There will not be a huge number appealing.

I am asking that they be given a fair appeal, not one chopped, changed and turned into a mere judicial review by the legalities introduced by the staff and defended by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. I am asking that the Government accept this motion and allow appeal on questions of fact or mixed law and fact and that it do so without the restriction of having to appeal for leave to appeal. Let the Federal Court itself judge the case before it.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, again today I rise in the debate on certain amendments to Bill C-55, but I am still firmly convinced that even if the 77 amendments were to be accepted, which will certainly not be the case, Bill C-55 is not what Canada needs to ensure the well being of refugees. What we do need is fair, fast and equitable legislation, and Bill C-55 does not fit this description. The legislative committee heard a number of expert witnesses who told us why this measure is worthless. Mr. Speaker, allow me to recall some of the comments of these experts.

• (1150)

The Canadian Bar Association is, I believe, made up of a very responsible and respected group of Canadian citizens. They claim that Bill C-55 violates the three basic principles of a proper refugee system; universal access, oral hearings for all, and review on the merits. They also said that the screening process and the lack of discretion for the immigration adjudicator and member of the refugee division concerning access criteria prevent a complete evaluation of claims and do not comply with the Convention in allowing refoulement without inquiry on the merits. They recommend full universal access before two members of the refugee division. They think the board should have the capacity to recommend to the Minister that a person be permitted to stay in Canada on humanitarian and compassionate grounds.

Furthermore, a no less respected organization, the Canadian Council for Refugees, also says that ultimately the only way to have a workable system is to have one that is fast and fair. C-55 will be challenged in every way possible. They predict that significant parts of the Bill will be struck down and the backlogs will be enormous.

Professor Hathaway, a well-versed expert on the matter said that after all the studies which have preceded it, it is disappointing to find that Bill C-55 has gone in this direction. The Eelam Tamil Society, a group which represents many refugees, says that Bill C-55 has the purpose to change Canada's approach to refugees to one consisting entirely of overseas selection. This is very unfortunate.

The Canadian Jewish Congress believes very strongly that C-55 will set up an unworkable process which will, in some cases, turn away genuine refugees. The system will create as many backlogs as the system it replaces.

I could express the views of many more experts, Mr. Speaker, all of whom say the same thing—Bill C-55 should be scrapped and replaced by a more adequate and humane law.

[Translation]

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, there has to be an alternative to this Bill. I gave all interested parties a document to replace this highhly controversial measure and I am convinced that a study of the proposed amendments would have enabled one and all to understand the reasons why Canada must now amend the Immigration Act of 1976 with respect to refugees, while at the same time honouring the Geneva Convention and remaining the world's most humanitarian country.

As far as amendment No. 68 goes, I urge my colleagues to follow the dictates of their conscience. Motion No. 68 is aimed at ensuring that the appeal be made in accordance with a rule and that it become a true appeal. To this end, the clause must read as follows. The motion reads, and I quote:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 19 by striking out lines 28 to 38 at page 43 and substituting the following therefor:

"any gound of appeal that involves a question of law, a question of fact, or a question of mixed law and fact."

I hope Hon. Members will support it but I have my doubts, Mr. Speaker, as in the case of all the other amendments.

[English]

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the initiative of the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) and the Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) we are discussing a very important principle, that is, what appeal mechanism ought to be available in a society like ours for people who apply to remain in Canada as refugees. Therefore, the technicality of the proposal should be seen against the background of the desire of those who are speaking in favour of this motion to have a fair system of appeal.

We have grown accustomed to not seeing either Minister of Immigration in the House during this debate on report stage. Today we are treated to the unusual spectacle of the absence of the Parliamentary Secretary as well. This is an all-time low in the presentation of any Bill by any Minister in the history of this Government. No one representing either Minister of Immigration, not even the Parliamentary Secretary, is here to listen to the debate.

I want to reinforce what the Member for La Prairie just said, and what the Member for York West said today and last night, namely, that it is important to design an appeal mechanism which will take into consideration not only the law but also the facts, which sometimes the law does not take into consideration. This point was very well covered by the Canadian Bar Association when it said that an appeal on legal grounds alone does not permit a review of the merits.

That is the substance of the issue being advanced by the Member for York West. Under the Bill as now written the merits of a case will not have one iota of effect on the mind of the judge because they will not be taken into consideration. From a human point of view this law is a very weak instrument for the consideration of the case of a human being in desperate circumstances applying for refugee status.

The Canadian Bar Association went on to say that the absence of review of the merits may permit different decisions in different regions of the country. This is why the conclusion of the Canadian Bar Association, which has unfortunately been ignored by the Government, is to have a more open appeal system. That is the obvious conclusion because we need an appeal system which considers the merits of a case. That is the purpose of this amendment.

On September 3 Amnesty International appeared before the committee and said that the appeal system in this Bill is woefully inadequate. They pointed first to the fact that after the refugee division decision is made the Federal Court will not be accessible because most refugee claims are made on facts and not on law. That is what this motion is all about. It highlights the importance of considering the merits and the facts.

Amnesty International points out as well that after the screening the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees recommends that the decision should be reviewed on the merits. This is not in Bill C-55. This is a deficiency in the Bill which we are trying to point out through Motions Nos. 67 and 68. We bring it to your attention in the hope that the Government will come to its senses and see the merits of this proposal, as it will do if it is, as it claims, a humanitarian government and one that will take into consideration the particular situation of individuals who knock at our doors.

This deficiency in the Government's Bill must be corrected, and that is why the motion was supported, not only by opposition Members but by the Member for La Prairie who is the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. In your experience as a politician, Mr. Speaker, when have you heard a government Member criticize a Bill from his own Government as the Hon. Member did a few moments ago?

Mr. Gormley: Is there something wrong with that?

Mr. Caccia: It only happens when such a Member is genuinely upset and believes the legislation is so deficient that he or she must rise to criticize it. That has happened very rarely in the history of this Parliament.

Mr. Robinson: It never happened with the Liberals.

Mr. Caccia: It has nothing to do with the Party. I applaud the Member for La Prairie for having the guts to say what he did. It could apply to the Tory Party, the Liberal Party or the New Democratic Party. I am simply saying that if he finds the courage to get up and make the points he made, there must be something profoundly wrong with the Bill, particularly this clause. Yet we still do not see the two Ministers of Immigration here to defend this lousy Bill C-55. At least we see the weak Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister coming in at the last minute, without extending the courtesy of hearing what his colleagues say on this measure.

Motions Nos. 67 and 68 are very important because they represent a fundamental element of the design of the appeal system. They are more than just motions, they represent a desire and intent to design a fairer system of appeal. That is why we want the Parliamentary Secretary to reply to the interventions made on this, and give us the reasons why the Government is not paying attention to these two motions.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I could not pass up the opportunity to comment during the debate on these motions. I want to personally offer my congratulations to the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) for the vigorous contribution he has made to the House with respect to this particular Bill. One rarely sees a situation in which a government Member of Parliament finds that he or she must divert from cabinet policy or government legislation. Members of Parliament sometimes find themselves opposed to a certain policy, but government Members in particular may feel compelled to support legislation no matter how the principle may affect them personally or their constituents.

Opposition critics have done a good job on this legislation. I am particularly proud of the vigorous work of the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) whose efforts have been acknowledged by people in my riding.

I believe Hon. Members should recognize the job done by the Member for La Prairie who has taken a principled and I believe honourable position on this legislation. He has made a very humanitarian contribution and provided thoughtful criticism of the legislation. I believe many Members can learn a lesson from the Member for La Prairie in the way he has acquitted himself in taking a stand against his Party on the basis of a firm humanitarian principle.

The Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) said that a certain disciplined approach must be taken in order to carry out an action once it has been decided upon. I have had eight years experience in the House and would note that the Liberal Party members never suffered from those pangs of conscience when they were in government. There was no wavering or criticism once their leader decided on a course of action.

Mr. Allmand: Not true.

Mr. Caccia: You were not even here when that happened.

Mr. Skelly: The Liberal Government never yielded and I think that Party has a lot of gall to take such a sanctimonious stand.

Mr. Caccia: Don't give us that smoke and mirrors.

Mr. Skelly: I think we have hit a nerve in the Hon. Member.

The Liberal Party governed with an iron fist. The voices of criticism in their own ranks were few and far between no matter how deficient the legislation. It is somewhat surprising to see Members and cabinet Ministers of the former Government advocating that government Members break ranks when it never happened when the Liberal Government ruled with an iron fist. One can only hope that these recent conversions may be a permanent feature of that Party.

This legislation should not be passed by the House. I believe that the Members who have worked diligently in opposition to this Bill have done a great service to the country and I congratulate our critic and the Member for La Prairie who, finding himself at odds with his Party and the Government's position, acquitted himself very well in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the Motion No. 67 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

[Translation]

The next question is on Motion No. 68 in the name of the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The recorded division stands deferred.

[English]

I have been asked to remind the House of the motions that are left on Bill C-55. We have Motions Nos. 73, 74, 75, 76 and 77 which will be debated separately and voted on separately.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, having examined Motions Nos. 73, 74, 76 and 77, I find they have the common characteristic that they essentially clean-up the Bill in a number of different areas the committee did not quite get to. I wonder if it might be the general feeling in the House that it would be wise to deal with these motions as a group because they have a similar purpose? We could vote on them separately but debate them together.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There has been a proposal to group Motions Nos. 73, 74, 76 and 77 together for debate but to vote on them separately.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, my only concern is that the last five amendments are Government amendments. I would like to have a proper hearing for each of those motions. I think it would be good if the House knew exactly the intentions of each of those amendments. That is why, while they may be similar, if we group them I do not think we will have a proper individual positioning by the government Members. Therefore, I would favour an individual debate.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, if that is the concern of the Hon. Member opposite, perhaps we can start with the Parliamentary Secretary, who could go through the four motions and tell us why they are necessary for clean-up. Then we might proceed from there. I wonder if that would be satisfactory to the Member from the Liberal Party?

Mr. Marchi: Perhaps we might find another compromise. If the Parliamentary Secretary wants to deal with the four motions, perhaps we can extend the time for debate from 10 minutes to 15 minutes, or up to 20 minutes, so that all of these matters will be properly aired and save time in the end as well.

Mr. Hawkes: I think, Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House, that would probably be acceptable. It would enable us to keep our heads on that matter and it would still leave Motion No. 75 for subsequent debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that Motion No. 73 to Motion No. 77 be grouped for debate—does the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) include Motion No. 75 in that group?

Mr. Hawkes: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The unanimous consent required, therefore, would be to group Motions Nos. 73, 74, 76 and 77 for debate, but they would be voted on separately. The speaking time allowable for a Member would be 15 minutes per Member. Is there unanimous consent to proceed in that way?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (for Minister of State (Immigration)) moved:

(a) by striking out line 29 at page 48 and substituting the following therefor:

"graph 115(1)(p), (s), (bb), (cc),"

(a) by striking out line 5 at page 61 and substituting the following therefor:

"decision and the reasons therefore as soon as possible after making the"

(b) by striking out line 15 at page 61 and substituting the following therefor:

"decision and the reasons therefor as soon as possible after making the".

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): I thank Hon. Members for their co-operation. I think they will find that the motions are by and large consequential and, as my friend the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) indicated, simply clean-up the terms. Therefore, it may not be necessary for me to use the total 15 minutes. I will however, deal with them clause by clause.

Motion No. 73 deals with Clause 23. This amendment is a clerical correction in that it deletes a reference to a provision of Bill C-84. All of the consequential amendments flowing from Bill C-84 are dealt with conditionally in Clause 35.

The reported Bill refers to a provision of Bill C-84 to provide definitions of "judge" and "court of appeal" for the purposes of Section 94.1. Because of the possible anomaly that would result if Bill C-84 were delayed beyond the date of proclamation of this Bill, it is preferable that these definitions be spelled out here.

These definitions are identical to those found in proposed Section 103.2 of Bill C-84, and this amendment has no substantive impact on the operations of the mechanism to protect third-party rights in the event of a seizure of a vehicle under Section 93.

Motion No. 74 deals with Clause 35(a) and (b). While Section 96.1 protects refugee claimants and Convention refugees from prosecution for many offences committed in order to flee to safety in Canada, it did not cover offences punishable under Section 99 of the Act. The offences covered under Section 99 include infractions such as the failure to have necessary passports and visas.

Since lack of documentation is a chronic problem among refugee claimants who flee their country of persecution on short notice, it would be inappropriate to commence prosecution until the claim has been determined.

Further, there will be no prosecution of those determined to be Convention refugees for passport and visa violations provided they have made their presence in Canada known to an immigration officer in a timely fashion provided for in Subsection 96.1(3).

Motion No. 76 deals with Clause 35(a) and (b). These amendments correct grammatical errors in the clause as reported from the committee. The reported wording appeared to make the operation of this clause conditional on the proclamation of the relevant sections of Bill C-84 during this session. With this amendment, the operation of the clause is conditional on Bill C-84 receiving Royal Assent during the present session and will operate whenever both this Bill and the relevant clauses of Bill C-84 are proclaimed.

Motion No. 77 deals with Clause 43(a) and (b). The committee amended Clause 14, subsections 48.02(1) and (2) to confirm that the adjudicator and the refugee division member will provide reasons with respect to their decision not to refer a claimant to the refugee division. These amendments to Clause 43 provide a consistent requirement on the adjudicator and refugee division member to give reasons with respect to transitional cases.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I think you will agree that many of these motions deal with clerical and consequential amendments and, therefore, I would move their acceptance.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I agree that several of these amendments are clerical in nature and, therefore, I do not think it is necessary to comment on them. To begin, I think Motion No. 73 is probably technical and, as far as the substance goes, not controversial, or at any rate not harmful. However, I do wish to comment on Motion No. 74.

Motion No. 74 reflects a new policy that the Government has adopted in Bill C-84 and in Bill C-55 to create or intensify a condemnation or an offence that is a matter now of new policy. We are reminded that under Section 99, referred to in the amendment, infractions such as failure to have the necessary passport or visa are included.

It is well known that many people have come to Canada and obtained refugee status without a visa to enter Canada and sometimes without a passport from their own country, whichever country that may be. It is well known that some of those people had passports, but destroyed them. It is also well known that some of those people were not able to obtain a passport or a visa. Yet of those who were not able to obtain a passport or visa but claimed refugee status, some have been found to be refugees.

The majority of people who came from the Central American countries of Guatemala, El Salvador, and Chile, have been found to be bona fide refugees. However, a substantial minority were not. On humanitarian grounds some of those people have been allowed to stay. The amendment and the previous passages to which it refers are silent on whether the punishment will be inflicted against those who were not found to be refugees, but who may be allowed to remain on humanitarian grounds. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) made much of the humanitarian provisions in the existing law, and at least one humanitarian type provision in the Bill as revised after committee. We have not been told if those people will be prosecuted. We are urged to rely on the good judgment of the Minister.

This means, of course, we must rely on the good judgment of Santa Claus. In this country, children under five tend to believe that Santa Claus comes to their house on Christmas Eve, and every house in the country, between the time the children go to bed and the time they wake up in the morning. We are asked to believe that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) will do something much more marvellous than that. He will be in every port of entry in Canada, not only on Christmas Eve, but every day of the year, and into the evening if there is an evening shift. Of course, it will not be the Minister but some overworked immigration official. I say "overworked" because we have received a complaint from the president of the local union in Toronto on the reduction of staff. Certainly, there has been no news of reduction in the work-load.

The humanitarian work is left in great doubt. We do not know what will happen to people who go through the process and who are found not to be refugees, but perhaps have a humanitarian claim, and if at some point their claim may be noticed. We do not know if they will be charged, as in Motion No. 74, and as is reflected in other parts of the Bill.

In discussions on Bill C-84 we have been assured that there will be no prosecutions of church people or other supposedly well-intentioned people who have assisted people to come to Canada to claim refugee status when they had no documents. That was a personal opinion given to us by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Once he ceases to be the Minister, that opinion is worth nothing. No matter how long the Minister wishes to stay in office, he certainly will not last forever. There will come a time when there is a new Minister. For that matter, there may well come a time when that Minister changes his mind. What he thinks is a good thing today, tomorrow he may feel is a bad thing.

There is no law to protect people who in good faith came to Canada claiming refugee status but do not have the required passports or visas. Therefore, there is a great danger that some people will be punished twice. They will be punished once by being denied refugee status, and will be punished a second time by being prosecuted for having come without visas. They may be jailed and then deported.

To leave it so wide open is monstrously unfair. There will be people who come from a country like El Salvador who think that they have a reasonable claim to refugee status who may be excluded. The Hon. Member for Calgary West stated that a great majority of the people presently coming and claiming refugee status are bogus claimants. The Hon. Member also indicated that a large majority of those who go to the determination process will be weeded out. They will not be sent to the refugee division, they will be excluded and considered to be ineligible or not credible at that first screening of the type that is considered unsatisfactory by the United Nations High Commission for Refugees. Then those people who have come without visas or passports may be prosecuted. According to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Calgary West, probably the great majority of those who apply will be subject to prosecution as reflected in this clause.

I believe that it is not merely a technical matter. I recognize that it puts up front the argument that we will not prosecute people immediately. The explanation of the representative of the Minister is that since lack of documentation is a chronic problem among refugee claimants who flee their country of persecution on short notice, it would be inappropriate to commence prosecution until the claim has been determined.

If that is all the Minister means, we would all wish to vote for that. He also states that there will be no prosecution of those determined to be Convention refugees for passport and visa violations, provided they have made their presence in Canada known to an immigration officer in the timely fashion provided for in Subsection 96.1(3).

The emphasis in the first two paragraphs is that there will be prosecution of those who are found not to be refugees. While proposed Section 96.1 protects refugee claimants and Convention refugees from prosecution for many offences committed in order to flee to safety in Canada, it does not cover offences punishable under Section 99 of the Act which is the passport and visa clause.

As stated by the Hon. Member for Calgary West, the unfortunate implication of this clause is that only a small number of those who may come without documentation will be exempted by this clause. The others may have their prosecution delayed, but they will be prosecuted.

Therefore, I have strong doubts about supporting this motion. By strong implication, it seems to condemn a person who in good faith comes to Canada believing that because he had trouble in El Salvador he should be a refugee. Perhaps he comes through the United States and does not trust his luck to the 2 per cent chance that they give Salvadoran claimants. But he comes to Canada, makes his claim and is perhaps ruled out at the first screening or the inquiry, or perhaps at the refugee division hearing. Perhaps he is given humanitarian consideration, we do not know, but on a technicality he may be punished. He may come to the border and state that he is a refugee with no passport. For having the nerve, for example, to come across the bridge from Buffalo into Fort Erie and claim refugee status he may be punished. In my opinion that is unreasonable.

The previous speaker stated that this clause "cleans up" that section. It makes clear what the Government is doing, even though this section would undertake to give protection to those few, according to the Member for Calgary West, who will be found to be genuine refugees within the narrow definition of the United Nations Convention.

I am willing to hear further comments from the representative of the Minister, or from the Member for Calgary West, but at the present time I have great difficulty in supporting this motion.

Finally, passing over Motion No. 76—and I agree that in subclauses (a) and (b) we appear to be correcting grammatical errors—we come to Motion No. 77. Here again I believe that the request to have the reasons given in writing is reasonable. I really hope the Hon. Member for Calgary West will not again play the record about thousands of bogus refugees delaying the whole process for months and years and so on. We are at a late stage of the process, as described, and only a few people have got through this far. Yes, they can listen to the reasons but they should be given them in writing. It is the practice in most courts, if any sort of appeal is to be made, to expect a written statement of a decision and the reasons for the decision. It is not the practice in the courts to have the appellant or his lawyer say that he heard the refugee division say thus and so and thus and so. It is the practice to say, let's have it in writing.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West tried to make out that we were asking in a motion yesterday to have the whole transcript transcribed. That is quite untrue. That was never part of the motion yesterday, and it would not be what I would request today.

If it would be in order, I would move:

> That Motion 77 be amended by adding the words "in writing" after the word "reasons" in section (a) and in section (b).

If such an amendment would be in order, I would write it out and give it to the Clerk.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is moved by Mr. Heap that Motion No. 77 be amended by adding the words "in writing" after the word "reasons" in section (a) and in section (b). I will reserve decision on this for a few minutes.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We dealt with the same issue yesterday. In light of the fact that we have already had a division on this particular principle, I wonder whether the amendment is in order.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the vote yesterday concerned a different section of the Bill. Therefore I think that to introduce this amendment into this section is not prohibited by the decision on the other section.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will proceed with the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) on debate now, and I will make a decision as soon as possible.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 73, unless I hear something otherwise from government Members who speak to it in the future, does not cause us too much concern. However, there is cause for concern when we come to Motion No. 74.

If we look at proposed section 96.1 at page 51 of the Bill, we find the word "Deferral" in the left-hand margin. I think that defines the entire intent of that particular motion. I think line 14 is the operative line. It reads:

> No person who claims to be a Convention refugee and has notified an immigration officer of the claim shall, pending disposition of the claim, be charged with,—

I think the operative word is "Deferral", and I think the operative line is "pending disposition of the claim".

Bill C-84 is currently being debated in the Senate and that debate is concentrating on a lot of problematic areas including the operative word in the documentation and the whole construction of the Bill.

I should like to refer to an individual claimant who comes to this country, makes an application, and tells an adjudicator or member of the refugee board at the border that he is fleeing his country. He may say, "Here are my credentials. By the way, I didn't have time to line up and wait for two months for a visa. I didn't have the luxury of approaching the Canadian Embassy because I knew the Chilean police and others were on the watch. I didn't have the time when they burned my home and ransacked my business to pick up the proper documents".

If those reasons are clearly stated, then we would have through Motion No. 74 a Government saying, "While the claim is being dealt with, we will not prosecute". However, it is not prepared to say that the individual will not be prosecuted because he did not have a proper visa or proper documentation, which is contrary to the reality of the plight facing refugees.

When we debated Bill C-84 we did not suggest that individuals should fraudulently mislead authorities or that they should push fraudulent documentation on Canadian authorities, in that perhaps it may have been necessary to escape the country which was torturing them to pick up documents which might not have been legitimate. However, once they arrive in Canada and make a claim, obviously they should be forthright with Canadian officials and explain the documentation if they have any. We suggested that it would be counterproductive for a claimant to destroy the documents on an airplane enroute to Canada and illegal for anyone to counsel a claimant to rip up his documentation.

We have said to the Government that ripping up documents and the counselling of claimants to rip up documents should be illegal, and that it should be illegal to continue to press fraudulent documents, misleading birth certificates, passports, or social insurance numbers—the whole gambit. We admit that, but time after time we have asked the Government, if a refugee claimant explains that he or she does not have a document, and if the reasons are legitimate ones, why should there be the possibility and probability that despite those accounts the individual will face prosecution under the new offence created in Bill C-84?

If a priest or nun were to help an individual claimant who does not have documentation in place to come into the country, it stands to reason that if the claimant is prosecuted the probability is that the individual priest or nun will also face prosecution of some kind.

An Hon. Member: Do you know the law?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member from Saskatchewan is yelling from his desk but does not have the courage to stand up when he has 10 minutes—

• (1240)

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The record might show that, with his usually fervent histrionics, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) named a Member from Saskatchewan when, in fact, I was working at my desk. A couple of colleagues from other western provinces did heckle, but on this occasion, as he has been the case many other times in the House, the Member from York West is wrong. The heckling was done elsewhere.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member still does not have the courage to stand up and speak for 15 minutes. I encourage him to do so and I will give him my word that I will not heckle, as he does. The Government, and the Hon. Member from Saskatchewan again—Meadow Lakes, Bow River, whatever it is—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: —cannot understand the plight of legitimate refugees. We are not looking at individuals who have the luxury and the time to get documents. The plight of true refugees is one of disorder; it is of fleeing without having packed your bags properly. That is the life of legitimate refugees. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) knows that that is the order of the day for legitimate refugees, so why are we so obsessed with the idea that if a person does not have a document right off the bat he or she may face prosecution? In Bill C-84 we have created a new offence. We also slam the organizations, churches, priests, rate-payer groups and community associations which voluntarily, moved by gut feelings, help individuals enter Canada who may not have proper documentation.

I believe I explained yesterday a case of an El Salvadoran mother with three children whose husband was killed because he was part of the labour movement in El Salvador. She was told in no uncertain terms that she and her children had to flee or face the same fate as her husband. They did not have time to go to our embassy or consulate. They escaped as fast as they could and went to the United States. They were hidden in an Anglican church. Churches are not allowed to promote compassion for refugees publicly for some unknown reason. The Anglican Church in Canada was successful in bringing that family to the border. If those individuals—and I am not sure about the documentation, quite frankly—did not have proper documentation then that mother and three children who were escaping possible death would possibly be prosecuted, along with the Anglican Church officials. To make a long story short, Mr. Speaker, that would simply run counter to a Canadian sense of justice and fair play.

No one is advocating rewarding fraudulent schemers and people who produce social insurance numbers and false passports, which is an industry unto itself. Immigrants do enter countries perhaps with fraudulent documentation and business entrepreneurs may not always be telling the whole truth of the matter. I do not think we find in legislation governing those individuals such a piece of legislation that is as regressive as this. This Bill hits the people who are less able to prepare and defend themselves, those without homes, without roots. Those individuals are the brunt of a Government which all of a sudden wants to show its macho image rather than dealing toughly with the United States on a number of other issues. In the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, on whom does the Government pick to show its macho image? It is the refugees, Mr. Speaker.

Concerning Motion No. 74 we cannot and will not accept it because we believe that the premise of it is incorrect.

With respect to Motion No. 76, I think what I said relating to Motion No. 73 is applicable. With respect to Motion No. 77, we had a debate yesterday about decisions being written. We do not think that is too much to ask. I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) moved the amendment that decisions be written and reasons be given. We agree with the government amendment in part suggesting that the reasons be given, but we do not want things to stop there. We cannot see why the Government cannot agree to our amendments which have suggested that reasons be written and presented to the claimant and the claimant's solicitor. That is done in virtually every other sphere of our system in the federal Government whether it be dealing with pension disputes, immigration appeal boards or workers' compensation cases. Even when we respond to our constituents, many times we give reasons for decisions. If the reasons are complicated, we document the case and go into detail. We try to provide in written form the complete parameter of the decision. We do these things in virtually every sphere of public policy. Why set a precedent? What happens when a life and death situation is facing someone who deserves human rights and respect? Is it so onerous to ask that those decisions be written? We have a Government that wants to turn boats back.

This is a matter of some semblance of balance. While the amendment is better because it forces the adjudicator and the immigration refugee board member to provide reasons, we are simply asking to have those reasons in written form so that the claimant, the solicitor and other interested parties may review the decisions and have some kind of intelligent response rather than carrying a video cassette or a tape recorder around saying, "Here is what was said". The expense is borne by the claimant but at the end, perhaps in a court, those transcripts will not be deemed official. They may be incorrect and an interpretation of a claimant or solicitor. The Government could say that it is not official; it was not said that way. Then we will have a mess. Rather than simplifying things, we would, in Fotheringham's words, be mudifying the situation needlessly.

Therefore, we believe that when a decision is made the reasons should be given, written and defended. I cannot respect a system that says, "Here is our decision but we will not write it down and you can do what you want with it". That is neither legitimate nor logical. I hope that on Motions Nos. 74 and 77 we will have some clarification by a member of the Government, perhaps the Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair finds the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) in order.

On debate, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I will try to make a short intervention. I want to talk about Motion No. 74. I hope the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party vote against this amendment. That would be the clearest indication to the general public that perhaps they do not understand as much about the Bill as they should.

It might help the public to understand that the thrust of most of the amendments with which we have dealt proposed by the Opposition provide a bonus for bogus claimants. Every argument we have heard on Motion No. 74 is on behalf of bogus claimants. It is very consistent with a series of amendments that would attempt to provide a better world for people who are not refugees in need of the protection of Canada but who abuse our laws.

In particular, I would like to focus on the fact that the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) has made a very forceful presentation condemning his own political Party for decisions taken back in 1976. At that time, it foisted on this nation, through closure, an Immigration Act that is responsible for the current backlog and problems.

This clause deals with allowing the Crown to lay charges and perhaps to secure convictions when people break the provisions of the Immigration Act. The law as it exists today, passed by the Hon. Member's Government through closure, allows us to prosecute every refugee and every human being who breaks Canadian immigration law. This clause gives effect to something the Ministers have said again and again and something to which opposition Members have refused to listen.

The Ministers have said that it is not the Government's intention, never has been and never will be, to prosecute a legitimate refugee for breaking Canadian immigration law. In the context of Bill C-84, they have said that it is not the Government's intention to prosecute human beings who counsel and aid legitimate refugees. The power to do so exists under the law passed by the Liberal Government, but we will not exercise it.

Bill C-55 contains a clause which will put into statute law the provision that we cannot charge or convict a refugee claimant and if that claimant is determined to be a refugee, we can never charge or convict him for breaking Canadian immigration law. It is a special privilege we confer on the people who need our help and protection. The proposed amendment broadens that privilege and gives effect to the reality that exists.

Members of the Opposition have been told time and time again that it is not the Government's intention to prosecute those who help real refugees. This Bill along with this amendment makes it illegal to try to charge them or convict them. I hope that opposition Members vote against this amendment. If they do, it will be a clear-cut signal that they care only about bogus claimants and do not care for legitimate refugees.

The other day, opposition Members tried to amend the Bill so it would give the same privileges to those who abuse Canadian immigration laws and are not refugees. I think the House should remain consistent. We do care about legitimate refugees. They deserve our protection. However, bogus claimants deserve to get it in the neck.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The first question is on Motion No. 73 standing in the name of the Hon. Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 73 (Mr. Weiner) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 74 standing in the name of the Hon. Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed pleased say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it. The motion is carried on division.

Motion No. 74 (Mr. Weiner) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 76 standing in the name of the Hon. Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 76 (Mr. Weiner) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on the amendment to Motion No. 77 moved by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded divisions on the proposed amendment and on Motion No. 77 stand deferred.

The last motion is Motion No. 75.

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie) moved:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 29 by striking out lines 42 to 49 at page 53 and lines 1 and 2 at page 54 and substituting the following therefor:

"(r) prescribing, for the purposes of paragraph 48.1(1)(b), any country with which Canada has a written arrangement with respect to persons who are or who claim to be Convention refugees as a safe third country for all persons or for persons of a specified class of persons, having regard to the record of that country with respect to human rights and to expulsion of persons who are or who claim to be Convention refugees."

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) would like to withdraw his motion. It refers in part to the notion of a safe third country and other amendments have taken those words and concepts out of the Bill. The motion would not fit within the context of the Bill any longer. For that reason and because of previous decisions, I wonder if the Hon. Member might seek the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw his motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Jourdenais: No, Mr. Speaker, you will note that I moved this amendment because I want to express my personal opinion, and I should like to have the opportunity to explain it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) has the floor.

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, did you ever wonder why we have so many phoney refugees, those we call economic refugees? Well, I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker: the 1976 Immigration Act no longer serves the purposes for which it was adopted.

Mr. Speaker, have you ever tried to help people seeking to have brothers, sisters, friends or others gain entry into Canada? In many cases we are turned down for all sorts of reasons which might easily be changed and accepted.

Mr. Speaker, one would think that the motto of officials who accept or reject immigration applicants in other countries outside Canada is no. Then they decide and analyze.

This reminds me of an anecdote. Before going into politics I was an insurance broker and when we used to call insurance companies to file claims, instead of answering: Hello, yes, good morning, or good afternoon they would say: No, we are not going to pay! This reminds me of the same thing. They have already made their decision even before we can do anything at all, or before the applicant has had a chance to explain why he would like to become a Canadian citizen.

If we made coming to Canada easier without allowing just about everybody seeking to make a home for himself in Canada, if we increased the quotas from 250,000 to 300,000 persons per year, we could change or increase the categories, the refugees in camps, the family reunions, the independent immigrants, the entrepreneurs, et cetera, and I am sure that for those who are trying to enter Canada illegally through the political asylum system, the Geneva Convention process would not exist, for they could ask to come legally to Canada as immigrants.

I thank you for indicating the time, Mr. Speaker; I shall continue after the lunch break.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

PRESENCE OF DIOXIN IN PAPER PRODUCTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this week it was reported that low levels of the dangerous chemical dioxin have been found in a wide range of finished paper products, including disposal diapers, food containers, towels, tissues, and office paper.

The U.S. paper industry and Environmental Protection Agency have known of the problem for at least 18 months but have not made it public. David Paavila, a spokesman for the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, said dioxin contamination was identified in Canadian mills several years ago.

Dioxins are not washed out of the pulp using conventional chlorine bleaching. However, oxygen bleaching, now used extensively in Europe, substantially reduces the problem and, according to some experts, also reduces production costs. The health of Canadians is being unnecessarily threatened. I urge the Government to move swiftly to force industry to abandon the chlorine bleaching process in favour of the safer and cheaper oxygen process.

UNION'S OPPOSITION TO FRANCHISING OPERATIONS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, Canadians want and deserve reliable postal service. A postal disruption is looming on the horizon, this time involving the 23,000 member Canadian Union of Postal Workers. CUPW is firmly opposed to the franchising of post offices while Canada Post management says franchising is absolutely necessary in order to reduce costs and get the corporation back in the black.

In changing times it is essential that companies have the authority to manage effectively and efficiently. At the same time, there is also a great responsibility to protect the rights of workers. I urge the corporation and the union to continue with their negotiations.

It is encouraging to note that both chief Canada Post negotiator Harold Dunstan and CUPW President Jean-Claude Parrot have said they are looking for a settlement. The Canadian public will not tolerate a breakdown of service.

ALLEGED INFILTRATION OF LABOUR UNIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, reliable sources have said that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service has used agents and paid informers to infiltrate various organizations such as the CEQ, the Public Service Alliance, the Canadian Auto Workers Union and, most recently, the British Columbia Federation of Labour. Members of that respected Federation find this snooping to be unethical, illegitimate, completely inappropriate, and unacceptable. It casts an unwarranted pall over the Federation's membership.

We have seen this type of behaviour before. The McDonald Commission report warned about: "The chilling effect that the indiscriminate use of informers can have on the free flow of ideas within institutions such as labour unions." It went on to point out that there is "far too little government direction and review of the security service policies with regard to unions."

I urge the Minister to meet with federation representatives, release all relevant documentation, and launch a full parliamentary inquiry into the activities of CSIS. Considering the growing list of serious allegations and the increasing lack of public confidence in the service and the Minister, anything less would be unacceptable.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S POSITION ON TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, the people of Mission—Port Moody, indeed all British Columbians, are concerned about recent statements made by NDP Members of this House and their fellow travellers regarding the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) bold trading initiative with the United States. Their attitude is indicative of the fact that these socialists are insensitive, inward looking, and incapable of governing.

The Prime Minister engaged in trade negotiations with the U.S. for the well-being of all Canadians, despite incredible odds. Our Prime Minister has a vision, that all regions and all the people of Canada will share the wealth and prosperity that a successful trading agreement would bring. He shares the foresight that Lord Macauley displayed over a century ago when he said: "Free trade, one of the greatest blessings which a Government can confer on a people, is in almost every country unpopular."

I urge all Members of this House, indeed all Canadians, to encourage our Prime Minister to continue to pursue this goal vigorously with the intensity, courage, and wisdom that he has displayed thus far as Prime Minister of this country.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

ALLOCATION OF FUNDING

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, Atlantic Canada is very concerned that the federal Government is again playing games with the region and is not at all concerned about its economic development.

Just recently the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce requested assurances from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that established regional development programs like the Atlantic Enterprise Program, and ERDA sub-agreements will be maintained and not starved of funding in favour of the new Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. What they suspect is that the $200 million per year budgeted for the Agency may be the only funding allocated for regional development. Although the Chamber applauds the creation of the Agency, as do we, it wants assurances that the money allotted is truly new money and not just old money being shuffled around.

My Party and I share the concerns of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce. We fully realize that the Tories are doing a lot less for regional development, and find this completely unacceptable.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Marcel Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, allow me to say that the defence policy of the Progressive Conservative Party is a realistic policy economywise, considering the 9.4 per cent of estimates earmarked for military operations out of the whole 1987-88 budget. Those figures are below the percentages maintained by other NATO countries with comparable areas, taking into account the percentage of those credits of 9.4 per cent earmarked for supervision and defence of our territorial waters, purchase of equipment, staffing, operational training of our forces in this country or abroad in peacekeeping operations.

I wish to insist on the realism of our defence policy by pointing out that the costs incurred to keep our commitments to NATO are quite reasonable and more especially since we should remember that large expenditures are made in Canada by other member countries to train their forces.

Our Government's policy for the defence of our country is realistic and no other party has ever proposed such a fine one. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I have serious doubts as to the defence policy advocated by the New Democratic Party.

A policy advocating that Canada remain alone and isolated considering the political and military reality of today is senseless. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that NDP means: No, to defence!

MEAT GRADING SYSTEM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the meat inspection policy of the country changed significantly when the Government took over. It changed from using department personnel to more reliance on in-plant personnel to apply the very crucial stamp which indicates the level of quality of meat. These grading stamps are a very important part of the system.

You may remember an affair in Montreal a number of years ago when some meat which was only supposed to be fit for pet food ended up bearing an official stamp.

The stamps get lost or are stolen on occasion. Through the Freedom of Information Act the Kitchener-Waterloo Record and certain people have been attempting to find out how long some of these stamps have been lost and what happens in such circumstances.

The stamps of one of the largest plants in the country recently went astray. We want to know what happened to them, when they will be recovered, and what status the stamped meat from that plant has in the meantime. We think it is time that glasnost came into the meat-grading system of our country.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S POSITION ON TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, trade is the life blood of Canada and the United States. The more trade, the more jobs, and the more buoyancy in the economy. While the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), and their negotiators have been working their hearts out to get 100,000 jobs for Canada the protectionists of the U.S.A. who, without a free trade agreement have the power to warp the industrial life of Canada, have been raising their ugly heads.

In Canada Shirley Carr and the NDP have acted like a fifth column for the protectionists by spouting untruths. "Mulroney is selling out Canada" Carr cries, and the Leader of the NDP parrots her in the House. "Sovereignty will be lost", "the Americans will take our jobs", "the Auto Pact is on the table", the NDP wrongly insinuate. And now the negotiations have been suspended.

Both Canada and the United States need and will profit from a fair trade agreement and neither will lose any sovereignty. Negotiations, if they are recommenced, can succeed, particularly if the NDP and Shirley Carr stop acting like a fifth column for the protectionists of the United States.

ENERGY

PROPOSED CAPE BRETON COAL-FIRED POWER PLANT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on a matter which is of great concern to the people of Nova Scotia. The Province of Nova Scotia has planned to build a new pollution-free coal-fired power plant on Cape Breton Island. The Government of Nova Scotia has requested that the federal Government assist in the funding of this project. This plant will be utilizing the circulating fluidized bed technology that treats coal to reduce the sulphur dioxide emissions which are responsible for acid rain. Yesterday the Premier of Nova Scotia stated that he has given up requesting that the federal Government commit itself to the project as it appears that it is not interested.

The Government should be ashamed of itself in light of the supposed commitment it has made to the environment. Here is an opportunity for the Government to demonstrate its concern for the environment, create employment, and increase the markets for Cape Breton coal.

I urge the Government to reconsider its decision and notify the Premier of Nova Scotia today that it will be committing funds to this very worth-while project which will use the latest coal technology and pollution-free controls.

FREE TRADE—AUTO PACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, the free trade issue has been on the mind of many people these last few days.

In an interview with reporter Pierre Nadeau yesterday evening on Le Point, Mr. Gordon Ritchie, Assistant Chief Negotiator for Free Trade, finally enlightened us about certain false allegations made by the two opposition Parties. He confirmed the statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to the effect that the Auto Pact had never been on the table.

Mr. Speaker, after such a clear statement by someone who is directly involved in the process, I believe that both the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) should immediately apologize for having questioned the comments of the Prime Minister.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

FUNDING OF COMMUNITY COLLEGES IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Government's attitude toward funding for community colleges in northeastern Ontario is simply atrocious. A recent letter I received from Glenn Crombie, President of Cambrian College, points this out. In the last three years, since the Government came to power, the amount of funding has been reduced by 40 per cent, from 100,000 training days to 61,000 training days for that college which not only serves Sudbury but the Manitoulin district as well.

That is happening to colleges throughout northern Ontario, which represents 90 per cent of the land mass of Ontario. We have a large native population who require extra assistance for training and upgrading. Yet the Tories have cut funding by 40 per cent. It is totally unacceptable to the people of northeastern Ontario and all of northern Ontario.

I call on the Minister and the Government to reinstate the full funding which was in place three years ago when the Government came to power.

TRADE

IMPORTANCE OF FREE TRADE WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the breaking off yesterday of the free trade negotiations with the United States could be a national tragedy. Canada now exports a quarter of its national production, and 80 per cent of this goes to the United States. This means that one out of four jobs would be threathened without a free trade agreement.

The Quebec Region needs a free trade agreement for its major industries. One of them, Lauzon Shipyards, needs for its long-term development to have the Jones Act repealed as this Act prohibits bids by foreigners on the building of ships used in the United States.

Free trade is essential if the Lauzon Shipyards are to bid on American Government contracts, which could be worth $740 billion. Quebec as a whole, on both the south and north shores, must now support our Government. Our parliamentarians and politicians must look beyond Party politics and everyone must act in a spirit of co-operation.

Our region and all its industries need free trade.

WINTER OLYMPICS

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISEMENTS—LACK OF REFERENCE TO CALGARY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I speak on behalf of all Members in the House today when I say that it has been brought to our attention that the Government of Canada will soon be running two television advertisements promoting the February Winter Olympics. However, there is no mention in those ads of the City of Calgary, the home of the Olympics. There is no film footage of the City of Calgary or the Province of Alberta.

Even the advertisements that private sponsors are running give a profile of the City of Calgary and the Province of Alberta. But the Government of Canada does not. This is highly insensitive.

Can you imagine the Los Angeles Olympic Games being advertised with no reference to Los Angeles? Can you imagine the Montreal Olympics being advertised with no reference to the city of Montreal?

Presently, all Members of Parliament from Alberta are Tories. It is hard to imagine that a Government with so many Members from Alberta can be so insensitive to the City of Calgary and to the Province of Alberta.

• (1415)

I call upon the Government to correct the error, redo the ads and give Calgary the due it deserves and Alberta the just credit it deserves.

TRADE

THREAT CAUSED BY AMERICAN PROTECTIONISTS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, as a citizen of Saskatchewan I am concerned about the suspension of the free trade talks. We began these talks two years ago because of a growing threat to our trade by American protectionists. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had the courage and foresight to seek a trade agreement in an attempt to prevent U.S. protectionism.

During the past two years Saskatchewan has seen first hand what happens when U.S. protectionism runs rampart. We have been seriously hurt in my province in grains, potash, and uranium. This kind of trade abuse by the Americans must be stopped now. It can be stopped by free trade.

To suggest, as many on the opposition side have, that the trade talks have somehow caused protectionism is so inaccurate it can only be described as silly. The Prime Minister said that Canada would walk away from any deal that was not in the best interests of our nation. We have walked away. On behalf of the Saskatchewan people, our farmers and resource producers, I speak fervently in hoping a trade agreement can still be found.

POSTAL BOX RENT INCREASE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, inflation is alive and well at Canada Post. This morning the people of Lancaster in my riding received their new postal box rental rates. Until today they were paying $6.75 per year for a mailbox. It will now cost $25.44. In one case the rate went up from $13.88 to $50.88.

My constituents are upset and they just will not take that kind of nonsense from the Tories any longer. The Tory Government should put an end to this kind of gouging. This is highway robbery. If the Government of Canada were to spend less time using taxpayers' money to reward its friends, there would be a lot more money to go around to help the people of Canada and the good people of Lancaster in the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. Shame on the Tories.

TRADE

FREE TRADE—SECURING OF BINDING TRADE DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM—EXEMPTION FOR CANADA FROM AMERICAN COMMERCE LAWS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, an over-all free trade agreement with the United States would compromise Canada's political or cultural sovereignty. Yet during more than two years the Prime Minister forged ahead on the basis of the naive hypothesis that such a free trade agreement would shelter Canada from the protectionist approach of the American Congress.

Will the Prime Minister now admit that his initiative did threaten the Canadian economy? Will he tell us why he thinks he can secure a binding dispute settlement mechanism between the two countries? And how can he obtain and manage to have Canada exempted from American trade laws?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First of all, Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is no! In this morning's La Presse one could read, and I quote: "The Americans have often pointed out to what extent Canada was better prepared than the United States to hold these negotiations and that Ottawa had appointed many high-calibre officials to lead them. It may be that discussions came to bear on a subject about which the American delegation was not sufficiently prepared to respond." That, Mr. Speaker, is a very interesting explanation concerning the important problem of the negotiations.

With respect to our intention to try to shelter Canada from protectionist attacks, of course, that is the basis of our initiative. This position has gained widespread support among many Canadians, including the provincial premiers and particularly Premier Bourassa of Quebec who, speaking on behalf of the Government of Quebec yesterday, emphasized again the extent to which a free trade agreement with the United States would indeed shelter Canada from unwarranted attacks on the part of protectionist elements. So in a way such is the rationale which has inspired us and which still inspires us as we try to reach a valid agreement between the two countries.

GOVERNMENT ECONOMIC POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the naive assumption that somehow Canada could be exempted from the protectionist sentiment in the United States Congress would only be valid if we were to obtain a binding trade dispute settlement mechanism with the United States, and a meaningful exemption from American trade law.

A year and a half ago in the House I warned the Prime Minister that any trade agreement at all, let alone a comprehensive free trade agreement which we opposed, speaking for the Liberal Party and for most Canadians, I tell you—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —that any trade agreement at all without a binding dispute mechanism would not be worth the paper it was written on.

Two months ago in the House I again said to the Prime Minister that, on the basis of statements made by the Chairman of the U.S. Senate Committee on Finance, and the leading Republican Senator, and leading Congressmen, a trading dispute mechanism was not on.

Despite that, the Prime Minister went ahead and continued his giveaways, and in a most vulnerable manner for Canada opened all its books to the United States. That is what happened.

Mr. McDermid: Talk about naive!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If the negotiations are over—and we believe that they should be over—when will the Government and the Prime Minister present to the country an intelligent national economic policy that, complemented with a useful trade policy, will bring the country back to what it should be?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are in the process of presenting a comprehensive economic policy to the people of Canada which has resulted in 907,000 new jobs since the Government was sworn in.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This is the highest rate of growth of all the OECD countries, the 24 industrialized countries in the world.

Mr. McDermid: You should be up cheering.

Mr. Mulroney: Now my right hon. friend tells the House that a year and a half ago he spoke about the need for a binding mechanism to settle disputes.

Two years ago Friday, in speaking to this issue on behalf of the Government, I said, "The answer to this problem lies in sound agreement legally binding between trading partners to secure and remove barriers to mutual trade".

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is not a dispute mechanism.

Mr. Mulroney: "That is our approach to world trade, and it is obvious that we must find special and direct means of securing and enhancing the annual $155 billion of two-way trade with the United States".

From the very beginning, Mr. Speaker, we recognized that this may not be easy, and indeed it may be very difficult to obtain a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States. We believe that a good deal can also be a fair deal, one that benefits Canada very much, and one that also benefits the United States. That is the type of liberalized trading instrument that we were seeking that could benefit both countries and serve as a model for the world.

It is with regret that we have noticed that the United States has not yet followed through in making that a reality.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): During the course of negotiations over the past two and a half years, the Prime Minister has caved in again and again on specific issues.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Whenever we asked the Prime Minister what Canada would get out of this deal, the Prime Minister stated to us, to the House, and to the country, "Wait until you see the deal".

The Prime Minister caved in on lumber, shakes and shingles, potash, and on book publishing. I ask the Prime Minister what did we get out of this negotiation?

Mr. Riis: Disaster.

• (1425)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What did we win?

Some Hon. Members: Nothing.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Now that the negotiations appear to have collapsed, does he intend to get anything back of what we lost over the last two and a half years during the course of these negotiations?

Won't the Prime Minister, instead of trying to wrap himself in the Canadian flag, admit candidly to the House and to the people of Canada that we are now worse off in our relationship with the United States than when we began these negotiations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't have mentioned this but, inasmuch as my right hon. friend does, I have in front of me The Toronto Star of March 22, 1987, where the headline says "Liberal Donald Johnston urges fellow Liberals to back free trade", one of the very key members of the Liberal caucus who has been speaking out on this. The Liberals have been—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How about your quote in 1983, Brian?

Mr. Riis: What was your position in 1983, Brian?

Mr. Speaker: I know Hon. Members would want to hear the answer of the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, another one of the most distinguished Liberals in Canada chaired the Royal Commission which set an objective, and I think it is important to mention it. The Macdonald Royal Commission said: "The negotiations with the United States are a prudent course which will help us to make Canada richer and, by making us richer, strengthen the fabric of our country and increase our self-confidence".

The Liberal Party does not have to convince Canadians. They already know of its antipathy and its bitterness toward the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Everybody knows that. That is not the position of this Government. We believe that there can be cooperation with the United States of America to generate jobs, wealth, and prosperity for all Canadians.

We are not going to hide in the 19th Century; we are going to lead Canada to a brilliant 21st Century.

FREE TRADE—ALTERNATIVE POLICY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to the Prime Minister and perhaps attempt to elevate the debate to a somewhat higher level. I think—

[English]

An Hon. Member: Correct, carry on.

Mr. Speaker: The intention of the Hon. Member is to be complimented, but it will take some silence here.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I think it can be said that the failure of the free trade negotiations will lead the Government willy-nilly to reconsider its economic policy.

For the past two years, we have heard free trade described as this Government's number one economic priority, as the cure-all that would create thousands of new jobs, as the miracle solution to unemployment problems. No later than yesterday, the Prime Minister implied that in his view—and this is beyond me—a free trade agreement would help solve the economic disparities affecting certain regions in this country.

I would therefore ask the Prime Minister, since a free trade agreement seems increasingly hard to reach: What alternative economic policy does he have to propose to Canadians?

I ask the question because to this day, the Government's economic policy has been to rule out intervention and let the marketplace take care of economic development in this country. Therefore, what will be the Government's economic policy, since free trade does not work?

The Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite off the mark! Because since we came to power 907,000 new jobs have been created, of which almost 250,000 were in Quebec. Interest rates are declining, but all the same we are looking to the future.

There are significant disparities—for instance, the unemployment rate in southern Ontario is 5.8 per cent, while in Newfoundland it hovers around 18 per cent to 19 per cent. Those are unacceptable regional disparities.

And as Mr. Bourassa, Quebec's Liberal Premier, indicated: Whithout a free trade agreement, there is the threat of irreversible economic decline in Quebec.

As a Quebecer and a Canadian, I am surprised to see the Liberal Member dead set against an instrument that would be of benefit to Quebec and Canada.

TEMPTATION TO CONCLUDE CHEAP AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, you have certainly noticed just how careful the Prime Minister was when he referred to the 900,000 jobs which have been created. He did not dare brag that his Government had created them. And that, without any free trade agreement.

Politically speaking, Mr. Speaker, the Government has invested so much in these free trade negotiations over the past two years by putting all its eggs in the same basket . . . The Government has stated that a free trade agreement was the corner stone of its economic policy. It will be therefore greatly tempted to come to an agreement at all cost or to sign a cheap agreement, in order to be able to claim openly: Victory! We have an agreement!

I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he can assure us that the Government will resist the temptation to have a settlement for a settlement's sake, in other words, to sign a cheap agreement merely to save its face.

Right Hon. Bran Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have never hesitated over major decisions in favor of Canada, even when the initiatives were risky. For instance, the free trade agreement or the Meech Lake Accord. It is not easy, but it is necessary for a government to make a stand on behalf of Quebec and the rest of Canada, but we just went ahead knowing fully well that each major undertaking is risky.

If I may, I should like to quote in part a statement made last night by Ambassador Reisman. He said:

• (1430)

[English]

> The Prime Minister made it plain to me when he hired me. He said, "Look, Simon, what we need is good access to the American market. What we need are good rules. What we need is certainty of access to that market and if there is any difficulty about interpreting the rules, we want to have an objective, bi-national dispute settlement mechanism to deal with differences between us . . . You know and I know that we may not get an agreement. It has to be a good agreement or there will be no agreement at all".

That is what has motivated the Government of Canada and we have not hesitated to take risks on behalf of building a more powerful and prosperous Canada.

POSSIBILITY OF POLITICAL SETTLEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. He has just mentioned that some 900,000 jobs have been created since his Government took office. I would add to that that we have a current surplus with the United States in trade in excess of $8 billion. Perhaps the Prime Minister should note that this has all been done without a free trade agreement. He should just ponder about that for a moment.

There was a report before noon today that the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States suggested that the two countries, Canada and the United States, will set aside the bargaining teams on each side that have been involved in the complex negotiations, in favour of reaching a political settlement between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister before October 5. Will the Prime Minister tell us whether this is a serious option?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says that 907,000 jobs have been created since the Government was sworn in. He is right. And that it was done without a free trade agreement. He is right again. Does he not think that Canada should try to do even better?

Mr. Broadbent: Yes. That is why you don't want a free trade agreement with the United States now.

Mr. Mulroney: I didn't want to induce a cardiac arrest here, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Be careful, it might affect your popularity.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Right Hon. Prime Minister could answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: I will be happy to try, Mr. Speaker.

Pursuant to that, the Economic Council of Canada—the very impartial national economic think-tank and research instrument—indicated in its judgment that 350,000 new jobs could be created.

We have in this country an important problem of disparities where the unemployment rate, for example, in my hon. friend's hometown, is down below 5 per cent and it is as high as 20 per cent elsewhere. What we need is a free trade agreement to ensure greater fairness, greater equality of economic opportunity for all Canadians. We do not want a concentration of wealth only in one region, even though we are pleased with that growth. We want to share that wealth across the country from Vancouver to Newfoundland. A comprehensive free trade arrangement can make that happen. That is why we have been pursuing it with courage, vision, and vigour for two years.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I had a five-minute dissertation on the preamble and no reply to the question at all.

Mr. Speaker: Which shows the great danger of long preambles.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please put his question?

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: You are right, Mr. Speaker, as we say in Oshawa!

[English]

POSSIBILITY OF MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the possibility has been raised in the United States that the complexities of the discussion in which Mr. Reisman for the Canadians and his counterpart for the Americans have been involved will be set aside in favour of a last-minute political settlement to be reached between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada before October 5—is this a serious option, Mr. Speaker? Is the Prime Minister considering having a special summit meeting with the President of the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday, and Ambassador Reisman indicated again on behalf of the Canadian Government, that the ball is very much in the American court. We have fulfilled all of the responsibilities. We have indicated and spelled out very clearly the position in regard to all outstanding issues. It is our judgment, and Ambassador Reisman has spelled it out, that there is an urgent need for a response from the American side. That is why, in the absence of that, he suspended negotiations. It would be, I think, inappropriate at this time and perhaps unhelpful at this very moment for the President and myself or anyone else at that level to get involved.

RESULT OF IMPASSE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the date of October 5 is looming quickly, as the Prime Minister knows. It has been said by negotiators on both sides, as I understand it, that the Americans wanted to discuss the automotive industry, regional development and cultural policy, all of which would have immense complicating and, for us, almost inevitably negative consequences for Canada. Will the Prime Minister assure us that there will not be a last minute political deal negotiated between himself and the President of the United States on these important matters, because such a deal at this point could only be reached in desperation and such a deal could only be bad for the future of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is typical NDP policy. In the question just before that the NDP Member was urging me to meet the President and then in the last question he was saying: "Whatever you do, don't do it."

Mr. Broadbent: No, I wasn't. Start listening to the questions.

Mr. Mulroney: This is typical consistency.

My friend refers to the automotive industry. Ambassador Reisman has made very clear the position in that regard, that it was never put on the table, notwithstanding the very mischievous comments by Mr. Bob White who is consistently identified as a Canadian labour leader. Perhaps the journalists could also identify him by the other hat he wears, that of Vice-President of the national NDP.

POSITION OF CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I think the Prime Minister would quite understand that there are a number of Canadians who are concerned about the events of the last 24 hours and would like some straight answers from the Government for a change.

Last night we had Simon Reisman, the chief negotiator, saying that as far as he is concerned the negotiations are finished. They are over. The game is over. The Prime Minister met with the Cabinet this morning and had briefings with Mr. Reisman.

Does the Prime Minister and the Cabinet now confirm Mr. Reisman's analysis that no deal is possible and the negotiations are over or is the Prime Minister continuing to contradict Mr. Reisman as he did yesterday by saying that there are still possibilities for a deal? Canadians would like to know, is the deal over or is the Prime Minister still planning some scheme in his mind to get a deal and shift his position as he has done so often in the past?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that yesterday and I think Ambassador Reisman put his position as well. Ambassador Reisman said this morning, by the way, the following:

> —I want to tell you that in 40 years of work in the Public Service and in negotiations of at least a dozen or more major agreements I have never had a better team, I have never put into it more professional, analytical, scientific work. I have never had better direction and better leadership from any of the Governments I have served.

POSITION OF CABINET

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, what does the reading of Simon Reisman's requiem have to do with the question I asked? I think Canadians want to know the answer. The Government has said that this is the most important priority. The chief negotiator has said that it is all over. Cabinet met this morning. What did the Cabinet decide? Is it all over or is the Prime Minister going to try to weasel himself into another deal?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have indicated that there are items that are very important and have to be resolved, from the beginning. We do not think they are outrageous. The dispute settlement mechanism to which we referred earlier, for example, is one of them.

I would give my hon. friend the following analogy, though not a perfect one. Tonight the Blue Jays and the Tigers begin a four-game series which is pretty crucial. How would the Detroit Tigers like it if the Blue Jays named the officials? They would not like it at all. We believe that there should be an impartial designation of officials. We want an impartial dispute settlement mechanism.

ALLEGED INFILTRATION OF LABOUR UNIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. According to news reports yesterday, CSIS has infiltrated not only the CNTU in Quebec but also the Quebec Teachers Federation, the Public Service Alliance, the B.C. Federation of Labour and the Canadian Auto Workers' Union. Given the Prime Minister's remarks on Bob White, we must ask ourselves if CSIS now sees Bob White as a threat to the security of Canada.

In view of the fact that this would in fact constitute a massive assault on the democratic labour movement in Canada, reminding Canadians of the worst abuses of the RCMP Security Service, will the Prime Minister order the Solicitor General to meet immediately with the leaders of the unions involved? Will he finally order a full parliamentary inquiry into these very, very serious allegations?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think this is basically a repetition of questions that have been asked of the Solicitor General over the course of many days now. The Solicitor General has answered these questions with distinction, with candour and with honesty.

The Solicitor General has indicated two things. One is that of course under the legislation the targeting of trade union organizations in Canada is outside the law. He has been advised and in fact has satisfied himself, on the basis of information received after inquiries, that these organizations are not being targeted. Nothing could be clearer. Either the Hon. Member is trying to create mischief or he comes here with malice—

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that it is improper to impute motives to other Hon. Members in this place.

ALLEGATION OF INTERFERENCE IN LEGAL PROSECUTION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, this reminds us of answers given by Liberal Solicitor Generals in the 1970s. Labour unions may not be targeted but if there are sources within those unions that is an attack on the trade union movement in Canada.

[Translation]

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we learned that the CSIS had tried unsuccessfully to prevent the Quebec Polic Force from laying criminal charges against Marc Boivin, a CSN informer paid by the CSIS. Since this clearly shows that the QPF has no confidence in the CSIS, will the Prime Minister finally admit that there is a crisis in the Canadian secret services and order a parliamentary investigation immediately?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to those two untrue allegations as follows: one, the fact is that the Solicitor General has made inquiries with respect to this allegation made by a journalist on Le Point last evening. On the basis of information provided to the Solicitor General, he is satisfied that there is no interference in the police investigation or in the laying of charges against Mr. Boivin.

Second, I would point out that the other allegation that was made in a general way on the basis of unnamed sources is the kind of material the Hon. Member persists in bringing before the House without any backing. Nothing could be further from the truth. The co-operation between CSIS and the QPF is at a very high level. Officials from both organizations have worked in a very professional way. Any suggestion to the contrary, without using legitimate and specific instances and examples, is only mischievous. I would suggest to the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party that he consider replacing his critic.

SECRETARY OF STATE

PROMOTION OF WOMEN—STANDING COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Last June, the Standing Committee on the Secretary of State published its first report on the Equal Opportunities for Women Program. In this report, the Committee recommended changes to extend the eligibility criteria of the program to provide access for organizations which provide a direct social service, such as counselling or child care. The Committee also recommended operational financing subsidies for organizations which meet a special need. Can the Secretary of State tell us whether he intends to follow up on these recommendations?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and I can assure him that I shall give the matter full consideration. The Government response to this report is being prepared and will be presented in mid-November.

[English]

ALLEGATION OF INTERFERENCE IN CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. It is obvious that the Security Service is out of control. There has been bungling, incompetence, negligence and false affidavits, and now there is a very serious allegation that the Security Intelligence Service interfered in criminal proceedings.

It has been indicated by the Minister of Justice that there has been an investigation into these allegations. I would ask the Prime Minister what the nature of the investigation was, if the Quebec Provincial Police were asked to comment on this particular matter, if an independent source investigated the allegations, or if the Solicitor General has simply asked the Security Intelligence Service whether it acted accordingly and appropriately.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, regardless of the nature of the question, this is simply a restatement by the Solicitor General critic of the Liberal Party of the question asked by the NDP Solicitor General critic. The answer remains the same.

I would remind the Hon. Member that his reputation as a legitimate critic in the area of senior law enforcement—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I was going to mention the word "reputation".

Ms. Copps: Don't be so ignorant.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston, second question.

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. The Security Intelligence Service is fast losing the confidence of the people of Canada when it ought to have the confidence of the people of Canada. I submit that CSIS is out of control because the Government has not provided the necessary direction and control. It appears that CSIS is ignoring the law which created it. I know the Prime Minister's mind is preoccupied with other matters but this matter is just as important.

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Nunziata: Does the Prime Minister understand that we need an independent inquiry into the conduct of CSIS in order to restore confidence in that agency?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it quite clear that CSIS was based upon Liberal legislation passed just before we came into office. Since that time successive Solicitors General of this Government have been working to improve the operation of that important agency. They have done an outstanding job in building upon the legislation we inherited. I can only tell the Hon. Member that as far as we are concerned CSIS is developing into an agency of which all Canadians are proud. It will not do him or his Party any good to make general and unsubstantiated allegations to the contrary.

GRAIN FARMERS—DEFICIENCY PAYMENT QUERY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. At last summer's Humboldt Conference of the Western Premiers they established that a deficiency payment of between $1.6 billion and $3 billion is needed by Canadian grain farmers over and above existing stabilization programs. Since Premier Grant Devine was in Ottawa yesterday and since this issue is a high priority with him as well as the federal Government, does the Government have an announcement today concerning the size of the pay-out for this year?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. He should realize that my colleague, the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board and the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds, held a third meeting with 50 farm leaders. Those leaders presented to us what we think is a sound and sensible proposal. I answered questions in this House on the same issue last week, I believe, and at the moment we are running the numbers to satisfy ourselves that it is fair and equitable. When that process is complete we will more than likely be meeting farm leaders again.

ROLE OF PREMIERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister tell us the role the Premiers are playing? Could he tell us whether in the meetings yesterday Mr. Devine played his trump card? Did he threaten another provincial election?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will realize I was not part of those discussions. I can tell him what the provinces could do. If you compare expenditures by this Government, particularly on grains and oilseeds, we are outspending the provinces many, many times. The provinces could play a greater role in assisting agriculture by joining with us in a new financial arrangement for crop insurance.

PUBLIC WORKS

LEASING OF OFFICE SPACE FOR TRADE NEGOTIATORS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. It pertains to the enriching experience we raised in the House yesterday concerning the receipt of some $50,000 by one Gervais Desrochers, a well-known Conservative. Yesterday in the House the Minister said all negotiations with officials of Public Works were directly with Met Life. Met Life has already acknowledged they hired Mr. Desrochers to help with the lease of their building, and the former Minister also publicly admitted meeting with Mr. Desrochers over this issue.

Could the Minister explain to the House why Mr. Desrochers received $50,000 if he did nothing, as the Minister claims he did? Otherwise, could he explain to the House if he was telling us the truth and nothing but the truth yesterday?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, allegations have been made which are being investigated by the proper authorities. I am instructed by my officials that at no time was any third party involved in the negotiations they had directly with officials of Met Life to conclude the lease.

Mr. Boudria: That is a little different from what we heard yesterday. The least that could be said is that this $50,000 gives Mr. Desrochers a new lease on life.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Smith of the Metropolitan Life has confirmed yesterday that he has hired Mr. Desrochers to arrange the leasing of the building.

The present Minister says the negotiations were held between his staff and the Department of Public Works. Is he now denying that the previous Minister of Public Works met with Mr. Desrochers concerning this transaction?

Can he confirm or deny this fact immediately in this House so that Canadians can be clear about it once and for all?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to answer on behalf of the Government, the Hon. Member is asking questions with respect to a matter he knows is under investigation by the police. I wonder if the Hon. Member would not agree with me that in those circumstances it would be inappropriate for us to comment with respect to the facts of the matter in order to allow the police to carry on their investigation. The Minister has responded with respect to information contained in his files dealing with the administration of his Department.

I can only refer the Hon. Member to the words of his own Leader who said in the House on November 30, 1984, that the rule with respect to investigations should be that we should not comment or pass judgment in the House on these matters while they are under investigation because that is contrary to our principles of justice.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER AIRPORT—PUBLIC SAFETY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Vancouver Airport is the most dangerous airport in the country. Can the Minister indicate when the Government will spend a few dollars to protect the hundreds of thousands of people moving in and out of this airport each year?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to make that charge, perhaps he should back it up before he raises such an issue on the floor of the House of Commons.

LACK OF PARALLEL RUNWAY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to ignore the fact that people have already been killed in Vancouver because of the lack of a parallel runway? Is he indicating also that the Government refuses to do anything constructive to build that parallel runway to protect the lives of Canadians moving in and out of that airport?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, now I know what the Hon. Member is getting at. If that is the position of the NDP, I will certainly convey it to the Minister of Transport and take it as a representation.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

MATANE PAPERMILL—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCE GRANT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question was meant for the Prime Minister but in his absence I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Yesterday, over 4,000 people attended a solidarity rally to obtain a papermill in the town of Matane. That papermill would create 350 jobs et would preserve 1,000 more.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us why his government does not announce immediately the grant necessary to carry out this project, knowing that unemployment is over 25 percent in this area?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as recently as last week, I have met with representatives of the area who have made representations to me. I emphasized at that time that we had received the latest information from the promotors of the project only 10 days earliers, that is some 15 or 18 days ago now, and that we would act very quickly, that all studies were completed, that documents to be submitted to Cabinet were being prepared, that they had to be translated and that these documents will be submitted to the Cabinet in the course of next week. I committed myself to give them an answer in one way or the other within three weeks.

That is as quick a process as we can have and that is the process that is being followed presently.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESPECT HIS COMMITMENTS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, will the President of the Treasury Board tell us whether his Government is prepared to honour its commitment to the people in the Matapédia—Matane area, yes or no? Will you honour your commitment to the people in that area?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to remind my hon. colleague that since about a month, I am no longer President of the Treasury Board but rather Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, and it is in this position that I am acting in this matter.

Mr. Speaker, we will honour our commitments to all communities facing difficulties because of regional disparities. Our Government is giving a high priority to the Matane dossier. We are dealing with it as quickly as possible. I said—and I believe it was well understood by all—that an answer would be given within three months, that the answer would be announced as soon as Cabinet Ministers have read the documentation that I will be submitting to them as soon as next week or the week after.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SITUATION IN PORT OF MONTREAL—ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. During a press conference last Monday the port of Montreal longshoremen's association denounced the slow negotiation process and the unacceptable state of labour relations in this case, and they asked the federal Government to appoint a commission of inquiry on this situation and on the ambiguous role played by President Arnold Master of the employers' association.

Here is my question: Does the Minister intend to act on the longshoremen's request and appoint a commission of inquiry on labour relations in the port of Montreal and on the ambiguous role of President Arnold Master of the employers' association?

Hon. Pierre Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, like in any other negotiations I suggest that the parties involved would stand to gain much if they were to make their representations at the bargaining table where decisions are made.

DEMAND OF STEVEDORES' ASSOCIATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, the longshoremen's association has repeatedly asked the Minister of Labour to set up a commission of inquiry on labour relations in the port. I should like to have a specific answer from the Minister. Can he tell us whether or not he intends to appoint such a commission of inquiry.

Hon. Pierre Cadieux (Minister of Labour): As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, the parties are to meet with the conciliator on September 25 and 29, and I think they will use these meetings to resolve their difficulties at the bargaining table.

SHIPBUILDING

HALIFAX SHIPYARD—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. The situation at the Halifax shipyard continues to worsen. A short time ago there was an average of 1,400 employees working there. Today there are 115 hourly workers.

Yesterday a delegation from Halifax was told that there would be no work coming from the federal Government for this shipyard before spring at the very earliest. Why is the Government refusing to help these workers?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the allegations my honourable friend has made are simply not true. Yesterday, I had indeed an opportunity to meet the members of a delegation from the City of Halifax. I assured them of our constant concern and desire to carefully examine the situation at the Halifax shipyard, in order to demonstrate to them once more that this Government care about the Halifax shipyard workers.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment insurance benefits of many of these workers have expired. It is going to be a very bleak winter for them and their families. What is the Government going to do about this? During the last election campaign they promised assistance. Where is this assistance? Is the Government saying that this shipyard does not matter?

Mr. Speaker: In view of the hour the question should be short and perhaps the answer could be short too.

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supplies and Services): The reply will be very short, Mr. Speaker. I do not think we have any lesson to receive from our colleagues opposite. For 20 years, they had done absolutely nothing to improve the situation in the shipbuilding industry. It is this Government which has started to act and established a timetable for improving the situation.

ESSENTIAL SERVICE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office or his assistant. Does the Minister consider the Post Office an essential service?

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—EMERGENCY DEBATE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in response to the judgment which Your Honour made this morning when we made application for an emergency debate. It was suggested that the issue should await further consideration depending upon the evolution of events and the information that would be provided.

We have had an opportunity today to try to ascertain from the Government the position it would be taking on the trade talks. There was no answer forthcoming. Therefore, I submit that it is now necessary to hold an emergency debate in order to attempt to inform Canadians fully of what is going on with the trade talks.

Mr. Speaker: The representations of the Hon. Member are, of course, important. I said earlier that as of eleven o'clock this morning it was not the disposition of the Chair to order an emergency debate to take place today. I think I made it clear to representatives of both opposition Parties that that does not close the door to other applications at another time. If the Hon. Member or other Hon. Members wish to make other applications, the Chair will, of course, consider them.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it being Thursday, I rise to ask the customary question of the Government, that is, what are the plans of the Government with regard to House business for the coming week?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that we will continue debate today on report stage of Bill C-55. We hope that that will be completed today. Tomorrow, or if there is time this afternoon, we will continue second reading debate on Bill C-74 with regard to the Environmental Protection Act. On Monday we hope to commence third reading of Bill C-55 and then move to second reading of Bills C-76 and C-77.

We have had discussions with the other House Leaders with regard to the commencement of debate on the Meech Lake Accord. We may be in a position to do that toward the end of next week or perhaps at the start of the following week.

I will be meeting with the opposition House Leaders on Tuesday to discuss further business. At that time I would also like to discuss the suggestions that we consider Senate reform.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on House business. When does the Government plan to bring Bill C-51 with regard to tobacco advertising forward for debate at second reading?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as the House will know, the House was reconvened to deal with emergency legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: The New Democratic Party may not consider it to be an emergency but I suggest they ask the people on the street about it.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Which emergency? It's been so long.

Mr. Lewis: Once we have completed debate on the emergency legislation and the Meech Lake Accord we will be in a position to consider the rest of the business of the House and proceed as expeditiously as possible with all the legislation on the Order Paper.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State suggested that debate on the Meech Lake Accord could begin as early as the end of next week. Could the Minister be a bit more specific? Is it not possible to identify a day next week when the debate could begin, or will we have to wait until the night before to find out?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we have been trying to accommodate the travel schedules of certain Members of the House. I was prepared to delay proceedings until such time as they were accommodated. We had discussions in good faith on Tuesday. There is more at issue than when; there is the orderliness of debate. We have been making an effort to accommodate everyone's schedule. That is why I cannot be specific.

In other words, I am trying to accommodate other Members of the House. We are in a position to go ahead toward the end of next week, but if it is not convenient for my colleagues on the other side we are prepared to accommodate them.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 75 (Mr. Jourdenais).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House took recess at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) had the floor.

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, if I had the time today to explain how we might change the Immigration Act to make it more flexible and less rigid, I am convinced that everyone would agree with my suggestions. Mr. Speaker, if the Immigration Act had been more flexible and easier to understand and if the quotas had been increased in the last twenty or twenty-five years to allow between 150,000 to 175,000 people a year to enter this country, Canada would now have a population of 75 or 80 million people.

Mr. Speaker, if this had been the case, do you think that free trade would be such a burning issue today and that Canada could or would have acted differently? Mr. Speaker, I sincerely believe that all Members of this House should define their position on Bill C-55 according to their own conscience. I hope that they will do so when the Bill is put to a vote.

Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, I do not hold much hope for many of these amendments, and if this Bill is accepted, I only have three other comments to make to the Members of this House, to all Canadians, to Quebecers and to residents of my own constituency of La Prairie.

First, the most important proposal which was neither debated nor voted on was the motion to withdraw or scrap Bill C-55. Second, this Bill is so lacking in compassion that my conscience will not allow me to vote for it.

The last comment I wish to make is also the most important, and I hope that those who are here or in their offices will listen carefully. Last June, we had a free vote on capital punishment. Many Members voted against a return of the death penalty giving as their reason for doing so that their conscience did not allow them to kill another human being. They were against the death penalty for murderers, even if they have committed a villainous crime and could not care less about the rest of society. I am anxious to see what my friends in the House will do when this Bill is put to a vote. I hope they will vote against the Bill because it can condemn to certain death innocent people who are being persecuted in their own country. I believe that this is really a matter of conscience and I am anxious to see what will happen.

Mr. Speaker, a clause that was in the Bill before it was considered and referred to a legislative committee, was similar to the one I am proposing and was changed. The committee made a change that was not quite necessary, in my opinion. Therefore, I move motion No. 75 which reads as follows:

"(r) prescribing, for the purposes of paragraph 48.1(1)(b), any country with which Canada has a written arrangement with respect to persons who are or who claim to be Convention refugees as a safe third country for all persons of for persons of a specified class of persons, having regard to the record of that country with respect to human rights and to expulsion of persons who are or who claim to be Convention refugees."

The House should support this motion because Canada must make an agreement with countries we want to consider as safe third countries in order to save the lives of those who are sent back without having to explain the reasons they claim to be Convention refugees.

[English]

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, this is the last motion at report stage of Bill C-55. Not only is it an appropriate motion, it is also appropriate that the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) finally honours the House with his presence at report stage. This amendment addresses a number of—

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it would be in order to point out to the Member that he should show some courtesy to the Minister. If he only knew why the Minister was not here today I think he would be a little more courteous. It is, after all, a Jewish holiday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) on debate.

Mr. Marchi: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Thacker: Apologize.

Mr. Marchi: We have no reason to apologize with the stuff that has been coming from that side of the House. You should take a lesson on your own.

The Government has made commitments in the past that there would be assurances that safe countries would be safe for claimants who would be sent to those countries. The Minister talked about guarantees, then changed his tune and talked about arrangements. Now we have an amendment that would suggest there would be an agreement with those countries which would purportedly suggest that they are safe.

We moved motions suggesting the removal of the prescreening stage rooted in a safe country concept. Those motions were defeated and we now ask the Government to support its own Member, the Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), who is currently the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

If it will not abandon the safe country concept or allow the refugee division to draft a safe country list, and if it will not agree that a list to be drafted by the Cabinet would only serve in an advisory capacity, the very least we are asking of the Government through this motion is that any member country on the safe country list have a written invalidating agreement with Canada before that safe country list is drawn in order to ensure the Cabinet and all Canadians of that country's safety.

I think that would be a valuable asset and a welcomed modification to the Bill. When an individual is sent to a so-called safe country, at least we can be assured that it is safe on the grounds of that written agreement between the two countries. We do not want to leave the word "safe" too loosely defined or leave open the question of return as opposed to admission because, as we have said so often, in many cases it is a question of life versus death. It is a question of a human being trying to find a country where he or she may find some basic human rights.

I suggest that if any of us were put in the same precarious situation we would want the same for our families.

It is one thing to try to make a system better, but when we talk about a safe country, there is the knowledge that we are sending someone away from our shores. Knowing we are passing the responsibility to someone else, the very least we can do is offer some morality and leadership so that if we are sending someone away from our shores we know we are sending them to a country which is going to extend a hand of compassion, assistance and welcome, that there is that partnership and the Geneva Convention will still be intact. If we legislate a safe country concept without grounding it in agreements and ensuring safety, then we will be driving a wedge into the Geneva Convention, which will mean its worth is on paper, but when it comes to practice there is no Convention to speak of.

Let us move forward as a country and show our leadership internationally Let us reclaim the leadership Canada has demonstrated over the years. Let us offer other countries an incentive and, perhaps, an inspiration to follow its best instincts domestically, regardless of the challenges and pressures from within.

This motion would try to mobilize these countries, to open a dialogue. If we are going to go "safe country", let us ensure the reciprocating country has the same standards, that a refugee from El Salvador will be treated with the same respect they receive in Canada, Belgium or Great Britain. There is an opportunity for Canada—apart from calling for an international summit—through this small motion, to say to the world; let us do it in partnership, let us do it in tandem. Therefore, I urge Members of the House, particularly government Members, to agree with this very last motion, and perhaps then the report stage will begin on an upbeat.

Perhaps I should take this moment as well, Mr. Speaker, to correct my earlier reference to the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner). If the reasons were because of the Jewish holiday, then I would be the last to fault him for that. If I have caused any embarrassment to himself or to his community, I am very sorry about that.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): I rise to support motion No. 75 in the name of the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais). I wish to take this occasion, as others have, to congratulate the Hon. Member for his strong conviction and courage in taking the stand he has as a dissident with his caucus on this point. I also wish to congratulate the Progressive Conservative caucus for having accommodated the Hon. Member. I know this was done in consultation and that it was not an easy consultation. I know there has been much heart searching on the part of the Hon. Member and his caucus colleagues in the difficult situation created for all of them by the conscientious disagreement of the Hon. Member for La Prairie with his hon. colleagues. Therefore, I respect the fact that it has been possible to carry on in spite of the sharp disagreement between the Hon. Member and his colleagues, and that is to the credit of the Progressive Conservative caucus.

On this motion I wish to take the same position taken by the two previous speakers, but to emphasize a little further the great importance of having this clause protected in order to carry out what may well be the intention of the Government. This intention is not sufficiently protected in the wording, and so far as I can find out in this complicated Bill—which has been revised a good deal by the Government—is not adequately protected elsewhere.

Some effort was made in amendments earlier in committee to get this amended by way of a fuller statement of the Convention obligations. That was refused. Some effort was made to have the adjudicator and the refugee division member made responsible for deciding in the inquiry the specific country to which the person would be sent. That was turned down. Efforts were made to have the matter adequately reviewed after a decision in order to catch possible errors, including an error of sending a person to a country that was not genuinely safe, particularly if the person thought it was not genuinely safe. That was turned down.

We now have a proposal that seems entirely in accord with what the Minister and his colleagues have said. The Minister said passionately in the debate in June that a person would not be sent to any country without a clear understanding. He used words like "agreement, guarantee, arrangement". He said there would be clear understanding that he or she would be given the same protection they would have in Canada. But that is not in the Bill. It is not in this clause and I believe it is not anywhere else in the Bill.

We are simply asking now that the clause be revised, that is, the clause describing the duty of the Minister to write the regulations, so that he will prescribe:

> —for the purposes of paragraph 48.1(1)(b), any country with which Canada has a written arrangement with respect to persons who are or who claim to be Convention refugees as a safe third country for all persons or for persons of a specified class of persons, having regard to the record of that country with respect to human rights and to expulsion of persons who are or who claim to be Convention refugees.

I believe the wording is the same as the Government's wording excepting the words concerning the written arrangement. I believe that will not cause a breakdown of the system. It will not cause endless legal disputes. It will not be a loophole for bogus refugees. It is within the control of the Government to make that clear, to make it clear in such a way that the refugee claimant who is being sent away to that country, and all who are concerned with him, and all who are concerned with the integrity of the system, will know how the system is operating and, if necessary, will be able to offer an opinion and disagreement. If country x is listed as a safe country because of a written agreement, the written agreement can be looked at in public and questioned, perhaps altered or perhaps defended and maintained. That would be a democratic procedure.

I hope the Government will give serious consideration to this amendment. I know that officials and some members of the Government are concerned about trying to arrange with some of the countries in western Europe, perhaps the United States, and no doubt some other countries, a system in which one occasion for determining a person's refugee status would be enough for all who would belong to a certain agreement.

If a person was found to be a refugee in this country, that would stand for the others. If he was found not to be a refugee, that would stand for the others. I know that is being attempted and I think it is well worth attempting. I also know agreement has not yet been arrived at. Written agreements of this sort might be a step in that direction. At least they would provide some basis of agreement between Canada and one other country in bilateral agreements. They might eventually be put together into a multilateral agreement. I, therefore, urge the Government to consider this amendment in a very friendly way.

Finally, I want to refer to a voice of the Canadian people—not "the" voice because there is no single voice—but a very strong voice of the Canadian people which has supported many of the amendments in spirit and sometimes explicitly throughout this debate. I am referring to the letter of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops dated September 16. I wish to quote a resolution that was passed at their meeting. It concerns the refugee status determination process in Canada, and it states:

> Whereas the Government of Canada is currently finalizing Bill C-55, an Act dealing with the refugee status determination process in Canada;
> Whereas Bill C-84 has just passed third reading (September 14, 1987), in spite of the reservations and opposition of a multitude of humanitarian, refugee aid, and church groups.
> The Episcopal Commission for Social Affairs recommends to the Plenary Assembly:
> That during the course of the daily press conference, the President of the CCCB recall the position taken by Canadian Church leaders in their telex message of June 1, 1987, to Prime Minister Mulroney which called for the withdrawal of Bill C-55 and the replacing of it with legislation that will actualize a refugee status determination process which is just, workable, expeditious and respectful of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and in conformity with Canada's international responsibilities as a signator of the Geneva Convention.

This is the proposal of the Most Reverend Gilles Ouellet, Chairman, Episcopal Commission for Social Affairs.

We have strong support for taking the more inclusive and humanitarian approach to the definition of our refugee legislation. I urge Hon. Members opposite to support this amendment.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, first I welcome the presence of the Minister and applaud the fact that he found it possible to be here with us today.

We speak in support of the motion of the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), because an important principle is at stake. With his amendment, the Hon. Member is defending the internationally accepted principle of prohibiting the expulsion or the return of an applicant for refugee status by any country.

In 1969 we agreed to an international convention.

For the record, I wish to quote Article 33 which deals exactly with this matter. It is entitled Prohibition of Expulsion or Return ("Refoulement") and it states:

> 1. No Contracting State shall expel or return ("refouler") a refugee in any manner whatsoever to the frontiers of territories where his life or freedom would be threatened on account of his race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion.

Article 33 is well balanced. In paragraph 2 it states:

> 2. The benefit of the present provision may not, however, be claimed by a refugee whom there are reasonable grounds for regarding as a danger to the security of the country in which he is, or who, having been convicted by a final judgment of a particularly serious crime, constitutes a danger to the community of that country.

Article 33 is very reasonable, and it was put forward during an international convention that we subscribed to.

During the hearings, the Canadian Bar Association expressed an opinion on the present Bill, and its dissatisfaction if the Bill were to go ahead without the protection of this principle, which would be taken care of by the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for La Prairie. The Canadian Bar Association stated that if this Bill is allowed to exclude the safe country notion, it would violate Article 33 of the UN Convention on Refugees because it rejects the claimant without considering whether the person is a refugee. This is an important central principle. The nub of the issue is that it requires the removal of that person without assurances that the country of destination will protect him from being returned to his original country where the danger may be.

We are dealing with a very important principle. We hope that the Minister and the Government will agree with a member of their own caucus, the Chairman of the standing committee, who has put forward this very important amendment which goes to the heart of any legislation that deals with refugees.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 75 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at the report stage of the Bill now before the House.

Call in the Members.

• (1610)

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. There have been negotiations and I think you will find consent to the following. I will read it very slowly because I am sure no one wants to vote 33 to 35 times this afternoon. The idea is to try to save time.

The voting on report stage of Bill C-55 should be conducted as follows. A vote on Motion No. 3 will be held and the result applied to all of the motions and to the amendment to Motion No. 77 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). It would be applied as well to the motions standing in the name of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). The reverse of that vote would then be applied to the motions of the Minister. The motions of the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) would be disposed of by applying to them the result of the vote on Motion No. 3, but the Hon. Member would be voting in the affirmative on his own motions.

Finally, the vote on Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina will be reversed and applied to the concurrence motion. However, the Hon. Member for La Prairie would be voting at that point in the negative. As well, each vote will be recorded and printed in today's Votes and Proceedings separately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). Is it agreed that we record the votes as indicated?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The first question is on Motion No. 3.

Mr. Heap moved:

Motion No. 3

(a) by striking out lines 46 and 47 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"two weeks after the making of the order; or"

(b) by striking out line 2 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

"required to leave Canada, and in any case not less than two weeks after the notice is received."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Heap) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

As agreed, the result of this division will be recorded as applying to Motions Nos. 4, 6, 7, 9, 11, 13, 14, 18, 21, 25, 27, 29, 31, 32, 33, 34, 37, 40, 43, 45, 47, 48, 49, 67, 68, 75, and the amendment to Motion No. 77.

As a result of the agreement, the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) will be recorded as having voted in the affirmative on Motions Nos. 4, 25, 34, 47, 68 and 75, and in the negative on the concurrence motion.

In reversing the result of this division and recording it as such, I declare Motions Nos. 57B, 70 and 77 standing in the name of the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) as having been carried. Also the concurrence motion will be recorded as having been moved by Mr. Mazankowski for Mr. Weiner, seconded by Mr. Lewis and, as amended, agreed to on the reversed division.

Mr. Jourdenais (Prairie) moved:

That Bill C-55, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 20 to 37 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"45.(1) Subject to subsection (5), where a person who is the sub-".

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Redway: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, as you have just indicated, there have been a considerable number of amendments to the Bill and I think at third reading it would be very helpful if we had the Bill reprinted with all of those amendments. I would like to ask for unanimous consent that Bill C-55 as further amended at report stage be reprinted for the use of the House at third reading.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to agree to my hon. colleague's suggestion on the basis that we do not find the printing is delayed for two or three weeks. I have no idea of the time frame we are talking about. If that is possible, fine.

Mr. Orlikow: How about three years?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In three years you will still be in opposition and still whining.

• (1620)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If I may, I will amend the motion of the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) somewhat and ask for unanimous consent that we order the Bill to be printed. It should be ready for Monday, but any delay in the printing should not preclude the Government from bringing the Bill forward. Is there unanimous consent for that proposition?

Mr. Redway: That's agreeable.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ACT

The House resumed from Thursday, September 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan that Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak this afternoon on Bill C-74 which has been put forward as the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. There is serious concern in the country about the inadequacy of this legislation. It is unfortunate that the Government did not, in drafting this legislation, seriously attempt to provide environmental protection.

The title of this Bill is definitely a misnomer. If the Government insists on proceeding with this legislation in its present form, the Opposition will fight to remove the name "Canadian Environmental Protection Act".

This Bill pays lip-service to the protection of the environment while overlooking the serious attacks which have been made on our environment. This is not leadership legislation. It is a desperate attempt to appease people, and it will certainly not work. Canadians are seriously concerned about the erosion of the environment. They are concerned that they do not have a safe and healthy place in which to raise their children. They are concerned that there is no effective forum in which to raise environmental concerns where they can get a fair hearing and an effective response. Such a forum does not exist now and will not exist should this legislation be passed.

When this Bill is finally sent to committee the members of the committee will have a monstrous task in attempting to provide legislation which will ensure that Canadians will have an opportunity to be directly involved in the protection of the environment.

There is no issue as important to Canadians as environmental protection. What does any other issue matter if diseases which develop and physical harm which is inflicted upon people through contamination of the environment are allowed to continue? Of what importance is any other issue? Over a period of time many Canadians have come to realize that this issue is far more important than many others which face us today.

We hope that the Government will pay heed to the concerns expressed by Members of Parliament on behalf of their constituents. We hope that the Government will listen carefully to the analyses of groups across Canada which have been fighting on environmental issues for years. We hope that this Bill will be redrafted to take cognizance of the points raised.

This is not legislation to protect the environment. Through this legislation the Government is attempting only to protect its backside on this critical issue. It is attempting to protect its backside for its failure to deal with environmental issues vitally important to Canadians. This is not an environmental protection Act. It must be reworked in committee to make it into a tool which Canadians can use to protect themselves, a tool which will guarantee that children will grow up safe and healthy protected from environmental contamination and the destruction of our environment.

This legislation is simply an amalgamation of existing laws in an attempt to sell them as something new and wonderful. Those who are concerned about the degradation of the environment which has gone on over the years will not be fooled by this legislation. They will recognize that it is not a tool to effect that protection.

It has been suggested that this legislation should contain an environmental bill of rights, a clear statement of what Canadians are entitled to in terms of environmental protection and standards. It should be a statement of our goals and objectives. There is no clear statement in the legislation of what it is trying to achieve. It is critical to have such a clear statement to guide the decisions of administrators who set standards and impose emergency orders to protect the environment. There is no doubt that this Bill must state its objectives clearly. On that basis Canadians can make a judgment about the Government's political will to provide a safe, clean environment. This Bill must state that Canadians have the right to a safe, clean environment.

There is very little provision in this legislation of opportunities for the public to participate in the enforcement of environmental laws. There are many people in this country who are seriously concerned about the degradation of the environment.

In the area which I represent people have formed groups protesting the use of herbicides and pesticides. They have come out to meetings to state that they do not want this stuff used near their homes, that they do not want it sprayed aerially or dropped in their water systems. They are frustrated in their attempts to express these concerns or to have a serious hearing on them. People have obstructed applicators in the process of using these chemicals in the environment, but they have no effective forum in which to prosecute abuses and infractions actively.

The public must have an opportunity to participate in the enforcement of environmental legislation. They must be able to become actively involved in prosecuting those who commit environmental infractions, whether it be misuse of herbicides and pesticides, misuse of dangerous chemicals, or oil and chemical spills. People do not have effective mechanisms by which they can initiate action. The public cannot go to the court in order to resolve successfully any challenges to imposed standards.

We must address the need to provide a forum for effective public participation in setting environmental standards for the communities in which they live. They should have the right to determine the quality of the environment in their areas and the Government should encourage involvement in that process by providing an effective forum.

I believe that the application of chemicals such as pesticides and herbicides should only be done with the co-operation of local people who would determine the standards of use. This legislation should provide for such a mechanism.

For instance, there is the use of pesticides and herbicides in school playgrounds. I would be absolutely irate if my children were in areas with that material and I had no opportunity to oppose its use. I am sure all Hon. Members would agree with other Canadians on that issue.

This situation also exists with respect to the use of pesticides by those who advocate aerial spraying of forests. The area of Okeover Inlet is an example of this situation. The federal Government licenses the product, the provincial Government claims no responsibility because it has been licensed by the federal Government, and there is no consideration for the individuals who live there.

The decision was made to use a helicopter to spray an area that was sensitive in terms of the watershed and the marine environment. It is one of the major shellfish-raising areas in British Columbia which had not been contaminated. Residents eventually threatened that they would shoot down any helicopter carrying pesticides that was flying over the area. Of course, this elicited the appropriate response from the RCMP, who defused the situation, but it illustrates the frustration experienced by people when the Government refuses to listen to their concerns about their children and the quality of the environment in which they live. The people of that community banded together and managed to convince the Government that they would remove the unwanted material themselves. They obtained a federal government grant and removed the alder by hand.

The basic problem in this situation was that they had no sense of effective participation in the decision on the use of those chemicals in that area.

We have seen similar cases up and down the coast of British Columbia, whether it is Fanny Bay, Merville, or the Sechelt Peninsula. Hundreds of people have attended public meetings to voice their outrage because a major corporation like B.C. Hydro, MacMillan Bloedel or Crown Forest Products have been able to use these materials with provincial government approval that is based on the federal government sanction. The people affected by these chemicals have no say in the standards for licensing those chemicals. They have no effective say in where those chemicals will be applied.

The Bill should provide Canadians with a fair opportunity to be involved in the setting of standards for these chemicals and where and how they will be applied. It would be a great service to Canada and the quality of our environment if that were one of the strong features of this legislation.

I believe that dangerous chemicals as defined in this legislation will not include pesticides and herbicides, which has been a source of great aggravation to Canadians over the years.

The Department of Agriculture has had the responsibility for licensing these products in Canada. Apparently, it has used tests in the United States to determine the acceptability of these chemicals in Canada. While the provincial Government determines how the chemicals are used, federal government licensing entitles its use.

Many Canadians have suggested that some of these licensed chemicals are in fact toxic and affect human beings. Only recently, the Canadian Government admitted that chemicals such as 2,4-D are harmful to human health. Canadians have appealed to the Government to remove many other herbicide and pesticide products from agriculture. Such chemicals should be included in the Environmental Protection Act to illustrate that the Government is concerned about their use and that it will encourage public participation in determining how and when these chemicals will be used if they are acceptable.

The Department of Agriculture should no longer be entitled to set the standards, because there is a major conflict of interest. Most Canadians would support this legislation if it were expanded to include herbicides and pesticides that are used widely in Canada, and I hope Members on the committee will broaden the legislation to include that class of chemicals.

Another area of major concern is the setting of national standards. I believe this Bill pays only lip-service to a major problem and does not provide any new initiatives in environmental protection.

Certain clauses of the Bill require the Government to consult with the provinces before setting national standards. The Social Credit Government of British Columbia has done much to erode environmental protection in Canada. While there is nothing wrong with consultation between federal and provincial Governments with respect to environmental standards, there should be a minimum national standard for the protection of the health of Canadians below which no provincial Government will be allowed to go. Where provinces are prepared to put higher standards in place, more effective procedures, that consultation should be an area of fair operation. There should even be federal assistance to ensure that those kinds of higher standards are encouraged and supported.

It would be our hope that this consultation section would be tightened so it was effective consultation and there would not be the ability to destroy federal standards or erode those standards and delay application. It is an absolute must that there be national standards, that the federal Government have the political will to enforce those standards, and that provinces which seek to impose higher standards in special areas receive encouragement and support from the federal Government. This issue is of enormous importance.

There is mention in Clause 38 that provincial consultation on matters of emergency orders are being put in place. It would appear that the federal Government has almost lost its political nerve at this point. With respect to an emergency order which involves, I would contemplate, an oil spill or spill of toxic chemicals in the marine environment—we have been treated to many serious oil spills in the Province of British Columbia—to suggest that the federal Government, before it acts on a toxic chemical spill in the provincial environment, should not have to consult with the Province of British Columbia.

I see that my time is drawing nigh. Hopefully, the important points that have been raised on the shortcomings of this legislation will be the subject of committee study, particularly in the herbicides and pesticides area. Action must be taken on those issue before this Bill has been passed into law.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? There being no questions, debate. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Mr. Skelly: I have a question, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, I recognized the Hon. Member for Western Arctic.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, while in general I am in favour of the provisions of Bill C-74, and I think that most of the Members of the House of Commons are, I want to bring to the attention of the Houses two specific areas outlined in this Bill that might need further study.

The first is really a constitutional matter. I am referring to the powers and authorities of the Government of Canada to regulate environmental matters in the Northwest Territories and Yukon, as opposed to what, in my opinion, ought to be the case. The people who live there, through their elected representatives on the Legislatures of the two Territories ought to be the ones, the same as the people in a province ought to make the overriding rules and regulations respecting environmental protection. Part IV of the Bill is the part that deals with federal Departments, agencies, Crown corporations, works, undertakings and lands. When it talks about federal lands, what it really means is all the land in the Northwest Territories and all the land in Yukon. We are at the bottom of the list after federal Departments and agencies and Crown corporations.

The operative clause in this part of the Bill is Clause 53. What it does is to empower the Governor in Council to make regulations with respect to virtually anything to do with the environment on those lands. We are going to run into some problems there, that I know. One of the problems will, of course, be battles between the Department of the Environment and the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs, which already likes to think it is the agency or Department that regulates with respect to these matters, and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, which also has some responsibility in that area. I know there will be an interdepartmental battle between those Departments of Government.

There is in the Northwest Territories an Act of the Territorial Legislature called the NWT Environmental Protection Act, I believe. It has never really had much attention because of all these federal regulations that are in effect and that have been administered by various government Departments. I think it would be preferable if the NWT Environmental Protection Act were the one under which prosecution were made, the one which is primarily used to regulate and enforce environmental matters in the Territories. That would be in keeping with the policy of the Parliament of Canada, both the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada, which wants to see provincial types of responsibilities devolve to the Territories.

It seems that this Bill is in some way drawing back from that policy. We have made some rapid strides of late with respect to electrical power, medical services and forestry, but we have recently been hit with the Meech Lake Agreement which has taken away something from us. It would appear to me that Bill C-74 would also tend to do the same thing.

I want to register my objections to this and my suggestion that things might proceed in a direction more in keeping with that given by the Parliament of Canada on previous occasions.

The second point I wish to raise arises from a meeting I had a few days ago with Mr. Walter Kudelik, the President of the Northwest Territories Association of Municipalities. I have a letter from his Executive Director, Mr. Jim Pitt of that association that I would like to read into the record. It is addressed to myself and states as follows:

> Enclosed with this letter is correspondence pertaining to Bill C-74 (Environmental Protection Act) and its impact on municipal liability insurance. The NWTAM's insurance consultant, Mr. Hugh Falconar has expressed grave concerns about the implications Bill C-74 will have for our members; we want you to be aware of these concerns.

It goes on to say that they have contacted the Federation of Canadian Municipalities to request some additional information and assistance. I also have a letter from Mr. Hugh Falconar, insurance consultant to the NWT Association of Municipalities, dated July 28. Mr. Falconar gives his opinion that:

> The Bill, a minefield for municipalities, appears to be a goldfield for federal prosecutors. The implications of Clause 116(1) are awesome.

It goes on to say further in the letter:

> At the moment, the absolute pollution exclusions in the general liability and umbrella liability insurance policies eliminate all pollution protection for municipalities.
> If Bill C-74 were enacted without the municipalities being able to have the benefit of insurance protection or some form of contingency funding, municipalities would be put into an almost impossible situation.

I do not know if the situation is quite as bad as Mr. Falconar believes because, of course, we have to read Clause 116 in conjunction with Clause 117, which gives some defence. But I think there is something to be concerned about in his remarks.

I also understand that the Canadian Water and Waste Water Association has been involved in the early stages of the drafting of the Bill, and I am pleased to see that this has taken place. I hope that when this goes to committee the Canadian Water and Waste Water Association will be invited to make further presentations and suggestions as to the manner in which the Bill may be improved.

• (1650)

In the Northwest Territories, there is case law under the Canada Labour Code that has held that municipalities are federal works or undertakings. It is pretty hard to believe that this is true, but it has happened. That is why municipalities in the Northwest Territories, and presumably also in the Yukon, are likely to be affected more by this Bill than municipalities elsewhere in Canada. It is a great concern.

I wish to make the request of the legislative committee to which this Bill will be referred that the Northwest Territories Association of Municipalities be invited to present its case with the hope that certain amendments can be made, or that it can be given peace of mind in order that municipalities will not find themselves in the position that is described in Mr. Falconar's letter.

I thank you, Sir, for the opportunity to make those few comments.

Mr. Redway: I always enjoy the comments of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) because he gives us a fresh insight into such an enormous and important part of Canada. Personally, I believe much more attention should be focused on that part of Canada. Generally, Canadians believe that therein is the great frontier of the country, and it is a part of Canada which is of enormous interest to Canadians.

I was interested in the Hon. Member's particular comments with respect to the impact of the Bill on the Northwest Territories, and also on the Yukon. I noted his concern and desire that the municipalities in the Northwest Territories be invited to appear before the legislative committee that will be dealing with this. Certainly I anticipate that as a member of that committee I will be putting forward his suggestion. I hope that they do have an opportunity to come and put forward their views.

Personally, I come from a part of Canada which is not organized as a federal territory, but as a province. I recognize the fact that municipalities in provinces are considered to be creatures of the provinces. It comes as no great surprise to me that where there is no province but a federal Government that is the father and mother of the territories, the municipalities in the territories would be considered to be creatures of the federal Government. Also, coming from a province where there is so much environmental legislation that impacts on municipalities, I feel that there should be no concerns as far as the municipalities in the Northwest Territories are concerned, but I would be happy to hear their representations.

Another point raised by the Hon. Member was on the constitutionality of the Bill. He pointed out one of the great issues of environmentalists across the country, but perhaps in the reverse. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic indicated that there may be inter-departmental battles with the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs as a result of the fact that the environmental protection power is in the Department of the Environment. Therefore, there will be another interested Department which will be struggling internally with the Department of the Environment.

In fact, environmentalists from other parts of Canada have criticized the fact that in this Bill the Department of the Environment has not amalgamated all of the environmental powers of the federal Government, such as the power that the Hon. Member from British Columbia mentioned a few moments ago, the Department of Agriculture's control over pesticides. There is also the question of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources' control over nuclear matters. There is also the question of the Department of Transport's control over the transportation of hazardous goods.

These struggles will go on whether or not these matters are amalgamated into the over-all control of the Department of the Environment. They will either go on between Departments where one has the environmental controls such as transport, energy, and agriculture, but it is not in fact the Department of Agriculture, or they will go on in the reverse where the Department of the Environment has control of the legislation but the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs will be struggling to have its two cents worth. Obviously, in the matter of the way of life of government, that problem will go on.

I hope that the Hon. Member will see the light at the end of the tunnel in that the Northwest Territories will have a devolution of these powers in much the same manner that the devolution has taken place in the other powers he referred to, health services, electric power, and forestry. I hope that the Hon. Member will agree and indicate that he is working for a devolution to the Government of the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Nickerson: I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member has asked a question. I am delighted with the suggestion that, if he is fortunate enough to be on the committee, he will see that the necessary invitation is extended. I could go on at great length on the powers granted to the territorial legislature under the Northwest Territories Act to legislate with respect to municipalities, and that type of matter, but I do not think today is the correct forum.

Mr. Rompkey: I had hoped, Mr. Speaker, to make some remarks on the legislation. I will be guided by you, Mr. Speaker, but in view of the time, I wonder if the Chair wishes to call it five o'clock and continue this debate tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Do I have unanimous consent to call it five o'clock?

Mr. Gauthier: We always face the difficulty, when we call it five o'clock, of knowing whether the Member whose Bill it is will be in the House, whether the Members will be ready to speak to that Bill, whether they are in the House, and whether is it appropriate for us to do so, or, rather, whether we should suspend the sitting until five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do have one speaker from the government side. Are there other speakers on this particular Bill?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to the Bill. I understand we have some speakers who thought they would be speaking when the clock indicated five o'clock. It will be a minute or two before they are all in place. If the House can await that time, they will all be here.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PARITY PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCTS ACT

The House resumed from Monday, August 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nystrom that Bill C-221, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I wish to urge Members of the House to adopt this Bill in principle and send it on to the Agriculture Committee for full-scale study and hearings.

• (1700)

The Bill deals with very important concerns which we have as Members from across the country, whether we represent urban or rural constituencies or, as I do, constituencies with a combination of the two. The debt situation of farmers is one sign of the crisis which they have been facing. It is a steadily worsening debt situation. What is particularly striking is that the debt situation is especially falling on larger farms which are the backbone of production in most parts of the country and, perhaps most tragic, on young farmers.

According to the official statistics, only 26 per cent of younger operators of farms under the age of 35 years report no interest expenses, whereas 61 per cent of older operators, 55 years of age and over, report no interest expenses.

We are talking about something in the order of $2 billion per year which is going from farm families in the form of interest, resulting in a reduction in the number of farmers on farms. For instance, in Ontario the number of younger farmers under the age of 35 years has declined by 22 per cent. Between 1981 and 1986 the capital value of farms has gone down by 16 per cent. In my Province of Ontario the decline has been an even steeper 24 per cent.

What do we do in the face of those facts? It is important to recognize the principle of parity pricing which is embodied in the Bill. That principle says that the prices which farmers get for their products, in so far as we can have some influence on them in domestic markets in Canada, should go up in proportion to the costs of production that farmers must face.

I should like to refer to the catastrophic situation facing Ontario farmers which calls for this kind of move to parity pricing. I know that the Bill itself does not deal with corn or soya beans. However, in his opening speech the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) indicated that he had met with producers of both commodities and could certainly see ways within the committee that these commodities could be brought into the Bill. For instance, let us take corn production and the price as of just yesterday in Chatham. Farmers in southwestern Ontario are receiving $2.27 per bushel. There are small variations to $2.37 or $2.47 in some parts of southwestern Ontario, but the $2.27 per bushel figure compares with a cost of production estimated by the provincial Government of $3.48 per bushel, including materials, pre-harvest expenses, harvest expenses, and land rent or the cost of land.

Dealing with the soya bean crop, in 1980 we started with a market price of $8.53. We have seen that figure decline to a market price per bushel of $6.20 in 1987. That compares with a cost production of $7.80.

Therefore we have a situation where farmers continue hoping for the future, but because of the difference between the prices they are receiving and costs of production, they are going more and more into debt and facing further and further difficulties for themselves and their families.

We must have a solution to this serious crisis, and I think the solution can come with the creation of marketing boards for commodities such as soya beans and corn on the domestic market. It can come with the recognition in those marketing boards that there must be a continued reflection in the prices offered by the boards of the costs of production and how they are increasing in my part of Ontario and in other parts of Ontario.

I urge the House to recognize what many of us recognized in the all-night debate which took place last spring. It indicated that there was a crisis in agriculture, but we have still not responded to that crisis sufficiently despite the drama of that all-night debate.

Let us take action. Let us move ahead. Let us do something concrete. Let us adopt Bill C-221. Let us take the step forward which this Bill represents.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to this Bill in that my riding contains some of the finest black loam farmland in Canada.

The intent of the Bill is well recognized. There is consensus across Canada that farmers deserve and should receive a fair and equitable return on their investment and labour. However, there is no one Bill that can assure adequate returns to all farmers of Canada at all times. There is no single program that will achieve that goal, least of all Bill C-221 respecting parity prices for farm products. This concept, which was used in the United States over 45 years ago, was eventually discontinued due to major shortcomings. It could be an opportune time to review the U.S. system of parity prices and its consequences.

The parity formula in the U.S. was established in 1940 by the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The purpose of the Act was to establish farm prices at a level that would maintain the purchasing power of farmers, with respect to articles they buy, equivalent to that of the base period. However, in order for purchasing power to be maintained over time, relative prices and incomes in the base period must be appropriate. In the United States it became apparent that there were substantial income differences among farmers, no matter what base period was used.

The intent of the parity pricing Act in the United States was similar to that of Bill C-221 in respect of adjusting prices of farm commodities to reflect changes in the prices of the articles which farmers buy. However, Mr. Speaker, being a scholar of the subject you will know that in order to stabilize supplies and prices, parity prices were incorporated into the loan rate formula. Farmers sold what they could, and the rest was purchased and stored by the Government. As technology advanced, production increased faster than demand. This increased the need for price support and over-production problems became unmanageable. Eventually, the Investment Parity Price Support Program became so expensive that it was disbanded.

It is interesting to note that although costs associated with the parity formula grew significantly, farmers were often not at the receiving end. Much of the money went to transportation, storage agencies and construction companies. The U.S. experience illustrated that parity prices were not effective in providing price support to farmers. It cost billions of dollars, only a portion of which went to farmers.

Bill C-221 is primarily aimed at helping Canadian grain and oil-seed producers who are experiencing a very difficult time. They are in a cost-price squeeze where market prices are falling and input costs are rising. As an example, wheat prices have fallen about 30 per cent in the last year due largely to an international trade war, while input prices have remained the same or even increased. Grain farmers on the Prairies are expected to experience a net decline in farm income this year, although this decline is being offset to a large degree through payments under government programs.

The solution to the farm income problem would not be solved by Bill C-221. The U.S. experience indicates that eventually it would be detrimental to the agriculture industry. The idea of parity pricing does not take into account new technology, efficiency of production, market signals and the need for international product marketability. It ignores the dynamic and often unpredictable nature of the agriculture industry due to such diverse forces and conflicting interests, regionally, nationally, and internationally. Over the past years, the farm sector in Canada has been effectively served by programs that increased the efficiency and competitiveness of farmers in the market-place, both nationally and internationally. A legislated solution will not be responsive to constantly changing circumstances and will therefore result in high costs with declining effectiveness.

One can argue that national supply management agencies in place for dairy and poultry products serve that industry well and that the same arrangement could apply to grains and oil-seeds. But these agencies have been established at the direct request of producers themselves who continue to recognize the fluctuating nature of the markets. They have built-in flexibility to protect both producers and consumers. Bill C-221 would not allow the same conditions for the grain and oil-seed producers. To be efficient and competitive, the market forces of supply and demand must prevail. That has always been a fundamental philosophy behind agricultural policy in Canada, a philosophy shared by all provinces as signatories to the recently developed national agriculture strategy.

The Government has been working with provincial administrations and the farm industry to build a network of programs to strengthen the productivity, efficiency and competitiveness of agriculture industry while providing farm income protection. Special initiatives have been introduced to help producers who are experiencing difficulties. In the long run, this approach will provide the best protection against the cost-price squeeze experienced by the Canadian agriculture sector.

Some of the support programs provided for Canadian grain and oil-seed farmers are the Special Canadian Grains Program, providing $1 billion this year to assist the grain and oil-seed farmers who have been facing lower prices resulting from the agricultural trade war between the United States and the European Economic Community. Payments are being made under the Agricultural Stabilization Act to farmers affected by lower prices, including close to $55.8 million for corn, soybean and barley producers for their 1985-86 crop. Special assistance was provided to prairie grain and livestock producers who suffered from the effects of several consecutive years of drought. The Western Grain Stabilization Act has been amended to allow interim payments to farmers in the spring when they need the cash most. An interim payment of $705 million has been made in 1986-87 for the last crop year. A tripartite stabilization program for the red meat sector has been established, with six provinces participating and others being expected to join. Participating provinces now represent between two-thirds and three-quarters of all beef cattle, sheep and hog production in the nation. This program is helping to stabilize returns for red meat producers, without shielding them from market signals. The Farm Fuel Tax Rebate Program exempts farmers from federal sales and excise taxes on farm fuels. An $80 million, five-year interest rate relief program has been designed and implemented to lower the interest costs for more than 5,000 Farm Credit Corporation borrowers. The two new FCC lending programs recently introduced are allowing farmers much greater financial flexibility.

These initiatives represent an innovative approach to protecting farmers from the current cost-price squeeze. They have been developed and implemented to respond to specific conditions in the market, and they reflect the flexibility and responsiveness required to deal with specific problems. This process is most effective in serving the interests of the agriculture sector as problems arise. The parity price system would not serve the industry as well and could result in continuing high costs to the taxpayer. For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am not able to support the spirit and the essence of Bill C-221.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have this opportunity to speak to a Bill which I think in a significant way addresses not just the concerns of farmers but concerns that I think ought to be the concerns of all Canadians.

I regret that the previous speaker representing the Progressive Conservative Party, as one would expect of a Party that calls itself Progressive Conservative, would choose to have compared apples and oranges in trying to see in the experience of the United States what is predictable about what will occur in Canada if the kind of legislation suggested in this Bill were adopted by this House, subsequently approved by the other place, and became law.

What is at issue here, and clearly at issue, is fairness. Anyone who looks at the situation faced by the farmers in Canada could by no means conclude that the farmer is treated with fairness. This is not deliberate, but if you compared the situation of the farmer as he and she experiences it now and contemplated just for a moment the prospects for the future, then one would have to reach the conclusion that we must search our collective minds to find the means by which the farmer will be able to obtain an adequate income.

No one suggests that this piece of legislation proposed here now is the entire answer to the problems that farmers face. It does go a little way, and it is a little way, that collectively all of us must walk.

I have said on a previous occasion when addressing the concerns of the agricultural community that I admit to being an urban representative. It occurs to me that there is a very significant industry in my riding called Hiram Walker. It consumes a great deal of barley and wheat. We will not say anything further about the manner in which the product is consumed and by whom and in what quantity here and elsewhere, but what we should address is that not a single worker in Hiram Walker faces as serious a deficit in income as does the farmer who provides the basis for that worker's livelihood. Nobody really expects a worker or a business person to continue carrying out his or her business or work under circumstances where he or she cannot make a profit. I repeat, this is about fairness.

I think we can all agree that it is not fair that the price of wheat for export will decrease by 20 per cent. It is not fair that it will cost a farmer $69,000 to produce wheat on 1,000 acres but he can only expect to make $40,000 from it. It is not fair that farmers are losing their farms, that the family farm is disappearing because of inadequate income and huge debt and that in many instances young farmers have no hope of owning a farm. It is not fair that in the area in which I live, the producers of soybeans and corn, the most common commodities produced in that area, find that it costs them more to produce their commodities than they can sell them for. They earn $2 per bushel for corn while it costs $3 per bushel to produce it, and they earn $6 per bushel for soybeans while it costs $7 per bushel to produce it. That is not fair, and what we are talking about here is fairness.

What is so strange, unusual and unreasonable about the proposition advanced in this Bill that wheat, oats and barley sold to the Canadian consumer should be priced so that the cost of production is covered? The production costs that should be covered include good wages for city workers and good profits for those producing implements and vehicles used on farms. That is all this Bill seeks to provide through what is called parity pricing. The farmer who sells his wheat, oats and barley should receive a return adequate to cover the cost of production and should earn a profit sufficient to allow the farmer to live, to eat and to clothe himself and his family. Why should the farmer provide to all the rest of us what we so desperately and continuously need at his own expense?

Is the proposition contained in the Bill not a self-evident one? Is this not something that all of us would naturally assume is a simple matter of justice and fairness? As the Hon. Member from the other side who spoke indicated, there are some small elements of the legislation that need to be adjusted to make it good legislation. I for one, coming from Essex County, would like to see it extended so that it would apply to soybean and corn producers. Just as wheat, barley and oats concern those in the West and in parts of Ontario, we in southwestern Ontario have a problem as well.

As well, I think note should be taken that there is a proposal here for marketing boards for beef and pork. Although that is not being demanded, it may be that we would want to prepare the way so that those producers too could share in the benefits of the simple principle advanced by this legislation, which is that one should not have to produce food for city people at one's own expense.

I urge the House to approve the submission of this Bill to the Agriculture Committee so that it can be refined and made practical and useful and so that it can benefit the farmer. I am as confident as I am confident that I am standing here today that, given an understanding of the situation faced by farmers, those in the cities would not expect the farmer to earn less than the automobile worker, the brewer or the politician in proportion to their contribution to this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak to Bill C-221, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products.

Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, the electors of the riding of Windsor—Walkerville had an opportunity to listen to their Member or will find time to read his comments in Hansard. They will see for themselves that the Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) was not very serious when he spoke to this legislative measure.

Mr. Speaker, setting the prices of farm products at the so-called parity level is one way to establish a link between these prices and the cost index of the agricultural community's input.

The concept of parity prices was used in a U.S. farm legislation some forty years ago. Its purpose was to establish farm prices at a level that would maintain the purchasing power of farmers, with respect to articles they buy, equivalent to that of the base period.

To determine the parity price of a farm commodity during a period prior to this base period, they would multiply its price during the base period by the input cost index reached during the period when the computation was made.

However, this procedure did not take into account a basic factor, namely, that as technology advances, productivity increases steadily over the years.

Well, the input cost index reflects the trend of input prices and not the input mix during production. With the passing of time, technology advance makes it possible to combine inputs in a more efficient way and, in the end, smaller amounts of inputs are necessary to produce the same quantity of farm commodities. The unit cost goes down. Parity prices, therefore, may reach levels which are much higher than the costs to efficient farmers.

That is the reason why the parity price system was dropped in the United States.

Bill C-221, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products, tries to overcome this problem by proposing to establish the prices on an annually established production cost formula.

By fixing prices on a yearly production cost basis, production cost pricing, although simple in principle, is not simple in its implementation. First, production costs have to be defined, which Bill C-221 does not do.

For instance, a distinction must be drawn between disbursement costs and non-disbursement costs. The difference is significant both conceptually and as to how costs are assessed.

The remuneration of the producer's work and investment entails no disbursement, but must be included in any pricing process.

One problem then is that, by determining farm prices on the basis of production costs, there is a danger that they be set at a level where demand will not completely absorb supply.

High prices stimulate production, Mr. Speaker, but on the other hand they discourage consumption. A pricing system based on a production cost formula cannot be put in place without a plan to limit supply to the level the available markets can absorb. Otherwise, the impact on external trade would be serious.

Mr. Speaker, providing a commodity with a high support price becomes costly when a country produces more of that commodity than it consumes. The surplus must be exported, and when world prices are still lower than domestic prices, this surplus is exported at a loss.

Such is the situation in the European Economic Community, and the common farm policy, which is the cause of that, is extremely costly to European taxpayers.

Canadian farm prices must be at a level that allows competition with foreign products. Otherwise, our products would not sell abroad because they would not compete on international markets. And then, if Canada used a double price system, selling abroad at prices that would be lower than domestic prices, it would be accused of dumping.

We cannot both develop the exportation of a product and introduce a parity prices system for that same product. Programs that are in place now, including the Western grain stabilization program and the tripartite stabilization programs that benefit beef, pork and lamb producers, better serve the needs of the export oriented production sectors then the parity prices system. They give a protection against downturns that periodically occur in the markets while ensuring that production be responsive to market trends.

So, Mr. Speaker, for these reasons and many others, it is absolutely unthinkable to implement a policy such as proposed by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) in his Bill C-221 and that is why we will have to vote against such a proposal since it is a socialist measure that would give no benefit to producers other than to burden them with enormous inconveniences, which is certainly not what we have been seeking since we came to power. Rather, we are working to help our producers become more and more efficient, more and more competitive so that they can carve out a significant place for themselves in the market so that ultimately we will succeed in stabilizing some sectors of productions by having profitable operations.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the last time I had an opportunity to speak about the problems which farmers and their families are having in this downturn in the economy, a Member on the government side shouted across the floor and asked what a guy from downtown Toronto was doing talking about farm problems. At that time I pointed out that, because I happen to represent an urban community, that does not mean that I do not have an understanding of the problems of farmers.

Excellent representatives from the prairie provinces and other farming regions have spoken out loudly and clearly on behalf of farmers. In addition, residents in my constituency consume the products of farmers and are concerned about how the present Government and previous Governments have treated farmers. They have not been treated very well.

In fact, many farmers to whom I have had an opportunity to speak in my travels across the country, particularly in the Province of Saskatchewan, have pointed out to me in the strongest possible terms on numerous occasions that the problems within that sector of the economy have occurred because there is no adequate agricultural policy in Canada. There is a piecemeal policy under which Governments react to problems rather than attempting to establish a long-range policy in agriculture.

In 1984, we had an extensive debate in this House on the Crow rate. Members in my Party argued over a long period of time that if the Government tampered with the Crow rate in the way it intended to, it would seriously affect the farmers of the country. That which we are seeing today is at least a partial result of that policy.

Many residents of my constituency work for Massey-Ferguson. Those people are employed in producing farm implements for the farmers of the country. If farmers do not have the income with which to buy those products the industrial workers in my constituency will be unemployed. They will not find gainful employment unless farmers have the financial resources to buy the equipment they produce. This is, therefore, not only a farm problem. It is also very much an urban problem in Brantford, Toronto, and other major manufacturing sectors across the country.

That is why I wanted the opportunity to speak on Bill C-221 as put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). The purpose of this Bill is quite clearly set out in the explanatory note which reads:

> The purpose of this Bill is to provide parity prices to farmers based on a cost-of-production formula for wheat, oats and barley for human consumption within Canada and to establish voluntary marketing Commissions for pork and beef. That is to lay the groundwork for parity prices for producers.

I heard the previous speaker in this debate refer to the measures being proposed by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville as some kind of socialist plot. The farmers I have spoken to explained the problem to me. They say that farmers today do not have the opportunity to recover the cost of their production, that is, the cost of seeding, fertilization, equipment to take the product off the field, et cetera, et cetera. They are not totally compensated for their investment.

I cannot imagine a Conservative Member at any other time arguing that a producer is not entitled to a reasonable profit for labour. That argument would be totally foreign under different circumstances. I can assure you that if that government Member were sitting in opposition he would be making the same argument in support of farmers as I am making today. However, because they are in government they feel they have to defend the indefensible, which in itself is indefensible. When I hear a member of the Conservative Party make such an argument I, quite frankly, do not understand it. I would like to hear him make that argument to the President of Massey-Ferguson. I would like to hear him make that argument to the Royal Bank or any other banking institution. I can tell you that tomorrow, all the political contributions from those corporations would be cut off and the Conservatives would not receive another red cent from those corporate interests.

However, they will not make that argument with those financial interests. Instead, they dump on the poor farmers once again.

I want to give some figures which clearly illustrate the problem in this country. It is not a problem facing only farmers, but one that faces consumers and the communities in which these farmers live. The problem affects all Canadians, so we should dispel the idea that we are only talking about farmers.

Even a cursory examination of the books of the Farm Credit Corporation over the last year or so show that some 18,000 farm loans are in arrears. That does not even begin to deal with loans and obligations toward other financial institutions than the Farm Credit Corporation.

In a recent survey among farmers about what they saw for the future, 59 per cent could only see the situation getting worse. I suggest that that is a national disgrace. The farming community in this country has been held in high esteem for many years because of its recognized importance to the economy of Canada.

The reason this Bill is before us and why we are having an opportunity to debate it is that the Government has not brought forward any measures to allow us to get into such a debate. That is why the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville felt he had to bring the Bill forward, in order to give us the opportunity to tell Canadian farmers that even if previous Liberal Governments did not care about them enough to bring in an agriculture policy, that even if the present Conservative Government does not care enough about them to bring forward a policy, we want to say that New Democrats do care and that is why we are trying to bring forward a measure that would go a long way toward helping farmers in this country.

I have an article from a Saskatchewan newspaper, The Leader-Post, in which Mr. Allen Boras clearly sets out the problem from a Saskatchewan point of view. I want to read this because it is interesting. Mr. Boras says:

> Because of an anticipated 20 per cent drop in grain prices, most south Saskatchewan farmers will have to produce almost double last year's record harvest just to break even in the coming year.

> Even in areas like Carlyle and Bengough, which produced a bumper 34 bushels an acre last year, farmers must push production to an all-but-impossible 58 bushels per acre of top-grade wheat. This would be needed just to cover input costs and produce a $15,000 annual income on a 1,000 acre farm.

He went on to say:

> These estimated production costs, provided by Saskatchewan Agriculture, don't include money needed to pay debts. They also don't include deficiency, stabilization or other government payments that have bolstered farmers' incomes in recent years.

There is the real monetary problem with which we are dealing.

I also want to spend a few minutes dealing with the social problems that these farm families are facing as a result of this crisis in the farming community. Let me refer to a book written by a group of concerned farm women. It is entitled: The Farmer Takes a Wife. This book was written as a result of farm women trying to determine and document the actual social problems that are created among the farm communities as a result of this farm crisis. It was written by a group of farm women from Bruce Grey County in Ontario.

Several years ago I had an opportunity to meet with many of these farm women personally, at which time they presented me with this work. I want to read a personal perspective from a farm woman on a particular day in her life. I am sure you will appreciate the compassion with which she writes.

I see that my time is up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.47 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the time provided for the debate has expired. Accordingly, the question is on the motion of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There were discussions among the Parties that we would defer this vote until six o'clock on Monday. I have been advised by the Table Officers that according to Standing Order 13(2), it is not possible to delay this vote until Monday at six o'clock on the basis that the House knew when the motion would come to a vote.

However, I have been in the House for some eight years. There were a number of occasions when all the Parties agreed to a speech by one Member from each Party for up to one-half hour each, which provided for an hour and a half of debate. In my opinion, that was a fixed time and the bell should not have rung more than 15 minutes.

I believe the opposition Whip would confirm that in most cases the bell would ring for 30 minutes. Technically, if what I have been told today is correct, whenever there is agreement among all Parties for one speaker from each Party to speak, there should be a 15-minute bell and the vote may not be deferred until Monday at six o'clock.

When one reads the Standing Order carefully, one finds that it refers to a predetermined time. I maintain that providing for a speech by one Member from each Party results in a predetermined time. I believe this situation should be thoroughly reviewed.

In every case I have agreed to the request for a 30-minute bell. I believe there is an inaccuracy here which should be corrected.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair intends to review the matter, thoroughly as the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) indicates. However, as far as this vote is concerned, if I have a request for a deferred vote, unless there is unanimous consent I will reject the request.

Mr. Fennell: If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, can we establish in the future that whenever there is a predetermined time for one speech by one member from each Party, the vote will be taken in 15 minutes? I must have that commitment from the Chair because if each Party has one speaker, that is a predetermined amount of time.

Mr. Gauthier: I would just like to say that the Government Whip and I had discussions earlier today and I told him that I saw no difficulty in giving my consent to postponing the vote until next Monday. I do not want to enter into the debate here because I understand Standing Order 13(4) clearly. I know how it is affected by Standing Order 13(2). I know, Mr. Speaker, that the Standing Orders do not allow the vote that you have to take after a 15-minute bell to be deferred. The rules are there. I do not want to change the rules tonight. I understand the predicament we are in, but I would give my consent to postponing the vote as an exception to the rules.

Mr. Prud'homme: Because we like the Chief Government Whip and we are reasonable.

Mr. Riis: I too like the Chief Government Whip and respect him. I recognize that Standing Order 13(2) and Standing Order 13(4) are in the Standing Orders. I, for one, do not want to renegotiate the Standing Orders on the floor of the House of Commons. I think it is a dangerous precedent and I am not prepared to enter into any understandings in terms of changing the Standing Orders under these conditions. There is a time and place at which to change the Standing Orders, but the floor of the House of Commons is not one of them.

I want to add another point because I suspect that the question for unanimous consent may be put shortly. I want simply to make the case that we have been waiting, quite frankly, for months for this vote to take place. Earlier in the day we informed our caucus that as per the Standing Orders, the vote would be taking place today. We informed our Members of that. At our caucus meeting on Wednesday that point was also made. We encouraged our Members to be here as per the Standing Orders. That was all we were following.

I was then informed earlier today that the Government had decided to defer the vote. It had decided to defer the vote. It was not a request. I said, quite frankly, that we had made a decision, so, Mr. Speaker, if in fact the request comes for unanimous consent to defer the vote, I am afraid, under the circumstances, I would be unable to give that consent.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a lack of credibility here. I expressed to the Chief Opposition Whip the same thing, that I would like to defer the vote. This is my normal statement, that I would like to defer the vote until six o'clock. The New Democratic Party Whip was not here. I went to the House Leader and said I would like to defer the vote to six o'clock, and he said, yes. That is how I have said it many times, as the Chief Opposition Whip can confirm.

The Hon. Member says he has waited for months. I remember a number of Bills we have had in this House on which we have waited months for a vote for months. I think that is a pretty weak argument. I do still maintain that in the future all Bills on which there is a pre-arranged agreement of one speaker from each Party, which is a fixed limit of time, there will be a 15 minute bell.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I think I must make one short intervention and that is, when I give my word for an agreement, to whomever, my word is good.

I want to remind my hon. friend, and I respect him for his views, that there was no request. The decision was that the vote would be deferred, and he was doing me the favour of telling me, and I appreciated it. First of all, he does not need my consent. The Government Whip himself can make the decision to defer a vote. He was simply informing me that that is what he did. I said: "Well, I guess it is your decision and I have to accept it". However, upon close examination of the Standing Orders, such was not the case. The Standing Orders are clear that under these particular circumstances, a vote cannot be deferred. I think it is appropriate and absolutely necessary that we follow the Standing Orders unless in fact there is unanimous agreement and, in this case, there will not be.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will benefit from the advice by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Prud'homme: I appeal to the common sense of Hon. Members. Mr. Speaker, I cannot wait for the day when we finally become civilized in this Parliament and start calling ourselves by our own name and not by the name of our constituencies. This is always difficult. I may seem not to know the Hon. Member and yet I have a lot of respect for him.

[English]

Some day I hope we will call ourselves by our names and not by our districts. I think it would be more human and intelligent. I must admit that if there is a socialist that I trust when he gives his word, it is the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). However, if my Whip is willing to postpone the vote and the Government is willing to postpone, I do not understand why we do not postpone it the vote. But if there is no agreement, we might as well vote.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I think the rule is very clear. There is not unanimous consent. The bells must start to ring and they must ring for 15 minutes. I think the Chair must get on with that right away. That is what the rules say.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to rise for a minute. I do not know if we have some confusion in the Chamber.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hawkes: I always like to see that we have an opportunity to declare on the issues. However, there has been some suggestion that the vote be deferred until Monday. I think I heard the suggestion that the bells start ringing at six o'clock. I quite appreciate that the mover of the motion would like to get on with the vote, but when the Chair is asked at this time to rise and seek unanimous consent of the House, I am not sure whether it is seeking unanimous consent of the House to defer the vote until Monday—

Some Hon. Members: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: —or whether the Chair is seeking to defer the ringing of the bells until six o'clock this evening. That is where my confusion is. I would have difficulty responding to the Chair's request until that confusion is clarified.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There has been a request for unanimous consent made by the Chief Opposition Whip, which was made in conjunction with Chief Government Whip, to defer this vote until Monday at six o'clock. According to the way the Chair reads the applicable Standing Orders, that cannot be done unless there is unanimous consent of the whole House. We do not have unanimous consent of the whole House.

Therefore, call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we are now into Private Members' Business hour and we have established a practice since the new rules have been in effect, namely that the vote is taken row by row. I believe that if you were to consult the House—

[English]

You will find, Mr. Speaker, that there is unanimous consent that we proceed by row vote rather than by Party vote.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that we proceed with the taking of the vote by row?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Nystrom), which was negatived on the following division:

The House resumed from Thursday, September 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan that Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, as you know, yesterday the clock outran me, not being the athlete that you were in your glory days. I am very pleased, though, to have this opportunity to speak today about legislation which also has inadequate underpinnings and needs a great deal of exercise.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are not reflecting on the Speaker, are you?

Mr. Rompkey: I notice that the Minister is exercising. That is good, because the Act needs a lot of exercise in order to be in shape to do the kind of job which needs to be done.

What we were promised was a gourmet meal; what we have is a stew. That is not adequate. The people of Canada will not think that it is adequate to do the kind of job they want done with the environment, to which they give top priority.

An Act was brought into effect back in 1976 to deal with the environmental impact of chemicals and their effect on human health. Amendments have been under consideration since 1981. The principal concern was that the Act did not adequately provide for the identification and assessment of new chemicals in Canada before they are used and dispersed in the environment.

The Minister has made provision for that in the Act, and we are prepared to accept that it is a good step forward. We support the initiative that new chemicals will be identified, and some will be banned and that action will be taken. We also support the provision that some chemicals now in existence will be put on the list and will be banned. Those provisions are good ones.

The problem is that we do not know what chemicals will be on the list. Another problem is that the resources devoted to this item are such that it will take a long time before we know. There is a schedule in the Act right now, but it is limited.

In order to go through all the Acts which are coming into this new amalgamation or pot-pourri, it will take a lot of work by a lot of people. The financial allocation to do that work is inadequate to meet the need or do the job. It will be years before the proper chemicals are identified on that list to give adequate protection to the people of Canada.

Therefore we had to question whether the intent is serious when we looked at the resources devoted to doing the kind of job which is talked about in the Act.

In his earlier statements the Minister said that it would deal with all sorts of things. In November, 1985, the St. Clair blob was discovered, and the Minister began promising that the amendment to the Environmental Contaminants Act would somehow clean up the St. Clair River and other existing pollution problems. However, that is not the case. The Minister made that claim repeatedly, but this piece of legislation cannot and will not clean up the Niagara River, the St. Clair River, the waste dumps, and the air pollution from factories. It is not going to do that. It is not going to do the job it was heralded to do in the beginning.

When the Minister released the draft legislation in December he called it the toughest pollution legislation in the western hemisphere. However, by the time he introduced the legislation in the House in June it had diminished to a first step toward cleaning up the environment.

The Minister also promised an environmental bill of rights and instead delivered some elegant prose in the preamble which really has no legal status at all.

• (1010)

There are 24 federal Departments administering 57 environmental laws. The Minister claims that Bill C-74 will streamline that process. Really all that is happening is the merging of three Acts, the Clean Air Act, the Ocean Dumping Control Act and the Environmental Contaminants Act. It is a merging of existing legislation without any change to those Acts at all.

This morning on the way in I heard of an operation yesterday off the East Coast of Newfoundland by the Canadian Coast Guard. It was an experimental cleanup of an oil spill. Oil was dispersed on the water and the Coast Guard tried its technology to see how it would work. It did not work as well as it should have worked. The Coast Guard admitted that there are faults in the technology and faults in the systems in place now to clean up potential spills off the East Coast. That is a very serious situation because the most important resource in my province and the Atlantic provinces is the marine resource. Ironically, the most serious threat to that marine resource is the other greatest potential economic benefit in that area, oil and gas.

There must be protection for our primary marine resource. The marine environment off the Atlantic Coast must be of paramount importance. It must be a priority. The Government must provide through legislation, not just through technology, adequate protection for that most important resource, but that has not been done. There has been no examination of the Ocean Dumping Control Act.

One could make the case that trout and salmon in streams are better protected than the cod off shore. The Fisheries Act is an Act with a lot of strength. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon) has wide-ranging powers to enforce laws regarding the spill of toxic chemicals into rivers. Salmon in their natural habitat are protected.

In my own province, a paper mill was dispersing effluent into the very important Exploits River. The Government worked with the company to ensure that the effluent did not kill the salmon resource in that river. The Fisheries Act allows for certain steps to be taken. It gives the Minister wide-ranging powers to protect the marine resources in rivers. However, that Act does not form a part of this legislation. What does form a part of it is the Ocean Dumping Control Act and that has not been examined, updated, beefed up or given any teeth. Yet we are entering an era in which we hope to develop oil and gas resources off the East Coast.

As I said at the outset, we support the idea that new chemicals will be identified and put on the list and the idea that chemicals already existing will be put on the list in the schedule of the Bill. However, I must repeat that inadequate resources have been allocated by the Government to do that.

As far as we are concerned, some parts of the Bill are objectionable. We find the preamble objectionable. A legislated environmental bill of rights would provide a right to a clean environment and provisions to empower citizens to take action to protect their environment in the courts.

I noticed that my colleague from British Columbia made the point yesterday that there should be provisions for individuals, for groups and for private citizens to have a part in seeing that the environment is adequately protected. After all, who does the environment belong to? It does not belong to the mining companies or the forestry companies. The environment belongs to the people of Canada. It is their heritage and they have a right to see that it is adequately protected and kept in a proper state for them and their children.

This Bill really does not contain an adequate provision for individuals in local areas to take their responsibilities seriously and to ensure that this Bill and indeed Canada's other environmental laws are properly administered to safeguard their environment. That is a weakness in the Bill.

There are various other weaknesses in the Bill. In our opinion, the Minister missed an opportunity to improve existing legislation that is being rolled into the Environmental Protection Act. I mentioned the Ocean Dumping Control Act already. Some critics argue that the Clean Air Act may in fact have been weakened by its inclusion in the proposed Environmental Protection Act.

As it stands, the Clean Air Act now deals with acid rain and air pollution internationally rather than domestically and domestic emissions are regulated by the same process of toxicity testing and information requirements as other chemicals. Under this regime, one may ask whether or not sulphur dioxide, for example, would qualify as a toxic chemical for regulation by the proposed Environmental Protection Act.

Then there is the question of Ministerial discretion. There are several clauses in the Bill that give the Minister discretion to deal with toxic chemicals. Clause 29(4), for example, would allow the Minister to waive the requirement for any information he decides is unnecessary. Clauses 15 and 16 would allow the Minister, on request of the applicant, to extend the time allowed to meet information requirements or other acts of compliance without public explanation or consultation. Clause 37 would allow the Minister to exempt chemicals from regulation at his discretion.

The Minister has these powers of discretion. If we are to have a law with teeth, there should be a written and clearly expressed intent to ensure that the environment is adequately protected and that those people who are using it, those who are temporary stewards of it, are not allowed to get away with practices that would destroy it for people now living and for their descendants.

There is the question as well of federal-provincial agreements. What we really want to have is a national law with national standards. We know that the provinces have their prerogatives and priorities and we know that everything is not equal across this country. Some provinces must operate in certain ways just to try to maintain equality with other regions of Canada.

The Atlantic Provinces, for example, have to bend over backward to attract industry to the area. I understand the difficulty and the extremes to which one must go to try to create jobs in primary processing. On the other hand, the Government should offer us a national Bill with national standards that is administered without any watering down of jurisdiction. We think it must be very clear that the Government set national standards and enforce and administer them itself.

Those are some of the difficulties we have with the Bill. It is an extremely important Bill but it really will not do the kind of job that, first, we were promised it would do, and second, the kind of job that needs to be done in Canada if we are to protect the environment.

We welcome certain provisions in the Bill. It is a step forward but it is not what was promised. It is not adequate. It contains weaknesses that we feel should be improved. We hope the Government will take a second look at it and that the Minister will revise it with a view to trying to do what he said he would do in the beginning, with a view to giving us a good, solid piece of legislation that will do the job that needs to be done.

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to hear the Hon. Member endorse this legislation that is designed to protect the environment. We appreciate that the speakers from the Opposition have endorsed this Bill in principle.

The Bill results from consultation which took place, using draft legislation, in December of 1986. Meetings were held right across the country, and written submissions were received as well. Upon reflecting on those meetings and submissions, the Minister made changes. When we took office in 1984 we said we were going to consult with the provinces and individual Canadians and, indeed, we have. We can be very proud of this legislation.

As the Hon. Member indicated, there has been some merging of legislation. He also said that is really all it is. However, it is much more than just that. Bill C-74 is the strongest piece of environmental legislation ever brought before this country. We are very proud of the fact that this Bill has teeth. Offences under this Act will be punished by fines and/or jail sentences.

As well, I hope the Member recognizes the importance of individuals being able to bring complaints to the Minister and the fact the Minister must respond. He talked about the discretion of the Minister, but when 12 people bring forward a complaint about a particular environmental situation the Minister must respond. That is a very important part of the legislation and I hope the Hon. Member will reflect on that fact.

This is not just a merging of legislation. It contains some new and very strong provisions which will indeed protect the environment.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary but I do not believe that the teeth she claims are in the Bill, or the process she has alluded to, are adequate. She has said citizens can bring forward complaints and the Minister has to respond. All well and good. Yet we do that every day. We get up for an hour in this House asking questions and the Minister has to respond. That is part of our system and there is nothing really new in it.

If you apply for a TV licence there is a public hearing. Officials have to sit there and listen to what you have to say. Is this good for the community or bad? How should it be changed? Even with the granting of a TV licence, which is not nearly as important as the protection of the environment, our legislation has at least a minimum of teeth. Yet even that, in my experience, has not always been adequate. There are things we can improve. I am just using this as an example, but the CRTC has to have a series of public hearings where people can come and present their views so we can hear the other side. There is a public process of examination.

We need something that goes beyond simple complaints coming to the Minister to which he has to reply. There have to be stronger provisions for public participation in the process so they can make their views known. Let the officials try and defend themselves. That is the kind of teeth we would like to see in the legislation. This may be a step forward but it is not as large a stride as you used to make, Mr. Speaker, on the football field when you were in your heyday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no further questions or comments, debate.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to speak on this Bill. As the Parliamentary Secretary said, this is probably the strongest environmental Bill brought forward by the Government of Canada. Yet that just indicates the conscious neglect of previous Governments. It certainly does not mean this Bill is adequate.

Canadians are looking for the protection of their total environment. They care about that. They are not looking just for protection against toxic substances. We need a bill of rights to protect the environment. I feel strongly about the fact that we were given stewardship over this planet, but not just to exploit and then destroy. I congratulate the Government on bringing this Bill forward, but it is tragic that it has not shown the necessary leadership and given us a Bill which would really be a bill of rights for the protection of our environment.

I represent an area familiar with these problems. Hamilton Harbour contains many contaminants in its sediment. We know 28 per cent of the fish in the harbour have lip cancer. That fact helps us to recognize the existence of health hazards there. Yet there is nothing in this Bill which says that you as an individual can prove that damage. Yes, a corporation can do it. It looks to commercial protection but not the safety and health of individuals. We feel very strongly that individuals should have the ability to launch a complaint and take action against the people contaminating the environment, whoever that may be. It is important that the legislation be in place so that action can be taken.

Environmental groups should be consulted. We have a wealth of knowledge among people who have devoted many hours of their lives to determine what kind of policy would protect our environment. Yet there is nothing in this Bill that says those people should be recognized as people who know what they are talking about. We have to care about what happens in our environment here in Canada. We speak of acid rain and other similar problems internationally. Yet we do not really take a strong stand on the issue of how we are destroying our own environment. It is crucial that we look at this and decide there are steps we can take.

We as a Party would love to participate in the process of putting amendments forward to strengthen this Bill. The necessary amendments would allow for public participation, consultation with environmental groups, as well as allowing the individual to complain. As an example, we know how heavily contaminated Hamilton Harbour is. There has been a passing of the buck from one body of government to another. There is nothing in this Bill which strengthens federal powers to clean up and protect the environment.

The Act provides that if you develop cancer from swimming in the Hamilton Harbour and can prove that that is where the cancer came from, you can take action against the Government. Surely we should be looking at prevention rather than taking action after the fact. It is very important that we are able to take action when contaminants are being put into our waters, our air, and our earth rather than waiting until the death sentence has been imposed on people because of that contamination.

The environment has become one of the greatest concerns of the people of Canada. The public is ahead of the politicians and legislators. It is very important that we recognize their desire for a clean environment and to protect this planet so that we can pass on to future generations a legacy of which we can be proud.

We believe strongly that the Act should enable the public to have some influence in the decision-making process. We believe that the powers of the Minister are too broad and can, therefore, be very discriminatory in individual and collective cases. We also believe that there must be a process for discussions with environmental groups. This Bill must enable the people of Canada to take action and be guaranteed protection.

The Bill has consolidated several Acts which could amount to an environmental protection Bill. However, the result has been that some of our environmental protection legislation has been weakened. At this time in our history we need a very strong environmental protection Act. We should be responding to the priorities of Canadians. We must recognize that once the environment is destroyed it is gone forever.

As a result of post-war development we paved over very precious agricultural land. We have bemoaned that tragedy since. A strong environmental protection Act now would keep us from weeping and wailing years from now, saying it is too bad that we did not put some clout into this Act, asking why we did not care enough. I am sure that Members on both sides of the House have received letters in support of strengthening the Act and ensuring that protection exists so that we will no longer have to apologize for the things which are happening in our environment.

We have contaminated the beautiful Hamilton Harbour and yet we are still not willing to enact legislation to ensure that it is cleaned up. There have been all sorts of recommendations made that we return the Harbour to its previous state in order that people can enjoy it, as our grandparents did. This Act gives us no ability to do that.

We are still talking about preventing toxic substances from entering our environment rather than protecting the environment as a whole or cleaning it up. I find it very difficult to believe that this Bill was drafted without the inclusion of herbicides. We have recognized the danger of the use of herbicides. We know this has harmed health. We have stopped using herbicides in many areas because we were no longer willing to accept the destruction they were causing.

It is also difficult to believe that the Bill does not identify any kind of nuclear substance or radiation. We know that those elements have caused a lot of problems. Research on them is ongoing. Extensive research is being done on low-level radiation. We are very concerned about the genetic problems which they can cause. We know that if the gene bank is destroyed in the human family we will be facing very serious problems.

We should be saying that we care enough about our environment, our country, and our planet that we will not continue on this road of destruction which we have been travelling at a very high speed over the last number of generations. Instead of that we are saying that after destruction has taken place, providing it has caused some type of commercial damage, charges can be laid to stop the destruction, but by then it will be too late.

We know that treatment is much more expensive than prevention. We have the ability to enact a very strong Bill which will protect our environment for many years to come if only we have the political will to do it. We know how people feel about the environment. We know that they care. Therefore, why are we not enacting legislation which will protect the environment for the future?

In conjunction with talking about the environment and this Bill, we must talk about the ability to strengthen federal powers. This has been discussed in the committee on the environment and on the Meech Lake Accord. People have been talking about how we can unify our nation. That is a common goal throughout the country and there is no doubt in my mind that the environment is another.

On this issue the Government can take a strong stand and show the leadership which is so important right now. It can have the courage, which previous Governments did not have, to enact legislation that will really protect the environment, not legislation that will only limit the introduction of toxic substances; a bill of rights for the environment so that people will be protected with ongoing legislation.

We must ensure that people do not have to become terminally ill before they can take action against polluters. It is possible to do these things, but not with this Act. Unless we are willing to accept some amendments that will strengthen the Bill, we are really saying, yes we are ready to give some type of cosmetic support to your concerns about the environment, but we are not ready to take action and say that for us as a nation it is a priority and for us the time has come. Many of us recognize that it is not a case of the time having come, but of the time having long past. We recognize that the time is long past by the type of illnesses we have seen, and when we look at the air that has been so badly polluted.

We have taken some steps in beginning to restrict some of the emissions from our industrial plants. Certainly, I have seen an improvement in the air pollution in Hamilton Mountain, but not to the extent I would like to see. When we have a resource that is as beautiful as the harbour itself, we should recognize that there is nothing in the legislation that would help us clean up that harbour or help us restore it to the state that it was when our grandparents were there, or to make us realize at long last that these are the resources that we can enjoy and use in a very positive manner for future generations.

Citizens must have some type of input, and there must be public participation. Over the years my experience both as a local politician and working on committees has been that very often we get a great sense of knowledge, direction, and problem solving from our communities. The grass roots are living with the problem on a day-to-day basis. They have recommendations and the ability to spend a lot of time and study and know the types of things that are affecting their immediate communities, and the types of things they can do about it.

I do not think that it was the bodies of government or the bureaucrats in the country that brought to the fore the dangers of herbicides. It was the people who were starting to have reactions within their own systems, and who saw the effects on their families and children—they made their presentations. In many cases in the communities across the country they had sit-ins. They refused to let the people spray their parks and their environment. At that point people became aware that there might be a problem with herbicides. We then started to look at the research and recognized that there is a problem.

This is one time when we do have the ability to do something, and not just wait to react. With this Bill we have the ability to put in some strong amendments to make sure it has broad scope, that we do have a bill of rights for the environment, that we do recognize it is the individual's rights that are being eroded by contamination pollutants, and that herbicides and all types of low-level radiation must be recognized as pollutants and contaminants.

We also must recognize that there is a need for public participation, for consultation with the environmental groups to protect the wealth of resources in this country from the commercial factories that may figure it is too expensive for them to stop polluting and, therefore, they can take a case and defend themselves against it. We must look at what we are attempting to do.

I would hope that the Government recognizes that it is the people of Canada that it wishes to protect, and it is this planet that we have been so blessed with.

I wish to urge the Government to accept some strong amendments to this Bill in order that we who have been part of this legislative body can feel proud in the future to know that we have put some protection there for our children and grandchildren, and to say that we do recognize the beauty of the creativity of this planet.

Ms. Mitchell: I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar). On this side of the House we are very proud, and I am sure her constituents also feel the same when she speaks out so strongly on these issues. I particularly liked the reference of the Hon. Member to a bill of rights for environmental protection.

Coming from the Lower Mainland of Vancouver where we have the beautiful basin of the Fraser River and the Fraser Valley, I was particularly interested in her comment that one of the pollutants we sometimes forget about is blacktop. In our community it is appalling.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not wish to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I would appreciate it if she would return to her own seat, unless there has been a change in the seating arrangement. I know there have been some changes in the New Democratic Party. If the Hon. Member would return to her seat, I will recognize her again.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I have now returned to my proper place.

I was commenting on the Hon. Member's reference to blacktop as a pollutant, and the fact that in my community of greater Vancouver it is indeed a very vicious pollutant which is covering very lush farmlands and thus depriving us of produce.

In the Hon. Member's community of Hamilton Mountain, and the surrounding area, which is an area I grew up in and certainly recall with fond memories, I wish to ask the Hon. Member if there are any problems concerning the farm lands as far as pollution is concerned, and particularly protections from the acid rain hazards.

Ms. Dewar: I passed over it lightly, but it is important that not only is acid rain destroying our environment on an international basis, but we must be very strict in our own domestic legislation to ensure that the acid rain problem is solved because of what it is doing to our own agriculture. I have seen some of the blight that has happened to the beautiful orchards in the communities surrounding Hamilton Mountain. It has literally wiped out whole orchards, and it is very serious.

We cannot allude to problems of the environment only on an international basis, and ignore the fact that we do not have the type of strict legislation in this country that would allow us to go to the international forum and talk about what we have implemented to restrict our people from contaminating our environment. In that manner we will have a much stronger voice internationally.

The tragedy that is happening is not only with acid rain, but also with the types of pollutants that have been emitted over the years from industrial plants. We have found that we can put in protection, and the emissions do not need to be at the high level that they have been in the past. Interestingly enough, industrial plants can still produce their products without having to contaminate us. Perhaps the profits may not be quite as high, but they are still adequate, and certainly that will protect the planet for future generations.

Mr. Heap: I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar), and enjoyed what she said. In Toronto there is a harbour and islands. It is quite a few years since I went with my children to swim in the waters off the north shore of Centre Island in Toronto Harbour, and the way it is going I may be able to walk on it before I ever swim in it again.

Toronto City Council has been considering methods of cleaning up the harbour and the Commissioner of Public Works has worked out figures on how many people would be employed in the work that would be necessary to clean it up. However, it is something that is considered rather beyond the budget of even a large city like Toronto.

The question that has been raised is whether the federal Government would help with that clean-up, since it is a harbour and to that degree under federal control. I wonder if there are similar discussions going on in Hamilton about specific plans for cleaning up Hamilton Harbour?

There are many, many recommendations for cleaning up our pollution, and it may be that the public works department of Hamilton has some ideas of what could be done, but less idea of where to find the money. I wonder if the Hon. Member can comment on the question of the funding problem for the clean-up that would be necessary?

Ms. Dewar: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there has been a very clear plan put in place for the clean-up of the harbour. I guess my concern about this Bill is that it does not address any kind of pollutants that are already in place. It talks about toxic substances that are going to be put into the environment but does not talk about any kind of remedial work for pollutants that are already in place.

There have been recommendations from the regional Government of Hamilton—Wentworth, as well as from the city itself and the province and, certainly, federal representatives. They all agree that it is possible to clean-up the harbour, but one passes the buck to the other and there is no legislation in place stiff enough to say, they have to get on with it because this is a priority. My feeling is that the citizens in the community are saying that they recognize that other things might have to go by the board to clean up our harbour, but they feel it is important enough that they want to enact those kinds of studies and the recommendations that come from those studies.

If we stiffened up this Bill the opportunities would be there to say that action must be taken, and there would be some respect for the citizens of the community. I really think Hamilton deserves this. We deserve to be able to use our harbour the way we could use it. The Hon. Member is right, children can no longer swim in the harbour. If they do, there is danger, and we know what the danger is, we know the health hazards. I really think the opportunity is ours now. We could put in some amendments to this Bill that would give it the kind of strength that would set the priorities, not just for the federal Government, but it would help the municipal and provincial Governments to enact what the priorities are of the people of Hamilton themselves, and the people of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now terminated.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, although it does not make me particularly happy to say it, I have to note that this is not a Government which has given Canada very strong or effective leadership in dealing with some of our nation's very serious environmental concerns and problems. Although we have a Minister who is very good at political preening and prancing, he has done very little with his responsibilities on a wide range of environmental issues that are of considerable concern to Canadians. I have in mind the control of toxic chemicals and the effect they have on human health. I have in mind acid rain which is causing such drastic damage to the forests in the part of Canada I represent in this House. I am thinking as well of Great Lakes water quality control.

Rather than having done much in the last three years since the Government was elected in terms of positive action towards creating a wholesome, healthy and clean environment, the Government has gone the other way in many cases. For example, we know it has made some very deep cuts to the environmental budget. We know it has ended funding for the Guelph—Toronto Toxicology Research Centre, and we know it has gutted the Canadian Wildlife Service.

I am concerned that the Government is withholding information about what is going on at the renegotiations of the Great Lakes Water Quality Control Agreement. I am concerned because there is clearly a pattern developing, as exemplified by the Meech Lake Accord and by the free trade fiasco, that the Government is quite prepared to give away a great deal and receive very little in return. I am nervous that the Great Lakes Water Control Agreement may be going the same way.

However, in the dying days of the Government we finally get for purposes of debate Bill C-74, an environmental Bill. The Minister dares to describe it as the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. He dares to describe it as a protection Act. We know it is going to do very little to protect the environment. This EPA is really more of an environmental propaganda Act.

A number of very important environmental groups and organizations put out a press release in which they said that Canadians want a real environmental protection Act, that the content of the proposed Act does not merit the title "Canadian Environmental Protection Act". The federal Government must assert its responsibility to protect the environment for its own sake. This group went on to say that Canadians put protection of the environment at the top of their priorities and it is time this Government did the same.

I agree with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) who delivered an impressive speech this morning. I agree with her that Canadians want, expect and deserve very strong action from their federal Government in terms of protecting the environment. They want an environmental protection Act, but I would argue that what they are getting in Bill C-74 is really an environmental deception Act.

As I said, this is the first time we have had the Government bring forward a Bill regarding the environment which was debatable. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill is not much. Whenever the House has turned its attention in the last three years to questions about the environment and the state it is in, it has usually been because motions have been brought forward by one or the other of the Opposition Parties. That is when we have had vigorous debate in this House on the environment.

As you know, Sir, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), has been very diligent and vigorous in the defence of a clean environment, whether air, water or land. He has become Canada's best known watchdog on the environment. He is a respected individual who regularly brings to the attention of this Parliament our fears and concerns about the environment. In contrast to that, we have a Minister who eulogizes, sermonizes and stage manages concerns about the environment. All of that gives us very little in the way of any forward movement.

You are signalling, Mr. Speaker, that we are going to the next stage of our proceedings. I will complete my remarks when we resume debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 19(4)—

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, before the Ontario Provincial Court last May the Bank of Canada, the National Research Council, the Department of Transport, and the Department of Supply and Services were accused of breaking the law by dumping toxic waste into the Ottawa River. We have learned this week that charges against these departments and agencies have been tossed out because the environment protection legislation does not apply to the federal Government. The very fact that it does not abide by its own legislation goes to show to what extent the Conservative Government could not care less about the rights of Canadian men and women to live in a pollution-free environment.

How can this Government condone environmental pollution while at the same time spending $74 million under a tripartite agreement aimed at cleaning up the Ottawa River? Last June the federal Government tabled a legislative measure which is designed to protect the environment, human life and health and which is so severe that it provides life terms and unlimited fines in cases of crimes against the environment. If all Canadians are to be subject to the proposed legislation, so should the Canadian Government.

PLANNED PARENTHOOD WEEK

IMPORTANCE OF EDUCATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, this week is Planned Parenthood Week and the theme is "Your sexuality lasts a lifetime: Make it healthy". President Norma Buchan states:

> With the current public focus on the negative aspects of sexual activity such as unplanned pregnancy and the spread of AIDS and other sexually-transmitted diseases, a positive health-oriented approach to sexuality is more important than ever. Education and awareness are the first steps to a healthier sexual life-style.

Canada is very fortunate that such a responsible and dedicated organization as Planned Parenthood of Canada is active in our communities. I commend it for its excellent work, which is acknowledged in an international comparative study to be published next month.

Canada, Australia, France and Italy tie for third place out of 15 developed countries in providing family planning programs. Although we rate lower on the availability of abortion, sex education in schools, and contraceptive information, much of the credit for our relatively respectable standing among developed nations should go to Planned Parenthood of Canada.

RESEARCH

CONVERSION OF USED TIRES INTO SOURCE OF ENERGY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, what do you do with 21 million used tires? That is the number that Canadians discard annually. Only so many of these can be used for dock bumpers. The balance remain to pollute our landscape or, if burned, they pollute our air.

However, a solution might well be on its way. Pilot-scale testing of a new vacuum pyrolysis technique which turns old tires into valuable carbon black and pyrolytic oils which can be further upgraded into heating oils and high octane additives shows a great deal of promise.

Private industry, universities, the Centre de recherche industrielle du Québec, and the Department of Energy, Mines and resources have contributed to this research which, hopefully, will turn an environmental problem into new industrial opportunities and new jobs for Canadians.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY ELECTION PROMISES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, at least one Canadian is fed up with empty rhetoric and Tory promises. I read today in The Toronto Sun that an individual by the name of John Ruffolo is suing the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for $90 for breaching campaign promises to increase the efficiency of the Post Office.

There are 338 Tory promises in the little book that I have in my hand, most of which have not been delivered. At $90 a promise for 338 undelivered promises, it will be a very expensive proposition for the Conservative Party. I suggest that the Conservative Party start making out cheques right now to every single Canadian who has been disappointed by its performance.

TRADE

FREE TRADE—SOCIALISTS' POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, for two and a half years now the socialists have been denouncing our free trade negotiations and the $95 billion market developed by Canada's enterprising business community. The socialists do not want to hear anything about it, yet they often illegally fill their own coffers with the union dues of automobile workers who are already protected by free trade.

Still they continue to claim that other Canadian workers should not have access to the lucrative American market. So where is their logic, Mr. Speaker?

For the past two and a half years the socialist leader has been campaigning hard against free trade, but now he wants an emergency debate. If we make abstraction of the rhetoric, Mr. Speaker, should we not conclude that the socialist leader's vision of Canada does not extend beyond the automobile workers?

Everything for the Oshawa riding! The socialist leader is prepared to trample on anything to be reelected in Oshawa, to the extent that we have to wonder whether his name might be on the Canadian Auto Workers' secret payroll.

STATUS OF WOMEN

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, a free trade agreement with the United States will undoubtedly affect employment opportunities for women. Women's groups are very concerned about the exact repercussions of a free trade deal. Eighty per cent of jobs in banking and communications are held by women. Two out of three women in manufacturing work on textiles, clothing, electrical equipment or food processing. All of these industries are endangered if free trade negotiations are reopened.

[Translation]

What measures does the Government intend to take to provide new opportunities for these women, many of them being middle aged? When will the Government announce that retraining courses and labour adjustment funds will be available to them? What kind of jobs can these women expect to have in the future?

[English]

How can the Government claim a commitment to economic equality for women when these questions remain unanswered? I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to take advantage of the present break in negotiations and to call a complete end to further free trade discussions.

LITERACY

FUNCTIONALLY ILLITERATE—SCHOOL CURRICULA QUESTIONED

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on September 10, 1985, I made a statement concerning the Parkdale Literacy Project and its efforts to eradicate illiteracy.

Recent reports have told us that the problem of illiteracy is greater than we imagined, with some 25 per cent of Canadians considered to be functionally illiterate. In Metro Toronto 33 per cent of all men and 22 per cent of women are illiterate. Even more disturbing is the report that more than one-half of the 4.5 million functionally illiterate said that they attended high school, and one-third claimed to have graduated.

The important question raised by these reports is why our education system is failing. Are the fundamentals of reading and writing not stressed adequately in school curricula? Are young people who encounter difficulties in school because of their lack of language skills dropping out instead of seeking help? These questions must be answered.

Literacy should be considered a basic right for all Canadians. By working together, with all levels of government, in co-operation with educational authorities, we can win the fight to eradicate illiteracy in Canada. Only then will all Canadians be truly equal.

LABOUR NEGOTIATIONS—REFERENCE TO ECONOMIC WARFARE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when I questioned the Minister responsible for the Post Office in the House the other day he referred to the Post Office labour negotiations as economic warfare. We do not need images of a battlefield when we are dealing with collective bargaining negotiations. We would prefer if the Minister looked at them, if he wishes to use such images, as a peace conference, as a way of resolving disputes through talk rather than through promoting confrontation by provocation.

The conciliator made his report public. One of the things that became evident from this report is that we are not just dealing with a matter of a collective bargaining relationship. We are dealing with a matter of government policy. The key obstacles to bringing about a settlement at the Post Office are matters of public policy. They are the Government's commitment to viewing the Post Office as a private profit-making business. They are the Government's commitment to franchising-out post offices.

These items of policy have to be changed in order that there are fewer hurdles to a negotiated settlement at the Post Office, so that postal service can continue and so that people can get the service that they deserve. The Government has to wake up and realize that the Post Office is a public service.

EXTERNAL AID

GOVERNMENT'S ACCEPTANCE OF COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) and the Department of External Affairs for their positive response to the report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade regarding Canada's official development assistance policies. The report is entitled, "For Whose Benefit?"

• (1110)

As a member of the standing committee, I was pleased to participate and contribute to one of the most important, in-depth reports which took 12 months of study. Our Government has fully accepted 98 of the recommendations made in the report, agreed in part to 13, and rejected only 4.

To respond effectively to the needs of developing countries, the Government has agreed to concentrate on human resource development, to adopt a new system of determining country eligibility, to untie more Canadian aid programs, and to decentralize CIDA administration. This strategy will improve aid delivery and better respond to the needs of Third World countries.

Saskatchewan food aid procurement is among the highest in Canada, selling many of its commodities to CIDA for Third World distribution. The response to the Government's recommendations from NGOs across the country, and particularly in the Province of Saskatchewan, has been very positive and supportive.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

PROPOSED INCREASE IN BENEFITS FOR SURVIVING SPOUSES AND DEPENDENT CHILDREN

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the consultation paper tabled in the House yesterday by the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) dealing with proposed changes to the Canada Pension Plan.

These proposals, which are the result of discussions between federal and provincial Governments, increase CPP benefits for surviving spouses under the age of 65 and for dependent children.

The paper proposes an across-the-bord increase of almost $100 per month in survivors' pensions for spouses under age 65, bringing the maximum pension to $385.15 per month. For the first time spouses under 45 years of age would qualify for the same benefits as those between ages 45 and 65.

The paper's other main proposals increase the amount for dependent children of deceased and disabled contributors to the plan to $121.48 per month from $94.79.

This is just a further example of continuing improvements and reforms to the Canada Pension Plan for which I congratulate the Government.

HOUSING

PLIGHT OF HOMELESS IN TORONTO

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, we recently had a conference in Ottawa on the subject of homelessness, and we recently heard through the media how the former Mayor of Toronto went through the park near his home early one morning and found over 40 people sleeping there because they had no other place to sleep.

An Hon. Member: By choice.

Mr. Heap: There is some well fed person across the way who says they are sleeping there from choice. I challenge him to go to that park and ask those men whether they are sleeping there by choice.

There is a very severe shortage of housing for people of middle and low incomes in Toronto. Traditionally there has been empty accommodation among some of the recently built and expensive condominiums, and anybody with $200,000 or $300,000 is welcome to bid for them, but for those without there is a great shortage of housing.

A few years ago Toronto City Council planned, through its responsibility for municipal planning, that Harbourfront would include a great deal of assisted housing. The management of Harbourfront under federal direction has mostly squeezed that out. I call upon the Government to reverse that injustice.

IMMIGRATION

ACCEPTANCE OF REFUGEES—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, tonight in an interview with Doug Small on the Global Television Network, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is going to say the following: "Canada needs more immigrants. We need and should be accepting more refugees, but this has to take place in a system of respect for the law". He is going to go on further to say that accepting more refugees in our country will be the wave of the future. This will be aired tonight on the Global Television Network.

We do not want queue-jumpers, or ship captains dealing illegally in human flesh, at our borders as we saw this summer. That was one of the reasons the House was recalled.

Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 dealt with the issue. They have been considered in the House and will be considered by the Senate. I want the Senate to pass these Bills so that we can get on with the job of building the country with new Canadians.

In 1832 a man named Mike Grimes came to this country from Tipperary, southern Ireland, and he settled around the area of Kingsmere where your home now is, Mr. Speaker. He was a tree cutter and lived to be 93 years old. He grew up in the area around Kingsmere, Old Chelsea, and King Mountain.

My mother is one of his descendants. She was Nora May Grimes. If that man had not come here to this new country, to build this land, to cut trees, and to develop the Ottawa Valley 155 years ago—and in fact he is buried at St. Stephen's Church in Old Chelsea—I would not be here today.

My ancestry goes back to that evolution. That man came here as a new Canadian, a new person, to develop the land. My Irish descent is strong in me.

I hope the wave of the future will be well recognized by the new people who come here to build this land, to make it a healthier and happier one for all of us.

TRADE

EFFECT ON CANADIAN ECONOMY OF UNITED STATES PROTECTIONIST ACTIVITY

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, with the recent suspension of the free trade talks, a lot of hopes of New Brunswickers have been dashed. They were looking forward to seeing more open doors between our provinces in eastern Canada and our neighbours to the south.

Certainly the Government of Canada cannot be faulted for making efforts to try to reach a successful resolution to the problems facing Canada, as we see more and more protectionist activity in the United States putting up tariff barriers and countervail duties against our raw materials and resources.

What has happened to softwood lumber in eastern Canada is an excellent example of why we should be discussing, with our neighbours to the south, the problems we are having with regard to trade.

Luckily, because of the efforts of the Government of Canada through the Department for International Trade, we have received an exemption for 85 per cent of our softwood lumber producers. However, there is still much hardship to be faced by some of these producers if we are not able to get a complete exemption for softwood producers of the Maritimes. It is a good example of what protectionist activity in the United States is causing to happen in Canada.

I hope those people who have been very critical of our efforts to reach a free trade agreement will stand up when the time comes, as we face more and more protectionist activity by the United States Congress against our raw materials and resources which are extremely important for jobs throughout Canada.

The Government should be commended for the efforts it has put forward and should be encouraged to get the door open so that we can continue with the talks which are so important to Canadians.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

SUSPENSION OF CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—POSSIBLE REOPENING OF TALKS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, in the deepened hope that we will be able to get some straight answers for a change in the House of Commons.

Yesterday the Prime Minister refused to give any indication of what might be the plan of the Government in relation to the negotiations that have been suspended with the United States. Yet, outside the House, the Prime Minister's press secretary surreptitiously slipped out information that meetings were being held at the highest level.

My attempt this morning is to see if we can get answers in the House of Commons and not through the sidelong glances of a press secretary.

Specifically I should like to ask the Minister of Finance is he undertaking meetings with Secretary of the Treasury Baker to speak explicitly about the free trade negotiations? Does he have a mandate from the Prime Minister and Cabinet to try to restart those negotiations?

In particular, will the Minister of Finance tell us what kind of concessions the Government of Canada is planning as a way of inducing the Americans back into the talks?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should know that the meetings which I will be having this weekend and early next week in Washington are part of the regular annual meetings of the IMF, the World Bank, and the Group of Seven.

These meetings have been planned for a number of months, in fact years. There is nothing special about that. I will see Mr. Baker during the course of these meetings, but at this point it is strictly to talk about matters relating to the international debt issue, to the progress we have made in dealing with some of the problems with sub-Saharan Africa, to consider a proposal by the managing director of the IMF, and things like that that are related to the international debt situation.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. I believe it is fair to say that he strains the credulity of the House and of Canadians generally to assume that he is to have a little tête-à-tête with Secretary of the Treasury Baker and not discuss the most important issue between our two countries at the present time.

What kind of guff are we being given this morning in the House? Will the Secretary of the Treasury and the Minister of Finance discuss the opportunity to start negotiations again, or has the Government clearly said that no further negotiations are to be undertaken? Why does the Minister of Finance not come clean for a change?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am being very direct with the Hon. Member. He may not like the answers I am giving him, but I am giving him direct answers.

There are no tête-à-têtes planned between Mr. Baker and myself. We will be meeting as part of the broader meetings of the Group of Seven, and at the IMF and World Bank meetings. That is the sum total of the meetings and that is the direct response to the Hon. Member's question.

CANADIAN POLICY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise another glaring contradiction that has occurred. The Prime Minister said in the House yesterday that he thought it would be inappropriate for him to meet with President Reagan. However, in an interview he gave to La Presse last evening, reported today, he said he thinks that maybe they should have a meeting. Furthermore, he went on to declare that the Government is prepared to water down its position on a dispute settlement mechanism—the mechanism does not have to be binding and it can be brought in gradually.

Is what is really happening right now that the only softening up that is going on is not with Americans but with the Canadian people? Is the Government not really trying to pave the way so that it can make further concessions to get its free trade deal? Is that not really what is taking place?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Of course not, Mr. Speaker. The situation is quite clear. The negotiator for Canada suspended negotiations because the proposals then on the table from the United States were not acceptable to Canada. It is up to the United States to make new proposals if it wants to have the negotiations continue. Those new proposals have not been received. The ball is very much in its court. I think that has been made clear to the House of Commons by the Prime Minister, and is clear to everyone willing to understand.

FREE TRADE—ARTICLES PUBLISHED IN TWO MONTREAL NEWSPAPERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, may I again direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister and seek clarification on the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement impasse?

Yesterday the Prime Minister told the House that the ball is in the American court and ruled out the possibility of a summit meeting with the American President. Indeed he told the House, as reported in The Gazette of Montreal:

[English]

—"PM rules out meeting Reagan now".

A few hours later in Montreal he met with the editorial staff of La Presse and said the opposite: "Mulroney says he is prepared to meet with Reagan". No wonder we are asking questions! Who is telling the truth, La Presse or The Gazette of Montreal?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot vouch for the accuracy of reports published by La Presse and The Gazette of Montreal, but I can speak for the Prime Minister and the Government. Yesterday the Prime Minister told the House, and I quote:

[English]

It would be, I think, inappropriate at this time and perhaps unhelpful at this very moment for the President and myself or anyone else at that level to get involved.

That is the position of the Government of Canada as stated in the House and as stated in Montreal. Just so that the House understands the situation, if there were ever to be any meeting on a higher level, it would occur only after a change in the United States position.

[Translation]

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister accurately quoted the Prime Minister on page 9286 of Hansard, and I quote word for word:

It would be, I think, inappropriate at this time and perhaps unhelpful at this very moment for the President and myself or anyone else at that level to get involved.

Here is my question: Who is this person? Is it Derek Burney who spoke to Mr. Howard Baker and submitted the five Canadian conditions? Were there negotiations yesterday afternoon?

What I want to know is this: Is the Canadian public being manipulated? Is public opinion being manipulated by this Government, because on one hand they would have us believe that negotiations have broken off, and on the other that negotiations are being handled by the No. 1 man in the Prime Minister's Office, Derek Burney, and that there are five conditions to the resumption of negotiations? Who is telling the truth?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is no. The Government of Canada did not submit five conditions—nor three nor seven—since the chief negotiator suspended negotiations.

I know there have been rumours, but they are false. Of course, certain Americans and certain Canadians do have conversations and that is quite normal. But the essential point to resume negotiations is a change in the American position, and it is up to the Americans to get in touch with us on that issue.

POSSIBLE FUTURE ACTION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, The Washington Post reports today that President Reagan and his top trade advisers decided at a meeting that the President should not call the Prime Minister in order to initiate some further action with respect to the free trade talks. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he can guarantee to the House that neither he nor Derek Burney, who is also going to Washington, will be making further concessions and contacts with the White House administration in order potentially to sell out Canada by trying to get these talks restarted on bended knee.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Hon. Member, travelling at high speed, has smashed into a brick wall and is showing the consequences.

The situation is very clear. The Hon. Member may try to distort it if it serves his ideological purposes but the situation is quite clear. We have entered into negotiations that we believe, if they succeed, will be very much in the interests of Canada. They are at a point of impasse. They are at that point of impasse because the position last put forward by the United States is not a position that Canada can accept.

We hope that the United States will change its position. That is up to the United States to decide. It is up to the Americans to communicate that to us.

I make the point in passing that the United States cannot seriously expect to make the progress it says it seeks in multilateral trade negotiations if it will content itself with the position it left at the table in its negotiations with its most important trading partner, Canada.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, at least we recognize a brick wall when we see one.

PRIME MINISTER'S NEWSPAPER INTERVIEW

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whoever has decided to speak for the Government on this issue to comment with respect to the so-called exclusive interview with the Prime Minister last night by La Presse in which the Prime Minister took some major steps backward in a commitment to an immediate binding dispute mechanism which he previously said was crucial to any solution to the free trade talks. He said—

[Translation]

"We must be in a position to introduce, perhaps in stages, a mechanism which will have a beneficial impact for both parties".

[English]

That is a retreat. The Government knows that and I would ask whether or not this is a signal to the United States that such a retreat is taking place on our part.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no retreat, there is no signal, and there is no change in the Hon. Member's infinite capacity for self-delusion.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me in fact that it has been this Government which has been deluded right from the start in hoping to get this agreement.

• (1130)

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, how can the Government expect the Canadian people to believe it when at the same time it says the ball is in the U.S. court it is setting up contacts with U.S. officials? It is sending the Prime Minister's Chief of Staff to Washington, and then softening its demands. Is this not trickery of the Canadian people?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, very frankly, the trickery is in the attempts by that Hon. Member, thankfully not very successfully, to distort what is going on. He is suggesting there has been a setting up of contacts by the Government of Canada with the U.S. There has been no setting up of contacts. What has happened is that because I am a NATO Foreign Minister and George Shultz is a NATO Foreign Minister, and summit Foreign Ministers met earlier this week, we met together. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, is carrying on normal meetings with the U.S. Secretary of the Treasury.

Is it the position of the NDP that because there is an impasse in the trade negotiations we should stop all normal contact with the U.S?

We know Gerry Caplan, the thinker for the NDP, has said we should get out of economic summits. We know it is the position of the NDP to have Canada get out of Europe, NATO and NORAD. We know their policy is to get out of the world, except in southern Africa where they want to resort to violence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are quite rightly confused, to put it gently, about what kind of game the Prime Minister is playing with them. We have the Ottawa Citizen—

Mr. Fennell: A great Liberal paper!

Mr. Tobin: —saying the Prime Minister rules out trade summit with Reagan. The Gazette says the meeting has been ruled out for now. The Toronto Sun says there is a 50/50 chance of a meeting. La Presse says the Prime Minister is ready to meet the President right away. We are wondering what kind of game is being played. Is the Prime Minister trying to manage a trade talk crisis or manipulate the Canadian public?

The Secretary of State for External Affairs said a moment ago there has been no change in the Canadian position with regard to the dispute resolution mechanism. Is he now confirming, then, that the Canadian position is and has been, as the Prime Minister is quoted in La Presse as saying, that Canada is prepared to grant a concession by accepting a dispute settlement mechanism that would be introduced by stages and over an extended period of time? Is he saying that is the position, has been the position all along despite earlier assurances, and therefore there has been no change?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure how I can help the Hon. Member out of his confusion arising from reading too many newspapers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Only the headlines.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Reading the headlines of too many newspapers. He has not yet told us his views on the Sunshine Girl, or as we say in my family, the Sunshine Person.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I would suggest that if he wants to know the position of the Government the best place to find it is in that time-honoured parliamentary publication, Hansard. He will see it there in black and white and it might, if he is able to read words consecutively, clear up his confusion.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: That answer would lead any reasonable Member to wonder about the totality of the acreage between the Minister's ears and come to the conclusion that it is indeed barren ground.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: George Baker for Leader.

Mr. Speaker: Both the Minister and the Hon. Member are at the moment coming out just about equal. Perhaps, if the Hon. Member would put his question directly, we can move on.

NEWSPAPER INTERVIEW

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I would like the Minister to spread a bit of sunshine and light on the question. The Prime Minister is quoted, and you cannot wish away his words, as saying in La Presse last night in an article to be published in full this weekend that he is prepared to consider granting a concession by accepting a dispute settlement mechanism that would be introduced in stages over a period of time. That is a radical departure from what he has been saying for the last several weeks.

The Secretary of State insists on saying there has been no change in the Government's position. Is he telling us that the words spoken by the Prime Minister last night in La Presse are the position which has been put to American negotiators over the last several weeks? If it is, the people of Canada have clearly been conned by their Prime Minister and Government.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me try to identify the question raised. I think it was—

Mr. Tobin: Watch out for swinging doors. Just answer the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am advised to watch out for swinging doors. I think that is much more a problem in the caucus of the Official Opposition than it is here. However, the point is that a dispute resolution mechanism is, in our judgment, essential to the successful conclusion of any negotiations. The Americans know that. What they put forward in the discussions that were suspended—

Mr. Tobin: Is that what we put forward, yes or no?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —if the Hon. Member would just be quiet for a moment—was not acceptable to Canada. It is in their hands—

Mr. Tobin: What did we put forward?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —as to whether or not they will come back with some proposals that are more acceptable to Canada. If they do, we will consider them.

Mr. Tobin: You are not answering, Joe, deliberately, with good reason.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: The font of all knowledge speaks.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Government announced regional economic development agencies for the Atlantic provinces and the West. Once again the Territories seem to be left in limbo. The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion has undertaken a six-month consultation process which the Assembly of First Nations says they will not participate in because in their view the decision has been made.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us when we will see some action on a northern development structure so we can get on with planned economic development?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to a consultation process from which, she says, the AFN has withdrawn. I would bring to her attention that groups in the Yukon have indicated their willingness to participate in the consultation process and we look forward to it. We have the Native Economic Development Program in place and Yukoners are taking advantage of it. We are considering applications right now from that area.

The Hon. Member would be helpful to natives and Yukoners by advising and encouraging them to participate in this consultation process.

CONSULTATION PROCESS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is again directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. His colleague suggests I should be encouraging people to participate in consultation. I should certainly be happy to do so. Over two months ago government leaders wrote the Minister asking what is happening and what consultation will take place. They have received no response. Would he care to comment on that?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the consultation process on DRIE's native economic programs was launched July 24. We have a team which is inviting interested persons from all across the country to make their views known. To my knowledge, groups in the Yukon have indicated that they will participate in that process. We look forward to their views and suggestions.

• (1140)

TOURISM POTENTIAL OF NORTH

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. Tourism is probably the industry with the greatest potential in the North at this time. I understand that the Territorial Government and the Travel Industry Association have been negotiating for some time for a funding agreement with the Minister's Department which would allow for the financing of tourism development. Will those negotiations bear fruit in the near future?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Department has been negotiating with that Government on a tourism subagreement. The Hon. Member has made several representations to our Department. I can assure him that we should be able to make a positive announcement in that regard within the next few days.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

INQUIRY CONCERNING WHICH UNIONS UNDER ILLEGAL SURVEILLANCE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Justice, who reasserted yesterday that the law does not allow the Canadian secret services to spy on the unions. We know however that the CSN was kept under surveillance by secret agent Marc Boivin, and we learned yesterday evening that the former Solicitor General and now Minister of Defence had confirmed in a letter to Mr. Zander, President of the British Columbia Carpenters' Union that his union had also been subject to surveillance.

I would like to ask the Minister if he is ready to recognize that it is time for the Government to throw some light on this scenario which is beginning to sound like a James Bond movie. If unions have been spied on, and two cases have now been confirmed, can the Minister tell us which other unions in Canada have been subject to illegal surveillance?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate the point which I and the Solicitor General have made over the last number of days in response to similar questions. The contention of the Hon. Member is incorrect. The law which governs the operation of CSIS is quite clear in this regard.

Because members of the Progressive Conservative Party were vigilant during the debate on the Liberal legislation setting up CSIS, they were able to bring forward amendments which instituted a series of ways in which the operation of CSIS would be scrutinized and monitored. We have the Security Intelligence Review Committee process. The Solicitor General has augmented this with other examinations of the operations of CSIS. The Inspector General is part of the process of scrutiny to ensure that the agency operates within the bounds of the law.

If the Hon. Member has any specific evidence to justify his contention to the contrary made under the protection of the House, he should do the proper thing, that is, bring it to the proper authorities for investigation by these independent commissions. That would be the proper thing for him to do rather than making general and unsubstantiated allegations on the floor of the House.

REQUEST THAT SURVEILLANCE BE ENDED

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister cannot have it both ways. He cannot say that it is illegal and not have me ask why it is happening all the same. That is the problem. A letter bearing the signature of the former Solicitor General was shown on television last night which confirms that the carpenters' union in B.C. was under surveillance.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Debate.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): That is a fact. If it is illegal, why is it happening just the same? How many other labour unions are being subjected to this Orwellian type of surveillance? When is the Government going to put an end to this?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can only remind the Hon. Member that this specific question has been answered by the Solicitor General. He does not accept the premise of the Hon. Member's question.

My information from the Solicitor General and his Department is that CSIS is operating within the law, within its mandate, within the legal constraints and obligations placed upon it in the legislation which we inherited from the Liberal Government. If we can give any further information to the Hon. Member in order to be of assistance, he need only ask.

Oral Questions

QUEBEC SECURITIES COMMISSION

TELEGLOBE PRIVATIZATION—LAYING OF CHARGES AGAINST MEMOTEC BOARD MEMBERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It is with regard to the privatization of Teleglobe which was sold by the Government to Memotec a few months ago.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that this morning the Quebec Securities Commission laid insider trading charges under Section 178 of the Quebec Securities Act against a number of the board members of Memotec? Amongst those charged was Peter Blaikie, the former National President of the Conservative Party of Canada. Can the Minister confirm this information?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was informed of that transpiration of events just before I entered the House. I have no details on the matter and it would, therefore, be inappropriate for me to comment until such time as those details are ascertained.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has confirmed that this has indeed happened, since Mr. Peter Blaikie is a former National President of the Conservative Party of Canada with many important connections, and since many of the board members have been charged, would the Deputy Prime Minister agree to an inquiry by a parliamentary committee into the sale of Teleglobe?

Mr. Speaker: I draw to the attention of all Hon. Members the clear rule in this place that questions to the Treasury Bench must be directed to some aspect of the administration of government. I regret to have to tell the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville that I believe that, under the circumstances, his question is out of order. The Hon. Member.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, in his capacity as Deputy Leader of the Government would the Deputy Prime Minister not agree to a parliamentary committee investigating the whole matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I thought I had made the position of the Chair very clear. I am always, of course, impressed, and sometimes influenced, by the ingenuity of Members in putting a question in a different way. However, I see no difference in substance between the question the Hon. Member has just asked and the previous one.

I ask Hon. Members to keep in mind that there are rules applying to questions that may be asked. It is my obligation as Speaker to ensure that they are followed. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

PUBLIC WORKS

LEASING OF OFFICE SPACE FOR TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and pertains to the free trade office leasing deal. I hope he will be allowed to answer the question without being interrupted by the Minister of Justice as was the Minister of Public Works yesterday.

On September 23 the Minister of Public Works said in this House, as reported at page 9236 of Hansard:

> The lease was pursued according to the ordinary standards set by Treasury Board.

Is it the position of the Government that paying a Tory friend $50,000 on a leasing deal is an ordinary standard? If so, what is an extraordinary standard? Is it $100,000, $200,000? What is the number?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to that question on behalf of the Minister of Public Works. I remind the Hon. Member that this matter is under current investigation as he well knows.

I again remind him of the admonition of his Leader that personal reputations are involved whenever there is an investigation. His own Leader indicated that we should follow the practice in this House of not commenting on a matter while it is under investigation until charges have been laid, if in fact that happens.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, if that rule applied as the Minister wants, it would preclude us from asking almost anything in this House, particularly bearing in mind the kinds of scandals with which the Government has surrounded itself.

IMPORTANCE OF AMOUNT OF MONEY PAID TO MR. DESROCHERS.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. According to the answers given by the Minister of Public Works yesterday, negotiations on the Metropolitan building were carried out directly between representatives of the Metropolitan and public servants. If this is true, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us why Mr. Gervais Desrochers received $50,000? If he has done nothing as the Government has suggested, why has he been paid $50,000? This is not peanuts.

• (1150)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, on November 30, 1984, when addressing the Solicitor General of the day the Leader of the Opposition stated that he wished the reinstatement of "the practice that used to apply in this House, and I believe still should, reflecting the principle of presumption of innocence until proven guilty" The Leader of the Opposition stated, "He must realize the reflection that announcements of investigations may have on private reputations . . . "

Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should take to heart the advice of his own Leader. The Hon. Member does the House of Commons and its reputation no good by getting into the gutter.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Cannot rise above it.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It concerns leaked documents from the American Paper Institute on the presence of dioxin in ordinary paper products. Since dioxin is an extremely hazardous substance and the processes of production of paper are the same in Canada, I wonder if the Minister would tell the House what inquiries he is undertaking to make sure that Canadian consumers are not exposed to this very hazardous substance in their ordinary paper products?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my Department does not have that responsibility. Under the Hazardous Products Act we have the responsibility of making sure that hazardous products are identified, but not identifying what is or is not hazardous. That would fall under the Department of Health and Welfare. I will communicate the representation of the Hon. Member to the Minister.

DEPARTMENTAL RESPONSIBILITY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Dioxin is a substance that affects waterways and fish, and all types of things that are dealt with in other Departments. Ordinary paper products such as toilet paper, disposable diapers, and writing paper are commonly used products. I do think his Department has some responsibility.

Will the Minister undertake to ensure that consumers, in purchasing these ordinary products, are not exposed to dioxin, a substance to which we have no reason to believe there is any safe exposure? This is something for which his Department ought to be taking responsibility.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I share the Hon. Member's concern about this hazardous material, and the fact that Canadians may be exposed to it through various paper products.

I have to inform the Hon. Member that under the Hazardous Products Act, as passed by Parliament, it is not legally my responsibility. It is the responsibility of the Minister of Health and Welfare.

Perhaps the NDP do not feel that the legal niceties need be obeyed as long as they have pronounced on it.

Ms. Mitchell: Are you not an advocate for consumers?

Ms. McDonald: These are consumer products.

Mr. Andre: I will make the representations to the Minister. I will send the Hon. Member a copy of the Act, and perhaps over the weekend she can read it and acquaint herself with Canadian law.

Ms. Mitchell: Where is your role as an advocate?

Mr. Young: Where is your Minister of Health?

An Hon. Member: Who is speaking for the consumer?

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—ENTRENCHMENT OF MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Justice. It concerns the Meech Lake Accord.

This week the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, the national umbrella organization representing multicultural associations across the country, had the following to say about the Accord. "Our worst suspicions about the process of the hearings were confirmed as the report merely rubberstamped the Accord . . . while we were taken for a ride . . . we cannot sit back and watch multiculturalism being set back for years".

Since multiculturalism, like bilingualism, must be recognized throughout the Constitution and not only in the Charter if we are to truly express and support the full nature of Canadian society, why has the Government adamantly refused to entrench multiculturalism as a fundamental characteristic in the opening clause of the Accord? In an attempt to treat everyone as first-class citizens, can the Minister tell the House that he is prepared to reconsider the position of the Government?

Mr. Daubney: You obviously have not read the report.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): I was very interested in receiving the report of the Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord. I thought that the report addressed the question very well that is raised by the Hon. Member.

As a Member of the House, as is the Hon. Member, who comes from those Canadians who are not of English or French extraction, I feel proud of my country. I am proud of the Constitution, and I am proud of the Meech Lake Accord. It has done much to bind the wounds of this country and bring Quebec back into Confederation.

I know that the Hon. Member is working hard to have his Leader reverse his position and to vote against the Accord. I wish the Hon. Member would do that on the basis of a position that is justifiable, and not one which has been shown to be incorrect.

CANADIAN HERITAGE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of this House, I too am very proud and loyal to my country.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Are you loyal to your Leader?

Mr. Marchi: As a Member of the House, and as a Canadian citizen, I would like to try to make this Constitution better. I believe we could, and I make no apologies for attempting to do that.

Leaving aside the issues in the Accord of the manner in which the country will be governed, and what shape our institutions will take in years to come, I wish to ask the Minister why he is unwilling to promote and proudly depict in the opening clauses of the Accord, the intrinsic heritage of Canadians which is proudly bilingual and proudly multicultural?

Since it is a policy of the federal Government, and a policy promoted by all provinces, does the Minister believe that the entrenchment of such a resolution and recognition in the opening clauses would hurt and dismantle the entire Accord?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am not questioning the motivation of the Hon. Member, and I understand the sentiment with which he indicates his point of view. I think he is wrong. The vast majority of people who have investigated this matter think there is no substance to the contention put forward by the Hon. Member.

I wish to point out to the Hon. Member a couple of things that should bring his some solace. At last we now have a whole country with Quebec as a participant in Confederation.

Ms. Mitchell: What about the Territories?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is an important and historic occurrence.

Secondly, we have now institutionalized constitutional discussion in our country. This means that we can build on the strengths that we have within the Charter of Rights and our Constitution.

On an annual basis we will be addressing these matters with the First Ministers to improve, where we can, the Constitution.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member would do a great service to the Liberal Party of Canada by standing up and giving his unequivocal support for the Meech Lake Accord and voting for the resolution when it comes before the House.

PENITENTIARIES

PROVISION OF HEALTH CARE SERVICES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, nurses, psychologists, and other professionals who work in the health care field in Canada's penitentiaries are dealing with inmates who have been involved in major crimes, including robbery, arson, and rape. Those inmates need help from competent people.

In the absence of the Solicitor General, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will the Government give up the bizarre idea that it can save money for the people of Canada by privatizing this service, getting rid of the people who have had experience and who know what is required, and giving the work to some poorly trained part-time workers who will create tremendous problems for the country and for the inmates?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in answering the Hon. Member on behalf of the Solicitor General, I have to say that the Solicitor General addressed this matter on previous occasions.

My recollection is that in the process of examining the area referred to by the Hon. Member, probably the prime consideration of the Hon. Member is the quality of service which will be given to inmates. The Hon. Member in generalizing in a rather negative way does not state the actual fact and intent of the policy. The so-called privatization can mean a more effective, sensitive and efficient delivery of services in some instances. I know this is contrary to the teachings of the New Democratic Party, but they haven't had an original thought since the 1933 Manifesto.

Mr. Broadbent: It is largely better than never having had an original thought.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North on a short supplementary question.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Does the Minister of Justice not realize that the question I raised has been brought to the attention of the Solicitor General and the Government by the Professional Institute? Its president wrote a letter to the Solicitor General, backed up by a petition signed 1,400 people concerned, in which she said:

> To work competently in a correctional setting requires a repeated, consistent exposure to that environment. An incorrect decision when confronted with a dangerous or life-threatening situation can escalate into tragedy.

That is the opinion of the people who work in the field. So again I ask the Minister if the Government will give up this bizarre idea which is based simply on its ideology that anything done by the private sector is better than that done by the public sector?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the Hon. Member's question. The Conservative Party does not have that particular philosophy. As proof positive of that, I think we were the ones who originated the CBC.

Mr. Broadbent: Socialist!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What can I say?

Mr. Broadbent: Public ownership, holy smoke!

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

FINANCE MINISTER'S MESSAGE TO WASHINGTON MEETING

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Finance, but I see that he has had to leave to catch his plane for Washington to meet the other Ministers of Finance of member countries of the International Monetary Fund and the governors of large central banks. I am sure that his Cabinet colleagues will be able to tell us about the main message which Canada plans to give at the meeting of the International Monetary Fund this weekend. I would like to add that the socialists would do better to listen since the only thing they know about financial matters is how to appropriate workers' funds!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is up to me to reply to direct questions such as the one just asked by my friend for Lévis. A large part of the message of the Minister of Finance at the Washington meeting will certainly deal with the need for the developed countries to continue to co-operate to improve the international economic situation, especially as concerns the Third World debt. As the House is well aware, Canada already plays a major role in this regard. We have just announced forgiveness of a large part of the official debt of francophone African countries and there will be a similar statement for anglophone African countries at the Commonwealth Conference in beautiful Vancouver.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that this will be the last question.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LUBICON BAND—LAND CLAIM—REQUEST FOR RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): My question is directed to the Minister of State for Indian Affairs. I believe that is his title now. It was on September 2 that I again raised in the House the question of the Lubicon Lake Indian Band. The Acting Minister on that date, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, said that a full announcement ought to be made by the Minister himself and that he would advise him to do so.

In view of the serious health problems in that community, in view of the fact that the UN Committee on Human Rights is involved, in view of the fact that there is social disintegration going on at an alarming rate and that this national disgrace is adversely affecting our otherwise good publicity and plans for the Calgary Olympics, is the Minister prepared today or, at the latest, early next week, to make an announcement that the negotiations will be resumed and that the Government will use a report prepared for it by E. Davie Fulton, especially that clause which says all the people in the band should be included in the settlement, not half of them only?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member in his question touches on a whole range of topics which are of interest to the Lubicon Lake Indian Band. He knows the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has expressed his hope that negotiations will recommence, and it is the intention of the Minister to announce the nomination of a negotiator pretty soon in order to ensure that those negotiations can start again.

FRAMEWORK FOR NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): I wonder if the Minister would simply explain to the House how the Government can justify excluding half of the band's members from a land settlement? Will he tell us today that in appointing this negotiator he will also make use of the services of the Hon. E. Davie Fulton as a third person mediator in this tragic dispute?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I do not think we will change the policy of the Government re land claims. We will not negotiate on the floor of the House. We will leave that to the negotiator.

Tabling of Documents

With respect to Mr. Fulton's report, the Department and my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, continue to view his paper to be used as a guide for negotiations.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to nine petitions, Nos. 332-2959 and 332-2991 to 332-2998 inclusive.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the pleasure and obligation to table a petition signed by residents in Canada who visited the famous Byward Market in my riding this summer.

• (1210)

These petitioners would like to have the House consider their petition which states that, whereas since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed on taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular, on medical supplies, dental supplies, snack foods, candies and soft drinks; whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal is studying the possibility of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services, including food; whereas food constitutes a vital element in day-to-day life; and whereas the imposition of this tax could have the effect of seriously penalizing certain categories of taxpayers such as the aged, families, the unemployed, low-income taxpayers and youth; the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

OPPOSITION TO LOCATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS TRANSFER POINT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two different petitions. The first one is from residents of Vancouver East who call on the Government to do away with the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to locate the transfer point for dangerous goods at the Burlington Northern Railway ferry slip in Vancouver East, which presents an extreme hazard to the residents and the workers in the surrounding vicinity. They call on the House of Commons to order the CTC to immediately relocate the transfer of all hazardous commodities to a location outside the inner harbour of Vancouver.

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-204—NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a group of petitions to present from Quebec, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and various parts of Ontario. The petitioners state that, whereas cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for 35,000 deaths each year, and that secondary smoke is implicated in the deaths of 500 involuntary smokers each year, and that Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians from these hazards, they call on Parliament to enact the Non-smokers' Health Act, Bill C-204.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of Oshawa, Lindsay, Whitby, Mississauga, Guelph, North York, Oakville, Milton, Barrie, Minesing, Orillia and Burlington, Ontario. These people point out that cigarette smoking is the major preventable health hazard in Canada and responsible for 35,000 Canadian deaths each year, 500 of which are of involuntary smokers. They point out that Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers.

They therefore humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact the Non-smokers' Health Act, Bill C-204.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions from residents of Manitoba, Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan who recognize that cigarette smoking is one of Canada's major preventable health hazards and is responsible for over 35,000 deaths each year, as well as 500 deaths of involuntary smokers.

The petitioners wish to show that Bill C-204, which seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers, should be supported.

Therefore the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact the Non-smokers' Health Act, Bill C-204.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and responsibility to present a duly certified petition from Canadians living in Williams Lake, Cranbrook, Victoria, Vernon, Calgary, Brandon, Winnipeg, The Pas, Dartmouth, and even Toronto, which points out that cigarette smoking is responsible for the deaths of some 35,000 Canadians each year and is Canada's major preventable health hazard. It is also implicated in the deaths of some 500 involuntary smokers.

Therefore the petitioners call upon Parliament to enact the Non-smokers' Health Act, Bill C-204, which will restrict the promotion of tobacco and guarantee smoke-free air to workers and travellers.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions. One is signed by residents of Manitoba, including residents of the towns of Clearwater, Crystal City and Snowflake. The other is signed by residents of Ontario from St. Thomas, London and other cities. They state that cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for 35,000 Canadian deaths each year.

Therefore they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact the Non-smokers' Health Act, Bill C-204.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I too have a number of petitions to present today all on the same subject. They are signed by residents of such places as Oakville, Kitchener, Nepean and Mississauga, Ontario.

All of the petitioners state that cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for some 35,000 Canadian deaths each year, and that secondary smoke is implicated in the deaths of 500 involuntary smokers each year.

They state that, whereas Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air for Canadian workers and travellers, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact the Non-smokers' Health Act, Bill C-204.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition in which the petitioners indicate that cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for 35,000 Canadian deaths each year—

Mr. McDermid: Don't forget pipes and cigars.

Mr. Keeper: —even if the Hon. Member across the way thinks that is insignificant.

The petitioners certainly feel that secondary smoke is implicated in the deaths of 500 involuntary smokers each year. They state that Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand two duly certified petitions signed by citizens of Canada from New Brunswick and Ontario who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to thus present a grievance before this honourable House.

They take note of the serious health hazards presented by smoking and by the impact of the air into which enters the smoke of cigarettes from smokers.

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact Bill C-204, a Bill entitled the Non-smokers' Health Act. In duty bound, your petitioners ever pray.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from Canadians, mainly from Ontario, although there are certainly petitions which are coming in from all across the country. They are from Toronto, Rexdale, Willowdale, Markham, Scarborough, my own riding of Broadview—Greenwood, Thornhill and Agincourt.

These petitioners support Bill C-204. They point out that cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for the deaths of 35,000 Canadians every year who smoke and is implicated in the deaths of 500 Canadians every year who are involuntary smokers.

Whereas Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact the Non-smokers' Health Act, Bill C-204.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and responsibility to present these petitions from people from across Ontario, in particular from Burlington, Stoney Creek, Scarborough, Toronto and, most important, Hamilton.

• (1220)

These citizens ask that we be cognizant of the fact that smoking causes over 35,000 preventable deaths each year and that 500 of those deaths are caused by secondary smoke.

They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact Bill C-204.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-55

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise with a degree of pleasure and responsibility to present to the House, pursuant to Standing Order 106, two different sets of petitions.

The first one deals with Bill C-55, the Government's legislation establishing new refugee guidelines. It is signed by residents of Toronto, Cambridge, Peterborough, Scarborough, and Willowdale in the Province of Ontario and by residents of Vancouver and Richmond, British Columbia.

The petitioners suggest that the safe third country concept and the prescreening stage be deleted and that the legislation should be complemented by a strong, accessible, fair and expedient appeal mechanism to discourage those who wish to abuse the system.

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the second set of petitions concerns the Meech Lake Accord. It is signed by Canadians living in Elliot Lake, Hamilton, and my own riding of York West.

They are very much pleased that an effort is being made to bring Quebec back into the constitutional family. However, they would also like the Government to recognize the multicultural heritage of our nation and of our people as a fundamental characteristic alongside the English-French linguistic duality.

Therefore, they call upon the Government to amend the constitutional accord by entrenching our nation's multicultural heritage and reality as a fundamental characteristic in the opening clause of the Constitution.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, question No. 176 will be answered today.

[Text]

TOBACCO RESTRAINT ACT

Question No. 176—Mr. McCurdy:

Since 1970, have any charges been laid under the provisions of the Tobacco Restraint Act, and if so (a) how many (b) how many cases were fines levied?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): A review of departmental records has indicated no charges under the Tobacco Restraint Act have been laid since 1978. No reliable statistics are available prior to that date.

Mr. McDermid: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

SUSPENSION OF FREE TRADE TALKS

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Member that I have received two applications under Standing Order 29 for the adjournment of the House. I will deal with them in the order in which they were received, and first I will call upon the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 29 to seek leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing the consequences of the collapse of the free trade talks between Canada and the United States.

As of this moment neither the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), nor the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), nor the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has made a statement to the House on this critical matter. Members of Parliament deserve the opportunity to debate the matter fully so that we may understand what are the immediate plans of the Government in terms of these talks and, if they are truly finished, just what alternatives the Government may be pursuing concerning our trade relations with the United States.

If Your Honour so rules that the conditions of Standing Order 29 have been met, I would be happy to move the appropriate motion at the appropriate time.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has a similar application.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, when similar applications under Standing Order 29 were put forward, your comments which I have noted with great care were as follows:

—that the issue is of extreme importance.

You then said:

—it is fair to say that I might be in a better position to consider the matter again after today's proceedings.

That suggests to me that Your Honour was taking proper consideration of what initiatives the Government might take to inform the House and, through the House, the Canadian people on what actions it was purporting to take to respond to what is a very serious crisis facing the country, by the Government's own admission. You, Sir, presided over Oral Question Period both yesterday and today and realize that on a number of very key points the Government has not been prepared to share information with the House.

I think it is of some great indignity to the House that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when queried in a very straightforward way would refuse to answer, yet outside the House the Director of Communications of his office would then go forward and give answers.

It would seem to me that it is very important that we try to restore the House of Commons as the forum in which important matters of state are examined and discussed and in which a dialogue takes place; not between the Director of Communications and the media. I think that is an unfortunate trend and it is something—

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that under Standing Order 29 a Member wishing to move such a motion "shall" present without argument the statement referred to.

This sounds like the debate has started, and the Government will not have an opportunity to reply to some of the accusations which have been made.

I believe the Hon. Member is going beyond the rules contained in the Standing Orders.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will of course have heard the intervention by the Parliamentary Secretary. While the Chair, because it is an important issue, gives a certain amount of latitude in the presentation of the application, I am sure the Hon. Member would take the comments under consideration.

Mr. Axworthy: I was attempting to present a reason to Your Honour in light of the statements made yesterday in the House that the matter would be considered further after the proceedings. I was simply drawing to the attention of the House what those proceedings were or were not, as the case may be.

I believe that the timing is of essential and critical importance, because we still have before us a number of major unanswered questions to which obviously many Canadians want answers. Until we have an emergency debate, it is clear that we will not have an opportunity to receive them.

Mr. Speaker: I want to express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) in raising again today an important matter. I do not think there is any question but that it is considered important, not only by Hon. Members in this place and the Government but, of course, by the public.

Yesterday I said, and I quote:

> I have given this matter a great deal of consideration and I agree with both Hon. Members that the issue is of extreme importance. At the moment it is not my disposition to order an emergency debate for today, but that does not mean it might not be ordered at some other time. I think it is fair to say that I might be in a better position to consider the matter again after today's proceedings.

Later, in response to a point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry who was seeking some elucidation of my earlier comments, I said:

> The representations of the Hon. Member are, of course, important. I said earlier that as of 11 o'clock this morning it was not the disposition of the Chair to order an emergency debate to take place today. I think I made it clear to representatives of both opposition Parties that that does not close the door to other applications at another time. If the Hon. Member or other Hon. Members wish to make other applications, the Chair will, of course, consider them.

I have again given serious consideration to the applications which have come in from both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party, and I must remain of the same view as I was yesterday, that I am not at the present time disposed to order an emergency debate.

This is an ongoing matter and, as I indicated yesterday, events may change and I may be disposed at another time to take a different position.

I hope all Hon. Members and the public that is watching and listening to this will realize that a matter can be of very great importance, but it may not necessarily be deemed appropriate by the Chair for it to be debated in an emergency debate.

I see that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is here, as are the Leader of the New Democratic Party and very senior representatives of the Official Opposition. I would say to all of them that there are other means by which this matter might be debated. I would suggest that they might have certain consultations among themselves in that regard.

• (1230)

Again, my disposition today should not be taken as saying that this particular subject might not at some later time be the subject of an emergency debate.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan that Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I was making some comments on Bill C-74, the Bill which the Government calls the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, though I believe that to be a misnomer. However, I had not completed my remarks when we moved to Statements by Members and Question Period.

At that time, I was pointing out to the House that this is the first environmental Bill to be introduced in the House for debate by this Government in its three years in office.

In the fall of 1985, nearly two years ago, the so-called St. Clair River blob came to public attention. At that time the Minister, responding to concerns raised by environmental leaders throughout Canada and to questions raised in the House by Members of Parliament, said that he planned to bring in an environmental contaminants Act which would clean up this foul, putrid mess. He said that it would do more than that, that it would solve other problems as well. He told us that we could expect that this planned legislation would deal with matters relating to the Niagara River, that there would be legislation which would help us deal with old waste dumps and that something would be forthcoming to deal with the pollutants that pour forth from a variety of factories across Canada.

In December of 1985, the Minister put forward a Bill which we did not debate. In his vain fashion, he called the Bill the toughest pollution legislation in the western world. That Bill died on the Order Paper, and the following June another Bill was introduced. This time the tough guy lines that had been scripted for the Minister had to be changed and we got a different story. Instead of the toughest pollution legislation in the western world, this time we got just a first step toward cleaning up the environment. We went from tough guy to timid first step in a matter of a couple of months.

Now Bill C-74 is before us. This morning, the Parliamentary Secretary was back using tough guy words once more. However, we know that those words really do not apply to Bill C-74. Later on I will bring to the attention of the House some evidence supporting that charge.

Bill C-74 is the merging of some legislation that has been around for quite a while. It merges the Clean Air Act, the Ocean Dumping Control Act and the Environmental Contaminants Act. These Acts have been brought together for streamlining, as described by the Minister. However, a spokesman for the Alberta group of the Sierra Club of western Canada has written the following:

> We feel that this proposal is not a complete environmental protection act as it leaves out important areas such as acid rain, motor vehicle emissions, recycling of wastes, hazardous goods movement, protection of flora and fauna, and a host of other very important factors in protecting Canada's environment. The Act should be renamed.

At one point in his career, the Minister spoke in the vainglorious terms, for which he is famous, of an environmental bill of rights. That is a lovely bit of sermonizing, a bill of rights based on environmental concerns. Of course, there is nothing close to a bill of rights in Bill C-74. Instead, there is a preamble to the legislation itself. The theme of the preamble is the environment. It is a prissy little piece on protecting the environment and human health.

We all know what a preamble is all about. On certain occasions in a court of law it may help the interpretation if there has been bad or vague drafting of the legislation. However, for the most part, a preamble has no legal status at all. It is usually just a bit of propaganda and exists for decorative purposes. It is a cosmetic that disguises reality.

What is the reality? The reality is that there is very little in the way of new action on environmental control in Bill C-74. In support of this argument, I quote Toby Vigod, a lawyer working with the Canadian Environmental Law Association:

> —the preamble to the proposed EPA is not legally enforceable. Case law and authorities on the subject of preambles generally conclude that they are not enforceable in and of themselves. They, however, can be used as a limited aid to interpretation in determining the meaning of statutory provisions that may be unclear and ambiguous.

I hope that the Minister has not given us a Bill which is unclear and ambiguous, but if he has, then perhaps his little preamble will be helpful in certain cases. Vigod goes on to conclude the following:

> However, this does not confer rights on citizens to protect their environment.

Let me turn to another source to support my argument. Pollution Probe has described this environmental Bill as being meaningless. Pollution Probe has said, as reported by the Ottawa Citizen:

> Environment Minister Tom McMillan's claim to have produced the country's first environmental bill of rights is meaningless, a Pollution Probe spokesman says.
> Janine Ferretti said in an interview from Toronto that if McMillan had wanted to include an enforceable bill of rights in his draft Environmental Protection Act, unveiled this week, he wouldn't have put it in the preamble of the new legislation where it has no legal basis.

Since there is no bill of rights at all, we do not need to talk about that any longer.

It has been said that this Bill does some streamlining. I challenge that as well. I do not think much has been streamlined when there are still 24 departments of Government responsible for 55 different statutes that deal in one way or another with environmental matters.

To be fair, Bill C-74 does one useful thing. It sets up a system that will assess the impact of new chemicals that come on to the market on human health and the environment. That was a task begun but not completed under the previous Government. However, my concern is that there will not be enough resources available to adequately do that important task. We know that there is a very fixed and restrained budget in the Department to help it undertake this task.

I want to agree with my friend from Newfoundland and Labrador when he says it is time the Ocean Dumping Control Act was given new force. You may have read, Sir, that the Act, brought in by the previous Government, is now being challenged in the Supreme Court. Here was a chance for the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to add new force to that Act, but he did not. He just folded it into C-74.

I fear, as does my hon. friend from Newfoundland and Labrador who spoke earlier in the debate, that the Clean Air Act as encompassed in C-74 may possibly—we cannot say categorically—permit sulphur dioxide to slip underneath the existing regulations and escape control altogether. That is so because, as the Parliamentary Secretary knows, acid rain is to be subject to the same toxicity test as other chemicals. So you can see that sulphur dioxide may escape altogether.

In addition, the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) also asked whether C-74 gives the Minister too much discretionary power. I wonder, and other Members wonder, should he be allowed to exempt chemicals from regulation altogether simply at his discretion?

Undoubtedly Bill C-74 is weakened by allowing each and every province to have a veto over the legislation if they feel—not if they prove but if they feel—that they have legislation of their own comparable to this legislation. I would ask, who is going to be the judge of that? No, I think C-74 suffers from what I would call the Meech Lake blights. I quote The Toronto Star:

> Specifically, two sections in the bill before Parliament would require McMillan to consult all the provinces before he drafts regulations or issues emergency orders to control toxic chemicals.
> While Ottawa would retain the right to act on its own after the consultations, the provisions invite Ottawa to take the weakest possible action, so that everyone can agree.

In sharp contrast to that, Sir, the Brundtland report says what is really needed is strong national standards enforced on a national basis. In my view, that is what Canada desperately needs and that is borne out of the kind of federalism that we are gradually negotiating away day by day.

I want to conclude by pointing out that the Parliamentary Secretary made the argument earlier today that this was a tough piece of legislation, the toughest we have ever seen. I want to quote from The Financial Post, an article by Doug Hunter who says:

> The Canadian Environmental Protection Act, tabled in Parliament on June 26, talks tough, with million-dollar-a-day fines against polluters and provisions for jailing executives of offending companies. CEOs probably won't be marching off to jail in leg irons, though, unless their pollution is accompanied by such gross misbehaviour as fraud, obstruction of inspectors or the death of innocent bystanders.
> Environmentalists criticize the act for its failure to set broad national standards, particularly for water quality.
> "It's Swiss cheese with fewer holes," says Toby Vigod, a lawyer and clinic director of the Canadian Environmental Law Association. "If I was in industry, I wouldn't be particularly perturbed. It's not going to affect day-to-day business."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments.

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words in response to what the Hon. Member said concerning Bill C-74. He mentioned the Brundtland report. That report was prepared by a committee chaired by Prime Minister Brundtland of Norway. We were very pleased with it. Indeed, this House unanimously endorsed it a few months ago.

The Minister set up a task force of environment Ministers which met as recently as the last two days in Quebec City. That task force was set up five months after the World Commission on Environment and Development warned that environmental problems on this planet are approaching crisis levels. Our task force was to respond to that report as it looks at how the world is going to have to view environmental issues. I would like to quote from a Globe and Mail article of yesterday which said:

> Mr. MacNeill, who was secretary-general to the Brundtland commission, said no other country is as advanced as Canada in dealing with the recommendations of the world commission.

Not only are we getting recognition from around the world for our outstanding contribution in this area, let us look specifically at the acid rain abatement programs which the Member talked about. We have made an outstanding contribution in reducing acid rain. We have reached agreements on reducing sulphur dioxide emissions. We are getting our House in order. We are now into very difficult negotiations with the U.S., but we heard on the floor of this House the President of the United States talking about an accord on this issue. Just last week we had the Montreal protocol on the ozone. Our Minister of the Environment took a very strong leadership position in getting that protocol. We have produced automobile emission standards which will lead to the phasing out of leaded gasoline. Indeed, there are many other examples which show the great accomplishments of this Government in cleaning up the environment.

Bill C-74 is another example. We are looking at chemicals coming on to the market, controlling those chemicals, producing priority lists, and putting teeth in the legislation in the form of penalties for those who pollute the environment. I think we should congratulate the Government on its fine work.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, you will know, as I do, that there is a world of difference between setting up a task force on a report which is as significant, useful and pointed as the Brundtland report is, and actually carrying out recommendations. One of the recommendations in the Brundtland report is that a nation requires a central authority for pollution control. If you decentralize pollution legislation and control and authority, the chances of getting effective pollution law and action is diminished. That is one of the messages in the Brundtland report.

When the Government tells us it has accepted that report and is going to take its responsibilities seriously, that we are going to have effective environmental protection law, then we will sit up and pay attention. However, when the Parliamentary Secretary talks about another task force we on this side are not very convinced.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, you asked whether the House was ready for the question. We on this side of the House are certainly not ready for the question. I am a little surprised that Members of the Government did not take the opportunity to enter this debate. I am surprised that they are not sufficiently concerned about environmental matters to elaborate upon the policies that the Government has chosen to legislate.

They reacted in a very negative way to the critical comments made by my colleague to my right. They reacted very defensively when he criticized the inadequacies of the legislation before the House. They reacted to his criticisms with a minute-long question. I would have appreciated a much more extensive and thorough response. I would have appreciated the comprehensive and in-depth debate which is required.

This Chamber is set up with the Opposition on one side of the room and the Government on the other. That encourages adversarial discussions which have merit. However, in addition to the Opposition blaming the Government and the Government advertising its own merits we need a thorough and profound debate on environmental questions. I invite members of the Government to enter that debate. I invite them to share with the public the thinking, if any, that they have done on environmental questions.

I am obviously not going to pretend that I do not enjoy pointing out weaknesses in the Government's legislation when they exist and need to be pointed out. However, I do invite members of the Government to enter this fundamental and serious debate, which is a watershed debate.

It was not so long ago that we would not be having a debate about environmental protection or health as related to environmental matters. It would have been taken for granted that the supreme value was economic development of any kind at any cost. We would have assumed that the planet could sustain any efforts at economic growth, that the earth could recover from any pollution and damage to the environment, and we could continue merrily on our way.

Over the last number of decades we have become much more aware of the seriousness of environmental matters. There are serious questions on survival for the planet and the human species and on the equality of our life. The vast majority of the general public is becoming aware of these matters.

We are establishing new bottom lines with regard to the environment. We are establishing new standards and new expectations on the environment. People are no longer willing to put up with the old economic blackmail of companies saying that if they are required to meet environmental standards they will have to close plants and do away with the jobs. Such economic blackmail has been going on for years and has made governments afraid to set the necessary standards to preserve the environment. The ultimate threat against a government is that of pulling out investment which will cause the loss of jobs, and thereby the loss of votes and office.

That game was played effectively until now. However, there is an emerging new consciousness on environmental matters. The politics of the environment and the economy are in the process of changing and we must recognize that. Of course new standards for environmental protection put limits on economic growth and development. However, it is implicit in creativity that you have some limits. A creative person is not free to do anything he or she wishes. A creative country recognizes the limits and then, within those limits, does that which needs to be done.

We must ask ourselves how we can develop our economy and have economic growth and employment as well as environmental protection. How can we have a good, safe, clean, healthy environment and employment as well? We must stop accepting the false dichotomy that the choice is between environmental protection and employment. We must say no to industries that want a licence to pollute. One way of learning to say no to that kind of blackmail from industry is to develop new types of economic development which will respect the environment.

If we do not find new methods of economic development which are environmentally sound, we will have no economic development at all. When all the rivers and forests are destroyed by acid rain there will be no employment and no economics at all. It is a very narrow perspective which says that we must choose between environmental protection and employment. We must broaden that perspective. We must lean how to develop the economy in ways which will respect the environment.

I would like to address Bill C-74 specifically. As we set out our goal of a safe environment and a dynamic economy we must figure out how to achieve it. Does the legislation before the House today contribute to moving toward such a society? The legislation does make some progress toward environmental protection. I do not want to be entirely negative about what the Government is doing, but I do want to point out the shortcomings as they must be pointed out. While this is a step forward, it is only a small step. It is a disappointing step. Much more needs to be done, and much more could have been done.

One of the most shocking things about this legislation is the manner in which it was drafted. It was drafted behind closed doors in somebody's closet. Rather than having comprehensive public hearings involving the citizens of Canada and those groups that monitor the environment and seek to protect it for the rest of us, and having them assist in drafting the legislation and setting the new standards, the Government goes behind closed doors and drafts the legislation. That is a major discrepancy and serious weakness with the legislation.

It is clear that we cannot arrive at a point where there is strong, sound environmental legislation unless we involve the public and inform the citizens of the process of developing that legislation. We are involved in a process of creating a new political culture, and setting new standards of conduct affecting the environment. That is a democratic process which requires the will and the support of the people. It cannot be done behind closed doors, it must be done in a public environment. That is one of the first weaknesses of the legislation and the process.

Another problem and major criticism of the legislation is that it does not include an environmental bill of rights. The Government has spoken glowingly about its legislation. Of course, we expect it to do that. We would like to hear more from the government side of the House in this debate. While it speaks glowingly of the legislation, it does not include an environmental bill of rights.

It is important to acknowledge that people have a right to a healthy environment. It is not some privilege, but it is a fundamental human right. It is important to have a safe and healthy environment because human beings cannot survive and reach their potential without a healthy and safe environment that is non-polluted. This is a matter of human rights. I know that it is a new concept to consider a non-polluted environment as a matter of human rights. It is a more familiar concept to think of human rights as concerning matters of race and discrimination. We are not yet familiar with the notion of the environment as a human right, but fundamentally it is, because in order to live and grow and reach full potential a human being must have a safe, healthy and non-polluted environment.

What else are we referring to when we talk about an environmental bill of rights? One of the central points made by environmental groups is that the public must have an opportunity to be involved in this process and play a role in the enforcement of environmental law. Why are those groups asking for ordinary citizens to have the right to play a role in enforcing environmental standards? Surely when we pass legislation in the House establishing environmental standards, that means there will be an end to pollution. We will stop laying waste to our environment. It should not be necessary for an ordinary citizen in my riding to become involved in the process in order to ensure that these standards are met.

The problem is that environmental legislation is often window dressing. While Governments have good standards on the books, they allow a great deal of discretion for their Ministers of the Environment and Cabinet. We may have good statements of commitments from Ministers, and we may have good standards written into legislation, there tend to be loopholes in these situations and Governments have failed to carry out these standards with the vigour required. When it comes to the environment, Governments tend to follow behind public opinion. Citizens feel that they cannot trust their Governments. Government continues to allow the environment to be polluted and succumbs to economic blackmail. Therefore, citizens feel that it cannot be left to the politicians, they have to become involved. They must have a legal right to be involved in the process because Governments fail to follow through. That is what we mean when we talk about an environmental bill of rights.

Another key point in regard to an environmental bill of rights is the fact that citizens should have some right to participate in environmental decision-making. The Minister has the right to set standards and to outline what levels industries have to meet, but the public must have an opportunity to be involved with regard to the establishment of standards. That cannot be left to the Ministers alone.

Some serious criticisms have been brought forward in this legislation. I am not only making these criticisms to make the Government look bad. I must say that sometimes the impression is that the Government invites that to be done. I am not doing this only to be negative because I am on the opposition side and my friends are on the government side. I am doing this because it is important for us to realize that public opinion is ahead of public policy. When it comes to the environment, up until the present time Canadian citizens have had much higher standards than public policy indicates.

The legislation before us today takes some steps forward, but those steps are feeble compared to what the public is demanding and what the public will support. Canadians are asking Governments to set a new bottom line when it comes to the environment, and to say, "No more polluting the environment, no more laying waste to the environment, no more acid rain, no more building of nuclear plants and building up wastes that we do not know how to handle which will be a problem for unforeseen generations. No more creating problems that are a danger to human health and survival".

The public is out in front and needs decisive and strong action from Governments. We need the Government to represent the people and to say that we will no longer allow the environment to be laid waste by industry as a result of economic blackmail. Governments should be creative in the manner in which they handle economic development and preserve the environment.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I would have a few comments on the allegations made by the socialist Member who said no Conservative Members rose today on this matter. I would remind him that six Government Members have already spoken, that this Government has had a day and half of debate on this legislation, that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is impatiently awaiting the House's acceptance of the Bill on second reading, so that it can be referred to a committee where it will be very well scrutinized.

I would also like to tell him that, as far as relations with industry and environment protection are concerned, he is not so well abreast of the situation because he should read the report presented yesterday, September 24, to the National Council of Resources and Environment Ministers. That report of the Council chaired by no other than Mr. Gérald Lécuyer, a socialist from Manitoba, has this to say in its introduction: "This report includes ideas and recommendations to harmonize Canada's sustained economic development with its environment". So we do not have that many lessons to receive from the socialist Member concerning any harmonization between environment protection and the industrial community.

Finally, he blames us for acting alone in the discussion of this Bill.

First, I would like to point out that it is very difficult to cooperate with the socialists. However, we have not acted unilaterally. There have been many public meetings about this Bill. The Bill itself has been published and fully explained. Minister have made speeches throughout Canada. There have been meetings at the provincial level.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it is important to remind the House that the Hon. Member is able to speak about the environment today simply because his leader was unsuccessful in obtaining a debate on free trade. He objected to having such a debate for two and a half years, but he asked for one today. Now, he wants to fill the gap because the Chair refused the NDP request for this debate, with good reason, as it would have been quite inconsistent with everything the socialists have said for the past two and a half years. If the Hon. Member wants to go on wasting taxpayers' money and the time of this House, he can do so, but we of the Conservative party have done our duty by preparing a good Bill. They should now shut up. This is what more and more Canadians are asking them to do.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to my capitalist friend across the aisle. I should like to add that this capitalist colleague of mine says his caucus has taken part in this debate. However, I have noted today that not one Conservative Member has asked to speak before me. A Liberal Member spoke but afterwards, not a sound was heard from the benches of the capitalist Conservative Members. I want to hear the great capitalists in this House. Mr. Speaker, I want the legislation to be improved. If you want this legislation to be passed by the House, you have to take part in the debate and state your reasons. This is the intent of the House. However, my capitalist colleague said that the Minister from Manitoba, our Minister of the Environment, talked about the harmony that exists between environment and industry. It is true. This is the value we are advocating in this House but no harmony achieved at any cost. We should be ready to set standards so that the industry will not keep on polluting the environment.

I should like to reply to the comments of my capitalist colleague on free trade.

I am against free trade if this new committment, if any, will reduce our environmental standards in Canada to the same level as in the United States where the President will not acknowledge the problem of acid rain.

With respect to acid rain, I should like to know if my capitalist friend agrees with the President of the United States, Mr. Ronald Reagan. Is it the reason why he supports the free trade concept?

• (1310)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) wishes to speak?

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I understand your natural confusion because you would automatically look to your right to see what kind of response members of the Government would be making to this important Bill. The fact that there are no such speakers prepared to defend their legislation is certainly justification for the slight lapse in recognition. I am very pleased you were able to adjust very quickly and to realize that members of the Opposition are certainly very much interested in environmental protection even though members of the Government apparently are not.

An Hon. Member: Who presented the Bill?

Mr. Axworthy: That is part of the problem. The Government presented a Bill which does not really provide environmental protection. I always try to be fair and balanced in my comments in this House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Certainly, some Members of the House of Commons acknowledge that fact. Therefore, I would like to provide complimentary words as well. This is a wonderful piece of camouflage. It is great cosmetics. It is a wonderfully constructed subterfuge. However, I do not think it is going to do much to protect the environment. It is reorganizing, rearranging and consolidating agencies and Departments, but what does that have to do with the fundamental causation of environmental spoilage in this country and elsewhere?

The legislation ignores the the most serious fundamental responsibility of any Government, and that is to provide for implementation and enforcement of controls, rules and laws. When one looks in this Bill to find the so-called teeth, to see the kind of clear and effective penalties, and application of those penalties, one is obviously disappointed.

We should not be surprised because we have seen in the past three years a serious avoidance by this Government of the hard issues of environment. I would not want to throw this House into a fit of unrestrained laughter if I tried to talk about the Government's record in dealing with acid rain. We all know the record there. We have been treated to the grand parade, the drums and symbols of the United States President being ushered into the House of Commons to announce a significant breakthrough that he and the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) arrived at a deal on acid rain.

The mimeograph machine and the electronic parliamentary networks were all churning out the message to the Canadian people: "Don't worry, the problem has been solved". That is until we found out just a little more than a week ago that indeed it was not only a total and complete mistake but it was a series of miscalculations, and it was portrayed as such. That is part of the problem. There is no shame in this kind of environmental protection by public relations. It is as if somehow the imagination of the PR flacks on the government side is sufficient reason for Canadians to be confident that something will be done about the environment. That seems to be about the only serious recourse to action with which we have bee greeted.

It has taken three years to come out with this whimper of a Bill, this modest gesture which is simply a shuffling of a few departmental responsibilities and co-ordinations without really looking at what is happening in the environment, without really examining the kind of matters which are of great concern.

One of the things that I would like to draw to the attention of the House is that interesting analysis provided by Barry Commoner, who I think is an acknowledged expert in environmental matters. He said in the New Yorker magazine about two months ago that one of the real disillusions for him personally as a leading environmental advocate is how in the last 10 years or so the environmental cause has become more of a lobby than a crusade, that this is simply another business-as-usual public policy matter that can be dealt with in the normal routine ways. We have kind of lost that sense of outrage and indignation. I can recall as a young student hearing Rachel Carson talking about the Silent Spring. It was then that we first discovered that our systems of nature, our ecology, were being poisoned.

The problem is that we started dealing with symptoms and not with causes. The fundamental cause is the way in which we organize our economy. Most environmental pollution is not caused by a secret band of environmental criminals who are out spilling oil into water or deliberately spewing things into the air. It is caused most often by those to whom we give the most respect, those who produce our goods and services, and by consumers themselves. Because we place such a premium on economic calculations we have avoided and evaded environmental ones.

It has been pointed out that perfectly good products that used to be drawn from natural commodities are now being replaced by artificial sources which require the use of far more petrochemicals, which has created a generation of something in the order of 40,000 or 50,000 new forms of chemicals in the last decade. These are all designed to ensure that we do not put our groceries in paper bags any more but, instead, in high-falutin plastic things that may cost less. But when we add up the spoilage of our ecology that is taking place and the spoilage of our human bodies, then those costs cannot be calculated.

We do not have the courage or the sense to tackle this issue. We just nibble at it, but only around the edges. We marginalize environmental issues by saying, "Let's tinker with it. Let's find some kind of soporific answer. Let's provide a few little penalties and fines", rather than saying that there are certain things that should not be produced and just getting rid of them.

We just cannot afford, as some western countries have pointed out, the use of DDT. It is poison. It gets into the food-chain and ends up in birds, human beings, fish and everything else. The only final answer is to get rid of it. The answer is not to say to some manufacturer, "If you are found using it we will give you a $5,000 fine, if we are able to take you to court". As we have pointed out, there have been something in the order of only 18 initiatives taken to court over the last few years. That is hardly what we would call putting fear and trepidation into the hearts and minds of polluters.

The fact of the matter is that if we want ultimately to come to grips with environmental issues in North America, to say nothing of other parts of the world, then we have to face up to some very hard economic questions. One is whether or not we want to continue to produce these products.

When I was the Minister of Transport we were being diligently lobbied by people in the Toronto area, to say nothing of those in other urban areas, about the movement of dangerous goods. The following is a wonderful case study of how not to do something. I am quite happy to offer it to the House because it is past history and it was my own Government which was responsible. We identified that the rail and truck cartage of dangerous goods had reached catastrophic proportions, that the numbers and volumes of railway cars and long-haul vehicles going through our major cities each day was increasing geometrically, and that the mathematical probabilities of a serious disaster taking place was increasing by the same proportions. Governments laboured mightily after the horrible accident in Mississauga to come up with answers. We came up with a stack of regulations on how to identify dangerous chemicals, what to do in case of accident, whom to notify, if chlorine gets on the skin what kind of crisis centre should be talked to and who should be informed. We did everything but ban the movement of dangerous chemicals through highly-populated urban areas.

We have the biggest pile of red tape and regulations that one has ever seen because we were not prepared to face a fundamental issue by telling chemical companies, the railroads and others, "I am sorry, you cannot take those goods through downtown Toronto, Winnipeg or Halifax. We will have to build railway yards that skirt the cities. We will have to find other forms of protection".

I see the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) is in the House. He and I live in a city where a major railway assembly line is in the middle of the city. I would not want to frighten this House by telling Hon. Members how many dangerous goods go through that piece of geography per day and threaten the lives of people on its periphery. I think it is best to say that both the Hon. Member and I have fought over the years to get that railway yard removed. I can tell Hon. Members from where the opposition came. It came from all the very powerful economic sources in the country which have said, "We are not prepared to do it". Why are they not prepared to do it? Because it will cost a certain railway $115 million. Hon. Members have only two to choose from, so they can take their pick. The same is true in Calgary where there was a serious accident that was almost catastrophic and was simply averted by timing. There have been similar close calls in virtually every city of the country. Yet we are not prepared to come to grips with the central issue, which is either finding some way of putting an embargo on this type of multiplication of artificial and highly toxic matters or at least finding ways of providing some immunity to people and the environment against them. Thus we have Bill C-74, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. It talks about consolidating agencies and providing some new penalties, in some cases, and totally misses the whole point of the exercise.

The reason I wanted to intervene in the debate is to express my hope that at some point we will have a serious environmental debate. I hope it will be a non-partisan debate. I do not think this is a Tory, Liberal or New Democratic issue. We all share it. We all have to live in it. Therefore, we all have to be concerned about it. We have become captive to fallacious thinking. We have allowed ourselves to become so imbued with the wrong values that we do not see what is essential and important versus what is peripheral and marginal. We may be more prepared to accept that it is crucial to have green garbage bags versus paper and that that somehow is a great sign of society's progress, while not recognizing that the production of such products are the basic root cause of many of the environmental problems we now face. I am not here to pick on green garbage bags. But they are symbolic of the kind of matters we face. I could point to all kinds of areas where we simply do not get to the root cause of what is spoiling our environment.

I simply say that a Bill such as the one that is before us is fundamentally useless. It is simply window-dressing. It is throwing hot air at a problem. It will not come to grips with what I think the country faces.

In the moment or two that I have remaining I would like to say that one would think that we should be providing some degree of leadership on this issue as a so-called sophisticated, well-developed industrial society so that other countries which are emerging into that status might get some signal as to how to prepare themselves. Instead, we are doing the opposite. I am reminded of what I think is one of the greatest criminal acts of the century. I refer to the disaster in Bhopal, India. In a sense it was a corporate decision to put into a Third World country a plant that was unsafe. Granted, India is a powerful country, but it is still a country of the Third World. The plant was placed there on the grounds that it would make good economic sense.

Our cavalier disregard for the environment and, in fact, for human life is staggering. For those who have travelled in Third World countries, and I think many Members of the House have done that, and have seen how that example is repeated time and time again, we can see that we are even less careful in other countries than we are in our own, if that is possible. We have more disregard for the environment and more disdain for proper protection and controls. We always justify that by saying that we are doing them a big favour and that we are providing jobs because we are introducing the industrial society to countries that need a lot of help. However, I am not sure that the help is always of the best kind.

My recent trip to Central America made me cry at times to see how beautiful countryside with gorgeous lakes and forests was being ruined. For example, a plant which made batteries was spewing its effluents into a lake and destroying it for generations, for centuries. It is tragic.

I am reminded of a particular quotation—and I do not know who said it—that one thing which distinguishes human beings from all other kinds of life is that we are the only ones who befoul our own nests, that we have achieved such a high level of maturity and understanding that we know how to poison ourselves and the environment around us.

I do not want to take a lot of time dealing with the particulars of the Bill. The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), our environmental critic, has done a superb job, and other Members of the House have spoken. However, I am here this afternoon, and Friday afternoons seem to bring out the whimsy and oftentimes seem to provide opportunities for one to say things in which one really believes. Let us quit tinkering. Let us quit lecturing on navigation as the ship is going down. I believe most Canadians want us to do something serious about the environment. Let us quit playing charades as we see than in Bill C-74 and do something worth while for a change.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of a question from the government side, and in order to further this debate, let me indicate that I was interested in the comments of my colleague with regard to the transportation of dangerous goods. They were really educational in the sense that he said that when the Government of which he was a part faced an important issue involving the environment, rather than dealing with the central question, which was the banning of the transportation of dangerous goods through large metropolitan areas, it dealt with many other peripheral matters. They were probably important but they were peripheral.

I appreciate the frankness of my colleague in this area, and I wonder whether he can educate us in other areas. Were there other areas, when he was Minister in the last Liberal Government, in which the Government failed to come to grips with central questions as they affect the environment? Could the Hon. Member elaborate upon that for us?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I thought one confession per afternoon would be enough.

First let me say that I did not use that example by way of doing a mea culpa or a sort of public self-flagellation. I was trying to demonstrate how Governments themselves are reflective of a broader point of view in society.

We began to address seriously the movement of dangerous goods. We attempted to go beyond dealing with the effects of an accident and to deal with the causes of it. We seriously considered how to reduce speeds, to bring them down to a point where we would substantially reduce the probability of accidents. It was something we were beginning to work at through a meeting. We brought together the major railway companies and, in a sense, gave them an ultimatum to come up with a decision on how to reduce speeds in major areas. I do not know what happened, because unfortunately the event on September 4, 1984 took place and I was no longer in a position to maintain that. I cannot answer for my successor as to whether he continued on it, and I have not persisted on that particular issue.

What I am trying to say to the Hon. Member is that I used that example to show that it is not a cost-free exercise. There are times when environmental advocates do not deal with hard reality. If they really want society and the Governments which govern it to deal seriously with environmental matters, they must recognize that there will be a very heavy price to pay. If we were to ban the movement of dangerous goods through urban areas, someone would have to pay a couple of billion dollars. It would probably be the Government and the railway companies combined. That is a large amount of money to swallow, and we have all the competing pressures for dollars.

My plea was that this debate be conducted in a non-partisan way. Is it in the best interests of the country to apply those kinds of costs? If the Hon. Member wants other examples, I can give them to him. I can give examples from the Government of which I was a member. I can give examples from the time when I was a member of the provincial Legislature of Manitoba and the NDP was in government: It did not do what it was supposed to do in the northern part of Manitoba. It allowed the flooding of hundreds of thousands of acres of Indian land for the sake of Manitoba Hydro. It was not just the Liberals who made mistakes; the NDP in Manitoba made mistakes. Earlier I used the example of the Conservative Government's attitude to acid rain. It was not prepared to ban it; it was prepared to issue a public relations release.

If the Hon. Member wants me to tar all Parties with the same brush, I could do it for another hour. My point is that I do not think any political Party in the country is prepared to face those hard questions. If we really want to deal with environmental problems as they should be dealt with, there will be a heavy price to pay, and we had better start conditioning and arguing for that price to be paid so that we can have a safe environment.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in what the Hon. Member said in his speech this afternoon, because some 40 trains per day carrying many dangerous goods travel along the Grand Trunk line which goes through my constituency.

Since the Hon. Member has not been following what has happened since September, 1984 in this regard, I thought he should be brought up to date. A major project is ongoing in Toronto involving the examination of alternate routes and how we can get dangerous goods through metropolitan areas safely. It is also examining speed limits and so on. It is being conducted by a former Deputy Minister of Transport for the Ontario Government who is an authority and is doing a very thorough job. There have been public hearings in our community and in various communities around the Toronto area.

One of the problems—and I think the Hon. Member will agree—is that many industries within urban centres require chemicals for whatever they do. I agree that our research and development people should be looking into the transportation of those goods, whether it be by road, rail, or whatever, in a safe and meaningful way. It is either that, or else we, the Governments of the land, should move these industries out to isolated areas and only there allow them to use dangerous chemicals.

I think that idea is unrealistic. I do not think our economy could handle that type of thing all at once, but it may be something to work toward. I wanted to bring the Hon. Member up to date on what is going on in the transportation of dangerous goods. It is an ongoing concern of the Government on which action is being taken.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to receive information from the Hon. Member. I would only say that it strikes me as déjà vu. When I was Minister of Transport we had the same committees and the same high level people examining the same subjects. It is now three years down the road. I wish them well and I hope they make progress, but I still think it misses the point I am making.

The Hon. Member and I have had exchanges in the House many times. We have different philosophies about the way an economy should be managed and run. Let me point out to him what I tried to say in my speech.

Perhaps the problem is that far more chemicals are being produced than we need. Perhaps we have got ourselves into a chemical cul-de-sac. I would use the example provided by Barry Comoner of the fact that there exist a number of good consumer products that do not create toxic wastes. For example, paper garbage bags could be used rather than green polyethylene garbage bags. The difference in environmental terms is enormous. Barry Comoner quoted hundreds of products for which that is the case.

In essence, we are partly responsible for despoiling the environment. We are resorting more and more to industrial processes because it is in the interests of large manufacturers to do so. That is an issue that must be part of the debate. It is not simply a question of asking how we move toxic wastes. We should ask whether we should be producing them at all.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure it is a tradition after one speech, but I would like to follow the precedent set by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) by trying not to make this a partisan issue. I too want to speak frankly to the House about what seems to me to be a tremendous gap between what I hear in the House of Commons and what I see happening.

The Minister and his Department have made an effort to demonstrate the significance the Government attaches to environmental issues. However, I would like to compare that with what has been the reality in my part of the country as shown by actual performance and activity on environmental crises. Perhaps I am talking about the difference between smiles and rhetoric in the House of Commons and dismal performance on the ground. That is the way I see it at the local level in Essex—Windsor.

The Government made very important commitments in 1985 and 1986 to do something about the so-called St. Clair blob. It committed itself to trying to find its actual source and to deal with what was causing it. There was tremendous publicity at the time. As the publicity disappeared, so, I am afraid, did the commitment to find what was actually causing that tremendously dangerous sediment to form on the bottom of the St. Clair River.

Adjacent to the Dow Chemical Company on the St. Clair River, there are still increasing deposits of dangerous chemicals including Dioxin TCDD2378, a chemical which has a tremendously damaging effect on the human body and has been tied to the emergence of cancer. We have not solved the problem, despite the great amount of publicity at the time.

Just across the river from the City of Windsor, an incinerator is being erected by the City of Detroit. This incinerator does not have the basic safeguards which are required to stop air emissions from polluting not only Detroit but, even worse, polluting Windsor and some of the best farmland in Canada which is in Essex County. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), in a press release last year, said that we would find a solution to this problem. However, the urgency expressed rhetorically has not been shown in practice.

The incinerator project continues to go forward, despite 30,000 signatures from the people of Windsor and Essex County on petitions opposing its establishment without adequate safeguards. The Government is not prepared to take the tough diplomatic action which is necessary. Frankly, I suspect this is because it has been trying to avoid any conflict with the United States that would create more problems for the doomed free trade arrangements.

Beginning this week, I have presented petitions to the House and will present petitions in future weeks to come about the Fermi II nuclear plant in Monroe, Michigan, just 10 miles from the edge of my constituency. This nuclear reactor has experienced a continual series of devastating mishaps, glitches and mistakes which have left the people of my constituency without any confidence in it. Its basic design raises clear concern over danger. In addition, explosive testimony has been given to a House of Representatives subcommittee in the United States demonstrating that the American Nuclear Regulatory Commission was frankly hoodwinked into providing licencing for Fermi II.

Given this hoodwinking and the tremendous danger to our economy, our society and our people, we have asked that our Government make a commitment to get Canadians and Americans in neutral positions to review Fermi II before it comes into full operation and see to it that it is given a complete and thorough safety check. If it does not meet the full-scale safety review, it should be shut down and shut down for good. Again, however, the Government came through with its eternal no to a basic environmental concern.

Similarly, we can talk about the municipal sewage problem in the City of Windsor and Sandwich West. This is not just a local problem. It leads to a flow of effluent into the Detroit River, thereby polluting an international body of water. Yet despite the most consistent pressure brought to bear on the Minister of the Environment, he has not been prepared to offer any assistance whatsoever in upgrading the sewage system. The same thing applies to the Turkey Creek situation in Sandwich West which is dangerous to the health of people in that part of my constituency and to the community itself.

This is not something this House has refused to do before. We have provided help for upgrading of such municipal services in the past. It has worked tremendously to generate jobs as well as providing environmental protection. Yet in this great Bill entitled the Environmental Protection Act there is absolutely no commitment of any kind to this type of activity. Another eternal no.

As well, my constituency has asked the Minister and regional environmental officials to provide assistance to environmental groups who are working hard to try to counter these serious problems. We have asked for help for MAD, Maidstone Against Dumping; RADAR, the Rochester Township group; and the Clean Water Alliance of Windsor. In case after case, despite smiles and graciousness here in the House of Commons, we have in the end received a no from the Government.

The same is true with respect to the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement which the Government is now renewing. The Government has attempted to portray the renewal process as a great step forward. Yet in practice it has rejected the principle of zero discharge of toxic substances. We think that this is crucial to turning around a disastrous situation in the Great Lakes. We have asked for changes in the agreement and the IJC committees monitoring the agreement. These changes would permit public representatives, not just scientists, to have some role in developing agreements.

I could go on, but I have chosen to illustrate only cases from my constituency which demonstrate this sense of rejection at the ground level of initiatives which could put our environment in better shape. That is why it is impossible to take seriously this legislation which claims to protect the environment. The reality is that nothing serious is being done, and the suspicion has to be that this legislation will work in exactly the same way at the national level. It is clearly weak. It has gaps through which, frankly, one can drive a train-load of toxic chemicals. It needs desperately to be improved.

First, it does not include clear-cut public enforcement mechanisms. It is not possible under this legislation, for example, for groups to sue the Government over environmental problems which develop. It is not possible for groups to play a public role in the setting of environmental standards. It misses the notion of an environmental bill of rights which could include such important things as the right to judicial review of administrative action, the right to broad access to information, and the onus being on the proponent of an activity to justify an action which may harm the environment. The legislation is extremely vague on what will be done with respect to the Minister's activities. He is given tremendous powers, but none of them are outlined or specified.

Finally, with respect to the emergency powers which are so often crucial in an environmental crisis such as we had on two or three occasions since this Parliament began in 1984, the Minister has to consult with the provinces prior to emergency action being taken. That is surely a ridiculous approach.

In conclusion, let me just say that we urgently need a new philosophy concerning the environment. We need fairness, equality and honesty in our approach to this and other problems. We put this to the Government and urge it to move as quickly as possible to try to remedy this Bill and, we hope, do much better with what comes out of the committee hearings.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being two o'clock, the House will now to proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE

SUGGESTED ASSISTANCE TO COUNTRIES WITH DECREASED MILITARY BUDGETS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands) moved:

> That, in the opinion of this House, in the interest of Canadian security and world peace, the government should consider the advisability of transferring, on an annual basis, 1 per cent of its defence budget to Official Development Assistance, over and above the present expenditure, which would be made available only to those countries which decreased their military budgets by at least 1 per cent on an annual basis.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to debate my motion which, in the interest of Canadian security and world peace, urges the Canadian Government to transfer one per cent of its defence budget to development assistance. The 1987-88 Estimates list our defence budget at $10,340 million. One per cent of that would be $103 million. My motion says that this money would be made available only to developing countries which had also cut their own military expenditures by one per cent.

The motion, therefore, requires a decrease in military spending both in Canada and in developing countries. I am sure that all Members in this House are aware of the link between military spending and underdevelopment in our world. The most dramatic statement of that link for me came in the spring of 1986 when an Ethiopian Cabinet Minister told me and some other Members of this House that if it were not for military spending Ethiopia could have fed itself during the 1984 famine.

The Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, in its study last spring and fall of official development assistance, and in its final report For Whose Benefit? notes this link. I would like to quote from it on human rights and militarization as follows:

> It is alarming when Third World countries spend more on the military than on basic needs such as health, education and other social services. Some of the African countries most at risk from famine—Ethiopia, Sudan, Angola, Mozambique—are also countries torn apart by internal violence. In 1984, the value of arms imports to Africa exceeded that of grain imports. In Central America, too, armed conflicts have devastated local economies and caused untold human suffering. Under these circumstances, programming long-term development aid is very difficult.
> Moreover, while high levels of military spending may sometimes be justified as necessary self-defence against aggression, all such cases should be examined critically in regard to continued eligibility for ODA (official development assistance).

The report emphasizes the following:

> Our aid should not allow any government to spend more on arms and less on basic needs than it otherwise would. In keeping with our own priorities and values, Canada should ask questions and expect answers in the case of recipient countries whose governments' budget allocations put more emphasis on the military than on programs of social and economic welfare.
> More generally, because the issue of disarmament and development is a critical one that ultimately affects us all, the Committee urges Canada to take a leadership role in discussions of this subject in multilateral forums.
> Canada should also work with others to control the traffic in arms destined for developing countries.

The approach taken by the committee to this link is basically the desire to use development assistance as some kind of sanction. When there is too much emphasis on military spending in developing countries we should be very careful about the kind of development assistance that we give. I endorse that point of view, but I think it would also help if we took a positive approach, if we used the carrot as well as the stick. That is what my motion attempts to do.

Doug Roche, our Ambassador for Disarmament, quoted former United States President Eisenhower who said:

> Every gun that is made, every warship launched, every rocket fired, signifies in a final sense a theft from those who hunger and are not fed, from those who are cold and are not clothed.

Today world expenditures on armaments equal $1 trillion or $1,000 billion. That $1 trillion is directly related to the death every day of 40,000 children from hunger or hunger-related disease, a modern holocaust which is related to the $1 trillion which we spend every year on military equipment and the military.

We will all remember that last July it was estimated that the total population of our world finally passed the 5 billion mark. For 5 billion people on our planet we are spending $1,000 billion on arms. That works out to $200 for every man, woman and dying child on this planet. If we compare that expenditure of $200 per capita for every human being on this planet with the Gross National Product per capita of some of the poorer countries, we will see just how immoral this whole situation is.

In 1982, Haiti, the poorest country in the western hemisphere, had a Gross National Product per capita of $290. Bangladesh had a GNP of $140 per capita; Nepal, $160; Burma, $190; Laos, $90; Chad, $80; Ethiopia, $150; Mali, $170; and Zaire, $180.

These are 1982 figures, and I presume they are up slightly since then. However, it gives us some sense that the total income per capita of some poor countries is less than what the world spends on an average on munitions.

Of course, these poor countries are not at all guiltless when it comes to their own spending priorities. With extremely limited public revenue many of the poorest countries have spent a disproportionate amount of their funds on the military. This can perhaps sometimes be understood in the light of the need for some defence against a real enemy. However, too often these expenditures are used by the military and dictators to repress their own people.

While we can all recognize this link in general terms, I think we need to explore it in a little more detail. In fact, if we look at the situation we will see that military expenditures in the Third World account for 25 per cent of the total debt burden of $950 billion held by developing countries. Military expenditures result in a bad disproportion of the economic priorities of these countries. The need for money to pay for military hardware leads to an increased emphasis on cash crops for exports. To get those cash crops peasants are forced off land which had been used for generations for subsistence farming.

We see increasing evidence in our world that when every Third World country is pushing exports of basic commodities, basic commodities tend to glut world markets and the price is driven down, forcing nations ever deeper into debt and forcing them to submit to the IMF prescription which cuts back on social programs, cuts wages, and insists on opening up their economies to foreign ownership.

This is a vicious cycle. Instead of military spending actually defending the sovereignty of these countries, it actually betrays their sovereignty. In Third World countries a military elite tends to attract the best and brightest of the educated young people. Instead of going into medicine, education, business, engineering, or one of the trades, they go into the military. The sectors that are more closely related to the needs of the people are ignored. Many young people go into the military because they are concerned about their families. The military gives a dependable income that cannot be found in an otherwise harassed economy.

Military expenditures lead to the militarization of political power. All over the Third World we have seen a proliferation of military dictatorships. Finally, the very heavy spending on the military leads directly to the start and prolongation of local wars.

Since the end of World War II, the Armed Forces of some 90 different countries have been involved in war—war is defined as a state where more than a thousand people per year have been killed. The territory of more than 80 countries has been involved in war. We see the direct effect of military expenditures on the Third World.

How about the developed world? The two superpowers, the United States of America and the U.S.S.R., account for half of the trillion dollars expended for arms throughout our world. It is very difficult to get accurate figures, particularly from Russia which claims military expenditures of some $22 billion a year, while western experts estimate that it would probably be ten times that amount. The United States is more open about its spending which totals approximately $300 billion a year. Those two countries account for more than $500 billion of arms spending a year.

What are the effects of that spending on those two countries? We are all aware of the shortage of basic consumer goods in the United States, and the growing pockets of persistent poverty characterized by malnutrition. There is hunger in the United States, lack of decent housing, deteriorating cities, and a lack of access to health and education services. This poverty in the richest nation in the world contrasts with the growing affluence in some of the sunbelt states that profit from military contracts. The spiralling deficit in the United States is directly attributable to military spending. As in the Third World, the armed forces and military research take a disproportionate share of the best and brightest of American and Russian youth.

The ostensible purpose of all this spending is to provide us with more security. Earlier this year our Minister of National Defence released a White Paper calling for massive expenditures in order to obtain nuclear submarines for Canada. This is supposed to increase our security as Canadians. We all know that it will do no such thing.

In recent weeks one event more than any other has given an increased sense of security to Canadians and to other people throughout the world. It was the agreement reached by President Reagan and Gorbachev to get rid of some 1,000 nuclear missiles from Europe and the Soviet Union. Getting rid of these nuclear missiles brought a sense of increased security, not the hardware itself.

Earlier I talked about the immoral expenditure of money on weapons. In another sense, it has always been easier to get the weapons in the first place than to get rid of them later on. Last week's agreement came after months and years of negotiations, wranglings, false hopes and dashed expectations. How ironic it is that we can all heave a collective sigh of relief when the superpowers are able to agree to remove weapons that were supposed to be designed to protect us. It is increasingly ironic that at the same time Canadians are contemplating increasing our own contribution to the arms race.

As a middle power, Canada is not in the arms race in the same manner as the United States or Russia, or even as France, Britain, or West Germany. We still spend $10.3 billion a year on it. There are calls for us to spend more in the name of national security. At the present time I am not naive enough to argue for unilateral disarmament. I do maintain that increasing our military expenditures will not increase either our sense of security or our real security.

On the other hand, anything that we could do to relieve or decrease the level of world tension would help our security.

Murray Thomson of Peacefund Canada, has quoted the late Olaf Palme of Sweden who said, "Security must be achieved not against one adversary but together with him". In our world that is very true. We must find some method of common security. We cannot have some type of fortress mentality that will guarantee our security against an adversary.

On the face of it, a 1 per cent decrease in arms spending by Canada would not be very significant. But it would be a start, and it would require a reciprocal decrease in some of the Third World countries. The idea of taking money from armaments and putting it toward development is not new.

Clyde Sanger in his 1981 book entitled Safe and Sound: Disarmament and Development in the 80s, summarizes the results of Inga Thorsson's three-year United Nations study on disarmament and development. He pointed out that there have been several different proposals to deal with this issue.

For example, in 1955, Prime Minister Edgar Faure of France proposed that all countries reduce military expenditures by an increasing percentage each year and contribute some of the savings to a development fund.

In 1956, Russia called for a 10 per cent to 15 per cent reduction in her own arms expenditures as well as those of the United States, Britain, and France. Again, some of the savings would go to development.

In 1973, the United Nations General Assembly adopted a U.S.S.R. resolution calling for a 10 per cent reduction in the military budgets of the five permanent members of the Security Council, stipulating that one-tenth of that reduction would go to development assistance.

There have been other proposals from Romania, Brazil, Senegal, and France.

My proposal, Mr. Speaker, is more modest. It does not need to wait for the big military powers to agree. Canada can lead the way along with one or two Third World countries.

On August 24 of this year, our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), speaking at the international conference on the relationship between disarmament and development, stated, " . . . the test of this conference will be what we do, not what we say. There is rhetoric enough on the evil of arms and the need for development. What we must seek to achieve here is practical co-operation, not mutual recrimination". He also stated, "The relevant question is how do we make progress, not whom do we blame".

He went on to say, "As a first step now, we should attach higher priority to the development of confidence-building measures, which are a prerequisite to any major arms limitation agreement". He pointed to the examples of Europe and Central America. He stated, "These examples differ in form, but demonstrate that small, steady, practical steps can create the confidence that leads to progress. We should increase our efforts to promote such co-operation at the regional level".

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that my proposal to take 1 per cent of our defence budget and make it available for development assistance to countries in the Third World that decrease their own military spending would be one such small step. It would be a small step that Canada is uniquely situated to make, a small step for Canada, but if followed by others it could be a big step toward world peace and security.

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Like many of my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, I think that the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) is interesting, but in fact it is unrealistic.

As my colleague pointed out a few moments ago, I also think that Canadians are supportive of disarmament, but in a world-wide context. He would want that to be done as soon as possible on a world-wide basis.

Still, Mr. Speaker, we must keep in mind the fact that nations have been making and keeping arms for quite some time, and that they will continue to do so as long as they have reasons to justify this course of action.

If I take a closer look at the motion before the House today, it reflects the widespread notion that there is a causal link—I would almost say a reverse connection—between defence and development expenditures. The belief appears to be that a reduction in defence expenditures will be followed by a corresponding increase in funds earmarked for international development. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it does not work out quite that way.

Admittedly, if billions of dollars are spent every year on armed forces throughout the world, there is a connection, but it relates to the billions of dollars which cannot be spent on the other needs of the people of the world. These needs are numerous and vie for funds which are already limited. Some which come to mind immediately include medical research, education, environmental protection, housing, day care centres, and care for senior citizens. The connection between defence and development is not exactly a particular case, for the same link exists between any other two sectors affected by public spending. In every country efforts are made to grab every spare dollar from military appropriations, and people dream of the day when nations will feel secure enough to spend less on armaments.

A moment ago, Mr. Speaker, I said that the proposition of my colleague is interesting. As I see it, its best feature is its inherent originality based on an excellent basic principle.

The Hon. Member is quite right to suggest that Third World countries must be encouraged to reduce their military spending. The defence budget of developing countries is minimal when compared with their outlays for all other social endeavours, be it health, education or the environment. Canada can certainly help restore the balance and reverse the trend in Third World countries seeking to improve their defence, and it will do just that.

I commend the Hon. Member for suggesting that nations ought to be encouraged to cut down military expenditures, but his approach leaves me wondering. I think it is a good principle which is badly applied and raises a series of questions and problems.

First, taking money for aid out of the military budget of Canada could be a symbolic gesture, but it would also be an arbitrary reduction which would not take into account the real needs and costs of maintaining armed forces in Canada. It would be a mistake to think that our defence budget just sits there until it is put to good use. I believe that this is an important point.

Second, if we think about the recipients, it seems to me that the mechanism suggested would be perceived as a paternalistic gesture by the Third World, and even as an attempt to corrupt other countries. Developing countries are as sensitive as we are about their national sovereignty. They want to make their own decisions about matters which concern them, such as defence, in spite of our disapproval in many cases.

Third, the mechanism suggested would inevitably favour offending countries. It would reward those that have chosen to spend a lot for defence in the past and are now reducing somewhat their expenditures and completely ignore those that have allocated a large part of their resources to development for years and have kept their military budget very low.

Fourth, and this is a fundamental point in my opinion, this approach does nothing to attack the cause of the problem, that is the reason why developing countries spend too much for military purposes. It would only hide a few symptoms and could only be a symbolic gesture.

Why do so many Third World governments spend so much for their armed forces? Because they lack confidence, because they fear their neighbours or because of internal tensions or discontent on the part of their population. The causes are varied and therefore require a varied response.

Many aspects of Canada's foreign policy can help to deal with the root causes of the problem, and this is exactly what this Government has done and is still doing. For instance, we are trying to alleviate tensions and insecurity in Southern Africa by providing support to front-line countries and to the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference. On the other hand, we are also putting pressure on the South African Government to abolish apartheid and let its neighbours live in peace. In Central America, we have given our full support to the Contadora proposals and are now supporting the conditions for peace proposed by the leadership of countries in the region.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, governments spend too much money on armaments when they fear the reactions of the population, the reactions of people who are desperate and have nothing to lose. We are terrified at the way those governments make ill use of their powers, infringe upon human rights, and resort to weapons for domestic repression. In my view, the Canadian Government is not taking all the steps needed, two of which I would like to examine more closely.

First, we must increase our external help. We must make it more efficient, we must better target it to those who are the most in need, the most vulnerable. The Government's response to the report of our Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs and External Trade is ample proof that such steps are being taken now. We are now going to decentralize our public development assistance mechanisms and transfer them to regional offices and we will make them more flexible. Also, we will further concentrate on fighting poverty and improving human resources in developing countries. All those improvements are aimed at giving those populations the hope of a better life, and the opportunity to contribute to the development of their countries, so as to lessen domestic tensions, and we hope that those governments will feel a lesser need to resort to armed repression.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, we can also help in encouraging and supporting the growth of civic institutions and social values that still remain to be developed in some Third World countries, if they are to enjoy peace, stability and the respect of human rights. The Government response to the report of the Standing Committee outlines the policy followed by Canada in this very sensitive area, which is to take action which will not be punitive or lead to confrontation, but be positive, constructive and supportive.

I am glad that the Hon. Member saw fit to raise this very important issue, Mr. Speaker. I believe that the policies followed by the Canadian Government are helping to reduce the need for Third World countries to spend their meager financial resources on weapons. I approuve the suggestion of the Hon. Member to provide an incentive for them to do so, but I believe that the formula he suggests is impractical. I have nothing better to suggest, but if someone else has any brilliant ideas, I think that we should at least consider them.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize that the policies of the Canadian Government help to maintain a balance between national security, world peace and international development, in the best interests and with the support of the Canadian population.

[English]

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I wish to, first, of course, commend the proposer of this motion for his sincerity because I believe he is a member, as I am, of the group which was investigating changes to the policies and improvements to the policies of our Development Assistance Program. He made a very helpful contribution in that regard.

I am sure that the other members of my caucus would join me, as I am sure other Members of the House would join me, in favouring world peace. We all favour world peace. We would all like to see world disarmament. Our country has contributed to both these causes. We would all like to work for the reduction of military spending and an increase in development aid to countries throughout the world so that their wealth may be increased. By their improvements we would also see a better world for ourselves and our children.

I say in all sincerity that I believe the motion is in one sense tragic. It is typical of the fantasy land or fairyland approach that we so often find espoused by members of the New Democratic Party. It calls for the Government of Canada to transfer on an annual basis 1 per cent of our defence budget to official development assistance. In other words, the Hon. Member is calling for a 1 per cent reduction of our defence budget and dedicating it to overseas development.

According to his motion, these funds would be made available only to those countries that decrease their military budgets by at least 1 per cent on an annual basis. We can all see the intention and the thrust of the motion. But it is such a simplistic approach, an over-simplified way to find an answer to the problem.

What does this motion try to achieve? Does it try to achieve disarmament? Does it try to disarm Canada? Does it try to disarm the states being provided with our assistance? Does it try to bring about justice or peace? No matter which of these objectives we attribute to the motion, it fails totally.

There are many countries which receive our aid and which need more of our aid which would suffer from such limitations. I cite, for example, Mozambique. Mozambique is one of a number of front-line states which is faced with a life and death military struggle with South African terrorism and aggression. For months I have been demanding in the House of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that we increase our aid to Mozambique. Earlier this week I pointed out that South Africa has mounted a deliberate campaign of aggression aimed at destabilizing the independent nations of southern Africa to make them more dependent than ever on trade and transportation links with South Africa. With this strategy in mind, Mozambique warrants special attention. It is a major transportation and communications link to all the front-line states.

I pointed out that South Africa invades Mozambique periodically, while bands of terrorists it sponsors roam the countryside spreading terror and destruction. As a result of these repeated attacks, the Government of Mozambique has been unable to deal with the unprecedented drought and floods that have plagued it throughout this decade.

The destruction of the economy and the communications system has made Mozambique the runaway winner of the International Index of Human Suffering, which is devised from a rating of human misery in more than 100 countries. Mozambique rated 95 out of the highest possible level of suffering, which is 100.

Statistics released by UNICEF in January of this year revealed the startling fact of the human tragedy in Mozambique. The 1983-84 famine in Mozambique resulted in the deaths of at least 100,000 people. The contributing factor which resulted in the famine other than weather or agricultural policy was the dislocation of rural life and food production in southern Mozambique by South African-sponsored rebels. The 1986 statistics state that approximately 140,000 children from both Mozambique and Angola have died from war and destabilization-related causes. In view of this tragic situation in Mozambique it is clear that these people require more than emergency food aid and some $25 million in aid from CIDA.

I would also like to point out that South African terrorism and aggression has been a destabilizing problem for the other front-line states, other states that receive aid from Canada. These include Zambia, Zimbabwe, Tanzania, Angola, Lesotho, Swaziland and Botswana. These nations are facing military incursions right now. At the upcoming Commonwealth Conference it is up to Canada to bring forward its concerns with respect to the military problems faced by these front-line states. It was suggested by our High Commissioner in London that, possibly, we should send to the front-line states military boots and other non-lethal military equipment to help these countries survive the attacks of South Africa or the guerillas which it sponsors.

It is clear that we have talked about the possibility of peacekeeping forces, either United Nations or Commonwealth peace-keeping forces. This means that Mozambique and the front-line states are facing military problems. In view of the fact that Mozambique is spending 42 per cent of its budget on defence, what a strange suggestion it would be then that we should now go through the NGOs and other organizations and give more money to Mozambique for non-military purposes while asking it to cut back its ability to defend itself in the face of the very problem that is destroying it, which is a military problem.

That would be the result of such an idea as expressed in the motion which is before us. It would bring about tragic results since it would make a demand on Mozambique to cut back its military forces. It seems somewhat inconsistent that our NDP colleagues want to see us do something about these front-line states in order to help them, and then on the other hand suggest that we pass a motion that would cut back by 1 per cent their ability to fight militarily, something which they do in a weakened state as it is. Would the NDP want us to cut back on the aid we give to Nicaragua, or not give it aid? After all, it has to expend its military forces to fight off the American-backed Contras and their terrorist bands. Perhaps the NDP would like to see Nicaragua cut back its military spending by 1 per cent in order to receive our overseas development assistance?

The terms of the motion show the inconsistency of this particular suggestion. We cannot link on the one hand the cutting back of aid or allow these countries to spend their military budgets, while on the other hand increasing aid to them on the other side of the ledger. Some countries could not afford such a program. It would be tragic to impose such a program on them.

The NDP is inconsistent in other ways as well. We have had presented to us by it the idea that Canada should cut back its spending on defence by 1 per cent. I suggest that, too, would be an inconsistent idea, if the NDP is also calling for us to withdraw from NATO. If we were to withdraw from NATO, it seems to me that we would have to spend more on defence rather than less, if we are to maintain our sovereignty. If we are to maintain our sovereignty and our independence by withdrawing from an umbrella organization in which we share the costs, then it seems to me that Canada would be reducing its ability to be effective, unless it increases its military spending.

As a matter of fact, perhaps the NDP realizes that it is not less defence spending that we need but better priorities on what we spend it. Canada requires defence spending if it is to continue its peace-keeping work. Canada requires more defence spending if it intends to play a larger role in the monitoring and the verification of disarmament. This inconsistency to withdraw from NATO and at the same time cut back on defence spending does not seem to make sense.

Another point I would like to make is that we have a long history of NDP ideas which reek of inconsistencies and contradictions. First, we witnessed the proposal to cut back on NATO spending. Then we heard from the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) her support for terrorism and violence. Now we must endure this equally ludicrous motion of the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

I wonder what is next to come from this Party of military strategists!

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if a Canadian Government implemented the substance of the motion as proposed by the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), funds earmarked for defence would be diverted to official foreign development assistance. On the surface no one can, if one assumes the world is perfect, argue against such a well-intentioned objective. I reinforce the fact that I honestly feel that the motion is well-intentioned. However, the world is not perfect. It would appear that the motion and most of the foreign and defence policies of the Hon. Member's Party seem to come from the same naive idealistic base.

I would argue that the support accorded by the NDP for such policies conveniently ignores the historical, current, and future realities governing world affairs. They conveniently deny the existence of Canadian defence and economic priorities which have and will continue to be fashioned in a manner that reflects the fact that Canada exists in an interdependent and imperfect world.

In the real world in which we live, Canada need not apologize to anyone on the level of development assistance provided to other countries. However, up to very recently, June 5 to be precise, this was not quite the case for Canada's defence effort.

From a situation where Canada had firmly established itself as a credible actor on the world stage, through collective defence efforts in World War I, World War II, Korea, and NATO and NORAD in the post-war era, and through a multitude of diplomatic initiatives, many through the United Nations, Canada's international reputation became tarnished because of the defence policies of the previous Government. This is the situation which the present Government is correcting.

For over 16 years Canadian defence policy was underfunded. As a result, equipment in the Canadian Armed Forces is inadequate in quantity and quality. Even when the former Government belatedly decided to embark upon a re-equipment program, it made no long-term commitment for funding. How could the defence planners work in this environment when it can take more than 15 years to implement fully the acquisition of major weapons systems? The previous Government had no sense of vision when it came to defence policy.

On June 5, when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) tabled the Government's White Paper, a visionary defence policy was set out. It was based on the realities of the world and Canada's role in it; on the only sound concept for the country, that of collective defence; on the economic abilities of our country; and on the will of all Canadians to defend our democratic way of life.

How can the Hon. Member suggest that funds should be diverted from the defence budget? I would assume that he has consulted with his colleague, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), or indeed his own Leader. When the Hon. Member for Brant announced his Party's position on defence matters last summer, no cuts were proposed. In fact, evidence shows that defence spending would increase under an NDP Government. I think this reinforces the NDP's position of consistently being inconsistent.

It was admitted at that time that indeed the previous Liberal Government had underfunded the defence effort and had left defence policy in shambles.

I should like to say a few words on two other key elements of Canadian security policy—disarmament and development assistance. The position of the Government regarding the relationship between disarmament and development is well established. It was made clear by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) at the UN Conference on this subject which was held in New York last month. Both remain major commitments of the Government. We continue to view both as fundamental policy objectives but as distinct processes related only through security. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs noted in his statement to the General Assembly, "Progress toward development and progress toward disarmament can both contribute to that security, but their relationship is not simple".

The approach to both must be global in scope and involve all countries. Both must be pursued together, recognizing that Governments are unlikely to disarm at the expense of what they consider their security in order to divert funds to development. We must accept that the level of a nation's security is the main criterion against which efforts for disarmament must be measured. Security is the touchstone. The reality is that each nation will judge its own security in its own terms.

In this sense security involves not only a military dimension but a state's economic and social well-being. A nation's security is the main criterion against which efforts for disarmament must be measured, not the level of economic gain. Development in its broadest sense can contribute to security by helping to create a stable international system. This will in turn diminish the importance of military strength as an element in a nation's security. Collaboration at all levels will be the mainstay of this process. It will remain necessary to continue to support and to further, as we are dedicated to do, existing global and regional institutions and agreements which promote disarmament and development.

In respect of the particular proposal made by the Hon. Member, the Government continues to believe that the idea of any prescribed transfers of funds saved through disarmament is unrealistic. Such savings when and where they occur can be used to support broad development objectives in numerous ways, such as debt reduction, stimulation of trade, investment and economic growth. These decisions are primarily for sovereign Governments to make in accordance with their own assessments of circumstances and events. Rather than specify particulars, we believe the accent should remain on a practical approach to these issues. It is a question of political will and of giving support to existing development and disarmament institutions and negotiations.

A further difficulty with the motion is more fundamental. Disarmament and development each constitute basic and long-standing government commitments whose importance has been consistently reaffirmed in annual expenditure reviews by Cabinet. The notion, therefore, that Canadian defence expenditures should be reduced for the purpose of transferring funds for development in the Third World ignores the fact that the level of such expenditures is decided in accordance with over-all security considerations.

Furthermore, Canadian development assistance is provided in accordance with well-established socio-economic criteria which, in the Government's view, must remain the principal guide. Even if any potential recipient country were to reduce military spending by 1 per cent, we would not wish to provide development assistance to a country on this basis. The Government would continue to insist that socio-economic determinants for the allocation of development assistance be given priority, if only to ensure that official development assistance is allocated in the most effective way.

In advocating this approach we do so from a position of strength and achievement. We have since 1949 provided $24 billion in official development assistance. Unlike the situation in some other parts of the world, none of this has been used for military assistance. The global ratio of military spending to official development assistance stands at about twenty to one. In Canada, the ratio is four to one, among the lowest in the world.

In disarmament, we continue to participate actively in all multilateral arms control and disarmament forums where our contribution is well established and of long standing. We make our views known at the bilateral level.

We are set on a course of action dedicated to the enhancement of our security and to international security in its most basic sense. This is consistent with both our policy on disarmament and our commitment to development. The motion put by the Hon. Member does not support this purpose.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate. I did not intend to rise, but one might say that I have been provoked by the interventions of my colleagues from the Liberal and Conservative Parties.

I understood this to be Private Members' Hour. I thought we were here as individual Members of Parliament to debate a matter of substance rather than engage in a partisan harangue about the policies of particular Parties. I am a little disappointed in that regard. I think it is important for us as individual Members of Parliament to have serious debates about important questions.

Let me remind Hon. Members of what the Hon. Member's motion says. It reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, in the interest of Canadian security and world peace, the government should consider the advisability of transferring, on an annual basis, 1 per cent of its defence budget to Official Development Assistance, over and above the present expenditure, which would be made available only to those countries which decreased their military budgets by at least 1 per cent on an annual basis.

The strongest criticism levelled against this motion was that it was naive, well-intentioned and idealistic. It is incredible that my colleague has the effrontery to be idealistic. Can one imagine being idealistic in this place? Why did he not bring forward a motion that was cynical, manipulative and realistic? That would have found support on all sides of the House, I am sure.

Yes, of course the motion put by my colleague is idealistic. Rather than putting it down for that, why do we not acknowledge that the concepts in this motion are in fact prophetic, not in the sense of being unrealistic but in the sense of having a broader perspective on reality, of having a vision of the kind of global society in which we must live. If such a society is to come about, we must start taking steps in that direction now.

I would like to challenge Hon. Members who found fault with this motion to come up with alternative proposals that would do what this motion seeks to do. What does this motion seek to do? As I read it, it links official development assistance with defence spending and provides that we take some practical action in that area. It points out that the nations of this world spend far too much on military budgets relative to what is spent on human and economic development.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): A trillion dollars.

Mr. Keeper: Yes, a trillion dollars. As a result of underspending on human development, some 40,000 children die each day.

Mr. McDermid: Those are the countries that are spending the money. That is the point.

Mr. Keeper: Obviously my colleague across the way does not understand that there is a link between spending money on arms and spending it on development. Hon. Members across the way do not seem to appreciate that unless we as a planet stop putting all those trillions of dollars into swords and start putting them into ploughshares, we will not be able to do something about the fact that 40,000 children die each day. That is the central point of the motion.

In the absence of any other practical, or even cynical or manipulative motion that would take us in the direction of a world with a new set of priorities, this motion must be supported. For too long we have spent far too much on the world's military budget. We must shift that priority. We must find ways to resolve conflicts between nations in a peaceful way rather than always relying on guns.

We cannot feed everyone, we cannot house everyone and we cannot provide the water that everyone on this planet needs without shifting our priorities. That is why defence spending should be linked to development spending. There is no way that we can continue to spend as much as we are spending now on military budgets and at the same time spend money on development. We must do both, and that means that we must find a new way of resolving problems and conflicts. This motion identifies that link and asks that we take action now. Until someone from any corner of this Chamber comes up with an alternative practical suggestion that we can support, let us support this motion. Let us do something.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of things to say and, unfortunately, a very short period of time in which to say them.

I would like to thank the Hon. Member, whom I have known for some time, for bringing this idea forward. This is something we hear discussed quite often in our ridings, though perhaps not specifically in the way the Hon. Member has presented it in the motion.

How many times have we heard people in our ridings ask why we spend any money at all on foreign aid, why we do not spend it at home on the Indian situation or on housing in Canada? They ask why we should take care of anybody anywhere else in the world. I hear that quite often in my riding, and I do not think that my situation is unique.

People do not understand foreign aid and they may not understand defence either. However, I find it extremely difficult to link the budget of one with the budget of the other. I am not knocking his perception and his ideals. I know what he is trying to achieve. I just do not think this is the way to do it.

The countries that are spending humungus amounts of money on defence are not the countries we are trying to help. The big bucks are being spent by the big boys. The countries we want to help are being picked on by their neighbours and need defence budgets. I simply cannot see us giving aid only to countries that reduce their defence budgets in concert with ours. It simply will not work. It is not practical.

I would like to continue to talk about the various forms of aid Canada has been providing. We are spending $2.5 billion in aid and $10 billion in defence, so the ratio is four to one. Canada is not spending an exorbitant amount of money on defence as compared to aid. I simply do not think we can link the two. I do not think it is practical, but I certainly do not knock the objectives of the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

STRIKING—CHANGE IN MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions among the Parties and I think Your Honour would find unanimous consent to proceed with the following motions, one at a time, of course. The first one is as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order of this House, the composition of the Striking Committee of the House of Commons be amended by substituting the name of Mr. Fontaine for that of Mrs. Bourgault.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS—AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to present the following motion:

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans be authorized to travel to Norway from October 24 to October 31, 1987, inclusive, to visit aquaculture centres and to meet with Norwegian parliamentarians and industry experts for the purpose of the committee's ongoing study of new techniques applicable to fisheries in Canada and that the necessary staff accompany the committee.

Motion agreed to.

HUMAN RIGHTS—AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the final motion is as follows:

That the Standing Committee on Human Rights be authorized to travel to Winnipeg, Manitoba, and Edmonton, Alberta, from October 5 to October 9, 1987, inclusive, and be authorized to travel to Toronto, Ontario, and Montreal, Quebec, from October 19 to October 23, 1987, inclusive, for the purpose of holding public hearings on the committee's ongoing study of human rights behind the Iron Curtain and age discrimination and that the necessary staff accompany the committee.

Motion agreed to.

FERMI II NUCLEAR REACTOR—REVIEW PROCESS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the residents of my constituency dealing with the Fermi II nuclear reactor. There are 386 signatures on this petition. It is one of a large number which are coming into my office.

The petition points to the tremendous dangers associated with this nuclear plant which is just 10 miles from the borders of Essex—Windsor. It points to the tremendously dismal record of accidents at Fermi II and it calls for a joint review by Canadian and American officials of safety at Fermi II before any decision for full-capacity operation is permitted to be made.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all the questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

S. O. 29

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that I am in receipt of an application for adjournment on the basis of an urgent matter and I am informed that the Hon. Member who is putting the application is on his way. I am prepared to wait a minute or so.

The Chair always wants to be as generous as possible when dealing with the rules of procedure. I know the matter is an important one, but I am afraid that I must take the decision that the Hon. Member—

Mr. Gauthier: Here he is.

Mr. Speaker: In the interests of any Hon. Member or members of the public who are watching this, I should announce that the distinguished Hon. Member is now in his seat, and I will hear the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

SUSPENSION OF FREE TRADE TALKS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for the slight delay. I did not realize that on Monday mornings, we conduct the House business with such dispatch and expediency.

This is the third day in a row that we have presented to the Chair a request for an emergency debate on the ongoing saga of the Canada-U.S. trade issue. I think it is fair to say that as each day goes by the arguments and reasons for that debate become all the more apparent and imperative.

There has now been a whole new series of meetings in Washington, contrary to previously stated positions. I can only say that the level of misunderstanding and confusion in the country is growing and expanding as each hour goes by.

I simply repeat the case we made before, which is that the only way that this can be properly dealt with under our system is in the House of Commons, not on the sidewalk outside the Langevin Block. It is here where information, ideas and positions should be exchanged and presented.

If Your Honour agrees with me, I would suggest that this evening would be the most appropriate time to debate the issue. The meetings in Washington will be over by then and we will know the results of them. Therefore, the House of Commons would be able to address immediately what is perhaps the most important issue to face Canada in many a decade.

Mr. Speaker: As the Hon. Member has pointed out, this is the third day in a row that applications have been brought to the Chair for an emergency debate on the trade talks. I should make it very clear that last week both opposition Parties applied. This morning the application came from the Official Opposition only, but I think it can be taken that members of the New Democratic Party continue with their position that if I were to rule in favour of an emergency debate it would be appropriate and it would be welcomed by them.

However, as I said last week, while the matter is of very great importance, something with which all Hon. Members, no matter what their views on the issue, would agree, it is not the disposition of the Chair at this time to put this matter in the category of one necessitating an emergency debate.

On Friday I invited the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the House Leaders to discuss this matter among themselves on an early occasion with a view to making arrangements for a debate to take place in this Chamber on another basis. I repeat that invitation because, as I say, the matter is important.

I have no criticism at all of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) or other Hon. Members who have brought the matter to the attention of the Chair. It is important, but it is not the disposition of the Chair to say that it crosses that sometimes difficult line between what is very important and what requires an emergency debate.

Again, I say to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry that that is my disposition today. That does not mean that something might not happen to change my mind. I thank the Hon. Member and would say, of course, that the conduct and decorum of this place is such that early-morning proceedings are conducted with great dispatch. If the Hon. Member wishes to speak with me tomorrow morning, it would be advisable for him to be here just a few minutes earlier.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Gerry Weiner (for the Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome once again the opportunity to speak on this so urgent and important legislation, Bill C-55. For many months now, Canadians from all walks of life, and Parliamentarians from all Parties have had the opportunity to discuss and debate the terms and references of this Bill. Indeed, thanks to the Canadian media, it has been examined under the scrutiny of the public eye as few pieces of legislation are.

It is no secret that much of the participation in this debate has been on the part of those who have opposed or who continue to oppose this legislation. The Government has welcomed this vigorous intervention, because public discussion of these issues has long been overdue.

• (1120)

Before this process began, refugee matters, and one could say immigration issues as well, were largely confined within a select community. Today they are in the public domain as never before. Because of that open visibility we have not only the opportunity to reconfirm Canada's long-standing commitment to the world's refugees, but also new possibilities as a people to work together to meet the challenges of such great need in our world.

It is time to eliminate the confrontational debate and begin to create the hospitable environment to continue building an even more generous refugee policy and an even larger immigration program. There has been a positive benefit from the outcry of the recent past. It allows us to focus on the positive contribution that immigrants have made and continue to make to our society. It has also increased the consciousness of all Canadians to the very sorry plight of the refugees of the world and to how much more we may be able to do together.

The country is all mixed up about immigrants, refugees and illegal aliens and we must clear up the confusion to avoid having decent Canadians fearing everybody from abroad. Clearly we are saying no to illegal aliens and yes to real refugees.

If we compare the situation before with what will be, we see that it was chaotic and unfair. We are bringing forward a system which will be fair and will deal with a real world situation. It is very important that we have criteria which are fair for all. We had a system which did not work. We will be putting in place a process which will work and will guarantee open determination to all in need of a secure and safe home.

It is only now as we reach the conclusion of our work in this Chamber that we can see that this is only the beginning of all that we must do. Our responsibility henceforth will be to ensure that this new refugee determination system works as it is intended to work. It will only be through such a system, one which works with compassion, fairness and justice, that we can affirm to Canadians that their sense of fairness and justice and their generosity have not been misplaced. Let no Member of this House be mistaken. The abuses which we have witnessed almost daily over the past year have given many Canadians cause to question their generosity, and not only toward refugees.

The new process will be a disincentive to abusers. Unfounded claimants will be disposed of very quickly. It will manage our resources effectively and eliminate the risk of backlogs and bottlenecks. It will give us the opportunity to remove, very quickly, security risks, war criminals, terrorists, and persons convicted in Canada of serious offences. There will be protection only for those who need protection.

We have listened to the great debate. We have been very concerned about exploring ways to handle the situation. Under this new process every individual will be seen and heard by a Convention refugee determination board member. Independent board members will hear all cases in quality, oral, non-adversarial hearings with the benefit of the doubt going always to the claimant. Claimants will be represented by counsel at all stages.

The deluge of false claims for refugee status has been undermining one of the very pillars of our society, immigration itself. That is an erosion which we cannot and must not allow to continue. That is why Bill C-55 is so very important and why I remain ready, indeed eager, to meet again and again with Members of this House, with the refugee serving community, and with the ordinary citizens of Canada to help make our new refugee determination system work, to meet those concerns which remain, and to find the common ground. In return, the responsibility of the Government must be clearly understood. We will help the genuine refugee in need of help. We will not help those who are not genuine refugees or do not need that help.

[Translation]

That is our duty, and it is also the commitment we have made, a commitment which has rallied Canadians from coast to coast.

Mr. Speaker, the need to come up with a new refugee status determination process has been obvious for years. Indeed, each passing day makes that need more urgent still.

This year alone we can expect to receive about 30,000 refugee status claims in Canada—30,000 despite the imposition of control measures in February, measures which Members of the Opposition have described as being drastic and inhumane. Mr. Speaker, you and I as well as every Member of the House know full well that the great majority of these 30,000 claims we will be receiving this year will be false. Roughly 70 per cent of these claimants will be regognized as not being genuine refugees. As to the others, a good many of them already benefit from the protection of another country or have had an opportunity to seek such protection.

Obviously Canada must devise a practical and effective refugee status determination system which will enable us to make a quick and fair distinction between a legitimate refugee in need of our protection and all other claimants. This is what Bill C-55 will enable us to do.

[English]

It will do that in a way not only consistent with the stringent criteria set up under Canada's own Charter of Rights, but also in complete agreement with our obligations to the United Nations High Commission for Refugees as a signatory of the Geneva Convention.

Yet the Opposition is set to persist. We have been told in no uncertain terms that every obstruction will be used in the upper Chamber to delay this Bill. I do not think the public will be confused by those who would use the misfortune of others for short-term partisan gain. Even those who still have genuine concerns about Bill C-55 realize that it is brought forward by a Government which has reaffirmed, not foreshortened, Canada's commitment to the world refugees. Our policy is clear. Both in terms of assistance here in Canada and overseas we have a refugee policy of which we are proud.

Last year the Government sponsored the resettlement in Canada of 12,000 refugees, an increase of 20 per cent over the last Liberal Government. Our actual immigration intake in 1987 will be 50 per cent higher than that of the last Liberal Government. We provide over $115 million a year in federal funds for the successful resettlement here in Canada of federally sponsored refugees and for the training of those refugees sponsored by private groups in the community. We give $16 million a year in food aid for refugees. Our financial contributions to international relief agencies including the Red Cross and the United Nations High Commission for Refugees are the fifth highest of all nations. Our total financial contributions to international relief on a per capita basis are second only in the world to the United States.

[Translation]

In no way does the Government have to seek justification for its commitments towards refugees of the world, nor for having introduced Bill C-55.

When the Bill was tabled the policy it advocated was already effective, constructive and equitable. It is even more so today.

Mr. Speaker, when the Government first introduced Bill C-55, a day marked by the virtuous indignation of Opposition Members, I stated here in the House as I did everywhere else from coast to coast that it was not a document carved in stone.

• (1130)

[English]

Time and again I called upon all Members of Parliament and members of the public as well to participate in making this Bill even more effective in its stated purposes. I am pleased and grateful that so much has been done to accomplish that goal.

Today, thanks to the amendments this House has accepted in committee, Bill C-55 is a stronger Bill. It is stronger through clarifying its intent, stronger in affirming its safeguards, stronger in its commitment to the genuine refugee. It has been further strengthened and improved during the course of the report stage. Your many hours of work—55 of them in public hearings alone—have brought significant improvement to the Bill. Let me quickly outline some of them.

The Bill now specifically states that the evidence to support a claim is in no way restricted and that each claimant has the right to testify on his or her own behalf. It spells out exactly what is meant by passing through a country while on the way to Canada, and states clearly that individuals in transit are not affected by the safe third country rule.

[Translation]

The Bill explains what a safe third country is: a country which honours the provisions of the Geneva Convention concerning the non-return of refugees.

If the claimant agrees, a representative of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees may now be present at the inquiry as well as at the board hearing.

When the services of counsel must be provided by the federal Government, the Bill now makes it quite clear that it must be a lawyer.

[English]

The amended Bill will distinguish between claimants who are arriving with no documents by air from overseas and those arriving with no documents at our border with the United States. Only those arriving by air without documents will be subject to a presumption of law regarding the country of departure. We will not make any presumption of law as to where those arriving by land may originally have come from.

Amendments also provide safeguards of another kind, safeguards against the manipulation of a new determination system by those who clearly do not deserve its consideration.

They bring the Bill into line with Bill C-71, guaranteeing that war criminals will be treated the same as claimants found to be security risks. Suspected war criminals will not be permitted to use the system to delay their removal or prosecution.

[Translation]

As a result of the report, other amendments have been adopted these past few days, particularly the addition of still more safeguards for persons who might not have an opportunity to submit a claim.

Even in that case, from a humanitarian standpoint obviously it would still be our duty to make sure that this person is not being threatened or is not likely to be persecuted. Therefore we did accept without reservation the recommendation of certain Members and private individuals that claimants whose case will have been rejected at the inquiry stage will be expelled only to a country where, pursuant to the Geneva Convention, they will be protected against return.

[English]

To achieve this, we have specified any deportation order made against the person coming from a safe third country can only be executed to that country unless the claimant himself waives that right. Such amendments will, I believe, greatly reduce, if not eliminate, any possibility of human error or oversight which might result, however remotely, in the deportation from Canada of a claimant to a place where he or she might face real danger.

I cannot help but feel that in practice they will go a long way to answering those reservations which still exist toward Bill C-55.

I share as much as I value the opinion of my good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), when he said in the House last Friday that even without amendments at this last stage the refugee determination system contained in the Bill would be the finest in the world. It really is no less than that.

We have not transferred to others, as others have done to us, our responsibility for refugees. Under Bill C-55 we honour as we have always honoured our international obligations without limit, and it is no surprise to me, although it might be to some, that the representative of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees testified that the essential features of this new system do not contravene the Convention.

[Translation]

But more than anything else, more than what the amendments—indeed a complete overhaul of the Bill—might ever produce, there is one thing which should rally the full support of Bill C-55 critics, an aspect which faithfully mirrors the sincerity of the Government which is determined to ensure that people needing the protection of Canada will indeed get it, and I am referring, Mr. Speaker, to Mr. Gordon Fairweather's appointment as Chairman of the new Immigration and Refugee Board.

[English]

Gordon Fairweather is a man of unparalleled commitment and compassion for the politically oppressed and persecuted. There may be someone somewhere in our country who matches his dedication to human rights, but there is none who exceeds him. His integrity, his indisputable honesty and courage should encourage all but the most mean-spirited and partisan opponents of the Government.

It should encourage them to see that when the Government promises a refugee determination system and personnel of exceptional quality and calibre, it delivers and will go on delivering in this field as in every other.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has always lived up to its responsibilities and will continue to do so. We continue to honour the commitment made with respect to world refugees, a commitment of which we can be proud and which we will maintain.

We also respect our commitment to Canadians.

Let Hon. Members or anybody else not delude themselves: We have made a name for ourselves because of our assistance to refugees, but our reputation is not due to this Government nor any previous administration, but only to the generosity and openmindedness of Canadian men and women.

[English]

We have not failed that trust and Bill C-55 is proof of that. Our duty of protecting the genuine refugee through this new determination system will be done. But we have never suggested that this is the total of our duty. Far from it.

I have already mentioned specific programs directed to refugee relief and assistance. One can add to them direct ministerial discretion through which thousands of people are helped every year, people who do not qualify under normal criteria even today, but who, on humanitarian grounds, still merit our assistance. That same ministerial discretion will apply after Bill C-55, as it does now. Yet one more safeguard, and perhaps the best of all for that discretion may be applied at any stage of the process.

I will not pretend to the House that the impulse behind Bill C-55 is not reactive. Obviously, it is a reaction to shortfalls and inadequacies in the refugee determination system that we inherited from the previous administration. It is a reaction to massive abuse.

But in other ways our policy toward refugees is in the forefront of innovation. We are leading the world in looking for new solutions to this universal problem of the 20th century. Canada has also initiated programs targetting specific groups in need of special assistance, including women refugees who are at risk, and other refugees with special needs.

We are determined that the world shall not turn its back on those in need of safe haven. We will argue that need whenever, wherever, and to whomever we can.

Bill C-55 draws a line that both common sense and justice demand be drawn. But we draw it in a manner which includes far more than it excludes. This Minister and this Government will not sit idly by and see that generosity and openness flagrantly and blatantly abused. Neither will we endanger our country's long-standing welcome of the immigrant because we failed to act.

One more time, Mr. Speaker, our duty and our responsibility is to aid the genuine refugee in need of our help. We can only do that through a determination system which once and for all will end the abuse of false or unjustified claims. Bill C-55 will get that job done simply, expeditiously, and fairly. It is time the Parliament of Canada got its job done by passing this Bill.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): I am pleased to respond on behalf of the Official Opposition to third reading of Bill C-55, the refugee determination system.

In his opening remarks today, the Minister outlined that Canadians are mixed up with respect to immigration and refugees. One good reason why they are mixed up—if the Minister wishes to use those words—is because they have received mixed signals from the Government during the deliberations. Perhaps there is nothing better outlining that confusion than what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has stated. I quote from an article in The Montreal Gazette where he is reported as saying:

> This country shall always be a haven for refugees and immigrants seeking tolerance and prosperity. We want a tolerant and a growing and a sympathetic and a warm country.

With respect to the recent boat arrivals, the Prime Minister stated in an article in the Canadian Press dated July 31, 1987:

> These people are by and large illegal aliens. They are people jumping the queue and taking the place of other immigrants.

Therein lies the confusion from the Prime Minister who, whether intentionally or not, is confusing the issue between refugees and immigrants. During the past two years in committee and in debates in the House we tried to distinguish between the line-up of landed immigrants who are legitimately seeking to come to Canada, and the line-up of refugees who are legitimately seeking to come to Canada. After due processing, those found to be illegitimate obviously have to leave our country.

But for the Prime Minister to confuse refugees and immigrants, and then to render a decision by stating, claiming, and judging that those individuals are illegal aliens before they have gone one step into the processing, raises the question and perhaps provides the answer for the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) who this morning stated that Canadians are receiving mixed signals and are mixed up. The Minister must ask himself why.

In terms of challenge, there is the challenge to match the Government's intention with its legislation. The Prime Minister speaks passionately and warmly about immigrants and refugees and the manner in which this country was built, and relays his own personal and family experiences, which is moving. Then the Prime Minister's Government produces refugee legislation in Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 which runs counter to those sentiments, and runs roughshod over those aspirations. Therefore, there is a clear gap between intentions and the law. This country will have to abide by the law, and not by the intentions or speeches made by the Prime Minister or the Minister.

Mrs. Helga Kutz-Harder from the United Church of Canada, and a member of the Inter-Church Committee, who appeared before the legislative committee studying Bill C-55, ended her remarks with a very moving definition of what her intentions would be for our country and this Government.

I wish to begin my speech with her conclusion:

> Our response as a nation to refugees is a matter that reaches far, far beyond immigration control. Your committee is charged with considering the effects your recommendations may ultimately have on human lives. The Christian community charges you to place the human person first and foremost in all of your deliberations. We will do anything we need to do as churches to hold Canada and the Canadian Government up to their very, very best. Our policies are not dictated by mood swings or public opinion polls. Our mandate is the eternal universal gospel of love and social justice. Our focus in this arena is on the stranger at our gates who we are commanded to love and to cherish.

I think those words are well advised. Perhaps those would set out the parameters of the constraints by which we should be drafting our legislation and enacting a new refugee determination system.

Bill C-55 is a very important Bill. It is a Bill that will reshape and reform the structure of our refugee process. It is of pre-eminent importance. It is far more important than Bill C-84 which this Party did not accept, and for which we still have very serious reservations. Bill C-55 with Bill C-84 will become the entire new system.

Perhaps it would be helpful if we look at why we need a good piece of legislation rather than simply passing Bill C-55 in quick order. We need a system that will be fair and expedient. We must avoid the line-ups and the backlogs that we have had in Canada. We need an inland processing system because the refugee movements have changed in the world. We are no longer living in the 1960s where we had the luxury of selecting our refugees from refugee camps across the world. We sent our immigration visa officers to those camps to select men, women and children based on certain criteria, and to do our part within the United Nations Convention and the international community to ease the plight of world refugees.

That has changed. The refugees are no longer waiting in those refugee camps to be selected by the visa officers from Canada, the United States, Belgium and other countries in the world. Those refugees are not moving solely into the camps but are going to various countries in the world, including Canada, and asking for refugee status. Therefore, there is a transition in the refugee movements that was not present when we only had government sponsored refugees.

Our refugee determination system has to be changed because the system which was there before was not able to meet the numbers which wanted to come to our country. That system was only able to handle the number of refugees who would complement the struggles we undertook to have refugees from the various camps come to this country.

When the Conservative Government took office there was a very urgent need to reform the system. There was a very urgent need to put in place a system that would be able to evolve with the transition in refugee movements. One has to ask oneself why the Government waited nearly three years before introducing Bill C-55, before moving on the reform. Rabbi Plaut was mandated by the previous administration to study and make recommendations on a new refugee determination system. We must keep in mind that we have had four different Ministers of Immigration under the present Conservative Government, all of whom said, upon being sworn in as Minister, that refugee reform was one of their first priorities as Ministers. We must keep in mind that the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration made a number of very moving recommendations, concluding that reform was needed. Many of the Plaut recommendations were embraced by the committee and by many other Canadians. We must also keep in mind that the Official Opposition Party, together with the New Democratic Party, also made separate recommendations, whether in written or verbal form in debate on the floor of the House of Commons. The non-governmental organizations, the churches, Amnesty International, the Inter-Church Committee, all made their recommendations to this Government, and in fact, the previous Government, with respect to ensuring that the proper reform take place rather than simply reform for the sake of reform.

The current chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, and Member of Parliament for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), a government Member, in his capacity as chairman, urged continuously for a refugee determination system that would do honour to our traditions and to the recommendations and input that had been received from the public for a good many years.

One has to wonder if the refugee determination was important to the Government, if the reform of the refugee process was a priority. After hearing all the evidence from Rabbi Plaut, the committee, Canadians, non-governmental organizations, why did it take three years before legislation was placed on the floor of the House of Commons for deliberation in this national Chamber?

One can conclude that it was not a high priority on the Government's agenda. It was not made a necessary prerequisite in order to clean up the system, to reform the system, so we could once again place the confidence of Canadians in an immigration policy and refugee determination system that works. The confidence of Canadians is a crucial variable in the over-all equation. Without the confidence, understanding and support of Canadians, governments are paralyzed. Governments are not able to enact progressive legislation unless that legislation is rooted in the sentiments of Canadians from one coast to the other. It is that support from Canadians that permitted former governments, including the short-lived government of the then Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Joe Clark, to enact a program. Between that Government and the Government of the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, close to 106,000 Vietnamese boat people, were brought in, some 50,000 supported by the communities themselves, sponsored by Canadians, and the other 50,000 supported and sponsored by the Canadian Government.

There was the movement of 37,000 Hungarians in 1958, the movement of 11,000 Czechoslovakia refugees in 1968, the 7,000 Uganda refugees in 1972, the special South American program in 1973 which allowed 7,000 refugees to come in, the 11,300 Lebanese refugees in 1976, the 9,300 Polish refugees who were let into this country in 1982, the special Salvadoran movement in 1982 numbering 3,000 refugees, and so on and so on.

Therefore, when the Minister says the Government has increased Government sponsored refugees to 12,000, that is true. Those are refugees from the camps. But what the Minister does not say is that in addition to the thousands we as the previous Government sponsored, and in addition to accepting claimants from within the country, we have had thousands upon thousands of special refugee movements that this Conservative Government has not allowed.

Miss MacDonald: Five thousand refugees from Vietnam is all the Liberals would bring in.

Mr. Marchi: When the Conservative Government attempts to create a crisis out of 300 refugees who came in on a boat, it is shameful against the backdrop of the thousands upon thousands who have been allowed to come in. The former Minister of Immigration is speaking from her chair. I hope at some point in the debate she will stand up and account for those numbers rather than looking simply at the 12,000 who were sponsored from camps.

Miss Macdonald: All the Liberal Government would bring in were 5,000 refugees from Vietnam.

Mr. Marchi: I ask her to address herself to the other refugees Canadians have allowed their governments to move on. It is those same refugees who live in this country today. It is those same refugees who now expect the same tolerance, the same progressive attitude, that needs to be discharged with respect to refugees and immigration.

While they and every Member of this Parliament certainly do not want abuse and fraudulent claims, do not want to reward those who base their actions on human desperation, they do expect a policy that is tolerant, fair and speaks to a higher order and to the best interests of this country, rather than subscribing to those policies which may be politically expedient for the day but in the long term are found to be wanting.

With respect to fraudulent claims, the problem is equally crucial. If we allow into our system fraudulent claims, if we bring into this country those who do not deserve our protection, those queue-jumpers, that will in fact destroy any legitimate system. Any illegitimate claimant in the line-up delays justice for the individual who legitimately merits the protection of this country or any other country. There is no disagreement with that.

At the same time, however, in cleaning up the abuse, in dealing with those who wish to use our regulations and laws for their own purposes, we cannot lose sight of the protection for the legitimate person. We cannot lose sight as a country of the fact that legislation must be enacted which first and foremost protects those who legitimately need our assistance.

When the Government talks about deterrence, with which this Government has preoccupied itself in trying to sell the two refugee Bills we are discussing in the House of Commons, it always does so by saying it is against abuse and wishes to discourage people from abusing the system. It is as if to suggest that someone else in the House of Commons is in favour of abuse, as if to suggest there is a segment of society that is in favour of those who do not follow our regulations and laws. Of course, that is not true.

If the Government was genuinely concerned about trying to deal with abuse, then what better way than to have in our laws a refugee determination system that works quickly and fairly? We then come to the delay of almost three years. If we had a refugee system in place that processed claims fairly in weeks and months rather than in months and years, then that would be the greatest deterrence to those who wish to do an end run around our system. Those so-called immigration consultants, those smugglers, charging up to $10,000 and $15,000 would not be able to sell their special packages since someone would not spend his or her life savings in order to stay in a country for a matter of weeks or months. They will come if they know that they have a chance to stay here for a few years. That would be worth their while. But if a refugee claimant who is not a bona fide claimant has to spend upwards of $10,000 to come here only to find out that the processing system allows for a decision in months, then that would be the greatest message of deterrence that the country could send out.

• (1200)

It is the type of signal that we should have been promoting rather than simply procrastinating for up to three years and then moving in a mass of hysteria in response to 174 arrivals with Bill C-84. We must keep in mind that Bill C-84 targets those who come in by boat. Of those in the current 15,000 backlog 300 have come in by boat. The other 14,700 have come in by plane, train, bus, car, and through American border crossings.

The Government has tried to market Bill C-84 as the be-all and end-all of refugee legislation. It is not that. It addresses itself to only a small portion of the larger looming dilemma that we face as a country and as a member of the international community.

If the Government were serious with respect to those manipulators who perpetrated the Portuguese scam, those who were responsible for the Brazilian scam, those who perpetrated the Turkish scam, those who sell visas, passports and false social insurance numbers, then it would have moved months and years ago. The Government should not have delayed any prosecution on those immigration consultants. As we speak today, those individuals are out on the streets of Toronto and Montreal carrying on their business as usual.

If the Government were genuinely concerned about abuse it would not have waited until the summer of 1987 to introduce a piece of legislation, a piece of legislation which runs counter to the best interests of the country. Rather, it would have taken the necessary steps along the way. If it wanted to put in place a deterrence Bill, then it could have put one in place in concert with Bill C-55. It could have introduced such a Bill not some months ago but early on in its mandate.

The Minister said that they listened and heard the great debate. I think that what he was addressing was the process by which Bill C-84 and, indeed, Bill C-55 have come to fruition. It was not an honourable process. On the one hand Bill C-84 had one week of debate in committee. That was when we really had the chance to cross the t's and dot the i's and to go through a clause by clause study. There was one week in which witnesses were asked to participate. For the most part those witnesses came from central Canada because those in the regions, whether they be easterners or westerners, had no time to prepare.

Then, other witnesses were denied an opportunity to come before the committee because it was not prepared to have enough time in order to hear them. It was a process which dictated to Canadians. It was not a prime example of participatory democracy in which the aspirations of Canadians, their input, their suggestions and recommendations were listened to, but in fact the Government simply rushed the process. It rushed the process through the House and in committee and then back again to the House.

The process was not much better with respect to Bill C-55. In regard to that Bill there was some additional time for witnesses to be heard, but there was still a great rush to pass the legislation.

I said earlier that the Government should have introduced this type of legislation in the early part of its mandate rather than three years after its commencement. However, since it decided in its third year to proceed with such legislation, the very least it could have offered was a proper debate to ensure that we would be doing service and justice to a piece of legislation that would be in place for years to come.

This is legislation which is supposed to meet the aspirations of many of the organizations which are active on a daily basis in terms of the plight of refugees, and not a piece of legislation which in a few months or a few years will be struck down by the courts because of some aspect of the Charter or the Constitution. If that happens then it will place in jeopardy all the work that led up to the debate in the House of Commons. It will place in jeopardy our whole determination system and perhaps even paralyse it as a result of a Supreme Court ruling or a ruling by another court.

Then what will we say to Canadians? Are we to say, "Well, we passed the legislation. We thought it would pass the courts and it did not. We now have to start from scratch again"? That is why the process required a great deal of scrutiny. That is why the process required a greater sensitivity on behalf of the Government.

When the Minister came before the committee which studied Bill C-55 he said, "Over the last few weeks you have heard from many special interest groups and individuals, all with strongly-held views on the best course to follow and concerns about perceived weaknesses in the proposed legislation. Like you, I have listened to their suggestions and concerns". He then proceeded to deliver his prepared speech.

The whole point is that the Government did not listen to those concerns or to those witnesses. It did not listen to them in Bill C-84 when virtually every amendment from the NDP and the Liberal Party was defeated. They were not accepted at committee stage, nor were they accepted at report stage or at third reading.

Essentially, it was the same story with Bill C-55. It is true that the Government accepted a number of the amendments which it sponsored. It tinkered with clauses here and there, but with respect to the major tenets of the legislation, the major concerns of groups and organizations, it did not listen. It did not move and it did not allow those amendments.

I must ask myself why the process is there. What is a committee to do when it calls organizations from British Columbia to Newfoundland to come in to make presentations, to allow them to answer questions from MPs, when at the end of the process not one of their proposed amendments or concerns will be listened to? Their variables are not in the equation that we are discussing today. I find that upsetting because that is not the way that a democratic institution ought to function.

I am not suggesting that every opinion that one hears from every witness will be the major plank in the legislation. I am not suggesting that at all. I am saying that you cannot draft legislation in a vacuum and expect the country to agree with every clause in the legislation.

Yes, the Government is charged with proposing legislation but there should be an opportunity at committee stage for interested and concerned Canadians to be heard and have their concerns addressed. The process is as important as the substance of the legislation. The two go hand in hand.

It was therefore with some degree of sadness that many Canadians went through the system, after the so-called reform of the committee structure, only to find out that by and large the legislation is the same after the process. This despite the intervention of hundreds of organizations who make it their business to be vigilant about legislation affecting their constituencies.

Another important point is that as we discuss Bill C-55 we cannot forget Bill C-84. That Bill was introduced as emergency legislation. That is why one of our amendments dealt with a sunset clause. By definition, emergencies do not last forever. Therefore emergency legislation should not become permanent legislation. We tried to get the Government to be sensitive to that fact when dealing with Bill C-84, but without success, and the Bill will shortly be law.

The Minister said in committee, and again this morning on the floor of the House of Commons, that claimants will have a chance for a fair oral hearing. On August 26 he said in committee that everyone with an arguable refugee claim will receive a full oral hearing before an expert and independent tribunal. No claimant will be removed from Canada without being seen by a member of the new refugee board. If you are a refugee arriving by boat, those words do not apply. Under the provisions of Bill C-84 an incoming vessel full of claimants, who we know very little about, can be turned away.

That creates an unfortunate situation. For example, let us take the case of a brother and sister who have to flee from El Salvador. The brother takes an airplane and lands at Toronto International Airport. Unfortunately, the sister took a boat and arrived off the coast of Canada. Those two individuals can and probably will meet very different fates. The brother will be processed as soon as he lands. He will say he is a refugee and hopefully we will guarantee him a hearing under this Bill. His sister, arriving off the coast of Newfoundland or British Columbia, may be turned away along with everyone else on the boat before the claim can be heard. We are in a sense discriminating based on the mode of transportation.

The Government has not been able to say in any reassuring way that it will know how many of those people have documents, how many of them are making fraudulent claims. It cannot make the proper determination at sea unless it sends immigration officers to interview the individual passengers.

We suggested that we bring the boat in and, if it is determined that they are not bona fide refugees, that we charge the captain and the rest of the culprits and put them in prison or fine them. We are not discouraging smugglers if we just allow the boat to turn around at sea and go back to where it sailed from. The captain of the ship, having been paid anyway, can simply dump them somewhere else.

More importantly, we will not have had a chance to examine those people under the refugee determination system. That is why I have placed on the floor of this House our concerns about Bill C-84 and Bill C-55. They are not consistent with each other if we take the words of the Minister seriously. We are concerned about the contradictions between the two Bills. We should do something about them.

Another area of great concern is in the legality of both pieces of legislation. A great number of people suggested that certain clauses in both Bills are unconstitutional. They offend certain parts of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. For that reason many people suggested some key amendments. Yet not only were those amendments refused, the Government also refused for a long time to allow officials from the Department of Justice to testify in committee.

The Government has refused to this day to show Canadians the basis for this legislation, including the legal opinions it received. Finally, it refused many requests, including that of our Party, to send the legislation, once it is passed, to the Supreme Court of Canada for judicial review. In that way we would know whether the legislation meets the standards of our Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. If it does not, then we are able to change it. Above all, we are able to do so with a great savings in time rather than see the piece of legislation being dragged through the courts and a decision being rendered after many years of debate and challenges and after great expense to many Canadians and organizations.

When the Minister of State for Immigration appeared before the committee he said quite clearly in his speech that the fundamental objectives of Bill C-55 were to provide protection to those who need it, and that he believed this piece of legislation met the justice system, the Constitution, and the Charter. However, he said that without backing it up with a legal opinion and without allowing justice officials to make reference to the legal opinion which they drafted.

However, every other legal witness who appeared before the committee differed with the opinion of the Minister. In fact, Barbara Jackman from the Canadian Bar Association said that the association felt it did not comply with the Convention obligations and that many of the association's lawyers felt that it did not comply with the Charter. That was the representative view of many legal and expert witnesses who testified before the committee. They indicated that constitutionally the provisions in both these Bills would be left wanting.

On the one hand we have the legal concerns. However, on the other hand we have the real concerns of Canadians much later in the process. If this piece of legislation, or Bill C-84, which preceded it, is found to be unconstitutional it will render our system null and void. It will place in chaos or in paralysation a determination system which was supposed to work. That is the real problem in terms of the constitutionality debate. Canadians from one coast to the other will be angry with a Government in which they placed their trust and confidence to enact a determination system that worked correctly, under the law, quickly, and fairly for refugee claimants.

What will the Government tell these Canadians in a year or two years' time if it is still in power? What will it say to them about why it proceeded with the Bill? What will it tell Canadians after years of debate when they see another piece of legislation which does not do what it was purported to do, namely, provide a refugee determination system which works on behalf of Canadians, in which they can have some degree of satisfaction, trust, and confidence, and which works on behalf of refugee claimants who are accessing it?

That will be the greatest political dilemma. Perhaps it will place a barrier on further progression in terms of immigration policy and programs. It will have a long-term impact and effect upon what we legislate in Parliament.

Is the current Government serious in terms of raising targets? Is it serious about increasing the number of refugees it wishes to accept? The other day the Prime Minister said that the Government wishes to increase the number of refugees coming to Canada. If they are serious and genuine about those concerns, they must pay close attention to not allowing this piece of legislation to be struck down by the courts. If that happens, I fear that many Canadians will lose patience and turn the frustration and anger which they feel for the Government into a policy of fewer immigrants, fewer refugees, less compassion, and less tolerance. That is a possibility.

As Canadians are watching the debate, perhaps they are assuming that the Government and the federal Parliament will take their legislative responsibilities seriously and pass legislation which is in keeping with our legal norms, with our justice system, and with our Charter. I say to the Government that it cannot have it both ways. It cannot have a piece of legislation which will be struck down by the courts and expect Canadians to have confidence in and support a progressive immigration policy and program such as we saw in the 1950s, 1960s, and 1970s.

Turning away from the domestic scene, another aspect is the international stage or the international community and how we appear among our peers, friends, or allies. What will be the world impact, repercussion, or impression when it learns about Bill C-84 and Bill C-55? What message will we be sending to the more than 100 countries that are signatories to the United Nations Convention on Refugees? What signal will we be sending to individual countries that are being urged to protect and encourage a resolve to try to come to grips with the refugee crisis in the international community? What directions are we encouraging those countries to take by our refugee legislation? Are we in fact strengthening that resolve among countries which subscribe to the United Nations Convention? Are we increasing their determination to stay the course or, by these two pieces of legislation, are we dismantling the incentive or efforts in trying to keep the pact together and to have it meaningful in these trying times across the globe? What happens to our international leadership in the field of refugee assistance? What is the significance to a country which for the first time won the Nansen Medal for its achievements and for its record of human rights in the area of refugee assistance? For the very first time a country and its people, rather than an individual or an organization, won the Nansen Medal. What are we to say to those who subscribe to the pride which all Canadians felt in being on top in this sphere internationally?

Quite often Canada, for a number of reasons and in numerous areas, has been able to play a complementary role with other countries in solving a problem. When it came to refugees, I think every Canadian felt a great sense of pride in Canada not being third best or second best but in fact being a leader in setting the trend and setting the standards. With that background, I do not think Canadians feel the same sense of pride once they learn about Bill C-55 and Bill C-84.

These are some of the questions and dilemmas with which the committee grappled. These are some of the dimensions which we should be addressing in this third reading debate.

Of course there are the problems with the Bill itself. We largely had two camps of organizations and testimony. On the one hand many individuals and organizations suggested that the Bill was badly drafted, that the Bill had too many shortcomings, and that the Bill did not do justice to our tradition in terms of refugee policies over the last number of years. They suggested that the Bill should be redrafted, that the Bill should go back to the drafting boards so that hopefully we would come up with a piece of legislation which did justice to our sense of fair play, compassion, and assistance.

The other side of the equation involved organizations and individuals who said that if we wanted to have Bill C-55 we must simply make movement toward substantial amendments in three crucial areas of the Bill, namely, prescreening, safe country, and appeal. Basically they said that for their approval and support they simply had to be met part way, that we had to show good faith and sincerity in the negotiations, and that those negotiations had to be reflected in the pieces of legislation which we brought forward. They said that the prescreening, the safe third country concept and the appeal mechanism had to be drastically altered if this piece of legislation could be supported. In the end, substantive changes on those three areas were not made.

My colleague from Spadina and I offered substantive amendments to those three clauses of the Bill, but those amendments were not accepted. That is why I initially spoke on the process. Many other amendments were moved. Some amendments which were moved by government Members to cross t's and dot i's were accepted. As well, a great many others designed to clean up the language of the Bill here and there were also accepted.

The position of my Party was in between those who wanted to redrafted the Bill and those who were in favour of it. We clearly articulated the need to change those three clauses of the Bill.

Our strategy when dealing with Bill C-84 was to move a great many amendments. We took care to draft those amendments so that they would be procedurally correct as well as acceptable, but not one of them was accepted at committee stage or in the House of Commons. Therefore, we took a different tack on Bill C-55. We did not move 60 or 70 amendments like we did when dealing with Bill C-84. We were not prepared to play charades by suggesting amendments that were not substantive. I say this not out of disrespect for those who chose to move a great many amendments in the hopes of trying to make this legislation better. Our tack was just different.

The Government wanted to have a prescreening stage that would prejudge refugee claimants, it wanted a safe country concept that would send refugees into orbit, bouncing them around like a ball in a pinball machine from one country to the other, and it wished to subscribe to an appeal mechanism that was poor, substandard and would not offer claimants access to it. We felt that if the Government was not willing to substantively change those three clauses, we were prepared to move other amendments which by comparison would be academic and insignificant.

If the Government was not prepared to accept amendments to those three objectionable clauses, we would not be pleased if the Minister told us that he listened because he moved six or seven amendments. The Minister did not listen where it counted. The Government did not move on these three clauses even though a great many people pleaded for it to do so.

I have never before heard witnesses in a committee actually use words like beg and plead. Witnesses came before that committee and actually said, "For goodness sake, if you are going to change something, then make a change that will have an impact. Make a change that will offer refugees some hope. Do not simply change those areas that do not count, add up the number of amendments accepted and brag about how many were accepted. Ask yourselves what is the impact of those amendments on the over-all legislation".

Members of my Party are embarrassed by certain clauses in this legislation. We do not want to identify ourselves with those who are happy with a mediocre piece of legislation. We believe that as a leader in the international community, we should subscribe to those interests that are above those that are mediocre, particularly when offering people protection in order to save their lives. We felt it was important to stand by those principles. We are perfectly willing to be judged by Canadians on our position as it affects the basic elements of the Bill.

Let us look at the prescreening provisions. The Government introduced in the legislation a new refugee board which would deal only with refugee claims. It would be distinct from the Immigration Appeal Board which could deal with appeals made by individuals who were not allowed to visit here or become landed immigrants. That is a very worth-while and significant step forward. However, the Government built a barrier around the new refugee board.

The Government built a brick wall around the refugee board by placing a prescreening stage before the oral hearing stage. At the border, two individuals would determine whether a claimant legitimately deserved to go to the next step or whether he should be turned back. If there is to be a refugee board that will make that determination, why has the Government included a prescreening stage? What does it accomplish? The answers to both questions are quite frightening.

The prescreening stage undermines the very reasons we established a refugee board in the first place. In his testimony on the prescreening stage, Rabbi Plaut said the following:

> This Bill has the wrong focus. It is not a Bill to determine refugee status primarily, it is a Bill on how to deport people primarily.

Rabbi Plaut, the individual who was mandated by the previous Government to study the issue and who submitted his recommendations to this Government, said quite clearly that the Bill is primarily about how to deport people.

Fred Zemans, a member of the Canadian Jewish Congress and a professor from York University who is very much active with the plight of refugees, said the following with respect to prescreening, and I think he put it in very clear language:

> I believe that the pre-screening is inappropriate. We do not appoint police officers to determine who is a criminal.

The point there is that police officers have a duty to apprehend suspects who then go before the justice system and a judge makes the final determination properly, fairly and logically. In the prescreening stage provided for by this Bill, there is no fairness, no logic and no sense of order.

The Government has said that it wishes to expedite refugee claims. Yet is is suggesting that there be a prescreening stage. That will expand the amount of time it will take for an individual claim to work itself through the system. There is more room for abuse if individual claimants know they can give their story twice rather than just the once before the refugee board. There will be longer line-ups as a result. The backlog will not be eased. We will be adding a bureaucratic layer at every border crossing in this country. That is very inappropriate if one of your goals is to cut down the amount of time a person has in the system.

It is also inconceivable that at the prescreening stage we are going to ask the claimant to give only part of his or her story. We will have two officers at the border crossing saying, "This is not the place to give us all the facts. We do not want to hear the whole story about how you suffered in prison, about how your family was persecuted and tortured or killed. Just give us a brief synopsis of your story". If you were a refugee claimant would you want to give just part of your story? Of course not. If you were escaping torture or in fear of your life you would want to put all your cards on the table. If that is to be done, and it should be done, then it is only proper that it be done in front of the refugee board. You cannot say to someone, just give part of the story, because there will be the fear that they have not given facts enough in order to warrant an opportunity to start a new and safe life.

How much is enough? What is a credible basis for a claim? How much time do you need; is it 10 minutes, or is it 20 minutes? How many relatives have to be killed, two, your whole family? Is it enough that they burned down your house in El Salvador? Is it enough that they kidnapped your parents or your sister? How much information do the two officers involved need in order to tell the claimant he has a case and to go on to the next stage? Those officers are going to go home at night and ask themselves if they did the right thing. Did that person provide me with enough information? They will wonder, because there was a plane load of claimants and they were under the gun, whether they made the right decision. Did that deadline and a shortage of staff have anything to do with refusing a particular individual an opportunity to give his or her story? Would you want to be that officer? Would I? I would rather do anything else. I would rather be a punch press operator in my father's tool and die shop than make those kinds of decisions. I say that seriously and I mean it, because not only are we putting refugee claimants in a precarious position, we are asking immigration officials to make decisions which they may live to regret, for personal and religious reasons.

The prescreening stage is a grave obstacle to this process. We do not see the need for it. It will not expedite matters. It will not make the system simpler. It will not allow the claimant to give his story properly. Rabbi Plaut called that the building of a Berlin Wall around the refugee determination system.

Another important question is who will be the officials making the determination? One will be a refugee board member and the other an immigration adjudicator. We suggested to the Government that if it really wanted to maintain its prescreening stage, despite the fact we think it is wrong, then at least it should make sure those two officials are from the refugee division. They would then be knowledgeable, credible, and have had day-to-day experience in judging individual claimants. Why was it necessary to have someone who works for Immigration Canada? Why an immigration adjudicator? People asked,"Don't you trust our immigration officials? Don't you think they are competent? Don't you think they are trustworthy?" Of course we do. They are all that and more. We never suggested that they are incompetent. However, they have a function to fulfil. They are hired as immigration adjudicators, the Immigration Commission is their master. Madam Falardeau-Ramsay, a member of the Immigration Appeal Board, addressed that concern. She said quite simply that immigration officials would make good refugee board members if they were not immigration officials. Therein lies the reason. An immigration adjudicator works for Immigration Canada. They work on immigration-related matters, control, deportation, and the rest. A member of the refugee division looks at the merits.

We suggested that you do not confuse immigration with refugee-related matters. Keep the two clearly delineated. It is good that we have a refugee board—absolutely. However, when you are doing prescreening and you have both an immigration official and a refugee official, you obscure the two lines and create confusion. You do not allow the immigration program to operate properly. That was our first suggestion. We suggested that if they are to be in place they both should be refugee board members. Once again our concerns were not addressed.

We are concerned about what prescreening does. Does it make the system more efficient by allowing in fewer refugees? We came to the conclusion that that must have been part of the equation. The Government must have determined that in order to have a cleaner, more effective and efficient system it would limit the number of claims accessing the system. That is comparable to a hospital suggesting that it would become more efficient by limiting the number of patients it admits. It is comparable to maximizing the efficiency of hospital emergency departments by allowing no one in after a certain hour.

Doctors and hospital administrators know that they cannot do that and they accept it. Everyone has probably been to an emergency ward. We know that they could be more efficient. Sick and bleeding people have to wait in the corridors because there are not enough rooms available. We have all had friends and families, if not ourselves, in that situation. We could not understand why we had to wait to be attended to, but there were other people ahead of us who were sick as well. At least hospitals do not close their doors. They do not tell you to take your sickness or injury elsewhere. They allow you in and treat you as soon as humanly possible.

That should be the system with regard to immigration. It is clearly unacceptable to try to maximize efficiency by minimizing the number of refugees who can access it. The moral way to treat refugee claimants is to allow them to be heard. If necessary, we must increase the number of refugee board members. It is better to do that than to increase the number of officers at border points who will make prejudgments.

It must be difficult for government Members and Ministers to rationalize a prescreening stage. I am sure that the people who understand the Bill have said the same things to government Members as they have said to me. I am moved by those arguments, and not only because I happen to be in this place at this time in the Opposition. I do not talk about these things only for the sake of talking We are all in favour of maximizing efficiency, but my colleagues and I are also interested in protecting individuals who seek our assistance.

What is a safe country and why do we have such a concept? We have asked the Government why it has such a policy. The policy is basically that if a refugee comes from country A passing through country B, which is on our list of so-called safe countries, and arrives in country B, Canada, then whether they were in country B for five minutes, five hours, five days, or five months, they will be sent back to country B with no questions asked. We will wash our hands of responsibility. We will play the role of Pontius Pilot in dealing with the plight of refugees.

If we are going to place people in safe third countries we should define precisely which countries those are in order that we can be sure they will face no danger there. We do not object to sending claimants back to a third country where they have enjoyed refugee status, if they have enjoyed protection and can live a normal life there. There are many people in the backlog who have not enjoyed such protection and are threatened with being returned to a land where they will be persecuted. Therefore, people who enjoy refugee status in another country should take advantage of it and allow us to extend the same courtesy to others who need it. After due processing it would be proper and legitimate for Canada to ask such individuals to complete their processing in that safe country.

Prescreening and a safe country concept together result in a danger of prejudgment. Individuals are placed in jeopardy.

I see that you are signalling that it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I will continue following Question Period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—POSITION OF NEW BRUNSWICK LIBERAL PARTY LEADER

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, occasionally a small piece of encouraging good news comes to our attention. In New Brunswick, Liberal Leader Frank McKenna, a constitutional expert, has said that if he is elected Premier he will endeavour to improve the Meech Lake Accord.

Mr. McKenna cites his concern for women's rights, the rights of francophones outside Quebec, and aboriginal rights. I share all of those apprehensions with this Leader and I would add equality for Canada's northerners under our Constitution to that list.

I urge the Government to adopt the proposed Liberal amendments to the Meech Lake Accord before we proceed with its ratification in the House.

SPORTS

MONTREAL INTERNATIONAL MARATHON—CONGRATULATIONS TO PARTICIPANTS

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, the town of Saint-Bruno de Montarville has earned distinction at Montreal's IXth International Marathon. A new page of history was written yesterday at the IXth International Marathon in Montreal when, for the first time ever, Canadian athlete Peter Maher led the best competitors to the wire, and two female athletes, Jacqueline Gareau and Nicole Caisse, both residents of Saint-Bruno de Montarville in the riding of Chambly, came in first and third respectively.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Government, the Canadian people, and especially the residents of the riding of Chambly, I extend congratulations to all participants in the Montreal IXth International Marathon, and more particularly to Jacqueline Gareau and Nicole Caisse. Marathon President Serge Arsenault, another resident of Saint-Bruno de Montarville, also deserves commendation for his outstanding work.

Bravo and congratulations to them all, long live the Montreal International Marathon!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DEMAND FOR ENVIRONMENTAL BILL OF RIGHTS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Government last week announced new measures for assessment and review of environmental impact. These new measures include a greater role for the public in environmental impact assessment, and that is welcome, for certainly ordinary Canadians want to be involved and environmental groups have great experience and expertise to offer.

However, the process is confined to planning only, and not regulation. Of course planning is essential, but planning without real teeth, without the prospect of regulation, is not enough. Environmentalists want to see legislative protection for the environment, with tough penalties and independent tribunals.

Cosmetic changes are not enough, given the seriousness of environmental destruction to date. There must be real protection in the future because industry is continuing this path. Potential polluters will be much more willing to build environmental concerns into their planning if they know that they face prosecution and penalties.

Canadians want a real Environmental Protection Act with an Environmental Bill of Rights. Nothing else will do.

EXTERNAL AID

THIRD WORLD DEVELOPMENT—PARTNERSHIP WALKS SPONSORED BY AGA KHAN FOUNDATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had the pleasure along with 2,000 others of participating in the Partnership Walk for Third World Development which was held in Taylor Creek Park in my riding. This walk, as well as the similar walks held in Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary and Montreal, was sponsored by the Aga Khan Foundation of Canada to increase awareness of international development among Canadians and to raise money to assist people in developing countries. The contributions are matched by CIDA, and in the case of Alberta residents, by Alberta Aid.

Foundation was established by His Highness the Aga Khan, spiritual leader of the Ismaili Muslims. There are approximately 15,000 Canadian Ismailis in the greater Toronto area.

Since coming to Canada a few short years ago, the Ismailis have made their mark in the professions, in business, and in community service. In my own community, Ismaili Canadians sponsor Scouts, Guides, Citizenship Courts and Blood Donor Clinics. Yesterday's Partnership Walk for Third World Development is another demonstration of the outstanding example they are setting for all Canadians to follow.

TRADE

FREE TRADE—JOBS—WOMEN—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO ACT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr Speaker, we learned last week that the free trade negotiations had broken off or had been interrupted. In any case, they are now in an impasse, but every cloud has a silver lining, and I would like to explain what I mean.

Many seamstresses in the hosiery and leather industries heaved a sigh of relief because free trade would mean bad news for a large number of them: job losses, relocation of families, and so on. If the negotiations resume, more serious thought should be given to jobs for women under a free trade agreement. I know that many will object that the good of the country must come before anything else. However, I am indeed thinking of the good of the country since 52 per cent of Canadians are women who want equality at home and at work. Instead of giving us only rhetoric, the Government should take more positive action in the framework of free trade, including for women.

FREE TRADE—POSITION OF SOCIALIST PARTY LEADER

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr Speaker, if I may, I would like to quote the words of the leader of the Socialist Party as reported on page 9346 of Hansard for September 25, 1987:

> I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 29 to seek leave to move the ajournment of the House.

Why? To discuss free trade.

Here is a second quote from the Socialist Leader, as reported on page 9232 of Hansard for September 23, 1987:

> Would the Prime Minister now tell the Americans that those talks are now ended, finished?

On the next page, we find the following:

> We want these talks—

—on free trade—

> —terminated.

Why? To stop discussing free trade, Mr. Speaker.

This is a simple, clear and recent example of the inconsistency, confusion and lack of intellectual rigour of the Socialist Leader.

Canadians must realize that, once again, the Socialist Leader does not know where he is going or even where he is.

If Canadians want to see what makes a good party leader, they will not find it by looking at the Socialist Leader.

LOBBYISTS REGISTRATION ACT

CALL FOR ACTION ON PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker:

> It is a great principle of public administration—I could even say an imperative—that to function effectively the Government and the public service of a democracy must have the trust and confidence of the public they serve.

Those were the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on September 9, 1985. In his open letter, he tabled a seven-point public sector ethics package which included instructions to "prepare on an urgent basis, legislation to govern lobbying activity". Over two years later we have yet to see action on public service sector ethics. Bill C-82 on lobbying has not yet been introduced for second reading and the Government has shown no sign of either introducing other public sector ethics legislation or in displaying public sector ethics.

We still face the spectre of continuous scandals—the Grossmann affair, questionable public works leasing arrangements and now the Memotec insider trading scandal—where an unending stream of Tory cronies and cohorts use public connections for private gain. Public confidence in our political system is plummeting as a result. I, therefore, call upon the Government to bring forth Bill C-82 from where it is hiding, and other aspects of the Government's ethics package right now.

POLICE AND CORRECTIONAL OFFICERS

MEMORIAL SERVICE ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was privileged yesterday, together with the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher), members of the House of Commons Security Staff, members of the RCMP, members of the City of Nepean and City of Ottawa Police Forces, and others, to attend the 10th Memorial Service on Parliament Hill to pay homage to the police and protective officers who have given their lives to protect the lives and rights of fellow Canadians, your neighbours and mine.

In 1984 a Memorial Book of Remembrance for police and correctional officers who were killed in the performance of their duties was unveiled on Parliament Hill. Yesterday the names of four officers who gave their lives as a result of violent criminal action in the past year were added. They are Agent Robert Baril, Montreal Urban Community Police, November 13, 1986, 42 years of age; Gordon Kowalcyzk, Special Constable, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Calgary, January 26, 1987, 35 years of age; Sergeant Larry Young, Vancouver Police Force, February 2, 1987, 42 years of age, and Constable Emmanuel Aucoin, New Brunswick Highway Patrol, March 8, 1987, 31 years of age.

Many others have died in the performance of their duty in highway accidents or by other means. Their sacrifice is no less meaningful, their loss no less painful, and their contribution to the quality of life in Canada no less appreciated.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF BOW RIVER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, for the past two months Albertans in Canmore and Exshaw have been outraged by a large brown streak of sewage debris in the normally sparkling blue-green waters of the Bow River. In September, bacterial levels near Exshaw reached 700 parts per million, three and one-half times the allowable level in Alberta. The source of pollution is the sewage treatment plant in Banff.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) should be reminded that as Mayor of Banff he is responsible for the operation of the treatment plant. Canmore's town manager, Frank Kosa, sums it up by saying: "Tom McMillan makes a big deal of protecting the ozone layer and he won't even clean up his own backyard".

• (1410)

And what about the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)? Where is he when it comes to protecting the health of his constituents? We have not heard from him on the pollution of the Bow River—perhaps he drank the water.

Pollution of the Bow River is a national disgrace. It enlightens Canadians as to the Government's commitment to water protection.

THE CONSTITUTION

SUPPORT FOR MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Slowly but surely, Mr. Speaker, we are definitely paving the way for Quebec's return, together with its constitutional rights, to the Canadian fold. The Saskatchewan and Quebec legislatures have already declared their support.

As the House is to begin in a matter of hours the debate on the Meech Lake Accord, once more I want to state emphatically that I wish to see this Accord ratified as soon as possible.

Irrespective of our political allegiance, we, as Members of the House, must vote as one in favour of Quebec's return to the Canadian family. We must say so in so many words. Of course, the interest of Quebecers is at stake, something I am well aware of as a Quebec elected representative, but the interest of Canada as a whole is also at stake.

I therefore urge all elected Members of this House and all Senators who also will have to ratify this Accord, to respect the will of the people and to vote unanimously in favour of Quebec's return to the Canadian constitutional fold.

The Meech Lake Accord is a major step towards national reconciliation, and as was pointed out by Pierre Tremblay in his column in today's Le Devoir newspaper, "gone are the days of confrontation, now is the time for reconciliation and realism. The Meech-Langevin philosophy is a scenario for peace, whereas Trudeau's credo was to stir up war".

This House and the provincial legislatures which have not yet ratified the Meech Lake Accord ought to do it without delay: it is in the interests of all Canadian men and women.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY WORK STOPPAGES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on the Great Lakes and along the St. Lawrence Seaway work stoppages commenced today with the withdrawal of services by engineers. This is an indication that the two parties were unable to achieve an agreement acceptable to both sides.

We on this side of the House hope that the two sides will get back to the bargaining table to hammer out an agreement. We ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) to provide any assistance his Department can provide to ensure that a new collective agreement is negotiated.

We are also concerned about the growing trend across the country which insists that workers accept roll-back settlements even when there are profits. We believe that it is time for a statement by the Government to indicate that a person who has been working for a certain wage for a certain length of time has a right to expect that type of guarantee of his income. We would like to hear a statement from the Government on this matter.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

FOOD RESEARCH INSTITUTE—SUGGESTED TRANSFER TO GUELPH

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has recognized the Guelph community as an important centre, if not the most important centre, for agriculture in Canada. By moving components of Agriculture Canada to Guelph the Minister has ensured a new stress on co-operation between the University of Guelph and his own associates.

Today I would like to make another suggestion to the Minister. That suggestion concerns the moving to Guelph of the Food Research Institute in order that it can co-operate more fully with industry in southern Ontario and with departments at the University of Guelph which have considerable strength in such areas as food science, animal science, nutrition, food processing, food engineering, and other areas.

Such a co-operative effort could not fail to benefit the food industry of Canada and the agricultural community in general.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Last week, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology made what I would describe as an admission of ineffectiveness and incompetence on the part of his government. As reported in the La Presse newspaper, he indicated that he would have to make a clean sweep of all the efforts made before by the Department of Regional Economic Development. In other words, he blamed his two predecessors implying that these ministers did not know what they were doing and had failed to properly administer the Department. As a matter of fact, the new minister indicated that he would have to set the Department's budget in order.

Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat unusual to hear, three years after this government assumed power, a minister step forward and recognize the incompetence of his own government.

It was pretty obvious Mr. Speaker, on the basis of its actions day after day, that this government had no overall policy concerning regional and industrial development. However, I am quite sure the Canadian people will not appreciate the fact that it took the government three years to realize its lack of policy.

Therefore, I trust that the minister, who wants now to be known as the new prophet of regional economic development, will be able to come up with a new policy before the next election; afterwards would be too late; meanwhile, they would have lost both time and money.

HOUSING

TORONTO—INCREASE IN RENTS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the rise in the cost of living in Canada has not affected all those Canadians whose salaries or wages have kept up to or exceeded the rise in the consumer price index. Parliament must focus more attention on those who are well below, especially when we consider the increasing significance of the price of principal accommodation.

In 1980 it was rising at a rate much more slowly than the cost of food. In 1987 it is rising at a rate that is much faster. During that period of time the average rent for a one-bedroom apartment in Metro Toronto has gone up more than 50 per cent. It is becoming a critical challenge to many people whose incomes are so low that they must spend 40 per cent or more of their income to pay for minimal accommodation in a basement apartment.

TRADE

IMPASSE IN CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CANADIAN DELEGATION IN WASHINGTON

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my questions to the Prime Minister.

Last Friday in the House in answer to a question, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said, " . . . if there were ever to be any meeting on a higher level, it would occur only after a change in the United States position".

Yesterday on television we had the chief Canadian negotiator pro tem, Simon Reisman, say, "I have seen nothing in the suggestions put forward by the United States to change in any significant way the impasse and difficulties that we encountered last week".

My question to the Prime Minister is this. If the Government of Canada was only going to respond to a major change—and Mr. Reisman states there has been no major change—why have we sent a high-level delegation, headed by Mr. Burney, together with two of his assistants, to Washington to start negotiating a new deal?

Has there been a major change in the American position, or is it truer that the only change in position is the one that is taking place by the Canadian Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, following the interview that was given Sunday morning by Ambassador Reisman there were communications throughout the day. Ambassador Reisman was quite correct and entirely consistent in saying what he did when he did. There were further communications from the Government of the United States which the Government determined met the criteria as set out by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on Friday, as a result of which the meeting is taking place just about now.

UNITED STATES POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Is the Prime Minister then saying that the United States Government is now prepared to make major changes on the question of the dispute settlement mechanism, and the major exclusion of programs like cultural industries and regional development?

Can we receive an assurance from the Prime Minister that the concessions are on the American side and not, as suggested on Friday, that Canada was also prepared to make changes dealing with the dispute settlement mechanism and to water down that program? Is it only the Americans who are making the changes at this point in time?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is inaccurate in his characterization of what is taking place. The statement that was issued is fairly clear cut. Communications between the two Governments were continuing during the weekend. As a result of these exchanges, it was agreed that senior political representatives of the two Governments would meet on Monday, September 28, on this matter.

I think my hon. friend can safely conclude that the information that came from Washington was enough to justify the presence of representatives of the Government of Canada to see if there were adequate reasons for resuming formal negotiations.

• (1420)

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL STATEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. I believe he would agree that over the last three or four days the primary source of information has been a form of sidewalk soliloquy by his press secretary and not information which has been given in the House of Commons.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether we can get assurances from him that he would be prepared to table the documents which changed hands this week between United States and Canadian officials and that tomorrow in the House, when his Principal Secretary returns from Washington, the Prime Minister or one of his Ministers will make a statement clearly outlining what is the present state of action in the negotiations, whether they will be resumed, what position the Canadian Government is taking in responding to those actions, and what concessions have been made on both sides.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with all the respect that I have for my own Director of Communications, Mr. Phillips, he has not been the primary source of information in this regard. He has been there to be helpful to the media in responding to their concerns.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister for International Trade, the Deputy Prime Minister, and I have been fully responding to inquiries all last week with regard to this. We have been forthcoming in providing my hon. friend, plus all Members of the House, with all relevant information.

My hon. friend knows full well that I have indicated many times that we will provide, at an appropriate time, all the information that he would wish upon which to make an appropriate value judgment.

At the moment there are discussions ongoing in Washington, and I know that he would want to do nothing that would compromise the possible success of those discussions.

PURPOSE OF DELEGATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since the Prime Minister is unwilling to give us any real information on why this meeting involving his Chief of Staff and two of his Ministers is taking place, and in view of the fact that last week the Government not only suspended the free trade talks with the United States but said that Canada would not go back and that instead the United States had to come to Canada, isn't the only conclusion Canadians can draw from what is happening that the American Ministers are going to be receiving Canadian Ministers and Derek Burney who are coming to Washington with a view to doing nothing else but caving in and giving in to the Americans on their essential demands?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Isn't this the only reasonable conclusion that Canadians can draw from this strange spectacle which the Canadian Government is staging?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to the Ministers "coming to Washington". In point of fact the Minister of Finance, the most senior Minister of the Government, has been in Washington for the last number of days—

Mr. Lapierre: Poor Maz.

Mr. Mulroney: In view of the indications that have been forthcoming—

An Hon. Member: You are not senior any more, Maz.

Mr. Mulroney: If my hon. friends would like the answer—in view of the indications that have been forthcoming from the Americans, it was deemed appropriate to ask the Minister of Finance to remain there to listen to their point of view.

The Minister for International Trade is there and the Chief of Staff to the Prime Minister, and I would not think that my hon. friend would find anything untoward in our responding to an action by the Government of the United States which may prove helpful at this time.

POSITION OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, wasn't the only action by the Government of the United States a two-page letter it sent late last week to Ottawa and which Simon Reisman said, after seeing it, was totally unacceptable because it did not represent any change whatsoever from the position the Americans were taking which led to the free trade talks being suspended?

If that is the case, I want to ask the Prime Minister, whether or not the Minister of Finance was already in Washington—and he was there for the IMF meetings and nothing else—isn't the fact of the matter that the Canadian Government took an initiative, which it said it was not going to take, to crawl to the Americans to get the talks started in a desperate effort to restore the remaining shreds of credibility of the Prime Minister on this failed, useless, and harmful free trade initiative.

• (1425)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we all know of the Hon. Member's deep antipathy for the United States of America. We all know of the anti-Americanism that permeates every statement the officials of the Liberal Party make. That is not the intention of this Government. That is not the true feelings of the people of Canada.

We are not negotiating with the people of the United States as we would negotiate, as he would suggest, with a hostile foreign power. We are negotiating on a country to country, sovereign to sovereign basis, attempting to conclude what we believe is an important international initiative in trade.

The statement made by my hon. friend is quite wrong. There were many other discussions and communications over the weekend from the United States of America, no doubt inspired, for example, by a sentiment expressed by the spokesman for the President of the United States, Mr. Fitzwater, who said that the President is very anxious that those negotiations continue and hopefully reach a conclusion. It is because of that view that initiatives were undertaken by the Government of the United States which allowed the Government of Canada to meet with the Americans at this time. We believe it is very much in the national interest to attempt this kind of meeting and I hope my hon. friend will ultimately agree.

INQUIRY WHO SUGGESTED MEETING IN WASHINGTON

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, uncertainty still prevails in connection with the free trade discussions. Can the Prime Minister simply say who suggested holding this meeting in Washington today? The Canadians or the Americans?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I already answered this question barely a few minutes ago. I went to the trouble of recalling the statements made last week by various Ministers, and in answer to a question from my friend the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor I just pointed out that there have been rather constant communications throughout the weekend. The Canadian Government has not changed its mind and came to the conclusion that President Reagan's attitude was serious enough to justify holding a meeting today. It seems quite normal to me that we should take this kind of approach.

[English]

INFORMATION RECEIVED BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I note that the Prime Minister has still not directly told us who made the suggestion, who suggested the initiative and who took that initiative. Since the Prime Minister has talked about it in his earlier answers, I would like to ask him precisely what information reached the Canadian Government which was so striking, so much of a change, that it led to a reversal of the very strong negative position Mr. Reisman had expressed with respect to the United States' letter which had been sent on Saturday. What information was that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already responded fully to that question. Now my hon. friend asks, in light of the information I have already provided the House, precisely what information reached the Canadian Government. If I provided him with that specific information, I would be as bad a negotiator as he obviously is.

UNITED STATES POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in fact it would give the Prime Minister a last chance to take Canadians into the confidence of the Government and to explain what is taking place in these negotiations. Since so much else has changed this weekend, I would ask the Prime Minister if he will make it clear once again that the Government will not start up negotiations once more unless the Americans indicate point blank and beforehand that there will be concessions made on their side, not on our side.

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know my hon. friend would not ask anyone to take him seriously when he talks about an absence of consultation and says we have not taken people into our confidence. He is nodding in support of his own statement.

I wrote down where he requested an opportunity to be taken into our confidence. In point of fact, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville specifically asked for a confidential briefing on this matter. The Government responded that we were ready to take the NDP fully into our confidence and the NDP turned us down because they do not want to know the truth.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES IN MEMOTEC STOCK ISSUE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. On February 12 the Minister informed the House that his Department had started an investigation into alleged irregularities in the Memotec stock issue. Seven and a half months have passed. In the meantime the Quebec Securities Commission decided to do something. That is very important, but does the Minister not think it would be time to let us in on the results of his inquiry?

Are we to expect a report soon? Is the work nearing completion? When are we going to have a report and, when it is completed, will the Minister table it in the House of Commons?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Director has indeed been conducting an investigation under the Canada Business Corporations Act in co-operation with the Quebec Securities Commission and the Ontario Securities Commission. In view of the fact charges were laid by the QSC, I asked him this morning to expedite the investigation and bring it to a completion as soon as possible. I asked my Deputy Minister to ensure that the Director has all the necessary resources. Yes, indeed, I am prepared to table his report in the House of Commons when it is ready.

OPPORTUNITY TO HOLD INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary to the Prime Minister. An inquiry was launched by the federal Government as early as last February. Quebec authorities have now made their inquiry and charges have been laid. Does not all this warrant shedding light on the matter, that a public inquiry be conducted so Canadians may know exactly what happened in this case?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should bring to the attention of the Hon. Member the words of Marc Barrierre, a spokesman for the QSC, who said, speaking of the persons charged: "They are charged with knowing that Memotec had bid on Teleglobe and benefiting from this knowledge. The charges do not concern the decision by the Government to sell Teleglobe to Memotec."

The reality is that the QSC acted on what they think is a violation of the Quebec Securities Act. We are investigating to see whether there have been any violations of the Canada Business Corporations Act. As I just indicated, I asked the Director to expedite his investigation so I can table his report in the House as soon as possible.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION—DIRECTOR'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and deals with the same issue. The Prime Minister knows that Peter Blaikie, the former national President of the Conservative Party of Canada, was one of those charged with insider trading. He also—

Mr. Speaker: I do not know where the Hon. Member's question is leading. As a consequence, I had to interrupt before he could perhaps get back on the fine line of appropriate questions in this matter. Hon. Members should be very careful to restrict their questions on this matter to those areas of ministerial responsibility. I have to say that the questions of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques were excellent and appropriate. I ask the same co-operation from other Members.

This is a serious matter but this is not the place to try anyone. It is the place to ask Ministers what they did or did not do or what they knew or did not know about those matters within their area of responsibility. Provided questions are along that line the Chair will of course allow them. The Hon. Member is very experienced and I know he will co-operate with the Chair.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, since Mr. Blaikie resigned on Friday as a member of the board of directors of the Canada Development Investment Corporation, which, amongst other things, advises the Government on privatization, has the time not come for tougher guidelines concerning government appointments to boards, commissions, agencies and the like?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, the appointment to the board of CDIC was made very recently. Mr. Blaikie offered his resignation and I accepted it on behalf of the Government, subject to Order in Council routine. I do not believe there is any need for an investigation. The investigation now under way by the QSC will determine the outcome of the charges. People have been charged; people have not been convicted.

PUBLIC APPOINTMENTS—REQUEST FOR STRICTER GUIDELINES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is again directed to the Prime Minister. On September 9, 1985, he wrote an open letter to all Members of Parliament and Senators on ethics in public service and public appointments and so on. When is he going to act on some of the recommendations he made? In particular, does he think the time has come for tougher guidelines on government appointments as well as things like patronage and lobbying?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend referred to the fact that the guidelines were addressed to MPs and Senators. If he is suggesting that in this particular case—

Mr. Nystrom: The letter was.

Mr. Mulroney: The letter. If he is suggesting in this particular case involving Mr. Blaikie that there has been a violation by an MP or Senator, perhaps he ought to say so.

With regard to the allegation, Mr. Blaikie is a distinguished member of the Quebec Bar and I suppose my hon. friend would agree, I hope he would, that Mr. Blaikie, along with other Canadians, benefits from the presumption of innocence.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week, his Minister responsible for Regional Industrial Expansion and Science and Technology stated that Canada had no strategy for industrial development and thus acknowleged the helplessness and incompetence of the Conservative Government after having been in power for three years. During the weekend, the Minister responsible for Regional Economic Expansion in Quebec, Mr. Marc-Yvan Côté, while in attendance at the convention held by the Union of Regional Municipalities asked that the federal Government put its house in order and provide a program which will really help the underdeveloped regions of Quebec. Will the Prime Minister tell us that after being inactive for three years his Government is without any policy on regional development and whether he will heed the provincial minister's suggestion and put its house in order?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in the first place I should point out to my colleague . . . that I can also read newspapers. We inherited rather disastrous conditions. There had been no policy for regional expansion for 25 years. During that period, the Government was unable to reduce regional disparities throughout the country. This Government has taken several major steps. I mean more especially the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, the setting up of a special expansion program for Northern Ontario and the establishment of a diversification office in Western Canada. We have taken a new approach to economic expansion, and to industrial expansion, as well as a new approach combining the very important activities related to science and technology to enable us to be more competitive in a world where the high technology sector is continuously changing.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER DECIDE IN FAVOUR OF MONTREAL

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, if only this Government were that active! My supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister.

The Minister in the same interview stated that indeed the Montreal Space Agency was on the Prime Minister's desk, and all it was waiting for was a personal decision from the latter.

The Prime Minister himself stated over the weekend that he had not taken any decision because of a very heavy schedule.

Here is my question to the Prime Minister: Could he take a few minutes this afternoon, go through the file and decide in favour of Montreal for the Space Agency?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would first point out to my hon. colleague that over these last three years, we have not been inactive as regards industrial development. We created hundreds and hundreds of jobs, contrary to the previous Government.

Speaking about a decision, why are you bent on killing Bill C-22? Why are you bent on preventing Canada from developing that area, from developing that high technology, which could create thousands of jobs?

CANADA POST CORPORATION

MEETING PROTESTING PLANS FOR FUTURE SERVICE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. The Minister will be aware that a number of representatives of organizations representing ordinary Canadians held a press conference today to indicate that in their view the Government's plans for the Post Office will result in a reduction in service. They had received post cards from tens of thousands of Canadians across the country.

What has the Minister to say to these ordinary Canadians who are protesting the fact that the Government's plans for the Post Office will result in a reduction of service?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand the ordinary Canadians included J. C. Parrot and the Member for Winnipeg North Centre and a couple of his colleagues.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Watch it, Harvie, you're going to screw up.

Mr. Andre: Perhaps we have different definitions of "service". By "improved service" we mean getting the mail delivered reliably, early, and in a fiscally responsible way. That is what the Post Office is trying to do and the Government is encouraging it in its efforts.

[Translation]

WOMEN—POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg—North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the ordinary Canadians have included the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, The National Anti-poverty Organization, and the signatures of tens of thousands of ordinary Canadians in eleven mailbags. What did the Minister tell the women who understand services curtailment also entails a salary cut for postmasters?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there were several random and inaccurate thoughts in that statement. I will repeat that the corporate plan of the Post Office calls for the opening of 6,000 new postal outlets so that people will have services closer to where they usually shop and to where they live. The plan calls for independent auditors to provide independent verification that the mail is being delivered within the specified time, which may be two days or three days depending on its class and the distance involved.

We are trying to do that so that the price of stamps will remain within the reach of the famous ordinary Canadians the NDP now purports to represent. The NDP seems to be supporting policies which would result in Canadians having to pay 60 or 70 cents for the delivery of a letter.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—DAMAGE INFLICTED BY EMISSIONS FROM UNITED STATES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. Canadians are dismayed at the lack of progress on the acid rain front. In 1985 the Prime Minister lost one year waiting for the acid rain Envoys' Report. In 1986 he gave Washington the wrong signal by agreeing to five years of coal technology research and demonstration. This year in this Chamber the Prime Minister enthusiastically applauded President Reagan when he committed himself merely to consider the possibility of an acid rain treaty.

Now that the Government is awakening to the realities of Canada-U.S. relations, will the Prime Minister find the courage to total up the damage to Canadian buildings, to forestry and agriculture, to our maple syrup producers, and to human health, and present a bill to President Reagan for the damages inflicted on Canada, as we did as a result of satellite debris falling in northern Canada some years ago?

Mr. Gauthier: Consider it.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says "consider it". Canadians did consider the fact that the inaction over many years in the area of the environment, particularly acid rain, was something for which they paid a heavy price. If my hon. friend, who seeks a non-partisan level, is critical of us, I think he would agree that his record as a former Minister of the Environment is substantially less than sterling in terms of his accomplishments with regard to abating acid rain.

My hon. friend is aware of the progress made in this area by the Minister of the Environment, most recently in ozone protection. He is aware of the advancements which the Minister of the Environment has made with South Moresby National Park. He is aware of the advances made by the Minister in introducing an Environmental Protection Act. I think he is aware of substantial accomplishment by the Minister of the Environment and I hope that at the appropriate time he will celebrate that accomplishment as well.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that Canadians will be comforted by that decisive answer by the Prime Minister and his acceptance of his responsibility with regard to acid rain.

ACID RAIN—DAMAGES SUFFERED BY MAPLE SYRUP PRODUCERS—POSSIBILITY OF COMPENSATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, here is my question: Is at least the Prime Minister ready to bill Washington for the damages done to Quebec maple syrup producers, who have complained about the damage done by acid rain and are claiming a $1 million compensation for damages due to the acidity caused by the Americans?

The Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are keeping in close touch with Quebec producers in that industry and are trying to get justice for them by the most legitimate and efficient means. I think my honourable friend will agree that when he was Minister of the Environment, he did absolutely nothing for years, so I think one might suggest he is not serious when pointing out the consequences of his own failures.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARREST OF CANADIAN CITIZEN IN INDIA—CONSULAR ACCESS

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I will direct my question to the Minister for External Relations. Two weeks ago I asked whether consular access had been provided for our High Commission in New Delhi to Daljit Singh, a Canadian arrested in the Punjab.

Since India is obliged to provide Canada consular access to Mr. Singh under the Vienna Convention, can the Minister assure the House that consular access has now been provided and that our officials have verified that Mr. Singh did not suffer any physical abuse while in police custody?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. colleague for his question and to reassure him that the High Commission in New Delhi has been advised by the Indian authorities that consular access has been authorised for Mr. Singh. An official of our High Commission will now be in the Punjab to meet Mr. Singh.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

BRITISH COLUMBIA CARPENTERS' UNION—AGENT'S MEETING WITH MEMBERS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. On Friday I met in British Columbia with representatives of the Carpenters' Union who are deeply concerned and angered by CSIS involvement in the internal affairs of their union. Would the Minister explain to the House why an agent of CSIS met with members of the Carpenters' Union seeking to oust the incumbent executive during their 1985 elections? Will the Minister agree to the request of the union executive to meet with their officials to explain this very serious abuse of the powers of CSIS?

• (1450)

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member well knows, there was correspondence between my predecessor, the Minister of National Defence, the then Solicitor General, and Mr. Zander, president of the union, back in 1986. The then Solicitor General wrote to Mr. Zander on May 2, 1986, and I quote from that letter: "Concerning union members of Local 452 meeting with an employee of CSIS, I am able to assure you that such contact was voluntary on their part. CSIS committed no improprieties in relation to the internal affairs of this union and has no interest in legitimate union activities".

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, all that letter says is that there was not a gun held to the heads of the members of the union, who in fact were seeking to oust the incumbent executive.

PRESENCE OF CSIS IN TRADE UNIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a confidential document of the CSIS indicating that the secret service hired in Montreal a regional co-ordinator for information on subversive activities in labour unions. Can the Minister tell us the specific duties of this position, whether this agent co-ordinates sources in the CEQ, the CSN or other Quebec unions, and whether the Minister will finally order a parliamentary inquiry into these very serious matters? What are the duties of this agent who is working within the labour movement in Quebec?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have advised the Hon. Member in the House on many occasions, CSIS has no authority under the Act to investigate labour unions because they are labour unions. It does have the right to investigate anyone who is considered a threat to the security of Canada.

Because of allegations of this nature that were raised earlier in the year, I acted very promptly. In June of this year I asked the Inspector General to commence his investigations as provided for under the Act. The Security Intelligence Review Committee agreed to undertake an investigation in July. In addition, I have asked the Osbaldeston committee to take a look at this whole matter.

In addition to that, I would remind the Hon. Member that Section 41 of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act provides that people who have concerns about improper investigations under the Act have the right to go to the Security Intelligence Review Committee and ask for an investigation. I suggest, with the greatest respect, that that is what they should do—follow the safeguards that Parliament has provided under the Act.

PUBLIC WORKS

INTER GESTION GD. LTÉE—RESIGNATION OF MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and concerns once more the Inter Gestion GD matter. The affidavit filed before the courts by the RCMP alleges that there was a meeting between the former Minister of Public Works and a Metropolitan official in June 1985, 19 months before the Minister resigned.

Can the Prime Minister tell this House at what exact moment he was informed of this matter and whether this was a factor in the resignation of the Minister from Cabinet?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this issue has been dealt with in the House by the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice. I have nothing further to add to the answers provided by the Minister of Justice on two occasions last week.

Mr. Boudria: It is interesting to see that the Government has nothing to say on this issue.

JOLIETTE AIRPORT CONTRACT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Minister of Transport. Again it concerns the Inter Gestion GD. Given that Inter Gestion GD is only listed with the Government as having expertise in the area of conferences and conventions, will the Minister explain why this company received a $75,000 contract for a feasibility study of an airport in Joliette, to do such things as prepare a preliminary design, cost estimate, and conduct an environmental impact study of an airport?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants an answer to that he will have to ask the City of Joliette. It is my understanding that it was they who contracted with the individual involved.

In terms of the qualifications, the Hon. Member may want to correspond directly with the City of Joliette.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

PRICE PAID BY MANITOBA CONSUMERS FOR NATURAL GAS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Late last week the National Energy Board refused the application made by the Manitoba Government to force TransCanada PipeLines to carry natural grass-

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He said natural.

Mr. Murphy: The decision by the National Energy Board means that Manitoba consumers will be paying much more than they should for natural gas. The concern of the people of Manitoba is that they are not getting the benefits of deregulation. What will the federal Government do to ensure that the consumers of Manitoba will be paying less for natural gas?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is quite aware that the National Energy Board is a quasi-judicial body that renders decisions from time to time with respect to energy. It has rendered a decision in this case.

There is a involved, and if any party wishes to appeal or wishes to register a differing point of view, a mechanism is in place for that to happen.

In light of the circumstances and the fact that contracts have to be observed—I think that was essentially the finding—I hope that the two jurisdictions, the Province of Alberta and the Province of Manitoba, can get together to resolve this matter in an amicable way.

NEGOTIATION OF PRICE BY LARGE CORPORATIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, considering that natural gas deregulation was sold to the House of Commons and the people of Canada on the basis that it would benefit the small consumer, why is it possible for large consumers and large corporations to negotiate lower prices while it is not possible for the people of Manitoba to negotiate lower prices?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can only assume that the Hon. Member is suggesting that contracts should be broken. A contract is a contract. I believe that is the principle the National Energy Board upheld.

The fact of the matter is that under the deregulation of natural gas prices there has been a general reduction in the price of natural gas. He should not lose sight of that.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

DIOXIN IN PAPER PRODUCTS—CHLORINE BLEACHING PROCESS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is directed to whatever Minister may be answering for the Minister of the Environment. Dioxin, which has been found in paper products in the United States, I understand is formed through the chlorine bleaching process that is used by American and Canadian paper mills. Bearing in mind the danger of dioxin, will the Minister give his undertaking that the Government will require Canadian paper producers to switch from the dioxin producing chlorine bleaching process to the safer oxygen bleaching process that is used by European paper mills?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Health and Welfare is doing a detailed assessment of the health hazards related to dioxin. We will give those findings to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. We are also working with Environment Canada.

I want to make one other point to the Hon. Member, concerning changing from the chlorine bleaching system to the oxygen system. There are certain studies that would indicate that it does not necessarily have the same efficacious health results as some people are putting forward. However, we are looking at the entire question.

LOSS OF MEAT INSPECTION STAMP AT KITCHENER PLANT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He knows that several weeks ago a meat inspection stamp was lost at the J. M. Schneider plant in Kitchener. This, along with the general transfer of inspection responsibilities from inspectors to the company itself, could represent a threat to Canada's enviable reputation for meat inspection. What action is the Government taking to ensure that this stamp is not being improperly used and that the integrity of the system will be maintained?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we did some checking, but not concerning the loss of this stamp. It was misplaced, we immediately took the measures required to locate it, and this has been done. We follow this kind of incident very closely to prevent abuses. I want to assure the House that we will do everything possible to avoid similar occurrences in the future, even if that means calling in the police or taking any other such measure.

REDUCED NUMBER OF INSPECTORS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would be ready to admit today that the cut-back in the number of inspectors is having an adverse impact on the integrity of the system. For instance, we are told that in some poultry plants the number of inspectors will be reduced to 85 per cent starting in the next month. Could the Minister explain to Canadians how, by reducing the number of inspectors in some of these poultry plants and changing to the American streamlined system, we can have as good a quality of inspection?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, Canada would be justified to boast having one of the world's best—if not the world's best—inspection system in this sector where we have always taken measures to rank among the best. The mere fact that a stamp might be misplaced in a plant—and found the following day—does not justify questioning the soundness of a whole inspection system. We hired inspectors when there were staff shortages, and the House can rest assured that we will maintain our high standards in that sector and monitor this kind of incidents very closely.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question.

AIR SAFETY

AIR-INDIA—REQUEST FOR SERVICES OF BOMB-SNIFFING DOGS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Will he confirm that the Indian Government and/or Air-India requested bomb-sniffing dogs to protect its flights from Canada to India seven months prior to the Air-India crash? If it is true that they did ask and the Government of Canada did say no, will the Minister explain to the Canadian people why the Government did not provide that protection?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that Air-India did make a request that all bags be checked by dogs. It was not acted upon because it was decided X-ray equipment would be used to screen the bags and also because of the fact that, through discussions with Air-India, it was proposed they would use a mechanical sniffer.

I should also point out that dogs are used from time to time when there is a specific threat on a specific flight. In this particular case, because there was not a specific threat, those precautions were not taken.

GOVERNMENT SECURITY MEASURES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister will be aware that not all the bags that were processed for Air-India flights over that period of time were in fact X-rayed or properly inspected. Would he now indicate to the House exactly what steps were taken, after hearing the request from Air-India, both for increased surveillance and the possibility of bomb threats? What steps did the Government of Canada, through the Department of Transport, CSIS, the RCMP, or whatever, take to ensure the protection of the people on those flights?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): With respect, Mr. Speaker, I did not say what the Hon. Member said I said. I tried to answer the question on the basis of the information which was provided to me. With regard to the specific flight, as has been indicated on many occasions in this House, there had been a request for additional security for all Air-India flights. That additional security was provided. That has been alluded to both in the CASB report and, indeed, the judicial inquiry by the Indian Government. It indicated that they had requested the additional security measures and that they were provided.

In addition to that, they did provide, on a regular basis and particularly in the case of Flight 182, for the attendance of a security supervisor who was flown in from New York. He works for Air-India and he supervised the whole operation. Really, in essence what I am saying to the House is that the requests that were made in terms of a general beefed-up surveillance that was required were in fact responded to by the Canadians.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED MISLEADING INFORMATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I raised a question with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) concerning leaked documents showing the presence of dioxin in ordinary paper products. The Minister in response to my question as to what he was doing to investigate and to ensure that Canadians were not being exposed to dioxins through their paper products replied that he had no such responsibility. He said:

> I have to inform the Hon. Member that under the Hazardous Products Act, as passed by Parliament, it is not legally my responsibility. It is the responsibility of the Minister of National Health and Welfare—

He said further:

> I will send the Hon. Member a copy of the Act and perhaps over the weekend she can read it and acquaint herself with Canadian law.

He did not send me a copy of the Act, incidentally, but that is not my complaint today.

The Minister said further:

> Perhaps the NDP do not feel that the legal niceties need be obeyed as long as they have pronounced on it.

He also made a very mysterious statement. He said:

> Under the Hazardous Products Act, we have the responsibility of making sure that hazardous products are identified, but not identifying what is or is not hazardous. That would fall under the Department of National Health and Welfare—

His first three statements are very clear. He does not have, in his view, any legal responsibility to act. However, if we actually look at the Act, and I have re-read it, we see it says in Section 8(1):

> The Governor in Council may by order amend Part I or Part II of the schedule by adding thereto
> (a) any product or substance that is or contains a poisonous, toxic, inflammable, explosive or corrosive product or substance—that—is or is likely to be a danger to the health or safety of the public.

Clearly dioxin, as the most toxic substance we have, qualifies and one might think it would be worthy of investigation if indeed the reports are true that there is dioxin in paper products.

Section 6(5) of the Act further states that an order amending Part I of the schedule may be made by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Minister or the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The definition section clearly states that "the Minister" means the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It further says that where the Minister has reason to believe that a product, material or substance is a product, material or substance that may be added to Part I or II of schedule I by an order made pursuant to subsection 6(1), the Minister may request information as the Minister deems necessary for the purpose of determining whether the product, material or substance is or is likely to be a danger to the health or safety of the public.

Again it is clear that "the Minister" means the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister has enormous discretion. He may or may not act. He may choose to abrogate his responsibilities. He may choose not to act. However, I submit that there is no evidence in the Act that he is forbidden by Parliament to act in this area and I think his statement has been misleading.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member can assist the Chair. First, I think as Hon. Members know, the Chair has always had a very great concern about environmental matters and a great deal of latitude is sometimes allowed on those questions a latitude which some other Members might think is perhaps overly generous. However, I am having difficulty seeing how the Hon. Member's rights or privileges or her capacity to carry on her duties as a Member of Parliament have been affected by the answer of the Hon. Minister.

The Hon. Member may be absolutely correct when she suggests to the Chair that the Hon. Minister perhaps ought to have read the Act himself. However, that does not seem to me to be a question of privilege. I am having some difficulty in understanding exactly what the Hon. Member's point is.

Ms. McDonald: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, my point is that the Minister has certainly been misleading to the House. He has made a false statement. He has also suggested that I am unwilling to obey the law. He said: "Perhaps the NDP do not feel that the legal niceties need be obeyed". He suggested that I have never read the Act. He is certainly reflecting on my capacity as a Member of Parliament, a critic in this area. It is quite clear that this is a misleading statement. I think that if he is not prepared to withdraw it, he has infringed upon my privileges as a Member of this House.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the Minister to make an intervention?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, in view of your comments and in view of the comments of the Hon. Member I do not think it is necessary to make any submissions.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened carefully to what the Hon. Member has said. I will examine the comments as they are presented in Hansard.

The Hon. Member certainly has a complaint. I am not completely satisfied at this point that it amounts to a question of privilege. As I said, I will give the Hon. Member the courtesy of reading Hansard.

Because Hon. Members sometimes have some difficulty with the distinction between a complaint and a question of privilege, as also does the public sometimes, I wish to point out that there are many things said in this place by both sides that are not agreed with by the other side. Sometimes things are said by members of the Opposition, and sometimes there are replies by Ministers, which are misleading, in the sense that they may or may not be absolutely accurate. Of course, what is the forbidden thing is to intentionally mislead. I suppose that often in the heat of debate things are said which may mislead a little bit but which are not necessarily intended to mislead. That of course is what I would have to look at very carefully in the comments made by the Minister, and I will do so.

I wish to say to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) that the substance of the matter raised is of importance and the Chair will look carefully at the matter and report back to the Chamber.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) had the floor.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, before lunch I was speaking on the safe country concept. I was beginning to address what is a safe country and to perhaps press upon the Government the need for a better and clarified definition.

We put to the Government on many occasions practical examples with respect to whether or not the United States of America can be considered such a candidate for inclusion on such a list given its record of refugees coming from Central America who are subsequently deported from the United States. We asked with respect to Salvadorans and Guatemalans whether or not the United States can be considered to be a safe country. We also set out Great Britain as an example. From that country a good number of Tamils are deported.

On several occasions the Minister has spoken about guarantees, safeguards and agreements with countries in terms of trying to define precisely our standards and the standard of those candidate countries we would be considering for such a safe country list. Those agreements, safeguards and guarantees have not found their way into the legislation. Therefore the Government has refused not only to define the phrase "safe country", but it has also failed to signal a willingness to enter into an agreement with a country or in fact to define what it means to have a standard that we claim to be safe. It also refused a number of amendments to alter such words as "returning to a safe third country" in exchange for "entry" or "admission" to that country which would more precisely define what it is we mean when we talk about returning to a country, since anyone can return to a country. However, that does not guarantee an individual the right to stay, to enjoy this status, or the right to even enter into the refugee determination system.

A very interesting witness appeared in committee on this subject. He is a lawyer from the New York City area working on behalf of the Committee for Human Rights. His name is Arthur Helton. With respect to the intransigence of a government in terms of not defining what it means by "safe country" and perhaps also answering whether or not the United States of America would be on such a list he said, "I think certainly that the United States does not deserve to be called a safe third country for Salvadorans, Guatemalans or Haitians. I can certainly tell you that if the United States was left off a safe third country list it would cause great embarrassment to authorities in the United States. It would create such enormous diplomatic pressures that the United States authorities would call on the Canadian authorities". He concluded by saying that it is incumbent upon the countries that have traditionally played a leadership role in refugee protection to resist most strongly any efforts to move away from that commitment.

Mr. Helton raises another area of concern. It is that we have the highest political body in the land charged with drafting such a list. The Government reversed a policy of the previous administration by eliminating the B-1 list. This is a list of countries to which the Government of Canada said under no circumstances, because of those human rights violations in those lands, would we ever return a refugee to face continued torture or persecution. Not only did it remove the B-1 list, which means that anyone can be deported back to any country regardless of human rights violations awaiting those individuals, but it is also prepared to draft a list of countries to which the Government is willing and prepared to send people back with no questions asked and without seeing the guarantees or agreements about which I spoke earlier.

When the highest political body in the land, that is, the federal Cabinet, decides which countries shall be on a safe country list, that Cabinet will of course be subject to great international political and diplomatic pressures. Our concern is that those pressures will be so huge and so powerful they will undermine the individual circumstances that should be addressed in terms of refugee claimants coming to Canada, having a possible safe country concept legislated in response.

The question which we must ask is whether or not some of those countries should be on that list. Or will it be the fact that our allies, our NATO partners or other countries with which we do trade will be on that list despite the fact that they may not merit being so because of their human rights violations? The question to ask is, of course, "What happens to individual refugees who because they come from a safe third country return to that country and we assume, or we would want Canadians to assume, that they are safe when in fact the opposite may be true?"

The other matter not answered by the Government is what will happen in the case of an uprising overnight in some corner of the globe. Here is a Cabinet which is in charge of drafting a list. Presumably it is also charged with adding or deleting member countries from that list. But how can a Cabinet react so swiftly and quickly in terms of internal strife in some country which would produce refugees who would come to our country and ask for status and we would check our list and say, "Well, I am sorry, the country from which you came is still on the list. We cannot help you". That would not take into account the latest and the most updated scenario in that country which may in fact be legitimate but because they are still on the list the prescreening officers will have to follow our safe country list.

The Cabinet is in charge of the nation's business and it faces domestic pressures. At this time the Cabinet is very much involved with the free trade question and other issues concerning the economy. We might have the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stay away for a period of time so that there would be a delay in terms of reviewing that list. In the meantime, what is the human cost to those individuals who have claimed status and have not been permitted to land here and have their cases considered because they happen to come from a country that is still on the list, but that should not be on the list? Those are practical concerns that must evolve with this policy. Entrusting Cabinet to oversee the drafting of such a list could be a very precarious responsibility indeed.

Therefore, in light of those circumstances, I together with others moved a number of amendments to attempt to overcome this situation. Our first suggestion was that a safe country concept is not necessary. In fact, those people who come to this country and obtain an oral hearing should have the refugee board members determine if their cases are legitimate without playing a game of chess and taking risks with prescreening and the safe country concept.

If the Government wished to insert in the legislation the safe country concept, we suggested that the Cabinet draft a list that would be advisory and not be the letter of the law and written in stone. That list would serve in an advisory capacity to the refugee board members. In that manner, if there was a mistake in the list, or if any changes were needed, then the refugee board members in that division would take it upon themselves to use that as an advisory list and make the required deviances. The Government refused.

We also suggested that the refugee division be empowered to draft such a list regarding the safe country concept. On a day to day basis they handle refugee claimants, they are in touch with the geopolitical situations in other countries, and they are in touch with the United Nations High Commission for Refugees and the international network. Therefore, there would be the assurance that this list had been devised, drafted, changed, and monitored regularly by people who are in the business, are knowledgeable, have credibility, and make it their top priority, rather than a Cabinet with a million and one things on the go with this having to wait at the bottom of the list.

Those recommendations were made in an effort to overcome the practical problems envisioned by most organizations when they testified on the safe country concept. All of our efforts were unsuccessful. The Government persisted, it wished to move on the Bill, and it has.

What are the effects of legislating a safe country under the United Nations Convention? Will the United Nations High Commission on Refugees be enamoured with the possibility of Canada enacting safe country legislation, basically washing its hands of its responsibility, and passing the problematic buck to someone else? What message are we sending to the countries where we would be sending those individuals, or the countries that are members of the United Nations Convention when they are being asked to stay the course and make their commitment to refugees and at the same time we are stating in our policy that, if we can, we will send you somewhere else?

The message is not positive. Moreover, it will allow and encourage other countries to do the same thing. Other countries will say if Canada has been a leading authority in the plight of refugees and it can enact safe country legislation, why could we not do it. If Canada does it, perhaps it is the correct thing to do. One can see the cumulative effect of that type of thinking. Virtually every country under the pact, and non-members of the Convention, will legislate safe third country and the whole world will be a safe third country. Refugees will bounce between countries, orbit around countries, become more desperate and, therefore, perhaps give more impetus to those consultants, smugglers, abusers, and manipulators among us to take those desperate individuals and attempt to have them come in the back door rather than the front door.

While we do not condone abuse and fraudulent claims, we would prefer to send out the message that, if you have a claim then you have an opportunity to lay that claim fairly and quickly at the front door of this country, rather than locking the front door and encouraging more desperation and having the cumulative effect of people and manipulators spearheading the movement of coming in through the back doors of this country and other countries.

In the long run, having a safe country concept will not do Canada, or our international partners, any favours at all. We would rather pay the price now and have a system that gives people a chance, and which takes away the desperation and the impetus for those people to give $10,000 to $20,000 to a captain of a ship in order that they can be brought to Canada because they perceive no other way of getting recognition as a refugee. We are suggesting that that be removed, that we pay the price now rather than paying a higher price later on.

Another spin-off from the safe country concept that is left with many refugee organizations is that the Government is not intent or enthusiastic about having individual claimants processed on shore. Perhaps the Government would prefer to return to the simple 1960s where it liked to be selective in the refugee camps. The situation then was a lot cleaner and more orderly. I suppose everyone would like to live in that ideal world, or perhaps everyone would like to relive the past and history. We are no longer in that era. We are in the present attempting to solve the problem faced by us and the international community for the next number of years. Therefore, it is impossible and irresponsible to wish to return to a different era. Governments and nations must take the future in hand and guide us through those treacherous waters and ensure that we come out in a healthy state at the end of the process.

Therefore, a government suggesting that it only wishes to select refugees from abroad, select the young rather than the old, the healthy rather than the ill, the skilled rather than the unskilled, the wealthy rather than the poor, or leaving the women in the camps with the first preference going to the male refugees is not a very realistic or responsible way to go.

For those reasons we cannot accept the safe country concept in the manner it is defined in the Bill without the guarantees and the agreement between the countries on that list, and without agreement that the list will not be drafted by the Cabinet. If there is to be a safe country concept the list should be drafted by the refugee division. We are only prepared to go as far as the Cabinet being able to draw up such a list, but that it only serve in an advisory capacity and not as the law of the land.

The final of the three areas of concern that our Party had a great deal of difficulty with, as did many organizations, is the appeal mechanism. There was a perception that the system is as good as the appeal. In terms of dealing with human beings, mistakes are very costly. Often mistakes can be fatal. Therefore, there was a sense that there was an urgency and a necessity to ensure that there is an appeal process that is as foolproof as possible. An appeal system will never be 100 per cent correct, 100 per cent foolproof. Yet we can strive toward that ideal appeal mechanism rather than stopping at a mediocre system that we have presently.

The present proposal suggests that there is an appeal with leave to the Federal Court only on points of law. It is seriously flawed. First, it is only done with leave rather than an automatic appeal. Second, it is to a Federal Court which most organizations and expert witnesses have stated is the incorrect body to deal with refugee related matters, that is not its area of expertise and a different body is required. Finally, it can only be done on points of law rather than, as we have suggested, to encourage and include points of fact, and circumstances involving the refugee claim. We do not want to have a court that does not look at the actual circumstances but looks at the process if the law was followed.

If the refugee board followed the law, it would not be necessary to consider the claim because it would meet the test under points of law. It may be seriously flawed, the refugee board may have erred, or new circumstances may have been brought forward by the refugee, but the refugee would not have an opportunity to appeal because they would not be points of law but points of fact and circumstance involving the case.

Rather than allow that appeal system to take place and to shape the new refugee determination system, we moved amendments. We talked about the inadequacies of the Federal Court before which only 2 per cent of appealed cases were successful. This means that 98 per cent of appeals were ruled out of order or not accepted. That is the reality of the Federal Court in respect of current appeals. It is universally maintained that it is not functioning correctly and is certainly not erring on the side of refugees.

Therefore we proposed a number of models. We suggested that perhaps there should be an automatic appeal and not one with leave. This would mean that the Federal Court would decide whether to hear an appeal, rather than saying that if an appeal is triggered the court must hear it. We suggested that it should not be on points of law, that it should be on points of fact and circumstance. Then we suggested other meaningful changes, such as, for example, that there should be an independent refugee body which would listen to appeals. We also suggested the possibility of a paper review, after which an individual reviewing the case would be empowered to order a new hearing.

As well we suggested an appeal to the deputy chairman of the refugee division or to a group of refugee board members who had not heard the claimant's case but would be in a position to review and to recommend a new hearing if a new hearing were justified.

All those models were rejected, even though they were presented to try to deal legitimately, under the process, with the situation that there may be mistakes in the process. Mistakes in this case are not mistakes that we can correct by other pieces of legislation or by a letter. These mistakes may not be correctable, because when a person has gone from being within our borders we may not know what fate awaits him if we indeed made an error. We wanted to assure ourselves that those fatal mistakes would not occur. We wanted a proper appeal mechanism in place in order to attain such a goal.

It was with good cause that many groups suggested that they would approve the Bill if substantial changes were made in terms of the three areas of concern—prescreening, safe country, and appeal. We moved amendments on these three areas in committee, believing quite firmly and genuinely that if amendments were not caused or accepted by the Government, the other amendments it would want to accept or promote would be academic by comparison.

What is the use of crossing the t's or dotting the i's on some page of the Bill if prescreening kept people out, if people were in orbit because of the safe country concept, and if an appeal would not be granted legitimately.

We believed that the current piece of legislation is seriously and fatally flawed. We hoped that through the public hearing process before the committee those changes would have had a chance to survive. As it is, today we are at third reading stage and we are still asking the Government one last time, in an eleventh hour plea, to make changes in those three areas. It should allow other people a place to stand and provide inspiration or satisfaction to the community serving refugees that some of its concerns have been heeded, considered, and implemented.

This piece of legislation was drafted in the Department, and at third reading stage it is largely in the same vein. Those individual Canadians are asking themselves what real democratic input and persuasion they were able to exercise, and the answer is an obvious one.

Aside from these three major issues, there are a number of other elements of concern. They were tabled before the committee and before the House. For example, in the area of legal representation a claim must be heard within 72 hours. Therefore, the suggestion is that unless the claimant obtains a lawyer within 72 hours the Government would appoint legal counsel for the individual. Many legal experts suggested that this would fly in the face of the Charter, in that every Canadian or other individual has the right to seek legal advice. A claimant who may wish to hire a lawyer who may be busy in Vancouver on another claim, may not have a chance within 72 hours to obtain the proper solicitor for himself in order to defend his claim for refugee status. It would be quite inappropriate for a government sponsored lawyer to be defending the individual against the Government.

We have suggested—and it was suggested by the court, the Canadian Bar Association, and others—that there be more flexibility so as to allow the claimant the full opportunity and option to select counsel of his or her choice rather than to throw in a rookie counsel or an individual who may not be immersed in the refugee law to defend an individual who in fact is fighting for his life.

Another area of concern was indicated by the National Association of Women and the Law which presented the committee with a forceful presentation on how the refugee phenomenon affected women. It was simply amazing to note from its presentation and statistics that over 80 per cent of all refugees in the world were women and young girls. That staggering figure brings with it a number of very serious questions and issues. The association had another extremely valuable statistic in terms of trying to understand the phenomenon. It indicated that 50 per cent of refugee women arriving in Canada had been harassed or sexually assaulted in the process of either fleeing their country or arriving in Canada.

When we couple those two very alarming statistics, we realize that the presentation on behalf of the National Association of Women and the Law made a moving and compelling argument that we needed to focus on the dilemma being faced by women, a dilemma which is not faced by men. Women have been moved to be refugees as a result of sexual harassment and the fact that many of them have tried, in various parts of the world, to stand up for women's rights and individual rights. In certain parts of the globe that is seen as an offence against the state and therefore they suffer persecution.

Someone standing up for his or her dignity in our country—and in this case it is a woman—is not regarded as an affront to the state or to our way of life. However, in many parts of the world women must flee because of sexual persecution; they must pick up their bags and leave. Yet it is not recognized in the Geneva Convention as a reason for legitimate refugee status.

We must consider that 50 per cent of refugee women who come to this country have already faced sexual harassment and assault. Since most of the refugees selected from refugee camps are men and boys, there is something wrong within the refugee process. Given those statistics and the very compelling arguments made in committee, we owe it to refugees, and specifically women refugees, to re-evaluate our regulations governing the selection of refugees.

We suggested that if the Government wants to have a prescreening provision and use the safe country concept to deport someone, the United Nations High Commission for Refugees should be alerted so that it may play a role in the process. If a person is to be deported to a country in which he may face the danger of torture, harassment or persecution, we suggested that as a last-ditch attempt, the United Nations High Commission for Refugees could intervene to find that individual a safe home. That proposition was turned down.

The Government had to decide if it wanted the refugee board to play an adversarial role or a non-adversarial role. We suggest that it pretends to be non-adversarial. The legislation currently provides that an immigration counsel may question and challenge the authenticity of a refugee's claim and that information may be obtained at the very beginning of the process through the prescreening. We suggest that if the Government is trying to sell the legislation as being non-adversarial, it should follow this up in law and remove from the refugee board the very adversarial immigration counsel.

The Government was reluctant to make a provision for written transcripts of the first interview of the prescreening stage for appeal purposes. The Government suggested that the interview would be tape-recorded, but we suggested that it would be a very small price to pay to have those interviews officially transcribed. It should not be left up to the claimant or his lawyer to take from an interview what he wants to take and then have its authenticity challenged by the Federal Court of Appeal. We suggested that CPP disability hearings and workers' compensation hearings be officially transcribed and decisions in those forums made in writing so that an appeal body may review a claim by reading the transcript rather than going by hearsay.

In the time allotted to me on third reading stage I want to reiterate our concerns about many things. We are concerned about the message this Bill will send to the international community and to those countries which subscribe to the United Nations Convention. There are essentially three concluding remarks I would like to leave with the House.

First, we must play a role of international leadership. We cannot look to other countries with substandard refugee protection laws. We won the Nansen Medal for a good reason. For the very first time, the Nansen Medal was won by a people as opposed to an individual or an organization. That suggests that Canada has set the trends and standards by which countries should be measured. Therefore, it is very important that we maintain that leadership, inspiration and encouragement to other countries to stay the course. We do not want to lead the international community in the wrong direction. If we do, we will not help provide an international solution to what is an international problem.

We do not want to be the architects of an international corridor of locked doors. By the time a refugee gets to the end of a corridor of locked doors, he is a desperate individual who is fighting for his life and liberty. When a human being is in a desperate state of mind, he fights back. That opens up opportunities for manipulators and smugglers who feed off human misery and desperation. Rather than encouraging people to come through the front door, this piece of legislation will encourage refugees to believe that the only way their claims will be assessed is if they come through the back door and try to rough it out. That is the wrong message. While there may be a short-term gain the Government wishes to sell, the long-term viability of the policy will be under attack.

The second part of my conclusion is that the Government owes Canada a clear vision of its immigration objectives and goals. It needs to trigger an enlightened and mature national debate. It needs to articulate a national goal for immigration. It needs to talk about immigration as a national building block and to talk about it in a positive and constructive way. It should not do something reactionary as it did when it introduced Bill C-84 at a time when some 300 individuals came to Canada while there is a backlog of thousands upon thousands lined up.

The Government must take into consideration our dwindling birth rate and our aging population. Some 50,000 people leave the country every year and we have a small population of base of only some 26 million people. We have a large land mass and great economic needs. We must still go abroad to find those with education that is not provided here. The Government must take cognizance of these factors and trends and ask how immigration can address them. It must ask how immigration can help Canada build a newer, better and more improved country. It must ask how many immigrants this country can absorb.

What is the reality of the refugees who have been in Canada for five years? Are they milking the system or is the vast majority just as productive as every other Canadian citizen? Some of the studies which are available but are not promoted offer a very rosy picture of the refugee experience in Canada.

The vast majority of the 106,000 Vietnamese boat people whom Canada accepted as refugees are now Canadian citizens and are doing very, very well. Many of them have jobs or have opened small businesses. They have integrated into the community. In many cases, their children are doing better then their peers in the educational system. These people are doing well. They are tomorrow's leaders and tomorrow's Members of Parliament.

That is the reality of the majority. I know that we cannot have an ideal world in which there is no abuse of workers' compensation, unemployment insurance, CPP disability payments and the like. There is abuse by immigrants and non-immigrants, young and old, people who have been here for many years and those who are here only a few weeks. You strive to eliminate that abuse, but what is the over-all picture? If it is positive, if it contributes to this country we call Canada, then let us show it to other Canadians. Let us remove the fear and pacify the critics among us. If the picture is positive, then the Government has a responsibility to demonstrate that and promote it rather than manipulate public opinion and fabricate a crisis which does not exist except in the imagination of government Members. That is the responsibility of a progressive Government because this country was built in partnership with immigrants.

Immigration is the most emotional area of federal public policy. When I go back to my riding office there is nothing more emotional than an immigration problem. People cannot understand why a relative cannot come here. A person cannot understand why his or her cousin, a refugee, cannot come here. Someone cannot understand why someone else was refused a visitor's visa. On and on and on. We must be very careful how we deal with an emotionally charged issue like this.

The Government must define the number of refugees in this program. It must define the number for family class immigrants. Is that the most important? If not, why? How many business immigrants should we encourage? Many? Few? Somewhere in between? How many visitors should we allow in? Should they all have visas? How many visas should we provide for foreign students? What about the people who complain that their son or daughter is bumped from school by some foreign student? What is the story on student visas? Many reports show that those people, when they go back to their own country, become ambassadors for Canada. If one of those foreign students ends up as the marketing director of a company in his own country, then you can bet your bottom dollar that Canada will be one of his markets.

The Government needs to have a mature debate on this subject in partnership with Canadians. It cannot dictate. It cannot refer it to a weakened committee which sends the Bill back to the House in its original form. That does not solve the real problem. It does not restore public confidence. The Government was elected to show responsible leadership on tough issues. It was not elected to run away from a challenge.

If the Government acts accordingly, we will once again be in a position to bring in special refugee flows like the Vietnamese boat people. If the Clark Government in 1979 or the Trudeau Government in 1980 reacted like today's Government, which makes a crisis out of 300 people, where would the Vietnamese boat people have been? Canada can safely lay claim to leadership in this area because it brought 106,000 of those people to our shores. Some 50,000 were sponsored by communities. Canadians said they want to participate. They accepted their responsibility and, together with the Government, led the way. Why can that not be done again? Why must we stoop to Bill C-84 and Bill C-55? Let us follow our best instincts and not the worst. Let us eradicate the fear rather than feeding off it. Let us tell Canadians the real story rather than a fabricated story.

Legitimate refugees are people who live in a world which can be described as one of horror. They live with the fear of being sent to prison, being tortured, and they live with continual harassment. That is the real world of the refugee. It is not an orderly world. It is disorder. They fight to put order back into their lives. They seek to bring dignity back into their lives. Fate dealt them an unfair hand. Fate dealt very harshly with those who were born in a number of countries which we do not even want to visit, never mind live there. Yet we can overcome fate. Why should the privileged countries not assist those people? Why can we not have a system as good as possible? One that offers leadership rather than mediocrity.

All Canadians have problems. All Canadians have day-to-day challenges. A husband and father becomes unemployed and that becomes a problem. Senior citizens experience escalating property taxes. They cannot pay and keep their home. We have substandard housing. University graduates cannot find employment. Someone gets sick or dies. Those are legitimate problems that Canadians face day after day. Sometimes those problems seem all-encompassing. We say we cannot deal with the world's problems because we have too many of our own. That is a legitimate human response. We try to solve our problems and hope the world will solve its.

Some people say it is tough to try to sell a progressive policy because the world is more complicated, life is difficult, and not everyone has pulled their share of the load. Notwithstanding those legitimate concerns, the problem of human life and human safety takes precedence. The responsibility for protecting human life is the first and foremost of our collective responsibilities. As parliamentarians we are in the business of solving problems. Nothing can be more important than trying to come to grips with the problem of a human being seeking protection on our shores. Is that a crime? Should we look upon that person as a criminal?

Give people a legitimate choice and there would be no immigrants anywhere. Given a choice my parents would have stayed in their homeland. They did not have a choice. They faced poverty and had no future, so they left. This is their home now. They are proud, loyal citizens who would never dream of returning to their original homeland because this is their home.

There may be confusion between immigrants and refugees. It is incumbent upon immigrants not to close the door to others who follow them.

The problems of the world are very large, but we are in the business of solving them. We cannot run away from this challenge. We cannot afford to do so, nor can the rest of the world. We may be overwhelmed by the 10 million to 15 million refugees around the world. We know that Canada cannot solve the entire problem, but we can lead other countries toward the solution.

I will conclude by reminding the House of some of the words of Rabbi Plaut. He said:

> Refugees are a fact of life. We are a large country. We are a rich country. I think that we can at least afford to be fair to the very few who come to our shores.

He concluded by saying:

> If you save one life, it is counted for you as if you had saved the whole world.

We should remember those words when we believe that we cannot move the world.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Free Trade—Articles published in two Montreal newspapers—Government position/Free trade negotiations—Government position; the Hon. Member for Broadview Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Acid rain—position of United States President—Government position/Canadian message; the hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Harbourfront—Toronto project—future development.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased and proud to have the honour of speaking against Bill C-55, not only on behalf of my Party and thousands of refugees from many countries, but also on behalf of tens of thousands of Canadians who have helped refugees to settle in Canada and will continue to help them to do so regardless of legislation such as this.

I am advised that there have been consultations among the Parties with regard to the length of time which I might speak, notwithstanding the normal rule. I will leave that to the appropriate people. I will simply advise that my speech would not take more than 50 minutes, if that is agreeable to Hon. Members.

I wish to make four main points in connection with this Bill. We have discussed the details of the Bill on previous occasions and there is much to be said about the context in which this Bill will operate.

First, it is significant that Canadians, in extraordinarily large numbers and at no little cost of their time, have mobilized to register grave alarm against Bill C-55. Second, many Canadians are amazed and troubled that the Government has so adamantly ignored them in Bills C-55 and C-84 and has sharply changed Canada's policy toward refugees. They are asking why.

Third, the Government's chosen line of action against refugees is now seen by many Canadians to fit a pattern of other government actions during the past year, a pattern hostile not only to refugees but also to Canadians. Fourth, Canadians who have opposed the Bill and heard the Government's defence of it still oppose the Bill. They are now asking themselves what kind of Government we have that will turn needy refugees away from one of the richest countries in the world and, for that purpose, also reduce the liberties of Canadians. Canadians are creating a greater vision of Canada which may have no room for the outlook, values and policies of the Government.

Of the many distinguished Canadians who appeared before the legislative committee and spoke against Bill C-55 the best known is Rabbi Gunther Plaut. He pointed out that as a former refugee, therefore knowing the heart of the stranger, he had done a report on refugees almost three years ago that won world-wide acclaim. He was invited by the United States Government to give a one-day seminar to leading government officials which was also attended by many ambassadors.

Yet, he said that we now have a Bill that was constructed by the Commission of Employment and Immigration and is brought forward as the will of the people. This Bill has the wrong focus. It is not primarily a Bill to determine refugee status; it is primarily a Bill on how to deport people. It is filled with constitutional problems. The process it proposes is not shorter but longer. However, he said that it has accomplished one unique thing, and that must be said to its credit. This Bill, like Bill C-84, has managed to unite all religious factions in this country.

Rabbi Plaut was right. These two Bills have raised a sense of alarm among Canadians not often heard. They have challenged Canadians fundamentally, challenged our sense of justice and even threatened our liberties. For that reason, not only the churches of Canada but also the Jewish Congress, by a remarkable consensus, have fundamentally opposed this Bill.

The Canadian Council of Churches representing 11 major non-Roman Catholic Christian denominations in Canada came together with the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops through the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees to oppose this Bill. They said that for 10 years the church representatives have urged reform of the present cumbersome refugee determination procedures which are slow to recognize genuine refugees and which attract abuse.

Church leaders have presented the Government with alternative refugee determination procedures consistent with its own principles and with the report of Parliament's Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. It is frightening to think that a climate of panic could be created from the arrival of a mere 174 asylum seekers. It is more frightening that this should lead to the precipitous passage of Bill C-55 in the face of a more just, efficient, and viable alternative. A few minor amendments cannot rectify the fundamental flaws of the current Bill C-55.

The Inter-church Committee for Refugees spoke clearly for the right of the individual declared by international law and scorned by Bill C-55. It said that Bill C-55 flies in the face of a very strongly held principle of the churches, that is, universal access to a fair and just determination process. Blanket tests would arbitrarily remove from Canada persons who have a right to a full and fair hearing of their claim. We must always remember that it is an individual claim and it is an individual who says that he or she has been persecuted.

When hearings were finished the Government rattled through clause by clause amendments with very slight change. The Canadian Council of Churches wrote to us and said that this is a far shot from our obligation to give an individual who arrives in Canada fair hearing of his or her claim to a need for our protection. They urged us to abandon Bill C-55.

[Translation]

At their annual meeting the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops expressed their views through the President, Monsignor Bernard Hubert: The legislative measure submitted to Canadians does not respect any of the principles we have always promoted. It is even a step backward with respect to our international responsibilities. In addition it is unfair to refugees and to the other already heavily overloaded first asylum countries.

We also received a telegram on behalf of a third group of Christian churches in Canada. It states:

> World Relief Canada, which serves as the refugee resettlement arm of the Evangelical Fellowship of Canada, an association of 23 evangelical protestant denominations, strongly urges our Government not to pass Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 as originally proposed.
> While we agree that abuses of our national largesse need to be prosecuted, we request that Parliament carefully consider amendments to the Bills which will strengthen fair treatment of bona fide refugees and protect Canadians who helped them out of compassion and conscience.
> R. E. Reimer, World Relief Canada.

The Canadian Jewish Congress said:

> As Jews, we ask you this time not for ourselves but for all those who arrive at our shores seeking refuge . . . (we) implore you not to close the gates by enacting this seriously flawed piece of legislation.

A few minutes later they were scornfully downgraded by the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) as being among the special interest groups.

In fact, we have heard this scornful put-down from the Government for months. Every group that has worked for refugees and assisted the Government's refugee program and, on the basis of that expertise, opposes this Bill, is dismissed as a special interest group.

This way of dismissing criticism which cannot be answered, as the criticism of the churches and Jewish Congress has not been answered, is indeed quite traditional and goes back at least thousands of years.

We find in the Book of the Acts of the Apostles, Chapter 17, verses 6 to 7, that when Paul and Silas came preaching the good news of new life in Thessalonica, some of the townspeople organized a riot against them on the complaint:

> These that have turned the world upside down have come here also—and they all do contrary to the decrees of Caesar, saying there is another king, one Jesus".

No doubt, the climate of panic was enhanced by the fact that Christianity was understood as an offshoot of Judaism. The Jews were considered a troublesome lot in the Roman Empire, partly because of their dangerous teaching that slaves ought to be freed.

Since many refugees are modern equivalents of runaway slaves, I am proud to see that Jews and Christians still get into trouble for trying to set them free.

We have not heard from the religious teachers of Canada's First Nations, but I doubt that they would support Bill C-55.

Besides these religious teachers, the labour movement spoke out. Both the Canadian Labour Congress and the Confédération des Syndicats Nationaux last spring issued condemnations of Bill C-55.

The Canadian Bar Association, representing 3,500 lawyers, was particularly firm in its rejection of Bill C-55. Its spokesperson reminded the Government that: "Section 3 of the Immigration Act sets out our objectives; the objectives with respect to refugees are: 3(12), to fulfil Canada's international legal obligations with respect to refugees and to uphold its humanitarian tradition with respect to the displaced and persecuted".

They also pointed out that when we signed the UN Convention relating to the status of refugees we did not obligate ourselves to select refugees overseas. The only thing to which we obligated ourselves in that Convention was to protect any refugee who arrived in Canada from being sent back to the country by which he would be persecuted.

In Bill C-55, Canada abandons its obligation on that point. Even though refugee claimants are returned only to countries that comply with Article 33 of the UN Convention, there is no guarantee that those countries will allow them to return and live there, or that they will allow them to make refugee claims there so as to get the protection of Article 33 against being returned to persecution. If Canada has refused to hear their refugee claims, how can we demand that other countries do it?

Of the many other witnesses we heard, I shall mention only the Canadian Ethnocultural Council. It represents immigrant groups whom this Government has tried to turn against refugees by saying that refugee claimants are queue-jumpers, preventing immigrants from bringing their relatives to Canada. Nevertheless, the council made it clear that it opposes Bill C-55 and, instead, supports the alternative model presented by Mr. Lorne Waldman of the Coalition for a Just Refugee and Immigration Policy. It also said:

> We would like to ask you to remember in your deliberations the wider context of the refugee issue. We feel that Canada should play a role in pressing for peaceful solutions to conflicts in areas of the world that produce refugees.

A total of 63 witnesses appeared before our committee, squeezed into 44 and a half hours. Every one, except ten from the Immigration Commission and two from the airline companies, opposed Bill C-55, and the chairman complained that they were repeating each other.

They all made the same chief points as the representatives of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. First, the UN asked that Canada, according to the Convention we signed 20 years ago, should examine all refugee applications made on our territory, including ones that came from a so-called safe country. The Government refused this, and will send many away without a full and fair hearing.

Second, the UN asked that claimants not be excluded from a full refugee division hearing primarily on the basis of decisions about people who came before from the same country. They said that more weight should be given to the circumstances of the individual who is coming now. The Government refused.

Third, the UN asked that a decision against a refugee should be reviewed because a mistake could cost a person's life. Again, the Government of Canada, a member of the executive of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, refused.

These three main objections to Bill C-55, made by every witness before the committee except those representing the Immigration Commission or the airlines, have been argued in Parliament and in public at every opportunity. The Government's refusal to heed them stands as a disgrace to Canada.

I also warn Hon. Members of the House and my brother and sister Canadians that we cannot deny justice and liberty to refugees without at the same time undermining and weakening the rights and liberties of Canadians.

We have seen how Bill C-84 denies the right and freedom of Canadians to help an undocumented refugee come to an immigration office in Canada to claim refugee status. Now Bill C-55, in the course of denying to a refugee claimant the right of a meaningful appeal of review of his or her claim, also denies to all Canadians the right to ask the courts to correct a mistake made by an immigration officer in the case of a Canadian applying to sponsor a relative for immigration. The Progressive Conservative Government, by whipping up a false panic about refugees, is eroding the freedom of individual Canadians to do what they believe is right.

I have described the strong opposition of Canadians to Bill C-55. However, the question many ask is: Why is the Government doing this? There is no doubt that the number of refugee claimants has risen very fast. There are ten times as many coming to Canada as there were a few years ago. There were 18,000 refugees last year. This is the Government's chief excuse, yet the previous Progressive Conservative Government decided to bring 50,000 from Vietnam in 1979, nearly three times as many. Why is there panic now?

The biggest shift in the flow of refugee claimants is in the countries of origin. After World War II, most refugees to Canada came from the communist countries of eastern Europe. They were anti-communists—including some Nazi war criminals, we find—and they were white. Now, most refugee claimants are from former colonial countries, often from brutal right wing regimes and not all clearly anti-communist. Most of them are not white.

Why are they coming? This new wave of refugees is a sign of much larger trouble in the world, especially in the past ten years.

During the fifties and sixties, and into the seventies, the Governments of western Europe and North America accepted millions of immigrants, legal and illegal, short-term and long-term, Caucasian and non-Caucasian. They fueled our manufacturing and service industries with cheap labour, and strengthened the expansion of our markets into the former colonies of Latin America, the Caribbean, Africa, Asia and the southern Pacific.

However, when that expansion reached its limits in the mid-seventies, and markets began to shrink, the countries of western Europe and North America began to cut back. Wage freezes, currency devaluations and restriction of immigration began. To bolster our industrialized nations, agricultural prices were cut, impoverishing many former colonial countries. Multinational manufacturers also began shutting down factories and data processing services in industrialized countries and moving to the former colonies for cheaper labour. The recession of the early 1980s speeded this up. One result was a sharper cut in the demand for cheap labour in Canada and our neighbours in North America and western Europe. At the same time, areas like Latin America experienced growth of Governments preaching the doctrine of national security. With arms, military advisers and police training, provided mainly by the United States and western Europe, these Governments began attacks against what they chose to call "communist subversion", such as did Pinochet's coup in Chile in 1973.

• (1620)

Powerful corporations joined with the military to suppress labour unions and hold wages well below the rate of inflation. In areas such as Latin America, the Philippines and Sri Lanka, peasants were forced off the land. Foreign-owned factories recruited labour at starvation wages, and more military repression was used to suppress unions. At the same time, the foreign owners of industry, including much agri-business, with the help of international banking institutions, ensured that more capital flowed out of these countries toward western Europe and North America than flowed into them.

The poverty of the people deepened rapidly. So the seeds of civil war were sown in many of the former colonies. From these same countries came refugees fleeing persecution because of their attempts to defend their right to eat or fleeing hunger in a land they no longer owned or where they could no longer grow food to eat.

More recently these former colonies have been burdened with huge external debts. Money spent to build and service factories there for foreign corporations, money lost to sinking agricultural prices, and cost of arms provided for industrial countries and used by the military to suppress discontent, was all charged against these impoverished Governments and hungry people. The refugees kept coming in search of a chance to live.

The peoples of these countries, officially politically independent, began movements and even wars of liberation from economic bondage that was killing them. The North Atlantic powers intervened to support Governments that would repay their debts to our banks regardless of cost to the people. More arms, military advisers and occasional military invasions as in the Caribbean increased the misery and drove out more refugees. For these reasons, there are perhaps 15 million displaced people in the world, mainly in the former colonies.

Canada, the United States and western Europe which benefited from the financial rape of those countries, are now visited by some of these victims looking for some of the good things we have taken from their countries, so we have a refugee crisis.

What is the usual answer of the North American Governments? Fear, panic, hostility and the building of bureaucratic walls to keep people out. It suggests a guilty conscience. This has certainly been the answer of senior Canadian Immigration Commission officials and the Cabinet. One-sided pictures are fed to the media suggesting that nearly all refugee claimants are bogus or maybe even terrorists, in spite of lack of evidence by the RCMP.

Negotiations within the United Nations High Commission for Refugees to encourage burden sharing so that struggling countries like Mexico and Pakistan would not be overwhelmed by refugees, are being reversed. Instead, Canadian, U.S. and western European immigration officials—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired. However, I believe there is unanimous consent to allow the Member to continue. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this privilege conferred on me and I hope those who voted for it will not regret their decision when they hear what I have to say. As I was saying, Canadian, U.S. and western European immigration officials meet in secret, excluding the UNHCR representative, to plan burden shifting, how to dump more refugee claimants onto countries too weak economically or politically to refuse them.

The Canadian Government's action in slamming Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 through in August and September is part of this exploitation of panic and exclusion. As aircraft companies manufactured more planes, as airline companies enticed more passengers, as the planes flew in both directions, as wars over markets and liberation of workers in ex-colonial countries increased, inevitably more refugee claimants arrived year by year in Canada. How did our Government handle this? In 1976, a new Immigration Act was adopted by Parliament.

After much discussion, the Liberal Government refused the urging of the churches and refugee aid societies and agencies who said that the only sound way to tell who was a real refugee was to let him or her tell the story face to face with those who decide a life and death question, in what the lawyers call an oral hearing. The Government said it would cost too much. Instead, the Government set up a cumbersome system, controlled mainly by the Immigration Commission, with hearings under oath, transcripts, a separate committee to study transcripts without looking claimants in the eye, an appeal board with more ponderous procedures, and it starved them for staff. The system slowed down and a backlog began to build up. The commission staff, to cover up, began leaking slanted stories to the media about hoards of bogus refugee claimants.

The Liberal Government, instead of giving the necessary staff, commissioned reports the Robinson report in 1983, the Ratushny report, and then the Plaut report. The Conservative Government came in in 1984 and delayed tabling the Plaut report from December 1984 until June 1985. Clearly, neither the commission nor the Cabinet was ready to face the embarrassment of the system's breakdown.

On April 4, 1985, the Supreme Court exposed the basic flaw in the system by its decision on the Singh case. It said justice and the Canadian Charter demand that every refugee claimant physically in Canada be heard face to face in an oral hearing before those who must decide whether to send him or her back to possible imprisonment, torture or death. The commission was stunned at being invaded by the forces of justice. The then Minister, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), dutifully issued a statement, apparently drafted by the commission, saying that now the Government must decide who will have access to the refugee determination system with its oral hearing. This was a clear and cynical declaration of contempt for that very decision of the Supreme Court and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, Canadian rights and freedoms, on which it is based.

The Progressive Conservative Government has consistently followed that line of contempt for the Singh decision from that day through Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 to this day.

In June, 1985 the Government stalled by asking the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration for yet another report, the fourth report in three years. The committee studied the Plaut report, interviewed commission officials and public witnesses, and tabled in November, 1985 its all-Party report, which essentially agreed with the Plaut report. It recommended that refugees status determination be seen as not an immigration question but a question of human rights. It said that there should be a refugee board independent of the commission. Refugee claimants should be sent directly to that board to be examined by people competent to decide human rights questions such as: "Is he or she a refugee?" Then the Immigration Commission should decide whether to land or remove that person.

A fair and quick system that would have taken all the profit from the racketeers who are taking big fees for bringing in bogus refugee claimants with the promise of several years of work before they are removed.

The Government was obligated by the new reformed Standing Orders of Parliament to give a comprehensive answer to our report in four months. It never did. In 22 months, the Progressive Conservative Government has refused to give a comprehensive answer to our report. It has refused to say which recommendations it accepts and which it rejects, and

why. This began the dismal pattern of this Government's habitual contempt of Parliament and the Government's duty to answer committee reports seriously, contempt which has continued toward other reports and other committees.

No doubt the commission bureaucrats impeded any attempt by the then Minister of State for Immigration to answer our committee seriously. Therefore, the commission's adamant hostility to refugees has helped to undermine the necessary rights of all Members of Parliament.

• (1630)

In May of 1986 the then Minister of State for Immigration made an attempt to respond to some of the committee's recommendations on the refugee backlog. These were soon twisted and undermined by the commission bureaucrats. The Minister of State was replaced by one who would do as he was told and not interfere with policy decisions.

The Portugal-Jehovah's Witness refugee scam brought in 3,500 bogus claimants, to be followed by a couple of thousand from Turkey and Brazil. The Government imposed visa requirements too late and, in 1987, after two years, began to lay charges against the scam operators. All this, of course, was presented to the media as a condemnation of refugees. It is the old dodge of blaming the victims.

Into 1987 the new Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) was giving press statements that insulted refugees and sometimes other immigrants saying that Canadians are getting fed up with bogus claimants, telling the church and refugee aid representatives that he would base his new refugee system on the Canadian backlash he perceived and not on what he scornfully called Euro-Canadians, bragging that his part of Quebec had not been dérangé.

On February 20, 1987, he imposed new restrictive regulations. Central American refugee claimants were coming to our border to escape a new harsh law in the United States that would deport 98 per cent of them back to the death squads of El Salvador and Guatemala. New regulations cut that flow into Canada by less than half by forcing them to return to U.S. immigration officials and wait for an inquiry date in Canada.

Chileans, fleeing a crack-down by Pinochet, were stopped at Buenos Aires by a new transit visa requirement written literally with their country's name on it, although it blocks many others too, except of course it does not block eastern Europeans.

Refugees were not the only scapegoats chosen by the Government to divert public anger from government corruption and untrustworthiness. Unions are, of course, the target that this Government loves to bash. The postal workers were blamed for management's decision to reduce postal service in the interest of privatization. The staff person-years of the Canada Employment Commission and the Canada Immigration Commission were slashed while their workloads rose.

Vancouver Port grain handlers were locked out by employers and accused by the Government of striking against prairie grain farmers. Letter carriers were forced to strike to defend their jobs and were upheld by the Canadian public. Railway workers were forced to strike and were immediately legislated back to work.

As we sit in session today, Canada Post, in violation of the Canada Labour Relations Board ruling, is stealing jobs from inside postal workers to give to under-paid, untrained, unequipped contracting small storekeepers who are in no position to defend themselves against predatory management.

In addition, of course, the Government continues the tradition of treating all unemployment insurance claimants as suspected cheaters. The Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration reported upon the Forget Commission's recommendations that urged a unanimous recommendation, No. 55, that:

> —under all circumstances, clients be treated with dignity and respect. Unemployment Insurance is the clients' program, and staff should presume that clients' intentions are honourable unless there is objective evidence to the contrary. In all cases, the onus of proof for ineligibility or disentitlement must rest with the Commission.

Again, as with the committee's report on refugee status determination, the Government refused to answer.

On the other hand, the Government issued in June its much publicized White Paper on National Defence in which it gives a rosy picture of arms manufacturing in Canada with never the slightest hint of multimillion dollar scandals by which defence production corporations reach into Canadian taxpayers' pockets. In fact, the Minister states in the section entitled "Defence Industrial Preparedness" the following:

> Maintaining the conventional forces of NATO as a credible deterrent requires that our industrial base be able to respond to the needs of our armed forces and those of our allies, both for initial readiness and for follow-on sustainment.
> A key element of both readiness and sustainment is the ability to equip and resupply military forces.

He also includes our research and development capacities in defence spending.

So there is method in this Government's madness and there is madness in its method. In order to promote super profits for what the Hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) calls "the North American defence production base", this Government revives the cold war politics of fear and counter-terror saying—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would be the last one to interrupt the Hon. Member. However, I think that he is a little off the topic of Bill C-55. I hope that he will come back to the Bill, if he does not mind.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I will point out the relevance of what I have been saying. I am talking about a climate of fear being introduced in a number of ways. Fear of refugees is one of the leading examples. I am pointing out the consistency of the Government's policy because in order to whip up the extra expenditures for the war program the Government is promoting a climate of fear and even panic. In fact, it is relevant to the Bill which is before us. Within a few weeks the Government will introduce second reading on Bill C-77, the security measures Bill. That Bill also allows the Government to suppress dissent by declaring an international emergency while our ally, the U.S., judged that its economic interests are threatened in the Persian Gulf, the Middle East or Central America.

These are dangerous politics for the Government to be playing. It seems that the Government wishes, whether it is with refugees, postal workers, or defence policy, to scare us into accepting these very dangerous politics.

When the boatload of Sikhs arrived in Nova Scotia in July, the Government was all ready to make a huge production of it with military guards and a military base. Potential refugee claimants were held incommunicado for a week without access to the press or lawyers, in violation of our Charter. There was scary talk of an invasion of turbanned aliens and security risks.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and other Ministers kept calling the Sikhs and other refugee claimants "queue-jumpers", hoping to turn immigrants against them by suggesting that refugees were hindering them from sponsoring their relatives. Some Tory MPs also told their constituents that the Liberals and the New Democrats in the House of Commons blocked Bill C-55, thereby preventing the Government from having legislation to deal with the Sikh boat. That is clearly and deliberately false. They showed their purpose by giving out the constituency office phone numbers of the Liberal and New Democratic critics, encouraging constituents to tie up our phones with mistaken complaints.

The Government's hoax failed with the immigrant community. The Canadian Ethnocultural Council, in addition to presenting strong briefs against Bill C-84 and Bill C-55, sent an open letter to the Prime Minister dated August 10, accusing the Government of an information campaign that resulted in the manipulation of the media and public opinion.

Specifically, the CEC charged that in addition to holding the Sikhs incommunicado, the Government released the most controversial person first, Mr. Amrik Dhinsa, apparently to create a negative reaction; obtained damaging statements through questionable means, faulty interpretation and use of statements out of context; leaked a confidential unfinished report on security suggesting problems with immigrants; leaked false information claiming that 33 Sikhs had criminal records. Then there was the musical comedy spectacle of the Canadian Navy and Air Force searching the Canadian coast for an empty freighter, the Walvis, that was anchored near England. I welcome the courageous plain talk of the Ethnocultural Council in exposing this hoax.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), until this spring known as a leading advocate of refugees, heightened the hysteria by appearing on TV the day Bill C-84 was tabled, stating, "This is not a Bill about refugees, it is a Bill about security". In fact, both Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 cast a shadow on all refugee claimants at a Canadian port of entry by allowing the Minister to order extraordinary detention, up to 28 days, renewable, and to issue a security certificate against them on secret evidence and without a fair trial. They are then denied the right of access to the refugee determination system, which Canada solemnly undertook to give them when we signed the UN Convention relating to the status of refugees 20 years ago, and which the UN representatives speaking to the committee urged us to honour.

The hoax that refugees are all to be suspected of being terrorists was exposed by the RCMP itself, just as it exposed a similar hoax used by the Liberal Government in 1942 as its excuse to imprison and rob 22,000 Japanese Canadians. In the case of the refugees, the RCMP witness at the Bill C-84 committee testified that none of the refugee claimants on last year's "Tamil" boat, or on this year's "Sikh" boat were found to be a security risk. When asked if any of the 5,000 screened by the RCMP in 1986, and the 6,000 in 1987 were determined as causing a threat to Canada, Deputy Commissioner Belanger answered, and I quote, "We have no documented evidence to that effect either".

Perhaps unintentionally, one more anti-refugee hoax was exploded by the Immigration Commission issuing the information that of the 99,206 immigrants landed in 1986, 6,571 were landed from within Canada through the administrative review of the refugee backlog in Canada. In other words, the actual recruitment of immigrants overseas, including refugees, fell short of the minimum target of the Government by almost 6,000, and its maximum target by almost 16,000. But it would have fallen short by more than 12,000 or 22,000 if the refugee claimants were not included. This means that there never was a queue, therefore, there could be no such thing as queue-jumpers in immigration.

Here is a context that explains the Government's rigid insistence on Bill C-55. First, following the former Minister of Employment and Immigration who justified the commission in trying to find ways to evade the Supreme Court decision in the Singh case, both the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), and the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) during debate this spring hinted strongly that we must change the Supreme Court's decision on Singh about the right of every refugee claimant to a full oral hearing before those who are competent to decide their fate. Instead of an open principle challenge by reference to the court, as we asked, they seem to be attempting to overturn that decision by indirect legislative tricks. They show their contempt for the court and the Charter in that manner.

Second, the hysteria whipped up against refugees is clearly to be used to exclude most refugees except those who are recruited overseas as immigrants. This would go hand in hand with a shift in Canadian government labour policy and may herald further freezing or reducing the target levels for family class immigration.

In this context, what can we make of the promise of the Minister of Employment and Immigration on the day that he introduced Bill C-84 to allow unmarried children of all ages to come as family members? He has given us no details. Past experience with his new point system makes immigrants very doubtful that he will do them any favours.

It seems that the ghost of the Nielsen report is the guiding hand. That report intended to cut government expenditures harshly, and proposed four things on immigration. The Government should restrict refugees to overseas recruitment as immigrants, except for those in "hot flight" directly from the country of persecution which, in practice, is possible only from Communist countries. Second, phase out government sponsorship and rely entirely upon charity to bring in refugees. Third, reduce family class immigration. Fourth, concentrate on bringing in immigrants with investment capital or specially needed skills.

The Government has taken its stand against the rights of refugees as recognized in international law which Canada has pledged to uphold, and in doing so knowingly restricts the rights and freedoms of Canadians.

I have stated what I see as the source of the crisis over refugees. I have stated what I see as the Government's chosen response, and a very unfortunate one it seems to me. Now I wish to describe what I see as the actual response chosen by the Canadian people in their own personal right.

The people of Canada have spoken strongly for refugees. In The Toronto Star poll 75 per cent said, "Let legitimate refugees come". At first, when very few had received copies of the Bill, let alone understood it, many supported the Bill, including newspaper editors. Many of those switched their stand when they learned the facts about what this Bill does to refugees.

Canadians have used the people's organizations of Canada, notably the churches and synagogues, to express their opposition to this Bill. The churches act in the ancient tradition expressed by Paul's letter to the Galatians (3:28): "There is no such thing as Jew and Greek, slave and freeman, male and female, for you are all one person in Jesus the Anointed One of the Creator". Nowadays I believe Paul may have added, "No such thing as citizen and alien".

The Jews speak from a tradition more than a thousand years older from the time when Moses organized the first brick-makers' strike in Egypt and led his people as refugees in the Exodus, the great walk-out from Egypt. They still remember the law he gave in Exodus 20:2-3: "I am the Lord your God who brought you out of Egypt, out of the land of slavery. You shall have no other god to set against me".

All the other hundreds of people's organizations who came as witnesses, wrote letters and sent telegrams, and took up petitions and visited MPs; all the townspeople in Fort Erie, southern Quebec, Windsor, Thunder Bay, Winnipeg, southern Alberta, Vancouver, and Charlesville, Nova Scotia who welcomed refugees with food, shelter, and friendship; all the editorialists in Le Devoir, CSN Nouvelles, The Toronto Star, The Globe and Mail, Calgary Herald, Vancouver Sun, and many other papers; all these and more knowingly and instinctively took the side of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in favour of refugee claimants and against the Bill's exclusions.

Nevertheless, with all that pressure we gained very slight amendments. The word "any" is now placed in the "credible basis" clause so that the adjudicator or refugee board member must send a claimant to the refugee board if they find "any credible and trustworthy evidence". For some there will be a bar against refoulement, sending someone back to the country of feared persecution. Those claimants sent back to the "third country" they came from and returned by that country to Canada will be allowed to re-enter the refugee determination process at the next stage.

The Bill is still unjust. Claimants are "guilty" until they prove themselves innocent. They may be forced to return to a country with no agreed standard on whether they will be able to make their refugee claim there. "Credibility" is still mainly at the caprice of the Minister's staff. There is no fair review or appeal.

The churches, the labour movement, and many other Canadians will continue to demand a fair refugee policy, according to the Canadian Council of Churches' proposal; a fair immigration policy, oriented to families rather than to the rich, the skillful, the powerful, or the politically correct; a foreign policy building development and peace rather than arms trade, rape of natural resources, and debt slavery to make it no longer necessary for people for people to flee their native lands as refugees; in Canada, full employment, not to make the instruments of death for export but to produce the means of life; and the principle that we should observe the needs of the poor before the wants of the rich.

More and more Canadians are asking, Mr. Speaker, for a change of heart in government; a change by which complete love of our neighbours will cast out fear.

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on third reading of Bill C-55. I wish to express my gratitude to all those who during the last month have participated in the debate on Canada's refugee policy. The contributions of Hon. Members, and those who appeared before the legislative committee, have served to raise the level of understanding on this issue.

I was somewhat surprised and disappointed when the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) stated earlier today that fewer refugees and immigrants are coming to Canada, and that our Conservative Government is less compassionate. The opposite is true. During the last three years of Conservative Government, immigration levels have increased from some 80,000 to 125,000 annually, while government sponsored refugees alone have increased from 9,000 to 12,000 annually. This is the best record ever for any Canadian Government in recent years.

This morning the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) took the high road on refugee measures, but not the Hon. Member for York West and previous Liberal Governments that only seemed to favour bogus refugees with money.

The Hon. Member for York West favours people who have money obtaining false passports and visas and paying large sums of money to transportation companies. The Conservative Government reaches out to the desperate and the needy in the world. The Government looks for places where they are waiting in camps. The Government goes there with its immigration officers and picks them up in Hong Kong, Bangkok, and other places where often the Americans got there before us to pick out the best.

The Conservative Government is not looking after the wealthy refugees, whom the Hon. Member for York West seems to be protecting, bogus refugees who pay fees to boat captains and immigration lawyers. The Government looks after all refugees in real need who have no other means to get to Canada.

The Conservative policy is clear. It is forward looking, humanitarian, and compassionate. As the Minister indicated this morning, it has three dimensions. First, the Government assists the UNHCR and Red Cross in many refugee camps in countries all over the world with food, shelter, and health costs. That is the first requirement for them to be safe. Second, we bring those refugees, especially the needy, to Canada in an orderly and timely fashion. Third, we assist those refugees and their families to settle properly in Canada. We assist them in finding shelter and jobs and in acquiring language skills.

The pre-1979 Liberal Government obtained only some 5,000 refugees from southeast Asia. However, what is the record of the Conservative Government? The Conservative Government, under the leadership of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), started to invite 50,000 Vietnamese from southeast Asia to Canada, which has been increased since then.

The pre-September 1984 Liberal Government sponsored only 9,000 government refugees annually, whereas the Conservative Government of today sponsors over 12,000 annually. Similar trends and figures can be cited for refugees from Central America from where very few refugees came to Canada under previous Liberal Governments. That has all changed today. The Conservative Government is far more humane toward Central and South American refugees.

Bill C-55 is part of a continuous process to ensure that our refugee policy is right for today's world. Canada's search for an updated refugee policy reflects our need to come to terms with new global pressures. We are doing it in a way which respects our humanitarian tradition while seeking a practical solution to contemporary problems.

In this connection I should like to thank all church groups, the Jewish community, human rights groups, UNHCR, and others who not only assisted for many years in settling refugees in Canada but also assisted the Government with briefs and comments on both Bill C-55 and Bill C-84.

That Canada has a long and honourable tradition in helping refugees is beyond question. Even before the refugee was recognized as a legal entity, Canada was offering a safe haven to those who needed it. The United Empire Loyalists were probably the first group to come to Canada under those circumstances. Later, in the mid-1800s, black Americans fled slavery by making their way to Canada on the underground railway. After General Custer was defeated at Little Bighorn, Sioux Indians sought refuge in western Canada. Religious dissenters such as the Mennonites and the Doukhobors found freedom in Canada, along with many settlers who were fleeing persecution in their homeland.

However, it was not until after World War II that a specific policy for refugees began to emerge in Canada. Millions of people displaced by war were resettled throughout the world in those post-war years. Canada has done her share, offering haven to more than 500,000 refugees in the intervening years.

Although Canada participated in the drafting of the Convention on Refugees in 1951, refugees were still considered under general immigration policy. However, under those terms Canada accepted some 40,000 Hungarians after 1956 and some 12,000 Czechoslovakians after 1968.

One year later Canada signed the UN Convention and Protocol for Refugees, formally recognizing refugees as an entity separate from the general immigrant population. This marked an important watershed for the refugee policy. In the interim, Canada welcomed some 7,000 Ugandan refugees.

Our refugee policy continued to evolve. The proclamation of the Immigration Act in 1976 provided a legal framework for the determination of refugees among individuals arriving in Canada. The Act allowed us to control the intake of refugees based upon our priorities and international commitments. Refugees, like all other persons intending to settle in Canada, were expected to apply abroad. However, as a signatory of the Convention and Protocol for Refugees Canada also agreed that it would not return to their homeland those determined to be refugees and to whom we have granted protection.

Canada faces a different set of circumstances today from 1951, 1969, and even those of 1976. When Canada signed the Convention it was assumed that a number of applications by people who appeared spontaneously at our borders would be manageable, given Canada's relatively isolated position and her acceptance of refugees from abroad. However, refugee issues cannot be divorced from general world developments. We are currently in the midst of one of the largest migration movements in history. It is estimated that between 70 million and 80 millions have left their countries of origin in search of a better way of life.

The problem is twofold. Unprecedent population growth in the Third World has raised expectations all over. The drift from the country into the city and severe economic problems have led to a vast movement of people looking for a better standard of living. On the other hand, changing economic fortunes in the late 1970s and early 1980s led developed countries to reduce greatly the opportunities for immigration and employment. As a result, a claim of refugee status became virtually the only means to obtain entry and work authorization.

This situation was further aggravated by a spate of ideological and civil conflicts in Africa, the Middle East, and Central America. Inevitably a large number of people affected by economic, political, or natural disasters not of their own making have tried to use the refugee claims system to enter developed countries.

There is no doubt that many of these individuals are genuine refugees in the true sense of the term. However, there are also many others trying to take advantage of asylum who are not persecuted or in fear of their lives because of their expressed opinions or beliefs. They are economic migrants who rightfully belong in the immigration stream.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before calling it five o'clock, I should like to indicate that the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) will have 10 minutes remaining on debate when we continue this matter tomorrow or whenever, plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

ADVISABILITY OF DECLARING CANADA A NUCLEAR ARMS FREE ZONE

The House resumed from Monday, August 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Young:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone by prohibiting the deployment, testing, construction and transportation of nuclear weapons and associated equipment through and within Canada, the export of goods and materials for use in the construction and deployment of nuclear arms and further, the government should encourage cities, provinces and states throughout the world to undertake similar action.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the motion was last before the House, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) had the floor. I now recognize the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate on the Private Member's Motion presented to this Chamber by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) and seconded by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

The motion calls upon the House to urge that, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone by prohibiting the deployment, testing, construction and transportation of nuclear weapons and associated equipment through and within Canada, the export of goods and materials for use in the construction and deployment of nuclear arms and further, the Government should encourage cities, provinces and states throughout the world to undertake similar action.

A nuclear weapons free zone can be established as an international zone by treaty or by national declaration and policy. They are generally considered to be a confidence-building measure which serves in peacetime to enhance international stability and provide a positive climate for arms control negotiations. Nuclear weapons free zones are a sane approach to the slowing of the momentum in the arms race by reducing the flexibility of nuclear weapons options and the circumstances under which they could be used.

At this time, roughly 59 per cent of all Canadians now live in nuclear weapons free zones. This is a circumstance that arises because some 169 municipalities have declared themselves to be nuclear weapons free zones. In fact, each time I leave my riding to return to Ottawa by way of the Regina airport, I am greeted at the outskirts of Regina by a sign that says: "You are now entering a nuclear weapons free zone". In fact, 168 other municipalities across Canada have made similar declarations.

In addition to the 169 municipalities, the Province of Ontario, the Province of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories have all declared themselves to be nuclear weapons free zones. The municipal councillors who attended the Federation of Canadian Municipalities' annual general meeting actually formed a nuclear weapons free zone committee to found a national organization sometime in 1988.

The activities at the municipal and provincial levels have been ongoing. There is acceptance in many parts of Canada for this kind of a proposal. Today's motion would urge the federal Government to get involved as well to ensure that the other 30 per cent of the population will live in nuclear weapons free zones.

Around the world, there are now four international treaties that set up nuclear weapons free zones. These treaties cover the Antarctic, all of Latin America, the sea-bed and outer space. A fifth treaty, the Raratonga Treaty, attempts to establish the South Pacific as a nuclear weapons free zone, but the treaty has run into some difficulties. While it has been recognized by those members of the South Pacific forum, including New Zealand, Australia, China and the U.S.S.R., both France and the United States have refused to sign.

As well, there are a number of other proposals for nuclear weapons free zones in the world. Talks continue among the Nordic countries to create a Nordic nuclear weapons free zone. Several countries in the Balkan Peninsula from Greece to Romania, Albania, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia are attempting to participate in an agreement that would make that area a nuclear weapons free zone. There is considerable discussion ongoing about extending that zone into Central Europe. Countries in the Indian Ocean area, some African and southeast Asian countries and some of the Middle Eastern countries are also discussing such a proposal.

It is of interest that the Inuit Circumpolar Conference is also at work drafting a proposal for an Arctic nuclear weapons free zone to comply with the ones in the Antarctic and the South Pacific. Seventeen nations including Austria, Japan, New Zealand and Sweden have declared themselves unilaterally to be nuclear weapons free zones.

As a symbolic gesture, the declaration of a nuclear weapons free zone is an expression of will to oppose the nuclear arms race. As one of the proponents has put it, it is a formal declaration by countries that they will neither acquire nuclear weapons nor facilitate the build-up of nuclear weapons by other states, that they will complement and support the non-proliferation treaty and that they will strengthen the momentum to freeze, reduce and eventually eliminate nuclear weapons.

Canada has long taken an official stand in international circles that is supportive of the declaration of nuclear weapons free zones. At the UN special sessions on disarmament in 1978 and in 1982, Canada voted in favour of joining the final declaration on the establishment of such zones. This stated support, however, has not materialized into concrete action in Canada. Only some of the provinces, territories and municipalities have participated.

In reality, Canada appears to provide support for the testing, development and training in the use of nuclear weapons. We allowed the testing of Cruise missiles, for instance. Canada places no restrictions on Canadian industrial involvement in the production of U.S. nuclear and nuclear-capable delivery systems or their components. Canada allows port visits by nuclear-armed naval vessels and has supported this commitment even further by the acquisition or declared acquisition of nuclear-powered submarines as proposed in the recent White Paper.

In addition to these more obvious breaches of our stated non-nuclear policy and our commitment made at the United Nations, Canada is less than stringent in the application of policy restrictions on the export of nuclear-fissionable materials. Although these are not to be used in Canada or anywhere else for the production of nuclear weapons, there is some evidence to show that our exports to South Korea, France and the United States are making their way into the atomic bomb programs of those countries.

There are a number of things we can do to aid the program we claimed we supported at the United Nations. We can cancel Cruise missile testing and the testing of other nuclear weapons systems or their components in Canada. We can prohibit port visits of nuclear-armed ships as has already been done in Denmark, Norway, Iceland, New Zealand and many other countries. We can pursue the creation of a nuclear weapons free zone in the Arctic together with other nations with Arctic interests, and we could end Canadian industrial participation in the development and production of nuclear weapons systems or their components.

In summary, I would like to put on record the words of representatives of Project Ploughshares. They said:

> A nuclear weapons free zone is not an attempt to make one immune to the effects of war, rather it is an attempt to influence national and international behaviour before war breaks out, ... A nuclear weapons free zone is a peacetime measure to restrict the spread of nuclear weapons, to withdraw political and technical support for the nuclear arms race and to build trust between nations and regions of the globe.

I think Canada could have no better goal than the acceptance of this motion. I would hope that the preliminary step would be taken to establish Canada as a nuclear weapons free zone.

• (1710)

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us reflects a concern on the minds of many Canadians. I refer to the role of nuclear weapons in preserving collective security and Canada's responsibility in that regard. Given the awesome destructive power of nuclear weapons it is understandable that Canadians want to be informed and knowledgeable about their Government's policy in this area.

First, I would like to emphasize, as a matter of reality, that Canadian policy and practice is in many respects already in conformity with the resolution before us. Canada does not possess nuclear weapons. In normal peacetime conditions no nuclear weapons are deployed, tested or constructed within Canada, or transported through Canada. Neither could such nuclear weapons-related activities occur on Canadian territory without the express permission of the Canadian Government. I remind the House that Canada is distinct from several of our NATO allies in that we do not have nuclear weapons in our inventory or on our territory. As for Canadian exports, which we just heard about, it is Canadian policy that all exports of nuclear material, equipment and technology shall be for peaceful, non-explosive uses only.

Second, I emphasize that the Government is sympathetic in principal to the broad concept of nuclear weapons free zones. Canada has supported resolutions at the UN calling for the creation of such zones. I note, however, that in the few cases where such zones have been officially proclaimed, they do not necessarily include prohibitions as comprehensive as those set out in this motion. For example, the South Pacific nuclear free zone, which Canada welcomed, does not prohibit transit through the zone by vessels which may be carrying nuclear weapons. This reflects the fact that even in the few regions where steps have been taken to establish such zones, the measures are adapted to the specific strategic realities and security interests of the countries concerned.

Our Government's approach is pragmatic. Our central concern is to ensure that our policies contribute to national security and international stability. A central pillar of this Government's national security policy is collective defence as exemplified by our membership in NATO and NORAD. The primary role of the alliance is to safeguard the security of member nations by deterring aggression. This Government believes, as do other NATO Governments, that the nuclear deterrent strategy of the alliance has been a critical factor in maintaining peace in the East-West context for over 40 years. Canada voluntarily shouldered the obligation to contribute to the capability of the alliance to implement its strategy of deterrence. It would not be consistent with our alliance membership, or with our own security interests, for Canada, as a matter of principle, to attempt to dissociate itself from any and all aspects of the nuclear deterrent strategy.

The second central pillar of our national security policy is arms control and disarmament. The Canadian Government, like other alliance Governments, recognizes the desirability of moving toward reduced reliance on nuclear weapons. The fact that the U.S. and the Soviet Union appear close to successfully concluding an agreement on the elimination of both short and medium-range nuclear weapons is most encouraging. I remind you, Sir, that those negotiations began as a result of an alliance initiative, and progress has in no small measure been due to the ability of the alliance to maintain a consistent and co-operative approach to the negotiations. Similarly, the alliance is lending its support to the efforts of the superpowers to negotiate radical reductions in their strategic nuclear weapons. As we move toward a less nuclear world, the conventional balance of forces gains an importance. In this area, too, alliance members are co-ordinating their efforts to bring about negotiations toward balanced, and preferably lower, conventional force levels in Europe.

Canada has been able to offer serious and constructive input to these several arms control negotiating efforts because of our presence at the table as an alliance member. Even in multilateral arms control forums, much of Canada's credibility and capacity for influence derives from our alliance membership. This signals to others our level of knowledge about arms control developments and our enhanced access to the deliberative forums. Without that membership we would have been poorly informed of developments, and our credibility seriously depreciated.

The question must be asked: What would be achieved by passing the motion before us? In many respects, as I noted, nothing would change. Canada would remain a country without nuclear weapons and without direct involvement in the manufacture or maintenance of nuclear arsenals. By signalling a desire to dissociate ourselves from key aspects of the collective defence strategy, our credibility and influence would be significantly diminished. Our own security would certainly not be enhanced, and it could even be compromised. Our influence elsewhere would in no way be enhanced, and it could in fact suffer. It would, in sum, be worse than a futile gesture which would fly in the face of the reality of interdependence, which is as real in the area of national security as it is in other policy areas.

It took the world 40 years to get itself into the current situation of East-West tension and the build-up of nuclear arms. During the last year we have at last begun to see agreements which lessen tension and actually reduce the number of nuclear weapons. It has always been my contention that there is no easy half-hour television solution to disarmament and arms control. It will take patience as we move step by step towards the goal desired by everyone.

The conference on peace and security held last year, in which Canada played a major role, provided new measures to reduce tension in Europe. The proposed agreement between the U.S. and the Soviet Union on short and intermediate range nuclear weapons will eliminate, it is true, only about 3 per cent of the world's nuclear weapons. However, it is an important start.

Let us work towards the reduction of tensions and suspicions to a more open verification system for nuclear arms, troop movements, and chemical weapons. Let us continue to work carefully towards further verifiable reductions while at the same time keeping NATO strong. It is my contention, Sir, that the resolution before this House at this time does not do that.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to speak to this motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). The motion says:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone by prohibiting the deployment, testing, construction and transportation of nuclear weapons and associated equipment through and within Canada, the export of goods and materials for use in the construction and deployment of nuclear arms and further, the government should encourage cities, provinces and states throughout the world to undertake similar action.

● (1720)

This, of course, is a very large subject. In the ten minutes I have I wish to concentrate on only one part of it. First, I wish to respond to two things said by the Hon. Member who just spoke. He said toward the end of his remarks that arms reduction will take a long time and will need patience. I agree with him. He, I, and many others in this House can remember discussions of this more than 40 years ago. I also agree with him that it is very heartening that now that the Soviet Union has achieved some parity with the United States on nuclear arms there seems to be some willingness on the part of the United States to negotiate some arms reduction. I regret that it has taken so long and hope that it does not always depend upon the balance of terror, as the establishment likes to call it.

I do not agree with the Hon. Member when he argues that Canada should reject this resolution because we need to participate in nuclear alliances in order to have access to their information so that we can to be credible when negotiating arms control. That reminds me of a cartoon in the Toronto Star by the famous cartoonist, Ben Wicks. The king was sitting on his throne with his jester in front of him and he said, "Make me laugh, tell me the one about getting disarmament through making more bombs".

It seems to me that if Canada, which has very considerable civilian knowledge of nuclear matters, were to withdraw from nuclear alliances, we would not lose our credibility. Unless the Government wants to cancel everything which the National Research Council does, we need not lose our ability to understand the peaceful uses of nuclear weapons. I think we would be more credible to the smaller and middle-sized countries of the world if we divested ourselves of our ties with the nuclear powers.

I want to concentrate mainly on the Arctic. I admit that I have not been there much. I went to the Yukon once, but all Canadians, most of whom do not live in the Arctic, must give it more thought because the Arctic is becoming very important. It could be the focal point for the expanding ambitions of several countries and, therefore, a focal point for the risk of nuclear war which, it is agreed, we need to prevent.

The Arctic is a major theatre of interest for the American Star Wars program, the American air defence initiative, which some people call Son of Star Wars, and the American maritime strategy, which includes invading Soviet ports in order to destroy the Soviet submarine fleet. For that they may want to use the Arctic, perhaps even part of the Canadian Arctic.

All of these plans are inherently destabilizing and aggressive. Deployment, which makes it possible to make such moves as I have described, is threatening the Russians with the possibility of a U.S. first strike against their retaliatory or second strike capacities. Most arms experts and nuclear experts agree that that would be the shape of a plan which would be perceived in that way by the Soviet Union. Even if we say that the U.S. does not intend to use it, it is very foolish to give the appearance of intending to use it. If they do not intend to use it, they could say so which, of course, they refused to do.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke about this on May 25, 1987, when he warned that if Star Wars are deployed with counterforce weapons, they do produce the option of a first strike. Some of the Government's actions are not consistent with that important understanding expressed by the Prime Minister. The policy of allowing Canadian corporations to engage in Star Wars research clouds that issue very gravely. It is important for the Government to show leadership in this matter.

As the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) have said and demonstrated through their actions, we have the opportunity to get many other powers in the world to listen to us when we have a serious program. We could extend leadership toward the goal of helping to ensure that there is no nuclear war.

One way in which to do that is to negotiate for a nuclear free zone which would cover the Arctic. Not only the Canadian Arctic would be involved, and this is where the negotiating comes in. The Americans are present in Alaska and the Soviet Union is present throughout its side of the Arctic. Greenland, Iceland and the other Scandinavian countries all have a strong stake in the Arctic and the benefits of a nuclear free zone there. Canada could take a lead by inviting them to talk about that and trying to set up agreement in which all countries could participate on an equal basis to reduce the threat throughout the Arctic without any one country making itself dangerously vulnerable.

For Canada's part we would probably have to agree on several things. We would have to deny the use of Canadian soil and waters to the U.S. for their air defence initiative, their Star Wars, and their maritime strategy. The present Government of Canada has been investigating this possibility vigorously. We would have to investigate it more vigorously and perhaps more contentiously. We would have to continue the general work, especially as it relates to that area, of discouraging the build-up and deployment of nuclear weapons, at least within the Arctic.

We would also have to refuse to test the cruise missile, particularly the one using the stealth technology, which is the most obvious threat to the Soviet Union. We would have to ask that the Soviet Union also refrain from testing similar missiles on its northern territory. We would have to stop allowing the transit of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil.

We have some rather slippery agreements with the United States which seem to say that they will not store, deploy, or use these weapons on our soil except when there is a crisis, in other words, except when they want to. They do say that when they are going to, they will let us know and we will have a chance to agree. It sounds like a 30-second phone call to tell us that they are coming over with the bombs and asking whether we object. I do not know what Canada will have to say about it at that point. We must make it clear that our territory is out of bounds for an action that might bomb the Soviet Union.

We must take over our own northern defence and warning system to ensure that it will be used for strategies which promote peace and the cooling down of tensions rather than threatening war. We must cancel low-level flight training for B-52s and other nuclear capable planes from the NATO countries. Finally, we must talk with the Inuit and other northern people around the Circle to find out what they are doing by way of negotiating among themselves.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) for his presentation of this motion because it is efforts such as this by public figures that make it possible for organizations throughout the world to take action.

I also want to congratulate the organizations on disarmament and other anti-nuclear organizations whose persistence in many of these nations has made this a cause of the public rather than a cause of the few.

I sometimes wonder what kind of world we would have today without those small groups of anti-nuclear activists, who march in the streets and demonstrate in front of the City Hall in Toronto or Vancouver. If they were not there to pressure the Government to put the reins on the development of nuclear weapons, what kind of world would we have? What kind of world would we have if the public did not take an interest in limiting nuclear arms?

I can only imagine the horror of what might have happened if there had not been organizations that dared to stand up and oppose the war machines of the world. I think, for instance, of the group holding hands around the nuclear base in England. This is the type of action that brings the concern of people to the attention of Governments throughout the world. If these groups were not persistent in making their views known throughout the world, there would probably be a much greater prevalence of nuclear development and armaments throughout the world.

We must give all our support to this kind of public intervention. I join an anti-nuclear march whenever I see one because I think it is that type of support that allows people in nations of the world to speak out against the development of arms that can destroy the world.

This debate has taken place on several occasions, and we hear the same arguments which attempt to negate the support we wish to give disarmament groups. However, I believe that the passage of such a motion for a nuclear weapons free zone would send a message that we not only support peace, we are willing to send a political message throughout the world that Canada is ready to take a decision on disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament. As long as nuclear weapons exist, there is always a chance they will be used.

The U.S.S.R. and the United States will retain those nuclear weapons for as long as they believe a nuclear deterrent is required. Presently, discussions are taking place in an attempt to reduce the number of weapons in the East and the West. However, if the U.S.S.R. and the United States believe they require a nuclear deterrent, why is it necessary for other countries to be part of the nuclear armament structure?

If Parliament is unable to pass a motion such as this, we will not be encouraging the development of the peace movement, or even giving the current disarmament discussions the support that is necessary in order to succeed. While this motion will have no effect on the deterrent force of our allies, it would send a message to the rest of the world that there should be no further development of arms that can eventually destroy the world. Once the button is pushed, it makes no difference whether these weapons are designed for first use or for defence.

If the number of nuclear weapons free zones throughout the world increased to the point where the majority of countries declared limits as suggested in this motion, nuclear armed countries like the U.S.S.R. and the United States will perhaps listen to what we say.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take part briefly in the debate on the motion moved by our friends to the left on August 31. First, I want to say that this issue is quite serious. On the one hand, we have heard some of our colleagues in this House support a motion to have Canada withdraw from the nuclear club. On the other hand, others say that agreeing with this motion would displease our allies since we could no longer take part in some aspects of our agreements with them.

• (1740)

[English]

The issue before us is indeed one that is of unimaginable proportion. In 1945, the first atomic bomb was exploded in the desert of New Mexico. From that point on life itself changed. Man and humanity had created the power to destroy itself. We cannot change that. It has happened. It is here and here to stay. Some people will argue that since the Hiroshima disaster, the so-called theory of mutually assured destruction has worked. Mutually assured destruction is abbreviated as "MAD" and there is something to be said for that abbreviation.

Of course, not only do we have mutually assured destruction in the event of a war but at the present rate of building up nuclear armaments, we have in fact mutually assured destruction whether we press the button or not at some point in the future. The point I am making is that in everyone and every thing there is a margin of error. The people who work in nuclear silos, the people who operate that machinery, and even the decision makers are not beyond the potential situation of making an error. Sooner or later—hopefully, much, much later, or not at all until we have totally dismantled nuclear warheads—we will have an error of some sort. Obviously, given that there is no room for any error, that day could be quite sad, not only for the people who started the confrontation, not only for the other side, but potentially for everyone.

The Secretary General of the United Nations gave a speech to the UN General Assembly on December 12, 1984. He described the situation I have just outlined with the following words:

> No ideological confrontation can be allowed to jeopardize the future of humanity. Nothing less is at stake: Today's decisions affect not only the present, they also put at risk succeeding generations. Like supreme arbiters, with our disputes of the moment we threaten to cut off the future and extinguish the lives of the innocent millions as yet unborn. There can be no greater arrogance. At the same time, the lives of all who lived before us may be rendered meaningless. For we have the power to dissolve in a conflict of hours or minutes the entire work of civilization, with all the brilliant culture heritage of humankind.

[Translation]

What Javier Perez de Cuellar was telling us, Mr. Speaker, was that we have not only the power to destroy, but also the power to make our future and our past completely meaningless because the destruction would be of such a magnitude that what came before and what will come in the future would have no real meaning as our way of life would be completely destroyed.

[English]

The only atomic bombs which have ever exploded have been in two cities of Japan, Hiroshima and Nagasaki. We commemorated the 40th anniversary of that event here on the steps of Parliament Hill sometime ago. I was there at that august ceremony to remember 40 years ago. There was a woman there who came to describe to us how she had lived through the incident. She was there the day the bomb exploded. She described the horror of those days. Today we have one million times the nuclear power that destroyed Hiroshima. I am told that the nuclear power the world has now is enough to destroy the planet 40 times over. One would think that once would be more than enough, but we have enough to do it 40 times. Obviously there is a message there. Apart from everything else, there is the tremendous waste of energy and human potential, the tremendous waste of resources. Surely there are better things we can do with our money than to buy enough armaments to blow ourselves up 40 times over.

One cannot help but wonder what the last 39 times is supposed to do after we have destroyed our world once? I do not know the answer to all of those questions.

[Translation]

It is quite possible that no one in this House can reply to all these questions, which makes it difficult to understand why Governments, individuals and countries would want to accumulate these nuclear devices.

I believe that it is important for us Canadians to do two things. First, we should take concrete action to encourage other countries, and preferably all of them, to get rid of their nuclear weapons. Second, I believe that it is important, and here I disagree with the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), to preserve our alliances with our friends. However, Mr. Speaker, even though someone is our friend and our ally, this does not give him the right to destroy our planet.

While I am myself in favour of Canada remaining a member of NATO and NORAD, I believe that it is important for us to support such a motion to indicate to the United States, to the Soviet Union and to all other countries that what we want most of all is a bilateral agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union to get rid of their nuclear weapons. By giving our support to this motion, and I hope that it will be adopted, we shall at least be telling those two countries that we are willing to do our share even though we are not a major power, and that we have the courage to do something which might lead the way to more concrete action by greater powers than Canada.

[English]

In conclusion, the Secretary General of the United Nations also stated that no one had given the United States and the Soviet Union the right to decide whether this world was to live or to die.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise with pleasure to support the motion put forward by my friend, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), that the Government should consider the advisability of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone. I note that in his motion the Hon. Member included the transportation, testing, construction and deployment of nuclear weapons and associated equipment.

First, we must acknowledge that while Canada has begun to take steps which contribute to the ultimate goal of Canada becoming a nuclear arms free zone by ensuring that nuclear weapons, as my hon. colleague stated, are not stored or deployed on or from Canadian soil, we have not taken as a nation full measures which would show to the world our commitment to the full participation in the prevention of war. In fact, some countries might say that Canada's stance has been hypocritical. For example, Canada has voted in favour of treaties establishing nuclear weapons free zones on the seabed, in the Antarctic, Latin America, outer space and similar initiatives in Africa, the South Pacific and the Middle East. Despite the fact that 169 Canadian municipalities, and Ontario, Manitoba, the Northwest Territories and, I am proud to say, the area I represent, the Yukon, have declared their regions nuclear weapons free zones, Canada has declined to do what it supports others doing. Ostensibly, one of the reasons given is our NATO commitments.

NATO commitments aside, whether we agree or disagree with them, the North Atlantic Treaty makes no reference at all to nuclear weapons. In fact, the eight members of NATO have some sort of prohibition on the deployment of other NATO members' nuclear weapons in their territories. This excuse just does not wash.

Despite sentiments supporting Canada's role in the non-proliferation of nuclear arms, the Government still places no restraints on industrial involvement in the production of U.S. nuclear and nuclear capable delivery systems or their components. Canada still allows port visits by nuclear-armed naval vessels. Canada is a regular producer of components for an arsenal of nearly 30 different nuclear weapons and related weapons, aircraft or other weapons systems. Nuclear weapons training by the United States, and possibly other NATO powers, takes place across Canada from the Northwest Territories to the U.S. border.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), so eloquently stated the other evening when he was presenting another Private Members' Bill, "Citizens are not reassured by the proliferation of arms; citizens are reassured by the reduction of arms", as noted by the recent welcome news that the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. have been successful in at least some measure of arms reduction. The argument that we can only be strong as we participate in increasing arms, because that will make our citizens feel secure, just does not wash either.

Today, there is an immediate action that the Government can take, an action that would send a strong signal that the country does not support the potential proliferation of nuclear trade. Currently, the United States is in the process of deciding whether to sign an agreement to transport plutonium dust over Canada's North. While this is reactor-grade plutonium, there will be enough plutonium on each flight—and it is estimated that there will be a flight every two weeks over 10 years—there will be enough plutonium to build 15 to 20 bombs, each one the equivalent of the Nagasaki bomb. Should this plutonium fall into terrorist hands, not only Canada's North but all of Canada and the world would be at risk. Canada must not participate even by default in such a potential horror. Should this agreement take place, 26 times a year this possibility will exist. Over 10 years the odds for hijacking or a crash, which would have equally devastating environmental effects, may also occur. We have only to say, "No".

Similarly, in the Arctic, as my hon. colleague from Spadina pointed out, despite proposals since 1964 to de-nuclearize the Arctic, about one-third of the nuclear submarines proposed by the Government will be sent there. It is considered that there will be an escalating effect of both militarization and nuclearization of the entire Arctic.

Canada has a proud history of peace-keeping. Through this motion we have the opportunity to be a part of peace-making.

Canada is certainly not a major world power in terms of our amount of arms and in terms of being a major physical deterrent to war. We are not one of the superpowers in that sense. However, we have shown through our history that we have been able through negotiation, through moral suasion, and now with this motion through action, to show that we do not support the proliferation of the nuclear race in any way, not only by not storing arms on our soil, which we do not do, but by not participating in any way in the production, the transport, or components—in any part of the nuclear race.

I believe that if the House supports this move, as many municipalities and regions in Canada have done, what we will see is much greater support by Canadians who want to be a part of the peace-makers of the world and who do not want to join the nuclear race through any form of production of nuclear arms. We have an opportunity here to be a leader in this area. As I mentioned earlier, Canada has supported very strongly the fact that other regions such as Africa and Latin America have treaties with respect to the non-proliferation of nuclear arms. We can join them by taking such action and by reinforcing that leadership.

I urge all Members of the House to support this motion unanimously and to show the people of Canada that we will not participate in a war in any way, that we will make a strong statement and we will work for the preservation of the world and all its citizens.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a question that is not only important today but is one that has been important in the past. We have been able to arouse the interest of Canadians. We know that this is a priority subject.

I certainly had the opportunity to bring it forward in another forum in which there was a referendum held on whether or not people wanted their municipalities to be nuclear weapons free. There was an overwhelming response in favour of that referendum. We then asked all the municipalities across the country if they would put such an issue on a referendum. Over 60 per cent of the Canadian population spoke out on such a motion.

What we are looking at today is the ability of the House of Commons to support this motion and to bring forward a Bill which would say to Canadians, "We are leaders. We understand the nonsense of being able to destroy ourselves 40 times over. We recognize the fact that we have the ability of showing other countries that Canada is truly a peace-loving and peace-keeping country".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. When debate is resumed on this motion the Hon. Member will have seven minutes.

Adjournment Debate

TRADE—FREE TRADE—ARTICLES PUBLISHED IN TWO MONTREAL NEWSPAPERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION / FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to follow up on the question I asked last Friday, September 25, concerning the break off of free trade negotiations with the Americans.

Last week, Mr. Speaker, we saw so many contradictory moves and heard so many contradictory comments on the part of the Government that we simply did not know who was telling the truth. As the common saying goes, it was as though we were looking at a government running around like a chicken with its head cut off.

For his part the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) speaks from both sides of his mouth, depending on where he is and which newspapers he is talking to. The English newspaper The Gazette has him stating that there can be no question of convening a summit meeting to discuss the break off of negotiations. To the French daily La Presse he is reported as having said that he is prepared to meet with President Reagan. In Saturday's newspapers certain editorial writers referred to the situation as a dialogue of the deaf. Le Devoir, La Presse, everybody was asking: But who is telling the truth in this case?

In the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said, and I quote his very words: It would be, I think, inappropriate at this time and perhaps unhelpful at this very moment for the President and myself or anyone else at that level to get involved. As he was saying this his Chief of Staff Derek Burney was talking to his American counterpart Howard Baker, and today we see that two of his Cabinet colleagues, the Minister of Finance and the Minister for International Trade, are in Washington to discuss with American negotiators in the hope of getting the negotiations back on track.

Mr. Speaker, the truth in all this is that last Friday a rumour was circulating among the public, in fact there was a news item in several daily papers that the Minister of Finance had contacted American Treasury Secretary James Baker to tell him about five conditions to reopen negotiations. I will read the text of the conditions which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) allegedly gave Mr. Baker. Indeed The Globe and Mail rather accurately sums up the five conditions. First:

• (1800)

[English]

Rules applying to fair and unfair trade such as dumping, countervailing duties and subsidies, spelled out in extremely clear terms and subject, in the event of disagreement, to "impartial, binational and definitive resolution;"

Clear general rules interpreted in an objective fashion with all elements of the agreement subject to speedy dispute settlement procedures;

Balanced widening of access for each country's agricultural and food products in the other's market;

Changes to automotive trade rules only if they hold the potential for more trade, production and employment in both countries;

A 10-year period during which virtually all tariff and non-tariff barriers to almost all trade would be removed with no new barriers introduced.

[Translation]

When I asked the question Friday, I was told: No! No! That does not exist, and to quote him, Mr. Speaker: "The answer to the question is no, the Government of Canada did not submit five conditions—nor three nor seven—since the chief negotiator suspended negotiations". I am not the one who said that, the Right Hon. Joe Clark did, the Secretary of State for External Affairs who, in reply to my question, said: No! No! There were not five conditions. Mr. Speaker, the question that comes to my mind is where will we get information and who is telling the truth.

Mr. Speaker, the truth of the whole matter is that the Canadian Government once more was deluded by the Americans. Mr. Simon Reisman himself, the chief negotiator, over the weekend stated on CTV's Question Period that in his opinion, the American administration had many other concerns besides free trade. The discussions never received all the attention they deserved at the highest level of government, and to quote him: "They only got involved over the last 24 or 36 hours".

This Tory Government is so obsessed with the United States that it is missing completely the time perspective of the rest of the world. As stated today in Toronto by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), and I will quote him because this is important:

[English]

"In its obsessive focus on the United States in the last three years, our Government has lost opportunities in the Pacific Rim, in the European Economic Community, and with many of our other trading partners outside North America. Our trade deficit with the Pacific Rim countries has jumped from $764 million in 1984 to $4 billion in 1986.

With Japan alone, our deficit went from $71 million in 1984 to $1.7 billion in 1986. Imports from the United Kingdom and other European countries are up 54 per cent from 1984, while our exports to those countries have only increased 14 per cent in the same period".

• (1805)

That was a quotation from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) from a speech that he made in Toronto today at noon.

[Translation]

If at least, Mr. Speaker, that blindness, that boundless attraction to the United States had been benefical to us, we could and we would then understand that something had to be handed out in the negotiations. But the net result of the Canada-US relations is rather sad. Let me recall it. According to Mr. Reisman, they never took us seriously in those free trade conversations. During that time, Canada for its part dismantled the Foreign Investment Screening Agency and abandoned the National Energy Policy to please the Americans. The latter responded by imposing all kinds of restrictive and punitive measures against Canada, as the import tariffs on books, the export tax on lumber, cedar shakes and shingles, the pressures on the pharmaceuticals industry with Bill C-22. The list is long, Mr. Speaker, it even includes Christmas trees. Is that long enough? Now they are talking about potash, pulp and paper, cultural industry, the Auto Pact, just to name a few. Mr. Speaker, there was a lack of seriousness in these negotiations: in the discussions the Government should have talked about such realistic things as how to implement a comprehensive agreement, an agreement which would have boosted trade between both countries. But no, they talked about other things, and I should like to remind the House that a very sobering article by Maxwell Cohen was published in weekend newspapers.

[English]

Maxwell Cohen says it very nicely:

> It is difficult to understand the mind-set that led to the delay in focusing on what now appears to be the most serious obstacle to a comprehensive free trade agreement. Indeed, it is arguable that the absence of a vision of the system that was to come out of these negotiations—constitutional, administrative and adjudicative—affects not only the dispute-settlement issue but also many of the implementation and substantive questions, from agriculture to investment, to cultural/intellectual property, to services.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I could not put it any better than that. Mr. Cohen said it all.

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, not to be provocative, a lot of people can say it better than the Hon. Member. He started off his diatribe tonight by saying that the Conservatives were running around like chickens with their heads cut off. Can one imagine a federal Liberal saying today that we are running around like chickens with our heads cut off? I mean, they cannot make up their minds on the Meech Lake Accord. They cannot make up their minds on trade. They cannot make up their minds on many things. For the Hon. Member to accuse us of running around like chickens with our heads cut off is being, to be kind to him, a little exaggerated, just a little exaggerated.

I only have three minutes, unfortunately, because there were so many exaggerated, unfounded, and untrue claims in the Hon. Member's speech about so many things.

He said that the Government is attacking Canada on the lumber industry. It was the lumber industry which filed against the Canadian lumber industry; it was not the Government. It was the potash industry in the United States which filed against the potash industry in Canada. It is not the Government attacking the Government.

The Liberals have been going around spreading all these claims. They say that we sold out on shakes and shingles. They slapped a 35 per cent tariff on shakes and shingles. The federal Government, the Government of Canada, stopped shipping our cedar logs to the United States, so they are in a worse situation today in the United States than they ever were. The only thing they accomplished was jacking up the prices. We are still exporting our shakes and shingles down there, as we are our softwood lumber.

The Hon. Member does not have his facts right. He talked about these five principles which are the bottom line for us. Those five principles are nothing new. They were expressed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) right from the very start. They are nothing new at all.

He talked about our negotiators. Everyone in the United States who has anything to do with our negotiating team has said that we have the best negotiating team—the best equipped, the best informed, and the most solid negotiating team going.

When the Americans were taking us for granted, the negotiating team walked out. However, now the Americans are not taking us for granted. Now the Americans are saying: "Come on back to the table, we want to negotiate again".

Mr. Gauthier: You are crawling there on your bellies.

Mr. McDermid: We did not crawl. They called us back, and that is why they are down there today.

I will tell the Hon. Member what is going on down there today. Maybe he could understand this analogy, just maybe he could understand it. Let me use baseball because it is current right now; everybody is paying attention to baseball. We are in a rain delay right now. Does the Hon. Member understand that? We are in a rain delay right now. We have to wait for the outcome of the talks between the officials to see if the players will be asked to resume the game or go to the showers. That is what is happening right now. Those talks are going on now, and I hope they will come to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Parliamentary Secretary just struck out.

• (1810)

ACID RAIN—POSITION OF UNITED STATES PRESIDENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION—CANADIAN MESSAGE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on September 18, I asked a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) regarding acid rain and what the Government is doing about Canada's number one environmental problem. I received a rather unsatisfactory and complacent response. At that time, the Minister said the following:

> We have already taken a major step because we have here in this House a statement from the President of the United States on the matter of acid rain.

The American President simply reiterated a promise already made about expenditures and about taking the problem seriously, a promise he had previously broken. We are not very optimistic that it will be honoured the next time around. The President still thinks that trees cause acid rain and other kinds of pollution and still does not see the responsibility of industry or of Government to push industry into cleaning up.

Why are we getting this response from the Americans? I suggest that it is in part because our own Government has sent a mixed message. It has told the Americans it will be friendly and will go along with whatever they say.

The joint report of the special envoys on acid rain by Drew Lewis of the United States and Bill Davis of Canada is an embarrassment and a scandal. It opts for more research, as if the problem was not already too well documented and as if we were not losing time in the battle against acid rain. It was a complacent report, agreed to by Canada's representative. We lost more time dealing with the report.

Why has this become another issue just recently? Just published has been a study by the National Acid Precipitation Assessment Program in the United States. This report has the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) all riled up, as it well ought to. It is entitled The Interim Assessment of the Causes and Effects of Acid Deposition. I might say that the phrase "acid deposition" is a way of escaping responsibility for acid rain.

The report says that acid rain might not be such a bad problem and wants things to be more thoroughly documented. It points out, for example, that the farming soils in Canada are not yet ruined by acid rain. If we waited until the soils on the Prairies were acidified, we would have lost them. Imagine replacing all the soil in Canada because it has become acidified. We will have enough trouble with the waters in our lakes and rivers.

The idea that we should wait until it is too late to correct the problem is totally irresponsible, yet that is what this group has suggested. I suggest that the Government itself must bear some responsibility for allowing it to think that that would be acceptable.

The Minister of the Environment called the report voodoo science. There is nothing wrong with the science in the report but it is short-sighted and does not look to the need to implement measures of prevention before it is too late. It is wrong in its application. In fact, it did not consider the Canadian problem at all. It ignored Canada, and the Government has allowed the Americans to do that.

[Translation]

A week ago I was in southern Quebec's Eastern Townships where one third of maple stands have died as a result of acid rain emanating from the United States. Forest decline over there is now far advanced—one third in that region—and the scourge is unrelentless. If one third of trees in the border area are affected, the other regions will be just as badly affected. And perhaps next year half the trees will have died because of acid rain, and again one third or one half in other regions. We cannot afford to wait for an effective remedy against this scourge.

[English]

Acid rain is our number one environmental problem. One half of acid rain in Canada comes from the United States. Yes, we must clean up our own act and we are not doing as much as we should, but in the region of Estrie, more than half the acid rain comes from the United States. This area has not been significantly affected by Ontario emissions. We know that the problem is coming from the United States and that our own Government is not acting strongly.

[Translation]

The environment is a major concern of Canadians. Acid rain is the most urgent problem with respect to Canada's environment.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians want concrete steps to be taken.

• (1815)

[English]

We have had enough of research. It is time we had serious action. The response of the Government to date of just waiting for the Americans, having a chat with the homologue of the Secretary of State for External Affairs is not enough. We need to send a strong and consistent message to the U.S., not just publicity programs. It cannot be botched up by sending a confused message of acceptability of the current state of affairs.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to discuss the Government's initiatives on acid rain and respond to the Hon. Member. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is in Washington today pressing for a reduction in acid rain causing emissions affecting our country. His schedule includes meetings with congressional representatives, environmental organizations, industry, and the administration. I do not call that complacency. The Minister has done more on the environment than any Minister in the past 20 years and is finally getting the U.S. to react. The message he is delivering is clear, simple and reasonable: Canada is taking action to reduce emissions and expects the U.S. to do likewise. Is that a complacent response? I hardly think so.

Our strategy vis-à-vis the U.S. is three-pronged. First, we must continue our efforts to convince the administration of the need for a positive response to our proposal for an international agreement to reduce the transboundary flow of emissions. The President's commitment to consider that proposal will be the focus of our efforts in this regard. Resolution of this problem is one of the Government's highest priorities, and I mean highest. Every effort has been made to this end. We have the Prime Minister's repeated personal interventions, representations by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of the Environment, and lobbying by the all-Party Special Committee on Acid Rain. Every effort will continue to be made in pursuit of an agreement.

Second, we must continue to ensure that Congress is fully apprised of the Canadian position. Full and accurate information will be crucial to congressional action on any eventual agreement we conclude with the administration. Members of Congress should have the benefit of our knowledge, research and experience. They should know where we stand and how important their efforts are on our air and rain.

Third, federal and provincial Governments and private individuals alike must work with interested Americans in an effort to broaden the understanding in the U.S. that acid rain is a serious international problem which must be addressed now. We know what we are demanding is not easy. We are conscious that it is not cheap. Delay will, however, not make it any less expensive for either of us. Indeed, in the end it will add to the expense.

We are asking the Americans to do no more than we are doing ourselves. When they act we will both be beneficiaries.

HARBOURFRONT—TORONTO PROJECT—FUTURE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, a week ago yesterday afternoon I was fortunate enough to attend the official opening of the Harbourside Co-op at Harbourfront in Toronto. From your earlier remarks I know you are a baseball fan and you will be interested to know that that co-op is built on the former site of Maple Leaf Stadium in Toronto. That stadium was demolished a number of years ago and is now part of the Harbourfront site.

I know you are well acquainted with the Harbourfront site because we have chatted about it previously. You will remember, of course, that it amounts to 100 acres on the waterfront. It is owned and operated by the federal Government through a board of directors appointed by us. They have been and are doing an outstanding job. You know as well that they turned the site, which in addition to the baseball stadium included old warehouses and other structures, into some marvellous housing, office and retail sales projects. Some 4,000 different activities are carried on there every year.

I am sure that you saw a recent advertisement in a number of newspapers placed by the Harbourfront board of directors indicating that they just won a very outstanding award. That award was made by the Waterfront Centre of Washington D.C. and is called the Honour Award for Excellence on the Waterfront. The federal Government's Harbourfront in Toronto was selected from over 100 waterfront developments across North America as the best. You can see what an outstanding job they have done.

At the same time there are problems with the Harbourfront. Many people are concerned about what the future holds. They are concerned that there has been overdevelopment of the site. They believe that the waterfront is being closed off to view. Some people say that a ceramic wall is being built between the water and the people of Metropolitan Toronto by all the overdevelopment on the site.

As a result of this concern the City of Toronto placed a development freeze on the site at Harbourfront as did the federal Government through the Minister of Public Works, the Secretary of State and the President of the Treasury Board. They decided that they would step back from it and take a close look at the situation. When that freeze was put on, six buildings were under development or in the pipeline at the time. They are, therefore, called the pipeline properties. All six of the pipeline properties were frozen as well when that freeze was put on by the City of Toronto and the federal Government.

I had the opportunity to be at the opening of the Harbourside Co-op. That is a marvellous co-op which provides affordable housing for low and modest income people. We need a lot more of that in Metro Toronto and right across the country. At that time I spoke to many families and found that their main concern was what would happen with future development at Harbourfront and, in particular, the six pipeline properties. I found that the people either wanted the pipeline properties to be eliminated altogether, shifted to another site, or downsized. They were talking especially about the three properties which are right on the waterfront.

Interestingly enough, just prior to the official opening of the Harbourside Co-op the federal Government released a new report on the site which was done by an American town planner by the name of Garry Hack. Mr. Hack is a well-known waterfront planner who has planned over 12 different waterfronts in North America. He is a man of some reputation.

The things he recommended after studying the Harbourfront are very interesting. He recommended a slight reduction in the amount of housing planned, a slight reduction in the amount of office space, and a substantial reduction in the amount of commercial space. He recommended that nothing be built over 25 metres in height. He also recommended that Harbourfront maintain the same amount of open space as exists at the present time.

With regard to the pipeline properties he recommended that three of them go ahead; the Co-op on Bathurst Quay and the two rampart condominiums on Spadina Quay. He said that the two Konvey condominiums on Bathurst Quay should be redesigned altogether and that the Huang & Danczky building on Maple Leaf Quay should be eliminated altogether.

That is very interesting because it runs exactly contrary to what the City of Toronto council has now recommended. Not too long ago the City of Toronto council decided that all six pipeline buildings should be allowed to proceed as long as the federal Government agreed to transfer 6.5 acres of parkland to the city and to reduce future density of development on the site.

• (1825)

In the past, the federal Government has always followed the advice and recommendation of the City of Toronto Planning Department as far as Harbourfront is concerned. It does not have to do so because this is federal land and under the Constitution the federal Government can override everybody and everything on federal property. However, in consideration of proper planning principles we have always followed the requests and direction of the Planning Department of the City of Toronto. That is the way Harbourfront was developed.

The question is now, when we have two dramatically opposing reports, whether the federal Government will follow our own planning report or the City of Toronto's planning report, which is dramatically different. The people of Toronto want to know and I know the Parliamentary Secretary will reassure them and me tonight.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, all these questions deal with two different matters: the first one is about a ground lease, and the second one about the progress of a policy review concerning the Harbourfront area in Toronto, or its Old Port area, as we would say in Montreal.

[English]

The first question concerns a ground lease which Harbourfront entered into with the development firm of Huang and Danzckay. The question was raised in April, when the lease was signed, and is being raised again by my honourable colleague, the Member for York East (Mr. Redway). Why did the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) allow the lease to be entered into if a policy review of Harbourfront Corporation's role and mandate was just commencing and a pause in development had been initiated?

The simple answer is as follows: Pursuant to the terms of a purchase and development agreement between the corporation and the developer, all pre-conditions having been met, the next logical step in the agreement was the signing of a ground lease by a date specified in the agreement, April 30, 1987.

Because the corporation would have been legally liable if the lease had not been entered into at that date, and because the signing did not prejudice the outcome of the policy review, the Minister concurred that Harbourfront enter into the lease.

The second question relates to the progress of the policy review. Work on the policy review has continued through the summer and is now close to completion. Those officials responsible for the review have maintained close communication with the city officials, specifically through the Commissioner of Planning and Development.

On August 10, 1987, the city adopted its position on changes it would like to see at Harbourfront, seeking assurances that 40 acres of parkland would be delivered to the City of Toronto. The city's position was based on extensive public input from the Harbourfront Review Committee. The views of the City and the public input have been taken into consideration in the policy review and an announcement will be forthcoming very shortly.

On behalf of the Minister of Public Works, I wish to assure my colleague and the Canadian public that federal commitments on Harbourfront will be met fully very soon.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS—STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will recall that several months ago, there was some discussion about altering the form of Routine Proceedings by eliminating the necessity under Motions and Bills of reading an endless list of Hon. Members' names, only to say after each name that the matter would stand. It seemed to be the disposition of the House that we try to eliminate that. As a consequence, the Chair has given consideration to the matter and I will read a statement which will perhaps meet the suggestions of Hon. Members. We could try this at least until the turn of the year.

On June 25, 1987, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) raised a point of order regarding the amount of time spent reading aloud individual items during Routine Proceedings. Specifically, he mentioned the large number of Members whose Notices of Motions are listed on the Order Paper. The same comment would apply to the introduction and first reading of Bills.

The Hon. Member suggested that the Chair not read a lengthy list but rather say something to the effect of: "Shall all the motions shown on today's Order Paper stand?" The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the government House Leader supported the suggestion and the Chair undertook to examine the possibility of streamlining the proceedings.

After examination of past practice and the Business of the House as listed on the Order Paper and after consultation with the three Parties, I am prepared to offer the following proposal which will be reviewed after the Christmas recess.

The Chair will announce each heading under Daily Routine of Business. Members wishing to be recognized will, as is customary, rise in their places. After reading the heading Introduction of Government Bills, Introduction of Private Members' Bills and Motions, the Chair will no longer call each Minister or Member whose item of business is listed on the Order Paper under those headings. Rather, the Speaker will simply announce those types of business and be prepared to recognize those Members if they rise. This should provide sufficient opportunity for Members to bring their business forward.

[Translation]

In order to ensure the effectiveness of this procedure, I should like to suggest to the Hon. Members that it is always useful to notify in advance one of the Table Clerks of the time they intend to move their motions or introduce their Bills during Routine Proceedings.

I wish to thank all Hon. Members for their helpful suggestions and I hope that this proposal reflects the over-all attitude of the House in its eagerness to operate more effectively.

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

PRESENTATION OF EIGHTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the eighth report of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources entitled "Oil Scarcity or Security?" in both official languages, to which, pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), the committee requests a comprehensive response.

The committee initiated this study of future oil availability in Canada to dispel the complacency brought about by global oil over-supply and depressed petroleum prices. As the supply of conventional light oil declines in the Western Hemisphere, oil importing nations will turn to the Persian Gulf. Canada must increase its supply of all grades of oil to remain self-sufficient. The committee makes 12 recommendations and believes Government should not intervene in the day-to-day workings of the market-place but come forward with a long-term planning policy to ensure stability in the future.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to meet a commitment which I made to a group of my constituents who were visiting the Byward Market in my riding, to present a petition which complies with Standing Order 106 and which reads as follows:

Whereas, since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers 24 new taxes or tax increases, in particular on medical and dental supplies, snack foods, candy and soft drinks;

Whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal has studied the possibility of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services, including food;

And whereas food constitutes a vital element of day-to-day life and imposition of this tax would have the effect of seriously penalizing certain categories of taxpayers, such as the aged, families, the unemployed, low and middle income taxpayers, and youth;

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

[English]

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by several dozen constituents in the Communities of Thessalon, Bruce Mines and Desbarats calling on the Government to reverse the plan of Canada Post to eliminate thousands of Post Offices, reduce service, and even remove the identity of a number of communities.

FERMI II NUCLEAR REACTOR—REVIEW PROCESS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition in a series from my constituents concerning the Fermi II nuclear reactor in the U.S. just 10 miles from the Canadian border. This petition is signed by 256 Canadians from Amherstburg and Essex.

It stresses the tremendous dangers evident in the safety record of this particular nuclear plant and tremendous problems with its accident record. It forcefully calls on the Government to intervene to see to it that there is a neutral safety review, including both Canadians and Americans, before this reactor is permitted to operate at full capacity.

IMMIGRATION—ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a duly-certified petition from a number of residents of various communities in my riding. The 180 petitioners express their concern that illegal immigrants are now allowed to enter Canada. They ask that the Government remedy the situation by making boat people return to where they came from, forcing them to abide by our immigration laws.

HIGHWAY SAFETY STANDARDS—REAR SEAT-BELTS—AIR BAGS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions signed by over 150 people from the Cities of Brantford, Hamilton and London, Ontario, New Westminster, British Columbia, Ottawa, Dalhousie, New Brunswick, indeed from across the country, who call upon Parliament to amend existing safety standards for rear seat-belts in passenger cars.

The petitioners believe rear seat-belts in passenger cars are at present inadequate and the cost of medical care for car crash victims can be reduced or eliminated. For those reasons the petitioners urge Parliament to institute mandatory installation of three point adjustable lap and shoulder seat-belts for rear seat passengers. They also ask for installation of front seat air bags.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I present two sets of petitions. The first is signed by residents of the Cities of Toronto, Scarborough, Burnaby, Vancouver, and Richmond. Essentially they request the Government to implement an accessible, fair and expeditious refugee determination system by deleting from Bill C-55 the reference to increased screening and the safe third country concept, and improving the Federal Court of Appeal mechanism.

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): The second petition deals with the Meech Lake Accord and is signed by residents of Calgary, Etobicoke and North York. They ask the Government to amend the opening clause of the Constitution to recognize Canada's multicultural heritage as a fundamental characteristic of this country.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

SUSPENSION OF FREE TRADE TALKS

Mr. Speaker: I have two applications for emergency debates today. I will hear the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the fourth day in a row that we have asked for an emergency debate on this very crucial item. I think we have come to your Honour's Chair as often as the Government has gone down to Washington, cap in hand, to try to get the talks reignited.

The Speaker's wisdom has been once again demonstrated. By waiting until today to have an emergency debate we have obviously caught the crescendo of the times at its absolute most important point. The Cabinet is assessing this morning whether or not the talks will continue or whether they will sell out the country, to use a phrase of my colleague.

We have not yet had an announcement from the Government. It may be that you in your wisdom, Mr. Speaker, may want to defer a decision on this application until three o'clock in order to learn whether the Government is finally prepared to make a public statement in this House concerning its position on the free trade talks.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to advise Hon. Members that I also have an application on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I will now hear the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I must say that it is becoming a habit to put the argument to you that there is at present a tremendous need for an emergency debate. There are three points which make it essentially crucial.

First, there is a tremendous amount of information which the Government has not seen fit to give Canadians about the course of negotiations as they are occurring. We have not, for instance, received information which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) suggested was received yesterday. The letters which were exchanged over the weekend between the Governments have not been tabled. As a consequence, it is unclear what the key issues are with respect to the discussions which are presently taking place between the two sides.

I am informed by my House Leader that due to the legislative agenda for this week it would be very difficult to find room for a Supply day on which to discuss this issue. I think, therefore, that both for the information needs of the country and for the potential of Members of Parliament to contribute to the decision-making process, there is a very strong case for an emergency debate at this stage.

Since I understand that the Cabinet is meeting this morning on the issue, I suggest that it might make sense if you, Mr. Speaker, were to defer your decision until three o'clock at which point we would have a sense of whether the Government has a statement to make.

Mr. Speaker: In the interest of all Hon. Members and also in the interest of the public that is watching and listening, I emphasize again that while a matter may be of very great importance it may not, in the opinion of the Chair, be a matter which on any given day is appropriate for an emergency debate.

The public should know that there has been a series of applications by both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party each day asking for an emergency debate. The Chair has declined each day to order an emergency debate but on each day has stressed that the matter is of great importance.

There is generally an admonishment to the Speaker not to give reasons for decisions and I have refrained from doing that, although Hon. Members will know that what goes on in the Speaker's head probably has something to do with what the Speaker says. I would like to be able to say that of all Hon. Members.

The suggestion this morning is that I might defer both of these applications until later on this afternoon to see what may happen later today. I think the better practice would be for me, with great politeness and courtesy, to reject the applications at this time. As I have said repeatedly, that fact, of course, does not prevent anyone from making another application at another time.

I want to say one thing which I think may be helpful. The suggestion has been made that the Speaker has very generously agreed to review the Speaker's rulings on the emergency debate each day. For the record it should be noted that the Speaker is not reviewing past rulings. The Speaker is taking each application as it is made on each given day. I think that is proper procedure.

I point out again that although a matter may be very important it may not be appropriate, in the Speaker's view, to order an emergency debate. I want to make it very clear that the Speaker certainly views the matter as important. We will see what transpires.

Members will note that last week I suggested there might be some conversations among the Government, the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party with regard to another way of having a debate. It is not for me to direct anyone in this House as to what they might do in speaking with each other. However, that may be something which could be considered.

In any event, that is the ruling for this morning. I thank Hon. Members for bringing the matter to my attention. I also want to thank both opposition representatives for their patience in accepting with good grace the Speaker's rulings in these matters.

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved:

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1982 came into force on April 17, 1982, following an agreement between Canada and all the provinces except Quebec;

AND WHEREAS the Government of Quebec has established a set of five proposals for constitutional change and has stated that amendments to give effect to those proposals would enable Quebec to resume a full role in the constitutional councils of Canada;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto sets out the basis on which Quebec's five constitutional proposals may be met;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto also recognizes the principle of the equality of all the provinces, provides new arrangements to foster greater harmony and cooperation between the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces and requires that conferences be convened to consider important constitutional, economic and other issues;

AND WHEREAS certain portions of the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto relate to matters referred to in section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

AND WHEREAS section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province;

NOW THEREFORE the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE

Constitution Act, 1867

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 1 thereof, the following section:

"2. (1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(2) The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

(4) Nothing in this section derogates from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 24 thereof, the following section:

"25. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, the government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate.

(2) Until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the person summoned to fill a vacancy in the Senate shall be chosen from among persons whose names have been submitted under subsection (1) by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates and must be acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 95 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Agreements on Immigration and Aliens

95A. The Government of Canada shall, at the request of the government of any province, negotiate with the government of that province for the purpose of concluding an agreement relating to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province that is appropriate to the needs and circumstances of that province.

95B. (1) Any agreement concluded between Canada and a province in relation to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province has the force of law from the time it is declared to do so in accordance with subsection 95C(1) and shall from that time have effect notwithstanding class 25 of section 91 or section 95.

(2) An agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) shall have effect only so long and so far as it is not repugnant to any provision of an Act of the Parliament of Canada that sets national standards and objectives relating to immigration or aliens, including any provision that establishes general classes of immigrants or relates to levels of immigration for Canada or that prescribes classes of individuals who are inadmissible into Canada.

(3) The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies in respect of any agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) and in respect of anything done by the Parliament or Government of Canada, or the legislature or government of a province, pursuant to any such agreement.

95C. (1) A declaration that an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) has the force of law may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement.

(2) An amendment to an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized

(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement; or

(b) in such other manner as is set out in the agreement.

95D. Sections 46 to 48 of the Constitution Act, 1982 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of any declaration made pursuant to subsection 95C(1), any amendment to an agreement made pursuant to subsection 95C(2) or any amendment made pursuant to section 95E.

95E. An amendment to sections 95A to 95D or this section may be made in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection 38(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, but only if the amendment is authorized by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of all the provinces that are, at the time of the amendment, parties to an agreement that has the force of law under subsection 95B(1)."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 96 thereof, the following heading:

"General"

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 101 thereof, the following heading:

"Courts Established by the Parliament of Canada"

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 101 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Supreme Court of Canada

101A. (1) The court existing under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada is hereby continued as the general court of appeal for Canada, and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a superior court of record.

(2) The Supreme Court of Canada shall consist of a chief justice to be called the Chief Justice of Canada and eight other judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor General in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

101B. (1) Any person may be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who, after having been admitted to the bar of any province or territory, has, for a total of at least ten years, been a judge of any court in Canada or a member of the bar of any province or territory.

(2) At least three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be appointed from among persons who, after having been admitted to the bar of Quebec, have, for a total of at least ten years, been judges of any court of Quebec or of any court established by the Parliament of Canada, or members of the bar of Quebec.

101C. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court.

(2) Where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

(3) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) of any of the three judges necessary to meet the requirement set out in subsection 101B(2), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the Government of Quebec.

(4) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) otherwise than as required under subsection (3), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the government of a province other than Quebec.

101D. Sections 99 and 100 apply in respect of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

101E. (1) Sections 101A to 101D shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws under section 101 except to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with those sections.

(2) For greater certainty, section 101A shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws relating to the reference of questions of law or fact, or any other matters, to the Supreme Court of Canada."

7. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 106 thereof, the following section:

"106A. (1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

(2) Nothing in this section extends the legislative powers of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces."

8. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and sections:

"XII—Conferences on the Economy and Other Matters

148. A conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year to discuss the state of the Canadian economy and such other matters as may be appropriate.

XIII—References

149. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

Constitution Act, 1982

9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part."

10. Section 44 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"44. Subject to section 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons."

11. Subsection 46(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province."

12. Subsection 47(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution."

13. Part VI of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Constitution Amendment, 1987

"PART VI

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

50. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate;

(b) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries; and

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon."

14. Subsection 52(2) of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(d) any other amendment to the Constitution of Canada."

15. Section 61 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Act 1982, or a reference to the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1982, shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

General

16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

CITATION

17. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

• (1130)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties as to debate, and I would like to thank Hon. Members for the courtesy they extended earlier this day. The House will know that this is an important debate. There was a great deal of effort expended by the constitution committee during the summer. It went to great lengths to bring in a report. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, it is a report on which the efforts of Members from all Parties were very well expended on behalf of the House and the people of Canada.

For those reasons I would suggest that we deviate from Standing Order 55(1) to the extent that the Member replying on behalf of the New Democratic Party would be allowed the same opportunity to speak at length as the Minister and the Member replying for the Official Opposition.

If you would put that to the House, Mr. Speaker, I think you would find there would be consent.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, indeed, there have been consultations and we have agreed to that.

Mr. Speaker: I thank Hon. Members for their courtesy and co-operation.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great sense of pride and history that I rise today to propose the adoption of the Meech Lake Accord. The adoption of the Accord will fulfil one of the fundamental commitments of this Government as outlined by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in his August, 1984, speech at Sept-Îles when he said:

> There is room in Canada for all identities to be affirmed, for all aspirations to be respected, and for all ideals to be pursued. I know many young men and women in Quebec will not be satisfied with mere words.
> We will have to make commitments and take concrete steps to reach the objective that I have set for myself and that I repeat here: To convince the Quebec National Assembly to give its consent to the new Canadian Constitution with honour and enthusiasm.

This Government's commitment to national reconciliation results from a deeply held conviction that for the nation to fulfil its destiny, the Canadian family must be unified in a common understanding of shared values and aspirations.

This is the one hundred and twentieth year of Canada's Constitution. The passing years have witnessed the creation of a modern state which has proudly taken its place on the world stage. The dream of a nation spanning a continent, linking the Atlantic to the Pacific, the 49th Parallel to the North Pole, has become a reality.

If the result of that dream has been greater than our founders could have hoped or imagined, it is not for lack of challenges to our development or of those who would gainsay every tentative step forward. Our Constitution has not only withstood these challenges, it has grown and matured as has Canada. This is as it must be. A constitution must be a living document which encompasses and meets changing needs. Our Constitution has had the strength which comes from the flexibility and the vitality which comes from growth. The last 120 years have been marked by continuing refinements to our Constitution. The time has now come to take an additional but historic and important step.

While the 1982 Constitution Act was a significant achievement, it remained fundamentally flawed. To impose constitutional reform on any province and its citizens is to deny their rightful participation in Confederation and runs contrary to the spirit and history of constitutional development in this country. Canada is a partnership of its peoples and provinces, a partnership which can be willingly embraced but not imposed. This concept is understood and accepted by Canadians from coast to coast.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Constitution provides the framework for the rights of all Canadians to participate and enjoy ready access. The Meech Lake Accord makes it better still by guaranteeing federal-provincial co-operation concerning shared-cost national programs as well as Senate and Supreme Court of Canada appointments. It acknowledges Canada's linguistic duality and Quebec's distinct character. The Accord provides for a future constitutional reform process by enshrining in the Constitution the holding of annual conferences of First Ministers to discuss economic and constitutional topics.

Perhaps more momentous still, however, it endorses the principle of the equality of the provinces by making their unanimous agreement a prerequisite to any further changes in our national institutions.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that these revisions will make Canada even stronger.

[English]

I would like to take a moment to review the major provisions of the motion before us today. The interpretation provision formally acknowledges two basic realities of Canada that have long existed in both fact and law. The first is Canadian linguistic duality and the second is Quebec's distinct identity. There are five components included in the interpretation clause confirming Quebec's distinct society. It is a Quebec within Canada. It is a Quebec that includes French speaking and English speaking Canadians. The distinct society does not alter the constitutional division of powers, nor does it alter our multicultural heritage protected in Section 27 of the Charter and, finally, it does not impinge upon the rights and interests of our aboriginal peoples.

The concepts of Canadian linguistic duality and Quebec's distinct society are of course not new. However, the Meech Lake Accord recognizes and strengthens the interpretative influence of these concepts. The inclusion of this new interpretative provision does not override any of the Charter rights, including, of course, equality rights. As noted by more than one constitutional expert, it makes explicit in our Constitution what has until now been largely implicit.

The federal Government's commitment to negotiate agreements with provinces relating to immigration, or the temporary admission of aliens into a province, is of particular importance to Quebec because it will permit administrative arrangements dating back to 1971 and now embodied in the Cullen-Couture agreement to be given constitutional status, resulting in greater certainty and permanency.

As the joint committee noted, these agreements have had no serious adverse affects and will encourage greater federal provincial co-operation in this important area of concurrent jurisdiction. Thus, in the case of Quebec, this provision was not needed so much to alter the current arrangements as to protect them from arbitrary change or, indeed, termination. These provisions will facilitate the conclusion of federal-provincial agreements in which the legitimate interests of the provinces in matters of immigration and temporary admission of aliens can be assured without impairing the national interest.

The provisions expressly state that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms will apply to these agreements or anything done pursuant to them. As a result, immigrants who become permanent residents will continue to enjoy the right to take up residence and pursue their livelihoods in any part of our country.

The Supreme Court of Canada will be formally entrenched in the Constitution, a befitting status for our nation's ultimate judicial institution. Statutory features of the Accord that will be constitutionalized include the composition of the court with its nine judges and the guarantee of at least three members from Quebec's civil law system.

Future judicial appointments will continue to be made by the Governor General in Council. However, provinces will be given, for the first time, a formal role in the selection of judges who will compose our highest court, one which plays such a vital role in interpreting not only our Constitution but also important federal and provincial laws.

Pending a constitutional amendment that brings about fundamental reform of the Senate, the provincial Governments will also be given a direct role in the selection of candidates for appointment to that institution.

The changes to both the Supreme Court and the Senate recognize the importance of having the provinces play a role in choosing the members of these federal institutions. Both changes are reflective of this Government's commitment to a policy of national reconciliation and recognition of provincial interests in these institutions.

Another important feature of the Accord is that dealing with federal spending power. Pursuant to the Accord the federal Government will provide reasonable compensation to any provincial Government that chooses not to participate in new national shared-cost programs if the following conditions are met. The program must be new, co-financed by the federal and provincial Governments and operate in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction; and the province must carry on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

This does not restrict the use of the federal spending power, but will require greater co-operation between federal and provincial Governments in establishing future shared-cost programs. It also recognizes the importance of maintaining a degree of flexibility for provinces in establishing programs which are tailored to their needs.

This provision provides implicit recognition of the federal spending power in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, while giving the provinces increased involvement in the establishment and the development of shared-cost programs in their areas of exclusive power.

This is clearly an area where federal and provincial powers overlap and therefore it is necessary to negotiate accommodations to ensure co-operation and avoid court contests. Such plans can only work with the genuine support of both the federal and provincial Governments, and jurisdictional issues must be avoided in the interests of those who are to benefit from such plans.

The revised amending formula will expand those items for which unanimous federal and provincial consent is necessary to include representation in the Senate and in the House of Commons, powers of the Senate and selection of Senators, the Supreme Court and the extension of existing, or creation of, new provinces. It will also provide that provinces opting out of any future constitutional amendments transferring provincial legislative powers to Parliament shall receive reasonable compensation. These provisions strengthen the principle of the equality of the provinces and will not penalize those who choose not to divest themselves of powers that are now constitutionally theirs.

There are a number of basic principles underlying the amendments set out in the Constitution Act, 1987. From a philosophical perspective the following principles are clearly reflected in the proposed amendments. First, Canada is a federal state whose foundation was based on certain unique characteristics, elements of which are found in the Constitution Act, 1867 and subsequent constitutional documents. Second, as a federal state, the provinces have a legitimate interest in the Constitution and the composition of our most fundamental national institutions, and the composition of the federation. Third, the provinces, regardless of size, are entitled to a legally equal status in modifying certain basic institutions of the nation. Fourth, while the national governing institutions must possess ample power and authority to act in the national interest, the process of governing in a federal state requires meaningful collaboration and co-operation between the two levels of Government, especially in areas where constitutional powers overlap or intersect. Fifth, effective government in a federal state must contemplate regular and formal meetings of the First Ministers on certain fundamental issues of co-operation rather than confrontation if agreement is to be achieved.

[Translation]

And so it is, Mr. Speaker, that the 1987 constitutional amendment takes into account our ever-changing federalism and will enable us to take a functional and co-operative approach to federal-provincial relations, particularly with respect to the constitutional evolution. It is aimed at fostering consensus rather than confrontation to solve problems of conflicts inherent in the very nature and the administration of a federal state.

The amendment is a far-sighted document which features two major factors: first, in various ways it faithfully mirrors Canada's current constitutional reality; second, its acknowledgement of current realities will have an impact on the trend of our evolution, for it is the very basis of future constitutional deliberations.

[English]

In this regard, the joint committee's report has suggested a range of issues for consideration, including Senate reform, aboriginal rights, devolution of power to the territories, multiculturalism, the extension and protection of linguistic rights, the enhancement and further protection of individual rights within the Charter, and any possible problems with the effect on the territories of a Supreme Court and Senate appointments' procedure. These are all important issues, and I assure all Hon. Members that the Government plans to review them during future constitutional discussions.

The two opposition Parties propose a number of amendments which, if taken together, call on Governments to reopen for negotiation virtually every section of the unanimously-endorsed Accord.

In days to come, other government spokespersons will address the particular amendments being proposed. However, I would like to make a couple of general observations as we begin this debate.

First, I must point out that no, and I repeat, no egregious error has been identified by the committee. Indeed, if I may be permitted to say, I make the statement categorically that no egregious errors have been pointed out on a balance of assessment of those experts in the field and those people who are vitally interested in the issue of constitutional reform. Hon. Members will recall that an identification of an egregious error was the only basis upon which First Ministers agreed they would be prepared to reopen the Accord. If we were to agree to reopen the Accord for renegotiation to consider even one amendment, pressure to consider others would almost invariably and inevitably mount. In that event there would be no guarantee that the necessary consensus which was arrived at by First Ministers could be reconstructed.

This marks the second time that we have used our domestic amending formula. It is an historic precedent because it will be the first that results from the unanimous agreement of all First Ministers. Given the severe test that faced them and the possible consequences of failure, their unqualified success is truly an occasion for national pride and celebration.

As Canadians know, the patriation process that culminated with the Constitution Act of 1982 has remained incomplete in an essential way because the Province of Quebec has consistently and continually expressed its dissent to that measure. That dissent has been expressed eloquently, passionately, and honourably. I take great pride in the Prime Minister's response and his achievement in gaining the support of the people, the Government, and the National Assembly of Quebec in adopting this Accord.

The attainment of complete national sovereignty with domestic tranquility is unfortunately far from the general rule in human history. Wars of revolution, unsuccessful revolts, civil wars, and other conflicts of this nature fill the history of mankind. In contrast, Canada's constitutional struggles have mostly been fought and won in a more civilized, although no less passionate manner.

As Canadians we do not always take sufficient pride in the accomplishments of our nation. I am proud to belong to a Government and to a nation that strives to find common ground in order to create an ever more just, humane, and understanding national society for the benefit of all its members, both individually and collectively. That is what Canada is all about.

I could not speak to this motion without paying special tribute to the excellent work of the members of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the 1987 Constitutional Accord. Their efforts in undertaking this enormous task are worthy of praise and admiration. Their report is thorough and compelling. It merits full study, and it demonstrates how seriously the committee took its task of scrutinizing the Accord.

The Joint Committee heard from Canadians from all regions in all walks of life. This type of public debate is both healthy and essential because constitutional documents are the property of the people. They are living documents which must represent the national will.

[Translation]

Many witnesses who appeared before the joint committee advocated the adoption of the 1987 Accord because it achieves national reconciliation and blurs our memory of the shock of the 1980 Quebec referendum and the ensuing isolation of that province during the 1981 and 1982 constitutional patriation process.

The Meech Lake Accord adoption will for ever turn that page of our history. We can look forward to a more challenging future as a result of greater harmony and closer co-operation. This is why I feel confident that we are at the dawn of an era of outstanding achievements for all Canadians.

[English]

Under the leadership of the Prime Minister, the Premiers of the 10 provinces have come together to forge a new unity, thereby reinvigorating our land. The task now rests with us, Members of Parliament, to confirm this historic Accord.

To say no to the Accord is to say no to the vision of a united Canada. All of us share a common purpose in the House, to ensure that our Constitution includes all parts of Canada, all provinces, and with special emphasis on this occasion to bringing Quebec into the constitutional family. Therefore, I think our responsibilities are clear.

In a careful way we have an agreement between the Prime Minister and the 10 First Ministers of our country which is well thought out, well considered, properly crafted in a legal and historic sense, and one which has said to the people of the Province of Quebec that we will welcome you with open arms into the constitutional family of Canada.

At the same time we have articulated the nature of our country, a country with wide geographic dimensions but indeed divergent parts; a country that is often said to be difficult to govern, but because of its diversity, because of its natural inherent strengths and the qualities of the regions and the people who make up the different parts of our country, it is one to which all Canadians say that they are proud to be members of this great nation.

I call upon all Members to support this Accord. I know that because of the nature of the House of Commons, being an adversarial forum, it is traditional to take an adversarial position and suggest that this provision or that provision is not totally satisfactory. We now have an opportunity to transcend partisanship in terms of this debate, an opportunity for all of us to join together and send a message to the people of Canada, and send a message to those people who, unfortunately, have been excluded from the constitutional family over the years since the acceptance of the 1982 Constitution.

Finally, if I may be permitted to say so, I am very proud of the leadership the Prime Minister has given to this particular matter. I will not bother you with quoting my own colleagues on the government side of the House to support that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Where are they all?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Regardless of political stripe, regardless of the fact that participants represented all political Parties in this country at these meetings, they were unanimous in their praise for the manner in which the Prime Minister gave leadership, and the perseverance and inspiration he gave with respect to bringing forward this Accord.

Mr. Foster: Where is he this morning? Why is the Prime Minister not here?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We will look forward to the support of the House of Commons for this Accord. To do otherwise is to send an unfortunate message to a very large section of our country, to many people, and to the whole concept of our country as has been developed over the years. I know that there will not be a sense of partisanship here, that there will be a sense of unity which will pervade the debate.

As I said at the outset, it is with great pride that I say to the House of Commons and the people of Canada, this is an historic moment in our history. This is an opportunity for us to join together.

Mr. Lapierre: Where is your Cabinet? Where is your Prime Minister?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Opposition may be on the verge of sinking down to partisanship again, but I wish to avoid that.

I wish to call upon them, notwithstanding their difficulties within their own caucus, to speak to this without any sense of partisanship, in order that we can go forward into a new era with all parts of Canada united and working toward a future which is without parallel in the world.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, earlier in his speech the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) reminded us that the House of Commons was an adversarial forum. In his closing words he then invited us to dismiss partisanship. He knows the nature of this place. I will agree with him on one feature of his remarks, that this indeed should be an historic debate. Certainly the numbers in attendance this morning for this very important discussion in the House of Commons on the constitutional fabric of our country, on the very bedrock of the laws of Canada, neither justify nor amplify the Minister's remarks in that respect.

We agree that what we are discussing here involves the most important law of our country. It follows upon the 1981-1982 debates, the patriation of our Constitution. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms was a great achievement of Pierre Elliott Trudeau, but it was incomplete. Quebec did not sign the accord at that time. There was a gap or an emptiness which did not bring the country as fully together as all of us would have wanted.

It is for that reason that despite its flaws—and it has flaws—we support the Accord, because it brings Quebec into the Canadian constitutional family politically, emotionally, and psychologically.

[Translation]

For all these reasons and despite its shortcomings, Mr. Speaker, I support the Accord. Back in 1982, thanks to Mr. Trudeau we did patriate the Canadian Constitution, but the process fell somewhat short since Quebec, headed by Mr. Lévesque and an independence-oriented administration, had refused to sign the Accord. Although strictly and legally bound under the Constitution, Quebec did feel the need to find its true place within our Canadian confederation and, more important still, within the Canadian family, to be part of it politically, emotionally and psychologically.

[English]

I know from the experience of 1971, when I had the honour of holding the place which the Minister of Justice now holds, that the constitutional process is a long, delicate and sometimes tedious one, and for good reason. The balance of powers between the federal and provincial Governments in the uneasy equilibrium of a federation is not to be tampered with unnecessarily.

I felt that in Victoria, under the leadership of Mr. Trudeau, we had achieved a model of political consensus, a model which was dissipated when Mr. Bourassa at that time felt it impossible, because of the pressure of public opinion in Quebec, to ratify that Accord.

Then of course came the rise of the Parti Québecois and its gain in the significant election of November 15, 1976; the referendum of 1980; and the tremendously emotional debate which gripped the Province of Quebec, family against family, colleague against colleague, partner against partner, business associate against business associate. The debate went right to the core of the province and of the French speaking Québecois of the province.

I think the most memorable event was the absolutely magnificent speech of Mr. Trudeau at the Paul Sauvé Arena, a speech which I credit with finally turning the tide in favour of Canada. It was a remarkable achievement. I think it was one of the great political speeches in the history of the country. It was certainly the greatest political speech to my mind in his own political career.

In that speech he gave a commitment to the people of Quebec that there would be a renewed federalism.

[Translation]

To put it in French, in a masterly address to a crowd of 15,000 to 20,000 people gathered at the Paul Sauvé Arena, Mr. Trudeau made a commitment by stating that if Quebecers were to reject the seduction of independence and opt for Canada there would be a renewed federalism. This is why Quebec francophones, in particular, supported Canada. This is why I said at the November Liberal Convention that Quebec had said yes to Canada, and that now time had come for Canada to say yes to Quebec.

[English]

What we have before us, of course, is the undoubted fact that Quebec is an essential part not only of our Constitution but of that subtle complex called the Canadian identity. The people of Quebec and the institutions of Quebec must be seen to be an integral part of the total fabric of Canada.

However, the 1982 patriation of the Constitution, the 1982 law, and even the Charter were not accepted by the National Assembly in Quebec City. One ought to recall that it was a unanimous vote which rejected the 1982 arrangement, not just members of the Parti Québecois but the Liberal Members as well, because the people of Quebec felt that their province had been left out. They felt that the achievement ratified by Parliament and the other provinces was incomplete.

It is that essential fact which prompts me—and we will analyse this Accord—to support the Accord despite its flaws to ensure that Quebec becomes once again a major party to our Confederation, a major part of future constitutional reform, and that the people of Quebec feel totally at ease and totally comfortable with the Canadian fact and Canadian identity.

I am proud to lead a Party which has always been at the forefront of constitutional reform in Canada. I believe that the constructive work done by members of our Party has helped bring about the process which we are debating.

We did not negotiate this Accord. I was not present at the table. We would have done it differently. Our November resolution set forth the parameters of where we thought the response to Mr. Bourassa's proposition should be. However, we believe that the Accord is a positive step. We also believe that it can be improved without jeopardizing the Accord.

[Translation]

I got the process under way on behalf of federal Members of Parliament, Mr. Speaker, by responding to Mr. Bourassa's five propositions during an interview I gave the daily Le Devoir in May, 1986, when I acknowledged that Quebec was a distinct society, when we responded in a constructive, concise and precise way, as Mr. Bourassa himself put it. Later on our colleagues and Quebec militant men and women proposed a full resolution at Saint-Hyacinthe, and it was almost unanimously endorsed by the Liberal Party Quebec wing. And finally, when 4,000 militants gathered here in the national capital for the November convention, a majority of 90 per cent supported the November resolution by acknowledging the distinct society, the distinct character of Quebec, along with several points featured in the existing constitutional agreement.

[English]

Throughout this debate we took a non-partisan position. I think we set a climate which allowed the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premiers to negotiate, knowing that they would not be attacked in an irresponsible way in the House of Commons. Shortly afterwards so did the New Democratic Party. Therefore the climate that was set allowed this Accord to be achieved.

[Translation]

From both sides of the debate we have heard forceful opinions. Those discussions, Mr. Speaker, have reinforced my personal view that despite its deficiencies, the accord is good for Quebecers and good for all Canadians.

Having carefully examined the contents of the Accord reached by the First Ministers, I believe the Canadian Government is maintaining its leadership role within the Confederation. Overall, I think this is a good step forward although, as the First Ministers themselves indicated, the Accord is not perfect. There is room for improvement.

• (1210)

[English]

Since the announcement of the Accord, I took the position I am now taking again in the House of Commons. The position was that we would first support the Accord despite its flaws because it brought Quebec fully into the Canadian family, and second, that we would seek improvements by way of amendment and propose those amendments to the Joint Committee, or whatever committee we thought might be established at the time, and in the House of Commons. Third, we wanted a public debate. We wanted to see the issue discussed thoroughly both in and out of Parliament, because after all, we are dealing with the bedrock of the country, the fundamental infrastructure of Canada, a law more fundamental than any other law and a law needing more scrutiny than any other law.

For that reason, we believe that a clause-by-clause analysis is necessary. We believe that the delicate equilibrium of the division of powers must be analysed. We believe in the primacy of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms outlining those areas of human conduct beyond the power of Parliament, beyond the power of any legislature to impede or intervene. We believe that the language should be as precise as possible. We believe that the courts, particularly the highest court, the Supreme Court of Canada, ought to be given guidance. We do not want to yield our primacy as legislators to the judicial process. We do not believe that constitutional change is a matter to be dealt with in haste.

We welcomed the committee hearings. I would like to pay tribute to my two colleagues, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) and the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who contributed in a very constructive way to the examination of the Accord, to the conduct of the hearings and of course to the preparation of the minority report which is before Your Honour.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We did not sign the majority report. We issued instead a minority report, and in that report, we stated our reasons for not signing. We regretted that this crucial exercise undertaken by the committee was, we believe, intentionally engineered to limit public scrutiny and serious debate. We could not support the language of the report because some of it, we believe, was deliberately inflammatory and calculated to make our support impossible.

When the majority report suggests that anyone who proposes an amendment is, in the words of the majority report, inviting a risk to the well-being of this country, and when the majority report accuses the previous Government under the leadership of Pierre Trudeau of having operated on conflict and confrontation, it is obvious that majority members were not seeking the type of consensus about which the Minister of Justice spoke this morning. We believe that the Constitution is the most vital document in our statutory fabric. We believe that Parliament should be heard.

We do not believe that the whole process will necessarily unravel if amendments are proposed. I am pleased to see that in this respect, members of the New Democratic Party agree with us. I would like to quote their addendum to the majority report:

> We believe, however, that prior to a resolution being placed before Parliament, certain amendments to the Accord could be accepted by First Ministers without in any way putting the Accord in jeopardy.

Those words are found at page 155 of the committee report, Addendum B.

I regret, however, that members of the New Democratic Party did not see fit to spell out their propositions and amendments in detail as we have done. I would like to suggest to them and to the House that the 1981-82 experience suggests that despite disclaimers by the Minister of Justice, despite the statements of the Prime Minister, amendments can be received. There are Members sitting in this House who can recall the attitude of the Government of the day. Despite the seeming intransigence of that period, amendments were accepted during the process. I believe it is open to the House and to the Government to adopt a similar attitude in this respect.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Our amendments are not based on the premise that the Accord fails because it does not resolve all the unfinished business of Confederation. Our amendments go completely to the matter discussed and decided within the Accord. We do not trespass beyond its boundaries. We understand that there will be a continuing constitutional process.

We also believe that our amendments do not undermine Quebec's conditions for entering the constitutional fold. We seek two purposes: that Quebec adhere completely to the Canadian Confederation and that fundamental rights of Canadians be protected throughout the country in their entirety and plenitude and without difference from province to province.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I was mildly surprised that the Minister did not see fit to deal with either minority report or to deal with the amendments we proposed. He has said that some of his colleagues will refer to those particular subjects, but I would have thought that as the senior law officer of the Crown, he would have given us the benefit of his views and of—he is giving me the thumbs-down sign. That is not the sign of an open mind. That is not the mark of someone who wants to achieve a consensus. That is not the symbol of a Minister who wants to achieve the widest possible agreement for this Accord.

Our amendments seek to achieve the following purposes, and for the benefit of the House, which is after all the highest forum in our country, they are the following. First, we want to include as fundamental characteristics of Canada not only the linguistic duality as spelled out in the Accord, not only the specific or distinct character of Quebec as spelled out in the Accord, but also the recognition of our aboriginal peoples, the recognition of the multicultural mosaic of Canada and the recognition of the regional identities and the advantages of lower trade barriers between the provinces.

We believe that the native peoples should not now be left to feel "out-distincted", to use the apt words of the Inuit committee on national issues. We do not believe that our aboriginal peoples ought to be made to feel less important than other Canadians. The committee was told by key native groups that such an amendment as we proposed would ensure equity and fairness for their peoples.

[Translation]

We also recognize there are Canadians whose first language is neither English nor French. Many groups have stated before the committee that they felt like second-class citizens, and we want to see the Accord stress both their contribution to the Canadian identity and regional diversity. We want the Accord to reflect the true nature of our Canadian society.

[English]

Second, we want to offer more protection to official language minorities by ensuring that Parliament is responsible for promoting as well as preserving official minority language rights.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We want to offer every province the opportunity to commit its legislature to promoting as well as preserving our linguistic duality.

[Translation]

Third, we also propose that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms take precedence, in order that the basic rights and freedoms of Canadians are not diminished by possible conflicts with other clauses in the Accord. Especially the rights to equality for women.

We have expressed some concerns over the rights to equality, which might be threathened by the recognition of Quebec's special responsibilities. Canadian women should not enjoy lesser protection than other Canadian women by reason of the distinct society clause.

Although we think that possibility is very remote, we want to ensure that even the most minute threats to our Charter are removed.

• (1220)

[English]

We nonetheless state our support, of course, for the distinct character of Quebec. We do not believe this is a revolutionary concept. We believe we are merely confirming in this Chamber the reality. Quebec does have a distinctive character. Quebec is the only province where French is the language of the majority. There is a different system of law, a unique psychology and a unique history. I do not believe that recognizing that fact in the Constitution is dangerous. I do not believe it will lead to special status or sovereignty association or le concept de deux Nations. I believe it is a historical and cultural fact that should be recognized. I do not believe there should be any conflict between that concept and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We seek to ensure that even a minimal risk of that conflict be clarified and this Parliament unequivocally pronounce upon it so that even a slight ambiguity not be left to the courts.

Fourth, we believe in an elected Senate. Despite all the bafflegab of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice and his predecessor, now the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), we want Senate reform. As I said in this House two and a half years ago, we believe that is the only fundamental reform which recognizes the geographical facts of this country as against the population of Ontario and Quebec. The Minister of Justice ought to understand that because his constituents certainly understand it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Absolutely.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The people of Saskatoon certainly understand it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Even my father understood it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He ought to support any process which would achieve early reform of the other place into an elected Chamber so that the people of Canada would have a true voice there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Our proposal would accelerate the move from an appointed Senate to an elected Senate by electing Senators now when vacancies occur rather than appointing them based on provincial lists. I believe the democratic rights of all Canadians would be strengthened by giving them the power to elect all their national legislators. Also, given our amendment, it would recognize the right of the citizens of the Yukon and Northwest Territories to senatorial election, a gap left in the Accord which deprives Canadians living north of the 60th parallel of any future representation or appointment to the Senate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Wrong.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They have no list to propose. I understand the Minister in personal terms, and I suppose the same is true of his predecessor from Newfoundland, feel that their current close allegiance to the Premiers of the day in their respective provinces protects them. However, when the Prime Minister first brought this proposition before the House of Commons I noticed the surprise and dismay on the faces of members of the Conservative Party when they felt this was a complication to their career plans. In any event, the Minister of Justice sits secure so long as there is "Devine Government" in Saskatchewan.

[Translation]

Fifth, we believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Accord clauses dealing with the appointment of Supreme Court justices from provincial lists could lead to an impasse between the federal and provincial Governments. We have therefore suggested a solution that would ensure that at all times the Supreme Court has a complement of Justices, and that would protect the basic rights of Northern Canadians, by granting their Governments the same rights as provinces have to nominate candidates to the Court.

[English]

Sixth, we propose that the clause concerning compensation for provinces opting out of national shared cost programs be clarified to ensure greater national consistency in programs available to all Canadians, and to ensure that minimum standards are met by provinces in order to claim compensation for opting out of such programs.

One area that I looked at specifically in gauging my own reaction to the Constitutional Accord, and in this respect there has been a distinct improvement in the Accord over the original agreement at Meech Lake, was that it spells out specifically that nothing in it alters the relative division of powers as between the federal and provincial Governments. In other words, whatever the Supreme Court of Canada determined to be the scope of federal spending power remains in place.

We also recognize there has probably been a strengthening of federal spending power by explicitly recognizing for the first time that it may be exercised within areas of provincial jurisdiction. We are also assuaged by recognizing that national objectives are chosen by the federal Government. However, we should clarify the clause to ensure that Parliament sets those objectives and ensure there is no ambiguity in national standards. I would like to make it clear that we believe this should be spelled out. As we all do in this Parliament, I believe in a strong central Government but in equilibrium with a well-functioning federalism.

I do not fear confrontation with the provinces. That is the inevitable nature of things in a federation. I believe it can be creative and useful. I also believe the Government side-steps that in order to try and get a false perfume of consent. I recommend to the Minister that he not be lulled into believing the agreement is a substitute for achievement.

However, I do not believe in confrontation for its own sake. I believe in co-operative federalism and it does not disturb me that the provinces can opt out. They have done so before and I was part of the negotiating team regarding the Canada and Quebec Pension Plan many years ago.

Seventh, we propose to eliminate the rigid unanimity provision for Senate reform and return to the seven provinces and 50 per cent of the population formula. We believe western Canadians and Atlantic Canadians in particular will want the flexibility we had before the Accord to achieve meaningful Senate reform.

We also suggest that the eventual provincehood of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and extension of existing provincial boundaries into those territories, should that ever happen, be resolved solely by the federal Government and the territory in question. The last instance we had of a new province coming into Confederation was the 1949 Terms of Union with the Province of Newfoundland. That was negotiated specifically between the federal Government and the Province of Newfoundland and put to the Parliament of Canada for ratification.

Eighth, with regard to future constitutional conferences, we propose to make aboriginal rights a priority. Our aboriginal peoples feel, having been left off the constitutional agenda, any progress made to date will be lost unless First Ministers continue discussions on self-government and other aboriginal concerns.

We also suggest that the fisheries issue does not have to be on the agenda every year as it will unnecessarily create instability in the industry and, frankly, three of the four provincial Governments in the Atlantic provinces are concerned that any transfer to provincial jurisdiction would result in anarchy in the administration of fishing rights in the Atlantic.

While it is not in these amendments, for our future constitutional menu we would have preferred that Section 33 of the Constitution Act, 1982, be repealed; that is to say, the notwithstanding clause allowing provincial Governments to enact legislation exempt from the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Although we have not dealt with it here because it went beyond the purview of the Accord, we recommend that future constitutional discussions eliminate those words relating to the administration of minority rights in education, eliminate the words "where numbers warrant" and rely on the general interpretation clause in the Constitution which would allow schools to be set up in a minority language where that was reasonable.

The Minister of Justice has closed his mind to amendments. He did not even do us the courtesy of referring to them or analysing them. The Prime Minister has said it is a take it or leave it proposition. He says if we disagree, or attempt to strike out a single word or change a single comma, or add a word here and there, we will destroy the process. I want to remind the Prime Minister through his Minister of Justice that each one of us was sent here to this House of Commons to do our best in analysing the laws brought before us. No other single piece of statute is more important, more fundamental or more vital than the Constitution of Canada.

What he is saying, and what he has said to the House, echoing the hollow words of the Prime Minister, is that no matter how we debate this issue, no matter what our constituents think, no matter what witnesses may have said before the joint committee, it will make no difference. The Government's collective mind is closed. The Prime Minister has shut the door on possibilities of improvement within the ambit of the Accord.

What he is really saying is we have a new level of Government established here with which no one has dealt specifically in the House of Commons to this date. We have a Prime Minister with an overwhelming mandate in the House of Commons, premiers who have majorities in their legislatures, and what we are really saying is that without prior notice, without prior mandate or prior discussion, 11 First Ministers can meet in secret, even until five o'clock in the morning, and decide a new constitutional direction for Canada. Yet it is irrelevant what Members of the House of Commons say. It is irrelevant, I suppose, what Members of the Senate say, although I have my own views about that. It is irrelevant what Members of the legislatures may say. It is a fait accompli. That is what we recognize here.

The Minister of Justice thinks this annual meeting of First Ministers will be a very important function. It is going to be a function now embedded in the Constitution that Parliament better look at very carefully in the future to ensure we have kept control over it.

I believe our Confederation is a little more resilient than the Minister of Justice imagines. I believe that Canada can survive a debate on the merits of the issues which have been put forward to the House today. I want to hear, as I believe do all Canadians, the Government's response to our amendments.

Does the Government, for example, think it is wrong that aboriginal rights or multicultural identity should be recognized? Does the Government feel it is wrong that the Charter should clearly be paramount? Does the Government feel it is wrong if we move towards Senate reform at a faster pace and, in our view, towards an elected Senate? Does the Government reject a deadlock-breaking mechanism on Supreme Court appointments? Does the Government reject the idea that the spending power might need some clarification? Does the Government object that the Territories should have a say in Senate appointments and in appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada? Does the Government object to giving the Territories a clear avenue, should circumstances dictate, for assuming provincial status? Does the Government think it is wrong to make aboriginal rights a priority of First Ministers' conferences? Are all of these proposed amendments to be rejected out of hand by the Government?

By the way, I know the Prime Minister's current priorities are heavy this morning, but this being the most fundamental issue before the House, and without in any way derogating the high office held by the Prime Minister, I would have thought that in the circumstances he ought to have led the debate. I hope the House hears from him on this debate.

I can say to the Minister and to you, Mr. Speaker, that if ultimately, despite our efforts in pressing them before this place, our proposals fail, if our amendments are rejected and voted down, we intend to make these amendments part of our Party's constitutional program. We intend to make them part of the platform in the next federal election and put them before the people of Canada. If and when we form a government, we intend to make them part of the ongoing constitutional process.

Our point of view is that the purpose of the debate will have been fulfilled if Canadians know in detail where we stand on these issues. They also deserve to know where the Government stands on each of these issues and where the New Democratic Party stands. Therefore, in order to inaugurate this process, I would like to propose the following amendment:

That the Motion be amended in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by striking out Section 2(1) thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada;

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society;

(c) the recognition that aboriginal peoples constitute a distinctive and fundamental characteristic of Canada;

(d) the recognition of the multicultural nature of Canadian society, and in particular respect for the many origins, creeds and cultures as well as the differing regional identities that helped shape Canadian society; and

(e) the recognition of the advantages of developing the Canadian economic union."

I submit this amendment in both French and English. It is seconded by the Hon. Member for York Centre, on his behalf and on behalf of the Hon. Member for Papineau.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) for his comments and the filing of the motion as has been read and presented to the Chair in both official languages. As is my obligation to Hon. Members, I will consider the motion carefully and report back to the Chamber with respect to its procedural acceptability. In the meantime, we will continue with debate. I thank the right hon. gentleman.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): It is a great honour for me today to be the lead-off speaker for the New Democratic Party on the Constitutional Accord. I may say that throughout the summer, during the hearings, I have taken a great interest in the Accord and what it accomplishes, which is really tremendous. I have also taken a great interest in some of its shortcomings and some of the future directions for constitutional change and renewal. In that connection, I may say that all of us in Canada have realized during the course of debate this summer that the Constitution should belong to the people of Canada and that the people of Canada should be heard when it comes to constitutional renewal and reform.

Partly because of our lack of experience in constitutional change since the 1982 patriation and Charter, and partly because of the haste of the Government, we have not had as much openness and consultation with the Canadian public as we would have liked. There is a lesson in this for us all and I will return in a moment to the process.

On behalf of the New Democratic Party, I want to say how very much we welcome Quebec's return to the Constitutional family.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: We have always felt it was a grievous occasion in 1982 when Quebec was isolated from patriation and the Charter. As a political Party we have wanted ever since to see this isolation ended. When the Quebec Government suggested a couple of years ago its five proposals which would make possible the ending of this isolation we heralded them. We agreed with them.

• (1240)

Since our founding as a political Party we have known that Quebec is indeed a distinct society. We have known of the linguistic duality of Canada, and that these are key and vital characteristics of our nation.

We felt that after Quebec had basically said yes to Canada in the referendum that we should do everything possible, compatible with the interests, concerns and ideals of all Canadians, to say yes to Quebec. I remember very vividly Ministers of the Parti Québécois Government coming to western Canada, in particular to British Columbia, and discovering, often to their surprise they said, how much we in British Columbia wanted Quebec in Canada, how much Quebec being a part of the constitutional family meant to us as British Columbians, and how wrong it would be for this nation to go into the future with one of its very basic elements not part of it. It was in British Columbia that I heard the strongest pleas for Quebec to come in, to be in, and for the rest of us to help make that possible.

We feel very badly when we are told that the Constitutional Accord pays some kind of favour to Quebec. I was quite shocked, as some Members of the House will recall, when former Prime Minister Trudeau was before the committee and suggested that all we were doing in this Accord was caving in to something "Quebec wanted" and the rest of us did not want. For we New Democrats, and I speak on behalf of all Canadians on this matter, we are delighted. We feel that the Accord is what we want. We feel that it is good for us, that it is good for all of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: Not only does the Accord have the result of reuniting Canada, but it does so in a spirit of what we have always called "co-operative federalism", both in the reaching of the Accord and in its provisions. The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) said a moment ago that Liberal Members could not sign the report of the Special Joint Committee because they did not like some of the language of the document. In particular, they did not like the reference to confrontation and conflict having characterized much of Canada's federal-provincial relations in the years up to 1984. There was confrontation and conflict. There was a tendency—a very strong tendency—to want to tell provinces what to do rather than to seek accommodations with them, in sharp contrast to the 1960s when a strong era of co-operative federalism prevailed.

We think that there cannot be a nation as large, as complex, as dispersed at this country without having a genuine federal system. Within such a federal system there must always be a very high degree of negotiation, discussion, and compromise, in order to reach the national objectives that we want. We think that the Accord gives expression to this vision of the operation of a genuine federal system. Therefore, on that ground, too, we have welcomed the Accord.

With specific reference to the spending power, it became less and less controversial as the hearings went on. There was a very great deal of evidence presented to us that there was no weakening of the purely federal spending power in areas of federal jurisdiction, no change whatsoever in the relative powers of the federal Government and the provinces, no change in the authority of the federal Government to spend in areas of mixed jurisdiction; and, in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, the authority of the federal Government to spend is constitutionally recognized for the the first time in the Constitutional Accord. What has in practice often taken place—federal spending in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, which has often been a very rancorous affair—we now have constitutionally entrenched. The federal Government and Parliament to spend in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction has been entrenched, and provinces wishing to opt out of such shared-cost programs can receive compensation only if they develop a program or an initiative that is "compatible with the national objectives".

If we have a party in power in Ottawa that has no national objectives, or has national objectives which are perhaps anathema to many of us in the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Rodriguez: That is the Tory Government you are describing.

Ms. Jewett: —such as might be the case under a Tory Government, then we as Canadians change the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: We put one in power, such as the New Democratic Party—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: —which will pursue the national objectives in a shared-cost program that meets the needs and aspirations of the Canadian people.

We welcome the provisions of the Accord that make possible the achievement of social and economic goals working in cooperation with the provinces that will realize a better Canada. The Constitution provides the framework for the achievement of our national objectives.

• (1250)

In the course of bringing Quebec back into the constitutional family, in developing the constitutionalizing of the federal spending power in areas of provincial jurisdiction, and in making other changes in our constitutional relationships, the Government, and indeed all 11 First Ministers, made one very serious error. I wish to discuss three or four errors, but there is one I wish to raise first, partly because I am a woman and, therefore, particularly sensitive to it.

The First Ministers have met and decided to give special protection in Section 16 of the Accord to our multicultural heritage, and to our aboriginal peoples. We have no objection to that, but we do object in respect of the equality rights of women. Section 28 of the Charter interestingly enough follows Sections 25 and 27 that are included in Section 16 of the Accord. They sat there and absolutely forgot about women, about their place in our constitutional history, about the long struggles to achieve, first, the strengthening of Section 15 of the Charter, and then the creation of Section 28. Notwithstanding anything in the Charter, the rights and freedoms referred to in Section 28 are guaranteed equally to male and female persons. Yet they never even thought of it, they bypassed it, and once again the constitutional history of Canadian women is rendered invisible. It is as if we have to start all over again.

The Government and the First Ministers stated that they did not intend to do this. In an article in Le Devoir on August 28, 1987, the Minister responsible for the Accord on behalf of the federal Government said, "les droits à l'égalité des sexes transcendent la langue et la culture." Sexual equality rights transcend language and culture. Why was that not said in the Accord? Why was that not placed in the Accord? Why was it said outside it? We are constantly told to trust the Ministers. In 1982 they said that labour unions and collective bargaining would be protected under the freedom of association clause. They told us that that would be the case. What happened? They were not protected at all. The courts do not listen to Ministers, but we are told to trust them. We are also told to trust the courts.

In a sense, we all got into this ourselves when we put the Charter in the Constitution. Of course, once there is a charter of fundamental rights and freedoms it follows that there will be judicial interpretation of laws or enactments that may infringe upon those rights. A great many of the problems that we as women have today go back to the wording of the Charter itself, Clause 1 of the Charter, the reasonable limits clause, and the relationship of that clause to Clause 15 and Clause 28 and what judges have been and are doing with those relationships.

We understand that a great many of the concerns raised by women's organizations and their constitutional experts during the hearings are concerns regarding the operation of the Charter. It is clear that the Charter is not totally paramount in terms of the rights and freedoms guaranteed in it because they are subject to Clause 1 of the Charter which allows for reasonable limits on those rights, if they are demonstrably justifiable.

By the way, in this connection the Liberal amendment to include the Charter in Section 16 of the Accord is totally ridiculous. Obviously, they have not heard of section 1 of the Charter. I may say no women's organizations suggested that particular amendment because they also saw how ridiculous it was.

We need to bring some understanding to the First Ministers and to the courts that we did not as women fight for nothing when we secured the strengthening of Section 15 of the Charter and the creation of Section 28. At the minimum that is why Section 28, the equality rights section of the Charter, should be included in Section 16 of the Accord. This has been agreed to by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and by la Fédération des femmes du Québec.

We do not think that our equality rights are jeopardized by Meech Lake. They are not. But with the same abundance of caution that the First Ministers put in the reference to our multicultural heritage and aboriginal rights, so they should also put into the Accord in Section 16 our equality rights, the equality rights of male and female persons.

I have a few more comments to make, Mr. Speaker, if I may call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

PENITENTIARIES

CRIMES COMMITTED BY PAROLED AND ESCAPED INMATES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, some disturbing parallels are emerging between the cases of Daniel Gingras and Allan Sweeney, who was convicted of the rape and murder of Celia Ruygrok, an Ottawa half-way house worker.

Mr. Gingras, an inmate of Edmonton Institution, was serving a life sentence for a murder which he committed in 1978 after he escaped from a federal penitentiary in Cowansville, Quebec. On June 29 of this year he again escaped, this time from an unarmed escort while on a day pass to celebrate his birthday at the West Edmonton Mall. He was recaptured on August 21 and once again faces murder charges in the deaths of Wanda Woodward and Joseph Piquette. He is also charged with armed robbery, possession of a restricted weapon, and possession of stolen property.

In the Gingras and Sweeney cases there appears to have been some serious lapses of information involving both the National Parole Board and Correctional Service Canada on the inmates in question. In both cases as well, the level of risk posed to society by the early release of these inmates appears to have been gravely underestimated.

S. O. 21

In light of the firing of the warden of Edmonton Institution following the investigation into the Gingras escape, I call upon the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher) to explain precisely why the warden was fired and to explain how it was possible for Mr. Gingras to be released on a day pass to celebrate his birthday at the West Edmonton Mall.

HUMANITARIAN SERVICE

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF CANADIAN SURGEON IN PALESTINIAN REFUGEE CAMP

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, The Toronto Star recently recognized Canadian surgeon, Dr. Christopher Giannou, for his outstanding humanitarianism displayed at the Shatila Palestinian refugee camp in Beirut, Lebanon.

Dr. Giannou dedicated the past three years to a benevolent medical practice in the Palestinian war camps of Beirut. During five months of fierce fighting at Shatila last winter, Giannou and his medical teams performed 200 major operations and between 400 and 500 minor ones. They buried 110 people but saved 650 more who were seriously wounded.

It seems appropriate for the House to recognize the achievements of Dr. Giannou under such extreme and arduous conditions. Not unlike a former Canadian physician practising abroad, Dr. Norman Bethune, Dr. Giannou has demonstrated unique and able courage and dedication to his profession.

The House should publicly recognize the achievements of this doctor in reducing pain and suffering in a horrific Lebanese war.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

CHANGES TO ASSIST SURVIVING SPOUSES—SITUATION OF SINGLE WOMEN

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) tabled in the House of Commons a consultation paper dealing with proposed changes to the Canada Pension Plan. The effect of those changes would be to alleviate some of the financial hardship now being experienced by surviving spouses and their families. These changes are long overdue, and we in this Party support them in so far as they go.

Once again, however, these proposals ignore the plight of a substantial number of survivors and their families. While the discussion paper recognizes that there have been major social changes in Canada since the inception of the Canada Pension Plan in 1966, it stops short of proposing to do anything about it. Instead, the proposals continue to perpetuate the notion that women are only entitled to an adequate pension if they have a man.

This paper does nothing to correct this discrimination against single women, particularly divorced women, and I call upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare to bring forward a further amendment to deal with this issue once and for all.

THE ECONOMY

SITUATION IN ABITIBI—TÉMISCAMINGUE REGION

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): When things are going well, Mr. Speaker, we should come out and say so! Never has the Abitibi-Témiscamingue economy been in such great shape, and we could even say that actually we are rolling in money. The unemployment rate, which had reached the tragic record high of 27 per cent during the 1982-83 years, fluctuated between 6.1 and 7.7 per cent over the past three months, which is Quebec's best economic performance.

What has contributed to this amazing recovery, Mr. Speaker?

First, we had record investments in mine exploration: in fact over 85 per cent of all Quebec investments in this industry were made in our area. Second, a maximum output in our forest industry: over 40 per cent of the lumber produced in Quebec comes from our area.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, to our Témiscamingue farmers who constantly meet new challenges by delivering to our domestic markets new products which appeal to more and more Canadians, I say bravo!

Mr. Speaker, of course this outstanding success would not have been possible without the determination, the drive and know-how of the Témiscamingue people to whom I want to pay tribute today.

HARBOURS AND PORTS

DREDGING AND WHARF REPAIRS REQUESTED BY PRINCE COUNTY FISHERMEN'S ASSOCIATION, P.E.I.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I bring to the attention of the House the worsening state of the harbours and wharfs in several fishing ports in my riding. This is a matter of utmost importance.

Fishermen in these communities know that the deterioration of their wharfs and harbours will not only disrupt their fishing but will also endanger their health and safety. The Prince County Fishermen's Association has asked the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) to undertake harbour dredging and wharf repairs in the communities of Alberton, Tignish, and Howards Cove. I have made the same request on previous occasions.

In a recent letter the Association pointed out:

> We fishermen depend on our harbours for safe landing of our catches and safe berthing of our vessels. Our livelihood creates a large portion of the revenue for West Prince. The upkeep of the harbours and wharfs is essential to the economy of our area.

At a time when these fishermen are striving to land the highest quality fish, it is absolutely essential that the federal Government invest in proper infrastructure. On behalf of the Fishermen's Association, I urge the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to undertake the long awaited wharf repairs and harbour dredging in West Prince.

SPACE RESEARCH

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF LAUNCHING OF CANADIAN SATELLITE

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, today marks the 25th anniversary of the launch of the earth satellite Alouette 1 from Vandenberg Air Force Base in California. With that launch, Canada was the third country into space.

In the last 25 years we have excelled as a world leader in space science, telecommunications, and remote sensing. With the launch of the Anik 1 satellite in 1972, Canada became the first country to operate a domestic communications system based on a satellite in a geostationary orbit.

In the 1980s we built on that technology through Telesat Canada and have gone on to participate in a variety of international programs such as Landsat, Canadarm, and the European Olympus satellite program. In the process, we built the most advanced satellite-testing laboratory in the world, the David Florida Laboratory located in the City of Nepean.

Canada is well in a position to maintain leadership in the decades ahead with such projects as MSAT, RADARSAT and the Space Station. The formula to get us there has been outlined in a recent report prepared by the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology entitled Canada's Space Program—A Voyage to the Future.

NATIVE PEOPLES

HIGH RATIO RECEIVING PRISON SENTENCES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, federal Conservative policies affecting Indian, Inuit and Métis citizens of Canada are proving to be ill-conceived and dangerous. Today we learn from the media that two-thirds of the prison population in Saskatchewan is native while natives represent only 14 per cent of the population. Saskatchewan Justice officials claim that this is due in part to racial bias in the justice system. That is no doubt true and something the Government should address.

Across Canada we find the startling statistics on incarceration are paralleled in the native community by the highest rates of infant mortality, suicide and unemployment, along with the other shocking signs of cultural genocide.

Two years ago, under the guidance of the then Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Erik Nielsen, the federal Government produced and I released the secret document known as Buffalo Jump of the 1980s. This document plots out the means by which native families can be forced out of their communities by cutting off economic development, housing, medical care and education. It plots the way to undermine existing native political institutions locally, regionally and nationally by cutting funds and blocking the routes to dispute settlements, specific and comprehensive claims, and closing off test-case funding to the courts and for megaproject impact funds, all of which are now being implemented.

All Canadians should be ashamed at the treatment of our first citizens by this Government. The Government's plan is a self-fulfilling prophecy of assimilation and extermination of the first nations of Canada.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF TORONTO BEACHES

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, all urban centres are facing major environmental problems due to storm water run-off. This summer as in past summers, the residents of Toronto were again denied the use of their beaches due to high pollution levels in Lake Ontario caused by urban run-off.

One solution has been to speed up sewer separation. This is a very expensive undertaking which, ironically, will serve as a more efficient conduit of pollutants to the lake.

It has been brought to my attention that there are many measures which, when implemented in conjunction with storm sewers, will effectively eliminate pollution. Such measures as improved surface sanitation, sewer flushing, and twice-yearly cleaning of catch basins will remove up to 50 per cent of heavy metals transported by storm water. Porous pavement whose structural integrity is not impaired has been found to reduce run-off by as much as 83 per cent.

The measures I have listed have been available for decades and are not costly. The fight to eliminate pollution must embrace all methods available, for the future of our existence is the price.

RESEARCH

MONTREAL'S ATTEMPTS TO ATTRACT PROPOSED SPACE AGENCY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we have known for some months now that the spokespeople for the City of Montreal and the province of Quebec in general pursue a common cause in their attempt to have the Space Agency located in that province.

Mr. Gauthier: In Ottawa!

Mr. Lapierre: At least, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), knows what he wants!

The slogans read: "Montréal, c'est spatial". Today, however when we read the newspapers, we realize that the NDP silence is special.

With regard to a project of such significance for the economic future of Montreal, Mr. Speaker, they shirk their responsibilities. Even the NDP Leader (Mr. Broadbent) is reported to have decided to look into the matter before making a decision at some later date.

Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of the Quebec Tory caucus who is talking from his seat should have the courage to stand up for the City of Montreal and support the Province of Quebec in their efforts to obtain the Space Agency. The Chairman of the caucus, who is shouting from his seat, can only kowtow before the Government, Mr. Speaker.

Montreal must get the Space Agency. The Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada, Mr. Turner, supports the Montreal initiatives, while the NDP is hiding its collective head in the sand. As to the Tories they cannot make up their minds.

EMPLOYMENT

EFFICACY OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to indicate today my great satisfaction at the entrepreneurship and efficiency shown by those taking advantage of our job development programs. These projects have given me an opportunity to appreciate the potential of this country to help us meet our stated objectives.

Quite recently, I was made aware of six thematic brochures published by a Quebec City organization called Centre femmes d'aujourd'hui thanks to federal financial assistance. Information on such subjects as homeless women, female solitude and the economic contribution of volunteers and homemakers is now available to the population for the greater good of our community.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good example of what this type of employment program can mean to our society. It is obvious that, beyond the financial considerations, our human resources contribute a lot to the strength and quality of this country.

LITERACY

ARTICLES OF ILLITERACY—SOUTHAM NEWS CONGRATULATED

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate the efforts of Southam News in bringing to the attention of Canadians our serious and continuing national problem of illiteracy. By assigning a first rate investigative journalist, Peter Calamai, and backing him with research and survey information, Southam was able to present the following well-documented facts about illiteracy:

Fully five million adult Canadians are functionally illiterate;

The problem is increasing with 100,000 illiterates being added to the population every year;

Less than 2 per cent of illiterates are enrolled in adequate literacy programs.

None of us can feel anything but shame that our educational and training facilities are failing so many. Yet the federal Government, which has only a few token programs, is not responding to the disaster. Where are the federal-provincial agreements to attack this growing problem?

I call on the cabinet Ministers responsible, particularly the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), to give a detailed response to the information uncovered by Southam and tell the House how they will respond positively to this greatest of adult education challenges, providing the necessary learning skills leading to the simple ability to cope in our exceedingly complex society.

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—SUPPORT FOR ADOPTION

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, as we begin today to debate the 1987 constitutional accord I wish to add my voice in support of this initiative of our Government. I believe it is the most significant accomplishment of our mandate.

Our Party's political agenda has been one of national reconciliation, and we have not strayed from our course. In 1984 our Leader promised to improve relations between Ottawa and the provinces. As Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), with this achievement, he has done just that. He has strengthened our federation and revitalized our national unity. The Prime Minister and the 10 Premiers should be highly commended for succeeding where others have failed.

Canadians across the land have welcomed Quebec, and with it one of our nation's founding cultures, back into the constitutional family. As Members of this federal institution our participation in ratifying this accomplishment is indeed historic. I wish to thank our Leader for providing this significant opportunity, and for an enormous deed well done.

FINANCE

CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATE SLASHED BY CANADA TRUST

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, last month several credit card companies increased interest charges on unpaid balances. Today one company, Canada Trust, announced it will slash its rate to a record 13.5 per cent. Its cards will not carry any annual fee, transaction charge or monthly statement cost. In effect, credit card balances will become like consumer loans.

If one company can do this, why can't others? This company will make a profit at 13.5 per cent. It is not a charitable institution. We ask, therefore, why must other MasterCard issuers charge 18.9 per cent? Why must VISA issuers add annual fees and transaction charges to their 16.5 per cent rate? Why do leading retail stores charge 28.8 per cent?

The House has given first reading to a Bill that will protect consumers against excessive interest charges. If one major trust company can push rates down to this historic low let no lobbyist tell any Member of this House that rates have to be so high that only an alpine climber can reach them.

TRADE

STATUS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TALKS—TRADE DEFICIT WITH PACIFIC RIM COUNTRIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister with regard to trade. Since his Government came to power Canada's trade surplus with the United States has fallen by half. Our trade deficit with the Pacific Rim countries is five times worse than when the Prime Minister assumed office. Imports from Europe are growing four times faster than are our exports from Europe. Believe it or not, Canada's trade deficit with Japan, the world's second largest industrial power, is 24 times worse than when the Prime Minister came to power. Talk about lost opportunities.

In light of the Government's truly pathetic record on world-wide trade would the Prime Minister bring this House up to date on recent developments in his obsessive desire to get a free trade deal with the United States? What did the Americans offer yesterday? What are Canadians conceding today? What is the stage of these negotiations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Canadian trading patterns remain strong and buoyant around the world. There has been a great deal of work done.

In fact, I know my right hon. friend will want to reflect upon what he said inasmuch as he was a member of an administration which talked about a third option—reducing our dependence on the United States. When that was begun in 1972, 65 per cent of our exports went to the United States. When it ended, 80 per cent of our exports went to the United States.

Rather than reducing our dependence there was a complete failure on the multilateral side by the Liberals, which brought about a situation in which it is clearly in the national interest to seek a comprehensive framework for such a large part of our foreign trade.

The trade talks have been complex and challenging. There was an important review yesterday. That review is ongoing further to a report of the Minister of Finance and the Minister for International Trade. At the earliest possible moment I will report to my right hon. friend.

SECURING OF BINDING COMMERCIAL DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I also hope that the Prime Minister will confide in Canadians and in Members of the House. The figures I just gave come from Statistics Canada and are endorsed by the Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs and External Trade.

Before the reopening of negotiations with the Americans, will the Prime Minister at least assure Canadians that the Americans guarantee him to accept the binding trade dispute settlement mechanism? Will he also assure Canadians that he is not making further concessions to secure such a binding mechanism?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition would know very well, there were no concessions. It was an important meeting prompted by the positive signals sent by the Americans. As I am speaking, the whole situation is being assessed to see whether we ought to resume negotiations. This assessment is being made by Ministers and Government officials, and I will be pleased to make the Leader of the Opposition aware of the outcome at the earliest opportunity.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I only say to the Prime Minister that the House and Canadians would appreciate knowing from him what is going on. One can understand, even after two years of negotiation, that there must be a deep split in his Government as to whether to continue these negotiations.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It might be that the Minister of Finance, who appears in a forthcoming mood, would like to respond, but I will put my question to the Prime Minister.

Have the Americans agreed to lay off our regional development programs? Have the Americans agreed to lay off our cultural industries? Have they agreed to give us a meaningful exemption from their 1974 trade law and the current omnibus Bill? Have they agreed to give us meaningful exemptions from their unilateral right to countervail, to use anti-dumping against us without notice and in a unilateral fashion? What further concessions are the Prime Minister and his Government willing to make to get that binding mechanism? What further concessions are they willing to make to get these negotiations back on track, if that is what the Prime Minister really wants to do?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing a serious matter about which, between the two countries, there are serious disagreements about some fundamentals. That is why the Government of Canada and Ambassador Reisman suspended the talks last Wednesday. It is because there was serious disagreement about some of the fundamentals. These matters are complex and difficult. They do not lend themselves to harangues, insults, or diatribes by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition or by anyone else.

I would suggest to my right hon. friend that if he is in any way concerned about the national interest, he will allow the Government of Canada and our public service negotiators—

Mr. Lapierre: You have had two years.

Mr. Mulroney: Yes, after two years. Indeed, after two years. There is nothing wrong with that—to proceed to resolve this matter, about which we have always indicated if it is very much in the national interests it will be brought forward for consideration by this House. If it is not, as I have said from the very beginning, there will be no deal.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Thank you.

An Hon. Member: That was not for you, Lloyd.

POSSIBLE RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want to address some supplementary questions, if I might, to the Prime Minister. He has just acknowledged that a trade deal of this comprehension is complicated, difficult and complex. We know that the deadline for concluding a deal is Sunday night, which is only five and one-half days away, yet the Government has yet to make up its mind if it is even going to resume negotiations.

We know what happened when we negotiated the softwood lumber deal at the last desperate moment. We got a bad deal with terrible flaws in it. How can the Government begin to resume negotiations, making the same mistake twice, when it has to negotiate a complicated comprehensive deal affecting every part of the economy, and hope to do it in a period of four or five days? Is that not a recipe for disaster? Why does the Government not just say it has been a bad bargain right from the start and start developing a much more effective trade strategy for Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the effective trade strategy is the one like the Liberal Party introduced in 1972 where we did not increase multilaterally. Our dependence on the United States increased directly as a result of the lack of policy of the Liberals, and it is because of the enormity of the problem that we are trying to seek to preserve jobs in Canada and create others by a comprehensive framework which will lend stability and security to the trading relationship.

As far as the negotiating process is concerned, it is well known it has been competently and professionally handled by Ambassador Reisman and his colleagues from the very beginning. There has been an unprecedented degree of co-operation with the First Ministers, all of whom have expressed satisfaction with their involvement and contribution. There has been a debate in the House, and there has been a great public debate. So there has been a tremendous exchange of information as we pursue, as we should, the national interest.

• (1425)

I have indicated from the beginning that if these fundamental differences that have emerged over the course of the discussions are not resolved then there shall be no deal. If we are capable of resolving them, we will bring forward for consideration a comprehensive trade arrangement which we believe will be in the national interest.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, while the Prime Minister is resorting to history, he might be reminded that the previous Government's trade strategy resulted in the Tokyo Round of negotiations of GATT that gave us secure guaranteed access to the American market for softwood lumber which his Government totally loused up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, with that small introduction, Mr. Speaker, I will turn to the question.

The Prime Minister has still not answered the fundamental problem, that is, you have got five days to go. You have got a negotiating process—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will watch his question.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Prime Minister this. Does he propose that in the next five days, if his Government decides to resume negotiations, that it will be able to resolve all the differences and work out an agreement that will cover all the potential flaws and fatalities of that agreement? Or will the Government be asking the country to buy a blank cheque, to buy a pig in the poke so that we will not know what we are getting? We will be signing away the future of the country.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when my hon. friend refers to a pig in the poke, I am reminded that the Liberals under the Tokyo Round neglected agriculture—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —and all the shame that that caused at the Tokyo Round to the Canadian farmers. The Hon. Member should be ashamed of himself. Western farmers were double-crossed by that.

My hon. friend seems to be traumatized by numbers. For example, he keeps referring to five days. Whether it is five days, five minutes, or five hours, the bottom line remains the same. This deal shall be in the national interest of Canada or there shall be no deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. We have been told that the Cabinet has been meeting all morning. We have seen the spectacle of cabinet Ministers flying to Washington for seven hours of pleading with the Americans.

I want to ask the Prime Minister why it is that after this much discussion, this much debate within Cabinet, it is not possible for the Government to tell the Canadian people what is going on. Why are Canadians being kept in the dark?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am reeling under that onslaught. There is something pathetic about hearing a protectionist with his feet firmly rooted in the 19th century trying to talk about changing world trade patterns. I think the NDP is very much on record as having indicated that it opposed the Auto Pact, a great liberalized trading instrument. It has indicated where it is and where it will be in the future.

We have had ongoing negotiations on this important trading matter. Yesterday was an important development in that. Very serious differences remain. We will see if we are capable of resolving them together.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the point. The negotiations go on and on with no result, and Canadians are not being told what is taking place.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT MAKE ITS DECISION KNOWN

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Here is my supplementary, Mr. Speaker. This Government has been negotiating with the American for 16 months. Yesterday there was another meeting which went on for seven and a half hours. The Cabinet has been discussing this question all morning. Why does the Government find it impossible to let us know its decision?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is exactly the same question in French as in English. Obviously the answer is the same.

In addition the Hon. Member is complaining that he feels he is being denied information. The fact is that the Minister for International Trade did offer to give NDP Members a special and confidential briefing just so they would be fully cognizant with all details. But the NDP Members rejected this offer.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ADOPT NEW APPROACH

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Government continues to avoid specific questions on this latest crisis which is facing the Canadian people and the country itself.

Does the Government not realize that the game is over? Does it not realize that time is running out? Does it not realize that it has to decide to take a new and different approach instead of following the same sell-out path which it has taken us on for so long?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I ask my hon. friend to reread the answers that were provided to the earlier questions of the distinguished Leader of the Opposition.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

MEMOTEC PURCHASE OF TELEGLOBE—REPORTED POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I requested a public inquiry into the Memotec purchase of Teleglobe, and the Government refused. Today I feel even more justified in calling for a public inquiry, especially after learning that the Government has ordered Memotec to hold off the announcement of its bid.

Why did the Government advise Memotec to postpone the announcement of its bid? Did the Government not realize that this could increase the risk of insider trading? Why does the Government not believe that each and every Canadian should have equal access to the information?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, as we pointed out in the House yesterday, there are three inquiries going on: the Quebec Securities Commission, the Ontario Securities Commission, and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

I feel somewhat constrained and have some respect for the fact that charges have been laid and no one has been convicted. There are other people who could also take those constraints to heart.

Mr. Nystrom: Why the delay?

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT REFUSES TO HOLD INQUIRY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, Memotec was in an unusual situation. On the one hand, it was being told by the Quebec Securities Commission that it should reveal that it had made an offer to purchase. On the other hand, the Government was recommending that Memotec postpone such an announcement. Yet, in the case of Canadair and de Havilland, we knew two months beforehand who had made purchasing bids. I therefore wonder why the president of Memotec is now complaining that the Government of Canada prevented him from making his offer public. What I want to ask the Government is this: What was the Government trying to hide at the time, and what is it trying to hide now by refusing to hold a public inquiry?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, the confidentiality agreement is part of normal commercial practice during a bidding process.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Why not in Canadair and de Havilland?

Mrs. McDougall: I am sure the inquiry will bring out all the facts about this case when the time comes. I think that a parliamentary inquiry, or some other inquiry, could prejudice the outcome of that case.

I have no intention of interfering with the fair process of justice in a commercial transaction.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE

ALLEGED HIRING OF AGENT TO CO-ORDINATE ACTIVITIES WITHIN PEACE MOVEMENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Recently we learned that CSIS has targeted a left wing magazine and infiltrated the labour movement in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada.

Will the Prime Minister now explain to Canadians why in February of this year CSIS hired a senior agent to co-ordinate its activities within the Canadian peace movement? What is CSIS doing with a unit of at least four full-time people specifically targeted to work within the peace movement in Canada?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the answers given in the House with respect to similar inquiries of a general nature have been addressed very well by the Solicitor General.

He has pointed out that, as a result of representations and suggestions made by our Party when this legislation was brought forward, there are at least two opportunities for investigations with respect to the operation of CSIS which have been established, quite apart and in addition to the prerogative of the Hon. Member to ask questions on the floor of the House and in committee.

It seems to me that the Solicitor General was also correct in pointing out to the Hon. Member that if there are specific complaints that the Hon. Member has, or any other citizen, that they should utilize those inquiry devices that are available under the legislation. In this manner they would have the opportunity of getting a proper assessment and we could then make a judgment on facts rather than on speculation.

Mr. Orlikow: Whitewash.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, we are not dealing with speculation. I have before me an internal CSIS document which describes clearly—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: —the objectives of the individual who is working within the peace movement in Canada.

[Translation]

INFILTRATION OF PEACE MOVEMENT IN CANADA— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the CSIS hired last February a sub-section chief to examine pro-Soviet activities within the bone fide peace movement, using recruitment tactics and the manipulation of human resources. My supplementary is this: What will the Prime Minister do to put an end immediatly to this dangerous and undemocratic infiltration of the peace movement in Canada?

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, if the New Democratic Party believes in principles of justice in our country, they should not be applauding that question.

The reality is that the Hon. Member comes forward and makes an allegation. By way of example, if the Hon. Member were to give information to the Inspector General, or to the independent SIRC committee which has a representative of the New Democratic Party, sworn to the Privy Council, for the purpose of examining the operation of CSIS, and if the Hon. Member were interested in improving the system, then he would do those things.

I can only report that I do not have any access to these documents that the Hon. Member purports to have in his possession. I would ask the Hon. Member to do what is proper and just and in accordance with our principles of justice.

MONTREAL CITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister in charge of Regional Industrial Expansion and of Science and Technology, I would direct my question to the Prime Minister. For two years the situation in the east end of Montreal, has been tragic. We have witnessed the establishment of the Survival Committee. One year later, the Picard report was tabled and we are still waiting for a response to that report's 86 recommendations. And today, the Pichette report just tabled recommends that the Government take immediate and drastic steps to help the 22,000 unemployed who are involved in the east end of Montreal.

My question to the Prime Minister is this: Is the Prime Minister, following those two reports, those hundreds of testimonies, and considering the situation of all those people in the east end of Montreal who are faced either with unemployment or welfare, will the Prime Minister now show some leadership and deliver on the commitment he gave in the shadow of Place Ville-Marie to do something for the City of Montreal?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister as well as the Members from Quebec and the Ministers have tried to do something for Montreal that has been thwarted by the Liberal Party, and I am referring to Bill C-22—millions of dollars in investments and jobs for Montreal. And today, they stand in this House and refer to the Picard report and yesterday's Pichette report. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Science and Technology has indicated he would soon be responding to the Picard report. As to the recommendations of the Pichette report, we will consider them and respond in due course.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we are sick and tired of the rhetoric used by this Government, who constantly refers to Bill C-22.

Mr. Speaker, all reports concerning the east end of Montreal mention the rail industry and the oil industry. There is a difference between train wheels and pills.

Mr. Speaker, this is what I am asking the Minister: For two years he has been doing nothing about the situation in Montreal's east end. There was the Picard report, now there is the Pichette report. Will they stop skating or using rhetoric, and get some action done? This is what the Pichette report is urging you to do. Stop monkeying around and do something!

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, if the Liberal Party is so interested in action, they should talk to the Senators, and let us pass Bill C-22. There is action—it means jobs and investment in Montreal.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY STRIKE—REQUEST THAT MINISTER APPOINT MEDIATOR

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. I am sure he knows the importance of keeping western grain moving through the Seaway and that this morning marine engineer union president, Mr. Gilbert Gauthier, said that he would welcome some government involvement in trying to help solve the dispute.

In light of that fact, I want to ask the Minister of Labour whether or not he is now willing to appoint a mediator, which would help to solve the dispute on the Seaway.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have been made aware of that declaration, and I am presently looking into it.

REQUEST FOR EARLY APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I welcome what the Minister has said, and I would like to ask him whether or not he will do that today, because it is a very important issue to western Canada in terms of keeping the grain moving. The union has already agreed to have the Government involved.

Will the Minister speak to management to ensure that a mediator can be appointed today or, at the very latest, tomorrow?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, I have been made aware of the declaration. My officials are looking into it, and they will report to me later this afternoon.

AIR SAFETY

AIR-INDIA CRASH—LUGGAGE SCREENING PROCEDURE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it concerns the bombing of Air-India Flight 182.

Yesterday the Government admitted that Air-India requested bomb-sniffing dogs and that that request was turned down. The Government also admits that the X-ray machine examining luggage boarded on to the ill-fated flight broke down on the day in question.

My question is very simple. Why was Flight 182 allowed to take off when all the luggage was not properly screened?

Is the Government prepared to admit today that it bears some responsibility for the breakdown in security resulting in the loss of 329 lives?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a lawyer, although you would never know it, and he well knows that this is a matter under litigation in the courts of the country, actions taken by Air-India and other people. It is therefore sub judice, and there is nothing to be added.

Just because the hon. gentleman has access to court files and comes up with these questions does not mean to say that he should ask them. He should wait for the court actions to be heard.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Minister that I passed law school and his two sons didn't.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart: Sleaze.

Some Hon. Members: Privilege.

Mr. Mazankowski: That says it all.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for York South—Weston would put his question—

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: —without the necessity of using language that wounds people who are not in this Chamber. I know the Hon. Member would not want to leave those words on the record.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to apologize for my comments, hoping that the Minister will do likewise.

WARNINGS GIVEN BY GOVERNMENT OF INDIA OFFICIALS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): You are in the Chamber, fellow.

Mr. Rossi: Mike, go back to sleep.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has apologized.

An Hon. Member: Insincerely.

Mr. Speaker: Under the circumstances I would ask that all Hon. Members give the Member the chance and the courtesy to ask his question.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is on the same subject and is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Will the Minister admit that the officials of the Government of India warned his Department about a month before Air-India Flight 182 was bombed? Could he indicate to the House the exact nature of the official warnings? Could he also indicate what was done about the particular warnings from the Government of India?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, both my sons practise law. They don't practise slander in a Chamber from which no redress can be sought.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: He can't take it but he can dish it out.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is a bad reflection on you.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He is one of your biggest liabilities.

Mr. Nystrom: No wonder Peckford bit his finger.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York East.

INTERPROVINCIAL TRADE

REMOVAL OF BARRIERS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion my question is directed to whomever may be answering for that Minister.

One year ago in the Speech from the Throne, the Government indicated that it would not only be pursuing trade negotiations with the United States and through GATT but also with provincial Governments for the purpose of removing interprovincial trading barriers.

What has been happening on that issue? When will we see some action? Why is the Government dragging its heels in this matter?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the issue of interprovincial barriers was raised at the First Ministers' Conference in 1986, and Regional Development Ministers across Canada have also addressed the question.

Ongoing meetings have been taking place on this important matter. Specific areas have been identified for discussion. Negotiating teams have been set up to review the possible reduction or elimination of interprovincial trade barriers.

We are confident that these negotiations among the provinces will continue and that an agreement will be reached.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

CANADA POST CORPORATION—EMPLOYEES' RIGHTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. I pointed out to him in questions last week and the week before that in the recent letter carriers' strike Canada Post has been found guilty of breaking the law with regard to forcing workers to do work which is normally done by workers on strike. I pointed out that the internal document of the Post Office also indicated that this was true.

This being the case, why would the Minister of Labour not issue a statement to all employees of Canada Post explaining to them what are their rights?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to my hon. colleague in response to his letter, and I quote:

> It is incumbent upon all parties to respect the law, and there should be no necessity for a Minister of Labour to specifically advise one particular party of this fact.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INFORM EMPLOYEES OF RIGHTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's letter also said:

> The Board's decision is quite clear, and removes any misapprehensions which may have existed previously regarding the interpretation of Section 184(3)(c), and the protection it affords to employees.

Since many non-unionized workers feel intimidated, why will the Minister of Labour not take the step of informing them exactly what are their rights?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the quotation from my letter which the Hon. Member just mentioned, and I still stand behind that statement. According to me, all parties in all disputes must respect the law.

CANADA STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR RELEAST OF REPORT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. He will know that in Saskatoon in October there will be a national forum on post-secondary education.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: It is all very well for government Members to applaud, but I hope the Government will be in a position to applaud when the Minister releases the report he has done on the Canada Student Loans Program. Canadian students coming out of university are suffering a debt load of anywhere from $12,000 to $20,000 per student. That is tragic.

When will the Minister release the report? Will it be before the forum? What will he do about that crushing debt load?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member may know, I met with the executive committee of the Ministers of Education on September 14. At that time we received the report from the officials, federal and provincial, with respect to that matter. I expect that I will be able to make a statement on it within the next week or two.

EDUCATION

NATIONAL FORUM ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the forum is an important first step but it is only a first step. Are the Minister and the Government committed to a follow-up, to an ongoing forum or to a council as suggested by the Leader of the Liberal Party in a speech he made in Toronto recently so that there can be a national focus and strategy for post-secondary education?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, when I announced the establishment of the forum some months ago, it was of course the first time in the history of Canada that that had been done. I can assure the Hon. Member that this Government intends to follow up. In establishing the forum itself, the Government is taking on the opportunity to put Canada in the position of having post-secondary education again at the top of the national priority agenda of Canada.

PUBLIC SERVICE

RECOGNITION OF PRINCIPLE OF WAGE PARITY

Mrs. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Recently the Canadian Human Rights Commission directed Treasury Board to recognize the principle of wage parity by adjusting the salaries of nursing assistants and hospital workers. These men and women who belong to the Hospital Services group of the Public Service were given raises of as much as 25 per cent in many cases.

[English]

The fact is that many registered nurses are working for less than registered nursing assistants who are in the same workplace. Would the Minister please see that the traditional relativity of these salaries is restored as quickly as possible?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I indeed appreciate the Hon. Member's question and I know of her interest in this very important issue. It is a very important matter. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition can laugh about it, but the Hon. Member and I have had discussions about it and I appreciate it very much. I also know that she is sincere about it. I want all Hon. Members to know that I am very sincere about it.

There is in place a joint union-management committee that is seized of this particular issue. We are having ongoing discussions within the Treasury Board Secretariat. Hopefully we can come up with a solution to this problem because, as the Hon. Member recognizes, this would impact right across the country on various other areas as well.

ADJUSTMENT MECHANISM

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's predecessor made a commitment to give the nurses a method to adjust this by September 1. Would the Minister please put that kind of mechanism in place so that this adjustment could be made? It is separate from the joint bargaining committee.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the Hon. Member is not suggesting that we circumvent the bargaining process. I think she recognizes that is something that all Hon. Members treasure. Her suggestion is one that has been presented to me in the form of a letter and I will be responding to her in very short order.

LABOUR RELATIONS

FEDERAL MINIMUM WAGE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Since 1986 the Consumer Price Index has risen 4.1 per cent but the average industrial hourly wage has risen less than 1 per cent and the federal minimum wage has not risen at all. What measures can the Minister take to stop this erosion of the ability of federal minimum-wage earners to cope with inflation?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. As the Hon. Member knows, the Government reviews the minimum wage and I will take his comments into consideration when we effect the next review which will be shortly.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LEGAL AID PROGRAMS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and is about legal aid. Is the Minister aware of the tremendous deterioration taking place across Canada in the legal aid programs to which the federal Government contributes? If he is aware of it, what is he doing about it?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I cannot be aware of something that does not exist except in the Hon. Member's imagination. These general allegations with respect to the quality of legal aid across Canada have nothing whatsoever to do with the commitment and support of the federal Government for this very important component of our justice system.

All I can say to the Hon. Member is that we have put into the legal aid system, by virtue of agreements put forward for the next three years, record amounts of money to be made available to areas which are essentially under provincial jurisdiction. If the previous Government had had only a particle of the commitment to legal aid that this Government has, I would have been the first to congratulate it.

USER CHARGES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is so happy with the legal aid system across Canada, does he feel that user charges are an appropriate part of the legal aid system to which the federal Government contributes?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this question has, of course, arisen in the course of negotiations with the provinces. There is an element of flexibility in these agreements to allow for cost recovery, in appropriate cases for which legal aid has been provided, from those people who are indeed in a position to contribute. This is a matter that has nothing to do with Party affiliation. For example, in the Province of Ontario where, as my hon. friend will know, there is a Liberal Government, there are provisions whereby moneys can be recovered with respect to the delivery of legal aid. All I am saying is that we are setting down as a basis of the discussions we are having on an ongoing basis with the provinces fair and reasonable propositions with respect to cost recovery.

If there are individual cases, we want to make sure that they are followed in accordance with the agreement we have entered into with the provinces. In terms of actual commitment, this Government has increased substantially the amount of money contributed to legal aid across Canada. I think the Hon. Member should be the first one to acknowledge that and to give us some acclaim for that action.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—WILTHDRAWAL OF NEWFOUNDLAND FROM DELEGATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since Newfoundland walked away from the bargaining table in the fish negotiations between Canada and France we have been treated to the spectacle of the Minister of Transport and the Premier of Newfoundland, the two lilliputian titans, engaging in mutual ego bashing. Is the Prime Minister prepared to put his diplomatic skills to work by getting Newfoundland back to the table and by working out a common position with the Premier of Newfoundland so that the people of Newfoundland are not left in the lurch?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the prelude to the hon. gentleman's question was in the same category of literature as that of the author of Gulliver's Travels.

I must report to the House that the Leader of the Hon. Member's Party in the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador has made a contribution supporting the position of the Government of Canada. He should take a few lessons from that personage.

• (1500)

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, there are many in this House who think the Minister of Transport is a wit. I think they are only half-right.

Some Hon. Members: Author!

Mr. Speaker: In view of the hour, perhaps the Hon. Member would put his question.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, so I'm not seen to be a Joe Biden, I want to say that I did not plagiarize that. I give credit to the only Conservative in this House that I have liked, and that is John G. Diefenbaker.

Mr. Nystrom: You like Flora.

Mr. Rodriguez: And Flora!

Mr. Mulroney: What about Maz?

An Hon. Member: And George.

Mr. Rodriguez: And George!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONTACT PREMIER

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Irrespective of what the Leader of the NDP in Newfoundland said, or anyone else, what is important is that the people of Newfoundland participate at the bargaining table. I am asking the Prime Minister to use his influence and position to get in touch with the Premier and work out a common position so Newfoundland can take its proper place at the bargaining table in harmony with the rest of those who are negotiating.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to send over some startling information to the hon. gentleman who has just done as he is bidden. That information is that I am from Newfoundland. The Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception is from Newfoundland. The Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's is from Newfoundland. We are at the bargaining table. We are protecting Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada and we are going to do so until the end!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege regarding a remark made by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). It occurred during Question Period when the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) put a question regarding infiltration of the peace movement by CSIS. At that point the Deputy Prime Minister remarked that they are Communists.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is false.

Mr. Fulton: I know the Deputy Prime Minister would not hold that view. The peace movement in Canada is composed of physicians, members of the church, and many other Canadians from coast to coast. Knowing him to be a fair-minded man, I know he would want to withdraw that remark.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would be the first one to withdraw that remark if I had made it. I did not make it and that is the honest truth.

Mr. McDermid: Fire your researcher, Fulton.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Get up, Jim, and apologize.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I certainly take the Deputy Prime Minister at his word. As I looked over I heard the words said and I am sure Hansard will have recorded them. Perhaps whoever did say it will show the same sense the Deputy Prime Minister and I have, and withdraw those words.

Mr. Speaker: The complaint of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is that the Minister said something. His reply was that if anyone said it, he did not. The Hon. Member for Skeena has of course accepted that. He now wants whoever said it to identify themselves and withdraw. If that should happen it would solve the Chair's problem. The Chair is not in a position to solve the Hon. Member's problem easily.

I might point out, of course, that the Communist Party is not outlawed in this country. I am not at all sure that it is a question of privilege in any event. However, I ask Hon. Members to refrain from using language which may offend other Members unnecessarily, thereby putting the Chamber to the time and effort of trying to accommodate all Hon. Members and get on with the business of the day.

I am sure the Hon. Member will understand that I do not think the Chair can do anything further at this time.

Orders of the day.

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1982 came into force on April 17, 1982, following an agreement between Canada and all the provinces except Quebec;

AND WHEREAS the Government of Quebec has established a set of five proposals for constitutional change and has stated that amendments to give effect to those proposals would enable Quebec to resume a full role in the constitutional councils of Canada;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto sets out the basis on which Quebec's five constitutional proposals may be met;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto also recognizes the principle of the equality of all the provinces, provides new arrangements to foster greater harmony and cooperation between the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces and requires that conferences be convened to consider important constitutional, economic and other issues;

AND WHEREAS certain portions of the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto relate to matters referred to in section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

AND WHEREAS section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province;

NOW THEREFORE the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE

Constitution Act, 1867

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 1 thereof, the following section:

"2. (1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(2) The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

(4) Nothing in this section derogates from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 24 thereof, the following section:

"25. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, the government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate.

(2) Until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the person summoned to fill a vacancy in the Senate shall be chosen from among persons whose names have been submitted under subsection (1) by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates and must be acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 95 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Agreements on Immigration and Aliens

95A. The Government of Canada shall, at the request of the government of any province, negotiate with the government of that province for the purpose of concluding an agreement relating to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province that is appropriate to the needs and circumstances of that province.

95B. (1) Any agreement concluded between Canada and a province in relation to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province has the force of law from the time it is declared to do so in accordance with subsection 95C(1) and shall from that time have effect notwithstanding class 25 of section 91 or section 95.

(2) An agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) shall have effect only so long and so far as it is not repugnant to any provision of an Act of the Parliament of Canada that sets national standards and objectives relating to immigration or aliens, including any provision that establishes general classes of immigrants or relates to levels of immigration for Canada or that prescribes classes of individuals who are inadmissible into Canada.

(3) The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies in respect of any agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) and in respect of anything done by the Parliament or Government of Canada, or the legislature or government of a province, pursuant to any such agreement.

95C. (1) A declaration that an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) has the force of law may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement.

(2) An amendment to an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized

(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement; or

(b) in such other manner as is set out in the agreement.

95D. Sections 46 to 48 of the Constitution Act, 1982 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of any declaration made pursuant to subsection 95C(1), any amendment to an agreement made pursuant to subsection 95C(2) or any amendment made pursuant to section 95E.

95E. An amendment to sections 95A to 95D or this section may be made in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection 38(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, but only if the amendment is authorized by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of all the provinces that are, at the time of the amendment, parties to an agreement that has the force of law under subsection 95B(1)."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 96 thereof, the following heading:

"General"

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 101 thereof, the following heading:

"Courts Established by the Parliament of Canada"

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 101 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Supreme Court of Canada

101A. (1) The court existing under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada is hereby continued as the general court of appeal for Canada, and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a superior court of record.

(2) The Supreme Court of Canada shall consist of a chief justice to be called the Chief Justice of Canada and eight other judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor General in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

101B. (1) Any person may be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who, after having been admitted to the bar of any province or territory, has, for a total of at least ten years, been a judge of any court in Canada or a member of the bar of any province or territory.

(2) At least three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be appointed from among persons who, after having been admitted to the bar of Quebec, have, for a total of at least ten years, been judges of any court of Quebec or of any court established by the Parliament of Canada, or members of the bar of Quebec.

101C. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court.

(2) Where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

(3) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) of any of the three judges necessary to meet the requirement set out in subsection 101B(2), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the Government of Quebec.

(4) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) otherwise than as required under subsection (3), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the government of a province other than Quebec.

101D. Sections 99 and 100 apply in respect of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

101E. (1) Sections 101A to 101D shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws under section 101 except to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with those sections.

(2) For greater certainty, section 101A shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws relating to the reference of questions of law or fact, or any other matters, to the Supreme Court of Canada."

7. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 106 thereof, the following section:

"106A. (1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

(2) Nothing in this section extends the legislative powers of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces."

8. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and sections:

"XII—CONFERENCES ON THE ECONOMY AND OTHER MATTERS

148. A conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year to discuss the state of the Canadian economy and such other matters as may be appropriate.

XIII—REFERENCES

149. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

Constitution Act, 1982

9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part."

10. Section 44 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"44. Subject to section 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons."

Constitution Amendment, 1987

11. Subsection 46(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province."

12. Subsection 47(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution."

13. Part VI of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"PART VI

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

50. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate;

(b) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries; and

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon."

14. Subsection 52(2) of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(d) any other amendment to the Constitution of Canada."

15. Section 61 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Act 1982, or a reference to the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1982, shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

General

16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

CITATION

17. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock p.m., the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) had the floor.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on September 22, one week ago today, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) if he would facilitate a meeting of women's constitutional experts and government constitutional advisers to examine the impact, if any, of the constitutional accord on women's equality rights. The Prime Minister facetiously dismissed the question, as did the Canadian Press.

Today the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women made a similar request, enlarging it to suggest that there be a national conference convened for the purpose of seeing if there is any case to be made for women's equality rights and other equality rights, including that of minorities, having been put in jeopardy. I urge the Prime Minister to look very seriously at this request and not just shrug it off as he did my earlier request. He should facilitate the holding of such a national conference.

I also urge him to pay some attention to the report of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitutional Accord. I was really shocked this morning when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) made no reference to the recommendations of that committee. It is as if all the work we did during the summer, all the witnesses we heard at our hearings, all the recommendations they made to us, were for nought. The Minister simply ignored the report. He probably has not read it, but he could have at least tried to have read the last chapter.

Since no other Minister of this House was involved in the process of drawing up the Constitutional Accord, I think all of us would expect the Prime Minister, in preparing himself to speak on the Accord, as I am sure he will, to very carefully study the recommendations of the joint committee concerning aboriginal rights, particularly self-government, and the unfairness of the Accord to the people of the North.

Indeed, there is a very strong recommendation that there is no justice for the exclusion of the territorial government's nominees to the Supreme Court and that the unanimity rule for the entry of new provinces is much too constraining. It is recommended that linguistic duality be promoted as well as preserved, that there be far more attention paid to the ethnocultural reality of Canada, and that the First Ministers should give serious consideration to the possible repeal of section 33 of the Charter, the over-ride section, which is of particular concern to minorities in the country. It is recommended that there be a process of Charter reviews since it became so clear during the hearings this summer that many aspects of the Charter itself are questionable. In some ways we are having a good deal more trouble with the Charter than with the Constitutional Accord itself.

Finally, we hope that the Prime Minister will at least address the question of the process of constitutional reform of which the Minister made no mention at all this morning. Apparently the Minister thinks that the process of the First Ministers getting together to draw up an agreement and consulting the Canadian public only after it had been done was just dandy.

The Special Joint Committee makes a very powerful recommendation that there be a permanent joint committee of both Houses on constitutional reform and renewal which would hold hearings across the country before the First Ministers meet on such matters as equality rights, the ethnocultural reality of Canada, the over-ride clause of the Charter, and the aboriginal peoples' rights to self-government.

It is recommended that we encourage the Canadian public, as well as the constitutional experts and professional associations, to participate in those hearings and that they be funded to do so. We cannot go on forever expecting volunteer groups to take hours and hours of their time preparing learned briefs without any payment for their efforts. We must, therefore, have funded participation. As a result of this process specific recommendations can be made to First Ministers so that they will know what is of most concern to Canadians with regard to constitutional reform.

I hope there would be some indication from the Prime Minister that attention has been paid to this and other recommendations of the joint committee. I would ask also that they read the New Democratic Party addendum. I spoke at length this morning about our concerns for the equality rights of women and our amendment in that connection. My colleagues will be speaking of our amendments already foreshadowed by the joint committee report with respect to fairness to our northern citizens and fairness to aboriginal peoples. They will be speaking in the course of the debate on those proposed amendments.

Finally, I want to reiterate that saying yes to Quebec after Quebec said yes to Canada in the referendum is one of the most exciting achievements that we have known in this generation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say how pleased I am to be able to participate in this historic debate and to have been able to sit on the committee. The joint committee of the House and the Senate studied the Meech Lake Accord and heard from a number of witnesses. I will come to my conclusions about the witnesses in a moment, but I cannot refrain from putting forward the point which witness after witness put forward, that is, that they needed more time to do a proper job.

The Meech Lake Accord is an achievement which I support for reasons that I will remind the House of in a moment. However, it could have been much better if the Government had been generous with it, if the Government had held hearings to give the people a true opportunity to put forward their opinions.

In spite of the committee hearings we experienced today what can only be referred to as executive federalism, that is, the changing of our Constitution basically by action of the executive of Parliament, the executive branch of the federal Government, and the executive of the provinces. That is not the way in which the Constitution should move forward.

My colleague, the Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), spoke about the joyous occasion which she thought this ought to be. In many ways it is, but how much better it would have been if the Government had been generous toward the people of Canada and given them every opportunity to prepare their brief in the amount of time they needed and to present them. Even more important, the Government should have given the people of Canada the hearing that they deserve.

I can say as a member of the committee who was present from beginning to end that there was never any intention of the Government to listen to the people of Canada. The Minister who was responsible for the matter, Senator Murray, indicated that they were only interested in hearing about egregious errors. They were not interested in hearing about ways in which the Accord could be improved. They were not interested in hearing about things which could be added to the Accord to make it a document which would have the support of a much broader constituency. That was not of interest to them. Their interest was only in technical errors in the work of the executive at the federal and provincial levels.

I am disappointed in both of those features. I am disappointed because my own conclusion and that of members of my Party who sat on the committee and listened to the witnesses is that it is a step forward, it is an Accord that we should support, but that it could have been a better opportunity for our country. It could have been an opportunity to address concerns of a number of constituencies which could have been addressed without in any way taking anything from the achievement represented by the Meech Lake and Langevin agreements.

A number of criticisms were made of the agreement. There are criticisms of the idea of a distinct society, criticisms of giving the provincial Governments any role at all in the composition of the Supreme Court, and criticism of the way in which Senate reform is to be brought forward, hopefully, but not necessarily, on an urgent basis, much to our regret.

However, by and large the amendments, and certainly the amendments to which the Official Opposition has loaned its support and which we have signed, are amendments which take nothing away from the fundamental achievement of Meech Lake which, as I have indicated, merely—if I can use that term—clarify it in a number of areas in which clarification is in order and add to it by bringing to the Meech Lake Accord the support of a number of groups which feel left out.

I would like to indicate why the Meech Lake Accord has my support. Our Leader spoke this morning of the very important achievement of bringing the Government of Quebec back into the process of negotiating further changes in our Constitution. I understood, and perhaps some Members of the House do not, the circumstances that in my view made it impossible for the Government of Quebec to have approved of the patriation and Charter in 1982. Even if the Meech Lake Accord had been presented by the Government of the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, I do not think it would have been acceptable to the Government of Premier Levesque. Therefore, I am one who looks at that period as one where unanimity was not obtainable.

In the present circumstances, unanimity has been attainable and has been attained. The mere bringing of the Government of Quebec back to the table in constitutional evolution assures that there will be further evolution of our Constitution or, at least, that there can be. Without Quebec at the table we could have reruns of the kinds of sad failures that occurred with the native self-government initiative where, with a certain measure of goodwill on the part of the parties who participated, it was still impossible to work out a satisfactory agreement.

In the future, when we talk about Senate reform, an elected Senate, as I hope we will, and when we talk about the possible redistribution of powers between Section 91 and Section 92, about strengthening the Canadian economic union, and when we talk, as I hope we will, in future constitutional discussions about removing the notwithstanding clause so that no legislature and the Parliament of this country can deliberately pass laws which defy the Charter and to which the Charter is not applicable, Quebec will be there.

When all of that constitutional agenda; native rights, the recognition of the multicultural community in Canada, things that were not done in this round of constitutional negotiations, are discussed Quebec will be there, and that to me is a substantial achievement. It is an achievement which makes the Meech Lake Accord worth supporting and my leader indicated all of that.

I think it is also important to indicate that Quebec's adherence and support was not achieved at a cost of weakening our country. It was not achieved at a cost of making what has been wrongly referred to as the most decentralized federal system in the world—which our system is not—an even more decentralized system. I have studied the Accord. I have heard the witnesses. What I like about the Meech Lake Accord is that it does not do these things.

If one remembers, back in the early 1970s governments and spokespersons from Quebec had a pretty heavy list. They wanted to take control of the CBC within the borders of the Province of Quebec. They wanted to take over the communications power. They wanted a strong and specific power in the area of international relations. They wanted to license radio and television broadcasting stations and cable companies. They wanted the responsibility for the situation of the francophone minorities in other provinces of our country. These were matters which were in the past on the agenda of the Province of Quebec under former governments. They were matters which would have led to a Quebec within Canada with a very special status.

In my opinion, special status is one thing that is not a part of the Meech Lake Accord. A weakening of the federal Government is not a part of the Meech Lake Accord. As I look through it, I see that Section 91 and Section 92 which allocate powers to the two levels of Government are unchanged. Not only are they unchanged, but specific language is put into the Meech Lake Accord to make it absolutely certain that nothing is to be taken away or added to either level of Government's powers under Section 91 and Section 92. That is there specifically. That applies, of course, to spending and to fund raising, raising money by various means of taxation. It is unchanged in the Meech Lake Accord. Both levels of Government retain all the powers they had before without gaining anything and without giving anything away.

I am particularly happy as well that the concept which the former Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, brought forward in the Official Languages Bill in 1969, enhanced as we continued in terms of constitutional amendments in 1981 and 1982, is unchanged. Bilingualism, as we conceived it back in 1969, is if anything strengthened in the Meech Lake Accord. It is not strengthened as much as I would have liked, but it is marginally strengthened. The door is open and I hope it will remain open for us to strengthen it in the future.

For example, Section 23, which provides for instruction for minority language communities across the country where numbers warrant, is still there. We in the Liberal Party called for the removal of that condition "where numbers warrant". We wanted a more generous attitude toward the situation of official language minorities across the country, whether English or French. I regret to reflect that, from what we understand, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the federal Government did not even ask for such changes. No suggestion was made to the provinces that "where numbers warrant" should be removed. However, that provision is there and it is strengthened marginally, as I indicated.

The Meech Lake Accord puts an obligation on the provincial Governments and the federal Government to preserve the linguistic duality of our country. Not only is Section 23 still there to continue to protect the official language minorities, but the Official Languages Act itself is still the law of the land. The provision is still in the Constitution whereby any province can declare itself to be officially bilingual, and where citizens' rights are enhanced in whichever province that occurs.

One opportunity was lost by our whole country through the Prime Minister's failure to raise that issue, to try on the occasion of the Meech Lake Accord to enhance the opportunity by seeing another province or another two provinces recognize officially their bilingual character. In our amendments, and the Liberal Party policy, last November, we called on Canada to move further along the line of provinces being officially bilingual. Nothing was done about it. However, as I indicated, I do not see the Meech Lake Accord as taking anything away from the type of official bilingualism that was begun by the Trudeau Government and which continues to be a national commitment.

Another thing that makes me pleased about the Meech Lake Accord is that the national leadership of the federal Government continues, in my view, to be a national possibility. There is still room with the powers the federal Government has, with peace, order and good government which is not diminished, with the undoubted power, clarified, of the federal Government to spend money in areas of exclusive provincial responsibility, hedged, admittedly, by a provision contained in the Meech Lake Accord, but recognized that there still is an opportunity for the federal Government to provide national leadership.

I think there is a certain confusion in the country about that subject. I do not think the federal Government is providing national leadership now. I think we have a federal Government that is withdrawing from its role of national leadership. One could see from the daycare program the Government proposed that it is not interested in providing national leadership in national programs. One can see from the answer the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) gave me not one half hour ago about legal aid that the Government is not interested in providing national leadership. One can see in the environment, in consumer protection, in the cries of our cities for support for urban infrastructural costs, that the Government is not interested in providing national leadership.

But that is a very different thing from saying that the evolution of our Constitution deprives the federal Government of the opportunity to provide national leadership. I think the way in which we will have national leadership from the federal Government is to defeat the present Government and to elect a Government of a different political colour, for instance, a Liberal Government.

Mr. Nystrom: No!

Mr. Kaplan: The Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party complains. Let me just say that I think that if an NDP Government were elected, the Meech Lake Accord would not be an obstacle to it in exercising national leadership.

When one looks at the Meech Lake Accord one should not hold it against the Accord that we have a federal Government that has copped out of providing national leadership in many, many important areas of life in Canada. That is this Government's style. It is a style that has won it the low position which it now holds in Canadian public opinion.

In our minority report we introduced a number of amendments. I think that it is accurate to characterize these amendments as clarifications and as additions. I cannot see them being characterized or considered as derogations from what was achieved at Meech Lake. I honestly believe, and it is the position of our Party, that it is not too late for these amendments to be considered by the Governments of Canada, provincial and federal, that have not yet taken the final steps that would make this Accord part of our Constitution. If that were done and if the list of amendments were considered and adopted, how could anyone argue that they would not improve the Meech Lake Accord?

The best the committee could do in its majority report was to come to the conclusion, not that the Liberal amendments would take anything away from the Accord, but that they could not be achieved, that there would not be the will or the consensus among Governments to make such changes. That is speculation by government Members, perhaps directed by the Government House Leader or the Minister responsible for this measure. I have more faith than that in the possibility of these amendments being adopted.

The amendments are not supported by us alone. These amendments have tremendous support across Canada. There are amendments dealing with multiculturalism, putting the question of native self-government on the agenda and dealing with the entry of the territories into provincehood. Each one of our amendments is an amendment that has tremendous support across the country. They take absolutely nothing away from what was achieved at Meech Lake. I want to urge Members of Parliament to reflect on that point.

There are now a number of Liberal provincial Governments in the country. It is a reasonable question to ask what the federal Liberals feel the provincial Liberal Governments should do. In speaking for myself I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the last thing we would want from any Liberal Leader or Liberal Premier is for them to say, "Well, I have read the Liberal amendments in the minority report and I have changed my mind about the Meech Lake Accord. We will only support it in this province if the other Parties agree to the minority Liberal report that was just put out in Ottawa". That is the last thing that we want. We want the Meech Lake Accord to go forward. What we are hoping is that Premiers and, indeed, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), will look at our list, consult with their colleagues and reflect on the fact that these amendments do not diminish the achievement of Meech Lake but that, in fact, they enhance it. They bring to it the support of many groups that now feel out of the process, that feel they are not part of it. I think these amendments can be achieved. I urge them on all Hon. Members.

I hope that procedures will be developed in this debate for us to be able to present each of our amendments for the consideration of our colleagues. I would like to see Members of the House vote against the amendments. How could they vote against the recognition of multiculturalism as a fundamental characteristic of our country? Or how could they vote against the idea of an elected Senate? I name but a few, Mr. Speaker.

I want to conclude by asking Members to look at the amendments, not the weight of them, not their number, but for what they each stand, and for what they would do to make the Meech Lake Accord a better deal for Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions, comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay).

Mr. Léo Duguay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure and a sense of privilege and honour that I rise today to support the Meech Lake Agreement now before this House.

One of the witnesses who came before the committee, the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau, recalled that in 1930 Parliamentarian Henri Bourassa noted that in Canada there were an Ontario patriotism, a Quebec patriotism and a Western patriotism, but no Canadian patriotism and that there would be no Canadian nation as long as there would be no Canadian patriotism.

Like Mr. Trudeau, I find that essential, Mr. Speaker, and I propose to assess the various clauses of the Accord in the light of what Bourassa called—and I am referring here to Henri Bourassa—Canadian patriotism. But Mr. Trudeau was wrong because clearly there is a Canadian patriotism, but we must go out and tap that patriotism instead of staying in Ottawa and calling for it.

Mr. Speaker, allow me in my preamble to refer briefly to my roots and explain the starting point in my assessment. My family was in Manitoba before Manitoba entered the Canadian Confederation. My parents came to St. Boniface during the 40s from a small Manitoba village named Sainte-Anne-des-Chênes. I would point out to you that in a province where the majority language is English, my parents did not speak that language. So I, as a youngster learned very soon in the street what it meant to belong to a minority group, when my first language was French and all my friends spoke English only. I soon learned also that in Manitoba teaching French was not allowed. I vividly remember that when the school inspector came to visit our classes, our French books and crucifixes had to be hidden away. French was taught nonetheless but it was against the law.

Later in life, I had an opportunity to represent Canada to the University Hockey World Games in Turin, in 1966. And there, for the first time, I noted that the world does not always perceive us as we see ourselves in Canada. The translator who was provided for our team only spoke Italian and French, because it was taken for granted that all Canadian hockey players were French-speaking. I also felt for the first time what it means for a young Canadian to walk behind one's flag and to experience the emotion felt for this wonderful country.

So I view that Accord as a fancophone from outside Quebec, as a very proud Manitoban and as a Canadian, and I state as clearly as I can that it is not impossible to be a threefold patriot. Only the weak are afraid of a distinct society. Only the weak wish everybody were alike in Canada.

[English]

I come to the House to speak in this debate as a franco-Manitoban, as a westerner. I can only say to you, Mr. Speaker, that for westerners Ottawa is pretty far away. We know that it is far away because we cannot drive to it in one day. We know that our National Arts Centre, our House of Commons and our Government are located in Ottawa, and we know that they are all far away. We know what happened when a purported national Government passed a national energy plan and struck the Foreign Investment Review Agency. We know that these instruments have the capacity for removing the capital that we westerners require to develop ourselves.

• (1540)

This morning the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) mentioned conflict and confrontation. In western Canada we know a great deal about conflict and confrontation. For a long time we have felt that this is what our national Government was doing to us.

When I look at Meech Lake, as Mr. Bourassa has stated, I speak of a Canadian patriotism. I know it is possible to be a Manitoban, a franco-Manitoban, and a Canadian, and that one does not exclude the others.

When we started our work as a committee this summer the first thing that was said to us was that our committee was a sham and a rubber stamp. Because I wished to be sure that all of the questions of my constituents were put on the table, on the first day I asked the Minister responsible what was the hurry with this process. Had the federal Government sold the farm? What was the purpose of the committee? I asked those questions, and I can stand before you today and state that I asked them because I wanted the answers, and I received the answers that I wished.

I know today that these were the wrong questions to ask. They were not the questions that mattered. People talked about the process being a sham. Of course, hindsight is the best teacher we have ever had. Looking back we might suggest a different process for the next round. The committee did exactly that.

When people talk about a process to avoid substance, I am reminded of the preacher who wrote in the margin of his speech for Sunday, "Weak point, shout louder". Process is one consideration, substance is another. The substantial agreement of Meech Lake is far more important than the process that led to it.

When people talk about federal or provincial power, my constituents remind me regularly that who provides which service is less important to them than the fact that a quality service is provided. They do not wish us to fight about power. They wish Governments to deliver the services required.

When the media criticizes this Accord and the process, I know that the committee would wish me to say to them and to the other critics that we wish they would read the letters from the 301 people who wrote in to us, the testimony of the 100 or so witnesses who appeared before the committee, and the complete analysis of the committee's report. We have not only put forth our recommendations for all to see, we have put forth the analysis which led to them. Critics should pass the test of agreeing or disagreeing with our analysis and not with some superficial vision that they read in the newspaper.

The Accord allows Quebec to resume its full role in the Canadian constitutional family and thus repair the damage done to national unity when Quebec was isolated in 1981.

After the referendum, former Prime Minister Trudeau promised renewal. What Quebec got was an agreement in 1982 which did not reflect the renewal that they sought. The Accord respects the equality of the provinces, assures federal authority in the capacity to exercise national leadership. It fosters co-operation and reinforces the federal structure of Canada.

It is that vision of Canada that I wish to support. This vision does not see a strong federal Government and weak provincial Governments. It does not see winning and losing, but rather it sees all Canadians and all Governments working together in the best national interest.

One question that we asked ourselves was, should we reopen the Accord? We concluded that it was the unanimous agreement of 11 First Ministers, all of whom are committed to proceeding with its ratification, that those 11 Ministers represented us, and that it would be our decision as a Parliament to agree or not to agree. In our view, opening up the Accord and considering amendments would have led to pressure to reopen the Accord for other subjects. There is no guarantee that, if we were to reopen this Accord, the necessary consensus could then be restructured on a different set of objectives.

Further, there is no pragmatic reason to reopen the Accord, since many of the changes being sought will be easier to accomplish in the future when Quebec sits as a full and participating member for constitutional renewal. There is no morally justifiable reason to reopen the Accord. I wish to remind all Hon. Members that, unlike a number of those groups seeking changes, Quebec was left isolated, and again may be left isolated.

I support the suggestion that we must look at aboriginal self-government. It is very clear that we wish to do that. Need I remind Members that we have had four such conferences and they all ended in failure? Merely saying that another conference should be held is not sufficient. All of the participants must rework their positions and seek a solution.

There is no question that the deliberations that led to more discussion and concern on our part was the matter of the Charter of Rights. We came to the conclusion, based not only on our own opinions but on the opinions of countless witnesses who supported that position, that the distinct society clause will not take away, override, or supersede Charter rights. The courts can now take into account the reality of Quebec's distinct society, where relevant. Quebec's willing acceptance of the Charter's legitimacy strengthens the Charter itself and the values it reflects.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, for a franco-Manitoban like myself, constitutional recognition of the existence of French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians in this country marks a decisive step in our history, as does confirmation in our Constitution of the role of Parliament and of each provincial legislature to protect this fundamental reality.

Obviously, some people will want us to go even further. Suffice it to say that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had put on the table the promotion of minority rights throughout the country during these discussions and that there was no concensus at the time.

Our Government is now sponsoring a Bill on official languages. I believe that it will soon become law. We are making some progress, and the Committee itself recommended that this major issue of the promotion of minority rights be put back on the table.

[English]

Senate reform will be the first item on the next round of constitutional discussions. I believe that Senate reform will occur. What is more important, I disagree with the suggestion of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition this morning that he would prefer returning to the seven provinces or the 50 per cent majority for this item. The committee disagrees. I need not remind Members that under that formula the two large provinces and five others could tell my province or the Province of Alberta what type of Senate reform they would have. We believe that to be inappropriate. There will be Senate reform, and there will be an elected Senate, but it will be the type of reform that is supported by each province in Canada.

All through the summer the committee met, with the participation of all Parties. It worked long hours, it heard at least a hundred hours of testimony from witnesses who gave this subject incredibly close consideration despite all of the comments on the process being hasty. These Canadians had obviously thought about this a great deal. They cared a lot about the subject. They wished to present their views to us and to all Canadians.

The committee's report stated that the question before Parliament and therefore before us in preparing this report is not whether a different solution might have been reached, or whether other constitutional issues might also have been addressed. Clearly the answer is yes to those questions. It is quite simply whether or not the Accord that has been agreed upon should be adopted, or whether any amendments should now be adopted.

The evidence heard by the committee suggests that the terms of this Accord reflect a compromise. No one should expect perfection in a compromise. A number of witnesses told us that the provisions of the Accord as it is now constituted are the absolute minimum terms upon which it will be possible to secure agreement among the Government of Canada and the provinces including Quebec not only now but into the foreseeable future.

It was under this opinion, which was reflected by most of the witnesses, that we recommended adoption of the Accord.

There were as always—and there will be here in the House of Commons—a number of worse case scenarios put forth. If these assumptions had been accepted by the committee, it would be appropriate to reject the Accord on that basis. If the worse case assumptions were the appropriate criteria, one would have withheld legislative power from the provinces over property and civil rights out of fear that it could be used to expropriate all private land holdings.

The committee looked at the worse case scenarios. Dean John Whyte of Queen's University Law School gave us a test in which we could address them. It was as follows: "Therefore the deficiencies of the Accord must be serious and they must be likely". As a member of the committee I say to the House that the critics have not met their own test. The deficiencies of the Accord are not serious and they are not likely.

The committee will now deal with the future of constitutional change. The British North America Act was not written as a constitution for all of us as modern Canadians. It served us well, and the repatriation of 1982 was important to Canada. In the future the process can be improved. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms should be looked at again, because questions are being asked about its application. Residents of Yukon and the Northwest Territories should have the same rights as other Canadians in respect of having candidates for the Supreme Court. Aboriginal self-government must be on our agenda. The promotion of our linguistic duality must be on our agenda. The ethno-cultural quality of Canada must be on our agenda, as well as a reformed Senate and the fisheries considerations.

These do not in any way detract from the Meech Lake Accord. They are things which we as Canadians have determined that we want to look at in terms of our future Constitution.

In conclusion, I want to make some comments from the point of view of a westerner who has seen conflict and confrontation. I think I came here partially because I wanted to bring to Canada a new sense of civility. Partisanship, yes, and disagreement, yes, but based on principle not on power. It is not who wins or loses. It is not the central power or the federal power versus the decentralized or provincial power. Canadians are residents of their provinces and they are Canadians. They do not want to fight over power. They want services provided.

It is not whether the Senate is appointed by the federal Government or the provinces, although it is clearly reasonable in our state to have the provinces being given a say in appointments to the Senate. What Canadians have been telling us is that they want an elected Senate. However, until it is elected, it seems reasonable that both groups would be represented.

Also it seems reasonable that judges should be appointed in consultation between the federal Government and the provincial Government. After all, the umpire of Confederation should be chosen by both teams.

It is not whether shared services are paid for by the federal Government or the provincial Government. I remind everyone that there is only one taxpayer. That taxpayer wants services provided and does not want his or her resources wasted by a fight over who is to deliver the services.

The findings of the committee really addressed themselves to a serious analysis of the following question: Is this Accord a good deal for Canada? In our report we addressed sequentially all the considerations. We stated our analyses and we gave our recommendations.

I think the committee has said—and I want to say it to the House—that the Accord is a great act of national reconciliation. It makes the country whole again. It is not flawed, as some say. It has its imperfections and its deficiencies. It points out a number of other national concerns which need to be addressed. It can be improved. The Constitution can be improved. The process of constitution-making needs to be improved. The substance of constitutional change needs to be addressed.

I came to the House of Commons in 1984 with a feeling about Canada which reflected my roots as a francophone outside Quebec, a minority member of this great Canadian country; as a Manitoban and a westerner who felt that confrontation and conflict had taken over where working together ought to be the norm; and, above all, as a Canadian who felt that this country in all its parts was a magnificent place in which to live, one of which we were all proud.

The Meech Lake Accord is not a perfect document for all times. It accomplishes its major objective, that of bringing Quebec into Confederation and of making a better Canada for all. I recommend to the House of Commons its adoption with all due speed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), I must announce the questions to be raised tonight.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1982 came into force on April 17, 1982, following an agreement between Canada and all the provinces except Quebec;

AND WHEREAS the Government of Quebec has established a set of five proposals for constitutional change and has stated that amendments to give effect to those proposals would enable Quebec to resume a full role in the constitutional councils of Canada;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto sets out the basis on which Quebec's five constitutional proposals may be met;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto also recognizes the principle of the equality of all the provinces, provides new arrangements to foster greater harmony and cooperation between the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces and requires that conferences be convened to consider important constitutional, economic and other issues;

AND WHEREAS certain portions of the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto relate to matters referred to in section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

AND WHEREAS section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province;

NOW THEREFORE the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE

Constitution Act, 1867

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 1 thereof, the following section:

"2. (1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(2) The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

Constitution Amendment, 1987

(4) Nothing in this section derogates from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 24 thereof, the following section:

"25. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, the government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate.

(2) Until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the person summoned to fill a vacancy in the Senate shall be chosen from among persons whose names have been submitted under subsection (1) by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates and must be acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 95 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Agreements on Immigration and Aliens

95A. The Government of Canada shall, at the request of the government of any province, negotiate with the government of that province for the purpose of concluding an agreement relating to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province that is appropriate to the needs and circumstances of that province.

95B. (1) Any agreement concluded between Canada and a province in relation to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province has the force of law from the time it is declared to do so in accordance with subsection 95C(1) and shall from that time have effect notwithstanding class 25 of section 91 or section 95.

(2) An agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) shall have effect only so long and so far as it is not repugnant to any provision of an Act of the Parliament of Canada that sets national standards and objectives relating to immigration or aliens, including any provision that establishes general classes of immigrants or relates to levels of immigration for Canada or that prescribes classes of individuals who are inadmissible into Canada.

(3) The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies in respect of any agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) and in respect of anything done by the Parliament or Government of Canada, or the legislature or government of a province, pursuant to any such agreement.

95C. (1) A declaration that an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) has the force of law may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement.

(2) An amendment to an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized

(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement; or

(b) in such other manner as is set out in the agreement.

95D. Sections 46 to 48 of the Constitution Act, 1982 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of any declaration made pursuant to subsection 95C(1), any amendment to an agreement made pursuant to subsection 95C(2) or any amendment made pursuant to section 95E.

95E. An amendment to sections 95A to 95D or this section may be made in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection 38(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, but only if the amendment is authorized by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of all the provinces that are, at the time of the amendment, parties to an agreement that has the force of law under subsection 95B(1)."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 96 thereof, the following heading:

"General"

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 101 thereof, the following heading:

"Courts Established by the Parliament of Canada"

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 101 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Supreme Court of Canada

101A. (1) The court existing under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada is hereby continued as the general court of appeal for Canada, and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a superior court of record.

(2) The Supreme Court of Canada shall consist of a chief justice to be called the Chief Justice of Canada and eight other judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor General in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

101B. (1) Any person may be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who, after having been admitted to the bar of any province or territory, has, for a total of at least ten years, been a judge of any court in Canada or a member of the bar of any province or territory.

(2) At least three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be appointed from among persons who, after having been admitted to the bar of Quebec, have, for a total of at least ten years, been judges of any court of Quebec or of any court established by the Parliament of Canada, or members of the bar of Quebec.

101C. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court.

(2) Where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

(3) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) of any of the three judges necessary to meet the requirement set out in subsection 101B(2), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the Government of Quebec.

(4) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) otherwise than as required under subsection (3), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the government of a province other than Quebec.

101D. Sections 99 and 100 apply in respect of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

101E. (1) Sections 101A to 101D shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws under section 101 except to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with those sections.

(2) For greater certainty, section 101A shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws relating to the reference of questions of law or fact, or any other matters, to the Supreme Court of Canada."

7. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 106 thereof, the following section:

"106A. (1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

(2) Nothing in this section extends the legislative powers of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces."

8. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and sections:

"XII—Conferences on the Economy and Other Matters

148. A conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year to discuss the state of the Canadian economy and such other matters as may be appropriate.

XIII—References

149. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

Constitution Act, 1982

9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part."

10. Section 44 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"44. Subject to section 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons."

11. Subsection 46(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province."

12. Subsection 47(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution."

13. Part VI of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"PART VI

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

50. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate;

(b) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries; and

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon."

14. Subsection 52(2) of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(d) any other amendment to the Constitution of Canada."

15. Section 61 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Act 1982, or a reference to the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1982, shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

General

16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

CITATION

17. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like in the first place to congratulate the Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) for the excellent speech he made in this House a few minutes ago.

Mr. Speaker, today we are having this historic debate in the House just like the historic debate we had seven years ago on the patriation of the Canadian Constitution.

[English]

I recommend very strongly to Members of the House the report of the joint committee which talks about not only the things that must be done today in terms of the Meech Lake agreement but also some recommendations for the future. I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will look very seriously at the recommendations we are making not only about the Meech Lake agreement today but about future constitutional change, about what should be on the agenda, and about the fact that we are recommending a joint committee of the House and of the other place on an ongoing basis for constitutional discussion. These are very important matters.

We had a broad consensus of the three political Parties in attendance at the meetings this summer. I was very proud, along with the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), to be a member of the committee and to see the consensus among all three political Parties.

Before rising to speak today, I went through some back editions of Hansard and came upon the one for May 22, 1980, two days after the national referendum in Quebec. At that time the New Democratic Party had an opposition day, and I was the constitutional critic for my Party. We had an opportunity to put the following motion before the House:

That this House welcomes the result of the referendum in Quebec and pledges itself to interpret that vote as a clear call for constitutional change.

I am very happy to say that I think all three Parties recognize that back on May 20, 1980 the people of Quebec voted yes for Canada and yes for constitutional change. I think the Meech Lake agreement will provide that major constitutional change and will bring Quebec, in the constitutional sense, back into the Canadian family. I believe that is very important.

[Translation]

Seven years ago, Quebec said yes to Canada in a referendum and now, Mr. Speaker, we have the opportunity to say yes to Quebec and we should do so. Let us not forget, Mr. Speaker, that Quebec's National Assembly passed the Meech Lake Accord three or four months ago. Could I now vote against Quebec? I am proud also to be from the first English-speaking province in Canada that passed the agreement last week in Regina, that is Saskatchewan, my native province.

Another quite significant fact, Mr. Speaker, is that now the three federal political Parties are in agreement. We have 11 First Ministers who agree on the Meech Lake Accord.

• (1600)

[English]

I think that is really significant.

I would like to go back over the history of why it is so important to have Quebec back in the Constitution, back in the Canadian federation in the constitutional sense. We spent some 25 years talking about what kind of a constitutional arrangement Quebec wants. We spent a lot of political energy on that question over the last quarter of a century.

[Translation]

I remember quite well the quiet revolution in Quebec during the sixties with Mr. Lesage as Premier and other important people such as René Lévesque. There were two or three others who were also important at that time. Afterwards, there was Daniel Johnson's election campaign with the theme: "Independence or equality." He won the election with such a platform. Then there was the Victoria Conference in 1971 where a constitutional agreement was signed by all Premiers but then Mr. Bourassa who was Premier, on his return to Quebec revised his position. There was still some constitutional confusion afterwards.

During that period, the Parti Québecois with Mr. René Lévesque was founded. I very well remember November 15, 1976, and I think that all Canadians, all Quebecers well remember that date, November 15, 1976, when Mr. Lévesque won the election with a huge majority in Quebec, forcing the goal of national independence for the people of Quebec. After that there was the May 1980 referendum. That was a tough moment for Quebecers, and not only for Quebecers but for all Canadians across this great land.

[English]

We spent much political energy and much energy in general trying to come to terms with how Canada is organized. We now have an historic opportunity to have Quebec in the Confederation constitutionally, and I say, let us not miss that opportunity.

This afternoon, I would like to read the words of one person who appeared before our committee, and I will do so in English because I think it is a very important message for those of us who are English-speaking Canadians. It is the testimony provided by Madam Solange Chaput-Rolland. For me, she was the most moving witness who appeared before the committee. She appealed to those of us in the other nine provinces to understand how badly needed is the Meech Lake Accord. She said:

> I think none outside Quebec knew the reality of the referendum. I travelled throughout Canada, about a few months after. It was all over, eh? Good. It was not exactly all over. Families against families, towns against towns, fathers and mothers not speaking to their children.
> (During the Referendum) we spoke with thousands of Quebeckers. Women wanted to leave their children a country as big as the one they had received from their father. That was mainly the article that reached the heart, because you are right: in this country if we put a little more heart into what we are doing, maybe we would be aware of the hurt we inflict on others.
> And then we came home. We went back to the National Assembly, back to our villages, back to our houses, back to the friends that were no more friends; they were on the "yes", we were on the "no". It was not a picnic, it was not a social gathering, it was not a think-tank, it was a battle between brothers, a dangerous, divisive battle, and we still feel it. It was not 100 years ago, it was seven years ago that we lived that referendum.
> English Canada could not care less one month after, and it stung me and it stung all of us who fought so hard to remain in Canada and to find ourselves outside of Canada. You know, it was a very dramatic gesture when Mr. Levesque put the flag of Quebec at half mast on the day you were all celebrating here.
> But our hearts were at half mast too that day, because we were out of a country we had chosen to remain.
> So the Accord of Meech Lake brought us something "incroyable" as a gesture of friendship—
> And I would really like people to know that for us Quebeckers, as for all the others here and everyone else, the Meech Lake accords are not an end, but the beginning of a grand process, I think. But I must tell you that for me it is really the first time that I have felt, YES, I won that referendum.
> But surely by now, surely, you all know that if Meech is to fail for whatever reason, there can be no more negotiations, no more justifications.
> If Quebec is once again to realize that it is more difficult to opt in Canada than to stay out of Canada, then surely, you know that the roads of tomorrow can only lead to another form of independence, but this time not chosen by any political party in Quebec, maybe chosen and imposed on Quebec outside Quebec.

I believe the testimony of Madam Chaput-Rolland was very moving. I think the time has come when we must say yes to Quebec and make Quebec once again part of the constitutional family.

I also want to say that we as a Party very proudly support the idea that Quebec is a distinct society within Canada. This resolution says that Quebec is a distinct society within Canada as it is the only province with a French-speaking majority and an English-speaking minority. It is very much a distinct society.

As a Party, we also support the concept of linguistic duality as a fundamental characteristic of Canada. Those are very positive reasons for supporting the Accord.

Aside from the Quebec reasons for supporting the Accord, there are other reasons as well. As I said before, we spent some 25 years on the Quebec question. One of the other reasons for supporting the Accord is that once Quebec is part of the constitutional family, a log-jam or a blockage that had existed will have been broken. Once Quebec is part of the family, we can begin to address seriously many other questions of constitutional change and build a Constitution that is even better for all Canadians from coast to coast.

As the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam said, the Meech Lake Accord also deals with co-operative federalism. She described the co-operative federalism of the 1960s under Mr. Pearson and the great confrontation and divisiveness of the 1970s and the early 1980s under Mr. Trudeau. Once again, this Accord is one that is built on a philosophy of co-operative federalism, and that is good for Canada. That is reflected in the way Supreme Court Justices are now to be chosen. The provinces will have a chance to nominate or recommend people for the Supreme Court, and the federal Government will have the final say by choosing from the list.

The Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam also mentioned that spending powers are now enshrined in the Constitution for the first time. From our point of view, that is a very positive thing. The opting out with compensation is a positive thing for Canada and it reflects the Canadian reality.

I do not think that any of the social programs that exist today would not be in existence if this particular formula had been used previously. For example, I would remind the House that when medicare came in, only two provinces agreed to it, British Columbia and Saskatchewan. Ontario was opposed to it. There was no medical care until there was a national will to have it and until the federal Government started putting in big bucks toward making medical care a reality.

The Quebec Pension Plan is another example of opting out. It is a very good pension plan and in some ways is even better than the Canada Pension Plan.

Also enshrined in the Accord is the equality of provinces. To me, a person who comes from a small province with a million people, that is very important in my vision of federalism.

Those are the positive things about the Accord. That is why, even without amendment, the House should vote overwhelmingly in favour of the Accord so that we may go on to build a tremendous country.

There are some ways to improve the Accord. In its addendum, our Party has suggested three specific, logical amendments that could be used to make the Accord even better. The amendments do not detract from the Accord nor do they unravel it. Indeed, they build on the Accord and make it all the better.

• (1610)

The first is fairness in the north. It is beyond me why the First Ministers would treat people north of 60 differently from the way they treat people south of 60. The people in the north do not have an opportunity through their territorial assemblies to nominate people to the Supreme Court of Canada or the Senate. I call upon all the First Ministers, including the Prime Minister, to change the Accord to make sure there is no discrimination against those people. This would not detract from the rights of people in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, British Columbia or anywhere else but it would make the Accord all the better.

In my opinion, the 11 First Ministers also did a very bad thing in changing the amending formula to require unanimity for the creation of new provinces. That is not fair at all. In 1905, my province came into Confederation in an arrangement made between it and Ottawa. In 1949, Newfoundland came into Confederation in an arrangement between it and Ottawa. That was a bilateral process and did not affect the other provinces. Why change it now?

As a compromise perhaps we should stay with the existing amending formula brought in by Pierre Trudeau in 1981-82 which says you can create a new province if you have the support of seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population. That is a compromise which would not be as discriminatory against the north.

Second, we suggest fairness for the aboriginal people of Canada. We suggest that conferences on native self-government be enshrined in Section 50 of the Accord. We are now putting on the agenda in the Accord itself conferences on the Senate and the fishery, and I appeal to our First Minister in this House to go back to his colleagues and try to persuade them to enshrine the obligation of aboriginal rights conferences within the Meech Lake Accord itself. That does not detract from anyone's powers or rights. In fact, in my opinion it adds to our rights and fulness as Canadians to make sure that we discuss Indian self-government at First Ministers' conferences very soon.

[Translation]

And, finally, Mr. Speaker, we also recommended and proposed justice for Canadian women. This morning, my colleague from New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) took up several minutes to deal with the necessity of having it in Section XVI, where reference is made to multicultural groups and the native people of Canada. We must also mention Section XXVIII of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and refer to Canadian women and have total enshrinement of equality rights for both men and women in Canada. That is so important, Mr. Speaker, that I wonder why the eleven First Ministers overlooked such a right that is basic to Canadian women.

[English]

There are a number of other things one can mention. In our addendum we say it is very important for future agendas that we undertake a Charter review. Once again, my colleague mentioned the interaction on women's rights between Section 1 and Section 15 and Section 28. We certainly support the process of review. We also want to mention the override part of the Charter, Section 33, which should be reviewed, particularly when it comes to equality rights. I personally think with respect to discrimination on the basis of sex or colour that there should be no override whatsoever. We should not be able to legislate the removal of those kinds of rights. The override refers to many other things as well and I think we should be reviewing everything that it touches.

The second point referred to in our suggestions for the future is to flesh out the Canadian family in a more real sense. We have to look at recognition in the Constitution of the future of the ethno-cultural reality of Canada as a fundamental characteristic. Over 30 per cent of Canadians have backgrounds which are not Anglo-Saxon, francophone or native Indian. I suppose half my family background, given my Swedish name, reflects that ethno-cultural reality. The time has come to try to create the political will to recognize as soon as possible in future rounds the ethno-cultural reality. I know with your ethno-cultural background you would certainly be in agreement with having the First Ministers discuss this as soon as possible after the Meech Lake Accord is resolved.

I see you bending over in your chair in enthusiasm, Mr. Speaker, but I have one last point to make and that is on the process.

[Translation]

He is a good man, Mr. Speaker, a good MP, the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) who belongs to the Ukrainian ethnic group. I come from what is perhaps the most Ukrainian constituency in Canada, the constituency of Yorkton—Melville. That proposal is just as important to you as it is to me, Mr. Speaker, and you will agree on that.

[English]

We suggest and underline what is said in Chapter 15 of this report. We have to democratize the process. Constitution building is for the people of Canada, not just for 11 First Ministers, not just for bureaucrats and not just for Ministers in charge of the Constitution. In fact, it is not just for MPs or MLAs or MNAs. It is for the people of Canada. One way of doing that is by supporting the recommendation for a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, an ongoing committee to make suggestions to First Ministers on constitutional change and hold hearings across this country.

[Translation]

Public hearings are so important for Canadian men and women, and I hope the other Legislative Assemblies, in Saskatchewan and everywhere, will do the same to provide a more democratic process for having constitutional changes made here in Canada.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, we have a great land.

[English]

We have a historic opportunity to bring Quebec into the Canadian family constitutionally, and once we do that we will have an even greater chance to make some of the changes I have talked about for the future, that is for the ethno-cultural reality, women, and the aboriginal people.

• (1620)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is time we did something.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier).

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, as a Quebecer and as a Canadian it is with emotion and pride that I rise today to support the historic accord of last June 3. First allow me to emphasize the vision and sense of history which inspired our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who was the great artisan of this accord. But each provincial Premier as well had to show much courage and selflessness to reach this accord. Indeed each provincial Premier had to demonstrate a particular feeling for the state and ignore personal and immediate interests to achieve this historic compromise which enables Canada to become whole again and Quebec to resume its role of consenting and henceforth active partner within the Canadian federation.

What we have here, Mr. Speaker, is an example of political courage, and we all know that such gestures in politics are few and far between. This is why the Prime Minister of Canada and the provincial Premiers who signed the accord will be highly regarded by the historians of this country.

The debate we are launching today in Canada's Parliament comes on the heels of lengthy negotiations. The process was difficult, sometimes painful. And I experienced these debates, first as a Quebecer, as a Canadian in Ottawa and then in Quebec. I too must admit that I had doubts at times. I was not sure whether Quebec might one day be able to achieve self-fulfillment without repudiating any aspects of its own personality in the Canadian Federation. We were being asked the question in a dramatic way: Was it possible to fully experience our pride, that of our roots, of our mother tongue and of our French culture, and at the same time to be just as proud to be Canadians? How could that be reconciled with the remembrance of our French ancestors who were lost in this hostile territory and who, gradually, traveled through the whole continent and eventually settled there only to lose it again, and the oppression from which conquered people generally suffer? How could we preserve a language and a culture which stemmed from our roots and associate them with the reality of a country to be built, a mostly anglophone Canada to be called our own? Many decades were to go by before one day those realities could be reconciled. Indeed, had it not been resolved in some quarters that the Canadian citizenship required absolutely and without qualification the reduction of this other reality that is part of the soul of a people: its language, its culture, its tradition?

It is about that dilemma and the sufferings it has caused throughout our history that I want to talk about, because it is not futile to view the Meech Lake Accord in a historical perspective. In fact, history recounts the anguish, the conflicts and ultimately the achievement of having remained what we are: French speaking people in Canada, on the American continent.

The history of this people that Mr. Trudeau, when he just recently appeared before the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, the history of this people that Mr. Trudeau described as a small people speaking a little understood dialect, is the history of a handful of French men and women isolated in a snowy land. In short, 60,000 people who had a dream of occupying a whole continent. That history is made of struggles, of shattered hopes, of extravagant dreams and bloody rebellions, but above all it is made of pride, a pride that is rooted in continuance, the pride of having survived in spite of all opposition and throughout all the misadventures that abound in our history. The pride of having maintained our language and our culture for more than two centuries and of being able to come here today in this House to assert in French our pride to be French speaking Canadians. That is what our Prime Minister was talking about in his speech delivered in Sept-Îles in August, 1984. Quebec men and women, said he, love Quebec and are proud to be Canadian. But Quebec men and women also love Canada and they are also proud of being Quebecers. They have a big enough heart for both loyalties. There is no doubt what has guided our Prime Minister and the Premiers of every province of Canada who have made possible on June 3 last, thanks to their ability to compromise, the return of Quebec in the constitutional family by signing the Meech Lake Accord.

A renewed federation had been promised to those among Quebecers who bet on Canada on May 20, 1980, which was the day of the Quebec referendum. However, a yes for Canada was also a no to certain things. It was a no to a uniform Canada governed from Ottawa where Quebec always seemed to be the loser. In his speech in Sept-Îles, the Prime Minister also stated: "One thing is certain, no Quebecer authorized the federal Liberals to take advantage of the confusion in Quebec after the referendum to ostracize their province from the Constitution." Mr. Mulroney also said: "My Party is not happy about the political weakening of Quebec caused by the unfortunate events which have taken place in Canada and in Quebec. If Quebec is weakened, all Canada is weakened. If Quebec is strong, all Canada is strong. One of the component of this yes to Canada was the reassertion of the distinctive character of Quebec society and its right to be different within the Canadian federation."

On May 21, 1980, the day after the Quebec referendum, Mr. Trudeau assured us that renewal of federalism was possible. Not only was this renewal possible, but also desirable, according to him. Not only was it desirable, but also achievable, and in the very near future. After believing this promise, Quebecers were surprised to learn in 1982 that the Canadian Constitution would be repatriated. This took place without the agreement of Quebec and more or less behind its back. Experts have told us that the Constitution Act, 1982, was imposed to the Quebec Government against the will of the Legislative Assembly.

Quebec was therefore legally committed to the Canadian federation, but against its will. The Supreme Court recognized that this was unconstitutional. Moreover, many Quebecers added that it was immoral. In practice, this created two Canadas: A Canada made up of nine English-speaking provinces which had adhered to the Constitution, and a Canada composed of one francophone province, Quebec, which had not.

Can we now say no to Quebec, as the Liberal opposition in this House is doing? For all practical purposes, the Liberals are ready to sign the Meech Lake Accord, but they are also proposing a series of amendments which would simply destroy this Accord. Naturally, this is in line with the policy of the Trudeau Government, and the same people are now telling us the very same things in 1987. But the motto of Quebec is Je me souviens, and Quebecers do, indeed, remember.

Mr. Speaker, we shall not see the aspirations of Quebec rejected once more. We shall not now have the rest of Canada ask what Quebec wants and refusing to hear the answer.

It would actually be extremely dangerous to open up this Accord which is rather flimsy. Flimsy it is because it implies a certain amount of renouncement on the part of several provincial representatives who have signed this Accord. Flimsy it is also because, if we open it, each of them might see this as an opportunity to return with his shopping list, with his probably legitimate demands, but which are far from being as urgent as Quebec's return to the Canadian fold. Now, I should like to quote one of the key witnesses who appeared before the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, namely Professor William Letterman, the former Dean of Law School at Queen's University. He said: "It is our view, Sir, that it would be very dangerous to start amending this text at this point. As I have said, this is an extraordinary operation to repair an unfortunate omission in 1982, and it responds to what the Quebec Government has told us would satisfy them. We think that objective is so important that we do not want to see it jeopardized in any way". It is neither I nor a member of this Tory Government who is saying that, but a former Dean of Law School at Queen's University.

As members of the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, we were overwhelmed very early with this feeling of urgency and felt the need to correct this historical mistake as soon as possible. In the light of this historical urgency, we were mandated to study the Meech Lake Accord to ascertain whether there were in it any weaknesses, such as exist in any other constitutional agreement, which might be contrary to the letter and the spirit of the Constitution. We could not find any. We found a number of clauses which could be improved upon, and that is why we have made a number of recommendations for future constitutional conferences.

It would be clearly out of the question to try and repair an injustice by creating other injustices against other Canadians or groups living in this country. But the nature of Quebec's distinct society which we have recognized had already been taken into account in a number of Supreme Court decisions as well as in our history. I should like to quote again from the statement made by Professor Letterman before our Joint Committee: "Nevertheless, I think it has been true since 1867 that the courts have known that the Quebec society is, in certain important ways, a distinct society." As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the concept was not new. The idea was first and foremost to make room for a sociological reality. "That has always weighted with them in settling constitutional issues that touched closely on Quebec. This has been implicit." And Professor Letterman added: "I believe it is worth making that which has been implicit explicit, in general terms, because it is, as we say in our brief, one of the fundamental realities of the Canadian free and democratic society, and has been from the beginning".

But we had also to take into account the flimsiness of the Accord. And that is what we did for several weeks last summer.

We have examined the Accord with our hearts, with open minds and in a spirit of accommodation. We have heard many groups. We have heard people tell us what they fear, what they worry about and what they want changed. Our review was rigorous and straightforward and each aspect was scrutinized with all due respect for those who had accepted to come and share their problems with us. But in the final analysis, we have not found in this historical compromise any obvious flaw which would frighten anyone in Canada. And those who fear that we may embark upon the slippery slope of the two nations concept must recognize along with Professor Letterman that nothing has changed, since Quebec's distinct society and unique character have been acknowledged on many occasions since 1867. It is therefore in a spirit of joy and pride that the provinces have greeted Quebec as an active member of the great constitutional family.

Mr. Speaker, we must be proud to support the first ministers' accord and to strive to make Canada a country where belonging does not mean being the same and where living is worthwhile.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. friend a question. With respect to the very careful deliberations she says they undertook in committee, and I appreciate the time, effort, consideration and concern that was part and parcel of a very important aspect of our life here in Canada, I wonder if the Hon. Member would explain to me the interpretation of Article 91, their questions and answers with respect to minority francophones and the consequences—

[Translation]

—the legal consequences of linguistic duality. Could she explain to me what the following part of page 52 means, and I quote: The Joint Committee accepts the advice that the "linguistic duality" clause is a constitutional step in the right direction for French-speaking minorities outside Quebec and that in law the "distinct society" clause is unlikely to erode in any significant way the existing entrenched constitutional rights of the English-speaking minority in Quebec.

Could my colleague explain what the committee means when it says the clause cannot in any way diminish rights.

[English]

In a sense, could she explain the intent of "the clause is unlikely to erode in any significant way the existing entrenched constitutional rights"? What is "a significant way", and how would it be diminished or not?

Mrs. Blais-Grenier: Mr. Speaker, I believe the whole report is very clear on that point. The distinct society in Quebec exists since 1867. It existed under another crown, the crown of France, then under the crown of England. That has not changed in any way. My Hon. colleague will recognize that the English-speaking people in Quebec have always enjoyed a privileged situation as a minority in Canada. But sooner or later Quebecers had to assert their French culture. They had to convince everyone in Canada not only that they were able to defend their language but that their language, that of the majority, had to be spoken in the workplace, to be the current language and allow Quebec to affirm itself as different.

I do not think the English-speaking minorities in Quebec ever had to fear the loss of their language. Over the years they were given two universities, numerous services in their own language, and McGill University, for instance, is certainly one the finest of all Canadian universities. But the six million French-speaking Quebecers are lost on a continent of 225 million English-speaking people. We must not mince words. It is obvious to me the English-speaking minority in Quebec will survive with the support of the 225 million English-speaking who inhabit this continent, and will survive regardless of the French fact in Quebec, as it has always survived and asserted itself through the years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

Mr. Rossi: I would like to ask my Hon. colleague what grounds she has for saying that at Meech Lake, and I quote: "The Liberals said no to Quebec". I would like to know what she means when she says about the Meech Lake Accord that the Liberals said no to Quebec, for in my humble opinion the Liberals said yes.

Mrs. Blais-Grenier: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to answer this question because many editorial writers have dealt with it in recent weeks. The hypocrisy of the current Liberal Opposition has been pointed out. I think it is very clear. On the one hand, they say yes, the Accord has their full support and, of course, they will not question it, but on the other hand they bring forth amendments. The list of amendments, if you analyse it, contains items that are so important that to all intents and purposes they are tantamount to questioning the Accord.

What I am saying and repeating in this House to my hon. colleague, and I speak as a former university professor, is that when in a text there are so many things which in one's opinion are offensive and objectionable, it would seem that the only thing to do is not to sign the text. However, the Liberals want to win on both sides, as they have always wanted to do.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise today in this debate which I consider—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Speaker will be entering the Chamber shortly to make a ruling, I believe. At that time I would ask the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) to relinquish the floor to the Speaker. However, at this time, he can continue his remarks.

Mr. Gauthier: I will resume my seat, Mr. Speaker, any time the Speaker wants to speak in this House. I expect that that authority will be observed by all Members of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as I was saying a moment ago I am pleased to take part in this debate which I consider historic. The proposal before us which introduces amendments to the Constitutional Act is for me the second opportunity to present my views. Everyone knows that I took part and got deeply involved in the 1981-82 debate on the patriation of the Constitution and on the amendment, and everyone knows that at the time I spoke with heartfelt emotion on the need to include in the proposed amendment a charter of rights and freedoms upon which I was insistent.

It was a great moment for Canada, but we managed to have only nine provinces sign the agreement. So it was also a sad day for a good many Canadians, considering that Quebec was not party to the 1981 constitutional accord.

Personally, as may be recalled, I was forced to withhold support in spite of the fact that I was in favour of patriation and that I felt the inclusion of a charter of basic rights and freedoms was a significant achievement.

I believe that Members of the House and my constituents understood at the time that mine was a protest vote against the majority who oftentimes forgets that we in the linguistic or other minority are subjected to the mass, to that will expressed by the majorities.

Mr. Speaker, I was glad to see Sections 16 to 20 in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I was glad to see Section 23 concerning minority language educational rights outside Quebec, this of course having to do with francophones within Quebec, it had to do—when numbers warrant—

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Order!

Mr. Gauthier: Is the Hon. Member seeking the floor? Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and other Hon. Members. However, I did want to return to the Chamber now to indicate that I have looked very carefully at the amendment of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) which he proposed in debate earlier today. I wish to indicate that I will defer any ruling on the amendment until three o'clock tomorrow afternoon. Of course, between now and then I am prepared to discuss with Hon. Members whether or not at that time one or others of them would wish to give any argument. Perhaps that is something that Hon. Members can indicate to me at some appropriate time.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I take it that Your Honour would accept at three o'clock tomorrow to hear arguments in favour of the amendment moved by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) if so required. Did I hear Your Honour properly in that regard?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is absolutely correct. I would be very anxious, of course, to extend that courtesy. If it is the wish of Hon. Members to give argument tomorrow, then it would be helpful if they gave me some advice along that line. Perhaps they could speak to the Table Officers.

I thank Hon. Members for their courtesy in terms of my interruption. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier—

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) on a point of order.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to point out to my colleague that earlier, when referring to this change, his microphone was off and we missed part of his remarks, to my deep sorrow.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will not be taking any time off the Hon. Member's speech. Therefore, he can start wherever he likes.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: I appreciate it, Mr. Speaker and I thank my colleague. I did not know that the microphones were not working. I am sorry about that. As the technician of the Official Opposition, I am responsible for certain things in my Party, but not for the microphones or the sound system.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, I had to vote against the 1981 Agreement in spite of the fact that I was for patriation and for inclusion of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and that I was happy that linguistic guarantees would be entrenched in the Constitution in Sections 16 to 20, as well as in Section 23 which guaranteed the minority language educational rights of the French-speaking minorities outside Quebec and the English-speaking minority in Quebec.

However, the wording of these clauses did not go far enough to preserve and promote minorities, and left too much to the interpretation of the courts. Hon. Members may recall that I clearly stated a few times in the House that the adoption of such a Charter gave very great powers to the courts compared to those traditonally given to this House, and I cautioned the Members of this House, at least generally, that they should be very certain that they understood exactly what this Charter of Rights and Freedoms meant.

Certain provisions of the 1981 Charter were too restrictive. For instance, the words "where the number is sufficient to warrant" in Section 23 left a bitter taste in my mouth as a French speaking Member from Ontario who is himself part of the linguistic minority. I deplored the absence of Quebec and I deplored the notwithstanding provision in Section 23. I also deplored at the time the fact that, in my opinion, the majority had not shown to this minority, which is important for the very existence of Canada, the generosity necessary to allow it to develop throughout Canada, which I consider essential for the survival of a Canada with two official languages.

I would now like to recall some of the arguments raised at the time. Hon. Members will remember that amendments had been suggested both by the Conservative Party and by other Members of this House. The debate was quite lengthy and certain amendments were accepted. I know, for instance, that Section 23 was rewritten partly because of some comments made by Members of this House. I was one of them. I do not take all the credit for this, but I do say that we had the benefit of a Government and of First Ministers who were willing to listen to our views.

It will be remembered that in my opinion the quantification of rights was not an acceptable concept. People have or do not have rights. If one requires justification in order to exercise one's rights, there is a great danger that many people will not exercise such rights. They will bow before the will of the majority, the easy solution, and will be assimilated. This is what is happening in this country.

Minorities need support from their leaders and politicians. Minorities should not always have to fight in order to exercise their rights, because this gets to be tiring, and very draining in the long run. Minorities should not need to be always on the defensive; this is why it is important that the Canadian Government, my national Government, not only ensure the protection of minority groups in Canada but promote those groups. This is essential for this country. Again, calculating my rights, quantifying my rights is something mean, and one is forced into a beggar's position. That is not a healthy attitude because it emphasizes the role of the dominant group versus that of the dominated one. Language equality in Canada is a concept that is not tied to the reality of numbers. We say that French and English are the two official languages in this country and that they have equal status. Therefore, any quantification of basic rights to existence in this country and to our language rights that are so dear to us must be eliminated.

Mr. Speaker, the 1982 Constitutional Agreement also stemmed from a political compromise. Indeed, Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau told me in this House, on January 29, 1979, in answer to a question concerning the rights to language equality to be included in the Constitution via the Charter, and I quote:

> I would insist on the fact that this bill of rights should and must include a bill of rights protecting official language minorities all over the country.

However, in 1981, we found ourselves tied to a document that did not entirely tally with that declaration of intent of the Prime Minister. There were loopholes as I said in the protection of minorities, and Canada became in that respect a mosaic in which minority rights varied and still vary according to the province where you live. In each of the provinces, Mr. Speaker, there is a different situation. Of course there was Quebec, Manitoba, New-Brunswick, where constitutional protection existed. And there were the other ones, where if numbers warranted it, certain privileges were granted. But language rights, constitutional rights as such did not exist for the minority group. Also, in the 1981 Agreement Quebec was absent.

For all those reasons, I took a negative stand, as I had to do in conscience, Mr. Speaker. At that time, it will be remembered that my constituents and certain Members in this House well understood my position and did not blame me for taking it, even though at times it was to them an embarrassment and a source of difficulties. At that time, in November 1981, I situated my argument within the following conceptual framework. I am quoting from Hansard, p. 1336, a speech that I made. One should not quote oneself, Mr. Speaker, but I think this will sum up my thoughts so I can move to another matter. I am quoting:

> The main purpose of a constitution is to guarantee the rights of citizens beyond the reach of any political power. Furthermore, it should not be used to protect the right of majorities but rather those of minorities, for the former, the majorities, protect themselves naturally through their numbers, through political influence and through the environment they create. That is why protection of the rights of the minorities cannot be left in the hands of the majorities, nor in those, for that matter, of the various legislative assemblies.

Today in 1987, six years later, I wish to set my intervention in the same context and analyze the Meech Lake Accord in the light of constitutional safeguards to protect language legislation for minorities, that is, French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec and English-speaking Canadians in Quebec.

Today, six years later, contrary to what I did in 1981, I will vote, Mr. Speaker, for the constitutional arrangement agreed upon in Meech Lake, for the Accord stemming from the Meech-Langevin meetings. However, the critical analysis that I intend to make and put forward about minority rights will prompt me to discuss an amendment that was proposed by my party, the Liberal Party.

First of all, I would like to briefly recap what is contained in the Meech Lake Accord and discuss what is new about it. The first question that comes to mind, Mr. Speaker, is the following: Why the Meech Lake Accord? The answer is obvious. This accord is the result of constitutional discussions that were initiated at the time of the patriation of the Constitution in 1981 and that were pursued ever since with the aim of putting an end to the constitutional isolation of Quebec. The Meech Lake Accord fulfills this goal and I do not know a single Canadian who is not happy about it. This adhesion of Quebec to the Constitution is a fondamental achievement that will condition my vote and I know that several of my colleagues will vote with me.

In a climate of mutual understanding and of fraternity, the federal government and the nine other provincial Governments have demonstrated at Meech Lake their attachment to Quebec and Quebecers. For that, they must be congratulated.

But who in fact took the initiative? Was it the federal Government or the provincial legislatures? Neither. The Accord has its origin in a document that was prepared in Quebec in June, 1985, in the manifesto that was published by the Quebec Liberal Party under the title Maîtriser l'avenir.

That document outlined the five propositions that Quebec deemed essential for joining the Constitution. I would like to briefly review them:

1) The explicit recognition of Quebec as a distinct society.

2) Guaranteed extended powers over immigration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have 10 minutes left on debate plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions between the House Leader of the Government and myself. We have agreed that, if the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) wishes a few more moments to complete his remarks, it is acceptable, with the idea that Private Members' Hour would be extended to include a full hour.

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my colleagues for this exception.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I continue.

Third, limit the federal Government's spending power; fourth, review of the Constitution amending formula, including a right of veto for Quebec, and finally, ensure Quebec's participation to the appointment of Supreme Court justices.

In August 1986, in Edmonton, the provincial Premiers unanimously agreed that their first constitutional priority was to consider Quebec's proposals before dealing with any other matter.

I remind the House that a little over a year ago, we had no commitment from the federal Government nor any other indication of its position concerning the constitutional dilemma. I suppose that the federal Government wanted to leave the initiative to others. Such was not the case with us, as members of the Liberal Party, for in the spring of 1986, our Leader (Mr. Turner) clearly defined the constitutional position of the Liberal Party in an interview to the Le Devoir newspaper, and in St-Hyacinthe, in the summer of 1986, he spelled out the whole constitutional amendment in a resolution which was almost unanimously adopted by the Quebec wing of the Liberal Party of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, some wonder why the Liberal Party of Canada supports the Accord, even if we have amendments to propose to improve it. It is quite simple. This Accord resembles as a twin the constitutional resolution adopted in November, 1986, by the Liberal Party during its convention held here in Ottawa.

I should like to describe in general terms the November 1986, resolution adopted by the Liberal Party. It was suggested to add a preamble to the Constitution which would provide for the following a) maintain and reinforce the linguistic duality; b) recognize Quebec's distinct society; c) recognize the multicultural nature of Canadian society; d) recognize the contribution of our native peoples; and e) develop Canada as an economic union. Mr. Speaker, such was the resolution adopted by the Ottawa Convention of the Liberal Party in November, 1986.

Moreover, the Liberal Party agreed to carry out a substantial reform of the Senate, while enshrining the principle of double majority in the Senate for all linguistic and cultural legislation. In the area of immigration, it meant to enshrine the Cullen-Couture agreement and to call a federal-provincial conference to deal with the federal government's spending power in the areas of provincial jurisdiction.

Now, this is all included in the Meech Lake Accord and some of my hon. friends opposite do not understand that the position of Liberal party in this regard is consistent and that we will vote for the Meech Lake Constitutional Agreement. Our position is quite clear, Mr. Speaker, and the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) was dead wrong when she said that the Liberals were against it.

We agree with the Meech Lake Accord because it is consistent with our Constitutional resolution of November, 1986. We are introducing amendments to the Meech Lake Accord because our resolution went even further, particularly by amending Section 33 of the Charter, the so-called "notwithstanding" clause—if that clause was deleted, our country would be fairer and safer and the words "where numbers warrant", an assessment of rights, would have to be deleted as well.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party went much further in guaranteeing the protection of minority rights. I have therefore some difficulty with the Accord in particular with regard to the Federal Government's commitment not only to protect but also to promote the equality of status of both official languages.

In fact, one of the main features of the Accord is the recognition in Section 2 of the language duality as a fundamental characteristic of the Canadian society. That Section recognizes Quebec's claim as a distinct society. But in fact, it goes much further because it not only recognizes the distinct identity of Quebec but it is also a recognition of the official language minorities throughout the country and of the fact that those minorities constitute a fundamental characteristic of the Canadian society. Moreover the role of the provinces, outside Quebec, is to preserve that fundamental characteristic of Canada.

If Prime Minister Trudeau had told me at the time, as reported in Hansard of November 9, 1981, in an answer to a question that with the introduction of the Charter of Rights, and I quote: "to start with, it would be good that Francophones outside Quebec rejoice for a little while—", perhaps not for too long, but for a little while, "—because the rights they have have been fighting for for 114 years are at last recognized."

Therefore it can be stated, without any reservation that since then, some progress has been made and that the Meech Lake Accord is indeed promoting minority rights. I do rejoice as was suggested by the then Prime Minister. But just for a little while as he also warned me because I would have liked things to move faster. In fact, what Section 2 is doing is to entrench bilingualism in Canada. Yet, bilingualism is a major legacy of former Liberal Governments. As was mentioned in our minority report, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party has always believed in official bilingualism which was first recognized in the Official Languages Act in 1969 and confirmed in the Constitutional Act of 1982. We do not believe that the Langevin Accord might, in any way, jeopardize bilingualism.

Mr. Speaker, our amendment must be considered in the context of the amendment to Section 2 of the Constitution. First it should be said that this is an interpretation clause which applies to the Constitution as a whole. But it is more than just a preamble considering the fact that, from now on, because of its equal status with other interpretation rules, the courts will have to take it into account to interpret the Constitution, including the Charter.

However, it should be mentioned that this clause is not binding and by that I mean that because of the provisions regarding linguistic duality and distinct identity the federal or provincial Governments neither gain or lose any power. This is a mere direction for the courts to get a perspective on the intent of the legislators which is the recognition of official language minorities all across Canada in addition to recognizing the Quebec society as a distinct society.

Concerning the recognition of minorities, the Fédération des Francophones hors Québec would have preferred to see the Accord define language duality and by the same token the existence of minorities by recognizing not only the linguistic identity of an individual as in "French-Speaking Canadian" but also the collective rights of that minority. This change which was made after the Meech Lake Accord appears in the legal text, also called the Langevin Accord where the terms "recognition of French-Speaking Canada", were replaced by "the recognition of French-Speaking Canadians".

The argument put forward by the Fédération des Francophones hors Québec suggested that this wording would make it easier to argue before the courts that the Accord protects collective rights. I fully agree. This wording was rejected mainly because of the potential ambiguity of the recognition given in Section 2. The fact remains that I want to draw the attention of the House to this important aspect because we in the minorities will still depend on a liberal court interpretation of the constitutional text. I sincerely hope we will be entitled to that, although I would have preferred explicit guarantees.

So the linguistic duality is recognized as a fundamental characteristic of Canada. To this fundamental characteristic we must add, in the case of Quebec, the notion of distinct society. Here again the wording of the legislators leaves ample room for court interpretation as to the exact meaning of the concept of distinct society. In Quebec it includes both anglophones and francophones.

The committee heard every kind of analysis according to the various experts who came to give evidence, but there was no consensus, and that is understandable. But even at that the committee gave their interpretation of the section in light of the notion of linguistic duality as a fundamental characteristic, and they stated in the report:

> It is in light of this fundamental characteristic that the courts will be asked to consider Quebec as a distinct society. As it is the proposed amendment does not describe it as a fundamental characteristic.

But this is where things get complicated and, without our proposed amendment, we are again faced with double standards—different treatment for Quebec's anglophone minority.

Indeed, if we analyze the concept of a distinct society for Quebec in the light of linguistic duality, we find in Clause 2.1(3) that the Quebec National Assembly has the role of preserving and promoting the distinct identity of Quebec. But what is this distinct identity, Mr. Speaker? According to the report of the Joint Special Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, on page 33, this phrase indubitably includes the language and the culture of French-speaking Quebecers, but also those of the English-speaking minority.

If we follow this interpretation, a double imbalance is created between the treatment accorded to our minorities, depending on whether they are English-speaking or French-speaking. If the minority is English-speaking, as it is in Quebec, the provincial Government must not only preserve and promote the linguistic duality, but also preserve and promote the particular culture of the anglophone minority.

The Committee goes even further in its interpretation as it includes the native people in the definition of "distinct society". This is what we find in section 40 of the report:

> As already pointed out, to the extent that they reside in Quebec, the native people belong to this "distinct society" just as much as the other residents. They have just as much right to benefit from the application of the interpretation rule as concerns the preservation and promotion of the "distinct society". Moreover, the members of the Joint Committee are convinced that other groups could be defined as distinct societies.

Mr. Speaker, I find this enlightening and important. The Accord therefore goes even further as it introduces, in addition to the promotion element which is absent for French-speaking minorities outside Quebec, the element of the particular culture of the minority, as I have already said, which includes not only Quebec francophones, but also the anglophones and the native people. This is potentially a very strong measure for Quebec anglophones and native people. It is up to them to claim their rights in Quebec and demand that their identity be preserved and promoted.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude on that, since I do not want to take too much of the time of the House. The Government, since this debate started, is clamouring far and wide that the Liberal Party wants to amend the Accord, because in their view there is a real need for it. But they also keep repeating that we cannot amend the Accord, because this would be going against Quebec's five conditions. But that is not true, Mr. Speaker. If we had simply respected Quebec's proposals, as stated in August 1986, we would never had committed Quebec to recognizing language rights, either in Quebec or elsewhere. But Quebec went away from Meech Lake ready to bind itself to more than was requested. This means we could have asked and obtained a little bit more, if the Canadian Government had not lacked the political courage and had insisted on selling its wares by telling Quebec: You must recognize also that it is our responsibility as the federal Government not only to protect but to to promote language duality.

Mr. Speaker, the way this Government is going about it in the free-trade negotiations with the Americans, the question that arises is how the constitutional negotiations were conducted. The Government told us that any change would mean the end of the Accord because the English-speaking provinces did not want to grant anything more to their minorities.

Mr. Speaker, in my view that is not the spirit that prevails in my country. However, we were able to ask them for a constitutional recognition, an extra obligation, and this is why I support that amended constitution, because we gained something. We now have a clear and specific definition of this country which says that the provinces and the Canadian Government must safeguard the existence of both language groups in this country, the English-speaking in Quebec and the French-speaking outside Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to go somewhat further and ask the Canadian Government to assume its responsibilities and actually take over the situation of French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec and generously accept the amendment we are proposing, namely that the Canadian Government should bind itself to promoting the English and French reality in Canada—throughout Canada—and to do so immediately.

HOLIDAYS ACT

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls) moved that Bill C-260, an Act respecting Sir John A. Macdonald Day, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am honoured and obviously very pleased to introduce Bill C-260, an Act respecting Sir John A. Macdonald Day. If Hon. Members agree with and see fit to support this measure, it would create for the first time a national holiday in February to honour Canada's first Prime Minister.

This idea has been discussed by various individuals throughout the years. In fact, there is an organized movement in Kingston, Ontario, the city in which I had the pleasure to attend Queen's University a few years ago. The City of Kingston holds celebrations in February of each year to honour its most famous citizen. I think it is fitting that the movement for a holiday began there. Now I believe it is appropriate that the holiday be extended by Parliament to the entire nation.

Sir John A. Macdonald was born in Glasgow in 1815 of Scottish parents. His grandfather fought for Prince Charles Edward Stuart at the Battle of Culloden Moor in 1745. When Sir John A. was five, his family moved from Scotland and settled in the Kingston area in the year 1820.

Like so many other great politicians, Sir John A. Macdonald became a lawyer and was admitted to the Bar in 1836. In 1844, he continued his political career with his election as the Conservative Member for Kingston in the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Canada. He became joint premier of a Liberal-Conservative coalition in 1858 and it was in subsequent years while he held that position that Sir John A. began his lifelong quest as a result of his deep belief that there should be a federation of all British North American colonies. As a result, he was a moving force in the Charlottetown and Quebec conferences of 1864 and acted as chairman of the London conference in December of 1866 at which he used his great constitutional expertise, knowledge and ability to put the finishing touches on the British North America Act of 1867, the Act which created the Dominion of Canada on July 1, 1867.

If Sir John A. did nothing else after that time, I believe his place in Canadian history would be secure and he would be worthy of our honour. However, as we all know, he did much more than that. I think all Canadians recognize his importance in the subsequent years until his death in 1891 and the contributions he made to Canada.

Sir John A. Macdonald recognized very early on the importance of territorial expansion to secure this country's independence on this half of the continent. Under his prime ministership, we saw the expansion of the country to Manitoba, the Northwest Territories, British Columbia and Prince Edward Island. We saw the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the railway which was so vital in securing Canada's unity over the years.

I propose that a national holiday be declared in this man's honour. There will be those who will ask me at what cost we will have another national holiday. It is my understanding that in the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Australia and a whole host of other western industrialized countries, the people celebrate more national holidays than Canadians. I suggest that it has not been to their detriment to celebrate those national holidays, just as I believe it will not be to the detriment and indeed would be to the benefit of Canada.

I suggest that it is impossible to calculate the benefits of a new national holiday in February. All of us have heard stories of the depression suffered by many Canadians during that time of the year. In that stretch between New Year's and Easter, there are presently no holidays. I suggest that there would be a tremendous increase in employee morale and I would suggest, as others have, that there would be a decrease in absenteeism if there were to be a holiday in February. As well, I would suggest that Canadians are now trying to do everything possible to extend our tourist season into the winter months. I believe it would be of tremendous benefit to the tourist industry to have a long weekend in February.

As well, such a holiday would focus attention on a vital chapter in Canada's history. Anyone who has grown up in Canada will have heard it said time and time again that we Canadians do not spend enough time examining our history and celebrating the individuals who helped build Canada. Indeed, as a student at Valleyway Public School, I recall hearing a succession of teachers raise the subject of Sir John A. Macdonald and telling us of his importance to the creation of Canada. I recall that each of them made the comment that perhaps someday Canada will have a holiday to honour this great man. I suggest that the talk you have heard so often from Canadians about promoting our history will remain just that unless we do some of the concrete things necessary to have the opportunity to examine and celebrate our history. I suggest that this Chamber has an opportunity this afternoon to do something very constructive to promote one of the great figures in Canadian history.

One of my colleagues said to me that there are certain partisan considerations in this. This may not go through by reason of the fact that Sir. John A. Macdonald was a Conservative. I should say that, among other things, it is perhaps not well-known that Sir John A. Macdonald was a participant in a number of coalitions. I mentioned already that he was Prime Minister under a Liberal-Conservative coalition.

However, regarding the partisan issue, I remember this House taking time to pass a resolution with the support of all three Parties to erect a statue on Parliament Hill to Lester B. Pearson. Before I became a Member of Parliament the Department of External Affairs building in Ottawa was named after Mr. Pearson, as was the Toronto International Airport. I believe there is a university in British Columbia named after him as well. That is all well and good. All Canadians, regardless of their political affiliation, agree with that. I was in this Chamber over two years when a resolution was put forward to erect a statue on Parliament Hill to John Diefenbaker. I participated in the debate and saw this Chamber rise above partisan considerations to honour a man who was perhaps one of the most partisan politicians in Canadian history. I remember as well the day when Tommy Douglas died and this Chamber took the time to remember him. I remember the heartfelt comments out of the mouths of politicians of all political Parties in recognizing his achievements as Premier of Saskatchewan, Leader of the CCF, and first Leader of the NDP. I agreed with those because I think they were appropriate.

Although this Chamber is a very partisan place on a day-to-day basis, we have seen three examples where we have risen above that. I suggest to Members of this House that this is another one of those opportunities to pay homage to a man whose contributions to this country are recognized by everyone. As an example of that, on his passing in 1891 Sir Wilfrid Laurier spoke about Sir John A. Macdonald on behalf of his Party. All his comments were very interesting, but I will bring only a couple of them to the attention of this House in order to demonstrate the point I am trying to make. He said this:

> It may be said without any exaggeration whatever, that the life of Sir John A. Macdonald, from the date he entered Parliament is the history of Canada—

Later on he said:

> Today, we deplore the loss of him who, we all unite in saying, was the foremost Canadian of his time, and who filled the largest place in Canadian history.

I find it significant that I am asking Parliament to honour a man who did so much to build and unite Canada on the very same day that we commenced debate on a great constitutional agreement which I believe all Members believe to be constructive in our efforts towards uniting Canada. I believe that most people in Canada will applaud the action we might take here this afternoon.

I would like to conclude with words that Sir John A. Macdonald wrote just shortly before his death and which I believe sum up his goals for this country. He said:

> If I had influence over the minds of the people of Canada, any power over their intellect, I would leave them with the legacy:
> Whatever you do adhere to the union—we are a great country, and shall become one of the greatest in the universe if we preserve it; we shall sink into insignificance and adversity if we suffer it to be broken. God and nature have made the two Canadas one—let no factious men be allowed to put them asunder.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I wish there were more than 10 minutes available to me to dedicate to this subject. It deserves a great deal more time than that. As well, I would like to add my admonition to that of my friend who introduced the Bill in saying this should not be a partisan debate if at all possible. This subject deserves the consideration of all political Parties and all Members of Parliament, especially those who are proud of Canada.

We all know that when Sir John A. Macdonald entered politics in 1844 the nation that was to become Canada was simply a string of colonies spread out from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic. When he ended his political career there was a nation literally from sea to sea. It was Sir John A. Macdonald who had the vision and the courage to carry it forward. We all know that, if it had not been for his leadership and inspiration, this Canada might not exist today. Indeed, we certainly know that he, with his understanding and determination, was largely responsible for bringing about Confederation. We know it was he who arranged for the purchase of the entire Northwest Territories from the Hudson Bay Company and saw to it that that vast stretch of territory was added to this nation. It was Sir John A. Macdonald who built the railroad from sea to sea. In other words, in this man's achievements we see almost everything that constitutes nation-building and the establishment of this nation.

It is therefore regrettable that we do not have any special recognition of that man and what he has done for this country. Indeed, when he died he was buried in a cemetery in Cataraqui, near Kingston. Interestingly enough, even today there is no special sign or marking to direct people to the grave. The place where he lies buried is relatively unknown to most Canadians.

On October 5, 1979, I introduced a Private Members' Bill entitled "An Act to Proclaim a Day in Commemoration of Sir John A. Macdonald". Again in 1981, about a year and a half later, I introduced a motion under Standing Order 43 calling for recognition of Sir John A. Macdonald and a day to be declared in his honour. As a matter of fact, the motion was seconded by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), which I felt was appropriate. Unfortunately, that resolution was not carried unanimously.

I said earlier that I would not like this to be a partisan speech. However, regrettably, there was a gaggle of "noes" to that resolution, and it did not come from the benches of either the Liberal or the Conservative Parties.

I am happy that the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has indicated his support for such a day. I hope that Members of all Parties will rise above all partisan considerations and give sympathetic consideration to this Bill.

I realize that there are problems involved in proclaiming a national holiday because that would mean another day off work. That might concern businessmen, and I can certainly understand their concerns. That is why when I introduced my Bill and my motion I called for a day to memorialize him, not necessarily with a day off work.

I personally think there is a good argument for a day off work. I think that the suggestion made by my colleague is a good one. A holiday in February is much needed in this country. I think that every effort should be made at least to study his suggestion. I hope his suggestion will be approved by this House in Private Members' Hour, that it will go to committee where further study can be given to it and, if appropriate, amendments made. The Government could even make it its own Bill if that is necessary. I do hope it will receive the support of all Members.

I want to conclude my remarks with a tribute to another man who has been working very hard for many years on this project. His name is Harvey Haber. In fact, an editorial in The Toronto Star was dedicated to him and his work on January 11, 1982, when The Toronto Star came out in favour of a John A. Macdonald Day on that date.

Harvey Haber has pointed out, as he has worked year after year to try to achieve support for recognition of this day, that school children in this country can tell you who was the first President of the United States but often cannot tell you who was the first Prime Minister of Canada. If you ask them whether they have ever heard of the name Macdonald, they will say "Yes, Ronald McDonald".

I hope that through the action of the House of Commons that tragedy will come to an end, that through our action Canadian school children will become more knowledgeable about the history of this great country and of the man who did so much to establish it. I hope that when they hear the name Macdonald they will chime, "Yes, Sir John A. Macdonald".

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to indicate my support and that of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party for this proposal. It is not surprising that someone who represents an area like Winnipeg, with the kind of weather we get there in February, would support a suggestion that we have a holiday in February. As has already been pointed out, there is no holiday between New Year's and Easter.

There have been a number of attempts to get Parliament to approve a proposal that we set aside a day to honour Sir John A. Macdonald. There have been a number of proposals made by some of my former colleagues that we set aside a day to be named Heritage Day. In doing that we would be following the example of some other countries such as the United States which has designated both Lincoln's birthday and Washington's birthday as national holidays. For many years we in this country designated May 24, the birth date of Queen Victoria, as a holiday.

I want to talk about Sir John A. Macdonald. The fact is that he was not just one of the Fathers of Confederation. It is likely that without Sir John A. Macdonald the country of Canada would not exist. In looking at the map of North America it is very easy to see that the economic lines in North America really run north and south rather than east and west. It was Sir John A. MacDonald's determination that the northern half of North America not become part of the United States which drove him to make two important principles a fundamental part of his political philosophy. Without those two principles Canada would probably not exist.

The first, of course, was his understanding that without a railway which spanned the continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific Canada could not become a country. The second principle to which he ascribed and which he made a fundamental part of his policy was the national policy. That was traditional Tory policy, similar in Canada to the Tory policy in Great Britain. That was a policy of protectionism for Canadian industry and manufacturing. Sir John A. Macdonald saw that without that we would not be able to keep this disparate nation together.

For the first time we saw assertiveness by Canada on economic matters. We started a manufacturing industry which substituted Canadian-made goods for what was previously imported from the mother country, Great Britain, or from the United States. It was a policy which worked for Canada and for Sir John A. Macdonald.

While I endorse this resolution, I must ask myself what has happened to the political Parties in this country. Sir John A. Macdonald instituted the first protectionist policy, the first tariff system in this country, and he was the Leader of the Conservative Party. He was opposed by the Liberals under Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

We should all remember that election campaign when Sir Wilfrid Laurier, speaking for his Liberal Party, proposed reciprocity with the United States. The Conservative Party opposed that. Now in 1987 we have had a complete reversal. The Conservatives, the inheritors of the tradition and the ideas of Sir John A. Macdonald, are hell-bent for election to get a free trade agreement with the United States. It does not matter what the cost is or what we have to give up, they will do it. The Liberal Party, which under Sir Wilfrid Laurier was all for free trade, is finally realizing that free trade with the United States would create many problems.

Let us make no mistake, Macdonald found that his carefully founded national policy was a success. I will quote a few sentences from the most Tory of Canadian historians, Donald Creighton, who in his two-volume biography of Sir John A. Macdonald said at page 275 the following:

> And yet, as the long, warm, golden autumn of 1879 drew placidly on, he began at last to concede, even to himself, that the improvement was a miraculous certainty.
> Everything showed it. The harvest had been bountiful. Prices were going up. The volume of imports slowly declined, while that of exports began to rise steadily upwards. "Trade is recovering wonderfully . . . ," Lorne wrote proudly to Hicks Beach. The ministers gloated. And Macdonald knew that the whole future of his government had been dramatically changed. Within a year of his accession to office, his commercial programme had been vindicated by a demonstration as convincing as it was fortuitous. The national policy was borne away towards success on the swift wheels of an accelerating prosperity. For a time, while this good fortune lasted, he would be able to do almost anything successfully. He might even succeed—it would be the supreme piece of luck—in inducing a commercial company to take over the whole gigantic project of the Canadian Pacific railway.

Obviously my friends in the Conservative Party, if they ever knew anything about the history of Canada, have forgotten it all. I would suggest quite seriously to the Prime Minister that he take a little time to read Donald Creighton's biography of Sir John A. Macdonald. If he did, he would not be so hell-bent to get this free trade deal. It was an idea he rejected vehemently before he became the Prime Minister. He would begin to think about what is good for Canada, as did Sir John A. Macdonald. If he did, this would be a better country.

Let me conclude by saying again that I and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party will be very happy to support the proposal we are discussing today.

[Translation]

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, like my colleagues I am very pleased to take part in this debate on Bill C-260 introduced by my colleague from Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) to designate the second Monday of February as Sir John A. Macdonald Day.

Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks I should like to make a brief comment and say I found it rather deplorable that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) was unable to do as the Hon. Member for Eglington—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) did, as he said, and refrain from taking a partisan approach to such an interesting debate. He concluded by saying that he agrees, that he is in favour of the motion, but throughout his remarks he did manage to criticize Sir John A. Macdonald or the Conservative Party.

Mr. Speaker, Sir John A. Macdonald presided over the birth of Canada as a nation. His administration was witness to Canada's tremendous expansion, from coast to coast, from south to north, as far as the Arctic islands. I am sure all Canadians share the commendable sentiment expressed through the motion before us today. Many things could be said concerning this proposed legal holiday in his honour. For openers, notwithstanding the wishes of many people to have a new legal holiday, we must not forget that we already have July 1, Canada Day, a great holiday for all Canadians. Every year, Mr. Speaker, this holiday gives us an opportunity to honour all our Prime Ministers and, I might add, all Canadian men and women who, before or after Confederation, contributed to the growth, diversity and strength of this remarkable country in which we Canadians live.

Since the name of Sir John A. Macdonald is mentioned on every such occasion, I wonder whether it is necessary indeed to have a distinct legal holiday. There is not doubt that the motion is highly commendable.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that before setting up a new holiday, it would be better to reconsider its name. For I think that the basic idea is to pay tribute to our Founding Fathers. We should take this opportunity to think of a name which would include all the individuals who, through their efforts and determination, managed to create a wonderful nation, the Canada of 1867.

The names of other people should be included, such as Sir George Etienne Cartier, who worked very closely with Sir John A. Macdonald both before and after Confederation and whose office in the East Block on the Hill is recognized as an historical site, just as the office of Sir John A. Macdonald, which is close by, is recognized as an historical site.

If we think of other great Canadians who came from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or other provinces, the name of Joe Smallwood, who was responsible for Newfoundland and Labrador joining Confederation in 1949, comes to mind. Nearer to us, if we think of the new Constitutional Accord, this historical document which was signed in June in Langevin-Meech, we could include without hesitation the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I am sure that, with the exception of a few ill-intentioned Liberals and our Socialists who are constantly hiding behind a screen of hypocrisy, most Canadians would agree that the name of this Prime Minister should be included.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, instead of choosing only one name for this holiday, we should try to come up with a name which would be more "generic" and which would be an opportunity to pay tribute to a great many Canadian men and women for their contributions.

Another point not to be overlooked is that of the cost of such a holiday. A paid holiday would represent a major expense for employers in the form of employee benefits. I have been advised that for the federal Government alone, including Public Service employees, the members of the Armed Forces, the RCMP, etc., one more holiday would cost over $50 million.

Mr. Speaker, although this motion is praiseworthy and means to pay tribute to a great Prime Minister and a great Canadian, I think it would be important for the government to pay more attention to the objectives and the costs of such a holiday and to be able to consider other options for a holiday in February, an idea which all Canadians would applaud.

[English]

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak on this important Bill put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson). Sir John A. Macdonald was a remarkable man. It is only fitting that we remember him in many ways.

I would like to talk about some of his achievements and that important place from which he comes, Kingston. It was mentioned by my hon. friend from Niagara Falls that he attended Queens University. Queens is a university close to my heart. I have two children who graduated from that university. I suppose that points out the difference in our generations.

As we all know, Sir John A. Macdonald formed the Dominion of Canada by uniting the four provinces. To those four provinces he added the west. He took a huge country and fought a great many people who did not have much vision. Sir John A. Macdonald was a man with a great deal of vision. With that vision he was able to convince those of lesser vision of the importance of having a strong central Canada made up of the provinces he had welded together. He had a great deal of conviction, as we all know, which enabled him and others to put our Confederation together. He brought our country together as a result of the drive which he had to create a national railroad.

We must talk and think about this great Prime Minister, this great father of our country, in many ways and at all times. With respect to establishing holidays, with all due respect, I become somewhat concerned sometimes about the number of holidays that we already have. I have a great deal of work to do in my job, and I would have a problem completing it if we had more holidays. I do not know what I would do if there were more holidays. I ask Hon. Members to look at all the work that is piled up here on my desk.

There are concerns which the federal Government has in terms of establishing another holiday. One of the concerns is with respect to whether or not that would place some sort of pressure on the provinces to follow suit. Then there are the costs to consider.

In talking about holidays, I was in another country recently and it seemed as though there was a holiday there every other day. Productivity falls off when there are too many holidays. I think there are a great many concerns in that respect.

Recognizing Sir John A. Macdonald by commemorating a statutory holiday in his name would be great. I do not know if all here assembled know that the former Prime Minister Alexander Mackenzie is from Sarnia. We do not have a national holiday in his name. I have somewhat of a problem supporting the commemoration of a holiday in the name of one Prime Minister when there is not one for Alexander Mackenzie.

Mr. Redway: He also represented York East at one time.

Mr. James: Yes, he did go to York East where he lost his voice. He was in great form when he was in Sarnia—Lambton. When the Prime Minister went up to the Hon. Member's part of the country he developed some problems.

Those are some matters that I want to comment on. I think we should celebrate Sir John A. Macdonald Day every day. I think we should think about that great man every day. We all think well of him.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I have been out to your part of the country and I have heard you talk about Sir John A. Macdonald out there, and that is very important. I give credit to my hon. colleague from Niagara Falls for suggesting that we single out this great man by dedicating a national holiday to him. However, I would like to suggest that we think about him in everything that we do in terms of our conservatism as we carry on governing this great country.

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, naturally I want to commend my colleague, the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) for his proposal to pay tribute to the man who presided over the building of Canada as we know it, who presided over the recognition of one Canada from sea to sea, and right up to the Arctic Ocean. It is therefore important that we pay him a tribute that is significant. Since I referred to the Arctic Ocean, I would also take this opportunity to pay tribute to someone in my constituency who brought the Arctic lands under Canada's flag—the first Arctic explorer, Captain Bernier, a native of my constituency whose remains rest in my constituency.

John A. Macdonald's main work, excluding Canada's official foundation, was to make this country a reality not only in the geographic sense, but to have it made a reality through union with rails. During the 25 years that Mr. Macdonald was Prime Minister of Canada, tremendous difficulties were also overcome to forge the link that was needed at that point and that is still very important, the link that united Canada from East to West, with the aim at that time to protect it against integration into the United States.

The year 1986 indeed marked the 100th anniversary of this rail link which is approximately 3,200 miles long. Celebrations were held in June, 1986. Strangely enough, Mr. Speaker, this material union of Canada took place under a Conservative Government, and today, one century later, we Conservatives are again the ones to develop and improve this union, and we now want to provide Canadians with a North-South link. This is why the Conservative Government is trying to ensure a market in the United States for this generation and the ones that will follow. One hundred years ago, we forged our East-West links under a Conservative Government, and today, still under a Conservative Government, we are trying to establish a North-South link to integrate our own economy to the American economy and provide for all our producers an additional market of 250 million potential customers. It is also a good thing to pay tribute to a former Prime minister of Canada and to a French-speaking Canadian who supported him from the very beginning, Sir George-Etienne Cartier, who should also be mentioned when we pay hommage to those who built Canada.

However, in a capitalistic system, something that we must keep in mind is the cost of institutionalizing a holiday, and I believe that Mr. Macdonald himself would object to our making our production even more expensive, especially as concerns our exports to the United States and to the rest of the world. With a gross national product of $500 billion, one day off work means a loss of $2.5 billion in production, Mr. Speaker.

I therefore believe that we should respect the spirit of Mr. Macdonald, who would not want us to spend this much money if he were still here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis.

Mr. Prud'homme: Earlier someone indicated to me that perhaps there were other Members who wished to participate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Lévis.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think that the comment of the Hon. Member is superfluous. Some Members on this side have still not spoken.

Mr. Prud'homme: You did not understand what I meant.

There is no problem.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There is no problem. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis wishes to speak.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Maybe I should have stated that in French. I am sure that the my hon. friend did not understand a word of what I was saying. I am not surprised, that is usually the case.

I indicated earlier that some Members wished to participate. Therefore, if they would so indicate by looking at me, I will not take 20 minutes. I wish to know if other Members wish to participate before doing so. If no one else wishes to participate, I will have a longer speech.

When I was in the lobby, I saw that tonight we were debating the Bill of the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) respecting Sir John A. Macdonald Day which would take place sometime in February.

Since we have many new Pages who come from all across Canada, I felt that I should indicate that, of course, anything to honour our Canadian Fathers should be considered by the House. If we wish to build and create a country—I always claim that Canada is one of the few countries in the world that is making itself every day. That is bad English, but I do wish to communicate my sentiments in English concerning Sir John A. Macdonald.

Canada is a country in the making every day. When speaking of February, it reminds me of another great event which took place on February 15, 1965. To educate our young university people, February 15 was the official day when we raised our Canadian flag. I did respect, and I still respect today those who saw another flag going to the Archives of Canada and being replaced by a truly Canadian flag. The Bill of our esteemed colleague reminds me that there has been much talk about that type of celebration in February.

I remember a very esteemed colleague from the Conservative Party, then in the Opposition, who wished to make the second Monday of February Heritage Day to honour Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir George-Étienne Cartier, and all the Fathers of Confederation, plus the flag of Canada.

In my evaluation, it is good that from time to time we spend an hour to remind ourselves of the manner in which this country came about, especially now that we are debating the very important issue called the Meech Lake agreement. I prefer to call it the Langevin accord, because Meech Lake has been amended by the Langevin accord. In my humble evaluation, everybody is erroneously calling it the Meech Lake agreement while we should more justly say the Langevin accord. There was an amendment that Premiers and the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) made to the Meech Lake Accord during this great event that took place at the Langevin Building.

However, as I said, I believe the House should consider honouring Sir John A. Macdonald. Should it be a holiday? Why not? Everyone likes a holiday. I do not know of any Canadian who would not like a holiday in February.

Mr. Darling: Especially in February.

Mr. Prud'homme: "Especially in February", as my esteemed colleague Stan Darling says. I hope that during Private Members' Hour we can call each other by name and not by constituency. As my esteemed friend, who has been a long-time member of the Standing Committee on National Defence and is from Parry Sound—Muskoka, is saying, anything in February would be good.

Seriously, however, there are many other events which we should celebrate. Perhaps some day we could combine them and do it during February. I am very serious; I do not want to be accused of wandering from the Bill which is being debated. If we want to honour Sir John A. Macdonald in a very relaxed atmosphere, we must ask ourselves what it would represent.

It would represent the beginning of what was then known as Canada. If such a thing were to take place, perhaps we could call it Confederation Day, but we do have July 1 for that purpose. Perhaps it could be the Fathers of Confederation or the National Anthem. It was in 1965, 1966, and 1967 that a committee of the House of Commons—and the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) and I are the only two remaining members of that committee—recommended "O Canada" as the National Anthem. It took approximately 15 years before we proclaimed it. It only became official on July 1, 1980, even though some Canadians had been singing it since July 1, 1880 when Calixa Lavallée and Judge Adolphe-Basile Routhier got together and wrote the words and music for "O Canada". That shows how slow we can sometimes be in terms of Canadianization. It was in 1980 that we proclaimed it as the official National Anthem. Some people say that perhaps sometime in February we should celebrate National Anthem Day.

Why should we honour the national flag, the National Anthem, or Sir John A. Macdonald? It is because there are so many millions of new Canadians who should be sensitized to what Canada is all about. Hon. Members will know that I wanted to honour John Diefenbaker by having his image on a Canadian coin. Some people thought it was a direct attack on the monarchy. I had no such sentiments. Canadians, especially new ones, should know what Canada is all about. When they have money in their hands every day, for example a five-dollar bill, eventually they say: "Who is that guy?" To the best of my recollection it would be the image of Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the five dollar bill, the image of Sir John A. Macdonald on the ten-dollar bill, and the image of Mackenzie King on the fifty-dollar bill. It is a very indirect way to educate ourselves on what Canada is all about.

I was very pleased and honoured to put forward a proposal to honour John Diefenbaker by placing his image on a Canadian coin. Later we could honour Lester B. Pearson and Louis St. Laurent. Of course we cannot honour people who are still alive; they may use that to come back. Who knows?

If I were asked to vote today, I would be very happy to honour Sir John A. Macdonald. I would go along with it. However, along with that, we should also honour all the others who have done so much. I think that would be great for us, for the new young Pages working in the House of Commons, and for millions of people who recently came to Canada. We must be reminded of what Canada is all about, and a Bill of that kind should do it.

[Translation]

We should congratulate the Hon. Member because as a result of such an initiative, our institutions get to be more widely known. Thus we learn about the early days of our country and what should be revered. In spite of everything, Canada is a country which has weathered many storms and will continue to do. I thank you for your forbearance, Mr. Speaker.

• (1810)

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed emotions that I rise to speak on this piece of legislation. It concerns me that we may not have an opportunity to vote on this Bill today, but I hope that we do eventually.

There is no question in my mind about the intention of the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson). He put the utmost of thought into this Bill which is to dedicate a special day to a tremendous man, Sir John A. Macdonald.

I do have concerns, I suppose, about whether we should celebrate a Sir John A. Macdonald Day or some sort of a generic holiday that could be named for all the Fathers of Confederation. There is no question that Sir John A. Macdonald was the catalyst of this nation and the greatest statesman I can recall. Then again, I would love to see a "DiefenDay" or something like that to commemorate some of our other great leaders. Perhaps we should look at the future of such legislation.

There are many concerns about costs and other aspects of declaring such a holiday, but I see, Sir, that you are waving at me so I will—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

APARTHEID—SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN RELATIONS WITH AFRICAN NATIONAL CONGRESS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I know that you, and I know for certain that I, very strongly, very vehemently and very unswervingly oppose apartheid. I know that you and I as well find apartheid to be institutionalized racism. We find it reprehensible and we support policies to encourage a peaceful solution and a peaceful end to apartheid in South Africa. Those are positions with which virtually all Canadians agree. However, all Canadians do not agree on what policies we should be following in order to bring about an end to apartheid.

The national polls tell us that a clear majority of Canadians agree with the policies the present Government is following. Those policies include increased sanctions, an anti-apartheid register, an embargo on arms and spare parts sales, a code of conduct for employment practices for Canadian corporations and businesses carrying on business in South Africa and financial assistance to South African blacks through education and training. As well, efforts are being made to get other nations through the Commonwealth, the francophonie and other western industrialized groups to support efforts against apartheid. Of course, there has been a continuing dialogue between Canada and South Africa with respect to bringing to a peaceful end the policies of apartheid.

Others are saying, however, that they do not agree with those policies. I am sure that you get those messages just as I do, Mr. Speaker. I receive many calls and letters from people in my constituency who feel very strongly that the approach that is being taken is the wrong one. It is not because they agree with apartheid or feel it is a good policy to be followed. They feel the approach being taken will perhaps encourage violence and terrorism and Marxism and communism, and bring about the establishment of a Soviet form of Government in South Africa. They do not want to see that. I know you do not want to see that, and I do not want to see it either.

Interestingly enough, I ran a survey in my constituency about a year ago on this question. I asked the following: Do you think Canada should impose economic sanctions against South Africa? Do you think we should increase economic sanctions? Some 37.8 per cent said yes and 52.6 per cent said no. I asked: Do you think we should have total sanctions against South Africa? I had 29.3 per cent say yes and 59.7 per cent say no. That is in a constituency where 51 per cent of the residents come from neither anglophone nor francophone background. There are over 60 different cultural and ethnic backgrounds represented in that constituency. This is a very interesting result in a part of the country such as mine.

As I indicated, I think the crux of the problem lies with the concern about whether or not the policies being followed by the Government are in effect encouraging establishment of a communist form of Government in southern Africa. On the other hand, there are those who say we must follow the policies this Government is following now. One of those persons is the Reverend Johannes Sindano. He is a Lutheran evangelical pastor and I had the opportunity of meeting him here in Ottawa. He comes from southern Africa and he put it to me and others that met with him that it is important for Canada and other western nations to put pressure on the South African Government to bring about an end to apartheid. To remain silent will be to create just the opposite of the desired effect. If the West does not encourage black South Africans, they will turn to the eastern bloc for encouragement and support in their struggle against apartheid. After all, as he points out, because black Africans are in the majority it is inevitable at some point in time that apartheid will disappear. At that stage they will remember who their friends and supporters were, whether they be in the eastern bloc or in western nations.

He also pointed out that, naturally, black Africans look to the West for support and help. He said it is from the West that black Africans received their education. It is from the West they received their religious training, economic development, and the higher standard of living that many of them now enjoy. It is natural for black South Africans to look to the West rather than the East. After all, it was Jefferson, not Lenin, who said all men were created equal. It was Lincoln who took the chains of slavery off blacks in America, and Stalin who enslaved eastern Europe.

Again, it is natural for black Africa to look to the West for support. Again, if the support is not forthcoming, unfortunately the vacuum will be filled, as the Reverend Sindano pointed out to me, by the eastern bloc. That may also bring about the violence which Canadians certainly do not want, notwithstanding the comments of our colleagues in the House, the NDP, who, a week or two ago, indicated that they felt violence was justifiable. I do not think the vast majority of Canadians feel that way. They want a peaceful solution in South Africa.

The Government has heard all sides of the story. It has heard the people who say that we must support South African blacks through more pressure. It has heard those who believe that we should keep our hands off South Africa. It is now up to the Government to respond and tell us what it is going to do in this situation.

I am looking forward to hearing from the Parliamentary Secretary tonight whether the Government is wavering in its stance on South Africa or whether it will maintain the strong policy which it has put in place and keep pressure on the South African Government to bring an end to apartheid.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) met with African National Congress President Oliver Tambo one month ago in Ottawa. The Secretary of State for External Affairs had previously held meetings with senior representatives of the ANC, most recently during his trip to South Africa last month.

These meetings do not convey any form of official recognition of the ANC on the part of the Canadian Government. The Government does recognize, however, that the ANC is an important factor in South Africa. It will be part of the solution in that country, whenever it comes and however it comes. There are also other groups with a part to play in building a post-apartheid South Africa.

The Government's objective is to encourage a peaceful solution in South Africa which results in non-racial representative government. Peace and democracy in South Africa are more likely to be achieved by dealing with the ANC and encouraging it to follow a moderate path.

In their meetings with Mr. Tambo, the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs explored the prospects for dialogue between the South African Government and the ANC. Mr. Tambo was encouraged to pursue the path of dialogue as was the South Africa Foreign Minister when the Minister met him in August.

The Government of Canada does not condone violence by any of the parties in South Africa, whether by the state or the ANC. The Prime Minister was very clear on that question during his visit to South Africa in January and that position has been reiterated on a number of other occasions, including directly to Mr. Tambo. Nevertheless, the Government recognizes that the root of violence in South Africa is the racially based system of apartheid and that such an oppressive system, when peaceful means are closed, gives rise to violent opposition.

The ANC had a history of 50 years of non-violence before it was banned. Its present leadership includes many who are moderate and they are to be encouraged. The danger exists, however, that as the level of violence in South Africa continues to grow, so may the influence of more radical elements of the ANC.

To achieve the goal of a peaceful solution to the situation in South Africa Canada has worked successfully with others in the Commonwealth and elsewhere to put pressure on the South African Government to enter into a dialogue with authentic black leaders, including the ANC, and start the process of fundamental change.

PENITENTIARIES—PROVISION OF HEALTH CARE SERVICES / GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I asked a question of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) with regard to the proposed privatization of the health care section of the correctional services. I was not surprised that the Minister's answer was not relevant to my question since the Minister of Justice is not responsible for the correctional system.

My question arose out of a letter which I received from the President of the Professional Institute of the Public Service which I believe exposes a very serious situation regarding the provision of services in our penitentiaries. We must realize that the inmates of our penitentiaries have been involved in very serious crimes; rape, armed robbery and murder. You name it and some of the prisoners have been involved in it.

The Government wishes to extend its policy of privatization wherever possible into the federal penitentiaries. I call that policy objective bizarre for the reason I have already indicated. We are dealing with very angry and disturbed people. It is not surprising that the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada opposed this idea. The union represents these people. There were 1,440 nurses and psychologists and others who signed a petition against this idea of privatization. One would think that the Department and the Government would have at least talked to these people before they proposed such an unworkable idea.

• (1825)

Second, the Professional Institute in a letter written to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher), signed by the President of the Professional Institute, Iris Craig, makes the following point which I think is very important:

CSC claims it wants to save taxpayers' money by laying off its own qualified, well-trained staff and hire contract employees who are simply not equipped to deal with volatile situations in which security is of prime concern.

To work competently in a correctional setting requires a repeated, consistent exposure to that environment. An incorrect decision, or even a lack of a decision, when confronted with a dangerous or life-threatening situation, can escalate into tragedy. There is no substitute for experience.

Surely even this Government should recognize the kind of riots and disturbances going on in our correctional institutions and how important it is to have well-trained, competent, permanent employees who have experience.

I would like to relate an experience my daughter had. She is a new graduate social worker. She received a contract with the John Howard Society. Her job was to work with prisoners in the medium security section of the Stony Mountain penitentiary. One of her clients, as she saw him week after week, was becoming increasingly disturbed, so much so that the last time she saw him she stood with her hand on the handle of the door so that she could get out of the room quickly if necessary. She reported the matter to the prison psychiatrist. He could not or would not do anything about it. A week or two later, while driving her car, she heard a news flash on the radio that a prisoner, her client, had picked up a piece of two-by-four in the carpentry shop, hit the instructor over the head and killed him.

That is the kind of situation which occurs, and this Government is proposing to turn over that work to part-time people on contract whose only interest will be to earn some money, a contractor interested in making a profit.

There are all sorts of questions which must be asked. Who is going to be responsible in a situation like that? Who would the family sue? Would the family sue the Government or would they sue the private contractor? What would be the level of profitability? What rate of return would be considered correct? Once the private sector becomes established will it skim off the profitable and low-risk offenders, leaving the public system with a difficult and unmanageable problem? Will the monitoring and contract requirements ensure business motives do not override the objective rehabilitation and decent prison conditions?

Lastly, I point out to the Parliamentary Secretary who will be answering my questions that a study was done by the Government for the Solicitor General in 1985. It was entitled "Operational and Resource Management, Review 7, Privatization" and warned that privatization could lead to endangerment to public, staff and inmates, deterioration of inmates' rights and labour unrest. Clearly, none of us wants this, and that is the burden of my question and my intervention in the House today. I hope the Government can supply some answers today and rethink what I consider to be a totally improper and unworkable idea. It could not be done in a worse set of circumstances than in the correctional system.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak further to the issue raised on September 25, 1987, by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), that being the presumption that the correctional service will be proceeding to the wholesale privatization of health care in its penitentiaries.

First, let me put to rest the myth that privatization of health services involves the replacement of professionals by "poorly-trained part-time workers", as the Hon. Member puts it. Privatization is not a new concept in the health care field. Approximately 40 per cent of the correctional service's health care budget is now spent on professional service contracts with individual professionals such as physicians, psychiatrists, psychologists, and dentists, throughout Canada's penitentiary system. This has been the case for several years. Neither quality of service nor the security of penitentiaries has been compromised by the engagement of such professionals under contract. There is no reason to believe that further privatization in the area of nursing services would lead to such a situation.

I believe that the concern expressed by the Hon. Member may be traced to a review of health care services that has been conducted recently in the Ontario Region of the Correctional Service under the "make or buy policy" of the Treasury Board. Basically, the application of this policy involves a comparison of the costs of providing service "in-house", so to speak, by government employees against the cost of delivery of the same services by the private sector.

This review, which has not yet been completed, is but one part of a major review of the entire field of health care delivery in the correctional service in order to ensure that the level of care provided to inmates takes into account both their specific needs and the level of care offered to society as a whole, and that the means of delivery remains as efficient and effective as possible.

I must emphasize that the only institutions at which nursing services have been privatized are at the new Donnacona Institution in Quebec and Atlantic Institution in New Brunswick. There are no plans at this time to privatize such services further.

The study cited above is restricted to the Ontario Region. Both the Professional Institution of the Public Service and staff in Ontario penitentiaries have been briefed on the objectives of the study. In addition, and most significantly, assurances have been given that employees would not suffer loss of employment if privatization is pursued.

Finally, having emphasized that no further plans for privatization of health services have been formulated, I believe it is also vital that I mention that on any given working day private individuals from the community enter our penitentiaries to provide a wide range of services from dentistry to volunteer literacy training. The qualifications of those persons to enter and provide services is a matter of scrutiny by the correctional service and measures continue to be applied equally to ensure the safety of their persons and the security of the institution at all times.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ACID RAIN—GOVERNMENT POLICIES TOWARD UNITED STATES/GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, at this stage following a question I asked in the House of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) some months ago, it is clear that the acid rain policy of the Government is in a shambles.

In 1985 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) lost a valuable year by agreeing that the two acid rain envoys prepare a report. In 1986, the same Prime Minister gave the wrong signal to Washington and to the Americans by agreeing to a five-year program on clean coal technology. This indicated to the Americans an implicit willingness on our part to wait for five years. In April of this year in this Chamber the Prime Minister claimed victory when President Reagan made a commitment to consider an acid rain treaty with Canada.

Today, six months later, what do we see on the horizon? It is in this respect that I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will answer. Having claimed victory so many times the credibility of the Prime Minister is now running very thin.

At the same time, it is this Government that has abandoned Canada's role internationally. This is a role which Canada conducted quite successfully until it was abandoned in 1985 by this Government. That international role was intended to generate pressure on the U.S. to come to the table and to agree to a reduction in air pollution through our friends and allies, through those who have adhered to the Helsinki Protocol. Yet unfortunately that initiative was abandoned.

• (1835)

In recent weeks the Americans have accused Canada of not implementing a domestic program to cut acid rain pollution in Canada. The two Tory Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are the only provinces which still have to come on board and sign the National Accord on Acid Rain Abatement. They are still defying the commitment that they made in 1984 and 1985, and even in 1986, and because of sheer neglect on the part of this Government it allows the Americans to criticize us for not maintaining our side of the commitment that by 1994 we will cut our sulphur dioxide pollution by 50 per cent.

Although it is belated, I welcome the conversion of the Minister to the notion that we must do something in the United States, and that he must go to Washington and make important visits to those who need to be convinced that Canada has a case. However, this conversion comes in the fourth year of this administration.

It distresses me to learn about the intention of the Government to spend money on advertising in the United States. Will we complain to the United States about how hard done by we are? That has been done many times. I do not think it will get us anywhere to complain about that. The Americans may be sympathetic, but they will not be moved by that type of argument. They will be moved by arguments that deal with their economic interest and their own economy.

I wish to ask the Parliamentary Secretary why the Government is not prepared to prepare a case that would explain to the Americans the cost to them of not proceeding with action in cutting air pollution from their coal fired plants. What will be the cost to the United States for not acting and removing those poisonous gases which are inflicting damage to their buildings, structures, lakes, forests, and agriculture? In addition to the damage they are doing to us, the Americans would be very sensitive to a study that points out the economic damage inflicted on their economy by their pollution.

Finally, I wish to ask the Parliamentary Secretary why the Government at this stage, in the fourth year of its mandate, is not putting together data and information required to prepare a bill that would be submitted to Washington for the yearly damage to our economy that is caused by their pollution. We could start with the bill from the producers of maple syrup in Quebec and Ontario. I am sure that they would be more than glad to quantify the damage caused to the maple forests that is provoked and caused by transboundary pollution from south of the border. It is estimated to be more than $1 million a year.

These are some of the questions that I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will address in his reply. I am looking forward to his statement.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) raises an important issue. The resolution of this problem is a priority of the Government.

Resolution requires action both domestically and bilaterally. We are working with the provincial Governments and with the Canadian industry to ensure the implementation of an effective acid rain control program. To date, more than 90 per cent of the necessary emission reductions are in regulatory or program form.

Bilaterally we are pressing the United States for early reductions in U.S. emissions affecting Canada. Over the last few years we have seen some progress in the United States.

In 1986, we saw U.S. President Reagan acknowledge the acid rain problem. This represented a breakthrough in the thinking of the U.S. administration. At the same time we saw the President take a step toward solving the acid rain problem by endorsing the Report of the Special Envoys on Acid Rain.

Again, in March 1987, we saw the President propose a clean coal technology program and a bilateral panel to oversee its implementation. None of us has been impressed with either the pace or the extent of the action of the U.S. administration on acid rain. However, as U.S. Senator George Mitchell, a proponent of acid rain control legislation, has said, "none of this would have happened without the unrelenting pressure of the Canadian Government".

Our message to the Americans is clear and unequivocal. Canada is putting its house in order with regard to acid rain. We expect the United States to respect its obligations as our neighbour and to control the contribution its sources are making to Canada's acid rain problem.

Based on scientific information, the resolution of the acid rain problem depends on the United States cutting the transboundary flow of sulphur dioxide to two million tonnes per year. We intend to continue to convey that strong message to the Government of the United States.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT OF ONTARIO—APPOINTMENT OF SIX WOMEN MINISTERS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Today in this House, Mr. Speaker, I should like to extend my congratulations to the Government of Ontario, and particularly to Premier David Peterson. Thirty new Ministers were sworn in yesterday, including six women: Mrs. Lily Munro, Mrs. Elinor Caplan, Mrs. Joan Smith, Mrs. Chaviva Hosek, Mrs. Lyn McLeod, and Mrs. Mavis Wilson.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Pépin: Of sixteen elected women, six were appointed to Cabinet, telling evidence of the Government's political will to promote equality.

I should like to mention that Mrs. Chaviva Hosek was given the housing portfolio. I remind the House that Mrs. Hosek has shown leadershsip in causes of women and minorities. We are very pleased that her new duties are recognition she deserves.

To Mrs. Hosek and all her female Ontario Cabinet colleagues we say: Bravo!

[English]

Bravo! Hang in there. You are a vital role model and there will be more to come.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY STRIKE BY MARINE ENGINEERS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, work stoppage along the St. Lawrence Seaway, initiated by the Canadian Marine Officers Union, is of great concern to the people of Saskatchewan. Withdrawal of services by engineers threatens grain ships on the St. Lawrence Seaway and could possibly halt 75 per cent of all shipping.

Saskatchewan farmers are finishing their harvesting and want to begin quickly moving their grains through the transportation system. Saskatchewan is already feeling the negative effects of the engineering strike, namely, the rail limits on wheat transportation recently imposed in our province. This is unacceptable to the people of Saskatchewan who must meet marketing quotas.

• (1405)

The devastating effects of another transportation disruption could severely cripple the economies of Saskatchewan and its neighbouring provinces. Put simply, Mr. Speaker, the western economy will not be able to endure another marketing delay. For this reason I call on my hon. colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), to intervene in the collective bargaining process to ensure that an agreement is reached quickly and that the interests of farmers across Canada are protected.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST ELECTION OF SPEAKER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to the attention of the House that it was one year ago today that we as Members of Parliament opened a new chapter in the evolution of the practices and traditions of the House of Commons with the first ever election of a Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Members will recall that the McGrath Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform first addressed the idea of an elected Speaker. It was to the credit of all parties that this progressive and historic increase in the influence of the Members of the House was made.

The election process was long and somewhat cumbersome, as the democratic process often is, but the excellent choice that we made on that historic night has demonstrated that this new procedure serves Members well.

I am certain that I speak for all Members of the House, Mr. Speaker, when I say that you have served Parliament and Canada well over the past year. Your decisions have been thoughtful and fair. The obvious respect that Members have for you has brought a renewed atmosphere of civility, dignity, and respect to this House.

This is a place where great issues of the day are raised and debated, where passions run high, and where patience is put to the test. It is a rare individual indeed who can preside over such a place and enforce the rules and procedures with the great care and skill which ensure that the rights and privileges of all Members are respected.

In you, Mr. Speaker, we have found such a rare individual. We look forward to continuing to work with you in the months and years ahead.

[Editor's Note: Whereupon all Hon. Members rose and applauded.]

Mr. Speaker: Members will note that I gave the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) extra time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank all Hon. Members for your very kind thoughts and demonstration here today. I want to thank you especially for all the help you have given me over the past year. Thank you very much.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR TRANSPORT

IMPACT OF BILL C-18

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): On November 4, 1986, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) introduced in the House Bill C-18 to set the needed legislative framework to ease the economic control over the Canadian transportation industry.

Our Government had put forward measures to enhance competition and greater market force freeplay, so that Canadian users could benefit from more competitive prices and a greater service choice.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill was given Royal Assent less than a month ago and its positive effects are already being felt.

For instance, Air Alma Incorporated, an airline operating in my riding, has been offering since Monday a new service to its travelling customers thanks to Bill C-18 and this, to the delight of the regional population who will have at its disposal two more flights every day to travel to the capital city of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-18 is only one of a great many initiatives of our Government which are beneficial to our regions.

PORTS

SAFETY OF WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, although initially I was one of those who accepted reluctantly your nomination today I must admit I was wrong and I congratulate you.

This being said, I was pleased yesterday, to meet with representatives of the Montreal Harbour employees, and those 1,000 workers proved to us that the accident rate in Montreal Harbour is much higher than anywhere else in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the stated causes of such a high accident level were: first, working hours are too long because dock workers are required, or forced to work between 60 and 80 hours a week. Second, absolutely no workers safety program. Third, no equipment inspection in Montreal Harbour.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the Minister of State (Transport) to meet within the shortest time frame with representatives of the Montreal Harbour employees, in order to force Montreal Harbour and all Canadian harbours to have work safety as their first priority, otherwise there will be a serious conflict in Montreal.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

POSTAL STRIKE—SUGGESTION POSTAL SERVICE BE DECLARED ESSENTIAL

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, the Post Office is on strike again. So, what else is new?

This country cannot be held at ransom again by CUPW, who, according to press reports, state that they are concerned about violence on the picket lines.

Shirley Carr of the CLC says that she is afraid that someone will be killed on the lines this time around.

I do not dispute that people have the right to strike, but I find it hard to believe that, in Canada, CUPW can threaten and intimidate those who are willing to work at the Post Office and accept their terms of employment.

The Post Office is an essential service and when it is on strike there are too many innocent victims, including small businesses, seniors, the disabled, and indeed all Canadians. As regrettable as I feel this action is, perhaps it is time to consider declaring Canada Post an essential service and removing the right to strike.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—TREATMENT OF BLACK CHILDREN—WORLD REACTION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the children of South Africa are going to a special school today. It is a school of the real world.

They are learning that brutal tyranny and the ruthless subjugation of a people do not mobilize nations as much as they mobilize words. Some are noble words, promising action, like those of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Some are the transparent words, like those who would use guns to defend English sheep on a far off island that cannot be her own. Some are the words of collaborators sent abroad to earn their keep from the oppressor. And there are the influential words of those not cured of latent racism, the mendacious Minister turned columnist, the retired judge, and the official spokesman of those who would keep Canada pure and, being consistent, spit calumny upon the victims of racism in South Africa.

Will we take home a lesson for the black children of South Africa, the fulfilled promise of the Prime Minister, or must they foresee that the negative voices will be the more compelling and that they should look elsewhere if ever they are to achieve freedom?

COINAGE

UNITED STATES CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE'S STUDY OF PROPOSED NEW DOLLAR COIN

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, copying being the sincerest form of flattery, it is interesting to note that a committee of members of the American House of Representatives and Senate is proposing that the United States mint a gold coloured one dollar coin.

The success of the Canadian gold "looney" vis-à-vis the silver Susan B. Anthony has evidently done much to prompt this reconsideration.

In order to retain the compatibility between Canadian and U.S. coinage, it would be advantageous for the Americans to adopt size and weight specifications similar to ours. We could help them with the special technology needed to coat the nickel blanks which we could also supply to them should they so wish.

The Royal Canadian Mint must be proud of its successful coinage innovations which other countries look to as a source of inspiration.

POLITICAL PARTIES

REFERENCE TO PRETTY GIRLS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, there is a new wrinkle in the ongoing saga of "close encounters of the capital kind". The "capital kind encounters" we are talking about are the parties that will be taking place tonight in various homes across the City of Ottawa.

There have been a number of suggestions that these parties have been set up to lobby. However, according to the ex-Conservative Member of Parliament who says these are not lobbying parties: "If anyone comes to try to sell them submarines, staplers, or whiskey, this is the wrong place to do it. They are probably—" the Ministers "—just going to be looking for pretty girls".

Given that Mr. Binks is hosting a party tonight where the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) will be present, I am quite sure that the Hon. Minister would not accept an invitation to a party where he is going just to look for pretty girls.

• (1415)

I am sure that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in protest at the comments that have been made by his soon-to-be host, Mr. Binks, will decline the invitation and boycott the party tonight so he can put an end to these "close encounters of the capital kind".

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL CONCERNING DUMP AT CANTLEY IN QUEBEC

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the situation is serious in the Cantley area of the city of Gatineau. Proposed dump sites could cause tremendous harm to the environment. The Quebec Government was alerted by citizens of Cantley. I therefore want to formally advise Environment Canada, whose Minister already has assured me of his cooperation. He is ready to discuss with his Quebec counterpart a situation of concern to citizens in my constituency, without infringing upon the provincial jurisdiction. I thank the Minister for his usual understanding.

[English]

The question of waste disposal is a complicated one as we run out of environmentally safe ways and sites, but we must not take steps that we will regret because of looking at short term solutions.

Our environment, Mr. Speaker, is very fragile. It should not be abused as a means to find a very fast solution to a very complicated problem.

SPORTS

TRIBUTE TO BEN JOHNSON, WORLD CHAMPION SPRINTER

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, one of the realities of this House is that the rhetoric of parliamentary debate tends to draw members into the use of superlatives more often than they should. The biggest and best all too often turn out to be not quite so large and, frankly, not that good.

There is one superlative I want to use today about which there is no question, that is, the fastest. It applies to Canada's Ben Johnson, the fastest human being in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Angus: Just a little while ago, Mr. Speaker, Ben Johnson lined up against the world's best sprinters and left them in his dust as he shattered the world record for the 100-metre dash. He covered the distance in only 9.83 seconds, shaving a full tenth of a second off the old record.

Ben is now back in Canada to receive the credit and the praise that he so justly deserves. He has carried his success with grace and with style.

I ask all members to join with me in congratulating Ben as he visits Parliament Hill today and to express our best wishes and our confidence in him for many future successes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I can say to our distinguished guest, Mr. Johnson, that while he was scheduled to be on the program a few minutes from now, the demonstration of affection and admiration that has been given to him is timely, is very sincere, and is very warmly meant.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CUPW STRIKE—CALL FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stan Graham (Kootenay East—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, they have done it to us again. For the second time in less than three months the powerful Canadian Union of Postal Workers is holding our country at ransom in an attempt to accomplish their own selfish goals.

Carefully planned rotating strikes, occurred in Victoria and Montreal today.

I have received calls from my constituents in Kootenay East—Revelstoke pleading for quick action to be taken by the Government. From our elderly citizens who are counting on monthly support payments to the businesses which demand a reliable postal service, we will all suffer the effects of this totally irresponsible and selfish act by the postal union.

• (1420)

Unions should not be allowed the freedom to disrupt a vital national service such as the Post Office. This action will only place undue hardship on innocent Canadians. The disruptive action taken by this union cannot and should not be tolerated. I strongly urge our Government to take decisive and immediate action to release the strangle-hold this national union has on our citizens.

ETHNIC AFFAIRS

SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ALLIED JEWISH COMMUNITIES SERVICES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last Allied Jewish Communities Services held its 70th annual meeting and accounted for its stewardship of the 17 affiliated social educational and cultural institutions which guide, enable, and promote the interests and concerns of the Jewish community of Montreal.

Over 1,600 people attended, bore witness and paid tribute to the volunteer and professional leadership which has enabled the communal service organization to reflect the heart and soul of this very heterogeneous society.

From 1762 on Jews have made their home, and have become part of the fabric of the Canadian and Quebec society. Successive waves of immigrants, seeking safe harbour from discrimination or economic hardship, have come to Canadian shores, speaking a myriad of languages and reflecting diverse cultures.

We have become a bilingual, multicultural and yet highly identifiable minority in Quebec and in Canada. I salute AJCS on its 70th birthday for its enriching contribution to the development of outstanding leaders, both communal and civic, in all areas of life of our people in Canada, in Quebec and, in particular, in Montreal.

I would like to draw attention to the fact that the wife of the Right Hon. Minister of External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is not a pretty girl, she is a fine, intelligent and beautiful woman in her

TRADE

STATUS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TALKS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade said last night that there has been some movement in the American position on free trade. Canadians would be interested in knowing about that. They would be even more interested in knowing whether there has been any Canadian movement on its position in the negotiations with the United States, particularly on the issues of subsidies and our culture.

The Government has virtually destroyed the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. It has weakened the whole issue of regional subsidies. The Government has already sold most of our book publishing industry to the Americans and yielded and withdrawn, apparently, a film distribution policy in the face of American pressure.

What movement has there been on the part of the Americans? And what concessions has Canada been prepared to make by way of a counter proposal?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in regard to the comments of my right hon. friend, the quite careless comments about regional economic expansion, I would point out to him something that he cares to neglect, that in all regions of the country, particularly those far removed from the centre, there has been a decrease in unemployment since this Government came to office, in all of the regions of this country, relative to the figures that were in place on September 17, 1984.

The 907,000 new jobs created in Canada is an important figure. The OECD report indicating that Canada's economy is growing at the top rate of all 24 members of the OECD is, I think, an important reflection of what we have been trying to do for the last three years as well. Trade, of course, is an important component of that, in all of its facets.

The Minister for International Trade indicated quite properly that there had been some movement on the important principle of dispute settlement. There has not been, however, agreement on the rules that might govern this mechanism. This is what is presently being considered. If, at an appropriate time, we receive an acceptable response from the Americans in this important area, I will be happy to advise my right hon. friend.

ISSUE OF MECHANISM TO SETTLE CANADIAN-AMERICAN DISPUTES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, such sectors as culture and regional grants contribute to the definition of Canada's very essence, and I believe that Canadians ought to know the position of the Government of Canada in these negotiations. The Prime Minister indicated there has been some movement with respect to the matter of a dispute settlement mechanism between both countries.

Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether his Government continues to insist, as do most Members of the House, that such a mechanism be binding and coupled with a significant exemption from the United States' unilateral right to slap countervailing duties and taxes on Canadian exports?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the initiatives we took in Northern Ontario, in Western Canada and, more recently, in the Atlantic region—commitments in excess of $1 billion—indicate to what extent the Government is intent on minimizing regional disparities. That is one of the major thrusts of the Government's national policy.

As to the second point raised by my Hon. friend concerning the mechanism, yes, we feel it is an important mechanism to settle disputes which might break out between our two countries as a result of the possible implementation of a free trade agreement. It seems normal to us that an impartial mechanism be available to enable both parties to settle their own disputes, should these occur after the possible negotiation of a more comprehensive agreement. This is the position I had announced practically from the outset, and our current efforts to achieve it attest to unfailing consistency on our part.

DEADLINE FOR CONCLUSION OF TALKS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Government's recent demonstration of its desperation for a deal—

Mr. de Cotret: Oh, come on!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —and the Government's secrecy throughout these entire negotiations, particularly at this crucial point in these negotiations, prompts me to ask the Prime Minister how long will this whole process go on.

Is the deadline of this weekend a firm deadline, or will the Prime Minister ask for an extension of that deadline to continue the talks?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could limit myself to the final comment of my right hon. friend in regard to secrecy.

Surely he will acknowledge that there has been extensive consultation, and probably an unprecedented sharing of information among Canadians on this very vital topic.

Mr. Gauthier: Where are you living?

Mr. Mulroney: Most recently there was a seven and a half hour meeting with the First Ministers involved in this.

Mr. Axworthy: What about the other 25 million?

Mr. Mulroney: There has been a continuing committee of Ministers and officials who have met on a regular basis.

To the best of my knowledge, all of the Premiers have commented very favourably on the extent to which information was shared, and is in the process of being shared, with industry, and with the provinces. There has been a debate in this House. We offered a confidential briefing to the Leader of the Opposition on all aspects, every conceivable aspect of trade, but he turned it down.

Mr. Gauthier: How about the deadline? Answer the deadline question.

Mr. Mulroney: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was choosing to score political points rather than to be concerned about the national interest. I think that indicates everything we have done—

Mr. Gauthier: You have been cut off.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, now we know why the Prime Minister needs all those shoes—he is up on his toes dancing so often that we cannot get a straight answer.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry would keep his preamble to the facts needed to place his question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Axworthy: I will make my question very short. The Prime Minister did not answer the previous question. My question is the following.

In the counter proposal that has been forwarded to the Americans, is the Government of Canada asking for an extension of the October 5 deadline? In other words, are we asking the United States to give us more time to try to work out this deal, or are we finally going to cut bait and say that the deal is no good and we should get out?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First, Mr. Speaker, we have not forwarded a counter proposal to the Americans. Second, we are not asking for an extension, and third, you do not have to worry about my shoes because we will put the boots to you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, according to a publication from the Prime Minister's former press secretary, he has already tried and failed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: We will wait for the publication of the book.

I want to return to the issue at hand. The Prime Minister said that we did not make a counter proposal, but in Question Period today he said, " but we are waiting for an American response". What is he waiting for a response to if he did not make a counter proposal? Why is it that even the Americans are confused? The spokesman for the trade negotiator's office says, "I do not know what this means." Is it consultation or negotiation? That is the same question Canadians are asking. What is the Government trying to do, is it consulting, negotiating or grovelling on its knees?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says the Americans are confused. Perhaps that is the case. The Americans we have been speaking with on behalf of the Government of Canada, Secretary Baker and Ambassador Yeutter, are certainly not confused. They know the position of the Government of Canada. It has been clearly expressed by the Minister of Finance and the Minister for International Trade and it presumably is in the process of being considered by the American Government at which appropriate time I suppose there will be a response. However, they also know and have known from the very beginning that if the Government of Canada deems that matters are not acceptable, there shall be no deal. We have said this from the very beginning.

CULTURE AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT ISSUE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, throughout the trade talks with the United States, the Prime Minister has continually promised to keep our cultural industries and assistance for regional development off the bargaining table. Now we have reports that the United States wants complete freedom in our cultural sector and severe restrictions on regional development aid as the price for a binding dispute settlement mechanism.

Point blank, will the Prime Minister tell us is the United States now seeking concessions on cultural industries and regional development and will this Government, despite its earlier promises, discuss these points?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all of the statements contained in that declaration are false.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I note that I started out by saying that the Prime Minister promised to keep these points off the bargaining table. Perhaps he is saying that is false too.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT CULTURAL INDUSTRY AND REGIONAL AID BE PROTECTED

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Our cultural industry and regional development assistance programs are very important for Canadians. Can the Prime Minister tell us quite clearly that his Government will protect our cultural industry and regional assistance programs in its discussions with the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member only has to read the statement I made in the House two years ago, on September 26, 1985. There has been no change in the position of the Canadian Government on these two fundamental issues in the last two years.

[English]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I hope the Prime Minister will stick to that statement right to the end as these discussions go forward.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER TERMINATE TALKS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, given these reports in the newspapers that the United States wants major concessions, in cultural industries, in regional aid, with respect to the Auto Pact and with respect to investment freedom, will the Prime Minister do the right thing for the country now? Will he call these talks off and terminate them for good?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think even my hon. friend would agree that I and the Minister for International Trade have responded to precisely that question at least a half dozen times in this House to the Hon. Member. The answer is unchanged.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

STRIKE BY INSIDE WORKERS—VIOLENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and concerns the postal strike.

The postal service is being interrupted for the second time in three months. The last strike in June was violent and cost Canadian taxpayers $30 million.

Why is the Conservative Government still encouraging violence in the work place? Is it its job-creation policy to hire strike breakers?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government not only does not encourage violence, it deplores violence, and it hopes that everybody in the House deplores violence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: I of course hope, and I would hope the Hon. Member would share the wish, that this dispute could be settled by negotiation. Since the union has now started a strike and the Post Office is attempting to fulfil its social responsibility of delivering the mail, both sides are required to obey the law. I think it behooves us as responsible parliamentarians to encourage both sides to do exactly that.

HIRING OF STRIKE-BREAKERS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Leonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that he wants to solve the strike by negotiation. Since negotiations have been going on for several weeks, Canada Post has been announcing that it will hire strike breakers. How does the Minister expect to solve this strike by negotiation when Canada Post and the Government are provoking it? Why does he not order Canada Post to stop strike-breaking activity so we will get this through with negotiation?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I see by the applause that it is the position of Members of the Liberal Party that the Post Office should shut down and there should be no mail delivered by the Post Office in view of this strike. That is fine. If that is their position, let them articulate it. The only other alternative is to acquiesce totally to the demands of J. C. Parrot.

The Post Office is trying to fulfil its social responsibility. The conciliator in the letter carriers dispute indicated it had that obligation. It is to do it in a lawful fashion, obeying Canadian law, and as the union goes on strike it has the obligation to do so in a lawful fashion and to obey Canadian law.

REPORTED SURVEILLANCE OF PEACE MOVEMENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, it is a grave insult to the peace movement in Canada, to groups such as Operation Dismantle, Project Ploughshares and Dévelopement et Paix to suggest that somehow their pursuit of peace and disarmament could be Soviet directed and inspired and thus pose a threat to the security of Canada.

My question is directed to the Solicitor General. Will the Minister now explain to the House and to Canadians why CSIS this year hired several individuals whose responsibility is in fact to watch the mainstream peace movement in Canada? Will this Minister do the right thing now and immediately order a stop to this dangerous, undemocratic practice by CSIS?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have said on many occasions in this House, CSIS has been mandated by Parliament to investigate anyone who is considered to be a threat to the security of Canada. Under Section 2(b) of that particular Act, a threat to the security of Canada includes foreign influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person.

• (1440)

To date I have received no evidence that CSIS has acted beyond the mandate given to it by Parliament.

Mr. Robinson: If that is the case, it is a condemnation of the sweeping mandate the Liberals gave to CSIS when they created the organization.

Mr. Holtmann: Then take it up with Nunziata.

[Translation]

INFILTRATION OF DEMOCRATIC ORGANIZATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have another confidential document of the CSIS which confirms that our secret service is infiltrating not only the labour movement and the Quebec peace movement, but also legitimate Canadian political parties, namely the Canadian Communist Party and the Quebec Communist Party.

How can the Minister justify this harmful attack against small but legitimate political parties? Why does the Minister believe that the CSIS has the right to infiltrate these democratic Canadian organizations?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I just said, I have no evidence to date that CSIS has acted beyond its mandate. Notwithstanding that, as I said on a number of occasions, I have directed the Inspector General to conduct an investigation to see whether or not allegations of this nature are true. The Security Intelligence Review Committee set up by Parliament under the Act is also conducting an investigation into matters of this nature. The Act is working.

The Act also provides under Section 41 that anyone who feels they are being improperly investigated have the right to go to SIRC and ask for an investigation. I suggest they do that and make the Act work. That is why it is there.

CITY OF MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR $25 MILLION GRANT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, who is responsible for matters involving the greater Montreal area.

The Minister is fully aware that the Committee for Economic and Job Renewal in the East end of Montreal has published its recommendations, showing that despite the economic recovery, and contrary to what the Prime Minister stated earlier, the East end of Montreal is plagued with a very high, 12.4 per cent unemployment rate. In order to prevent the loss of thousands of jobs and to create new jobs, the Committee has put forward some 12 recommendations directly involving the Canadian government.

My question to the Minister is this: Would he be ready to inject $25 million into the setting up of a bureau to help restructuring and modernizing larger businesses, and to create a special fund for manpower training? Is the Minister ready to give a positive answer to that recommendation of the Pichette Committee?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member mentioned, we have received the Pichette Committee report. That most interesting report clearly has required a lot of work. We are going to make an in-depth study of the recommendations and hopefully we will be in a position to respond to its special recommendations within the shortest time frame.

AID—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the people in the East end of Montreal are just about sick and tired of this Government's numerous studies. This Government has had three years of inaction and thousands of jobs have been lost in the East end of Montreal. And I know this junior Minister is talking about Bill C-22 to manufacture pills in Montreal-north. Workers in the East end of Montreal want to know—as for instance the welder at Bombardier's, the welder at Vickers', the mechanic—when are you going to help him keep his job? Are you going to wait again? Stop studying and start doing your job! They are asking you to use $25 million to help them, to create an employment tax credit. Are you going to do something, yes or no?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, our intention never was to wait. To the contrary, we have taken action—133,000 jobs created in Montreal within the last three years, and I repeat 133,000—we did our job! The unemployment rate has come down to 9.6 percent from 10.6 percent, Mr. Speaker. We did our job!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: Inaction is on the other side, among those who are blocking Bill C-22—they are preventing the injection of $700 million in new capital in Montreal, they are stifling the creation of 1,300 new jobs. Join with your colleagues in the other Chamber and have that Bill enacted and see how the 133,000 figure will increase.

Mr. Rossi: Always the same excuse! Bill C-22. Outside of that, nothing for the East end of Montreal, nil!

PICHETTE REPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Quiet over there.

An Hon. Member: Shut up!

Mr. Rossi: Shut up yourself, okay?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Both sides have the right idea. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Is the Minister aware that there are still 22,000 unemployed in East Montreal? Is the Government ready to follow up on the recommendations of the Pichette Report? What the people of East Montreal want to know is when the Government will follow up on this report to help reduce unemployment in that area.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, we are well aware of the problems in East Montreal. These problems have existed for several years. The recommendations of the Pichette Report are now being considered by my Department and I hope to be able to respond to these recommendations in the very near future.

URGENCY OF SITUATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): The Government has now been in power for several years also. It could have responded to the problems of economic recovery in East Montreal for the past three years. Can the Minister explain why, since the publication ten months ago of the Picard Report on the economic future of Greater Montreal, action has been taken only about certain aspects of this report, and the Minister is now promising to respond and take action in the very near future? What does that mean and why is the Government unable to act immediately?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague is right to say that we have already followed up on several recommendations contained in the Picard Report. We are now taking action about several other points and we shall be giving a complete response to the Picard Report within a few days.

As for our concern for Greater Montreal, I said earlier that 133,000 new jobs had been created. There has also been a 32 per cent increase in retail sales as well as a marked increase in housing starts and industrial expansion in the Montreal region. This is reflected by the number of building permits. The Montreal region is faring much better now than when the Conservative Government came to power.

HORTICULTURE

HONEY PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION FOR LOST SALES

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. His Department has prevented some honey from being sold in the U.S., testing it so slow that some deals are being cancelled. When can the honey producers expect compensation for lost sales? Is the Canadian Government going to buy the honey from these producers, assist in the replacement of equipment, and take responsibility for all other implications of this action which I estimate will cost $100 million?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the continuing interest of my hon. colleague in the problems of the honey industry. Canada is not stopping sales in the U.S. The problem is that the U.S. is not accepting our product at the moment. We are trying to work with the people in the industry, the provinces, and our counterparts in the U.S. to develop a plan whereby we have secure access to markets for Canadian products in the U.S.

PICARD REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology. My colleague for Ottawa-Centre referred to the Picard Report. I am certain that he forgot about the recommendation on the Space Agency, which he should support as much as we, Liberals.

My question to the Minister is this. He is now blaming the Senators for sitting on Bill C-22. Yet, the Minister himself has been sitting on the Picard Report for much longer. Could the Minister take the lead and show that he can act quickly by making the required decisions as concerns the Picard Report? Instead of waiting for eleven new recommendations, could he not follow up on the first 86?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, we have already taken action about several of the 86 recommendations which were before us. First, I must tell the Hon. Member that many of these recommendations were addressed mostly to the municipal and provincial governments. Naturally, these recommendations were referred to the proper government level because we do not want to impinge on other jurisdictions. We have taken action about many other recommendations. As for the rest, as I have said many times, we shall be giving a complete response to the Picard Report in the coming days.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ACT IMMEDIATELY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Minister referred earlier to certain figures and pretended that there had been an increase in job creation. If he had read the report which has been tabled, he would realize that unemployment has in fact increased to 12.4 per cent in East Montreal and that there are now 8,000 more potential unemployed because of the age of certain industries. What I ask the Minister is this: Will he wait for these 8,000 workers to lose their jobs before taking action or will he do something immediately in line with the recommendations of the Action Committee and ensure that action is taken immediately instead of letting the situation deteriorate?

Hon. Robet de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, we have certainly not let the situation deteriorate. We have created jobs in Greater Montreal. We have created jobs in East Montreal. It will give me great pleasure to provide you with a list of our investments in East Montreal if you want this information.

When I say that we are now looking at the Pichette Report, it is because we are doing just that, and we shall give our response to this report as soon as possible.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CORPORATION'S FREEDOM TO ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. In a letter which the Prime Minister wrote this summer with regard to Canada Post he said:

> A long term solution to these problems can only be worked out by the Corporation and its unions through compromise—

In a spirit of compromise, is there a true arm's length relationship between the Government and Canada Post? Is Canada Post free to drop its insistence upon franchising out existing work to drug stores which are often right across the street from existing post offices?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the shareholder of this Crown corporation, we require of Canada Post, as we do of every other Crown corporation, a corporate plan to indicate what it plans to achieve over a five-year span. It is updated annually.

As part of its corporate plan to improve service to Canadians the Post Office intends to open up some 6,000 postal outlets so that people can buy their postal services where they shop and where they can park at times more convenient to them.

The Government approved of that plan. If circumstances cause a change in the plan, which the corporation will bring to the Government's attention, we will, of course, consider it.

CORPORATION'S NEGOTIATING STANCE IN LABOUR DISPUTE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, is the Government allowing Canada Post to negotiate freely? Does it have a complete open hand in negotiations, or does it have to come back to the Government to get permission to change its negotiating stance?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not at the negotiating table. No representative of the Government is at the negotiating table. I have no influence on the decisions. This is being run by management. The negotiations which are going on are the same kind of negotiations that went on between the cabin attendants and Air Canada last year and between CNR and the railway workers.

The unions and the NDP are attempting to indicate that the Government is somehow orchestrating things. I understand what they are attempting to do, but there is no basis in fact to support those accusations.

AIRPORTS

SECURITY OF TRAVELLERS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and is with regard to security at Canadian airports. On June 25, 1985, two days after the Air-India tragedy, the Deputy Prime Minister, then the Minister of Transport, said the following as reported at page 6146 of Hansard:

> Over the last 60 hours, since these tragedies occurred, the Government has moved quickly to ensure the security of Canadian air travellers—

We learned today that notwithstanding the assurances given by the Minister of Transport at the time, the Canadian failure rate now stands at 25 per cent which is worse than the failure rate at major American airports. We find now that safety and security at Canadian airports over the last two years have remained abysmally substandard.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister explain to Canadians why he misled this House and Canadians two days after the Air-India tragedy?

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Where's John Turner?

Miss MacDonald: As usual he's not in the House.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for York South—Weston knows that it is, of course, against the rules to suggest that anyone deliberately misled this place. While the Hon. Member did not use the word "deliberately", his language was pretty strong. I am sure he would want to correct himself and put the question.

Mr. Nunziata: My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Why did he tell Canadians that the Government had moved quickly to ensure the security of Canadian air travellers when it has become obvious today that the Government did very little, if anything at all, with regard to security at Canadian airports?

Ms. Copps: Well, answer. The arrogance!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps Hon. Members could assist the Chair. There is, of course, no obligation for a Minister to answer a question. The Hon. Member may want to ask another question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, this is absolutely unbelievable.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Out!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That was directed at you, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Contempt!

Mr. Speaker: Under the circumstances I know the Hon. Member for York South—Weston would co-operate with the Speaker. I am going to recognize another Member. The Hon. Member for St. John's East.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REPLACEMENT OF PRESIDENT

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia has joined the loud chorus of voices in the mining community of Cape Breton in expressing dissatisfaction with the policies and attitudes of the current management of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and, in particular, with the President and Chief Executive Officer, Derrick Rance. Will the Minister now take steps to clean up the management of this corporation starting with the replacement of Mr. Rance?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am well aware of the situation. I have had meetings with the Chairman of the corporation. I have also taken steps, as recently as yesterday, to direct the corporation to stop the stockpiling of coal on international wharves which raises environmental concerns in the province and very strong concerns on the part of the provincial Government.

That has already been done. I intend to sit down with the senior management of the corporation in the very near future to air the whole situation.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Rance, the current President, assured the people of Cape Breton in November, 1985, that efficiency would be obtained in the operations without the reduction of manpower.

Why is the Minister keeping Mr. Rance in office and allowing him to continue his plans to lay off close to 500 workers? Would the Minister not agree that Mr. Rance has lost faith with the workers and people of Cape Breton and really should be removed?

• (1500)

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can only respond by repeating what I said in my former answer. I will be meeting with Mr. Rance in the next few days to clear up the situation.

AGRICULTURE

BRITISH COLUMBIA'S WITHDRAWAL FROM SUPPLY MANAGEMENT AND MARKETING BOARDS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Yesterday it was reported that the British Columbia Government is pulling all of its producers out of the national supply management programs and marketing boards. If this is true it represents a tremendous threat to our national marketing system for some three or four commodities across the country.

Can the Minister confirm these reports and tell us what the implications are for these producers? Will dairy producers continue to receive payments under the Canadian Dairy Commission? Will our import controls continue to be in place under our GATT obligations? Will the Minister tell us what the implications are for these dairy and feather industry producers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that question by my colleague, the Member for Algoma. I must respond by saying that I am indeed disappointed, but I am really not surprised because I have been aware of some discontent within certain sectors of the producers in the Province of British Columbia.

I must say, however, that provincial Ministers have already commenced a review of supply management systems and we hope that the report will be due in the near future.

I say that I am disappointed because marketing systems with supply management powers in various commodities have worked well for producers and processors and Canadian consumers. I hope that there would be some sober second thought before the final decision is made with respect to this move.

Mr. Foster: I am pleased to hear that the provincial Ministers are taking action to restore the integrity of the system.

FEDERAL POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister say exactly what actions he is prepared to take or is taking to ensure the restoration of a system that is the envy of producers throughout North America and European countries? We would like to see it maintained here in Canada.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the federal Government is one of 10 signatories to those plans with respect to the marketing systems. This involves a provincial Government, it involves the supervisory bodies, it also involves the producer groups of those various commodities.

I have been in touch with all representatives of all the commodity groups in the Province of British Columbia. I take satisfaction in the fact that, while not unanimously, almost without exception they are not in favour of the position taken by the Government of British Columbia at this moment. They would rather remain part of a national supply management system and they hope that a resolution of this matter can take place, thus avoiding the withdrawal from these supply management plans.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

POINT LEPREAU, NEW BRUNSWICK—PROPOSED SECOND NUCLEAR REACTOR

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Yesterday Premier Hatfield announced that negotiations were proceeding with Atomic Energy of Canada regarding the development of a 300 megawatt unit at Point Lepreau II, and that construction will commence in 1990 following completion of detailed engineering.

The Globe and Mail has reported that the Minister has rejected New Brunswick's proposal for 100 per cent financing of the project. Will the Minister provide the House with a report on the status of those negotiations?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first, there is no truth to the allegation that I have rejected Mr. Hatfield's proposals. Last October Premier Hatfield and I met to discuss the possible development of a second nuclear reactor at Point Lepreau. We agreed that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and New Brunswick Power should commence discussions with a view to reaching a mutually satisfactory commercial arrangement.

These discussions are ongoing and proceeding well, although no final decision has been reached.

I have consistently maintained that decisions on new generating capacity must be made by the provinces and that the federal Government stood prepared to support the development of commercial projects. I indicated in Calgary a couple of days ago that we were not in the business of financing 100 per cent of any project. I am sure Mr. Hatfield appreciates this position.

We are agreed that the project must be commercial and we are actively pursuing discussions with this objective in mind.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the House that despite the delay in getting started, all of which was completely legitimate and appropriate, this will be the last question for today. The Hon.

Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan. Given the hour, I hope the questions will be short.

AIRPORTS

NON DETECTION OF WEAPONS BY SECURITY GUARDS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Will the Minister confirm that nearly 25 per cent of all the fake and real weapons taken through airport security by Department of Transport staff were in fact not detected by the security guards hired by the contractors? If it is true, why has he not moved to replace these contractors with permanent, well trained employees of Transport Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the hon. gentleman who observes the rules and traditions of this House and is a very good Member of the House. Such a test was undertaken by the Department, the result of which was that 25 per cent of the pseudo weapons were undetected. However, this was a test at all the airports in Canada, including very small airports and airports in the far North. It was not just major airports, as in the case of the United States where they only checked the major airports.

In the late spring of this year we introduced a new training program for airport security screening personnel. We believe there has been a significant improvement. This follows as a result of the recommendations of the task force on the screening process at airports that was set up by the Deputy Prime Minister. As always, he was very prompt to act when it came to his attention that action was needed.

SECURITY FACILITIES AT SMALL AIRPORTS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, given that the only successful hijacking in Canadian history occurred a number of years ago out of one of those smaller airports—Thunder Bay—and given that there is no matching fire power within the airport grounds and is not even available for 15 minutes in the event of a real threat through the discovery of weapons, what action will the Minister take to ensure that those smaller airports have access to proper security facilities?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the entire security arrangements at airports have been reviewed and in excess of $30 million in additional funds has been devoted to security at our airports. The Hon. Member will know that there are certain procedures going into effect today, I believe, with reference to the security of those who are allowed into restricted areas at airports.

All of these steps have gone forward and there has been steady improvement in that area. We are living in a democratic country and there is a limit to what measures one can put into effect.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

RESIGNATION OF MEMBER FOR MEGANTIC—COMPTON—STANSTEAD (MR. GÉRIN) AS PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I now recognize the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) on a question of privilege.

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have already asked the Right Hon. the Prime Minister to relieve me of my duties as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice, at the most opportune time for both the Department and the Government.

Yesterday the Prime Minister told me he agreed to my request, so this decision is effective immediately. Over the past year I have done my best to fulfill the responsibilities assigned to me by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and I am confident I did live up to expectations. I still fully agree with departmental policies, convinced as I am that the Minister attests to the excellence which in past history has been the hallmark of Canada's outstanding Ministers of Justice.

I greatly appreciated the non-partisan approach and the close co-operation of Liberal and NDP critics in the course of debates, particularly in committee, as well as the unfailing support of the Minister's staff and Department officials.

I thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for having given me the honour to serve, and I am sure I will have further opportunities to do so again.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his thoughts and comments which reflect the spirit of the very good traditions of the House.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, having worked very closely with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice, I would say quite simply that he has done an exceptional job. I am sorry he has decided to resign as Parliamentary Secretary, but I congratulate him particularly for the work he did during the year he was Parliamentary Secretary.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, personally and on behalf of the Official Opposition, I too should like to express our concern and regrets that he has chosen to resign, and we wish him the best of everything!

• (1510)

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to rise to join with others in paying tribute to my Parliamentary Secretary and to thank him very much for his kind remarks. The quality of work which he has delivered in his responsibility has been exemplary. He has brought real distinction to the post of Parliamentary Secretary, and I thank him for his assistance to me in the carriage of my responsibilities as Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SPACE RESEARCH

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF LAUNCHING OF CANADIAN SATELLITE

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, as we all know, marked the twenty-fifth anniversary of Canada's first venture into space with the launch of Alouette I, which was a scientific research satellite.

With the launch on September 29, 1962, of our first satellite, we positioned Canada to become a world leader in the peaceful occupation and the use of space. More important, we set the stage for us to build a space program which serves our national goals and our national aspirations.

Our space-based communications networks have drawn us together as a people and have played an important role in shaping our national character. As well, Canada's involvement in space will increasingly allow us to better understand and to manage our vast land and improve our custodial practices over our resources to protect and preserve our environment for the benefit of future generations, perhaps through remote sensing and technologies developed by Canadian scientists and by Canadian engineers.

But while Canada has produced an amazing variety of sophisticated hardware of world-class distinction, the real story of this nation's space program has been the dedicated zeal of the pioneers who were associated with the programs, who for 25 years have had the vision, the courage and the foresight to compete with the very best in the world in the exploitation of a new frontier and to translate the knowledge we have gained into real benefits which are now enjoyed by all Canadians wherever they may live.

Our space efforts have helped us to bridge the vast distances of our land and have allowed even the most remote of our communities to become integrated into the mainstream of Canadian life. On behalf of the Government, therefore, I wish to pay tribute to the great efforts and the commitment of scientists, engineers, astronauts and, yes, even statesmen and politicians, who have built a solid foundation from which we have now launched a new effort.

Let us be inspired by our space pioneers to look ahead to the future prospects that await us. I am convinced the next 25 years will prove even more challenging and even more rewarding than our past endeavors. We have a proud history of accomplishment and a bright future in this silver anniversary year of Canada in space. I know that all Canadians would want to join us in celebrating this great Canadian success story.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the Minister in commemmorating and celebrating Canada's 25 years in space. Canada's history in space is distinguished, not by glamour, prestige and dramatic adventure, but by a steadfast and continued commitment to the pre-eminent national need for reliable long range communications. As the Minister has said, it began September 29, 1962, with the NASA launch of Alouette. It was a Canadian made, designed and built satellite. It involved three years of workmanship, 20 years in manhours, and $3 million in federal financing. It was built to investigate the ionosphere and provided much valuable information over the years.

That was the beginning, but we continue to go forward. Indeed, Canada will participate with the United Kingdom, the United States in the RADARSAT satellite project which is scheduled to be launched in 1994. It is a remote sensing project that will monitor soil conditions, ship movements, and provide other information at a cost in total estimated today of $770 million, of which Canada will participate to the tune of $250 million. That will also include the participation of the provinces of Canada as well.

Canada, in the last number of years, has provided new pioneers for space, not only technicians and scientists, but these days astronauts. We now have six astronauts in this country, all payload specialists, one of whom, it is worth noting, is a woman. Canada will participate in the U.S. space station at a cost of about $800 million over 15 years.

Many Canadians would welcome that development provided they can be assured, and there are still some concerns, of the use of such a program, provided that it is non-military and provided that the cost of Canada's $800 million worth of participation is not done at the expense of other research and development.

As much as I join the Minister in celebrating Canada's 25 years in space, I would be remiss if I did not remind the House, and indeed the Minister, as well as Canadians, that this Government had committed itself to increased R and D spending to 2.5 per cent of GNP in line with other major industrial nations. I know the Minister would like to see that happen. That was the commitment three years ago. The reality is an expenditure of roughly 1.3 per cent.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in his book Where I Stand committed himself to an expenditure increase of roughly 20 per cent in NRC. The reality is that there has been a reduction of nearly $400 million or a cumulative drop of 23 per cent. He promised an increase and we developed a drop of 23 per cent. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget of February, 1986, announced an increase of $1 billion to federal granting agencies. The reality is that there will be a $335 million drop in base budgets of those same granting agencies.

Yes, Canada does have a proud tradition, Canada does have 25 years in space of which it can be proud and which it should celebrate. But those accomplishments were not only a reflection of the genious, the hard work and the dedication of the technicians and scientists of this country, they were a reflection of the commitment of the governments during those 25 years to see progress in Canada. That commitment can only continue, and the next 25 years can only be as bright when the Government of Canada continues the kind of financial commitment necessary for R and D in this country.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I was a graduate student in the United States when the first satellite, Sputnik, was launched into space. It was traumatic for the nations of the west at the time, but as scientists we saw in the event the beginning of a new era for science. Subsequent developments fulfilled that hope. Working as a graduate student, it was with pride that I learned that 25 years ago my country, Canada, became the third country to orbit a satellite, Alouette I, thus establishing Canadian leadership in the peaceful exploitation of space.

It is meet that it has been through the use of extraterrestrial space that we have been able to enhance communications among our people, across the vast terrestial space of our land, and thus foster a nation more united.

I wish to join the Minister in paying homage to the scientists and engineers who have, by their creativity, skill and knowledge, placed Canada among the front-ranks in the development of first-class space technology. It is technology that is not limited only to the exploitation of space but serves as well to enhancing the technological basis for industry as well as improving the lives of our citizens.

As we celebrate the twenty-fifth Anniversary of Alouette I, Canada has committed itself to the intensification of its efforts in space with its new $2 billion space program. In Radarsat we will be provided with extraterrestrial eyes to help us in managing our resources. In MSAT we will extend again our communications capacity, and in the development of the mobile servicing system we will expand our knowledge of and ability to exploit space.

As a scientist, I appreciate the significance of our involvement in space, but I also, as a scientist and as a citizen, must express my concerns. First, Canada must not allow its collaboration in space to become collaboration in advancing the destabilizing military policies of the United States respresented by the star wars initiative. We should commit ourselves to the more noble effort of establishing in space the monitoring systems that will provide confidence for the world in the security of future disarmament agreements.

Second, our research effort in space must not distort or allow us to forget our scientific efforts in other fields. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has noted, Canada remains minor league in its science effort and our space agency alone will not bring our general performance to the major league level.

While we are preoccupied with free trade as the basis for future industrial and economic development for Canada, we have shown virtually no commitment to the real basis for future growth, the expansion of knowledge. It is there, not elsewhere, that Canada's future lies.

PETITIONS

EXIT VISAS FOR THE KAGAN FAMILY

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a duly certified petition from a number of constituents in my riding of Hamilton West and from other concerned citizens of the Province of Ontario. The petitioners have expressed serious concern that the Soviet Government has consistently refused over the past 10 years to grant exit visas to the Kagan family who are forced to reside under this socialist regime.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to protest the constant refusal of the Soviet Government to grant exit visas, and demand that our Government continue its efforts to secure the Kagans release.

Order Paper Questions

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition, pursuant to Standing Order 106, which follows the numerous petitions I have tabled with the House for the last four or five weeks. The petitioners avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance.

Whereas since September 1984 the federal Government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular, on medical, dental supplies, snack foods, candies and soft drinks, and whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal is studying the possibility of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services, including food, and whereas food constitutes a vital element in day-to-day life, and whereas the imposition of this tax would have the effect of seriously penalizing certain categories of taxpayers such as the aged, families, the unemployed, low-income taxpayers, youth, and so on, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

CANADA POST—MAIL DELIVERY TO NEW SUBDIVISIONS

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty today to present a duly certified petition from some 220 residents of York—Scarborough who urge that Canada Post re-establish its practice of providing door-to-door mail delivery to new subdivisions.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the House that question No. 174 will be answered today.

[Text]

CANADA POST CORPORATION—EXPENSES INCURRED DURING STRIKE

Question No. 174—Mr. de Jong:

What were the total costs incurred by the Canada Post Corporation during the letter carrier's strike for (a) the use of taxi cabs and rented vans to transport replacement workers (b) total payment to replacement workers, including the use of management personnel (c) additional security arrangements (d) hotel accomodation for management personnel (e) additional warehouse facilities (f) transportation costs incurred by management personnel?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Canada Post Corporation informs as follows:

The information you have requested is currently not available. Information relating to expenses incurred during the letter carriers' dispute will be reflected in the corporation's next annual report which will be released at the end of the 1987/88 fiscal year.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

CANADIAN SECURITY

Mr. Speaker: Applications under Standing Order 29.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I seek leave, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 29, to move a motion for the adjournment of the House today on a matter of immediate and urgent concern, namely, the recent revelations regarding the Canadian Security Intelligence Service.

The series of information which has come out in recent days of CSIS infiltration of democratic organizations in Canada, including the labour movement, the peace movement, as well as legal political parties, give rise to grave concerns that must be dealt with on an urgent and emergency basis by the House.

In addition, clearly CSIS has dangerously mishandled its responsibilities in the area of counter-terrorism, including the Air-India disaster and the failure to take steps to provide for the protection of a visiting Punjabi cabinet minister.

In light of the series of events which have taken place and in light of the importance of an urgent debate on this situation, and, Mr. Speaker, in recognition of your earlier rulings under similar applications pursuant to Standing Order 29, I would hope there could be an emergency debate this evening on this serious and important question touching the civil liberties of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) for bringing this matter back to the Chamber. As the Chair has stated, it is an important matter.

The Chair is in some difficulty, and I have indicated to Hon. Members on both sides that the Chair is somewhat concerned that, in the absence of apparently any allotted days, or perhaps some arrangements soon in committee, this matter is left in a position where it can only be addressed each day in Question Period, and in circumstances which are somewhat less than debate.

I request that the Hon. Member for Burnaby and the Minister have a discussion tonight which will not preclude the fact that I would hear a further application on the same subject.

Perhaps the time has come when it would be in the interests of this place that some time is made available to address some of these matters. In the absence of that, the only action that Hon. Members in the Opposition can take is to ask for an emergency debate.

I am also mindful in reminding Members that one of the reasons expressed many times in the past by Speakers for turning down an emergency debate was that there was some other place and another occasion to debate the same subject.

I would ask that the Hon. Member for Burnaby contact the Hon. Minister and perhaps the chairman of the committee and see if something can be worked out between now and tomorrow. I will hear the Hon. Member tomorrow if he wishes to put in a further application.

Mr. Robinson: I certainly will speak with the Minister, as Your Honour has suggested. With respect to the suggestion of proceedings before the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General on this important matter, I wish to draw to the attention of Your Honour that yesterday at an organizational meeting of that particular standing committee an attempt was indeed made to bring this serious question before the committee, and it is partly because of the fact that I was informed that this would not be possible until some time late next month that I brought forward the motion seeking leave to adjourn under Standing Order 29.

However, I will certainly speak with the Minister tonight, as Your Honour has suggested.

Mr. Speaker: I think that I should make it clear to all Hon. Members, and also to the public, that on applications for an emergency debate the Government is put in a position of disadvantage in the sense that it cannot respond to the application. That is the reason the application is put in its most finite terms, and the Hon. Member has co-operated.

But it is not here that the Chair can entertain a discussion or an argument across the Chamber on the merits or otherwise. That is one of the reasons I am inviting the Hon. Member and others to meet and have a discussion.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, when listening to the comments, I understood that the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) said that the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General was reorganizing. I fail to understand how the committees could reorganize at this time because the House has not given concurrence to the Striking Committee report that was tabled in the House in the last few days. I cannot see how a committee would reorganize without the House concurring in the membership of those committees. At this time I would object that any committee would reorganize without the House concurring in those reports.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) points out another matter arising out of the comments. Perhaps the Hon. Member as chairman of the committee would wish to respond.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the committee, I wish to advise the Opposition Whip that we did not have an organizational meeting. Yesterday we had a future business meeting at which we planned our agenda between now and the end of the calendar year, and in fact beyond. We agreed to hear from the Solicitor General in the middle of November on the issue raised by the NDP justice critic.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister on a point of order.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, as you will appreciate, under the rules it is difficult for me to respond on behalf of the Government with respect to a request for an emergency debate. Therefore, I simply raise the question as to whether the House considers Hansard from Monday, September 28, 1987, to be correct in that I note that there were no statements made under Standing Order 21 with respect to this subject, and only one series of questions.

I would also point out that Hansard, September 29, 1987, records no statements under Standing Order 21, and only one series of questions from the Hon. Member.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that for an emergency to be a true emergency more than one Member of the House must be seized of that issue and take the opportunity available to Members, through Standing Order 21 and Oral Questions, to bring it to the attention of the House.

Mr. Speaker: As I stated, on these applications the Government is at a disadvantage. But the Hon. Minister is ingenious, and has at least put some of his thoughts forward.

At the risk of closing off other very ingenious Members who may wish to get into a debate, which is not required, I request that Hon. Members follow my suggestion, and if necessary I can hear the matter again tomorrow.

There is another motion under Standing Order 29 and I recognize the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

SUSPENSION OF FREE TRADE TALKS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I am interested to hear the definition of emergency as suggested by the government side. There certainly have been a great many questions and statements made with respect to free trade.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can do something which I felt I had to do many months ago, that is, dispel any Hon. Members from thinking that just by the numbers of people rising they are necessarily going to persuade the Chair that it is an emergency.

Mr. Langdon: I am pleased to hear that admonishment to the Minister, Mr. Speaker.

With respect to the subject, and I raise this very seriously, in the last week we have had a tremendous charade take place in this country, and a series of "toings" and "froings"—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member does know that the application that he brings with respect to an emergency debate on the trade talks is a matter that is viewed with great seriousness by the Chair, and I am sure by all Hon. Members in this place. The application has to be made directly. The Hon. Member will realize, for the reasons I set out, that under the rules the Government is not given any permission or right to reply, the Hon. Member will make his statement very briefly and not in an argumentative fashion. I can assure the Hon. Member that the Chair understands his position very well.

Mr. Langdon: I do not make these points in any attempt to argue with the Government, but simply to point out that there is a great urgency for the country as a whole and for us as parliamentarians to be able to discuss this issue in a forum that is more open to detailed discussion and probing in detail than is possible during Question Period.

On Monday, there were seven and a half hours of negotiation in the United States, and apparently yesterday Cabinet negotiated for 11 hours. We have not had any statement from the Government, as I expected would come at some stage this week.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: I do not wish to interrupt the Hon. Member, and I hesitate to do so. I am not going to engage in debate, but I simply wish to ask the following. It is my understanding that in order to invoke Standing Order 29 an Hon. Member must give to the Speaker, "at least one hour prior to raising it in the House, a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed".

Under Standing Order 29(3) it states that "the Member shall rise in his or her place and present without argument—"

Under Standing Order 29(4) it states, "The Speaker shall decide, without any debate—" I would simply ask, since this arises as a result of a letter, whether the remarks of my hon. friend should not pertain exactly to what was written to you in requesting the debate.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker: I think I can help the Hon. Minister. I think I have to say to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) that the Hon. Minister is correct. I have the Hon. Member's point and I am again today not of a disposition to grant an emergency debate tonight.

I say again that that does not mean that the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members are precluded from bringing applications another time. For now, for the reasons, as I mentioned yesterday, which I have in my head and do not always allow out of my head, today there will be no emergency debate. However, that does not mean that there might not be one at some further time.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would simply like to have clarified whether it is the usual rule in circumstances such as this to be able to put one's case, albeit briefly, or whether it is commonplace or indeed allowable under the rules to have that case interrupted by a Government Minister seeking to stomp the full presentation.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can assist the Hon. Member by remarking that any Member at almost any time can rise on a point of order and call the attention of the House to the rules. Sometimes Hon. Members do that before the Chair does it. The Chair has been known to allow at least some latitude at times. However, as I said, strictly speaking, the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) is correct. The Chair has allowed and may well continue to allow sufficient comment when the application is made so that the position of the Member is clear. Applications sometimes come in for emergency debates and they are not much more elucidating than the words, "Dear Mr. Speaker, I want an emergency debate on something, thank you very much, sincerely". It may well be that it is helpful to the Chair to hear at least a few comments, but I think the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members will accept that when it gets beyond argument or when a government Member quite correctly rises to say that perhaps the Chair is allowing too much latitude in comments on the application, then I think we have to take that into account.

The rules are there and I think the Minister of State was within his rights in drawing them to the attention of the House. In any event, as the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor knows, I have heard him in the past and I know that he knows that I will hear him in the future.

I should like to advise the House that because of the Minister's statement. government orders will be extended by 10 minutes.

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed from Tuesday, September 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1982 came into force on April 17, 1982, following an agreement between Canada and all the provinces except Quebec;

AND WHEREAS the Government of Quebec has established a set of five proposals for constitutional change and has stated that amendments to give effect to those proposals would enable Quebec to resume a full role in the constitutional councils of Canada;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto sets out the basis on which Quebec's five constitutional proposals may be met;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto also recognizes the principle of the equality of all the provinces, provides new arrangements to foster greater harmony and cooperation between the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces and requires that conferences be convened to consider important constitutional, economic and other issues;

AND WHEREAS certain portions of the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto relate to matters referred to in section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

AND WHEREAS section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province;

NOW THEREFORE the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE

Constitution Act, 1867

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 1 thereof, the following section:

"2. (1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(2) The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

(4) Nothing in this section derogates from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 24 thereof, the following section:

"25. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, the government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate.

(2) Until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the person summoned to fill a vacancy in the Senate shall be chosen from among persons whose names have been submitted under subsection (1) by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates and must be acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 95 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Agreements on Immigration and Aliens

95A. The Government of Canada shall, at the request of the government of any province, negotiate with the government of that province for the purpose of concluding an agreement relating to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province that is appropriate to the needs and circumstances of that province.

95B. (1) Any agreement concluded between Canada and a province in relation to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province has the force of law from the time it is declared to do so in accordance with subsection 95C(1) and shall from that time have effect notwithstanding class 25 of section 91 or section 95.

(2) An agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) shall have effect only so long and so far as it is not repugnant to any provision of an Act of the Parliament of Canada that sets national standards and objectives relating to immigration or aliens, including any provision that establishes general classes of immigrants or relates to levels of immigration for Canada or that prescribes classes of individuals who are inadmissible into Canada.

(3) The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies in respect of any agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) and in respect of anything done by the Parliament or Government of Canada, or the legislature or government of a province, pursuant to any such agreement.

95C. (1) A declaration that an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) has the force of law may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement.

(2) An amendment to an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized

(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement; or

(b) in such other manner as is set out in the agreement.

95D. Sections 46 to 48 of the Constitution Act, 1982 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of any declaration made pursuant to subsection 95C(1), any amendment to an agreement made pursuant to subsection 95C(2) or any amendment made pursuant to section 95E.

95E. An amendment to sections 95A to 95D or this section may be made in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection 38(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, but only if the amendment is authorized by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of all the provinces that are, at the time of the amendment, parties to an agreement that has the force of law under subsection 95B(1)."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 96 thereof, the following heading:

"General"

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 101 thereof, the following heading:

Constitution Amendment, 1987

"Courts Established by the Parliament of Canada"

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 101 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Supreme Court of Canada

101A. (1) The court existing under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada is hereby continued as the general court of appeal for Canada, and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a superior court of record.

(2) The Supreme Court of Canada shall consist of a chief justice to be called the Chief Justice of Canada and eight other judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor General in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

101B. (1) Any person may be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who, after having been admitted to the bar of any province or territory, has, for a total of at least ten years, been a judge of any court in Canada or a member of the bar of any province or territory.

(2) At least three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be appointed from among persons who, after having been admitted to the bar of Quebec, have, for a total of at least ten years, been judges of any court of Quebec or of any court established by the Parliament of Canada, or members of the bar of Quebec.

101C. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court.

(2) Where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

(3) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) of any of the three judges necessary to meet the requirement set out in subsection 101B(2), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the Government of Quebec.

(4) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) otherwise than as required under subsection (3), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the government of a province other than Quebec.

101D. Sections 99 and 100 apply in respect of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

101E. (1) Sections 101A to 101D shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws under section 101 except to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with those sections.

(2) For greater certainty, section 101A shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws relating to the reference of questions of law or fact, or any other matters, to the Supreme Court of Canada."

7. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 106 thereof, the following section:

"106A. (1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

(2) Nothing in this section extends the legislative powers of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces."

8. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and sections:

"XII—Conferences on the Economy and Other Matters

148. A conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year to discuss the state of the Canadian economy and such other matters as may be appropriate.

XIII—References

149. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

Constitution Act, 1982

9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part."

10. Section 44 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"44. Subject to section 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons."

11. Subsection 46(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province."

12. Subsection 47(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution."

13. Part VI of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"PART VI

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

50. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate;

(b) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries; and

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon."

14. Subsection 52(2) of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(d) any other amendment to the Constitution of Canada."

15. Section 61 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Act 1982, or a reference to the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1982, shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

General

16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

CITATION

17. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday my colleague from Ottawa—Vanier made a very impassioned speech and we allowed him to extend the hours of debate in order to complete his remarks. I thought we might have the usual opportunity to question my hon. colleague and then commence debate. Is that not the position we are at?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister is correct. I have just consulted with the Table and we are in a 10 minute question and answer period following the speech by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to compliment my colleague on his speech and his support for the Accord. I wondered if he would like to elaborate on just how he feels the mechanism of the meeting between Premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) serves to allow for an agreement to be reached in a country as large as this with so many diverse opinions and wishes. I would ask him to comment on exactly how he feels the Meech Lake process has served the country in coming to grips with this problem among politicians rather than among civil servants, functionaries, law professors and lawyers.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, evidently, the process this time was a little more productive than the 1981 process with which nine provinces agreed and one province, the Province of Quebec, stayed out of. The process of consultation among 11 First Ministers is an ongoing one and will now be constitutionalized, from what I understand, if Meech Lake is adopted as proposed, and will give the First Ministers a constitutional obligation to hold annual meetings.

I take it that the results of these meetings would be decisions which, prior to their being adopted by the Premiers, would be thoroughly aired by their provinces' parliaments or legislatures. However, we could be replacing Parliament and the legislatures with another form of Government called constitutional meetings of Premiers and the Prime Minister. A little club would be established of those who would decide matters of national importance among themselves.

I still think that there has to be input from this Parliament and from every legislature. Through that medium, and through the Premiers of the provinces and the Prime Minister, those questions could be well covered at these annual constitutional meetings of the First Ministers.

I have a reservation in my own mind as to the possibility of creating a very elite club of people who would take decisions without the proper consultation. God knows that we do not want that to become a form of constitutional government whereby select people, be they Premiers of the provinces or the Prime Minister, would negotiate among themselves deals or arrangements that would bind the whole country without prior consultation with their respective parliaments.

I would hope that this system of consultation, questions of economics, social programs or anything dealing with the national well-being and the quality of life of Canadians, would be resolved in a fashion that would allow for input from all levels of both the legislatures and the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). He talked about the fact that there will be an annual opportunity for Premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to come together to discuss a constitutional agenda. As he knows, one of the central themes, I suppose, of the Langevin Accord is the notion of unanimity. Does that concept raise any questions or doubts in his mind about its application?

• (1550)

Bear in mind the possibility that between now and the time this Accord passes all the provincial legislatures and this House there may well be in one province or another a change of Government. The new Government may very well use the principle of unanimity, which is central to the Accord, to destroy the Accord. I would be surprised, and I am asking the Hon. Member if he would be, if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and all the Premiers would take kindly to a new player coming into the club and destroying their work. The agreement they drafted contains the principle that any one player can thwart the will of the rest. Has the Member given that some thought and what kind of conclusion has he come to?

Mr. Gauthier: I thank the Hon. Member for the question because it is of great importance. I find it difficult to accept that following a change of Government a new player can come in and change the rules. I guess one would accept in a federated state like we have that the word of one province has to be accepted. If it so happens that following an election the disposition of that province is not the same, there nevertheless has to be an acceptance of the previous decision, especially on constitutional matters. What the Hon. Member is alluding to is to be found in Part VI which says:

> A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988.

It goes on to explain that the conferences will have on their agenda Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate, fisheries, and so on. I take it that if these Premiers met, following the decision of the provincial legislatures and this Parliament, the deal would be binding until subsequent meetings change it.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Madam Speaker, I am very proud to take part in this historic debate in support of the Meech Lake Accord. The accord recognizes formally and by way of celebration what has always been implicitly accepted: Quebec is an integral part of Canada and yet a distinct society among us.

For women, Quebec's struggle for recognition of its distinctiveness holds special relevance because women have also laboured long and hard for recognition of the distinct role they play in society. The gains that women made through the equality provisions of the Charter in 1982 were not just the result of hard lobbying which took place over a short period of time, but the culmination of decades of consciousness-raising, achieving inner strength, and personal and public credibility.

Some women still have fears that hard-earned gains can disappear with one stroke of the pen. That is a sign that we as a society are still a long way from true equality. There are still two levels of comfort in this country, one for men and one for women. However, change has begun. It must begin someplace. The process is well under way.

[Translation]

However, any change must reflect honest intentions and good faith, otherwise all ideas, words, arguments and systems are futile. Are our intentions honest? Yes, undoubtedly. Is there real good will toward Canadian women? Yes, more so than ever before in the history of our country. Is that the end of the struggle? No, because some prejudices, either real or imagined, still persist in our society.

[English]

But is there progress—considerable and without question. The spirit that enables us to solve the problems of Quebec, distinct yet part of Canada, is the same spirit which looks to erase the other inequities that exist in our society.

Our Government has been and continues to be committed to equality for women, not only in word but also in action. It is unthinkable, therefore, that in accepting the constitutional Accord we would in any way diminish the important rights that the Charter established for women.

The Constitution is the property of all Canadians, men and women. It is open to all. It is a living document. Its life comes not from politicians or from the courts but from the people. No politician today would tamper with the hard-earned rights of 1982 and 1987. Nor would Canadians tolerate regressive action by future leaders. We, as elected representatives in this Chamber are only part of the process and the vigilance which must continue if women are to achieve true equality. This vigilance must carry over into our courts, our factories, our schools and our homes.

As Minister responsible for the status of women, I am very pleased that Canadian women took such an active part in the debates surrounding the Accord. Indeed, among the most distinctive features of the hearings of the special joint committee were the presentations made by many women's groups which amounted to over 10 per cent of the total testimony. Their arguments were complex and thoughtful.

It was concern about a perceived threat to equality rights that brought women before the special joint committee. They raised questions about the potential of the Accord's language duality-distinct society clause to override or supersede the rights guaranteed in the Charter, particularly the sexual equality rights. Women had no argument with the new measures that would welcome Quebec formally into the Canadian federation, but rather the possible creation of a new balance of rights and freedoms that could be used to the detriment of Canadian women.

This question had not been taken lightly by First Ministers. In drafting the constitutional Accord they devoted a great deal of attention to Charter rights. They had a lengthy discussion of the relationship between the rights found in the Charter and the recognition of Quebec's distinct society.

After all is said and done, some controversy may still linger, but it is based on complex legal interpretations rather than on errors. The First Ministers' decision to include the language duality-distinct society clause was based on legal advice that such an amendment would not override the Charter of Rights. It would not allow Quebec or any other province to enact laws that could override the Charter or be immune from Charter scrutiny by the courts. All federal and provincial laws and other government measures would still remain subject to Charter review, federal and provincial human rights legislation, public opinion, and the general democratic process which we must not underestimate.

• (1600)

Charter rights such as equality rights are substantive rights. Interpretation clauses such as the distinct society and recognition of multiculturalism and aboriginal heritage provisions operate on the margins of other provisions of the Constitution and generally supplement their meaning. They cannot displace or override substantive rights.

The linguistic duality-distinct society clause does not obstruct the Charter. The rights and freedoms in the Charter remain whole. None will be amended, superseded, overridden or taken away. The interpretation clause is not a grant of power to enable governments to do something in the future that they cannot do today. I believe that this point has been lost in much of the technical discussion, and sometimes the passion, which inevitably enters into such debates.

As an interpretation clause the Accord's distinct society provision is designed to be read along with other constitutional values in any Charter analysis by the courts. It enables the courts to interpret the Constitution, including the Charter, in a manner consistent with Quebec's distinctiveness within Canada. It would be used to shed light on the application of the Charter in certain cases where there may be ambiguity. Since the courts are already taking into account the reality of Quebec's distinctiveness in their judgments, this clause essentially makes explicit what has long been implicit.

In no way will the distinct society clause change the substance of Charter rights. Here, Madam Speaker, is where it is important to make the distinction between interpretation clauses and provisions which confer substantive rights in our Constitution. Substantive rights operate on a different plane than interpretation provisions. Section 28 in particular gives sexual equality rights the highest protections within the Charter. This perspective was supported by a number of senior constitutional lawyers who appeared before the committee.

[Translation]

The primacy of rights contained in the Charter, including equality rights, is unambiguous.

As the Minister responsible for the status of women, I appreciate the concerns expressed by some women's organizations regarding the Accord. I spared no effort to ensure that these concerns are heard and examined fully. The Special Joint Committee has listened carefully to the evidence put forward by women's groups. I personally met with representatives from several of these organizations in order to discuss the matter and I arranged a meeting in Ottawa where women's groups representatives and government experts discussed the Accord. We had a straightforward discussion on several aspects of this matter.

[English]

At the end some did not agree with our position, but I am fully convinced, after considerable research and considerable thought, because the Charter is important to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and to the Government as well as to myself, that we have advanced the cause of a united Canada without adversely affecting the rights of Canadian women.

It is clear from the discussions I have had with women, and from the testimony that women's groups presented before the special joint committee, that the unease which women have with the role and interpretation of the Charter and Constitution has its primary source in matters outside of the Accord. Women's fundamental concerns about equality rights delve into the wider context of the Charter's operation as a whole.

For this reason I welcome the committee's recommendation that a consultative process be initiated under the direction of a permanent Joint Senate-House Committee on Constitutional Reform. In light of the concerns that have been expressed the Government agrees with the committee that perhaps the Charter as a whole, particularly Sections 1 and 33, should be reviewed in the future by First Ministers. Further parliamentary scrutiny of this issue would be welcome. This process, in addition to the annual constitutional conferences established by the Accord, would offer women practical opportunities for input into an ongoing process of constitutional reform.

I have said it before in this Chamber and other places, but it is worth repeating here that women have been major players in ensuring the equality rights which all Canadians now enjoy. However, the field has changed substantially in the five years since equality rights were enshrined in the Constitution in 1982. Women and women's groups have been welcomed by the Government as significant participants in the process of policy development and in decision making. In the areas of pension reform, economic development, tax reform, employment strategies, and child care the views and concerns of women have been listened to and heeded.

I am delighted to say that in my efforts as Minister responsible I have been aided and supported by the Prime Minister and my cabinet colleagues who all share belief in the strength and potential of Canadian women. We are united in our determination to further the advancement of the women of Canada with all means available to us. We have advanced issues with tangible measures such as our employment equity program, reform of Canada's divorce and family orders enforcement laws, and a plan of action to ensure the implementation of equal pay for work of equal value in the public service.

[Translation]

Moreover, we have made a special effort in the area of appointments. For instance, for the first time a woman held the rank of general in Canada, for the second time a woman was appointed to the Supreme Court, and we nominated the first woman to the Federal Court of Canada.

The initiatives our government intends to take are described in the document entitled Dimensions of Equality: A Federal Government Work Plan for Women, which was tabled at the First Ministers' Conference on the Economy held last November. This document identifies our priorities and describes our action plan over the next two years for enhancing equality between men and women.

[English]

The constitutional Accord brings into reality one of the most essential elements of Canadian history and the Canadian dream, that is, a nation from coast to coast with Quebec officially a part of the Canadian family. The richness of that province and of its people will shine on all of us. The Canadian dream that was put into motion so many years ago by Sir John A. Macdonald and his contemporaries is a dream that does not end, because it is a dream of justice and fairness for every member of our society across Canada.

The Prime Minister and the ten Premiers were not alone when they put on paper the words that would make this country complete. They had with them the ideas, hopes, and aspirations of successive generations of Canadians. They listened to the voices of the present, but their eyes were on the future because the Constitution is not merely for today. It is a living document and it will encourage Canadians to continue their dream. There is a powerful momentum in this country of justice and equality for all Canadians. That momentum was captured at Meech Lake and will carry all of us, men and women, celebrating Canada into the future.

Ms. Jewett: Madam Speaker, the Minister said that she had met with representatives of several of the national women's organizations. I believe she said she had discussions with their constitutional advisers as well as with the Government's constitutional advisers.

I have talked to all the women's organizations and most of them do not feel there was adequate discussion of their concerns. Indeed, in many cases their briefs were only available in the last week or two because of the shortage of time, lack of financial support and so on.

Since there are differing points of view among the constitutional experts, would it not be an excellent idea for the Minister to seriously consider the proposal of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women that said yesterday there should be a national conference on the potential effects of the Accord on the equality rights of women and minorities?

I am sure the Minister has read many of the briefs and proceedings of the committee this summer. Does she not believe that there is indeed a great deal more ground to be covered by constitutional experts, including those in the Government and those who represent women's groups and universities, in examining the potential outcome of the Accord? If so, such a conference would be educational, desirable and should be facilitated.

Will she give that assurance to the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women?

Mrs. McDougall: Madam Speaker, I received the resolutions of the Canadian Advisory Council yesterday. Of course, I am always prepared to take those resolutions under advisement.

Let me make two points to the Hon. Member. First, I agree with her assessment of the Charter which she made in the House, that sexual equality rights in the Charter are not threatened by the Meech Lake Accord.

Second, in terms of consultation, I wonder whether a large national gathering is the appropriate place to discuss what is really a legal interpretation issue. I believe the Charter as a whole is a very important issue and that is why I welcomed the recommendation of the committee that we look at the Charter over time and not just for now, so that a permanent part of the Government's role is to be vigilant in regard to the rights of women and other people whose rights are reflected in the Charter.

Having said that, I am always prepared to look at the resolutions and take them under advisement. I think it goes beyond a one afternoon event. Therefore, the process laid out by the committee is probably more appropriate.

However, I did read the briefs and the testimony before the committee very carefully. I have paid considerable attention to this issue because it is clearly one that is very important to women.

I think the appropriate conclusion is that we regard the Charter as an over-all part of the Constitution that we are prepared to review over time as a body of jurisprudence builds up in the courts. I am sure, based on the Hon. Member's comments in the Chamber, that she would probably agree that that is a wise procedure.

Ms. Jewett: Madam Speaker, the Minister knows that the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women is perfectly free to hold its own conference. I hope she was not suggesting for a moment that it needs her approval and she would regard their resolutions as ones that need her approval. I hope she would not repeat the experience of the Member of the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) when he was ultimately responsible for the advisory council and attempted to cancel the meeting.

Mrs. McDougall: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

Ms. Jewett: I am simply asking a question. I hope she is not going to cancel a proposed conference of the advisory council. They are free to hold a conference on this matter.

Would the Minister be willing to facilitate the conference financially and in other ways?

Mrs. McDougall: Madam Speaker, I certainly recognize the council's right to be independent and to hold its own conferences. It has certainly done so before and I suppose I took it for granted that the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members would know that.

I said that I would take under advisement the resolutions and any role I would have to play. At the moment, I believe there is another process that is more appropriate.

The Canadian Advisory Council has done excellent research on behalf of women in Canada. I have said that many times and I certainly respect their right to make decisions and hold their own consultations, as they have done many times. Indeed, I have been a speaker at many of those consultations and conferences.

I fully understand my role vis-à-vis the council and other women's groups in this country, both in terms of listening to them and forwarding their views. We will not always agree with all of the groups that appear before Members of this Chamber. There are as many opinions among women as there are among men and that is why I believe our discussions have been fruitful and should continue. The issues concerning the Charter will not be resolved with one consultation or one conference, but should be considered over time as an integral living part of the Constitution.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, the report of the special joint committee places considerable emphasis on the difference between legality and legitimacy. It points out that while people can claim rightly that Quebec has always legally been bound by the Constitution, the Constitution of 1982 lacks legitimacy within Quebec and with the people of Quebec.

In the same way, I suggest to the Minister that this Accord lacks legitimacy with many of the women of Canada and with the majority of women's organizations in Canada that have studied this report. Is the Minister prepared to remove the doubts that exists among women and women's organizations that the Charter protects their rights from any changes that are brought about by the Accord? Will she ensure that this new Constitution is not only legal but also has legitimacy among Canadian women?

Mrs. McDougall: Madam Speaker, I believe the best way to do that is to provide a procedure whereby the Charter is given pride and place in the kind of monitoring that is recommended by the committee.

I have looked at all of the opinions. I am not a lawyer, so it is the legitimacy that concerns me as much as the legalities. I believe that there is a great deal of legitimacy to the Meech Lake Accord. I understand what was in the joint special committee report. However, I think that in terms of where we go from here, the balance that was achieved in the Meech Lake Accord between the Constitution and the Charter, and the entry of Quebec into Canada, is a very delicate balance. It was achieved. It is something that we on this side of the House are very proud of on behalf of the people of Canada whom we and other Members in this Chamber represent, as well as the regions of Canada that are represented by their elected Premiers as well.

• (1620)

Our celebration of the Accord recognizes that within the whole constitutional process there is always considerably more that can be done, and will be done, because there is now a process in place to recognize the vitality and the life that exists within this document for the future.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise today to join this debate on the Meech Lake Accord.

[Translation]

First and foremost, I wish to talk about Quebec. As all Canadian men and women and as a representative of the North, I am delighted that at long last, Quebec men and women now officially adhere to the Constitution. I think that was necessary for the progress of the Canadian Constitution. For many years, a large number of Canadians felt quite concerned about the unfulfilled promise made during the referendum. Now, for Quebec, as a result of the Meech Lake Accord, it has become a reality. I must clearly state that I realize how very important is the Accord for Quebec as well as for the rest of Canada. But it is with anger and sorrow that I hear people say that Canadian Northerners seem to be against Quebec. It is untrue and unfair. Most of the Northerners I represent are quite happy with Quebec being part of the Accord. Now, Madam Speaker, I must deal with the problems which this Accord has created for Northern Canadians.

[English]

People in the territories to whom I have spoken feel strongly that the lack of consultation and the lack of participation in the democratic process in the formation of the Meech Lake Accord have been an insult and, more importantly, patently unfair to Canadians occupying one-third of the land mass of Canada. Perhaps it will be the Québécois who understand best what we are saying in the northern territories when we speak of feeling like second-class citizens because we feel that our voices are not being heard and our opinions not respected.

As the Government leader of the Yukon said in his presentation to the constitutional committee, "Quebecers also know the exasperation of abandonment. The failure of fair treatment for Quebec has remained a haunting and collective embarrassment. Has no lesson been drawn from this? Is there no concern for the aspirations of Canada's two northern territories, two potential partners in Confederation?" It should not be in a mature society that 75,000 citizens of that country have no voice, that their duly elected representatives and legislatures are unrecognized in the creation of something as fundamentally important as the development of a Constitution for this country.

For many, I regret to say, at least those above the 60th parallel, it may be seen as the southern Constitution. This is not fair. This is not right. This is not against Quebec. This is not the way to build an integrated and a whole Canada.

In 1981, an article in The Globe and Mail under the heading of "Selling the North" stated as follows:

> The people of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, both natives and white, have been used as bargaining counters in the constitutional argument between the Prime Minister and the Premiers.

Those were the words of a different Prime Minister, a different Government, but the same scenario.

In 1981 also the former Member from the Yukon, a member of the government Party now, put forth a motion during the constitutional debate of 1981 that the territories should deal only with the federal Government as had all other areas in Canada when they came into Confederation regarding potential provincehood. I would like to quote that former Member's comments. He said that for over half a century the dream of provincial status has been the lodestone of northern hopes. It has been central to the vision of the North which sees the development of Yukon and the Northwest Territories as the best and brightest hope for Canada's future. When the Prime Minister accepted the inclusion of two clauses in the April Accord relating to the extension of existing provinces into the territories, and notwithstanding any other law or practice in relatin to the establishment of new provinces, he dealt a crushing blow to the hopes and aspirations of thousands of Canadian citizens resident above 60. He gave away what was not his to give away, the rights and privileges of Canadians of northern Canada above 60.

The mover of that motion was so eloquent that he convinced the members of his Party to vote for that motion. The Liberal Government at the time, of course, voted against that motion. I am proud to say that the New Democratic Party is the only Party that has remained consistent on this issue, as you will see, Madam Speaker, when you read Addendum B of the report of the constitutional committee. At that time, we supported the report on that motion regarding the territories. We support it now, and we will be proposing it.

In June of 1987 the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) proposed a similar motion. We do not see at all the same consistency in either the current Opposition, or the current Government. So six years later we have a flip-flop. I suppose all one can say is that plus cela change, plus c'est pareil.

I would now like to say a few words about this one-third of Canada. The North, when viewed from the outside, is often seen as a vast wilderness, largely uninhabited, romantic, with some interesting and perhaps exotic aboriginal residents, and tourists who come to see the last frontier. To be sure, the population is not large, which is very much the attraction of the North. In constitutional terms, it is true that we are not asking for provincehood now. But we do want those rights to be assured for the future.

It is equally true that since the early 1900s the directions of all federal governments have been based on the assumption that the Territories will at some time in the future become provinces. In the presentations of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories to the committee, they made fairly strong points about this. I would like to quote a couple of examples that those presenters made to the committee. In 1922, the constitutional expert, Mr. E. Kennedy wrote in a leading law text of the day:

> It is true that the Dominion of Canada which was created by proclamation on July 1, 1867, consisted of only four provinces, but a little vision might have seen that the Canada in the British North America Act allowing territorial extension was at least pregnant with magnificent possibilities.

In 1958, Alvin Hamilton, the then Minister of Northern affairs and National Resources, stated in the House of Commons in relation to proposed amendments to the Northern Territories Act and the Yukon Act:

> I think the House will recognize that our responsibilities with regard to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories take us into the field of provincial and municipal government. These amendments forward steps in the administration and growth of our new parts of Canada towards provincial status.

The Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) stated in this House on June 8, 1987:

> I do not think anyone can challenge the fact that my Party and this Government have taken a leadership role in respect to ensuring that, as quickly as possible, we move forward in this area of the Territories controlling their destiny and attaining provincial status.

On September 29, 1987, the Minister made a very moving statement. He said that the Constitution is a document of the people. No one would disagree, but we ask: "Of all the people?" Is it all the people except 75,000? And we leave that question.

The Legislatures and Government of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon today are not glorified municipal institutions. They legislate in respect of municipal matters, business, health, education and justice. Some of the legislatures, to quote the Government Leader of the Yukon, exercise their authorities over an area as large as India. The Government leaders and Ministers of the Territories have also participated in meetings of federal, provincial and territorial Ministers. They were invited to participate in the First Ministers' meetings on aboriginal rights. However, they were not consulted, not invited and not signators to the document which will set the future of citizens living above the 60th parallel. This is the only area in Canada where citizens were not represented by their elected leaders.

The report of the constitutional committee submitted this month states that some unnamed provinces were: " extremely jealous of the trappings of provincehood of the Territories". Therefore, one can only conclude that it was not by oversight but by calculation that the appointment of Senators and Supreme Court judges was reserved only for provinces. At the same time, with this attitude, we feel that our fears that the unanimity clause will preclude future provincehood are well-founded, and therein lies the concern of the North with the unanimity provision.

It is for this reason that my Party, in putting forth Addendum B, highlights those areas to ensure that aboriginal people will be recognized, that the North will take its rightful place, that women's rights will assuredly remain entrenched and that the rights of visible minorities will be similarly protected through a process of Charter review. I say to you, Madam

Speaker, that certainly in the North, the Tory "trust me" is just not good enough.

I have spoken briefly about the provincehood issue. There is another area that remains unchanged, and that is, the clause regarding boundary extension. Do the First Ministers actually envisage that the Yukon will become part of British Columbia, that the Western Arctic will become part of Alberta? Do they really harbour such fantasies of a land grab in this day and age? Can any Canadian take such an idea seriously? Would Albertans, for example, stand by while Manitoba took over Calgary and Edmonton? It is ludicrous. Therefore, why is it there?

I would like to say a few words now about the people of the North. As the Hon. Minister said yesterday, Constitutions are the peoples. I would like to talk about the peoples of the North who, like everyone else in Canada, live, work and raise families. We must first remember that the North is an important part of Canadian history, not just a history of gold rushes, whalers, missionaries and fur traders, but it has a rich heritage of aboriginal people whose ancestors have lived in the North for at least 30,000 years.

These people are not exotic supplements to National Geographic. They are politicians, scientists, business people, trappers, hunters, storekeepers, linguists and archeologists. As an example, in Old Crow, Yukon, there is a man who does not read or write but who, without the aid of any of our culture's science, classified 200 species of birds, not in Latin but in Loucheu, not written on paper but remembered and recited orally. He is a scientist. He is a northerner. He is a Canadian.

There are those who came to the Yukon as fur traders, adventurers, seeking gold, seeking jobs, building the highway. They stayed to build a country, your country, Madam Speaker, and mine. I know a woman whose father carried a piano on his back over the Chilkoot Pass on his way to the gold rush. Today that woman, her children and her children's children are building a society in the Yukon. They are Canadians.

I know a miner, a refugee, who works at a difficult and dirty job but who is proud "she" and her family are Canadians. She can work here and build her community in her Canada and our Canada.

I know farmers—yes, Madam Speaker, there are farmers in the North—raising cattle and growing crops under very difficult environmental conditions. They are working to ensure the self-sufficiency of the North. They are Canadians.

There are many more. There are fishermen, business people, gourmet cooks. There are theatres and cinemas. There are singers and song writers. From Watson Lake to Old Crow, from Dawson to Haines Junction, from Mayo to Faro, in Teslin, Tagish, Carmacks, Carcross, Elsa, Snag, Burwash, Swift River, Beaver Creek, Moose Creek and Whitehorse, and in the 13 Indian bands of the Yukon, there are Canadians who elect governments territorially, elect Members of Parliament, who raise their families, run their businesses, drink a beer now and then, and understand themselves to be full-fledged Canadians. As an aside, Madam Speaker, Revenue Canada certainly appears to agree with them.

Unless amendments are made to this Accord, northern Canada will be saying it is only half Canadian, that our voice does not count.

At one time when people from the south asked me what I did for a living, I would say somewhat facetiously: "I am paid to occupy the North". We see increasing instances of our sovereignty under dispute, but it will not be through further militarization that we assert our sovereignty. It will be through pointing to Yukoners, to residents of the Northwest Territory, to the Inuit, to the Dene, the Loucheuc and other aboriginal and non-aboriginal groups, saying: "This is our land. These are Canadians. This is Canada".

With respect to our specific concerns which are addressed in these amendments, such as appointment to the Supreme Court, why would members of the Bar, many of whom belong to several provincial Bars but reside in the Territories, be excluded? It defies logic. There is the need for a resolution of aboriginal rights, further aboriginal rights conferences. As aboriginal groups have so eloquently said, the circle of Confederation will not be closed until Canada's first peoples are recognized.

Finally, provincehood, not now but for the future. Surely this is a logical extension of our history to date. The Government of Canada has a fiduciary duty to protect the interests of the North and aboriginal people. Can the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) truly say that he has fulfilled this duty?

In an article in The Toronto Star on September 20, 1987, Richard Gwynn stated, "The Arctic matters deeply in itself to Canadians. It matters in terms of sovereignty; and of the environment. It matters most perhaps, psychologically. It rounds us out as a nation; giving us depth and form". I could not agree more.

Representing that part of Canada which has no vote and no voice, I must vote against this Accord as it stands, unless amended. I urge Members to listen to the amendments which will be put forward by our Party which will add to making this Accord acceptable to a much broader range of people.

As I mentioned earlier, we were not part of the consultation process. This is the only formal forum in which we can speak and say no. I urge Members of the House to support the amendments of the NDP.

[Translation]

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, I feel that this debate is about Canada, about ourselves, about the way we perceive ourselves and it is also a debate on the division of powers to enable us to do the things which we have to do as citizens, in our country.

If I speak out against the Accord today, it is not because I am against Quebec, as you surely know, but because I am for a stronger, not weaker Canada than the one we had known so far.

[English]

It seems to me that the important thing is how we organize ourselves as citizens in a large nation, and how we see ourselves in the mirror called the Constitution. We are a small population, geographically located next door to the most powerful nation. We live in a large geographical chunk called Canada. The fact that we are neighbours to the United States and not to Luxembourg, or the Republic of San Marino, requires a Constitution that adds strength and does not diminish strength in the role of the national Government, if we wish to compete successfully in the world instead of seeking special favours in Washington and retreating to the comfort of fortress America.

What happened to public participation in the process of this Accord? The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) did not consult with Canadians when he negotiated the Accord. Eleven politicians decided for 25 million Canadians. The joint committee did not travel. Instead, it brought a handful of witnesses to Ottawa. Yet the committee had a responsibility to travel and consult Canadians on the Constitution. To make things worse, in July the Prime Minister announced that the Accord would not be changed, no matter what the committee recommended.

This week we are debating the Constitution of the people of Canada. Senator Murray told the committee at the outset that amendments to the Accord would not be accepted, and that the hearings were for public information only. What a sham! What a sad day for democracy! Is that the Progressive Conservative notion of democratic consultation?

This is the constitutional proposal of 11 individuals. The committee report did not produce one amendment, except for the Liberal proposals. In my submission, the 11-man vision of Canada expressed in Section 2 of the Accord is a rear-view mirror vision which may have been valid two generations ago. However, today a new Canada is emerging.

Canada includes many distinct societies: Quebec, Newfoundland, Haida Indians, New Brunswick, Ontario, Lubicon Indians, immigrant groups, the Dene Nation, Inuit, Mennonites, British Columbia, you name it, Madam Speaker, there are hundreds of distinct societies from coast to coast. In my submission, it is wrong to single out one distinct society in this constitutional Accord. Instead, we should constitutionalize what Canada is, a multicultural society, a nation composed of people from many different backgrounds.

Canada is not a nation where ethnics are over here and majorities are over there; not two founding races over here and aboriginal people over there; not the 10 provinces and the Prime Minister at one table cooking this up, and the two northern territories left out, as mentioned by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin).

Ethnicity and multiculturalism are not only the label for minorities. Majority groups are also ethnic and part of multiculturalism. Since ethnic and multicultural have become interchangeable words in the current political language, since Canada means people from many origins and cultures who joined the aboriginals, since the distinct character applies to many regions and people from Newfoundland to British Columbia, from the 49th parallel to the North Pole, it becomes imperative to amend Section 2, which is the description of our society.

When a decision is made on the present amendment before you, Madam Speaker, I intend to move an amendment to Section 2 which will state that the Constitution of Canada should be interpreted in the manner consistent with the recognition that Canada is a multicultural society which includes aboriginal peoples, French-speaking Canadians centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec. In the amendment I intend to move, aboriginal people and new Canadians will not be added as an afterthought, which is probably what the Prime Minister and the Premiers did at 4.30 in the morning when they realized the political repercussions of their initial oversight.

In the amendment I intend to move, Canada is defined as one society, one distinct society because of its uniqueness in which there is no room for the potential emergence of two societies and eventually of two nations, in which there is no division between minority and majority groups, and no division between aboriginal and all other groups that compose Canadian society.

If not amended, the reasons I will vote against the Accord are the following. First, the definition of Canada proposed in the Accord is outdated. It is not the modern Canada. Millions of Canadians are left out who do not identify with either French or English. They have no place in the Accord, and they are outside the Constitution. Native people are an afterthought. This is not today's Canada.

• (1650)

Second, the spending power clause would lead to a chequerboard Canada and to the Balkanization of standards of social services, as it was so well put to the joint committee by several witnesses including the former Deputy Minister of the Treasury Board. Further, we want Ottawa to retain the power to stop provincial attempts to opt out in future as in the case of extra billing. The Accord encourages this option of opting out.

On the spending power, we do not want future federal Governments to be restrained when taking environmental initiatives. Third, there is the devolution of power to the provinces in the appointment to the Senate and the Supreme Court. As well, there is uncertainty about women's rights.

Greater rights are given to the provinces on immigration matters. The Cullen-Couture Accord, as far as I am concerned, goes far enough. There is no need to give provinces greater powers. Immigrants should not and cannot be forced to reside in a specified province. Immigrants choose Canada when they come, not Ontario, Quebec or British Columbia, but the whole Canadian nation.

Because of the erosion of power of future Parliaments, federal-provincial constitutional meetings will from now on be institutionalized. The result will be that joint committees and Parliaments will not be able to make changes to future accords for all sorts of reasons, as it is the case now. Canada's future constitutional changes will then be written, if we adopt this Accord, by a process reminiscent of a board of directors consisting of the Prime Minister of the day and the 10 Premiers as well.

Once the Accord is approved as it is proposed, everyone in the House knows that it will be virtually impossible to make substantial changes to federal institutions in the future. Once passed, this Accord will be cast in cement and it will be Canada's Constitution.

As I mentioned at the beginning, the Constitution is the mirror in which we see ourselves as Canadian citizens. It is the instrument that we agree upon to divide powers so as to get things done for the benefit of the nation and of all its citizens.

This Accord is not good because it weakens Confederation. It gives the wrong picture of Canadian society. It leaves the public out of future changes. It gives the provinces new powers without giving to the national Government, to Canada itself, new powers as well. Therefore, it produces a one-way flow of powers in the direction of the provinces without benefiting the national interests.

For these reasons, I oppose the Accord. My reasons are based on a number of considerations. Fundamentally, I reject the definition of Canada in Section 2(1). I find it outdated, a vision of the past. This is why I call it a rear-view mirror. That is not the Canada that we experience and see every day, be it urban or rural Canada. We do not want to leave out of our Constitution those who do not identify themselves with the French or the English culture, and we do not want to have in the Constitution as an add-on, an afterthought, the consideration that is due to our aboriginal people, to the minority groups and to immigration groups. Hence, I look forward to the debate later on when there will be an opportunity to put forward an amendment on the definition of Canadian society, an amendment which proposes a definition which I think is the proper and more contemporary one for Canada to consider.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments. There are no questions, so we will resume debate.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, as a member of the special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons which looked into this matter, it is an honour for me to participate in this important debate today. I am very proud to have my signature on the report of our committee. I would be bold enough to suggest that I think it is one of the finest parliamentary reports ever to be handed down in the history of this institution.

The constitutional Accord of 1987 itself is an historic document. It truly marks a turning point in our constitutional history. It closes a difficult chapter that began when Quebec was left out of the agreement leading to patriation and to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in 1982.

The 1982 reform was a major, significant and important advance in our constitutional development, but it was incomplete. It did not include all of Canada. Quebec's distinct identity within Canada and our linguistic duality as a country were glaring omissions from the 1982 description of our national values. The elected Government of Quebec did not join the other nine provinces in support of the agreement.

As the Hon. Robert Stanfield told us at the joint parliamentary committee hearings in 1982, we created two Canadas. By recognizing linguistic duality and Quebec's distinct identity within Canada, the 1987 Accord completes the constitutional picture drawn in 1982 of how Canadians see themselves, of Canada as it is, in the words of our committee.

Quebec's acceptance of the Accord makes Canada whole again. The chapter that opened in 1982 is now closed. Now we can write a new and happier chapter for the Accord unblocks the constitutional reform process. It offers new means and new hopes for reaching such long-held goals as Senate reform and for addressing a number of other issues raised before our joint committee.

As Hon. Members know, the Government of Que' ec had been watching the constitutional reform process from the sidelines ever since the 1982 package was put together. With the Accord in place, it can return, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) foresaw, with honour and enthusiasm to the constitutional bargaining table.

This is a development of measurable importance. Quebec's isolation was more than a rebuke to the values of moderation and tolerance that we cultivate as Canadians. It was also a real obstacle to further constitutional reform. There are dry, mathematical reasons for this. Without Quebec's participation, it would be all the harder to secure amendments calling for the support of seven provinces representing half the population. It was impossible to pursue reform of the Senate because of Quebec's veto over its representation there and it would be impossible to secure amendments calling for unanimous consent.

More important are the reasons related to our democratic and federal principles. No solid or lasting reform would be possible when a large segment of the population felt that its wishes had not at least been considered.

Gordon Robertson, the federal Government's top constitutional adviser from 1975 to 1979, reminded us in committee that the first goal of the constitutional reform process from the start was, in his words, to produce a sense of satisfaction and acceptance in Quebec. Through the Accord this goal has been won at last. I would like to quote briefly from Mr. Robertson's testimony shown at page 29 of the committee report. It says:

> Members of the Joint Committee were particularly impressed with the approach formulated by Gordon Robertson, former Clerk of the Privy Council and a participant in almost every important federal-provincial conference on constitutional matters from 1950 until his retirement from the federal public service in 1979.
> Mr. Robertson advocated a three-step approach.

These are his words now:

> As I see it, the basic question is what are the prime objectives of policy to be achieved at this time, 1987, in the constitutional realm? The (federal) government has decided, and I think the other governments, the provincial governments agree, that the prime objective is to achieve an agreement under which Quebec can become a willing participant in the Canadian Confederation. This seems to me to be right as to the prime objective of policy at this time. If that is agreed, the second question I think is whether the arrangements to achieve that objective involve consequences that are seriously adverse for Canada.
> Then the third question, it seems to me, is whether there is a reasonable prospect of getting better arrangements than the arrangements that are incorporated in the Constitutional Accord, 1987.

Mr. Robertson went on in his testimony to answer both those latter questions in the negative.

Really, I think there are two opposing visions of Canada challenging us in this debate and that challenged us as members of the joint committee over the long hot summer days when we sat in the Railway Committee Room. One is a vision of confrontation, the other a vision of co-operation. One is founded on struggle and animosity between federal and provincial Governments, the other on co-operation and mutual respect. One sees the federal and provincial Governments as rivals for the allegiance of Canadians, the other as partners in serving Canadians.

The Constitutional Accord of 1987 stands squarely for the vision of co-operation, mutual respect, and partnership. I believe this vision of co-operation and partnership is shared by most Canadians.

I believe as well that most Canadians want us to adopt the Accord because it translates this vision into the building blocks of a stronger and more united Canada. How does it do that? That is a question I intend to answer in the next few minutes of my remarks.

The Constitutional Accord of 1987 is rooted in the spirit of federalism and the principle that the federal and provincial Governments share responsibility for the well-being of Canada. That spirit was brutally ruptured during the events leading to patriation of the Constitution. In 1980 Quebecers said non to sovereignty association and oui to the renewed federalism they were solemnly promised by the rest of us, in particular the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, during the referendum campaign. Yet when the final deal was made it was without Quebec's consent, without the participation of the people who had opted for Canada in the belief that their culture and their presence would be respected.

We heard clear testimony in committee on the threat this situation posed to our continuing unity. "It left a wound and a grievance", in the words of Jack Pickersgill, a man who draws on a wealth of experience in constitutional and political matters going back to the time of Mackenzie King. Gordon Robertson sounded a clear warning that it would be "an extremely dangerous situation for the future if we leave it one in which perhaps there is a sense of grievance, frustration, perhaps even of betrayal" in Quebec.

This Accord now gives us an opportunity to heal the wounds and make us one Canada again. I think it was perhaps put best, certainly most emotionally, by Solange Chaput-Rolland, former member of the Pépin-Robarts committee and Liberal Member of the Quebec Legislature when she told the committee:

[Translation]

> It was only on the day following the Meech Lake Accord that I really felt for the first time that we had won the referendum.

[English]

Those are the words of a woman who cherishes and respects her country, who stood for her country when it was not easy to do so, and who now rejoices in the respect her country has paid, with this Accord, to her culture.

However, the Accord does much more than bring Quebec back into our constitutional family. I would support it even if it had nothing to do with ending Quebec's isolation since it promotes my view of Canada by creating a framework for heightened co-operation between two orders of Government.

I will not take up the time of the House describing these provisions of the Accord in detail, they are well-known and have been mentioned by other participants in this debate. However, I think it is useful to sketch some of the implications to make my point clear.

Let me begin with key federal institutions. By offering the provinces an opportunity to have a say in appointments, the Accord strengthens the Supreme Court of Canada, and the other place, the Senate, as truly federal institutions. In the case of the other place, the Accord moves forward the process of further reform in the second round of constitutional talks.

I do not suppose anyone doubts that the goal is to strengthen regional voices in our national decision-making process. Certainly that is the starting point. The interim procedures set out in the Accord represent an important gesture of good faith. Let me point out that this aspect of the Accord is in the spirit of 1867 when the Fathers of Confederation envisaged the second Chamber as a forum for regional concerns at the centre. As to the Supreme Court, its federal character can only be reinforced by provincial participation in the choice of justices. This is, after all, the court that acts as the ultimate referee in disputes about the meaning of the Constitution, including federal-provincial disputes. It is also the court that rules on the constitutionality of federal and provincial laws.

Much has been heard, in the shallow criticism of this Accord, about the so-called limitations on federal spending powers. I think that is a good political catch phrase. It is portentous and empty, perfect for those who want news coverage and to give the illusion of thought. The truth is that there has never been any requirement for provinces to adhere to shared cost programs initiated by the federal Government in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. For the first time we have entrenchment of federal Government power to be involved in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. We are talking about areas of "exclusive provincial jurisdiction". Those three words seem to have escaped the critics of this part of the Accord.

All the Accord does is to recognize the integrity of provincial jurisdiction by guaranteeing reasonable compensation to provinces that prefer to meet national objectives in ways tailored to the particular needs of their people.

Peter Leslie, Director of the Institute of Intergovernmental Relations at Queen's University, pointed out to the committee that this arrangement can be of positive benefit to Canadians as taxpayers and users of programs. Provinces, he points out, will have the latitude to find innovative solutions to problems felt across the country. They will be encouraged to devise means that are the most cost effective or most efficient in pursuing national objectives.

Professor Gerald Beaudoin, of the University of Ottawa Law School, told us that terms employed in the section dealing with national shared cost programs were unlikely to give rise to great difficulty because the concepts such as "compatibility" and "initiative" were already known to the law.

He emphasized that, in any event, the section would only come into play in the limited category of future programs that have the following characteristics. First, it must be a national program; second, it must be a shared cost program; third, the program must have been established after the section has come into force; and finally, the program must be in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. Only if all four of these conditions are satisfied will the section be triggered.

Accordingly, the proposed Section 106A will have no impact on established national shared cost programs, nor will the section affect non-shared cost programs such as the family allowance program. If the Government of Canada establishes a regional rather than a national program, the section would not come into play either. The section will not apply to programs established in areas of shared jurisdiction such as agriculture, immigration, and perhaps education.

I suggest that some of the Members opposite are trying to walk both sides of the fence. They are afraid of taking a clear stand on the principle of national reconciliation so they posture, adopting positions they know will not work, stands they know will have no chance of implementation. They propose an amendment to the spending powers provision so they will look good on the evening news, so they will look as if they knew a constitutional principle when they stumbled over one.

This kind of posturing is the cheapest attempt to gain notoriety without taking responsibility for action. The proponents of this amendment know, as we all do, that this proposal has already been discussed by the First Ministers at length and has been rejected. What can be easier than proposing an amendment you know will not, cannot, be accepted or implemented?

Members opposite evidently believe that making the amendment will delude the public into a belief that the members of the Liberal Party are in fact capable of independent thought. Well, they are not. They have lost the fire and the vision necessary to build a country. All they have left is the pathetic posturing of a marginal Party which does not count any more because it does not care anymore. It does not care about our history, our culture, or anything beyond short-term partisan advantage. While they whimper in the corner of our national life, the rest of us will go about the business of building a nation secure in its diversity.

This Accord is both an end and a beginning. It marks the end of a profound and dangerous alienation of Quebec, its culture and its people, from the rest of Canada. It is the beginning of the rest of our national journey into the twenty-first century. This Accord provides us with the basis for a continuing exploration of the territory of constitutional reform. With a strong and stable national base we can afford to listen, and we must now respond to the legitimate calls for equity and reform which in other times might have threatened us. It is an exciting time to be a Canadian and I will be proud to vote in favour of the Accord.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. While I was sitting here I was thinking of the long history that my family has had in constitutional matters. I was talking to an uncle of mine who used to teach history in Alberta who reminded me that a distant forefather of mine, Peter Mitchell, was a Premier of New Brunswick and actually sat at the constitution table and was one of the Fathers of Confederation 120 years ago. More recently, another relative, whom I also did not meet, was the Premier of Prince Edward Island earlier in this century and was also involved in constitutional matters. Only five short years ago I was the spokesman for our Party on constitutional matters. Many of my old wounds from that lengthy process are still healing.

Mr. Siddon: Were they Liberal or Conservative, Jim?

Mr. Fulton: One of the Members across asks about my two forefathers. I believe that Peter Mitchell, who was the Premier of New Brunswick, was a Conservative and that James Stewart, who was the Premier of Prince Edward Island, was a Liberal.

Mr. Crosbie: Then you are a typical NDPer.

Mr. Fulton: As we progressed westward, our politics have changed. Most of my relatives in Alberta and British Columbia are New Democrats to a one.

I want to spend a few moments talking about one of the grave errors which I think occurred in the constitutional process and why there are raw nerves in many areas of the country. The construction of constitutional consensus was missed out. For a constitution, a charter, our courts and a society to work truly all Canadians must trust and be confident that a proper process was gone through. Public involvement must be first rather than last. I believe that all Members who participated on the joint constitutional committee found that not being able to travel and not giving all Canadians the opportunity to appear at the committee until after the fact has created many raw nerves.

We were served up a constitutional meal without a chance to ever see the menu. The 11 cooks at Meech Lake left out some vital ingredients—the spice of participation and the choice of democratic involvement.

With the support and good will of all Canadians, Quebec has joined as a full and willing partner in Confederation and constitutional affairs. The Accord makes good the promises to Quebec of seven years ago when Quebecers said yes to Canada. It was very much time that the Parliament and the people of Canada responded to that deep-felt need in Quebec.

I listened with care to what Mr. Trudeau had to say when he appeared before the committee. I and many other Canadians disagreed when he said that the division of power between the federal and provincial Governments was disturbed. After studying carefully the wording of the Accord and having listened to and read the evidence of many of the witnesses, I am certainly convinced that those powers were not disturbed. In fact, many of the powers that had been exacted through practice now exist in the wording of the Accord. I will come to those in a moment.

I will deal for a moment with the fact that Quebec is now properly recognized as being distinct. That has been done without giving Quebec a different constitutional status than that of British Columbia, Alberta, the Maritimes, or any other province in this country.

Just this year in Montreal the New Democratic Party passed a resolution supported by delegates from every province and both Territories which stated: "The uniqueness of Quebec as the one province within which the majority, language and culture is French—". That policy was first enunciated by the NDP in 1961. I am proud to belong to a Party that has remained consistent for many decades in pursuing the aspirations of Quebecers and all Canadians and to have now seen that become a constitutional reality.

The federal Government's authority to set up national cost shared programs, even in areas of exclusive jurisdiction, is unimpaired and likely even strengthened, as we heard from many of the witnesses. Provinces can opt out of programs which are set up entirely within their jurisdiction, but only with compensation when their programs achieve the national objectives set out in legislation. When a national day care program is set up, we hope in the next few years, it will only be possible for provinces to opt out when they set up child care programs which meet the national objectives set by this Parliament. That is a very good thing.

However, in my view the First Ministers demonstrated a collective blindness to the reality of some parts of Canada and some parts of our history in some very key areas. In particular, I want to spend a moment discussing our first nations and first citizens. Canada is more than only a duality of French and English. The founding nations were the first citizens, the first nations, of over 30,000 years' duration with powerful internationally recognized cultures and highly evolved laws and traditions. They included the Niska, Inuit, Haida, Huron, Beothuk, Iroquois, Tsimshian, Nootka, Haisla, Tahltan, and Tlingit to name just a few.

As we heard from Senator Lowell Murray and others speaking for the Government, out of an abundance of caution special protection was provided in Clause 16 for the constitutional wording on aboriginal rights that have been stalled by political inaction and bureaucratic inertia, not because of a lack of public support.

In my Province of British Columbia, it has been found through polls and discussions among people on the street that the majority of British Columbians support and endorse negotiated settlements on the questions of aboriginal title and rights in the Province of British Columbia. It is political inertia and the blindness of the political leadership at the provincial level in British Columbia, in other provinces and certainly in Ottawa that is responsible for the lack of substantial movement one would have expected in the wording of the Constitution Act, 1982 which recognizes and affirms aboriginal rights and title which have been practised by some aboriginal cultures in Canada for 30,000 years or more.

In facing the reality and vital importance of providing an avenue for the entrance of Quebec, some key Canadian realities were sidelined. This includes fairness to the aboriginal peoples. First, in terms of the First Ministers' meeting on aboriginal rights and self-government, we will be moving an amendment to attempt to secure in the wording of the Accord and the motion before the House that aboriginal rights and the full participation of aboriginal leaders takes place at the meetings as we propose, as well as in terms of any First Ministers' meetings that deal with or touch upon matters affecting aboriginal rights. It is crucially important that aboriginal people not be inhibited or dealt with unfairly in terms of these vital constitutional matters.

Members of the House and Canadians generally should recognize how the wording in relation to aboriginal rights came to be in the Constitution Act, 1982. That wording was withdrawn by Prime Minister Trudeau and it was only under pressure from the New Democratic Party that it was restored. Canadians should understand that in terms of the evolution of aboriginal title and rights in this country.

It has only been through the ongoing battle by groups such as the Nishga Tribal Council of British Columbia who took their case to the Supreme Court 15 years ago. After a century of trying to deal with Great Britain and Ottawa, trying to deal with kings, governors general and political Parties, they, along with Tom Berger, finally took their case to the Supreme Court of Canada where they obtained a tied decision on the matter of Nishga title in the Nass Valley.

It was at that point that the assimilation and cultural extermination policies of the Parliament of Canada were reversed. The Minister at that time, Mr. Chrétien, backed away from the White Paper proposals on assimilation. It led to the march toward the constitutional wording that is there. We must move on to the constitutional conferences that must be held to bring on side those Premiers and political Parties that would live in the historically inaccurate backwaters of Canada rather than move forward to recognize title and remove those grey areas that are infringing on the rights of Canada's first nations and citizens.

I want to spend a moment dealing with fairness for Canada's northern citizens. In my view, three new provinces would be created in the North, of which two would be in the Northwest Territories, perhaps to be called Denedeh and Nunavut, and the Yukon. As my colleague, the Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin), pointed out so well, even in the words of Erik Nielsen, the concept of provincial status was the lodestone for more than half a century of northerners as they look toward their aspirations of becoming provinces.

I spoke to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) after the Accord was signed and asked how there could have been such blindness in requiring the unanimity rule for the creation of new provinces north of sixty. I was somewhat saddened to hear the Prime Minister, as the number one statesman for Canada, one would always hope, taking such a legalistic approach. He said that making them new provinces would affect the Consolidated Revenue Fund and federal institutions. He said this would require a First Ministers' Conference and the need for unanimity and so on.

That is hardly the case. All our other provinces entered Confederation in a bilateral process between the federal Government and themselves. It was only after 1982 that it was changed to seven provinces with 50 per cent of the population, along with the federal Government. This represented a much higher wall to be scaled by Yukoners and residents of the Northwest Territories in their aspirations to become provinces.

They now face the bleak prospect of a wall that many of them believe is perhaps impossible to scale in order to become provinces. I believe that the First Ministers should have put much more thought into the feeling this leaves with northerners. As my friend from Yukon pointed out, northerners now experience, as Quebecers once did, the feeling of being left out and that this is a southern Constitution which ignores a third of Canada north of sixty.

I reviewed press clippings from the last decade to see whether any political Party or leader in Canada ever suggested that Clause 43 should have been changed in this Draconian way in terms of the creation of new provinces. I could find none. I believe that the First Ministers did not notice this omission and, in their view of the greater picture of Canada, they ignored the fact that northerners—I am proud to consider myself as one—hold dear the feeling of fullness in participating in the Canadian family.

Not only do we face the unanimity rule, there is also the fact that northerners, whether members of the Bar or the bench, are excluded from the opportunity to even be proposed to be members of the Supreme Court. My uncle in Yukon is the Supreme Court Justice of Yukon. I find it dumbfounding that he should be prohibited from having his name submitted for sitting on the bench of the Supreme Court of Canada. While I do not want to speak for him, and do not know whether he would want to take on such an onerous task, I believe it is unfair. Furthermore, the Supreme Court Justices of Canada said as much to the Canadian Bar Association, and it is very rare that Supreme Court Justices would speak out about the unfair, un-Canadian and perhaps even unconstitutional move to prohibit certain Canadians from having the opportunity to be nominated or placed on the Supreme Court of Canada. That is a terrible oversight and is something that we hope to rectify as part of our amendments.

Let me deal for a moment with the Senate. Premier Getty and others said much in the West about a Triple E Senate. They were certainly snookered at Meech Lake.

I believe that the Senate is one of those anachronisms in Canada. We should abolish it first, then decide what is required in addition to the democratic institution of Parliament. That opportunity was missed, although I suppose the Premiers were somewhat appeased by being able to submit names for the Senate, as though it would in any way deal with the important issues which this country must face.

I want to talk about the participation by the territorial Governments. They must be given more than simply slots on the agenda in terms of the First Ministers' meetings. There must be participation by territorial Governments, particularly at meetings where matters affecting them are on the agenda. As a northerner, I certainly serve notice that northerners intend to move to provincial status in the future. It is very important that the venues and ongoing access to major decisions be maintained. Territorial leaders such as Tony Penikett who have given so much of their time to the North must be given the opportunity to participate in the important evolution of constitutional debates in this country.

The matter of equality of women and the Meech Lake Accord requires considerable comment. Section 28 was Canada's constitutional commitment to sexual equality. That section was achieved as a result of great effort by thousands of women from every province and territory in 1981 and 1982.

In my view, it is more a matter of consistency than necessity that Section 28 be included in Clause 16. Senator Lowell Murray said that it was out of an abundance of caution that Clause 16 was formulated to include aboriginal rights and aboriginal matters. Even since 1982, court rulings have had dramatically different effects than what was suggested by the Ministers who spoke in the House and in committees back in 1981 and 1982.

We have seen that the courts, in terms of the trade union movement, in terms of freedom of association and so on, did not and were not held in that light by the justices and the courts of the country. In the construction of constitutions it is crucially important that there be consistency. Just as Sections 25 and 27 were included out of an abundance of caution, out of consistency, we are moving an amendment to attempt to get the Government to make the necessary changes to make this Accord better.

I want to spend a moment now on the future of constitutional evolution in terms of Charter review, the ethno-cultural reality of Canada, and the democratic process of how we can deal with what I described earlier as the raw nerves that are out there. Northerners did not have the kind of biological and vocal involvement in this process that there should have been. The leaders from the NWT and the Yukon were excluded, as were aboriginal people. When we see an agenda set for future meetings, including fisheries for example, we have to think very carefully about how to improve the democratic process.

In terms of the democratic process, we have recommended that the special joint committee on constitutional reform carry on and become an ongoing process whereby Canadians who are touched, damaged or feel endangered in some way by rulings of the court or by pieces of legislation brought forward by provincial, federal, or the territorial legislatures will have an opportunity to have their constitutional views aired. There will be an ongoing balance, some forum, some focus where Canadians of all origins, creeds and sects have an opportunity to have their views heard and to have them heard often, before First Ministers' conferences, before we have anything further cooked in the kitchen at Meech Lake, or anywhere else.

On Canada's ethno-cultural reality, we see the linguistic duality of Canada recognized in the Accord as a fundamental characteristic of Canada. The report of the committee states that the ethno-cultural diversity of Canada deserves further study. I doubt that there is a single Member of the House who would not agree with that. It is crucially important in terms of constitutional evolution with the ever-changing demographic flux within Canada that much greater consideration be given to this. We are urging early consideration of the ethno-cultural reality of Canada as a fundamental characteristic of our nation.

On the matter of Charter review, after the Meech Lake Accord had been struck, we heard concerns raised by women, constitutional experts, and by representatives of visible and other minority groups that go far beyond the scope of the 1987 constitutional Accord.

To come back again for a moment to what I said earlier, one of the crucial things that was missing in this whole process was the involvement of Canadians to a true extent in the process leading up to the Accord. I must say that we have very much the same critical concern from Canadians from coast to coast back in 1981-82. There was not as broad a forum and as broad an opportunity for them to set the seeds of their ideas to fertile soil, for parliamentarians and First Ministers to have an opportunity to grapple with the kinds of wording that would be the most useful and the longest standing for all of us in Canada.

So the democratic process, the Canadian ethno-cultural reality, fairness for Canada's northerners, fairness for aboriginal people, fairness for women, and Charter review, are matters that we feel very strongly should be dealt with in the near future. I have been involved for many years in constitutional matters. I am honoured to say that because of the movement on board now of the people of Quebec and the Province of Quebec it is with open arms, I can tell you from the bottom of my heart, of British Columbians that we receive them. So from the West to the East to the North it has the substance that allows me to vote for it despite its flaws.

[Translation]

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Madam Speaker, it is with deep emotion that I rise in this debate today, and I would hope that all Hon. Members are fully aware that we are living through historic moments about which our children and grandchildren will be talking.

When I decided to be a candidate in the 1984 election in the riding of Louis-Hébert my idea was to promote in particular four goals that were of special concern to me. As I said in this House on October 7, 1986, the first of these goals was to have Quebec sign the constitutional agreement and resume its rightful place in Canada, and to see that its rights were respected.

I had faith in our leader who had committed a Conservative Government to work with all Canadians to achieve national reconciliation. Throughout the election campaign he had made several references to this pledge. Allow me to quote the remarks he made in Sept-Îles on August 6, 1984:

Canada is the bet made by men and women of different cultures, languages and religions to settle their disputes, harmonize their interests, and successfully promote the values of respect for others and selflessness.

A Conservative Government will take up this bet. Co-operation and understanding will be more than mere words to us. It will be the honour of the Party I lead to make that a way of living, to deal with our fellow Canadians, to suffer, to work, and to triumph with them. One thing for sure is that not a single Quebecer, man or woman, has given federal Liberals free reign to take advantage of Quebec's disarray resulting from the referendum to sentence the province to constitutional ostracism. My Party does not rejoice over the political weakening to which these deplorable incidents have led Quebec. If Quebec is weakened, so is Canada; if Quebec is strong, so is Canada.

There is room in Canada for the affirmation of all identities, respect for all aspirations, and the quest for all ideals.

I know that Quebecers expect more than simple words. We will have to offer guarantees and take positive steps to achieve the objective I have in mind: convince the Quebec National Assembly to endorse Canada's new Constitution with honour and enthusiasm.

Madam Speaker, since the Meech-Langevin Agreement, this is exactly what has been done. As a Quebecer, my fondest wish has come true thanks to the firm will and negotiating talent of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and to the open mind of the Premiers, and I am quite proud of it.

This historic Accord puts an end to the constitutional ostracism of Quebec, with terms which are to the advantage of Quebec, of all the provinces, and most important, of Canada as a whole.

As you know, Madam Speaker, the situation in Quebec was not very good during the last twenty years. There was a climate of constant confrontation between the provincial legislature and the central Government. There was no possibility of agreement between the two Government levels. Quebec had been isolated and rejected.

When Premier Bourassa dared to defend the rights of Quebecers, he only succeeded in being called a "hot-dog eater" by then Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

Quebecers have had enough of the obvious lack respect for their views before the 1980 referendum, and it was absolutely essential to back the Federal Government against the wall if we wanted at least to resume discussions. Quebec had to give itself tools to obtain the power to negotiate. As a Quebecer and a Canadian, I was distressed to see Quebec lose ground, and this is why I accepted to chair the yes campaign in the Louis-Hébert constituency for the 1980 referendum. A "yes" victory in the referendum seemed to me the only possible solution to make the Trudeau Government negotiate with the Quebec Government. Unfortunately, at the time of the 1980 referendum, Quebec voters were promised that a no vote would not mean that they were accepting the status quo, but rather that they wished a renewed federalism. At the time, there was no detailed explanation of what this renewed federalism would mean, but I believe that everyone understood that it would be a federalism along the lines that successive Quebec governments had supported.

Madam Speaker, the Trudeau Government betrayed Quebecers. Recently, one of my colleagues opposite, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), following publication of the letter of Pierre Trudeau in the newspaper La Presse, recognized the terrible mistake made in 1982 by stating that if he had realized what his then leader was thinking, he would have voted yes in the referendum. In addition, Mrs. Chaput-Rolland, one of the eminent members of the Pepin-Robarts Commission on Canadian unity between 1977 and 1979 and leader of the no committee for 1980 referendum, stated the following before the Special Joint Committee:

In Quebec, we decided seven years ago that Canada was our country. It remains for us to find out if we were right to assert our loyalty. Quite frankly, I must say that I wondered in 1982 whether the suffering, the disputes, and the bitterness which followed the 1980 referendum had really been necessary. We voted for Canada, but Canada, through its central Government, which was so busy preparing to repatriate the British North America Act of 1867, did very little for those who had just openly stated their will to remain within this country. Promises and dreams had both vanished. Not a single Quebecer would want to relive this period in our history.

Madam Speaker, the isolation of Quebec is a problem with which we had to deal when we came to power. It was essential that we not leave it as a legacy to another generation which might have been forced to solve it under more difficult circumstances and at a less favourable time.

Madam Speaker, since the Meech-Langevin accord, I am a proud Quebecer and a proud Canadian. I can tell all Canadians that I am speaking here from the bottom of my heart. I do not claim to be a constitutional expert, but deep inside I know that finally Quebec has resumed its rightful place, its rights finally have been acknowledged after so many years of confrontation, and I must add I am deeply moved. The accord, Madam Speaker, acknowledges the basic aspirations of Quebecers, and as stated by Michel Roy in La Presse on May 2, 1987: "What transpired Thursday in the Gatineau Hills is somewhat of a miracle. That accord to a large extent agrees to the five proposals put forward by the Bourassa Government after it was elected. This is an agreement that fully warrants Quebec's concurrence to the Constitutional Act. It protects Quebec's historic rights and legitimate aspirations. It enshrines Quebec's distinct nature. It recognizes the Canadian duality that Ottawa and the provinces are agreed to protect. Premier Bourassa and Prime Minister Mulroney rightfully view it as the conclusion of an exceptional day."

The constitutional expert, Robert Décary, in an interview to the program Le Point of May 1, 1987, stated and I quote: "It was not expected that the concept of distinct society would appear in the body of the Constitution itself. The courts now will be able to give it far greater consideration than if it had been written in a preamble. The courts are now empowered to rule that Quebec has the authority and duty to protect the French language.

I was extremely surprised to see the situation resolved. Mr. Mulroney had stated it was necessary that Quebec adhere to the Constitution with honour and enthusiasm. This has been achieved in my view."

Many experts who appeared before the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the 1987 Constitutional Agreement also lead us to conclude that the Meech Lake Accord was a solid document that ends Quebec's constitutional isolation and strengthens national unity. No major flaw was found. Distinguished law experts, such as Professor Lederman from Queen's University, Mr. Yves Fortier, former President of the Canadian Bar Association, and Professor Gérald Beaudoin of the University of Ottawa stated they were satisfied with the present wording of the accord.

Veteran participants and researchers in the area of federal-provincial relations such as Robert Stanfield, Jack Pickersgill, Gordon Robertson, Peter MacKinson and Professors Richard Simeon and Peter Leslie, the former and present directors of the Inter-Government Relations Institute, have stated that in the circumstances the accord could not be any better. They were unanimous in concluding that such a favourable opportunity must be taken to end the round of discussions on Quebec and to open up the constitutional reform process.

Mr. Gordon Robertson, the former Cabinet Secretary under the Trudeau Government, took part in all the conferences from 1968 to 1969 and attended throughout all the 1980 and 1981 conferences as a CBC analyst. In his view, in order to analyze the 1987 Accord we must first ask ourselves what prime policy goals we want to set up in 1987 in the constitutional area. The federal Government has decided, and the provincial Governments have agreed, that the prime goal was to have Quebec become a fullfledged partner in the Canadian Confederation. Like Mr. Robertson, I am deeply convinced that major policy goal was the right one.

Madam Speaker, to those who fear that the Accord may weaken the central Government, my answer is: not at all! Quite the opposite! Indeed, the Meech Lake Accord will strengthen our federalism in two ways: first, by providing greater legitimacy to our institutions and greater harmony for the exercise of jurisdictions at every level of government.

Since it reaffirms the will of each region to promote the well-being of the country, the Accord will strenghten the ties within Confederation. Moreover, by acknowledging the importance of each province in the development of our collective options, we will thus strengthen the federal character of Canada.

By allowing the provinces to have their say in the appointments to the Supreme Court, the Accord will voice within one of our most important institutions the spirit of true federalism. Considering the acknowledgment in our basic legislation of the specific character of Quebec in Canada, the Meech-Langevin Accord shows that we are ready to live in a community while respecting our differences and our ties.

Madam Speaker, all Quebecers and Canadians throughout the country should rejoice and have confidence in the new concept of co-operative federalism as advocated by our Government and the Premiers of all our Canadian provinces.

Madam Speaker, like all Canadians from whatever region, I am deeply attached to my province, Quebec, and to my country, Canada. I have no qualms whatsoever about this feeling of dual belonging because to me, far from being a sign of weakness, it is a sign of strength, and this also makes us greater as a nation.

That is where lies the full portent of the Meech Lake Accord. Its amendments to the Constitution are nothing more or less than the perception of all Canadians. The Accord attests to our confidence in ourselves and in our collective future.

It projects the image of a federal state where a strong national government speaks on behalf of all citizens. It mirrors a federation where the central government plays its role of guardian of the national interest with the close co-operation of provinces.

Madam Speaker, with this Accord today we can look to the future with confidence. There is only one strong Canada, the kind of country which the Conservative Government has always advocated and of which, as I said on many occasions, I am very proud.

Madam Speaker, the Saskatchewan and Quebec legislatures have already endorsed the Langevin-Meech Lake Accord. As federal Members of Parliament from all regions of Canada we are gathered in this House to debate the Accord.

Again I want to express my heart-felt hope that the Accord will be ratified as soon as possible, and this is why I urge all Hon. Members, whatever their political persuasion, to give it their unanimous support and, at last, to say a resounding yes to Quebec.

As I pointed out earlier, the interests of all Quebecers, naturally, and as a Member from Quebec, I am especially aware of these interests, but most of all, the interests of all Canada are at stake.

I therefore ask, Madam Speaker, all the Members of this House and all Senators, who will also have to ratify this Agreement, to respect the will of the Canadian population and to vote unanimously and without reservation in favour of having Quebec rejoin the Canadian constitutional family.

The Meech-Langevin Agreement is a major step toward national reconciliation, and both this House and the provincial legislatures which have not already done so must ratify it without delay in the interests of all Canadians and for the future of our beautiful country, Canada.

• (1750)

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Madam Speaker, this motion serves to ratify the 1987 Constitutional Accord, more commonly known as the Meech Lake Accord, or the Langevin Accord after it was modestly modified to place in the Accord a non-derogation clause which, it was believed, would protect the aboriginal people and the multicultural nature of society from the duality that the Meech Lake Accord emphasizes.

That modification indicates that it was recognized that there were certain weaknesses, but that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premiers were not prepared to deal with them. They took so much satisfaction in having reached an arrangement that they closed their eyes to the many weaknesses in this document.

It is difficult for me to resist the temptation to be immoderate in expressing my feelings on this agreement. Quite frankly and candidly my own view is that this is a bad piece of constitutional work. It is out of step and out of keeping with the type of Canada in which we live. I see it as a throw-back to another time when the ancien régime or a model of that nature predominated in Quebec, and when the United Empire Loyalists dominated Upper Canada. That time has long since past.

This agreement fails to reflect the reality of modern Canada. I am convinced that gradually over time this document will serve to change the character of Canada so that our search, sometimes even a struggle for a national identity, which has always been elusive and difficult to grasp, will become well nigh impossible to achieve as we tend more and more to go our own ways as provinces and regions.

I am sometimes asked what is wrong with the constitutional amendment of 1987, the Meech Lake Accord. What is wrong is that it gives validity to the view that our nation is no more than a community of communities, what former Prime Minister Trudeau once disparagingly described as a loose association of shopping centres.

Mr. Crosbie: Nonsense.

Mr. Penner: This Accord permits and encourages political power to flow from the centre into the provincial capitals, and it leaves unanswered the question of who will speak for all Canadians when there is a reason to have someone speak for all Canadians.

A few weeks ago I had an opportunity to speak to an Ontario cabinet Minister. Among other things, we discussed the Meech Lake Accord. I told him I did not like it.

Mr. Crosbie: Which they are supporting.

Mr. Penner: Yes, they are supporting it. The Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has interjected that they are supporting it. I wish to tell the Hon. Minister of Transport that the cabinet Minister stated that we cannot blame Premier Peterson, to which I replied that I did not blame him. The cabinet Minister stated that they had been given far more than they expected or asked for, and how could that be turned down.

Mr. Crosbie: Absolutely.

Mr. Penner: That is right. In other words, we sold the farm for an old run-down half-ton truck.

I am convinced that the shift in power that is bound to take place over time will make the provincial capitals the preferred centres of action. That will relegate this national forum and Parliament into something that is analogous to the European Parliament that now sits in Strasbourg. Of course, the provinces will still make use of us. They will still like to use us as the collection agency. After all, collecting taxes is never a pleasant duty. Over time, Parliament will be a centre for the debating of vague resolutions that will carry very little in the way of effective influence. The Prime Minister's duties are bound to be significantly altered as he or she will become the person chairing the annual meetings of First Ministers. At one meeting they will discuss the economy. At another meeting they will discuss an agenda—they have actually put an agenda right into the Constitution. Forever and a day they must discuss the Senate. They must discuss fisheries, and they must discuss such other matters as may be agreed to. We can just imagine that meeting, "Is there any discussion on the Senate? None. Any discussion on fisheries? None. Are there any other matters that we can agree on? No." Meeting adjourned. How can something like that be put into the Constitution and call it a good piece of constitutional work?

The description of Quebec as a distinct society is a difficult and troublesome concept. If the Accord were modified in a number of ways, perhaps I would be able to swallow this notion. If definite steps were taken in the agreement to prevent or assure Canadians that there was no dilution of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, particularly women's rights, if steps were taken to guarantee and advance aboriginal rights, if the political future of Canadians living north of 60 were not blocked, as they certainly are by the Meech Lake Accord, if all of those safeguards were built in, as the Liberal amendments to this Accord attempt to do, then, reluctantly and hesitantly, I could perhaps accept the distinct society of Quebec, but I would never like it. I would never feel comfortable with it.

I think that to describe Quebec as a distinct society is really an insult to many other Canadians who live in the various regions and areas of Canada. Distinctiveness in Quebec, it is argued, is based on language and culture. But surely there are numerous other equally valid categories of distinctiveness if we want to play the game of distinctiveness. I sense, when I cross the Rockies and go to our western most province, that there is distinctiveness there. I certainly feel it north of 60 and on the Prairies.

The region from which I come regards itself as being distinct from southern Ontario, distinct from other parts of Canada. Certainly that distinctiveness exists in Canada and it exists nowhere more clearly and evidently than it does in the province from which the Hon. Minister of Transport comes, the great Province of Newfoundland.

If we adopt this measure, how then will we address each other in the House? We will all be Hon. Members, but if you are an Hon. Member from Quebec, you will be an "Honourable and Distinctive Member". The Minister will be an Honourable and Distinctive Minister". A judge of the Supreme Court will be "Your Distinctive Honour". The Premier from one province will not be Mr. Premier but "Mr. Distinctive Premier".

The multicultural nature of Canadian society is surely downplayed by this Accord. As I said earlier, if we want to talk about distinctiveness, then what a sound and good case could be made for the distinctiveness of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. They too have distinctive languages, though many of them are dying out. There is a rescue operation going on, not too successfully because the resources are not available, but there are distinctive languages and there are distinctive cultures.

If Hon. Members want to take a moment to read that marvellous new edition of the Historical Atlas of Canada, they will find that the first section in that new edition says that for a long period of time, it was argued that the aboriginal people were immigrants who came here in 2,000 B.C. across the Bering Strait ice bridge. That has now been refuted and there is clear evidence from archeological research that the aboriginal peoples in North America go back 12,000 B.C. So when the elders of the First Nations talk about time immemorial, they are referring to time that goes back as far as there can possibly be any evidence for, that is, to 12,000 B.C.

The struggle for the recognition of the constitutional rights of aboriginal peoples is, in my view, set back irreversibly by the Meech Lake Accord. I talked about the agenda that is built into this Accord dealing with the Senate, fisheries and other matters as may be agreed to through unanimity.

We had four national conferences on aboriginal rights and made very little, if any, progress. Surely to goodness if there is to be an agenda—and how ridiculous it is in the first place to put an agenda in the Constitution— we would not forget to put in a major piece of unfinished business, defining and describing what are the aboriginal rights of Canada's first citizens.

Those who live north of 60, a great part of Canada, a distinctive part of Canada, are given a lower status than all other Canadians. In the City of Yellowknife, they are wearing armbands branding themselves as being a lower level of citizenry. That is how strongly they feel against the Meech Lake Accord. Northerners believe that they may be prevented forever from achieving their legitimate political goals of provincehood, of owning their own resources, of directing their own future.

In this House in answer to a question I posed several months ago to the Prime Minister about the creation of new provinces, the Prime Minister shot back a question to me. He asked if it is the Liberal position that new provinces shall be created bilaterally between the federal Government and the territory in question and the people who live there. The answer is unequivocally, yes. That is the way the other provinces were created.

When my grandfather came to this country and settled on a homestead in western Canada, his first address was the Northwest Territories. He was among those who encouraged the creation of a new province in 1905 and said that since there were certain matters that should be dealt with closer to home, they should be a province and have their own capital and their own legislature. Why should that not be possible for the Yukon? Why should that not be possible for the Western Arctic? Why should that not be possible for a new territory that is likely to be created in the Eastern Arctic with the name Nunavut?

I believe that the Meech Lake Accord dilutes one of the most valuable constitutional tools that any individual citizen has, and that is, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I think it does threaten women's rights, and that point has been made strongly, articulately and forcefully by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women.

I am concerned too about linguistic rights of English speaking people in Quebec and linguistic rights of French speaking people outside of Quebec. What does this do to the nature of Canada, which I see as a society that has as its first citizens aboriginals with a history that goes back as far as it is possible to go back, a multicultural society and two official languages.

The 1987 Constitutional Accord is one which should be substantially amended. The document, in its spirit and in its thrust, runs directly counter to what constitutes this nation. I deeply regret the process by which this Accord came into existence. It was so exclusive, a private conclave. It should have been much more open. It should have followed the pattern of the 1982 Constitutional Act.

As you know, Madam Speaker, a series of amendments have been proposed by the Liberal party. I think these amendments would significantly improve the Accord. They would make it much more acceptable to many Canadians and they would in no way offend Quebec or the people of Quebec. For me, these amendments are not only vital and important, but they are essential.

In 1517, there was a young German priest who nailed on the door of a church at Wurtemburg a number of proposals for change to the institution that he loved and to which he was dedicated. He had exhausted every single avenue in order to get these changes accepted. When he was turned down at every door, at every forum, he said, "Here I stand, I can do no other, God help me".

For me, my Party's amendments are necessary to accepting this 1987 constitutional amendment, and if they fail to be accepted by the House, I am left with no choice, no option. I will vote no. I will vote against the Meech Lake Accord.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

BILL C-46—PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-46, an Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mint Act and the Currency Act.

PETITIONS

FERMI II NUCLEAR REACTOR—REVIEW PROCESS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition to present in the continuing series which I have been bringing to the House dealing with the very serious dangers to this country which are represented by the Fermi II nuclear plant in Munroe, Michigan. This plant is 10 kilometres from the border of my constituency.

In this petition 250 residents of towns such as Amherstberg and Malton have pointed out the extended length of time it has taken to get this facility even close to operating capacity. They have pointed out the serious accident record which the facility has. They have suggested very strongly that the Government of Canada must intervene in order to ensure that a safe review process is established by neutral parties to ensure that there is not a danger established by the reactor moving to full capacity without such a review.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, as the next petition in the series I have been tabling in the House for the last four or five weeks, I am pleased to table one signed by the residents of two senior citizens' homes in my riding located at 255 Donald and 800 Saint-Laurent, which reads as follows:

> Whereas since September 1984 the federal Government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular on medical and dental supplies, snack foods, candies and soft drinks;
> Whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal is studying the possibility of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services, including food;
> Whereas food constitutes a vital element in day-to-day life, and whereas the imposition of this tax would have the effect of seriously penalizing certain categories of taxpayers such as the aged, families, the unemployed, low-income taxpayers, youth, and so on;
> Wherefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

OPPOSITION TO PURCHASE OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and privilege to present a petition signed mainly by residents of Saltspring Island in British Columbia who are concerned about the great danger of accidents while nuclear armed and/or powered ships are in Canadian ports. They point to the threat which this poses to the environment and to Canadian citizens. They call upon the House of Commons not to purchase nuclear powered submarines for Canada.

Order Paper Questions

AMENDMENTS TO BILL C-55

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I would like to table in the House of Commons two petitions on two different issues.

The first issue is with regard to the legislation currently before the House, namely, Bill C-55, the refugee determination Bill. I have a petition signed by residents of Vancouver, Richmond, Thunder Bay, Mississauga, Etobicoke, Brampton, Bramalea and Toronto. All these petitioners are asking the Government to delete the safe country clause and the prescreening stage and to upgrade the refugee appeal mechanism so that we may have a refugee determination system which is accessible, fair, and expedient and will discourage those who wish to abuse our system and do an end run around our regulations.

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the final three petitions come from residents living in the Cities of Burnaby, Vancouver, London, Peterborough, and from my own riding of York West. These petitioners are asking the Government to amend the current Meech Lake Accord in order to incorporate and entrench in the opening clause one fundamental character of Canada, which is Canada's multicultural heritage, as a reality in this country that should be alongside the English-French linguistic duality in defining who Canadians are and what this country is about.

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON AUTOMATION OF LIGHTHOUSES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition concerning the Government's proposal to automate light stations on the coast of British Columbia. The residents who signed the petition are concerned that the Leblond report was totally biased and did not reflect the need for public safety.

They ask the Government to impose a moratorium on any action by the Coast Guard in destaffing the light stations and that light station keepers be equipped and trained to do an even more effective job on public information and public safety.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

SUSPENSION OF FREE TRADE TALKS

Mr. Speaker: I want to bring to the attention of the House that again I have received an application under Standing Order 29 with respect to the granting of an emergency debate relating to the trade talks. I recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you allow me to move a motion at the appropriate time so that the House can deal with a very important matter. We know that the deadline on the free trade issues is October 5. I suggest that you might want to use your judgment and protect the minority interest in the House and, of course, in the interest of the greater understanding of the issues, allow this debate to take place tonight.

I hope you would see the urgency of that request. Indeed, you have asked the Government to use whatever tools it has at its disposal to allow for this debate. The Government has not been forthcoming to date as far as I know, and there is one day left for debate. I hope we could have your consent to have this emergency debate tonight.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier for bringing this matter to the Chair's attention. As I have said repeatedly for some days now, the Chair views it as an extremely important matter. As yet, however, it has not been the disposition of the Chair to order an emergency debate.

I say again to the Hon. Member that that does not preclude the Chair from having a different view at a different time. For today, however, it is not the disposition of the Chair to order an emergency debate for tonight. I repeat that the Chair knows that it is an important matter.

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed from Wednesday, September 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hantyshyn:

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1982 came into force on April 17, 1982, following an agreement between Canada and all the provinces except Quebec;

AND WHEREAS the Government of Quebec has established a set of five proposals for constitutional change and has stated that amendments to give effect to those proposals would enable Quebec to resume a full role in the constitutional councils of Canada;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto sets out the basis on which Quebec's five constitutional proposals may be met;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto also recognizes the principle of the equality of all the provinces, provides new arrangements to foster greater harmony and cooperation between the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces and requires that conferences be convened to consider important constitutional, economic and other issues;

AND WHEREAS certain portions of the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto relate to matters referred to in section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

AND WHEREAS section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province;

NOW THEREFORE the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE

Constitution Act, 1867

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 1 thereof, the following section:

"2. (1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(2) The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

(4) Nothing in this section derogates from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 24 thereof, the following section:

"25. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, the government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate.

(2) Until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the person summoned to fill a vacancy in the Senate shall be chosen from among persons whose names have been submitted under subsection (1) by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates and must be acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 95 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Agreements on Immigration and Aliens

95A. The Government of Canada shall, at the request of the government of any province, negotiate with the government of that province for the purpose of concluding an agreement relating to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province that is appropriate to the needs and circumstances of that province.

95B. (1) Any agreement concluded between Canada and a province in relation to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province has the force of law from the time it is declared to do so in accordance with subsection 95C(1) and shall from that time have effect notwithstanding class 25 of section 91 or section 95.

(2) An agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) shall have effect only so long and so far as it is not repugnant to any provision of an Act of the Parliament of Canada that sets national standards and objectives relating to immigration or aliens, including any provision that establishes general classes of immigrants or relates to levels of immigration for Canada or that prescribes classes of individuals who are inadmissible into Canada.

(3) The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies in respect of any agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) and in respect of anything done by the Parliament or Government of Canada, or the legislature or government of a province, pursuant to any such agreement.

95C. (1) A declaration that an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) has the force of law may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement.

(2) An amendment to an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized

(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement; or

(b) in such other manner as is set out in the agreement.

95D. Sections 46 to 48 of the Constitution Act, 1982 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of any declaration made pursuant to subsection 95C(1), any amendment to an agreement made pursuant to subsection 95C(2) or any amendment made pursuant to section 95E.

95E. An amendment to sections 95A to 95D or this section may be made in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection 38(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, but only if the amendment is authorized by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of all the provinces that are, at the time of the amendment, parties to an agreement that has the force of law under subsection 95B(1)."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 96 thereof, the following heading:

"General"

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 101 thereof, the following heading:

"Courts Established by the Parliament of Canada"

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 101 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Supreme Court of Canada

101A. (1) The court existing under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada is hereby continued as the general court of appeal for Canada, and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a superior court of record.

(2) The Supreme Court of Canada shall consist of a chief justice to be called the Chief Justice of Canada and eight other judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor General in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

101B. (1) Any person may be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who, after having been admitted to the bar of any province or territory, has, for a total of at least ten years, been a judge of any court in Canada or a member of the bar of any province or territory.

(2) At least three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be appointed from among persons who, after having been admitted to the bar of Quebec, have, for a total of at least ten years, been judges of any court of Quebec or of any court established by the Parliament of Canada, or members of the bar of Quebec.

101C. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court.

(2) Where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

(3) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) of any of the three judges necessary to meet the requirement set out in subsection 101B(2), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the Government of Quebec.

(4) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) otherwise than as required under subsection (3), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the government of a province other than Quebec.

101D. Sections 99 and 100 apply in respect of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

101E. (1) Sections 101A to 101D shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws under section 101 except to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with those sections.

(2) For greater certainty, section 101A shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws relating to the reference of questions of law or fact, or any other matters, to the Supreme Court of Canada."

7. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 106 thereof, the following section:

"106A. (1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

(2) Nothing in this section extends the legislative powers of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces."

8. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and sections:

"XII—CONFERENCES ON THE ECONOMY AND OTHER MATTERS

148. A conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year to discuss the state of the Canadian economy and such other matters as may be appropriate.

XIII—REFERENCES

149. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

Constitution Act, 1982

9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part."

10. Section 44 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"44. Subject to section 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons."

11. Subsection 46(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province."

12. Subsection 47(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution."

13. Part VI of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"PART VI

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

50. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate;

(b) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries; and

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon."

14. Subsection 52(2) of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(d) any other amendment to the Constitution of Canada."

15. Section 61 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Act 1982, or a reference to the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1982, shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

General

16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

CITATION

17. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Madawaska—Victoria in the Province of New Brunswick, and as an Acadian and as a francophone outside Quebec, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate on the 1987 Constitutional Accord. Today, I would like to comment on one of the fundamental aspects of the Accord, one that has my full support, and I am referring to the recognition of linguistic duality and the consequences for official language minorities.

The patriation of the Constitution in 1982 gave us a chance to recognize and confirm the importance of certain fundamental values and characteristics of our country. At the time, we recognized the rights of native peoples and stated our will to protect our multicultural heritage. We also guaranteed the equality of men and women, democratic rights and major language rights.

However, Mr. Speaker, how can any country be proud of guaranteeing and recognizing rights so fundamental for its citizens, how can any country be proud of such an accomplishment when we all know that the 1982 Accord left out one of the fundamental parts of the Constitution, one of the founding peoples of this country which had legitimate demands, demands which Quebec had presented to Canada long ago?

In 1982, Quebec was left out, and that is why the 1987 Constitutional Accord is so important. In addition to bringing Quebec back into the Canadian family, the Accord takes us even further in our recognition of language minorities. As a result of this Accord, Canada's linguistic duality will now be recognized in the Constitution. It is the first time in the history of this country that all Governments have agreed formally to define this fundamental characteristic of our Federation, and we are not talking about two nations or two totally separate entities but about French-speaking Canadians and English-speaking Canadians, living together across this country. I see this as continuing what we have already accomplished in the sphere of official languages. We are finally recognizing, in the Constitution, that which forms the foundation of our efforts to ensure respect for our two official languages.

Furthermore, all provincial legislatures have been given the responsibility to protect this fundamental aspect of our Federation. All provinces have now pledged their support for our language minorities. When we consider how important the full and unstinting co-operation of provincial Governments is to the future of these communities, we can only rejoice in such an undertaking. The Commissioner of Official Languages said that language minorities have now acquired the kind of protection they did not have before. Whatever some people may claim or maintain, this was not a foregone conclusion. And to those who are shouting from the roof-tops that Canada gained nothing and Quebec was the only winner in this spring's negotiations, we should recall what was said by the committee.

As the report points out, none of the five conditions set forth by Quebec sought explicit constitutional recognition of the existence of linguistic minorities in that province or elsewhere, nor was there anything about Quebec having a role to play in the protection of such minorities. The committee also recalls that the provincial Premiers went to Meech Lake to deal with the issue of Quebec being a "distinct society", one of the things Canada obtained in the constitutional negotiations. The provincial Premiers went back home, fully committed to enshrine in the Constitution the obligation to protect francophone minorities in their own provinces. They agreed to the formal acknowledgment of the presence of these minorities as being a fundamental characteristic of Canada, and this is one of the things Canada obtained in the constitutional talks.

[English]

Some concern has been expressed about the fate of these minorities as the Constitution simply affirms the role of the provinces to preserve linguistic duality. It is feared that the status quo will be maintained whereas bilingualism still has a very long way to go in many provinces. I agree with those who say that there is still much to be done in the area of bilingualism. On this I believe we fully agree. However, I do not share the view of those critics who state that because the Constitution affirms responsibility for preservation, nothing else will be done, for it is clear that such an affirmation establishes a minimum common undertaking. It does not prevent any Government from doing much, much more.

• (1120)

Affirmation of this role did not prevent the adoption of Ontario's Bill No. 8, nor has it stood in the way of our tabling a new Official Languages Act. The provisions of the new Bill dealing with the advancement of official languages exceed by far all that has been accomplished to date. Clause 40 of that Bill reads as follows:

> The Government of Canada is committed to enhancing the vitality of the English and French linguistic minority communities in Canada and supporting and assisting their development and fostering the full recognition and use of both English and French in Canadian society.

[Translation]

The measure also provides that the Government will take positive steps to live up to this commitment, both by working in its own fields of jurisdiction and by encouraging the provinces, the municipalities as well as the major associations of the private sector, the labour movement and volunteer organizations to make a special effort.

More specifically as far as the provinces are concerned, the government will encourage and help them promote the expansion of francophone and anglophone minorities, particularly by providing provincial and municipal services in both official languages and enabling them to be educated in their respective language.

Given this firm government pledge and the constitutional guarantee that provincial legislatures will protect this duality, we can indeed look to the future with optimism. This constitutional guarantee is all the more significant that it is spelt out in an interpretative rule. At least that is the view of expert witnesses who appeared before the committee. As Mr. Robert Decary pointed out, the Constitution and therefore the Charter as well as linguistic rights will have to be so interpreted as to ensure the protection of francophones.

On June 3, the First Ministers confirmed the role of all Governments in protecting duality. It may not be much, but they all see this as a giant step forward.

Still, many of them had expected more. Spokesmen for francophones outside Quebec and their supporters would have liked all Governments to be given the role of promoting as well as protecting Canada's fundamental characteristic, namely the presence of francophones and anglophones throughout Canada.

Senator Murray stated that on June 3 the First Ministers had examined—and actually they did—a number of avenues to that end. It had then to be recognized that despite the Prime Minister's personal efforts, the consensus could not go any further than it did.

People will ask, since the provinces will not accept a promotional role, that we at least bind the Canadian Parliament to such a proposal, if only to cast in stone the commitments it made up till now at the legislative level. This is what the Liberal Party is asking for in its series of amendment proposals. We are asked to reopen the Accord to stress the role of both Parliament and the provinces that would so wish to promote our duality, adding that since that commitment only involves Parliament and some of the provinces, it would easily command unanimity.

But to those who make such a suggestion or proposal, I would like to submit two points. First, according to the testimonies produced, the Joint Committee Report, and the comments of those who negotiated the Accord—and I am referring here to all the First Ministers—it is clear that any reopening of the Accord for anything else but the correction of a major error or a substantial oversight would be viewed as a reopening of negotiations. From then on, everyone could propose changes. And in the opinion of many people, that is a recipe for failure. I share that view, Mr. Speaker.

If 25 years of constitutional negotiations in Canada were needed to bring us as a nation to that day of June 3 on which finally, after pondering and negotiating, the First Ministers finally reached a consensus, and when we say this is a canvas that is weaved together, I believe it would be illusive to believe we could now reopen the Accord in order to perhaps placate concerns that may seem legitimate. If we did that, we would inevitably be asking for an end to the Meech Lake Accord, and if that Accord were to break down we might have to wait another 25 years or more and without being a prophet of gloom, I can assure you that if this time we say no to Quebec, a lot of time will be needed to repair such a serious error.

But the people who propose that Parliament and some provinces only do the promotion of the French culture within their exclusive jurisdictions, could perhaps more importantly think of the impact a commitment by Parliament alone or a few Governments to promote duality could have. Clearly, Parliament is already promoting this duality, and a constitutional commitment would do no more actually than the Official Languages Act already provides. The same goes for certain provinces.

However, we may wonder whether that commitment by Parliament or a few Governments to promote duality could not be interpreted as encouraging the status quo in the other provinces. Indeed, why should a province that has nothing more than a protective role under the Constitution promote duality if that is the responsibility of a few Governments only?

I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that under the Constitution French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec would become second-class citizens in some of the provinces and first-class citizens in other provinces. I feel that I cannot subscribe to such a constitutional situation in this country.

Today with the Meech Lake Accord, and the Constitutional Accord of 1987, we have a common role which is to protect our cultural duality and the Government of Canada can encourage provinces to play that role and go beyond that. I am not suggesting that Parliament should not assume the constitutional role and do more but I point out that we have to look seriously at the consequences before compelling it to do so by means of a reconsideration of the consensus reached on June 3.

To my mind it would be highly preferable to take advantage of the forthcoming constitutional discussions to add to the duality already provided for in the Accord.

Madam Speaker, I should now like to deal with another aspect of the Accord which has been discussed. A distinguished critic of the Accord, and I do not mean the leader of the Liberal party in New Brunswick, but rather the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau who wrote on May 27 last: That the Constitutional Accord gave Quebec a competence which other provinces did not have, that is, he said, to promote the concentration of the French culture in Quebec. He saw therein a bad omen for French-speaking minorities.

As a French-speaking Canadian from outside Quebec, I admit that I do not understand his argument concerning French-speaking Canadians from outside Quebec.

The FFHQ and other groups told us that it was essential to maintain a strong French culture in Quebec. Mr. Décary stated: "If Canada wants to protect the French element of this country, the province having a French-speaking majority should be given the political and legislative tools needed to promote its language, its genius and its civilization." He added: "Without Quebec, the French culture elsewhere in Canada would be an illusion." However, no one, except Mr. Trudeau ever suggested that it would give Quebec new constitutional powers. Messrs. Beaudoin and Lederman, among others, have clearly stated the opposite. The role of Quebec, as Mr. Beaudoin said, should remain within shared competences. It does not change Sections 91 and 92. It does not give Quebec extraterritorial power nor any mandate to act in a jurisdiction at other government levels. I do not see how the other provinces or the federal Government would have anything to fear.

• (1130)

I see progress in this Constitutional Accord. I see progress for Quebec and for francophone minorities. I see progress for linguistic duality and for acceptance of our policy on official languages. Many, if not the majority, of the witnesses heard by the committee, share my view. It is not perfect in the sense that we could have done more. However, politics is the art of the possible and the heart of compromise. When I say the art of the possible and the art of compromise, it is perhaps even more true when it comes to constitutional matters. I do not believe that anyone who has participated in the constitutional negotiations, including Mr. Trudeau, can say otherwise.

I am sure that the Charter of Rights with the notwithstanding clause, Section 33, is not the type of full, air-tight protection of fundamental rights that the former Prime Minister wanted. The circumstances of the moment forced him to accept section 33, but he did not reject the Charter because of it. No. Instead, he chose to move forward with the Charter because a Charter with section 33 was better than no Charter at all.

The agreement reached on June 3 was also a compromise, but a less dramatic one. Still, I do not consider it a step backward. I see no danger for francophones or for anglophones.

[Translation]

I see progress in this Agreement, Madam Speaker, progress for Quebec and for francophone minorities. What I find deplorable, however, as a representative of New Brunswick in this House, is that during the current electoral campaign in New Brunswick, one of the provincial party leaders is threatening to destroy the Meech Lake Accord under the pretext that, if he becomes premier of New Brunswick, it would be with the mandate of re-opening the Meech Lake negociations.

I am speaking about the leader of the New Brunswick Liberal Party, Mr. McKenna, who is telling two things to the people of New Brunswick, to Acadians and to women. First, as he knows quite well that the Acadians recognize that Richard Hatfield was an architect of the Meech Lake Accord with the Canadian Prime Minister and that Mr. Hatfield has been promoting and protecting the rights of Acadians in New Brunswick for a long time, Mr. McKenna, the leader of a political Party, to attract the votes of Acadians, is now going through the province and telling people: A vote for me is a vote to re-open and amend the Meech Lake Accord. When he is asked why, he speaks about the rights of women, francophones and the native people, but what he does not say to the people of New Brunswick is what he will do exactly. He says that he will re-open the Accord, but he does not tell the people of the province why. At least, we know where the federal Liberal Party stands. The federal Liberals have proposed amendments saying that these amendments deal with fundamental issues, but that if these amendments are not accepted, they will still support the 1987 Constitutional Accord, which Mr. McKenna refuses to do in New Brunswick.

He is asking the people of New Brunswick, including Acadians and women, for a blank cheque. He asks them to send him to Ottawa, but without telling them what he will do. When such a major issue is involved, Mr. Speaker, you cannot give a blank cheque to someone who does not have the guts to tell the people of New Brunswick whether or not he will really destroy the Meech Lake Accord.

This is an important issue because I would not want the people of New Brunswick, including the Acadians, to be isolated from the rest of this country by the petty political action of a leader who is only trying to attract a specific group of voters in New Brunswick.

DISPOSITION OF CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties, and I think that you will find there was unanimous consent for the following order to be moved immediately:

> That consideration of the motion of the Minister of Justice for amendments to the Constitution of Canada (Government Orders, Government Business, Number 14) shall be conducted as follows:
> (1) No later than 6:00 p.m. on Thursday October 1, 1987, the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party, or a member of their respective Parties acting on their behalf, may each give notice of a motion incorporating amendments described in addendum A and B, respectively, of the report of the Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord, tabled in the House on September 21, 1987, and, when the said Government Order is next taken up on a subsequent sitting day, the Speaker shall, notwithstanding any Standing Order or usual practice, declare these motions to have been duly moved and seconded;

(2) No later than 5:00 p.m. on Friday, October 2, 1987, other Members may give notice of amendments substantively different from those of which notice has been given pursuant to Section (1) of this Order, and when the said Government Order is taken up on the next sitting day, the Speaker may declare these motions to have been duly moved and seconded;

(3) No amendment shall be permitted other than as provided for by Sections (1) and (2) of this Order and any amendment or sub-amendment proposed before the adoption of this Order shall be deemed to have been withdrawn;

(4) During the debate on the said Government Order, and any amendments thereto, no Member may speak more than once;

(5) At the conclusion of debate on the said Government Order, the Speaker shall put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment, all of the questions necessary to dispose of all of the proposed amendments and of the main motion, as amended or not amended, as the case may be, in the following order:

(i) the motion proposed by the Leader of the Opposition or a member acting on his behalf pursuant to Section (1) of this Order;

(ii) the motion proposed by the Leader of the New Democratic Party or a Member acting on his behalf pursuant to Section (1) of this Order;

(iii)Any motion proposed pursuant to Section (2) of this Order;

(iv) the main motion;

(6) For the purposes of this Order, a Whip may request a deferred vote on all questions set out in Section (5) of this Order for 48 hours.

(7) During consideration of this Government Order, the provisions of Standing Order 9(4) shall not apply.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the Hon. Minister of State have unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I should have prefaced my remarks by pointing out to the House that the House Leaders from the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party have been very co-operative with the Government in an effort to organize and manage the debate so that it meets the wishes of the Parties and also the individuals who may wish to place amendments.

I wish to thank them for their co-operation.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I too wish to offer an observation that on this very historic occasion when the House is dealing with the Constitution of Canada that it was a pleasure to work with the House Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition and the Government House Leader to arrange a package that would permit every Member to have an opportunity to speak to the motion before the House regarding the Accord, or the respective amendments put forward by the various Parties or individuals, and allow for a free and open debate on this very important matter.

I concur with the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) that this has been a very productive exercise. It indicates that when the will is there, all three political Parties in Canada can work together for the good of the country.

• (1140)

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, I simply want to say that the order which has just been adopted represents the results of consultations. It will permit the consideration of amendments deemed important to the opposition Parties, as well as possibly to individuals.

In addition, it will ensure that those who wish to speak in this debate will have the opportunity to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Following the comments of Hon. Members and the motion which has just been carried, I think the Chair may also express a few comments.

In the special order which the House has just adopted it is provided that certain amendments included in the report of the Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord shall be proposed to the House notwithstanding that they may be out of order pursuant to our rules and practices.

While this is a most unusual procedure, it is not for the Chair to interfere with the course which the House has unanimously chosen to follow. However, I believe it is my duty to state for the record that the amendments which may be proposed during the debate on this government order should not be cited or referred to as precedents in future proceedings in this Chamber.

The House will now proceed with the question and answer period following the speech of the Hon. Minister.

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed debate on the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1982 came into force on April 17, 1982, following an agreement between Canada and all the provinces except Quebec;

AND WHEREAS the Government of Quebec has established a set of five proposals for constitutional change and has stated that amendments to give effect to those proposals would enable Quebec to resume a full role in the constitutional councils of Canada;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto sets out the basis on which Quebec's five constitutional proposals may be met;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto also recognizes the principle of the equality of all the provinces, provides new arrangements to foster greater harmony and cooperation between the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces and requires that conferences be convened to consider important constitutional, economic and other issues;

AND WHEREAS certain portions of the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto relate to matters referred to in section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

AND WHEREAS section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province;

NOW THEREFORE the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE

Constitution Act, 1867

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 1 thereof, the following section:

"2. (1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(2) The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

(4) Nothing in this section derogates from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 24 thereof, the following section:

"25. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, the government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate.

(2) Until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the person summoned to fill a vacancy in the Senate shall be chosen from among persons whose names have been submitted under subsection (1) by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates and must be acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 95 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Agreements on Immigration and Aliens

95A. The Government of Canada shall, at the request of the government of any province, negotiate with the government of that province for the purpose of concluding an agreement relating to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province that is appropriate to the needs and circumstances of that province.

95B. (1) Any agreement concluded between Canada and a province in relation to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province has the force of law from the time it is declared to do so in accordance with subsection 95C(1) and shall from that time have effect notwithstanding class 25 of section 91 or section 95.

(2) An agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) shall have effect only so long and so far as it is not repugnant to any provision of an Act of the Parliament of Canada that sets national standards and objectives relating to immigration or aliens, including any provision that establishes general classes of immigrants or relates to levels of immigration for Canada or that prescribes classes of individuals who are inadmissible into Canada.

(3) The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies in respect of any agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) and in respect of anything done by the Parliament or Government of Canada, or the legislature or government of a province, pursuant to any such agreement.

95C. (1) A declaration that an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) has the force of law may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement.

(2) An amendment to an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized

(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement; or

(b) in such other manner as is set out in the agreement.

95D. Sections 46 to 48 of the Constitution Act, 1982 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of any declaration made pursuant to subsection 95C(1), any amendment to an agreement made pursuant to subsection 95C(2) or any amendment made pursuant to section 95E.

95E. An amendment to sections 95A to 95D or this section may be made in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection 38(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, but only if the amendment is authorized by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of all the provinces that are, at the time of the amendment, parties to an agreement that has the force of law under subsection 95B(1)."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 96 thereof, the following heading:

"General"

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 101 thereof, the following heading:

"Courts Established by the Parliament of Canada"

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 101 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Supreme Court of Canada

101A. (1) The court existing under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada is hereby continued as the general court of appeal for Canada, and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a superior court of record.

(2) The Supreme Court of Canada shall consist of a chief justice to be called the Chief Justice of Canada and eight other judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor General in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

101B. (1) Any person may be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who, after having been admitted to the bar of any province or territory, has, for a total of at least ten years, been a judge of any court in Canada or a member of the bar of any province or territory.

(2) At least three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be appointed from among persons who, after having been admitted to the bar of Quebec, have, for a total of at least ten years, been judges of any court of Quebec or of any court established by the Parliament of Canada, or members of the bar of Quebec.

101C. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court.

(2) Where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

(3) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) of any of the three judges necessary to meet the requirement set out in subsection 101B(2), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the Government of Quebec.

(4) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) otherwise than as required under subsection (3), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the government of a province other than Quebec.

101D. Sections 99 and 100 apply in respect of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

101E. (1) Sections 101A to 101D shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws under section 101 except to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with those sections.

(2) For greater certainty, section 101A shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws relating to the reference of questions of law or fact, or any other matters, to the Supreme Court of Canada."

7. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 106 thereof, the following section:

"106A. (1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

(2) Nothing in this section extends the legislative powers of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces."

8. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and sections:

"XII—Conferences on the Economy and Other Matters

148. A conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year to discuss the state of the Canadian economy and such other matters as may be appropriate.

XIII—References

149. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

Constitution Act, 1982

9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part."

10. Section 44 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"44. Subject to section 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons."

11. Subsection 46(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province."

12. Subsection 47(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution."

13. Part VI of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"Part VI

Constitutional Conferences

50. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate;

(b) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries; and

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon."

14. Subsection 52(2) of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(d) any other amendment to the Constitution of Canada."

15. Section 61 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Act 1982, or a reference to the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1982, shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

General

16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

CITATION

17. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I listened carefully to the Minister's speech and, indeed, I share some of his views. We both belong to a minority in our provinces, although the minority in his province is more important than it is in mine. We are part of the Canadian diaspora and we understand each other very well, I think, in terms of our objectives.

I would like to ask him a question because, at the end of his remarks, he mentioned the possibility that, should there be a change of Government—and I mention it only because the Minister himself alluded to it—that Government, headed by someone other that Mr. Hatfield in New Brunswick, might not endorse the Constitutional Accord known as the Meech-Langevin Accord.

We all know that, at the present time, the amendment formula requires seven provinces with 50 per cent of the population, but that the Meech Lake Accord introduces a new formula which demands unanimous approval, and that is precisely what the Minister is concerned with. The new method will come into effect when the Accord is agreed upon. The provincial Premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have agreed unanimously that this new formula should prevail. Yesterday, I was asked in the House the question I am going to put to the Minister. I do not know whether he read it or not. Would a new partner on the Canadian scene, a new provincial Government which would refuse to endorse the accord, this Meech Lake agreement, destroy the unanimity concept? In the Minister's opinion would such a move jeopardize an agreement accepted by a Government legally elected and rightfully representing the interests of the Province of New Brunswick? I am asking the question because, as far as I am concerned, I consider that a new player must accept the rules presented to him. Those of us who are in favour of the Meech Lake Accord, and I am sure that I am expressing the feelings of many of my Party colleagues, think it would be improper and perhaps even difficult for a new player to change the rules of the game and say: the Meech Lake Accord is no more, for there is no longer unanimity. We will return to the old amending formula which required the support of seven provinces and 50 per cent of the population. If I understood him correctly, is that what the Minister meant? He was concerned that a new player, New Brunswick, might change the rules of the game concerning the Meech Lake Accord.

Mr. Valcourt: Exactly, Madam Speaker. That is what is occurring now. There is, of course, the fact that the Leader of the Liberal Party of New Brunswick is involved in an election campaign and that, in an effort to obtain the support of both women and Acadians, he claims that he will, all by himself, reopen this dossier in spite of the fact that this document is the result of a consensus between all the First Ministers of this country. But what does he really mean? When he says, for instance, that he wants to improve this document or that he wants to meet the concerns of women, although constitutional experts have abundantly demonstrated that their rights would not be affected, although those who know something about Canadian reality are well aware that some provinces are resisting their constitutional obligations at home, he claims that he wants to promote the French fact and, in order to flatter Acadians, he says that he will reopen this dossier. But what he absolutely refuses to say, it is whether, if elected, he would submit the Constitutional Accord to the Legislative Assembly for approval. What I simply cannot accept, what I deplore, Madam Speaker, is for him to use the concerns of Acadians, women and Native peoples, saying: Of course, I am going to reopen this, but without saying openly that, once the issue is debated, no, it is out of the question, for it cannot be reopened. Are you going to submit it to the Legislative Assembly, yes or no? That is what he will not say. It is because he refuses to show leadership that I, for one, feel that we should not give him a blank cheque. I feel also that he is depriving the citizens of New Brunswick of one of the most basic tenets of democracy, namely, that they should know where their political leaders stand. Is he going to submit the 1987 Constitutional Accord for approval, just as the legitimate and duly elected prime minister of New Brunswick did on June 3 last?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has the floor for a very short supplementary. Then I shall recognize the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, what the Minister has just put forward are facts! Each province has agreed to submit the 1987 Constitutional Accord to its Legislature. I do not see how it could do otherwise. Personally, I feel that the newly elected Premier of New Brunswick . . . I do not share the Minister's opinion on this, for I feel Mr. McKenna has very good chances of being elected—I think that Mr. McKenna will submit the Constitutional Resolution to the New Brunswick Legislature, and we will see what will happen next.

[English]

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, the Minister spoke as a francophone from outside Quebec. I think it was very important for him to do that because there are many related concerns.

The Minister is also the Minister of State for Indian Affairs and Northern Development and, as such, he has responsibility to aboriginal people. Could he give us his views on the impact of the Accord upon aboriginal people, particularly in respect of that section of the Accord which calls for constitutional conferences that will be dealing with such subjects as Senate reform and fisheries, both of which are absolutely vital to aboriginal people?

Mr. Valcourt: Madam Speaker, of course, I think the question of aboriginal rights is very important. It is obvious that on June 3 the First Ministers could not agree on putting the question of aboriginal rights on the agenda of the next constitutional conference.

• (1150)

We have had dates agreed to for constitutional conferences on aboriginal rights and it has not worked. Why? As our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated many times, with Quebec at the negotiating table and part of the Constitution the native people stand a much better chance of having the question of aboriginal rights resolved, in particular that of self-government. I understand and appreciate that they would like to see at this stage the issue of aboriginal rights on the agenda at the conference, but experience teaches us that fixing dates for conferences without a consensus does not work. If we had said in 1982 that the Quebec round would take place by October, 1984, or June, 1985, would that have ensured the resolution of the Quebec round? Not at all.

The groundwork the Prime Minister laid down in Sept-Îles was good. He said that we will start consultation and call a conference when there is a chance of reaching a solution. I think that is the best course to follow on aboriginal rights.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time allowed for questions and comments has expired.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I am very excited to be taking part in the process of constitutional development, particularly bringing Quebec back into the constitutional family. I believe the adoption of this Accord by Parliament and the provinces will be an historic occasion on which all Canadians can rejoice.

[Translation]

I remember well how ashamed I felt when the Constitution was signed and Quebec was not there. The Queen came for the ceremony, but Quebec was not part of the Constitution that was signed that day. So our Constitution and the Charter were launched without the agreement of a major part of Canada.

We will now change this unhappy situation. We will welcome Quebec in the Constitution. From now on, we will work together in one Canada in order to renew our country, our Constitution, and this, in a Canada that recognizes the distinct character of Quebec. Together, we will tackle other constitutional problems such as Senate reform and justice for native people.

We cannot solve these problems without the full participation of Quebec.

While the Meech Lake Accord constitutes an important step for Canada, it is not perfect. We in the NDP have proposed some amendments in order to eliminate the injustice suffered by our northern citizens and to include more considerations for native people.

[English]

We have in particular proposed an amendment. We are not satisfied with the change which means that the Yukon and the Northwest Territories would need to have unanimous consent of the provinces in order to become a province themselves. No other region of Canada had to face that. We do not like the exclusion of the Yukon and Northwest Territories from participation in the selection of Supreme Court justices or Senators. We think that should be changed.

The NDP deeply regrets the failure to reach a just settlement with native peoples and we believe the Accord should have included early consideration by First Ministers of aboriginal rights and self-government.

My riding of Broadview—Greenwood contains many citizens whose heritage is neither English nor French. Many are concerned about multicultural heritage and while the Accord does nothing against recognition of this heritage, it does nothing for it either. We recommend that First Ministers give early consideration to the ethnocultural reality of Canada as a fundamental characteristic.

In the course of looking at the Constitutional Accord many people, particularly women and minority groups, raised concerns regarding the application of the Charter. We have not yet begun to deal with those concerns. We believe there should be a very thorough Charter review and these considerations should be treated seriously.

The incorporation of a Charter in our Constitution was a major change for Canada, moving from a parliamentary system to one with an entrenched Charter. That gave an enormously greater role to the courts. Of course we have to review the results of that change. We must adapt where we see that the results are not those desired or intended.

I want to get on to some major considerations raised in the constitutional debate, considerations which make some people worried about accepting the Accord as it stands. I want to begin with the very serious concern regarding women's equality. I am a feminist. I was very actively involved in the Charter fight for women's equality back in 1981-82. Frankly, I am not one of those who was keen on a Charter and thought with some confidence that it would solve our problems. Certainly when we saw that there was going to be a Charter, I, along with other women, acted in a very determined way to ensure that the Charter would be good for the women of Canada. I am very concerned that this Accord respects the gains the women's movement made in 1982.

The first version produced in 1982 was very inadequate. It would have worsened the situation of women. Yet we saw the women's movement come of age, and the enormous force of that movement changed the Charter. The wording was changed. For that reason we can understand why women are suspicious of this new Accord. We have not been treated properly in the past. However, while we should have some amendments, I believe that, even if we did not, we need not be worried about taking a step backwards.

To meet the concerns expressed, we propose that Section 28 of the Charter be incorporated in Section 16 of the Accord. Here we have a need for consistency and symmetry. With multicultural heritage and aboriginal rights being given special recognition it is very important that women's equality not be lost.

What happens if we do not achieve amendment? I still think the security we have in Section 28 is adequate. This gives women that extra recognition that equality is a fundamental part of our Constitution. We have Section 15 as well as the back-up of Section 28. I feel very confident that that will be adequate.

It has been suggested that the distinct society recognition could be used against women's equality. I think that argument is all wrong. In the 1930s in Quebec, when women did not have the rights they had in other parts of the country, that certainly would have been a legitimate concern. However, we are not living in the 1930s. Quebec is a very different society in the 1980s, one in which women's equality is perhaps closer to achievement than in many other parts of the country.

[Translation]

Quebec was the first province to pass an act providing equal pay for work of equal value. The Régie des rentes in Quebec was more favorable to the participation of women than the Canada Pension Plan. The Quebec Plan includes the drop out measure providing for the inclusion of women homemakers when they have a child of less than seven years of age. That measure was rejected by Ontario for many years which, because of the veto of that province, blocked any move in that direction for the rest of Canada. So the distinct society made possible a valuable difference. Later on, that measure was introduced in the rest of Canada.

• (1200)

[English]

Here we see doing something differently was actually beneficial, and the rest of Canada caught up. I do not think we have to worry about distinct society impinging on women's rights. Nor do I think the distinct society recognition is any loss for the rest of Canada. It is simply a fact of life, and the Accord is very clear that most English-speaking people live outside the Province of Quebec but some live in Quebec, most French-speaking people live inside Quebec but others live in all other parts of the country. Minority rights are recognized in our Constitution before and after the Accord. It is not a give-away, it is simply a recognition of Canadian reality.

Another very, very serious objection that has been raised against the Accord is that it weakens federal powers. It has been stated that the federal power will be so weakened that we will not be able to create the social programs we need to face and solve the problems we have as a united nation.

I do not believe that the Accord has that kind of effect at all and I think people are being caught up too much in theory and abstractions. I think the remarks of former Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau are simply off base. He talks in an academic fashion, in the pejorative sense of the word, being far-fetched, argumentative, theoretical and indeed capricious.

Let us look at the reality. The Accord comes close to the reality that exists. It is a change on paper but it is not really a significant change in how we order our national and provincial shared responsibilities. Indeed, the federal Government for the first time will have a stated explicit constitutional authority to spend in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. Again, this is not a give-away, this is not something that any province has lost, because that power was already recognized in fact, thanks to the very significant spending powers the federal Government had. It is not a change in practice but it is constitutionally accepted.

There are about a hundred shared-cost programs of various sorts between the federal Government and the provinces. The really significant ones were achieved by consensus and negotiation. In some cases, it was a 100 per cent consensus. Our great social programs like the old age pension, unemployment insurance and the family allowance were achieved only when all provinces agreed. Then we have a different situation with the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan. Here we have two slightly different plans set up, but this was not a defeat for Canada, this has actually been advantageous.

The Quebec Pension Plan has done things a little differently, and in some cases I say the Quebec Pension Plan has done things better. In some cases, the Canada Pension Plan has subsequently accepted things begun by the Quebec Pension Plan. We can see that this possibility of having provinces do things differently, as long as they meet national objectives, is not a new departure. We have been doing this anyway and it is a healthy development. It has been good for the country and it will continue to be good for the country.

There have been disputes between the provinces and the federal Government, for example in medicare, and we only got medicare because a province started it, the CCF Province of Saskatchewan. Ontario opposed it, but very soon thereafter when it was brought in on a national basis, Ontario came along.

We need to have some flexibility. We need to have negotiation. I suggest that the next social program that we need and that I hope we are going to have, namely child care, will only be successful if we have federal-provincial negotiation and consensus. These are not matters in which there is any significant change, and indeed the change on paper will strengthen federal powers by constitutionalizing the right of spending in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction.

Some people have objected to the statement in the Accord that there will be annual First Ministers' meetings. Some people have even suggested that this would work against the federal power. I think this is absolute nonsense. We already have First Ministers' meetings. They are part of our normal governmental life, and they are healthy things to have. We have a shared-responsibility Constitution. Some programs are federal, some are provincial, some are shared. It is normal, natural and healthy for the Governments to get together at least annually to discuss matters of mutual concern to Canada.

The question of power over immigration has been raised as being a diminution of federal power and also a matter which could impinge on women's equality. I do not think either are true. We have already had arrangements with the Province of Quebec for 16 years now and we have not seen inordinate discrimination. There is discrimination against women in immigration, but it is not in any particular province. There is national discrimination.

The safeguards in the case of immigration are quite clear. The Charter still holds. That is made perfectly clear in the Accord and it is made perfectly clear that the agreement arranged with the province must be approved by Parliament, by us, elected representatives, and we certainly would not approve of a discriminatory arrangement. The terms, objectives and nature of immigration policy remain federal. I think that is not an area which will pose new problems, and let us hope that it will provide some new solutions. We want immigration to be handled in a way that is satisfactory to provinces, and it will work much more smoothly if that is the case.

It has been suggested that giving the power to the provinces to nominate Senators, although I hope we do not have a Senate much longer, and judges for the Supreme Court of Canada is a diminution of federal responsibility. Again I do not think this is true. It does not give the power to a province to put someone in the Senate or the Supreme Court of Canada to work against Canada. That simply is not possible. The appointment must have the final approval of the federal Government through the Governor in Council. It means that the provinces will propose people for nomination, and that is perfectly reasonable. This is done in other federal states. If the federal Government does not consider those nominees acceptable, then they will negotiate. Negotiation, talking to each other, reconciling differences is a normal and proper part of life in a federal state.

[Translation]

We must rely on the common sense of Canadians, of the federal and provincial governments, in order to find a solution to these differences.

I am an ecologist and I want adequate federal power to enact regulations in the area of environment. Toxic substances flowing in our rivers and polluting our air, as in acid rains, do not recognize provincial boundaries. Therefore, there must be strict national criteria. I believe the provinces should have the right to demand even stricter criteria but not to lower the established national criteria. Ecologists from Quebec agree on that. Ecologists from all parts of Canada are asking for such measures. Yet, both levels of governement share the responsibility for environment. Agreements must be negotiated in order to establish adequate criteria. The Accord does not bring any change in this regard. The federal Government is not any more capable nor any less capable to act in this area. Political will is required at both levels of Government in order to bring about a real remedy and this goodwill cannot be legislated. However, I suggest the agreements that are required will become more likely with Quebec's adhesion to the Constitution. The energy that was wasted in bitterness and confusion will be better used if Quebec becomes part of the Constitution.

[English]

That, Madam Speaker, is what I am looking forward to. We have to put our past behind us. We have to put behind us those years of confrontation and bitterness. I want further to see many more Canadians involved in the process of constitutional development. The Constitution belongs to all Canadians. It is not government property. Average Canadians should be involved in the next steps as we work toward a fairer Constitution, redressing the injustices to the North and our native peoples, and dealing with the alienation of the west and the east and their proposals for constitutional change to meet their concerns.

• (1210)

I have carefully examined the objections which have been raised. I have studied the committee's work on the subject. The committee worked hard all summer on this issue. It weighed the objections raised against the consequences of not acting. I think we must consider those objections very carefully as well as amendments, but we must also consider the consequences of refusing reconciliation with Quebec. That would be a terrible non-step to take, a terrible dereliction of our duty.

I believe that by saying yes to Quebec we will also be saying yes to all of Canada and our future together. Let this Parliament and the provincial legislatures make this commitment now so that we can work together creatively, responsibly, and amicably to build the kind of Canada that all Canadians want.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston).

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Madam Speaker, I would like to use the time available to me today to speak, first of all, to my colleagues, friends, constituents and fellow citizens in the Province of Quebec. Madam Speaker, as you know, there are supporters of the Constitutional Accord who insist that to be against or to reject the Accord is to be against Quebec; that to reject the concept of Quebec as a distinct society is to be against Quebec itself; that not to accept the Constitutional Accord unamended, despite its flagrant shortcomings, means not accepting Quebec as a member of our constitutional family. That, Madam Speaker, is tantamount to blackmail. However, there are many people who have let themselves be convinced by these simplistic and unsound arguments.

If I had more than 20 minutes, I would be able to demonstrate to you, and convince those who listen with an open mind, that this radical change of course contemplated by the constitutional Accord could weaken if not destroy the Canadian Federation. We are embarking upon a dangerous course towards decentralization, a poorly thought-out constitutional dead-end caused by the requirement that the provinces must be unanimous on major constitutional amendments. This is a step backward from the vision of a bilingual and multicultural Canada and a return to what some people call the two-nation concept, one anglophone and the other francophone. To those who say: "Donald, if you vote against the Accord, you are voting against Quebec", I say: To vote for the Accord is to vote against Canada.

I am for a confident and strong Quebec, within a strong Federation.

If I wanted to destroy the Canadian federation, if I wanted to suppress the rights of language minorities, and if I wanted to create a loosely constructed federation, a kind of alliance among 10 provinces, with a distinct society in Quebec, endowed with powers that would not be available to the other provinces, if I wanted to wipe out the possibility of creating jointly-financed national programs like health insurance, if I wanted to do all that, Madam Speaker, I would vote for the Constitutional Accord.

I will therefore vote against it.

Madam Speaker, I am being accused of wanting to maintain the dream of a bilingual country, a dream that does not reflect the Canadian reality that Quebec is a francophone island in an anglophone country.

I am being accused of refusing to accept a fact of life, namely that Quebec is a distinct society within the Canadian federation and that the Quebec National Assembly and the Quebec Government must be able to protect and promote that distinct identity, as described in the Constitutional Accord. Today, Madam Speaker, I therefore wish to concentrate on this particular aspect, namely, Quebec as a distinct society.

First of all, Madam Speaker, to explain my philosophy I must comment briefly on my own origins. I am not originally from Quebec. I was raised on a small farm in the Ottawa Valley, just 12 miles from Parliament Hill. But for more than 40 years I lived in the Province of Quebec, first in Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu and later in Montreal. My father retired in Vancouver, and my wife comes from Nova Scotia.

And so, Madam Speaker, I feel at home everywhere in Canada but particularly in Quebec where I have chosen to reside. Madam Speaker, I am sorry I did not learn to speak French before my adult years, and that explains my strong accent. I mention these points of personal history simply to tell you that I chose to make Montreal my home. Like many other anglophones in the province—I believe the great majority—we not only accept the promotion of French in "la belle province", but we take an active part in the process. Our children speak French, they work in French and, far from being hostile to the French fact we are proud of it! We are in the Province of Quebec not despite the French fact but because of the French fact. Although there was an exodus of anglophones after the election of the Parti québécois, those who remained chose the Quebec option and have no intention of abandoning their province.

Madam Speaker, my problem with the Constitutional Accord lies far beyond Quebec linguistic issues. But I emphasize that the protection of minority rights remains a basic point in this debate, whether we are talking about the 800,000 people who speak English in Quebec and can be found in every socio-economic stratum of society, about the rights of francophones outside Quebec, about women, about native people, about Catholics, Protestants, Jews, Indians, all visible minorities, just to name a few. In my judgment, given the legal scope of the distinct society clause, there is no doubt that minority rights could be prejudiced under the proposed agreement.

However, Madam Speaker, let us get back for a moment to the dream of a bilingual country from Newfoundland to British Columbia.

As I see it, the Accord will indeed put an end to this dream, this dream about a bilingual country where Canadians who speak French or English or are bilingual will be entitled to public services in the language of their choice throughout Canada. A country where education would be available in either French or English in every region. Unfortunately, and there is no doubt on this point, in both its tone and direction the Accord leads toward a French-speaking Quebec in an English-speaking country. Admittedly, it is true that we have not yet fully realized the bilingual Canada of our dreams, but instead of applauding the progress already made and of continuing in the same vein, the Government is telling us that we should entrench in the Constitution what it considers to be the Canadian reality. For my part, I say that you should never enter public life if you are satisfied with reality, satisfied with the status quo.

Did Sir John A. Macdonald accept the Canadian status quo of his time? Or rather, did he dream of a strong and united federal country—a dream which guided his policies? Was the building of a railway across this beautiful country, which is the subject of the book The National Dream by Pierre Berton, not inspired by this dream? Was the vision of Laurier, who said that the 20th century belonged to Canada, not a dream also? Even if it is impossible to make our dreams come true, we must still make sure that our society progresses toward those dreams. As for me, Madam Speaker, I am convinced that the dream of Henri Bourassa, Laurier, St-Laurent, Pearson, and more recently Trudeau, namely the dream of the bilingual Canada which I have described, is a dream which can come true. Indeed, it is essential for this dream to come true if we want to have a strong and united Canada which can compete with the rest of the world. As far as this dream is concerned, Madam Speaker, the Accord represents a disappointing failure.

Faced with this Accord, what would be the thoughts of Henri Bourassa, the great Canadian nationalist who stated the following in 1912:

> No, indeed, French, we have the right to be because of our language; Catholic, we have the right to be because of our faith; free, we have the right to be because of the Constitution; Canadian, we are before anything else; British, we have as much right as anyone else to be. And these rights should be ours to enjoy throughout the Confederation.

Let me also quote the words of Archbishop Langevin, who attended a conference in Montreal that same year on the occasion of the first Congress of the French language in Quebec:

> We do not recognize the right of anyone to stop French Canadians at the Quebec border to tell them: From this point on, you are no longer at home. We are at home everywhere in Canada.

Now, 75 years later, Madam Speaker, we are abandoning this dream. It seems to me that what has been achieved to date justifies our confidence in the future of the policies which have made it possible for Canada to make such extraordinary progress.

The legal recognition of Quebec as a distinct society represents in my view a capitulation to the philosophy of those who favour the coexistence of two nations on Canadian territory, namely a francophone nation and an anglophone nation. Many people say to me: "Donald, it is obvious that Quebec is a distinct society." There is for instance Professor Beaudoin, and I shall now reply to the comment of my friend, the Hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). As Professor Beaudoin stated before the National Assembly Committee:

> Because the language and culture of a majority of its population are French, and because it operates under a French civil law, Quebec is a distinct society.

Well, even if we support Professor Beaudoin's point of view, observation of fact should not be entrenched in a Constitution, because of their legal consequences. As another professor suggested:

> Let us suppose the Constitution stated that Toronto is the financial capital of Canada.

While this may be exaggerated, it makes the point.

There is no doubt that Quebec has distinctive characteristics. Its history, language and culture are different from those of the other provinces, there is no doubt about that. But the other provinces also have distinctive characteristics. Let us take for instance the case of Newfoundland which has a different history and culture; the Acadian population in New Brunswick, the Ukrainians in the Western Provinces; the unique characteristics of British Columbia, and so on. In other words, every province has a distinctive character. These differences are also based on an economy which changes considerably from one region to another, from one province to another, so that each region is different from the other regions, each province is different from the other provinces.

That is why we have here in Canada a federal system which makes sure that the individual interests of the partners in Confederation are looked after by the provincial Governments, each being independent in its own area of responsibility. If we accept Mr. Beaudoin's definition that Quebec is a distinct society because the language and culture of its majority are French, and because it operates under a French civil law, we must also recognize that all these rights and characteristics are now protected by the Canadian Constitution. Why, then, should we add the notion of a distinct society to the Constitution? Is it purely to give more power to the province—that is to say, to the provincial politicians?

There is no doubt that because of its special status as a distinct society Quebec will enjoy powers which will not be available to the other provinces. Those who suggest this is not the case are frankly wrong. The Joint Committee has taken care not to call witnesses who would have proven that point. For instance, Madam Speaker, is it not strange that the Joint Committee did not insist on the presence of official spokesmen for the Quebec Government to explain their interpretation of that clause? Would Mr. Bourassa's Government be satisfied if Quebec gained nothing with its "distinct society"? I do not think so.

Before the National Assembly, referring to the Constitutional Accord in last June, Mr. Bourassa said: "... It must be emphasized that the entire Constitution including the Charter, will be interpreted and enforced in the light of that distinct society clause. Legislative jurisdiction is the target and this will enable us to consolidate our gains and win new ground." This statement by Mr. Bourassa is in flagrant conflict with the position of the federal Government as expressed on many occasions by Senator Murray.

I would like to accept the government point of view given by Senator Murray but any student of constitutional law knows that many important powers have been allocated through the interpretation of the division of powers. For those who maintain that the distinct society clause is merely a rule of interpretation, I quote, this time with approval, the following comment made by Mr. Beaudoin: "It is a rule of interpretation which has changed Canadian federalism."

In this instance, Madam Speaker, he was right. Therefore it is clear: there is no doubt that there will be a change in the distribution of powers such that Quebec will have powers not available to other provinces. With such an approach, we are setting out upon an extremely dangerous road to an unbalanced federation. A clear consequence of that new approach will be a castration of the role of Quebec's politicians and bureaucrats at the national level, once Quebec takes on important powers not granted to other provinces. And if there are questions concerning the nature of powers that could be transferred, I would be pleased to answer then, Madam Speaker, once I have concluded my comments.

To conclude, when the Prime Minister tells us how much the Canadian federation has been strengthened by this Constitutional Accord because Quebec now becomes a member of the family, I remain sceptical. Why? For three reasons at least. First, we are told the Accord with all its flaws is justified because Quebec is adhering to the Canadian Constitution. Is that so? To which Constitution? Not the 1982 Constitution. Rather, to a new one in which Quebec is not bound to submit fully to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, in which Quebec will have special powers and where Canada will become the head waiter serving the provinces when they meet each year to feast at the expense of the national interest.

Second, we are told that this adherence to the Constitution will permit the evolution of the Canadian Constitution. Is that so? What evolution? Without the ability to amend the Senate or the Supreme Court, to create new provinces or to change other national institutions unless there is unanimous approval by all provinces, how in all honesty can constitutional evolution be considered a possibility for Canada?

Third, the Fathers of this new Constitution have not explained to Canadians that the Quebec Government feels itself in no way bound to remain part of the family. It maintains the right to leave the federation at will. Listen to what Mr. Bourassa had to say on June 18, 1987, when the Constitutional Accord was adopted by the National Assembly, and I quote:

> The Liberal Party recognizes the right of Quebec to freely express its will to maintain the Canadian federal union or to end it.

Furthermore, he confirmed that this policy:

> "is not changed or affected in any way by the adoption of the Meech Lake Accord."

So when Mr. Bourassa said that "Quebec is winning one of the greatest political victories of its history, a victory that is undeniably recognized by most objective observers as one of the greatest in two centuries", Madam Speaker, he was right. But he should have added that it was at the same time the greatest defeat for Canada.

Mr. Berger: Madam Speaker, I heard the Hon. Member say he would have perhaps a few supplementary comments to make on the powers that could be transferred to the Province of Quebec as a distinct society, and I invite him to make those comments, if he so wishes.

Mr. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Madam Speaker, perhaps I could elaborate on the rule of interpretation as explained by Professor Beaudoin. I made the point that if Quebec were to be invested with many important powers, that would unbalance the federation. The communication sector comes first to my mind. True, powers are shared in the communication area, but the role of the CRTC results from the interpretation of the Constitution. Communication is not found among the powers divided between Sections 91 and 92 of the Canadian Constitution. It is therefore an excellent example. If, for instance, Quebec as a distinct society becomes responsible for the control or content of communications, would a Quebec Member of Parliament be an appropriate candidate for the position of federal Minister of Communications, considering he would not have jurisdiction in his own province? Would it be found acceptable to entrust Canadian policy in the area of communications or some other area to someone who does not have a say in these matters at home, in his own province? Would not all Hon. Members from Quebec in fact be bound by the same constraints? And I may say that the same would hold true for civil servants. Could we imagine, for example, in these circumstances, André Bureau from Trois-Rivières as CRTC President?

There you have it, Madam Speaker. To me, to ask these questions is to answer them. We shall be creating what lawyers would refer to as an asymmetrical federation, an unbalanced federation, where, as I have already indicated in my comments, the role played by politicians from the province of Quebec will be castrated.

• (1230)

Mr. Berger: Madam Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member, if he would, to comment perhaps on another area which I do not believe he mentioned in his speech, that is, the area of the environment. I would like to refer to a letter that was sent to the clerk of the Special Joint Committee on September 10 by a group of organizations, The Canadian Environmental Law Association, The Citizens Network on Waste Management, Energy Probe and Pollution Probe. The authors of this letter are concerned that the Meech Lake agreement as presently worded may act as another barrier to the federal Government taking a strong role in the area of environmental protection.

The authors are concerned that the ability of the provinces to opt out of shared-cost programs and to receive compensation therefor will inhibit or may discourage the federal Government from assuming its responsibility to protect the environment, if it can be argued that any federal initiative is in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. We have the problem precisely because the environment is not listed as one of the items of responsibility in either Section 91 or Section 92. Concern for the environment was not a matter which was discussed, if you will, or which was a concern at the time of the BNA Act in 1867. So it is an area where there has been considerable ambiguity.

I would like the Member perhaps to comment upon this and to state whether he agrees that this shared-cost provision, the right of the provinces to opt out, would in effect inhibit the federal Government from taking action in this area?

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, I do agree with the representations made by the Hon. Member that the federal Government would be inhibited from operating in these areas by virtue of the new provisions on cost-shared programs, which is one of the few levers left to the national Government to establish national standards in areas which we say fall under exclusive provincial jurisdiction.

Of course, someday the Government may try to invoke the peace, order and good government clause to argue that the environment is a matter of national concern, going back and relying on the Canada Temperance case and others. On the other hand, if one is able to argue, say, in the case of Quebec, that it is a distinct society and that the peace, order and good government clause should receive a restricted application of the kind given by Viscount Haldane, namely, national emergency, then one could easily see that a checkerboard would emerge in this country with respect to environmental control programs.

I would also draw to the attention of the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) the fact that national objectives are nowhere defined as being established by the Government of Canada. In fact, if one looks at the comments of Mr. Bourassa in the National Assembly—

[Translation]

It is quite obvious that in his heart he considers that national objectives will be established in consultation with the provinces.

• (1240)

[English]

One must ask, where are these national objectives to be established? Here in the House of Commons, or behind closed doors at a private First Ministers' Conference, or behind closed doors at Meech Lake? I would like spokespersons from the Province of Quebec to come forward and tell us how they interpret this particular provision. All we have are comments from Mr. Bourassa in Quebec. If we establish our national objectives through provincial meetings of First Ministers, we are stating that the national interest is the sum of separate individual provincial interests. That is not what Canada is all about.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to kow why the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) is so afraid of the promotion of French in Quebec. Why is he so afraid? Are the provinces enemies of the federal Government? Are the provincial Premiers bad boys? Why is he so afraid of Quebec's distinctive character? I understand that Westmount is no different from Toronto. But Saint-Henri is different from Westmount and different from Toronto. Can the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount explain his fear, his fury, and why, in 1982, he did not fight as strongly when Quebec did not support the Constitution?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if my honourable friend and colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie was here when I made my comments, because I did explain that we are very proud to have a Quebec in which French is promoted. We are involved in the process. As I said, our children go to French schools. They work in French. So, as I explained, we stayed in Quebec because of the French fact, not in spite of it. On the contrary! So obviously he did not understand the comments I just made here. But when he asks why I am afraid of the provincial Premiers, I say that we must have a national vision. We are here to stand up for the national interest, not the separate individual provincial interests. The Premier of each province is supposed to look after the interests of his own province. Mr. Ghiz was not elected by the people of Alberta. Only one legislature is supposed to represent the national interest. Its members are elected from all across the country. It is this Parliament. It is up to us to represent the national interest, not the interests of the Province of Quebec in this House. We have been elected to defend the national interest, to promote the national interest. It is not the responsibility of provincial premiers to defend this interest. They cannot do it; they have no incentive to do so. And that is why we cannot leave the management of our country in the hands of 10 Premiers meeting privately behind closed doors with the Prime Minister of Canada. That is not what Canada is all about.

[English]

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate. It is important that the first thing I do is to indicate that I spent my summer working as a member of the committee on the Meech Lake Accord, only to discover at the end of that process that my name was not included in the list of members of the committee.

Obviously, this caused me a great deal of concern. I had to go through each of the reasons that I could possibly think of why my name was not included. The first one may have been the fact that my name is difficult to spell, but I do not think that flies. Maybe I am just too shy, quiet, and withdrawn.

Ms. Jewett: No, that doesn't fly either.

Mr. Cooper: My colleagues in the House know that this is not likely to have been the reason. Then I thought that possibly it was some regional discrimination, but after a little homework I had no choice but to rule that out. Finally, I decided it must be discrimination of another type, and that is the fact that I am so short—maybe they just missed me in the line-up.

After checking all those reasons out, I came to the conclusion that it happened as a matter of an oversight. I spent my summer working on the Meech Lake Accord, this historical document, only to be completely forgotten by history. It was a tough time for me, nevertheless it was a time that I thoroughly enjoyed and found most fascinating.

I wish to begin my remarks by complimenting the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer), the co-chairman of the committee, who did an excellent job. Together with his co-chairman, Senator Tremblay from the other House, those men conducted themselves in a fashion that they can be proud of, and certainly I was proud to be part of the group that worked with them.

I also wish to comment on the witnesses who appeared before us. There is nothing like a constitutional debate to bring out people with strong viewpoints, impressive arguments, clearly defined ideas, and an ability to present their case. That certainly was the case in this particular committee. We had experts come forward, and as is usually the case when dealing with experts, they were divided on the manner in which they viewed the Accord. Nevertheless, the arguments placed before the committee were fascinating, well thought out, and they certainly helped each of us to look at the Accord, gain insight into it, and find a perspective. After hearing the arguments, we were able to reach individual and collective decisions.

Today I wish to address three things on the Meech Lake Accord. First, I wish to look at the Accord from the perspective of my own home Province of Alberta and how the Accord affects them. Second, I wish to spend a little time on the process by which this constitutional agreement was reached. Third, I wish briefly to touch on the future constitutional process in this country, how we must examine that, and the importance of the role it will play in Canada in the future.

Let me begin by looking at the Meech Lake agreement from the perspective of Alberta. There are several items we must look at to gain an insight into the manner in which Albertans may respond to the Accord. First, we must look at the question of federal-provincial powers, the distinct society clause, the issue of Senate reform, and in any discussions of Alberta's perspective, we must look at the question of the veto, the unanimity on the amendments to the federal institutions.

First, I wish to look at the area of provincial powers. Several critics of the Accord have stated that the federal Government has sold out the shop and given the powers away to the provinces. Now the provinces are supreme, they will control the national agenda, and the federal Government's hands are tied. In hearing the witnesses, looking at the Accord, and spending time on this particular issue and others, it was obvious to me and to other members of the committee that that is clearly not the case.

I feel very strongly that the federal Government now works within a parameter that defines its powers in areas of provincial jurisdiction. It cannot holus-bolus move into an area of provincial jurisdiction and stomp on provincial interests. In fact, now there is the ability to draw a consensus, get the various levels of Government to work together, not only to the good of the various provinces and regions, but also to the good of the national Government.

I think back to some of the areas on which Albertans would have reacted angrily if the federal Government had moved in. Albertans would be very angry if the federal Government were to move in with a national program in areas of energy, as was done by a previous Government with the National Energy Program, or in the area of education. They would respond to that in a most negative and critical manner. After the Meech Lake Accord, Albertans have the opportunity to take a look at federal concerns and decisions that may be forthcoming in those particular areas; they have an opportunity to participate in those discussions. But they also have an assurance that they cannot have their area of jurisdiction over-examined or controlled by a federal Government.

I also want to look at the area of distinct society. When the Meech Lake Accord was first signed, many Albertans were concerned and said: "We as Albertans are also distinct. Why don't we have a constitutional definition or description which declares Albertans to be distinct as well?"

I spent some time looking at the Accord, and I think it accepts or acknowledges a fact of Canada—the fact that the Province of Quebec is distinct. It is distinct in its language, and it is distinct in its culture. It has a distinctness long recognized by Canadians from coast to coast. What the Meech Lake Accord has done is taken that distinctness, which we accept as a fact, placed it in our Constitution, and described it as such.

In a number of rulings on areas dealing with the Province of Quebec, the Supreme Court has already made reference to the fact that Quebec is a distinct society. We are not charting new ground, and I do not feel that Albertans have to be concerned. The fact is that Quebec is distinct. It is a unique and wonderful part of Canada. Through the Meech Lake Accord and through the description of Quebec as a distinct society, I see Quebec now as a full partner in Canada and a full participant in our Constitution. That in itself strengthens all Canada. It strengthens Alberta and it strengthens Quebec. It builds the kind of nation which all Canadians really want.

There is no way that I could look at the Meech Lake Accord and not talk for a few moments about Senate reform. It is probably one of the most important issues to Albertans today. Certainly it was one of the most important parts of the Meech Lake Accord which attracted the attention of Albertans.

Many have said that Senate reform is now more difficult as a result of the Accord. People such as Dr. Elton of the Canada West Foundation appeared before us as witnesses and argued that, as did other witnesses. However, there were several other witnesses with whom I am inclined to agree who said that that was not the case. They did not see Senate reform as being more difficult now than it was prior to the Meech Lake Accord.

I agree for the following reasons. As the Constitution of Canada presently exists, with Quebec being outside the constitutional framework, not legally or technically but in spirit, the Province of Ontario virtually has a sole veto or automatic veto. Therefore, Senate reform at the beginning of the process was in a very difficult position. With the present amending formula of seven out of 10 provinces and 50 per cent of the population agreeing to any amendment, Ontario is in a very unique spot about which I as an Albertan was very much concerned.

Albertans feel very strongly. When they look at the area of Senate reform, they argue for what is commonly called a Triple E Senate—equal, effective, and elected.

I should like to touch briefly upon what that means. The term "elected" is a very obvious one. We feel that Senators at present have the authority of their position but do not have any moral authority. What moral authority do they have? How many people from Alberta, Quebec, or Ontario can name the Senators of their provinces? I am willing to bet that very few can. Why? It is because Senators are not in any way accountable to them. Therefore I argue, as do other Albertans, that our Senators must be elected.

We are also looking for an effective Senate which, as a result of being elected, has the moral authority to act, the right to represent their regional interests, and the responsibility and collective consent of the provinces and the people they represent, not the present situation.

The third area of the so-called Triple E Senate is "equal". As Hon. Members and Canadians know, the Senate is equal on a regional basis right now. Advocates of the Triple E Senate are proposing that we move from not only being regionally balanced but that we start to look at provincial balance. I would argue for that because I think it is important. We have population balances in the House of Commons. For example, Quebec has more Members of Parliament than does Saskatchewan, and Ontario has more Members of Parliament than does Nova Scotia. Why can we not take these balances and put them in the Senate? Why can we not define, represent, and be concerned with regional concerns? Why can there not be equal numbers of people from each province? I obviously support that concept as do Albertans in general. This is why they were so concerned about the Accord and the impact it may have upon Senate reform.

I argue, as I have already said, that the Accord does not diminish our opportunity for Senate reform. I will come back to that in my next point which I think is so crucial, that is, the whole question of a veto with regard to federal institutions or the unanimity which is now required for amendment. This was also very crucial to Albertans. For example, if under present circumstances someone decided to put in place an unelected Senate which would be reformed in some other way, right now seven of 10 provinces might well agree to that, with the Province of Alberta not agreeing and in fact being very angry and frustrated with the proposal. Under present circumstances our hands would be tied. We would have no opportunity to block the process.

However, with the Meech Lake Accord Albertans have a chance. They have an ace in the poker game on Senate reform. I think it is crucial and important to Albertans. It assures us that we as Albertans will see what we want to see, particularly in the area of Senate reform, but not only in that area.

I want to close my comments by paying a compliment to Premier Don Getty of the Province of Alberta. I looked at the Meech Lake Accord and at what resulted there, and I must say as an Albertan that I was pleased to see his fingerprints and his involvement in the process. I was pleased to see how he brought an Albertan perspective to a document which is significant nationally and fundamental to our constitutional history and future. I think Don Getty very much represented Albertans in a way which all of us can be proud of. I think that is demonstrated in the kinds of things about which I have talked in the last few moments.

I should also like to talk a little about process, but I see that it is approaching one o'clock. If I may call it one o'clock and continue at three o'clock, I would feel better than breaking my speech in the middle of it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

TRANSPORT

ANGUS SHOPS—OPPORTUNITY TO REASSURE RESIDENTS OF MONTREAL EAST

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, on Monday I met with spokesmen for the workers of the Angus shops in Montreal East. They told me that the company has laid off 1,000 workers over the past five years, that unfortunately there are only 1,116 employees left in these Montreal east shops, and that as early as next week 40 jobs will be transferred to western Canada.

Mr. Speaker, CP management did not bother to tell the employees nor the people who live in the neighbourhood of these shops. I would urge the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Vézina) to meet with these workers to tell them that the Angus shops will stay in Montreal east and that neighbouring residents may rest assured that company operations will be maintained.

I dare hope the Minister of State for Transport will heed our advice and get in touch with CP management so as to reassure these people who have had to cope with steadily declining employment in Montreal east.

TAX REFORM

VIEWS OF TOURISM INDUSTRY ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, a delegation representing Canada's $22 billion tourism industry appeared before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs this morning. On behalf of the 60,000 businesses employing over one million people, the Tourism Industry Association of Canada offered its input on the White Paper on Tax Reform. While TIAC is generally pleased with the proposed reform, it voiced some concern in specific areas.

From the outset the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) promised to consult the people of Canada prior to drafting legislation, and this he has done. After the auto industry, the tourism industry is the largest earner of foreign exchange in Canada, drawing $6 billion from beyond our borders. Canada must continue to be considered an ideal international tourist destination. I am confident the Minister would never place this reputation in jeopardy.

He is acutely aware that Canada suffers from an annual $2 billion tourism deficit. For that reason TIAC and this Government will continue to try to convince Canadians there is no better place for a vacation than here at home. Members of this Government heard the association's concerns loud and clear. TIAC can rest assured that the industry will be vibrant and prosperous as Canada heads into the 21st century.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

HOUSING SHORTAGES ON RESERVES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Churchill I am deeply concerned about the horrendous shortage of adequate shelter in the native communities of northern Manitoba. In this, the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, the federal Government should be especially ashamed of this deplorable situation. How can we say we are treating our aboriginal people fairly when we see this level of neglect on the part of the federal Government?

In one reserve in my riding 250 people out of 674, or over one-third, are in desperate need of shelter. In Shamattawa there are only 90 houses for over 670 people. The people cannot even get replacements for nine houses destroyed by fire over the last two years.

I call upon the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) to rectify this horrid situation. It is his responsibility, as well as that of his Government, to help ensure these Canadians receive adequate shelter. I know all Members would agree with the UN Charter of Human Rights which says it is the right of every human being to have access to adequate shelter.

I call once again upon the Minister to live up to his obligation and address the crisis facing my constituents, and native people across the nation. Adequate housing is something that our native children deserve.

ABORTION

SURVIVAL OF PREMATURELY BORN BABIES

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have recently been made aware of the survival of two remarkably premature infants. One was born only 141 days after conception, while the other after only 145 days. This is about half the normal gestation period. Each weighed slightly over one pound. I am sure we can all rejoice with the parents of these two tiny human beings.

Unfortunately, Canada's abortion law would have allowed the aborting of both those children who were born after 20 weeks gestation. Statistics Canada records that in 1985, 1,815 babies between the ages of 17 and 20 weeks were killed in Canadian hospitals, and an astonishing 181 were killed after the twentieth week.

The survival of these two tiny infants is testimony to the fact that human life is a continuum that begins with conception, not birth. Those babies aborted are no less human than those born, regardless of the gestational age at which the event takes place. Abortion kills a pre-born human life in the earliest stages of development. It does not simply "terminate a pregnancy".

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REQUEST THAT STOCKPILING OF COAL BE STOPPED

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) said he directed the Cape Breton Development Corporation to stop stockpiling coal on the international piers in the Whitney Pier area of Sydney. That statement is misleading. It certainly does not mean the Government is opposed to the stockpiling of coal on the piers, it is merely a moratorium until it deals with the public relations problem caused by President Derek Rance.

While the Minister was making that statement, Mr. Rance was meeting with residents of the area Devco will be polluting and telling them the stockpiling will be going ahead and, if Devco is forced to stop, mines would be closed.

• (1405)

Cape Bretoners are being told that if they want jobs, they must take them at any price, and that clean air and the amenities other parts of the country take for granted do not apply to industrial Cape Breton.

I want the Government to state emphatically today that coal will not be stockpiled in the Whitney Pier area of Sidney at any time unless there are safeguards agreed to by the residents of the Whitney Pier area, and that the decision of the Cape Breton Development Corporation to stockpile be immediately overturned by the federal Government.

TRADE

FREE TRADE WITH UNITED STATES—NEED TO PROTECT CANADIAN INTERESTS

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, as everyone knows, the negotiations to sign a free-trade agreement have reached a critical point.

However, at this stage more than ever, I want to reaffirm the need for such an agreement between Canada and the United States since another American bill is threatening Canadian exports, Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian pulp and paper industry is now the target of the protectionist attacks of Congress.

When we know that the pulp and paper sector, which includes the related industries in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean region, exported for $33.6 million of products in 1986, it is easy to realize the importance of such an agreement. If no agreement is signed, a region such as the one I represent would suffer heavy economic consequences which the other sectors of our regional economy would have difficulty to compensate.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government wants to preserve the economy of our regions and to protect a large number of industrial sectors, and this is why we shall fight to the end to bring the Americans to show a more positive attitude in the negotiation process.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

CAPPING OF POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION ASSISTANCE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, this spring the Conservative Government launched what many people agree to be a short-sighted and regressive measure to the detriment of the aboriginal people of Canada. I am referring to the capping of post-secondary education assistance for native students who want nothing more than to learn.

This move was made without any consultation, and was even directly opposed to the recommendations of the Neilsen task force which found among other things that native participation rates in Canada's colleges and universities are far below the national average. The Canadian Association of University Teachers has recently condemned the decision, calling the move cynical and noting that this fall is the first time qualified native students will be denied access to education because of lack of funds.

A society that does not have access to higher education is a society that will continue to face unacceptable levels of unemployment, welfare dependency, and incarceration. In the interests of fairness and a brighter future for so many young native people, I call upon the administration to reverse the damage and to reopen the doors of quality education to native youth.

ROAD SAFETY

DRIVE DRY PROGRAM—SCHEDULED LAUNCHING IN HAMILTON

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, Sunday, October 11, in Hamilton will be notable for two reasons. The Hamilton Tiger Cats will be meeting the Saskatchewan Rough Riders at Ivor Wynne Stadium. More important than the outcome of that game, however, will be a special ceremony on the field which will launch the Drive Dry Program.

The Council on Road Trauma is the designated committee on impaired driving for the region of Hamilton—Wentworth. Regional Chairman William Sears, Chief of Police Robert Hamilton and I, among others, are supporting this endeavour to cut down on the incredible number of road fatalities involving alcohol impairment.

The most frightening aspect of the nearly 2,000 alcohol-related deaths in 1986 is that the vast majority occurred in the 16-to-24 age bracket. The Drive Dry Program is designed to educate people that it is not cool to drive under the influence. Driving drunk kills people. Driving dry makes great good sense.

• (1410)

I urge the people of Hamilton—Wentworth and all Hon. Members to support the worthy idea of a Drive Dry Program.

AEROSPACE

SITE OF NEW SPACE AGENCY—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO MAKE DECISION AS EARLY AS POSSIBLE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the new Canadian space agency is a subject of constant comment in the media, because the Conservative Government cannot make up its mind about its location. The same is true of the disease control laboratory, where the Government is hesitating between Ottawa and Winnipeg. As we all know, a new space agency will have to deal with various sectors that come under the federal Government and are located in the National Capital, the nerve centre where the decision-making takes place. The National Capital would also be a logical choice because a number of countries have decided to locate such agencies in their respective capital cities.

In any event, whether the Government favours the National Capital region or Montreal as the future location of the new space agency, a choice must be made. The Government will have to decide.

To remove any doubt about the location and to prevent further speculation that might jeopardize the project, the Conservative Government must act. It should table its Bill today and tell Canadians as soon as possible where the agency will be located.

THE ECONOMY

IMPROVEMENT IN ABITIBI

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, together with his volunteers and the members of his PC association, the Conservative member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) has successfully completed his fund raising based on a new method, to wit, the refusal of all donations over $1,000, the refusal of all donations from corporations, profit organizations and unions.

The crusade initiated by the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead is finally bearing fruit and, in agreement with Mr. Denis Lamarche, from Senneterre, the president of my party association in Abitibi, as well as other members of the executive, I fully support this method which we will use from now on in Abitibi.

Since 1984, together with my association and the economic players, I have had to deal with a number of projects and important issues which had not been settled under the previous government.

We are pursuing the economic recovery which is an accomplishment of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Abitibi people. At 7.2 per cent, the unemployment rate in my riding is the lowest in Quebec, compared to 20 per cent in 1983-84. All together we are working towards a more prosperous Abitibi.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CHILE—COPPER MINE PROJECT—CANADIAN LINE OF CREDIT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Government of General Pinochet in Chile is completing work on a $1.1 billion copper mine which will eventually process 300,000 tonnes a year. This mine of the Chilean Government will compete directly with Canadian copper mines, particularly those mines in the Highland Valley of British Columbia.

It is of particular concern to the miners and their families in this part of Canada that the Canadian Export Development Corporation has recently offered to extend to the Chilean Government a $70 million line of credit to develop this particular mine. The British Columbia Mining Association has indicated that this will create an unfair competitive advantage for the Chilean mine which has an extremely high rate of copper ore and pays very low wages to miners.

These are tough times in the copper industry. The situation is extremely competitive. I think it is time that the Canadian Government started to support Canadian mines, Canadian miners, and Canadian mining communities as opposed to those of General Pinochet in Chile.

GRAIN EXPORTS—EFFECT OF ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY STRIKE

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, Saskatchewan grain farmers export over 80 per cent of their production each year. It is a long way from the primary prairie elevator to Thunder Bay and from Thunder Bay to export position at tidewater ports in Montreal or further east. The distance to our foreign customers is even greater. None of the competitors we fight with for a share of the international grain market have to transport their grain as far as we do.

We must export if Canadians are to continue to benefit from the earnings derived from grain sales abroad, even now during a period of devastatingly low grain prices.

With a one-week rail strike in August of this year, a strike/lock-out at Thunder Bay in September, 1986, and now a strike by marine engineers on ships which who would ordinarily ply the waters of the Great Lakes from about the first week of April until the second week of December, the reliability of the eastern grain transportation system seems to be undermined by labour-management relations between those who are responsible for moving grain to market.

Canadians living in cities, towns, or rural areas all benefit from the jobs and income that the grain sector contributes to the economy every time we sell to foreign buyers. The longer this current labour-management dispute remains unresolved, the harder it will be for Canada to maintain its share of the international grain market.

I encourage all Members of Parliament to use their influence on the two parties in the dispute, the Canadian Lake Carriers Association and the Canadian Marine Officers Union, to bring about a speedy settlement and move our grain.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—DUMPING OF PCBS BY GENERAL MOTORS FOUNDRY AT MASSENA, N.Y.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, Canadians who watched The Journal the other night saw another example of toxic chemicals from a source in the United States threatening human health. This time, it was not the Niagara River or the Great Lakes, but the St. Lawrence River.

Thousands of tonnes of PCBs have been dumped in the river at the General Motors foundry at Massena, New York, upstream of Lake St. Francis.

The Massena site is a priority site for the United States Environmental Protection Agency but little progress has been made. Already, fish, turtles, birds and other animals are contaminated with PCBs. Therefore, people who eat anything caught in this part of the St. Lawrence may be at risk too.

We urge the Government to make strong representations in Washington to implement a plan to remove this threat to the health of millions of people living downstream from the General Motors foundry at Massena along the St. Lawrence River and the Lake St. Francis basins.

FINANCE

TAX CREDITS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Apparently, Mr. Speaker, we are constantly learning something new about the detrimental effects of the incompetent action taken by the former Liberal administration which had created a tax credit to encourage private research.

The Auditor General has indicated that the Department of Finance had known for at least nine months that the tax credit program, implemented by the previous Liberal minister, was a tax loophole running completely out of control, although it would not admit it.

Since January, 1984, both the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Finance knew for sure, on the basis of ample evidence, that the program had gone berserk and that it would cost much more than the estimated $200 million.

Moreover, when our Government imposed a moratorium on this program one month after our election, this program had already cost $3.5 billion to Canadian taxpayers.

Indeed, we should be grateful to the Canadian people who were clever enough to recognize that something was wrong with this government scheme and to change the situation by bringing to power a Progressive Conservative Government for better management and deficit control.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude by reminding you that this was the worst tax fraud in Canadian history and that it should be mentioned as such in the Guinness Book of Records.

FINANCE

COST TO TAXPAYERS OF TAX EXPENDITURE PROGRAMS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, tax expenditures have, over the years, become a favourite method of hiding the Government's direction of money into particular sectors of the economy without having to be accountable to Parliament or the people of Canada.

Examples of the Government spending money by not collecting it as taxes are programs such as MURB, the Multi-Unit Residential Building Program, and SRTC, the Scientific Research Tax Credit.

One will search long and futilely in the Estimates, in the financial plans and in public accounts for statistics, or even estimates, of the cost of these and other tax expenditures to Canadians. Tax expenditures to large and small corporations are just as much spending of taxpayers' dollars as is the payment of a pension to a senior citizen. It is time that the Government established an evaluation and monitoring system for tax expenditures.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CALL FOR MEASURES TO RESOLVE LABOUR DISPUTES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the latest postal strike has the potential to disrupt many Canadian businesses. Labour difficulties in the Seaway will cause damage to western grain farmers. These same farmers were harmed by the Thunder Bay and Vancouver port closures last year and the rail strike a short time ago.

My point is that we in Canada have to find a better way of dealing with breakdowns in the collective bargaining process. We live in a tremendously sophisticated society. We can put men into space, we can transplant human organs, and we can transmit information world-wide in the twinkle of an eye. Yet, when labour and management fail to agree, we find ourselves back in the stone ages with primitive blunt instruments—lock-outs and strikes—which ultimately penalize all Canadians. Surely there are viable alternatives.

Once again I urge the establishment of a parliamentary committee to examine the whole area of labour relations with a view to finding a way to resolving these impasses without resorting to rocks and clubs.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING—REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have always believed in honouring the Cruise missile commitment made by the Government of Canada to the United States and to our other allies, and we have honoured that commitment. I have always believed in honouring the commitments that previous Governments made.

As I said in my speech to the House of Commons when the issue was debated on March 6, we should test the Cruise missile until such time as there are concrete results in the negotiations between the two super powers on intermediate range nuclear weapons.

There have been concrete results, much to the relief of the world, and I say the time has arrived to move forward in the world search for peace and for Canada to suspend Cruise missile testing in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My question is a simple one. Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs agree with that statement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I guess we are being exposed to another part of the rehabilitation program of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Take the high road, Joe.

Mr. Foster: Don't let your 23 per cent go to your head, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —with dramatic little announcements being made without regard to the cost to the country or the cost to the alliances of which we are part. There has been progress made, very important progress, on arms control. It is not yet complete. Indeed, the agreement in principle has not yet been completed in detail with regard to the INF agreement.

One of the reasons we were able to get the Soviets to the table was that they knew it was not going to be possible to split the alliance. It is important, in our judgment, that commitments made by the alliance be kept by the alliance if we want to continue to make progress on arms control, and we are more interested in progress in arms control than we are in dramatic statements made for effect at home.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I don't think Canadians are going to appreciate the tone of that reply, and I am not going to reply in kind because I am not going to play politics on the floor of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am more interested in the peace of the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State may care to use world peace to put on a little performance here in the House, but Canadians don't appreciate that.

REQUEST THAT CANADA REVIEW CRUISE MISSILE TESTING ON OWN TERRITORY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there is no reason for renewing the agreement on Cruise missile testing if the two superpowers ratify a treaty prohibiting intermediate nuclear arms. Nor is there any reason to test the Cruise missile this winter, since the superpowers have expressed their intention of signing such a treaty. Perhaps the Minister doesn't realize it, but the world is changing, and Canada's foreign policy must evolve accordingly.

Will the Minister persuade or ask the Prime Minister to persuade the Americans not to ask Canada's permission to test the Cruise missile this winter?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as far as the Leader of the Opposition and I are concerned, our actions are self-explanatory.

As for the question, the suggestion made by the Liberal Party as another attempt to get publicity here in Canada, the suggestion that Canada should now renege on commitments observed in the past that had made a major contribution toward the ratification of an agreement on reducing levels of nuclear arms, as far as that question is concerned, we do not agree with a policy that could destroy the unity of NATO, and we do not agree with a policy that could be a threat to what we have accomplished so far in reducing levels of nuclear arms.

• (1425)

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I too believe in living up to our commitments. The agreement to test the Cruise missile in Canada was directly tied, under a two-track NATO decision, to the negotiations on intermediate range nuclear weapons. Now that the superpowers have agreed in principle to ban intermediate range nuclear weapons, is the Government willing to respond, in a complementary and positive way, to that historic agreement? Or is the Minister suggesting that there is a different rationale for Cruise testing? Are he and the Government shifting their ground on behalf of the people of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is no. I am not shifting my ground. A review of the record will see that the Leader of the Opposition is in fact shifting his ground. What he should do is read the record—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Read the speech!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —rather than The Globe and Mail of Toronto.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TALKS—MINISTERS' VISIT TO WASHINGTON

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I would also like to present to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I presume that he speaks for the Government.

Last week, when Simon Reisman suspended the trade talks, the Prime Minister said at the time that we were going to wait for Washington to make its moves. We have now had the spectacle twice in a week of cabinet Ministers going to Washington—I suppose the United States Air Force does not fly this way any more—even though it is quite clear that at this late date the possibility of getting a fair trade deal in the Canadian national interest is virtually zero.

I want to ask the Secretary of State this question. Is he prepared to explain to the House what position the delegation is taking to Washington today? Is it a deal at any price, or is the delegation simply going to deliver an official notice of withdrawal from the trade negotiations?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is neither of those things. The Hon. Member will recall that one of the questions of very real importance to Canada is the ability to put in place some reliable mechanism for the resolution of disputes. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition expressed his view the other day that that was impossible, that that would never happen so he did not want to try. We thought it was worth trying. There has been in fact some slight movement by the Americans.

There has been an agreement more or less in principle to the idea of a tribunal. But there has been no agreement on rules that would guide such a tribunal. In our judgment a tribunal without rules would not provide Canada with the kind of guarantees and security that we require. That is among the items that are being discussed in Washington today.

We think it is better to see if we can make progress to protect Canada's interests rather than simply walk away from the negotiations.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to pose a supplementary question to the Minister. When he states that the only issue is really a dispute settlement mechanism, he ignores that there are many other issues of major concern, particularly to Canadians, for example, the right of Canada to decide for itself in its own sovereignty the kind of support programs and subsidies it will have for regional development, and other forms of assistance to overcome disparities in this country are of concern. Are those also part of those negotiations in Washington today?

Would the Minister on behalf of the Government table what kind of correspondence, what kind of statements, and what kind of counter proposals have been made so that, for the first time, Canadians will know what is going on? Are we being sold down the river? Are we negotiating away the right of this country to make decisions in its own sovereign interest?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to those last two questions, as it has been on the dozens of times the Hon. Member has put them in exactly those terms, is no. He has also—and I am sure he did it inadvertently—misquoted me. I said that among the things being considered and dicussed in Washington in this meeting requested by the Americans is the question of a dispute resolution mechanism—it is among the items.

• (1430)

We made clear when Ambassador Reisman declared an impasse in the negotiation—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Whatever happened to him?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —that among the things that had been put on the table that Canada could not accept were some proposals regarding regional development.

If there is progress made on the question of rules, there might then be discussion of that and other questions. Canada's interest, as it has been throughout, will be protected by the Government of Canada.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In the past the Secretary of State for External Affairs has linked the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada with progress being made in the disarmament field. Specifically, the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated in the House on March 2 when making the linkage between disarmament progress that, "We will determine Canadian Government policy on the basis of what is actually decided in Geneva".

Since the Soviets and the Americans, fortunately, have now reached a major INF agreement moving the world sensibly toward disarmament, why has the Government of Canada reversed its position on this very important matter?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party just quoted my words and then distorted them. I stand by the quote and not the distortion.

Mr. Hees: Way to go, Joe!

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I, and many Canadians, at the time thought that the Secretary of State for External Affairs was linking the testing of the Cruise missile with progress being made in the disarmament field.

I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs was that not the basic position of the Government. Is the Government saying to the people of Canada that, even if we continue to make at long last significant progress in this world between the superpowers, moving toward disarmament, the Canadian Government will continue to test Cruise missiles here?

Why does the Canadian Government not clearly live up to the implication left with the people of Canada? Why does it not make a contribution toward disarmament instead of moving in the opposite direction?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my words are clear. They are on the record, and they have just been read by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. He drew an interpretation from them that he claims is a legitimate interpretation. I would quarrel with that. I think my words speak for themselves.

Let us come to the question as to how this country contributes to progress on arms control.

It is the position of the New Democratic Party that this country contributes to progress in arms control by breaking up NATO, which is what they would do by running away from NATO obligations.

If that position has been adopted by the Government of Canada, if the Soviets had been successful in finding such a dupe in the offices of the Government of Canada who would take the country out of NATO, then we would not have the agreement in principle that was achieved by Mr. Shultz and Mr. Shevardnadze.

I do not propose to put those types of agreement at risk to meet some ideological commitment of the New Democratic Party here in Canada.

Ms. Jewett: Oh, Joe, sit down.

Mr. Hees: Way to go, Joe.

Mr. Siddon: There is no strength in weakness.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, all I would say is that one would hope that in a matter as serious as this when there is a specific question on disarmament, the Secretary of State for External Affairs would have the courtesy to the public of Canada to deal with the question that is asked instead of raising a red herring.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I do not wish to distort the argument of the Minister, because I understood his argument. I will ask him to explain what he meant. On March 2 he stated, in a way that I understood, that there was a linkage to be made between Cruise testing and disarmament agreements between the Soviet Union and the United States. Would he tell us what he meant when he said, "We will determine Canadian government policy on the basis of what is actually decided in Geneva"?

If the Minister did not mean that we would contribute to this process by stopping the testing of Cruise missiles, what did he mean?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, unlike the Leader of the New Democratic Party, my words speak for themselves.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There they are on the record talking about what was actually decided in Geneva. I stand by the record.

I perfectly understand why the Leader of the New Democratic Party does not want to talk about his policy and his Party's policy of pulling this country out of NATO.

Ms. Jewett: Come on, Joe, answer the question.

Mr. Broadbent: Pack it in.

Mr. Riis: Now we understand why you are not the Prime Minister, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Leader of the NDP knows that would jeopardize Canada's and the West's ability to achieve reduction in nuclear weapons. We want weapons down. We do not want that type of false gesture for partisan purposes here at home.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

STRIKE BY INSIDE WORKERS—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT APPOINT MEDIATOR

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the postal strike.

Again, the financial strait-jacket that the Government has imposed on Canada Post is giving us a postal strike. If the Government has created it, the Government at should at least try to settle it.

The last time the Government first refused to appoint a mediator, and then it waited one full week before appointing a mediator. Now we know that Associate Deputy Minister Bill Kelly is already involved. What we would like to know is the following: Is Mr. Kelly involved as an observer, as a messenger, as a notetaker, or does he have a mandate to mediate? If not, when will the Government appoint a mediator?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. colleague had read the press release, he would have noted that Mr. Kelly was not appointed at this particular time as a mediator.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we know what he is not, but we still do not know what he is.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT'S ROLE

Mr. Jacques Guilbaut (Saint-Jacques): Mr Speaker, the strike is obviously the result of the strait jacket in which the Government has put Canada Post to stop it from making reasonable offers which could lead to a settlement. Why is the Deputy Minister, Bill Kelly, reduced to taking notes during the meetings? Why can he not act as mediator? Does the Government feel responsible for settling the strike or is it simply trying to use the postal workers as political scapegoats?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr Speaker, once more, if the Hon. Member took the trouble to read the press release, he would know exactly why I have asked Mr. Kelly to meet the parties involved.

As for the question of whether or not Mr. Kelly should act as mediator, which he is not doing, I would like to quote the words of Mr. Parrot as reported on page 3 of today's issue of Le journal de Montréal:

> The presence of a mediator is useful when both parties have seriously want to come to an agreement.

This is what Mr. Kelly is now doing, Mr. Speaker, trying to determine the intentions of both parties and evaluating the situation. He will report to me after completing his evaluation.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PREMIERS' MEETING CONVENED

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Premiers of Canada have been called together to meet tomorrow morning on free trade without being told what the agenda is, or without any prior briefing for their staffs.

I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, whom I just heard deliver a pessimistic speech to Canadian exporters on this subject, why has this meeting been called. Is it in hopes of some deal, or is it in fact to pull the plug?

Mr. Jelinek: Wait until tomorrow.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, you would think that after hearing a speech delivered by me the Hon. Member would be in a better frame of mind!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: Why, Joe? Why would we do that?

Mr. Axworthy: Just more depressed.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Everyone I talk to is in a better frame of mind. I do not know what is wrong with the Hon. Member.

The reason that the Prime Minister has invited the Premiers to meet tomorrow is that we are obviously at a very critical state in the negotiations with the United States.

In sharp contrast to the policy of former Governments, it has been the policy of this Government from the very beginning to involve the provinces fully in all aspects of the discussions. We intend to carry on that practice. Tomorrow the Prime Minister, and my colleague, the Minister for International Trade will report to the Premiers on our assessment of developments in the trade negotiation with the United States. That is part of the way we make this country work.

• (1440)

UNITED STATES POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, given that we now have before us an admission of the seriousness of this meeting tomorrow and an admission of the last minute quality of it, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs share with Canadians as well—not just with the Premiers but with all Canadians—what concessions the United States is asking for in return for the dispute settlement mechanism movement about which he talked earlier in his comments?

What concessions is the United States asking for in return for that movement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, from the beginning we have been trying to involve as broad a cross-section of individual Canadians and elected representatives as possible in the discussion of what we take into and what we might get from the trade negotiations. We wanted to do it in a way which would not mean that Canada's hand would be shown to the United States.

We have had a very good agreement, the one that worked, in consultation with the Premiers. We offered to the New Democratic Party and to the Liberal Party, as a result of the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville, in camera briefings so that they could be brought up to date on the developments in the trade negotiations without jeopardizing those negotiations.

The New Democratic Party turned that fair offer down. I do not intend now, as we move toward the deadline the Americans set under their system for these negotiations, to depart from our past practice of not communicating all our positions to the people with whom we have been negotiating, by way of the House of Commons.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

STRIKE BY INSIDE WORKERS—TIMING OF SETTLEMENT

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Most Canadians are absolutely fed up with disruption in the postal service. In light of the happenings of the past few days, could the Minister tell the House whether he anticipates an early settlement of this strike?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I always hopefully anticipate an early end to all various conflicts. In respect of this particular one, I am awaiting the assessment of Mr. Kelly who, I understand, is still with the parties.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

OFFICIAL SPOKESMAN FOR SERVICE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It concerns the silencing of the official spokesman of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. Could the Solicitor General explain why he has in effect muzzled the official spokesman of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service? What is the Government hiding? What is it afraid of?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to advise the Hon. Member that his allegation is false. I have not done that. I agree with and adhere to the prime ministerial guidelines laid down in 1984.

PROVISION OF INFORMATION BY PUBLIC SERVANTS—PRIME MINISTER'S GUIDELINES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, in his guidelines dated November 23, 1984, said that the Government's policy was designed "to ensure that public servants who are called upon to comment on government policy are allowed to do so on the record, and in full freedom".

The Solicitor General has instructed the official spokesman of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service not to answer questions from the media or from opposition Members of Parliament. Can he explain how his latest change in policy is compatible with the Prime Minister's guidelines with regard to information being provided by public servants?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, again in reply to the Hon. Member, I have not effected any change in policy. I agree with and adhere to the guidelines laid down by the Prime Minister.

Oral Questions

FRANCHISING OF OPERATIONS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. He will know that the conciliator, Mr. Foisey, said that franchising post offices put job security at risk, and that Mr. Dunstan is quoted as saying that there will be no compromise with regard to franchising.

Will the Minister now recognize that the Government's policy on franchising is the major obstacle to having a negotiated settlement at the Post Office? Will he remove that part of his plan so that there can be a settlement at the Post Office and mail can move?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should have completed what Conciliation Commissioner Foisey said. He said that it is certainly up to the Post Office to decide how to organize whether or not it is going to franchise. However, the obligation it has is to ensure that there is no adverse effect on the employees.

Mr. Dunstan has made a commitment to negotiate, along the lines suggested by Mr. Foisey, to ensure that no employees would be adversely affected by this decision, which is most properly a management decision.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR ABANDONMENT OF FRANCHISING

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the corporate plan of Canada Post is the work of the Government.

I would like to ask the Minister whether he is willing to stop speaking about back-to-work legislation. Instead, would he take an important initiative and leave the franchising concept out of these negotiations?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand where the New Democratic Party is coming from. Its resolution F42 says that an NDP Government will move to allow workers the right to negotiate the degree of control which they may wish to assume. CUPW resolution A5 says: "The union views as a primary direction the workers' control of the workplace".

We view it as management's responsibility to manage the Post Office—to do it with sensitivity toward its workers and to do it in a compassionate way, but to manage the Post Office. We do not think Parliament gave a mandate to Jean-Claude Parrot to decide how the Post Office is going to be organized. Apparently members of the NDP do. That is fine. They will have to live with that.

TAXATION

INEQUALITIES IN SYSTEM

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Finance).

Yesterday, the Alliance for Tax Equity, following a study on the Finance Minister's tax reform, stated that the more children one has, the more one is penalized by the Canadian Government's tax reform.

Moreover, the study clearly shows that in 1988 a married couple with four children earning $35,000 will pay $144 more in taxes than in 1986, while a couple with two children in the same income bracket will pay $69 less.

Can the Minister explain to Canadian families why this Conservative Government is drawing up tax policies that penalize families with a larger number of children in Canada?

Why such an injustice?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, he knows that eight out of ten families will be better off as a result of tax reform.

As for that very complicated example he gave, I would like him to table it so that I can study it and respond to it tomorrow.

[Translation]

SOCIAL JUSTICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister does not do his homework.

Moreover, that study carried out by the Alliance for Tax Equity shows that the tax reform favours richer families. An example is provided, with tables to show that a family with a $100,000 income and four dependent children will pay $2,473 in taxes, while a couple with four children with a $35,000 income will pay $144 more in taxes in 1988.

How are they going to explain that to the people? Under what kind of social justice does this Conservative Government penalize have-not families in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, our studies are clear. Those who have incomes of $50,000 or more are going to contribute substantially more to the revenues of the federal Government. Those earning under $35,000 or less are going to contribute substantially less. Those are the facts.

FISHERIES

FRASER RIVER SALMON RUN—WATER LEVELS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Sockeye and pink salmon runs trying to get past Hell's Gate in the Fraser Canyon are in danger of being decimated this year because of low water as a result of the long dry summer.

Fisheries officials are now desperately trying to negotiate with B.C. Hydro officials for a release of water from Bridge River to increase the level in the Canyon.

The Minister and his Department have known about this crisis for some time. Why has the Minister not acted until now?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is very simple. It shows the extent to which distortion in a question can seriously miscast an issue.

• (1450)

This morning I spoke to my regional Director General in Vancouver who said, contrary to the distorted video shots shown last night, there is no crisis. Some 430,000 pink salmon are already above Hell's Gate. There is no trouble on the part of either the pink or sockeye salmon in migrating up that corridor. I spoke to the Hon. Jack Davis, B.C. Minister of Energy, an hour or two ago and he offered his full co-operation should additional remedial measures be required.

Mr. Manly: There very definitely is a crisis and salmon production in future years will prove that.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TREATY—SIZE OF AMERICAN CATCH

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, over the past few years the Americans' share of the salmon run on the Fraser has increased, ever since the signing of the Canada-U.S. Treaty. If this year's drought results in a decrease in the salmon run, will the Americans continue to get an increased share, because it is based on an average of previous years?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the question is hypothetical. There is indeed a serious drought problem in British Columbia. I am told this is a very infrequent situation. However, I assured the Hon. Member a few moments ago that all salmon reaching Hell's Gate and other narrows in the Fraser Canyon are getting past those barriers. There is no pooling or accumulation of fish unable to migrate towards the spawning beds at this time.

PRIVATIZATION

TELEGLOBE SALE—PURCHASE OF SHARES BY MEMOTEC EMPLOYEES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Privatization and concerns the Government's privatization procedure. She should know that in addition to those already charged, four senior management employees of Memotec purchased a total of 27,000 shares of that company on the Montreal Stock Exchange on January 21. The value of those shares increased by over $500,000, representing an incredible profit for those employees.

Why are there no rules as part of the privatization procedure to prevent employees of companies making bids on Crown assets from benefiting from insider knowledge?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, the privatization process in no way precludes anyone in the private sector, or any other company, from living up to their other legislated obligations. It is provincial securities commissions which administer the regulations in this area and the Quebec Securities Commission has done that. The case is before the court and I am sure the Hon. Member knows that.

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN PRIVATIZATION PROCEDURES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows it was her privatization procedure, in particular that which stopped Memotec from making its bid public for at least a month, which allowed Memotec employees, including the four I have mentioned, to make a $500,000 profit as a result of insider information. That is a direct result of the procedures followed by the Minister.

I ask her again, in view of the scandalous profits being made as a result of insider information, is she prepared to change the procedures and allow some decency to be returned to this kind of government operation? Or is there some plan to ensure that friends of the Government are able to benefit because of the procedures laid down by the Minister?

Mr. Beatty: The Nunziata high road again.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, first, the officers of the company to which the Hon. Member refers, as I understood it, bought those shares after a newspaper story about—

Mr. Tobin: A rumour. Two days after a rumour.

Some Hon. Members: Shut up!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member asked a question and the Minister is attempting to respond. While she is I think Hon. Members might remain silent.
