Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): These working groups were made up of officials from both countries and were working on the components of the agreement. Anything that the working group members agreed upon had to be passed on to the table of Ministers where decisions were being taken. That particular proposal was not ratified by the Ministers since, as my colleague has just said, these discussions have never involved Bill C-22 in any way, shape, or form.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—ATTACK ON PROJECT SPONSORED BY FARMERS FOR PEACE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Deputy Prime Minister. We learned this past weekend that a Canadian aid project in Nicaragua supported by the Farmers for Peace group which, as he knows, is very active in his own province, was once again attacked by the U.S. supported and financed Contra organization with loss of life and very serious property damage.

The last time such an attack took place the protest raised by the Canadian Government with its U.S. counterparts came to absolutely nothing. Would the Deputy Prime Minister see fit to contact his colleagues who are attending the Commonwealth Conference, the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to ask them to raise once again the strongest possible opposition to this kind of attack on Canadian aid projects?

Is it not time for the Government to speak out in an unqualified way against continued U.S. aid to the Contra forces which are now attacking Canadian backed projects in Nicaragua?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact we learned of the attack on that project on October 9. Indeed, the first attack had been denounced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We had even discussed the matter with Mr. Shultz at the time. We have asked our Ambassador to that country for a report, and are monitoring the situation very closely.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TELL AMERICANS TO STOP AIDING CONTRAS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, that is not an answer to the question. The project has been attacked a second time. Obviously that first protest had absolutely no impact whatsoever on the Americans.

I want to ask the Government, especially in light of the fact that today the Nobel Peace Prize was awarded to President Arias of Costa Rica who has specifically asked other countries to speak out against Contra aid, if the Government will have the courage to stand up and tell the Americans to stop aiding the Contras, stop attacking our projects, stop risking human lives.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the first attack was strongly protested by the Minister in this House, and some representations were made. Of course we condemn the second attack and are monitoring the situation very closely. We will take appropriate action.

TRADE

ENERGY—EFFECT OF UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to either the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Energy, whoever is answering today with respect to the trade agreement that was initialled in principle between Canada and the United States some 10 days ago.

The Premier of Prince Edward Island is quoted in today's press as saying that in all the discussions leading up to the proposed agreement there was absolutely no mention by the Prime Minister of talks taking place in the important domain of energy.

Will the Government confirm that not only was there no discussion of energy with the Premiers leading up to the weekend on which an agreement took place, but even when the Prime Minister met with the Premiers on the Friday before the agreement was initialled in principle he did not mention the subject of energy although it profoundly affects the provinces? Will the Government confirm this incredible allegation made by the Premier of Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it must be made very clear to the Hon. Member that the intent of this agreement and the effect of it is to improve trade in energy and remove the trade barriers in energy between the two countries.

There is no change in the regulation. There is no change in the regulatory practices. There is only a removal of the trade barriers between the two countries, the effect of which will be greater encouragement to investment in our energy resources that will increase our security of supply because investors in Canada will have a greater incentive to invest and more security that these resources can find a market without the obstacles that have restricted that market during the past number of years.

Mr. Broadbent: This Minister, in addition to his colleague last week, must be tuned into Radio Peking because he has not answered the question at all.

ROLE OF PROVINCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, Section 92(a) of the Constitution in 1982 gave to the provinces very specific powers over the control, development and management of their resources. Therefore, does the Government not believe from a moral point of view that the provinces ought to have been consulted on the question of energy? Furthermore, given the new commitments that the federal Government wants to make in terms of internal pricing within Canada by these provinces, does the Government of Canada not agree that provincial agreement is constitutionally required in order for this agreement and its energy provisions to go anywhere?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, clearly, if there were in the free trade agreement with the United States changes leading to amendments to the Constitution, those amendments would follow the procedures already known in Canada for constitutional amendments, so that in such circumstances Prince Edward Island could take action if need be.

But I would call the attention of the leader of the New Democratic Party to the fact that this government has been reviewing its energy policy, since 1984. Our policy which is market-oriented and deregulation-oriented has been largely implemented in the oil and gas sectors.

In September last, long before the agreement was signed, I wrote to the National Energy Board asking for public hearings on the matter of electric power exports. Those hearings took place and Prince Edward Island made some representations.

The National Energy Board wrote to the Minister of Energy in July of this year to make its recommendations known. Those public recommendations were made available to all provinces, and Prince Edward Island can make its views known at every stage.

It is only next winter, after consultation with the provinces, that the Canadian government will take steps on the matter of hydro-electric power exports from Canada.

FREE TRADE—SUPPORT OF PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will try once more. My question to the Minister is very simple. Considering the powers the provinces have to control and develop their natural resources, would he not agree that the Canadian government must obtain provincial approval in order to conclude this agreement with the U.S.?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is very clear that the natural resources, by the Constitution in this country, are the responsibility of the provinces. Nothing in the free trade agreement is against that aspect.

It is very clear that this Parliament, supported by the New Democratic Party, decided to create a National Energy Board with some responsibilities. That is the federal responsibility, and it is supported by the hon. gentleman's party.

Mr. Broadbent: What has that got to do with the question?

Mr. Masse: In Canada the natural resources are owned by the provinces but the trade in natural resources between provinces and at the international border is in the responsibility of the federal Government.

SIGNING OF AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He has said that the free trade agreement has removed the barriers to trade and energy. What this has done has not only removed the barriers to free trade but it as removed energy to the detriment of Canadians. There is, no longer, any protection against shortages of energy in Canada.

There were meetings with the Premiers to inform them about what was going on in these free trade negotiations, yet energy was never mentioned, in the words of the Premier of Prince Edward Island himself.

Was the Government so intent on signing this free trade agreement that it failed to protect Canadians against shortages of energy in Canada and double-crossed the provinces?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the agreement provides for the establishment of various basic rules relating to exports, but it is also true that, apart from these general rules, there is nothing specific that applies to energy. So there are no particular problems with energy exports. There is a government decision to open the U.S. market to all Canadian producers and this includes people in all provinces.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, there is no problem about the export of energy for the Americans. There is nothing to stop them from taking whatever they want. Has the Government not read the papers this weekend on how the Americans are gloating about what they were able to squeeze from Canadians? We do not even know what energy means. It is not defined.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member had an extensive preamble to the first question. I would ask him to put his question.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, is this Government so intent on being liked by the Americans that it gave up its control of the energy sector and all protection to Canadians against shortages in the industry, and Canadian sovereignty as well?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I realize why the Opposition is using scare tactics, but it is totally untrue to claim that Canadians will have to sell their energy to the United States. Canadians will sell their energy if they think they can make a profit. There is nothing in the Agreement to contradict this. I know the Liberal Party wanted to prevent people in Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia from taking advantage of their own natural resources, and that was the case under the Liberal Party's energy program at the time. It cost Western Canadians and Canadians in general a lot of money, and we do not want to get back to that kind of policy, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

INQUIRY WHETHER MATANE REGION PAPERMILL PROJECT HAS BEEN AFFECTED BY CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The House is aware that a delegation from Matane was here this morning to pressure the federal Government into deciding in favour of a proposed paper mill in the Matane area, and as you know, Mr. Speaker, the Government has been dragging its feet. My question is as follows: Has this project been compromised under the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and United States?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Not at all, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY WHETHER FEDERAL PROGRAMS AFFECTED BY CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister say categorically that our present regional development policy such as tax credits and subsidies, not just for those projects but for other regional development programs as well, have not been compromised by the Agreement signed by this country and United States? Could you say so in no incertain terms, right now, for every project?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can say categorically that federal programs aimed at resolving regional disparity have not in any way been compromised by the Agreement signed by our two Governments.

MATANE PAPER MILL PROJECT—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL CARRY OUT PROMISE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion. Isn't this project jeopardized by the indecisiveness of the Minister if not by the Free Trade Agreement? For months, and particularly in the last weeks, people in Murdochville, for instance, had to block roads to get answers from Ottawa. People in Sept-Iles are going to take their protest onto the streets, on the 31st of this month, in an attempt to get answers from Ottawa. People from Matane are here to try to get this Government moving.

I ask the Minister the following question. He promised to give us an answer within a month and his deadline will expire in a few hours. Could the Minister ensure us today that we will be given an answer within this deadline?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State Responsible for Science and Technology): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY IF MINISTER POSSESSES ALL NECESSARY FACTS TO MAKE POSITIVE DECISION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I want the Minister to give us an answer and not a mere commitment to answer "within the next few days", as for the Picard report about which he has not answered as yet.

I ask the Minister if he now has on hand all the elements required, as well as the assurances from the Minister of Finance, in order to make a positive decision?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State Responsible for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I shall say to my hon. colleague that when I personally met, for the first time, with the representatives from Matane, about one month ago, I told them that the final data from the sponsor of the project had just been received ten days earlier and that it would take about six more weeks to reach a final decision. I then said that I would give an answer around the 14th, which is tomorrow.

Generally, Mr. Speaker, it takes quite a long time to study matters of such importance. All the studies have been completed, all the recommendations have been received and I am confident that, in the next few hours, we shall be able to give a definite answer to the people of Matane which I want to congratulate for the representations they made today. In fact, they presented in a very dignified and sound way their views on that project. I congratulate them and I can say to my honourable colleague that they will get an answer within the next few hours.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—OVERFISHING BY FRENCH FLEET

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in light of the French Government quitting the negotiations over the Canada-France fishing dispute without agreeing to put the St. Pierre boundary question to international arbitration, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House what pressure is being put on France to prevent overfishing in 3PS? Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us why the Government is still considering spending $7 billion on French designed nuclear submarines when the French Government will not do the civilized thing and proposes to continue overfishing in that zone?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, at the negotiations last Friday the French again broke off negotiations because they felt that the Government was being too firm and resolute in connection with the demands that it was making with reference to fish quotas in Canadian waters. Therefore, they have broken off negotiations.

We have explained to France that, as a result, there will be no quotas for French fishing vessels on the East Coast Canadian waters next year. We are not going to go to arbitration under the Treaty of 1972 for several reasons, one of which is that since they will not go to arbitration on the question of the boundaries between St. Pierre and Miquelon and Canada, no one can say with finality what are Canadian waters. In addition, France's actions have been so unreasonable that it is making the 1972 Treaty unworkable.

The House can be assured that we are taking a firm and resolute position that the French now certainly understand, and that there will be no give-away that is not absolutely necessary and reasonable in order to settle this situation.

With respect to the question of nuclear submarines, no decision has been made, and it is certainly unrelated to the present controversy.

CANADIAN COD STOCK

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Government has attempted the "carrot" approach by offering northern cod. That has not worked. The difficulty that we have is with 3PS and the threat by France to overfish that stock to the detriment of fishermen on the south coast of Newfoundland.

I wish to know what the Government will do about that situation? Will it put pressure on the French Government to prevent that stock from being depleted, and how will it do that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): It was suggested by the Hon. Member's foreign affairs critic—one of the Rambos in the NDP Party—that armed force be used in this situation, and the Leader of the NDP seemed to support that particular Rambo suggestion several months ago.

We are dealing with France in the following manner. We are taking a firm position. We have told them that there will be no quotas next year at all unless they are prepared to come back and discuss this matter reasonably. That is putting tremendous pressure on France because, in addition to the French fishing fleet, the fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon will not have access to the Gulf of St. Lawrence or any other Canadian waters.

What other types of pressure may be needed, I do not know. This is certainly very firm pressure upon France which we hope will bring them back to the bargaining table in a reasonable frame of mind.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT—PROVINCIAL APPROVAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The free trade strategy of the Government has been characterized by contradiction, confusion, and confabulation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Last Friday we saw the mess that was wrought by its introduction of Bill C-22.

I wish to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether he agrees with his Minister for International Trade on another issue relating to the free trade talks when she states that no provincial approval is necessary, or whether the Deputy Prime Minister agrees with the position taken by the United States trade representative that no deal will go forward without provincial approval?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first, perhaps it would be appropriate for Ambassador Yeutter to concentrate his efforts on selling this very important free trade package to Americans, and particularly to the Congress, rather than engaging in concerning himself with the Canadian situation.

The position of the Government is that this is a deal that has been negotiated, it is good for Canada, it is a balanced package, and it is good for all regions of the country. We believe that given the fact that the Premiers have been involved—and I should say in passing that reference has been made to the fact that the Premiers were not involved in the energy discussions, and that is simply untrue; I am informed that energy was brought up on various occasions; the Premiers were fully briefed on the energy situation,—we believe that we can continue to work with the provinces and over time, after examining the documents in detail and recognizing the positive benefits, we hope that the Premiers will all come onside.

ENERGY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the words of the Premier of Prince Edward Island were quite clear when he stated the Premiers "were never told energy was on the table. It was not discussed". Now the Deputy Prime Minister is claiming that energy was under discussion. Is he suggesting that the Premier of Prince Edward Island was lying? If he is not suggesting that, could he stand up in the House and clear up once and for all the confusion and the confabulation that have surrounded the Government's selling job, both with respect to provincial involvement, and also with respect to the link between higher drug prices in this country and a sell-out to the Americans in the so-called free trade debate?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to comment upon the confusion in the mind of the Hon. Member. But I can say to her that I am advised that the Premiers were briefed on the energy situation not once, but twice, and on several occasions. That was part and parcel of the briefing, as I understand it, and as I am informed.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—AID TO FRONT-LINE STATES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, and it has to do with Canada's policy towards South Africa and apartheid.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister clarify for the House, and for the Canadian people, what type of aid the Government has in mind when it talks about aid to the front-line states?

Can the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House, on behalf of the Government and the Prime Minister, that any new emphasis on aid to the front-line states will not be used as an alternative to or a substitute for tough economic action against South Africa?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows, I believe, that an important conference is under way in Vancouver, and it would be inappropriate at this stage either to put forward a new position or confirm any previous one. Mr. Speaker, members attending the Conference are there to discuss, and the future will show those discussions to have been fruitful.

[English]

ECONOMIC SANCTIONS—COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it would be appropriate if the Deputy Prime Minister could speak for the Government. The Prime Minister has made it clear in the past that Canada would be prepared to invoke complete economic sanctions against South Africa. He has also made it clear that, in his view, there are limits to unanimity.

I wish to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, does he not think, at this time when the leaders of the Commonwealth countries are meeting here in Canada that, if there is failure to get collective economic action with respect to South Africa, this would be the time for Canada to show the leadership that the Prime Minister has done a lot of talking about, and make it clear that Canada is prepared to go it alone with respect to comprehensive economic sanctions against South Africa.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the position of the Canadian Government is very clear. The Prime Minister reiterated that position last night on the CBC interview. I would invite the Hon. Member to read it, because it clearly restates the position and strategy involved. As the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary indicated, there is—

Ms. Copps: What about C-22?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Hamilton East continues to involve herself in all matters related to questions in the House of Commons, rather than sitting back and listening, perhaps that is the manner in which she would like to see Question Period run.

Mr. Blaikie: I am listening.

Mr. Mazankowski: I appreciate the remark of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill.

With respect to aid for the front-line states, the Prime Minister again made it very clear, and I quote, "They need assistance to help them rebuild rail lines, their port system, their transportation and communication links. They need aid for human suffering, and they need military aid. Canada's preoccupation is with the first part of that equation. We believe that it is consistent with our traditions and our objectives and our expertise and our wishes for the region that we help in the infrastructure development, helping human beings, helping transportation, ports, rail lines, and so on as opposed to the military implications".

We are not offering any military aid. That is very clear and unequivocal. It is a different position from that taken by the NDP Party.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

RESTORATION OF BAND STATUS—HOUSING NEEDS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs. It concerns C-31, a Bill that was passed by this Parliament and is now law. The House will recall that this Bill had to do with the reinstatement of Indian persons who had lost their status and wished to return to their communities.

• (1450)

When the Bill was before committee, the Minister's predecessor said:

> The Government is fully committed to ensuring that bands have adequate funding to enable new band members to be integrated with a minimum of disruption to community life.

What plans does the Minister have to provide the hundreds of houses needed this year for the women and children who are returning to their communities? There is a shortfall between the Department's budget and the actual needs. This is creating a housing crisis in Indian communities. When will the Minister respond?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, regarding Bill C-31, the Hon. Member is aware that when the legislation was passed the estimates of those who would seek reinstatement were grossly inaccurate. It is now estimated that there will be some 100,000 people of aboriginal origin seeking and obtaining reinstatement as Indians in Canada.

I believe for the infrastructure and housing to date the total is $27 million. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that within the government process there are discussions to identify the funds. I am having those discussions with my colleagues at this time.

AGREEMENTS MADE WITH INDIAN BANDS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that this year he has entered into a large number of agreements with Indian bands for the provision of these houses. Does he think it is right that he and his Government should be breaking these agreements?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I can only ask my hon. friend if he would identify agreements and I would certainly be pleased to look at them.

As he is aware, through the process there is an ability to put forward subsidized housing dollars for Indian people in Canada up to, in some areas, an average of $30,000 per home.

Also, as the Hon. Member is aware, there is the criterion and there is the necessity of the band being able to complete those homes. We are having those discussions with bands at this time.

AIR SAFETY

AIRPORT WORKERS—SECURITY CHECKS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It concerns the decision of his Government to force existing airport workers to undergo detailed security investigations, even if they have been employed in their positions for more than 20 years.

Will the Minister indicate to the House what proof he has that any employee, past or present, was actually a security threat at Canada's airports?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, all over the world Governments have had to take steps to try to protect the travelling public and their transportation systems from threats from terrorism and armed action which we have seen occurring for some 12 years to 15 years. Every country has had to institute certain checks on personnel who go into certain restricted areas of airports, who have access to aircraft or other sensitive areas like that.

Canada has to follow suit. It is distasteful in a free and democratic country such as ours that we have to take these steps. That is why the regulations have been brought in.

The House adopted amendments to the Aeronautics Act at the invitation of the Government a year and a half ago to give us these powers. We are now implementing these powers. Reasonable notice is given to everybody involved.

Surely it is not too harsh for a person to have to get a permit every five years to have access to these areas. All that is happening now is that when you need a permit, if your permit expires or you are a new employee, you have to go through these checks before obtaining a permit. There will be about 12,000 this year.

This is not unreasonable if we are serious about trying to prevent any possibility of terrorist acts in our transportation system.

REPORTED EXEMPTION FOR STRIKE-BREAKERS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, if the Government were that serious about security, it would not have issued a telex on October 9 which instructed airport managers and security personnel to exempt any scabs from the requirements of this Draconian approach.

Perhaps the Minister could explain to the people of Canada why it is necessary to have massive security checks on the workers and their families but not on last minute call-ups to try to replace a striking worker. Could he explain that to the people of Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what directive the hon. gentleman is referring to and, therefore, I am not going to attempt to explain it.

If the hon. gentleman would send me over whatever telex he says he has, I will certainly look into it. As far as I am concerned, anyone who has to have admittance into these areas should be required to be checked, or they should have a person who has been cleared going with them.

Everyone cannot be checked in 24 hours, so the system is that if you are a new employee you are allowed into these restricted areas as long as you have somebody accompanying you who has been cleared.

Perhaps that is what has been proposed in this situation. If not, I will look into it, but it would be nice to have the information first so that you can check out these matters rather than somebody just trying to catch you with a fast one in the Question Period.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

LACK OF AFFORDABLE HOUSING IN TORONTO

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Metro Toronto has become a place where lower and middle-income earners find it easy to get work but almost impossible to locate affordable housing.

The average wage earner cannot afford a house costing more than $135,000, but last month the average selling price in Metro was $186,000 for a family home, and many families are having to spend 40 per cent more of their income for rent.

What hope can the Minister give these people and what information can he give the House that we can prevent this problem from becoming a crisis?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his continuing interest in housing matters relative to Toronto and indeed to all Canada.

In the last three years we have had record housing starts throughout Canada and in Toronto. All the funds in my portfolio, namely, $1.5 billion, are devoted to those most in need. In Toronto in the last year we constructed some 4,500 new units. In Canada we either constructed or renovated some 55,000 units for those most in need.

The province also indicated that they were very interested and have an obligation to respond. They did that in their platform. We are anxiously waiting to see what particulars they will put forward to accommodate the need in co-operation with the federal Government.

MONTRÉAL EST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, and it concerns regional development.

We know, from his answer to my colleague for Shefford, that people in Matane are to be congratulated because my feeling is they won, although unfortunately they had to spend money to come here and beg. Not that this Conservative government wanted to help them, it is simply that the people from Matane forced its hand.

Now, people from the Eastern sector of Montreal want to know how long they will have to wait. This Conservative government has been dragging its feet for three years now about this matter. This morning, the City of Montreal announced its economic recovery plan for Montreal's Eastern sector and here is what I would like to know from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion: What are his plans to pave the way to Montreal Eastern sector's economic recovery? Is he ready to give respond to the CREM report, Mr. Pichette's report? The Minister has had that report for two weeks now and we are waiting for his answer.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me it took a lot less time for the previous Government to break down the economy in Montreal East than it took to restore its vitality as we have been doing during the past three years. If we look at the number of jobs created in the Montreal area, we realize it is one of the areas with the fastest increase in employment across this country.

I wish the Hon. Member would look at his statistics and stick to the facts when asking a question. At least it would be easier to give an intelligent answer.

ESTABLISHMENT OF RAILWAY TRANSPORT PREFERENTIAL PURCHASING POLICY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the employee at Vickers was right: The Minister isn't dragging his feet, he can't even walk.

The Minister's answer proves he did not read the CREM Report. In Montreal East, the employment rate is 12 percent. It hasn't gone down in three years. I suggest the Hon. Member and Minister read the CREM report.

This is what the people of Montreal East want: They are sick and tired of the Minister's song and dance. Is the Minister going to respond to the CREM report? Will the signing of the Free Trade Agreement with United States prevent the Government from carrying out one of the proposals made by the Montreal East Committee, which was to establish a preferential procurement policy with respect to rolling stock?

Will the Government, despite the signing of the Free Trade Agreement, be able to introduce a policy that will create jobs in Montreal East and protect jobs in the railway transportation industry? Yes or no?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, finding out what this question is all about is quite a challenge!

First of all, the Hon. Member is talking about unemployment instead of employment rates. He does not mention the fact that the number of people in the labour force has increased considerably in the area. He does not mention job creation. And all this is being mixed up with free trade. He overlooked action taken by the present Conservative Government to enhance the economic well-being of the area. The report is being studied, thank you. And we will be able to make some pertinent announcements as soon as the studies have been completed.

If we look at regional economic development generally, because we have to consider all regions, we see that the Government has done very well, while Opposition Members keep trying to impede our progress on all kinds of initiatives that could create jobs, such as Bill C-22, with its prospects for advanced technology, 700 jobs, 1,300 jobs and $700 million worth of investment. That isn't good enough!

ENERGY—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO P.E.I. PREMIER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister arising out of what he said earlier in the House. In my earlier question I asked the Government to confirm what Premier Ghiz of P.E.I. had said about the energy discussions and I want the Deputy Prime Minister to listen to the question and reply to it.

Premier Ghiz has said that the Premiers were never told energy was on the table and that it was not discussed at any of the meetings of the First Ministers. Since I confirmed with Premier Pawley's office in Manitoba that what Premier Ghiz stated is absolutely true, does the Deputy Prime Minister stand by what he said earlier in Question Period?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that Premiers were briefed not only once but twice in September and in July, and on other occasions officials were briefed about the energy package as well. Perhaps the Hon. Leader of the NDP might want to put in another call to his friends.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if the people of Canada, not to mention the Opposition, had to choose between the reliability of Premier Ghiz and Premier Pawley and that of the Government, I do not need need to tell him whose side they would come down on.

INFORMATION PROVIDED TO DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Since the Minister has said he was advised, by whom was he advised? Was it one of the other Ministers involved in the discussions? Was he advised by the Prime Minister's office? This is a fundamentally important question. Two Premiers have said one thing and the Deputy Prime Minister is saying another. The people of Canada have a right to get to the truth of this important matter.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is a very fundamental question. I can advise the Hon. Member that I am giving him the information that has been given to me by a very senior official within the Government of Canada. I know that sometimes the Hon. Leader of the NDP does not like the answers, but just because he does not like them, he does not have to charge them with being dishonest. That is the information.

There is an axiom in this House that when a Minister for the Crown responds to a question, it is assumed that it is the truth, and on the basis of the information—

An Hon. Member: That's the problem.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, we went through this a little bit on Friday and I want to make it very clear that I am not misleading or distorting—

Ms. Copps: Just like C-22.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East would do well to sit back and listen from time to time because she will never allow the courtesy of a Member to put a question or answer a question without talking from her seat.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The Leader of the New Democratic Party has every right to clarify this and I am trying to clarify it and that is the answer.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the House that that concludes Question Period.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED RESTRICTION OF RIGHTS OF MEMBERS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I have given you advance notice. To put this question of privilege into some perspective, I have to tell you the background of what caused me to raise this matter.

This morning, the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration met and a resolution was passed. The resolution was passed because all members from the Government side voted for it while Members of the Opposition and one Conservative Member voted against it.

The resolution was that members of the committee could not contact the researchers, hired by the committee of Parliament and paid for with taxpayers' money through the House of Commons, unless we got the permission of the chairman of the standing committee.

Under the Standing Order 97(1) of this House, the committee has the power to retain the services of expert, professional, technical and clerical staff as may be deemed necessary to carry out its mandate.

A group of government Members came into that committee, having shut down the committee by removing its Chairman last week, and they encroached on my privilege as a Member of Parliament to carry out my duties as a Member by saying that I cannot contact the researchers hired by the committee with the budget that has been allotted to the committee by Parliament, and that I cannot ask them for help in carrying out my duties as a MP, unless I go through the Chair.

If we were to extend that to its logical conclusion, Members of the Opposition could not contact the Clerks of the House for advice on matters pertaining to the operations of the House or our conduct in the House unless we went through the Chair. Can you imagine that? We could not talk to a Page and give a Page an instruction, be it to bring a glass of water or whatever, unless we went through the Chair. We could not contact the legal beagles who are attached to the House to give Members advice in drafting Bills unless we went through the Chair. We could not contact the researchers of the Library of Parliament unless we got the approval of the librarian who is a servant of this House.

I would suggest that my privilege, the privilege of other members of that committee and, by extension, the privileges of all Members of the House, no matter on what committees they sit, have been breached and encroached upon by this particular motion passed by the Conservative members of the committee this morning.

It is noted that the Opposition voted and argued against the motion. We raised all of these points in the committee. We objected strenuously to the motion, as did the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais). I know that he is persona non grata in the Caucus of the Conservative Party, but the fact is that having done him in as chairman of the committee, they sought to deliver the coup de grace, which was to limit opportunities for members of that committee to carry out their duties under the McGrath report's new view of committees in this House, which is that committees are masters of their own destinies and have the ability to spend their budgets on hiring research staff.

I think it was an abuse of our privileges for the majority to deal with the committee in the way it did this morning. I suggest, if you find there is prima facie evidence of a breach of privilege, that you refer this matter to the appropriate committee for examination.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the sentiments expressed by my friend from Nickel Belt. Once again in the ninth inning we see the Government call upon its bullpen of parachute artists to descend upon the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration and poison the work of that committee. That committee, along with perhaps the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, was the flagship committee with respect to tackling major issues and producing recommendations through a number of excellent reports.

We saw that poisoning in the John Quigley affair and the Georges Grossmann affair. Last week the Government did an end run around the previous chairman. Today it proceeded to terminate the committee's research director without a shred of evidence to suggest that the research was incompetent. That attempt failed, but then unfortunately government Members proceeded to pass a motion which suggested that until the research needs of the committee are dealt with, which will take until the end of this year, no member of the committee will be able to access the research staff of the committee unless he or she goes through the chairman of the committee.

I said in committee, and I say it here, that I will refuse to go along with a motion which I believe is an affront to the privileges of each Member of Parliament. Access to the research staff of the committee, seconded from the Library of Parliament, is not the sole prerogative of any individual Member. Those researchers are responsible for providing assistance and direction to 282 Members of Parliament without requiring the written consent of a committee chairman.

While committees are theoretically supposed to be masters of their own fate, I believe there is good cause to be alarmed by a resolution which restricts the freedom of any Member of Parliament. These researchers are paid by the tax dollars of all Canadians. Not only is it an affront, it is a waste of taxpayers dollars. The researchers are there to complement the work of Members. If we decide we need to utilize their services in order to enhance our work, then this motion does nothing but undermine the integrity and independence of any committee and its members.

I will end by stressing the importance all Members place on the McGrath recommendations. That report suggests that committees are to be somewhat more useful in influencing public policy. The system should allow for greater independence of a committee from the Government. Yet now we have a motion which suggests that MPs are unable to access research information unless consent is obtained from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. Lewis: How do you know you will not get it?

Mr. Marchi: Then government Members have the temerity to suggest that any Member who does not subscribe to the motion will face some consequences. In my humble opinion that motion is undemocratic. It poisons the possibility of the non-partisan co-operation this committee has had for the last two and a half years. It threatens its independence and is an affront to the individual freedoms of individual Members as well as undermines the purpose of research being available to Members. I hope you address yourself to this very crucial motion, because it is in danger of setting a very alarming course for members of our parliamentary committees.

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to both the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). In the interest of your making a decision, it would help if we got all the facts on the table.

This morning the committee voted on a motion to evaluate the researchers and research requirements of the committee. The Chair was to report back to the committee before the end of this year. That motion, if not unanimously passed, was at least passed by the majority of Members present.

While there was debate on the motion, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt agreed that it would be in the best interests of the committee and the evaluation if Members of Parliament were not to use the services of the researchers during the course of the evaluation. I therefore find it somewhat odd that the Hon. Member now believes his privileges have been somehow abused. He agreed to the very motion prior to the vote. I find it very unusual that five minutes prior to the motion being put the Member did not feel that his privileges were being violated, supported the motion, and then all of a sudden finds himself in a position where those privileges are being violated.

I invite you to examine the record, and I suggest there has been no violation of any Member's privileges whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker: I should indicate that the complaint may, given the facts coming out, be a serious one. I have some doubt as to whether it is a question of privilege. I want to indicate to Hon. Members that the Chair has the point being made, but some assistance could be given, perhaps by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who spoke first, if he could send to the Chair, for my deliberation at the appropriate time, the actual motion passed in the committee. I ask him to do that.

• (1520)

The Chair has the point and will hear several more Members, but we will not spend all afternoon on the issue.

The Hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, as a former chairman and a present member of the committee, I want to speak in support of the question of privilege. When I and the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) were chairmen of the committee, members of the committee were never required to ask the chairman for access to the researchers which were made available to the committee.

You, Mr. Speaker, were once a member of the Opposition and know that Members in Opposition do not have the same expertise available to them to assist them with their work in Parliament as do the Ministers and Parliamentary Secretaries who are provided with a lot of research support by their Departments.

It was a great day when, on the recommendation of the McGrath committee, committees were able to contract experts to help them with research. For the last two years members of that committee have been able to call these researchers to get information on matters being dealt with by the committee. I am not speaking of matters which were not being dealt with by the committee.

To pass a resolution that members of the committee cannot have access to the expertise of those researchers who are being paid by Parliament and the people of Canada is a violation of our privileges, because it affects the way we can work in Parliament. We have one or two research people in our offices but cannot afford experts in the areas on which we are critics. Therefore, we rely on the experts who are assigned to committees. These are experts in labour economics, employment economics and immigration who can provide us with expertise.

The issue of unemployment insurance was before the committee last spring. I could call the researcher and ask him to look into former studies done in the 1940s or 1950s on a certain point and report on that to the committee, as well as on the implications of the Forget report on such matters. To require me to ask the chairman whether I can do that is a clear violation of my privileges.

As long as we are dealing with the work before the committee in a broad way, we must have the right to ask researchers to study specific points so that all aspects can be brought out and we can do our work better. If we cannot do that we become eunuchs and the reforms are meaningless.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I was present this morning at the sitting of the Committee on Employment and Immigration, held in camera at the request of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

Mr. Speaker, I heard the representations of the three previous speakers and they did not tell you 5 per cent of what happened in camera this morning. I would ask you, if you want to investigate this matter, to inquire of the members and dispense us from having to consider the meeting as having been held in camera. You will then note that they deliberately held back 95 per cent of the facts to mislead you Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I regret but the Hon. Member knows that it is not proper to impute motives to other Hon. Members. I would be pleased if the Hon. Member could give a proprer answer to assist the Chair.

Mr. Fontaine: Because the Chair is asking me, Mr. Speaker, I will readily admit that maybe I should not have voiced my accusations here in the House. I am sorry for the Chair, but as a newly elected member, I was so flabbergasted by some of the representations made that I simply could not keep quiet.

Mr. Speaker: I am really grateful to the Hon. Member for making a reply which is absolutely proper and consistent with the tradition of this House. But the situation, especially as described by the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), is creating difficulties for the Chair, because it is clearly impossible for the Chair to attend the said meeting. For my own sake, as suggested by the Hon. Member for Lévis, it might be necessary for the Hon. Member to have this committee business investigated. But it is impossible, considering that our Standing Orders and the tradition of the House are clearly against such an approach. I suggest, however, that the time may have come for a pause in dealing with this issue, especially because I do not yet have the exact motion; as soon as I have it, and after some further deliberation on my part, I might deem it necessary to continue the discussion.

For the time being, however, I seek the cooperation of all Hon. Members to conclude the interventions for now; if I feel it necessary, once I have had the opportunity to examine the exact wording of the motion, the Chair may feel advisable to return to the House to continue hearing the interventions.

I therefore ask whether this approach is satisfactory to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, that is a very sound proposal. I will submit to you the exact motion which was passed in the committee. I trust that we can discuss it tomorrow once you have had a chance to review it.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member very much. I notice that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) is rising. I hope it is not on this point.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will defer my remarks until tomorrow but I would like to participate in this debate because I do believe that a question of privilege has been raised.

Mr. Speaker: I want the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell to know that I have noted his comments. I know that there are some other Members, including the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar), who were seeking the floor. Until I can consider the matter a little more carefully we will adjourn the matter. As I say, it is only an adjournment. If necessary, I will hear further interventions.

Are there any further questions of privilege or points of order on any other matter?

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cadieux that Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Northumberland—Miramichi (Mr. Jardine) has the floor.

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on the proposed legislation before Hon. Members today, namely, the Postal Services Continuation Act, 1987. As the Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) indicated in his remarks yesterday, the introduction of back-to-work legislation is something which the Government finds not only repugnant but frustrating. Given the free democratic society in which we live and the collective bargaining system which reflects the inherent rights of such a society, it is indeed regrettable that situations such as that which we are now facing with the disruption of postal services occur. It is regrettable from the point of view that the parties to the dispute, in this case Canada Post Corporation and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, have been afforded every opportunity that the free collective bargaining system offers to demonstrate a responsible attitude and settle their differences themselves without inflicting such serious hardship on the Canadian public and on the economy of the country.

Hon. Members will be well aware of the vast amount of rhetoric that has been emanating from the two sides in the dispute recently, firmly laying the blame for the failure of the negotiations at each other's doorstep. One has only to examine the report of the conciliation commissioner, Mr. Claude H. Foisy, to appreciate that the current bitter dispute is the collective responsibility of both parties. After reading the report of the conciliation commissioner, one is left with the distinct impression that if the two sides would channel the same energies into the resolution of the issues in dispute as they spend now in criticizing each other, the consumers of postal services in this country would indeed be much better served.

In his report, Mr. Foisy describes the relationship between Canada Post Corporation and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers as one which is characterized by profound mutual distrust. While this revelation basically serves to confirm that which has been known for some time, it is of particular concern to the Government which has set specific goals and targets for the corporation to achieve in the coming years.

Let it be clearly understood that this Government is firmly committed to providing Canadians with a postal service which offers an effective and cost-efficient service. The clock is running and it is time that labour and management exhibit of some proof of the ability to come to grips with crucial issues which impact on the Corporation's very raison d'être—the efficient collection, processing and delivery of the mail.

In his remarks at the beginning of second reading, the Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) referred to comments contained in the report of the Review Committee on the Mandate and Productivity of Canada Post Corporation, otherwise known as the Marchment committee. I think it would be appropriate, in light of the proposed legislation before us, to reflect upon the main findings of the Marchment committee as they related to labour relations at Canada Post Corporation.

The Review Committee on the Mandate and Productivity of Canada Post Corporation was established on June 20, 1985, by the then Minister responsible for the Corporation, the Hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty). The committee, whose membership was composed of business, labour and agricultural representatives, was charged with consulting extensively with all interested groups in assessing the corporation's legislative mandate, policies and practices, and to report to the Minister responsible for the corporation on the future requirements for a national postal system. In addition to a series of hearings held across Canada, the committee, chaired by Alan Marchment, visited postal facilities in Canada and consulted widely with officials in the Australian and United States postal services.

The initial observations of the Marchment review committee pertaining to labour relations at Canada Post Corporation are worthy of note. The report states:

> The members of the committee are unanimous in agreeing that they have never seen labour relations in any jurisdiction that are as acrimonious as those that exist between Canada Post Corporation management and the postal unions. They are poisonous to the point of the potential destruction of the enterprise. There is a clear lack of trust on the part of each side—management and labour. The relationship is more reminiscent of a class war than any kind of pursuit of mutual objectives.

This sounds all too familiar to me. It is as if time has stood still in relation to hoped for improvements in the relationships between Canada Post Corporation and its unions.

In its recommendations, the review committee suggested various initiatives to remedy the corporation's labour relations problems. These included joint involvement of the corporation and its unions in developing new methods of consultation and co-operation to permit the settlement of important issues outside of the grievance procedure; joint exploration of opportunities for improving the quality of working life in postal plants and possible incentives for improved productivity; co-operation in identifying and improving hazardous work areas and conditions in the workplace; and negotiations between the corporation and its unions to eliminate restrictive clauses impeding the achievement of efficiency in operations.

Other recommendations include joint co-operation in reducing absenteeism to normal industrial levels; that high priority be given to job training programs; and that action be initiated to consolidate the number of unions within Canada Post. The report also recommended that the corporation continue to contract the operation of sub post offices and explore the feasibility of contracting out more of its ancillary services.

Again, I feel it is worth-while to quote directly from the Marchment review committee report which, in its conclusion and summary of recommendations, states:

> Most fundamentally, if the Corporation is to survive into the next century, it must have real collaboration between management and labour and a complete change in the attitude of hostility and distrust which now prevails. Both management and labour must recognize that their futures are intertwined. If Canadians are not soon given, at fair cost, the level of service they need and want, they will increasingly continue to turn to alternate if not competitive modes of communication to the detriment and ultimate demise of the Corporation. Some people have already characterized the Canadian postal system as a dinosaur en route to extinction.

As Hon. Members are aware, the main concern in the current dispute revolves around the issue of preserving job security for its members while management is seeking to open additional sub post offices and award franchises, while gaining increased flexibility in laying off surplus employees. The conciliation commissioner, while acknowledging the right of management to open new sub post offices and award franchising in keeping with its corporate plan, also recognized the right of unionized employees to some sort of job security and recommended accordingly. Despite what has been viewed as a relatively balanced approach to the dispute, the Foisy report has not resulted in a resolution of the issues.

As has been indicated, the Bill before us today will bring about an immediate restoration of postal operations as well as providing for the settlement of all issues in dispute through the appointment of a mediator-arbitrator. This method of dispute resolution will provide the parties with one final opportunity to come to grips with the issues themselves and arrive at a mutually satisfactory agreement. Otherwise, the task will fall to the mediator-arbitrator appointed under the terms of the legislation.

The Government cannot and will not allow the economy and the citizens of this country to be subjected to a second prolonged postal strike within less than four months. Such disruptions impact adversely on those dependent on government transfer payments such as the elderly, the handicapped and the poor, as well as on the small business sector.

A work stoppage of major duration in the postal service could result in serious loss of business or even bankruptcy for many small firms that are dependent on Canada Post. Suspended postal operations could result in disruption of collection and cash flow, loss of employment, increased cost through the use of couriers, long-distance charges, increased bank charges and interest payments on receivables.

To summarize, Madam Speaker, Canadians have lost patience with both management and labour at Canada Post Corporation. What Canadians want and what they deserve is an efficient and reliable postal system that is not subjected to labour disruptions at every turn. I urge all Hon. Members to give swift passage to the Bill before us, and I urge the parties to the labour dispute to take full advantage of the opportunity provided by the legislation to determine their own destiny.

This Government continues to be a firm believer in the free collective bargaining process, but we will not hesitate to take decisive action in cases where the parties to a labour dispute abdicate their responsibilities and place the economic or physical well-being of Canadians in serious jeopardy.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there any questions or comments? If not we shall resume debate. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, I was rather amazed to hear the previous speaker representing the government side saying that the Government believes in the collective bargaining process. What a bucket of horse manure.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: I have to say to that Member, "You hold the lantern while I shovel". I have seen Governments bring back-to-work legislation to this House, previous Liberal Governments, the short six-months hiatus of the Clark regime, and now this Government. This is the War Measures Act of collective bargaining, Madam Speaker. I have never seen back-to-work legislation couched in clauses, language and specific directions as I have seen in Bill C-86.

Eight days into this strike by CUPW's inside workers against Canada Post we have a Bill to put the workers back to work.

Mr. Witer: Decisive action.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer) says "decisive action".

Mr. Allmand: It was not even a full strike.

Mr. Rodriguez: CUPW members were on a rotating strike. The right to strike was given to the inside workers and it was given to the letter carriers. The letter carriers had a previous dispute with Canada Post and they exercised the right to strike. It was a rotating strike.

Mr. Fulton: Perfectly legal.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, perfectly legal in this country. The strike went on for 19 days and then they got a settlement. With CUPW we have had an eight day strike—and considering the fact that we do not deliver mail on Saturdays and Sundays, we are talking about five days.

Mr. Fulton: Four days.

Mr. Rodriguez: Four days.

The right to strike which these workers have has been taken away by this Government in Bill C-86. It has not only taken away that right, but it has done other things. The punishment sections may very well run counter to the whole nature of the Charter of Rights. When you start saying to stewards on the shop floor and to the membership that they will be told which president they can elect, and when you remove the right of the workers to select their executive, which is a basic democratic right of any collective, it is very serious. I can tell you that I have been here since 1972, with a little hiatus of four years—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: —and how things have changed around here! In all that time I have never witnessed any legislation brought in this House to put capital back to work. We have consistently in this country seen capital going on strike. If they do not like the environment laws in a province, the way a municipality deals with them or the federal tax laws, they close their doors. That is capital on strike. I have never seen legislation brought to the floor of the House of Commons that forced capital back to work. But consistently we see legislation forcing workers back to work.

What we had was a dispute between CUPW and Canada Post. You can pass all the laws you want with your big majority, Mr. Minister. You can stomp on the rights of workers, but I say to you that you can take a horse to drink but you cannot make him water.

Some Hon. Members: oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: What is the matter? Is that not the way it goes? Is it the other way?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is a fact, Madam Speaker. I have seen previous legislation brought to this House putting postal workers back to work. But legislation never deals with the underlying problems within the Post Office.

The last strike I recall very vividly was in 1978. We in the NDP and this side of the House said that if we created a Crown corporation for Canada Post separate from the Government—and there was support among CUPW members—it would provide opportunities for workers to negotiate directly with their employer, that they would be under the Canada Labour Code and not under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, which limits the ideas and areas for negotiation, such as classification, occupation, health and safety and the whole question of technologizing the Post Office. Everyone, including the postal workers, said, "Lets go for a Crown corporation and really establish an arm's length relationship with the Government". Let the workers have face to face dealings with their employer. That was done in 1981.

What I am seeing in 1987 is that we have not established the arm's length relationship. We have not allowed the inside workers, the letter carriers or any other group of workers within the Post Office to deal with their problems. We had a business plan for the Post Office laid down by the Minister who is responsible for Canada Post, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). What was the first and foremost injunction to Canada Post? Cut the deficit in some six years. By next year Canada Post has to eliminate the deficit. When the United States Government set up its post office as a Crown corporation, the United States gave the post office 14 years to retire its deficit.

An Hon. Member: How long did it take them?

Mr. Binns: How are they doing?

Mr. Rodriguez: Today we look at our own Post Office and find that under the present structure it will retire its deficit by next year. There was a business plan implemented by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is responsible for the Post Office, and given to Canada Post officials. We saw them, and Mr. Lander and his assistants briefed our caucus. They were great when talking about systems of moving the mail and all of those business systems. Not once did the discussion turn to people and the welfare of those who work in Canada Post to provide the service. The whole discussion was on the systems of management that have been put into place. We understand that, after all Mr. Lander came from the Delorean empire. We know what happened to that. He has now come to Canada Post and is talking about systems of management and efficiency, and not once did he talk about the workers. That leads to the next issue in this business plan, because that is how the Post Office sees its mandate to cut the deficit, and that is to franchise out the service.

• (1550)

The Marchment commission report was undertaken by the Government. There was a poll taken among Canadians for the Marchment commission report. It showed that Canadians are pleased with the service provided by the workers within the Post Office. Canadians are not saying that the people in the Post Office are not good and efficient workers. What does the Government say to the Post Office? "Cut the deficit by next year". What does the Post Office do? It comes up with a new management system of franchising out. Of course, the postal workers are concerned about the franchising out of services. They know it means that their jobs will go down the tubes. They started off implacably saying no to franchising out. The Government and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) bring in Bill C-86 eight days into a rotating strike on the instruction of their colleague who is responsible for the Post Office. What do they really wish to do?

Mr. Fulton: It is like putting Dracula in charge of the blood bank.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is correct. They are suggesting to Canadians that we should agree to allow jobs that pay $12, $13, $14 an hour to be cut back and that we should give the jobs to people who are prepared to work for $4.50 an hour or $5 an hour. Five dollars an hour is $200 a week based on a 40-hour week. For 52 weeks that is approximately $10,000. All Canadians and all Members of Parliament should not be agreeing to wipe out full-time, well-paying jobs to create a series of low-paying positions. An individual who takes that job could not keep his or her family with dignity.

I wish to touch upon the fact that there are a number of women who work inside the Post Office. A considerable number of women, many of whom are single parents supporting a family, work inside the Post Office.

Mr. Fulton: Three-quarters.

Mr. Rodriguez: My colleague states that there are three-quarters, which is 75 per cent. Through their union they have achieved a good wage. The Government is saying, "No, we can get other people, mostly women, who can work for five bucks an hour". That is what we are being asked to do. We are being asked to bust CUPW and to subsidize poverty wages. We are asked to contribute to that. That is why there is no way that I could support this Bill.

Implacably, the union within the Post Office, CUPW, said no to franchising out. It has since compromised, and shown that it is willing to compromise on that issue. It has said it is prepared to go along with franchising in areas where there are no postal services.

Mr. McDermid: Oh, gee.

Mr. Rodriguez: Instead of snorting over there, you should read the reports that came out on the union's position.

Mr. McDermid: I have.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is prepared to back down on that question. But it is not prepared to back down on closing substations of the Post Office and opening up franchising outlets in the same location, or near the same location, for a quarter of the wages. That cannot be done.

The Post Office workers, the CUPW, has also said that they are prepared to go along with franchising except where there is a postal station, that it cannot be closed to open a franchising operation. They have backed down on the franchising issue and have counter proposed two exceptions. Where there are no postal services there can be a franchising operation, but it cannot be done where there is a postal station. A postal station cannot be closed to put in a franchising operation.

The Government thinks that it is riding on public sentiment. In my hands I have two editorials. I feel that they are representative. One is from the Winnipeg Free Press. No one could accuse the Winnipeg Free Press of ever supporting working-class people. I hardly think that it has ever positioned itself in that manner. The article states, "Why the Government decided to move so quickly and so harshly to end the strike is anybody's guess". I do not have to guess. I know why. The Minister got pressured by his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is really calling the shots for the Post Office. That is why we have this Bill. The article goes on to state, "It certainly was not to benefit the postal service or the people who use it". The article closes by stating, "A negotiated settlement would have taken long and hard negotiations in which each side would have had to pay the price of intransigence—Canada Post through lost revenues; the postal workers through lost wages. The public would have suffered, too, but the suffering would have been limited by the rotating nature of the strikes and by the proven ability of Canada Post to get some mail at least past picket lines". That was stated in the Winnipeg Free Press which is not noted for its socialism. It is certainly not noted for support of working-class people.

I have another article from a "real left-wing" paper, The Edmonton Journal. The headline states, "Postal workers licked again". The article states, "Ottawa is using coercion where reason might have prevailed by legislating an end to rotating postal strikes. In the process, the federal Government spurns . . . " Not my word, Madam Speaker, but that of the editor of The Edmonton Journal. He states, "spurns the collective-bargaining process and erodes the right to strike. Is this an article in The Edmonton Journal? By golly it is, Madam Speaker. He further states, "It invites the Canadian Union of Postal Workers to retaliate in a manner that can hardly make the delivery of mail more efficient".

The editor goes on to state, "Last summer's letter carrier strike languished twice as long before a mediator stepped in; and a general strike by clerks and mail sorters in 1981 was settled—through mediation—after six weeks . . . The ability to strike is virtually the only leverage the workers have in negotiations. To short-circuit collective bargaining for the sake of expedience undermines the rights of all union workers—and brings into question the Government's commitment to productive labour relations".

That article was in the Edmonton Journal. That is not some left-wing paper like The Tribune, or The Toronto Star, although I do have The Toronto Star.

• (1600)

I see you signalling me, Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): You have one minute remaining.

Mr. Rodriguez: I am glad you clarified that, Madam Speaker. That is the signal I have been trying to give to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) about the Bill for a long time, that he has one minute in which to repent. It is not too late.

We have learned from all this that the Government jumped hastily because of its hidden agenda. It is all part of the free trade arrangement—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: It is all part of it; it is all part of it. I know what the Hon. Member from Edmonton will say, but it is all part of it—privatization, deregulation, and free trade.

Our postal services compare very positively on an international basis. The Minister should let the process of collective bargaining take place. He should let the market-place of collective bargaining decide the settlement which workers get. He should not be in there ruining collective bargaining with legislation which is so Draconian that I suppose Hitler could vote for it, but not Members on this side of the House.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, we are told that during the strike of outside workers in the month of June, the Government and the people of Canada paid approximately $30 million for replacement workers.

During the labour dispute before us right now, the Post Office advertised for replacement workers long before the strike deadline arrived. While they spent $30 million for replacement workers in June, we do not know yet how much they are spending during this strike.

Would the Hon. Member like to comment upon the policy of spending millions of dollars on replacement workers, moneys which could have been used to settle the strike right away and get it over and done with?

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for his question. I sat in the House and I heard about the development of rural dignity. People in rural communities have been decrying the quality of service provided by Canada Post following the mandate which it received from the Government under the table, surreptitiously, and in a euphemism called the business plan of the Post Office, which was designed in the office of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. They have to cut the deficit, so they have been cutting back on rural mail service.

In Capreol they do not get Saturday delivery any more. Some communities have great big supermailboxes with one key which fits them all. They are right across the street from people who are receiving door-to-door delivery and paying the same taxes.

Referring to the $30 million for replacement workers—

Mr. Allmand: Scabs.

Mr. Rodriguez: Scabs. Let us call a spade a spade. They have $30 million for that, but they cannot provide service. Canadians want service.

What would happen if we applied the same principle to other services, the principle that the Post Office is no longer a service and people must pay extra for all these things? What would happen if we tried that on our local fire departments?

Marcus Crassus in Rome in 13 B.C. had the only fire department. Every time there was a fire, he would negotiate with the owner of the villa how much he wanted to pay for putting out the fire. They had privatized the service then. The Post Office is going back to 13 B.C., the time of Marcus Crassus.

I say to the Hon. Member that with $30 million we could provide service. When they put out advertisements for scab workers the situation in society is such that people want to work. Invariably they are young people with no particular skills in the market who are out of work. They are women who are probably on welfare and are being offered $13 an hour. They are new Canadians who do not understand our system of collective bargaining and the democratic process. They are the ones who are enticed by $13 an hour to cross the picket line to do scab labour. It is a crying shame. The Government should hang its head.

I know that the Government ran on the campaign of jobs, jobs, jobs. Surely it is not these kinds of jobs. Surely it is not replacing well paid jobs with low paid jobs in an effort to cut the deficit.

I suggest that Canadians want service. They do not mind seeing $30 million spent on improving service and paying for it, rather than seeing $30 million being put into scab labour.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I have a brief comment and a question for my hon. friend.

The New Democratic Party is the champion of small business, at least that is what it tells us. Every day its Members rise in the House and say: "We are the champions of small business. Elect us and we will take care of small business".

It turns out that small business made it very clear, both independently and through the associations to which it belongs, that the mail must be delivered; strike or no strike. That is what small business wants and demands of the Post Office, and that is exactly what is happening. Temporary labour is going to keep the mail moving.

In my particular constituency I have a number of small businesses, and if there is an extended strike—and I am talking about a week—they will be in very deep financial trouble. They have come to me and said, "Keep the mail going, keep the mail coming to my particular industry and, more important, have it shipped out'. We get that message. We know that many small businesses will be hurt badly. It is obvious that the strike will go on for a very long period of time. I think the Post Office is carrying out its responsibility in ensuring that the mail is delivered.

The Hon. Member praised the American post office system and said how wonderful it was.

An Hon. Member: What did he say?

Mr. McDermid: He mentioned how well run it is and that they had 14 years to reduce the deficit and everything else. As he knows, the post office in the United States is an essential service and its employees are not allowed to strike. Is he suggesting that if we give the Post Office in Canada 14 years to reduce the deficit, the New Democratic Party would support legislation to make it an essential service?

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, I do not mind the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary making up questions to put to me, but I wish he would not make up my speech.

If he were listening attentively, he would not have heard me praise the American postal service. I simply compared the fact that the American Government gave its post office department 13 years to wipe out its deficit.

Mr. McDermid: The last time you said 14 years, and now you are saying 13 years.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is 13 years, from 1971 to 1984.

The Hon. Member made a plea for small business. He said that small business wanted an end to the strike. I have a quote from Mr. Dale Botting of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business who said: "There's no need to pull the plug yet".

I too circulate in my riding, and I listen to small business. Small-business representatives have not been phoning me to say: "Look, John, we are into a problem here, the mail has to be delivered". In fact, some have been saying that this time, their suppliers who run small businesses as well have smartened up. Now they phone and say: "Do not put your cheque in the mail, we will come around to pick it up". They have organized themselves to pick up cheques and to deliver their orders personally.

It was a rotating strike. After eight days of the strike, bang, the Government brought in legislation. If this legislation held any hope of resolving the long-term problem, I would say yes, I would consider supporting it, but it has no hope of resolving the problems in the Post Office. On the contrary, it will only exacerbate relationships between those who have to go back inside that plant once this legislation is passed and the management with whom they have to work.

I think that is always the Conservative response to everything. Use force and might, and might is right. When will they understand that we say "might for right" and not "might is right"? When will they learn that?

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, today we are called upon to speak on Bill C-86. Needless to say, the issue of a postal strike, particularly to those who intend to vote against the legislation, does not constitute a very popular issue with some Canadians. However, I think I would be remiss in my duties if I did not take this occasion to speak against this Bill, because it is wrong. When something is wrong, it is the duty of all Members of Parliament to say so. If we do not say so, when a bad Bill is presented to Parliament, many others may be abused in the same way as the people affected by this Bill.

It has been said before that extreme law is extreme injury. It is not justice but, rather, the denial of it. The Bill that is before us today would, in my view, be one of those that I would describe as extreme law and it will cause extreme injury.

Let us for a moment examine some of the provisions of this legislation. For union members, there will be unprecedented fines of between $500 and $1,000 a day. For union officers, there will be fines of $10,000 to $50,000 a day, and for the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, there will be fines of $20,000 to $100,000 a day. I ask, if this is the appropriate level for fines, assuming that this Bill is correct, something I do not assume, then why is it that we have never imposed fines like that in the past?

We have just experienced a labour disruption which in my view had a far greater potential for damage to the country, and I am referring to the rail strike of last summer. Did we hear of $20,000 to $100,000 fines in that legislation? No. Well then, if we did not, I can only assume that the Government was wrong in the way it administered that Bill or that it is wrong in the way it has presented Bill C-86 to the House of Commons. My view is that this Bill is wrong.

At the time the Minister first raised the issue of back-to-work legislation, we were three days into a rotating strike, not a full work stoppage but a rotating strike which had lasted only three days. That is when the Government let out utterances to the effect that back-to-work legislation would be necessary.

Some five days later, eight days after the beginning of the rotating strike—let us recall that this was not at that point a full stoppage of mail delivery—the Government imposed the harshest piece of labour legislation this country has ever seen. Why? Was it a full, all-out strike? Was there violence in the streets? No, that was not the case. Yet the Government decided that this kind of legislation was needed at this time.

Of course, a number of editorials have been published which do not support the position of the Government. There are also two opposition Parties in the House which do not support the position of the Government because the legislation that is before us is wrong.

[Translation]

It would have been a lot easier for the Government, Madam Speaker, to let negotiations proceed as usual. I am not one of those people who would stand up and say that, even if we do not get any more mail, even if the system is totally paralyzed, there is no situation that would justify bringing the workers back, because obviously such situations do exist, as we all know. I think Members on all sides of the House will agree that when a strike in an essential service lasts for any length of time, it is time to put an end to it. However, the question is: Have we reached that stage in this case? The answer is no. The answer is no, because, as I pointed out earlier, after only three days of rotating strikes the Government decided to send messages that, as some of my colleagues said earlier, poisoned the negotiations. Five days later, this draconian legislation was tabled in the House.

[English]

This law is unprecedented. It is not only unprecedented because of the magnitude of the fines for which it provides, it is also unprecedented in that it was presented so soon after what could hardly be considered a major disruption.

I do not approve, of course, of the violence that has occurred over the last few days, although it has not been considerable. Nevertheless, there has been some violence. I do not approve of violence, whether on the part of union members or on the part of so-called replacement or scab workers, and of course there have been reports of both. Usually and unfortunately, one group tends to get a little more of the spotlight when it decides it will undertake a violent act, but either way, I do not approve of that kind of behavior.

I regret to say it, but neither do I approve of the union strategy of picketing the homes of Conservative Members of Parliament. I am of the view that the home of any member of this House is one place, and perhaps the only place, where he has the right to be in privacy with his spouse and his children without having to face that kind of intimidation. Because I have supported the union, it is with regret that I make this statement. However, I do not support that particular activity, and I for one can say that if they want to continue to have my support, they will have to cut out immediately that part of their nonsense.

Having said that, I hope both parties get back to the negotiating table to find a peaceful and suitable end to the labour disruption. You might say that is a futile hope at this point given the Bill we have in front of us, a Bill which will inevitably be accepted and become the law of the land. Not that I will vote in favour of it, unless of course the situation warrants it. However, at the time the Bill was introduced, back-to-work legislation was not warranted, least of all the Draconian law we now have before us.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the service Canadians have received from Canada Post during the past year has not greatly improved. I should point out that in ridings like the one I represent, and I would urge the Hon. Member opposite to pay special attention, because the same probably applies to his riding as well, it should be said that in my riding for instance, we have people who live in Orléans, in the National Capital Region, who, although they are in an urban area, do not have the privilege—and it should be considered a right, but at this time it is a privilege—of having home mail delivery.

[English]

We even have an unusual situation in one of our communities. People living in downtown Orleans in my riding, a community of 75,000 people, have as their postal address the Town of Navan, eight kilometres away. That is about the same as residents of Ottawa having Gatineau as an address. According to Canada Post the reason is so that they could have contractors instead of union employees deliver the mail to the supermailboxes. The Navan Post Office does not use union employees, and if Canada Post gives people a Navan address, even though they do not live there, then that justifies delivering the mail door-to-door by that means. That is the kind of service my constituents in the Orleans area are getting right now from Canada Post. It is a devious attempt to circumvent paying union labour in the community.

When Canadians listen to the news, they do not always get that side of the story. They of course hear that Canada Post is trying to deliver the mail and something bogged down here because of a labour disruption. Some people look at that and say, "It is the union's fault again. Someone in the union is too aggressive or something or other and has caused this situation." That is not always the case, and I have just described a situation where nothing short of a loophole has been used to deprive my constituents of the mail service they should be getting, with the side effect of giving them as an address the name of a community they do not live in.

Can you imagine living in that town and trying to get something delivered, say a furniture company to deliver the refrigerator? They end up in the wrong town.

Mr. McDermid: Oh, come on.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), who will soon be defeated, sits there amazed that this kind of thing is happening.

Mr. McDermid: You can come down to my riding any time. I would love to have you there.

Mr. Boudria: I do not blame him. I was speaking slowly so I know he understood everything. He should realize that these kinds of things are going on. He does not. If he would come to my constituency he would find out. Tories seldom come to my constituency because they are not welcome there.

Mr. McDermid: You are welcome in my riding any time.

Mr. Cooper: You had my picture in your householder.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), for whom I have great respect, says his picture was in my constituency mail-out. That is true.

Mr. Cooper: You just want to be seen with great people.

Mr. Boudria: I think very highly of the Hon. Member notwithstanding his shortcomings in being a Tory.

Mr. McDermid: It is not fair to refer to his stature.

Mr. Blaikie: He said "shortcoming" not "short standing".

Mr. Boudria: In closing, I cannot support this kind of legislation. I would not want to support any kind of back-to-work legislation at this time because I do not believe we have reached the stage where it is warranted. An Hon. Member referred to the fact that even the Canadian Federation of Small Business said there is no need to pull the plug yet.

Mr. McDermid: What Member?

Mr. Boudria: Even they did not think it was the appropriate time for back-to-work legislation.

Mr. McDermid: Take a look at what their membership says.

Mr. Boudria: Even if it were time, and inevitably there is a time for that, this is the wrong kind of legislation. It is harsh, Draconian and unfair. People will remember that the Tory Government is so desperate that it is willing to run roughshod over the rights of Canadians in order to enhance their tarnished image. That is the sorry state of the Progressive Conservative Party.

[Translation]

It is too bad the Conservative Party has reached the point, Madam Speaker, where they are so desperate they are ready to do just about anything to restore their tarnished image. That will not work, because Canadians are intelligent, and Canadians are informed consumers. As informed consumers, they purchased some merchandise in 1984. They are now disappointed in this Conservative merchandise, and they intend to drop this product at the first opportunity. This first opportunity will be the next election, and I say to Hon. Members opposite that Canadians are fed up with this kind of Government, and that the Government, instead of trying to restore its image and resorting to all kinds of publicity exercises, that this Government should spend some time and energy on doing its job, which is to govern Canada. That is what they were elected for, not for the kind of legislation and bills we have before us today.

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member told a story which well illustrates the master plan behind a lot of the initiatives and legislation the Government has brought forward. The story he told was that of the community in his riding where people were given an address of a town other than the one they live in because of some Post Office machinations which would make it possible to use non-union labour.

• (1630)

Since 1984 there has been a move afoot to eliminate well-paid working people, to create a society with two levels of Canadians; an elite group of very well paid professionals and others, and a much larger group at the bottom which will be competing for the available jobs in this anti-union, free trade regulated environment. We will see the elimination of that portion of the middle class made up of well-paid working Canadians who constitute the vast majority of the riding which I represent. They are on the hit list. They will be eliminated in the evolving economic agenda of the Progressive Conservative Government.

We will see in this country a process which is much more accelerated in the United States, that is, the elimination of what we would call in a general and, I admit, inaccurate sort of way, the middle class. The Government must remember what Aristotle said about the middle class. He said that the larger the middle class the less likely there is to be a revolution.

Through this kind of legislation and other initiatives we are creating in Canada the potential for never-ending conflict, not only among working Canadians as they cut each other's throats for jobs which do not pay as well as they used to, but between the two groups of Canadians of which I have spoken, with this legislation as it interacts with all the other things the Government has done.

That is very regrettable because one of the things which characterizes Canada more than any other western nation is the group in the middle, whether they be well-paid postal clerks, teachers or whatever, who make up the support group for many of the things which are uniquely Canadian, our medicare and other social programs which we have managed to build since 1945. All of that will be at stake in the restructuring of our economy and the relationships between labour and management, government and its employees, and Canada and the United States which the Government is so set on doing.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for the excellent points he raised in his intervention. I would like to correct the record by saying that from post office to post office in Navan and Orleans is eight miles rather than eight kilometres. It is even worse than I had indicated earlier.

There has been a tremendous inconvenience imposed on the people of that area. Imagine someone saying, "That letter I sent you the other day says that I live in Navan, but don't go there to find me because I actually live in Orleans. It is just that the Post Office has an unusual, convoluted way of addressing us. We live in Orleans but are supposed to pretend that we live elsewhere".

I wrote a letter to the Minister responsible for Canada Post (Mr. Andre) and he wrote back to me about a year and a half ago, after a four-month delay, and explained to me how the people who live in Orleans but are supposed to pretend they live in Navan, according to Canada Post, are supposed to address their envelopes. They are supposed to indicate their name and their street and then "Navan (Orleans)" and end with the postal code.

Would you, Madam Speaker, indicate your address as "Ottawa (Gatineau)"? Surely not. That is ridiculous. In fact, Ottawa and Gatineau are closer than are Navan and Orleans. That is an indication of the unusual and inappropriate activity which Canada Post is engaging in to try to save a few dollars. This is causing major disruption.

The Member who just spoke referred to the two levels of Canadians which the Conservative Government is creating by eroding the middle class. The Member is obviously right. We have seen Budget after Budget which has created major disruptions and imposed tremendous tax increases on many Canadians. In his first Budget Speech, I believe, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that Canada has a shortage of the rich. I am sure my hon. colleagues will remember those words. I disagree that Canada has a shortage of rich people. We have a surplus of poor people, and that is the problem. The Government is trying to increase that number in order to please its many wealthy friends.

Canadians want good, fair Government. They want a Government which will stop trying to use every devious method on earth to enhance its image which has been so badly damaged by all kinds of excesses, abuses of power, conflicts of interest and every other scandal that you can think of. Being the non-partisan person that you are, Madam Speaker, you will understand that the Tories have abused their power in the past. Canadians want good, honest, and sincere Government. They want the Tories to cut out the nonsense that they have been perpetrating on the Canadian people.

Mr. Duguay: Madam Speaker, I would like to address a comment to my hon. colleague with reference to his comment that this is the wrong kind of legislation. For most of my life I worked in a secondary school. I always believed that the appropriate way to deal with young people was to let them make their own decisions, always reserving the right to introduce some maturity when they carried on in a way unbecoming even to young people.

I judged rather quickly that many of the things which were said on each side in the debate last week were inappropriate. However, yesterday afternoon I saw with my own eyes a very clear indication of why the Government should legislate these people back to work.

Without ever trying to contact me at my office or at home, 50 workers from CUPW showed up in front of my house to intimidate me and my family to the point that my children asked me whether it was safe to go outside. For that reason I believe that this is the correct kind of legislation. When mature adults do not know how to behave and resort to intimidation of people and their families, it is appropriate to put them back to work.

We are not only putting them back to work. We are prepared to appoint a mediator who will become an arbitrator. We are telling the Post Office and its workers that if they want to resolve this problem themselves they are quite welcome to do it with the help of a mediator, but if they want to resort to intimidation of the Canadians who are suffering the most as a result of this, those who lose their mail service, they should expect Parliament to put them back to work. I hope we do it right away.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTIONS

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Administration of Justice—Recommended television coverage of criminal trials; the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris)—Regional Development—Government projects in St. John's East, Newfoundland/Request for speedy start to projects; and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar)—Public Service—Recognition of principle of wage parity/Adjustment mechanism.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

POSTAL SERVICES CONTINUATION ACT, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cadieux that Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The time for questions and comments has elapsed.

Mr. Boudria: A Tory asks me a question and does not allow me to answer. That is your sincerity.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It is questions and comments.

Mr. Boudria: He asked me a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Chair would be prepared to allow one minute for the Hon. Member to answer the question, but the Chair first wants the Hon. Member to withdraw that comment which the Hon. Member has made. It was a comment referring to the Chair and putting in doubt—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): —and by casting doubts on the impartiality of the Chair. If—

[English]

Mr. Boudria: It was not toward you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): If somehow the Chair has misunderstood, I will certainly apologize to the hon. gentleman. However, if what I heard is correct, it should be withdrawn.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I apologize if you believe that any comment I made was directed toward you. I was addressing myself to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) who refused me consent to answer the question.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That does not help.

Mr. Boudria: It was not addressed to Madam Speaker. I am severe toward my opponents, but it is not my practice ever to criticize the Chair.

I just want to answer briefly the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay). I indicated in the House a few minutes ago that although I support the union in its position, I want to dissociate myself totally from the picketing of homes of Members of Parliament. In my view, M.P.s' homes are one location where Members of Parliament should have privacy. In my view, that is sacred for all of us. They did not picket my home, but the homes of Conservative Members. I said that I consider that kind of activity inappropriate and I want to dissociate myself from anything or anyone who does that to any Member of the House, regardless of their Party.

Notwithstanding that, the proposed law before us is still unjust. As I said in my opening remarks, extreme law is extreme injury. It is not justice, but the denial of it and I stand by that view.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, the House has been debating this motion for two days now. The House was on notice since last Friday that this matter would be debated today. Therefore, I think it is fair to assume that any Member who wishes to participate in this debate will be here today.

I am asking for the co-operation of the House to complete second reading so that we can get the parties back to the bargaining table, prevent further violence on the picket line and get the mail moving at peak efficiency. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux):

That, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(a), the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of second reading stage of Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the Deputy Government House Leader. Will those Members who object to the motion please rise in their places.

And more than 15 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): More than 15 Members having risen, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is deemed to have been withdrawn.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties with a view to determining the amount of time necessary to complete debate at second reading of this Bill. I want to be fair to the opposition Parties and indicate that the Liberal Party thought it would be able to proceed to Committee of the Whole House this evening. The New Democratic Party was not prepared to give that assurance.

As I have indicated to the House, this legislation is important and we want to get the parties back to the bargaining table and avoid further violence on the picket-line. We wish to get the mail moving.

Therefore, I want to give notice pursuant to Standing Order 117 that at a future sitting of the House the Government will propose a motion allocating one sitting day for the completion of second reading stage of the Bill.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to talk about the incredible significance of the right to strike in our society. It is not my intention to speak with a sense of self-righteous sanctimony, but simply to point out to Members of the House and, hopefully, to people throughout the country that tremendous gains have been made by average Canadians thanks to the right to be able to withdraw their services freely.

I believe that we as a legislature should be extremely hesitant about trampling upon that right to strike. Only in the most difficult or dramatic set of circumstances, when the good of the country is clearly the dominant consideration, should we be prepared to override that right to strike. This is clearly not such a case. It is a case where a strike has been perpetuated by a Government that brought in back-to-work legislation at a time when it was not required, at a time when, frankly, it was designed to destroy the morale of workers and to make much more difficult the future progress of the Post Office.

I think it is important for people to keep in mind just three strikes that I choose at random. First, the Ford strike which took place in Windsor in 1945. It brought to my city and to the people who live there for the first time the recognition by that company that people had the right to form a union, to defend the union and to see to it that the union had a financial base for the future. It was out of that that the Rand formula eventually came which has contributed immeasurably to labour peace in Canada.

The second strike I want to mention is the General Motors strike in Oshawa in 1936. The strike led to the resignation of Liberal cabinet Ministers, including some from my part of the country, who said very clearly that when it came time to ride with General Motors or walk with workers, they would walk with workers. It is a sentiment which I think we should recall and recall with pride.

I think too, as we sit here in Ottawa, that we should consider the strike here by clerks which led for the first time in this city to a fair rate of pay for women clerks compared to their counterparts in the civil service. We have to recognize that strikes have been steps toward social equality and social fairness within our society.

There is a myth about CUPW, the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, that it is some kind of renegade union which understands no discipline and is prone to violence. Let me tell you, Madam Speaker, that as a Member of Parliament I visited the picket lines this past Friday in my City of Windsor. The people who work in the Post Office there also walk the picket lines. They were prepared to give up tremendous amounts of pay to do that. They are average Canadians, the sort of people you would meet next to you on the bus and walking down the street, but they were not people—and in this they were typical too—who were prepared to have their rights stepped on by a Government which brought in back-to-work legislation at a time when there was not even a full-scale strike in place in Canada.

I have to ask you, Mr. Speaker, and all the people in the House and across the country to consider what it does to the faith of men and women like ourselves, brought up to believe in democratic rights. There is no question that their strike is a legal one. Before that strike had even reached a stage where it existed as a full-scale strike, the full force of Parliament was brought down on their heads. What faith does it give them in the future? What faith does it give them in their government institutions?

There are a lot of issues in this strike. There is the issue of franchising which will have the effect of reducing the wages which are received by a lot of women, from the good wages received in the Post Office to the lousy wages received in many convenience stores. But what about forcing people in the Town of Lasalle in my constituency to travel seven miles before they can get their mail, whether it is registered or something like that, that has to be picked up at the Post Office? This is inconvenient service and totally ridiculous. There is also the issue of strike-breaking and whether a Crown corporation representing Canadians should ever, ever strike-break. I, for one, do not think that it should. I think strike-breaking is something which should be totally outlawed. I think it is something which should never be carried forward by the people who represent, in some sense, all of the Government of Canada.

There is the question too of service. There is no question that the service offered by the Post Office of Canada has deteriorated badly, not because of the workers in the Post Office but because of the management which has messed the institution up and made it something completely different from the institution of which Canadians used to be proud in the days after World War II.

This legislation with its huge fines and harsh attempts to push union leaders out of the roles of leadership in the future, its refusal to go for a mediator first, is an approach which has terrible consequences for the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reid): I hate to interrupt the Hon. Member but it being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

ADVISABILITY OF REDUCING LEAD CONTENT IN PAINTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of reducing the allowable lead content in all consumer paints, particularly those used on products for children, from the existing level of 0.5 per cent to 0.06 per cent.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a motion that has an environmental inspiration, and at the same time it has a health goal. It is intended to protect the health of Canadians from lead, and in a sense it is driven by a comparative study between the lead that we allow in Canada to be used in paints, and the lead that is allowed to be added to paints south of the border.

I will briefly explain the background leading to this resolution. In Canada under the Hazardous Products Act there are regulations which specify how much lead can be used in pigments and in paints that are utilized in the production of furniture and toys used by children and adults. In these regulations a specific limit is set, namely five parts per thousand, as stated in the motion. That is five parts per thousand of the total solids contained in the coating to be applied to the specific item that children play with, or the item used by adults.

The two main pigments that are used in Canada are red lead and lead chromate. By contrast, the permitted quantities in the United States are only six hundred parts per million, which is roughly one-tenth of what is permitted in Canada. In Canada the content of lead in paints that are used commercially and applied to toys and other wooden products that are put into circulation for the market-place is virtually 10 times greater than that permitted in the United States.

Through history and through time it has been well established that lead is far from being a healthy matter. On the contrary, it is a matter that endangers human health. If ingested in certain quantities, it can have some very serious consequences on the mental capacity of human beings.

Therefore, the reason for this motion is to bring to the attention of the House the necessity to change our regulations and make them more restrictive in order that in future the paints to be used in the production of children's equipment, toys, and the like, will contain one-tenth of the lead that is presently permitted.

Let me add that at the present time lead-based compounds are without restriction. I am referring not to paints but only to compounds which are widely used as paint additives. These lead-based compounds also ought to be examined from the point of view of human health, and be regulated to within the same scope and breadth in order to better protect the health of Canadians than we have so far.

Who is at risk in particular may interest you, Mr. Speaker. Particularly at risk are the consumers who are using articles that are covered or coated with such paints, but also consumers and individuals who may be sanding walls of old interiors or exteriors where lead paint has been used, and where large quantities of lead can be inhaled while sanding those old paints. Therefore, it is an operation that must be watched by anyone who is engaged in it and is unware of the consequences of lead on human health. Also at risk is the tiny consumer, the child in the crib who may be biting at items, toys, the bars of the crib itself which are painted with lead-containing paints, and who innocently and inadvertently may be ingesting some of this lead that is definitely rather dangerous to health.

I welcome the presence in the House today of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). I am sure that he will wish to examine this matter and make representations to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) on the question of lead contained in paint.

For instance, the paint used on children's furniture and toys could be marked as a safe item. There is no doubt about that. But it is important that the Canadian consumer know that it is allowed to contain up to five parts per thousand of lead. Many experts in the field consider this level to be far too high, particularly in relation to children and because of the habit of children to chew on anything that they can get their hands on.

The second threat is one that could be related to the fact that paint does peel and flake off. As I mentioned a moment ago, it can be removed by the process of sanding. In this manner, children can be contaminated, and also grown-ups, particularly those engaged in sanding operations.

There is an excellent book by Barbara Wallace and Kathy Cooper entitled The Citizen's Guide to Lead. This book has inspired this motion, and I am drawing most of the information related to this motion from it. In that book, Mr. Speaker, you will find advice to protect your constituents and the consumers in your Niagara area from lead in dust resulting from home renovations, and also from the potential danger of children getting in touch with the paint which coats toys.

Some people may wish to know how to identify paint that contains a high level of lead in their homes. There is a method to establish if lead is present in paint. When a 10 per cent solution of sodium sulfide is applied to paint that contains lead, the paint turns black. That would be an indication that the paint has a high content of lead. One may decide to remove it. In that case, it is recommended that one be very cautious and wear a mask, cover-alls, and other protective clothing while engaging in the operation of removing the paint.

It is important—and I would like to use the few minutes available to me—to indicate that lead is not only present in paint, which is the main thrust and purpose of my motion. The Royal Society of Canada conducted a study which was made public in September of last year. It analysed or broke down the sources of lead in the environment and attributed to lead in paint and lead solder on cans some 10 per cent of the total. It also attributed some 63 per cent of lead present in the environment to the burning of leaded gasoline in cars.

Lead in gasoline is now being gradually reduced in Canada to a level which will be comparable to the level that now exists in the United States, but only by January 1, 1993. In other words, between now and the end of 1992 we will still have levels of lead in gasoline which are particularly high and harmful to human health. Therefore, it is a process of lead reduction which leaves much to be desired and ought to be accelerated if we start from the premise that lead in the environment is not healthy.

I refer in my motion to lead in paints, but I cannot overlook the importance of reducing over the shortest possible time the presence of lead from the usage of that type of gasoline so as to improve the quality of the environment, particularly from the point of view of children. It has been established that the health of children is particularly affected by the presence of lead in the environment and in the pollution caused by automotive traffic.

One of the reasons given for the fact that children are particularly affected is their size and height which brings them much closer to the level of emission pipes of cars, trucks and the like. Therefore, they are closer to that level than adults and, because of the fact that they are also very young and their physical make-up is more sensitive, they are the ones who suffer in a more visible manner from the impact and consequences of lead in the environment.

This is one of the main reasons for hearing quite frequently urgings not to let cars which burn leaded gasoline idle for hours and hours in cold weather and not to leave, as a good health guideline, any engine running unless it is absolutely necessary. Even if an automobile is burning leaded gasoline which contains a reduced quantity of lead, it is still a type of combustion which affects human health.

I believe that the practice of misfueling ought to be raised in the minute or two still available. Certain car engines have been manufactured to use only unleaded gasoline, which unfortunately costs more than leaded, despite urgings from those of us in the Opposition for the Government to change the tax structure so as to bring the prices of the two gasolines in line and possibly have an eventual tax structure which would make unleaded gasoline less expensive than leaded. Unfortunately the fact remains that some consumers have tended to misfuel, namely, to use leaded gasoline in their cars instead of unleaded. In the process they have ruined the catalytic converters in their engines, which was rather foolish. However, in the process they have also misused the trust placed in them as consumers, namely, the trust that when one buys a car which runs on unleaded gasoline one is supposed to purchase unleaded gasoline, not leaded gasoline as some tend to do.

This is one of the reasons that we find that recent models of cars which run on unleaded gasoline can only be filled with a type of nozzle that is narrow enough to fit into the gas tank opening.

I have made reference, stretching the rules of relevance, however, to unleaded and leaded gasoline because the Royal Society of Canada pointed out that the consumption of leaded gasoline represented a very large percentage of the lead which affects the quality of the environment.

Returning to the purpose of my motion, I conclude by urging the Government, in particular the Minister of National Health and Welfare whose presence I welcome tonight, to address the question of the content of lead in paint and to urge and promote the adoption in regulations of a level which would be one-tenth the present level permitted and would bring the level of permitted lead to .06 per cent. This has been on stream, as a result of an EPA initiative adopted in the United States, since the late 1970s or early 1980s.

In the end it protects the health of infants and children. It improves the protection afforded to young consumers in their early stages when they use items which are available on the market that may at times even be marked as safe but are not as safe as they should be, because the content of lead used in the coating may be 10 times as high as that used in other jurisdictions.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) regarding the permissible lead content for consumer paints.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, among other Departments, has been concerned for many years about the risk posed to Canadians by lead. The Department is aware that humans are exposed to lead from many sources. For example, trace levels of lead are found in the air, in water, and food. The Department is also aware that children are more susceptible than adults to the toxic effects of this metal.

In the past, when the need for action was demonstrated, the Department took several measures under the Hazardous Products Act to limit the exposure of Canadians, particularly children, to this insidious toxic metal. These initiatives were taken either in response to a specific need, as with the 1971 regulations governing the release of lead from glazed ceramic dinnerware, or as part of the over-all federal government policy to reduce the use of lead in the environment.

One of the first initiatives under the Hazardous Products Act was the establishment of a limit for the quantity of lead in liquid coating materials such as paint used on children's furniture. The limit which came into effect on May 1, 1970, is 0.5 per cent by weight.

Following this, on November 4, 1970, children's toys and playthings, painted or decorated with a coating that contained lead in excess of 0.5 per cent, were banned. On August 21, 1973, similarly coated pencils and artists' brushes were banned. Effective January 1, 1976, paints sold to consumers for home use could not contain more than 0.5 per cent lead. These requirements remain in force today.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has demonstrated unfailing concern for the safety of Canadians. On numerous occasions, actions under the Hazardous Products Act have been taken to remove hazardous products from the market-place and to protect Canadians. In addition, the Department devotes considerable effort to ensuring that existing regulations continue to provide adequate protection for Canadians. Recent examples are the revisions to the regulations for cribs and children's sleepwear.

The motion of the Hon. Member is that the Government should consider the advisability of reducing the allowable lead content in all consumer paints, particularly those used on products for children, from the existing level of 0.5 per cent to 0.06 per cent. Prior to 1950, lead pigments and other lead compounds were used extensively in paints, but new technology and materials have virtually eliminated lead from household paints. Lead pigments are no longer used and, although small quantities of lead dryers are apparently necessary for some formulations, they too are being replaced.

In 1974, as the Hon. Member was saying, the U.S. Consumer Products Safety Commission concluded that a level of 0.5 per cent lead in paint was safe. In 1976, the U.S. Congress directed that the commission determine if a lead level in excess of 0.06 per cent but less than 0.5 per cent was safe. Although there was a little new information, powerful consumer advocacy groups supported by Senator Edward Kennedy intervened in the hearings held by the commission in support of the 0.06 per cent limit.

Subsequently, the commission decided that the available scientific information was insufficient to determine if the lead levels between 0.5 per cent and 0.06 per cent were either safe of unsafe. Therefore, the legislative process in the United States dictated that the new lower limit of 0.06 per cent be established.

Canada has not experienced the outbreaks of severe lead poisoning from paint ingestion observed in the United States. I think it is important to note that in most instances, lead poisoning in the United States occurred with children who suffered from an affliction called "pica", an abnormal tendency to compulsively chew on things, and who also had access to old paint heavily laced with lead. As I stated earlier, such paints were manufactured long ago, decades before the Hazardous Products Act was proclaimed.

In recent years, information obtained from a sampling of hospitals across Canada indicated that there are no confirmed reports of lead poisoning from paints. The experience of other information sources such as medical associations, consumer complaints and representations from consumer advocacy groups is similar. Consequently, there is no reason to believe that Canadians are not adequately protected by the regulations for paints under the Hazardous Products Act.

In addition, it is my understanding that the scientists at Health and Welfare Canada maintain that the 0.5 per cent limit for lead is adequate. Officials in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will continue to monitor this situation to ensure that Canadians are well protected from lead in consumer products subject to the Hazardous Products Act.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I would like to begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for bringing in an excellent resolution today which will be one important measure toward improving the health of Canadian children. Of course, we need many more measures to attack the problem of lead poisoning.

Of course, we are becoming more and more aware that even very samll quantities of lead in the air, in the soil, in paint, in water and from other sources will have a developmental effect on children. There are effects on their ability to grow, on their mental development and on their hearing. Of course, in larger quantities, lead can cause blindness and even death. These are the acute effects of lead poisoning.

The evidence we are beginning to get now as to what amounts of lead are commonly found in the blood of children is shocking. These levels are very dangerous indeed. I take a particular interest in this subject because in my own riding of Broadview—Greenwood, in South Riverdale, there has been an enormous amount of exposure to lead from a company in the area. Indeed, right now, soil that has been lead contaminated is being removed.

The children in that area, of course, are exposed not only to the lead in the soil and the lead which comes into their homes by way of dust, but they can be getting it through lead in water pipes and through food. Of course, many of the older homes used lead paint. Children do touch things and put their hands in their mouths, and it is a cumulative effect.

We just cannot be reassured by this very complacent Government that everything is being done correctly or that, because lead in gasoline is gradually being reduced, the problem is being taken care of. It is not being taken care of because children are exposed in so very many different ways.

It may be that there is no safe level for exposure to lead, and children, of course, are particularly vulnerable. The supposedly safe level for lead of 25 micrograms per decilitre of blood was set in 1985. It is probably too high. I might note that in my riding, a very large number of children have been shown to be at risk at this very, very high level of exposure. Now we are beginning to get information which suggests that at levels typical for Canadian children of 10, 12 or 15 micrograms per decilitre of blood, there can be effects on learning, on stature, on birth weight and on hearing.

I note that in the southern part of my own riding, the average level for children is 15 micrograms. The average in urban Canada is 12 micrograms, and the average in Ontario, when considering rural and urban areas together, is 10 micrograms. We are not talking about just odd instances or children with abnormalities who have some tendency to put things in their mouths. We are talking about thousands of children who may be developmentally handicapped. They may go into adult life handicapped by exposure to lead in a variety of ways.

We know that the best way to attack this problem is to reduce and eliminate lead in gasoline and paint. Those are two convenient ways to begin to reduce the problem. Obviously it will be harder to get rid of lead in other forms, and we need a comprehensive approach. However, the proposal before us is certainly a most reasonable one. It is to reduce:

> —the allowable lead content in all consumer paints, particularly those used on products for children, from the existing level of 0.5 per cent to 0.6 per cent.

Where did these numbers come from? Interestingly enough his lower limit is the allowable limit in the U.S. right now. Here we have the irony of a country which has not been very good on environmental health matters with a better model than we have. The Government ought to be ashamed that we have Members of Parliament urging that an American standard be adopted in order to give Canadians better protection than they already have from their own Government. I hope it is ashamed and will consider doing just that.

Lead is still allowed in paint in Canada. The words "lead free" mean up to 5,000 parts per million, whereas in the U.S. it is down to 600. Yet Environment Canada has been very complacent about this. They take the view that, with respect to the reduction of lead in gasoline, the problem has been resolved. We have done enough and do not have to worry any more. That is certainly not the case at all.

The Hon. Member referred to the lead and gasoline problem and I want to refer to it as well because we need a comprehensive approach. We want to see progress in particular areas but we need to reduce lead emissions from gasoline as well. Studies show that 30 per cent to 40 per cent of lead in children's blood is directly attributable to lead in gasoline. The figure is probably higher on an indirect basis. Yet our standard of .2 grams per litre, which we went to this year, was adopted in the U.S. in 1982. We are behind the U.S., and yet the Government adopted an advertising approach reminding people of their duty as citizens to buy unleaded gasoline, this instead of appealing to their pocket-books in a very practical way by hiking taxes on leaded gasoline in order to encourage use of unleaded.

I note as well that the Department of National Defence uses leaded gasoline routinely. It is a major government Department with an enormous number of motor vehicles and it is contaminating the environment in which children have to grow up. The Department is causing a serious health hazard, and that is most reprehensible. The federal Government ought to change its policies. The taxpayers' money is being used in a way which is causing ill health and possible mental retardation among very young children.

Children are much more vulnerable than adults. They are shorter, more exposed to exhaust fumes, and in certain cities, and my own is a prime example with an enormous amount of traffic, they are particularly exposed. They have more soft tissue and the toxins concentrate in those tissues. We therefore have a responsibility to see that they have the protection they need so they will be able to develop properly and not be harmed by lead. Some 30 per cent of lead absorbed ends up in the brain or soft tissue where it interferes with the production of key proteins. That has an effect on nerve cells.

I simply want to conclude by pointing out that this is a problem of massive dimensions. Pollution Probe estimates that half of Canada's pre-school children are at risk as a result of these low levels of lead to which they are exposed. This is not good enough. We need tougher standards. We need comprehensive coverage including paints, toys, exterior and interior paints, and gasoline. This is a serious problem and I strongly endorse the resolution before us today. I urge the Government to take much speedier and stronger action to give health protection to our young children.

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex—Kent): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to join in this debate this afternoon. I first want to say to the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) that his ongoing concern in particular areas of the environment is always interesting. Then we have the new NDP critic, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). She left the committee which we feel is the most important, namely, the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. Certainly we will miss her input. However, I am sure her interest will continue in the committee dealing with the environment. She has already created a reputation in that area. However, we miss her in the committee dealing with communications. Some of us still have some bad habits which the Hon. Member may have to come back to correct.

I also want to say that we are very pleased that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) was present for most of the debate this afternoon. It is rather uncommon for a Minister to hear speeches during Private Members' hour, and we are certainly pleased he was here to listen to most of them.

I want to comment on the motion presented by the Hon. Member which refers to the permissible lead content in consumer paints. This is of great interest to all Members who have concerns about the environment, certainly those with young children who are most susceptible.

For many years the Department of Health and Welfare shared the concerns of the Member about undue exposure to lead by inhalation or ingestion. Certainly there are a number of sources which contribute to the total body burden of lead. They do not all come from paint alone. Daily exposures most commonly result from naturally occurring levels in food, airborne lead, especially in urban and industrialized areas, inhaled dust, and, to a lesser extent, from consumer products and even our drinking water. The Hon. Member's motion states that:

> —the government should consider the advisability of reducing the allowable lead content in all consumer paints, particularly those used on products for children, from the existing level of 0.5 per cent to 0.06 per cent.

The level proposed is, as was pointed out, the regulated lead content of paint in the U.S. It was enacted into law by the U.S. Consumer Products Safety Commission on February 28, 1978. This content level was based on consideration of the extensive number of lead poisoning cases occurring in children from core areas of cities with deteriorating buildings. These old buildings contained painted woodwork and walls that contributed significantly to total lead intake in children who chewed upon painted wood or ingested chips of paint flaked from the walls. The 1978 rule of the U.S. commission superseded early legislation requiring paint to contain less than 0.5 per cent lead in 1976 and 1 per cent in 1971.

Canada has carefully considered the health effects of lead and acted promptly to reduce daily lead exposure in all segments of the population. Starting in 1969 the Government of Canada took action under the Hazardous Products Act to prohibit the sale of certain products containing lead above specific ceilings. For example, all pencils and paint brushes as well as furniture and toys to be used by children may not be coated in paints containing more than 0.5 per cent total lead content; glazed ceramic cookware must not release lead in excess of seven parts per million when subjected to standard testing; paints sold to consumers for use inside or outside homes or on any furniture or product are regulated if they contain more than 0.5 per cent lead.

A number of food commodities have maximum tolerable limits prescribed under the Food and Drugs Act. The Department of the Environment acted to require lead levels in gasoline to be drastically reduced and eventually eliminated. Exposures to lead in the workplace have decreased dramatically over the decade.

The Department is currently reviewing all lead regulations under the Hazardous Products Act and the Food and Drug Act to ensure that Canadians are adequately protected. In order to decide upon the need to further reduce the lead concentration in paint it is necessary to consider the health effects data that indicates the extent of lead intoxication in Canada, the most significant sources of human exposure to lead, and current uses of lead in paint.

From information obtained from Statistics Canada and contacts within Canadian hospitals, diagnosed cases of lead poisoning that can be attributed to ingestion of paints are rarely seen in Canada. In addition, the total number of cases of lead poisoning from all environmental sources has decreased since the early 1970s.

Canada never experienced the health problems associated with lead absorption from ingestion of lead paints to the same extent as seen in the United States. From 1950 to 1970 in that country it became clinically evident that children were being unduly exposed to high concentrations of lead through ingestion of paint chips, plaster, or old wallpaper saturated with paint found in houses constructed before 1940. Before 1940 lead compounds were more liberally used by the paint industry.

In 1978 the legislation in the United States establishing a ceiling on the lead content of household paint at 0.06 per cent was enacted in response to the crisis experienced at that time. The 0.06 per cent value was chosen because it represented the background concentration in paints to which lead had not been intentionally added. In addition to this legislation, large public health programs were initiated to remove the layers of paint from older urban housing. These two American initiatives as well as the greater public awareness of the problems associated with undue exposure to lead led to a reduction of blood-lead levels in children in the United States. Blood-levels in children in the United States are beginning to approach those found in Canadian children. Therefore, it is working.

It is often not clearly understood or explained that frequent reports of lead poisoning in children who had ingested paint peelings or chips involve a type of white lead paint that has not been made in North America for over 40 years. Modern white paints contain titanium dioxide rather than white lead as the pigment. Such paints present little hazard. Until a few years ago small quantities of coloured lead pigments were frequently used in yellow, orange, blue and green paint. Voluntary action on the part of paint manufacturers led to the use of alternative, non-lead pigments. Today only very small amounts of lead-containing compounds are occasionally used as drying and binding agents in consumer paints.

The Hazardous Products Act regulates the sale of interior architectural paints containing more than 0.5 per cent lead in the dried film. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs routinely analyses interior paints to ensure compliance. In recent years most consumer paints have been found to contain lead at levels considerably below the 0.5 per cent limit.

Exposure to lead is experiences primarily via naturally occurring levels in food and inhaled particles. There is little evidence that consumer paints contribute significantly to human exposure to lead in Canada, even in children. A number of recent studies have been conducted on blood-lead levels in children both in Canada and in the United States. In general, urban children living in high-density areas tend to have higher blood-lead levels than children in less dense areas. This has been attributed to greater exposure to lead arising from automobile emissions. Clusters of high blood-lead levels and even overt clinical symptoms may be seen in communities where deliberate inhalation abuse of gasoline is prevalent.

Scientists within the Department of National Health and Welfare have carefully examined recent research results on the effects of low levels of lead in the body. They have concluded that there is a need to reduce the existing intervention level of 40 micrograms per decilitre of blood to 20 to 25 micrograms per decilitre of blood.

This conclusion was based upon new and old scientific evidence of effects in the most sensitive portion of our population, that being children. An intervention level is used to trigger an active program to identify the sources of an individual's exposure to lead and a strategy to reduce the body's lead levels before health may be affected. In addition, the World Health Organization has proposed, and the Department has supported, a revised maximum allowable weekly intake for lead in children of 25 micrograms per kilogram of body weight.

The need to reduce intervention levels should not be confused with a need to reduce lead levels in paint. Most consumer paints presently available in Canada have lead contents below that prescribed by legislation, and lead intake via ingested paint is considered by officials in the Department to represent a minor route of exposure in Canadian children.

Nevertheless, I should impress upon the House the need for us to be prudent and to reduce potential Canadian exposure to toxic substances, when feasible, to levels considered to pose no significant risk. I can tell the House that officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare are currently discussing the feasibility of the mandatory elimination of all lead-containing additives in paint products to which children are exposed.

Scientists within the Department will continue to monitor this situation to ensure that Canadians are well protected from exposure to lead and other toxic chemicals in consumer products, food, and the environment.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on Motion M-54 put forward by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). At the outset I would like to say how pleased and interested I was to hear the comments of the Member for Essex—Kent (Mr. Caldwell). As you know, that Member has a reputation for being sensitive to environmental issues as well as a whole range of other issues. It is a credit to the people of his riding that they had the foresight to send him to Parliament. He has been a tremendous addition to this place, and I and other Members have been very pleased to have been associated with him these past three years.

The motion which we are debating today states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of reducing the allowable lead content in all consumer paints, particularly those used on products for children, from the existing level of 0.5 % to 0.06 per cent.

The proposal makes a certain amount of sense in the same way as a motion supporting motherhood would make a lot of sense. Lead is a well-known environmental poison and is highly toxic to humans. That is undebatable. Once released into the environment it does not move through natural pathways to more remote locations. Compared to other heavy metals it has a very long environmental persistence and, therefore, is a product which we should be very concerned about and aware of. If there is widespread exposure to lead now, future generations will also be exposed to the lead which is already in the environment or is being added to it every day.

There is no doubt that releases of lead into the environment and human exposure to it constitute, therefore, major environmental and health problems. Having said that, I must, nevertheless, point out that the motion of the Hon. Member for Davenport is redundant. The motion asks the Government to consider the advisability of reducing the allowable lead content. I maintain that the Government, through its highly trained and extremely competent specialists in the Departments of National Health and Welfare, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and the Environment have already considered the advisability of such a reduction and found that it is not warranted.

Canada has already carefully considered the negative health effects of lead and has implemented a variety of effective measures which strictly control the use of lead, curtail the release of lead into the environment, and keep the exposure of Canadian citizens to lead well within safe limits.

There are two primary causes of human exposure to lead. The first is the naturally occurring levels in food, and the second is through atmospheric particles which are inhaled. Lead is a normal constituent of the earth's crust and trace amounts of it are found naturally in water, soil and food. The Hon. Member's motion is directed specifically toward paint. However, there is little evidence to indicate that paint of itself is a significant contributor to human exposure to lead in Canada, even among children.

It is true that the public tends to associate lead poisoning with the ingestion of paint by children. Certainly, this issue received a great deal of attention particularly in the United States several decades ago. In fact, in the years before 1940 lead was commonly used in paint in concentrations a great deal higher than we find today. From 1950 to 1970 it became clinically evident in the United States that children were becoming unduly exposed to high concentrations of lead. These came through the ingestion of paint chips, plaster and old wallpaper that had been saturated with leaded paints. These sources of lead were found primarily in houses that had been constructed prior to 1940.

In response to this crisis, the United States passed legislation in 1978 that established a ceiling on the lead content of household paints. This ceiling was set at 0.06 per cent.

In addition, wide-scaled public health programs were set up to strip old paint from older urban housing. In brief, this was the source of public concern over lead in paints.

I believe it should be pointed out that, thankfully, Canada has never experienced the health problems associated with lead absorption from the ingestion of lead paints to the degree that has been found in the United States. According to information from Statistics Canada, formerly the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and compiled from data provided by Canadian hospitals, diagnosed cases of lead poisoning that can be attributed to the ingestion of paint are extremely rare in this country.

This experience is paralleled by information provided from other sources, such as medical associations, representations from consumer advocacy groups and the monitoring of consumer complaints. Therefore, there is every reason to believe that Canadians are already adequately protected from lead in paint through regulations for paint contained in the Hazardous Products Act.

Canada has an effective package of safety measures designed to limit the exposure of Canadians, particularly children, to lead, regardless of source. They are part of the over-all policy of the federal Government regarding lead, which is to control and reduce releases of lead into the environment.

The Hazardous Products Act to which I referred earlier limits the quantities of lead present in liquid coating materials. Therefore, paints sold to consumers for use inside or outside the home, or for use on any furniture or household products are regulated if they contain more than 0.5 per cent lead. I should add that exposures to lead in Canadian workplaces have declined dramatically over the past decade.

Most important, Environment Canada has moved to drastically reduce lead levels in gasoline and will eventually eliminate lead from gasoline entirely. This is extremely significant because motor vehicles are the greatest single source of lead in the environment.

The Government is already taking effective action to protect Canadians from the deadly effects of lead, whatever the source. In the specific area of paint, which the Hon. Member's motion addresses, levels of lead in most paints produced today are already well below the present safeguard level of 0.5 per cent.

When accounts appear of lead poisoning in children who have ingested lead-containing paints, they are invariably linked to paints of type that have not been manufactured in North America for over 30 years. Modern technology, in combination with voluntary restraint on the part of paint manufacturers, has done away with the need for further restrictions such as those contained in the Hon. Member's motion.

For example, modern white paints contain titanium dioxide rather than lead as a pigment. Voluntary actions by paint manufacturers as well have lead to the use of alternative non-lead pigments. At present, lead is only used in paint compounds where its technical properties make its replacement difficult. According to analyses routinely carried by Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada, most paints have been found to contain lead only at levels considerably below the 0.5 per cent limit.

I suggest that Canadians are already well protected from lead in paints. Therefore, the Private Members' Motion of the Hon. Member for Davenport is unnecessary and I suggest that the energies of the House could better be directed toward more genuine and pressing environmental and health concerns that confront Canadians, such as the clean-up of the Great Lakes and the Niagara River.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, I want to address Private Members' Motion M-54 which was introduced by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

This motion was ostensibly drafted to address one aspect of the problem of lead in the environment. There is no doubt that lead is an element highly toxic to both humans and the environment. Exposure to high levels of lead can cause serious and acute symptoms. Fortunately, advances in industrial hygiene have virtually eliminated acute lead poisoning.

However, chronic exposure to low levels of lead in the environment is also a serious health concern. Low levels of lead are known to interfere with haemoglobin synthesis. They are suspected of causing neuro-physiological and behavioural effects, as well as teratogenic effects. That is, they are suspected of being able to cause injury to a foetus without affecting the mother. They are also suspected of inducing growth inhibition and hypertension.

The Hon. Member's motion focuses on lead in paint. It states:

> That in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of reducing the allowable lead content in all consumer paints, particularly those used on products for children, from the existing level of 0.5 per cent to 0.06 per cent.

I believe it can be demonstrated that consumer safeguards already on the books give Canadians more than adequate protection from chronic exposure to low levels of lead.

Health and Welfare Canada expressed its concerns about the potential effects of lead pollution on human health in the early 1970s, and it identified those human sources of it that contributed to an increased body-burden of lead.

Consequently, action was taken on many fronts. Baby foods were put into lead-free containers. The lead content of paint was regulated. Lead emissions from secondary smelters were controlled. The maximum lead content of gasoline was initially set at 0.77 grams per litre and has since been lowered even further, as I will explain later.

Let us examine the use of lead in paint since that is the area singled out by the Hon. Member's motion. The use of lead in paint in Canada is subject to the requirements under the Hazardous Products Act. I thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak to this motion, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—RECOMMENDED TELEVISION COVERAGE OF CRIMINAL TRIALS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, as you know the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms has in it a provision, Section 11(d), which sets out that any person charged with an offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal. Every single word in that particular section of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is significant and important. Perhaps it is impossible to pick out one phrase or one word that is more important than another but there is particular significance in the two words in that section "public hearing". Those are very important words and they are in the section for a reason. That reason is that all hearings and trials held over the years in our courts were not always held in public. In fact, traditionally many of them were held in private and the public had no access whatever to those courts or hearings.

It was as a result of that that some very unfortunate and frightening things went on behind closed doors of courts and hearing rooms which were not open to the public. One thing that comes to my mind is the history of intimidation, even the torture, of some witnesses to confess or to tell a story which perhaps was not true. In many cases it was not true at all. In the courts years ago there was behind closed doors this effort to fabricate evidence by torture and by other means that would not be exposed to the light of day because the public could not see what was happening.

Years ago in England those courts were known as the Courts of Star Chamber. It was because of the Courts of Star Chamber and the horrible reputation which they had, a reputation which I suggest would approach the courts of the Spanish Inquisition, which made the public and the legal system realize how significant and important it was to have open and public hearings. As a result that has become part of our civil liberties and it has become enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Until recently when we thought of public hearings and public court trials, we thought in terms of a court room which the public could come in and out of at will, subject to not disrupting proceedings. The door was open and members of the public could come into a court room, sit down, watch and listen and leave when they wanted to. That is what we have traditionally thought of as a public hearing.

Very recently as you are aware, Madam Speaker, there has been a change in the concept of a public hearing. With the new electronic media it is quite possible to have television in a court room or a hearing room so that not only a few members of the public, limited by the size of the seating capacity, but virtually every person in the world would have access and could be part of that public hearing process. That is a new concept, something which we have not come to as yet in this country.

We have seen in the United States on American cable television the broadcasting and televising of some rather interesting and perhaps lurid trials, some of them murder and some of them divorce trials. Some have caught a great deal of public attention. Through that publicity and through the fact that Americans have had the advantage of television in public hearings and in court rooms, we in Canada have started to become interested in this concept. Approximately six different royal commission hearings in Canada have been televised. The public has been able to watch and see on a daily basis, sometimes for many months, the proceedings of those royal commission hearings.

The result is that we in Canada now have a growing interest in the televising of court proceedings as part of this public hearing process that is guaranteed by our Charter of Rights. In June of this year the Law Reform Commission of Canada recommended that there be televised trials held in Canada on a two-year experimental basis. That was followed in July by recommendations by the Ontario Royal Commission, headed by Mr. Justice Thomas Zuber of the Ontario Supreme Court, who also recommended that, on an experimental basis for the public interest, there be televised proceedings of criminal justice trials. In August the Canadian Bar Association followed with a similar recommendation. A great deal of interest has been indicated. A great many recommendations have been made by at least three different investigating bodies.

It seems to me it is time for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to take a stand on this issue. I know that perhaps he is concerned about grandstanding in the courts. Perhaps he is concerned about what goes on in the House of Commons with television here. But, bearing in mind his own comments that the public has to know and find out about the criminal justice system, this is a method of doing it.

I hope that tonight the Parliamentary Secretary will tell us that the Minister of Justice will be taking a leadership role and recommending the institution in federal courts of television for trials, and also taking a leadership role in urging provincial Ministers of Justice and provincial Attorneys General to do the very same thing in provincial courts.

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to respond on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). The Hon. Member has raised many points with regard to the advantages of television coverage of criminal trials.

The question of electronic media access to the courts is a complex one. There are at least three elements that make it so. First is the degree and purpose of access; the question of which equipment is used; and the question of which courts should have this access. The complexity of the matter, as the Hon. Member has suggested, has been reflected and studied and yet remains to be studied.

In June of this year, the Law Reform Commission of Canada recommended that a national experiment be conducted to examine what effect, if any, the presence of the electronic media would have on participants in the criminal process, such as witnesses, lawyers, judges, and jurors. As an interim measure, the Law Reform Commission recommended that electronic media coverage be permitted immediately in criminal appeals, and that the use of audio recorders be allowed in criminal proceedings as a means of ensuring accuracy in the transmission of statements made in open court, but not for broadcast purposes.

The Ontario Courts Inquiry conducted by Mr. Justice Thomas Zuber of the Ontario Court of Appeal recommended, as the Hon. Member has suggested, amending the necessary Ontario legislation to permit the use of tape recorders in the court room as a method of taking notes. The Zuber inquiry called for electronic media access to the court rooms of Ontario for an experimental period of two years.

This past August a special committee, established by the Canadian Bar Association to examine the issue of cameras in the courts, released its recommendations which called for full media access to all appellate courts, including the Supreme Court of Canada. This recommendation was adopted by a wide margin by the National Council of the Canadian Bar Association. However, a further recommendation calling for a two-year trial program to give access to the electronic and photographic media to cover proceedings in Canadian trial courts was adopted by only a very slim margin.

The Minister believes that these are all very serious and even fundamental concerns which have been raised. Certainly he must consider the public's right to know, the freedom of the press, the educational value of broadcasting court proceedings, and even the opposition to the suggestion of this kind of television coverage.

Opponents often refer to the prejudice of the right of an accused to a fair trial, invasion of the privacy of defendants and victims, intimidation of witnesses, grandstanding and even advertising by counsel, the physical disruption caused by cameras in a court room, the sensationalization and distortion of proceedings.

Constitutional responsibility over the whole question of electronic media access to superior, district, and provincial courts lies with the respective provincial Governments. Nevertheless, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada is following the public debate on the matter, including the remarks of the Hon. Member tonight, in part because the question arises in relation to federally constituted courts as well. He awaits with great interest the outcome of the study by Chief Justice Clarke's committee which has been undertaken on behalf of the Canadian Judicial Council to look into the same matter.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—GOVERNMENT PROJECTS IN ST. JOHN'S EAST, NFLD./REQUEST FOR SPEEDY START TO PROJECTS

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I rise to elaborate further on the question which I put to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on August 13, 1987. It dealt with projects announced by the Government during the one-month period leading up to the by-election in St. John's East on July 20. We had some $33 million worth of projects which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) took great pains to try to convince the public were done in the ordinary course of government business.

If that were the case, I would expect that in the almost three months which have passed since that time we would have had $33 million per month or another $100 million worth of announcements of projects in St. John's East. We have not heard anything further on those announcements, and constituents in my riding are quite concerned about when those projects will in fact be started.

I understand that some work has been started on some of them. However, on August 13, I essentially asked for a report on when work would be available for the unemployed in Newfoundland, particularly on the projects to which I referred—a wharf restoration project in Long Pond, a project in Foxtrap for harbour improvements, the Bauline breakwater which was announced at a cost of $1.5 million, and the breakwater at Flat Rock which will cost $1.2 million.

I understand that there is some problem with these projects and fisheries improvements for $6 million in St. John's. I would like to have a firm commitment from the Government on when these projects will actually be undertaken.

I understand that these announcements were made in the ordinary course of government business, so one would anticipate that all studies had been done, that all preliminary work had been done, and that they were ready to start spending the money and commencing construction on these projects.

I would like the Parliamentary Secretary, in answer to my question, to outline the scheduling of these projects, particularly the ones referred to in my question on August 13—the breakwater in Bauline, the breakwater in Flat Rock, the Foxtrap harbour improvement program, and the wharf restoration in Long Pond at a cost of $6 million.

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) on behalf of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon).

No one in the House is more concerned about small craft harbours than myself because indeed I have many of them in my riding. The Government has now undertaken a massive harbour revitalization program to bring my harbours in Prince Edward Island, his in Newfoundland, and others across the country into a good state of repair.

I am pleased that the Hon. Member for St. John's East recognizes that in addition to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans providing essential harbours and services to the commercial fishermen of Newfoundland, there are also substantial employment benefits to fishing communities derived from the construction and annual maintenance of these harbours. Our Harbour Revitalization Program, which was announced by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans last June, has already committed over $3 million to projects at Flat Rock, Foxtrap, Outer Cove and Bauline in the riding of St. John's East. These projects are now in the engineering stage and will go to public tender and then proceed to construction.

In the Province of Newfoundland, there have now been 25 projects approved under the special program of a total value of over $20 million. While most of the projects are in the engineering stage, tenders have already been called on several projects and construction has started at Lower Island Cove and St. Bride's. Contracts for most of the remaining projects will be awarded prior to the 1988 construction season.

I might add that in addition to the Harbour Revitalization Program projects that have been announced for Newfoundland fishing harbours, the Minister has also approved some $11 million of repairs and construction at 120 Newfoundland fishing harbours from the Small Craft Harbours regular 1987-88 maintenance budget. Virtually all of that work is already under way. To date this brings the total of approved harbour work in the Province of Newfoundland to $31 million. I would conclude by saying that probably not since John Diefenbaker's Government has there been so much effort and money committed to revitalizing small craft harbours in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Before giving the floor to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar), I must say, looking at the gallery of the House of Commons, I have never felt so well protected. Should I become sick, I know I will be in good hands.

PUBLIC SERVICE—RECOGNITION OF PRINCIPLE OF WAGE PARITY/ADJUSTMENT MECHANISM

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, it gives me a certain amount of concern but also some pleasure to rise to speak on this issue because I think it is a very important one. As you have said, we may feel well protected but I think a profession that has been often neglected has been the nursing profession, not just in our country but in society in general.

Of course we have a very serious problem before us at the moment. I have asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski Cotret) if he would take action quickly because the Human Rights Commission made a decision in July which provided that registered nursing assistants should receive equal pay for work of equal value. Of course, that skewed the balance that had existed traditionally in the nursing profession. There had been a historical differential of 25 per cent in the pay rates of registered nurses and registered nursing assistants.

In 1985, the President of the Treasury Board suggested that there be joint bargaining negotiations. The registered nurses working for the federal Government at the time entered into those negotiations with good faith. They were quite happy to be a part of that joint negotiating team and to look at equal pay for work of equal value. However, since then, the Human Rights Commission decision has certainly put that out of balance, and I must say that the decision is retroactive to 1980.

We now have the situation of federal hospitals staffed and supervised by nurses who are in some cases actually getting paid less than the people they are supervising. I am quite sure that the Government would recognize the fact that this is a totally unacceptable and unjust situation. I think it requires immediate action.

The answer that has often been given is that the Government does not want to interrupt the process of collective bargaining. This is not the process of collective bargaining. We are talking about something that is totally out of whack at the moment. It must be corrected quickly.

Nurses are not a militant group. The fact that the nurses are present in the gallery of the House of Commons this afternoon tells us how deeply upset they have become about this whole situation and how they feel that they are being greatly mistreated. What we want is some way of looking at equalizing the pay differential.

In 1977 we had an arbitration decision involving the Wellesley Hospital. I recognize that is an Ontario decision but it established the right to the differential, and that it had in fact existed over the years. That decision is enough of a precedent that I would like the President of the Treasury Board to look at it and establish some kind of mechanism outside of the joint bargaining table in order to achieve equalization.

I cannot think of any other profession which would have tolerated this situation as long as this one has. We are talking about people responsible for the delivery of medication, implementation of doctor's orders, channelling patients into the proper rehabilitation areas, and looking after liaison with the families and friends of patients so that they understand the situation. They are doing all of that and at the same time supervising other people to make sure the work is being done, yet this is not recognized in their pay. Over the last week we have talked a lot about the rights of working people and their need for an equal voice. This situation is upsetting the whole health care delivery system. We know that if the nurses wanted to bring everything to a halt, they could do it. They do not want to do it. They want some justice in the decision-making process.

It took a great deal of thought on their part before they decided to go to work in jeans and T-shirts and so on instead of their professional garb. They have come to the House of Commons tonight to say: "This is what we are as professionals". They are saying that all they want is equal treatment. I urge the President of the Treasury Board to quickly put some kind of mechanism in place to bring this to a quick resolution.

I know the Government has said it will put the entire labour relations system out of wack. It seems to me that for many, many years other professions have managed to do that to get equal treatment. The time has come to look at our nurses and recognize their profession and the fact they are giving us quality care. It is fine to give them compliments but it is much more important to give them a reasonable pay cheque so that they can have a decent standard of living and respect the people they work for as well as the patients they are delivering care to.

I ask if the Government has come up with some kind of mechanism which will bring pay equalization to these nurses who work in institutions under the administration of the federal Government.

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for her interventions on this very important question. On September 29 the Hon. Member raised this question with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). He indicated that he not only appreciated her question but that it was a very important matter, one that he was very concerned and sincere about. He said:

> Hopefully we can come up with a solution to this problem because, as the Hon. Member recognizes, this would impact right across the country on various other areas as well.

A joint union-management initiative to study the implementation of equal pay for work of equal value service-wide within the federal Public Service was launched in March of 1985. This Government's initiative is not only the first voluntary proactive initiative taken by the employer under the Canadian Human Rights Act, but also the largest proactive equal pay study to be undertaken. I should say as well that the Government and the President of the Treasury Board are pleased that the public service unions are participating jointly in this activity.

The initiative is well under way. Currently 4,419 public service employees are completing questionnaires on the job functions each one of them performs. The data gathered through this process will be evaluated under the job evaluation factors of skill, effort, responsibility and working conditions to determine the working conditions and to determine the relative value of each job. The evaluation results will then be analysed in relation to the wages which have been negotiated or set out for each of the occupational groups within the Public Service.

The female-dominated hospital services group comprises a principal focus of the ongoing study. I would like to note that as a result of a complaint under the Canadian Human Rights Act this group recently received a wage adjustment to equalize their wages with the male-dominated general services group. Registered nursing assistants are members of this group and benefited from this wage settlement. The resulting wage increases to the registered nursing assistants has narrowed the salary relativity between registered nurses and RNAs.

The employer is sensitive to employees concerns about traditional reporting relationships and this particular matter is currently being examined. At the same time, we must recognize that traditional wage relativities may reflect the undervaluation of work performed predominantly by women, the issue which the Government is addressing through its equal pay initiatives. Upon the conclusion of the equal pay study targeted for the fall of 1988 the President of the Treasury Board will consider its recommendations and I am sure he will respond in an adequate manner.

The joint union-management initiative on equal pay for work of equal value will not solve all the labour issues we have within the public service, but it will address the very important issue of gender-based pay discrimination.

WOMEN

WAGE INEQUALITIES—IMPORTANCE OF EMPLOYMENT POLICY

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, according to a report from Labour Canada, the income gap between men and women became even wider in 1985. The number of women entering the labour market increased by 46.3 per cent between 1975 and 1985, compared with 15.3 per cent for their male colleagues.

Women working full and part time are paid only 59.6 per cent of what men are paid. It is also true that among women, 35 per cent are enrolled in professional degree and post-graduate courses, compared with 6.8 per cent of men. Only 16 per cent earn more than $25,000 annually, compared with 48 per cent of their male colleagues. The gap, measured in dollars, shows a difference in salary of $11,613 per year.

This report, Mr. Speaker, demonstrates the importance of employment equity programs and the need for an employment policy for women. When is the Government going to take action on this issue? Bill C-62, which has no teeth and no substance, is not going to give women their rightful place on the labour market and in our society.

MEDICAL CARE

AMBULANCE ATTENDANTS—EMERGENCY MEDICAL ATTENTION

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, when an ambulance arrives for a loved one who has suffered a massive heart attack one normally believes that the attendants on board can perform techniques to save him or her. Unfortunately, this is not so.

According to the Advanced Coronary Treatment Foundation of Canada, nearly half of the estimated 50,000 Canadians who have heart attacks each year die en route to hospital. Thousands of deaths, including those resulting from car accidents and other emergencies, could be avoided if paramedic care were available at the scene.

Ontario has expanded its emergency medical services so that a number of cities, including Ottawa, will have attendants this fall trained in one advanced life support skill.

Today and tomorrow the ACT Foundation will be holding a national competition in Toronto where emergency medical attendants from across Canada will perform life-saving procedures on victims of simulated heart attacks and accident-related emergencies. Their goal is to stimulate maximum public awareness of this critical and largely neglected area of emergency care. I wish them all very good luck.

CO-OPERATIVE DEVELOPMENT WEEK

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF CO-OP ATLANTIC

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the week following Thanksgiving is well established as Co-operative Development Week. It serves as an annual opportunity to appreciate the role of co-operative organizations and credit unions in community-based economic development. This year the week also provides an opportunity to assess the trade deal with the United States.

Members of Parliament recently received a letter from Co-op Atlantic in which we were told:

> Even if Canada could easily obtain the advantages which the negotiating team (sought), there would be solid ground for co-operators to oppose a Canada-U.S.A. free trade deal. In a unified continental market the odds favour large, vertically integrated, national and multinational corporations.
> It is in the nature of such organizations to aim for maximum profits and minimum social accountability. This places them in direct opposition to the democratic principles which co-operatives espouse. They operate through centralized, hierarchical control; co-ops operate through broadly-based community participation. They exploit resources to maximize present profits; co-ops stand for careful stewardship of resources in the future.

The members of Co-op Atlantic, Mr. Speaker, believe in a much larger Canada than does the Government. They favour beneficial fair trade with many partners rather than a bilateral deal which could limit other economic and trade options while concentrating corporate power at the expense of local ownership and control.

I urge the Parliament of Canada to listen to these words of wisdom from co-operatives in Atlantic Canada.

ORDER OF GREY NUNS—250TH ANNIVERSARY

TRIBUTE, THANKS, AND WISH FOR LONG LIFE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): This year we are celebrating the 250th anniversary of the Grey Nuns. We pay tribute to Marguerite d'Youville, the founder of the Order of the Grey Nuns. Her work, continued for two and a half centuries by a group of exceptionally dedicated women, quietly involved in meeting the daily needs of the community, has given us hospitals, schools, orphanages, and shelters for the needy.

Is there a family in Quebec that does not have at least one relative with the Grey Nuns? We have all known the excellent services they provide, and many of us still enjoy those services provided by the Grey Nuns. They are not dead. They will never die. Their material achievements may perish, but the education and philosophy of life these women have inculcated in our mothers, aunts, cousins, sisters and brothers that, Mr. Speaker, will not die. It is a lasting intellectual and social contribution that will continue to grow. I wish to pay tribute to our Grey Nuns and say a heartfelt thank you and long may they live!

TECHNOLOGY

OUTMODED PAY PROCESSING IN CERTAIN CANADA EMPLOYMENT CENTRES—NEED TO SPEED UP ISSUANCE OF PAY CHEQUES FOR WORKERS

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, we live in an age where modern technology is serving us in many ways. Thanks to advanced technology, repetitive tasks can be done at very high speed, and considering the state of our technology today, it is hard to believe that in 1987, some Canada Employment Centres continue to use a practically obsolete system for issuing pay cheques.

Mr. Speaker, our employment centres use a manual system for processing cards used to issue pay cheques to participants in the Manpower Adjustment Program. This extremely primitive system is responsible for delays of from 15 days to three weeks in issuing pay cheques. It is very inconvenient for the workers concerned, who, in many cases, cannot afford to wait that long for their pay cheque.

The CECs say they are snowed under, and they realize that the system penalizes the workers. An efficient way must be found as soon as possible to accelerate the processing of these pay cheques. Our solution might be to computerize the card processing system. In any case, this intolerable situation should not be allowed to go on. When will the responsible Minister take action and put an end to the delays in issuing Manpower Adjustment Program cheques?

TRADE

SUPPORT FOR CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, the recent signing of a free trade agreement is being positively received by most Canadians. As can be expected, it is being criticized by the "Old Democratic Party" and the Liberals.

I quote from The Globe and Mail of October 7, 1987:

> Canada's free trade deal with the United States looks stronger as we get to know it.
> It does not threaten Canada's social programs, including regional development schemes.
> It does not affect Canada's cultural industries and policies. It does not threaten the automobile industry. In fact, the essential feature of the auto pact—duty-free access to the United States—will be more secure in a comprehensive deal that also stiffens North American content requirements. It does not threaten agricultural marketing boards or the supply management system.
> These are things free trade does not do that its critics demanded that it should not do.

I commend The Globe and Mail for its objectivity.

MARINE SAFETY

OPPOSITION TO DESTAFFING WEST COAST LIGHT STATIONS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, opposition continues to grow to the Tory Government's plan to automate and destaff West Coast light stations.

The Coast Guard and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) seemed oblivious to the fact that no one, aside from them, wants this change.

Even the members of the B.C. Conservative caucus have joined municipal and regional leaders, fishermen, recreational boaters and lightkeepers in opposing this action. Last week the Minister of Transport rejected his B.C. colleagues' intervention, suggesting that they are even more irrational than the bureaucrats.

Last week the Coast Guard indicated that it will be terminating a lightkeeper position at Saturna Island, three months before its proposed elimination. Even more outrageous is the fact that this action was to take place 11 days before the first public meeting on the Leblond Commission report. Fortunately, they recognized their error and rescinded that action.

I hope it is not too late to drive home to the Minister of Transport one more time that opposition to his change is virtually unanimous. Therefore, I invite the Minister to come to Campbell River on October 29, to hear what the community feels about lighthouse automation and destaffing.

The Minister of Transport has hidden too long on this issue. Let him come to B.C. to hear firsthand what the people there feel.

FREE TRADE

TRIBUTE TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec Est): Mr. Speaker, let me express my pride with the initiators of the successful agreement in principle on free trade with the United States. We have gone through a first stage that is both meaningful and important. The Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, has written a new page in our history. He proved that in matters of trade no borderline can hold out against the will of nations striving to open up their horizons and seek new opportunities. By signing a free trade agreement with the world's largest trading partner, we are getting closer to first place.

The link that is being established with Mexico and also the 600 million Latin-Americans south of the United States will in my view enable us, in a matter of years, to negotiate and forge special links with that huge market in America.

Conservatives in Ottawa have realized, Mr. Speaker, that a government's role is to manage, legislate, lead, prevent and foresee. Thank you, Mr. Mulroney, for that courageous, audacious, well-thought, strategic step.

DOMINION, N.S.—THREATENED CLOSURE OF POST OFFICE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, last night I attended a meeting with the Mayor of Dominion and the town council to discuss the future of the post office in this small rural town in Cape Breton. It is clear that Canada Post wants to change the system of mail delivery in this town and rid itself of a full-time staff of postal employees.

The zeal of Canada Post to close this small rural post office is only surpassed by its apparent bungling of consulting and communicating with the residents of the Town of Dominion. The people of this community want to meet immediately with senior officials of Canada Post to determine the criteria being used to close this post office. They want to know what alternatives Canada Post has under active consideration. They also want to know the date the notification period officially begins and will there be continued home mail service? In essence, the people, as well as the representatives of the Town of Dominion, want to keep their post office open and open all year round. They do not appreciate the shabby and arrogant behaviour with which Canada Post and the Minister's office have been treating them in this regard.

EXTERNAL AID

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, one of the overlooked benefits of free trade is what it can do for the Third World. A Canada with a strong economy is a Canada strong enough to help develop under-developed countries. A Canada with only enough resources to maintain itself is not a Canada that can share with the Third World.

Only a Canada with enough trade to generate wealth over and above what 25 million people need for their own living can be a Canada able to help others.

Let us also see that free trade will not be confined to the Canada-U.S. trade agreement. Free trade is the greatest help that all developed countries can give to the Third World. What incentive is there for a country to develop if it does not find markets for what it produces?

If Canada and the developed world open our trading doors to countries still developing, we will do more to help the Third World than all the giveaways have ever done.

ROAD SAFETY

DE-ICING COSTS—USE OF ALTERNATIVES TO SALT ADVOCATED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that Governments can be held liable for the millions of dollars of property damage resulting from salt on the roads. The costly corrosive effects of salt on our cars, farmlands, streets and buildings, as well as its harmful effects on our soil, fish and wildlife, are now legally recognized. Even the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) admits: "Salt is known to have certain adverse environmental effects".

The federal Government should now launch a national campaign to convert away from salt to methanol or calcium magnesium acetate, known as CMA. A recent scientific report by Dunn and Schenk notes that using either substance would cut our winter de-icing costs in half. Both CMA and methanol improve traction, act as corrosion inhibitors, with no adverse effects to soil or water. What is more, both can be made from natural waste cellulose.

I made an offer as late as this past August for the Minister to begin test trials of these two road de-icers in my own riding of Skeena. The road linking Smithers, Terrace, Kitimat and Prince Rupert offers a variety of winter highway conditions. Existing vehicles can be used to apply CMA. Wood waste is readily available and Kitimat is home to the ocelot methanol plant.

In light of yesterday's Supreme Court decision and the fact that winter is fast approaching, I would urge the Government to undertake immediately a Canadian test program for CMA and methanol. They are cheaper, more efficient and a more environmentally sound method of ensuring safety on our winter roads for all Canadians.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PROCEEDINGS IN STANDING COMMITTEE ON LABOUR, EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it is sad to witness the continued government manipulation of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. First it blocked the Georges Grossmann and John Quigley investigations, then it eliminated the former chairman. Yesterday the Government turned again to its bullpen of parachute replacements who descended upon the committee and poisoned the atmosphere by demanding the immediate firing of the research director.

No legitimate reasons or evidence were offered. Instead, their reasons were rooted in innuendo, unsubstantiated allegations and blatant partisan motivations. Government members also moved a motion to bar any Member from utilizing our researchers until a thorough evaluation of our research needs is completed. It is a motion which, in my opinion, is irresponsible, undemocratic and an affront to our rights and privileges as Members of Parliament.

This is a committee that offered leadership and vision. Now, thanks to the Government, it has become a sad and depressing sight, showing what happens when a Government moves in to kill free speech and independence of thought in our committees. Our system and all Canadians are the losers because of it.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—VIEW OF UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday, in Somerset, New Jersey, the President of the United States, referring to the trade agreement between Canada and the United States, said, and I quote from the transcript:

> If past is prologue, we know what the results will be. Almost 200 years ago, trade barriers vanished in the United States part of this continent after the new Constitution took effect. Almost immediately, a stagnant national economy began to boom. The U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement is a new economic constitution for North America.

The President is really saying that the Canadian economy is becoming part of a North American economy under American direction. Why did the Government of Canada sign a trade agreement that represents a new economic constitution for North America, a trade agreement that is a sell-out of our independent economic identity on the northern half of this continent?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition continues to make outlandish statements and sow the seeds of fear and apprehension in the minds of Canadians. I think he recognizes— and he is a bit of a salesman himself—that this is an arrangement that has to be sold on both sides of the border.

Clearly, the United States administration, indeed, members of Congress, who believe in the liberalization of trade, will be out selling the package. I think the President of the United States was engaged in that particular effort during the process of the debate in Canada. I would hope that we might engage in an enlightened debate without the use of fear and without the use of exaggeration, but really sticking to the facts.

I invite the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to reread the document and to stick to the facts. Quite frankly, I think that Canadians are prepared to engage in an enlightened debate. I invite him to join in that process.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONTINENTAL RESOURCE POLICY QUERY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The outlandish statement, to use the words of the Deputy Prime Minister, that I cited was not the words of an anonymous American official. They were not even the words of Clayton Yeutter. They were not even the words of the Secretary of the Treasury, that intimate friend of the Minister of Finance. They were the words of the President of the United States.

You know, Mr. Speaker, in 1844 our American friends used the phrase "54/40 or fight". They wanted the border somewhere up around Prince Rupert. A year later, in 1845, our American friends coined the phrase "manifest destiny", which really meant that they wanted to run the whole continent. As late as 1952, under the Paley Commission, the United States coined a new vocabulary "resources for freedom". They wanted a continental energy policy. Now they have got it.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister why it is that after the Americans for 140 years have been trying to get a continental hegemony, a continental resource policy the Government yielded to a continental resource policy rather than giving us a Canadian national resource and energy policy in order to build our economy on those resources.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the conclusions of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition are dead wrong. The fact of the matter is we have had an Auto Pact agreement in this country for 22 years, which is really a free trade arrangement.

Mr. Broadbent: No, it is not.

Mr. Mazankowski: Is he suggesting we are less Canadian by virtue of the fact that we have had a free trade arrangement in automobiles which has seen exports grow from $1.2 billion to $64 billion; which has seen jobs increase from 80,000 to 130,000; which has seen investment increased by about $10 billion in the last 10 years? Are we less Canadian as a result of that, Mr. Speaker? Is that the position of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is wrong if he cites the Auto Pact as an example of free trade. It is a sectoral agreement guaranteeing Canadian participation, Canadian jobs, Canadian employment, and a Canadian share of the auto market.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What this Government has permitted is a breaking of the East-West connection of this country in terms of energy. Now the energy of this country is directed south. That is exactly what has happened under this policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CULTURAL SOVEREIGNTY—METHODS OF APPLYING AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, according to documents that are still being revised and made available by the U.S. Trade Representative, the Free-Trade Agreement gives the United States the right to claim compensation. If future steps taken by Canada in the cultural area harm their interests—I am directing that question to the Deputy Prime Minister—why did the Government sign an agreement that enables the Americans to retaliate against us if we take steps to protect our culture? How did we get ourselves in that situation, in view of the fact that the Prime Minister stated on several occasions that culture was not being negotiated with the United States?

• (1425)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada signed no such document to which the Hon. Member refers, and he is putting a misinterpretation on it.

While we are in the process of quoting, I would draw attention to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and his book, Politics of Purpose, in which he talks about where people stand. It was a rather expedient conversion on his part. This is what he was prepared to do vis-à-vis the United States. Perhaps he would like to explain this to the House and to the Canadian people. On page 183 it states:

> We might wish to export water not for money (as we sold power under the Columbia River Treaty), but in return for access to your markets.

Is that still the position of the Leader of the Opposition?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

An Hon. Member: Turn-about Turner.

CULTURAL POLICIES—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): The Prime Minister, the Minister for International Trade, and the Minister of Communications have stated that our cultural industries would be protected in any trade negotiations. With good reason Canadians have been hesitant to trust the Government. We now know that the Government has made changes in the postal subsidies, it has removed tariffs on our sound recordings and printed material, and now there is a revised October 8 document which the Deputy Prime Minister would like us to believe is not a real document. Nonetheless, that document does state, "However, the U.S. retains the right to redress any adverse commercial effects of any future cultural measures enacted by Canada".

In the absence of the Minister of Communications, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Why did the Minister agree to have our cultural policies frozen? Why did the Minister and the Government agree to a U.S. veto over any new Canadian cultural initiatives?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is another instance of the misinterpretation of a particular section of the agreement. That is not what was agreed to. That is not what that section states. What it does state is exactly what is in place now. Whether this country has a Liberal Government, an NDP Government, or a Conservative Government now, and if it takes action in providing a subsidy in any cultural area, that is distorting trade between the two countries. The other country can take action on that. But there are two safeguards that are introduced in the agreement which are not presently in place.

One is that any disagreement would be referred to a dispute settlement body. The second point is that under the current U.S. law they would take an action under Section 301 which has no monetary limitation to it. This particular provision sets a specific monetary limitation to any action that could be taken.

FILM DISTRIBUTION INDUSTRY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that Mr. Jack Valenti got to Mr. Reagan again. The Minister answers in the same manner in which he tried to destroy, through capital cost allowance, the film distribution industry in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Finestone: I would like to know how can Canadians trust you and the Government?

My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Is it not true that any new Canadian film distribution policy to improve our meagre 3 per cent share of the market will now be subject to retaliation under this new deal? If this is not the case, will you allow your Minister of Communications to table her new Bill—

Mr. Speaker: Naturally, the Chair is hesitant to interrupt the Hon. Member. But I do wish to remind Hon. Members that, in this Chamber, unlike some others, it has been the tradition, and one that Hon. Members wish to maintain, that we do not refer to other Members in a personal way. I would ask that the Hon. Member be careful.

• (1430)

Mrs. Finestone: I will rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker, to make it clear.

Mr. Speaker: I think the question is clear enough.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me respond if I could to the Hon. Member's question. First, I want to make it absolutely clear that we have strengthened our protection against U.S. action under the free trade agreement from what it is today, under the existing law today. That is a fact which is indisputable.

I would like to make a second point to the Hon. Member. She casts some allegations on our attitudes toward the film industry and other cultural industries. I ask her to go back two Budgets and see, I think it was, something somewhere between $50 million and $100 million that we provided to support the growth and development of that industry in Canada.

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member does not like to hear the truth, but the fact is that that money has been expended in support of that industry.

Mrs. Finestone: Oh, oh! Bring in the film Bill.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot hear what the Hon. Member is saying.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. President Reagan clearly understood the direction of this new agreement when he said that it was heading toward "a new economic constitution for North America". I also add immediately that spokespersons for the Mexican Government also described it that way. They said that the Mexicans would "never enter into such an agreement with the United States".

Does the Government of Canada not understand that when it proposes such major changes in energy, in services, and in investment it is giving up fundamental aspects of our sovereignty, that is to say, our own national right to control our national destiny? Will it come to its senses and put an end to this deal now?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, rather than the Hon. Leader of the NDP listening to Mexicans, perhaps he might start listening to Canadians.

For example, the Automotive Industry Association of Canada summed up its result as follows: "This is a tremendous opportunity for the automotive industry". The chairman of the Manitoba Hog Marketing Board is pleased with the Government, and says: "We have a major market in the U.S. and I am very glad that we are able to expand it". David Fulton, President of the Manitoba Cattle Producers Association, said: "The agreement would mean the end of current beef tariffs between the two countries".

Re fishing, Mr. Cummings said: "The most important aspect to us is a dispute resolving mechanism that we got. It is a hell of a gain for Canada". I could go on.

He should listen to the Premier of the Province of Quebec. He should listen to the energy sector and the textile sector. These people, speaking on behalf of their particular industries, believe that the free trade arrangement that was negotiated by the Government is good for Canada and good for their industries.

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Minister that the people of Canada expect Ministers of the Crown to answer the questions they are asked.

If the Deputy Prime Minister does not understand this agreement, I can tell him that President Reagan understands, the Mexicans understand, many provincial Premiers understand, and we understand. We are not going to yield our sovereignty in this country to the likes of that Government over there.

ROLE OF PROVINCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Deputy Prime Minister will not deal with that question, there is another important aspect of the agreement for which his own Government has provided. He will find it on page 35, and it says the following:

> The parties to this Agreement shall ensure that all necessary measures are taken in order to give effect to its provisions, including their observance,—

And it goes on to say:

> —by state, provincial and local governments.

Since the clause I have just quoted says that the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States are required to get the appropriate agreements by state and provincial Governments, and since there are major changes in services and energy, which are clearly within the constitutional domain of the provinces, is the federal Government now going to live up to its obligation to get agreement from the provinces for such fundamental changes? That is the issue.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is talking about energy, I would refer him to the Premiers of the three energy producing provinces, namely, Mr. Getty, Mr. Vander Zalm, and Mr. Devine. They all agree with the thrust of the free trade proposal because it is good for the energy sector and it is good for Canada. Why doesn't the Hon. Leader of the NDP start paying a little attention to what is good for western Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: He knows what is good for Oshawa, and we support him on that. Why doesn't he support westerners for a change?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I say to the Deputy Prime Minister that as a former car dealer he knows the Auto Pact was not a free trade pact. Any day of the year they would put that in place in western Canada, we would support it 100 per cent. We want its investment protection safeguards.

PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): One last question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister has decided to ignore the provinces altogether. According to the Agreement with the United States, the federal Government has an obligation to consult directly to obtain the support of the provinces.

Does the federal Government intend to act according to the principles of the Agreement, yes or no? That is the question.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, during the course of the negotiation I think that the federal Government set a tremendous precedent in terms of consultation, in keeping the provinces and in keeping the sectors informed, and even offering to keep the opposition Parties informed on progress involving the talks. That will certainly continue.

It is very interesting that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party talks about how great the Auto Pact is. Maybe he would like to explain to the Canadian people why his Party opposed it in 1965.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Mr. Broadbent: Get your act straight. Have an election on it, Don; go ahead.

Mr. Mazankowski: Tell the truth for a change.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Don't forget Hatfield is more popular than Mulroney.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

CANADIAN CULTURAL POLICY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. I was about to comment that there have been two Tory Leaders who put their faith in free trade to the electoral test in the last two months, and we know what has happened to them; they don't even have a seat to stand on.

The Minister of Finance was talking about misinformation. I want to quote directly from the statement released by the United States Government, which is a partner in this particular trade deal. It says: "The U.S. retains the right to redress any adverse commercial effects of any future cultural measures enacted by Canada".

My question is very simple. Does that not clearly demonstrate that as far as the Americans are concerned they now have the right to retaliate against any future Canadian cultural policy? Does that stand not fly in the face of every assertion made by the Prime Minister, by the Minister for International Trade, and by the Minister responsible for culture?

In other words, we have given the Americans the right to hold a veto over any future cultural policy enacted by the Government.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely wrong. We have the right as the Government to do whatever we want to further our culture in this country.

It says very clearly in the agreement that culture is exempted from the agreement in terms of investment. It is exempted in the agreement under the specific chapter on culture.

The United States are saying that they reserve the right under the GATT which they have today. If the Hon. Member thinks back to Bill C-58, they took some actions in retaliation on that as well.

Nothing has changed. Culture is not a subject of this agreement.

• (1440)

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, so much for the claim of the Government that it has secured access for Canadian goods and services. The Government has obviously gained nothing if the Government says the situation has stayed the same. The Minister says we cannot have the status quo. You have entrenched the status quo in this agreement.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Which way do you want to go?

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON JOBS IN ONTARIO

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask another question about misinformation from the Minister. The Ontario Government tabled yesterday a study undertaken with the private sector that shows over 400,000 jobs in Ontario alone will be affected by the free trade deal. That far exceeds the 300,000 some odd jobs which the Economic Council predicts might be gained. My question is for the Minister of Finance.

When will the Government provide this House with a clear and proper evaluation of where the new jobs will be and where the job losses will be? When are you going to start telling the truth to the Canadian people as to who will win or lose under this deal?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I might go back to the Hon. Member's preamble on culture, which way does the Member want it? First, he says that he wants us to have full access and make culture part of the agreement. Then he says "No, I don't want to have culture as part of the agreement."

Mr. Axworthy: No.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I do not know which way he wants to go.

Mr. Axworthy: That is your problem.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Sometimes when you are riding the fence it is dangerous.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As to the Member's question, I have the same article from which he was reading. If he reads down further in the article it says "It will be wrong to say that all of these 400,000 people will be affected".

Mr. Axworthy: How many will be affected? Tell us.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In other words, people are saying there will be some industries that will be subject to greater competition.

Mr. Axworthy: Tell us about it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): But a lot of those industries will improve their competitiveness. They will not see jobs lost. We will see that, as a result over-all, jobs will be created. The Economic Council knows that. We will have updated studies on this so that the Hon. Member can make some judgments. I hope that he will come to some honest judgments on the conclusions reached by others.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR COMMITTEE ON STANDING ORDERS

Mr. Speaker: I want to bring to the attention of Members the presence in the Gallery of the Newfoundland and Labrador Committee on Standing Orders, lead by the Hon. James Russell.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

ENERGY—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—PROVINCIAL RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Section 92(a) of the Constitution clearly gives the provinces ownership rights over natural resources including energy. That includes the right to determine the rate of development, production and sale of a resource. What the trade deal states is that Canada will not impose any quantitative trade or cost restrictions on energy exports. At page 35 it states that Canada will take all necessary measures to provide permanent and full U.S. access.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that this deal attempts to remove provincial resource rights and that their consent as provinces must be obtained for this deal to have any validity whatever in law?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): The answer is a categorical no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fulton: That is very interesting, Mr. Speaker.

ACCESS TO GASOLINE SUPPLIES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister.

How can the federal Government promise in this agreement to give proportional access to the U.S. in cases of shortages of supply? Let me make it abundantly clear what that means. When the next oil crisis comes, which will come as surely as the sun rises, a driver, a car owner, in Prince Rupert or Montreal, being told that there are restrictions on his or her access to gasoline will not be able to fill up, but will know that at the same time U.S. drivers south of the border can fill up on Canadian gasoline. You tell me what the hell kind of a deal that is.

Mr. Speaker: I hope Hon. Members could constrain their enthusiasm. I might say to the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister that in his reply perhaps he could restrain any temptation to reply in kind.

Mr. Broadbent: That is the kind of deal Mexico wouldn't sign.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, before the Hon. Member starts swearing at me, perhaps he might learn a little bit about the energy business. I know he is just a new critic.

An Hon. Member: They dumped the old one.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I can best answer the Member's question by quoting a Senator from western Canada, Senator Olson who, I think, put the energy provisions of the free trade arrangement into perspective. If the House will allow me, I will quote because I think it should bring some objectivity to the debate. The Hon. Senator said: "We were committed to share with the United States before. We have been committed to sharing our energy resources, particularly oil with the United States since 1974. If there was a shortage, there is nothing new in that. I also know very well, as does the Leader of the Government, that if we got into a very serious situation where there was a shortage that required us to share our natural gas flow with the consumers in the United States, we would do that. In any event, there is no question about that. So what is so great about that? I have read the agreement and there is nothing in it that advances us from where we are today".

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. With all due respect to the Deputy Prime Minister and the Hon. Senator, they are both wrong.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLellan: Ontario, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland have all said that prior to the signing of the free trade agreement there was no substantive discussion on energy with the provinces.

Why did the Government on such important issues as non-discriminatory access to our energy supplies support a proportional sharing of our resources? Why did the federal Government not discuss these items with the provinces or at least even mention to the provinces that these were on the table?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thought I answered that question yesterday. Further to my response yesterday, the Deputy Trade Commissioner was quoted on CBC news last night as saying that he, in fact, did provide the energy briefings himself. Premier Devine said: "Energy has always been on the table because it is a big trading item. For someone to say that we didn't have oil and gas on the table or it wasn't in the negotiations is simply not accurate".

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, there is a big difference on items such as this that are in the first free trade agreement with the United States and changing the carburetor on your car. I am talking about substantive issues. It is obvious that the Americans wanted this in the free trade agreement.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Why, Mr. Speaker, did the Government have a hidden agenda on energy with the United States when signing this free trade agreement, completely oblivious to everybody else outside the Government and without any consultation with any other party whatever?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member was an ardent proponent of the National Energy Program. There was only one problem with that program, it didn't work.

All that is being done here—and I am glad to see a smile on the Hon. Member's face because I think he acknowledges that fact—is enshrining the policy that was enunciated by this Government in 1985.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

PROTECTION FOR WAGE EARNERS, SUPPLIERS, AND CONSUMERS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As the Minister knows, the bankruptcy laws in this country are hopelessly outdated and leave little or no protection for wage earners, suppliers, and consumers.

In the new legislation which the Minister is presently contemplating, will he put protection in for wage earners, suppliers, and consumers?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is certainly the intent. We hope to bring forward legislation in the near future which will provide wage earner protection. We will have better consumer bankruptcy legislation, making it simpler and cheaper. We are exploring ways in which suppliers can be protected from what are close to fraudulent practices that occur all too often under the laws that exist today.

TRADE

SERVICE INDUSTRY—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The United States scored a great triumph over Canada in negotiating a free trade agreement in services. The U.S. is a service exporting country and Canada is not. The service industry accounts for two-thirds of our economy and generates 70 per cent of our employment. Did the Minister secure provincial agreement to free trade in services which are under provincial jurisdiction?

• (1450)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister have said, there has been extensive discussion on all aspects of this agreement with the provinces, both at the First Ministers' level as well as at the officials' level. The Hon. Member should reverse her statistics and try to put a positive view on it. Yes, a large part of our economy and of our employment is dependent on services. However, could she not look at it a little positively and say in this open market with the U.S. maybe we could export some of those services?

The people I have spoken to since the agreement was signed, many of whom are in the service industry, are quite excited about the opportunities now afforded them because they can export services and follow up on some of their products with their service people to ensure they get the follow-up service required to make that market work for them.

PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION OVER SERVICE JOBS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as I said, the U.S. exports services and we do not. Some 83 per cent of all service jobs are held by women. Did you negotiate—

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member has an important question and I ask her, as I have asked others, to refrain from using the personal pronoun "you".

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, what provisions did the Government make to protect those jobs which are under provincial jurisdiction, 83 per cent of which are held by women?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I refer the Hon. Member to the Economic Council Review which discussed a number of aspects of the outcome of a free trade agreement. One of the conclusions they drew was that women would benefit more—

Mr. Rodriguez: They did not study the service sector.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Maybe I better address this entirely to you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I want to assure the Hon. Minister I would certainly listen, as will other Hon. Members, please.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is from a background paper from the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women: "A free trade arrangement with the United States would improve economic prospects for Canadian women". The Economic Council of Canada agreed with that conclusion and said women would benefit more from a free trade agreement than would men.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WATER RESOURCES

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Author!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. McDermid: Is that an autographed copy, John?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He quoted from my 1968 best seller—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —Politics of Purpose.

Mr. McDermid: You can get it for 39 cents.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we have been trying to move this book for 20 years.

Mr. de Cotret: We understand why.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The speech from which the Deputy Prime Minister quoted, using a technique which unfortunately the Prime Minister uses from time to time and which does not reflect its full import when it was made before the U.S. Chamber of Commerce on water policy, had as its thesis—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will get to the question. At page 176 the thesis was: "Hold on a minute!", I said to those Americans down in Washington.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On your knees!

Mr. Speaker: I might say to Hon. Members that I know it was a long time ago but I shall bend the rules of relevancy. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I will do you a similar courtesy when you write your book.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I said:

> Hold on a minute! We say there is Canadian water, and there is American water. (And there is Mexican water), but we do not like the new vocabulary which calls our water continental water.

That was the thesis of that speech before the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): But then you would sell it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It was supplemented by a speech to the Marine Club in Toronto entitled "A Canadian Water Policy", found in the same book. I commend it to the hon. gentleman and ask him if his reference to water today is an indication that water is part of the continental energy policy agreed to by the Government?

Mr. McDermid: You like the colour of the book, too: red, white and blue.

However, there was another very interesting quote which—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: —is very closely associated with this point. He said, in connection with the quote I used earlier, at page 183:

> I don't want to sound tough. I hope I am merely being realistic.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Now that is a far better quote. I commend it to the House.

CANADIAN RESOURCES POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman, who comes from Alberta, not admit that a better resource policy for Canada, and by implication he has included water in this policy, is a policy that allows us to build up our manufacturing base, particularly for new industry, around our resources—

Mr. McDermid: That is exactly what we are doing.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —rather than allow those resources to be swept into a continental market? Would that not be a better policy?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, what is important and what this Government has tried to do is create a climate conducive to the development of our energy resources. That is good for western Canada, indeed for the whole nation. It is good for the west and it is good for Ontario.

Why does the Hon. Member continue to insist upon going back to the relics of the past? I know when he was out of politics he was not a very fond admirer of the National Energy Program. What he is advocating today is obviously another flip-flop. He wants to go back to the old days of regulation, central control—

Mr. Frith: Not a policy made in Washington.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and an invasion of the rights of the provinces.

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORT TAX

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will know that page 34 of the preliminary transcript of the free trade agreement specifically continues an egregious American protectionist measure, namely, the 15 per cent softwood lumber export tax. The Deputy Prime Minister knows that his Government promised Canadians that tax would be lifted as part of a free trade deal. Therefore, can he assure Canadians that his Government has formally proposed and the American Government has formally acknowledged Canada's desire to negotiate the end of this tax?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member to point out where this Government said that with the negotiations would come the end of the 15 per cent tax on exports of softwood lumber to the U.S. What is taking place at the present time is negotiations between the federal Government and the provinces towards establishing replacement measures in the provinces to get rid of that tax. That is what is going on right now. The agreement ensures that it will not happen again, that is for sure.

• (1500)

CLOSURE OF SAWMILLS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Government knows that the 15 per cent duty has already cost the operations of several sawmills in northern Ontario. Indeed, another one is closing today which will mean the loss of some 300 jobs because it is going on indefinite lay-off status.

The Prime Minister announced a program of adjustment for areas which are negatively affected by free trade. Will those mills which closed as a result of the preparatory concessions made by the Government be compensated and receive assistance under that program?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were fair and looked into the mill closings, of which I have a record here, he would learn that the mills which have closed down had been operating for quite a period of time at a loss. They were inefficient mills. Softwood lumber production is clipping along at a record rate this year. These mills did not close down because of the 15 per cent sales tax.

When that 15 per cent tax is returned to the province it is permissible for the province to use that money to help the workers who are displaced when mills close down.

IMPACT OF FEDERAL GRANTS TO MATANE PAPERMILL ON OTHER PAPERMILLS—OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH NEW PAPERMILL

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for regional development. Since Abitibi Price's Kénogami factory at Jonquière is investing $150 million in equipment to produce supercalendered fine paper, the same grade that would be produced at Matane but in this instance, without federal subsidy, could the Minister inform the House whether market studies now being analyzed by our senior officials have shown there is room for a new paper mill producing the same product, and is the Government considering the impact federal subsidies to the paper mill in Matane might have on other, existing paper mills, including the one at Kénogami with its 1,200 employees?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that all the necessary sectorial studies that are customarily carried out for projects submitted to DRIE, to ensure there is a market and a demand that can accommodate the business that is to be subsidized in some way or another, either through existing programs or through special subsidies.

These studies have been completed and are, of course, part of the dossier on which an announcement will be made very shortly.

ENERGY

FREE TRADE—REQUEST FOR DETAILS ON HYDRO-ELECTRIC POWER

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of Oral Question Period, the Deputy Prime Minister has been referring to the energy question like a self-styled expert. I would therefore like to ask him for some clarification with respect to hydro power.

I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister—on page 17 of the Agreement, Canada has agreed to eliminate a discriminatory price test on electricity exports. Will this section allow the Goverment of Quebec and more specifically, Hydro Quebec, to go on charging the Americans three times as much as it charges Quebec consumers? Will it also allow Hydro Quebec to cut rates for the benefit of regional development? Could the Deputy Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance perhaps explain?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Premier of the Province of Quebec has made it very clear—

Mr. Lapierre: He wasn't there. You were there.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will continue my answer if the Hon. Member will permit me. The Premier of the Province of Quebec has made it very clear that he supports this agreement in every way. He thinks it is going to be very good for both Quebec and Canada.

With regard to the specific question, there is nothing which will prohibit Hydro Quebec or any other hydro company from offering rates in their province which are conducive to development in that particular province. They can sell at whatever the market will bear in the United States. If they are short-term sales, they may sell at low prices or high prices.

Mr. Axworthy: You had better reread the agreement.

FREE TRADE ACCORD—ENERGY—CUSTOMS BARRIERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance stated that this agreement would change nothing to the regulatory practices in the energy area. I just do not understand how he could have said that yesterday, after having signed an agreement which in part reads: "Both sides have agreed to prohibit restrictions on imports or exports, including quantitative restrictions, taxes, minimum import or export price requirements or any other equivalent measure". Could the Minister repeat what he said yesterday, that is, that the agreement would only mean a removal of the trade barriers? Does he not feel that regulatory practices will be affected?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with that. Hydro Quebec, which is the subject of the Hon. Member's question, can set rates for the Province of Quebec. If it wants to enter into a contract with New Hampshire or New York State it can enter into a long-term contract with electric power commissions in—

Mr. Ouellet: At what price?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): At whatever price they can negotiate with the purchaser on the other side.

Mr. Axworthy: But it can't be discriminatory.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise that the time for Question Period has ended. I notice that the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) is rising. I will try to ensure that she is heard tomorrow.

The Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) on a question of privilege.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

STATEMENT BY MINISTER—FREE TRADE BRIEFING

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of remarks made today by the Deputy Prime Minister. He has led the House and the people of Canada to believe that the Government has done its best to offer briefings to inform the Opposition about the details of the free trade agreement.

It was my job to line up some briefers for the Ontario Liberal caucus last night. We approached two officials who were involved in the trade talks to brief the Ontario Liberal caucus on the details. Late yesterday afternoon we received word that they were unable to do so because they did not have Privy Council permission to do so.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Hopkins: The Cabinet did not want officials to appear before the Ontario Liberal caucus to brief Liberal opposition Members.

Therefore, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) misled the House this afternoon when he said that the Government is trying to keep the Opposition informed. He knows full well that the briefing he offered to the Leader of the Opposition previous to the agreement was on the condition that it be confidential to the Leader of the Opposition. That does nothing for the public view. It does nothing for the members of the caucus of the Official Opposition. The Cabinet is refusing to give information to members of the Opposition and the Parliament of Canada about the free trade agreement and the Deputy Prime Minister should not be standing in his place misleading the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is a point of order. It is a rather unusual outburst from a gentleman for whom I have a great deal of regard. I hope he would want to reconsider the statements he has made.

Ms. Copps: It's true.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, if there is a point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), then let us hear it too and I will deal with it at the same time.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Are you the Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can assist Hon. Members. This is not a point of order. It comes to the Chair and the House as a question of privilege. I am having some difficulty finding a question of privilege. It is a complaint; it is an argument. There may very well be other places to which the Hon. Member could take the argument. I will hear the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), but I do not think we need to spend a prolonged period of time on this, at least at this time under a question of privilege.

Mr. Rossi: Let's get the truth.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it would not be my intention to prolong this discussion. However, the Hon. Member knows that we did offer, during the course of the negotiations, confidential briefings to the Leaders of the New Democratic Party and the Official Opposition. That was turned down and that is fair ball.

I have been in Opposition as well as in Government. I think the Hon. Member recognizes that it is not proper to offer briefings to one Party and not the other. That is a long-established rule which the Government employs. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that under the aegis of a standing committee where there would be members of all Parties in attendance, we would certainly arrange to have briefings at any time. I think that can be arranged.

We hope to convene the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade very soon so that it can be seized with this issue and all the details can be examined in full. However, I say to the Hon. Member that if he is a member of a standing committee that wants to be enlightened on certain aspects, I am certain that under the aegis of an all-party agreement that can be arranged.

POINT OF ORDER

STATEMENT BY MEMBER

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we are one of the strongest trading nations in the world. One of our largest untapped markets today is mainland China. China is our second largest customer for Canadian grain producers and is one of our oldest and most important customers. Not only are the Chinese good customers, they have become good friends over the years. We have established a respectful relationship which is friendly and cordial.

I submit that nothing but real harm to our relations with mainland China could result if we allow disparaging remarks in the House that show disrespect to that country while at the same time showing a real lack of sensitivity—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is rising on a point of order. He may very well have a valid point, but I must remind him that it is not a point of order, but a point of argument.

Someone may or may not have said something in the Chamber to which the Hon. Member takes exception but, unless the Hon. Member can quickly give some direction to the Chair as to where his comments are proceeding, I do not see it as a point of order, at least so far.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, it happened twice in the House. The first time I overlooked it.

I refer you to page 9912 of Hansard where the Leader of the New Democratic Party said:

> The Minister, in addition to his colleague last week, must be tuned into Radio Peking—

I suggest that that is not only disparaging to Mainland China, it is very ignorant and disparaging to ethnic Chinese Canadians. I think it is bigoted and should be withdrawn. That is my point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary's point is specifically that, according to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, a comment by the Leader of the New Democratic Party amounts to a bigoted comment and ought to be withdrawn.

In view of that position taken by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, I would of course hear from someone from the New Democratic Party. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is seeking the floor.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing offensive about referring to Radio Peking. There is nothing whatsoever offensive about that particular remark.

We know that China is a tremendous customer for Canadian grain and potash. Any advertising of that radio station might be a positive feature.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I submit to the House that the Parliamentary Secretary's statement is absolutely mischievous and provocative, and is designed to cause harm to the Leader who meant no harm at all. The Hon. Member should withdraw his nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: This is not the first time or perhaps the last when Hon. Members on both sides feel they wish to air, through a point of order or a question of privilege, what they believe is a grievance.

While the Chair certainly accepts a certain amount of latitude in these matters, I must indicate to the House that this is not a point of order. It may well be a complaint and I would ask the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to perhaps have some discussion with other Hon. Members.

I think the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) clearly indicated that all Hon. Members agree that whatever language is used in this place, it certainly ought not be intentionally used to slight any of Canada's friends or any Canadians of whatever ethnic background in this country. With that, I think we can leave the subject.

PETITIONS

GOVERNEMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petitions Nos. 332-2973, 332-2977, and 332-3096.

FERMI II NUCLEAR REACTOR—REVIEW PROCESS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from 250 petitioners drawn from all parts of the constituency, particularly from Amherstburg, La Salle, Malden, Harrow and southern parts of Essex—Windsor. They are deeply concerned with respect to the Fermi II nuclear plant which has a terrible safety record. They suggest that it poses a clear and present danger to their lives and their property. Due to the abysmal record of accidents at the plant, they petition the Government to take active measures to ensure that a joint procedure is established to review this, involving both Canadians and Americans, before Fermi II is permitted to go to full operation.

REQUEST FOR TOUGH LEGISLATION DEALING WITH PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to present a petition signed by 306 residents of Kitchener and the Waterloo region. These 306 signatures added to the 1,325 which I presented on August 19, brings the total number of signatures to 1,631 petitioning the Government to bring forward its tough legislation against pornography.

OPPOSITION TO THE ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a duly certified petition from a number of residents, mostly from Ganges, British Columbia, who are very concerned about the danger posed by the presence of nuclear powered or nuclear armed vessels in Canadian ports. Considering the danger to the environment and Canadian citizens, they call upon the Government not to purchase nuclear-powered submarines for Canada.

OPPOSITION TO DESTAFFING WEST COAST LIGHTHOUSES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition to the House from residents of the central coast of British Columbia. They petition the Government to stop its wrong-headed policy of automating and destaffing lighthouses in British Columbia. The petitioners point out that they depend for safety on those lighthouses and are absolutely opposed to their destaffing and automation and the reduction of safety services on the coast of British Columbia.

• (1520)

The petitioners are thoroughly in favour of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) getting himself out to Campbell River, British Columbia, on October 21 to hear the concerns of those citizens firsthand.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Doug Lewis (for Minister of State (Finance)) moved that a Ways and Means motion respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges, to give effect to the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, laid upon the table on Friday, October 2, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Time Allocation

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-86

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, under Government orders, you will note that we have on the Order Paper a motion for time allocation. Immediately prior to moving that time allocation motion, I would like to inquire once more if there is any disposition on the part of the opposition Parties to expedite debate. The Government is prepared to complete second reading, to move into Committee of the Whole House and to complete third reading this evening in an effort to pass this very important Bill. We are concerned and we want to get the parties back to the bargaining table. We want to prevent any further violence on the picket lines and we want to keep the mail moving. I would like to ask once more of the opposition Parties, if I may, prior to moving this motion, if there is any disposition to expedite debate so that we can complete third reading of this Bill tonight?

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, as much as we are not happy with the contents of Bill C-86, we believe we have reached a stage where we could probably better put our points across by moving amendments. To do this, we would welcome moving to committee stage.

Because of the language of the Minister, I do not know if he is still swinging the sword of Damocles of time allocation over our heads. I would urge him not to do that because this would necessitate a two-hour debate on procedure which, in my view, is meaningless. I would rather discuss the substance of the Bill. It would probably take longer if we go through time allocation. That is where we are in the Liberal Party.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, we will not be co-operating with the Government. We believe this legislation is not balanced. It is not fair. The Government has the ability to move time allocation, and if that is the action it wishes to take it can take it.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of my colleague from the Liberal Party. Regretfully, I move:

> That, in relation to Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services, one further sitting day be allotted to the second reading stage of the Bill; and
> That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on the day allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated just a few moments ago, we do not believe this is fair legislation. I think there is an attempt by the Government to railroad this legislation through the House of Commons. It is unfortunate that that is the case. Our Party has indicated in our speeches in the House the areas on which we believe there should be amendments to make this legislation more fair and equal in its treatment of both management and the workers. To date we have not received a response from the Government to indicate which amendments it is likely to accept and which amendments it is going to reject.

We would hope that in the two-hour time period we have now that the Ministers of the Government will rise in the House of Commons and give us some indication of whether or not they will be open to amendments to this legislation. I have already spoken to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) and told him what areas of the legislation we believe should be amended in order to make it more fair and compatible and more acceptable to both sides in the dispute.

Having said that, we do believe that as long as postal workers have the right to strike, as they have under the law of this country, the Government should allow the dispute to continue or, even more constructively, should allow Canada Post to negotiate. As I said in my opening speech on this debate, it is the Government that is causing the strike. It is the Government's refusal to allow Canada Post to discuss at the bargaining table the issue of franchising that is causing this strike. We in the New Democratic Party caucus believe that the workers, through their union, have the right to take that very important matter to the bargaining table and that they should expect that Canada Post will discuss this matter. It is this item that is causing the strike. It is the major item in dispute. As long as the Government, for its own political agenda, refuses to allow this item to be negotiated, we are going to have a labour dispute in this country.

It is the Government's refusal to negotiate in good faith, and I want to make that very clear, on the matter of job security that is causing the strike at the present time, just as it was the Government's move to introduce the legislation in the House of Commons that provoked a national strike. We did not have a national strike until this legislation was introduced into the House of Commons, it was only after this unfair one-sided legislation was introduced that a national strike right across this country was provoked.

I have difficulty understanding why the Government will not allow this item to be discussed and negotiated. After all the speeches made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and the Minister responsible for the status of women about the need for affirmative action and the need to ensure that women have jobs with adequate salaries, it seems completely contradictory to have a Government policy which is going to take these jobs, with fairly decent salaries, which are basically held by women, and franchise them out to a number of locations right across this country. Again, women will be hired, but on a part-time basis. They will receive basic minimum wages—no benefits and no likelihood of a decent pension plan. The Government has to be responsible for what it is doing. It knows full well that the net result of this franchising-out policy is that jobs at the wickets in Canada Post right across the country will disappear. Yet the people who will be picking up the new jobs will be women, and those women will be receiving, in most cases, salaries at the minimum wage level.

It is interesting to note that in this debate in the House of Commons we have not heard from the Minister responsible for the status of women. We have not heard from any government Member defending the franchising-out position and what it will do to women workers across this land. Not one Conservative of the over 200 who are in this House has got up to defend what will happen to the salaries of women who will be doing the work that is presently being done by Canada Post.

We have had the Minister responsible for Canada Post in his usual unbiased way talk about the costs being too much in the Post Office and that things are terrible. One would almost think that he is not the Minister responsible for Canada Post because he says things are so terrible there. He must be doing a terrible job as the Minister responsible. But things will get worse if we take away those wicket jobs, the preferred jobs, the jobs that people work for years and years in order to get, in order to have day-time jobs, fairly clean jobs, from them. They will then obviously not find those compatible, acceptable, and rewarding jobs.

To do that simply because the Government wants to privatize part of the postal service is completely ridiculous. It is unnecessary. It is, as I said, causing the national strike that we have taking place at the present time. I would ask the Government again, because it does have the opportunity to debate today, why it is so essential to take those jobs from women and make them minimum wage jobs? Why is that so essential to this Government? That is what will happen. The Government knows that is what will happen.

The Minister responsible for Canada Post got up and said that no one will lose jobs as a result of this measure. He said, "We will make sure that Canada Post will do something to ensure that those people who are presently at the wickets can go and sort mail. They can do other jobs in the Post Office". But that is not necessarily a good option.

First, the jobs that people have worked for years and years to get will be taken away. Second, it is not always the casein some of the smaller post offices across the land that four more mail sorters are needed, because there are already four mail sorters. They are there doing that work at that time. Eight mail sorters will not be needed. What will happen? Will people be forced to leave the communities they work in, or will they have to quit working at the Post Office?

This is a matter of job security. Because it is a matter of job security it belongs at the bargaining table. Yet you have heard from the Minister responsible for Canada Post, Madam Speaker, say, "No, it is management rights. We will not negotiate that". That is not management rights. It is the security of those families across the land. They have a right to take that to the negotiating table. It is the pigheadedness of this Government and its refusal to allow negotiations to take place at the negotiating table that have caused a national strike.

If the Government was willing to move, if the Government was willing to allow the issue of franchising-out to be negotiated, where it will take place, when it will take place, how it will take place, then I think this issue could be resolved. But the negotiations have to be allowed to take place. If the Government is saying that it will not discuss the item, then, obviously, it will not be resolved. A mediator may come in and there may be an arbitration award handed down in two or three months. That may make people think that the labour dispute has been resolved because the arbitrator has acted and made recommendations. But if the issue is not satisfactorily resolved for both sides, both management and the workers, then we will have more years of disputes within the Post Office. I am not saying violence. I am not saying provocation, but it will obviously set a very bumpy relationship between management and the workers, because they could not discuss at the negotiating table the item that is of concern to both parties.

So, Madam Speaker, we have to oppose this measure. We continue to oppose it. What we want to see from the Government is an indication not only that it will accept some of the amendments we have suggested but also that it will allow negotiations to take place at the bargaining table. The only way that that can happen is if the hands of Canada Post are freed and it is allowed to negotiate this item at the bargaining table.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, I would like to start by saying that we on the side of the House regret that the Government has decided to use time allocation, a procedure that amounts to gagging Members in order to speed up the debate on Bill C-86. Ironically, using this procedure will probably make the debate go on longer than it should, because when the Minister introduces the motion for time allocation, it is followed, as you know, by a two-hour debate for the sole purpose of finding out whether the motion will be adopted. This means we spend two hours talking about procedure instead of discussing some of the amendments that could be made to this Bill. While the amendments would not make it perfect or even acceptable—depending what the Government wants to do with its majority—they would at least have the effect of making us to stick to the substance of the Bill.

It is regrettable that, once again, the Government, supported by its vast majority, is using a Standing Order of the House to impose its will and to try and get approval for a Bill that has some very dangerous aspects.

First of all, I may say that as far as we are concerned, it was not the right time to introduce this Bill.

[English]

I want to say that in our opinion the timing with respect to bringing Bill C-86 before the House was wrong. First, I think that we have to agree, all of us, that there was no national emergency. We were not facing a strike that had the effect of crippling the Canadian economy. This is not a rail strike where commodities such as grain, coal, and other essentials are not moving throughout the country, something which we had to endure a few months ago. In this case, we have a situation in which we have a strike which was comparatively more calm than the letter carriers' strike. Certainly, the violence was kept to a minimum up until the time the Government chose to bring this ill-fated Bill forward. According to the Government, the mail was largely moving. According to a statement this morning in Le Journal de Montreal, which I will read in French—

"The Canada Post Corporation claims it received nearly 32 million letters and parcels during the weekend and that it delivered them on Tuesday".

Canada Post admitted that despite the fact there was a strike and probably because of the fact the Corporation decided to us strike breakers, the mail was being delivered, which adds credibility to my argument that the Government was ill-advised to introduce its Bill at this time.

Furthermore, negotiations were still going on between Canada Post and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. We think the Government should have done the right thing, which was to act ont the request we made to the Minister on the floor of the House about two weeks ago, to appoint a mediator who could then work unhampered, without this sword of Damocles, without the threat of this legislation we have before us today. The mediator would have been able to consider the conciliation report tabled earlier, and perhaps by today the strike would have been settled. However, by introducing back-to-work legislation which is always cordially detested by the workers concerned, whether they happen to work for Canada Post or in any other sector, the Government is taking the risk of having a prolonged strike and of increased violence, and that is what is happening.

I think the Government is largely to blame for the fact that the strike is continuing and that the atmosphere on the picket line is getting worse, as postal workers are becoming increasingly irritated at what is happening, at being faced with back-to-work legislation and seeing people, otherwise well intentioned and who only want to earn a few bucks, being forced by the Government to face Canada Post's regular workers, which necessarily will lead to violent confrontation.

Furthermore, the Bill contains measures that are all wrong. I had a chance to discuss them with some of my colleagues. Clause 7 of the Bill appears to force the hand of the mediator-arbitrator by enjoining him seriously to consider the conciliation report. Whoever has read this report knows perfectly well that in some parts, it supports Canada Post's plan to franchise postal services. And that is one of the most controversial issue at stake between Canada Post and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers.

[English]

I say that it was a mistake for the Government to phrase Clause 7 of the Bill in such a manner as to give the impression that the Government is giving instructions to the mediator-arbitrator to consider favourably the conciliation report. Those who have read the report know that it is slanted in favour of franchising out postal services. This is one of the hottest points that is dividing Canada Post and the union.

I have to agree that the wording is worse in French than in English. In English it states that the mediator-arbitrator should "give due cognizance to the report of the conciliation commissioner". This may be interpreted by some as considering it very seriously, whereas to others it may be read as giving simple consideration. On the other hand, in French using the words—

—"prendra sérieusement connaissance" does not leave any room for interpretation. This strictly means that the mediator-arbitrator should rely on the conciliation report and in that sense, for a Government which has been bragging since the beginning that it has allowed Canada Post to manage its own affairs and that it has tried to intervene as little as possible in that conflict, we see a clause where the Government gives clear instructions to the mediator-arbitrator. However, I must admit, because I already have had several discussions with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), that he seems to be open-minded and that he would be ready to accept amendments to that clause, and this augurs well, and in due course I intend to introduce an amendment to curb the effect of that clause.

However this will not solve the problem in Clause 11 which I feel provides for excessively severe penalties and also additional ones, because there are fines much greater than in the past to punish those who would go against the legislation.

However, I must admit that in that case I was less successful in my negotiations with the Minister and I will have to propose an amendment to shorten the five-year period during which a union leader or a Canada Post official could be prevented from holding office. I will have to fight against that clause, since the Government does not seem to be ready to admit that it is most dangerous and could infringe human rights.

This being said, Madam Speaker, I have to add before concluding that I object to the time allocation motion or to the guillotine set by the Government and, in any case, I will rise again to state my views about the contents of the Bill which I find inequitable.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, the Post Office is an institution that is close to the hearts and souls of Canadians virtually everywhere. It is a place where, in every village and hamlet of Canada, if the federal Government is to have a presence, it has it there. It is a place where fishermen and farmers gather and exchange views and ideas. It is a place where people exchange friendly letters. It is a place where bills are paid and cheques are received. Having said all of that as to how it touches us emotionally, let me say that Canadians clearly and dearly are looking forward to a settlement of this present dispute.

I submit, Madam Speaker, that there are only four alternatives which the Government has to enable it to approach this particular subject. First, it could shut down the Post Office. It could be shut down simply by allowing a strike to proceed; the two parties to come into dispute and to allow the Post Office to be closed and not serve Canadians. Of course, that approach was tried by the Liberals in 1975, and with some support from the New Democratic Party. It was tried in that there was a 42-day postal strike. During that period of time the small business community everywhere expressed the view that this was crippling the country, destroying business, and putting other innocent Canadians out of work. In response to a question by a media personality, the leader of the inside postal workers union stated that he could not care less that there was some significant damage being done to others.

Apart from shutting down the Post Office by allowing a protracted strike, a third option would be to give in to the demands of the postal union. Again, that approach has been tried. It was tried by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) when he was Postmaster General of Canada. It was also tried when the Hon. Bryce Mackasey was Postmaster General of Canada.

Much of the present view of Canadians regarding to how they look upon the present conditions and salaries of the Post Office is tied to the fact that we gave in to postal demands which seemed to be excessive at the time. We could order them back to work and put an arbitrator in place as a fourth option. We could use replacement workers and have the Post Office continue to operate. I believe it is clear that Canadians everywhere want to have the postal system operating.

I want to take a look at the present situation which I think is bringing about conditions that are of concern to and perhaps very close to and in some instances already dangerous for picket line workers. I submit that it is inappropriate for members of the Opposition to prolong the debate, especially when members of the Liberal Party are in a position to bring forward in committee of the whole the amendments they seek. They have had discussions with the Minister and they recognize that there is a willingness to co-operate. I believe that approach to be a responsible one. However, the longer we hold up the back-to-work legislation, the more we risk some dangerous situations taking place on the picket lines.

Those situations have already been enumerated in the House, but I think it is appropriate for me to repeat them. In Victoria, a picket struck a supervisor, and CUPW members interfered with mail collection from street letter boxes by harassing the drivers. In Vancouver, 16 replacement workers were assaulted as they were entering a marshalling site. In Regina, a picket kicked the door of a pizza delivery vehicle, and another picket threw himself on its hood. In Saskatoon, a number of replacement workers' car tires were slashed, and a picket smashed a window in a bus carrying replacement workers into the MPP. The man was arrested by police. In Edmonton, a picket was arrested for mischief after throwing bricks at a bus carrying replacement workers. In Winnipeg, the mail room in a high rise apartment building was broken into. In Cornwall, Ontario, a hockey stick smashed through van windows. A female replacement worker was hit. She was taken to hospital. While she was okay, the President of the CUPW local was arrested and charged with mischief. In London, a picket was charged with assault. Also in London, the lobby mailboxes of 15 apartment buildings were vandalized with glue in the locking mechanisms.

Turning to Atlantic Canada, in St. John's, a CUPW member was charged with common assault, and 15 vehicles received punctured tires while waiting entry into plant grounds. In Saint John, two vehicles received slashed tires, and two quarts of paint were spread on a tractor. In Moncton, a bus carrying replacement workers was hit with eggs and blue paint bombs. In Gagetown, charges of mischief are being laid against CUPW members for smashing eggs on a vehicle. In Fredericton, a picket was charged after striking a man with a picket sign, and two other pickets were charged after throwing eggs. The tires of a bus used to carry replacement workers were slashed, and potatoes were put in the exhaust of the bus.

We must bear in mind, as the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) indicated, that there is a willingness to look at some of the amendments and accept the reasonable ones. However, for members of the New Democratic Party to take the view that somehow it is inappropriate to move forward with this important piece of national legislation until all of their unreasonable demands are met, places risk and onus upon them in respect of the dangerous potential in the picket line situation.

Let us look at the question of franchising-out. Let me say, probably as sincerely as anyone can in that I come from a constituency which has 113 individual communities, that franchising out more than anything else will ensure postal service for those communities long into the future. In some villages and hamlets where the Post Office presently exists, the only other facility is a local store. When a postmaster or postmistress retires, there is virtually no one in the community willing or ready to take up the service. Franchising out means that the local grocery store next door will be able to take up the service and continue to offer it to the community. As the Government of Canada, we project that some 6,000 new rural services will open across Canada in the next 10 years, yet members of the New Democratic Party would like to hold out that somehow that is inappropriate.

Since many of them represent communities much larger than those in my riding, I want to tell them that the Post Office is an institution which handles one of the largest volumes of money of any business in Canada. It is close to that of the automotive industry. Despite that fact, it is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. five days per week, which does not meet the needs of modern day society.

The situation today is that many families are single parent families or both spouses are working. We need a postal service that is open early and open late, that gives service during noon hours, and that is located in convenient locations. In many medium-sized cities with present postal services, people must make trips to the post office between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m., and the post offices are located in inconvenient places.

In conclusion, let me say that what the other Parties are saying is that the nub of the issue for them is the real reason the legislation ought to go forward, so that the country can get on with serving its public as it wants and needs to be served.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise to participate in the debate because I think it is important that we do not stop debating the issue. What we have before us is a Draconian Bill. It is difficult to believe that this kind of law can be proposed in Canada in 1987.

What really upsets me is that the mail was moving, with rotating strikes and negotiations were ongoing. However, as soon as the Government started to suggest that we might have this kind of legislation before the House, the employer ceased to agree to any of the clauses on which they had come to agreement. I wish government Members would recognize that they are discouraging collective bargaining.

It is nice to hear about the hearts and flowers, that there will be people in the communities who will be able to take these jobs. However, over the years women have worked hard to obtain decent paying jobs. Through the efforts of CUPW they were able to obtain those kinds of jobs.

Government Members should not play games. The hidden agenda is union breaking. When have we ever had a Government endorsing the hiring of scabs? We would not see that happening with Chrysler, Stelco, General Motors, or Ford, because the private sector has learned to respect collective bargaining. This Government is actually putting its stamp of approval on its hiring of scabs. What does that do, Madam Speaker? It pits Canadian worker against Canadian worker.

I notice with some interest that the previous speaker alluded to the kind of violence that has gone on during the strike. The violence started to take place after this legislation was introduced. What kind of violence was taking place? The Member named a number of CUPE people who have been arrested, but he forgot that there was a CUPE Member who was seen on national news with a broken pelvis. She was run over by a truck driven by one of the people taking in scabs. The Member did not have any shame about that. It seems to me that we should all be hanging our heads in shame.

We are talking about reducing the wages of women who will be working in the post offices that are franchised out. The union said it would look at franchising. The union has given, compromised and done all sorts of things in new developments so service would be there for the people. The union was looking for compromise because it was looking for resolution. What happened? The employer said no, because the Government said that it was going to hire replacement workers and introduce back-to-work legislation.

Collective bargaining does not mean a tinker's damn. We have to understand that this whole tactic of the Government is a military one, pitting Canadian worker against Canadian worker, saying that things are being done to save money. But we do not save money with this kind of tactic.

When you reduce wages being brought into a family, what you are doing is hitting at small business everywhere in a community. What about a child coming home asking, "Mommy, can I just go to the store for a treat this week?" Mommy has to say, "Sorry, you can't. I no longer have the kind of job to afford those kinds of things. Now we have to scrape for mere existence". The Government is bragging about the fact that it will be able to hire women at $5 an hour. Surely when you are talking about the heart of a community, you cannot be bragging about that kind of thing.

It distresses me that in 1987 we have not recognized what is the dignity of work. That is part of what this debate is all about. That is perhaps why the Government wants to start to restrict the amount of time in this debate. It cannot stand looking into its own heart, recognizing what it is doing to the soul of the country.

I appreciate that the small post office is the meeting place. People see their friends there, exchange greetings, get their letters, bills and often receive cheques. It has also become the centre of many of our smaller communities. The Government is saying that this that is the end of a Canadian tradition, that it will no longer stand for that, that the market will control things and when it can pay people the least amount of money, that is what it is going to do. The Government's aim is to keep the people poor and exploit them. It is doing a good job. It says that it will create jobs across the country. Of course the Government will create jobs, but it will put people out of work. Other people will be in those jobs getting half the wages of those who have been working for a good standard of living in a quality kind of job.

We are not talking about people who have been ripping off the system, we are talking about women who have worked many years on the night shift. They have worked hard, in many cases to supplement income, and often have been the sole wage earners. When they finished after many years they got promoted to wicket jobs where they could at last work days. But we hear that that is a luxury, and that they are being paid far too much. I would like every Member in this House to attempt to keep his or her family on $12 an hour and think they are living in luxury. Figure out what that is and then tell me that this Bill the Government has introduced is a just and fair. The Government is stopping negotiations, saying that it is okay for women to work for less. That will be put into law, making sure that is how they work. That is what the Government is really doing. But it is not just women that which the Government is getting at. It is getting at families, reducing standards of living and hurting people.

This kind of legislation before us is Draconian. This is the kind of legislation of which we should be ashamed. Surely we should spend every minute of our lives delaying this legislation, making sure that we will not have to hang our heads in shame, having become a party to it. We in the New Democratic Party have no intention of facilitating the Government by passing this kind of legislation. Do not say that we feel badly about it. We are proud of it. We are very proud to support the principle that dignity and quality of life is something people deserve.

We also recognize that it was the Government which brought on the strike. It was not CUPW. The Government said very early that what it was going to do was hire replacement workers and franchise out, that it could save a whole lot of money and there was no need for high paying jobs, and by "high paying" it meant $12 and $13 an hour. Maybe the Government thinks it could get the minimum wages changed to $2 or $3 an hour; then it would be very happy because it could exploit that many more people, and then say that that many more jobs had been created. Canadians no longer want that kind of thing to happen. I think the next election will show that people do not want that to happen. These people were willing to go to the negotiating table, they were willing to go on rotating strikes and come to some compromises. They were willing to have true and good bargaining take place; the people wanted to arrive at things that are fair. That type of thing has been stopped and suffocated by the Government. The Government instead has hired scabs and pitted people against each other.

Of course there is violence on the picket line. If you knew that your family would be hungry, that your future was gone and that your job was no longer secure you would feel violent. This country went to war for freedom in 1939 because we felt that those rights existed. I never thought that war was a solution to anything, but lots of people thought that war would protect freedom. The Government is supporting and encouraging violence because it is driving people to frustration, to fight for the survival for their own quality of life and the ability to feed their families.

The kind of Bill we have before us says that we no longer respect that. With this kind of legislation we are stepping back into the 1920s and the dirty thirties. That is what the Government is trying to do to the country. It will not get away with it because there are too many people who know that the quality of life and dignity of the human being and the family is far too precious for us to accede to the Government saying, "exploitation, exploitation, exploitation".

It is urgent that this debate continue. I think it needs to continue by any manner or means so that we will be able to stop this legislation from passing.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take part today in this debate to put an end to the conflict between the Canada Post Corporation and its various employees. This is rather a difficult situation and I suggest that, as the Governement, we just cannot allow it to continue.

I certainly realize that the best thing would be for both parties, namely the Union and the Canada Post Corporation, to reach a negotiated settlement. But considering that both parties are so very far apart, as the Government, we cannot wait until acts of violence occur or allow employees to go without their salaries, not getting their pay cheques at the end of the week, or delay for weeks making a decision or adopting a legislation as we are doing now.

Madam Speaker, I may have a few points . . . I suggest that Canadians would want to know what is going on in these negotiations. As far as the conflict between Canada Post and its employees is concerned, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) has provided a detailed chronology of events and described the efforts made to settle this conflict through conciliation, and here are a few points which were mentioned by conciliation commissionner Claude Foisy in his report.

The conciliation commissioner's report points to a number of very serious omissions on the part of the parties to these negotiations. It was obvious there was no desire to reach a compromise, and they consequently failed their duty to negotiate a collective agreement. Despite all the rhetoric and attemps to have the public see the other party as responsible for the deadlock, what has been reported by the media during the last few weeks, Madam Speaker, is sufficient evidence of the parties' unfortunate performance at the bargaining table and their refusal to take seriously their duty to their members and to the Canadian people.

Here are some comments that appear on page 2 of the conciliation commissioner's report. When he met with the parties for the first time, there were 120 items on the table, that is, fifty-two management demands and sixty-eight union demands. That is a considerable number of items at this stage in the negotiations. Madam Speaker, listen to this. The commissioner then pointed out an amazing fact: the number of items was the same as at the very beginning of the negotiations. In other words, before the conciliation commissioner became involved, the parties had not agreed on any of the 120 items at issue. They only managed to sign a few clauses they had agreed not to change in the previous agreement.

In his report, the commissioner gives his evaluation of the negotiations, and anyone who reads this part of the report will be readily convinced that the talks reflected a total absence of constructive collective bargaining. The commissioner indicated that the parties spent a lot of time translating their demands into clauses for the agreement. And this is what he added: Except for the last day of the talks, which was August 12 this year, exchanges between the parties did not go beyond matters of principle and their justification. Consequently, as far as specific recommendations on the wording were concerned, the commissioner was not in a position to assess all the practical implications. In most cases, he accepted the wording as proposed by the parties. And if this approach leads to practical problems for the parties, they will have only themselves to blame, said the conciliation commissioner, since they had more than five months to send me their comments.

Madam Speaker, this paragraph alone should be enough to make us realize the obvious lack of constructive attempts to reach an agreement, as well as the frustration the commissioner must have felt in his attempt to bring the parties closer together on these issues.

Madam Speaker, what the Government is proposing is that for ninety days, a mediator-arbitrator will try to reconcile the parties. After ninety days of talks, the items still at issue . . . at that time, an arbitrator will be appointed and will settle the items still pending. Madam Speaker, I assume that meanwhile, postal employees will go back to work and will continue to be paid, and the rule or the principle followed customarily in collective bargaining when there is no agreement will be to use the services of an arbitrator, who will then settle the dispute. So why should we wait indefinitely and run the risk of having violent incidents? I also think it is important that Opposition Members should let this legislation be passed as soon as possible, to avoid financial loss for the parties concerned and so that Canadians can receive their mail and these people can go back to work.

Madam Speaker, I would like to mention that yesterday, representatives of union members in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area were at my riding office in Jonquière, to tell me about their concerns about the current dispute.

What surprised me was how those people were "demotivated" by what they were experiencing in the work place. I have a feeling the higher echelons or instructions coming from the top are simply ignoring the needs of union members—there is a lack of work motivation, and what I perceived upon listening to those employees is not normal. I wonder if their union leaders are aware of the needs of people, at the grassroots, people in the different post offices, what they experience, their concerns and expectations. My feeling is they only care about major issues and fail to look below at what is going on in the field.

It is my hope their leaders will also go and find out about the real needs and expectations of their members in the field, because a corporation that has 72,000 employees—Canada Post Corporation—is a big corporation in terms of jobs. They should make sure that working conditions are improved at Canada Post Corporation. Right now this seems to be a must. Something has to be done in that area.

I will therefore concur with the Government so that the Bill be passed, even though actually I would have preferred that being done through the normal negotiation process and an agreement being reached.

But in view of the circumstances, because of the deadlock, we must assume our responsibilities and make sure those people do not unduly lose money because of a protracted strike.

• (1610)

[English]

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I want to speak to this motion because in introducing it the Government is doing the same thing it is doing with the Bill itself; that is, it is trying to force its plan on the Post Office workers and force its will on this Parliament. In enacting this legislation the Government is showing the highest form of hypocrisy. It creates a crisis and then attempts to resolve it by Draconian means. The hypocrisy of the Government is very clear even in the title of the Bill itself.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) told the House over the last couple of days that the mail was going through and the Post Office was operating efficiently. Yet his Government puts before the House a Bill entitled "An Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services." If the postal service is operating and the mail is getting through, why do we need a Bill to continue postal services?

Pressure was being put on Post Office management through this collective action in an attempt to negotiate a decent collective agreement. What did the Government do? Instead of letting that process continue, it advised the House and its Post Office managers that it would not let a strike go on for very long. What was the result? Its Post Office managers refused from that point on to engage in any meaningful negotiations with the workers. The Government, by its actions, set the stage for the end of negotiations, because of a lack of good faith bargaining by Post Office management.

During the period of rotating strikes there was no major disruption of postal service, and this despite the fact that the Government allowed a Crown corporation to engage in active strike-breaking through the hiring of scabs. To permit a Crown agency to engage in that kind of union-busting activity was a shameful act on the part of the Government. That outrageous behaviour brought about this situation which has caused massive problems throughout the country.

The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) gave a litany of reasons why this strike ought to be ended. However, he did not tell the House that all of the incidents which he listed occurred after the Government introduced this Draconian back-to-work legislation which takes away the rights of workers. These instances occurred because the Government introduced this legislation. That is an example of the hypocrisy we hear in this House.

The Government says it wants to stop violence and confrontation and get people back to the bargaining table, but it provoked the confrontation in the first place through a set-up, and then by telling the workers that they would be forced back to work with perhaps the most Draconian labour legislation that we have seen in recent years in this country.

There was further evidence of the hypocrisy of the Government in the words of the Member for Crowfoot. He talked about how important the postal service is to rural Canada. As a Member from a rural area he is no doubt very aware of how important the postal service is to rural people, not merely for the delivery of letters but as a source of information about the federal government and as a gathering place.

That is why when the Government threatened the postal service in rural Canada there arose a grass roots movement called Rural Dignity, of which I am sure the Hon. Member is aware. That organization set out to fight the closing of rural post offices, to prevent the Government from taking away their postal service, their link with the federal Government, and the decent jobs and status which postmasters and postmistresses had in rural communities.

Everyone who comes from a rural area or is familiar with rural Canada knows that the postmistress is a very important and highly regarded member of the community. She is quite often a commissioner of oaths or justice of the peace as well and has looked after the needs of the rural community in official matters. That is not a job which can be done by a clerk earning a minimum wage, who has other jobs to do as well. A person operating a grocery store cannot provide postal service at the same time.

I have a letter written by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on August 14, 1984 when he was the Leader of the Opposition. The letter is to the national president of the Canadian Postmasters and Assistants Association. It reads:

> The Progressive Conservative Party feels that Canada Post's current program of rapid debt reduction is unrealistic, and is the underlying cause of problems with regard to both declining postal service and ventures into ill-conceived schemes to generate greater revenue.

The Prime Minister said:

> It is not possible for me to promise at this time that a Conservative government will re-instate full rural postal service within a year, or that all laid-off postal workers will be immediately re-hired. I can assure you, however, that restoring the quality of service will be our top priority with Canada Post.

The Prime Minister has not done that. Instead, his Government has allowed Canada Post to downgrade the services of the Post Office and is now participating in an unholy alliance with the managers of Canada Post to introduce Draconian legislation into the House to force their plans upon the workers of Canada. Contained in that legislation are some of the worst provisions I have ever seen with regard to labour.

The legislation provides that if an employee of Canada Post who holds a union position violates this law he will not be allowed to work for the union for a period of five years. This kind of Draconian legislation is comparable to banishment, or the outlawry of the middle ages. That is what the South Africans do when they do not like what journalists write. They ban them and they are no longer allowed to work in South Africa.

The Government does not want this legislation to be debated because it is afraid that the people of Canada will learn what is really contained in that Bill and what is really going on. We should never see such legislation in this House. It should never be passed as quickly as the Government wants it to be passed. It must be fully debated. All Members must have an opportunity to speak and tell the people of Canada what the Government is doing.

This legislation is detrimental to the workers, the postal service, and the people of Canada.

The Government has allowed postal service to deteriorate under the plans of Canada Post. It is doing nothing to improve the quality of service. This legislation will make things worse in the Post Office and worse for the workers and the people of Canada.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to enter into this debate today on the imposition of time allocation on Bill C-86. We have just heard from the new authorities of the New Democratic Party. I congratulate them on entering this House but, having listened to what the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) had to say, it is obvious that they need a history lesson.

The words came out in full colour this afternoon. The Member for St. John's East must have used the word "Draconian" 30 times. I am not sure he knows the meaning of the word. He heard it from one of his colleagues earlier today and suddenly everything is Draconian. We have heard that expression before from the Member from Nickel Belt who, when speaking on this motion, spoke to the Members behind him. He did not even have the courtesy to speak to the rest of the House of Commons.

The Member for Hamilton Mountain talked about women. She is the great protector of women. Does she know how many people, including women, were put out of business because of the last postal strike? Nine thousand people lost jobs due to the last major postal strike and many of them were women.

Mr. Rodriguez: What's your source?

Mr. Holtmann: My source is the Federation of Independent Business. Madam Speaker, one must wonder who the New Democratic Party supports. Those Members support the union. They support the union because it finances their Party. They do not represent management or the users of the Post Office. They do not really care about women or the users of the Post Office. Let us review the history of the negotiations. The negotiations have been going on for the last 15 months, yet the NDP does not want to legislate them back to work. The NDP will be the negotiators for the union and make the negotiations fly. I suggest to the House that a union leader would have serious reservations about hiring any one of those New Democrats to negotiate.

• (1630)

One must question where the NDP stands. They expressed concern for a woman who may be losing a job. No woman is losing her job at the Post Office. They know that the new system of franchising would be established only upon retirement. How does that put a woman out of work?

My hon. colleague noted that in fact the new franchising system may create even more jobs. What is wrong with that? What have you got against more jobs?

Mr. Rodriguez: Four dollars an hour.

Mr. Holtmann: The fee has never been mentioned or negotiated. The parties were unable to come to a conclusion after 15 months of negotiation, yet the NDP wants to extend these negotiations and the strike. It wants to create more damage and injury to the economy of Canada.

Mr. Rodriguez: Like free trade.

Mr. Holtmann: How do they expect that to be creative?

Mr. Rodriguez: You do not believe in collective bargaining.

Mr. Holtmann: Certainly we believe in collective bargaining, but obviously in 15 months it has not produced a collective answer.

Mr. Rodriguez: The right to strike is part of collective bargaining.

Mr. Holtmann: The NDP takes the attitude that it will only support the strikers and let the process continue for another 15 months. Alternatively, it would support the view of the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar), which is to let the strike continue and ruin big and small industries in this country. It does not care.

While members of the NDP will say they support the average small-business person during the next election campaign, where were they when they were needed?

New Democrats suggest that this legislation is Draconian and hypocritical.

Mr. Rodriguez: You are a big hypocrite!

Mr. Reimer: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) is trying to present his point of view to the House. Perhaps you could ask members of the new democratic party at least to give him the courtesy of allowing him to say what he wants. They may not like what he is saying, but surely he has the right to say what he wants.

Mr. Nystrom: I have not said a word.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Hon. Member said that our friend to the right—

Mr. Rodriguez: Far right.

Mr. Keeper: —was attempting to express himself and get his message across. But clearly he was trying to provoke a reaction from this side of the House. Otherwise, why would he be saying such nonsense? I think the Hon. Member is achieving his objective. Let the debate continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): While listening very carefully to the exchange that was taking place in the House, the Chair had the feeling that both the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) and some members of the New Democratic Party were enjoying that part of the exchange. I am sure that Hon. Members will want to take the opportunity to answer the Hon. Member, but he should be given the time and the opportunity to have his say.

Mr. Holtmann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I hope you will tack that extra time that was literally stolen from me this afternoon on to my time for debate.

Let us review what the strike was about and why we would, in fact, legislate the inside postal workers back to work. They were not striking in order to improve the high level of absenteeism, which is 17 days for inside postal workers, compared to an average of seven days of absenteeism among other workers in Canada. I heard nothing from the NDP about that situation which is very prevalent among inside postal workers.

While that is not something about which those workers can be proud, the NDP will find a way to say that it is great.

The reason they are on strike is to scuttle management's objectives to bring good, clean, efficient postal service to Canadians. When the NDP supports that type of action, one really wonders how 36 of them were elected as Members of Parliament.

The federal Government must return some sense to the situation. The workers are not even arguing over wages, which are good compared to those in the private sector.

History has proven that we cannot afford a lengthy postal strike because of its damaging effects on the country. Certainly, no one in the House should condone the violence which has been alluded to, although members of the new democratic party have said that violence can be condoned sometimes when it comes to international affairs. That Party, which claims to be the protector of the people, even condones violence. I believe that the Leader of the New Democratic Party even talked about gun-boat diplomacy, referring to some fishing off the coast of Newfoundland. That Party wanted violence. We do not want violence, and I think that is very evident in the actions taken by the Government.

The reason we are moving time allocation is that anything further to be said by the Opposition will simply be repetition. I already indicated that one Hon. Member repeated the word "Draconian" 40 times in his speech.

We want to avoid violence. Clearly that is the objective of the Government and the reason for supporting the back-to-work legislation. Furthermore, the majority of Canadians want back-to-work legislation. Why does the Opposition not agree for once that we are doing what Canadians want? Canadians want their mail to move.

Mr. Rodriguez: They do not want free trade.

Mr. Holtmann: He wants to get into the free trade debate. He will have his opportunity to do so. I suggest that Canadians might even want free trade, but they certainly want free access to the mail without controversy, fights or abuse on the picket lines.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I must say at the outset that it is a tragedy that the Government found it necessary to limit this debate rather than examine this legislation in a thorough and comprehensive way. Rather than taking the time to consider our suggestions for amendment, or seeking to change or even withdraw the legislation, it is limiting the debate and trying to bulldoze ahead. However, knowing the Government well, we are not surprised by its action.

I want to explain what the Government is trying to sell Canadians with regard to Canada Post. These days, politics is largely a matter of image. The Government treats the Post Office like a business. It is trying to sell the Post Office to the Canadian public as a business. Why has the Government chosen to do that? It is because, for many Canadians, that has connotations of efficiency, of being cost-effective and of providing a good service. So this is the image the Government is trying to sell. However, the reality is that when it comes to service, the Government has watered down the standards of service. Rather than working out how it could make sure the letters arrive in time, meeting the standards that are already in place, the Government has watered down the standards.

It still takes eight days in many cases for a letter to get across town. Therefore, the reality does not fit the image the Government is trying to sell. It tries to get across to the Canadian public that if we treat the Post Office as a business, it will be cost effective and the best thing for the pocketbook. The reality tears apart that image because when the Government franchises post offices it gives away post offices that bring in the best revenue. A business person who is interested in a franchise from the Post Office is not going to take one of those post offices that are losing money. It will be the one that makes a revenue. So the Post Office and the Government are giving away revenue which will create more deficit for the Post Office. This is completely contrary to the image the Government is trying to project when it calls the Post Office a business.

The point I want to make is simply that the Government is trying to sell a pig in a poke. It is trying to sell an image, because that is the nature of modern politics.

The reason the Government brought in a motion to limit debate is that it is trying to sell another image, which is one of the Government being tough, in control and capable of governing this country. Well, every Canadian knows that the reality of this Government is that it is completely incompetent and lacks the capacity to set a direction and maintain it. It certainly lacks the compassion to set a direction which is in line with Canadian values.

There are other ways of looking at the Post Office rather than simply looking at it as a business. One of the ways I would like to suggest is fairly commonplace but still important. Why do we not look at the Post Office as a public utility? Why can it not be like the Manitoba Telephone System, which is owned by the people of Manitoba, delivers good service, and is what it is, which is a public utility? It is under the democratic control of the community in which it is located, and this is very important when it comes to rural communities.

When this Government treats the Post Office as a business, what happens is that when that business is in a rural community, if it cannot make enough dollars to balance the books, it is closed down and the service is cut off, tearing away one of the pillars of our rural communities. So rural Canada is up in arms against the Government. Rather than treating the Post Office as a business, why not look at it as a public utility and recognize that the post office in a rural community is an investment? It is part of our willingness to preserve rural life.

It is not our ideal to have everyone living in a city. Canadians ought to have the option of living in a rural environment. The economics of having to centralize everything in the large urban centre does not make any sense in the modern context in which we are trying to improve the quality of life. This is the time when we should be investing in rural community life so that people who want to live in that kind of environment have the option to do so, rather than tearing out the roots of our rural Canadian communities.

Another aspect of looking at the Post Office as a public utility rather than as a business is that we can cross-subsidize services. In other words, we can be involved in those services that make a profit and use those profits to support the services that lose money. Not only that, if it is a public utility, if it follows public policies, then it can set national standards, which brings us to the whole question of women's equality. Why treat the Post Office as a business if it means that we will have to cut women's wages? Why is it that when 80 per cent of the people who run rural post offices are women already receiving low wages, the Government moves to cut back their wages drastically? In Wilno, Ontario, the Government is offering the Postmistress one-fifth of what she earned before.

It is not a freeze in her salary, it is not a cut, but a complete slashing of her salary. she was offered one-fifth of what she was offered before. this is what the government is doing when it treats the post office as a business, trying to create a great image when the reality is a horror story.

There is another way to do it. We want the Government to wake up. Rather than introducing motions in this House to cut off debate because it does not want to hear about alternatives, it ought to listen to what people on this side of the House are saying. The Government ought to listen to what rural Canadians and women are saying and should learn from it so it can develop a policy for the Post Office that makes sense.

Over the last 20 years the Post Office has been going downhill because it has been bounced from one Minister's desk to another. It has been ignored for 20 years. Twenty years ago Canadians were satisfied with their postal service. They had confidence in it, and the people who worked for the Post Office had pride in their work. But the Post Office has gone downhill through neglect. It is time for the Government to rethink the Post Office and it is time for Canadians to rethink the Post Office and time to have a real national debate. Why do we have a Post Office? The debate should not just be a process of grandstanding by a Government that is sinking in the quicksand of its own unpopularity. Why do we not have a real debate on the Post Office? How can it be run efficiently? What is its purpose? We can then design a Post Office that can work and function and pay decent wages so that people do not have to live in poverty in order to work there. People should have the option to work in an environment that is healthy, and the Post Office should be able to support rural Canadian life so we do not contribute to the abandonment of rural communities.

I am very disappointed in what the Government is doing in moving this motion to limit debate. What it is in fact doing is seeking to sell a pig in a poke to the Canadian public. It is trying to say it is tough. It is saying: "We have taken on Jean-Claude Parrot and we have made him say "uncle". Why is it trying to do that? Because its own public image is in the garbage pail, and the Government has earned the right to be there. Its image is like junk mail. It has given junk mail to the Canadian people and the Canadian people have said that this is a junk Government.

It is time for the Government to wake up and realize that grandstanding is not enough. When push comes to shove, when it comes to the bottom line, the question is whether the Government is governing in a way that is competent, not whether it is doing well with its public relations efforts.

How well is the Government actually governing the country? If it were to think about what the Post Office is for and to establish a decent plan to achieve the objectives of Canadians, which is to get their mail on time—in a couple of days rather than a couple of weeks—Canadians would like that. Canadians also want the workers to have pride in working at the Post Office. The vast majority want to know that their Public Service is paying liveable wages. They do not necessarily demand that someone be able to eat caviar on their wages, but certainly that they be able to have three good meals on their table rather than being forced to live in poverty.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Madam Speaker, I wish to join in this debate on time allocation regarding the dispute in the Post Office. This time, I shall address the Chair and I hope that I will not be interrupted by some Hon. Members who appear to take this issue much less seriously than they claim, before TV cameras, for all Canadians to see.

Madam Speaker, I think that this dispute has lasted longer than opposition Members seem to realize. They just need to watch TV. But they forget that there has been 15 months of negotiations that were getting us nowhere. The parties have been playing at musical chairs for 15 months. And after all that time the negotiators had to admit that they could not even see the light at the end of the tunnel and could not find one single point that could be settled.

I hope that all Canadians and particularly those in my riding who phoned to tell me that it was about time to resolve this dispute will realize that, in the past, we never have negotiated a settlement. We used to yield to every demand, to buy peace and to settle disputes at any cost.

If you look at the report of the Conciliation Commissioner, Mr. Claude Foisy—We were told, time and time again, that there was no progress in the last 15 months of negotiations and that the major point of contention, franchising, would trigger an all-out war. Madam Speaker, we are in the midst of that war which has already taken its toll. While workers put their life in danger on picket lines, our colleagues opposite keep saying: There is no hurry, let us continue the debate!

The situation is much more serious. Instead of continuing the debate we must solve the problem. As Government Members, we cannot act irresponsibly as the Members opposite who would like us to give everything to the unions. I think that our primary responsibility is to ensure that the negotiations will be meaningful and to solve that problem at a reasonable cost.

As you are aware, a large number of our constituents complain about the lack of motivation in our Post Offices. There is an incredible lack of motivation—

• (1650)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) has the floor. The normal courtesy should be extended to him by Members opposite. Even the Chair cannot hear his remarks. I would say that the conversation between Hon. Members is a bit too loud. The Hon. Member for Duvernay.

[Translation]

Mr. Della Noce: Madam Speaker, as I said earlier, they do not even have the courtesy to listen as we did when they spoke.

As I was saying, there is a serious problem of attitude in the Post Office. I can see it in my riding, and I am sure many of my colleagues could say the same. Now, in our post offices, the customers get bawled out. People are very frustrated. I was even told, and I had the same experience myself, that it is impossible to get a smile from a post office employee. It is frightening! My colleague for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) said that there is a total lack of motivation in the postal service. I believe him. No one smiles, no one cares. It all belongs to the Government. We go on strike, and our demands are met. Sure. That is what we used to do. Today, Mr. Foisy mentioned in his report that Canada Post had the right to franchise postal services. I found some newspaper clippings, and I have an article, published in Le Devoir on October 9, that I would like to quote: "As far as postal services are concerned, this Bill could put an end to a quarter century of bungling, when politicians bought peace at any price. It is too bad—"

I hope Hon. Members will listen, because this is for them! "—the NDP Opposition has not understood this and is taking advantage of this opportunity to make some cheap politics instead of taking the longer view to consider the public interest."

Here is another one: In the past, the Canadian Union of Postal Workers managed to make major gains in strikes under the Liberals, who caved in to demands for a settlement at any price.

Well, we certainly cannot blame the unions. I want this to be quite clear, Madam Speaker. I am not against the unions. When they get something they want, I say more power to them. But I think we have to go further than that to settle the problems at issue here. Obviously, we want to put an end to this dispute, and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) was quite accommodating: If there is anything you don't like, we might be willing to change a few words!

No, they said. Let the strike go on. Things will get better. We can have a debate and make some cheap political gains and even get on television on the evening news! Madam Speaker, that is not what the business people are saying in my riding. They say: Settle the problem once and for all. They need the service, which is very important to small businesses.

They also talked about scabs and strike-breakers. The fact is that in Quebec it is even harder than in the rest of Canada because that problem was settled during the big strikes we had in the past. I don't like strike-breakers. I am against all that. You can't do that.

However, I must say that Quebec has dealt with the problem, and maybe other provinces across Canada will do likewise to deal with a problem that, I think, can only lead to violence. The real purpose of the Bill is to have our mail delivered without violence. It seems that after 15 months we have not succeeded. There were negotiations, but they failed. People are sick and tired of playing musical chairs. We are going to wait again. Are we going to wait another 15 months? Are we going to wait another six months? Are we going to wait for someone to die? This week a woman was wounded in both legs. Do we want her to die? Do we want more people to get hurt? I think we are trying to make something out of nothing.

There is no way to bargain. Maybe they should impose a negotiator who might be more successful. The unions and the NDP are saying that jobs will be lost, and that the negotiators dealt with this and that.

Madam Speaker, are you aware that there are in Canada 12,000 postal counters? Only 417 of them are manned by unionized workers. There is the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. The Union is saying that 4,200 jobs are already jeopardized, creating the impression of further lay-offs. Would you believe that these people think there are going to be 4,200 lay-offs? They are wrong. The Corporation has offered job security to all its employees. The people who are listening to us must be wondering: What are they fighting over? What are they negotiating? They are negotiating the franchising of the postal services.

We have reached a point where a small group of employees want to tell their employer: That is the way you are going to do it. As you probably know, Madam Speaker, I was once a boss myself. I was a boss and a union supporter once, and I have never allowed my employees to dictate to me how to run my business, because each time I did, I lost money. For instance, I have negotiated with, watched and listened to my employees. I have worked with them and obtained some success.

Madam Speaker, they should not claim that some jobs will be lost; it is all right for the NDP to try and make cheap political gains, but no job will be lost. Violence must stop. I do not like the way things are going. I wish that within the past 15 months, the parties had reached a negotiated settlement. The Minister of Labour said the same thing, and we are part of the Government, not the Opposition. We must act responsibly and decide in the best interests of Canadian businesses and individuals, making sure that they are getting their mail. Our honourable friends opposite should go to the United States: They would realize that there are no strikes there any longer. There is service. In the United Kingdom, they are getting their mail within 24 hours, while here, we are not even able to get it within a week, with a smile.

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, it is a sad day for Parliament and democracy. Every single time that the Government, with its vast majority and its great weight, has to use closure and the limitation of debate in the House, it is a sad day. It is a sad day that it has imposed limitation of debate on this particular piece of legislation. I am saddened by this Draconian piece of legislation.

It also saddens me that it looks as though the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party got together, because on this limitation of debate motion I have only heard one Liberal speaker on this particular Bill. It is unfortunate that the Official Opposition has not seen fit to participate in fighting what at other times they would stand up and shout against as the tyranny of the Government. I am saddened by that because they pretend to be the champions of the working class. In fact, when the chips are down they run for cover.

What does the limitation of debate in the House say? First, it says that the Government is incapable of dealing with this serious problem. The very introduction of back-to-work legislation in the form of Bill C-86 is a clear indication that the Government has failed, in spite of the fact that it had a hands-on relationship with Canada Post. There has not been the arm's length relationship which we heard would take place with the creation of Canada Post.

I recall the President of Canada Post, Mr. Lander, stating to a committee of the House that I attended that he could not tell us what the business plan was for the Post Office, because it had not been approved by the Government. So the Government approved the business plan for the Post Office. What was that business plan? It was simply to cut back the postal services to Canadians.

Therefore, this limitation of debate is a clear acknowledgement on the part of the Government that it is incapable of dealing with Canada Post and the problems in the Post Office. It is incapable of ensuring that postal services to Canadians would not only be expanded but enhanced. It is a complete failure on the part of the Government to deal with the Post Office, in much the same manner as the Post Office is incapable of dealing with the industrial relations within the Post Office and with the workers who are involved in the Post Office. It must come to its political masters and say, "Put them back to work".

Mr. Keeper: Bail us out.

Mr. Rodriguez: Bail us out, save our face. We have been failures. Instead of saying to Canada Post, "You go back to the table and negotiate a collective agreement with your employees", the Government has come forward to use the jackboot on the workers in the Post Office. I can only classify this as PTL, punitive Tory legislation.

Mr. Benjamin: Praise the Lord, brothers!

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to tell them that it is not too late to repent. I say to them, repent now, the hour is not late, because in fact the moment of reckoning is at hand.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Bill C-86 should be filed in the dead-letter wicket. This legislation is an acknowledgement of failure by the Government. The Post Office was in quite a mess when Bryce Mackasey was the Postmaster General and headed the Post Office during the 1978 strike. I recall that very well. I recall Bryce Mackasey, in an attempt to resolve the strike with the Post Office, phoning me up and saying, "Can you get Joe Davidson over here? I want to see him". I recall that vividly. I recall saying to Joe Davidson, "Look, here it is. Here is the technological change clause". He took it out of his pocket and said, "There it is. It will solve the problems in the Post Office". It was laid right on the table, and Joe Davidson looked at it and said, "Well, who is going to sign this?" Mackasey said, "I will sign it. I am the Postmaster General". And Davidson said, "What guarantees do we have that this will continue after you are gone?" Mackasey said, "Well, you have the word of the Government". What good was the word of the Government, Madam Speaker? Sure, we got the Post Office out of the Canada Labour Code. We got it out of the PSSRB. Now it is under the Canada Labour Code, it is a Crown Corporation, but now it has PTL legislation. Is that any improvement?

Mr. Blaikie: What does PTL mean?

Mr. Rodriguez: Punitive Tory legislation, that is the new lexicon. That is what we have over there led by Pierre Bakker. We were all led to believe that going to a Crown corporation, going on the Canada Labour Code, will mean that henceforth the Post Office and its employees would be able to resolve their disputes. What have we got nine years later?

Mr. Blaikie: Betrayal.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is a betrayal. It is absolutely a betrayal.

Mrs. Sparrow: Have you got your shovel, John?

Mr. Rodriguez: It is vengeance with a passion, that is what it is. If one can imagine a Tory in passion, I want to state that they have a pretty vivid imagination.

Mr. Nystrom: There is a volunteer.

Mr. Rodriguez: I have never seen a Tory with passion.

Mrs. Sparrow: Oh, come on, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: Anybody that could move a Tory to passion—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, I have been sitting here reflecting for a few moments. I wonder if I may seek to buy the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) his supper tonight?

• (1710)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair is pondering on whether it should ask for the unanimous consent of the House before agreeing to the Hon. Member's suggestion. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has the floor.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, I really wish the Conservatives would show some passion for the collective bargaining process. If they had a passion for justice in the workplace, if they had a passion to try to provide service to Canadians through Canada Post—

Mrs. Sparrow: That is what we are doing.

Mr. Rodriguez: They are not providing service. I have received letters from across the country. We have the Organization of Rural Dignity because the Government has consistently cut back rural postal services. It has consistently cut back urban postal services.

We have had demonstrations. We have had people taking the Government to court over the whole matter of urban postal services. The record is clear.

This piece of legislation and the closing of debate in the House of Commons will not improve collective bargaining in the Post Office. It is using the jackboot of tyranny to put workers back to work in that workplace.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, of course if the NDP Members opposite were to shut up, perhaps they would finally listen to what we have to say.

I would like to refer to the last speakers to show our television audience what can happen in a debate. We had earlier one of our Liberal opponents who rose quite beyond himself and told Canadians watching television what an immoral, what a horrendous thing closure was on such an important matter. It was both immoral and important because, as he said, we will be discussing procedure for two hours rather than the subject matter of the Bill. I would like to tell the Hon. Member, who by the way has just entered the House, that during the 10 minutes he spoke—of course he took two minutes to play the offended virgin, which left eight minutes during which he addressed the subject matter and the problem at the Post Office.

On the other hand, Madam Speaker, we just heard a very delightful and eloquent speech from my NDP friend. This clearly shows their attitude in this case. What a joke! They laugh, they mock the conflict to show that on the Government side what is going on is absolutely ridiculous. But what is going on on the Government side? We returned to the negotiation table after some time, and I would like to quote the following from Le Devoir: "After 10 days of postal strike, the Government decided on back-to-work legislation. They are 10 days too late." It is not a laughing matter. It is absolutely not a laughing matter, nor is it a matter for procedural bickering either, Madam Speaker.

What would this Bill do, actually? We are telling people: You are taking the Canadian people as hostage. You will go back to the table, we are appointing a mediator who shall within a certain timeframe, keeping a steady eye on the report submitted previously, manage to make his views known. And that is important. We should, or rather the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) could have said : I am enacting a special legislation, you are going back to work, and here are the working conditions. But no. We want to proceed in a democratic way.

But we are past the time, Madam Speaker, where settlements were taking both the Canadian people and the Canadian Parliament as hostages. The time has gone, Madam Speaker, when regulations only were taking hostage the Canadian people as well as the Parliament of Canada. Canada Post Corporation was privatized in order to remove the political aspect of the system and we have been here for a week laughing and mocking and taking Canadian men and women hostage. We agreed with the strike earlier. We do not think about older people nor the thousands of men and women who are concerned by the present situation. And in our speeches, we pretend to maintain the quality of the service. But let us wonder about the quality of service for the past 25 years. Why is it that the sales of companies such as Courrier, Purolator and so on are ever increasing? The sales . . .

An Hon. Member: Because they are private companies!

Mr. Hudon: Not because they are private companies, but they offer a better service and we paid attention to that.

As for us, when you listen to the NDP members, we have less mail, less service to offer because if those people were coming back, volumes would really be important and the quality of service should yet be improved. The best guaranty of job security is the quality of service being offered.

When I was director of personnel administration in a school board, I kept repeating that the best job security you can have depends on the quality of service you offer to the people you have been hired to serve. That is why, incidentally, Madam Speaker, the Conservative Party will be re-elected because they offer the best service Canadians want and have ever had during the past 20 years.

Madam Speaker, if you read editorials which support us, you will find one in the Gazette, for instance, under the headline " It had to be done". And yet, that paper is not known to be always supportive of the Party in power. You also look at the special legislation, and an editorial by Pierre Vennat in La Presse: Clearly, the Mulroney Government was right when it decided to end the postal dispute by introducing a Bill to that effect.

In four or five minutes, Madam Speaker, we will be called upon to vote and I will support time allocation for the debate on that issue, because we have been discussing procedure for the past two hours, discussing closing the debate. The debate must be closed. We must give back to Canadian men and women who are entitled to services, the power they have as citizens. At this point, after two or three weeks, we have had enough and that is final. The best safeguard, the best work quality as I said is the quality of service they should provide. They said this was a sad day. It is not necessarily so terrible, except that we may have wasted two hours—we should have passed the Bill earlier in order to move to other business that is important to Canadians.

I think that everything has been covered by the Hon. Members who spoke and we are now coming to the end of the debate and I would like it to be serene and calm. Are we rich enough, can we afford in Canada to deprive all our citizens of services they are entitled to? This we will never repeat too often. The Canadian Parliament, the highest authority in the land—of course the Senate has a different view—the Canadian Parliament essentially has the power and the right to give back to the citizens the services they should have, and we should stop listening to a few people who, in a system like ours, in a democratic system, have a right to make their views known, but the fact that they have a strong voice to bellow out their points does not necessarily make them right.

I like to refer to the old story of the parishoner who one day went up to the pulpit to read the sermon prepared by the parish priest for the next day. The sexton had written in the margin: "Weak point, use loud voice." When one is not too sure of what to say, one makes jokes, one uses a loud voice, one shouts to impress one's truth. I can say that in the constituency of Beauharnois—Salaberry, in Valleyfield, there are dozens of people who are calling because they expect service. I represent them also. It is not only on behalf of union leaders whom I hold in high esteem that I am speaking out, but also on behalf of mothers, senior citizens and all those who are expecting something through the mail.

I suggest that the time has come to put an end to this hostage-taking of the Canadian people and that the parties should get together—a corporation has every right to change the direction of its operation as it pleases. Madam Speaker, in Valleyfield, which is not a city as big as Montreal, with between 30,000 and 33,000 inhabitants, not a week goes by without some convenience store owner showing up at my office to say: Mr. Hudon, it would be nice if I could get a small postal counter. I think it is a very good idea. Why not? Everybody agrees that we should bring the service closer to the customers, provided that this does not endanger any job security or other rights.

As I was saying earlier, Madam Speaker, the best security for these people would be in the quality of their service. Why refuse them that? Every application for a postal counter should be judged on its merits, and very often, we are faced, not with arbitrary decisions, but with decisions such as: Here, we may have gone a little bit too far, it would be necessary to make personnel cuts. I am sure that the postmasters . . . the Valleyfield postmaster at any rate, would take this into account when making such a decision. However, I should say that it is sometimes much simpler to make a decision when the staff is reduced and that normal rather than Draconian steps are taken.

This is quality service. Such service for Canada Post would be as that provided by Courier and Purolator which pick up letters and make home deliveries. They do not say: "I have your letter and I will deliver it when I feel like it".

The quality service is a kind of decentralization. I feel that people should be ready to accept such a move. It will give Canada Post a greater volume. People have lost confidence. The Member for Beauharnois—Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) cannot restore confidence and I fully agree. However those are fruitless and childish struggles that we are facing now and they prevent us from going any further.

I think that we should be serious enough to see that this is justified and I appeal to my colleagues from the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party to stop performing antics with this issue and to vote really for the well-being of Canadians and for quality service.

The parties will return to the negotiation table and for 90 days, the Bill will appoint a mediator who will be instructed to consider all disputed issues and to try to find a common ground of agreement between the parties. But this is excellent! They do not say: Go back to work, you have 4 percent and we do not talk about it any more. This is excellent! If they have persuasive arguments, Good Heaven, it will be a good table to put them forward . . . an area of agreement with the parties . . . if he cannot do it within 90 days, he will make an arbitral decision on each point of controversy.

I trust the skills of the judge or mediator-arbitrator who will be appointed. I am confident that with this, with good arguments, Canada Post Corporation will sit at the table with the Union and that the parties will put forward their arguments; maybe we will see the light at the end of the tunnel, Mrs. Speaker.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, in the two minutes remaining in the time allocation motion, I have a couple of comments. When the Deputy House Leader for the Government moved the motion today he indicated that time allocation was not needed and, therefore, the Bill was needed to do three things: to get the parties back to the bargaining table; to end violence on the picket lines; and to keep the mail moving. The Government does not need any legislation to get the sides back to the bargaining table. It needs to instruct Canada Post to start bargaining fairly and that it is no longer bound by the corporate plan directed by the Government. To end violence on the picket line, you eliminate the cause of the violence, which is the use of scabs. There was no violence during the rotating strikes—

Some Hon. Members: Yes, there was.

Mr. Angus: —except when Canada Post started to bring replacement workers in.

We had a strike in Thunder Bay at the Great Lakes Forest Products plant. One thousand five hundred men and women went out on strike, but there was no violence because there were no replacement workers, no scabs. People there understand the system. The Government has to accept responsibility for the violence.

As to keeping the mail moving, I come back to my first point, that if the Government were serious about keeping the mail moving it would have instructed Canada Post that it was no longer bound by the corporate plan, a plan that will not increase service but will lead to a deterioration of service in the communities.

I hope tomorrow during the full debate I will be able to finish my comments.

The House resumed from Tuesday, October 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cadieux, that Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, it is a great pleasure to rise after such a magnificent show of generosity, openness and acceptance and fairness by the Conservative Party in power. It gives us a sense of warmth and excitement to have such fine, upstanding foes who will not deign to use their massive majority to break a strike before it is even in full swing and will then turn around, once the legislation is introduced, and use the full power of their majority to cut off debate before it is even possible for people to express their view as fully as they would like.

This is one of the longest speeches that I have managed to make, and if I keep going it may start again at eleven o'clock tomorrow morning. I warn the Conservatives of the consequences of this.

The objections to the Government's action that we are presenting in this case is not just a New Democratic Party position, or an opposition position, it is one that has been accepted and endorsed by newspapers across the country. These are newspapers that, to say the least, are not noted for their enthusiasm either for CUPW, or indeed for the Opposition.

For instance, the Winnipeg Free Press states:

> Canadians are used to the sight of Parliament stopping postal strikes. This week, they witnessed the unusual spectacle of Parliament starting one.

It goes on to say that the legislation:

> —brought about a complete walkout of postal workers, accompanied by the bitterness and violence that has marked past postal strikes.

In short, it was not anything that the parties to this dispute did, but the introduction of legislation by the Government, which indicates how completely unfair it was to bring this legislation at that time.

The Winnipeg Free Press goes on to say:

> The sanctions proposed to force union members and their leaders back to work verge on the outlandish—

The Winnipeg Free Press is not exactly a friend of the union movement in this country.

The Edmonton Journal, which some might like to consider the voice of the West, said:

> Ottawa is using coercion where reason might have prevailed by legislating an end to rotating postal strikes.
> In the process, the federal government spurns the collective-bargaining process and erodes the right to strike. It invites the Canadian Union of Postal Workers to retaliate in a manner that can hardly make the delivery of mail more efficient.
> When talks broke off Wednesday, CUPW called for a mediator but was rebuffed by Canada Post. Thursday, Ottawa proposed mediation in the new bill.

However, it could not leave it at mediation. The Government had to include compulsory arbitration, which takes away completely the potential for successful arbitration and for successful mediation to occur.

Therefore, I suggest that we have a spectacle of a Government which, in its performance, is not just outraging the Opposition, postal workers and customers of Canada Post who will bear the consequences of this foolish act, it is also outraging editorial writers in what are usually conservative newspapers throughout the country.

In view of this, I want to move:

> That this House do now adjourn.

The Acting Speaker (Madam Champagne): It being 6 p.m., the House stands adjourned until tomorrow, at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of State Finance)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-87, an Act respecting the imposition of duties of customs and other charges to give effect to the international convention on the harmonized commodity description and coding system, to provide relief against the imposition of certain duties of customs or other charges, to provide for other related matters, and to amend or repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce this Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO DESTAFFING WEST COAST LIGHTHOUSES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of Gold River and Tahsis, British Columbia, who would have the House of Commons insist that the Government abandon its plan to automate and destaff light stations along the coast of British Columbia in the interest of safety and improvement to navigation.

The petitioners are in favour of the imposition of a moratorium and are certainly in favour of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) attending the public hearings in Campbell River, British Columbia, on October 29, 1987.

OPPOSITION TO GOVERNMENT'S POSITION ON HOUSING

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling a petition signed by residents of Toronto and London, Ontario, in which they object to the Government's housing policy. This being the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, they believe that the Government's definition of essential needs is preventing hundreds of thousands of Canadians living below the poverty line from receiving Government housing assistance.

Wherefore, your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to increase immediately the amounts given for co-operative housing assistance.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the pleasure of tabling a petition signed by residents of the National Capital Region. They humbly declare that:

whereas since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular on medical and dental supplies, snack foods, candy and soft drinks;

whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal is studying the possibility of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services, including food;

whereas food constitutes a vital element in day-to-day life and the imposition of this tax would have the effect of seriously penalizing certain categories of taxpayers such as the aged, families, unemployed, low-income taxpayers, youth, et cetera;

wherefore the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

FERMI II NUCLEAR REACTOR—REVIEW PROCESS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition in a long series of petitions which have been presented from my constituency with respect to the serious dangers of the Fermi II nuclear reactor in Michigan.

This particular petition is signed by residents of Windsor, Essex, Harrow, Woodslee, Tecumseh, Oldcastle, as well as Anderton and Amherstburg. The petitioners call very strongly for a Canadian presence with the United States to review the safety measures which exist for this nuclear reactor before it is permitted to go to full operation.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, October 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cadieux, that Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has completed his speech. The question and comment period following the Hon. Member's speech is now available to Members.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) said he had spent some time on the picket line in Windsor. Would he indicate what he learned about the unusual and unfair way Canada Post has been treating those employees who are not directly involved in the Government's attempt to destroy CUPW?

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): First, I thank my colleague for the spontaneous question.

There are casual workers for the Post Office in my constituency who are not part of this strike, not part of the picket lines and do not receive strike pay. Yet, when they reported to Canada Post facilities last night to receive their pay cheques, they were told that they were not to get those cheques until the strike was finished.

They were further told that they were trespassing on private property by trying to go to the formal area where, during previous strikes, they normally received their weekly cheques as casual workers.

These workers are most often people who face particular financial difficulties. They are often single parents or workers who have been able to pick up this casual job after being unemployed. This money is absolutely crucial to them, particularly because they do not get strike pay and do not have the possibility of receiving unemployment insurance quickly after the refusal by their employer to honour work which they have already done.

Such a practice is absolutely inexcusable and demonstrates the extremely poor management practices of Canada Post. It is the reason that strikes such as this, which have been so devastating to the postal service in this country, have become commonplace.

We have also been told by union officials that this is not an isolated example, limited to Windsor itself, but is something that is actually being applied across the country. Casual workers who have already put in their time to Canada Post are unable to get their pay cheques which are quite properly due to them from the corporation. I think it is most unfortunate. It is a very sad commentary on the Post Office.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to my hon. friend's speech on this critical issue. Is it his understanding that the short-term goal of the Government in terms of its directives to the postal corporation is to actually phase out the postal system of Canada as we know it in terms of the small rural post offices and community post offices in the suburbs? These are places where many of us can meet many of our constituents at one time because many residents visit the small community post office between 10.30 and 11 o'clock. Is it his understanding that it is the plan of Canada Post Corporation to phase out our postal service as we know it, and is doing so essentially under the direction of the federal Government?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite clear from the deterioration of service which has taken place in the rural parts of my constituency that one must have this fear about the future which my colleague has mentioned. One has to have a sense that Canada Post no longer sees service to small communities and rural parts of Canada as a priority in the future. I think it is pursuing this lack of priority by cutting back support for rural postal routes. I think it is looking very closely at closing down post offices in small communities in my constituency.

The rumours certainly have gone around with respect to post offices, for instance, in La Salle, which is one of the small communities in my constituency, that they would be shut down and people would have to pick up their mail in the future at so-called convenience stores or drug stores which, in the case of the particular community of La Salle, are seven or eight miles from the main heart of the town itself. The post office is right in the middle of this old French community. So the signs are there, although I hope that it will turn out simply to be the efforts of this Government to pressure Canada Post far too hard and that a new Government, when it is elected, will see that Canada Post shifts back to its original commitment to provide service to our rural communities and our rural people right across the country.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find there is consent for the following order to be passed by the House.

That, when Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services, has been given second reading this day, it shall stand referred to a Committee of the Whole; and

That the adjournment proceedings this day, pursuant to Standing Order 66, be suspended; and

That the normal hour of daily adjournment be suspended and the House shall continue with consideration of the said Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, indeed there have been discussions and we have had some very clear indications from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) that the amendments suggested by the labour critic of the New Democratic Party are being considered, that he is at least open to evaluating those amendments and will respond at the appropriate time, we hope in the affirmative. Therefore, we feel it is important that we get on to discussing ways and means of improving this legislation and this special order is a way to facilitate that debate.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned yesterday, we were then ready to go to committee because we thought the time had been reached where we could better put our point of view across through moving amendments. We have also had discussions with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) who showed an open mind and who appears to be receptive to some of our amendments. Therefore, in this respect, we are quite willing to agree with this order, and I say that on behalf of my Party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent in respect to the order?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There were two minutes left in the question and comment period of the speech of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). Resuming debate.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I too want to participate in debate on Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services. I want to remind the House that when this Bill was tabled there were postal services and mail was moving. Yes, there were a series of rotating strikes followed by a series of lock-outs by Canada Post, even though it likes to suggest it was a scheduling problem more than anything else. By the time this Bill was tabled there was no emergency, no hue and cry in the country from any sector. In fact, there were suggestions by a lot of groups which would normally be considered anti-Post Office and anti-CUPW that things should be left well enough alone.

This Government, for whatever reason, and we have our suspicions, decided to bring in this legislation. It decided to use the heavy hand of its majority to accomplish phase two of its over-all vision for Canada Post. In phase one, of course, it is trying to dismantle a system, by no means perfect, instead of rejuvenating it, using this legislation to force upon the workers a collective agreement that is in tune with the corporate plan. That corporate plan is one that will actually lead to a further deterioration of postal services.

During my speech this morning I want to give some examples of this new efficiency, this new level of service that Canada Post is trying to provide to the people of Canada. Because my immediate knowledge tends to be focused on my riding, I will deal with riding issues.

We have this new beast in Thunder Bay; it is not called a franchise outlet; it is not called a sub post office. In fact, we are not sure if it has a technical name, but it is commonly referred to as a parcel outlet. This is a place where one has to go in order to get a parcel or registered letter that was unable to be delivered to one's door. In the old days, the courier service, a contractor employed by Canada Post, would drive up to one's door, usually at speeds which were unsafe for neighbourhood children, but that is a different issue, and finding no one home—let us remember that the majority of families have two wage earners these days—the parcel or registered letter would go back to the station.

At the station a card would be prepared, matched with the parcel or registered letter, and shifted over to the letter carrier section for delivery the next day to the recipient's home so that when the recipient arrived home from work there would be a card in the mailbox saying that a parcel or registered letter could be picked up at Postal Station F or P, or whatever the letter of the branch of Canada Post.

The next day, unless the individual was on a shift that gets him or her home early, more than likely it would be picked up on the third day, but no later. Because of this new efficiency it takes three or four days to claim a parcel or registered letter from what is called a corner store, which is usually in the middle of a block, or a confectionery store that has place for two cars to park. These parcels or registered letters are stored in the livingroom of the owner. Usually these are confectionery stores that are at least an hour away from, for instance, a senior citizen who used to be able to walk to the post office. Now these people have to walk to the bus stop, which is about the same distance from the senior citizens' apartment building as the post office, take a 20 minute bus ride to the other end of the old City of Fort William, go to the confectionery store and hopefully get their parcels. There is no guarantee they will be there because every time you add another step to a process there is another chance of human error. These errors have already occurred. Then they go back and wait for the bus for anywhere from 10 minutes to 20 minutes, and sometimes for up to 40 minutes, and then back for another 20 minute bus ride. So this new, improved efficiency for those seniors takes them at least another hour to get a parcel that they used to be able to walk to the post office to get as part of their daily routine.

I use the seniors as an example because, as we know—and all of us have received calls, not during this particular labour-management dispute but in others—seniors rely on the mail. They rely on parcels. We like to call them care packages from the kids, or from a sister or brother. They tend to use the mails more than do a great many of us. So they have a situation in which they are being forced to go well out of their way to obtain a service that was once available to them just around the corner.

In the other half of the City of Fort William they do not have to go that far. In fact, the parcel outlet is in a drugstore, which is in a small mall about 1,500 feet from the main post office. But it is in an area in which it is difficult to park. It is a busy shopping mall. So it is more difficult for people to gain access. What about that main post office? What is happening there? Well, as part of what I see as the over-all plan of Canada Post, management appears to be doing its best to anger the customers, to frustrate the customers, to make them angry at the staff.

Do you know what they do, Mr. Speaker? At the busiest time of the day they assign most of the staff to non-wicket duties. We have had situations in which there has been only one clerk on a counter that has room for six or eight on duty, and the line up is out the door. It is no wonder that the Government says people want this new improved service. Of course they want it, they are being turned off and turned away from the traditional outlets.

CUPW has not said that they do not want services provided in areas that do not have them. They would be more than happy to have them staffed by full-time Canada Post employees, not a drugstore clerk who will do the post office duties when they are not selling cosmetics or whatever. That is the other thing that we have seen happening.

Let me turn to the community of Atikokan at the other end of my riding. It has a central post office. It has no home delivery. Nor, quite frankly, is home delivery wanted in that community because, as my colleagues have said before me, in these smaller communities those post offices are a communications point. They play a focal point in the community. Politicians know that if they want to greet the whole town they show up at ten o'clock in the morning, or at eleven o'clock, and pretty well everybody comes to the post office to pick up their mail.

What does Canada Post want to do? It wants to develop one of these postal outlets somewhere else in that small community of 4,500 people. So there would be the frustrating situation of being sent, or going down, to the post office with a parcel and being told to go across town to pick it up instead of using the logical one-stop shopping service that is currently available.

They are talking about closing rural post offices on Saturdays. It is being said that there is not enough business on Saturdays. What does that do to the people of northwestern Ontario whose livelihood comes from the harvesting of trees and the digging of ore and have to live out of town Monday through Friday and only come into town on weekends? What does that do to them? It disenfranchises them.

The Post Office should be trying to develop a postal system that will attract new volumes of mail, that will ensure that the revenue is there to pay for the services that the people of Canada want, without having to charge an arm or a leg for a stamp, and at the same time providing a vast range of services that would introduce new revenue to Canada Post. The Post Office is not doing that.

Let me go to the Bill itself and talk about a couple of things in it. I want to express my concern about the imbalance in this Bill. It is clearly a Bill weighted heavily in favour of Canada Post and heavily against the workers and their union. For example, setting aside the monetary penalties which are very severe for someone who violates this law, let us take a look at the responsibilities for the union leadership and the responsibilities for the management leadership and the respective penalties.

As we know, either a union officer who defies this law or a company official who defies this law is forbidden from holding office or employment for five years. When one looks farther in the Bill one finds in relation to "Obligations of union" the following:

> The union and each officer and representative of the union
> (a) shall, forthwith on the coming into force of this Act, give notice to the employees that, by reason of the coming into force of this Act, postal operations are forthwith to be continued or resumed, as the case may be, and the employees, when so required, are forthwith to continue or resume, as the case may be, the duties of their employment—

The union officers have to tell their members that they have to go back to work, but the company is not forced to bring them back to work until it wants to. We saw during the rotating strikes where Canada Post management made a point of delaying in bringing those workers back. They said that the scabs had to finish their shifts.

In Thunder Bay we had the ludicrous situation at the mail sorting plant where the workers were kept out an extra day; and, yes, there were scabs in there attempting to sort the mail. But at the main post office where the wickets are, and where there were no replacement workers, no scabs brought in, only management employees, they were kept out for an extra day.

Canada Post has shown already its irresponsibility in this matter. Yet here in this Bill we are giving it the right to delay calling back the workers. But the leadership of the unions, whether at the national level or the local level, have to jump. Are they required to have a telex out within one minute of the 12-hour point when this law comes into being? This is hunting season up in northwestern Ontario and conceivably some of the leadership may be out enjoying the recreational life that is offered in northwestern Ontario. Will they be prohibited from holding office because they took a weekend off and did not jump when the Government said that they should?

What right does Parliament have, what right does the Government of Canada have, to tell the rank and file of CUPW, whether it is at the local in Thunder Bay or at the local in Atikokan, or the national union, who should be their leaders? That is up to those men and women. They are the ones who decide. Think of the position that they are placed in.

I suspect that there is a mythology in the Conservative ranks on how unions function, they really believe that orders flow from the top to the bottom, and when Jean-Claude Parrot says, "Do it", they do it. It does not work like that in the real world. Through a secret ballot the membership of a local of CUPW could decide that they were going to remain on strike. As a body they would suffer certain penalties, of which they would be aware. They would know that their local or their national would be fined. They know that as individuals they would be fined. But by giving that direction to their leadership, they would also be saying that, because of this Bill, the leadership would not be able to continue as the leadership for five years. That is an extremely difficult position to put anyone in. I would not want to be one of those labour leaders under this Bill; it is so Draconian.

This is why we wish this part pulled out, why we have been pushing the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), who hopefully has enough clout to convince his Cabinet colleagues to back off on this Draconian measure. It goes beyond rationality.

I have some background in labour relations as a member of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, and I have some understanding of the difference between mediation and arbitration. I know that the two are not one and the same. The mediator learns a lot from both sides in confidence in order to try to pull them together and find that middle road that will allow an agreement to occur. But if that same person then becomes the arbitrator, who then decides to pick from this and pick from that, it places both parties in a very difficult situation. It means that mediation will not and cannot work. Both sides must have faith in that mediator.

If the two were split, and if within the framework of this Bill the mediator was given x number of months to attempt to come up with an agreement, and for those parts where he was unsuccessful to turn them over to a different arbitrator, one who was not privy to the confidential talks in mediation, then that would make this bad Bill slightly better.

I will be brief, Mr. Speaker, because I see that my time is running out. The third item is the reference to the Foisy report. Once again, this is another example of the manner in which this Government chooses to favour management. During the back-to-work legislation for the railways we argued that the arbitrator's report should be included because it was favourable to the unions. The Government said it did not wish to do that, it was not appropriate to put those things in legislation. Because this report is favourable to the management of Canada Post it wishes it included.

We can see the game, and it is consistent with the game that has been played all along by the Government. It is anti-worker, and anti-union. This is clearly not a Government that is in favour of an efficient Post Office, and services to the community. It is doing its best to reduce the services. It is doing its best to attempt to break the union. Quite frankly, it is desperate to win something, anything. It thought it could win against the letter carriers but was unsuccessful. It thought it could win by provoking a national postal strike, which quite frankly the Government did provoke because it was only after this legislation was tabled that the rotating strikes and lock-outs escalated into a national strike. It has to accept the responsibility for that. But it will not win this one either. There is not the hue and cry out there. People see through the activities of the Government. They know what it is up to and, just as in everything else, they will not support the Government now, and certainly not at the next election.

Mr. Murphy: I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) for his very fine speech on this issue. I know that in the past he has been involved in back-to-work legislation, especially in opposing the back-to-work legislation of the railway workers. I wonder if the Hon. Member would spend a few minutes explaining why this legislation is much worse and more pro-management in the manner it is structured than other back-to-work legislation that has come through the House of Commons.

Mr. Angus: I thank the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) for his question, and I wish to publicly thank him for the work that he has done in regard to this legislation and the other back-to-work Bills that we have seen from the Government; we have probably seen more from this Government than previous administrations over the years.

As one looks through these Bills, one begins to pick up the pattern and understand how this Bill relates to the over-all plan of the Government, and the over-all plan of Canada Post, which are one and the same. We have heard in the House that Canada Post refused to do anything until the Cabinet adopted its business plan. The business plan was predicated on the whole concept of franchising out, of carving out components of the Post Office and turning them over to the private sector.

The Foisy report was incorporated into this legislation. It came down clearly on the side of Canada Post with regard to franchising, in spite of a remarkable willingness by CUPW to modify its position and say yes to franchise outlets in areas where there are no services. CUPW wishes to see a strong Post Office because it is important to their members. With a strong Post Office there is better job security, workers get a fair share of the revenue, and there are opportunities for advancement.

I do not know if you have ever gone to a sorting plant, Mr. Speaker. I have, and have seen those areas where people are stuck in front of pigeon-holes sorting the mail day after day, or night after night. I think they do an incredible job, I really do. But it is a job that eventually creates problems for them. It is tedious, mundane, and repetitive. Consequently, there are two realities. We have to reward them for that repetition and the mundane aspect. I do not mean to demean it, because it is an important job. But to keep people in that job we must pay them a decent rate of pay. We must also give them an opportunity to move out. I have seen press reports, and I know a number of people in the Post Office, so I know what those day jobs at the wicket counters mean to them. It means a sane life-style. It probably means that the marriage will survive. If a person works from twelve to eight five days a week for six or seven years, and his or her spouse is working an eight to four shift, something has to give. This hope for a move allows some stability. It is almost like a carrot out there to give the person something to look forward to. I think the media have done a very good job of portraying the importance of the 4,400 wicket jobs.

If we allow the Government to franchise out that aspect, to eliminate the front line or the human face to human face contact, and turn it over to minimum wage employees who come and go, we lose something in the over-all system.

I think the Bill is weighted much more in favour of management than was the railway legislation or the longshoremen's legislation. The Government must give further consideration to the kinds of changes we have been suggesting.

We recognize that a Bill will pass this House which will force men and women back to work. However, let us make it a fair Bill. Let us not give Canada Post the option of when it has to bring back its workers. Let us make sure that the rule applies to management as it does to the workers. Let us not have unfairness. Let us remove the penalty clause which is clearly aimed more at the union than at management.

Will the President of Canada Post be turfed out of his job? If he violates the law, yes, but I somehow suspect that the Government would find another Crown corporation to put him in, as opposed to Jean-Claude Parrot who cannot go to another union; he is a postal worker.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in view of my colleague's comments on the penalty clause, particularly the penalty which provides for the prohibition of a union officer belonging to a union for five years, I would like to ask him his view on it in terms of constitutionality. Is there anything at all in the legislation and in what the Government has said about equivalent penalties for everybody from the president down to the most junior foreman of Canada Post who fails to recall employees immediately upon passage of the legislation?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) for his question.

Those people who are familiar with legislation will know that Bills contain marginal notes on the left-hand column which explain each clause. Clause 11(1) has the marginal note "Additional punishment—union" and Clause 11(2) has "Additional punishment—employer". The wording of the subclauses clearly indicates that they are not balanced. I have seen press reports that indicate that very knowledgeable people in the civil rights field feel that this penalty is in conflict with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I guess one would only know that if the law is passed, if somebody violates the law and is found guilty of violating it, and a challenge is taken to the courts. I do not think we should take that risk, and that is why I want it removed.

Clearly there is no penalty for an employer or an employer representative who does not call wicket clerks back to work for eight o'clock the morning after the Bill is passed. The Bill is supposed to come into effect 12 hours after the Royal Assent. However, if a local manager or supervisor decides that he will not bring back those people until a day after, meaning yet another financial penalty for employees because they will have lost another day's wages, there is nothing in the Bill to punish him.

We had the same argument before when dealing with back-to-work legislation. In fact, we were able to convince the Minister of Labour to withdraw a similar clause from another Bill because we argued that it was unfair, unjust, and not balanced.

I hope the Government reconsiders these aspects because it is important that legislation such as this is balanced, rather than in favour of one side or the other.

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to speak this morning on Bill C-86, an Act to ensure the continuation of postal services to all Canadians.

As regrettable as such action is, for I really believe in the rights of union workers, I commend the Minister for bringing forward legislation at this time to protect the innocent victims involved in a labour versus management dispute at the Post Office in that postal services to many people suffer.

There are hundreds of very responsible unions in Canada which successfully negotiate settlements with businesses right across the country. This system functions very well. However, with the right to strike also comes a responsibility and an accountability. We have clearly seen that the track record of CUPW is very poor. It has essentially lost that right because of its track record, because of continued disruptions and hardships placed upon small businesses whose cash flow has been severely hampered in prolonged strikes of the past.

Many hundreds of businesses have gone bankrupt and thousands of jobs have been lost. Old age pensioners have waited anxiously for their cheques in the mail, not knowing for sure whether they will come. The same applies to the disabled and those who receive mother's allowance and baby bonus cheques. We are in the midst of a United Way campaign which raises significant funds to help the needy and disadvantaged in Canada. All such things are being placed in jeopardy.

Unfortunately we have seen the actions of the past few weeks. We have seen the irresponsible actions of the unions on the picket lines. We have seen them sticking glue in mailboxes. We have seen them issuing directives saying that they will do everything to disrupt postal service at various postal depots. This clearly indicates that it is not a responsible executive.

We should not jump to the conclusion that they speak for all inside postal workers. There are many inside postal workers who are very responsible and carry on their duties in a very conscientious way. However, I believe that many of these people are afraid to come forward and express their dissatisfaction with the actions of the CUPW executive for fear of reprisal, and we can certainly understand that. The unfortunate part is that all unions are tarred with the same brush by the irresponsible actions of the past few weeks and over the past few years.

In the last 10 years there have been 711,000 days lost through strikes and illegal strikes at the Post Office. We have to ask why. If we take a look at the over-all plight of the postal workers we see the inside postal workers earning a salary with all benefits in the range of $24.50 an hour. We see an absentee rate of full-time postal workers of 19.05 days a year, roughly four working weeks. That is scandalous. Compare that to the rate in private industry of six days per year. Interestingly we see a turnover rate in the post office of 3.52 per cent. That is virtually a zero turnover rate. If you compare that to private industry, it speaks volumes. It tells me as one Canadian that people obviously are reasonably content or they would be leaving. They know when they have job security, reasonable wages and benefits. So why leave?

In London alone in the quest for replacement workers there are 2,000 Canadians who are willing to take the job, its conditions, the hourly wage, the benefits at the Post Office. We are seeing union management saying that it is not prepared to accept $24.50 an hour, and is not prepared to let anybody else do the job. It boils down to a very important principle. Management has to have the right to manage. For too many years the CUPE executive have been trying to manage and run the Post Office. I say unequivocally that public opinion is fed up with its actions.

I see in my own office, as a result of this legislation, as well as my own private Member's Bill, which is coming up shortly, to take away the right to strike and declares for all intents and purposes, the Post Office to be an essential service, an overwhelming positive reaction. People realize that CUPE has not shown itself to be responsible or having had the best interests of Canadians at heart. CUPE is prepared to jeopardize and compromise the postal service for its own benefit. This is unfortunate. I have had about 200 calls to my office in the last few days, 197 to be exact, 189 in favour and 8 against. Most of those identified themselves as inside postal workers.

We all realize that there is a responsibility incumbent upon management. Clearly it takes two to tango. It would not be just to point the finger at the union without pointing out that there are areas of discontent and problems within management of the Post Office. Clearly the spirit of confrontation has built up animosity and we have to work toward resolving that. Yet to the credit of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) he has done everything he can do to bring these parties together. He brought in Mr. Drouin and Mr. Foisy who conducted extensive hearings and brought forward recommendations that were initially given credit by the unions.

In the key area of the union dispute, that being franchising and job security, let it be clearly understood—never mind the smoke and mirrors—that the recommendation and the offer by the Corporation and in the Foisy report was that existing jobs would not be in jeopardy—no existing employee would lose his or her job. This gives the Corporation the latitude and liberty to run the Corporation in an efficient way to ensure better service to all Canadians, and more accessible service, may I say.

In my own community I can drive around the corner and go to a convenience store with a postal outlet. I can pick up a parcel on a Saturday. The service available is second to none compared to what the Post Office has offered in the past.

Indeed, Canadians will benefit. We have to be physically responsible. We cannot continue to guarantee any number of jobs at any cost. We have to attempt to run an efficient business operation. Bear in mind that this is a Crown corporation, one that was incorporated in 1981. There is a perception that the Government is running the Post Office. We are trying to do the opposite. We are trying to allow that Corporation to run efficiently and economically and, I am happy to say, it would be making significant progress if it were not for these unfortunate strikes and disruptions of service.

My own personal Bill, C-269, goes beyond the Minister's Bill. The Minister's Bill is essentially calling for the parties to come back to the negotiating table and have binding arbitration. However, my Bill not only calls for that but it takes from CUPE the right to strike and, for all intents and purposes, declares the Post Office an essential service. I feel this is necessary.

As I said in my earlier remarks, I feel that the uncertainty of postal service, the growing lack of confidence and cynicism among Canadians about the service and the Post Office's unreliability is hurting the Corporation in a dramatic way. Businesses are starting to use alternative services. People are saying that they cannot be sure that if they send a cheque, a contract or a very important document, that it will get to its destinations on time.

The concept of taking away the right to strike for postal workers is not new. It is not as though I were inventing the wheel. The situation has existed in the United States and it has worked very well. You can mail a letter in Buffalo and it will be delivered, virtually guaranteed, in Florida the next day. If you mail it on Monday it will be there on Tuesday. This speaks volumes.

As I say, the Minister has appointed a very noted labour negotiator, Mr. Bill Kelly, to try to bring the parties together. As capable as he has shown himself to be in the past, he has expressed his frustration with the attitude of the parties. In view of that, it is very clear that the the Minister has no option. The Minister must take the action has taken in bringing this legislation before the House.

I commend the Minister for assuring Canadians that the mail will be delivered and that there will be continuity of service. Pensioners will not have to go to bed at night wondering if their cheques will be there in the morning, wondering whether they can pay their rent or buy their food. The Minister has given reasonable assurances to those small businesses that so desperately wait for cheques to come in to pay their employees, to pay their payables, to pay their taxes and indeed to be good corporate citizens.

As regrettable as such legislation is, I do commend the Minister for showing the resolve and the determination to protect all Canadians.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of my hon. friend. He referred to replacement workers. The first instance I can recall of replacement workers being used to a large extent was during the strike at the Pocklington plant, which resulted in violence. Even though the workers were in a legal strike position, the company brought in strike-breakers, scabs, replacement workers.

With some pride, the Hon. Member indicated that in his community of London there were 2,000 people who wanted to be scabs and to do the work the inside workers were doing. I know my hon. friend follows labour relations, and he knows that in his part of Ontario there have been labour disputes at General Motors, Ford and Chrysler. I wonder if he can think of any other instances of replacement workers being brought in.

It seems that the Government is saying it supports scabs who cross picket lines. When there are management-labour disputes in the City of Kamloops, replacement workers are not used to run the city. When the pulp and paper mills there have labour disputes, they do not bring in scabs to continue the operations of the mills. However, Canada Post does this.

Does the Hon. Member believe that that is the appropriate thing to do? Could he describe for us other labour-management disputes in which replacement workers have been brought in on a large scale? At the same time, could he tell us if that is because the management of other organizations are much more sophisticated? I am thinking of management that recognizes the validity of a management-labour dispute and the workers' right to withdraw their services and bring pressure on the bargaining process. I would enjoy hearing the Hon. Member's comments on this.

Does he think that it is progressive labour relations for management to bring in scab workers on armed, steel-plated buses with blackened windows? Is this the Government's impression of a progressive management team, is this what we want to see as a model for the rest of Canada? Could he outline where this is used in other jurisdictions?

Mr. Jepson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question and for the points he has made. The workers do have a right to strike. However, the Government has the right and the responsibility to move the mail and to ensure that Canadians receive all services. It only clouds the issue to use as an example a meat-packing plant. That is totally irrelevant to the important issue that most Canadians believe it is their right to have proper and reliable mail service.

For that reason, I think it is important that replacement workers are brought in. They are not scabs. They are individual Canadians like the Hon. Member and I with families and loved ones. They are human beings. For a Member of Parliament or anyone else to refer to another person as a scab is distasteful to most Canadians. They are replacement workers who are willing to accept job conditions when other people are not prepared to accept those conditions.

I am not saying this as a blanket statement. I am talking about what is really an essential service to Canadians. I do not suggest that this is a desirable approach to take in a blanket fashion. But I do say that in a case such as the Post Office when so many people are caught in the wide net of a postal strike, the Government, if it is responsible and doing its job, must ensure mail delivery to all Canadians.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions to put to the Hon. Member who has just spoken. First, I would like to follow up on the question put by my colleague from Kamloops—Shuswap. I would be very interested in hearing the Hon. Member describe previous cases in the history of this Crown corporation of strike-breakers being used. I think the use of strike-breakers is an extremely provocative action. It was seen to be an extremely provocative action in the case of the letter carriers strike. Despite the fact that it has always been an essential service, is this not the first time that Canada Post has taken this extremely provocative step?

Second, at the beginning of his remarks the Hon. Member referred to the hundreds of responsible union settlements which take place across Canada. I think it is important to keep these settlements in mind. The reason those responsible settlements have taken place at Chrysler, Ford and General Motors is that there is always a possible cost to the employer if a settlement is not reached, just as there is a possible cost to the worker who has to go out on the picket line and lose wages.

In this case, was the possibility of a responsible negotiating process not badly undercut by the obvious willingness of the Government right from the beginning of the dispute to legislate people back to work? Did this not make it next to impossible for the Crown corporation to bargain with any sense that it would lose something? It knew that if a strike took place the Government would step in and send the workers back to work. There was, therefore, no potential loss to make them responsible at the bargaining table.

Mr. Jepson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Member for his question. I am afraid that he has selective amnesia with regarding the actions of the Government over the past months. The Government appointed Mr. Drouin and Mr. Foisy, who conducted extensive hearings, and finally appointed the noted labour negotiator, Mr. Bill Kelly. The Minister and the Government have made a very conscientious effort to reach a negotiated settlement.

It is clear that CUPW had another agenda. The major issue is not wages or other benefits. The major issue is, who is running the Post Office, CUPW or management. With the greatest of respect, I believe that CUPW ran the Post Office for too many years under the previous administration. It is time that management be allowed to manage.

With regard to the Member's first question about a precedent being set with strike-breakers, I cannot cite specific examples off the top of my head, but I believe, with due respect, that it has happened on isolated occasions before. However, by the same token, I do not believe that we have any choice when we consider the position in which Government and the postal corporation has been placed. The mail must be delivered. If the people who are there are not prepared to do it at $24.50 an hour plus benefits, we must get someone else to do it. There are 2,000 people in London who said that they would do it.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): I am happy to take part in this debate, if for no other reason than to express my disapproval of the manner in which the Government is handling this matter. None of us relish this debate or like the situation. This is not the first time we have been through this. This is about the tenth or twelfth time we have been through it in the years that I have been here.

On no other occasion when the Government has felt compelled to bring in back-to-work legislation to end a strike or lock-out was the use of strike-breakers or scabs—and that is what they are—encouraged or allowed. On a couple of occasions which I can recall the Government legislated a settlement with which neither side was very happy, but at least it was fair and even-handed. Any legislation slanted in favour of one side is undemocratic and unfair.

I do not dispute that from time to time an occasion will arise when purely as a last resort, after every other effort has been exhausted, legislation will be necessary. On the odd occasion in previous years even the Minister has met with both sides, separately and together, in an effort to reach a settlement under the principles of collective bargaining. That is a long-standing tradition in this country supported by all sides of the House.

Legislation which takes sides invites and incites violence. Otherwise law-abiding, decent citizens of Canada are so frustrated and angered that they believe they have no other choice. How would any of us feel in the same situation? I am certain that every one of us would feel exactly the same.

The union asked for a mediator on Wednesday and on Wednesday afternoon Canada Post said no. On Thursday the Government introduced the legislation. The union was then left with no choice but to discontinue rotating strikes and call everyone out all over the country. This is a most incompetent manner in which to handle this situation.

This Bill was not necessary, certainly not yet. The mail was moving no slower than it moved before. On average it takes four to five days for my mail to move between Regina and Ottawa, regardless of which direction. Some takes as long as 12 or 14 days. That reminds me of the old saw we heard when the price of postage was raised to 17 cents. It was said that 2 cents was for postage and 15 cents was for storage. I have often wondered whether, of the 36 cents charged now, 6 cents is not for postage and 30 cents for storage.

Every union and every union member in the country has recognized for many years that technological change and automation will reduce the number of people required to do the work and will affect their lives and livelihoods. They have recognized that for many decades. I experienced it myself as an employee of a railroad. In the overwhelming majority of cases the displacement and disruption caused by technological change and automation can be kept to a minimum through mutually agreed upon methods, to the benefit of one side and with the least possible harm to the other.

For the last 15 or 20 years the management of Canada Post has been on a union-busting kick. It has been determined to barge ahead with automation and technological change, regardless of the cost. It has spent $500 million or $600 to put in automated sorting equipment which did not work. Rather than taking two or three days for the mail to move between Toronto and Winnipeg, it took five or six days. It did not work. However, in its drive for automation it did not care and still does not care. I can only conclude that since the management of the Post Office has been hired by the Government, the Government does not care about either the kind of service Canadians receive or the kind of treatment the employees are given.

There has not been bargaining in good faith. The Government has approved the business plan of the Post Office, which calls for franchising without regard to provisions for job security.

Mrs. Sparrow: That is not true.

Mr. Benjamin: The mediator's report says that the inside workers who are displaced by franchising will have job security at wicket positions. However, the Post Office can simply reduce the number of wickets by franchising locations nearby. The employees of Canada Post are not stupid. They get angry when they see through that kind of chicanery, and I cannot blame them.

When you have a good employer, you have good employees. When you have good management, you have a good union. The Post Office has not had good management for many years. Many of us hoped that relations at Canada Post would have improved when it was made a Crown corporation rather than a government department.

Relations did improve for some time, but then the Government became obsessed with reducing the deficit by cutting losses and cutting costs, even if that meant cutting service and mistreating employees. The bottom line syndrome took over and Canada Post brought down its business plan in line with the Government's directives to reduce its losses.

I do not believe that there is a profitable post office anywhere in the world, except perhaps Liechtenstein or Monaco. I understand that the British Post Office may break even and perhaps have some small surplus from time to time. Perhaps we can learn something from it. It also provides a far greater number of services than Canada Post provides.

Yesterday, an Hon. Member speaking on this issue complained that the employees' fight to obtain job security was an unreasonable demand. I thought the 19th century Tory mentality disappeared with the election of the present Government. However, I was wrong. Those social and economic dinosaurs are back in greater numbers than ever.

In my constituency, mail delivery takes as long or longer than before, whether it is to a postal box, through sub-post offices or even by door-to-door delivery. Canada Post attempted to close a sub post office in a shopping centre in my constituency. It meant that people in the immediate area had to go a mile and a half south or a mile and a half north to another sub post office. Within 48 hours, 4,000 citizens in that immediate neighbourhood went to that sub-post office located in a drugstore—which, incidentally, has unionized employees—and signed a petition demanding the retention of that sub post office. That must mean something.

The public relations official for Canada Post in Regina had the nerve to say that these people could take a bus. There are many senior citizens in that part of the city. If they took a bus it would cost them a dollar each way. Who would spend a dollar to buy a 36-cent stamp? Perhaps some dummy in the management of Canada Post believes it is a good idea, but the citizens of Canada do not.

In all my years of public life I have yet to find a single Canadian taxpayer of any political stripe who has objected to a loss in the Post Office as long as they got the service. When Canada Post delivered mail on a one-day or two-day delivery basis until the early 1970s, there was a loss every year. Canadians are quite prepared to share in the cost of the provision of the best possible postal service through general tax revenue. Of course, the objective should be an efficient postal service which could break even or even make a few dollars. But the Post Office is not a business, it is a public service. Imagine what would happen if we attempted to make the provision of sewer lines, water lines, streets and sidewalks operate as a business?

Mrs. Sparrow: Every city does it.

Mr. Benjamin: I do not know of any city that makes a profit on roads, sidewalks, sewers and water lines. They are all essential public services which certainly do not pay their own way. In fact, they represent a total loss, and taxes must be raised and paid by all citizens of the community, as they should be, to share in the cost of an essential public service. The people of this country want service first.

The Transport Committee just returned from a trip to Europe.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: Incidentally, it is the first time that the committee has been able to travel outside this country in over 100 years. We had much more reason to travel than some other committees that I can think of.

Mr. Andre: You are always on trips, Les.

Mr. Benjamin: I wish I could catch up to the number of trips some of my colleagues on both sides of the House have taken. We met with the management, members of boards, presidents of companies and government Ministers from Britain, Holland, Belgium, Germany and France. We saw the airport at Heathrow, the Tilbury docks in London, the Port of Rotterdam and the airport in Amsterdam. All of us were given Eurail passes and rode the trains, including the Grand Vitesse between Paris and Léon. I wish we could give the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and VIA Rail management Eurail passes so they could see what is happening elsewhere when it comes to moving people.

However, in all of those locations, the question was put to some of these officials if they had any labour difficulties or strikes. Have you had any strikes? On every occasion, as my colleagues in committee will verify, they raised their eyebrows, saying it is inconceivable that there would be a lock-out or strike in those industries, all of which are of a public service nature. One individual scratched his head, I think it was at Heathrow Airport in London, and said, "Yes, I think we did have a strike seven years ago for four hours when the air traffic controllers went out". They have a system there, not only collective bargaining, but a degree of industrial democracy, that the unions and management both look upon a strike or a lock-out as a failure on the part of both sides.

Legislation like this that legislates in favour of one side over the other flies in the face of good industrial relations. It incites unions, particularly individual members of those unions, to take actions they would never even consider under a decent and fair system, and they have not been operating under a decent and fair system in the current negotiations. They have not received fair consideration from the Government in this legislation.

Let me rely on a couple of publications that are not known to be of socialist inclination, New Democratic Party propaganda, or anything like that. Of all publications, The Edmonton Journal, in that heart of free enterprise and free market force—if they keep going the way they are there would be good reason to call it "Redmonton"—stated on October 9:

> Ottawa is using coercion where reason might have prevailed by legislating an end to rotating postal strikes.
> In the process, the federal Government spurns the collective bargaining process and erodes the right to strike. It invites the Canadian Union of Postal Workers to retaliate in a manner that can hardly make the delivery of mail more efficient.

It goes on to state:

> For its part, CUPW has shown sensitivity to Canadian consumers by staging rotating strikes instead of suspending all mail service.

Another great bastion of free enterprise and the market forces, the Winnipeg Free Press, referring to the services only being modestly disrupted because of the rotating nature of the strikes, stated:

> The postal service was not a model of efficiency but it was not dramatically less efficient than at other times.

It went on to state:

> Why the Government decided to move so quickly and so harshly to end the strike is anybody's guess. It certainly was not to benefit the postal service or the people who use it.
> The eventual outcome of that dispute ought to be based on two clear principles: the postal unions have the right to fight for job security for their members; the post office management has the right to run the Post Office.

I do not disagree with that. The Winnipeg Free Press ends its editorial by stating:

> The time might have come when the Government had no choice but to take action. It has not come yet.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the same thing applies today, five days after that editorial was written.

This kind of Draconian move was totally unnecessary. The Government has shown an unmitigated bias in support of Canada Post in order to put in place Canada Post's so-called business plan as speedily as possible so as to reduce its deficit. That is its number one priority regardless of the quality of service the people of Canada receive and regardless of the rights of the employees.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I have one question to put to the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). I believe he mentioned in his remarks that if we have bad management and bad practices, we are going to end up with bad labour relations and that it was management and the Government which were responsible for bad relations of the Post Office. I do not know whether the Hon. Member had the opportunity to read the latest book on the Post Office written by David Stewart

Patterson of the Globe and Mail. It is called Post Mortem and I recommend it to the Hon. Member.

One of the things outlined in the book is that over the last 15 years there have been several Ministers responsible for Canada Post, Postmaster Generals before the creation of the Crown corporation and Ministers responsible after that. There have been three complete changes in the upper management of the Post Office in that period of time; Jim Corkery, being the first of this group of three, came from the Ontario division of the Post Office. At that time it was a department of Government. When it became a Crown corporation there was Michael Warren, who brought in a whole new management team. We now have Don Landers who is running the Crown corporation with another new management team.

What we have had over the last 15 years is three completely different sets of managers. We have had different approaches from governments because there have been different governments in that time. However, one consistency throughout the last 15 years is that we have had the same labour union leaders, Jean-Claude Parrot and Bob McGarry.

Is it the Hon. Member's position that in fact we have had the incredibly unlucky situation in which three complete sets of managers, with different philosophies and approaches, have all happened to be terribly wrong and totally responsible for the bad labour relations, while on the other side of the equation the consistent and same union leaders are blameless and in no way responsible for the sad state of labour relations?

The Hon. Member and I agree that labour relations in the Post Office are in a terrible state, but I really find it a little difficult to blame it all on Government and management when we have had three different approaches, three different sets of managers, while on the other side we have had the consistency of approach, a militant approach, over the last 15 years. Is there no blame to be attached whatsoever to that side of the equation, that everything rests with the incredible misfortune of coming up with three new sets of managements, all of whom are totally incompetent when it comes to managing labour? Is that the position of the Hon. Member?

Mr. Benjamin: I think my hon. friend has missed the point. Perhaps I did not make it well enough and I will try again. I said if we have good management we will have a good union. If we have a good employer, we will have good employees. Surely over the last 25 years the experience we have had in Canada must tell us something. When it gets to the point where the Winnipeg Free Press starts calling into question the competency of the Government and the management, it has to tell us something. That is not coming from union members or union leaders. I do not think that Mr. Parrot has been the leader of the CUPW for the last 15 years. I think it has been the last seven or eight years since Mr. Davidson passed away. Compared to Mr. Davidson, Mr. Parrot is a saint. In fact, he has been complimented as many times as being the most responsible yet in the postal unions.

As far as the letter carriers are concerned, last month is the first time in their entire history that they have struck. They have been more than patient. By the way, postmasters out in rural Canada belong to a union as well, although they call it an association. Ask them about the management of the Post Office over the last 15 years.

The Hon. Member says that they have hired three different sets.

Ms. Mitchell: They should hire women for a change.

Mr. Benjamin: I do not know what kind of sets they are into. Can they find better sets than that? They sure as hell were matching sets. They matched in terms of not being able to comprehend what the essential reason for and the purpose of their position is at the Canada Post Corporation. It is to provide service in the handling and delivery of mail in Canada; and that takes first priority over everything else.

Service has been chronically reduced. Communities and citizens have been ignored and given the run around. Do you call that good management, Mr. Speaker? They have been given double-talk.

There was a situation, for example, at one time in the Regina Post Office which had hundreds of pending grievances, some of them going back six years. Most of them were very minor and could have been settled between the union rep and the foreman on the floor of the sorting room. No, they had to go upstairs, and then to Saskatoon, and then to Winnipeg. Sometimes they even went all the way to Ottawa. No wonder the morale is bad. By the way, some of those grievances the union refused to take up because it did not figure that the member had a case. The union is not right 100 per cent of the time, and I have never suggested that for one minute. Nobody is 100 per cent right and nobody is 100 per cent wrong in almost everything.

But they have not, I submit, been unreasonable in fighting for something so fundamental, something that took all these years through collective bargaining, and all those years of struggle; that is, the rights and benefits to which they are entitled. If one pays good one will get good work. If one pays minimum wage, or something like $5 an hour and one wants turnover in one's workforce, then one will sure get it. If one wants to get incompetents—

Mr. Horner: Who gets $5 an hour?

Mr. Benjamin: When you franchise out post offices and they are done on tenders and the lowest bidder gets it, then that lowest bidder will not be paying $10 or $12 an hour. You know it and I know it, Mr. Speaker.

I am not saying that those three sets of management that have been hired in the last 15 years are bad, personally. I have no doubt that they are very smart, wise and competent gentlemen. But I want to submit that that same management has to work in accordance with what is Government policy. One could separate Canada Post as a Crown corporation, but the buck still ends up with the Government of the day. Government policy has been to try to get Canada Post to eliminate its deficit over a period of years, and to start making money. When there is a policy such as that in a service industry—

Mr. Andre: Like the British Post Office, which you praise.

Mr. Benjamin: If my hon. friend would take a look at all the other services provided by the British Post Office that Canada Post does not provide, he would find that there are people in that country who use the Post Office for a lot more than just buying a stamp, mailing a letter or picking up mail. I do not want to compare the two because there is a high density population there and very short distances, so the two are not comparable. That is probably one other reason why they have a better chance to break even, or even to make a modest profit.

That is the other thing that the successive managements of the Post Office in Canada, all of them, have completely forgotten. We always will have a higher cost in transportation and communications. It is inevitable and it is unavoidable. We are geographically the second largest nation in the world. We are in a northern climate, cold and harsh, with a small, widely-scattered population. Of course our costs will be higher.

One has one's head in the sand if one thinks that they can be brought down in line with the United States or some countries in Europe. That is out of all reality. Our costs will be higher, and I resent that being taken out on the employees of Canada Post.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Since we will be starting a speech on debate, is it the pleasure of the House to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 12.55 p.m. the House took recess.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

PANEL'S REJECTION OF CANADIAN COUNTERVAIL DUTY ON BEEF IMPORTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in 1984 the European Economic Community dramatically increased its shipments of subsidized beef from Ireland and Denmark to Canada to some 50 million pounds per year. The Government imposed quotas and then backed off. Subsequently the Canadian Cattlemen's Association launched a countervail suit against the EEC. That was sustained by the government agencies in Canada.

Recently we learned that this countervail duty of 80 cents a pound on subsidized beef from the EEC has been turned down by a GATT panel. The GATT panel report will be presented to the full GATT committee. Canada has an opportunity to turn down that report, and maintain the countervail duty.

I call upon the Government to turn down this report and continue the countervail duty on EEC beef to bring order to the Canadian agriculture and meat marketing situation.

MATANE PAPERMILL—GOVERNMENT'S ACTION

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia—Matane): Mr. Speaker, our Government has just made an offer to the Donohue company and Rexfor, a Crown corporation, to set up a regional paper mill in Matane.

Today, I wish to thank and congratulate my honorable friends for giving their support to this major economic project. A few stages remain to be covered before the construction work can begin. Now all the interested parties have finally given their go ahead, to the greatest satisfaction of a proud and resourceful population.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, by supporting this project, our Government shows to the whole of Canada that regional development remains a priority for the Conservative Party. It is now the responsibility of promoters Donohue-Maxwell and Rexfor to make a decision.

Now, the people in Matane know where all the parties stand. There are still a few details to iron out before this matter is finally settled.

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF CO-OPERATIVE MOVEMENT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is Co-Operative Development Week in Canada. Co-operatives have become such an integral part of our lives that many of us tend to take them for granted or, worse yet, view them as a vestige of some bygone era. In fact, they continue to be a modern way of adapting economic activity to democratic principles. One member, one vote, is such a basic revolution in control of our economic institutions that it is small wonder that some of our Governments, recognizing only the power of money and not of people, still have to be reminded of their existence.

• (1405)

The co-operative ideal is admirably suited to small, community-based economic and social endeavours, from grocery stores, credit unions, daycare, and housing projects to the very large agricultural co-operatives. These same democratic principles of widely held control have worked for large-scale institutions as well; witness the wheat pools in the West, the dairy pools across the country, the credit union centrals, and co-operative insurance. They are living examples of the socialist belief that people can control and direct their own economic destiny through self help, a basic principle for our Party which springs from the same basic belief in the power of ordinary people to direct their own lives.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

BOUNDARY AGREEMENT—CALL FOR HOLDING OF PLEBISCITE

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had this to say about the two Territories:

> This Government has actively promoted the steady expansion of responsible government in the Yukon and the N.W.T., and will continue to give both territories the support they will need for the next stages in their constitutional development.

Now that the N.W.T. Legislative Assembly has been duly elected, one of those stages, that of holding a plebiscite on the boundary agreement, should be initiated soon, especially since the Treasury Board has frozen funding to the Nunavut Constitutional Forum until a plebiscite can be held.

This major obstacle to political evolution should be resolved before the next issues of provincehood or the turning over of more provincial responsibilities can be negotiated.

I urge the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) and the Department of Justice to show leadership in bringing this matter to the attention of the next Government Leader of the Northwest Territories.

EMPLOYMENT

NEED TO PURSUE EMPLOYMENT DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS AND UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT SECTION 38 PROGRAM

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, we are well aware of the importance for our communities of the so-called Employment Development Program and the Unemployment Insurance Act, Section 38, program implemented by the Department of Employment and Immigration. Every year, a great many employers, organizations and workers within our ridings benefit from these programs.

If I mention these facts to the House, it is because we are at a time of year when the application forms for the Employment Development Program are normally issued to organizations and employers anxious to submit projects.

But what is happening this year? There is no trace of any application form or any formal announcement by the responsible Minister concerning their extension. What is happening to these programs? Nobody knows for sure. However, information from reliable sources seem to indicate that the Employment Development Programs and even the Unemployment Insurance Act, Section 38, program might not be extended this year. It is high time for the Minister responsible for these programs to speak out.

We are absolutely against their elimination, unless some similar programs aimed at the same clientele are announced by the Minister very shortly.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. CLAIR RIVER—CRITICISM OF ARTICLE IN ENVIRONMENT CANADA PUBLICATION

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, as all Hon. Members of the House are aware, an unfortunate spill into the St. Clair River occurred in my constituency of Sarnia—Lambton two years ago. Since that time, I and many other concerned citizens and organizations have frequently brought to the attention of the federal Government the serious problems created by federal employees using worse case scenarios to describe the events in Sarnia—Lambton.

I am most distressed to see a recent article in the August, 1987, edition of "Environment Update", an Environment Canada publication, written with all too familiar disregard for accuracy.

For the record, here are a few facts which appear to have been left out of the article. First, the company itself reported the spill to the appropriate authorities. Second, the company started a clean-up before any government orders were given. Third, to address the unique problem of contaminated sediment in a swift flowing river, the company developed new technology to remove over 90 per cent of the remaining contamination. Fourth, despite media reports to the contrary, none of the chemicals involved exceeded the short-term drinking water standards in any water supplies.

I have often addressed the House stressing the need for balance and fairness in reporting. I would urge Environment Canada to write another article in the same publication which truly reflects the tremendous developments of the last two years, not just a replay of the events of the past.

CLIMATIC CONDITIONS

DROUGHT IN CENTRAL BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, while urging the Government not to support the decision of the GATT review panel which would allow heavily subsidized EEC beef to enter Canada and create a very uncompetitive situation for Canadian cattlemen, I draw to the attention of the House the extreme drought situation which exists in central British Columbia.

There has been no significant rainfall for many months. The usual semi-arid region is fast becoming a desert as streams dry up, lake levels fall dramatically, and water tables drop. The result has been catastrophic for the sports fishery and is causing extreme problems for both cattlemen and orchardists alike. Provincial and federal support is required to find alternative sources of water.

I urge the federal Government to amend Section 2.4 of the ARDSA program which would allow funds to be made available for both Crown and deeded land suffering under extreme drought conditions. As well, I would urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to approve fast tracking for applications presently coming in under the existing Section 2.4 of the ARDSA program.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

NEED TO WORK FOR COMMON GOOD

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, this morning's results of the Gallup Poll are another clear indication that the Conservative Government is fading fast.

Mr. Speaker, the results of this poll and the election results in New Brunswick have made it clear that despite all the handstands, all the representations and initiatives made by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and this Government during the past month, and I am referring to the Francophonie Summit, the Commonwealth Conference and the Free Trade Agreement, Canadians know preferably well that all this is not being done for the sake of the Canadian people but simply in order to enhance the Prime Minister's image.

Mr. Speaker, the results of the Gallup Poll and the election in New Brunswick are a clear indication that after being fooled once during the last election campaign, Canadians no longer accept or believe this Prime Minister.

I therefore urge all Conservative Members to tell the Prime Minister; from now on, do things that are good for Canadians and stop trying to improve your image. Start working for the common good of the Canadian people.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—SUPPORT URGED FOR ARIAS PEACE PLAN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the 1987 Nobel Peace Prize has been awarded to Costa Rican President Oscar Arias for his role in the formation of the Central American peace plan. By awarding the prize to Mr. Arias, the Nobel committee has sent a clear message of support and encouragement to Central American leaders for their efforts to bring peace to this troubled region.

Canada should do likewise, Mr. Speaker. As a country blessed with social and political stability, Canada should spare no effort to help bring similar stability to Central America. I call upon the Government to indicate clearly its willingness to offer whatever help and assistance are required to ensure the plan's success.

But the most urgent and important thing that Canada could do would be to condemn unambiguously, both publicly and privately, the continued funding of the Contras by the Reagan administration and do all in our power to get the U.S. Congress to end all overt and covert aid to the Contras. This would assist Central American efforts to bring peace to the region and it would also make it clear that Canada is not willing to be silent while Canadian aid projects and Canadian lives are put at risk, as was the case recently in Nicaragua, by American supported activities.

The peace plan represents a window of opportunity for Central America and for the peace of the world. Now is the time to tell our friend and neighbour, the United States, to stop acting like a bully and respect the collective Central American wisdom and will for peace that the Guatemalan Accord so clearly demonstrates. A Central America in charge of its own destiny is something that should be encouraged, not discouraged.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—RELEASED REFUSENIKS' EXPRESSION OF THANKS TO CANADA

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, Benjamin and Tanya Bogomolny, former refuseniks, visited Parliament yesterday, exactly one year to the day since they left the Soviet Union. Tanya has had a bout with cancer and is one of a group of patients who have been trying to join families in Israel and obtain treatment in the west. Benjamin is in the Guinness Book of World Records as the longest standing refusenik up to now.

"What accounts for your getting permission to leave," I asked them. "It was the actions of the International Cancer Patients Solidarity Committee headed by Montrealer, Dr. Jerry Batiste, and the intervention of the Canadian Government" was their clear reply. They were here to thank Canada for its efforts and to remind Canadians that there are other cancer patients and thousands of refuseniks who are still waiting for permission to leave.

Meriting particular attention are Naum Meiman, and Benjamin Charney, both cancer patients who are seriously ill and need specialized treatment. The fate of these people depends upon the continuing efforts of Canadians and our Government and parliamentarians. It depends on us, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

FUTURE OF FIRESTONE PLANT IN HAMILTON

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, once again I hesitate to refer to the operation in the Ministry of Regional Industrial Expansion as the Keystone Cops but that is exactly what it is. Yesterday we saw the ridiculous spectacle of the Minister claiming that negotiations had reopened for the sale of Firestone to Cooper in the United States. At the same time as he claimed negotiations had reopened, a fact which had escaped every other player in the negotiations, he refused to have any federal government involvement as long as negotiations are going on.

• (1415)

When will the Minister realize that with 1,300 jobs in Hamilton at stake, he cannot leave it up to his officials to make telephone contacts? He cannot leave it up to his officials to write letters when there is a mail strike going on. He has to take some personal leadership, get on top of the dossier and make sure that a deal is made to save those 1,300 Hamilton jobs. He should stop fooling around, and if he is not prepared to do that, he should resign.

PRIVACY

SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS—MORE CONTROL OVER USAGE

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Government for its response to the justice committee's report on the Privacy Act and Access to Information Act. In particular, I am pleased that there will be more control on the use of Social Insurance Numbers.

There is a growing concern on the part of all Canadians about Social Insurance Numbers and this concern has been addressed. The federal Government will require all federal Departments and agencies to obtain Treasury Board approval for any current use of SINs not authorized by statute or regulation. There will also be a prohibition against the collection and the use of SINs by any federal Department or agency for any new administrative purpose unless specifically authorized by law.

In addition, the Government will require that no right, benefit or privilege be withheld from and no penalty be imposed on any individual for refusal to disclose his or her SIN to a government institution except where it is specifically required by law. I am pleased as well that there will be a public awareness campaign launched to heighten knowledge of the Access to Information Act. I think these are changes that should be welcomed by all Members of the House because they are a significant step forward.

NORTHERN ONTARIO INITIATIVES PROGRAM

COMPOSITION OF ADVISORY COUNCIL

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher), the Minister responsible for the Northern Ontario Initiatives Program known as FEDNOR, has recently announced the composition of the program's advisory council. As I expected, this council has become another patronage patch in a lush garden of government appointments.

The chairman is a former Province of Ontario Conservative cabinet Minister. The vice-chairman has close associations with the Minister himself. One of the members is the father of a sitting Ontario Conservative MPP and a former cabinet Minister. Another is a former Ontario Conservative MPP. Still another is the wife of a past president of a Tory riding association.

All of this I can accept with good grace, I hope, but I have one question. In that vast area between the City of Timmins and the City of Thunder Bay and between Lake Superior and Hudson Bay, the constituency of Cochrane—Superior, was there not one single, solitary Conservative who could be found as worthy to serve on the FEDNOR advisory council?

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—BILL C-22

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. On Tuesday the Minister was asked in the House about media reports indicating that the original version of the trade agreement with the United States and signed by him contained a reference to the Government's drug Bill known as Bill C-22. Referring to Hansard of Tuesday, October 13, the Minister is quoted as replying as follows:

> The question coming from across the floor is "why did I sign it?" The simple fact is that I did not sign it, nor did the Minister for International Trade, the Chief of Staff of the Prime Minister nor the chief negotiator.

I believe the Minister of Finance, but I have in my hand what purports to be a copy of the original trade agreement with the United States referring to Bill C-22 explicitly, and signed by Michael Wilson, the Minister of Finance; Pat Carney, the Minister for International Trade; Derek Burney, the Chief of Staff of the Prime Minister of Canada; and Simon Reisman, the chief negotiator on behalf of the Government of Canada. Is there another Michael Wilson authorized to sign a trade agreement on behalf of the Government of Canada?

• (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is purposely distorting. That which was tabled in the House by the Prime Minister last week is the official document. That is the agreement we signed on October 3 in Washington.

I have made absolutely clear—and stand by what I said—what was initialled by people in the working groups, that was presented to the main negotiating table and was rejected by us. What was signed by my colleague and the other two who signed the agreement is what was tabled. If the Leader of the Opposition does not accept that, then he is not accepting my word.

Mr. Axworthy: That's right.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, to use the words of Sir Winston Churchill, I have never heard a Minister of the Crown describe the exact opposite of the truth with so much precision.

PASSAGE OF BILL C-22—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this document bearing the signatures of the Minister of Finance and the Minister for International Trade contains the following sentence on page 37:

> Canada has agreed to pass the pending amendments contained in Bill C-22 in respect of compulsory licensing of pharmaceuticals.

This document was presented to Ministers and signed. It was then distributed to reporters at our Embassy in Washington, quickly retrieved, and other pages were substituted.

Is the Minister saying that this agreement which he signed was changed after he signed it? Is he saying that this is not his signature but a forgery? Is the Minister saying that he signed this agreement without reading it first, particularly page 37? Or is the Minister really saying that there is an understanding between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States with regard to the pharmaceutical Bill and that the Government of Canada, including the Minister, does not want the people of Canada to know about it?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have made it absolutely clear that what I signed is what was tabled in the House a week ago last Monday, I believe. If the Leader of the Opposition is not accepting that, he is implicitly calling me a liar and I challenge him to stand up and say that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Put your seat on the line.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Cut out the bravado.

Mr. Gauthier: What a big phoney you are.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF FINANCE ORDER APPEARANCE OF SENIOR NEGOTIATORS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think I have a solution for the Minister. Since the Minister of Finance, who was supposed to direct the final stages of the negotiations on the Agreement with the United States, today denies he was involved, is he prepared to ask the senior negotiators who drafted page 37 and the document I have here, which mentions the price of drugs, to come before the House and explain who instructed them to change the document after it was signed by the Minister of Finance?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have made that very clear. I would like to repeat the answer I gave in response to this question on Tuesday, I believe. The part of this document to which the Leader of the Opposition referred, which was initialled by two working group members, one from the American side and one from the Canadian side, arrived at the negotiating table where I, the chief negotiator, the Chief of Staff of the Prime Minister, and the Minister for International Trade sat. We saw this part that had been signed by the working group member. We said: "That is wrong", and we rejected it on the spot. Bill C-22 is not part of this agreement. It never was to be a part of this agreement, and we rejected it on the spot.

• (1425)

Mr. Lapierre: How did it get in there?

An Hon. Member: How come you signed it?

Mr. Speaker: Questions that are being asked are serious and have overtones that are not particularly easy for the Chair. The Minister is attempting to respond and I would ask those, especially the colleagues of the right hon. gentleman who asked the question, to give the Minister a chance to respond.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): A voice from the backbenches of the Liberal Party asked why I signed it. The simple fact is that I did not sign it.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I also want to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. He has described one scenario of events.

Let me ask him if the following scenario is true or false. Is it not true that a document bearing his signature along with other Ministers was distributed by the Ambassador of this country to a group of reporters, that this same document was then withdrawn and had a certain portion—a sentence relating to Bill C-22—erased, and then redistributed?

The document holding his signature has a major portion of a line dealing with Bill C-22 erased. I would say that an American President had to resign when a tape was erased. Why does the Hon. Minister not take the same course and realize that unless he is prepared to get to the basis of facts and bring the negotiators before a committee he should take the same stand and resign?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have made it absolutely clear, and if the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry does not accept my point of view, I tell him to call me a liar. Call me a liar on the spot. I have stated what is the fact, and if the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry does not agree with that, make that allegation on the spot.

Mr. Axworthy: I will reverse the offer—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would say to the Hon. Minister that as yet no one has made that accusation. I would say to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry who is rising on a supplementary, that I would hope that he would not think it necessary to make that allegation.

REQUEST THAT NEGOTIATIONS AND AMBASSADOR BE CALLED BEFORE COMMITTEE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Minister of Finance again. If he is saying that the version of the events that took place in the Embassy library are wrong, then why is he afraid to allow the chief negotiators and the Canadian Ambassador in Washington to come before a committee and testify under oath, one way or the other, as to which version of the events is right? What is he afraid of? If he is not afraid, why does he not take the honourable course that Ministers of this Parliament have taken for years, that when they have in fact done something wrong they take responsibility for it?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fennell: You did not resign.

Mr. Crosbie: Get a new printing press.

Mr. Axworthy: I went before a committee. He is afraid to. He is a big chicken.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Finance.

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): You know, Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting, the approach the Liberal Party is taking now. I will stack my credibility up against that Hon. Member—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Go ahead.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)): I will also say that anybody who has been a part of these negotiations, particularly the item that is at question to date, is happy to appear before a committee during the time this trade agreement is discussed. You will find, Mr. Speaker, that my interpretation of the events, my statement of the facts, will stand.

The other thing I think is very interesting here is the way Members opposite are not willing to address the facts of this agreement. They know that this agreement is good for Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)): —that it will stand up for years to come as one of the greatest agreements that any Government has entered into, but they are reduced to this type of—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: You just blew your credibility.

Mr. Crosbie: The rat pack has a leader at last.

BRIEFING NOTES PREPARED FOR AMERICAN OFFICIALS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has raised an extremely important question based on the document we were all asking questions about last Friday, and received essentially the same answers from the Ministers of the Crown at that time, denying its authenticity. My questions are based on another document I obtained last night. These are briefing notes prepared for U.S. Secretary Treasurer Baker and Mr. Yeutter after the agreement was signed. The first paragraph under "Intellectual Property" in that document states:

> What the U.S. got: Canada will liberalize its rules on compulsory licensing of pharmaceuticals. Canada will enact pending amendments contained in Bill C-22, and—furthermore, the Parliament of Canada—

> —will review within ten years the further improvements for protection of pharmaceutical inventions.

This is a document, I repeat, prepared for the use of the U.S. Secretary of the Treasury. I want to ask the Government of Canada today if it stands by what it said? Is it saying that the United States officials are not telling the truth?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen this particular document but I stand by what I have said in this House before and what the Deputy Prime Minister, I believe, said a week ago tomorrow or a week ago today—I forget the precise date. Bill C-22 is not—and I repeat is not—a part of the agreement.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Was.

Some Hon. Members: Was.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It was never a part of the agreement ever. The comment was made there that we will pass Bill C-22. That is brand new news. We have already passed Bill C-22, so there is nothing—

Mr. Axworthy: Not yet.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Twice.

Mr. Gauthier: Parliament? This is the House of Commons. This is not Parliament. Come on.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): This House of Commons has passed Bill C-22.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Only John Turner speaks for the Senate.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We cannot control the Senators—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Even John can't.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I thought the Leader of the Opposition was able to control the Senators, but I guess that is not possible. They still hold the gun to his head. Everything he does, he is run with a little pirouette here, like a little marionette. Marionette John.

FILM DISTRIBUTION INDUSTRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister that he will know as well as I do that what he is involved in is an extremely serious matter. The document that I quoted is an American document which says it was part of the deal, part of the agreement, and it not only says Bill C-22 was part of it, it describes a commitment made for further changes to be made within the next 10 years, which is additional information.

I want to go to another area in the same document concerning the so-called protection the Government obtained in the cultural domain. Mr. Jack Valenti, a Hollywood film mogul, said recently before Canadian audiences on television that he objected to the proposed new film legislation that was to be brought in by the Government of Canada. Subsequently that was denied by the Minister involved, but I want to read what it says in this document about what was agreed on that subject. It says, and I quote:

> They—

With reference to the Government of Canada.

> —have also promised to solve Jack Valenti's problem on film distribution within the next two weeks.

Could the Government tell us what that means?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me comment first on the preamble to the last question about some promise we are going to do something about pharmaceuticals in 10 years, time. That is totally the result of the imagination of the person who wrote that briefing note for Secretary Baker, or whoever it was.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That was never even discussed. On the question of Mr. Valenti's problem, there was no commitment, no understanding to solve Mr. Valenti's problem. The Minister of Communications has stated quite clearly that the Government has a commitment to ensure that Canada is treated as a separate market for film distribution. That commitment still stands.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, some of us are inclined to believe something, let me put it this way, other than that. We are going to look with interest at the Bill the Minister has promised to introduce.

ENERGY—EFFECT OF TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I have a third question in the domain of energy. The Minister himself said to me in the House on Tuesday, October 13, with regard to energy changes when we made the accusation that substantial changes were being made that were going to impinge directly on our sovereignty, including regulatory changes, and so on: "There is no change in the regulation. There is no change in regulatory practices". I quote from the energy section of the document—and the U.S. document devotes more space to energy, I say in passing, than to any other particular matter—where it says with reference to changes agreed to by the Government of Canada:

> Canada has agreed to: (1) limit the application of its "surplus test" for energy exports to a monitoring function, with any possible future restriction subject to the proportionality and nondiscriminatory pricing conditions above: (2)—

> eliminate its requirement that uranium exports be upgraded to the maximum extent possible in Canada prior to export; and (3)— > eliminate a discriminatory price test on electricity exports.

Another change—

I could go on. Does the Minister still stand by what he said incredibly in the House the other day, that there is no change agreed to by the Government of Canada in the energy domain, or are the Americans talking through their hats?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not get the whole of the Hon. Member's question, but he has just repeated what is in the document itself.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Have you read it yet?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is there in black and white.

Mr. Broadbent: And you said there was no change and I am telling you what the Americans have said.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What I said was—this document, so all Hon. Members know what I am reading from, is the elements of the agreement—this affects the ability of the two countries to enter into trade, not regulation, to trade between the two countries on energy products. The Hon. Member mentioned uranium. Some relief on both sides of the border has been achieved in terms of trade—

Mr. Broadbent: You said in the House there was no change.

An Hon. Member: The uranium producers like it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member would listen carefully, I said there were no changes in regulations. There are changes in trade barriers. Trade barriers have been lifted. There is an ability of both countries—

Mr. Broadbent: And the elimination of regulations.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There is a change in the ability of both countries to trade freely with each other in matters involving energy trade. That is one of the great achievements here, because as some of his colleagues will tell the Hon. Member, this will allow the Province of Saskatchewan, as an example, to sell more uranium into the United States market where today there are major restrictions.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—BILL C-22

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The body of evidence building today in this House that the Government of Canada included Canadian drug prices as part of the free trade agreement is overwhelming and, I suggest, irrefutable. The Minister has not just left his fingerprints as evidence of that, he has left his signature.

• (1440)

Will the Minister explain to the House how it is that senior officials working for cabinet Ministers of the Government of Canada, and senior officials working for cabinet Secretaries of the Government of the United States, could have included in this document bearing his signature, without the knowledge of Ministers of both Governments, the following words: "Canada has agreed to pass the pending amendments contained in Bill C-22 in respect of compulsory licensing of pharmaceuticals".?

How did that happen without the knowledge of Ministers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is identical to a question to which I responded on Tuesday and to what I was asked today by his Leader and the Hon. Member from Winnipeg. The only thing that I can understand from what the Hon. Member from Newfoundland is saying is that he disagrees with what I have said, and he is not accepting my word. I thought that there was a very, very clear tradition in the House that Members accepted the word of an Hon. Member—

Mr. Lapierre: Not since Mulroney.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —or put his seat on the line.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I think that perhaps the Chair can assist all Hon. Members for a moment, and the public that is watching and listening, by repeating something which has been part of the tradition of this House of Commons since its inception, that is, no Member calls another Member a liar, and the word of an Hon. Member is accepted. If there are circumstances, and there might be some time in the long history of Parliament, when, for any particular reason and based on some evidence, an Hon. Member is not prepared to accept another Hon. Member's word, then there is a proper and appropriate way to charge him.

I have to say to all Hon. Members of this Chamber, and to the public of the country that is watching and listening, that it is impossible to have a civil debate or a civil Question Period in this place unless all Hon. Members on both sides of this Chamber understand that what I have just said is fundamental to the decency and effectiveness of the House of Commons of our country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I have said many times that this place is made up of people of great idealism, courage, passion, and decency. That is why it is the great place that it is. I would hope that for the rest of this Question Period all Hon. Members on all sides would listen carefully to questions that are properly put, give Ministers a chance to respond, and unless they have been recognized, please keep their opinions to themselves.

REFERENCE IN DOCUMENT TO BILL C-22

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I think that all Hon. Members would be wise—as indeed I shall be—to adhere to your words and to your advice to all of us. That is why I want to go back to the Minister and to repeat the question I asked. His response and his challenge were not, Mr. Speaker, in reaction to my question. My question, and I repeat it, was this.

How does the Minister explain that senior officials of the Government of Canada, working for Canadian cabinet Ministers, and senior officials working for the United States Government and accountable to U.S. cabinet Secretaries, could have included on page 38 of this agreement a matter relating to Canada's commitment with respect to Canadian drug prices when in fact the Minister of Finance is now telling the House that this matter was not part of the free trade agreement, this matter never was part of the free trade agreement, this matter has nothing to do with the free trade agreement? I ask the question: What is it doing in the document?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the histrionics will not get the Hon. Member any more credibility—

Mr. Tobin: Answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I have stated very clearly that this document to which he refers was agreed upon between two members of a working group. It then was—

Mr. Tobin: Without your knowledge?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Without my knowledge.

Ms. Copps: And you signed it?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member would let me continue the explanation that I have given three times now already in this House, I will.

It was then brought to the negotiating table. As soon as I saw it I said that that is not a part of this agreement, reject it. It was taken away. The new document—the Hon. Member is holding up something that happens to be appended to that document. He would have appended it to that document, not me, because there was never—

Mr. Tobin: That was issued at the embassy.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —any part of the agreement that we signed that was tabled in the House of Commons a week ago Monday that had anything to do with Bill C-22. That is an absolute fact and I have stated that three times.

Ms. Copps: He is changing his story right now.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member shakes his hand at me. I challenge him to stand up and tell me—

Mr. Tobin: You are like the condemned man laughing at the hangman as opposed to the lever. Grow up.

Mr. Speaker: I am looking at the New Democratic Party and I am wondering which of its Members would like to be recognized.

The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROTECTION OF CANADIAN COMPANIES FROM TAKEOVERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, according to this confidential document for U.S. Secretary Baker, to which my Leader has already referred, the free trade deal between the United States and Canada would cut from 7,500 to only 500 the number of Canadian companies protected from unregulated take-over by the United States. Will the Minister of Finance confirm this cut-back by 87 per cent in the companies protected from U.S. take-over in Canada? Will he confirm this give-away?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm off the top of my head whether that number is correct. But what I do know is that, yes, we did—

Mr. Broadbent: The Americans checked the numbers.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —raise the threshold levels to $150 million and that has the effect of removing a number of companies from review.

But let me point out to the Hon. Member that there is a good reason for that. We have seen over the last five years the investment that is being made by Canadian companies into the United States increasing by 20 per cent or 21 per cent, and investment coming north into Canada increasing by about 7 per cent. That is because Canadian companies do not have assurance of access to that market.

If we do have access to that market, and companies have the confidence that it will be there, then that investment that has been going to the States will come to Canada, create jobs in Canada, increase Canadian ownership in Canada. Surely, the Hon. Member can see the benefits of that type of an agreement with the United States.

• (1450)

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY—CANADIAN CONTENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): I am talking about take-overs, not new investments.

The same document states that Canada will henceforth "impose no export, local content, local sourcing, or import substitution requirements on U.S. investors", and "on third-country investors as well".

Will the Minister admit that this prevents Canada from ever requiring Japanese auto firms, for instance, to meet the 60 per cent Canadian content rules in this country? How many job possibilities are lost to Canadians as a consequence?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am having trouble following the precise wording of what the Hon. Member is reading. I believe that the last part of the quote that he read out to the House is incorrect.

Mr. Langdon: It is there.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let us go back to the over-all benefits of a free trade agreement. There is practically no economic organization in the country that does not expect that the over-all effect of a trade agreement with the United States will increase jobs in Canada over and above what would be the case had we not had an agreement. Furthermore, those comparisons are made relative to the status quo today and do not take account at all of the potential impact of increased protectionist measures that we all expect will come from the United States if we do not have this agreement.

That is the benefit of this agreement. That is why we have signed it. That is why we believe that over all there will be a good deal of economic benefit and more jobs created in this country.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

DEVOLUTION OF PROVINCIAL-TYPE POWERS

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, who played a major role in past constitutional talks. The Prime Minister has stated that the Government will promote the expansion of responsible government in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories.

When this Government speaks of political development of the Northwest Territories, is it restricted to the devolution of provincial-type powers to those Governments?

Mr. Penner: That is a set-up, Tom.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, a member of the Opposition unfortunately makes a mischaracterization of a very important question. I appreciate receiving that question from an outstanding representative of the Northwest Territories in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am pleased to report that the Government and the Conservative Party continue their commitment with respect to the devolution of political authority and power to the Territories. Under the leadership of my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Government is considering strategy and an over-all approach with respect to this very important question.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in the process of developing this particular policy, the representations of the distinguished Member who asked this question will be very much in the forefront of the consideration of the Government.

TRADE

FREE TRADE—REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING DOCUMENT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister of Finance to explain what happened at the Canadian Embassy in Washington. It is quite obvious that what the reporters present saw was not an optical illusion or a mirage. They definitely read an original document, bearing the message:

[English]

> Attached are 39 pages of agreed text setting out the essential elements of a free trade agreement between the United States and Canada, each was initialed by the negotiators.

They got that document. That is what they saw signed by the Minister of Finance and the Minister for International Trade.

Tell me what happened. Why did the Assistant Press Secretary, John Fieldhouse, pull out the document and come back with another one? What happened?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question because I do not know what happened in the embassy that day. What I have said, and I have given my word to the House, and through the Speaker to Members opposite, that what was tabled a week ago Monday was what was signed by my colleagues and myself at the negotiating table in Washington.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Finance telling me that the Canadian Ambassador in Washington distributed a forged document to reporters the first time around?

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is a false document. That document was not signed, it was not part of the agreement, and I have made that absolutely clear.

ENERGY—EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON CANADA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In confidential briefing papers prepared for U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker, and trade representative Clayton Yeutter, questions were posed and answers given regarding the U.S. victory on free trade.

One of the questions posed involved energy. While recognizing that Mexico has larger oil and gas reserves than Canada, the question on energy was the following. "What about a North American common market with Canada and Mexico?" The answer was, "The political climate in Mexico is not ready".

Would the Minister of Finance explain to Canadians why a small country with large gas and oil reserves would not participate in such a deal, while a large country like Canada with small reserves would?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I am surprised that an Hon. Member from a western province would not understand the benefits of this deal to the development of his province and other producing provinces in Canada. It will result in the development of energy resources in western Canada, which will benefit the whole country.

Mr. Mazankowski: The rest of the country.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The rest of the country, including western Canada. This is not a continental energy agreement.

We have made a number of moves to deregulate the energy industry over the past three years in Canada, but what we were finding was that trade restrictions in the United States were inhibiting our ability to sell those energy resources into the United States.

This does not change any of those regulatory practices which have already been agreed to, but it does free up the markets in order that we can sell those resources into the United States, and gain cash flow to develop further resources in Canada to the benefit of all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REFERENCE TO REDUCED ENERGY COSTS IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister.

I am a third generation western Canadian. We want manufacturing in the West not just pipelines down into the United States.

Mr. Broadbent: Right on. Do you ever learn over there?

Mr. Fulton: The document goes on to state that this deal will "reduce average energy costs" in the United States.

I wish to ask the Minister why any Canadian in their right mind would support a deal that will see costs go even lower in the United States because right across the board, gas, oil, electricity in the United States are already lower. Why should we pay higher costs in order that they can have lower costs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one of the key elements of this agreement is that it will encourage the development of manufacturing industry in western Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Why?

Mr. Riis: How?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I should take my old school chum, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, back to economics. A larger market can support a broader manufacturing base. With the market opening up south of British Columbia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan, there will be more manufacturing companies.

Mr. Nystrom: Rubbish.

Mr. Mazankowski: He does not want free trade for the west.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I know that the Hon. Member does not want free trade for the west.

Mr. Riis: You should have gone to second year economics.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We see this as a way of developing a more broadly based and diversified manufacturing and industrial sector in western Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: We will take you on in the west any day. Let's have a fight in the west right now.

MINISTER'S SIGNATURE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the spirit of your suggestion, Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not wish to question the integrity or the word of the Minister of Finance. But I do wish to challenge the competency of this Minister in regard to these negotiations.

Earlier in the House he stated that he did not sign the document when referring to the fact that Canada has agreed to pass the amendments contained in Bill C-22 in respect of compulsory licenced pharmaceuticals. I suggest that the Minister of Finance signed two documents, this particular document, which was not tabled in the House, and this document which has been tabled in the House.

I would ask the Minister to explain, for the benefit of Canadians, why he is refusing to admit that he signed two documents, one making specific reference to changing the pharmaceutical legislation in this country. Why?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are getting right back to the very fine line that you drew attention to a minute ago. I signed one document. That document was tabled in the House. If there was an error made in the distribution of documents in the Embassy, I cannot control that. But I can control what I sign, and the Hon. Member has my word for it. If he disagrees with that, say so now.

• (1500)

RESPONSIBILITY FOR REFERENCE IN DOCUMENT TO BILL C-22

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. I will accept his word.

I ask the Minister of Finance to explain the following to the House. The Prime Minister sent him to Washington to be in charge of the negotiations. Was he in charge of the negotiations? Who on the negotiating team made this flaw in the particular agreement? If they made that flaw, will he have them come to Ottawa next week, not in two months' or three months' time, to explain the obvious or apparent contradiction in the documents?

Would the Minister of Finance do the honourable thing and request those officials to be here next week to explain to Members of Parliament why this contradiction is in the document, if he is in charge of the negotiations?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not denying that that document exists and that that document may have been distributed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I mean, clearly it was distributed. I am not saying that it was not. What I am saying is that that document was not a part of the agreement which we signed in Washington.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ELIMINATION OF LEADED GASOLINE—EFFECT ON FARMING COMMUNITIES AND ANTIQUE CAR OWNERS

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I want to explain the basis of my interest in the question which I am about to ask. First, the only tetraethyl lead production facility in Canada is in Sarnia—Lambton. Second, I have an interest in farming and part of my riding is farm oriented. Third, I admire the preservation and presentation of antique cars.

The Government, spearheaded by the Minister of the Environment, has taken an active position in eliminating leaded gasoline and its use. As the Minister and my hon. colleagues are aware, some concern has been expressed by members of our farming communities over the phasing out of leaded gasoline. Additionally, it has recently come to my attention that concern is also—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has an important matter. I think he is certainly putting the basis of his question to the House, and I think the point has probably been received by Hon. Members and the Minister. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. James: There is also concern being expressed by antique car and classic car owners about the use of unleaded gasoline in these very important vehicles.

Given that farmers and antique car owners may require special provisions, will the Minister of the Environment explain how he will answer their needs?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that the Government of Canada has outlawed lead in gasoline, which policy is to take effect at the end of 1992 on a phased out basis.

However, we appreciate that there are narrow categories of vehicles, among them antique cars and certain types of farm vehicles, which might require a certain amount of lead in gasoline to achieve high octane levels or proper valve lubrication.

We will take that factor fully into account when we implement the policy which, nevertheless, will be exactly as it was Gazetted in June, 1986.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question of Question Period.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—FILM DISTRIBUTION INDUSTRY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Finance also arises from the confidential briefing note to Mr. Baker and Mr. Yeutter, following the question raised by the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party on the so-called promise to solve Jack Valenti's problem.

There is a question in this document—"How will the agreement affect the proposed Canadian law on film distribution?" The answer states that "we expect any future cultural measures taken will be consistent with what has been agreed," that is, to solve Mr. Valenti's problem.

Will the Minister tell us how the Americans can have the idea that they have gained a great deal on culture, particularly in film distribution? If this is not true, what can this possibly mean?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I stated yesterday—and my colleague, the Minister of Communications, stated it on other occasions last week—that culture is exempt from this agreement. It is stated absolutely and precisely on two separate occasions in the agreement.

I do not know what Mr. Valenti's problem is. I do not know what Mr. Valenti wants. What we are saying is that we are committed to the film distribution policy which has been announced and to which the Minister of Communications has stated that we are committed.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF FILM DISTRIBUTION LEGISLATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. If the Government had done what it said it would do on culture, there would have been no section in the agreement at all. However, there is one, and there are different interpretations of it.

I think the only way to clear the air on this and to give the Government some credibility is to bring in the film distribution Bill now. Will the Government do that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the responsibility for bringing that legislation forward does not lie with me. What I can say on behalf of the Government, which I said in my previous answer, as well as in answer to one of the Hon. Member's colleagues, is that the Government is still committed to the film distribution policy to create a separate market in Canada for film distribution. That policy stands.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to give the Chair a moment to say something. When I spoke some minutes ago, I interrupted the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe. I do not want anyone to think that there was anything incorrect about the question the Hon. Member was asking. He, as other Hon. Members sometimes do, repeated it in his supplemental, and it was of course allowed.

What I said, and what I hope all Hon. Members will accept, was said to apply evenly to every part of the Chamber.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

AMENDMENT TO HOUSE ORDER REGARDING BILL C-86

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier today the House passed an order allowing for the continuation of debate on Bill C-86 at committee of the whole stage.

There have been discussions among the Parties, and we wish to amend that motion with consent. I think Your Honour would find unanimous consent to the putting of the following motion and to the motion itself. I move:

> That the Order of the House made earlier this day be amended in the third paragraph by deleting all the words after the words "shall continue" and substituting the following therefor:
> "and complete consideration of the committee of the whole and third reading stages of the said Bill."

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm that indeed there have been plenty of negotiations among the Parties. Considering that the Government has indicated its willingness not only to evaluate opposition amendments that have been proposed but to consider the adoption of at least two of them, we feel that in the best interest of facilitating these amendments getting into the legislation this would be an appropriate step. We concur.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Liberal Party, we acknowledge there has been some intense negotiating, that the Minister's attitude was one of understanding and willingness to accept certain amendments we proposed, so that in the circumstances, we are prepared to co-operate with the other Parties in this House.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I take it that there is agreement in the House to adopt the recommendation and the proposal of the Hon. Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Deputy Government House Leader what business the Government intends to call for the coming week.

He has already given us part of the answer for today in the order which he has presented, but I am sure he has other information for us.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, presuming that we complete third reading stage by ten o'clock tomorrow morning, we will continue debate at third reading on Bill C-55 to amend the Immigration Act. On Monday we would continue debate on the Meech Lake Accord.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

POSTAL SERVICES CONTINUATION ACT, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cadieux that Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am rather saddened to be moved to speak to Bill C-86 today. I recall a number of occasions when the Government took action to end strikes, but this is the first instance in my recollection that the Government has taken action to initiate a national strike in our postal services.

Until Bill C-86 was introduced in the House, the postal service of Canada had not come to a stop. Mail was being delivered. As a matter of fact, most organizations that reported to the House made it very clear that mail disruption was minimal, if at all. I have done surveys in my own constituency as well as around the City of Ottawa and found that there was no perceptible difference in the service people were receiving, but there certainly was immediately with the introduction of Bill C-86.

The Government in a sense provoked CUPW into a strike situation. The workers realized that negotiations were out and there were no other options open to them, that the Government in a sense had sided with one side of the bargaining team, namely, the management team. They decided that the Government would impose a settlement which can only be described, as have many described it in this House and beyond, as Draconian, and, more importantly, as being provocative; in other words, legislation designed to provoke a reaction on the picket lines.

I want to take a few moments to outline what the Government has been doing to our postal system and explain why this particular step has been extremely unfortunate. I think we all agree that if you want to provoke disruption in a community, in a suburb of a city, a rural area or a small town, all you have to do is indicate your intention to remove the post office, relocate it or reduce postal service. You are then guaranteed to have a significant reaction by the population of the area. People see the post office as central to their communities, central in many respects to their lives.

I know in my own community there was a discussion some months ago about moving the post office a number of blocks in a small community called Chase, British Columbia. The local residents of that area rose up and said that to expect their seniors particularly—because Chase has a major retirement segment of its population—to walk many extra blocks to get their mail was something which the community was not prepared to accept.

There were alternative sites for the new post office but people said they wanted to keep it in the central part of their community because it provided a vital function, not only in terms of collecting mail and carrying out the usual postal services but also as a community communications centre where people come and go regularly throughout the day. If someone wants to get information around a community by posting a particular notice you do that at the post office and within a matter of hours everyone in the community is aware of the upcoming event, problem or issue.

It is important that we realize today what we are doing. If there ever was a title of a Bill that was hypocritical, it is the title of Bill C-86, which is, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services. Before the Bill was introduced there was post service. There was no need to continue postal service because it existed. There was no need to resume postal service because it existed. The rotating disruptions were procedures used by CUPW to bring some attention to bear on the negotiators.

As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, CUPW asked for a mediator to be brought in. You and I know that there are disputes. We have them among ourselves in the House of Commons over issues. Often a third party comes in to mediate to see if there cannot be some resolution. Normally there is a resolution and a successful answer is found by bringing in a mediator. CUPW asked for a mediator. The postal corporation said no, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) said no and the Minister responsible for the Post Office said no.

CUPW then said it would have to do something and decided to have rotating strikes in various community centres to focus concern on the fact that negotiations were not proceeding because the request for a mediator was denied. Here we have Bill C-86 with its hypocritical title of, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services, when in fact there were postal services. Canadians had not noticed any disruption, let alone any discontinuation. That took place only after the legislation was introduced. We are witnessing for the first time in Canadian history legislation that created a postal strike in Canada—

Mr. Horner: What about the media?

Mr. Riis: —as opposed to resolving a disruption in postal service.

The legislation before us takes sides. This concerns us. It very clearly takes a side in the issue, coming down on the side of the postal corporation. Rather than appointing a mediator it appoints an individual who is to play two roles. How you do this without having two heads, I do not know. A person will be a mediator on the one hand but on the other hand an arbitrator as well. A person works with the two parties, hopefully with their confidence to try to mediate, but if that does not work, then he or she becomes an arbitrator. That is an impossible task. Any labour management consultant would say that it is impossible to expect that of anyone. They are two different roles and ought to be filled by two different individuals with different types of expertise. But no, this obviously then is a provocative element.

I can also discuss a whole number of other very provocative phrases in the Bill. For example, it says that if a person decides not to follow the exact suggestions in the legislation when it is passed, that a person cannot hold a position in the union for five years. I think that is rather hypocritical. There are people in this House who are charged with criminal offences and people from other houses, and I will not name them, who have not only been charged with offences but have been found guilty. They sit today as Members of provincial Legislatures, the Legislature of British Columbia is one, in my own home province. I could mention a whole list of others. Even a person found guilty of an offence in the courts of Canada is allowed to maintain his or her position. This legislation will say to the union leadership that that will be an impossibility for them. This is a double standard and a hypocritical positioning on the issue.

There is another aspect which is particularly repugnant in the way this issue has been pursued by the Government. This is one of the very first times in Canadian history where scabs or, as the euphemism now is, replacement workers have been brought in to break the union. This is government endorsed and sponsored. The Government says it wants to bring in scabs to continue work in the postal system. Does General Motors do that? What about Stelco, Weyerhaeuser, MacMillan Bloedel, Imperial Oil? Do cities and municipalities across this country, when entering into labour disruptions, do that?

The only instance that I can recall where that was done was in the Pocklington situation in Edmonton. We know the condemnation which that particular confrontation brought from around the world. Every progressive management labour person condemned that kind of action.

Now we have seen the Government of Canada endorse the use of scab labour as part of its postal system. What we are seeing here is something incredibly serious. Obviously it is designed not only to provoke but to break the unions involved with the postal system; CUPW to be specific in this instance.

I wonder if Members of the House and the public understand the context in which Bill C-86 has been introduced. What is the plan of the Government? I want to tell you very clearly, Mr. Speaker, that the plan is to eliminate, in a sense, the postal system as we know it. The wickets, the interaction, will be privatized and our post offices will be depots for sorting. Is that what Canadians want?

Are Canadians calling out that they want the postal system to be operated as a business? We do not require that of the RCMP, the Armed Forces, our ambulance services, our health care services, our educational services, our universities, colleges and technical schools. We have decided as a Government to target the postal system to be a business, not a public service—not even a public utility but a business, ideally a profit making business.

We need to examine the fundamental principle on which this legislation is based. I have discussed this, as I am sure all Members have at public meetings, where postal services have come up for discussion. People are interested in what we are doing to improve the Post Office. I told them that we are moving to improve the postal system but that there are all kinds of problems. I wish I had time to elaborate on the management problems associated with the postal system.

When I see a company with labour problems, inevitably I see a company that has poor management and lacks management skills. The converse is also true. When a sophisticated, thoughtful, professional management is in place, there is the same kind of union. I think we want to keep that point very clear in our minds.

When I ask Canadians if they want to see the postal system as a part of the Government, as is in other countries, they say yes, we ought to have that here in Canada. In Australia and the United Kingdom the postal systems are doing relatively well. They provide not only a good postal service but other services as well to generate revenue.

If we were to run the postal service simply as a business, the inevitable result would be that there might be good service in the sophisticated urban areas of Canada, but in the small communities and rural parts of Canada there would obviously be a reduced level of service. Our existing postal system enables us to cross-subsidize. The profits that are made in the highly populated areas enable the Post Office to provide service to the smaller communities and rural parts of Canada.

We happen to live in the second largest country in the world, and we require a postal system that reflects that. If we are in this business to make money, we will certainly not make it in the small communities and rural areas. Those services will be seriously eroded.

As a Parliament we have a responsibility to do what is necessary to enhance and maintain the rights for which the Rural Dignity organization are calling. It is saying, "Enable us to maintain the level of services in rural Canada, whether it be rural schools or postal services. Let us maintain our dignity and raise our families as we ought to".

Bill C-86 signals the erosion of a commitment to rural Canada and small town Canada. It is an abandonment of the commitment to maintain the rural fabric of our country. It is a sop to the move toward urbanization.

What does this Bill mean for women workers? Any Hon. Member who has toured the postal services in his own community realizes that the majority of employees of the Post Office are women. These women make a reasonable wage. I chose that word "reasonable" purposely. I have heard some outlandish figures bandied about in the last number of hours. I think we all recognize that the average wage for a postal worker is $12 or $13 per hour—

Mrs. Sparrow: Plus benefits.

Mr. Riis: Plus their benefits. That is how we measure all contracts, on hourly rates plus benefits. The benefits for postal employees are equivalent to those we find in the workforce. We are not talking about elaborate benefits.

A pay rate of $12 or $13 per hour comes out to about $25,000 per year. Yet I have heard countless Members on government benches calling this figure outlandish and saying that the pay these people are getting is ridiculous. What do Conservative Members think maintains and drives our economy? It is the ability of people to purchase goods and services.

Surely even the small business sector which is concerned about what is going on in the Post Office realizes that if everyone in Canada were paid at the minimum wage it would be tough to run a successful business. Is there anyone here in the House who would call $12 or $13 per hour or $25,000 extravagant or unreasonable? I do not think so. I do not think that we would consider $25,000 per year to be an unreasonable income.

The majority of the workers in the postal services are women and the majority of those women head single-parent families and raise children on their $12 per hour. That is an average income, one that we should not for even a moment condemn as being excessive. Those Hon. Members who have done that ought to consider their own incomes and balance them with the $12 per hour income the postal employees presently average.

I would like to discuss what I see as probably being an inadvertent initiative that has been considered by this legislation. As we phase out postal services as we know them and franchise or privatize them, those hourly workers receiving $12 per hour who tend to be women will lose their jobs and end up being hired by someone else at about minimum wage or perhaps slightly higher. That is a tremendous drop in earning power and in take-home pay. It is very difficult to raise a family on the minimum wage or a wage that is slightly above minimum wage. To be very frank about it, it is impossible.

I think it is important that Hon. Members recognize that Bill C-86 is not just a piece of back-to-work legislation, but is part of an incredibly devious, Machiavellian plan the Government has imposed upon Canada Post to change the face of the postal system Canadians have grown to love over the years.

I go to the Post Office regularly, as we all. Letter carriers deliver my mail to me. I do not think anyone would deny that one cannot meet a more interesting and positive group of people. When I travel throughout my constituency I always stop in at the post offices because those are good places to meet people. Inevitably, the people there are positive, friendly, hard-working and committed to the Post Office. They do not have casual attitudes toward their work. They are committed to doing an excellent job.

Those workers who go door to door in areas where there is still door-to-door delivery go out of their way to deliver mail in a positive way.

Mr. Horner: What's this got to do with CUPW?

Mr. Riis: "What's this got to do with CUPW," a Conservative Member yells out. It is all part of the same team.

Mr. Horner: Letter carriers are different.

Mr. Riis: He says that letter carriers are different. I happen to know many letter carriers from Kamloops personally. I know letter carriers and inside workers from Kamloops, Salmon Arm and a whole variety of communities.

Mr. Horner: Try mine.

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member says that I should go to his community because they are not good. Is that the point he is making? Is he indicating that the employees in the Post Office are bad, negative people?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): They voted for him.

Mr. Riis: I do not know if they will vote for him again. I am simply saying that these are average, ordinary Canadians who are trying to make a living.

If the Hon. Member went to his office this afternoon and said to his office staff, "I have news for you, I will phase out your jobs in the next little while," how does he think they would react, particularly if he went on to say, "I have better news, I am bringing in scabs to do your job while I try to figure out how to phase out your jobs"? Imagine how productive his office would be. How would those devoted employees who have worked with the Hon. Member for many, many years feel? They would feel betrayed. They would be pushed to the wall when those scabs came into his office.

That is what we are saying today. We are telling people who have worked for the Post Office, in many cases for their entire lives, that we will phase out their work, and while we determine how we will do it we will bring in replacement workers or scabs. We will do this until we can force them back to work with a Bill that caters to the employer only and not to the union. That is why we as thoughtful parliamentarians are deeply hurt by this legislation.

Back-to-work legislation with which we have been involved in the past often included provisions for a settlement which was fair to both sides. It certainly did not make such direction as the direction which this legislation makes to follow the guidelines of the Foisy report. In other words, the Government is saying that the plan of the postal corporation must be implemented. This legislation is flawed.

On a positive note, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) has indicated his intention to consider reasoned amendments put forward by the Opposition. He will be doing that as the debate continues today. I am pleased that the Minister has at least seen fit to recognize that the Bill can be improved. I doubt if it will be improved significantly enough that we can support it, but we do appreciate the Minister's willingness to consider amendments put forward by opposition Members.

In conclusion, we are concerned about many points in this legislation. However, more important, we are concerned that this legislation is part of a Draconian, evil, machiavellian plan to eliminate our postal system as we know it and replace it with a business. It is wrong to run such a fundamental service in the second largest country of the world as a business and expect it to make a profit year after year when we do that with no other area of government service. I think that is wrong-headed.

I look forward to the time, hopefully not too many months from now, when there will be a new Government which will have a more sophisticated and up-to-date mandate based on the success of post offices in other parts of the world.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the Hon. Member's comments on Bill C-86. I was a bit disturbed when the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) called out that in addition to the $12 or $13 which most of these workers earn they receive benefits. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) pointed out that that is usually part of the standard union contract.

What will happen to those benefits under a franchising system when employees will be working for a much lower wage? Will they receive those benefits along with their lower wage?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, that question in itself deserves a long debate. There are other jurisdictions in which this extreme form of franchising has taken place. Inevitably the payment package which employees receive is nearly always, if not always, minimum wage with virtually no benefits at all—no pension plans and no health plans.

The preoccupation is not with delivering service but with undercutting the competition in order to get the franchise contract. That may be laudable in some quarters. Privatization has been going on for some time in my constituency. People are so desperate to get a contract that they undercut their colleagues and friends to such an extent that it is almost impossible to maintain service, let alone make a profit. They can only do that by eliminating all benefits for employees.

My hon. friend has reminded us once again that this is only one small step. The postal corporation, with the support of the Government, would like to have as many people as possible in Canada paid as little as possible. I remind you that the driving engine of an economy is made up of people who are able to purchase the goods and services which the economy provides. People working for the minimum wage and receiving no benefits will be able to purchase only a minimal amount of goods and services. That is bad news, not only for the people involved but for the business community and Canada as a whole.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on what has brought us to this state. Over the years CUPW, supported by the NDP, has decided that it will raise the wages and benefits of postal workers. That is a worth-while cause and the union has done that over the years.

Over the years since 1981 when the Canada Post Corporation was created, the Liberal Government gave benefits until Canada Post had a deficit of almost $1 billion. The members of the NDP bandy about figures like $12 an hour plus benefits. I will be more specific. In fact, the average salary is $13.75 an hour plus benefits, which brings it to $24.89 per hour. I can tell you that that works out to more than $25,000 a year.

With a deficit of about $1 billion the Canada Post Corporation decided to appoint a new manager and a new president to try to get it back under control. The manager has stated that with the help of the Minister he can get the corporation to a break-even point within a year without putting postage up to 60 cents.

There are senior citizens in this country who taught school for $25 a month. They cannot understand why the postal workers need $25 an hour. The Hon. Member said that the next Government, which I suppose he presumes will be an NDP government, will make things roll. Who will pay the 60 cents for a stamp? The senior citizen living on a fixed income who taught school for $25 a month will not be able to pay 60 cents for a stamp.

Mr. Manly: Your Government tried to cut their pensions.

Mr. Riis: Leave time for me to respond to this, please.

Mr. Horner: There is no possible way that Canada Post can continue to give, give, give. At the Gateway Post Office in my riding CUPW supports 19 per cent absenteeism. The people of Canada do not like that very much. The employers take Fridays off so that they can work for time-and-a-half on Saturdays. That will not make this country great. Socialism and CUPW will not make this country great. The postal employees should get back to their jobs delivering mail and let us get on with the business of the country. I would like to hear the Member's comments on that.

Mr. Riis: I do not know where to begin, Mr. Speaker, because I have never heard such a peculiar diatribe in my life. I urge the Member to read a management book. If he knew anything about management he would know that you cannot force people to do anything. That is the Conservative mentality, the same mentality that wanted to cut back on senior citizens' cheques because they were getting too much.

We stood with senior citizens across the country and said that although the Conservatives might think they get too much the New Democratic Party realizes who built this country. The New Democratic Party realizes that the senior citizens of today struggled during the Depression and through three wars. They built this country. If anything, we should be increasing their pensions rather than cutting them as the Conservatives wanted to do at the beginning of their mandate.

In conclusion, we have been blessed with the revelation that the Conservatives believe that $24,000 a year is an excessive income. Not only is it too much, it is excessive. He said that they should not make so much money. I am tempted to comment on how he voted on the last salary increase and so on, but I will not do so.

We in the NDP believe that an employee who delivers the kind of service, with which I am familiar in terms of our postal delivery, letter carriers and those who man the post offices and sort our mail, deserve a decent wage. The Member believes that $24,000 is excessive and should be reduced. That is simply where we depart company. I respect his view although they are extremely different from mine.

I do not know what he would pay people, and I certainly would not want to work for someone like him, with all due respect, because he probably has a sign on his office wall saying: "The minimum wage is too high". We have no hesitation in saying that those who do a good job and a good day's work should get a reasonable pay. That is what makes our economy grow. That is where the New Democratic Party stands.

The best friend of a small business person is a well paid employee. I think that is the position on which any government should base its programs. We look forward to that day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) on debate. I wish to advise Hon. Members that after her speech, the speeches will be of 10 minutes' duration.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak in favour of Bill C-86. I particularly want to address certain aspects of the dispute resolution mechanisms contained in this Bill.

In view of the all too clear indications given by both parties that they have been unable to settle their differences to date, I believe the Bill offers a very reasonable and fair path to settlement.

In the present case, I earnestly hope that the parties will take full advantage of the mediation phase and of the assistance of a third party to reach accommodations on the differences which have separated them. The Bill provides for 90 days in total for the mediator-arbitrator to complete the necessary work. There will be ample time, therefore, for the parties to work towards a mediated settlement of most or even all the issues that are in dispute.

In the event that the arbitration phase is required, I note that the Bill provides a full opportunity for both the employer and the union to be heard.

Clause 7 of the Bill provides for the appointment of a mediator-arbitrator. In my view, mediation-arbitration is a creative and positive dispute resolution technique. First, it enables a third party to work with the employer and the union in order to assist them to settle their own differences. However, if there should be issues on which agreement cannot be reached, then the mediator-arbitrator has powers of binding decision. In reaching any binding decisions, the mediator-arbitrator can, of course, usefully draw upon the knowledge of the issues and dynamics of a dispute which have been gained during the mediation phase.

In the event that the arbitration phase is required, I note that the Bill provides full opportunity for the employer and the union to be heard. Clause 7(2)(b) of the Bill specifically calls for a mediator-arbitrator to hear the parties on matters relating to the revision of the collective agreement which remain in dispute. The same subsection of the Bill also requires that due cognizance be given to the report of the conciliation commissioner that was released to the parties on September 22. I fully support this reference to conciliation commissioner Foisy's report in the Bill.

As has already been pointed out, it is a comprehensive document which deals at some length with the background to the dispute and with the respective arguments and positions of the parties on matters in contention. Furthermore, it offers well thought out and objective proposals and recommendations on the key issues.

Again, comments have already been made concerning the balanced nature of the commissioner's findings. The report endeavours to reconcile the parties' competing demands and interests. Due consideration is given to the corporation's need to conduct business in a viable, efficient manner and to meet reasonable service targets on which the Canadian public should be able to rely.

At the same time the report recognizes the need to protect the interests of the corporation's existing employees and it does include several recommendations in this regard.

In speaking to the Bill on second reading, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) referred to certain key aspects of the commissioner's report dealing with the job security question, particularly with reference to the impact of franchising and the opening of new sub post offices. In this respect the commissioner recommends comprehensive employment protection measures for any employees currently engaged in postal wicket work who might be affected by the corporation's legitimate recourse to private sector postal outlets.

There is another aspect of the job security issue which the commissioner examines in some depth. This aspect is in relation to the corporation's demands for greater flexibility in the deployment of its workforce. The commissioner concludes that the corporation is justified in seeking this additional flexibility. Indeed, he states that an employer cannot be expected to run its business in a cost effective manner if it must continue to employ employees for whom it has no work. Such a situation existed under the expired collective agreement which obliged the employer to maintain surplus employees in a given location even though productive employment was available for them elsewhere in the corporation's system.

While he recommended greater flexibility for the corporation to deploy its workforce, the commissioner also endorsed job and income security measures for affected employees. In this respect, the commissioner observed that his recommendations would provide members of the bargaining unit with rights in the job security area which would still be superior to those found among Canadian unionized workers as a whole.

The conciliation commissioner's report contains reasonable recommendations which would, if adopted, result in a very fair collective agreement offering the employer more flexibility than exists at present but maintaining sound conditions and terms of employment for the employees concerned.

In several areas, the commissioner rejected the employer's demand which he found was not justifiable. For example, with respect to technological change, the commissioner did not accept the corporation's plan to modify the current provision. This provision, by the way, offers employees considerable protection and is among the best found in collective agreements in Canada. Similarly, the commissioner rejected the corporation's demands concerning the capacity to undertake work measurement for individual employees.

On health and safety issues, the commissioner generally finds in favour of the union's demands. In the important area of noise reduction, the employer is enjoined to work with the health and safety committee to reduce noise to more comfortable levels. Similarly, the commissioner accepts in great measure the union's concerns with respect to additional break periods for postal coders and he accelerates the night workers' access to the special recovery leave provided for by the collective agreement.

The conciliation commissioner's report covered much ground and represented considerable time and effort. It is important that this time and effort not be wasted. Hopefully, the parties will address themselves to the issues it deals with in the period now provided for them to seek a mediated settlement. If not, I am sure the person appointed to the important task of mediator-arbitrator will find the report to be very useful.

I would like to express the hope that the parties will take their responsibilities seriously both now and in the future. An efficient and viable postal service should not be beyond grasp. It has been accomplished in other industrialized countries and it is possible here in Canada. I would not for one moment suggest that efficiency should be achieved at the expense of postal employees. However, neither postal unions nor the corporation can afford not to change if the goals of efficiency and viability are to be reached. Employees should be adequately protected in the face of change and the Foisy recommendations would continue to assure them such protection. But the best protection at the Canada Post Corporation, or in any other business, is the success of the enterprise.

I want to speak about the Marchment review committee report that was tabled in November, 1985. The Marchment review committee examined Canada Post's mandate. The board of directors at the inception of the corporation adopted a three-pronged definition of its objectives; first, to improve service, second, to create a better climate for human relations within the corporation and, third, to achieve financial self sufficiency. All Canadians want consistently reliable, dependable service at a fair cost. They want to know that it will take two days for a letter to be delivered in a city, perhaps three days within a province and four days across Canada, and they want to know that it will be reliable, dependable service.

The mail is an essential service to senior citizens. They receive letters from loved ones, their Old Age Security pension cheques and some receive Guaranteed Income Supplements. These things are extremely essential. How about people living on interest and dividend income? Mail is an essential service to them. They have to receive this income in order to live. What about Governments, be they federal or provincial? They need postal services for payments, revenues, communication. There are hundreds of small business people in Calgary South and literally millions across our country. They are totally dependent on the mail service. They need their receivables to exist. They must have a consistently reliable service.

What about foreign business? People overseas doing business with companies in Canada and, indeed, Canadian companies doing business with foreign companies, must be guaranteed a good, dependable service. If they cannot be guaranteed that, they will go elsewhere, causing a loss of jobs and a loss of foreign investment which is needed in this huge geographical country of ours with such a small population.

How about my business? How about the business of each Hon. Member of the House? We are very dependent upon the mail not only to receive letters from our constituents but also to communicate our replies to them.

There were three major recommendations in the Marchment report: first, service that is consistently reliable and dependable; second, management-labour methods for consultation and co-operation; and, third, financial self-sufficiency. All of these have been addressed in the Foisy report. When the Foisy report was released, Canada Post and CUPW indicated that the report could serve as a basis of an agreement in principle between the two parties.

I just want to review some of the observations made by the conciliation commissioner Claude Foisy. With respect to franchising, he said that Canada Post operates some 8,000 postal outlets of which about 1,950 are operated by the private sector. About 5,225 are operated by its employees who are members of CPAA and only 417 employ members of the CUPW union.

Canada Post maintains that in relation to sub-post offices and franchises, its costs are equivalent to approximately 13 per cent to 20 per cent of receipts. In the case of a large post office operated by employees belonging to CUPW, its average cost is 70 per cent of receipts. He also says that a distinction must be made between the opening of sub post offices and franchises that co-exist with offices operated by CUPW members, and the closure of existing post offices on purely economic grounds.

With respect to management's rights, he stated that responsibility for determining the range and level of service offered to the public rests entirely with the corporation, not the union. The role of Canada Post is not to provide jobs for Canadians or to increase the income of union members as a form of social assistance. It must operate in an efficient and cost-effective manner, otherwise its spending power would be unlimited.

On its operations, the commissioner states that these strict service standards, that is, first-class mail to be delivered within two or three days of mailing, depending on the locale, which the corporation wants to attain at all costs in a proportion of 99.9 per cent, are the central factors in the development of all of its mail processing operations. Given the nature of the operation, he is of the opinion that the employer must be permitted access to the appropriate manpower at lower cost. The employer can guarantee full-time jobs only to the extent that its business permits. The average hourly cost of a full-time employee covered by the current collective agreement, including pay and benefits, is now $24.89.

In conclusion, I want to say that the union does have the right to strike. Canada Post has the right and responsibility to move the mail for all Canadians. Jobs are of the utmost importance. However, also of the utmost importance is an economically viable Canada Post Corporation with management that provides reliable, dependable service as well as self-sufficiency.

• (1600)

I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me this opportunity to support the Bill of the Minister of Labour, Bill C-86. I wish that we moved along quickly with the debate so we can move into third reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments?

We will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I note that we are now down to 10-minute speeches. I believe that back-to-work legislation for Canada Post, which is being imposed on the House today with closure, goes beyond the Government's inability to honour its commitment. It goes beyond its total disregard for fairness and honesty. At stake here, what is actually being decided, is really a question of freedom. It is the breaking of a social contract.

What kind of a free country gives people the right to free collective bargaining and then takes it away if it does not like the consequences? Dictatorships do not allow the right to strike. Dictatorships throw union leaders and striking workers in jail, which is one of the provisions of this Bill. Are we now a dictatorship? Labour legislation is part of our social contract. The rules of the game are enshrined in our law. The workers at Canada Post followed all the rules and have ended up in a legal strike. They have the right to strike, as my colleague who spoke before me indicated.

But now the Government wants to step in arbitrarily and change the rules. I think we have seen from the speeches of the Minister and others that they want to impose management's demands on the workers. This is a blatant interference in the free collective bargaining process. We must ask ourselves why the Government is setting such a bad example in this Bill, an example that is imposed on a Crown corporation but certainly has very significant ramifications for other employers across the country.

Is this the kind of leadership the Government wants to provide for other large employers? Are contracts now to be settled by the use of scabs? I think it is just deplorable that this Government has condoned the practice of using scab labour by the Crown corporation that is under its jurisdiction.

Are contracts to be settled by back-to-work legislation, as has happened in this case and in others under the jurisdiction of this Government? If this Government is set in changing the rules of the game, then it is dangerously undermining the social contract. We know from history that social unrest may very well be the consequence right across the country. If this happens, social disintegration will be directly attributable to this Government.

The Government should be re-examining Canada Post policies and Canada Post management. It should be looking once again at the basic causes of this present dispute, basic causes which have been substantiated in speeches in this House, which are really based on the Government's policy of privatization.

The root of the problem lies with this Government's insistence on franchising postal services. This Government wants to run a public service like a private enterprise. We know full well, and I am sure that the unions who are concerned about their jobs and their workers as well as being concerned about the postal service know full well, that there are going to be very many negative impacts of franchising out. There will be impacts on jobs. Many jobs will be reduced from full-time jobs, with a living union wage, to part-time jobs at half the amount. Many of those jobs, I am sorry to say, will also be taken by women, many of whom are the sole support of their families.

Job loss will fall most heavily on women, children and families. There will be a particular impact on rural communities. Franchising out is not only bad for workers and has not only been the main cause of the dispute and the legislation that we are debating today, it is also very bad for consumers. I hope that the public out there who may be listening to our debate will consider it from their point of view as well. I would like to give a couple of examples.

Recently I had a letter from a constituent of mine who was expecting a parcel, a very important parcel, that he was to pick up. It was under a customs bond. He received the card, which we now receive, stating that he could not pick this up at the post office, he had to go to another place, in this case a small drugstore in the neighbourhood. So he started out to try to locate his parcel. He found, when he went to the small business, that a very valuable parcel, which had been clearly marked with a customs bond, could not be located. The clerk in the corner store was busy with other things and did not know what procedure was to be followed. Eventually, he himself looked around and found his very valuable parcel located on the floor in a very public area. This is a result of franchising out.

He told me that later on he tried to pick up another parcel. To add to his frustration he found that it was still en route. Between the Post Office and the notice coming to his house and going back to the Post Office and going from there to this small business that was now dealing with parcels, the procedure took several days. Apparently, the package had been delivered to his home by the Post Office, then taken back when no one was at home. A notice card was sent out and then the parcel was delivered several blocks away to the pharmacy while the Post Office shelves remained empty and postal workers who are public employees were not given the right to handle such merchandise.

What kind of a foolish, impractical, inefficient and costly system is this? I would like to say to my friend from Calgary that if this is the kind of real improvement in postal services that she is advocating by supporting privatization, I do not know how she can talk about economic feasibility.

Postal services must be improved, we all agree with that. We are all completely frustrated with the time it takes the mail to be delivered. This is a problem of everyone. We do not want to victimize any particular part of the whole service. But I fail to see how franchising out will improve the service.

I would just like to quote an article by June Callwood in The Globe and Mail of a couple of days ago. She states:

> Canada Post and the Canadian Government are co-operating to confound a strike over the issue of the Post Office's decision to reduce costs, by getting rid of unionized post offices and replacing them with outlets staffed by non-union people who will work for debased wages—
> A village is a small place . . . Some villages are home to fewer than 200 people, but home they are . . . A child growing up in a village is known and tended to some degree by everyone who lives there—
> All over the country—people describe the post office as the heart of the village—
> It is doubtful, however, that the villages can survive the latest catastrophe, Canada Post's decision to abolish rural route deliveries.
> Last November Canada Post announced it would cut back on both as part of its strategy to end the huge post office deficit by 1988. Of the 5,221 rural post offices across Canada, some 1,700 are slated for extinction and 3,500 others will be "transferred to the private sector".

Mr. Speaker, 82 per cent of rural postmasters and their assistants are women. I talked not too long ago to members of Dignité Rurale, women from the Gaspé, who have started a movement to oppose this. They told me that closure of rural post offices means a drastic loss of jobs for women. Some 37 were lost last year alone in Saskatchewan by sub-contracting out at not even a wage but at 22 per cent of the sales intake. This means they figure that women and other workers will be earning only about $2,000 a year. In many cases this means that they are working in the store for six days a week. This is in a rural situation. Those particular workers have been under CPPA not under CUPW, but the same principle applies.

It is basic to the current strike that the government policy of privatization is what is the most prevalent cause of unrest. Of course CUPW workers do not wish to lose their jobs. Of course they want and should have the right to decently paid jobs. They have come to my office, and I expect to others, with suggestions for improvements to the postal service. They have presented a number of very positive recommendations, but they have not been given a chance. They oppose franchising out, and so do we. It is bad for workers and consumers. It destroys one of our most important community institutions, particularly in rural communities.

In closing, I must say that I regret the action taken by the Government in imposing back-to-work legislation. I very much regret the policies of the Government which have been imposed upon Canada Post, which in turn has imposed them on its workers and which have contributed to such unrest in Canada.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my obligation and duty as a Member of Parliament who believes in the right of working people to organize and bargain collectively, to speak out against Bill C-86. It is important for the Canadian people to understand what the Government has done first to the Post Office, then to postal workers, and finally to the entire bargaining process.

We have seen what the Government has done to the Post Office ever since it came to power, and we had the Nielsen Commission report. For 120 years the Post Office has been serving Canadians and providing a vital service. The Government has this fixation that instead of providing a service, the Post Office should be a money-making corporation. This has been driving the Government in its ideological fixation to attempt to make the Post Office a money-making corporation, never mind the impact upon Canadians who look to the Post Office for service, never mind the impact upon those Canadians who work at the Post Office.

We have seen the Government refuse to initiate new postal walks, so in effect we have two classes of service in Canada today. People who live in established communities continue to get door-to-door delivery. People who live in new suburbs or in smaller communities that have grown to a sufficient size for door-to-door delivery, do not receive door-to-door delivery. Instead there is the fiasco of the Government's supermailboxes. There is a threat to close down rural post offices that my colleague from Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) mentioned.

Now there is an attempt at franchising which means that the Government is going to be doing away with good union jobs and replacing them with a franchising-out situation that will depend upon low paid labour with no job security and no benefits.

The Government moved very quickly in the direction of provocation of the union when it advertised for strike-breakers. This is unheard of. I come from a community where there is a long tradition of honouring people who have fought and struggled for the rights of working men and women to have a decent wage and decent working conditions. I use the word "strike-breakers" instead of the word "scab", because to me the word "scab" has some pretty heavy connotations. In the community where I live people remember members of a family three and four generations down the line because that member scabbed. It is a very serious allegation.

I would like to share with Members part of the definition of a scab written by Jack London. It summarizes the manner in which many working people feel about someone who undercuts their attempts to better their working conditions. Jack London stated that a scab is a two-legged animal with a corkscrew soul, a water-logged brain, a combination backbone of jelly and glue. Where others have hearts he carries a tumour of rotten principles. When a scab walks down the street, men turn their backs and angels weep in heaven, and the devil shuts the gates of hell to keep him out. Esau sold his birthright for a meal of pottage. Judas Iscariot sold his Saviour for 30 pieces of silver, Benedict Arnold sold his country for a promise of a commission in the British army. The modern strike-breaker sells his birthright, his country, his wife, his children and his fellow man for an unfulfilled promise from his employer. Esau was a traitor to himself. Judas Iscariot was a traitor to his God. Benedict Arnold was a traitor to his country. A strike-breaker is a traitor to his God, his country, his wife, his family and himself.

That indicates the depth of feeling that union people have toward someone who undercuts their struggle. Yet, on the other hand, we know that in some situations people are desperate. They are desperate for a job and to put something on the table. They might not feel very good about strike-breaking, but they feel that they are driven to it.

The question that I wish to place before the House, and the question that the Canadian people should be asking, is, what type of employer pushes people to strike-break? What type of employer sets one group of workers against another? What type of employer uses one group of workers to undercut deliberately the standards of another group that has been bargaining collectively to better their situation? I must ask, what type of government will act as that type of employer? The answer for the Canadian people is that only a Tory Government would be prepared to do that. This is a scab Government.

Unfortunately, the men and women who are driven by desperation to act as strike-breakers get the name "scab" attached to them, a name they will carry to their graves, and a name that their children and grandchildren will sometimes have hurled at them. They receive the name of scab, while the members of the Government continue to call themselves honourable. There is something not quite fair about this.

When we look at the current strike, we must realize that it was deliberately provoked by the Government as part of its over-all strategy to destroy the Post Office as a service to the people of Canada. It did not care who paid the price. The major price is being loaded upon the workers. We saw the manner the Government did that with the letter carriers. Now the Government is doing it to the inside workers who are members of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers.

CUPW took a very moderate approach as it began this strike. Instead of having an all-out strike, it had rotating strikes in order that it would not have too serious an impact upon the Canadian public. The Government chose to escalate that. Here is a situation where the Government has deliberately provoked an all-out strike by introducing Bill C-86.

Some of the members of my Party have referred to this legislation as Draconian. Yesterday some members of the Conservative Party felt that perhaps we should not use the word "Draconian". I checked, and the word "Draconian" comes from Draco who was a 7th century B.C. Athenian lawmaker. The types of laws that he made were written in blood rather than ink. For even the most trivial offences, people received the death penalty.

Draco is also the name of a lizard. I would like to suggest to Hon. Members that this legislation is Draconian in both meanings of the word; it is lizard-like, it crawls on its belly, it is cold-blooded, and is a relic from another age that should not be around in the 1980s. Certainly, it does not extract the death penalty for any of the workers, but it sounds the death-knell for collective bargaining. It sounds the death-knell for the rights of working people to elect their own leaders freely.

Clause 11 of Bill C-86 means that the Government can prevent any leader who advises his workers, his members, not to follow this legislation, from holding any office in the union or having any job with Canada Post. That is what we mean when we say that the legislation is Draconian. It puts an end to free collective bargaining on the part of the Post Office. It strikes at the very root of our right as Canadians to association. Freedom of association is guaranteed under Section 2 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, yet Bill C-86 strikes at that right.

Last Friday, just after the legislation had been tabled in the House, I had an opportunity to visit the picket line at the main sorting station near Victoria. I talked with some of the workers. They are very concerned. Their struggle is a just one. They are not asking for increased wages, but they are concerned about job security and about protecting the quality of their jobs. Many of them have worked for years at night shift jobs and have finally got the opportunity to work a day shift job at the wicket. This business of franchising will take that away from them. While the Government says that they will continue to have job security, they will be relegated to some kind of job on the night shift.

I do not know how many Hon. Members opposite have worked night shift. Well, I have, and it is not something which most workers in Canada appreciate, particularly if they have put in their years on night shift and have obtained a day job, only to see it taken away and hived off to some franchise outfit which will pay substandard wages.

They are also concerned that in the long run it will destroy union jobs. Apart from their own job security, as union men and women they are concerned about the impact it will have upon society in total, because it will destroy decent paying jobs and replace them with jobs at substandard wages without any benefits. I emphasize that if we pay substandard wages, we will be building a substandard economy and we will have a substandard society.

Why is the Government insisting upon destroying the Post Office? Why is it insisting upon destroying the living standards of Canadian men and women? Why is it insisting upon building a substandard society? I urge the Government to withdraw Bill C-86 and let collective bargaining take its proper route.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I was not scheduled to speak in the debate, but I want to put a few comments on record. I will be supporting Bill C-86, but with some reluctance.

I find the same difficulty today as I had a number of weeks ago when we looked at legislation to end the rail strike. What we are seeing is an impasse, both in the case of railway workers and in the case of Canada Post employees, which has developed as a result of a long period of time when management and workers were not talking, were not discussing the problems, and were not taking into consideration the job that had to be done and the best way to do it.

As a result, today we as parliamentarians are being used as pawns in that we now have to step in and settle a dispute which really should have been resolved at the negotiating table.

I find a little fault with the system whereby we indicated that if they did not reach a settlement we would bring in back-to-work legislation. That certainly puts the gun to the heads of the negotiators on behalf of Canada Post and on behalf of the unions. Unfortunately, the management of Canada Post looks at that as being a situation where it can sit back and perhaps not negotiate any further in good faith because it knows that Parliament will run to its assistance and provide legislation that will cause the dispute to end. I find that a very difficult situation to be put in.

I also find a couple of issues in the dispute somewhat discomforting. I am personally not in favour of replacement workers. Canada Post has used them twice and it has caused a great deal of disruption on the picket lines. Canada Post has the right to lock out its employees and, conversely, those employees have the right to withdraw their services. That is part of the process, yet every time they use replacement workers to do the jobs of those who have removed their services in order to cause discomfort to the corporation, so that they can hopefully get a collective bargaining settlement.

I find a difficulty in that regard. If it is so essential that the 23,000 CUPW people work at Canada Post, or the workers involved in the last dispute, perhaps we should not be considering Bill C-86 to end the dispute. Perhaps we should be considering legislation to take away or remove that right to strike. If every time there is a dispute we call in Parliament to settle it, perhaps we should look at some sort of legislation to remove that right to strike and provide a dispute settling mechanism through arbitration.

The other problem with which I have difficulty is franchising. I have no problem with franchising new services as Canada Post tries to extend its network into new population areas. However, I have difficulty with the thought that some existing postal operations may be franchised. I know that Canada Post is guaranteeing employment, but there is a certain quality of employment to which these people are entitled.

For example, I have a community of 17,000 people in my constituency with virtually no postal service. It has a few over-the-counter wickets in stores and so on. I can support franchising in the future for new facilities in order to provide service to the people, but I do not support the concept of taking existing post offices and putting them in the Kentucky Fried Chicken store next door. Nonetheless, I agree that in order to provide expanded services we may have to look at franchising.

However, those issues are not being settled by Bill C-86, the legislation which is before us today. Bill C-86 is merely calling an end to the dispute and is providing for 90 days of negotiation, with the benefit of a mediator, and eventually, if that is not successful, an arbitrator will be appointed who will have the binding powers to settle the dispute.

That is the only reason that I am supporting Bill C-86. I do not believe that Parliament should settle the issues, and we are not settling the issues. The issues are better solved between the parties sitting down in a responsible manner and negotiating. Given the nature of the management of Canada Post and the nature of the leadership of the union, I do not know whether we could really expect to have serious bargaining at the table without a lot of posturing and confrontation. I think that is why we are here today.

I also support the legislation because I know that Canadians are telling me "get them back to work". Canadians are paying good money in taxes for the subsidies and in stamps for the services, and they expect service. Earlier we talked about $24.89 being the average hourly cost of an employee including salary and benefits. It is a lot of money. I do not dispute that most Canadians are not making that amount but would like to make it. Nonetheless, it is a fact. It has been achieved through years of negotiating, and I do not think we can turn around and take it away in one step. However, the Canadian public has every right to expect service for that amount of pay.

When Canadians walk into a post office and see six wickets, one open, a 50-foot line-up, and four people standing back talking because it might be their coffee break, they do not react very well. That is a problem which both management and union have. They must solve the problems facing Canada Post.

I can tell the House that the staff in my office do not take a break if there is a constituent who wants service. They may get their break at some other time, but their priority is to provide service. That is what the Canadian public expects for $24.89. They do not expect us to take that away from the workers today. They may be a little jealous of that amount of money, but they expect productivity, courtesy, and service. They certainly expect their letter, when it is posted, to get to its destination in a reasonable length of time.

I am supporting Bill C-86 because we must get on with that objective. We obviously have a problem between management and union. I would say that as a Government we have a problem with the management.

I am not happy with the response I get from Canada Post. If my constituents get the same kind of nonchalant attitude when they call Canada Post, they have every right to be upset.

I understand why the relationship between the union and management has deteriorated. My relationship with Canada Post has certainly deteriorated over the years because it does not return my phone calls. They gave me the same gobbledegook as they gave my constituents when they called.

When a new house is built beside an old house, and one gets postal service and the other does not, and Canada Post says that it will take six months to review the route, in the meantime people are made to go downtown to a post office box. They are not even given a green box or a supermailbox. I do not blame the public for being frustrated with Canada Post, and they are taking that frustration out in this dispute.

Let us get it settled. Let us get a handle on the problem. It is not only a problem of management. It is a problem of the Government, the opposition Parties, the Canadian public, and the unions. We must make that organization work because Canadian taxpayers expect us to make it work. If we cannot do the job of making it work, they are prepared to accept other alternatives which will make it work.

The job must be done. They want us to do it. They want efficiency. They want service. They want fairness. They are not prepared to put up with what they are getting now and paying the kinds of bills they are paying. I will vote to put them back to work because the dispute will, hopefully, be resolved in the 90 days with the benefit of a mediator.

I find this kind of legislation very difficult. We are being brought into this to settle a problem which did not start six weeks or six months ago, it probably started six years ago with the unions and management getting further and further apart.

I will be supporting Bill C-86 with some reluctance because I have reservations about the dispute. Nonetheless this is not ending or settling particular issues, it is putting them back into the process. I can certainly tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in 90 days if the matter is not settled then an arbitrator will be needed. We will have a job to do to rebuild and provide the service which Canada Post is expected to provide Canadians.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in what the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) had to say. I thought I heard between the lines that he was more uncomfortable with this legislation than he feels he is able to admit on the record in the House. I was interested in his comment about line-ups at wickets. I wonder whether he has had the opportunity to be in a bank lately or in a number of other private enterprise institutions where line-ups are not infrequent. I sometimes find it irritating that we hear so very often about this kind of thing when it happens in the public sector but we never hear about identical things happening in the private sector.

I want to begin what I have to say this afternoon by taking issue with a statement made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) when he introduced this legislation. He said that the Government was determined—I am paraphrasing—that no private dispute would be allowed to tie up the country the way the postal strike was allegedly tying up the country. Actually it was not tying up the country until the Minister intervened, but that is beside the point.

I want to take issue with the notion that this is a private dispute, that this somehow belongs totally in the realm of the private sector, namely, that it is not related in some way or another to public policy, because this dispute is related to public policy. It is not a private dispute. It is related to the policy of the Government set down by the Government for Canada Post. It is in reaction to those policies that the Canadian Union of Postal Workers has found itself in the situation in which it now is, being unwilling, quite rightly, not to accept the policies which Canada Post is trying to force upon it, policies which have their origin in the policies of the Government. It is quite false, inaccurate, hypocritical and misleading for the Minister of Labour to refer to this as a private dispute which he and his Government really have not had anything to do with but which the Minister now out of a great sense of responsibility to the nation, is intervening to settle.

This is a dispute which has been precipitated by the policy of the Progressive Conservative Government. It is quite deceptive for the Minister of Labour to refer to this as a private dispute. It is government policy that Canada Post has with its plan for the franchising of postal offices. It is government policy that Canada Post not hire any more letter carriers and set up these rinky-dink supermailboxes all over the country. It is government policy that there be this constriction placed upon postal service.

I have had many constituents complain to me, not about inside postal workers or line-ups at wickets, but about things related to Canada Post policy. They are service-related, but in a way that is related to policy and not to the quality of the work being provided by postal workers. It is not postal workers who are to blame for supermailboxes. It is not postal workers who are to blame for the policies which the Post Office has adopted with respect to a great many issues which makes service more difficult for Canadians. Very close to where I live, I am aware of a supermailbox now having been set up. It has been there for a week or two. People are still having to go to the main post office in Transcona to get their mail. If they have to live with a supermailbox, they wonder why they cannot get their mail delivered to it now. We contacted Canada Post for them and we were told that that mailbox is not scheduled to be used until the beginning of November.

Not only does Canada Post irritate the devil out of people by forcing them to have these supermailboxes, but having set them up, will not even use them, making people go elsewhere for their mail. These things make absolutely no sense, Mr. Speaker. That is why there has not been the public outcry against the postal workers that some people might have expected or might have wanted, particularly on the government side.

Canadians have come to realize that the Post Office is run by a bunch of dummies. The public has a lot of sympathy for the postal workers who have to work under these dummies and under the people who devise these policies. I say to every Canadian who might be listening and tempted to accept the Government's invitation to perceive the Canadian postal workers as scapegoats in this dispute that it is their post offices which are on the Government's hit list. It is their post offices that will someday be franchised out, and it is their post offices which will disappear, particularly those in rural Canada. It is their relatives, friends and perhaps themselves, if they move into a newer area, who will never again receive door-to-door mail delivery.

This situation affects everyone. I think everyone has had just enough of a taste—some have had more than just a taste—at the way the Post Office is run not to be willing to accept the Government's view that it is the postal workers who are to blame.

The Government has clearly taken sides in this dispute. The Government has not acted neutrally. It has taken sides by referring in the way it has to the Foisy report, contradicting the position the Government took at the time of the back-to-work rail legislation when the Government refused to make reference to the conciliator's report. It has become absolutely clear that this is not a neutral act by the Government. This is a partisan act in which the Government has taken the side of management, not surprisingly, because management is implementing the Government's policies.

Going back to what I said originally, this is not a private dispute between Canada Post and its employees; it is a dispute centered around the appropriate resistance of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers on behalf of all Canadians to the policies which the Government has asked Canada Post to put in place. All Canadians owe CUPW a certain debt of gratitude, if you ask me, for not being willing to roll over and play dead with respect to these issues, for fighting back and for calling the attention of Canadians to just what is involved in the Government's policies with respect to Canada Post.

I had an opportunity to comment on the larger issue the other day. So far, I have been talking mostly about the policies of Canada Post with respect to franchising and things like that. I would like to turn now to the economic well-being of the workers.

What is happening here is part of a larger attack on the standard of living of working Canadians. The right-wing solution to the crisis in the western economy is that if there is to be a reallocation of power, capital and income, the people who will have to make the sacrifices are not those who have loads of money to begin with like the owners and the wealthy, but the well-paid working people. They will have to make that sacrifice in order, to use the euphemism of the right, that Canada and other countries which in the post-war era had enjoyed a good standard of living can become competitive.

With whom will these countries become competitive? "Competitive" is one of the words that is bandied about here, in the free trade agreement and in multilateral trade arrangements as if everyone knew what it meant. The fact is that "competitive" means that instead of having a Government that wants to work for a new, just and sustainable international economic order, as many have suggested it ought to do, we have a Government which wants to accommodate itself, rather than resist, through the sacrifices of working Canadians, to trends in the global economy which will pit working Canadians against working Koreans, Brazilians and Americans.

In order to have this kind of competition, we will all become the poor. When I say "we", I mean people who come from working class communities in which people have been able to have a decent standard of living for the last 30 or 40 years. The Government has said: "In order for us to be competitive, you people out there in Transcona and elsewhere have to give up that standard of living. It was nice for a while, four decades, not bad, particularly if it was from when you were 20 to 60 years old, but for the rest of you young people out there who thought you would have the kind of economic security your parents had, forget it. We are in the brand new world of a global-free enterprise, a brand new world of competitiveness, a brand new world of free trade with the United States".

Workers in Canada will be able to compete with workers in the sun belt of the southern United States where there is an anti-labour environment, very few environmental laws, very little regulation and a political context that is antithetical to social justice. These are the people with whom we are supposed to compete, and we are supposed to be excited about it. We are supposed to be excited about the fact that we can be given the opportunity by the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada to give up everything for which the people have worked over the last 50 years in building a more socially just Canada in order to be competitive.

That is not something with which working people will put up. Wherever working people take a stand against that kind of economic and political agenda, whether it be with CUPW, the rail unions or the workers at Super Value in Winnipeg, the NDP will be standing with those people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! It being 4.45 p.m., pursuant to Order made Wednesday, October 14, 1987, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the Bill now before the House.

[English]

Mr. Cadieux, seconded by Mr. Lewis, moves that Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services, be read the second time and, by order made earlier this day, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Cadieux) which was agreed to on the following division:

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener) moved:

That in the opinion of this House, the Constitution Act, 1982, should be amended in order to include property rights and, that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms so that it reads as follows:

"7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

and this House urges that the Legislative Assemblies of all provinces and the Senate pass similar resolutions.

• (1710)

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the second opportunity I have had to introduce and defend before this House a motion calling for the constitutional protection of property rights. The first time was on May 28, 1985, during the last session of Parliament.

The intent and rationale of this motion is very straightforward. I am asking the House of Commons to pass this motion, allow this question to go to the Senate and then to the provincial Governments through the amending process for our Constitution, seeking its consent to add the words "enjoyment of property" to Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights.

This action would thereby provide the necessary and natural corollary to the words "life, liberty and security of person", rights already secured in Section 7 of the Charter.

It is true that the right to enjoy property is now included in the Canadian Bill of Rights. However, the Canadian Bill of Rights is but a statement of general principle and does not of itself confer or create real rights. When property rights were proposed for inclusion in our Charter in 1981, the matter was discussed, then explicitly rejected, a regrettable omission about which I will say more later.

Suffice it to say that once a decision was made in 1981 to list all the rights of Canadians in the Charter, then surely all such rights should have been included. However, the omission of property rights from the present text of the Charter is an obvious and very serious omission. It remains a constitutional imperative to ensure it is included.

In my earlier speech I spoke in some detail on the philosophical rationale for this motion and do not feel the need to repeat myself at length here today. Simply put, however, I would argue that to omit and deny the right to private property is to diminish, indeed to render meaningless, the existing rights to life, liberty and security of person. Surely, our existing freedom to purchase a car, home, farm or business is severely restricted if our basic right to make, buy, keep or sell is not also protected. Likewise, surely the principle of freedom "to pursue the gaining of a livelihood", in Section 6, Part 2(b) of the Charter, as a labourer, housewife, farmer or businessman, is severely diminished if one's freedom to simply keep, sell or buy is not secure. All this is simple common sense.

Permit me to give two concrete examples. Under the ill-conceived and ruinous National Energy Program, the previous Liberal administration confiscated from the oil companies 25 per cent of all land assets north of the 60th parallel, called the "frontier lands", and gave them to PetroCan without any compensation whatsoever, not a single penny.

Another obvious area of concern are the nationalization policies of the New Democratic Party which would allow the seizure of assets without necessarily providing full compensation. So the socialist New Democratic Party could nationalize a bank or a business and refuse to pay fair market value. By adding the words "enjoyment of property" to the Charter, such actions would be severely restricted.

Therefore, lest there be any doubt, let me reiterate the fundamental rationale of this motion. Logical consistency demands that those fundamental rights now guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, words such as, "life, liberty and security of the person", be given their natural, undeniable and essential correlate, namely, "enjoyment of property". I would suggest it is incumbent upon those who would disagree with the motion to state their position with respect to this rationale.

In addition to the self-evident inherent logic of this motion, there are several other compelling factors in its favour. First, the historical precedent is overwhelming. The basic human right to own what we make was included in such documents as the Magna Carta in 1215 and the English Bill of Rights in 1627. In 1948, Canada signed the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Article 17 of that declaration reads:

> (1) Everyone has the right to own property as well as in association with others.
> (2) No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

Additionally, property rights is also recognized in the 1960 Canadian Bill of Rights. Clearly, then, it is now time to bring our Constitution in line with these historic documents.

Second, the entrenchment of property rights is currently recognized by a wide range of modern democratic counties including Australia, the United States, West Germany, Italy, Finland and, for my socialist colleagues, even socialist Sweden. Third, various Canadian national organizations, such as the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Real Estate Association, have been constant in their efforts to have Parliament act on this issue.

Fourth, this is a matter which applies to all Canadians and it is a right which each of them wants and deserves. This fact has received undeniable support in a recent Gallup poll which shows that 81 per cent of Canadians say that it is either "very" or "fairly" important to them that the Constitution be amended to include property rights.

The ordinary person's vested interest in the protection of property rights is recognized by all responsible public leaders. Britain's Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has said: "We need a property owning democracy". Why? Because, to quote Barbara Amiel, a well-known Canadian journalist, Mrs. Thatcher understands:

> That for ordinary working people, who might not be blessed with the intellectual property of the intelligentsia or the abstract property of the bureaucracy, the most important thing is the house they own or the few shares they can get. That bit of real property means that they can arrange their lives independently of the state.

Permit me now, Mr. Speaker, briefly to anticipate and respond to some of the concerns which have often been voiced with respect to this issue. These concerns are invariably related to two basic questions; first, what exactly is meant by "property", and, second, what would be the impact of the inclusion and subsequent interpretation of "enjoyment of property" upon various bodies such as the provinces, natives, environmentalists, womens' groups, business and labour, and so on. While these are important questions and, as such, cannot be exhausted here, it is crucial that they be held in proper perspective.

First, it is true that the concept of property has evolved from a rather basic interest in land and personal property to a more complex concern with intellectual property, that is, patents, trade marks and copyrights. There is also passive property such as stocks and shares, and now there is even the so-called "new property", such as social security systems and public employment. Admittedly, therefore, defining "property" is now a necessary and sometimes complicated exercise.

Second, the legitimate reservations of certain groups must be taken very seriously whether it be Prince Edward Island which is concerned about foreign land ownership, womens' groups wanting to safeguard gains in family law legislation, or environmentalists justifiably interested in protection from pollution. But these concerns should not be overstated. For example, some have argued that large corporations stand to benefit most from property rights and, therefore, protection of property rights is in itself not a good thing. Such an argument is logically absurd.

Are we, therefore, to deny and revoke our constitutional right to free speech simply because certain people or parties, for example, the Toronto Star, are large enough to exercise that right with the potential for greater influence than smaller newspapers or individual citizens? Of course not. Yet some persist in arguing that the constitutional protection of property rights will only benefit big business. Does that mean freedom of speech or freedom of the press is only of value to the Toronto Star? That is absurd.

Furthermore, it must be recognized that all aspects of the Charter are subject to Section 1 of the Charter which reads as follows:

> The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

I maintain that this qualifier safeguards against the kinds of extreme scenarios envisioned by oppenents of property rights.

Consequently, while the "enjoyment of property" may require both careful definition and legal interpretation, this is in no way sufficient to negate the rationale and the value of this motion. Just because it may be difficult to define and interpret what is meant by words such as "life", "liberty" or "security of person", that does not mean that we therefore refrain from enshrining these fundamental rights. Likewise, just because it may be difficult to define and interpret the words "enjoyment of property", it does not necessarily follow that it must be excluded from the Charter. To so argue is, at best, to allow necessary caution to negate a valid and fundamental principle; or, at worst, it is absurd logic used to distort completely the issue at hand.

If this rationale is sound, and I believe it is, and if there are compelling reasons in its favour, and I believe that there are, and if the major objections can be met, and I believe that they can be, then the way is clear for this Government and this House to take the necessary and decisive action. Not to do so would be intellectually and morally dishonest. It would be an abdication of our responsibility as Members of Parliament.

So I must emphasize the need for decisive action. We cannot perpetuate the negligence of the previous administration whose performance during the 1981 constitutional debates on this topic was nothing short of scandalous.

On Tuesday, January 20, 1981, the Conservative Party in opposition introduced an amendment seeking the inclusion of property rights in the Charter. On Friday, January 23, the then Solicitor General, in his capacity as acting Minister of Justice for the Government, accepted this amendment on behalf of the Liberal Government. However, that Sunday evening, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), having conferred with his provincial socialist counterparts in Saskatchewan, informed Canadians on national television that the NDP would be withdrawing its support for the Constitution if property rights were to be included.

The following Tuesday, Prime Minister Trudeau told Parliament that the property rights amendment had to be dropped. True to form, the Liberal Government had sacrificed a fundamental principle on the altar of political expediency. Its philosophy should have told it that it should have been in favour of it, but it gave up for political expediency.

Since this motion will be coming to a vote, it will be interesting to see whether the Liberal Party will again try to sit on both sides of this issue. It will also be interesting to see whether the NDP will continue to tell the constituents in my riding, and people right across Canada, that they cannot have the constitutionally protected right to make, sell, keep, buy, or own. They have that right; they must.

To cite the compelling logic of the 1972 decision, as just one example, of the Supreme Court of the United States:

> Property does not have rights. People have rights... [However] A fundamental inter-dependence exists between the personal right to liberty and the personal right to property. Neither could have meaning without the other. That rights in property are basic civil rights has long been recognized.

The Conservative Party is in favour of the constitutional recognition of property rights. Consistent with this, the present Government has taken very specific initiatives toward this end.

When I introduced and defended this motion during the last session of Parliament, a number of impediments stood in its way. First, there was the fact that the Province of Quebec was not yet a signatory to the Constitution. However, the recent historic Meech Lake Accord has gone a long way to resolving this deficiency. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) speaking on Law Day, April 15, 1987, noted:

> The successful resolution of the Quebec issue will unlock the constitutional reform process and allow us to turn our attention to other issues—such as ... property rights—in a second round of constitutional discussions.

This next round is already under way. A second impediment to my former motion was the need to address various concerns at the provincial level. Since then, following federal Government impetus, the provincial Attorneys General have established a working group to examine the property rights question.

As an example of recent action at the provincial level, at the initiative of my provincial colleague from Waterloo, Mr. Herb Epp, the Ontario Government on November 27, 1986, passed a resolution that Section 7 of the Charter be amended to include the "enjoyment of property".

A third impediment is related to the format of Private Members' Business. It was felt that one hour on a non-votable debate in the House was not an adequate format in which to debate such a significant subject as this. However, following the recent parliamentary reforms introduced by the Prime Minister, this new motion has been selected for extended debate with a mandatory vote to follow. This provides ample opportunity for all Members of the House to express their positions and to vote accordingly.

Permit me to summarize, Mr. Speaker. The premise of this motion is philosophically sound. The right of ownership flows naturally and logically from the uniqueness of every free individual to make, to invent, to keep, to buy, or to sell. The reasons in favour of the constitutional protection of property rights are compelling, both historically and constitutionally. The reservations with respect to definition and legal interpretation can all be met. The impediments to legislative action are now being removed.

We all know that the overwhelming majority of Canadians want the federal Government to act on this issue. Therefore, in conclusion, I call upon the House to accept and approve this motion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on this Private Member's motion put forward this evening. It is a question which will evidently come up quite often in the House. I think it is one that really needs a great deal of debate. I feel it is unfortunate that this evening we are limited to one hour, even though, of course, the Hon. Member proposing the motion has stated that there are other ways of having extended debate.

However, I think that this question goes much deeper than a great many Members are prepared to admit. This issue goes back to the time when we were repatriating the Constitution in the early 1980s. It was not only a question, as the Hon. Member stated, of political expediency; it was a question of provincial disagreement on the question of including the clause on property rights in the Constitution. He is correct in stating that Prince Edward Island was opposed, largely because of its restriction on foreign ownership of land in the province. But other provinces such as Saskatchewan were opposed as well.

I think that they had reasons. Whether it can be said that the reasons were reasons with which one would agree or not, I think one would have to say that their reasons were sound reasons as far as they were concerned. Although we may not agree with them, it will not be simple to bring this dialogue to a point where we can talk about putting this clause in the Constitution. If the Government is serious about doing this, then the dialogue with the provinces will have to be brought along much further than it has been to the present time.

The Hon. Member stated that we do not have a definition of property. That is true. That is a concern to me. The Hon. Member mentioned that this may not be necessary. He mentioned that there is support for this from the Canadian Bar Association. If we do not have a definition of property, I can understand why the Canadian Bar Association would be in favour of it, because it will make millionaires out of many of them.

The Hon. Member is correct in stating that the term "property" has evolved. One can look at history, back in the 1780s, the time of the drafters of the Declaration of Independence in the United States, and read about the disagreement between two such prominent men as Thomas Edison and James Madison and their definition of property and whether it should be included in the Constitution. At that particular time, they could not agree. It was a very dicey point even at that time, although subsequently through amendment it has been included in the Bill of Rights in the United States. We have had this evolvement of what is property. Initially it was narrowly termed as real property, the ownership of land. Now it means other things such as personal property and intellectual property. There are also rights in personal property and intellectual property.

For instance, people who are entitled to an Old Age Security pension, Canada Pension, or unemployment insurance have the receipt of those cheques and that is their personal property. That is not only personal property but it is a right that they have to receive that personal property. So there are rights not only in real property but in personal property.

The Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) also correctly stated that we are now talking about property in relation to intellectual property such as patents and copyrights. That is very true. Of course, if a person has a patent or a copyright, they have every reason and every right to be able to depend on the fact that that will stand up and that the law will enforce that right. So there has been an evolvement, and the definition continues to evolve. It is very important that we define property, and know from the outset exactly what property we wish to include.

There also are other aspects of property. As government becomes more involved in the lives of people, with incorporations, licences, and the list goes on, the definition of property continues to expand.

As the Hon. Member states, there is a very strong segment of people in Canada who believe that property should be included. There is also a strong segment of people who believe that property should not be included. A lot of people go by the old axiom, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it". We do have property rights in this country, and those property rights to be rights do not have to be included in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The courts have passed judgment on this. I wish to refer to a case in 1975, Harrison v. Carswell, where it states:

> Anglo-Canadian jurisprudence has traditionally recognized, as a fundamental freedom, the right of the individual to the enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof, of any interest therein, save by due process of law.

That is a Supreme Court decision. The Supreme Court has come out firmly on the side of property rights. While property rights are not enshrined in the Constitution, they are definitely rights in this country.

We must also look to Section 26 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which states, "The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed as denying the existence of any other rights and freedoms that exist in Canada".

In the Charter of Rights and Freedoms specifically set out is the statement that because the rights of property are not included in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that does not mean that they do not exist. Nor is there anything in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms that would say that these rights do not exist. That is very important.

We must also look at the history in Canada. The Hon. Member may talk about other countries, but in Canada we have had a unique situation in that we patriated our Constitution when we were fairly well advanced in our history, after we had been a country for over 100 years. We had this Charter of Rights and Freedoms well after we had been a country for over 100 years. So there is a good body of civil law and common law which looks after the rights of Canadians with respect to their property. This has evolved, and is evolving.

Canadians should not be concerned in any way about the fact that property rights are not enshrined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Their rights to property remain sound and inviolate. We must keep that in mind. I can appreciate the concern of the Hon. Member. I do not agree with him that this is a necessity, and I think that there are many who do not. However, if he feels it is something he wishes to pursue, I would encourage him to take it to his colleagues in caucus, the Government, and the provinces. If there is to be any meaningful change, it has to be aired with the provinces, and the provinces have to come along as equal partners in trying to make this change.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer). The motion is for the enjoyment of property. It states that it is to amend the Constitution of Canada in order that Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms read:

> Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

I very strongly oppose this. I wish to confirm what the Hon. Member for Kitchener said that it was the NDP that scuttled this in 1981. I was proud at that time to be the NDP constitutional spokesman when this happened. If the Member for Kitchener wishes a reference on exactly when it happened, it was at the committee stage of the hearings back in 1981, and I believe it was on November 1, which was a Friday. I remember that day very well when the Acting Minister of Justice accepted an amendment from the Conservative Party. The Hon. Member from Burnaby and myself talked out the clock. We consulted over the weekend and persuaded the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to drop this. I wish to explain some reasons why we did that.

I went over my remarks to the committee at that time, and one of the things I said was that one of the most persuasive arguments against property rights in the Constitution was put forward by a Conservative Justice Minister named Horst Carver, the Minister of Justice for Prince Edward Island. He came to our committee and was extremely persuasive when he said that, if property rights were enshrined in the Constitution of Canada, he was afraid that the provincial rights in this country would be jeopardized and tampered with. Foreign ownership regulations and laws in Prince Edward Island over the restriction of farmland and the restriction of the purchasing of tourism land by foreigners would be put in jeopardy. He was afraid that if property rights were in the Constitution, as stated in the motion where it talks about the enjoyment of property and persons enjoying their property, this would be a wide open invitation to Americans to buy farmland in Prince Edward Island, buy recreation land, corporations could do so, and it would be a great invasion of provincial rights.

I also recall some Albertans in the Conservative Government of Peter Lougheed making a similar argument without as much passion about why we should not be doing this. Of course the NDP Government of Allan Blakeney did the same thing. I am very proud to have been the NDP spokesman in those days when we scuttled that extremely reactionary and retrograde move by the Conservative Party, a move which would have been a great invasion of provincial rights.

I am happy that it is a constitutional amendment and that it must be approved not only by the House of Commons and the Senate of Canada but by seven of the ten provinces representing 50 per cent of the people.

I make it very clear that Albertans under Lougheed, P.E.I. Conservatives, and many other Conservatives in Canada at the provincial level do not support it. I am very pleased that this kind of amendment will not go through.

I want to explain why it should not go through. As I said, it was proposed back in 1981. Mr. Bennett, the Premier of British Columbia, reproposed it in 1983. It failed to get through the Premiers despite the fact that there were many Conservative Premiers in the country. I am very proud that it went down to defeat.

I come from the Province of Saskatchewan. There has been tremendous intervention in its economy by Governments of Saskatchewan, such as the take-over of potash mines and things of that nature over the years. This kind of constitutional amendment may have prohibited that kind of intervention in the economy, in that that kind of prohibition would have been opposed by an overwhelming number of Saskatchewan people. I am not only talking about New Democrats. Saskatchewan has a Conservative Government now which maintains the Saskatchewan Potash Corporation. The very right-wing Government of Liberal Ross Thatcher, who was more conservative than most Conservatives, maintained Crown corporations in Saskatchewan. They are a very important part of our heritage. I do not want to see that heritage jeopardized by a Supreme Court decision which says that a person may enjoy property rights when that person might be an American company which would prohibit us from expanding the Saskatchewan Potash Corporation or indeed Saskoil.

Another example is the Province of Quebec. Quebec intervened in the asbestos market. The federal Government has intervened in the oil market with Petro-Canada. In 1984, the Government expanded the role of Petro-Canada through the takeover and purchase of other oil companies. That might be put in jeopardy by property rights being enshrined in the Constitution of Canada.

I have already mentioned Prince Edward Island and the very passionate stand taken by Horst Carver, the Conservative Minister of Justice of that province. I assume Joe Ghiz, the present Premier, would take the same stand on behalf of Prince Edward Islanders.

I think this kind of amendment is very dangerous for ordinary people or ordinary citizens, small businesses, and farmers. I say that as a person who said back in 1981 that I wanted to see economic rights put in the Constitution. At that time I said that we should have economic rights in the Constitution—the right to a job, the right to an income, the right to medicare, the right to decent wages, the right to own a farm, the right to own a small business, and the right to own a home. I am very much in favour of those rights for ordinary people, but I am not in favour of the amendment before the House today.

I have already mentioned some of the reasons I am not in favour of the amendment. However, let me point out that there would be no guarantee if we had the amendment in the Constitution. "Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person" is already there, and the Hon. Member would like to add the following:

—and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

I know how the Supreme Court of Canada can interpret that.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that the Hon. Member does not wish to suggest something that is not so. The only words that are being added to Section 7 are the words "enjoyment of property". The rest is already in there.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, it was totally inadvertent on my part. I know Section 7 of the Charter. I was a member of the committee this past summer, and I am very familiar with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Section 7 reads:

Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

What the Hon. Member would add is "enjoyment of property". However, I am concerned about interpretation by the courts.

You are a very distinguished lawyer and member of the Bar of Quebec, Mr. Speaker. In that you are sitting in the chair, of course you cannot comment, but I am sure you could probably give us some very interesting opinions on this point. There is no guarantee at all that the Supreme Court of Canada and other courts would not interpret the protection of property in such a way as to rule out a wide variety of government initiatives aimed at, for instance, improving the workplace, regulating technological change, regulating labour relations, restricting the right to pollute, safeguarding the environment, protecting tenants and all kinds of other rights which workers, tenants, and other ordinary Canadians might have.

It seems clear that these and other government actions could be construed as affecting the right to the enjoyment of property. Not only is there the fact that one has property, but one has the right to enjoy that property. What does that mean in the courts of Canada? "Enjoyment of property" are very elastic words, and this is what Horst Carver, the Conservative Justice Minister of Prince Edward Island, was concerned about.

I should also like to note the so-called due process clauses in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments in the United States Constitution. Between 1905 and 1937 in respect of these clauses "to strike down laws providing for minimum wages, maximum hours of work and maximum prices, and prohibiting anti-union activity", the court reasoned that such laws were unjust denials of the employer's liberty to bargain with his employees and control the use of his property. I think these are points which we should note.

What does the word "everyone" mean? I ask that question of the Hon. Member for Kitchener. I know he has very good intentions in his motion. I do not question his motives whatsoever. However, what does the word "everyone" mean? What does the word "property" mean? These words can have broad definitions by Supreme Court justices over whom neither he nor I have control once it is out of the domain of Parliament. It is not so much that we are taking control out of the hands of Parliament. We are taking control out of the hands of the provincial legislatures of Canada and giving it to the Supreme Court of Canada. That is what I do not like about the particular amendment. The word "everyone" could be a Japanese investor, an American investor, a Canadian company, CPR, the Hon. Member for Kitchener, or anybody. Again I say that it is one of the things I do not like about the amendment before the House today. It almost certainly includes corporations.

What about the word "property"? Property includes the rights to control and dispose of a very broad range of assets and so on. That also concerns me. As I said before, it falls under provincial jurisdiction. I do not think that we in the Parliament of Canada should initiate a constitutional change which affects the provinces almost exclusively. Of course we have that right. The Hon. Member has that right. However, I do not think that we should be the ones to initiate it. It is in their domain. If they want changes, they should be initiating the particular move.

Once again I appeal to my friend who comes from a Party which has always stressed that provincial rights are important in rethinking this position. I could go on and on, but I see you signalling, Mr. Speaker, that my time is up. As I said, I think the resolution would do more harm to the rights of ordinary Canadians and do more to protect the rights of big companies and big investors, including many foreign investors. It would also take away many of the rights of provincial legislatures to do what they want with their resources and their farmland. I have already mentioned the case of Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan, but I see that my time is up.

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, indeed it is a pleasure to rise to participate in debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer). I commend him for his initiative in bringing an extremely important matter to the attention of the House.

I know that with the Hon. Member's heritage the matter is important to him. He appreciates even more how precious property rights are to many, if not all, Canadians. Many of his constituents have come from persecuted countries, and I know how important the motion is to them.

Since being elected in 1984, I have made no fewer than five interventions in the House of Commons on the inclusion of property rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Many individuals have chosen Canada as their new home because of the freedoms which we enjoy to work hard and to acquire wealth and property. It is difficult for me to understand why in 1981-82 the NDP would not allow the inclusion of property rights in the Charter.

A recent poll commissioned by the Canadian Real Estate Board showed that eight out of ten Canadians said that it is either fairly or very important to put property rights into the Charter. This support is consistently high across Canada.

Again I commend the Hon. Member for Kitchener, and I am honoured to have seconded his motion to have property rights enshrined in the Charter.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to join in the debate. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) who has, not only on this occasion but on a number of occasions, brought forward a number of important subjects for debate in the House. I congratulate him for that. I think it is a good reflection on the people of Kitchener that they had the foresight and wisdom to send this individual back to Parliament a second time.

• (1750)

Constitutional change as proposed by the Hon. Member for Kitchener is very timely inasmuch as we have also been discussing the Meech Lake Accord. I will say in passing that I believe the Meech Lake Accord sets a new tone for co-operative and constructive federal-provincial relations. The Accord has shown that constitutional change is possible in Canada when it is done collectively and in co-operation with the provinces, and I am sure that this is what the Hon. Member for Kitchener has in mind.

At the outset I would like to emphasize that in my view property rights have played a central role in the evolution of our society. Indeed, property rights are an essential part of British parliamentary democracy. These rights can be traced back to the year 1215 with the signing of the Magna Charta. Today the right to own, use and enjoy property is fundamental to the economic life of our country and of other western democracies. For that reason I believe it should be enshrined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The role of property in the economy of our country, the right to own, use and enjoy property, is fundamental to the basic feature of democracy, which is individual freedom. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party has had a long and honourable association with this idea. It was the Conservative Government under the late Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker who in 1960 introduced the Canadian Bill of Rights which included protection for the enjoyment of property. In the recent process leading to the patriation of the Constitution, it was the Progressive Party again that wanted the inclusion of property rights. Unfortunately that process was not included at the end, and I am very pleased that the Hon. Member for Kitchener has come forward in an attempt to correct the situation.

There have already been a number of discussions and debates about this question. I am the first to admit that questions concerning the Constitution are never simple. They are usually difficult, but I do not think that as a result of that we should shrink from the task.

The Member from the New Democratic Party says that the definitions of property are very complicated. I agree with that. We have real property which concerns land. We have personal property which deals with everything from cars to negotiable instruments. Just because the definition of property is very broad and it will, of necessity, have to be interpreted by the courts there is no reason not to embark on the course, a very important one, to have it included within the Charter of Rights.

I say the motion before us would add the enjoyment of property to Section 7 of the Charter thereby guaranteeing the right not to be deprived of the enjoyment of property, except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice. In conjuction with that, it is reasonable, I believe, to say that what we are talking about is the unreasonable deprivation of an individual when it comes to property rights. I would suggest that some of the fears I have heard enumerated here that people's rights will be trampled on by the rights of the Government to conduct the business of either the province or the federal Government are misplaced. I do not think that is what we are talking about at all. It is not the intention of the Member from Kitchener. He wants to strike a reasonable balance between the property rights of the individual and the legitimate concerns of the state. I would not feel so strongly about this if I had not seen examples in Canadian history where property rights of the individual had been trampled upon.

You would be aware, Mr. Speaker, coming as you do from the Province of Quebec, of all the problems that surrounded the expropriation of land for Mirabel Airport. The facts are this: much more land than necessary was expropriated for the airport. Everybody knew it and acknowledged it. The people whose farms and homes were expropriated fought the issue for years, indeed decades, to do something about it. I became a believer in this resolution just on that issue alone because I always thought that if property rights had been enshrined in the Constitution, people would have had a legal access and would have been able to take a legal route to show and demonstrate to a court of law that their rights had been unnecessarily deprived. It was a very moving moment for all of us when the then Minister of Public Works—I was not there to see it, I saw it on television—spoke to all the farmers who had been deprived of their property and acknowledged—something that should have been acknowledged years ago—that a terrible mistake had been made. All the suffering all those years by those individuals was unnecessary.

Whether this motion goes through or not, I hope other Crown corporations take a long hard look at their property management system. We can start with the St. Lawrence Seaway which owns land in my area. I would suggest the St. Lawrence Seaway should perhaps take a look at how much land it has expropriated over the years. That company should look at the question in the light of what is reasonable for its requirements. I do not limit the issue to the St. Lawrence Seaway. Other companies should do the same thing.

If this motion had been passed and had been part of the Constitution, individuals would have had a remedy in law, and I think that is what we all want. I feel very strongly about this motion which has been supported by a number of organizations. On December 18, 1986 I was very pleased to present a petition spearheaded by the St. Catharines and District Real Estate Board. I know I was joined by the Members from Welland, St. Catharines, Erie and Lincoln, all the Members of Parliament from the Niagara Peninsula, in support of this very worth-while endeavour. This motion has the complete support of the Niagara Falls Fort Erie Real Estate Association. They have made representations to me as one of their two Members of Parliament who represent the area and have asked that we act.

I ask Hon. Members to begin the process of enshrining property rights in the Constitution. It is a long and difficult process but I know it will need the support of the provinces. It is long overdue and we should begin the process now.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief, not that I have much choice with the time that is left to us in this hour. I just wanted to make a quick remark to the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson).

The largest single expropriation in the history of this country was made by the Conservative provincial Government of Ontario in 1982 when it expropriated 10,991 housing units in the sale of Cadillac Fairview to Greymac Trust.

Mrs. Mailly: How can you compare that to Mirabel? This is a serious subject.

Mr. Boudria: The Member across who knows so little should listen a little more and perhaps if she is here many years, which is very doubtful, she could learn something. I want to tell the Member from Niagara Falls that I for one cannot support such an initiative for a number of reasons. The Conservative Party has no monopoly on virtue on this issue because of the expropriation to which I have referred. There are still preferred shareholders of Crown Trust, Seaway Trust and Greymac Trust in Canada who have never been properly compensated for the loss of their property confiscated by the Province of Ontario in that year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the motion is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

POSTAL SERVICES CONTINUATION ACT, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to special order, I do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services—Mr. Cadieux—Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: Since Hon. Members have been so kind as to provide amendments to the Chair prior to entering into Committee of the Whole, would it be agreeable that we stand Clause 2 as the amendments the Chair has received on Clause 2 are consequential on amendments to Clauses 7 and 8? If that is agreeable to Hon. Members, we will proceed with Clause 3.

Clause 2 stood.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I would like to ask the Chair, although I have no real objections, why it is asking us to proceed in this fashion and what effect this would have.

The Chairman: According to the Chair, it would be difficult to adopt the proposed amendment to Clause 2 before considering Clauses 7 and 8.

[English]

The Chairman: Shall Clause 3 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

On Clause 5—extension of collective agreement

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-86 be amended in Clause 5 by striking out line 40 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"date to be fixed by the arbitrator,"

The Chairman: The Chair finds the amendment to be in order.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to speak for very long on the amendment to Clause 5. Again, it is a part of the package about which we spoke earlier and we will make our major arguments when we deal with Clauses 7 and 8.

It is difficult going clause by clause when the major clause to which we object and believe should be changed comes part way through the Bill, but through necessity, we must deal with things stage by stage. However, I do want to take this opportunity as we begin clause by clause consideration of the Bill to say that one of the major problems we had with this Act when it was introduced a week ago was that it provided for a mediator-arbitrator. We objected to that.

At that time, we asked the Minister to appoint a mediator. At that time, there was not a national postal strike and the situation was such that we believed that a mediator would have been the best person to deal with the dispute that was boiling in the country. We still believe that that would have been the best route to take a week ago.

A mediator working with the union and with Canada Post could have used his or her good offices to try to resolve the dispute last week. That was not done at the time and since then, there has been a nation-wide postal strike for a week, a strike which we believe was caused by the Government's introduction of this legislation, augmented by the fact that Canada Post has refused to negotiate the issue of franchising even though that will affect the jobs of people who work at the wickets right across Canada.

Because the Government refused to negotiate and because it introduced legislation, we believed that we were going in the wrong direction and that it was very important that a mediator be appointed. However, we do recognize that there has been a national strike for a week as a result of this legislation and we do recognize that a mediator would be of very limited value now that both sides have been driven apart and there are very bitter feelings as a result of the Government's introduction of this legislation.

We will still move amendments on this particular clause. However, we will save our substantive argument until we get to the major clause. Since this clause was called, we will obviously be voting on it at this time. I know that some of my colleagues would like to speak a bit further on it.

• (1810)

Mr. Heap: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak against this very unjust and destructive back-to-work legislation of the Conservative Government. The amendment which we are now debating is part of the package which we are seeking. It talks of an agreement for certain action to be taken at a date to be fixed by the arbitrator. More generally, we are getting at the difference between mediation and arbitration.

In the half century during which labour law has grown up as a body of practice and law in North America, most contracts have been settled without a strike and without any compulsory back-to-work legislation. Many contracts are settled without the aid of a mediator and the large majority are settled without any such intervention at all.

The country has been moving toward a policy of resolving conflicts by negotiation. Sometimes negotiations break down and the owner may lock out or the workers may go on strike. However, that is not the normal way of proceeding.

As my colleague, the Member for Churchill, said, we urged the Government to appoint a mediator before this strike happened and the Government refused to do it. Now it seems that the Government wants to destroy the very concept of mediation, the very concept of negotiation, in order to bring about a willing compromise with each side giving a little bit and neither side getting all it asked for, a willing compromise for the sake of peace and good order. The Government does not want a willing compromise. It is clear that the Government has decided that it will either destroy unions or enslave them.

There have been continual attacks on the postal unions by the Government. They are continually being blamed for the inefficiency of the Post Office. Even the public, which is relatively impartial, understands that it is very often a rude and inconsiderate management that is to blame. The public strongly supported the letter carriers and is now beginning to support the inside postal workers notwithstanding the heavy propaganda which has been spread against the inside postal workers who are now on strike.

I have read letters to the editor and have received telephone calls and letters in my constituency office from people saying that they disagree with the franchising out of the wicket work of the Post Office to drug stores or small variety stores in my riding of Spadina. They have complained bitterly about having to travel some distance to a little store to pick up a registered letter or parcel. The postage has been paid but the management of the Post Office will not do the work. Instead, in many cases the recipient of the mail is required to do the work which until a few weeks ago was being done by the Post Office. A management decision has now been made that that paid-for service will no longer be fully provided.

People who in principle do not sympathize with the Canadian Union of Postal Workers do sympathize on the issue of franchising. That is a central issue in this strike. If the Government had been willing to negotiate on the matter of franchising, there would be no strike. That has been made plain in many ways, including by the union's offer to negotiate franchising in certain defined situations such as new residential areas.

If the Post Office had been willing to negotiate it, could have arrived at an agreement with the postal workers and not only would there be no strike, there would be better service than is now being received by my constituents who have complained to my office. People are being required to go a mile or two to pick up mail for which postage was paid. They often have to go to a location which is not served by good public transportation or has no proper parking.

The Post Office is forcing the customers to do the work which management has declined to do. This will result in people making less use of the Post Office. Perhaps that is another purpose of the Minister in forcing this strike and imposing this settlement. Perhaps there is a campaign to drive away the ordinary users of the Post Office so that friends of the Government who operate private postal services will inherit the business when the public service has been destroyed.

I have said that there has been great progress in the last half century in Canada and the United States in developing labour law to the point where contracts and disputes are normally settled without a strike. Nevertheless, we have not arrived at anywhere near full democracy for the people who earn their living through wages as compared to those who earn their living from the property they own.

Trade unionists in particular are second-class citizens in Canada. The Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms do not say that. Those words are not found in any law passed by Parliament or any other jurisdiction in Canada, but the fact is that only trade union members get fined or sent to jail for not working.

Doctors can go on strike and no one talks about putting them in jail, although their patients may suffer when they are refused service. Bankers go on strike. They refuse to give loans at 9 per cent. They will not give loans unless they are paid 12 per cent, or whatever the rate of interest is. There is no negotiation, mediation, arbitration or back-to-work law telling the bankers that since they made $200 million profit last year they must lend money at 9 per cent. No such thing is even considered.

Bankers, professional people, owners of any business or any property can go on strike with impunity. They can refuse to make their service or property available to tenants or customers on the terms that have been customary or which the customers might consider reasonable. They can ask any unreasonable price or impose any unreasonable condition they like. If they do not get their way they can shut the place down and hope to force, by deprivation, their customers to meet their price. Only members of trade unions can be prohibited by law from doing what every other person in this country is free to do.

I have been a trade unionist for many years. I worked in a factory for 18 years and am proud to have been a member of the Canadian Paperworkers Union. I respect the work of rank and file trade union men and women and their local, regional, and national officers and representatives who have built up the self-respect of people who work for wages and are otherwise deprived of their right to give or withhold their labour freely.

In our factory, the only way we could bargain to get a decent wage, to have normal courteous treatment from a supervisor rather than contemptuous insults or orders; the only way we could bargain to avoid racial discrimination and the sowing of racial conflict by certain foremen and to have safety in order to protect ourselves from the risk of life and limb due to unsafe working conditions, was by agreeing as a union that if we could not get a reasonable settlement we would not do the work of the factory. In 30 years there was only one strike in our factory for some two or three weeks. Normally, disputes were settled by negotiation.

My point is that the union has been the means of raising the self respect of Canada's working people such as the ones who make it possible for this Parliament to run. Many of them are still deprived by this Parliament of the right to have a union. They include the people who clean the buildings, who build and repair them, who provide the services in the cafeteria, who drive the buses, the constables and others. There is only the beginnings of recognition of union organization.

This Parliament is one of the worst employers in Canada and one of the most out of date, anti-union and anti-human employers in Canada. Now, Parliament wants to extend that anti-union, anti-worker attitude into the Post Office.

The principle we are trying to put forward in this amendment and the following amendments is that there should be at least a move by this Parliament toward restoring the principle that we mediate in an attempt to get an agreement before we go to arbitration, especially considering the bias terms in which the Government is giving direction to the arbitrator, that he shall give due cognizance to the Foisy report, which means enforcing enfranchising. Not only is franchising being forced on the postal workers, it is being forced on millions of Canadian customers who are objecting to it. However, they have no voice.

The Minister spoke very scornfully of the 23,000 members of the union and how they can hold Canada to ransom, as he put it. However, he has turned the situation upside down. It is not 23,000 union members who are holding Canada to ransom, it is the Minister and his appointed manager of the Post Office who are holding Canada to ransom by destroying a good delivery service and forcing my constituents, most of them non union, to go to much extra trouble to get their mail.

To their surprise, my constituents are beginning to see the Canadian Union of Postal Workers as their only defender. Since Parliament, dominated by a Tory Government that has grown contemptuous because of its three-quarters majority, will not protect the interests of the users of the Post Office, they find that the only defender they have left is this despised Canadian Union of Postal Workers. The union is attacked by the Minister and misrepresented by the postal management and the Minister.

We are saying that all of Canada suffers because postal workers in the union, like other trade unionists in Canada are still not given the full right of citizens in Canada. They are not allowed, like other people, to give or withhold their labour by their decision. Because postal workers are treated as less than free citizens of Canada, the users of the postal service are suffering through loss of proper delivery of their mail. They will continue to suffer as long as this insane and greedy cost-cutting service-cutting system is imposed by the Government.

I urge Parliament to adopt this amendment concerning the date being fixed by the arbitrator, to adopt the other amendments that my caucus will be moving, and to restore at least a little of the health that has been developed over the past half century in labour negotiations on this continent.

I urge the Government to reconsider its suicide course and not try to use the Post Office as a means of destroying a union and damaging the whole principle of labour relations and labour negotiations in Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to speak to the Bill earlier in the day but the Minister was unable to be here. I want to take this opportunity to say to the Minister now that his remarks the other day that this was a private dispute were quite out of order and inaccurate. This is certainly not a private dispute.

We are dealing with a publicly owned Crown corporation that is in the midst of a national strike that was provoked by the Government of Canada through the mandate and instructions given to that Crown corporation by the elected Conservative Government.

I do not believe that qualifies as a private dispute. I suggest that it is a situation created by public policy and one which could have been avoided if the Government had adopted the appropriate policy to instruct Canada Post to be willing to negotiate that which it is now not willing to negotiate, such as franchising. It is quite misleading for the Minister to pretend that this is some private dispute in which he and his Government are beneficently intervening through the peace, order and good government clause.

This dispute has its origins in public policy and the instructions of the Government to Canada Post. I hope the Minister will at least have the decency to admit that at some point. We could then move on to debating what policy changes the Government might be willing to change and whether it is willing to give Canada Post the appropriate instructions with respect to what is and what is not negotiable.

If Canada Post was willing to negotiate the matter of franchising, we would not even have the strike. One must ask why the Government wants Canada Post to be so unreasonable about negotiating franchising. If it did not instruct Canada Post to be unreasonable, why is it tolerating such a policy that would inevitably lead to a strike if it did not negotiate the matter?

The Minister is fooling no one when he tries to characterize what is happening as a private dispute. This Bill does not resolve a private dispute, it creates another layer of public involvement in the ongoing situation at the Post Office. It makes matters worse by virtue of the one-sidedness of the legislation, the interference in the internal affairs of the trade union that is involved, the one-sidedness that is displayed by including the Foisy report in the way it has when it was not willing to do the same at the time of the back-to-work legislation for the rail workers and by the one-sidedness which has been consistently displayed in both the tone and rhetoric of the Minister of Labour with respect to the strike. I just find it regrettable that the Government did not have the good sense to take the kind of steps that could have been taken to have prevented the strike in the first place. Now, instead of giving Canada Post the appropriate instruction, it is proposing to make matters worse.

On Clause 7—Appointment of mediator-arbitrator

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Chairman, I have some comments on Clause 7 of the Bill. In fact, I also intend to move an amendment.

[English]

Before going into the amendment, I would like to speak about the Foisy report because that is what we are talking about, especially Clause 7(2)(b).

First, Members from the government benches have been claiming that this Bill was brought about because it was not possible for the two parties to reach any kind of an agreement. Anyone who has read the Foisy report has to come to the conclusion that long before the Government decided to bring forward Bill C-86, the two parties had gone a long way toward reaching an agreement on a number of items. In fact, if I am allowed to quote page 3 of the Foisy report, we find that the parties have been successful in agreeing to a number of items. I will quote the French version of the Foisy report:

On page 3 of his report, Mr. Foisy says: "After many meetings, the parties finally agreed to strike a compromise, which was mainly limited to withdrawing their respective demands and the signing of other provisions". The status quo. However, Mr. Foisy goes on to say, and this is important: "When I met the parties for the last time—". That was sometime ago, as he says: "—on August 12, 1987, about 75 percent of the clauses in the collective agreement had been renewed." In fact, that is one of the reasons why Bill C-86 got such a poor reception on this side of the House. The Government claimed there was a national emergency and that negotiations were not working out, while if we go back to the middle of August, by then already three-quarters of the clauses of the collective agreement had received the approval of Canada Post and the Union of Postal Workers. This means negotiations were going at a brisk pace. That happens to be one of the positive aspects of the Foisy Report but unfortunately, there is more. The report contains a number of pages I find alarming, and that is why I intend to move an amendment. In some areas the Foisy Report clearly supports the employer, the Canada Post Corporation, especially on job security, franchising and technological change. I intend to concentrate more particularly on franchising, since that is one of the controversial issues separating the Union and Canada Post.

If we look at page 25 of the Foisy Report, Mr. Speaker, we see that Mr. Foisy says the following: "In a context where the employer can legally ask the private sector to offer its services, we consider Canada Post's option to deal with the private sector a legitimate one. The administrative policies and philosophy of a company should not be engraved in stone, and any company has the right to restructure and rethink its future in terms of new criteria and new directions. Provided the employer's policy abides by the provisions of the Canada Labour Code, nothing really prevents the employer from using the services of the private sector".

That is what makes me say the Foisy Report is biased with respect to franchising, and that is why I have trouble with Clause 7, which says, in its present form, and I will quote what it says at the bottom of page 3 and the top of page 4: "The mediator-arbitrator shall give due cognizance to the report of the conciliation commissioner that was released to them on September 22, 1987", referring to the Foisy Report. That I find difficult to accept. I would not want the mediator-arbitrator to be forced by legislation to seriously consider a report that in some areas is biased towards the employer. I would of course expect the mediator-arbitrator to take the time to read the Foisy Report. But I would not want him to feel he has an obligation to implement the report. I think the person who is eventually appointed to this position should have an independent mind and be able to make up his own mind about most of the issues at stake in these negotiations.

The amendment I intend to move is aimed at giving the mediator-arbitrator the freedom he should have had initially. My amendment is quite simple, and reads as follows:

That Bill C-86 be amended in Clause 7(2)(b) by striking out the word "due" from the first line on page 4 of the Bill.

The English version of the amendment would read as follows:

[English]

That Bill C-86 be amended in Clause 7(2)b by striking out the word "due" from the first line on page 4 of the Bill.

The effect of this is to ensure that the mediator-arbitrator has a free mind and starts from scratch. If he wants to read the Foisy report, he can. I do not recommend it for bedtime reading. I read it myself. I should not have read it before going to sleep.

Mr. Keeper: Did you fall asleep?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint Jacques): No, I did not fall asleep. There were some parts in it that I found offensive. I did not find them fair, equal and in balance. I hope the mediator-arbitrator will read them in the morning rather than at night. Once he has read them, as he should, I think he should make up his mind. He will have, first, a period of 90 days to be able to speak to both management and the employees. He will be able to get their separate points of view. He may be able to meet them together. He has a wide range of opportunities to apprise himself as to what the parties want respectively. He can also glance at this imperfect report.

[Translation]

This is the reason why I propose those amendments. I discussed them with the others parties in the House and I believe that the Government is favourably disposed. I spoke about them on several occasions with representatives of the New Democratic Party and together we have tried, along with the Minister, to find a formula which would meet the requirements of the Government and those of my NDP colleagues.

The reason why I say that they would meet those requirements is that if I were really free, I would merely vote against that part of the Bill because I find after having read the Foisy Report that the mediator-arbitrator would be more inspired if he sought his own information and made up his mind.

However, as a Member who has been sitting here for a few years, rather than proposing that section 7.2(b) be withdrawn altogether and my amendment rejected by the Government majority, I prefer at least to reach a compromise where the importance that the mediator-arbitrator must give to the Foisy Report is lessened and I think that if the mediator-arbitrator reads Hansard, he will realize what our purpose is and if the amendment is accepted I think that it will be an improvement compared with the present wording.

So if I had it my way, as I said earlier, I would vote against Clause 7(2)(b). But as a practical man, I think that we are able to water it down to reasonable proportions whereby the mediator-arbitrator would be able to give cognizance to the Foisy report. In my opinion, this report does not deserve more than one taking cognizance of it.

This is the reason that I am enjoining my colleagues in the House of Commons to support this amendment which I believe would be in the best interests of both sides, both management and the union. It would probably bring about a better settlement which, in turn, would be a good thing for the ratepayers of Canada who I am sure expect better service from Canada Post.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McDermid): The amendment is in order and is presently before the committee. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, I would also like to indicate that our caucus, the New Democratic Party caucus, will be supporting this amendment. It is one of two amendments of the Opposition Parties to which the Government has agreed. We still do not like the legislation. We still do not believe that the legislation is fair. We will be voting against it. However, we believe it is necessary to improve the legislation and to remove as much of the bias in it as is possible.

At second reading we listed this as one of the three areas with which we have concern in terms of the legislation. We found it remarkable that when the Government, which also wears the hat of management in this particular dispute, likes a conciliation report it directs the mediator-arbitrator to look at that conciliation report. We believe that the wording that the Government originally had was much stronger than, "Look at the conciliation officer's report", but was instead giving a direction to the mediator-arbitrator, a direction as to what he or she should be doing in the next few months.

We pointed out that this happened in this particular legislation but, a month ago, when the House passed back-to-work legislation on the railway workers which was a situation, to put it politely, in which the Government was not in love with the conciliation commissioner's report, it did not include a clause in that legislation saying that the conciliation commissioner's report must be looked at by any arbitrator. Any sense of fairness would say that the Government using its legislative hat cannot pick and choose when arbitrators are going to look at reports of conciliation commissioners. It destroys the whole sense of fairness in collective bargaining. It destroys the whole sense of having conciliation commissioners, conciliation officers, and conciliation boards if one knows that the Government is going to use its legislative power to pick those conciliation reports it likes and include those in legislation in one form or another, and when it does not like a conciliation commissioner's report, to reject it and make sure that it is not looked at by whoever is appointed to be a mediator or an arbitrator.

We suggested at second reading, as well as in numerous meetings with the Minister over the last few days, that he take out that whole subsection referring to the conciliation commissioner's report. We suggested that the Government has for its own reasons expressed an unwillingness to do so. I regret that because I think that in a bitter dispute, and with the history of friction that has existed between the Post Office and its employees, the last thing that is needed is for the House to be perceived as passing legislation which not only orders people back to work but which, because the Government likes a conciliation commissioner's report, includes that as part of the legislation.

The sense of fairness is being violated. People look upon the House of Commons as a final court. They assume that when the Government is using its legislative hat it is not also taking advantage of that hat to cover up the management hat that is underneath. That is what is happening with the legislation and with this particular clause, if it goes unamended.

While we do not believe that the amendment solves all the problems, we do believe that it reduces the degree of reference involved. I hope that when the Minister gets up, as he promised to do earlier, to explain what he believes the interpretation of this clause to be, that he will indicate especially after the amendment will be accepted by the House, that this is an indication to the mediator-arbitrator to look at the conciliation report in the same way he or she can look at the Act setting up Canada Post, or the Canada Labour Code, or all sorts of other precedents, but that the conciliation commissioner's report will not have any primacy. If that is the intent of this amendment, and that is what we understand its intent to be, then we will support it. It does help to remove a very strong sense of bias that is in this legislation. It is very important that this amendment be accepted.

I want to say that the fact that a conciliation commissioner's report is referred to in the legislation when the Government likes it and is not referred to in Government legislation when the Government does not like it does not speak well of the fairness of the Government in general terms. How can one feel safe if one is bargaining in a Crown corporation, whether it be Air Canada, Canadian National, or whether it is any of the other Crown corporations, or even government departments for that matter, if the Government is going to use its legislative power in this way?

In the past the Government has indicated that this reference of the conciliation commissioner's report is not binding on the mediator-arbitrator. If that is so, then why is the Government putting it in the legislation? Why is it necessary? Why has it rejected each and every attempt to take out that whole subclause? If it believes it has no importance, then why refer to it? Why not in a letter appointing this mediator-arbitrator say, "You should also consider and look at the conciliation report because it has been done. It has been paid for and is an available document, just as many other pieces of information are available to you". The very fact that the Government felt it was necessary to include this clause in the legislation makes us nervous that it does have some importance. In checking with some legal people, if it remains unamended, it does have some legal meaning. A mediator-arbitrator may choose to take that as an instruction from the Government and Parliament. It is important that we reduce the meaning of this clause.

I hope in the next few minutes the Minister will rise and indicate that the amendment is acceptable to the Government, and that the meaning of the clause after it is amended will have a very limited scope.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to see the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) tabled a constructive amendment, supported by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). However, before the amendment is put to a vote, I just want to say that I object to the premise on which the amendment is based, namely, that the proposed legislation was not necessary at this time. I would like to quote an editorial by Jean Francoeur, published in Le Devoir on October 15:

Specious Argument

IF IT WERE NOT for the strategy of systematic obstruction used by both Opposition Parties in the House of Commons, postal services would have been back to normal since Monday.

So the Liberals and New Democrats must be held "jointly and severally" responsible for the losses suffered by Canadians as a result of this unduly prolonged labour dispute.

The arguments of the respective spokespersons would appear to be specious, to say the least. There was no rush, they said last Thursday, after tabling back-to-work legislation. The strike was only partial and had not led to any violent incidents.

Today, they say it was Parliament's intervention that lit the fuse.

Their analysis of the situation does not hold water. With all their rhetoric, the Opposition Parties tend to forget that:

—the postal workers agreement expired a year ago and negotiations have since then been deadlocked on major items;

—the Minister of Labour, Mr. Pierre Cadieux, appointed a conciliator this fall, Mr. André Drouin, who after three months had failed to bring the parties any closer together; —at the request of the Minister, a conciliation commissioner, Mr. Claude H. Foisy, tried to re-establish a dialogue, with as much success; five months later he withdrew to draft his report and submit his recommendations;

—once the strike had been called, Mr. Cadieux asked his Associate Deputy-Minister, Mr. Bill Kelly to meet with management and union negotiators to see whether the dispute could be settled without going through an endless war of nerves the answer was negative; —following this alarming report, the Minister sent a serious warning to the parties, urging them to resume negotiations. They did so—for two hours!

Facts had to be faced. The new breakdown of negotiations, reflecting irreconcilable differences, could not be tolerated.

As soon as the Government was convinced the dispute would continue without any hope for a negotiated settlement, and that as a result, the Canada Post Corporation and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers would cause more harm to others then they were doing to each other, the Government could no longer be content to wait until the damage reached alarming proportions.

By refusing to co-operate, the opposition parties have demonstrated they have a very narrow view of their duty to Canadians. Their opportunistic obstinacy will merely postpone the appointment of a mediator-arbitrator who will receive a mandate from Parliament to force the warring parties to control their self-destructive instincts.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to correct a number of inaccuracies for which, first of all, we can thank the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that she can hear from behind the curtains and that she will listen carefully to what I have to say.

First of all, the Hon. Member quoted an editorial as saying that Parliament should have put an end to the postal strike sooner. Mr. Chairman, if she were totally honest with herself, not to mention with the House, she should have added that last week, most of the editorials were also saying the Goverment should have appointed a mediator. I am sure she would want to make that correction.

I don't want to speak any longer than necessary, but I would like to add that I am glad this particular Member is not Minister of Labour. I must say I prefer the present Minister, because at least he realizes that when the Parties in the House have been able to reach an agreement, it is not exactly advisable to start fanning the flames as the Hon. Member just did. Needless to say, if she were on the negotiating team, the process might go on even longer. I say this in the presence of one of the most famous or the most famous negotiator in the country who is with us this evening to listen to this debate.

Mr. Chairman, I see the Minister is pointing to the mediator, Mr. Kelly, to whom I was of course referring. I imagine that he, the Minister and everyone else will agree that the strategy of the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) who just tried to fan the flames when a consensus seemed to be developing in the House, that strategy reflects a political naiveté that is rare in most Hon. Members, though abundant in the case of this particular Member.

[English]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McDermid): Before I recognize the Hon. Member, I wish to remind the committee that we are discussing in Clause 7 an amendment to Clause 7(2)(b).

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words in support of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) and his amendment, and remind the House of the reasons for this strike and why we are here.

The main reason for this strike is, in fact, mentioned in the Foisy Report. Agreement had been reached on most clauses, but job security, which is directly related to the privatization of the Canada Post Corporation, is the reason why today, the Corporation is proceeding bit by bit.

The conciliation commissioner's report looks favourably on privatization, and we find it surprising that the Government included in the Bill a clause asking the mediator-arbitrator to give due cognizance to this report. It is clear that both the report and, as we know, the Government look favourably on privatization.

If we want to be objective, and if the only purpose of this Parliament is to see to it that postal workers go back to work to provide a service to the Canadian people and that the mediator-arbitrator is given a wide ranging and specific mandate to reach an agreement that is acceptable to both parties, one that brings justice and peace, we will not include this kind of clause in the Bill.

Mr. Chairman, I may also remind the House that in 1981, when the Canada Post Corporation was established, the purpose was to have an independent Crown corporation that would be able to operate properly and especially to settle disputes with employees. One of its three mandates was to establish better labour relations. Mr. Chairman, we have had good labour relations, a healthy drop in the deficit and improved services until 1986, from 1981 to 1986. And ever since the Government decided to privatize and started interfering in the affairs of the Canada Post Corporation, that is when we started having problems with labour relations, and we have now had two strikes in three months, after five years without any strikes at all.

I think, therefore, that my colleague the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques was right to ask for the removal of the whole clause in order for the mediator-arbitrator to understand our objections. At least, we should remove the word "due". The mediator should not start as a basis from the conciliation commissioner's report which finds in favor of privatization, which suits both the Canada Post Corporation and the Government.

• (1900)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to make some comments regarding this important amendment. I should like to preface my remarks, having listened to the Hon. Member for Gatineau, by saying that probably she should be reminded that Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services, is actually the initiative which caused the postal strike in a technical way.

There was no strike until the legislation was introduced. There were revolving interruptions, but the mail was getting through. As a matter of fact, most organizations said that they were not being inconvenienced at all. I know that in telephone calls to my constituents asking them about their mail flow they indicated that they had not noticed any particular disruption. However, the minute the legislation was introduced, a strike occurred. I think it was the first time in Canadian history that the Government's initiative caused a strike rather than ended one.

I speak in support of the amendment to remove the word "due". I have a great deal of faith in the Minister of Labour. Having heard the arguments and having thought about the word, I think he would find that it would be in everyone's interest to unshackle or free the arbitrator, to give the arbitrator an opportunity to recognize the contents of the Foisy report and the ability to determine what might be the most appropriate solution in the end. I suspect that it is just one example of some rather hasty drafting of legislation. It is often found that "due cognizance" is appropriate wording. I think we all recognize that we would not want to ask Ben Johnson to carry out a race with shackles on, and we would not want an arbitrator to come down with a decision having been equally shackled in terms of his ability to move.

I join with many other Members, and I trust the Minister of Labour, in supporting the proposal. I think it is a reasoned and thoughtful one. I think it will actually improve the legislation. For that reason I hope it receives the full support of the House of Commons.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I rise, as did my colleague, in support of the amendment to Clause 7 which would delete the word "due" from the following sentence: "give due cognizance to the report of the conciliation commissioner".

In an attempt to understand the import of these words, I turned to a dictionary. For once the dictionary—and in this case it was Oxford—was not of much help, except when it came to defining the word "due". It indicated that the word could mean a debt or an obligation. It is clear that those of us on this side of the House have taken the word "due" in this case to mean an obligation on behalf of the mediator to take cognizance of the Foisy report.

Earlier in the debate we heard that there was an imbalance in the words as between the English version and the French version. This is important because by having the word "due" in this piece of legislation, the Government is seeking to put more weight on the Foisy report or on a particular set of policy recommendations. The French version simply says the following.

—prendre sérieusement connaissance du rapport du commissaire-conciliateur—

[English]

I am not an expert in French or an expert translator, so I cannot weigh the differences between the two languages. However, lawyers have looked at the word and have concluded that the English version gives a lot more weight to the instructions to the mediator-arbitrator to look at the conciliation report.

We really question the value of doing that. We also question the fairness of placing a great deal of weight upon the Foisy report. I suppose the real question would concern why we do that.

It is because the Foisy report, at least as it has been read by most commentators, starts from the assumption of accepting the Government's plan for the Post Office, the Government's plan for franchising local neighbourhood post offices. Since that is one of the key issues on the table, the Foisy report starts with a bias on one side of the table, on the management side of the table. This bias really says that if there is to be a negotiated settlement, it must start by accepting the Government's plans for the Post Office.

What would be wrong with that? The difficulty is that even the conciliator recognized that the Government's plans for franchising put at risk job security, the employment security of the people who work at the Post Office. Therefore, job security is a key issue in the dispute. If the Government's plan for franchising really raises serious questions about job security, then to be giving instructions to the mediator-arbitrator to accept the Government's plans for the Post Office is to be giving an unfair balance to the situation. It ties the hands of the mediator-arbitrator so that the person cannot consider all possibilities with an open mind.

The legislation should not give undue weight to the Government's plan for privatization. These plans have been one of the major obstacles to getting a negotiated settlement at the Post Office. Also, the plans did not come about as a result of negotiations with the union or the people who work at the Post Office. They were not consulted in terms of the drafting of the plans. In the final analysis, the public was not consulted in the drafting of those plans.

In the adoption of the objective of franchising neighbourhood post offices, turning over neighbourhood post offices to local Shoppers Drug Marts, those plans were devised behind closed doors. There was no opportunity for the public to become involved in any debate about the Post Office—why we have a Post Office, what kind of service objectives we have for the Post Office, how we want to pay for the service we receive from the Post Office, how the Post Office shall be structured, whether the Post Office is a public service or some sort of neo-Conservative, private, profit-making enterprise, or whether it is a way to have one more business in the community.

The opposition Parties feel that the actions of the Government in terms of the postal dispute have been biased. They have not been even-handed in terms of standing between management and labour. The Government has really taken sides. The Government is sending messages to the management at the Post Office that it does not have to negotiate with the workers, it just has to sit tight. Legislation will be passed putting in place the kind of contract wanted, so there is no need to bother about negotiating with the workers.

Clause 7 bears this out by giving undue weight to the Foisy report. This is not the only way the Government has found out how to give a message to the management at the Post Office that it really does not have to negotiate with the employees.

Ever since the postal disruption started, the Government has threatened back-to-work legislation. The problem with making that threat once the strike started, and making it on a constant basis, was that management at the Post Office knew that as long as the Government was prepared to bring in back-to-work legislation, it would put in place the kind of contract which management at the Post Office wanted. There has always been this one-sided approach to the dispute.

While we would have preferred that the Government had gone the route of mediation rather than that of back-to-work legislation, we think that it would be an improvement to the legislation if the Government would withdraw the word "due" from "give due cognizance to the report of the conciliation commissioner". This would free up the hands of the mediator arbitrator to be a little more objective in approaching the issues on the table between management and the union. It will perhaps put less weight on the conciliator's report.

While this report seems to start out from the premise of accepting the Government's plans for the Post Office, accepting in principle the fact that the Government and the management at the Post Office should proceed with privatizing post offices—one of the matters of dispute—it also pointed out that Foisy, the conciliator, had to do a lot of speculating on his own. When he met with the union and the management at the Post Office they were at loggerheads over principle questions, such as whether there should be franchising out or not. Because it is the Government's policy to bring in franchising and because the union quite legitimately feels that this is a threat to job security, the conciliator was not able to get beyond broad questions of principle into the details of what a collective agreement would look like. He did not have the opportunity to sit down with both sides and ask what this kind of a clause would mean to them if it were in a collective agreement or if wording was this way or that. He did not have a chance to look at the wording or to study things closely because the impasse was at the question of principle.

We feel it is a mistake for this legislation to give too much weight to the conciliator's report because it really gives direction to the arbitrator to put in place a kind of collective agreement which the management at the Post Office wants and which the Government appears to want. What is in the legislation is in line with the Government's plans for the Post Office and it is the Government's plans for the Post Office which are a matter of dispute.

Another thing about the Foisy report was the statement that the conflict at the Post Office would be a conflict between the Titans, that the battle would go on for a long period of time and that it would be a win-lose situation in which one of the Titans would win and the other would lose. That was the only way the conflict at the Post Office could be resolved. But ironically that is not what happened. The postal workers then went on a rotating strike. People continued to receive their mail so the public was not greatly inconvenienced. It was only when the Government moved to introduce this back-to-work legislation that they went to a full scale national postal strike. This legislation caused the violent scenes that we see on television every night. This legislation caused the out and out conflict on the streets between the Titans predicted in the Foisy Report.

To sum up, I want to say that this is a good amendment. It reduces the amount of weight placed on the conciliator's report. It should give the mediator-arbitrator more of a free hand in evaluating what kind of a solution can be arrived at in place of a negotiated settlement. It will give him more room in mediating the situation.

By removing the word "due" from this clause, we hope that less weight will be placed on the conciliator's report, that there will not be a clear message for the mediator-arbitrator to follow government policy and be flexible. We hope the person who takes on this job will be given more elbow room and that he or she can take into consideration the concerns of job security which the workers will bring to the table even when those concerns come in conflict with the Government's policy of franchising. That is why we support this recommendation to remove the word "due". We consider it to be a positive step.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the Minister or his officials. When I read the clause I was rather concerned because we seem to be giving some clear direction to the mediator rather than allowing the mediator to look into these matters freely. I am quite sure that any mediator worth his or her salt would take a look at anything that surrounded the previous negotiations and take any documentation or any of the proceedings that have gone on in these negotiations into account when trying to bring about a settlement.

I see the Minister nodding in agreement with what I have just said. Given that, what is the reason for including it in this piece of legislation? If we take it as a given, the mediator in all likelihood would do that anyway, so why is it necessary to instruct the mediator?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take too much of the House's time trying to answer all the points that have been made. I believe most of them have been addressed and answered by the various speeches that were made at second reading stage. Nevertheless, there are a few points on which I wish to touch. Obviously I will deal with the amendment and the question raised by the Hon. Member who just spoke. Before I do that, although I hate to quote myself, with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to quote a short part of the speech I made at second reading:

> Following release of the conciliation commissioner's report, the parties had before them a reasoned and reasonable document which should have served as a basis for negotiations towards settlement.
> Instead, the negotiations deteriorated. Consequently, on September 29, I asked my Associate Deputy Minister, Bill Kelly, to meet with the parties to assess what progress had been made since the release of Commissioner Foisy's report, how far the parties were apart, their willingness to compromise, and whether in his view this dispute could be resolved through the collective bargaining process short of a protracted strike with all its inherent dangers.

Postal Services Continuation

Mr. Kelly advised me that the parties had made no progress on the major issues in this dispute since the release of the conciliation commissioner's report on September 22, 1987. He also provided me with his judgment, resulting from private discussions with both sides, that this dispute could not be resolved through the collective bargaining process short of a lengthy test of economic strength.

I do not want to deal with the interpretation of words except perhaps for the interpretation of the phrase "due cognizance", but contrary to what some Hon. Members have indicated, it was clear that there was a strike at that time. Because of the steps that had been taken since the beginning of negotiations 15 months ago and the help received through conciliation and commissioner's reports, and following the assessment of my Associate Deputy Minister, it was clear that the Government had to intervene. We did and the legislation was tabled.

Whether or not they agree with this, of course, is their privilege, but I would like to remind my hon. colleagues that if we had passed this legislation through all stages last week perhaps what they call the strike would not have occurred. This being said, I would now like to address the specific amendment.

Clause 7(2)(b) reads as follows:

(b) If the mediator-arbitrator is unable to bring about agreement in respect of any such matter, hear the employer and the union on the matter, give due cognizance to the report of the conciliation commissioner that was released to them on September 22, 1987, arbitrate the matter and render a decision in respect thereof;

The French version reads:—

"if the mediator-arbitrator is unable to bring about agreement in respect of any such matter, hear the employer and the union on the matter, give due cognizance to the report of the conciliation commissioner that was released to them on September 22, 1987, arbitrate the matter and render a decision in respect thereof."

There are two points I should like to address, Mr. Speaker. First is the reference to the conciliation commissioner's report. One could argue for a long time over that, but I should like to emphasize that when the report was made public, it was commented upon by both parties and Mr. Parrot was reported to have said:

[English]

—"Commissioner Foisy made some recommendations that reflect our demands, some recommendations that reflect the employer's, others that go half-way for both and others which are not addressed. This report therefore sets the stage for serious negotiations but does not necessarily provide the basis for an agreement". It sets the basis for serious negotiations, pronounces on certain demands that are pro-management and pro-union, others that go half-way and others upon which he did not pronounce. We thought it important in the particular circumstances of this dispute to make the reference.

The reference being made, they are to give due cognizance, as the clause reads in English. In French—

"—prendre sérieusement connaissance—".

In French.

[English]

I know that some of my colleagues here in the House have been and may still be lawyers, and I am sure they would agree with me that one can draw different interpretations from a given text of law. I must admit that I have often pleaded on various interpretations in the past. I indicated to the Hon. Member for Churchill that I would tell him my interpretation of what I believe the text will mean once the amendment is voted upon, such amendment with which I am in agreement, just to take away a little bit of the stress.

There are various ways of determining what something means. My colleague from Winnipeg Centre referred to a dictionary. I do not know to which dictionary he referred. Usually when I want to interpret legal words, and this is just a suggestion for the future, I go to Black's Legal Dictionary. I believe that that is a well-known reference book.

Notwithstanding what can be found in various dictionaries, my interpretation of "give due cognizance" or—

—prendre sérieusement en considération—

[English]

—in the context of Clause 7(2)(b), is that it says exactly what it means. That is that he will take it into consideration since the report cannot make representations as the parties themselves can.

My hon. friends have suggested that the words may be ambiguous. I am prepared to accept that argument, notwithstanding the fact that my interpretation does not necessarily change. The mediator-arbitrator is not bound by the report. He takes cognizance or, in French—

entendre l'employeur, le syndicat et prendre sérieusement en considération—

[English]

He takes cognizance of the report and draws his own conclusions. As the clause indicates, he can arbitrate the matter after he has looked into the report and heard the parties. Consequently, I do not object to the amendment, but I welcome it. We did have discussions on the amendment in question and we will support that particular amendment.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that there is some agreement among the three political Parties, but I would like to comment very briefly on this particular clause. First, we are dealing with a mediator-arbitrator. In effect, this individual who is appointed by the Government of Canada will be wearing two hats. As I understand it, his first responsibility will be to try to mediate, to try to bring the parties together. If he is not able to do that, as I understand it, he has to get rid of his mediator hat and put on his arbitrator hat.

Mediators are kind of on both sides. They mediate and do not take sides. They do not have that much power. Once they put on the other hat that says arbitrator, all of a sudden they acquire some jurisdiction. Under this piece of legislation entitled "An Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services" this mediator-arbitrator will have the legal authority to impose an agreement.

It seems to me that the Government is going to choose someone who is experienced in mediating and arbitrating. I cannot understand why we need Clause 7(2)(b) at all. It seems to me that that portion of the legislation is trying to tell the experienced mediator-arbitrator what to do. Presumably you will appoint someone who has some experience in the field and you are telling him in Clause 7(2)(a) to "endeavour to mediate all the matters referred to" et cetera. You are directing him to try to come to some type of an agreement.

The legislation goes on in Clause 7(2)(b) to say: "if the mediator-arbitrator is unable to bring about agreement in respect of any such matter" he is supposed to listen to the employer. It seems to me that it is obvious that if he takes off his mediator hat and puts on his arbitrator hat he will have to hear the employer. You do not have to tell him what to do. He is an experienced fellow and will know what to do.

It goes on to say that he must hear the union. That is obvious. He will listen to both sides. The principles of natural justice require that he listen to both sides. Then the legislation tells him to "give due cognizance to the report". One does not need a legal dictionary to know what it means to "give due cognizance to the report". You are telling the mediator-arbitrator, who has some experience in collective bargaining, to look at a report. Why does he have to be told to look at the report?

Mr. Boudria: Because it is favourable to them.

Mr. Nunziata: My colleague, the Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, tells me that there is a hidden motive, that there is a method to the madness of the Government.

The mediator-arbitrator will wonder what the Government means. He will know that the Government does not think he is so naive and incompetent as to not look at the report before making a decision and will therefore know that it is telling him to do something and wants him to decide in a certain way.

Although there is agreement on all three sides of the House, it seems to me that there is no need at all for this clause because it assumes that the mediator-arbitrator does not know what he or she is doing. If the Government is not in fact trying to tell the mediator-arbitrator what to do, why is this clause needed to tell him or her to listen to the union on management and to look at the report? Surely the mediator-arbitrator knows enough to do that.

Why does the Minister not stand up and admit that he is basically telling the mediator-arbitrator to do things which would favour management? In effect, through this particular clause the Government is trying to influence the decision of someone who is supposed to be objective, who is not supposed to be influenced in any way, who is supposed to look at all the facts and come to a conclusion based on those facts.

It seems to me that the Government has a hidden agenda. Why does it not stand up and own up to the fact that this clause and others are meant to dictate to the mediator-arbitrator what the Government wants in the collective bargaining agreement?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I have already made my point and support the amendment, notwithstanding the temptation that the Hon. Member is giving me not to support it.

[Translation]

The Chairman: Then, we have the amendment moved by Mr. Guilbault:

That Bill C-86 be amended in Clause 7(2)(b) by striking out the word "due" from the first line on page 4 of the Bill.

[English]

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the Committee to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)) agreed to.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-86 be amended in Clause 7 by striking out lines 24 to 46 at page 3 and lines 1 to 28 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"MEDIATOR

7.(1) The Minister shall, after the coming into force of this Act, appoint a mediator and refer to the mediator all matters relating to the amendment or revision of the collective agreement that, at the time of the appointment, remain in dispute between the union and the employer, including the issue of franchising.

(2) The mediator shall, within sixty days after the mediator's appointment or such longer period as the Minister may allow,

(a) endeavour to mediate all the matters referred to in subsection (1) and to bring about agreement between the union and the employer on those matters; and

(b) report to the Minister on the resolution of all such matters.

(3) The mediator has, with such modifications as the circumstances require, for the purposes of the mediation referred to in paragraph 2(a), all the powers of a conciliation commissioner under Section 175 of the Canada Labour Code."

Mr. Chairman, as a preface I would like to say that I was a little taken aback by the Minister's threat to withdraw his support for the amendment that we have just passed. I did not dare get up on my feet at that moment to react. If I had said anything at that moment, if I had pointed out that the Minister was being a little touchy, a little thin-skinned, we might have lost that amendment.

Mr. Nunziata: You showed restraint.

Mr. Keeper: I restrained myself. I resisted the temptation to get up and speak the truth to the Minister to his face because I was afraid that he might carry out his threat and withdraw his support for the amendment.

I point that out because that has characterized these negotiations. The Government is thin-skinned. If you rock its boat it will get even with you. That has been bothering people with regard to the Government and the way it has been handling the negotiations at the Post Office. That is why we moved this amendment which is a comprehensive amendment dealing with the issue of the mediator.

Through this amendment we are seeking to amend Clause 7 entitled: "Mediator-Arbitrator". We want to make the distinction between a mediator and an arbitrator. Once you move to the concept of a mediator-arbitrator, a two-headed monster with two purposes, mediation and arbitration, you have in effect done away with the role of mediator.

A mediator is supposed to be impartial. He is supposed to be able to sit down with both sides at the table to hear the concerns, assist with the communication, and help the parties come to a negotiated agreement. The mediator has no big club. He does not have a guillotine to hang over the heads of the parties at the table. He does not have the power of law to force an agreement. The mediator's role is to bring about an agreed upon resolution between the parties, not to bang heads together and force a settlement or tell the parties what they must do.

We want to preserve the integrity of the concept of a mediator rather than reducing it to the concept of mediator-arbitrator because the arbitrator's role is different. The arbitrator's role is to be like a judge, to hear both sides of the story and then make a decision or a judgment. The arbitrator has decision-making powers.

It is important to make a distinction between the role of the mediator and the arbitrator. I hesitate to rise and speak on this matter tonight because we have in our presence one of the most distinguished mediators in our country, Mr. Bill Kelly. He made a distinguished contribution to the last dispute at the Post Office and helped to bring the parties to a negotiated settlement. He demonstrated the value of the function of a mediator.

I hesitate to even rise and speak on a matter involving labour management relations with such a distinguished gentleman with us tonight.

In any event, it is essential that we make the point that the integrity of the concept of a mediator be respected, particularly in this case. The Government failed to make use of its option of having a mediator in this dispute. While we see the word mediator in this legislation, it is linked to the arbitrator role. Therefore, the person who is supposed to be an objective conciliator is tied to the person who makes the decision and thereby destroys the role of the mediator.

The Government created a very difficult situation by setting up a pattern of confrontation with the union at the Post Office. First, it dismissed the previous Minister responsible for the Post Office who was a rather gentlemanly person and at least gave an appearance of reasonableness. It replaced that reasonable Minister with the pit bull terrier of the front benches of the Conservative Party, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. If that is not a signal of confrontation, I do not know what is.

The Government is sending these signals with everything it does. Its first message was: "We want to fight. We want confrontation. We want to pound you into the ground". That was its message: "We will not listen to what you have to say."

We must remind the Government of the integrity of the concept of the mediator. It must explain why it bypassed its opportunity to use a mediator. We hope the Minister takes the opportunity to explain in a comprehensive way why in this legislation he is abusing the notion of a mediator and why the Government failed to use its option of appointing a mediator.

Did the Minister of Labour decide himself that he did not want to use a mediator, or were his hands tied by his Cabinet colleagues, or was it the right-wing Conservative back-benchers who handcuffed him so that he could not use all the options available to him?

It is important to respect the concept of mediation. That is why we have moved our amendment with regard to substituting the present wording of mediator-arbitrator with the concept of the mediator.

Mr. Crosbie: You are against anything that is a change.

Mr. Keeper: I hear a faint echo.

Mr. Crosbie: You are not used to a sounding vessel.

Mr. Keeper: Now I hear a tinkling cymbal.

The Government is following a policy of confrontation because it wants to garner some public support and show that it is strong. The Government followed that policy of confrontation and provoked a strike at the Post Office. However, now that it can see that there is not much prospect for a settlement, rather than taking the opportunity to send in a mediator as was called for by the opposition Parties, the Government took other steps which gave a bad taste to the whole situation. It prolonged the policy of confrontation and added to the public impression that the Government was interested in confrontation rather than a settlement.

First, the Government sent in the gentleman who is here with us this evening as a fact-finder and evaluator of the situation, to determine whether a settlement was possible, rather than giving him the authority to act as a mediator. Furthermore, they sent him in on the eve of the strike, which immediately raised many suspicions. In light of a situation in which the parties were already polarized, it was not surprising that he would say a settlement was not likely under the circumstances. The Government was then free to use that as an excuse to introduce back-to-work legislation, rather than use all the options available to it.

The Government has been pursuing a policy of confrontation. That is why a mediator was never used. That is why we are dealing with this legislation.

The Government has a firm policy for the Post Office. It wants to franchise all the neighbourhood post offices and turn them over to the local Shoppers Drug Marts. Naturally, post office workers are saying that if it turns these jobs over to the private sector they will not only lose them, the pay will be cut in half. People will have to work at the minimum wage.

This policy was obviously designed for confrontation and has been a key factor in having a strike. That is why our amendment attempts to reinstate the concept of the mediator. That is why we include the phrase: "including the issue of franchising". We want the mediator to look at all the matters relating to the revision of the collective agreement that remain in dispute between the union and the employer, including the issue of franchising, at the time of the appointment. We do not want the mediator's hands to be tied as they are under the Government's legislation.

This legislation refers to the Foisy report which, of course, accepts the Government's policy of franchising. Therefore, it instructs the mediator-arbitrator to begin with the assumption of accepting the Government's policy of franchising. We want some flexibility so that an agreement can be drafted that will protect job security in spite of the Government having its policy of franchising.

• (1950)

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, I want to deal with the two items contained within the amendment moved by my colleague. I want to thank the Minister of Labour for referring me to Black's Law Dictionary, with pronunciations, Fifth Edition, because there are interesting descriptions under "franchise". I would like to read some of these descriptions into the record because I think they will help all of us to understand what Canada Post intends with regard to its operations and perhaps what it may mean to the workers, as well as to the public.

> Franchise.
> A special privilege conferred by government on individual or corporation, and which does not belong to citizens of country generally of common right. In England it is defined to be a royal privilege in the hands of a subject.
> A privilege granted or sold, such as to use a name or to sell products or services. The right given by a manufacturer or supplier to a retailer to use his products and name on terms and conditions mutually agreed upon.
> In its simplest terms, a franchise is a license from owner of a trademark or trade name permitting another to sell a product or service under that name or mark.
> More broadly stated, a "franchise" has evolved into an elaborate agreement under which the franchisee undertakes to conduct a business or sell a product or service in accordance with methods and procedures prescribed by the franchisor, and the franchisor undertakes to assist the franchisee through advertising, promotion and other advisory services.

Under the subheading of "General and Special":

> The charter of a corporation is its "general" franchise, while a "special" franchise consists in any rights granted by the public to use property for a public use but with private profit.

I think there we have the nub. Any rights granted by the public, therefore by the Parliament of Canada through a Crown corporation, to use property for a public use but with private profit property. This Government's solution to Canada Post is to turn over as much of its operation as it feels it can get away with to the private sector, so that its private sector friends can make some money, some profit, so they can pay wages one would find paid in a fast-food outlet or in a corner store. These wages would only provide for part-time employment, not for full-time jobs which are necessary to sustain one's family. These would be jobs held by students, part-time jobs held by women, instead of full-time jobs which are now held by women in Canada Post. That is why we want to provide some additional direction to the mediator to ensure that Canada Post will finally negotiate with the Canadian Union of Postal Workers the issue of franchising.

The Foisy report makes specific reference to it. Canada Post rejected union attempts to negotiate. In fact, I was quite amazed by the offer CUPW made during the course of the negotiations going from a position I perceived as one where it was saying no franchise operations at all, to where it was saying perhaps, yes, there are areas of the country where a franchise operation would make sense in order to provide a service where one does not exist today. Canada Post said no, and the reason is because that is not how it wants to work it. Canada Post is not looking to provide additional service. It is looking at replacing existing services which are provided through full-time permanent employees of the Canada Post Corporation. Canada Post wants to shut down postal outlets and post offices in favour of a little nook or cranny in the back of a drug store somewhere.

As I indicated earlier in the House, Canada Post wants to store parcels and registered mail in the livingrooms behind the confectionery stores. That is the kind of system Canada Post is looking for. Because the corporate plan, the business plan, had to be approved by Cabinet, it is therefore the decision of the Government of the day to take this approach. It has taken this approach instead of finding methods that would ensure an increase in the volume of mail being handled by the Post Office, methods to increase the levels of service to ensure that one did not have to wait for 10, 15 or 30 minutes in a line-up at a post office, so that one could get in and out, get the stamps, get the services, get one's parcels at the post office, get the service the Post Office is required to provide.

The Post Office could have looked at increasing the areas of revenue. It is well behind in terms of electronic mail service. It can do as other countries and move into banking services. We have been opening up the financial institutions to non-banking groups. Why not open them up to Canada Post? Why cave in to the demands of the business community. Canada Post started a mail-order catalogue business with Consumers Distributing to provide yet another source of income and another service, but the Government has its own blind idea as to what the Post Office should be like. It has a blind idea of a world without unions, a world where people are paid pennies. But we will continue to fight against that, whether it is in legislation like this, in our ridings or elsewhere.

It will not take much convincing to convince the people of Canada that the Government is going in the wrong direction when it comes to Canada Post. I would ask that the Government accept this amendment because it does two things. It separates the mediator from the arbitrator, and my colleague has very aptly explained the rationale behind that. Second, it forces the issue of franchising into the mediation process very clearly up front as an item that the mediator must address with the two parties.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a short comment about this amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) from the New Democratic Party. To put it briefly, this amendment would have the effect to replace the mediator-arbitrator by a mediator, who would act in this capacity only. So, I have no difficulty with this proposal as I asked the Minister to appoint a mediator, before the beginning of the strike, about 12 days ago. However, for reasons of his own that he has been trying to explain a few times, the Minister chose not to appoint a mediator. The Minister decided to propose this Draconian bill instead.

[English]

So in a way this amendment, which says let us do away with the two-hat personality that my friend, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston was referring to earlier, would take us back to a mediator only, which is what I called for days ago. I am still of the opinion that, if a mediator had been appointed, we might have avoided a strike. Or, at least, we might have avoided the tabling of this repressive legislation.

• (2000)

I realize that if this amendment were passed one would either have to agree to scratch the whole Bill or one would have to agree to make a number of very important consequential amendments to other clauses. Symbolically, I have to say that I cannot disagree with the proposition that says, "Let us throw the billy club out of the window, let us do it through bargaining with a mediator". It may be too late to do that at this stage but, symbolically, I think it would be difficult for me to support the idea that I could disapprove of this amendment.

Therefore I would like to commend my colleague for having brought it forward to the floor of the House of Commons which has allowed us to speak to this particular point, which I believe is very important.

[Translation]

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I thank my honourable colleague for his comments. I only want to clarify a few points. Our amendment to Section 7 is very important because its purpose is to make the point that the government forgot to use a mediator in that dispute. A mediator succeeded in solving the last postal dispute with letter carriers. Then, why not use one in this strike? We want to point out that the government forgot this important step, that he had other options and alternatives to that back-to-work legislation. We also wish to point out that the appointment of a mediator-arbitrator is not a valid proposal as it combines two different roles which should be filled by two different people. The role of the mediator is to facilitate communication between the parties in dispute while the task of the arbitrator is to listen to the parties and make a decision afterwards. Our intent is to underline that the combination of those two roles is objectionable because the role of the mediator is undermined. We prefer to put the emphasis on the mediator because his role is to solve the dispute on a voluntary basis. We want the government to realize that it is better to help the parties to come to a settlement on a voluntary basis rather than forcing them to reach a new agreement.

[English]

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak to the amendment to Clause 7. I think it is very important that the role of mediator in this dispute be separated from that of arbitrator. We know that during the early part of the rotating strike, which only became full-fledged after the Government brought in this legislation, there was a call for a mediator by CUPW. The Government refused to appoint a mediator. Now, it has finally agreed to the request to appoint a mediator. But it will not appoint a mediator to play the role of mediation in this dispute but, rather, forces the mediator to try to reach an agreement, always with the hammer in the other hand to say, "If you do not reach an agreement, then it will be me who will enforce a decision on the parties".

For people who are involved in mediation, the role of mediator is to go to each side, to know things about each side that he does not disclose to the other, to attempt to reach some kind of compromise. He knows where the weaknesses are in the position and goes from one side to the other, finds out if there is a basis for compromise, looks back and forth. There has to be a trust there that this mediator will play that role and not use what is told to him in a way that is contrary to the mediation process. It is a well-defined and well-recognized labour relations technique. It is a very special technique.

The role of the arbitrator, on the other hand, is quite different. The arbitrator has to be a judge. He has to make a decision based on the facts before him without trying to second-guess one party or second-guess the other. To combine those roles into one is avoiding the proper method of dealing with labour relations disputes.

If the Government had appointed a mediator in this dispute before, even if the Government saw fit to go to legislation, we may have had a very different type of legislation. That kind of legislation would be very much like the amendments that are proposed, particularly to this clause. It would have been made clear to a mediator that what was holding up the dispute was the fact that the management of the Post Office was refusing to negotiate on the issue of franchising. That is the very issue which is causing concern about job security. The approach that the management of the Post Office has taken is very much like technological change. Technological change is an aspect of management. In an operation such as the Post Office, it is something that affects the working conditions, the career paths, the working lives of the individuals. It is therefore a very valid subject of negotiation.

When the management of the Post Office refused to deal with the issue of franchising, what it did was to refuse to bargain on the very issue which was at the nub of the dispute. To put a mediator-arbitrator into this situation without any directions as to what issues ought to be the subject of bargaining is to turn a blind eye to the real issue of the dispute. If the Government is not prepared to accept an amendment to this clause it seems that it is very clear that the Government is doing what we have been suggesting, that is, playing the role of an aid to management to force an agreement down the throats of the workers by bringing forward this legislation.

This motion to amend Clause 7 includes the issue of franchising. It appears that there must be direction given to the management of the Post Office to sit down to discuss this issue, not just have the mediator-arbitrator look at the Foisy report, which report gives a certain type of direction but which ignores the fact that the franchising arrangement can be the subject of negotiations. In fact, it has been offered by CUPW. The negotiators have suggested that they are prepared to discuss franchising, and prepared to reach compromises on it. That is the very essence of labour relations and collective bargaining, even in a strike situation, that there is give and take which is required, and that give and take must be on all issues in dispute.

In this situation, there must be a direction to the parties, and particularly to the management of the Post Office to discuss the issue of franchising. Once that step has been taken, a mediator and a direction for Canada Post management to discuss franchising, then we will see if the parties can actually reach an agreement once the Government has stated as a matter of policy that Canada Post's management must discuss franchising with the union as an appropriate collective bargaining item.

If that does not happen, I think that the role of the mediator-arbitrator as proposed by the Government is one which is faulty and will not lead to harmony in the Post Office. In fact, it will lead to a further exacerbation of the unhappy relations between management and the union.

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux: Mr Speaker, again I do not intend to indulge in rhetoric as some of my friends seem to be doing tonight. However, Mr. Speaker—

[English]

I would like to refer to one particular remark which was made by my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre when he referred to my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is also responsible for the Post Office, as being the "pit bull" Minister.

I would like to point out, Mr. Chairman, in the case of that particular appointment where the Prime Minister gave my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the responsibility for the Post Office, obviously the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had the benefit of knowing who the critic for the NDP was.

To be a little more serious, with respect to the amendment and the various comments that have been made around it, I would like to point out that my hon. colleague from Saint-Jacques has referred to his request in the House to appoint a mediator which was refused at the time by myself.

I would like to draw the attention of all Hon. Members to the fact that part of the reasoning and the advice that I received when I was making the decision to appoint or not to appoint a mediator, came from my Associate Deputy Minister. As everybody knows, he is one of the most experienced, if not the most experienced, as was suggested by my hon. colleague from Winnipeg North Centre.

At the time when the possibility existed, we decided and concluded that appointing a mediator would perhaps not be a good decision. But to make sure, I sent my Associate Deputy Minister to meet with the parties and to assess the situation, as I indicated in the quote in my speech on an earlier amendment. The decision and conclusion at the time was that it would not be a good solution to appoint a mediator. Obviously those are judgment calls. I believe that my friend, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques, will agree with that. He may not agree with my decision, but he will agree that it was a judgment call. In my mind, it was very well-founded at the time.

I do agree with my friend, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques, that it would not be appropriate at this point to accept the amendments suggested by my hon. colleagues from the NDP, because we have passed that stage. A solution in this particular dispute at this particular time is the mediation-arbitration concept. Perhaps this is not used as often as the appointment of a mediator on the one hand, or an arbitrator on the other hand, but it is a concept that has been used successfully in the past, particularly in the 1978 legislation with respect to the Post Office, if my memory serves me correctly.

It has also been used in other circumstances where the parties came to an agreement.

I believe in the circumstances, the decision of the Government to refer the matter to a mediator-arbitrator is the correct one, and consequently we will not support that amendment.

Mr. Murphy: As I indicated earlier in the evening, in preparing this amendment we wished to point out the fact that the Government did have other options. At the time that it introduced this legislation, it could have appointed a mediator. This was asked for by the union involved, by myself, and also by others.

I point out again that at the time the legislation was introduced, and at the time people were calling for a mediator, there was no national strike. There were rotational strikes. The Government and the Minister responsible for the Post Office did claim that the mail was getting through. We believed that appointing a mediator could have worked. We believed that a mediator should have been appointed. We still believe that that is the case.

Also, in this amendment there is an instruction to include the issue of franchising at the table. We have to remind the Members of the House sitting in Committee of the Whole, and others, that the Government, through the Minister responsible for Canada Post, time after time has stated that the issue of franchising out is a management right, it is not something to be negotiated. It is a government decision. That is the decision that has caused this strike. We believe that is the problem facing the country at the present time with regard to this dispute.

If the Government believes that it can refer to a conciliation commissioner's report that it considers favourable to the Government, one that is liked by the Minister responsible for Canada Post, certainly in the same legislation we in the Opposition should be able to make the point that the House should also be giving an instruction. The instruction is to discuss with the employees affected the whole issue of franchising out. That should be discussed at the negotiating table. It certainly affects the job security of those people. It is something that affects where they will work in the future; if they will be working for Canada Post, the type of work that they will be doing, and it is something that normally would be discussed at the table.

That does not mean that the employees through their union will get everything that they want, because that probably will not happen. But it does mean that the matter of where franchising will take place, how it will take place, and when it will take place will be discussed. Those are logical things to negotiate at the table.

The people who work at the wickets in Thompson, The Pas, Flin Flon, Winnipeg, Montreal, and right cross the country know that the job they are doing at the present time, which many have done for years, will disappear under the Government's plan. They know that, even if they have worked at that wicket for eight, ten, or a dozen years, although people are still coming to those wickets of their own free choice, because of the government plan that job will disappear. The people know that will happen. Because of that they expect their union, as their representative, to go to management and discuss that item, see how it will be implemented, and where it will be implemented.

It has been management, on the direct orders of the Government, that is refusing to discuss that item. It is important to say in tonight's debate that this is not a strike based upon the union asking for more. Obviously there are other clauses involved in the negotiations, but this is a dispute about where those people will be working in the future. It is ironic that the Government is willing to order these people back to work and, if they do not return to work, they will face heavy fines. However, some two months to four months down the road they could lose their jobs. The Government can order them back to work, but it refuses to order Canada Post to keep those people working. What a contradiction! It thinks it is important for those people to go back to work, but at the same time it is taking that work and giving it to someone else. That is what is happening with this piece of legislation.

As I said at second reading, we are not dealing with technological change for the most part. We are dealing with the Government taking away jobs, quite often from women, jobs which pay decent salaries, the better jobs within the postal system. The Government is saying that they cannot have those jobs any more, that they will be given to sub post offices. The person who takes the new job will probably receive minimum wage, have no pension plan, have no benefits, have no job security.

What kind of affirmative action program is that for a Government? It is not something new. It is something the Government has already done. For example, at one time the people who cleaned major post offices across the country were government employees. Their jobs disappeared. They were laid off. They lost their positions. Then the jobs were contracted out to individuals or companies in the private sector that sometimes hired the same cleaners at minimum wage. It is shameful. It is disgusting.

The Government is saying that it is a management decision, that it is the business plan, and that it must happen. However, it refuses to let Canada Post discuss that with its employees through their representatives in CUPW.

It is not only a matter of having a mediator. It is time for the Government to recognize, through its Crown corporation, that the major issues in dispute must be negotiated and discussed with the people they affect.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I have a brief question for the Minister of Labour. The Minister made some comments about the clause dealing with a mediator-arbitrator, but he did not comment upon the distinction between the role of a mediator and the role of an arbitrator.

I want to ask him about this distinction. The mediator is there as a third party who can gain the trust of the parties to the dispute in order to facilitate communications and to bring about a voluntary settlement. An arbitrator is someone who has decision-making powers. When these roles are put into one, the integrity of the role of the mediator is undermined. I would like the Minister to comment on that. From what he has said so far, I did not get any understanding that he appreciates the difference between the two roles and the points we have been making in that area.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I agree in part with what the Hon. Member for York South—Weston said a little while ago on another amendment, particularly when he mentioned that the people we appoint are very skilled and responsible.

The person who will be appointed as mediator-arbitrator will obviously understand the two hats that he or she will be wearing. I am convinced that the person will do his or her utmost to get the parties back at the table to try to mediate and arrive at a settlement.

If there is one thing upon which we all agree, regardless of politics, it is that the best settlement is a negotiated one. Consequently, the person appointed will do his or her utmost to arrive at that particular settlement without the population of Canada being subjected to a protracted strike or work stoppage during that period of time.

If mediation fails, as, unfortunately, perhaps signs tend to indicate, the person, whoever he or she may be, according to the legislation and the particular articles to which we have been referring, will arbitrate the dispute that exists between the parties at that time.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I would like to deal with the issue of franchising. My comrade from Winnipeg—North Centre who spoke on this matter concerned himself with franchising and said that the management of the Post Office was taking the position that it was a management right.

Would the Minister tell us whether he sees a difference between franchising out, contracting out, and other management rights? Does he see franchising out or franchising as a management right that is not a proper subject for collective bargaining? If so, he would be agreeing with the management of the Post Office in that regard and he would be taking a very archaic view of management rights.

In many collective agreements across the country there are clauses defining the work of the bargaining unit and clauses on management rights. At one time management had the right to do everything, until these rights had been negotiated through collective bargaining. Now they must promote on the basis of merit, not on the basis of favouritism or of promoting one's relatives, and they must give people the opportunity to apply for jobs. Perhaps all these things at one time were management rights, but now they are not.

There is no magic in the word "franchising". Contracting out is the subject of many collective agreements. It must be negotiated or agreed upon, as is the case with technological change and many other factors in collective bargaining.

Would the Minister tell us whether he sees the franchising issue as a sole right of management, the union having no right to discuss it, or is it a proper item for collective bargaining?

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have already quoted a clause that was criticized earlier, namely: That the mediator-arbitrator was to hear the employer and the union and give cognizance to the Foisy report.

I think that the mediator-arbitrator will indeed hear both parties. I suppose that the parties, particularly the one that is represented by my hon. colleague, will give their views to the mediator-arbitrator who will take them into consideration, together with the position of the employer and the recommendations of commissioner Foisy who renders a decision in part on the issue referred to by my hon. colleague. And I believe that the mediator-arbitrator, the employer and the union will properly settle the matter.

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, I am still having some difficulty with the concept known as mediator-arbitrator. I am certain Canadians who are watching tonight are wondering what in fact we are talking about. The labour experts will understand the difference between a conciliator, an arbitrator and a mediator. They all have certain functions, powers and responsibilities. I suppose at some point in time we learned in school about the differences. Now a new monster has been created. The Minister indicated in a different dispute that a mediator-arbitrator entity had been created.

• (2030)

Mr. Keeper: Under a Liberal Government was it?

Mr. Nunziata: When you get to the point where you have to resort to back-to-work legislation, you are beyond the point of mediating, you are at the point where the two parties, management and labour, are so far apart that you need an arbitrator, a judge, to say, "This is the decision. This is the collective bargaining agreement". Obviously if during the arbitration process the parties decide to agree on their own without risking what an arbitrator might decide, that is all in the best interests of everyone involved because the parties, in effect, have negotiated a settlement.

I have some difficulty in entrenching this mediation-arbitration concept in this legislation. Let us not try to kid anyone. This Bill is called an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services. That is all fine and dandy. We know what this legislation is all about. It is back-to-work legislation. It is forcing people to go back to work. It is forcing the postal workers to work, and if they do not, they are subject, as Clause 10 says, to some pretty heavy financial penalties. Then there are some additional penalties with regard to suspension from union activity if they contravene a certain section of the Act. We will have more to say when we get to Clause 11.

We do not understand why this concept of mediator arbitrator is necessary. The Minister himself admitted that at one point it was not possible, feasible—he called it a judgment call—or appropriate to appoint a mediator. That was after the strike. The Minister is shaking his head. Sometime, somewhere a decision was made by him and his officials that a mediator was not appropriate, even though we in the Liberal Party suggested that a mediator ought to have been appointed because a mediator might have been able to succeed in bringing the parties together at some point prior to the escalation of the violence in the conflict. Now we are at a point where there is basically a gun to the collective heads of the union. The Minister is a party to this threat of pointing a gun at the heads of the union saying "You are going back to work. If you don't go back to work, you have double trouble. Not only will we fine you $10,000 or $50,000 a day but we will make sure that you do not participate in union activity for up to five years."

The mediator-arbitrator, this experienced, skilled person who will be appointed under this legislation, will be aware of exactly what has transpired to date. He will be fully aware of what is in the legislation. Does the Minister really believe that simply by calling this person a mediator-arbitrator somehow he or she will be able to do something other than what an arbitrator might do on his or her own? I fail to understand why at one point it was his judgment call that mediation was not possible and that somehow now that the parties are so far apart back-to-work legislation is needed and all of a sudden mediation is needed by someone who would pat both sides on their backs and say, "Come on guys. Let's get together and call it a day, get back to work and start delivering the mail". I do not understand why a mediator-arbitrator is needed.

I think the Minister should admit that this piece of legislation has a sledgehammer approach in it. It says to the union, "Go back to work. We have an arbitrator. We are telling the arbitrator to look at the conciliator's report. We are giving direction to the arbitrator to find in favour, or lean toward, the position of management". That seems to me to be patently unfair and inappropriate in the circumstances.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, there are various things I could say, but some have already been said and some will not serve any purpose anyway.

With respect to this legislation, that it is back-to-work legislation, I think that is self-evident. One of the clauses in the Bill says specifically that, that the employees must go back to work. It is very clear that that is one of the purposes of the legislation.

At the time I made a judgment call that the appointment of a mediator would not have been appropriate because the parties were so far apart. I still believe that the parties are far apart. I believed that the day we introduced the legislation, particularly after having the assessment of my Associate Deputy Minister to that effect. Therefore, I concluded that back-to-work legislation was required. Notwithstanding the decision that back-to-work legislation was required, I also decided that, because of certain requests, including one from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint Jacques, and one from the union with respect to mediation, perhaps it was worth-while, as some would say, to give it a shot. That is provided for in this legislation. I hope, I sincerely hope, that the parties will prove that I was wrong, that there is a possibility of coming to a settlement. I will be the first one to praise the parties the day they come to an agreement. Our Government will not tolerate, as was done before the introduction of the legislation, the playing of musical chairs nor Canadians being submitted to protracted disruptions because of work stoppages, violence, and accrued violence.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the opening remarks of the Minister when he said that he did not believe in any event that anything he said would be listened to. I want to assure him that if he says the right thing we will listen to it very carefully.

Mr. Cadieux: That is not what I said.

Mr. Young: The Minister said that this is not what he said. I will accept that. Reflecting the dilemma that we have found in negotiations between Crown corporations and unions is an assumption on the part of Governments that somehow or other all the problems that are facing collective bargaining lie at the feet of unions. There are two parties to negotiations. In my experience and observation of the manner in which Crown corporations conduct negotiations, they clearly go into those negotiations knowing full well that if an agreement is not concluded the Government will step in and legislate workers back to work. It has happened continuously. I think it is high time, quite frankly, that Members on all sides of the House should perhaps strike some kind of a committee to investigate the process of collective bargaining with Crown corporations and their employees through their organizations. Certainly the mechanism in place now does not work. It does not work to anyone's advantage, whether it be the public's, the Crown corporations', the unions or its members. It is something worth-while taking a look at.

One of the key problems in these negotiations has been the post offices and, I assume from everything I have heard, the Government's insistence that the Post Office should be reorganized. A very sore point centers on the franchising of operations. It is not only the union that is concerned about reorganization in the Post Office, it is also the customers, the clientele which the Post Office is attempting to serve. I want to read one letter which is typical of the number of letters I have received from constituents on this whole question of reorganization in the Post Office and the effect it is having on the mail service. My constituent, Sandra Hanmer, writes:

> Here is an example of how it is serving me—I received a card saying I had a registered mail letter awaiting pick-up. The address on the card wasn't the usual one of Station 'H' on the Danforth, a few dozen yards from where I work. It was that of a Shopper's Drug Mart. So I took the half hour's walk down to Shopper's World at Danforth and Victoria Park where there is a large Shopper's Drug Mart. There's also a huge Shopper's Drug Mart much nearer at Main and Danforth but this doesn't have a post office counter. Too convenient for all the thousands of tenants in the Main Square complex, I guess.
> The postmistress at Shopper's Drug Mart at Shopper's World couldn't find my envelope. She finally took a look at my card and said, "No wonder I couldn't find your letter, you have to go down to Queen St. Shopper's Drug Mart, not this one." Fortunately, I'm a strong person and a good walker and own a bicycle also, so I was able to make the trek down to Queen Street. Fortunately, I don't work Wednesday mornings so I can reserve it for these little jaunts.
> I live, work and shop in different places and none of them is down on Queen St., a place I rarely visit unless I'm going for an early morning cycle on the boardwalk. If you'd really done "a thorough analysis of where we need Post Offices" you would realize that we need one at Main & Danforth or continue to keep parcels and registered letters, etc. at Station 'H'.
> I live at Gerrard & Woodbine, where there's a little post office and drycleaners but I can't get my letters there. I work very near Station 'H' on the Danforth, I can no longer get letters or parcels there. I shop at Main & Danforth where there's no post office at all. I have to take time to go miles out of my way—I don't call this an improvement in service. Not to mention the abolition of all the mailboxes which used to be around.

Representatives of the Post Office went through my constituency and unilaterally, without any kind of reason or rationale, picked mailboxes up from corners and chucked them into the back of trucks. One fellow who runs a corner store next to one of these mailboxes asked them why they were removing it, and they said it was because it was not used any longer. He said to the two fellows who were picking up this mailbox: "Well, open it up" and the guys opened it up. The thing was stacked with mail. It was well used.

Removing these boxes presents real difficulties for many elderly people, particularly during the winter months when they have to walk several additional blocks on sometimes icy or snow-bound sidewalks. I could go on and on.

It seems to me that the point the Hon. Member for St. John's East made earlier in his argument as to why franchising or contracting out should be a part of the collective bargaining process is something which I would think would be in the Government's interest to encourage. We all want to see that kind of maturity in collective bargaining. We should tell Canada Post that it has an obligation to the public, to its employees and to Parliament and it should put that item on the table for collective bargaining. I would like to hear what the Minister would say on that.

Amendment (Mr. Keeper) negatived.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 7, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause 7, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 8 and 9 agreed to.

On Clause 10—Offence by individuals.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a few moments to address Clause 7. I must say that I was disappointed that the Minister did not take the opportunity to respond to the comment my colleague made on the earlier clause. He pointed out the difficulties that exist for senior citizens when mailboxes are picked up off the street and senior citizens have to walk long distances under severe winter conditions. The Minister chose not to respond to that. One of the problems is that the Government does not hear when we bring to its attention what is happening to seniors and ordinary Canadians. It fails to respond or answer to these concerns.

I would like to deal specifically with Clause 10, the enforcement clause. It reads:

> An individual who contravenes any provision of this Act is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction and is liable, for each day or part of a day during which the offence continues, to a fine
> (a) of not less than $10,000 or more than $50,000, where the individual was acting in the capacity—

The Chairman: The Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) on a point of order.

Mr. Cadieux: I want some clarification, Mr. Chairman. I thought, and I may be wrong, that clause 10 had been agreed to and that we were considering clause 11. But if I am wrong . . . Are we still on clause 10? Very well! I apologize.

[English]

Mr. Keeper: I can understand the impatience of the Minister. I am sure he wants this clause to be adopted. However, we want to deal with it.

The implications of this clause should be brought to the attention of the Canadian public. The clause provides that there will be fines of from $10,000 to $50,000 imposed on any individual who is acting in the capacity of an officer or representative of the employer or the union and of not less than $500 or more than $1,000 in any other case. The clause also provides for fines of $20,000 to $100,000 to be imposed upon the employer or the union.

These are very heavy fines. Why does the Government find it necessary to threaten individuals with fines of upwards of $50,000 and to threaten the union with fines of up to $100,000 a day? Why does the Government feel it is necessary to put this gun to the heads of those who are leading the workers at the Post Office?

Why is the Government using such Draconian legislation to force these workers back to work? The key issue on the table in the dispute is the question of franchising. Why is the Government willing to use such heavy penalties to put in place its policy of franchising? Is this franchising policy such a good policy that it merits the use of such heavy fines?

I would like to raise one question about the whole matter of franchising. Today, I might have a neighbourhood post office, but tomorrow morning it might be in a Shoppers Drug Mart.

• (2050)

A fundamental policy of the federal Government for the last few years has been to provide service in the official language of your choice. If your mother tongue is French, you can get service in French. If your mother tongue is English, you can get service in English. The Post Office has been slow to live up to the policy of bilingualism, which is so crucial to keeping the country together. Franchising will make that even more difficult.

If the Government cannot assure service in the language of your choice when the employees of the Post Office are direct employees of the Government, how can it do so when the service is provided in a drug store? I wonder whether the Government has thought about what will happen to the language rights of Canadians. If the language rights of Canadians are further undermined, what will happen to the unity of the country?

The Government is so set on the policy of franchising that it is willing to impose fines of $10,000, $50,000 and $100,000 per day. I would like to know whether the Minister, the Cabinet and the Government have considered the implications of franchising on the policy of bilingualism. How will they ensure that people can get service in the language of their choice?

Would the Minister do us the courtesy of responding to that? I have yet to hear an explanation from the Government on this. It is obviously something that the Government is pushing for very strongly since it is prepared to impose such large fines in support of it. Would the Minister comment on how the Government will assure the provision of service in the official language of your choice under the franchise system when it has had such a dismal record of providing it until now when it has been more within its control?

I see that the Minister refuses to stand up. I gave him an opportunity to do so. Is the Minister willing to stand up?

Mr. Cadieux: Sure.

Mr. Keeper: Would he then comment on that question? This is fundamental to Canadian unity.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I am prepared, of course, to give explanations on this Bill without hesitation. I would prefer to listen to the other Members who have comments on this clause and will answer all questions at the end.

[Translation]

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that the Minister has not answered my question. He will perhaps do it later on, but I am nevertheless disappointed that he did not take right away the opportunity to answer it, because the Government has clearly indicated its willingness to go to any lengths to ram through this back-to-work legislation related to postal workers. As we know, franchising out is one of the key issues regarding the problems of post offices. How does the Government think it will be able to maintain its policy of bilingualism in this country once post offices are privatized, when the level of service the public is entitled to has not even been reached?

[English]

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment on Clause 10 of the Bill. It is hard to say which clause of this Bill is the worst. However, I find it astounding that a minimum fine of $10,000 will be imposed for each day or part of a day that someone violates this legislation. We have many laws in this country. We have the Criminal Code with hundreds of sections which provides for minimum fines and minimum sentences. Lives are endangered and lost every day because of impaired driving and there is a minimum fine for that offence, but is is not $10,000. Until recently it was $50.

Under this legislation a shop steward or minor official in the postal union, perhaps a picket captain or officer of a local, who contravenes this legislation is liable to a minimum fine of $10,000. For example, Clause 4 provides that "each officer and representative of the union shall . . . take all reasonable steps to ensure that employees comply with paragraph 3(b)" which provides that "every employee shall, when so required, forthwith continue or resume, as the case may be, the duties of that employee's employment".

If a judge decides that a shop steward did not take all reasonable steps to ensure that other employees go back to work he will be fined $10,000 for that horrid crime for each day or part thereof.

We must have some very serious situations to deal with if an officer must take all reasonable steps to ensure that employees comply with that paragraph. Maybe a judge would decide that it would be reasonable for the union to expel its members if they did not comply exactly with every section of this Bill. Then the union would be fined a minimum of $20,000 a day even if it complied with this legislation and told its members to go back to work as we have every reason to believe it will. Under this Bill a minimum fine of $10,000 may be imposed for what may be a very minor violation of this legislation. If we were talking about concerted defiance of the legislation in its entirety by the entire union, perhaps there would be a need for such stringent measures.

One wonders where the Government is coming from in proposing such legislation. Perhaps the Minister of Labour could tell us what other legislation provides for such fines for such potentially minor offences.

• (2100)

Minimum fines have always been criticized by defence council in cases where a technical violation of the law may have occurred, which calls for the sympathy of the court. Any members who are lawyers will have often heard judges say that while there has been a technical violation of the law, the case he has heard is a sympathetic one in which there are extenuating circumstances and therefore the punishment of being before the court is enough.

However, while the judge may want to give an absolute discharge or conditional discharge, in this case he would indicate that he cannot do so because he is bound by the law. While there may be a minor technical violation, a judge in this case might say that while he has listened to the circumstances surrounding the case, the breach of the legislation was not very serious, the fine he must impose is $10,000. If the breach of the legislation takes places over two days, the fine will be $20,000.

I submit that a minimum fine of $10,000 is outrageous. This legislation only involves a summary conviction, and even serious crimes under the Criminal Code which are indictable offences do not have fines of $10,000.

Until two years ago the minimum fine for the indictable offence of impaired driving was $50. It is now $350, yet the minimum fine for a breach of this legislation at any time during the continuance of the collective agreement which is referred to is $10,000. We all know how the courts define a strike. It can range from one or two individuals having a strike to a general strike.

While there are illegal strikes from time to time in this country, they occur more often when legislation is passed making collective bargaining inoperative. The usual remedy for anyone engaging in a wildcat strike is to get an injunction through the court. In this case, however, any time during the course of this collective agreement anyone who is a representative of the union, whether or not it is authorized by the union, will be subject to a minimum fine of $10,000. The minimum of $10,000 provided for in Clause 10 is absolutely outrageous. It does not provide for the judicial discretion, which is very important in the administration of justice in this country.

I understand that this is not a justice Bill. Perhaps the Minister of Labour did not consult with the officials of the Department of Justice when he was establishing minimum fines of such astounding proportions in this legislation.

Perhaps the Minister could indicate whether he believes there are cases where judicial discretion is required and a minimum fine of $10,000 is not appropriate. While our judicial system exists to enforce the laws, there must be some tolerance of the fact that there may be extenuating circumstances in individual cases that call for discretion on the part of the judge. Judges are given very wide discretion to deal with all sorts of crimes.

The Government is telling judges that they cannot use their discretion in this case and take special circumstances into account. The Government is not prepared to allow a judge to exercise discretion and give less than a $10,000 fine to an ordinary working person. He does not have the power to say that such a fine is inappropriate and can be reserved for a more serious case.

Did the Minister's officials review the Criminal Code to determine the seriousness of this crime compared to other crimes which had minimum fines? Why did he set a minimum fine of $10,000 and not provide for discretion by a federally appointed judge so he might hear a case like this and deal with the facts before him without the Government telling him that he must fine someone $10,000 a day?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, before I comment on Clause 10, I want to ask the Minister when the enforcement provision, Clause 10, ends. In other words, we know that the penalties will begin if there is a breach as soon as the law is passed, presumably sometime tomorrow. Does the enforcement provision lapse upon the expiry of the 90 days or upon the entering into of the collective agreement as provided for by Clause 8?

While he is on his feet, will he indicate how many people in the last 20 years have been prosecuted under enforcement provisions of federal back-to-work legislation and, of those prosecuted, how many were employees and how many were representatives of employers, and what were the penalties imposed by the courts?

Once the Minister has answered those questions, I would like to make some very brief comments on Clause 10.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I do not have the information with respect to the number of convictions during the last 20 years. I do recall one instance of back-to-work legislation which was breached. It is the one concerning CUPW, following the 1978 back-to-work legislation when there was at least one prosecution in which I believe the person ended up in jail for some time. Presumably there may be some others, but I am willing to look into that and report back to my hon. colleague at the earliest opportunity.

With respect to the severity of the fines, I will not try to convince the House that they are not severe. They are. They are severe in this particular legislation for the same reasons that they were severe in Bill C-24, which we adopted in November, 1986, and for the same reasons they were severe in Bill C-85, adopted a month ago with respect to the railway industry. They are the same fines, exactly the same sections, and we will stand by them again.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the Minister could answer my question with regard to when the enforcement provisions expire, then I will make my comments. The Bill provides for very heavy fines here and I would like to know when they expire.

Mr. Cadieux: They are in force as long as the collective agreement is in force.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, we are dealing here with Clause 10, but Clause 10 cannot be considered in isolation. One has to, it seems to me, look at Clause 11 as well. The sidenote beside Clause 11(1) reads "Additional Punishment-Union", and the sidenote on Clause 11(2) is "Additional Punishment-Employer". First, with regard to Clause 10, I think the Minister will agree that this particular enforcement provision, although it applies to both employee and employer, in this case postal workers and Canada Post, is directed at employees. I am sure that if the Minister were to review the last 20 or 50 years he would be hard pressed to find a situation where a representative of management has been prosecuted under back-to-work legislation. So let us not kid anyone. Even though it says a representative of the employer is subject to these rather heavy fines, we are really talking about employees and CUPW. Let me read Clause 10(1), Mr. Chairman. It reads:

> An individual who contravenes any provision of this Act is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction and is liable, for each day or part of a day during which the offence continues, to a fine
> (a) of not less than $10,000 or more than $50,000, where the individual was acting in the capacity of an officer or representative of the employer or the union when the offence was committed;—

So that first part deals with union officers and representatives of the employer, but in effect we are talking about union officers. The Minister laughs, but he knows that he is not going to prosecute anyone in Canada Post management under this clause. It is directed at CUPW members.

A court would have no discretion whatsoever. If there is a contravention, regardless of how minor the contravention, the fine is $10,000 a day or any part of a day. So if a technical breach lasts for 10 minutes or 15 minutes and there is a prosecution, the court would have no discretion whatsoever but to fine that union official a minimum of $10,000 and, depending on who is sitting on the bench and the circumstances, the fine could go as high as $50,000.

That in and of itself is patently unfair and inequitable. It raises considerable concern. This section says: "An individual who contravenes any provision of this Act". What is a "provision of this Act"? This Act, if one reads from Clause 1 through to Clause 13, requires management and union to do a number of things. It is not specific. It is not clear and unambiguous. There are clauses in here that might lead one to question exactly what was meant by the legislation. We all know the workers have to go back to work, that is clear. As the law says, they have to resume their duties. Clause 4 states:

> The union and each officer and representative of the union
> (a) shall, forthwith on the coming into force of this Act,—

And that is within 12 or 24 hours.

> —give notice to the employees—

What does that mean? If the employees have to be back at work within 12 hours or 24 hours, how does one give notice to the employees? How many employees are involved at Canada Post?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint Jacques): Of those under the collective agreement, there are 23,000.

Mr. Nunziata: Twenty three thousand employees. We know the Post Office is shut down so we cannot mail them a letter and say: "Here is your notice. Go back to work". We could send them a telegram, I suppose, but who will pay for 23,000 telegrams? This legislation requires them to be back at work within a 12 or 24 hour period. Is the Minister assuming that these 23,000 postal workers involved in this particular situation are each watching these proceedings with bated breath and this is their notice? The court could say that when the Minister was standing in the House, that was sufficient notice. The Minister can see the ridiculousness of the offence here. It is meant, I suppose, to deter the union but it is a sledge-hammer approach.

The Minister talks about a mediator-arbitrator. There is still some hope. The Minister is a reasonable guy. He still hopes that somehow there will be a negotiated settlement. But how does he really expect, in all sincerity, the union to come to the table with the arbitrator sitting at the head and management sitting across and be in a very good mood when we have Clause 10 saying, "If you dare breach one section of this particular legislation, we are going to fine you $10,000, and if that is not enough, we are going to leave it up to the court under Clause 11 to prohibit that particular union officer from participating in union activities for five years"?

If the Minister really wants some co-operation from the union officers in CUPW, he would not bring into effect Clause 10 and Clause 11. It is a threat. If this is not provocation to breach this particular Act, I do not know what is. It certainly does not serve to create an atmosphere of co-operation.

If I may continue, Mr. Chairman, there is a minimum penalty of $10,000 if one does not give notice to the employees that, and I quote from Clause 4(1)(a):

> —by reason of the coming into force of this Act, postal operations are forthwith to be continued or resumed, as the case may be, and the employees, when so required, are forthwith to continue or resume, as the case may be, the duties of their employment;

What does all this mean? The employees are asking what it all means. It is not that specific. Mr. Kelly is an expert in labour law and the Minister, by virtue of the office he holds, has presumably acquired considerable degree of knowledge on this particular subject, but we are talking about 23,000 ordinary Canadians who do not have the expertise of Mr. Kelly or the Minister of Labour and they are being told that if they breach any provision of this Act they are subjecting themselves to a minimum $10,000 fine per day, if they or an officer of the corporation, and if they are just a run of the mill regular worker, they will be fined $500 per day. These guys are not earning $500 a day, yet they are going to be fined a minimum of $500 a day if they breach any provision of this Act.

It is obvious that there are problems because the Act is not specific enough. Therefore, we will have the technical breaches of the legislation. The Minister might stand up and say: "Let us be reasonable, we are not going to prosecute every minor breach", but that is not the case. When we pass laws here one has to assume that any breach is a breach and it ought to be prosecuted.

I hope the Minister is not going to suggest that we will leave it up to the police to decide whether they are going to prosecute under this back-to-work Bill C-86. I hope he is not suggesting that, because that is not the role of the police. We are passing a piece of legislation and it must stand on its own.

This particular Clause 10(1) provides for Draconian measures. As the Hon. Member for St. John's East pointed out, there are not that many pieces of federal legislation that have penalties as severe as these. That leads me to ask the following question. Why are they as severe as they are? What is the purpose of having this particular clause in this Bill? Why a $10,000 minimum fine per day as opposed to $50, $100, or no minimum fine at all?

I note that there is no provision in this Bill for incarceration, in other words, jail. Why is the Minister not providing for a minimum jail term in this legislation? He referred to a situation not so long ago in which a prominent member of CUPW spent time in prison. Did that legislation at the time provide for imprisonment, or was it a similar type of legislation to what we have here today? He has not provided for any period of incarceration. Perhaps that would have been a different approach. I would like to hear from the Minister as to why he decided to impose such heavy fines for breaches under this Bill and why he did not consider other possible penalties.

Not only is the Minister creating an atmosphere of provocation with Clause 10, the union is down on the ground and he decides to feed the union the boots by imposing Clause 11. What the Minister is saying is, "$10,000 a day is not enough. We want to leave it up to the court to prohibit a union member from participating in union activity for up to five years". I ask the Minister—

Mr. Harris: Not up to the court.

Mr. Nunziata: Let me read the clause so that we are clear. Clause 11(1) states:

> No individual who is convicted of an offence under this Act that was committed while the individual was acting in the capacity as an officer or representative of the union shall be employed in any capacity by, or act as an officer or representative of, the union at any time in the five years immediately after the date of the conviction.

Mr. Boudria: It is worse.

Mr. Nunziata: As the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, who is not learned in law—

The Chairman: I would like to remind the Hon. Member that when we get to Clause 11 there will probably be amendments made concerning the point that he is now talking about.

Mr. Nunziata: Obviously, you are privy to information that I am not privy to, Mr. Chairman. However, we are dealing with Clause 10.

As the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell pointed out, if one is convicted—and this is why it is important—of an offence under Clause 10, not only is one fined but one is suspended from union activity. There is no discretion. Right, Mr. Harris?

Mr. Harris: None in there.

Mr. Nunziata: And it is automatic that one is prohibited from participating in union activities for five years. Well, it goes on to state in Clause 11(2) that if an employer or a representative of the employer breaches any part of this Bill, or is found guilty of a breach of a provision of it, then he cannot be employed by Canada Post for five years. That is nonsense. In effect it is a sentence. One is not going to prosecute any employer. One is not going to prosecute Mr. Lander or any of his cohorts. That is not what this legislation is all about. That is not what this clause is all about.

It is obvious that this particular enforcement provision is in breach of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I do not think one has to go too far to conclude that—

Mr. Reid: Take it to court.

Mr. Nunziata: The Hon. Member opposite says, "Take it to court". That is the typical Tory way. If a member of that Party does not like legislation, then they say that we should take it to court. That is shirking one's responsibilities as a parliamentarian here. Our responsibility is to pass laws that will withstand court challenges, not to pass laws hoping for a court challenge.

But one does not have to go too far, Mr. Minister, to realize that it is in fact a breach of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is cruel and unusual punishment when there is a punishment of a minimum fine of $10,000, and on top of that mandatory or automatic suspension from union activity for five years.

I hope the Minister in the next few hours will reconsider this Draconian clause and delete completely Clause 11 and modify Clause 10 in order to create an atmosphere in which the two parties will try to the greatest extent and to the greatest degree possible to co-operate to create a work environment over the next several years that will be in the best interests of management, labour and the public.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Chairman, I want to comment on this particular clause because in my discussions with postal workers in Essex—Windsor it has been suggested to me very strongly that it is these kinds of provisions within the proposed Bill which present the red flag in front of the bull, the goad which will make for labour relations in the Post Office, which are already extremely difficult, difficult to put right and more difficult to turn around.

I think that everybody in this House, everybody in this country, recognizes that there is a very difficult situation in respect of labour-management relations in the Post Office. If the marble worker himself, Mr. Kelly, cannot succeed in bringing about some kind of meeting of minds, as he was able to do with letter carriers, then I think that is one demonstration. It is very important that whatever piece of legislation is brought to bear on the backs of these workers is seen to be in some sense balanced, in some sense fair. There are two aspects of this particular clause which in that respect worry me considerably. They certainly very considerably worry the workers to whom I have talked.

The first is that, as a number of people have suggested, the extreme severity of the fines which are levied, not just as potential maximums but as necessary minimums on condition of conviction. I remind you, Mr. Chairman, the House and the country that this provision is being presented in a piece of legislation which was brought in at a time when there was no full strike. There was just a rotating strike across the country. Service had not been completely interrupted. It was brought in at a time when I think, again, everybody in the country would agree that the service which has been provided by the Post Office in this past period has deteriorated significantly. It was brought in at a time when the union itself had requested a mediator. The Minister refused to accept that request, Canada Post refused to accept that request which would have permitted that possibility to at least be explored. As I noted this morning, it was brought in at a time when provisions had been in place whereby casual workers had found it very difficult, despite their peripheral relationship with the strike, to receive the wages which were rightfully due to them for the work that they had done in the past.

Despite all those circumstances, despite that context, there was still this tremendously heavy burden put on workers of fines of $10,000 up to $50,000 with respect to officers of the union, and fines of $20,000 up to $100,000 with respect to the union. That is not an absolute fine, that is a fine per day. That seems to me, as one of my colleagues described it the other day, to represent the War Measures Act of labour relations. It is not something that the people of this country will see as fair, just, balanced, and equitable.

I ask the Minister if he can provide some type of justification for these extremely strong fines, given the circumstances which existed at the time that this legislation was brought in, that is, no strike, deteriorating service in the Post Office for the past few years, no response to the request for a mediator, and circumstances which made it difficult for casual workers to be paid what was due to them.

The second point I wish to raise is that the country itself has been told that this is back-to-work legislation; it is legislation to get the Post Office going again. In fact, as it is written this clause states that any provision of this Act which includes the imposition of the collective agreement over a significant period of years ahead, any provision of this Act if it is broken can lead to conviction and these very heavy fines.

I also ask the Minister why, if he felt it was necessary to put heavy fines into effect to get the workers back to work, he also felt that he had to back up every single clause of this potential Act, every single clause of what we do not even know may yet come from the arbitrator who looks at this dispute, why every single bit of that activity shall be backed up by this extremely heavy enforcement mechanism? Even if it is justified to consider heavy fines to send workers back to work, which I do not agree it is, I think most people in this country will look at this as far too heavy for what it sets out to accomplish. But even if that is the case, why apply it to every aspect of labour relations in the Post Office for the next three years so that every provision of this Act, including what the arbitrator might ultimately put into place, is subject to those types of heavy fines?

That is certainly how it reads to me, and I welcome the Minister stating that this will not be the case, if indeed it is not. As the clause is set out, it clearly states that any provision of this Act which, for instance, is broken by a wildcat strike two years from now, or by a union protest against a go-slow activity in protest of some part of the provisions of the arbitration which is settled, that any part of that, any activity of that type, can lead to these massive fines.

I remember sitting in the Press Gallery years ago when the War Measures Act was brought into Parliament. I listened to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, in what was a very unpopular statement at that stage, say that this was using a hammer to crush a peanut.

In this case, I think the provisions are harsh, unreasonable, unfair, and quite out of league and context. This shows up not only in the size of the fines but also by the fact that they will be applied to any activity in the future where the union might in some minor way break the provisions of the collective agreement, not because the union thought that it did, but because it was judged by some judge to have done so.

Mr. Harris: I wish to pick on one of the comments of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). It is important that we understand that this legislation would have the effect of imposing minimum fines of $10,000 on union officials. People talk about "union officials" and mean the national president of the union. This means anybody who is a representative of the union which can include a shop steward or someone who is acting in any capacity within the union. It could affect someone during the whole course of the collective agreement that is referred to here, and it could have nothing whatever to do with the Post Office. It could be a national political protest, which we have had from time to time in this country. Political protests which involve work stoppages and national days of protest are political acts and have nothing whatever to do with labour relations in the Post Office. This would expose the individual to a minimum $10,000 fine up to a $50,000 fine.

We should not be satisfied with the answer of the Minister of Labour, or the justification that the reason it is a $10,000 fine is tough, it is a minimum fine, but we did it before so we will do it again, and that is the justification.

That is not a very good justification. There is a precedent in dealing with legislation in this country. The reason that we have minimum fines is that when there are no minimum fines sometimes a judge will not give serious consideration to the offence. The legislature will then step in and say, "We have had this crime on the books for many years, the judges will let the people go and they should be treating them more severely,. so we will up the fines".

Would the Minister tell us whether or not there has been any experience where there has been back-to-work legislation, where the judges have been complacent, have not taken the matter seriously, and have not given appropriate fines? Could the Minister tell us whether there have been situations which have shown that without minimum fines of $10,000 the judges do not do their jobs and do not take the matter seriously enough?

We are not talking about maximum fines of $50,000. There may be cases where defiance of legislation of this nature might require a serious fine of $50,000, but we are talking here about a minimum fine of $10,000 with no judicial discretion.

Could the Minister tell us why he has taken that discretion away from the judges? Has there been an experience about which he can tell us where a judge should have given a fine of $10,000 and only gave one of $50, $100, $2,000, or $5,000? Has that been the experience with back-to-work legislation, that judges have not taken it seriously enough and have not treated it properly? If the Minister thinks that that is the case, I ask him to tell us about those experiences, to tell us what has happened.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the remarks of my colleagues, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston, the Hon. Member for St. John's East, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor, and others. It is becoming obvious that no one in the House has come to the conclusion that the minimum fines are acceptable. They have been found to be too high, too harsh, and unrealistic. They have been called all sorts of names. I do not want to repeat the remarks of my colleagues, but I would like to indicate that I agree with them 100 per cent.

As a practical man, I would like to try to give the Minister an opportunity to correct what I consider to be abusive penalties. As the Hon. Member for St. John's East suggested, the Minister should give to the judge the power that he should have in the first place, that is, to exert his judgment and to decide what a minimum penalty should be. The Minister could do that by removing the minimum penalty and giving the responsibility to the judge, or the Minister could return to the drawing-board and establish new, realistic, minimum fines.

I would like to move the following amendment which would give the Minister the opening of which he seems to be in need to try to do a better job:

> That Bill C-86 be amended in Clause 10 by deleting the words "less than $10,000 or" from line 8 on page 5 of the Bill, and by deleting the words "less than $500 or" from line 13 on page 5 of the Bill, and by deleting the words "less than $20,000 or" from line 20 on page 5 of the Bill.

Either the Minister decides that he wants to leave the discretion entirely with the court or the judge to decide what will be the penalty—there is a maximum, but with this there would be no minimum—or perhaps the Minister, who appears to be ferocious if we look at the amounts in the Bill, wants to set his own more realistic minimum. I will not say more than that. I think I have done my duty by providing the Minister with an opportunity tonight, as we are dealing with the Bill clause by clause, to do a better job.

And if the Minister wants to take this opportunity, we could have a legislation that, while being tough, could at least be more humane, which all our fellow citizens would consider more reasonable, although its goal is to enforce the law.

And I will conclude on these words, waiting for the response of the Minister to see what he wants to do. Will he insist on going too far, with unreasonable penalties, or does he want a realistic legislation that still has teeth without being offensive? That is my question to him.

[English]

The Chairman: We have the amendment of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques on the floor. The Chair finds the amendment in order.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, we support the amendment of our colleague.

Some Hon. Members: Comrade Keeper.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I note that some of my Liberal colleagues have picked up an idea from a good source, a colleague of mine on the New Democratic Party benches. I do not mean to get under the skins of my colleagues. I enjoy co-operation, and co-operation in a good cause would be to give some flexibility to judges so that fines do not have to be severe where they are not required.

I hope the Minister will be open to this amendment. I do not know whether or not he is or whether he is prepared to give some sort of indication. I do not see any nod of his head or any smile, so I will not expect any openness to the amendment on the part of the Minister. Perhaps we can still hope.

I would like to make a point about these fines for lack of compliance with the legislation. The Minister indicated that the fines were severe, that $10,000 or $100,000 per day were severe fines. I do not dispute that at all; they are severe.

Why has the Government found it necessary to go to such severe legislation? It is simply because it has failed to set the stage for negotiations. It has set in place a policy for the Post Office which was confrontational and made negotiations impossible. Therefore, it must have extreme and severe fines in order to enforce a settlement. That is why the fines are severe.

The amendment of my colleague would be useful. I hope the Minister will listen to some reason and give some flexibility to the courts. I would also point out that while the severe fines are there because the Government has refused to set the stage for negotiations, the Minister has also said, in response to questions from this side of the House, that the fines will apply throughout the life of the collective agreement. It could be that for two years or three years these fines will apply.

Clause 6 indicates that if someone participates in a strike against the employer, he or she would be subject to the enforcement clauses. If, sometime during the life of the agreement arising from this legislation, a worker were to go on a wildcat strike for some reason of a local nature, or some hardship in a particular plant, or for something which ordinary Canadians would understand, he or she would be subject to these enormous fines, these very severe fines.

Surely there is another regime under which such situations could be regulated. Surely these fines are not applied in all cases in which there is a collective agreement and somebody refuses to work and goes on a wildcat strike.

Mr. Harris: In response to a manager going crazy or something.

Mr. Keeper: Perhaps the manager would have lost his sanity and would have become unreasonable, authoritarian and apply this kind of management style in the local post office. What if you cannot take that kind of harassment from your manager and you walk out and refuse to come to work? You are subject to these kinds of fines. Surely there is another regime under which such a situation could be handled.

I recall reading the book on the Post Office entitled Post Mortem in which there is an account of a manager in the Post Office walked out in order to resolve a local conflict. He managed to get the attention of the political authorities and the situation was resolved. How could anybody who works at the Post Office bring attention to the slightest irritant for which there is no resolution? They would in this case be subject to severe fines. I would like the Minister to deal with why he has the severe fines in the legislation, because the Government has not set in place a regime that would lead to a negotiated settlement. Why do these fines have to be in place throughout the whole life of the collective agreement? Surely there could be a limit to how long they are in place. I would like to hear the Minister respond to those two items.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak briefly on the amendment proposed by my hon. colleague. It is obvious that the clause with which we are dealing now is at the very heart of the Bill proposed by the Minister. He is adamant that there should be fines of such a size to achieve what he thinks they should achieve. Even though some of us disagree with some of those fines, I suppose that we could live with some aspects of them a little easier if they were amended in a way that would still fulfil the objectives of the Minister while being more reasonable for everyone. Nevertheless I do not like the Bill, but at least it will be more palatable for all individuals concerned. Ideally the maximum fine should be lowered as well.

As a compromise, my distinguished colleague from Saint-Jacques has offered this amendment to us which would still retain the main feature of the Bill, namely, to have the availability of levying large fines while not putting our judges in strait-jackets causing a situation whereby they would have to impose fines which could very well be unreasonable for some offences.

My colleague from Winnipeg has given us examples of an individual wildcat walk-out in a community six months or a year from now which could result in very harsh side effects from a minimum fine which may not be warranted at the time. It is very possible that maximum fines would not be warranted at any time. Nevertheless they would be even less warranted in a year from now in a small community where a local situation has caused some sort of disagreement between management and labour. I think what my colleague has offered is a compromise type of a motion, certainly not making everyone totally happy, but in the good spirit of co-operation, I think that he has proposed something that the Minister, if I may suggest, should consider favourably.

I think the Minister himself will recognize that the present Bill as worded now has features, particularly this minimum fine feature, which could be extremely injurious. I said it in my second reading speech and I will repeat it again tonight that extreme law is extreme injury. It is not justice but the denial of it. That is a very old axiom, as the Minister who is a lawyer will well know, but it is very definitely apropos in this kind of a Bill. The Minister being the Minister of Labour not the Minister of management will want to have legislation which could still be as strict as required in his view, but not having that strait-jacket effect or that extreme injury potential effect that I have just described.

I want to support the amendment offered by my colleague and I invite the Minister to give it very serious consideration. In my view it will not substantially damage the fundamental characteristics of his Bill but it will make the legislation somewhat fairer than it is at the present time.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak in support of the amendment. It is a very reasonable one. In times like these, the Government ought to be prepared to listen to reason when there is so much emotionalism about an issue and, to be fair, coming from all quarters. We have in this case a very reasonable proposal put by the Hon. Member from Saint-Jacques. When dealing with offences, the courts and judges are very experienced in how to determine what kind of punishment to give.

Two factors are taken into consideration. This is part of the law of the country, as the Minister will know. In determining the fine or punishment one of the factors is the severity of the offence as determined by the maximum punishment provided for in the legislation. Note, it is maximum punishment. Minimum punishment is not even looked at to determine the severity. It is the maximum punishment as determined by the legislation. A crime with a maximum punishment of 14 years in jail is considered more serious than a crime with a maximum punishment of two years. Maximum is what is used to determine how seriously the Parliament of Canada wants to view an offence. This amendment has left the maximums there. The judge has a very clear idea from Parliament how seriously the offence is to be regarded and will govern himself accordingly.

As the Member from Burin—St. George's knows, judges in Newfoundland in dealing with offences by offshore fishing captains, Spanish and Portuguese sea captains who break the fishing laws and other federal statutes have no hesitation in imposing fines of $25,000, $30,000 or more based on the seriousness of the offence and based on the maximum punishment provided by the law.

The other principle which judges will consider is one which I am sure the Minister considers important because of this legislation, namely, deterrence. One or the other objective of sentencing is deterrence. If deterrence is needed in a particular offence, then the punishment is harsher. This is a very reasonable amendment and proposal. Two messages are being sent to the judges. One, Parliament considers the breaking of the law very serious because of the maximum fine. Two, if deterrence is important in a particular case, then the punishment can suit the crime if the crime is serious enough to warrant a heavy punishment. These two factors will guide a judge in dealing with any offence under this Bill, but will also provide, by taking out these absolutely outrageous minimums, for discretion for a technical breach for a violation having nothing to do whatever with the purpose of this legislation. The purpose is to stop the current dispute and attempt to resolve the current outstanding differences between the Post Office Corporation and its employees.

Let us have the enforcement provisions deal with the problem, not deal with something else and not set traps and minefields for workers down the road because some manager steps out of line. If a manager steps out of line by doing something wrong and the employee says, "Well, we have to put up with this. We have to tolerate this abuse", the shop steward will be levied a fine of $10,000 minimum if he tells an employee that he doesn't have to put up with such abusive action on the part of the employer. It might have nothing whatsoever to do with the current dispute but might have to do with something else entirely.

Unless this amendment is accepted, we will still have this very severe, arbitrary, automatic and essentially unfair and unjust provision which does not allow for no discretion on the part of the court. If this amendment is accepted, the court will be able to respond appropriately to the cases that come before it. I would urge the Minister to accept this amendment as it sufficiently provides for his objectives without tying the hands of a judge who deals with real cases and real facts.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take any more time but I would like to indicate that all sides of the House seem to accept this amendment. I want to ask the Minister whether he will take this opportunity to revise the penalties provided for in the bill; as a matter of fact, he has the choice either to revise them himself or to leave to a judge's discretion the enforcement of the law and the setting of discretionary fines before a court. Could the Minister tell us whether he intends to take this opportunity that is given to him?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I want first of all to thank my hon. colleagues for their very sincere representations and say that I appreciate their concerns; they are similar of course to the points that have been made during consideration of Bill C-85 and Bill C-24, so that—

[English]

I have had the occasion to discuss amendments on previous occasions. When we discussed Bills C-84 and C-24 we considered the severity, and they are severe, of these particular clauses and we considered the proposed amendments which were not accepted at that time. The amendments proposed this evening to this particular clause will not be accepted either.

Amendment (Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)) negatived on division.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 10 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause 10 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 11 carry?

On Clause 11—Additional punishment—union

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Chairman, as if we did not have enough to say on the preceding clause with regard to the harshness of penalties, I must rise again to say that this five-year off-the-job penalty goes way beyond Clause 10 in its harshness and Clause 10 is harsh enough. This penalty comes on top of the penalties that are already provided for in Clause 10, penalties which we have already described as being too heavy.

We are certainly entering a new era of severity, of unusual and inhumane penalties. I do not think that I as a Member of this House can accept that. In some countries of the world they still cut off the hand of someone who has been caught stealing. Because they are still doing that in some countries does not mean that we have to revert back to the Dark Ages in this country.

I do not know how to describe a five-year off-the-job penalty. Some have called it a sledge-hammer. Some have called it a whip with seven strands. Others have called it a shotgun. I think I will call it vengeance with passion.

I do not know what the union leadership or the officers of Canada Post have done to the Minister to make him react in such a vengeful way. I take it as my duty to move an amendment to this clause. I move:

> That Bill C-86 be amended in Clause 11 by striking out the words "five years" from line 28 on page 5 of the Bill and substituting therefor the words "three days" and by striking out the words "five years" from line 36 on page 5 and substituting therefor the words "three days".

This amendment is symbolic. In fact, my purpose is to move an amendment to strike out entirely Clause 11. Our rules do not provide for that, our rules say that if I do not like a certain clause, I simply vote against it. I wanted to move an amendment that would allow my colleagues and I to say what we think of this measure.

What is the purpose of this additional punishment? To enforce compliance? Obviously, that cannot be the case, since under Clause 10, an individual acting in the capacity of an officer of the Canada Post Corporation or the union who contravenes the Act is already liable to a fine of not less than $10,000 or more than $50,000 per day. It is clear that providing for an additional punishment of five years is not meant as a way to enforce compliance. There must be some other reason, but I can't find it, since the preceding clause is already so extreme.

So what is the point? As I see it, the fines alone are more than sufficient and even too severe. Is this supposed to hit the unions hard or intimidate Canada Post officials? Is it because, as I said previously in the House, the Government, desperate to improve its image, seems to think that a good way to do that is to act tough with postal employees? Maybe the Government thinks it would help improve public opinion polls. I don't know. I just don't understand. I would ask the Minister to answer the following question: What is the additional advantage? I ask this question because I cannot think of any other possibility.

A reasonable suspension period. Suspensions are included in certain kinds of legislation at the provincial, federal and municipal level in Canada. Policemen have been suspended for fifteen days or even a month. That is a fact. But suspending someone for a period of five years simply boggles the mind, since, as I said before, the purpose is not to enforce compliance, because that has already been amply taken care of by the preceding clause.

Do we want to put a person in a position where he might lose his home because for five years he would not be able to pay his mortgage? Do we want him to lose his car and have trouble feeding his family? I hardly think that is what the Government has in mind.

Mr. Speaker, even a person convicted of a criminal offense under the Criminal Code is pardoned if he files an application after two years. In other words, anyone who is convicted of assault or damaging somebody else's property can come after two years and apply for a pardon to the Office of the Solicitor General of Canada, and if his behaviour has been good, he will be granted a pardon every time.

According to our laws a person convicted of a criminal offence can be pardoned after two years. Yet, a person who has already paid a $10,000 fine would be suspended from doing his job as an officer of the union or of Canada Post for a period of five years. That is beyond me.

I have looked at the Charter of Rights and found at least three points in the Charter which this measure may violate.

[Translation]

I may remind Hon. Members that the Charter provides Canadians with legal guarantees. One of these guarantees is set forth in Section 12 of the Charter, which says that everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

Of course, it is debatable whether a five-year suspension is cruel or unusual, but no one can convince me it is normal, common or customary.

I would be concerned that people who are affected or threatened by Clause 11 might go before the courts to ask for a ruling on whether this particular clause contravenes the Charter of Rights and the legal guarantees I just read to you. I would not be surprised if those people won their case.

There is more. The Charter of Rights provides Canadian citizens with other guarantees as well. If I could find the other sections—here they are. Under fundamental freedoms, every one has the following fundamental freedoms: freedom of conscience and religion etc., and finally, the one I am interested in here, 2(d)—freedom of association. Sure, just because certain officers of the Union are suspended for a five-year period does not prevent union members from continuing to be part of an association. Of course that can go on. However, I maintain that an association whose officers have been suspended for a period of five years will be hard pressed to administer itself and to have a sense of direction. It merely opens the door to other union Members who would be only too happy to replace the former officers who were suspended and to take advantage of this opportunity to do so. This could lead to anarchy within a union, and I wonder whether that is the purpose of this clause. Because, as I said before, I do not see why the fines provided in the preceding clause should not be more than adequate.

There are other freedoms that are also guaranteed by the Charter. Under mobility and residence rights: Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain and leave Canada, and so forth, and finally Article 6(b); every citizen has the right to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

Anyone whose right to pursue the gaining of a livelihood is guaranteed by the Charter and who is prohibited from working in his particular field, either as an officer or representative of the Canada Post Corporation or as an officer or representative of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, that person is definitely deprived of a freedom and a right guaranteed under the Charter, namely, to pursue the gaining of livelihood. I agree, that person can work somewhere else, but as far as I know, the Canada Post Corporation is a monopoly.

[English]

There are not three, four, or five Canada Post organizations in the country, there is only one. If one is prevented from acting as an officer of Canada Post, as he used to, for a period of five years, where will he seek employment in his specialty? This is in violation of Section 6(b) of the Charter of Rights. The same thing applies to an officer of the union. There are not three or four CUPW organizations in Canada, there is only one.

The purpose of this amendment is to point out that this heavy-handed five-year off-the-job penalty is absolutely unacceptable. I do not know how the Minister will react to this amendment. He did not react very favourably to my amendment to Clause 10.

Mr. Nunziata: He is not being reasonable.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I do not foresee my Party voting for legislation which contains such horrendous penalties as those contained in this Bill. I do not want to be associated with this legislation. I do not want to carry the blame if someone loses his house because the mortgagor forecloses. I want to be able to say for the rest of my life that I opposed such measures as this. I do not oppose it only because it is contained in back-to-work legislation. I would oppose it in any piece of legislation. What is unreasonable in this Bill would be unreasonable in any other Bill. That which goes beyond reason goes beyond my support.

The Chairman: The Member for Saint-Jacques has moved the following amendment:

> That Bill C-86 be amended in Clause 11 by striking out the words "five years" from line 28 on page 5 of the Bill and substituting therefor the words "three days" and by striking out the words "five years" from line 36 on page 5 and substituting therefor the words "three days".

The Chair finds the amendment to be in order.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I want to take a few minutes to make quite clear how we feel about this clause. This clause says that if workers do not comply with the law they will lose their position with the union or with the Post Office. These are very severe enforcement provisions.

Having introduced enforcement provisions of this nature one would think that the Government had done everything possible on the face of the earth to come to a negotiated settlement. It is clear that the Government has done just the opposite. It has followed a policy of confrontation. It developed its plan for the Post Office behind closed doors. It failed to involve the public or the union in the development of its plans for the Post Office. It kicked the union representatives off the board of the Post Office.

The Government's policy has made a negotiated settlement virtually impossible. In order to justify the penalties in this legislation the Government should have gone in the opposite direction. If it had done everything possible to arrive at a negotiated settlement it may have a case for such severe enforcement provisions.

If workers do not do as they are told they will lose their positions with the union and their jobs at the Post Office. This reminds me of the solidarity union experience in Poland, and the case of Louis Riel in Canada.

• (2220)

In Poland, people were living under a totalitarian regime that did not allow its people to have a voice in the quality of their life. They organized and developed a union to give them strength. Of course, they were crushed because the government of that country did not believe in hearing from the people and did not believe in the fundamental freedoms that lead to representation in a democratic society.

This legislation echoes that because it is telling ordinary workers, people who work at the Post Office, that they do not have the right to choose their own leadership. That is a very important aspect of democracy.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Do not break the law!

Mr. Keeper: An Hon. Member says, break the law. One of the fundamental aspects of law is the concept of natural justice. Also laws in society are based on the concept of democracy. The removal of the right of people to choose representation removes one of the pillars that supports a democratic society. This legislation echoes the situation in Poland and brings to mind the struggle of the solidarity union.

It also reminds me of the case of Louis Riel in Canada. He was not allowed to sit in this Chamber because the government of the day did not want him here. He was elected by his people to serve them and give voice to their grievances. The government said no. Not only did it choose to see that he was hung, it did not allow him to claim his seat in the House.

This legislation reminds me of that situation because the Government is telling people that they do not have the right to choose their own representatives. That is anti-democratic and fundamentally wrong. The Government may want its legislation to be effective and obeyed, but it ought to have a good reason to justify this provision that will not allow someone to represent others if they do not do what the Government wants.

In fact, the Government has chosen confrontation every step of the way. It did not use the option of a mediator so that it could use this back-to-work legislation.

This provision is unacceptable. Before implementing this provision the Government should prove that it has gone as far as it can to seek an agreement. Instead, it has promoted confrontation and made it impossible to come to a negotiated settlement.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, I think it is obvious to everyone concerned that Clause 11 is, in effect, the Jean-Claude Parrot clause of this legislation. I could not help but think as I read Clause 11 that when the Minister was drafting this legislation he had one person in mind, Jean-Claude Parrot.

The Government wants to crush Jean-Claude Parrot and CUPW. It ought to admit its hidden agenda.

The purpose of the legislation is to get the mail moving again. Traditionally, Canadians have been fair and equitable. They have been understanding when it comes to legislation and punishment.

A minister of the Government of Canada could be convicted of corruption, could be convicted of conflict of interest, could be convicted of fraud, could be convicted of every offence in the Criminal Code of Canada and the very next day have the right to again run for public office. The Minister knows that. Why is that the case? If any Hon. Member of this House is convicted of corruption, some Canadians would ask why that person should be allowed to again run for public office. Not long ago there was a case in Nova Scotia where an individual was convicted of an offence and subsequently had the opportunity to run again. It was left up to the people, through a democratic process, to determine whether or not that person should sit again as an elected representative. That was a very basic and fundamental principle of natural justice of democracy.

If there is one law for politicians, one law for Ministers of the Crown, why should there be another law for union leaders? What is the hidden agenda of the Government?

If the purpose of this legislation is to get the 23,000 postal workers back to work, and the Minister, who purports to be a reasonable man, says that he wants a negotiated settlement because everyone believes that is the best possible solution, why is he provoking the union? Why is he provoking Jean-Claude Parrot to defy this legislation?

Not only has he decided in Clause 10 to provide for a minimum penalty of $10,000 a day, with no discretion whatsoever in the court, Jean-Claude Parrot will not be able to be a union representative for five years.

I want the Minister to stand up and deny that that is who he had in mind when he drafted this Draconian, cruel clause, Clause 11. Why does he not admit that it is the hidden agenda of the Conservative Government to crush CUPW.

It seems to me that the Prime Minister wants to be another Ronald Reagan. Just as Ronald Reagan did with the air traffic controllers, the Prime Minister of Canada wants to provoke the postal workers into a situation where 23,000 Canadians defy this law and are fined these excessive fines so that he can then fire them all.

Why does the Minister not admit to the hidden agenda of the Conservative Government? Why else would he have this clause in the legislation?

I challenge the Minister to show us one precedent that is similar to this law. I challenge him to show us some legislation in the Criminal Code of Canada dealing with politicians. He knows that politicians of his own Party stand charged with criminal offences. I would like him to stand up and tell us whether he believes the Criminal Code of Canada should be amended to provide that any politician convicted of a criminal offence should not be able to stand for public office for five years. That is absolutely undemocratic. It is unjust, unfair and inequitable.

If the Minister is honest and sincere in what he is saying in regard to trying to get the two parties back to together again, I would hope he would withdraw Clause 11. He knows we cannot move an amendment to strike Clause 11. We must simply vote against it or move other amendments that would serve to reduce the period of automatic prohibition for a person convicted under this Act to act as a union officer. Why does he not do the reasonable thing and completely withdraw Clause 11? In that way he will be in a better position to say to the union and to management that he wants a settlement? If he allows Clause 11 to stand, it is an open challenge to Jean-Claude Parrot and to CUPW to defy this legislation.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I am very disturbed about Clause 11. What it proves is that if one wants to have good labour legislation one does not expect it to come from a Conservative Government. What you get from a Conservative Government is bad labour legislation and this is a good example of that. Clause 11 is completely unnecessary. It is vindictive. It has no place in labour legislation which is passed by the Parliament of Canada. It sets a terrible example for labour legislation in other jurisdictions. I sincerely hope that the Minister will in fact reconsider the inclusion of this clause in the Bill and will in fact withdraw it.

The reason one gets bad labour legislation from Conservatives is precisely because there is always a strong element within a Conservative caucus, and within the Progressive Conservative Party, that wants to bash unions, that wants to kick workers around because they think it is okay. The union is trying to have the opportunity to bargain collectively, to speak up for their rights and to exercise some dignity in the workplace. Here we have an example of the Government going even further and withdrawing rights which ought to pertain to any person, that is the reasonable right to be considered on a reasonable basis and not to lose one's livelihood because of some set of circumstances which are laid out in Clause 11.

I would like to talk about the specifics of the clause. What it says is that if any worker is convicted of doing certain acts that are outlawed by the Bill he can be prevented from being an officer or a representative of the union for five years thereafter, and he can also be prevented from working for Canada Post for the next five years. A five-year loss of one's work is a penalty which in dollar terms is $150,000 or $125,000 in lost income, depending on the individual's wage rate. Of course, it works out to be far more than that because it may force the individual to move. He may not have other opportunities. It is, as other speakers have said, a Draconian penalty.

One has to ask what are the circumstances under which this might actually arise? I was thinking, for example, of what happens in a situation in Winnipeg, or in the Alta Vista terminal in Ottawa when an individual postal worker, who is a shop steward or an officer of the local CUPW executive, and who works in a situation which has been heating up because of unreasonable actions taken by a supervisor who has been harassing employees and giving orders that are unreasonable, or in other ways creating difficult situations, and the situation explodes and a bunch of workers walk off the job in a wildcat strike? The individual who was an officer of the local had no part in that but he is then in the situation that if he goes to the outside of the plant, even for five minutes, in order to persuade the workers that perhaps they had better come back in and cool off, he can be guilty of participating in the strike and convicted for that act of trying to maintain labour harmony in his particular workplace. He can not only be denied from working with the union for five years but can also lose his job for a minimum of five years. Of course, he will never get it back because he will be simply written off after that by Canada Post.

What kind of need is there for this? There are fines already in the Bill for violations of the Act. They have been used before in back-to-work legislation. They are objectionable but, nonetheless, at least there is an established precedent for them.

We are talking not of a matter of applying this to a short period of time when there might be some high tempers. In fact, the Government has already agreed to delay the back-to-work features so that there is a certain period of time, although not long, for people to get back to work rather than being forced back to work the minute the Bill is proclaimed tomorrow, or whenever that may happen to occur. Therefore, why add this clause? Why go with this needless provocation? Is it really because the Government wants to set RCMP undercover agents to work in postal terminals to harass the leaders of the postal workers union in different places, provoking them into calling a strike or taking some other action and then forcing them out of their job? Is that what the Government has in mind? We have seen this used in the Province of Quebec.

We have just seen in the Province of Quebec how the Government has used agents provocateurs who worked for a union and actually recommended or directed activities which proved to be illegal. Does the Government intend to recruit such agents who will work as agents provocateurs and find ways to oust from his position Mr. Jean-Claude Parrot and have him found guilty under the legislation for having violated the legislation.

[English]

Is that what the Government has in mind? I do not know. I cannot justify this particular part of the legislation being in force at all. The representative of the Liberal Party suggested we should take the five-year provision and cut it down to three days. If someone was convicted, they should be denied the opportunity to work for Canada Post for three days. There are provisions in the collective bargaining agreement for grievances, for suspension, for acts of discipline, to be exercised by Canada Post. There is a whole structure under which those disciplinary acts can in fact be grieved if the employee finds them to be unreasonable. Those disciplinary acts can include suspensions for certain periods of time. There is an established manner of procedure.

I do not mind that being in the practice of labour-management relations, but whether it is five years or three days, I do mind, and my Party objects as well to the idea that we enshrine this principle in the law through passing Clause 11. That is why, with regret, I say to the representatives of the Liberal Party that we cannot support that particular amendment. It is not a good amendment because it is not a good clause. It is not a good part of the Bill and it should be taken away completely.

I wonder what has led the Government to this desire to try and bash the postal workers by every device possible? We now know that even a free trade agreement cannot bring the Conservatives up in the polls. They are now trying to bash postal workers because they are old whipping boys for the Liberals and now for the Conservatives and perhaps that is what they will use in order to try to bring themselves up in the polls. But it is just not going to wash.

I know from the calls I am receiving that there are people who are concerned about postal services. That is a very natural concern. They are asking themselves what are the options? Why is it that Canada Post is so intent on eliminating 4,200 jobs over the course of the next few years? Why is it that Canada Post is trying to turn these jobs into jobs that pay only $4 or $5 an hour? Why has Canada Post refused to look at ways in which it can broaden and expand its services rather than limiting them?

Someone called me the other day and asked me what ideas I had in mind. I said, for example, that I would like to be able to go down to my neighbourhood post office or to the central post office in Ottawa and use a facsimile machine to send material to another post office anywhere in the country. I could phone someone in an office there and say, "Look. I am sending you the material you want by facsimile. It will be there in 10 minutes. Go and get it". Within a half an hour I could take something from my desk and have it on the desk of someone with whom I am doing business anywhere in the country. That is a very valuable service. It does not now exist, but it could be offered through every main Canada Post terminal. But the Government says, "Let's close those terminals. We will put those services into neighborhood stores and close those terminals".

Over the course of the last century and a half we have had the postal service as one of the elements that has linked this country together.

The Government is now saying, "We want to run trucks, carry mail bags on airplanes, but we do not want to have Canada Post personnel actually relating to the customers and giving them service. That is something the Government should avoid. We are going to make this into an invisible service where people go to a supermailbox to get their mail, where they put there mail into a box, where the service is all carried out by machines or else by people who are franchisees or acting as agents for Canada Post".

I looked at the document about the commitment to all Canadians which was issued by Canada Post in the last few weeks as it was preparing for this confrontation with the postal unions. It is interesting that there is only one reference to employees. There is nothing in this document at all which is directed, as it should have been, to building up a sense of pride and commitment on the part of those Canada Post employees. They have had that sense of pride and commitment for a long time, but it is undermined when labour legislation such as this is brought in.

It states here that we have established a rigid delivery standard to which every employee is working. It says that we have new and tighter management controls. It says that Canada Post is going to continue to run the Post Office like it was the army rather than like a modern corporation here in the late 1980s.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): We are on Clause 11.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton says that we are on Clause 11. That is the Hon. Member who has the Alta Vista terminal in his riding.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): You are wrong again.

Mr. Cassidy: He clearly supports offensive labour legislation, as do all of his colleagues. If the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton wants to stand up with the postal workers, why was he not there on the picket lines the other day when I was there supporting the postal workers?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: Why does the Hon. Member not participate in the debate?

Mr. Cassidy: One Member of the Hon. Member's Party was there with the postal workers, the Hon. Member for Plamondon. He had no problems being there. Why was this Member of Parliament not there supporting the rights of workers to be protected against offensive labour legislation? It is the duty of any Member of Parliament to stand up and speak out against legislation that contravenes the Charter of Rights. Why does the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton not do that? Maybe that Hon. Member could get up on debate and say why he supports offensive labour legislation like this.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Because my constituents have said, "Get them back to work".

Mr. Cassidy: Under any conditions? The Hon. Member says, "To hell with the Charter of Rights. To hell with labour-management relations. To hell with the labour law. Let us throw that all out the window." That is what the Hon. Member is saying. That is the kind of approach that I find offensive. It is the kind of approach that my Party finds offensive.

The Minister of management should have been acting as the Minister of Labour when he got up the other day. Instead, he stood up as the apologist for Canada Post, defending the fact that Canada Post had failed to bargain in good faith on the question of franchising. Day after day, week after week, month after month, Canada Post refused to talk about that particular issue with its employees who have said, "Let's talk about it. Let's look at it. Let's look at a number of different alternatives". The employees have indicated that they were prepared to look at that and now for their pains the union leaders in that particular case are threatened with being deprived of their jobs for five years under Clause 11, which is the clause we happen to be considering.

The Hon. Member for Gatineau also supports offensive labour legislation, unless she is able to get up right now and say that she wishes to stand aside from this particular thing and ask her Minister to withdraw that particular clause.

Mrs. Mailly: I support the unemployed who deserve to get their cheques. I support them in their wish to get their cards. That is what I support.

Mr. Cassidy: Does that mean the Hon. Member supports workers serving as strike-breakers? Is that what the Hon. Member is saying? I cannot support that, and a lot of Canadians cannot support that. I am opposed to Clause 11. I want to say to those workers who are watching, who are not directly involved and who may be saying, "Well, we would like to see the mails back", of course, we would like to see them back. But remember that we are talking about the principles of labour legislation that apply to every working man and woman across Canada right now. If it is okay for the Government to use this Clause 11, which would allow somebody to be driven out of his or her job for five years because of an offence that could in fact be trivial, if it is okay for it to use that against postal workers, then it is okay for it to use it, as it did, against longshoremen, against workers in the communications area, and against railroad workers.

It is okay to have a precedent which can be used in provincial areas of jurisdiction. But, what diminishes one worker's rights diminishes the rights of all workers. What diminishes the rights of any worker diminishes the rights of any Canadian. When offensive legislation such as this is put into force, the rights of every worker and every man and woman in Canada are diminished. That is why this clause should be refused.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I listened with considerable attention to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. He said in his closing remarks that he opposes Clause 11 of the Bill. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques, has proposed an amendment which would effectively delete Clause 11. Yet he said he was against that amendment. I have some difficulty in understanding the position of the New Democratic Party as it pertains to our amendment to Clause 11.

I will explain to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre how it works. You see, Mr. Chairman, you cannot move to delete Clause 11 because it is against the rules of this House. So what we do is move an amendment which effectively removes the power from the clause, which is what my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques, did. I hope that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has understood the purpose of the Liberal amendment, which is to effectively delete Clause 11 under the rules permitted by the House. How can one be against an amendment which negates Clause 11 and be against Clause 11 simultaneously? I am waiting for some further explanation in that regard.

If we can get back to the substantive issue here, in Clause 11 what we have in fact is a very harsh clause. The Hon. Member for Gatineau will have plenty of opportunity to speak later, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. Mailly: I am supporting you, Don.

Mr. Boudria: We will certainly be here for sometime to come yet, and with the Hon. Member's assistance possibly even longer.

What I want to bring to the attention of the Committee of the Whole House is that my colleague from York South—Weston has pointed out quite well that what we effectively have of course is a clause which, if left unamended, would have serious consequences. What happens, I ask the Minister, if there was a technical breach of the collective agreement? Would that clause still apply?

If the Minister is to tell us that it does not apply, then I ask him which clause of the Bill permits a judge or anyone else from not applying that part of the Bill? I see no discretionary authority any where in the Bill which would allow us to remove that clause if it is not applicable. Again, I ask the Minister, would it not have been more fair and more reasonable to have left that to the discretion of a judge, even accepting, albeit reluctantly on my part, that the Minister would have said for a time of up to five years? At least let the judge do the job of judging.

I have some difficulty at any time that this House places us in the position where in fact we are imposing a minimum sentence. I recognize that it has been done before. There are certain cases in which perhaps it is warranted. But, in fact, when there is a minimum sentence and a maximum sentence which is the same number, and that is effectively what Clause 11 provides— the five-year feature being a minimum and a maximum of five years—then we are leaving no discretion at all to the judges. At least Clause 10, however repugnant it was, left some discretion for the judge, the difference between $10,000 and $50,000. That is still too high in any respect but, nevertheless, there is some discretion. In Clause 11 there seems to be no discretion at all. The minimum sentence and the maximum sentence is stipulated in the clause.

The Minister may say it is all right because the same type of punishment is put on the employer. My distinguished colleague for York South-Weston very eloquently pointed out earlier tonight that to expect that one would place that same type of fine on the management of Canada Post is somewhat of a remote possibility, to put it at best. We all know it will never happen. Instead, what will likely happen is that some day, six months or a year down the road, there will be a technical breach somewhere in the country and someone will be convicted of this offence. They will be punished in a manner which is most unreasonable, and it will not at all achieve what the Minister is attempting to achieve, that is to get the workers back to work.

There is a compromise available. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques has demonstrated such a compromise—just remove the clause altogether. We will still have the main provisions of the Bill. Alternatively, the Minister could change the Bill to state, no less than six months and no more than five years, and leave some discretion to the judge. It still would not be a perfect Bill, but it would be better, or should I say not as bad as it is in its present state. I invite the Minister to address that section. Perhaps at the same time we could get some clarification from the folks to my left as to which side they are on in relation to Clause 11.

Mr. Skelly: I would like to express my absolute astonishment and concern over the situation expressed by my colleagues. We have to go back a number of years to when the Liberals were in power and remember their spirited defence of the postal workers union and its leader. It is amazing how those hypocrites can be converted on the road to Damascus. It was in fact the legislation of the Liberal Party that put Jean-Claude Parrot in jail. That was done by the Liberals when they were the Government.

The next thing to remember is that it was Liberal legislation that shut down the postal workers before the full extent of the collective bargaining process could work in 1978. The Liberals put them away before they managed to get out on strike, and before the full nature of the collective bargaining process had taken place. It is absolutely astounding that the Liberal caucus today can stand up in such a hypocritical manner and attempt to suggest that they are the salvation of labour rights in Canada. That is absolute nonsense. The President of CUPW was jailed by that Party, and in 1978 the rights of postal workers were trampled in the House by labour legislation that was as unjust and as repugnant as the legislation that we see before us today.

It is ironic that my colleague made reference to the Métis situation with Louis Riel. It is ironic that Sir John A. Macdonald and the group who hanged Louis Riel happened to be called the Liberal Conservative Party in former times. That was the name of that Party. We see in essence the same today with the false debate between the Conservatives and the Liberals on labour relations, with the Liberals on their feet in sanctimonious protestation protecting workers rights. They were the ones who actually wound up putting the leader of that union in jail, passing legislation in the House that was totally disgusting.

The problem before the House is that there is a clause in this legislation that is absolutely unacceptable. It breaks the principle of democratic trade unionism. It also breaks a principle of fair play in this country. When an individual has broken the law, the common practice is that a penalty upon conviction is served. Once the penalty established by law is served then the person is free to accept his place in society and continue on as a citizen. Once the debt is paid it is paid. A further penalty is not imposed that goes against basic principles of fairness, and the principle of democratic trade unionism.

Out of this misguided clause, a situation is created from which further conflict and dissension will evolve. If the Government attempts to pass this provision that bars an individual the workers feel represents their interests effectively and competently with management, who is involved vigorously in the collective bargaining process in attempting to extract benefits for workers, there is no doubt that they will elect that individual no matter what it states in the legislation. The basic unfairness of that particular clause will make workers re-elect those individuals.

The next thing that will happen is that the Government is forced to respond to that issue, not the nature of labour relations within the Post Office but to that single issue. What will it do? It will simply put up a trustee, or attempt to put a the union into trusteeship. What other option is there? The union is then put under trusteeship. In the final analysis, this particular clause is one of the stones on the road to breaking this union. That is what has to be read here.

This is another mistake made by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell when he stands up and criticizes the NDP for being unable to support any further imposition of penalty where a democratically elected individual cannot represent the group that he or she has been elected to represent. Three minutes, three days, five years, what is the difference? The thing is that it violates the principle and operation of a democratic trade union. Once the penalty has been paid, the offence is finished, and the individual should be prepared to make his way as a citizen. The Conservative Government is sowing the seeds of further conflict within the union.

It is our hope that the Liberals will fight with us to have the Conservatives withdraw this repugnant provision in this legislation. It is not needed. This legislation has the force of a hammer, far too large already. It is not needed, unless the wish is to break the union and bring more conflict within the postal union and management. If some day the Government wishes to place that union under trusteeship and break it altogether, then the correct thing is being done. Then the Government is totally exposing itself and violating the basic principles of democratic trade unionism in Canada. This is absolutely repugnant. It would be our hope that the Liberals would not attempt to mitigate it, and may perhaps even put an arrow in a future quiver for themselves. They have shown such negative approaches to the postal union before when they were in government. I am not talking about my colleagues who are new to the House. It is the Liberal Party that we all know and hold in such total contempt that I am referring to.

The basic issue is that this clause is absolutely unacceptable and it must be removed. The seed of future dissension is in that clause. The possibility of creating enormous conflict where people will go to jail to defend their democratic rights is sown by that clause. What we see here is the present Government's wish to break that union. In good faith, that clause ought to be removed.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have already spoken on that clause and I did not intend to speak again, but I do not think that I can let the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River get away that easy.

• (2300)

He based some of his accusations about my Party on facts that were wrong. Perhaps it is nice for him to attack the Liberal Party and to blame it for the fact that Jean-Claude Parrot was jailed a few years ago because of Liberal legislation. After listening to him, I am not sure whether he has read the legislation in question. I have a copy of it here.

Mr. Skelly: Bring it over. If it is different from mine, I would be glad to look at it.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to tell him what is in it. I have done my homework. He will not find a jail sentence in that piece of legislation. If he goes back in history, he may be able to find that the union leader in question was jailed because he refused to pay a fine. That is standard in Canada. If a person does not pay his fine, he winds up behind bars. The Hon. Member may want to make sure that he pays his traffic tickets. Perhaps he should get his facts right.

Since the Hon. Member seems to want to shoot arrows, I am going to ask him questions. I have been present in the House of Commons throughout this debate. In fact, I miss very few sitting days in a year. I have not heard his Leader raise his voice once in the House of Commons or ask one question of the Government about the strike. I have not heard him request mediation or try in any way to protect those involved. However, the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River came into the House at the eleventh hour. Perhaps he had been relaxing in his office or somewhere else all evening.

Mr. Skelly: I watched you on television.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): If the Hon. Member has seen me on television, he has seen me moving amendments in an attempt to make this piece of legislation reasonable. I was unable to achieve that. If he sticks with me, he will see me vote against it because I think it is an unpalatable piece of legislation. However, I cannot take that trash from an Hon. Member who does not have the nerve nor the courage nor the competence to write his own amendments, to come to the House of Commons, to try to fight for them, and to convince his fellow Members to accept them.

There is another reason I am on my feet. While the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River attacked us and I rebutted his points, I saw Tory Members laughing on the other side. I saw a grin on their faces. Frankly, I cannot stand seeing the Minister and other Tory Members rejoicing at the same time as they are forcing such a piece of trash through the House of Commons.

I say to NDP Members—and we have been working together on this to try to agree on amendments; we even got the Minister to agree on amendments—that now is not the time for war among ourselves. Now is the time to fight against an unacceptable piece of legislation.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, I rise to join with my colleagues on this side of the House and to say that I am particularly appalled by Clause 11. I am appalled by this Bill which is so punitive and unfair that it imposes heavy penalties, particularly on the postal union. In particular, Clause 11 imposes a heavy penalty on top of the heavy fines about which we heard when we were dealing with previous clauses. It deprives either a union leader or a manager of Canada Post of his or her livelihood for five years.

I cannot help but recall the legislation which we were studying and opposing about 10 months ago when the same Minister was imposing back-to-work legislation on longshoremen. At that time the legislation contained a similar clause, except that it was more punitive toward union leaders if I am not mistaken. I cannot say that the Minister is being more fair by saying that the same penalty will be imposed on management and on union leaders. That is not being more fair; it is only being doubly punitive. It is deplorable.

The Minister has brought in back-to-work legislation three times or so, if I recall correctly, in the period of his jurisdiction. Each time it gets tougher, tougher, and tougher.

It is not that this is a token plan. This measure takes away a person's livelihood for up to five years. It ruins careers, and one can see what that would do to families. It also takes away the right of unions to choose their own officials. We must not forget about that.

I should like to return to a point which was made in French a little earlier by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques. I think it was the point which Mr. Borovoy had also made, that the legislation is contrary to our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I would like the Minister to comment on it and to explain it to us.

If my notes are correct, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques also said that Article 12 of the Charter provided legal guarantees that everyone has the right not to be treated to any cruel or unusual punishment, which this is. People have the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association, which this certainly undermines. They have the right to pursue a livelihood in any province.

I would like the Minister to explain how he can bring in legislation with a clause such as this one which certainly appears to be contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. If the piece of legislation passes, I certainly hope that it will be challenged in the courts.

I would also like to say to my friends in the Liberal Party that we had prepared an amendment which I understand is out of order. It would do away with this clause altogether. We think that Clause 11 should be removed by striking out lines 22 to 37. We do not agree that there should be such a punitive clause in the Bill.

I urge the Minister to reconsider and to explain how he can bring it in when it contravenes the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to add my own comments on Clause 11 which truly shows this Conservative Government's provocative spirit. They started with the hiring of strike breakers. All along, they refused to appoint a mediator in order to force the introduction of this shotgun bill that goes so far as denying an individual his democratic rights to be elected to a union or office job.

[English]

I would like to read into the record a quotation from page 3 of the conciliator's report of 1985. It reads: "If you believe in the collective bargaining system as I do, periods of economic retrenchment are not an occasion for management to beat labour up but rather a time which requires the setting of realistic goals".

The conciliator at that time was the Deputy Minister of Finance. It was not a union member or union leader who said that; it was the Deputy Minister of Finance who was speaking about realistic goals.

Definitely the Conservative Government is not talking about realistic goals. It proposed in 1986 a business plan which the workers who are on strike are against because they are losing their jobs. Canadians in general are against it. Rural Canadians are against it because they are losing their post offices. Urban Canadians are against it because their mail is not being delivered to their doors. Many people are contesting it because periodicals and magazines will not be delivered to their homes at the same postal rate.

Canadians are against the new postal system which the Government of Canada wants. Clause 11 proves that the Government wants to break the union so that it can dismantle and privatize Canada Post.

The Government is bragging about Canada Post, saying that it has improved services. However, there are many places to which people must go to receive registered mail or parcels. One week it is one address, and the next week it is another. If they say that they are improving service by adding more outlets, why should they then reduce services at the Post Office? The intention is very clear. The Government wants to destroy the postal system the way we know it now. In order to accomplish that the Government has to destroy the union and Clause 11 does exactly that with a five year penalty.

• (2310)

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to make a few remarks in the debate. It seems that one of my colleagues wanted to speak on this amendment at the same time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Jong: It has become quite obvious to most Canadians what the Government's agenda is. What we are dealing with in the postal dispute is more politics than wisdom. It is a not a real desire to settle genuine disputes and genuine concerns. There are concerns of the working people throughout Canada not just in the Post Office but in many industries as well, concerns about job security. People see their jobs going down the drain, causing them to have lower and increasingly lower standards of living. Statistics point this out. You can see that actual wages have declined in terms of the cost of living over the last number of years. You can begin to understand the concern and desperation of working people.

What is the Government's solution to this dispute? If it were really up to some of the Hon. Members across the way, I am sure they would prefer to call out the army. They see in this dispute an opportunity to win electoral support, at least they hope, by forcing confrontation. I learned early in politics that the Conservatives, the forces of the right, are not only concerned about who their friends are but who they can succeed in making their enemies. They feel that if they can get working people, particularly organized people and unions, to be their enemies, that will help their electoral causes. I have seen this type of thing in Saskatchewan where the Conservative Party very often goes out of its way to kick out at native people and the poor people on welfare in order to provoke them.

I remember working in a youth agency in Vancouver in the late 1960s and early 1970s. The mayor at that time was Tom Campbell. Tom Campbell as mayor used to provoke a riot around election time because he felt that that would create concern in the local citizenry and help him get re-elected. It is the politics whereby hate can provoke people considered unpopular, then you can help yourself politically. It is a disgusting type of politics. It is the politics of the right that we have seen Maggie Thatcher practice in Great Britain, that we see Ronnie Reagan practice in the United States and now we see the Conservative Government attempting to do the same thing. I suggest that it is not going to work. Canadians have seen though this Government. They have seen through its insincerity, its double dealing, lying and cheating and it is not going to work, Mr. Chairman.

Clause 11 is an attempt to provoke the labour movement and those who are involved in the trade unions even further. It is so obvious what the Government is attempting to do. Fair-minded Canadians will reject this Government, its policies and its legislation. It is phony and divisive and against the nature of the country. Surely the nature of the country is one of conciliation, co-operation and of working through, not the confrontation being practised by this Government. It is not a country where people condone the type of provocation practised by this Government. That is why we will see this Government in power for only a short period of time. It was elected with a very large majority. People wanted an honest change. But what they got was even worse than what they had before. This Government is a passing phenomenon. The Conservatives will be here today and gone tomorrow. This legislation with Clause 11 is another nail in the coffin of the Government.

The Tories are through for this generation, perhaps even for several more generations to come. I urge them as they approach the end of their mandate to begin to realize that the politics of Ronnie Reagan and Maggie Thatcher is not going to work in this country. I hope the Conservatives begin to realize that there are some real problems people face concerning job security. I hope that they come up with some genuine and honest solutions that are needed as we move into the 21st century instead of the type of legislation that we see here which is short-sighted and mean. It will just not work.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, I was not going to say anything more about Clause 11 but I have been provoked by the Member for Comox—Powell River.

Mr. Boudria: He is there in his rightful place with the Tories.

Mr. Nunziata: The Member who sits across the way with the Tories has the unmitigated audacity, nerve and gall to call Liberals hypocrite and to call the Liberal Party sanctimonious. The New Democrats are applauding.

There is a new song being sung by union people across the country. It goes as follows: "Oh where, oh where can Eddy be? Angus Reid has taken him away from me." Where, oh where, has Ed Broadbent been over the last number of weeks? The Member for Oshawa, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Party that prides itself as the Party of labour, has not said a thing over the last week. One would have thought, Mr. Chairman, that the NDP Leader who claims to be the leader of the Party of the working people—

Mr. Skelly: I have a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I am very reluctant to interrupt a speech by the Hon. Member. Could we give him a couple of minutes to regain his train of thought? We would be prepared to have a coffee while he gets himself together.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, if my colleague had read The Globe and Mail this morning he would know that the Member for Oshawa is on the record with regard to this legislation. This kind of gratuitous attack which simply reveals the Liberal political agenda is not appropriate to this debate which deals with serious legislation.

The Chairman: I would ask all Members to speak on Clause 11, particularly the amendment.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, my, oh my, how sensitive the socialists are when we dare criticize their dear leader who has remained silent over the last several weeks. It is amazing what public opinion polls do to socialists. They have a little whiff of power and all of a sudden they lose their principles and morals. One would have thought that the Member for Oshawa would have stood up for the workers, the unions of Canada, including CUPW. Solidarity forever. But no, the Member for Oshawa has wimped out.

• (2320)

The Hon. Member for Oshawa has wimped out because he whiffs power. Enough about the NDP and their hypocrisy and how sanctimonious they are. The people and the unions of Canada know what the NDP and the Hon. Member for Oshawa are all about. The Hon. Member is not there when they need him. He ought to be in the House today speaking on this Bill.

In any event, I have one or two more comments to make about Clause 11. Clause 11 provides for a mandatory, automatic five-year suspension from union activity. It is extreme and Draconian. It is hideous.

When the Minister has an opportunity to rise, and I am sure he will have that opportunity in the very near future, I would like him to tell us whether or not he sought the advice of the Justice Department with regard to Clause 11, and if so, tell us if he is prepared to table in the House the opinion of the Justice Department on whether or not Clause 11 is in compliance with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and in particular whether or not Clause 11 is in breach of Section 2(d), Section 6(b), and Section 12 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

As the Minister knows, Section 12 of the Charter provides that everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment. Cruel is defined in The Canadian Law Dictionary—

Mr. Horner: Is that Black's?

Mr. Nunziata: No, it is not Black's but it is from the Library of Parliament.

Mr. Boudria: So it has to be right.

Mr. Nunziata: It is reputable. It defines "cruel" on page 102 as follows:

> In R v. Buckler, the following definition from the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary of the word 'cruel' was cited with approval; 1. disposed to inflict suffering; indifferent to or taking pleasure in another's pain; merciless; pitiless, hard hearted. 2. Fierce, savage. 3. Severe, rigorous. 4. Painful, distressing.

That is what Clause 11 is all about. I know that many Members of the Conservative caucus do not support the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Notwithstanding, it is the law of Canada.

Section 12 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides that everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment. I submit that to automatically suspend a union officer for five years after being convicted of an offence under this clause and after having been forced to pay a minimum fine of $10,000 per day is cruel and unusual.

Did the Minister ask the Justice Department for an opinion on whether or not Clause 11 of this legislation breaches in any way or offends in any fashion Section 12 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms? Did he ask for an opinion on whether or not it offends Section 6(b) which provides that every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain and leave Canada to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province? Clause 11 which would prohibit someone from working for a union seems to me to breach Section 6(1)(b) of the Charter which gives Canadians the right to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

Not only does Clause 11 prohibit an individual from being employed by a union, it also prohibits someone from working for a union without being paid. If a union decided to appoint an individual who had been convicted of an offence under this legislation to represent the union in any fashion whatsoever, it would not be able to do so. Let us assume for a moment that a lawyer or another individual who has expertise in labour law is asked by a union to represent it in some fashion but that person has been convicted of an offence under this legislation. He or she would not be able to represent that union for five years.

Surely the Minister has considered the hardship that that will cause for the individual and his family. It will be a real hardship for a person not to work for a union for five years if in his entire life he has known no other occupation.

Finally, has the Minister asked the Department of Justice to render an opinion on whether or not Clause 11 is in breach of Section 2 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and in particular Section 2(d) which provides that everyone has certain fundamental freedoms including freedom of association?

• (2330)

In my respectful submission, Clause 11 which automatically prohibits an individual from associating with the union would be in direct contravention of Section 2(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms as well as breaching other Sections of the Charter.

If the Minister did not seek the opinion of the Department of Justice, can he explain to the House why? If he did, will he table the opinion in the House of Commons?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Chairman, we find Clause 11 to be the most offensive part of this very offensive Bill. We seem to forget at times that we are talking about a fundamental right of Canadian men and women to work for their wages and to fight for working conditions and against a punitive plan that will be imposed upon them by Canada Post, a plan which will see people who have spent long years working the night shift relegated to working the night shift again after they had established enough seniority to be able to have a day-shift job at a wicket.

The Government has established a plan that it hopes will eliminate the deficit. It will not do that, but it will destroy the Post Office by destroying the working conditions of the men and women who work for the Post Office. That is why we are opposed to this Bill and that is why we are basically opposed to Clause 11 which is absolutely punitive.

Clause 11 states that any union officer who is convicted under this Act will not be eligible to hold office in his or her union for a period of five years. This is a clear attack on the rights of working men and women to direct the affairs of their own unions and it is an attack upon rights of working men and women to bargain collectively. It attacks the basic freedom of Canadians as guaranteed by our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the freedom of association.

This Bill is right in line with what many Tories think about unions. I recall that when the Hon. Minister of State for Science and Technology was a back-bencher, year after year he introduced a private Member's Bill calling for right-to-work legislation that would destroy unions. It goes back to the kind of attitude we saw under the leadership of R.B. Bennett. After Canadians had experienced the kind of Government that R.B. Bennett offered, the Conservatives were out for a good many years. That will happen again when the next election comes around.

R.B. Bennett, speaking 55 years ago in November of 1932, called for the iron heel of ruthlessness against any people who were speaking up for progressive social change in Canada. That was "Iron-Heel Bennett" and we have the same thing from this Government except some people might suggest that it is a different kind of heel, a "Gucci-shoe heel".

Clause 11 has no place in legislation dealing with labour. I am surprised that a Minister of Labour would bring in legislation which contains such a clause. It is repressive and provocative and will not lead to better relationships between the union and the Post Office. If the Government has any desire for better relations it will withdraw this clause immediately. I urge it to do so in the interests of the welfare of the men and women who work for Canada Post.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I take this debate far more seriously than I think many Members of the House do. When I first saw Clause 11 I, like many Canadians, thought for a brief moment that perhaps the Government was just looking for some headlines by seeking to impose $10,000 to $50,000 fines and threatening workers with the loss of their positions for five years.

However, when we take the mask off this issue and look inside to see what the Conservative Government's agenda has been on the Post Office, we realize that something quite different is in fact going on here. The Government is attempting to paint CUPW and its leadership as the creators and perpetrators of all the problems in the Post Office. That is hardly the case. The Minister responsible for Canada Post privatized many of the potentially money-making and more financially secure operations of Canada Post.

This is a self-fulfilling prophecy. The Government wants to look tough on these issues. It wants to give voters the impression that it is tough and is in control. Anyone who mucks around will get a fine of $10,000 per day and union leaders will be stripped of their right to represent working people. I do not think there are many trade unionists in this country who bought this. Fair-minded Canadians who have any dealings with a CUPW member, whether it be a neighbour, friend, daughter, sister or mother, know what the workers are like.

When one takes a close look at Clause 11 one sees other things trickling out. It just happens that the agreement which will be substantiated by this legislation will run out in the latest month in which there can possibly be a federal election. The Government has carefully calculated so that there is no opportunity for a strike or other such activity in the time leading up to the next election.

Clause 12 deems the entire union to be a person. I have seen this in legislation before, usually in far-right legislation. I think the Minister would like to withdraw this. I hope he does withdraw Clause 11. Situations will arise in the next couple of years in which the management will do things which are unacceptable and cannot be fed back into the mediation process properly. The problem will go to the officers of the union who will have to decide what to do.

Mr. Borovoy, a well known and nationally respected legal mind on the matter of civil liberties has pointed out in very clear terms that this is contrary to the Charter. It is unconstitutional. Many Members of this House were here five years ago when the Constitution Act of 1982 was enacted. The words included in that Act are there to protect collective rights, to protect the rights of trade unionists and their leadership. If such legislation were introduced in Chile or some other such place, the Minister of Labour would probably be the first to say that it was Draconian, that it was uncivilized to bring forward such concoctions.

When you strip away the mask you have some understanding of the strategy with which the Government has come forward. It has cut back on funds, refused to allow a real collective bargaining process to proceed, demanded franchising out, and gradually withdrawn services. In my own constituency we have seen the effects of reducing the numbers of workers. The lines of people coming in to pick up parcels have been lengthened. People are told that they have to buy their stamps and money orders elsewhere.

Mr. McDermid: Don't exaggerate. That's nonsense.

Mr. Fulton: Government Members are obviously out of touch with the postal service in their own constituencies. I know what has happened in my constituency.

The Government is trying to convince the public that an unruly union is the problem with postal service in Canada, that it is all the fault of CUPW and J. C. Parrot. In fact the incompetence lies on that side of the House and an awful lot of Canadians know that that is the case and will not lay the fault at the door of trade unionists or CUPW members.

The Minister of Labour must know the meaning of Clause 11. It is a call to arms to a union like CUPW. If they are going to take an action it will have to be a collective action which will really shut the operation down. They know that the moment they do something their leadership will be gone so any action would have to be much more vigorous, protracted, and prolonged than would otherwise be the case. The Government is setting up all kinds of straw situations. I would describe this as a gasoline clause. It is meant to incite ill feelings by the public toward CUPW workers and create situations in which very dramatic action will be required.

While listening to other speakers, I was troubled by the lack of serious thought which many Members of this House have given to the seriousness of what is being done in the House tonight. The Government may well want to consider why it would bring forward such an unworkable plan. It has put forward a firing squad situation for collective bargaining. CUPW had no possible opportunity to deal in a realistic manner with the proposals which Canada Post was putting forward.

The Government is still tonight attempting to blame its incompetence in providing proper postal service on CUPW which, of course, is preposterous. Through Clause 11 the Minister responsible for Canada Post is trying to isolate Jean Claude Parrot and the other leaders of CUPW and make it almost impossible for them to stand up for their collective and democratic rights. Clause 11 can be described as nothing other than dog vomit and it should be removed from the floor of the House of Commons.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, there have been some very strong opinions on this clause expressed here on the floor of the House of Commons in Committee of the Whole. Members used their time to speak as well on issues which had been discussed on other clauses. I would like to address two points with respect to Clause 11.

• (2340)

First, the same clause was in Bill C-24 that was adopted here in November, 1986. To my knowledge, Mr. Parrot was not a member of that particular union at the time so that the argument of the Hon. Member for York—South Weston that this clause was designed for Mr. Parrot is quite inaccurate.

With respect to the fact that this clause was used before, it is a favourite clause because I am using it again. I remind Hon. Members that there was an inaccuracy in Bill C-24 because, as first drafted, it dealt only with the union officers.

Ms. Mitchell: You refused to change it.

Mr. Cadieux: After debate in the House, it was amended to include the equivalent clause with respect to the employers. The exact clause is here. As a matter of fact, the Member for Skeena said that it would at least be a saw-off at the time to have the equivalent penalty for the employer. That is exactly what is here and he agreed with that amendment at that time.

I do not intend to either accept the amendment or to withdraw the clause. It will stay in this legislation.

I want to correct something that was stated by the Member for Ottawa Centre. I believe the Hon. Member for Winnipeg would agree with me that the clause in question does not prevent a union person from working for the corporation. It prevents the union representative or officer from acting in that capacity but not from working for the corporation since subparagraph 2 applies to the employer representatives or officers. I wanted to correct that. I believe Hon. Members will agree with it.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Amendment (Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)) negatived.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 11 carry?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to Clause 11 because the Minister of Labour has called it his favourite clause.

Mr. Cadieux: No, you have.

Mr. Harris: It is a shameful admission by the Government that its favourite clause is the most heinous clause in the Bill. It proves the Government's attitude toward unions, its attitude toward freedom of association, its attitude toward freedom of assembly and the freedom of people in this country to elect representatives of their choice and hire people of their choice to work for their organizations.

An Hon. Member: Even temporary workers?

Mr. Harris: People do not defy legislation en masse unles it is so terrible that it cannot be obeyed. I am not talking about this particular legislation but about general principles.

The Member for Burin-St. George's, who is from Newfoundland, knows that recently in Newfoundland the members of a union defied legislation because that legislation was considered by the vast majority of people to be unjust and wrong.

Without any suggestion of a massive violation of legislation and before there was even a full scale strike, the Government is imposing back-to-work legislation which itself provoked a strike. But the legislation contains in it a terrible—

Mr. Lewis: Draconian.

Mr. Harris: The Minister considers it Draconian.

Mr. Lewis: I do not want you to forget the word.

Mr. Harris: I must agree with the Minister who considers it Draconian. Perhaps he will speak and tell us how bad it is. The Member for Burin—St. George's will also remember the IWA strike in Newfoundland in 1959, when the Government of Newfoundland outlawed a union and made it a crime to be a member of a union.

Mr. McDermid: It does not say that here.

Mr. Harris: I know it does not say that here. That legislation was decried from one end of the country to the other.

An Hon. Member: Speak to the Bill.

Mr. Harris: It is the same kind of legislation. We are talking about principles but they do not want to talk about principles. They want to talk about ordering postal workers back to work and trying to resolve a crisis that they created.

The Minister of Labour is very proud that it is the second time the Government has included his favourite clause. Perhaps the Government will now introduce amendments to the Canada Labour Code suggesting that members of a union who do anything contrary to the Canada Labour Code will be banned from being officers or representatives.

Now the Government has proposed an equality clause which prevents the employers from violating the legislation. It reminds me of a quote, by Anatole France who said the law in its majestic equality forbids both the rich and the poor from sleeping under bridges on rainy nights, from begging in the streets, and from stealing bread. That is the kind of equality we see in this legislation.

The rich do not need to steal bread. This legislation is designed to support the managers of Canada Post. Why will they violate the legislation when it is their legislation? The Government is simply introducing that provision to show how fair-minded it is. It is rank hypocrisy.

The Government is putting down the workers and saying that being an officer of a union is an illegitimate activity in this country. Unions were built by people who were trying to improve their lot. They were built to protect workers from employers like the people at Canada Post. Unions exist to fight against management that is inept and arbitrary and does not give them a say. The management says it will not let the workers negotiate important matters that concern their working conditions.

Matters of collective bargaining and contracting out are negotiated in hundreds of collective agreements throughout the country. Yet the Government says that Canada Post does not have to negotiate this because it will order them back to work. Not only will it order them back to work, it will use its favourite clause by which it will ban people from being members of unions if they do not obey the legislation.

The Government says it will ban people from being members of the union if they do not obey this legislation in every dot and tittle automatically. There will be no discretion or question. It will be totally arbitrary, following the dictates of the people who run Canada Post. That is what we have from this Government. That is what this clause represents. I said earlier that I was not sure what the worst clause in this legislation was. I am convinced now that this clause is absolutely the worst clause. It is the most horrendous clause because it takes away the rights of freedom of association and freedom of assembly. It takes away those rights from workers across this country. It sets a terrible precedent. We have the Government condoning, first of all, strike-breakers in a Crown corporation. That will set an example for private employers. We will follow Peter Pocklington who set the example for this Government. He did not make it as Leader of the Conservative Party but he is its ideological leader. He sets the example and the Government follows with this legislation. We have Peter Pocklington calling the tune and this Government following.

We have a very good example of the kind of attitude this Government wants to promote in the Crown corporation called Devco. The Cape Breton Development Corporation had a manager who recently resigned under pressure not only from this House but from the Nova Scotia Government, the New Democratic Party in Nova Scotia and the workers in Cape Breton. He is the man who is said to have said to the workers who complained about going to work underground under the conditions that existed in the coal mines: "You fellows should consider yourselves lucky. In South Africa we send—"and I think he used the word "niggers"— "those guys below ground in bare feet". That is the kind of Crown corporation attitude this Government has allowed to exist. Now we have the Government condoning the use of strike-breakers in the Post Office. We are passing legislation very much equivalent to the South African legislation which is imposed on journalists they do not like. A journalist is not allowed to work in South Africa if he says things the government does not like. We now have our Government saying: "If you break this law, we will not allow you to be a member of the executive of the union or a representative of the union or work for the union in any capacity. You cannot even sweep floors for the union". That is the legislation we have before us. That is the example this Government is setting as to how it thinks labour legislation should operate.

It is totally unnecessary. If this Government had any sense it would take this clause out of the legislation altogether. I am afraid the Government does not have any sense. I am afraid the only response, unfortunately for the Government, the people of Canada will be able to make is to vote the Conservatives out of office. That is the only response the workers of Canada can have.

I plead with the Conservatives for their own sake, if not for the sake of the workers of Canada, to take this measure out because it is very bad legislation. It is a very bad measure. It ought not to be any part of a civilized country's legislation in the face of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, freedom of association, freedom of assembly and freedom to elect the leaders of your choice.

This Government as a matter of course, says: "We used it once before. We will use it again and we will use it in every piece of legislation we have". It is the favourite clause of the Minister.

If that is his favourite clause, I would suggest to him that perhaps he ought not to be Minister of Labour. He ought to learn something about human rights and something about justice. He should not condone this kind of nonsense in his legislation, if he wants to have harmony in the Post Office, if that is one of his aims. Perhaps he does not want to have harmony in the Post Office, but let us assume he does. If he is a proper Minister of Labour and doing his job, what he will want is what all the people of Canada want and everyone in Canada wants to have a decent postal service, harmony in the Post Office and a postal service that is efficient and operates properly. If that is what the Minister wants, then he ought to pass legislation that is going to lead to that and not pass this sort of legislation which provokes workers and right-thinking people into believing this Government does not want to have harmony in the Post Office.

Many Canadians believe there is trouble in the Post Office and a lot of them do not know why. This is an opportunity for the people of Canada to understand why there is not harmony in the Post Office. We have two examples. First, we have rotating strikes and normal collective bargaining being carried on. The only major irritant up to then was the Government condoning the use of strike-breakers and scabs in the Post Office. Postal service was operating more or less as it had been before.

An Hon. Member: According to the managers.

Mr. Harris: Yes, according to the managers. The next escalation of this strike was not caused by CUPW. Who caused the escalation? The Minister of Labour caused the escalation by introducing this legislation. Now we have a full strike. Now we have the Government saying that because of this full strike we must pass this legislation. That is the kind of information the people of Canada need to know and understand. It is this Government and the management of the Post Office—which the Government has told what to do—who have caused the disruption of the Post Office.

It is they who do not want to have harmony in the Post Office because if they did, they would not have this clause in the Bill. They would not have the Bill at all. They would have a different Bill that would provide for proper negotiations and mediation, as we have suggested, and they would insist that the Post Office management discuss and negotiate on the major issue in the dispute, and that is the issue of franchising.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, just briefly, the Minister of Labour was speaking a moment ago and I assume he did not want to leave the impression on the record that I had either voted for or supported the clause in the last go-round of the legislation because I voted both against the clause and against the legislation, against his favourite clause.

During debate I do recall pointing out the unfairness of the clause, but it only applied to the longshoremen. It did not apply to anyone else. I said there was an obvious unfairness in the legislation. I do not think that the Minister would want to leave the impression that I either supported or voted for it.

An Hon. Member: Even though he tried.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I suppose that answer would demonstrate what has happened, but my recollection, and I stand to be corrected, of course, is that the Hon. Member supported the amendment that I proposed to make it applicable to the employer as well as to the union. I would doubt very much that the Hon. Member voted against that amendment. However, I stand to be corrected once we check the record.

Because Hon. Members are repeating arguments they had put before the House earlier this evening, that does not necessarily make the arguments more convincing. They become repetitious. We have heard them before and perhaps they will induce someone like myself to use one of their suggestions. For instance, using the words "favourite clause", I was repeating something that was said on the other side. If it is not a favourite clause, it is certainly a clause that has been used before. Unfortuntely, it would not be a clause that would have to be used if the parties came to a settled agreement, which are the best agreements, and which they should have achieved after 15 months of negotiations in this case.

• (2400)

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, if the Minister of Labour is not convinced of the rightness of the cause, then perhaps he will consider that this particular clause, Clause 11, can also be applied in cases which have nothing to do with this dispute. We could have some event down the road a year or two from now in a small postal station or a small postal plant where one of the managers of the Post Office gets out of whack—and I am sure there are thousands and thousands of people in middle management in the Post Office, I do not know what they are doing and they probably do not know what they are doing themselves—but someone runs amok—

Mr. McDermid: Most of the management came up from the ranks of the union. So you are knocking yourself.

Mr. Harris: So we have all sorts of people who could run amok in the Post Office and there is a response, and a reasonable response, by the members of the union to refuse to work, to refuse to obey orders, to refuse to do things that are unreasonably requested of them, or to be provoked into doing something that has nothing whatsoever to do with this strike.

We do not want to give the managers of the Post Office a licence to run roughshod over the workers for the life of this agreement under pain of their being exposed to this type of clause and this type of legislation.

Clause 11 provides that a shop steward, or an official or representative of the union, in that situation does not even have to do anything at all. All he has to be found to have done by a court is not take what the court considers to be reasonable steps to prevent people from walking off the job. We have a brand new code here now for the behaviour of shop stewards who have to take reasonable steps to prevent people from going on a wildcat strike. A judge has to determine that after the fact. If the judge determines that, no, there were reasonable things that one could have done that one did not do, then that person is banned from holding office in the union for a period of five years and cannot work for the union for five years. All of those measures are brought in by this legislation.

If what the Minister wants to do is to get workers back to work, he should have legislation that is aimed at that, not legislation that sets a terrible precedent for labour legislation all across the country. If he has done it before, then shame on him for having done it before. He should realize his mistake and should not do it again. The fact that this clause or something similar to it was contained in a previous Bill is no excuse for continuing it on. I would ask him to do the proper thing and remove the clause.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, it is with some trepidation that I make—

Mr. Jepson: He's crossed the floor. Call The Toronto Star.

Mr. Nunziata: —what a motley bunch across the way. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I am referring to the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Angus: That is because there are no Liberals to point to.

Mr. Skelly: Point of order, Mr. Chairman. Could the renegade from the Liberal Party indicate that he was in fact speaking about his own people on this side of the House.

Mr. McDermid: Well, look at the ragtag bunch.

Mr. McKenzie: Go and speak on your own side. Just go and speak on your own side. I will sit here and you sit here, Bob, and take that seat so he can't sit down. The day I will tolerate that stuff over here—

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege. We are debating a piece of legislation here in the House of Commons dealing with back-to-work legislation. We are in Committee of the Whole. We are entitled to sit in whatever seat we wish to sit that happens to be vacant. I am not sitting in my regular seat, nor is the Hon. Member who assaulted me a few moments ago. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Hon. Member to stand and to apologize. If he is not prepared to stand and to apologize, then I would ask that you take the appropriate action, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McKenzie: I would suggest you never come over to this side again. Just stay on your side and you speak there and I will speak here, as will the rest of us.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, we are in Committee of the Whole and I believe that this matter would best be dealt with when we return to the House in proper forum. I do believe it is a proper matter of privilege and that it should be dealt with by the full House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: The Chair will report on this matter to the full House.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: On debate. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston.

Mr. Nunziata: Could I have some explanation as to what you mean by reporting to the full House, Mr. Chairman? I would ask that the matter be dealt with by the House. The Hon. Member assaulted me while I was speaking. It is an offence under the Criminal Code of Canada to assault another individual. It shows contempt, Mr. Chairman, for this Parliament for one Hon. Member to assault another Hon. Member while that Member is speaking. Obviously, the Hon. Member does not show any remorse for his actions and I would ask that he be properly dealt with by the House of Commons.

Mr. McKenzie: With the greatest of pleasure!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Chairman, I believe also that you would be well advised to report to the full House about what happened, which was clearly a breach of privilege, mentioning clearly that when the Hon. Member for York South—Weston spoke from a seat other than his own, namely, from the seat of the Deputy Prime Minister, the seat was vacant. In that respect he was entitled to speak from that seat. By the way, while I am on my feet, I have come to realize that the seat is still vacant, as far as I am concerned, since the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine does not really appear to be with us tonight.

Mr. McDermid: That really helps the situation.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You ought to take that into account, too.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, you have suggested that you will report to the full House tomorrow. I can assure you that we will co-operate in those proceedings. I would suggest, that in the interests of all, that we proceed with the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Chairman, I must say that the Minister of Labour in his response to our Member, who outlined in considerable detail some of the inadequacies with respect to this clause, presented no sign of backing off, no sign of attempting to compromise. I cannot understand why it is that the Minister is not prepared to listen to what is obviously a cogent argument, an argument which has been well put, an argument which clearly carries a great deal of weight. I ask the Minister to tell us why it is that he is not prepared to make those sorts of changes.

I also ask the Minister to tell us why he was not prepared to take the suggestion by the trade union involved to appoint a mediator separate from arbitration? Before we move to final consideration of this clause, I also ask the Minister to tell us what possible justification he personally feels that he can put forward for such a vicious action against members of legal trade unions as is suggested in this clause of the Bill? I ask the Minister to respond to those issues before we move to a vote.

Mr. Cadieux: With respect to the arguments that were put forward by the Hon. Member for St. John's East, I agree with the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor that the arguments were well put, and I am sure well thought out. I am sure that the Hon. Member for St. John's East meant what he put forward. He is entitled to his opinion, and I respect it. I have already indicated to the House that he did not convince me, nor was I convinced during the debate on Bill C-24 when we discussed the same clauses which applied to both the employer and the union, not only to the union as there seems to be a temptation to indicate. I will not withdraw the clause.

Mr. Langdon: There were two other points that I raised that I would like to hear from the Minister on before we move to a vote on this crucial clause. This clause has somehow come to signify to people exactly how far and how hard the Conservative Party is prepared to move against the trade union movement in this country.

I ask the Minister if he will respond to the question which a great many people have asked in this country, and certainly a great many members of CUPW have asked me on picket lines, why was the Minister not prepared to appoint a mediator at least to explore the possibility of avoiding this Draconian piece of legislation?

Mr. Cadieux: With all due respect, I have answered the questions on the mediator-arbitrator when we dealt with Clause 7.

Clause agreed to: Yeas, 37; nays, 17.

Clause 12 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 13 carry?

On Clause 13—Coming into force

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I wish to say that there is a problem with Clause 13. If one looks at the Bill, one will find in Clause 4 that both union officers and management have obligations. If Clause 13 is left as is, those obligations would have to be carried in a very short period of time. Clause 13 has to do with the coming into force of this Act, and it states:

> This Act shall come into force on the twelfth hour after the time at which it is assented to.

If one returns to Clause 4, it states:

> 4. (1) The union and each officer and representative of the union
> (a) shall, forthwith on the coming into force of this Act, give notice to the employees that, by reason of the coming into force of this Act, postal operations are forthwith to be continued or resumed—

When one reads Clause 4, one realizes that each and every member of the union, and each and every worker has to be notified by the union leadership and informed of the passage of this Bill. They have to be told that postal operations are to resume, and told to return to work. The Minister has agreed to this, and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill has devised an amendment to correct this. He has also agreed that the 12 hour period is certainly too short for the mammoth task of reaching 23,000 card-carrying members across the country to give them the message. They are scattered all over the place, and the problem is all the greater since it seems that the coming into force of this legislation will happen over the weekend. We have negotiated with the Minister and the three Parties to find a solution and make this more reasonable.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill, has done a lot of work on this. I think that he would be happy to claim paternity of the amendment. I am willing to let him have paternity if he agrees to let me have maternity, because I had something to do with the gestation of this baby. I do not know if my friend has a copy of the amendment with him, or if he wants to read it into the record. I think that I have given the rationale for the amendment, and I will leave the floor to my colleague who represents the riding of Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: I thank the Hon. Member for that gracious introduction. I will move the motion:

> That Bill C-86 be amended in Clause 13 by striking out lines 41 to 43 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:
> "13. This Act shall come into force on the day immediately after the day on which this Act is assented to, but not before the twelfth hour after the time at which it is assented to.

The Chairman: The Chair finds the amendment in order. Shall the amendment carry?

• (2420)

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman it is not my intent to speak long on the amendment. It is obviously an amendment on which the two opposition Parties have come to agreement with the Government. It is one of the amendments which will allow the legislation to pass through the House of Commons today. We still do not believe that the legislation is good legislation. We made very evident tonight that we oppose it. There are many errors in the legislation and there is still a fundamental imbalance in it. In an attempt to get some amendments through the House to improve the legislation which the Government was willing to accept from the opposition Parties, I join my colleague in the Liberal Party in moving this amendment and in the other amendment we moved last night.

It is not my intention to speak on third reading. I will ask one of my other colleagues to do that. I would like to point out, however, that this House by passing legislation of this sort will leave a fundamental sense of unfairness not only among the people who work in our post offices but among a number of other people in society.

If people have heard some of the comments—I do not know whether they have been transferred by our electronic Hansard and through the media—by back-benchers who have never spoken in this House there will be a sense that this House does not treat all citizens equally. There is a basic contempt for some of our citizens by Members of this House of Commons.

I do not mean to lecture the House but I do believe that, when we are passing legislation about which so many Canadians feel strongly and which many Canadians believe offends and hurts them, this House and its Members should show more concern about how Canadians feel. I am not speaking about any individual clause in the Bill. We have done that as we went through it. I believe that the comments made by some Members of this House do offend the sensitivities of many Canadians and I do believe that was unnecessary and it will only create a further sense of unfairness.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, if I understood correctly, what is involved is the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) concerning the coming into reflect of the legislation. We had discussions on the matter, Mr. Speaker, and of course we feel it is a worthwhile amendment, so much so that it uses the terms that appeared in Bill C-85—we in agree on that amendment. I would take this opportunity, despite our differences—

[English]

Notwithstanding the differences of opinion that we may have had through this debate, in the Committee of the Whole in particular, Mr. Chairman, I still want to thank my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques, and the Hon. Member for Churchill. We had some discussions which perhaps did not please everybody involved but we had some serious discussions on the possible amendments. I thank them for their co-operation and I support this amendment.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of clarification for the Minister of Labour. I have obtained Hansard for November 17 and 18, 1986, regarding the point the Minister made earlier. When the Minister moved the amendment to Clause 13, it carried on division. There was not a recorded vote on that.

However, the remarks to which the Minister might have been referring appear on page 1265 of Hansard for November 18. They were in lock-out of the longshoremen. Referring to Bill C-24, this is what I had to say about that particular clause:

> Let me deal with Clause 13, particularly Clause 13(2). The Minister moved quickly on the suggestion made in the speech by my friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). He agreed in principle that what is being applied to union officers must be applied to corporate officers as well. I am sure that everyone involved would have preferred that Clause 13(2) simply be deleted. I find no comparable precedent in the last decade of legislation before the House that was solely directed against a union. That is why the criticism directed against Bill C-24 as it now stands is correct. It is clearly anti-union.

I refer the Minister as well to the Votes and Proceedings for November 17, 1986 at page 198. The Minister is recorded as being in favour of it and I am recorded as being against it.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I did indicate that I would stand to be corrected and I take the word of the Hon. Member. That is not the quote to which I was referring. I was referring to the one on page 1267 of Hansard for November 18 which reads:

> —I think the Minister has agreed in principle that, although he will not take the clause out as it applies to unions, he is prepared to apply it evenly to corporations as well as the union. It is a saw-off. I would prefer to see Clause 13(2) dropped.

It was a saw-off and that is what I was referring to.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Churchill carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Murphy) agreed to.

Clause 13, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services, be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? With leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services, be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, since last week we have been hearing many comments on the labour dispute and the legislation now before us. It is important in my view, at this stage, Mr. Speaker that we review the circumstances under which we introduced the Bill and that we put them into context.

[English]

We have been told that the Government acted prematurely, that we disrupted negotiations between the parties.

Let us review the record for a moment. The parties spent some four months in direct bargaining before notifying me of their dispute. I appointed a conciliation officer and the parties spent a further three months negotiating under his auspices. Because the dispute still remained unresolved I appointed a conciliation commissioner and the parties had another five months of third party assistance. When Commissioner Foisy's report and recommendations were released to them, both parties made encouraging noises that the stage was now set for meaningful negotiations. Their actions, however, did not demonstrate their intention to conduct such meaningful negotiations.

The assessment conducted by my Associate Deputy Minister informed me that the dispute could not be resolved through the collective bargaining process short of a lengthy test of economic strength. The Government was not prepared to sit by and watch the inevitable deterioration of the Canadian postal system while the parties engaged in their private battles. There were no negotiations going on and no prospect of such negotiations when the Government introduced this legislation. We had no intention of allowing a national emergency to develop while the parties implemented their respective strategic plans heedless of the effect on our postal system.

We have been accused of causing the escalation of an otherwise peaceful dispute. Every Member of this House is aware of the record of negotiations between these parties. The escalation of the dispute was inevitable as each side sought to enforce its will upon the other. It was precisely this escalation of violence that this legislation sought to avoid.

After reviewing the circumstances that obliged us to table this Bill, Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the substance of the Bill. The concept of mediation-arbitration has provoked a lot of criticism, especially from those who do not fully understand the process. Mediation-arbitration combines the best elements of mediation and arbitration. When the process is used properly, we do not have a weaker form of arbitration but a fortified or stronger type of mediation.

Mr. Speaker, our Government maintains its belief that the best settlement is a negotiated settlement. Including a mediation-arbitration process in this legislation as a mechanism for resolving the conflict makes it possible for negotiations to continue. Mr. Speaker, although we cannot guarantee the parties will settle all their differences through negotiation, we do not want to deprive them of that opportunity. For the parties, mediation-arbitration maybe the only chance they will have to establish a new basis for constructive labour relations, and I urge them to take advantage of all the benefits they will be able to derive from this process.

[English]

We have been criticized for the penalty clauses provided in this Bill. I can only respond with surprise to this criticism because in November of last year, the Opposition passed these very same provisions with alacrity in the case of the West Coast longshore industry.

The record of the parties to this dispute is well known. While we expect that persons who hold responsible positions will act responsibly, we wish to give a very strong signal to anyone contemplating the fines in this case that they do so at their own risk. Personally, I hope that this penalty will never be used. Nevertheless, it is there if it is necessary.

I must repeat that it is never a pleasant task for a Minister of Labour to have to introduce back-to-work legislation. It is an admission that the collective bargaining system has failed. In the case of Canada Post and CUPW, the Government had no alternative but to move to this option of last resort if there is to be any hope of a future for our national postal system.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words to summarize the position we have held throughout this debate on Bill C-86. We have said from the moment this Bill was tabled that there was no national emergency warranting the use of such harsh legislation.

At the time the Bill was tabled and in the days preceding its tabling, there was little violence on the picket lines. The mail was moving and the mail is still moving, as a matter of fact. That is what the Government has claimed throughout this period.

We said that mediation would have been the right approach for the Government to have taken. We called for it, the workers called for it, but the Government refused. It chose to use a tougher approach.

The Minister has just repeated that at the time the legislation was tabled, there was no more negotiation between the parties, but the Minister fails to recognize that even before the legislation was tabled, 75 per cent of the clauses in the collective agreement had been agreed to by the parties. One cannot say that the bargaining process was not working.

[Translation]

I think it is clear and should be clear to everyone that the score of the strike expanded as soon as Bill C-86 was tabled. What had previously been a series of rotating strikes, never on the same day and never in the same location, moving across the country, has now become a national strike. Violence has started to surface, and there is more and more of it. I think we will have to realize that the Government is at least partly responsible for events that have occurred since the Bill was tabled. We have discussed the use of strike breakers several times since the beginning of the dispute.

[English]

The use of scabs had the expected results. When the unemployed are pitted against regular workers who are trying to protect their livelihoods, their daily bread, their regular jobs, it is very hard to expect that violence will not take place.

Now that the Government has acquired experience and practice in using scabs, replacement workers, on two occasions, may I suggest that the Government put this experience into practice by appointing replacement Tory Members of Parliament to replace those Members who were speechless during the entire debate. I make one exception. I must give the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) credit for rising in the House and at least reading a press release into the record. The rest of them were all watching, nodding and approving of the harsh, unusual penalties. Maybe what this country needs from now on is a herd of scab Tory MPs to represent the people of more than 200 ridings in Canada.

The Government has stuck to the hard line. Throughout this debate, the Minister has refused to amend Clause 10 which contains unusually harsh penalties and very heavy fines. He has refused to move on the five-year off-the-job penalty contained in the horrendous Clause 11. We think this is wrong. We think that this alone would be cause for us to vote against the legislation.

[Translation]

However, I must give the Minister credit for accepting two amendments from the Opposition, one to amend Clause 7 that will give the mediator-arbitrator a free hand and let him make his own decisions without considering the report by the conciliation-commissioner Foisy, which we think was not a fair report, and the Minister also deserves credit for accepting an amendment to Clause 13, which of course concerns the effective date of the Bill and will simplify the Union's task of reaching its 23,000 members. However, we still feel it is not enough, and I am sorry to say our Party will have to vote against the last stage of this Bill. My only hope is that when subsequent legislation is introduced in this House, the Government will have an opportunity to reflect on the inflexibility of the Bill before the House today, and I hope today's experience will not be repeated.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before I address the legislation, I wish to say a few words of thanks on behalf, I am sure, of all Hon. Members, to those who help us do our jobs, the staff of the House of Commons, for aiding us this evening. I wish to thank the security staff, the Hansard reporters, all of the pages, the Clerks, the officers of the House, the console operators, the bus drivers and the television operators. On behalf of all Hon. Members, I would like to thank them for their efforts to make this session possible.

Mr. Keeper: I will come directly to the legislation because I do not want to speak too long. There are, however, a few key points which must be made. The Government has presented the notion that if only the parties to the dispute had negotiated in a reasonable fashion and come to an agreement it would not have had to act, that it would have sat back and allowed the natural collective bargaining process to take place. Is it accurate to say that the Government has been at arm's length from these negotiations, that it has not been at the table? Let us examine in brief what has happened in these negotiations to see whether that stands up to any objective test of reality.

When the Government introduced the legislation which we are presently debating the result was to turn a series of rotating strikes, during which the mail was being delivered, into a national strike. By introducing its back-to-work legislation the Government provoked a national strike. How can it claim to be at arm's length when the introduction of this legislation provoked the national strike and, having driven the working people to the wall, provoked the violence which we have seen on television during the last few days, violence for which the Government has sought to blame the Opposition?

Before the Government brought in this legislation it threatened, day after day, to introduce back-to-work legislation. The impact of that was to remove the incentive of the management of the Post Office to negotiate. It told management to sit quietly on its duff and do nothing, that it would bring in legislation to impose an agreement that management wants because management is trying to impose the Government's plan. How can the Government say that it is at arm's length from the negotiations when its constant threats of back-to-work legislation prevented negotiations?

There is more, Mr. Speaker. Did the Government use all of the options at its disposal in order to keep the mails moving until a negotiated settlement was arrived at in order to have good labour relations at the Post Office? Not at all. One of the Government's crucial failures in this situation was a failure to use a mediator. It failed to have an objective third party sit at the table to facilitate communications and attempt to solve the problems in order to arrive at a negotiated settlement. The Government threw that option aside and in its place put a new two-headed monster called a mediator-arbitrator, a concept which was originally introduced by the Liberal Party when it was in Government. That concept destroyed the notion of mediation.

Mr. Cassidy: An oxymoron.

Mr. Keeper: With regard to one of the key issues, the public policy with regard to franchising, the Government refused to be flexible. We are against the policy of franchising, not only because it threatens job security but because it also threatens service to the public. If the Government wanted to be pigheaded and continue with the policy, it did not need to be rigid. It could have been flexible in order to arrive at a negotiated settlement.

During the negotiations the negotiator said categorically that he would not compromise on franchising. Taking that position on the cue of the Government he made a negotiated settlement impossible. How can the Government claim it was at arm's length from these negotiations?

Rather than being at arm's length it was the pupeteer pulling the strings on both sides of the table. It was ensuring that management was rigid and would not negotiate at the same time as provoking a national strike and promoting the violence which appeared on television. Rather than being at arm's length from the negotiation the Government was manipulating the situation. It was the pupeteer who led to this dispute.

The Government did that in order to impose its plan for the Post Office. Is that plan worth it? Its plan waters down the delivery dates of mail so that it will still take eight days to get mail across town. The Government's plan attacks rural service and the wages of women. It undermines the concept of bilingual service through the franchising out of postal service. It treats suburban residents in an arbitrary fashion by giving service to one street while a neighbouring street does not get home mail delivery.

The Government's claim that it was at arm's length and only intervened because the parties could not come to an agreement is hollow. We have made that case and it is evident to every Canadian who has been observing the negotiations that the Government was the pupeteer manipulating the situation. The Government created the false crisis in order to justify this legislation.

This legislation is unjustifiable. The Government should have been been preparing the climate for negotiations rather than seeking confrontation in order to justify bringing in back-to-work legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Cadieux) which was agreed to on the following division:

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Deputy Prime Minister) moved that Bill C-83, an Act to amend the Senate and the House of Commons Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, all Members of the House can be proud of the success of parliamentary reform. That parliamentary reform has taken place not only in terms of the changes to the Standing Orders, but also in terms of the duties which all Members of Parliament perform on behalf of their Party and on behalf of the House.

These additional duties refer to the standing committee chairmen, the panel of chairmen who deal with legislative committees, as well as to the House Leaders' offices, the Deputy House Leader, the Party Whips and the caucus chairmen.

Under those circumstances, the Government has brought forward Bill C-83 after full and complete discussions with the other Party House Leaders. This Bill was introduced in June of this year but was not proceeded with at that time. There has been full discussion with the other Parties and it is my understanding that all three Parties will support this Bill.

It is not our intention to debate it at any length and we would ask that there be unanimous consent that it go to Committee of the Whole and be dealt with expeditiously as soon as second reading is completed. It is also my understanding that no recorded division will be requested.

This Bill is recognition of the work-load that all Members of Parliament take on in addition to their duties as Members. It impacts on the time they have available for those duties and impacts upon the time they have in their ridings. For those reasons, it was the opinion of Members of all three Parties that they should be compensated for undertaking those duties. I commend this Bill to the House and appreciate the support and encouragement of my colleagues.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm what the Government House Leader has said with regard to the extensive consultation about this Bill among all the Parties. I also want to confirm that we are in agreement with the procedure that the Minister has proposed for dealing with the Bill.

It has become apparent that one of the results of parliamentary reform that was put into effect some months ago has been the development of not just a more extensive and active committee system but one that involves a large number of meetings. The committee chairpersons are required not only to preside over the committee meetings but to do a lot of the behind-the-scenes organizational work. The system created as a result of the parliamentary reform, which has been effective, has resulted in many layers, if I may describe it that way, which make demands of the committee chairpersons that were not made before.

It is clear that the development of the system of the House of Commons as a result of these rule changes has placed additional duties on a number of people. There are precedents for what is proposed in this Bill in what already exists in a number of the provincial legislatures.

Due to the intent or spirit of the reports on parliamentary reform, which have been well received in the House, due to the changes in the rules to which the House has agreed, and the additional work-loads that have developed as a result, and due to the precedents which exist in a number of the provincial legislatures, I think that the Bill presented by the Deputy House Leader (Mr. Lewis) should be supported. We are ready to concur with the procedure which he has suggested.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to indicate, on behalf of my Party, support for Bill C-83. Although this Bill was introduced by the Government, as it should be, it actually flows from the recommendations of two committees of this House. A Special Committee of the Board of Internal Economy studied the matter for some time, particularly with regard to practices in various provincial legislatures and other parliaments around the world.

If we are to take seriously the recommendations for parliamentary reform we must recognize that the responsibilities of certain Members have increased tremendously, particularly those who chair committees. I believe that all Members understand that putting more emphasis on the work done by committees has resulted in a significantly increased work-load for committee members as well as committee chairpersons. For those reasons the Board of Internal Economy felt that the provisions of this Bill were appropriate.

The provisions of this Bill flowed also from the recommendations of the Committee on Management and Members' Services which studied the involvement of Members as they assumed the role of chairpersons of committees and held special positions within their caucus organizations.

Discussions have taken place and Parties have examined this legislation and taken positions on it. I support the comments made by the two previous speakers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the Bill be referred to Committee of the Whole?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, read the third time and passed.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, September 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, allow me to get squared away because I am a little awkward on my feet.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On a previous occasion in this House when one of my colleagues was in a similar situation the House gave him permission to speak from his seat. If the Member is interested, perhaps we could give him the same opportunity.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the offer. I may indeed take advantage of it before my 20 minutes are up. Having spent eight years in this Chamber I am used to trying to deliver my speech while on my feet, and I would like to at least start that way.

I would like to tell Members of the House, the people in the Gallery, and those watching us on television that I am especially happy to be here today. Except for the benefit of a seat-belt on Sunday I am absolutely certain I would not have this opportunity to speak to this Bill. I commend the use of seat-belts to those who sometimes get a little lazy in that area, as I think we all do from time to time.

My accident occurred between Geneva and Lausanne. I was in Switzerland because I had spent the previous week as a member of the Canadian delegation to the Executive Committee of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. This organization is made up of countries and delegations from around the world that are concerned about the issue of refugees and what this Parliament is about to do with regard to refugee legislation.

It was particularly exciting to be at that meeting in Geneva because once again, in keeping with the spirit of the UNHCR decision to award us the Nansen Medal a year ago, the Canadian delegation was in the forefront of changing patterns and changing trends. We are viewed in the international community as a leading nation, if not the leading nation, when it comes to humanity, compassion and concern for the refugees of this world.

There has been so much discord within our country. Very eminent Canadians have spoken out against this legislation. Members of the Opposition and, indeed, one or two members of my own Party have spoken with conviction, passion, and concern against the legislation.

• (1020)

I was able to spend hours in Geneva with those who are considered to be world-wide legal experts in the United Nations High Commission for Refugees. I spent time with the Commissioner himself, with the Deputy Commissioner, with delegations from every nation in the world concerned about the Canadian legislation. There is no other conclusion possible than that this is the finest Immigration Act, that these amendments proposed by Bill C-55 will give us the finest system in the world. Nobody else comes close. As one goes to those other people and asks them to show us another nation that will provide in legislative form the rights and privileges for true refugees, they cannot come up with one.

This Chamber during third reading debate and, hopefully, the members in the other place will put this legislation into place quickly. It is indeed the model for the rest of the world to follow.

How did we come to the discord? In part, the original drafting was flawed. It is a complex piece of legislation. It is part of an over-all Immigration Act. There were mistakes made in the original drafting. People have not caught up with the reality that Members of this Chamber called the most expert witnesses in the country, questioned them, listened to them and amended that original drafting. Well over 50 amendments were made. The Bill that we will be voting on shortly, I hope, and sending to the Senate, has to be seen not in its original form but as an amended Bill.

We have to pay tribute in the House to the members who served on that legislative committee with diligence, compassion, caring and skill. We have to pay tribute to the non-governmental organizations in the community which took the time and the trouble to come to tell us what they saw or did not see in the Bill. The group we often overlook is the task force itself, some of whose members have worked on this problem for four or five years, through two different Governments, trying to arrive at changes that would work. They have worked long, hard and with great skill.

But in the process of consultation discord was created. Many members of the NGO community have a great deal of difficulty trusting the bureaucracy, the civil servants in the Immigration Department. With the passage of time many people in the Immigration Department have a great deal of difficulty trusting those leaders in the NGO community. The relationship has degenerated into a slanging-match. A lot of unkind things are said privately, and sometimes publicly.

I would like to say that I fail to see how any of that advances our humanitarian and compassionate consideration for the refugees of the world. It is a luxury that we enjoy a democracy in Canada where we do have freedom of speech. But what purpose is served by using ugly words, by calling others down and by spreading false rumours?

It has been a difficult process to arrive at Bill C-55. But that process is now behind us. It is time, I think, and it is time, I hope, for all those people who care about refugees in the world to come back together and begin to work together. The cause is just.

If one looks at the world today one will see that not every country enjoys a democracy. Very few countries, perhaps as many as 35 or 36, have systems of Government that we would recognize as democracies. That is out of 160 countries. Even democracies can be guilty of persecution. But in those countries that are not democracies it is almost a guarantee that persecution does occur, based on political beliefs in many cases, based on race, based on religion, based on social groups.

I think we have a particular obligation as one of the world's finest democracies, today, tomorrow, and forever to have an open-door policy, to welcome the victims of persecution. If we want the world some day to enjoy our kind of democracy and our system, then we have to offer sanctuary to those who fight for it in repressive regimes, those who are victims of that kind of behaviour in repressive regimes. If we offer sanctuary, and if other western and other democratic nations offer sanctuary, then the struggle will continue and the world will change. It will be a better place. But the failure to offer sanctuary could spell the death-knell of progress of that kind.

What about our legislation? Why do I say it is a model? Why do others say it is so terrible? I think the biggest difference between us is probably the degree of understanding we might have about the entire system. It is a complex system and it is difficult to understand. Most of the criticism comes about because people look at a piece of the system. They do not have the knowledge to see that piece in the context of the whole.

In 1978 the Immigration Act came into effect. Lying at the core of our current Immigration Act is the responsibility, the power, for the Minister of Immigration to act in a humanitarian and compassionate manner in any individual case. Much of what we have done in the last decade for refugees, and in the decade before that, has been based on that principle in the Immigration Act. Nothing we are about to do in Bill C-55 changes that. That power is there today. That obligation is there today. That power and that obligation will be there tomorrow. It will be exercised.

We heard testimony that today the Minister exercises that power at the end of a chain. When somebody faces deportation from Canada it is exercised. In the new world it will be there from the first day of arrival until the day somebody leaves. There will be instructions to utilize it up front. So when someone who is clearly a refugee arrives undocumented at our border point, having fled persecution, what I think people fail to understand is that it is the intention of the Government, the bureaucracy, and it is the power within the Act, that in that initial interview with the immigration officer a ministerial permit simply has to be issued and the person is inside Canada.

There is a bogyman out there that we will put every single arrival at the border through inquiry. That is ridiculous. It would be an enormous waste of resources. It would serve no purpose to proceed in that fashion. Humanitarian and compassionate considerations will be the first thing taken into account. People will be given permits and landed in Canada when it is clear that they have a legitimate claim to our protection.

An inquiry is based on a decision by an immigration officer at the border point, agreed to by that person's supervisor, that there is no good reason to admit this person to Canada. Two people have to reach the decision not to admit, and then our legislation takes over.

The legislation before us today states that we immediately assign a barrister and solicitor to the applicant paid for at taxpayers' expense. An inquiry will be held in front of an adjudicator, who is like a judge, and a member of the refugee board. There are two decision-makers. The claimant has a lawyer. No country in the world does that. This is still at the point of admission.

In most European nations an officer at the border says, "No", and there is no protection, there is no appeal, there is nothing.

In our system two officers have to concur. When the claimant does not agree, a lawyer is provided, and two people are provided to make the decision. If they agree with the two bureaucrats that the person does not need protection according to the clauses in the Bill, then entry cannot be denied for an additional 24 hours. This piece of legislation provides a lawyer to prepare an appeal to the Federal Court of Canada, a leave application, and a period of 24 hours for an additional appeal to the Minister.

Six people representing five organizations all must agree that this person should not be admitted to Canada. We are talking about quality of protection for legitimate refugees. Is it conceivable that six people representing five different organizations who all agree that this person has no basis to the claim to need protection would be wrong? They do not have to decide that the claim is legitimate and that the person is a refugee. They simply have to decide that there is absolutely no evidence to suggest that the person could be found to be a refugee. That is the manner in which the decision not to admit must be upheld.

I hear somebody state that is very fair. It is more than very fair. It may be too much protection. But it is clearly the most protection in the world, by a country mile. No country provides that protection to a claimant for potential entry into a country.

Once inside the country, as people move through the determination process, there has been a lot of concern about what people call the lack of an appeal. What is overlooked in the discussion is that we have an informal hearing with two members of a refugee board, both of whom have to say that the person is not a refugee before the status is denied. This is an informal hearing which can go on for hours. It is done in a relaxed atmosphere. Claimants may bring anyone to testify on their behalf. They can introduce any evidence. The Crown must provide evidence on past decision-making related to people of this characteristic. The statute requires that that must be part of the evidentiary base.

Let us assume that they conclude that the person is not a refugee. There is no immediate removal. There is a leave application to the Federal Court to have the case reconsidered. The estimates are that it will take at least two months for the court to decide. In the interim, we have the Act itself. There is a humanitarian and compassionate obligation on the Minister, and two months for the NGO, for the church, for a brother or a sister, for a Member of Parliament, for a barrister and solicitor familiar with the case to go directly to the Minister on appeal of this decision. That exists in the scheme of the Act and it is not being taken away. Therefore, there are two types of appeals which flow from a negative decision in terms of the statute that we are providing to the House and to the nation.

Nowhere else in the world today are there those types of conditions; the provision of a barrister or solicitor, the different levels, the humanitarian and compassionate grounds. I ask myself, why do we have such anger and turmoil? Why are such statements made? The answer is that we have lived through a period of history, and we have gone through close to 10 years of the current Immigration Act. The scheme of the Act as it sits without these amendments requires employees of the Immigration Department domestically to keep their hands off refugees. They never sit in on the hearings.

The Department is currently charged with the administration of the Act and whether the person has a legal right to enter Canada. If they decide that he or she does not, they send the matter to inquiry. In inquiry the person makes a claim to be a refugee, and it must be adjourned. Therefore, all the employees of the Department are screened out. The only other relationship that the Department has is one person does an examination under oath. Two, three, or four months later that transcript then goes to RSAC, it is appealed to the Immigration Appeal Board and to the Federal Court of Canada. But the immigration employee, the line officer, today has no compassionate power at the border, and no direction to act on behalf of refugees. They do not sit through the inquiry and hear the refugees' stories on credibility and so on.

Mrs. Finestone: Where is the refugee right now?

Mr. Hawkes: Where is the refugee right now? We have some hollering from across the way as to where the refugee is. Some are inside the country on ministerial permits, some are in detention at border points.

I would say to the parliamentary committee, to the NGO community, and to the Minister that now is the time for the dialogue to be commenced. There is a watch-dog rule on the administrative implementation of this Act. The barristers and solicitors, and the NGO communities have a big role to play. The parliamentary committee through its investigative powers can ensure that the entire scheme of the Act is administered with sensitivity.

We as parliamentarians can urge the Minister to provide that type of direction to the bureaucracy, and we can pass legislation. This legislation is a model for the world to follow. We may reach a day in five or ten years time when we may find some manner to improve it. But it is far ahead of any piece of legislation that presently exists in the world in terms of its capacity to provide real protection to real refugees. I urge this Chamber to move it forward this day. I urge members in the other place to look at it, but do so quickly. Let us pass this legislation and regain our rightful place in the world as the leader in terms of legal protection for legitimate refugees.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) stated that the committee heard a wide variety of witnesses, and that it made amendments following their representations. The point that has been emphasized by our Party, and by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), is that the Government absolutely refused to deal with the fundamental concerns brought forward by the majority of those witnesses.

• (1040)

I would like to read to the Hon. Member the letter which was sent to concerned Members of Parliament from Donald Anderson, General Secretary of the Canadian Council of Churches, dated September 21. I ask him to comment on the substance of the letter concerning Bill C-55. It reads:

> We appreciate government work to try to improve Bill C-55. Unfortunately our deep concerns remain. How can we know if a person claiming to be a refugee needs our help if we do not hear their problems? Each person claiming to be a refugee should have a right to have their individual circumstances assessed and their case decided on its merits before competent independent decision makers. To us, this is the intent of the Convention and Protocol.

Immigration programs may legitimately choose who comes on humanitarian grounds and may set priorities on countries they may come from. We understand the attractiveness of this approach. Bill C-55 provides for exclusion of people not on the basis of their individual circumstances, but by a political cabinet decision that the country they transitted before arriving in Canada is deemed to adhere to Clause 33 of the Convention, that is, it is deemed the transit country will not return the person in any manner whatsoever to a country where he or she may face persecution. This is a far shot from our obligation to give an individual who arrives in Canada a fair hearing of his or her claim to need our protection.

Also, there is no meaningful appeal to any of the critical decisions made which can remove claimants from Canada in proposed inquiries or hearings.

We cannot accept legislation which sets aside a claimant's right to just procedures in the name of administrative convenience. We urge you to reconsider, to abandon this Bill C-55 and to speedily replace it with one conforming with the principles of allowing every claimant a hearing on the merits and a meaningful appeal. There are alternative processes we can surely all support.

I urge the Hon. Member to consider the import of the letter and the evidence of other witnesses who appeared before the committee. How can he possibly say that the committee and the Government responded to their very legitimate concerns?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for reading that letter, and I thank him particularly for referring to the date of it, because it clearly identifies the problem about which I spoke. The Bill was not through the House on September 21. What the Hon. Member has is a letter dealing with the original drafting, not with Bill C-55 as amended. It could not be, simply because of the date. That is the first problem.

Expressed in the letter is the concern about returning people to what has become known in the popular press as a safe third country. That whole section was amended dramatically and drastically in its wording both in the House and in committee.

First, under statute law the Cabinet of Canada is prohibited from naming a safe country unless it complies clearly with Article 33 of the Convention, which is non-refoulement.

The second major feature of the set of clauses is that the return can only be to the country from where they came, nowhere else in the world.

Let us say that people came here from France and France will not take them back. France has been where they were protected; they were not in the country of persecution. If France will not take them back, they proceed in our system. That is what the clause is all about.

One could not go to the world body and sit with those delegations without coming back to Canada with a very deep concern about the refugee claimant in the orbit phenomenon.

Refugees do not abuse the system of any nation, but bogus claimants do. Bogus claimants have a lot of resources in many cases. They take advantage of legal loopholes and they begin to swamp the generosity of people who care about refugees. It was particularly disturbing to see in the Chamber so many amendments being moved by the Opposition which provided advantages for bogus claimants, not for legitimate refugees.

Our obligation as a nation is to legitimate refugees. Our obligation, in world terms, is to kick bogus claimants out of Canada and to encourage France and Sweden to do likewise.

There is a generosity of spirit which is alive and well, but they cannot continue to abuse it, or it will disappear. The willingness of generous nations to help refugees will go down the tubes world-wide if we do not have a system to differentiate between a real refugee and a bogus claimant. We cannot provide an endless series of loopholes for bogus claimants and expect that they will not use them. The people who will not use them are legitimate refugees, because they do not have the resources.

That indeed may be a potential misunderstanding between Mr. Anderson and myself, to some extent. I know that when our enforcement people in immigration catch people who are in the country illegally and bring them to an inquiry, at the rate of about 1,000 per month, suddenly 75 per cent of them claim to be refugees. It is a magical transformation to avoid enforcement of our law. Bill C-55 corrects that. Bill C-55 is necessary to perfect our collective will to do what needs to be done for legitimate refugees.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would point out that it still depends upon the Minister's discretion and it is still at the discretion of the Minister's staff. Furthermore, the Hon. Member did not address the second question which I raised, that is, the whole question of some kind of appeal process.

The appeal process is still based upon questions of law rather than upon questions of fact, so that questions of merit are not able to come forward. I would like to hear the Hon. Member's comment on this vital concern of witnesses.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I will try to give even more clarity. People arriving at one of our border points who have fled persecution have no documents, no papers, nothing. They can tell their entire story to the immigration officer they first encounter. Any action taken in relationship to that arrival must be approved by a supervisor. If it is a positive feeling that they are really refugees, they simply issue a ministerial permit and the persons are inside the country. The only people they take to inquiry, common sense tells us, are those to whom they wish to deny entry. That is what the legislation says. It is time the nation looked at what the legislation says, not at what other people say it says. That is the scheme of the Act and the amendments in Bill C-55.

If we have 3,800 people arriving from Portugal, claiming to be refugees, and telling their story to the immigration officer, it is difficult to believe the story because there is no available evidence that there is persecution in Portugal. When these people arrive at our borders, under the current situation they are here for two years or three years because of all these wasted appeals.

Under the new system these people will go to inquiry and within seven days—perhaps it will be as few as 72 hours—they will have told their story and, if there is nothing to their story, they are gone. They have had appeals. They can appeal to the Minister and move for leave to appeal to the Federal Court.

The inquiry itself is an appeal of an administrative decision made by an officer at the border point. The legislation deals with nothing except appeals and levels of appeals. Six different groups have to concur in the decision not to admit before that person is not admitted. The person has a lawyer throughout, paid for at our expense. No country in the world comes close to the degree of protection offered by Bill C-55.

• (1050)

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act of Canada. The Bill is an extremely important piece of legislation. It reflects, or is supposed to reflect, the heart, the soul and mind of a country made up of so many people who came to these shores either under refugee or immigration status. It sets the future policy of our nation.

I listened to my hon. colleague across the way. I know he is a sincere and well meaning individual and I hope his health improves very quickly. As I see him hobbling out on his crutches, I appreciate the effort he has put forward.

I still remain unconvinced that there is a sense of humanity and sense of consideration for the true, real refugee coming to our shores. That is why I feel so strongly and say to the Minister that if this Bill goes through I hope he will watch it with great care. I hope he will bring the proper kinds of amendments to the Bill so that the three major areas of serious concern; the prescreening; the safe third country and the appeal process, will enable us to be sure that real refugees not bogus refugees will receive proper consideration.

The Member was pleading and discussing the Portugese situation, which only indicates in the strongest way the need for us to reform the immigration guidelines and the need for us to expand the definitions and the kinds of classes that we are prepared to accept in terms of general immigration, namely, the family class and the family rejoinder class.

I do not know what has happened to us in this country. I come from the Province of Quebec where large families were a way of life and only enriched the fabric of society. We have dramatically changed that concept of family in Quebec as we have done elsewhere in North America. That has not been the case in many of the European countries, the eastern countries, the South American and other countries from which immigrants come, and as a result of whom this country is much enriched. In other countries the concept of family is a much larger one. It includes nieces, nephews, aunts, uncles and grandparents.

The sooner we separate out the concerns surrounding refugee Bills, refugees coming to this country and the immigration stream, making it very clear that we are talking about two separate procedures and two separate groups in Canada the better it will be. It may seem as clear as motherhood and apple pie to Members of this House, but it certainly is not clear to the ordinary Canadian citizen.

Mr. Skelly: What about fatherhood and apple pie?

Mrs. Finestone: Fatherhood and apple pie. If the Member becomes a good baker, then that is fine with me. We could trade recipes, but that is not the point.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: The issue is how to bring the important concerns that are addressed in this Bill and remove the confusion found in the immigration stream and that stream which is called the refugee stream.

I find it rather ironic that we are dealing with this Bill in 1987, this being the United Nations International Year of the Homeless. What could be more relevant at the time of the world's focus on homelessness than a group of people, tens of thousands, maybe millions and millions, who are homeless not because of choice but because of instability in their home countries? They are looking for a decent home, a place to set down roots and a place to start a new life for themselves and their children.

This Bill does not answer the needs in the way that it should. Nor does it meet our responsibilities on an international scale. It is not only ironic but it is Machiavellian that we have allowed confusion to exist in the minds of Canadians. People who ask for immigrant status for their extended family but are blocked, who then see this large mass of refugees, who seem by the way in which this issue has been handled to be taking the place of nieces or nephews, it raises anger and ire on the part of our new immigrants. Confusion continues. We need a Government that will educate, lead and articulate that difference between a landed immigrant and those who come to our doors as refugees, allowing the kind of openness to those who have reached our shores in that kind of a situation.

I would suggest that the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) should take a good look at the statistics with respect to the amount of family rejoinders that have taken place in Canada. Given the turmoil in the international world, we have far from kept our commitment, both in terms of the economic migrant and immigrant and the immigrant coming for family rejoinder. I would like to see the family rejoinder category enlarged and I am sure the Minister would too. I am sure there are ways in which that can be done and I hope it happens sooner rather than later.

From a historical perspective I think it is important to take a look at what Canada has done. In the 1960s and 1970s Canada was essentially selecting refugees from around the world and we were doing a very good job. We were very concerned and manifesting a humanitarian approach as we went to refugee camps and selected immigrants. In recent years, during the 1980s, things changed. People are creative and when there is tremendous pressure around them and there seems no way out, they find alternative ways and means to enter a country. Those alternate routes are not always the most effective and efficient routes, but human beings who are looking for a new way of life and freedom in this world do accept terrible risks. That is something with which we need to concern ourselves.

In the early 1980s, as the Liberal Government saw this increasing growth of refugees, some of them bogus, some of them coming here using disreputable representatives, Rabbi Plaut was called upon to do a study and to undertake a serious examination of the needs of having an updated and new refugee Bill. A backlog of refugee claimant cases was aggravated by inaction. Rabbi Plaut said at the end of 1984 that the Government should have acted in an expeditious way to meet the growing concern. Did the Government do that? No, Mr. Speaker. What we had was no less than four different Ministers of Immigration, the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald), the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean), The Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner) and the Hon. Member for Roberval (Mr. Bouchard)—do I have 10 minutes or 20 minutes, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member has 20 minutes. She may continue her speech after Question Period.

Mrs. Finestone: Do you want me to terminate now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mrs. Finestone: I will come back on a historical retrospective after the Question Period.

EDUCATION

MARC GARNEAU COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, tonight Overlea Secondary School in my riding will be officially renamed Marc Garneau Collegiate Institute in recognition of Canada's first astronaut in space.

The school, which serves both North York and East York students, will specialize in mathematics, science and high technology, including computer science and space technology. It will be working in co-operation with the nearby Ontario Science Centre, NASA, the National Research Council of Canada, the Science Council of Canada, the National Museum of Science and Spar Aerospace.

The name Marc Garneau Collegiate was chosen not only to highlight the specialized teaching program but also to provide a role model for the students. It should remind us all that this is the twenty-fifth anniversary of Canada in space, that 50 per cent of the engineers at NASA during the first days of the American Gemini program were Canadians, and that Canadians built the communications antenna and the lunar landing legs for the Apollo program.

Canadians have established themselves as world leaders in science. The students from Marc Garneau Collegiate will be our leaders of the future.

ABORTION

CALL FOR AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, this weekend, women across Canada will demonstrate their strong opposition to Canada's unjust and discriminatory abortion law. Statistics Canada figures show that access to legal abortions is declining dramatically and 18 per cent of therapeutic abortion committees which should be approving legal abortions have approved no abortions at all.

The current law only allows abortions which are performed in hospitals with permission from a panel of three doctors who determine if continuing the pregnancy would endanger a woman's life or health. Section 251 of the Criminal Code forces women to endure unnecessary and dangerous delays. The tragic consequences of this intolerable law fall most heavily on young women, immigrant women, rural women, working-class women and women of colour.

One male columnist expressed what many women feel. To compel a woman to bear a child against her will or to force her to abide by what others define as adequate or inadequate reasons for an abortion is a form of naked authoritarian violence. It is ironic that in this developed nation women must engage in constant struggle to obtain a fundamental right while an international conference on family planning has called on Governments throughout the world to liberalize abortion laws.

I call upon the Government to repeal Sections 251 and 252 of the Criminal Code, to decriminalize abortion, and to introduce a preventive holistic health care system including public community health clinics offering a complete range of health care services, including family planning and access to abortion for women and their families.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IRAN-IRAQ CONFLICT—SUPPORT URGED FOR UNITED NATIONS RESOLUTION

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, a couple of days ago the Iran-Iraq conflict began affecting more of the innocent civilian population in urban areas. An attack on a school in the Iraqi capital of Bagdad resulted in the deaths of 32 and the wounding of 218 innocent civilians, mostly children.

Iran has persistently ignored repeated pleas by various international organizations to put an end to all hostilities. In view of the existing explosive situation highlighted by this incident, and the prevailing concern of possible involvement of non-belligerent third parties, I wish other Members of this House to join me in expressing sympathy to the families of the victims in Bagdad and expressing in strongest terms support for the efforts of our Government to urge the parties to the Iran-Iraq conflict to abide by the terms of the UN Security Council Resolution 598 of July 20, 1987, which will help restore the much desired peace and stability in the region and put an end to the kind of incident that was witnessed in the senseless slaughter of the children of Baghdad.

THE CENSUS

ALLEGED RELEASE OF CONFIDENTIAL MEDICAL INFORMATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I urge the Minister responsible for the Census to refer the Young case of Powell River immediately to the RCMP for investigation. It is apparent that the Minister's staff is not prepared or competent to undertake an investigation.

The charge that confidential medical information taken during the Census was systematically released by Census staff to commercial drug company salespeople must be investigated. The release of this confidential information obtained in the Census is unconscionable criminal behavior and must be stopped. Not only does it violate the basic rights of the respondents, but it seriously undermines the Census and the integrity of all Census takers.

The Minister must refer this case immediately to the RCMP for investigation, and if action is not taken the reasonable course would be to counsel constituents to refuse to participate in the Census.

THE LATE WILFRID MICHAUD, FADOQ REGIONAL CHAIRMAN

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to Mr. Wilfrid Michaud, Regional President of the Fédération de l'âge d'or du Québec, who passed away suddenly Monday night. With his wife, Thérèse, we mourn the loss of a dear friend and husband. Thérèse was proud of Wilfrid, a man of great dedication and firm convictions. Saturday night, he joked about the Senators' astonishment at his support for Bill C-22, the proposed legislation on drug patents. This from the man who lead the fight against de-indexation and who worked for St-Laurent, Pearson and the Right Hon. John Turner!

I promise to pursue the plans for a senior citizens' centre in Gatineau, one of his pet projects. The centre will be named the Wilfrid Michaud Centre. Wilfrid deplored the fragmentation of his army, as he said. We must unite. There are 18 senior citizens' clubs in the riding of Gatineau. Since some of them have few resources, we must pool the resources we have.

AGRICULTURE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON SUPPLY-MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the free trade deal is no deal for the farmers of the constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. Contrary to promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and others, supply-managed agriculture has been affected by the free trade deal. It is quite evident that the win for the Americans is a loss for Canada.

Canadian chicken imports from the United States, for instance, will increase by 20 per cent. Chicken is a supply-managed commodity. The Canadian dairy policy will be affected as well because, of course, Canadian dairy producers will now have no tariff protection for yoghurt and ice cream, products which will be free to come into Canada and will affect the livelihoods of those constituents I represent in the House of Commons.

Very clearly, the people of Canada were not told the whole truth by the Prime Minister and by the Government one more time. They will remember. Yes, they will remember.

EMPLOYMENT

CREATION OF JOBS IN SCARBOROUGH—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, Scarborough continues to lead all of Metro Toronto in economic growth and job creation. In the past year, over 8,600 new jobs have been created in Scarborough, and 7,600 of those were full-time jobs. Over 450 new businesses opened last year, and in the past three years 26,000 new jobs have been created. The largest single employment increase occurred in the manufacturing sector which now employs close to one-third of all Scarborough workers.

Those manufacturers and the workers they employ know that, thanks to the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement, their economic future looks very good indeed. Free trade means that Scarborough's businesses will have greater access to the U.S. market and a chance to compete for some $300 billion worth of U.S. federal government contracts.

Free trade also means that consumers in Scarborough will pay lower prices for the goods they buy and have a wider selection to choose from. The President of the Scarborough Chamber of Commerce welcomed the agreement by saying that free trade will give Scarborough an opportunity to compete in a larger market and, over time, that will help them expand and create new jobs.

Business people, workers and consumers in Scarborough welcome the free trade agreement because they know it will help our city to continue to be one of the most prosperous and industrious communities in Canada.

FORESTRY

CALL FOR REMOVAL OF SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORT TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, Canadians associated with the Canadian forest industry were shocked and experienced a sense of betrayal when they found that the federal Government had decided to adhere to the American request to impose a 15 per cent softwood tax on exports going to the United States. They were doubly surprised when they found this 15 per cent softwood tax was now entrenched in the Canada-U.S. trade deal.

• (1110)

In some provinces such as British Columbia the provincial Governments have increased stumpage rates at the same time. Mr. Ike Barber, spokesperson for Slocan Timber Products Clearwater Mill indicated that the B.C. Government increased charges to that company more than 1,000 per cent.

Mills in provinces such as British Columbia are now getting it two ways—the 15 per cent surtax on exports to the U.S.; and now significant increases in stumpage and other charges. As a result, forest companies such as the Ainsworth Mill in Savona and the Balco Mill in the North Thompson Valley of British Columbia have had to close down their operations in the last few weeks.

The federal Government should get its act together. First, it should remove the 15 per cent tax which has now been entrenched in the trade deal with the U.S. Second, it should put in place programs to assist those workers who have lost their jobs and are unable to provide for their families as a result of provincial and especially federal government initiatives.

NEW BRUNSWICK

PROVINCIAL ELECTION—LIBERALS' SUCCESS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, "Fifty-eight for the Liberals, nothing for the Conservatives and nothing for the New Democrats, in other words, 58-0 for the McKenna team". Incredible but true, that was the score after a campaign conducted by a terrific leader and his team. New Brunswick is now entering the McKenna era, and the energy and determination of the Premier Elect will give the province a new lease on life.

Nothing could hold back this tidal wave, not even the millions of dollars worth of projects announced by the federal Minister for Tourism and Small Businesses. The federal announcements during the campaign only strengthened the resolve of the people of New Brunswick to get rid of the Conservatives.

[English]

What if a federal election were called? My bet is that in New Brunswick it would be another wipe-out; 10 to nothing for the Liberals. Of course, we could not be so lucky as to have a federal election called in the coming year.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON SERVICE SECTOR OF ECONOMY

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Economic Council of Canada did a study which indicated the free trade agreement would increase jobs in Canada by 350,000. It did not take into account the service sector which provides 70 per cent of employment in Canada. Some 80 per cent of those jobs are held by women.

We ask the Government to stop any further confirmation of the free trade agreement until it starts to look at the implications, not just for the service sector but for women. They will be left without jobs, and that is intolerable. If the Government does not act quickly and stop selling our country down the drain we are going to be in terribly destitute straits.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—ISSUANCE OF EXIT VISAS FOR REFUSENIKS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it was wonderful to watch last evening a TV broadcast of Ida Nudel, a long-time Soviet refusenik, receiving her citizenship in Israel. I met her in Moscow in May of this year, along with well over 100 Soviet Jews who have been struggling for many years to leave the Soviet Union. One such individual was Valdimir Slepak. His ordeal and struggle to leave the U.S.S.R. lasted 17 years. Again it was wonderful to hear that two days ago Mr. Slepak was finally allowed to leave.

Before we overly applaud the U.S.S.R. for the release of those two people, let us remember that it is simply living up to its basic human rights obligations. Many thousands of Soviet citizens are still being denied exit visas. I wrote to Mr. Gorbachev this week asking for special consideration for Professor Naum Neiman and Dr. Benjamin Charney. Both have cancer and both have been waiting many years to leave the U.S.S.R. and receive better medical attention in the West. Is glasnost really working? Is it fair?

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—COMPLETE BAN ON TRADE ADVOCATED

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, we have seen in British Columbia this week a battle over the question of apartheid. It seems to me the Canadian Government's words would ring far truer if it would follow up on the all-Party resolution calling for a complete ban on all trade with South Africa.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is no doubt aware that, notwithstanding our commitment to collective sanctions, in the first six months of 1987 we saw a 37 per cent increase in trade in non-sanctioned goods. We have seen an increase of over 3,000 per cent in the trade in textiles between 1984 and 1986. It is clear that selective sanctions are not working.

Notwithstanding the Secretary of State for External Affairs' (Mr. Clark) comments about "sanction fatigue", now is the time to move ahead with full and complete sanctions to let South Africa know that no country in this world is going to tolerate that apartheid racist regime.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ROAD BUILDING—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF TOURISM

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the lowest form of pork-barrel politics is alive and well in the Social Credit Party in British Columbia. On Wednesday night, at a meeting in my constituency, Minister of Tourism Bill Reid spoke to a group of Socreds and said:

> You know that until you get a Socred in here you're not going to get a road through.

When he was interrupted by groans and laughter he said:

> Well, I mean, that's a fact of life. I'm talking to friends, I hope. I mean, that's a fact of life.

The facts of life in British Columbia, as the Socreds interpret them, are that unless people vote for that Government they are not going to get the services they are paying for in their taxes. The facts of life under a Social Credit Government are that unless people support them the whole democratic process has been rendered meaningless.

They would like a one-Party state as there is in New Brunswick. But, that is not going to happen because the NDP in British Columbia is not going to accept the plan of that Government which is to try to turn British Columbia into a system with a centralized Government, and eight satrapies responsible to the Premier but not to the people who elect the MLAs.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—MINISTER'S SIGNATURE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question or two for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, as reported at page 10,000 of Hansard, the Minister said:

> I signed one document. That document was tabled in the House. If there was an error made in the distribution of documents in the embassy, I cannot control that.

I have in one hand a document tabled in the House bearing the signatures of the Minister of Finance and his negotiating team colleagues. It makes no reference to Bill C-22, the drug legislation currently before Parliament. In my other hand I have a different document bearing the signatures of the Minister of Finance and his negotiating colleagues. It was produced in and by the Canadian Embassy in Washington and given to the media. It refers specifically to Bill C-22 and the drug legislation as part of the negotiations material.

These documents are not the same. The signatures are different. The texts are different in so far as one refers to the drug legislation and one does not.

The Minister said yesterday: "I signed one document." Can he explain why his signature appears in different calligraphy, different writing, on two documents?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): That is a very easy answer to give, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member is a lawyer and knows that normally there is more than one signing page for a document like this. There is one document, the document that was signed and tabled in the House a week ago Monday, but there are two signing pages. One was for the United States and one was for Canada. Copies of those two signing pages obviously have been used in the material to which the Hon. Member has referred in the House today.

• (1120)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister still has not explained why the documents are different. Either the Minister signed twice, is suggesting that he did not know what was in the document he signed, or he is suggesting that it was changed after he signed it.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF SECOND DOCUMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): In any case, Mr. Speaker, for two years the Government maintained here in the House that its drug patents Bill had no connection with the free trade talks. Now we are being told in the House that the day before the final version was signed, senior Canadian officials were still negotiating on the inclusion of this Bill in the trade agreement with United States.

First, the Minister told us he did not sign the document. Then he told the House he signed only one document. Now we have two documents, and the Minister has failed to explain why. As I said earlier, these documents are not identical. The signatures are not identical. One document refers to Bill C-22 and the other one does not. The notation of the date on the documents is different.

If the drug patents Bill was never part of the negotiations, and if the Minister only signed one document, who gave Canadian Embassy employees the second document with the signature of the Minister of Finance, mentioning this particular Bill? Perhaps you could explain that.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker we are getting into the same sort of area that we covered at great length yesterday. I will not reply to the same questions for, I think, the fifth or sixth time.

I will say that the Leader of the Opposition has distorted what I just said in my first answer to this question. I said that I signed one document. There were two signing pages, as I indicated in my first response, one for the American side and one for the Canadian side. That is normal. He should know that as a lawyer.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, as a lawyer I always insisted that my client read the document before he signed it.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have two different documents here. The signatures are different. Either the Minister did not first read the document on an important matter affecting the trade relationship between Canada and the United States or it was changed afterwards, or he signed both. We have not yet received a satisfactory explanation.

We have one signature on one document, we have a second signature on another document. I suggest perhaps we should have a third signature on a letter of resignation.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, here we go again. I do not have anything to add to what I said yesterday or to what I said in the first two answers I gave to the Hon. Member. There were clerical errors, as he can understand. As people were collating documents, a lot of loose pages had been taken from the document that they signed, and that I read. I read it very thoroughly because I was intimately involved with much of it.

The Hon. Member is clearly reaching a new low. He is trying to deflect the attention of people from the benefits of this agreement and the fact that it will create jobs across the country, create better jobs throughout the country, reduce prices for consumers, result in a greater variety of goods, result in a great deal of economic benefit, and result in the continuation of our social programs because they are not touched by this agreement. It will reinforce the unique identity of Canada—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Minister but the answer is getting well beyond the question.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister told the Leader of the Opposition that normally there is more than one signing page for a document like this. Those were his exact words.

I take it that the Minister of Finance is saying that he affixed his signature to more than one signing page without first making sure that that signing page was attached to a series of pages representing the agreement which was reached. If that was the case, how could he have been so careless as to allow that to happen? How could he have simply put his signature on signing pages without making sure that the underlying document reflected the whole agreement? Is this not a symbol of the way the Government handled this whole matter so carelessly and sold out Canadian interests?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, now they are really groping.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are groping for the truth.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): They are really groping, going to this length. I signed the document. I signed the document that was tabled in the House a week ago Monday. I think I have said that about eight or nine times now.

All that I can presume from the way the Leader of the Opposition and the House Leader of the Liberal Party are waving this red herring across the trade agreement is that they are not capable of challenging the importance of this agreement. They know that this has protected our social programs. They know that this has protected our culture. They know that this has strengthened the Auto Pact and that this has strengthened a number of other industries across the country. They know that this will increase regional development.

NEGOTIATIONS CONCERNING CANADA-AMERICAN AGREEMENT—INQUIRY WHY MINISTER ACTED SO CASUALLY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has not explained why he signed a document distributed by our ambassador to reporters in Washington. The document included a clause in which the Government promised to pass Bill C-22, despite the fact it had promised the House the Bill would not be on the table.

I ask the Minister to explain why he has been so offhand about this matter, when he himself said that he was in charge of these negotiations. Why is he being so offhand about the negotiations and the agreement? Why did he give the Americans a blank cheque and sell out to the U.S?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is groping again. He does not really know what he is after, he is just trying to deflect information.

I am holding a press release from the Canadian Embassy, dated October 13, which says in part: "At a press briefing held in Washington on October 5, concerning the results of the U.S.—Canada trade negotiations, the Canadian Embassy issued documents which contained an incorrect version."

It goes on to say that:

"The incorrect version of this text had come forward as a draft from one of the many working parties focusing on the major elements of the agreement and had been rejected by the Canadian negotiators. At no time did the Canadian negotiators agree to the inclusion of this text as part of the Canada—U.S. agreement."

Upon discovery of this error—; clerical error:

"—the Embassy immediately issued the correct documentation."

I do not know what else I can say. We are going over and over again that which has been carefully set out by me, by the embassy, and by my colleagues a week ago today.

BRIEFING OF UNITED STATES SENATORS—REFERENCE TO BILL C-22

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My question for the Minister of Finance concerns the same subject. Yesterday when I raised in the House the question of briefing notes that were prepared for the U.S. Treasury Secretary, that made a specific link between the free trade agreement and the passage of Bill C-22, the pharmaceutical legislation, the Minister of Finance on behalf of the Government of Canada again denied the connection. He did so again just a minute ago, saying that the Canadian Embassy in Washington issued a statement on October 13 which said that the so-called connection between the drug legislation and the package was only in an earlier document.

This morning it was confirmed by three U.S. Senators that the briefing they got last week after the final agreement was produced included, as part of the package as described to them, Bill C-22. The offices of at least three U.S. Senators who are on the key Finance Committee are now saying that they have been told by U.S. officials that this was part of the agreement. Is the Minister of Finance now saying that the U.S. Senators are wrong as well?

• (1130)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a press release that was issued this morning by the Office of the United States Trade Representative.

Mr. McDermid: Read it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)): Thank you very much. I will. It reads:

The document printed in Inside U.S. Trade— —which I believe is the document to which the Leader of the New Democratic Party was referring yesterday—

—was a draft, uncleared, staff-level document that was prepared prior to the end of the negotiation and obviously does not reflect the final results.

I think that speaks for itself.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, all this proves is that members of the Government of Canada have been on the phone in the last 24 hours talking to their U.S. equivalents.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CONTENT OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want the Minister of Finance to listen to the question for once and answer it. The question I asked a minute ago was about the final document, not the interim document.

I want the Minister of Finance to explain to the House and the people of Canada why three U.S. Senators—and that is all we had time to contact so far this morning—who were briefed on the basis of the final document were told that Bill C-22 was part of the package? Is he saying that the U.S. Senators are lying?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party has been known to—and I choose my words very carefully—

Mr. Broadbent: You had better.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —misinterpret what some people have said to him. I said yesterday and on Tuesday of this week that what was tabled in the House of Commons is the final document. That is the agreement. That is a fact.

If the Leader of the New Democratic Party is not going to accept that as a fact, I suggest that he stand up and tell us what he is going to accept. That is the fact.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's little homily was indeed touching.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INFORMATION PROVIDED TO UNITED STATES SENATORS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, no one is saying that what was signed and what was tabled is not the agreement. We all understand that. What is at stake here, and has been raised by both opposition Parties, is whether, in addition to what was signed in the final form, there was a side agreement which has been made clear to the U.S. Senators and U.S. officials.

Is the Minister of Finance telling us that the U.S. Senators were misinformed when they were told that as part of the overall package, including the final agreement, the Government of Canada has agreed to pass Bill C-22? Will the Government for once be fully honest with the people of Canada on this matter?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be fully honest with the Leader of the New Democratic Party. Yes, we are saying that we are going to pass Bill C-22. We passed it once and passed it a second time. I will tell any Senator or any member of the U.S. administration that we have passed it twice.

The Leader of the Opposition should try to pull his appointed Senators into line and not try to weasel out of his responsibility as Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Just do your job.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —to get that legislation passed, under the pretext of some change in the trade agreement. If he is trying to weasel out of his responsibility he should stand up and tell us why he is weaseling out.

WORKING PARTY'S REFERENCE TO BILL C-22

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Minister that the only political Party that is operating on pretext is the Party opposite, the Conservative Party.

The Minister of Finance has made an incredible admission this morning in the House. In answer to the question of my Leader he said that up until the eleventh hour, only hours before the document was signed, the working party was including the issue of the drug Bill in the final package. He said this morning that the working party included the drug legislation.

How can he say that here in the House when for a year and a half he, his colleague the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs, his colleague the Minister for International Trade, and the Prime Minister have insisted that the drug Bill was never part of the negotiations? What was the working party doing in the eleventh hour with any mention of the drug Bill in any working copy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at any time in the negotiations the Americans can bring up any issue they want. That is part of negotiating. I have never said that that did not come up in the negotiations during the weekend of October 3 and 4. What I did say was that as far as Canada is concerned that is not a part of the negotiations, that is not going to be agreed upon as part of any agreement. That is why it was rejected out-of-hand as soon as it came to the table.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I gather that the Minister has finally admitted that it was in fact part of the negotiations. Is he asking the Canadian people to believe that in the eleventh hour, three hours before the final document was signed, the Americans came forward with new propositions and the Canadians were entertaining new propositions on an area as critical as the drug laws of our country?

If that is the case, this free trade agreement will give us even more trouble than we thought it would. He cannot even run his own secretarial services.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the other side is sinking to new depths of despair. If the Hon. Member for Hamilton East has ever been a part of negotiations she will know that things come up at various stages in negotiations. Sometimes they are things which have been discussed right from the start and sometimes they come up at a very late hour.

Ms. Copps: I thought you said it was a clerical error.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): This is another attempt to deflect the interest of Canadians from the benefits of this. We are trying to carry forward the benefits that we have brought to this country. We have been number one in job creation, number one in economic growth among industrialized countries, and number one in productivity performance. We want the free trade agreement to continue that very good record of success into the next century.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FILM DISTRIBUTION LEGISLATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I talked with three U.S. Senators' offices this morning. Each confirmed to us what Senator Baucus' office stated quite specifically, that not only was Bill C-22 part of the free trade negotiations but the film distribution question also came up during briefings and the Canadian Government's proposed legislation was part of the free trade negotiations on that issue.

I will direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Given this reality on top of the reality with regard to the drug legislation, will the Government finally come clean and tell Canadians what it has agreed to do to "solve Mr. Valenti's problem"?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that nothing was done to solve Mr. Valenti's problem. That was not part of any agreement, not the agreement that was signed here or any other elements of the agreement.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, according to the U.S. Senators, the Bill on film distribution was discussed. Is the Minister prepared to inform the House what he is going to do for Mr. Valenti? Is he going to tell Canadians what he wants to do about a major problem for Canadian culture?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, nothing.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

GOVERNMENT ELECTION PROMISE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the Access to Information Act and, in particular, the Government's rejection of over 90 per cent of the recommendations of a unanimous report of a committee recommending major changes to the Access to Information Act.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, in the promise-filled summer of 1984, in its thirst for power, the Conservative Party made over 338 promises. One of those promises was for a more open Government. The Prime Minister, the Leader of the Conservative Party at the time, promised that he would overhaul the Access to Information Act.

He said in August, 1984: "The present (Liberal) Government believes you have only limited rights to know... Conservatives believe you have every right to know". The Prime Minister promised to "end the obsession with secrecy". My question to the Government is very simply this. Why was this promise broken?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleague, the Minister of Justice, who is away on official business, I would like to advise the Hon. Member that yesterday the Minister of Justice in a scrum outside the House, following the tabling of the response said: "We are committed to the principle and we are, in fact, by our response, indicating immediate action to make it a more effective and a more efficient vehicle for the average Canadian to get information on government operations".

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder that the Conservative Government is at 23 per cent in the polls? Is it any wonder that this is the least popular Government ever in Canadian history?

Mr. Speaker: I know that the Hon. Member may well want to put a preamble to his question and, of course, the Chair would accept that. But I do not think that those comments were properly a preamble. Would the Hon. Member put his question, please?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Government is refusing to provide the public with more access to government information, notwithstanding the promises it made during the last election campaign. The Government will recognize that more information makes for a more honest Government. My question to the Government is this. Why is it refusing to provide more information to the public? What is it trying to hide?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, again, I can only repeat my earlier answer to the Hon. Member. I would advise him that we will ensure that the

Access to Information Act is carried through in spirit, as well as in fact, by changing the attitude of Government on openness and accessibility.

Mr. Jelinek: It is more than the Grits ever did.

COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Solicitor General. The present Minister of Justice on November 27, 1984, had this to say:

> The people of Canada have a right to information and the preservation of that right is one that we in this Party and the Government regard as the most serious undertaking we have.

Mr. Speaker, we have just learned that with respect to the unanimous set of 108 recommendations by the justice committee the Government has decided to ignore 97 of those recommendations in terms of opening up access to information.

My question to the Hon. Minister is simply this. Why did the Government go against that unanimous set of recommendations in an effort to cover up and to keep invaluable information from flowing to the people of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question in response to another Hon. Member. Again, I can only repeat what my colleague, the Minister of Justice, said yesterday. "We are committed to the principle and we are, in fact, by our response, indicating immediate action to make it a more effective and a more efficient vehicle for the average Canadian to get information on government operations".

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have before me a quote by the present Prime Minister that he uttered on August 13, 1984, just before the last federal election. He said that the difference "between the present administration", that is the Liberal administration, "and a new Conservative Government is simply this: The present Government believes you only have limited rights to know; Conservatives believe that you have every right to know".

Very clearly, the implication of the Prime Minister was that a new Government would change in terms of its approach to access to information. Will the Minister indicate why there is absolutely no difference at all and why the Prime Minister has gone back on his promise to the people of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that we are not a Party that goes back on its promises.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelleher: There is only evil in the mind of the beholder, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to quote again from the Hon. Minister of Justice. He said: "We are expanding substantially the protection to the individual. We are curtailing substantially the use of the social insurance number as a single identifying number. We are looking after protecting the concerns of the average Canadian, and I think we are doing an effective and a good job in that regard".

AGRICULTURE

SUPPLY MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for Canada's loose-leaf negotiator, the Minister of Finance, concerning the free trade agreement with the United States. On December 2, 1985, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said in response to my question concerning the protection of supply management systems in agriculture: "We do not intend to place agriculture at risk in any negotiations".

Given that statement and other statements by the Prime Minister to that effect, why were tariffs dropped on dairy products, a supply management commodity? Why were tariffs removed on chicken? Why are imports of chicken from the United States increased by 20 per cent? Is this another broken promise?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. I have a quote here somewhere by someone who is intimately involved in that industry who supports the agreement.

The tariffs are down. But the key element of the supply management system, the quantity restrictions, the import restrictions, remain in place. There have been some adjustments in the feather industry, but those adjustments are in line with the growth in the markets over recent years.

REMOVAL OF CHICKEN IMPORT TARIFFS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just referred to import restrictions. Does he not realize that one of those import restrictions making supply management work was the tariff restriction? How can he reconcile what he has just said now with the statement by a representative of the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency who stated: "We do not agree that the chicken industry should be undermined by eliminating one of its very necessary underpinnings, tariffs". How can he reconcile his statements with what the chicken agency is saying, as well as other farming groups?

Is it not true that the Government has broken another promise to the farmers of Canada? Why does it not come clean now and admit that it has done so? It has sold them out. Was this another sheet that was in the wrong place in the negotiations?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the rhetoric does not improve the presentation one little bit. The point that I made is that the key element of the supply management system is not tariffs; it is the import restrictions. Those import restrictions have been adjusted in a very minor way, consistent with the size of the economy and the growth in the economy in recent years.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

COMMITTEE'S EXAMINATION OF PAROLE SYSTEM

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Chairman of the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Justice and Solicitor General.

Regardless of their views on capital punishment, I think virtually all Canadians agree that, in a good number of instances, jail sentences are not severe enough in relation to the crime committed. Many people believe that paroles or conditional releases are too lenient.

I wish to ask the Chairman is his committee actively dealing with these vital issues now, and when can we expect a report and recommendations?

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question, and his long-standing interest in this area. I particularly recognize his work in the area of the young offenders legislation.

I can advise the Hon. Member that the committee has started work on this major review. For example, next week we will be hearing from the Chairman of the National Parole Board. The committee hopes to respond to the concerns of the public in a thoughtful and dispassionate way, and to suggest reforms perhaps as early as the end of June, 1988.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance on the trade deal. On October 4 on CBC the Prime Minister stated that regional development programs were "untouched and unchallenged" because of the trade deal. On October 9 the Minister of Transport stated: "There aren't any of our regional development programs that are affected by this agreement".

I wish to ask the Minister of Finance whether he sees any contradiction between what was stated by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport, and what was stated yesterday by the Deputy Minister of Finance, Stanley Hartt, in his appearance before the Public Accounts Committee when he stated: "We are going to have to think differently in terms of ways to promote economic development", and that some of the regional subsidy programs cannot be used in the future, such as the Michelin arrangement.

I wish to ask the Minister of Finance whether he can square that circle. Can he inform the House who is telling the truth?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it has been known for quite some time that deals comparable to the Michelin deal are liable to action and countervail in the United States. I believe that the Michelin deal was the subject of a countervail action. Nothing has changed on that.

What we have at this point is a dispute settlement mechanism that ensures that the rules for that countervail are properly administered.

I point out to the Hon. Member that on Wednesday or Thursday there was an announcement made by my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, on the project in Matane. Clearly we are able to move ahead with regional development policies that will bring ahead projects like the Matane project that are fully consistent with the trade negotiations for the specific position that we are in today.

Mr. Broadbent: Clean up our law, make it consistent with U.S. law.

Mr. Nystrom: Continue our regional development programs as long as they are consistent with American trade law, from the way I understand the Minister.

Mr. Riis: Right on, that is what he said.

INQUIRY WHO IS SPEAKING TRUTH

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): We had Mr. Hartt and his comments on Michelin last night, and on October 13, the Minister of regional development said in the House, in answer to one of my questions, and I quote:

> I can say categorically that federal programs aimed at resolving disparity have not in any way been compromised by the Agreement signed by our two Governments.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday, Mr. Hartt, the Deputy Minister of Finance, said the exact opposite.

The question is, once more: Who is telling the truth, Deputy Minister Hartt or the Minister of regional development?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there has been absolutely no change in our abilities to deliver regional development programs that is affected in any way by the free trade agreement. Mr. Hartt was referring to projects like Michelin which was undertaken a number of years ago, which are subject to countervail law, as the same type of program in the United States, if it was exporting into Canada, would be subject to our countervail law. So nothing has changed.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party has a great big smile on his face.

Mr. Riis: It is you we are smiling at, Michael.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Leader of the New Democratic Party is not quite sure exactly what trade law is, and he is laughing in an inane way because he does not understand the import of the question.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

IMPACT OF FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, following the statements made by the Deputy Minister. When we get several versions of the facts, it is often hard to tell what the truth of the matter is. My question concerns these statements, and I would ask the Minister how the free trade agreement will affect the activities of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Are regions like New Brunswick and the rest of the Atlantic Region doomed to get only minor projects, the crumbs, while major projects will be directed to the more prosperous regions of this country?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there will be no effect whatever on the ability of the Government to deliver regional development programs to Atlantic Canada. In terms of the last part of his question, there will be no bias at all in the Government redirecting major projects to other parts of the country outside Atlantic Canada. That is in no way affected by the free trade agreement. Our ability to deliver regional development programs to all parts of Atlantic Canada will remain absolutely unchanged and unaffected by this agreement.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF STATEMENTS BY MINISTER AND DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, how does the Minister explain the comments made by his Deputy Minister, ramely that we will have to change our perspective on our regional development programs? Where is the truth in what the Minister said just now and in what was said by the Deputy Minister yesterday before a committee of the House?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question twice in reply to the member of the New Democratic Party.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—INFORMATION PROVIDED TO UNITED STATES SENATORS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. There have been very real contradictions between what the Government has been stating and what the American officials have been stating on both the written and unwritten components of the trade package, and I refer specifically to Bill C-22 as well as the film distribution industry.

If the Conservative Government's version is the accurate one, will the Minister of Finance now call the American trade officials and ask them, in fact demand, that they stop misinforming the American people through the Senators in the United States? Will the Minister of Finance do that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have a note that was given to me from my staff that indicates that Mr. Yeutter spoke to some member of the New Democratic Party and told him absolutely that Bill C-22 was not part of this agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF FILM DISTRIBUTION LEGISLATION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, we have said clearly in the House, and we recognize, that it is not part of the official document, but clearly it is part of the deal that was made. It was a side deal by this Government to sell out the rights of Parliament to make decisions on behalf of the people of Canada.

I ask the Minister to show some good faith. If his version of the truth is the factual one as it applies to Mr. Valenti's problem, at the appropriate Order of the Day today will the Minister table the Bill with regard to the film distribution industry in order that we can see what is in it?

Mr. Riis: Of course not.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions I have stated the facts on Bill C-22. I stated them on the film distribution policy. Yesterday, I think I stated them three times. I stated them also in response to my colleague from Mount Royal. That is a fact. I cannot do more than state the facts. If the Hon. Member has some integrity himself, he would accept what I say as the facts.

Mr. Murphy: Table the Bill.

BILL C-22—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Yeutter may be correct in suggesting that the drug Bill is not in the final text.

• (1200)

It certainly was in one of the final documents signed by the Minister, and it was certainly actively—

An Hon. Member: Look at the facts.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It was not in the document signed by me. You are twisting the truth again, John.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has the floor. I would ask Hon. Members to give him the appropriate courtesies.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It was certainly actively negotiated during the course of the trade negotiations with the United States despite disclaimers in this House.

Would the Minister give me and Members of the House an undertaking by way of a clear statement that there was no understanding, verbal or written, given either in public or in private to the United States administration or the United States Congress by the Government of Canada, that this Government would facilitate or arrange passage of Bill C-22, the drug legislation before the House?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have said that in the House in response to, I believe it was, the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

I will go down and I will speak to Mr. Baker, I will speak to Mr. Yeutter, I will speak to any Senator or any Congressman and tell him that it is the intention of the Government to see that Bill passed.

If the Leader of the Opposition would not weasel out of his responsibilities to control the non-elected Senate, the Senators from his Party who are holding up passage, holding back the will of Parliament, the will of the elected House of Commons, we would be able to move that legislation along.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is not my duty to facilitate the passage of a bad Bill, I tell him that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

QUERY CONCERNING POSSIBLE EXISTENCE OF OTHER UNDERSTANDINGS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we now have a clear statement from the Minister respecting the drug Bill, and we will have that on the record.

I want to ask him for another statement. Would he declare to the House of Commons that there has been no understanding, verbal or written, private or public, given by the Government of Canada to the United States administration or to Members of the United States Congress relating to any matter not specifically contained in the final text of the agreement, signed by him, between Canada and the United States?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure I understand the question. Is that the same question as the first question the Hon. Leader of the Opposition asked?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No. I think we want it right on the record here that the final agreement contains the total agreement and that there is no understanding, which was given by the Minister or his colleagues or the Canadian negotiating team on behalf of the Government of Canada, either verbal or written, public or private, to either the United States administration or the U.S. Congress, on matters not specifically contained in that agreement.

Mr. Dick: So help you God.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes, so help him God. That is what we want.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I have made that statement before in the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Just make it again, quite clearly.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): For the record.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will make it again quite clearly that I do not know what the Hon. Member is digging at here.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We will see.

PASSAGE OF BILL C-22—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a single supplementary question on the same matter to get absolute clarification.

The Minister has made it clear that in terms of the final document we have all seen there is no reference to Bill C-22. There is no dispute about that.

What there is an important dispute about is the understanding that has been conveyed, for example, to at least three Senators in the U.S. Senate who have to make a decision on this, that as part of the package agreed upon there is included in that a commitment—I repeat, part of the agreed upon package by the Government of Canada—to pass Bill C-22.

Was there a specific undertaking, as specific as that, made to the U.S. administration? Yes or no?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the same question which has just been asked by the Leader of the Opposition. We have made no commitment.

Mr. Broadbent: You made no commitment.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We cannot make any further commitment than what we have actually done in the House of Commons.

We passed Bill C-22 twice. The problem is with the Liberals in the Senate who are ignoring the fact that Bill C-22 will produce about 3,000 jobs, $1.4 billion in research and development spending, and tremendous benefits across the country, which will get us into the mainstream of industrialized nations in research and development, and better health care for Canadians right across the country.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF TELEVISION BROADCASTING

Mr. Speaker: I wish to make a statement about the tenth anniversary of the House of Commons television broadcasting.

[Translation]

I would like to bring to the attention of all Hon. Members and our television audience that today is the tenth anniversary of television broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons. On October 17, 1977, the proceedings of this House were broadcast for the first time on a daily basis.

Perhaps not all Hon. Members are aware that Canada was the first country to provide this kind of daily service. Since then, a number of provincial legislatures and many other legislatures throughout the world have followed suit.

[English]

I am sure all Hon. Members will want to join with me in taking this opportunity to thank the management and staff of the House of Commons Broadcasting Branch and Electronic Services Branch for their continuing efforts in ensuring that House television broadcasts are of the highest technical quality.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

DECORUM IN THE HOUSE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege, of which I gave you notice last evening, arises out of a rather unfortunate incident in the House of Commons involving the conduct of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie).

Shortly after midnight when the Committee of the Whole was considering Bill C-86, the back-to-work legislation, I was recognized by the Chairman to speak. While I was speaking I was physically assaulted by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine. I should add that the Member in question appeared to be seriously impaired by alcohol.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: The Member was given an opportunity to apologize—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could understand that imputations or accusations are probably not appropriate in the Chamber. Certainly an incident happened of which the Chair has been made aware. I would ask the Hon. Member to conclude his comments and take some care in the words that he uses.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Member in question, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine, was given an opportunity to apologize but refused to do so.

I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that you take the appropriate disciplinary action.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the wee hours of this morning during the postal strike debate I ejected the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) from this side of the House to the other side of the House.

I was unaware that the rules allow a Member to speak from any seat in the Chamber during committee of the Whole debate. I know that the Hon. Member for York South—Weston is a very respected Member of the House, a very effective debater, and I apologize to him. At no time in the future would I ever attempt to stifle him from entering into debate.

I apologize to the Hon. Member and to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1210)

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, whether or not the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) is aware of the rules in Committee of the Whole, he certainly is aware that he is not the Sergeant-at-Arms in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Keeper: He physically assaulted the man.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, without any equivocation at all, has given an absolute apology. I wonder whether the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) feels there is any necessity to continue. The Chair is in this position. Clearly an Hon. Member has said frankly to the House "I was wrong".

Mr. Keeper: He assaulted him.

Mr. Speaker: Once that is done, it seems to me procedurally that that is the end of the issue. However, the Hon. Member for Churchill is a well respected Member of this House and I would ask him perhaps to conclude his remarks, taking into account what I have just said.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take your advice at its real value. I do think that there is no more important right for a Member of this House than the ability to get up and state his or her case on legislation before us. Any effort by any Member of this House to impede that right is completely unacceptable.

Under the rules in this House we cannot use certain words against each other. Certainly when a Member goes beyond that, he infringes on the rights not only of that one Member who is physically assaulted but of the entire House itself.

I would like to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that at the time this occurred we were dealing with legislation ordering people back to work. The Government was talking about violence on the picket lines and yet at the same time we had violence in the House of Commons.

Mr. Keeper: It is true.

Mr. Murphy: I would also point out that what we were dealing with in the House of Commons at that moment was very stiff penalties to be levied on anyone who broke the law of this land, penalties which would impede elected people from seeking election for the ensuing five years if they broke that law.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill, who I repeat is a responsible and well respected Member, knows that this is not the place to redebate the debate of last night. I see the Hon. Member accepting that. Perhaps he could close off his remarks.

Mr. Murphy: I agree, Mr. Speaker. I do believe it was necessary to point out for people who were watching the debate—obviously a great number of Canadians were—that they will see a double standard if we treat this issue lightly.

I accept the apology given by the Member. I do not think it was given overly graciously but it was given and we have to accept it in this House. I believe all Members are concerned that we have strict penalties for ourselves, just as we have for others, should this ever happen again in the future.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) raised a point of privilege. The Hon. Member involved is a very senior Member of this place and he has stated quite clearly to this House, as is appropriate, "I was wrong. I am sorry".

I think that all of us can accept what the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) has said, that this incident ought not to have happened and that it ought not to happen again. I think that closes the matter, and I thank Hon. Members for their co-operation.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF TELEVISION OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS PROCEEDINGS

POSSIBLE TELEVISION COVERAGE OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few words to your comments on the tenth anniversary of television broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons.

Perhaps I may remind the House that all parliamentarians gave their unanimous approval to the McGrath Report and recommended that the proceedings of our parliamentary committees be televised as well as those of the House.

On this tenth anniversary, it would have been appropriate for the Government House Leader to announce that the Government had finally accepted this unanimous recommendation by committee members, unanimously supported at the time by all Members of Parliament, and that it would proceed as soon as possible with also televising the proceedings of our committees, where increasingly, back-benchers are doing useful and important work that is of interest to the people of this country.

PETITIONS

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure, pursuant to Standing Order 106, to present a petition from a number of people from British Columbia who have been watching the debate on Bill C-55.

They draw our attention to the fact that the Standing Committee on Immigration has proposed a new procedure for refugees which, if adopted, would fairly and effectively solve the problems of backlogs and the unsubstantiated claims being made. This particular initiative has widespread support among not only all Parties in Parliament, as reflected by the committee's report, but also the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress and many of the groups and individuals very knowledgeable on refugee issues.

Therefore, they ask the Government of Canada to withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims for refugee claimants before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission and to provide universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada along with the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and honour to present two petitions, both of which have been certified correct according to Standing Order 106.

The first one comes from a good cross-section of the Canadian public in Mississauga, Bramalea, Toronto, Etobicoke, Willowdale, Scarborough, Agincourt, Ottawa, Gloucester, Saint John, New Brunswick, Hull and Aylmer. The petitioners call on Parliament to change Bill C-55, the Immigration Bill, to correct some very real problems which they see in it.

The second series of petitions are also on Bill C-55. The petitioners call upon the Government and Parliament to withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation employing the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission, among other things.

• (1220)

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a good cross-section of Canadians. Bill C-55 threatens Canada's traditional commitment to assisting refugees and sets out measures designed to keep most refugee claimants out of the country as opposed to ensuring that genuine refugee claimants are given protection.

Bill C-55 will result in many, perhaps most, refugees who reach our borders being turned away without having their claim heard on the merits of their cases and by limiting the right of appeal to points of law. This legislation ignores the reality that most refugee claims are questions of fact and credibility.

The concept of safe third country has no foundation in law and no definition and therefore subjects to the refugee process undue political and diplomatic pressures. The Standing Committee of Parliament has proposed a new procedure for refugees which if adopted would fairly and effectively solve problems of backlogs and unsubstantiated claims. That alternative has wide-spread support among all Parties in Parliament as well as the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Conference and most other groups knowledgeable on refugee issues.

Therefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that Government and Parliament withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute the legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claims before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission universal access to such hearings to every applicant in Canada and the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): I too have a series of petitions mostly from cities of Toronto, Windsor and Ottawa. It is asking that the Government withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation which embodies the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants and that this be done before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission with universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada and the right to appeal on the basis of fact. The petitioners state a number of very serious complaints about the present legislation.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a duly certified petition from a number of Canadians pointing out the problems that exist with Bill C-55 and pointing out that a Standing Committee of Parliament has proposed a new procedure for refugees which would fairly and effectively solve problems of backlogs and of unsubstantiated refugee claims and that this alternative has wide-spread support among groups involved with refugees.

Therefore the petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that Government and Parliament withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principle of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada and the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition from Canadians from Edmonton in the Province of Alberta, Windsor, Ontario, Vancouver and Halifax. These petitions have been duly certified in accordance with Standing Order 106 and they are concerned with Bill C-55's threat to Canada's traditional commitment to assisting refugees. It recognizes the Standing Committee's alternative that has been proposed which has wide-spread support from the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress and most other groups and individuals knowledgeable on refugee issues.

The petitioners call upon Parliament and Government to withdraw Bill C-55 and to substitute legislation embodying proper principles of fair and quick oral hearings and claims for refugee claimants based on a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) has managed to do something that most Hon. Members are very unlikely ever to be able to do in this Chamber and that is to speak from a seat other than his own. However, the Chair exercised a great deal of latitude and consideration. Because the Hon. Member for St. John's East is of course well and honourably known to us all, it was perhaps appropriate not to interrupt him, but I would not want what just happened to be any example of what the Chair might be prepared to permit under other circumstances. As all Hon. Members know, they are to quite a degree rooted to their seats.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition here from citizens of Edmonton and Toronto and these have been duly certified. These people are urging the Government to withdraw Bill C-55 because by limiting the rights of the appeal to points of law, this legislation ignores the reality that most refugee claims are questions of fact and credibility.

Whereas the concept of a safe third country has no foundation in law and no definition and therefore subjects the refugee process to undue political and diplomatic pressures and the alternative has wide-spread support among all Parties in Parliament as well as the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress and most other groups and individuals knowledgeable on refugee issues, therefore, the undersigned have asked to have this Bill withdrawn.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity today to participate in debate on Bill C-55 which provides for amendments to the Immigration Act. My colleagues and I have just tabled a number of petitions. As the House knows and perhaps the people watching do not, Hon. Members were not allowed to read the petitions at the time of presenting them, so as part of my speech on Bill C-55, I would like to read into the record one of the petitions just so it is there for public consideration. It is entitled "Petition to the Honourable House of Commons, in Parliament Assembled.

> The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will thereby provide a remedy, humbly sheweth

> Therefore we the undersigned, your Petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the Parliament to ensure that Government and Parliament withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a Refugee Board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada, and the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

That is the petition that has been circulated across Canada and been signed by hundreds if not thousands of Canadians who are very concerned about the impact of this legislation and about the manner in which those seeking to come to this land are treated.

The Bill revises the Immigration Act of 1976 mainly as it deals with people who claim refugee status in Canada, either when they arrive at a port of entry or when they are already here with visas as immigrants, students or visitors. The great majority of claimants are those arriving at a port of entry, usually without a visa. The Government, particularly the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, has over a half dozen years tried to twist the system against refugee claimants by screening out ones they consider bogus and not letting them be examined by the body authorized to determine whether or not they are refugees.

• (1230)

A refugee, according to the UN Treaty we signed 20 years ago, is a person outside of his country and unable or unwilling to return through a well-founded fear of persecution on account of race, religion, nationality, political outlook, or membership in a particular social group.

Canada's present law, the 1976 Immigration Act, provides a system for examination of claimants and decision by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee and Immigration Appeal Board. The system is cumbersome and it broke down two or three years ago because the number of claimants increased faster than the staff provided by the Government.

Once it had broken down, and a claimant might wait two, three or five years for a final decision, the so-called consultants and bogus refugees moved in. For a fee of several thousand dollars per head, consultants arranged to bring people in, coached to make a refugee claim which, given our strong human rights law and broken down processing system, could give them several years to earn Canadian wages before being removed from Canada. The worst example was that of Portuguese claiming to be Jehovah's Witnesses who feared persecution by the Roman Catholic Church in Portugal. The Government delayed imposing visa requirement for 14 months after the scam was known, allowing in 3,500 bogus claimants. Later came the Turks, Brazilians and others.

Quite clearly the law needs revision. The Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, as a result of a study directed to it by the then Minister of State for Immigration and the House, tabled in November, 1985, its fifth report with a proposal for a swift and fair system of refugee status determination.

The committee proposed that a refugee claimant be sent directly to a refugee board without a lot of immigration procedures first. The board would decide yes or no, being trained and authorized to do so, and Immigration would take over from there; either admitting the person on refugee grounds or, if there were no other humanitarian grounds, expelling the person.

The Government was required to reply within four months but it has never provided this House with what we consider a comprehensive response to that report. Instead, it responded with Bill C-55, tabled in May of this year.

Briefly, this Bill sends a refugee claimant first to an immigration inquiry to determine whether there is any reason to not remove him or her from this country. The immigration adjudicator, a member of the refugee division at this inquiry, examines only the eligibility and credibility of the claimant. This means they do not judge the merits of his or her claim but only whether or not that person would be safe in another country which they passed through and should be removed to that country, or whether the country that the person indicates they are fleeing from is in fact a country that does not produce refugees. On either of these grounds they may prohibit him or her from going to the refugee division to state the whole claim and have it determined by that body.

Although the Bill has a few good points we have opposed it essentially because of the way it will prevent most claimants from having access to an otherwise good refugee determination system, that is the refugee division. We also oppose the harsh restrictions on time provided to find a lawyer, except for the ones provided and paid for by the Minister, and the severe restrictions on the right of appeal to the courts.

The restrictions on access violates the UN Convention which requires that everyone be accorded the right to make a refugee claim, and the UN Charter of Human Rights which says every persecuted person has the right to seek protection of another Government. It also violates the Supreme Court of Canada decision in the Singh case in April, 1985, that on the basis of the Charter everyone physically in Canada who makes a refugee claim has the right to be heard in person by the body that will decide on the merits of his or her claim. The Charter also guarantees the right of access to counsel. The right to appeal is implicit in Canadian law and may be defended on Charter grounds.

The Bill was tabled in May. We had an emergency session this summer, which is still going on and on and on, to deal with a separate but similar immigration Bill. However, because there was such urgency in dealing with C-55 the committee work was rushed through. There were only seven meeting days and some 40 witnesses were crammed into 44 1/2 hours. Clearly what the Government was trying to do was prevent a groundswell of opposition. It knew once the groups involved in immigration, whether it be the ethnic groups themselves who provide support for the people of their former nationality, or the churches, or labour groups or what have you, got an idea of what this Bill would really do they would develop the kind of groundswell that would be necessary to convince the Government to defeat it.

As we have seen, thousands of people have signed petitions asking the Government to change this. I get calls on a regular basis from churches in my riding who want an update and want to know what they can do, who they can write to, how they can put pressure on the Government to change this legislation. I have a copy of one such letter dated September 21 of this year from Donald Anderson, General Secretary of the Canadian Council of Churches. That is a very well respected body which has as its basis for being, aside from religion, the humanitarian aspects of our society. He writes:

> We appreciate government work to try to improve Bill C-55. Unfortunately our deep concerns remain. How can we know if a person claiming to be a refugee needs our help if we do not hear their problems? Each person claiming to be a refugee should have a right to have their individual circumstances assessed and their case decided on its merits before competent independent decision makers. To us, this is the intent of the Convention and Protocol.
> Immigration programs may legitimately choose who comes on humanitarian grounds and may set priorities on countries they may come from. We understand the attractiveness of this approach.
> Bill C-55 provides for exclusion of people not on the basis of their individual circumstances, but by a political cabinet decision that the country they transitted before arriving in Canada is deemed to adhere to Clause 33 of the Convention, that is, it is deemed the transit country will not return the person in any manner whatsoever to a country where he or she may face persecution.

This is a far shot from our obligation to give an individual who arrives in Canada a fair hearing of his or her claim to need our protection.

Also, there is no meaningful appeal to any of the critical decisions made which can remove claimants from Canada in proposed inquiries or hearings.

We cannot accept legislation which sets aside a claimant's right to just procedures in the name of administrative convenience.

We urge you to reconsider, to abandon this Bill C-55 and to speedily replace it with one conforming with the principles of allowing every claimant a hearing on the merits and a meaningful appeal. There are alternative processes we can surely all support.

Let me spend a few moments going into some detail on the elements I have already referred to; first, the denial of the right to be heard which was not corrected during many attempts in committee by my colleague, the Hon. Member or Spadina (Mr. Heap). I would just like to compliment him for the work he has done over this long summer and fall. I want to compliment the Member for Spadina for the many hours he has spent in Ottawa and out on the hustings working with the network that developed opposition to this legislation, working with witnesses and his colleagues on the legislative committee in an attempt to convince the Government of the need to make positive changes to the legislation. He has done an excellent job. I not only compliment him, I thank him on behalf of my constituents and all those who are concerned about immigration matters.

• (1240)

The denial of the right to be heard has not been corrected. The main fault in Bill C-55, quite unchanged by scores of amendments attempted in the legislative committee and at report stage, is that it denies Canada's obligation to let a refugee claimant at our border state his or her case. This is called "universal access", and is supported by the Supreme Court and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The UN Convention and Protocol relating to the status of refugees, which Canada signed in 1967, states unequivocally in Article 33:

No country shall expel or return (réfouler) a refugee in any manner whatsoever to the frontiers of territories when his life or freedom would be threatened on account of his race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular group or social opinion.

The recognized logic of this is that Canada has solemnly agreed not to réfoule anyone inside our borders who claims to be a refugee unless and until Canada has decided that that person's claim is unfounded. The present 1976 Immigration Act reserves to the Minister, on advice of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee, or to the Immigration Appeal Board, the power to decide whether a claimant is or is not a real refugee. For several years, senior officials of the Immigration Commission illegally rejected certain claims without letting the Refugee Status Advisory Committee or the Minister see them, until the former Minister stopped them. Since then, they appear to have dragged their heels—by taking many months to arrange typing of the transcript of a claimant's statement under oath for example—until the system became hopelessly backlogged.

Bill C-55 is a renewed drive by the senior officials to exclude most claimants either on the ground that they could have claimed elsewhere or on the ground that they do not have a claim worth listening to. They are to be screened out before coming to the refugee division, which will have the legal authority to decide claims, and deported. This device not only violates Article 33 of the Convention, endangering real refugees, but will also waste time on cases that do go forward to the refugee division. That is the very fault laid against our present refugee determination system.

Let us deal with the safe third country. Is there a real safe third country in the world? The first test is to decide whether the claimant spent any time, other than at an airport in transit, in a country where he or she might have been safe. This is to be decided by looking at a list, made by the Cabinet, of countries that comply with Article 33 of the Convention.

That sounds reasonable at first. However, since Canada refused to hear that person's claim, Canada has no right to assume that the other country will hear it either. Therefore, the other country may do as Canada did, and expel the claimant to somewhere else which could bring the claimant who may be a genuine refugee back to the country of actual persecution. That would violate Canada's Convention obligation not to réfoule a refugee even indirectly.

We have seen an example of this only in the last couple of weeks. An individual was sent back to the safe third country, where he was immediately deported. That safe third country was our neighbour to the south. We have been talking about a continental energy policy, but I think we have a continental immigration policy to make sure that certain people do not get into the northern part of North America.

Let me turn to the credibility test. If a claimant passes the safe third country test, he or she is then required to demonstrate a credible basis for the claim. This, defined as having credible and trustworthy evidence upon which the refugee division might find a claim well founded, really means that the refugee division's work is to be done first at the screening, hastily, without a fair chance for the claimant to prepare, and by a panel including an adjudicator who is not competent to decide refugee claims.

If I had to decide for some reason that I must leave Canada because of my political or religious beliefs, I do not believe it would be something I would plan to do for some months, and therefore be able to arrange all the documentation I needed to support my claim to the country to which I was fleeing. Rather I would be probably lucky to flee with the clothes on my back. Most legitimate refugees do not have the opportunity to bring their documentation.

When I was a provincial member, I recall having a case of a citizen from the Ukraine, who was visiting Thunder Bay. She wanted to claim political asylum but there was a catch to the situation. She was divorced, but the divorce papers were in the hands of the Soviet authorities and therefore she could not use the option of marrying a Canadian as a means of staying in Canada.

The point is that it is very easy for non progressive countries that are bound to create refugees of some type to ensure that their citizens do not have the proper documentation available to them. Furthermore, a person is a legitimate refugee likely because his political views differ from those of a fascist or military dictatorship. What assurances are there that such a government would give the Canadian Government accurate information about the refugee?

There must be a process by which each case can be examined on its merit rather than referring to a shopping list of safe third countries to which these refugees can be returned.

Canada has supported some very questionable governments in South America and other parts of the world over the years. We have seen those governments overthrown.

I see that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I thank my colleague, the Member for Spadina for his efforts. We will continue to speak to this Bill to give the Government time to reconsider it, and realize that what it is doing is wrong.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member agree that in some measure part of the abuse of the refugee system lies in the fact that it seems on occasion to be the only way to have access to this country? Perhaps if we could even meet the targets that are set, which we have not done for a number of years, there would be a system in which people would at least think they have a chance to have access to this country.

I agree with the Member when he says that there are many bogus claims of which he does not approve. I do not think any Member of the House approves of that activity. Frustration exists because the system has been bogged down by red tape, which I suppose is necessary in some measure in an immigration system but has been carried too far in our system and has put it into a state of inertia. Would the Member comment on that.

• (1250)

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) for his comments and his question. I agree that not only in terms of structure but in terms of philosophy we must open up this country. A number of years ago I listened to an individual, whom I will not name but who was a member of the big blue machine out of Queen's Park. He appeared on Canada AM every now and then with two other individuals, representing other political parties, who will also remain nameless. He spoke to a conference in Thunder Bay and argued very forcefully about the need to increase drastically the number of people coming to this country. The traditional family in Canada has 1.2 children, not enough even to sustain the existing population. We must, therefore, open up legal immigration.

Ours is a vast country which was populated by immigrants. My father's family came to Canada in the 1790s from the United States, having gone there from the British Isles. Successive generations of my mother's family came directly from Scotland and Ireland to Canada. My family was part of the group that opened up the west. My grandfather homesteaded in Manitoba in a village called Angusville, appropriately enough. I am the son of an immigrant. With the exception of our native Canadians, we are all sons and daughters of immigrants.

The country is changing because the individuals who come here are no longer primarily from Europe. People from the Caribbean, Asia, Africa and all parts of the world come here now. We need those people to work in our factories and to buy the goods which the factories produce.

It is important to develop an immigration policy which allows people to enter the country. As the Hon. Member said, we cannot even meet our quota. We cannot even reunite families to the extent that we would like. Every week constituents of mine come into my office and tell me, for example, that they have been trying for years to get their brother out of country x or their sister or son our of country y. The red tape which they must go through is extremely frustrating.

We need a system which will ensure that those people who want to come to Canada of their own free will to start a new life and look for opportunities are able to do so. In addition, we have a responsibility to accept those legitimate refugees who are forced to leave their homeland for whatever reasons. We need a process which will ensure that the legitimate ones get through and the bogus ones do not. The process must be carried out in a timely and humane manner, in the Canadian way.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, as I begin my comments I am reminded of a question asked by Rabbi Gunther Plaut at a meeting in Montreal in the spring. He simply asked why the Government does not tell Canadians the truth. It is a pertinent question which should be asked by all Canadians, and I will come back to it during the course of my remarks.

We are debating today a most shameful piece of legislation which illustrates more than any other Bill before this House the duplicity and hypocrisy of the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I ask that the Member not use those types of words when referring to a specific Member of the House.

Mr. Berger: I will try to heed your admonishment, Mr. Speaker.

Most important, and regrettably, as a result of the actions of the Government, lives will be at risk and human beings will suffer. In the process Canada's international reputation is being torn to shreds.

Canadians were deceived by the Government. We were told that there was an emergency. Parliament was called back on August 11, several weeks after 174 Sikhs arrived on the shores of Nova Scotia. The Government held them in detention for several weeks. Extraordinary measures were implemented. Canadians were led to believe that we were subject to various threats to our security. In the final analysis every single person was released by an adjudicator who came to the conclusion that the Government had no grounds whatsoever for holding these persons in detention.

It is laughable to suggest that we are in an emergency situation when we compare our situation to that of other countries. I understand that the Government of Canada was embarrassed recently at a meeting of the executive committee of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees because of its attitude toward refugees. Observers from the refugee-producing countries attend the meetings of this organization.

At this particular meeting there were observers from Pakistan and the Sudan, each of which receive millions of refugees. There were representatives from Somalia, Mexico and Thailand which receive hundreds of thousands of persons seeking asylum or temporary shelter. Not one of those countries are taking restrictive measures. Not one of those countries even mentioned restrictive measures. They simply asked the western countries for help by way of food, medicine, or other goods, in order to cope with the hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of refugees on their borders.

If you can believe it, Mr. Speaker, Canada complained about the 30,000 or so asylum-seekers who have accumulated in our country over the past several years. We almost got booed out of the place. When the International Council of Voluntary Agencies in its statement on the protection of refugees complained about the restrictive measures and the inadequate appeals in the Bill that we are studying here today, quite understandably, the faces of the Canadian delegation turned red.

Is this the international image that we want to keep? Is this in keeping with Canada's humanitarian traditions which we have established over the past 25 or 30 years?

Where was the mellifluous Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) this past August with his words of generosity and compassion? I remind the House that only one year and several months ago now, in August of 1986, he said the following. These are the words which he uttered as reported in the press on August 18, 1986. He said, "It is not the presence of 155 frightened human beings searching for freedom and opportunity that is going to undermine Canada or our immigration policies". He was talking about the Tamils who had arrived in the summer of 1986.

What happened in the year? In 1986, the Prime Minister was generous in his attitude toward refugees. A year later, in 1987, he was silent. He had not a word to say. He left the dirty work to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and to the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner), who is sitting here in the House today.

The Prime Minister piped up recently and actually had the audacity to say that refugees are the wave of the future. On September 25 of this year, again as reported in the press, he said that accepting more refugees is going to be the wave of the future. May I suggest that the Prime Minister's words ring hollow when compared to the restrictive actions that this Government is taking? But how typical, I would suggest as well. The Government and the Prime Minister promised generosity and compassion, but we get harsh, unconscionable actions. It is no wonder that the people of Canada do not believe a word that he says. It is no wonder that the Government has sunk to such a low standing in the opinion of Canadians.

I come back to the question I asked earlier today at the opening of my remarks. Why not tell the truth? The Government and its spokesmen have misrepresented what honest, well-meaning individuals mean by the concept of universal access. They suggested that we would open the doors to all the refugees in the world, to the 15 million or 20 million of them. They even went so far as to say that we were suggesting that five billion people ought to come to Canada, if one can believe that.

I would like to refer the House to the words of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Friesen) who, in debate in the House on August 13 of this year, as reported at page 8036 of Hansard, stated, "What I said was under the Singh decision," that being the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada a year or two ago in 1985, "with respect to the protection under the Charter, there is a possibility of five billion people. Anyone around the world could land on our shores . . . Therefore, potentially every person in the world can come here and claim refugee status. That confirms the numbers I quoted".

The Minister of State for Immigration now has his head buried in his papers. On that same day I was engaged in an exchange with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) who said that he did not believe in the concept of universal access. The Minister, in reference to me, said, "He is saying to Canadians, and they have to understand this, that everyone who decides to come to Canada and claim refugee status should have access". The Minister of State for Immigration piped up and said, "Five billion people". "Five billion people", the Minister of State for Immigration said, as reported at page 8043 of Hansard for August 13, 1987. What kind of nerve does he have to make that type of irresponsible statement? What type of nerve does he have to suggest to Canadians that five billion people may come to our shores?

Are those the actions of a responsible Minister of the Crown? Are those the actions of a responsible Minister of State for Immigration who flouts these kinds of fears and this kind of ridiculous notion before Canadians? Five billion people, he said. It cannot be repeated often enough.

Universal access simply means that we give all people who claim to be refugees and who manage to come to Canada a right to be heard on the merits of their claims. That does not mean that we accept them. Our only obligation—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. We will have to go to the other place. The Hon. Member will be able to continue his speech when we come back.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services.

[English]

I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Rideau Hall,

October 16, 1987

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gérard V.J. La Forest, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 16th day of October, 1987, at 1:00 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a Bill.

Yours sincerely,
Anthony P. Smyth
Deputy Secretary, Policy and Program

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable The Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Deputy Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate chamber, the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bill:

Bill C-86, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services—Chapter 40.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, prior to my comments being interrupted by Royal Assent, I was explaining that the concept of universal access simply means that we give all people who manage to get to our shores and claim to be refugees a full hearing on the merits. Those who are in favour of this concept believe that we must give all persons a chance to prove their case. That does not mean that we have to accept all claimants. Indeed, under the UN Convention the only obligation we have is not to return them to a country where their lives would be in danger. Therefore, we can simply accept people on a temporary basis. If the situation in the country from which they fled corrects itself, we can return them to that country at that time.

It is totally misleading and incorrect to say that we are being flooded by millions of potential claimants. Millions of refugees are not coming to Canada. They have no desire to come here. They wish to return to their own countries. At the meeting of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees executive committee in Geneva, representatives from Somalia, Thailand, and Mexico did not ask Canada or western countries to resettle those refugees. They asked for our aid. Second, we have slammed on visas for most refugee producing countries. Third, we have imposed tremendous fines on transportation companies, so that the vast majority of refugees in the world will be left to struggle in refugee camps, to starve, to be shot at, and to be trampled on. It is misleading to suggest that those refugees in any way pose a threat to the peace of mind and way of life of Canadians, or to suggest that they are arriving in numbers which we cannot handle.

The following questions have been asked by Tory Members. Why should we help those who have managed to come here? Why not choose more from the refugee camps? They have said that they are the deserving ones, as if to say that those who come here on their own are not deserving, are not in need of our protection, or are breaking the rules to come here.

There is a very clear answer to these questions. It is precisely to allow refugees to move spontaneously on their own to a safe haven that the UN Convention exists. It was adopted after World War II when hundreds of thousands of people became victims because they had nowhere to go, no country would accept them. The UN Convention was established to permit refugees to move spontaneously to seek salvation on their own. It was not to require them to stand in line or to apply at embassies abroad. The Convention was a deviation from the principle that sovereign states had total control over their borders.

Again I remind Hon. Members that it is incorrect, therefore, to suggest that under the UN Convention we are somehow subject to being flooded by hundreds of thousands of claimants from around the world.

Another great promise of the Government was to consult with Canadians. Not a single witness before the legislative committee supported the Bill. I remind the Minister of that fact. I would also suggest that Hon. Members read what the witnesses said.

In particular I should like to quote Professor William Angus from Osgoode Hall, an expert authority on administrative law. He referred to how the Government, in this Bill, was trying to limit access to the courts and to the traditional remedy which people have to apply to the courts for review of a decision made by a government agency or government board. In this case it would be the refugee division.

If we read his testimony before the committee, we see that he referred to the legislation as being unprecedented. He said that he had not seen before a situation where, in order to get the courts to review a decision made by the refugee division, one needed the permission of a judge or needed to apply for leave. Normally one does not have to ask the court for its permission; one has the right to have the court review the decision of an administrative tribunal. It is a long-standing remedy available to citizens which was developed in common law going back hundreds of years.

He went on to say that the provision in Bill C-55 was a most extraordinary provision which might be appropriate for an authoritarian state but completely inappropriate for a democracy such as we have in Canada which has the system of the rule of law. Is that not quite a statement for a professor of law to make before a parliamentary committee?

I have struggled to find words to express the abhorrence I feel for this wicked, unjust Bill for I do not believe that it belongs on the books. We were told by witnesses that court challenges were already being prepared, that it offends the Charter, that it offends human dignity, that it offends Canadians' sense of fairness, and that it offends human nature which will not submit to arbitrary, heavy-handed measures.

In conclusion, I am reminded of the words of the poet Robert Frost who wrote the following in the poem Mending Wall:

> Something there is that doesn't love a wall,
>
> That sends the frozen-ground-swell under it,
>
> And spills the upper boulders in the sun;
> And makes gaps even two can pass abreast.

As long as human beings have a breath of life, as long as they have a will to survive, they will find ways around the walls built by bureaucrats. They will find ways to save their lives. They will not linger in refugee camps.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) on his excellent and very thoughtful presentation to the House this afternoon.

For the benefit of all Hon. Members, could he tell us what he thinks in greater detail about the so-called safe third country concept? We know that although certain countries may be a safe haven for individuals coming from certain destinations, they are not necessarily a safe haven for those who come from other countries or countries with different political beliefs.

Further, perhaps the Hon. Member could inform us on what he thinks of the particular provision and what he thinks will be the long-term effect of such a clause, were it to stand up to court challenges. We recognize that there is a distinct possibility that it will not. However, in the unlikely event that it will withstand a court challenge, what does the Hon. Member think will be the long-term effect of such a clause, both in terms of what the direct result would be for individual claimants and in terms of our status as a nation, recognizing that we have been an award winning nation? I am referring to the Nansen Medal which our country merited not long ago. How does he think we will fare in that regard with this new policy?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The safe third country provision in the Bill sets up a screen. It is a way to screen claimants out of the system. It violates the principle of universal access about which I spoke earlier.

In essence it means that a good many claimants who come to Canada will not have the right to make a claim.

Since Canada happens to be a country which is fairly remote from most refugee producing countries, in essence it means that very few refugees will indeed be eligible to make claims in Canada. Estimates have been made that as many as 80 per cent of claimants will be ruled out as a result of this provision. The only ones who might be eligible, for argument's sake, are people from eastern bloc countries and Warsaw Pact countries who are on holiday to Cuba and deplane when the airplane lands to refuel in Gander. They will be eligible.

However, Afghans who spend some time in Pakistan or other countries prior to coming to Canada will not be eligible. Salvadorans who have spent some time in the United States will not be eligible to make a claim under that provision.

We are putting up a wall around our refugee determination system. For all intents and purposes we are excluding the vast majority of the refugees of the world. Furthermore, the Member will note, if he reads the provision relating to a safe third country, that these countries will be prescribed by Cabinet. In other words, if a person is on a list prescribed by Cabinet, that person is refused, denied, access to the refugee determination system. There is no discretion whatever given to the adjudicator or the member of the refugee division at the hearing to look at the individual situation of the claimant. If the claimant is on a list, he is out of the system, excluded, and not entitled to make a claim. I understand that this is at variance with the practice in many of the European countries which have tried to implement this kind of a system. In France and West Germany there is room for individual determination, even if a person comes from a so-called safe third country.

The Member asked me to speak to the question of effect. I said earlier this summer in this debate and in an article that I wrote that tragic mistakes will be made, undeniably tragic mistakes will be made. I tried not to exaggerate the impact that this would have because we were trying to have a civilized debate. However, what do I mean by saying that tragic mistakes will be made, Mr. Speaker? Very simply, lives will be lost. Human beings will suffer as a result of this particular provision and this legislation. What does it do to Canada's international reputation? As I said earlier, our international reputation is being torn to shreds. Again, I have talked to people who attended the meeting of the executive committee of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Geneva recently where Canadian officials were all but booed out of the room.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I was at the meeting and there was no booing. Canada was applauded for its stand. The Member might like to get his facts straight. As for the situation in Europe today, in most cases people from other European countries are turned away at the border with no appeals. They have none of the kinds of protections we see in Bill C-55.

When the Member speaks and writes articles about a safe third country, perhaps he should read the legislation and discover its accuracy. If the Member looks at the amended Bill, as part of the eligibility requirements in an inland hearing there is absolutely no notion of a safe third country being a consideration. The notion of a safe third country will occur at a border point when, in the judgment of the immigration official, there is no need for protection in Canada. That judgment is then appealed to an inquiry with an adjudicator and a refugee board member. It can further be appealed to the Federal Court of Canada, and it is always appealable to the Minister. There are three levels of appeal in the Canadian system in those few cases which will occur at border points.

Ms. Mitchell: You are kidding yourself.

Mr. Hawkes: There are three levels of appeal from an administrative judgment, Mr. Speaker. The European system has no appeal in most cases from similar administrative judgments. People are sitting across the way shaking their heads. They are dead wrong.

Ms. Mitchell: Look at reality. What about the person who doesn't speak any English?

Mr. Hawkes: This system provides protection that no other place in the world provides. The Member opposite is dead wrong when he talks about what the safe third country concept will do. When he thinks it applies to inland claims, it does not, in statute, as amended, and in the Bill that we have before us today it is deliberately excluded. I was part of the group who made those amendments.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the Member has a lot of gall to stand up in this House and make those kinds of statements when he says that the notion of a safe third country will be applied at the border and a judgment will be made that a person is not in need of protection. There have been articles in the paper in the last few weeks. I have spoken to lawyers who told me that there are circumstances today already under the administrative measures introduced by the Government last February 21—

Mr. Redway: Name one.

Mr. Berger: —in which people have been returned to their countries—

Mr. Redway: Name one.

Mr. Berger: —where their lives are in danger.

Mr. Redway: Name one.

Mr. Hawkes: Name just one.

Mr. Berger: The hon. gentlemen are shouting,"Name one". There was an article in The Globe and Mail a week ago where Mendel Green, the very experienced Toronto attorney, was referring to a Filipino whose name I am afraid I cannot recall, but I would ask them to read this article. As I say, I have been in touch with some lawyers in Toronto in the past couple of days who have told me that there are other cases which they have not yet had the opportunity to document. There was a case I believe of a Salvadoran woman who was returned to the United States and subsequently returned to El Salvador.

I would say to the Member, it is perhaps unfortunate to say, that he has absolutely no credibility to stand up in this House and to speak on this question. He has lost his credibility among all of the people who work in this area, among church groups, humanitarian organizations, Amnesty International and knowledgeable immigration lawyers. I invite him, if he is so confident of his facts, to speak to the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner), as well as the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and ask them to attend some debates that have been scheduled over the course of the next few weeks and to respond to some of the invitations they have received but which they are too afraid to attend.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I met with a representative of an organization in Vancouver, in fact, in my riding of Vancouver East. I am very glad the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) is in the House because I will be seeking his help with this matter. The representative from Casa Latin Americana, as the organization is called, is a volunteer who gives many hours, as do other Latin American people who work in this centre providing assistance for Spanish speaking refugees from Latin America. They have quite a number, I think up to 20 volunteer teachers, who are helping with English as a second language. They have 10 or so volunteer lawyers who are helping refugees and new immigrants with legal questions, including refugees and their problems. They provide a lot of mutual help and support from each other. It is a place where people can meet and speak their own language.

Beginning over the last few years many people have come to Canada largely over the British Columbia border. This centre has unfortunately been refused ISAP federal funds. One of its main purposes is to assist in the settlement of Latin American people coming to Canada, and it has a lot of volunteer support. However, it would like to have at least one staff person, but it has been refused funds. It has also been refused funds from the Canada Employment and Immigration Department for any job development programs. I mentioned that the group has very strong support from churches, from the Spanish-speaking community, from many agencies and from many individuals in Vancouver. The Minister, I hope, will speak to me about this personally.

When I met with my friend yesterday, I asked him about some of the recent experiences he had with people coming from Latin America and he told me about a medical doctor from Guatemala for whom he had been serving as interpreter. This doctor when he was in Guatemala was performing his normal duties as a physician. At one point, he was called by the guerrilla groups to provide medical services to some of their people who were injured and dying. He went as a physician, of course, with no particular political commitment.

As a result of doing this, he was blacklisted politically by the Guatemalan Government. His wife and his daughter were subsequently killed and he was the only survivor. He himself was unconscious for about a week and it was guerrillas who took him to the hills to look after him.

Eventually he was able to leave that country and to go first to Mexico with his sister and then to the United States. Of course, his objective was to come to Canada. He arrived in Canada about four months ago, spoke very little if any English, and of course is now registered as a refugee claimant waiting to be recognized as an official refugee and to be allowed to remain permanently in Canada.

This man is seeking sanctuary in Canada as a political refugee. I am sure the Minister and the officials will probably approve his claim. There is no question that he will face danger and perhaps death if he returns to Guatemala.

Under the present system, as I understand it, he goes to the bottom of a very long waiting list of applicants, and it could be several years before his claim is processed by the refugee determination committee. Meanwhile, of course, his future is insecure. He cannot practise his profession, but at least he is here in Canada and he is safe. He has people around him, particularly the people at Casa Latin Americana, who care about him and are willing to give him all kinds of support and help.

I would think that if this man had not arrived at the Canadian border already and were to come to the border in the future after Bill C-55 was implemented, it is highly doubtful that he would have gotten past the border point. He did not speak English, he would not have had anyone there to speak for him. I doubt if he had many documents. It would be very difficult for him. I want to return to this example a little later in my remarks because I think it illustrates a pretty typical kind of refugee situation that we are seeing very frequently now in my part of Canada and I am sure in other parts as well.

Why are we so concerned about Bill C-55? I think this is the third or fourth opportunity I have had to speak very strongly and very sincerely about my concerns and the concerns of my Party about this Bill. We all agree that it has become very obvious that there are serious flaws in our refugee system. There is no question at all that changes are needed to make it more fair and more efficient. I think the long waiting list to which I just referred is certainly one that we have all been very concerned about. I know the Minister has been concerned about this as well.

In 1985, Rabbi Gunther Plaut outlined in his report an effective and fair refugee determination system. We have all referred to this report. The main points that he advocated were also included in the report of the all-Party Standing Committee on Labour Employment and Immigration, which was a very effective and active committee that looked into these matters.

All of these proposals for reform, it seemed to me, were very, very practical and sound and based on a lot of expert evidence. They would expedite refugee procedures while also maintaining full rights to a fair hearing and appeal. They were supported, of course, by church groups, by immigration lawyers and civil rights groups and by refugee organizations right across the country.

Unfortunately, as we have all said, and this is now history, it remains most regrettable that this Conservative Government refused to consider or implement either the Plaut recommendations or those of the parliamentary committee. Instead, it introduced Bill C-55, an amendment to the Immigration Act, which is intended to establish a new refugee determination process in Canada, a process which we believe will be unfair and inhumane and will contravene both UN requirements and our Charter of Rights.

Many Canadians who are knowledgeable about the refugee situation and who have given a great deal of their time in assisting refugees have appealed repeatedly to the Government to withdraw this Bill. Even in this very final stage of debate, we appeal again to the Government to do this.

We think that it is very unfortunate that in a country with Canada's strong humanitarian traditions, we are likely to be taken backward by this Bill. I do not believe that the Minister, who I know has a very strong heart and feeling for people, wants to do that, but I cannot understand why he does not see the severely restrictive aspects of this Bill.

I want to refer to some of the points which concern us most which I had mentioned previously so I will not go into them in detail again. Legal experts and humanitarian groups that work closely with refugee claimants agree that Bill C-55 may lead to genuine refugees being forcibly removed from Canada to face arbitrary detention, torture or execution in their homelands.

As was stated by my colleague who spoke previously, one of the most offensive aspects of the Bill is the safe third country concept. I am afraid that my friend from Calgary has not convinced me to the contrary. Nor has he convinced our immigration critic who is much more knowledgeable about this and has sat through all the hearings and heard all the amendments that were referred to.

The Bill allows the Cabinet to create a list of safe countries to which refugee claimants may be removed, even without having had a chance to explain why they are seeking sanctuary in Canada. Refugee claimants will be detained at our borders or airports and can be sent back to a safe third country by only two officials, two people who will undoubtedly, as we all have, have subjective biases. They will not have a great deal of time to go into detail and will probably not speak the language of the person who is applying.

It seems quite logical to expect that that kind of a review would be a superficial one and these two persons would decide whether or not claimants do qualify then to take further steps to be processed through the Canadian refugee determination committee. Undoubtedly, many people would be culled out at that stage. I do not think there is any real protection in the process since these people are not guaranteed interpreters, legal counsel or appeal nor do they have full rights to a hearing at that stage.

We can expect that those, like the doctor from Guatemala, could very well be returned to the U.S. and from the United States could be deported within 24 hours to their countries of origin, which in many cases may be dangerous for them. In cases of refugees such as the Guatemalan doctor who spoke no English, had no lawyer or visa, the applicant would have no real opportunity for appeal. It is quite possible that that doctor would have been refused admission to Canada and that he would have then been returned by the U.S. to Guatemala and certainly to possible death and if not death, then certainly severe danger. I was talking just about Guatemalans. But what happens if we have Salvadorans who face the same kind of discrimination? We know that the U.S. accepts only about 2.6 per cent of refugee applicants from El Salvador. We also know that some people in the U.S. tracked 50 people who were returned to El Salvador and found that most of them are now dead. I was told by my friend in Vancouver that there are death squads operating in Los Angeles.

Another thing that occurs to me is the question of why we are shifting responsibility for helping refugees who want to come to Canada to these so-called safe third countries? Why are we not welcoming people ourselves and processing their applications in an efficient and fair manner in Canada? Do we not have more resources and less population pressures than Mexico, for example, which has no choice but to take people from the countries I have mentioned? I am ashamed to say that Canada has an unfortunate history of leaving refugees in refugee camps in Third World countries, or in other countries for that matter, while we cream off a few of the healthiest people. I do not think this is good enough and I hope most Members of this House agree.

Since I am sure Members have had enough of my direct quotes I would like to quote some relevant criticism in an article by Michael Schelew, a Toronto lawyer and spokesman for Amnesty International on refugee affairs. This was published in The Globe and Mail on August 13. He says:

> —humanitarian groups that work closely with refugee claimants have condemned Bill C-55 because it may lead to genuine refugees being forcibly removed from Canada to face arbitrary detention, torture or execution.
> One of the bill's more offensive aspects is the "safe third country" concept.
> This bill contains no guarantees that genuine refugees will not be returned to their country of persecution after being sent to a so-called safe third country.
>
> The power given the Cabinet to choose safe countries will add politics to the process, seriously damage the integrity of the system and possibly put genuine refugees at risk.
> Furthermore, what will become of claimants who are returned to Canada having been refused entry to a safe third country?

A very interesting point. He refers to the Sikhs who came to our shores last summer where the Dutch made it clear to Canada that they would not allow those Sikhs to re-enter that country. He said:

> This refusal has confirmed the position taken by many refugee experts—and even some government officials in private—that the safe-country concept is not workable.
> Another glaring deficiency in Bill C-55 is the limited right of appeal. The Federal Court of Canada will hear an appeal only if there is an error in law. Because refugee claims are primarily based upon findings of fact and credibility and not legal questions, appeals that are limited to legal technicalities have little likelihood of being heard. As a result, Bill C-55 provides no meaningful appeal mechanism by which mistakes made at the initial refugee hearing can be rectified.
> It is no wonder that credible organizations such as Amnesty International and the United Nations High Commission for Refugees have expressed grave reservations about the safe third country provisions and the inaccessible appeal procedures.

Given that the Canadian public is legitimately concerned about the abuse of Canada's inland refugee-determination procedure, the federal government is trying to sell Bill C-55 by saying that it will control abuse.

We have not heard quite as much about that in this debate as we heard all summer long. Of course, Bill C-84 was directed specifically at what the Minister claimed to be abuse. He used the term very frequently and this led the public to feel sometimes that he was equating refugee claimants with abusers. However, the articles goes on to say:

—expert reports commissioned by the United Nations High Commission for Refugees have maintained that only 10 to 15 per cent of all refugee claimants can be categorized as abusers.

I see my time is almost up so I would like to conclude by quoting Mr. Schelew once more. He said:

—many Canadians have come to the conclusion that the federal Cabinet is more concerned with vote-getting and trade than it is about protecting the integrity of a refugee-determination system that will help those genuinely in need of help. What is worse, many Canadians are now accusing the Government of encouraging the abuse of the determination procedure in order to justify restrictive refugee measures.

Canadians are proud of their humanitarian tradition of assisting the persecuted and the displaced. Bill C-55, if it becomes law, will destroy this tradition. This bill is so repugnant to Canadian values that it must be withdrawn and replaced. It is high time the Prime Minister began listening seriously to the many non-partisan opponents of this bill.

That was written in August and it remains true today. Certainly we support the points made.

I want to make a few general points in concluding. Canada faces a falling birth rate. We have an aging population. In the years ahead we are going to have fewer and fewer young workers paying taxes and contributing to the pension system, helping to pay the cost of care for an aging population. We need people, there is no question about it. I am sure the Minister, who is concerned with population trends, would agree. We need young workers and people with young families, people who are going to bring their skills to Canada, become consumers, and stimulate our economy, create jobs and help us to compete in a competitive world. Surely we need a much more open and just immigration policy, not just for business entrepreneurs and for people from politically correct countries according to Conservative standards. We need many more people and we need a total review of our immigration policy with this in mind. We need to maintain a fair refugee policy and do away with this Bill which does not achieve any of those objectives.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North) moved that Bill C-254, an Act to amend the Citizenship Act (period of residence), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise before the House today to debate my Private Members' Bill, Bill C-254, which proposes to amend the Citizenship Act, period of residence. Presently, a non-Canadian spouse of a member of the Armed Forces or a public servant, either provincial or federal, who is serving his or her country abroad, must reside in Canada in order to be granted Canadian citizenship.

My Bill, while not a highly contentious issue, is of national significance to Canadians from all regions of the country, and of particular importance to the large number of individuals who, at any given time, are serving our country abroad.

The intent of Bill C-254 is to bring consistency and fairness back to the Citizenship Act, as it relates to the individuals I have already identified. There are a couple of areas that I feel lack consistency and cause essential problems for these individuals representing Canada overseas.

The first is that citizenship court judges have absolute discretion in interpreting what constitutes residency under the Act. This means that while some judges interpret residency to mean actual physical presence in Canada, others allow time spent abroad in any official capacity to count for the residency requirement.

The second area of inconsistency concerns taxation. Foreign born spouses are taxed as Canadian citizens, however they are not granted citizenship nor do they enjoy all the rights and privileges that go along with Canadian citizenship until they have fulfilled the residency requirements outlined in the current Act.

The difficulty in fulfilling these residency requirements is great, given the rotational nature of foreign employment assignments. Spouses of these Canadians who serve overseas on an on and off basis are never in Canada long enough to fulfil residency requirements of three consecutive years at any one time.

As such, each stay of less than three years in Canada is erased. Therefore, one cannot accumulate years of residence during successive stays in Canada and apply them towards residency requirements, even though they are serving the country of their spouse abroad.

The foreign service community is actively supporting this Bill and has suggested that the residency requirement of the Act is one of the major irritants of employment with the foreign service of Canada. They too would like to see the Citizenship Act amended to facilitate a fairer system for fulfilling residency requirements.

Spouses of diplomats, Armed Forces and other government personnel in other countries do not encounter the same difficulties fulfilling residency requirements as spouses of our personnel do in Canada.

Let me outline a few examples. Australia has a residency requirement of one year within two. However, the Minister responsible may waive the residency requirement. In France there is no residency requirement for foreign service spouses. In The Netherlands, foreign service spouses can acquire citizenship from abroad. In the United States, the residency requirement for foreign service spouses may be waived as a posting abroad is confirmed. These other countries recognize the importance of the service of these personnel and their spouses.

I think all Members of the House would agree that the spouses of all Canadians who are in the employ of our Armed Forces and External Affairs and Public Service abroad deserve better treatment.

Furthermore, the rotation of their assignments causes much hardship on their spouses' ability to meet the residency requirements. This makes it hard for us to keep some of our best and brightest people in these occupations to serve our country.

We as parliamentarians have a duty not to let the quality of these professional people in these occupations decline because of this minor problem that we have found in the existing Act.

I am sure all my colleagues on both sides of the House will agree that Bill C-254 is a non-partisan issue. It is an issue of fairness to those individuals who are serving the Canadian public abroad.

While non-Canadian spouses are acting on the Canadian public's behalf overseas, and are taxed as Canadian citizens, they might well be denied citizenship because of a lack of flexibility, consistency and understanding for such circumstances in the present Act.

Canadians should be proud of the quality of our representatives overseas. They are our best and brightest, and I would hate to think that someone may have to pass up a posting or leave the service altogether, therefore losing the benefit of their knowledge, in order to fulfil the requirements of a residency.

It is my sincere belief that Bill C-254 should be considered so that consistency can be brought back to the Citizenship Act and fairness restored to the treatment of Canadians and their spouses who serve this country abroad.

I want to thank members of the Opposition for their consideration in allowing this Bill to go to the legislative committee. I do not think much more would be gained by my prolonging the debate on this issue.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate this afternoon on Bill C-254, an Act to amend the Citizenship Act, introduced by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock). First of all, the Hon. Member is to be commended for his decision to present this Bill in the House. It is a very interesting piece of legislation. It will not stir up a great deal of controversy. However, if it is passed, it can be of great benefit to many Canadians and to many people who would like to become Canadian citizens.

[English]

Earlier today I had the opportunity to have a brief meeting with the Foreign Service Community Association from which I received a brief on this issue.

The brief contains some rather interesting statistics. I want to share some information with the House which will perhaps assist other Hon. Members in understanding why such a Bill would be beneficial to many people.

First, the minimum residency requirement in Canada for the purposes of becoming a Canadian citizen is three years. It is my understanding that some have interpreted this as meaning three consecutive years. While this has not always been applied rigidly by citizenship court judges, they have done so on a number of occasions.

The Foreign Service Community Association tells us that the longest average residency of people who are married to Canadian citizens working overseas on behalf of the Government of Canada, either in the military or foreign service, is 19 months. Anyone in that situation could be denied the opportunity of applying for citizenship.

The average accumulated residency time in Canada is 23 months. Therefore, even if one could add up the accumulated residency time, which is not always recognized, they would still be short of the residency requirement by a year.

Interestingly enough, the average time the same people spend abroad on postings is 47 months. These postings with one's spouse could be in a Canadian embassy or working with the Canadian embassy for 47 months in a Canadian environment, albeit elsewhere in the world. Yet, that 47 months has been interpreted by citizenship court judges as not counting.

• (1410)

Statistics show that of the spouses in that situation 16 per cent have accumulated three or more years in Canada in separate periods of residence. These people cannot apply even though they technically have the amount of time required by the present law. Fifty-six per cent of the spouses have served abroad for more than three years, but many judges have said that that does not count. Sixty-eight per cent have accumulated three or more years when time served abroad on postings is added to the time spent in Canada.

In other words, if we were to add the time spent overseas of spouses while married to a Canadian working overseas for the Government to the time spent in Canada, more than two-thirds of them would qualify to become Canadian citizens. The most revealing statistic indicates that 90 per cent have not resided in Canada for three consecutive years.

I had the opportunity to meet with a person who informed me that she had been married to a Canadian citizen for 11 years and had been working with her spouse in the foreign service. This person lived in Canada with her spouse for two-and-a-half years, then spent seven years abroad, then returned to Canada two years ago. This person is still not technically able to become a Canadian citizen. It seems to me that these are the very kinds of people for whom we should be rolling out the welcome mat.

The Bill before us would go a long way toward ensuring that some very qualified people in the foreign service do not leave in order to enable their spouses to qualify as a citizen, because that is sometimes what they have to resort to. In addition, I am sure that it would create far more harmonious family situations. It would make things much easier for everyone.

As one final piece of information, I am told that there are three spouses of Canadian foreign service people overseas who are presently stateless. They are in the same situation as are refugees applying to come to this country, even though they are married to Canadian citizens and may even work in the offices which issue visas for people to come to Canada.

Needless to say, such compelling evidence leads me to believe that this Bill should be referred to a legislative committee as soon as possible. There may be loopholes in the Bill and the legislative committee will assist us to find them.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Members of this House have no intention of passing laws that would create problems even greater then we have known in the past. At first glance, this Bill would not seem to create any problems. In any case, the Hon. Member who introduced the Bill would like to see it referred, as customary, to a legislative committee of the House, which could then call witnesses and thus give Parliament the assurance that the Bill is drafted in such a way that no abuse will be possible. Nobody wants abuse, but we do not want legislation that would discriminate against certain groups.

The fact that this Bill does not . . . I think the present situation discriminates against the people I met earlier today. I am therefore delighted to support this Bill, and I would urge all Members of this House to vote in favour of the proposed legislation, especially, Mr. Speaker—

[English]

In closing, let me say that it is my position that we should do everything in our capacity to give our approval to this Bill and refer it to a legislative committee this very day.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) on taking the initiative to put this Bill before the House of Commons. This Bill provides an opportunity for the House to work effectively and in greater harmony than one often sees among the Parties in order to correct an injustice which has existed for 10 years and deserved to be fixed a long time ago. I believe that we can fix this injustice.

My Party supports the Bill proposed by the Member for Etobicoke North. We have suggested, and I believe it is agreed on all sides of the House, that it be referred to a legislative committee. When it returns to the House after having been discussed and perhaps tidied up, we would be prepared to give it third reading without spending any further parliamentary time on it.

I would like to congratulate the members of the Foreign Service Community Association, three of whose representatives are in the Gallery now, for their persistent efforts to bring this matter to the attention of parliamentarians. They have prepared briefs and prepared a very elaborate, extensive, helpful survey in the spring on the situation of foreign service spouses in order to bring the problem to our attention.

The Bill will provide for credit to be given toward the time required for citizenship to any landed immigrant who is the spouse of a Government of Canada employee posted abroad or Canadian Armed Force's personnel posted abroad.

The problem is most acute, however, with the foreign service spouses because of the nature of their work. Canada's immigration service abroad, our foreign aid service abroad and, of course, our diplomatic representation abroad is all carried out through the Department of External Affairs. In that area the normal career pattern is to be abroad for two to three years, then to return to Canada, to go abroad again, and return once again to Canada. It is a bit of a roller-coaster. It is a difficult life and the spouses are really unpaid ambassadors for Canada. They are seen and treated by the people in the country where they are posted as being a representative of Canada.

The members of the community association point out rather wryly that the spouse of a Canadian posted abroad does not get the privilege of being a non-Canadian for tax purposes but has to suffer the consequences of being treated as a non-Canadian when it comes to citizenship. In other words, we take their money through taxation but will not give them credit toward the time required for citizenship even if they happen to be contributing to the Canadian Treasury.

In addition to this there is the psychological problem of not knowing what your status is. The Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) cited the example of one spouse who has been married to a Canadian for over 10 years and has not yet succeeded in piling up a three-year uninterrupted period in Canada in order to become a citizen.

In addition to the psychological problem there is a professional problem. Spouses are increasingly working in the foreign service as well as everywhere else. On being posted back to Canada, normally to Ottawa, the foreign-born spouse of a Canadian diplomat or Canadian employee looks for a job in which to continue his or her career. One of the obvious places to look is the Government of Canada, but the Government of Canada, in employment, quite specifically discriminates against people who are not citizens. It only gives jobs to non-citizens in the event that no Canadian citizen is available.

Therefore, someone who chooses to marry a diplomat or someone else working for Canada and comes back to Canada to live cannot get citizenship and finds that they may well not be able to continue with their profession or career because the jobs in Ottawa which are most likely to be suitable require Canadian citizenship.

This is not a huge problem, but it is not a small problem either. According to the survey of 160 spouses of foreign service personnel who would like to become citizens, 108 have been married to a Canadian for more than three years. Only 26 have three years of residence in Canada. But nonetheless while they were abroad they were certainly representing Canada. Only 16, or 10 per cent, have three or more years of consecutive residence in one stretch in Canada.

That is an indication of the problem. People say, "Well, this is not quite right. If any of these men or women had married a Canadian and moved then to Canada as a landed immigrant, then after three years and a day they would be eligible for Canadian citizenship". It is just an accident that their spouse happens to be a foreign service officer that leads to this particular situation.

I would point out that this Bill affects non-diplomatic personnel as well as diplomatic personnel. While this is not the subject of the Bill, I know from contacts with my constituents in Ottawa Centre that non-diplomatic personnel, support staff, the secretaries, the people doing the ciphering and the communications work and that kind of thing, suffer some real discrimination in foreign posts. Diplomats receive tax-exempt status and have certain abilities to import products without tariffs which the non-diplomats do not have. Because the Canadian dollar is not always as strong as it was a few years ago, some of those non-diplomatic personnel find it difficult just to survive living in a foreign economy with the lower salaries they get, because they are not paid as much as the diplomats, and likewise get lower allowances. This is governed in large measure by the Geneva Convention which gives special privileges to diplomats.

As a country which has spoken up at the United Nations and elsewhere for the status of women in diplomatic life and in diplomatic and in international postings, and as a country which is concerned about equality between different people whether they live and work at the elite level or the working level, I think Canada should be pressing very hard that the countries of the world amend the Geneva Convention in order to ensure that this discrimination against the lower paid and lower status personnel in diplomatic missions abroad should be brought to an end. I wanted to piggyback that comment in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker. But I have raised this matter with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on a number of occasions, as well as with my own critic in that area.

I repeat, with respect to the spouses of diplomats and of other Canadian officers, in many cases they must pass a security screening for their spouse to retain their job if the marriage takes place. In other words, they are much more carefully screened than people who come through to become Canadian citizens who have very light screening.

I think this is a matter which cries out to be corrected. It is a matter of injustice that needs to be fixed. It is not an issue that affects hundreds of thousands of Canadians. But for those people who are affected it is dear and near to their hearts in a literal as well as a practical sense. I think that the House should be prepared to move, and move with alacrity, on this particular matter.

I hope that the legislative committee can complete its work and we can bring this back to the House within the course of the next three or four weeks.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to add a few comments to the discussion today on the Bill presented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) and on what I would call his very creative initiative. He is another hard-working Conservative Member of Parliament. I want to add something to the comments of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) and the statistics he reported, and to the comments of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Bill C-254 is essentially proposing to change the Citizenship Act whereby any day outside of Canada shall be treated as equivalent to one day of residence in Canada for the purpose of becoming a Canadian citizen. I have lived and worked abroad many years, as you know, Mr. Speaker, in Africa and Central America. I have travelled extensively around other parts of the world and have recognized the tremendous frustrations that are being faced by foreign-born spouses. I, of course, was a Canadian living and working abroad, but I had constant contact with foreign-born spouses who were not Canadians.

The nature of my riding also lends itself to the importance of this Bill because there are a great many foreign service personnel who live in the constituency of Ottawa—Carleton. There are people from the Armed Forces who live there who are directly affcted by this issue. So I am particularly pleased to be able to add a few comments on it.

The Foreign Service Community Association has been referred to as a voluntary organization that supports and represents the non-professional needs of foreign service employees and their dependants. But it is awfully concerned as well about this issue of foreign-born spouses as it applies to citizenship.

In June of this year it presented a very well researched, very well thought out brief to the Minister and the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie). I had an opportunity to meet on September 17 with the President of the association, Nancy Fraser, and the office co-ordinator, Don Jones, and some of their colleagues to talk about this proposal by my colleague from Etobicoke North. I understand there is a similar initiative taking place in the other place. We discussed their concerns and frustrations. I am very pleased to support them.

I think this Bill is very fair. It is very reasonable. I think it is very timely to eliminate some of these obvious frustrations that foreign-born spouses have in their efforts to become Canadian citizens. It is in that spirit that I want to support this very timely piece of legislation and ask that it be given unanimous consent and approval here in the House of Commons this afternoon.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, as an Ottawa area Member I, too, would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) on his initiative today. I was pleased to be able to second the Hon. Member's motion this afternoon.

Like other Members from the National Capital Region, I represent a number of foreign service officers. In fact, I just returned last night from Geneva where I had briefings from Canadian foreign officers there involved in the GATT trade discussions. I found that the Ambassador there and his second in charge were both constituents of mine. I might say that they are doing an excellent job for Canada in those difficult negotiations.

Generally, I think we are well served by our foreign service personnel in this country. I think they are second to none anywhere. We have good reason to be proud not just of them but of their spouses and their families who also contribute a great deal to the successful work that they are able to carry out on behalf of this country all over the world.

I, too, met recently with the president and other officers of the association of foreign service spouses and agreed to lend my support to the thrust of this Bill. I also just want to point out that I had agreed with a Senator from the other place to sponsor in this House a Bill which has, I believe, just come out of the Senate, Bill S-8, which deals with virtually an identical subject matter. I have not yet notified the Table Officers of that, but it may well be that I will not do so in light of what appears to be the decision, the will of the House to proceed to committee on this matter.

May I say to Hon. Members that it might be appropriate for the committee that is struck to examine Bill S-8, the Senate Bill, in order to come up with the best possible piece of legislation we can to achieve this very worthwhile objective. Once again, I extend my thanks and congratulations to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it three o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until Monday morning at eleven o'clock pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 2.29 p.m..

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege and an honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 on behalf of a number of western Canadians who remind the House of Commons that the standing committee of Parliament responsible for immigration regulations has proposed a new procedure for refugees which, if adopted, would fairly and effectively solve the problems of backlogs and all the unsubstantiated claims.

This particular proposal has received widespread support from not only all Parties of Parliament but from the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress and actually most other groups or individuals knowledgeable on refugee issues.

Therefore, the petitioners are asking the Government of Canada to withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute it with legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims made by refugee claimants, and these ought to be made before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, providing universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada. The claimants also ought to have the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

FERMI II NUCLEAR REACTOR—REVIEW PROCESS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I have a petition from approximately 250 residents of Essex County who are particularly concerned about the operation and further construction of the Fermi II Nuclear Plant on the U.S. side of the border just adjacent to my constituency.

The petitioners come from Amherstburg, Harrow, Sandwich West, Colchester, Malden, Anderdon, and a good many other parts of my constituency. The petitioners are most concerned to see that there is a Canadian presence which plays an equal role with the United States in reviewing the safety of Fermi II before this nuclear reactor is permitted to move any further toward full operation.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a privilege to present a petition on behalf of people in my riding from the community of Coudouc. Petitioners wish to convey their disagreement with the new corporate plan for Canada Post.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 187 and 188.

[Text]

CBC'S CONTRACT EMPLOYEES

Question No. 187—Mr. Pennock:

1. What is the CBC's employment practice with respect to personnel on contract?

2. (a) Are any restrictions placed on non-CBC staff and, if so, what are they (b) can they be given corporate signing authority, and, if so, for what amounts and to what limits?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the reply to the above questions is as follows:

1. CBC's employment practice with respect to personnel on contract is governed by its corporate Human Resources Policy No. 1.2 entitled "Non-Staff Resources Utilization". A copy of that policy is below.

2. (a) See the policy in 1. above. (b) Yes. Sub-section 4.3 of Section 1 of the corporate policy Delegation of Financial Signing Authority states:

Where a contract employee, other than a producer and/or project manager referred to in sub-section 3.11 of this section, occupies a position designated as a responsibility/cost centre and for which a budget has been allocated, and he is deemed to be an employee for purposes of taxation and other benefits in accordance with Finance Policy—Taxation 3.2—Employees/Independent Contractor Status, such employee is automatically delegated authority similar to that delegated to equivalent positions at the MS-4 level and above.

The Corporation will ensure that management retains the capability to employ non-staff resources in response to its changing needs, correctly in terms of the type of employment created, and with full knowledge and opportunity to measure services received for money expended. In so doing the Corporation will provide fair compensation; protect and optimize the rights of the Corporation and contracted individuals; facilitate the Corporation's management of non-staff; deal knowledgeably with outside agencies, utilize co-ordinated and consistent administrative practices.

1. Contact Administration

In acquiring non-staff resources, authorized persons will employ administrative procedures as follows:

(a) Individual contracts will be prepared and signed by the specified Corporation party and the non-staff contractee(s), to conform to Corporation and other agency requirements (unions, associations and government, etc).

(b) All contracts will be administered at unique divisional/area points consistent with operational needs to ensure consistency and accuracy in the application of the policy and its practices, and the collection of pertinent information in order to —ensure that all Corporation commitments for services are confirmed in writing at the earliest time and, subject to operational requirements, that a contract is entered into in advance.

—create a repository of contract information for internal and external use, such as rights in terms of further use and/or sale of programs, the further use of talent, and where appropriate for the management and development of non-staff resources.

—ensure that contract administration properly reflects changes occurring in the nature of the work performed, programming and other developments.

—enable the necessary management of the contract practices.

2. Payment

The payment of non-staff resources will meet operational requirements and involve consistent local control procedures ensuring that compensation conforms to Corporation standards, contract terms and conditions, and with other agency (unions, associations and governments, etc.) requirements.

Such payment must comply with this Policy and will be made on receipt of budget authority authorization and certification of completion of an appropriate portion of the services specified in the contract.

1. The payment of non-staff resources will be a regional (divisional/area) responsibility and appropriate pay systems will be designed for this purpose.

2. All non-staff pay systems in operation in the Corporation will provide a designated minimum of common and compatible data in a consistent format.

3. The co-ordination point(s) will provide Finance with interpretations of individual contracts respecting the type of employment created and the implications of collective agreements.

4. It is the responsibility of Finance to specify the basic information it requires about a contract/contractee in order to carry out the paying function.

CBC—CONTRACT OF MS. SHEELAGH WHITTAKER

Question No. 188—Mr. Pennock:

1. What is the current status of Ms. Sheelagh Whittaker with the CBC?

2. In her role as Vice-President of Planning for the Corporation, was she initially retained on a personal services contract to Mr. Franklin Delaney, then Vice-President and is she presently on such a contract?

3. Is Ms. Whittaker on a retainer to Canada Consulting Group (CCG) and, if so, under what terms?

4. Does the Corporation make a separate remittance to CCG for the services provided on an ongoing basis by Ms. Whittaker as Vice-President, Planning and Corporate Affairs and, if so, in what amount?

5. What are the terms of the contract between the CBC and CCG for the services of Ms. Whittaker, or between the CBC and Ms. Whittaker with respect to (a) reimbursement of travel costs between Toronto and Ottawa (b) reimbursement of accommodation costs, meal allowances and other transportation in Ottawa?

6. What is the Corporation's total annual liability for the services of Ms. Whittaker?

7. Does CBC continue to utilize the consulting services of CCG for other projects?

8. In the fiscal year (a) 1986-87 (b) 1987-88, what was/is the amount of the contracts let to CCG by (i) CBC (ii) Vice-President, Planning and Corporate Affairs (iii) Vice-President, Special Projects?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the reply to the above questions is as follows:

1. Ms. Whittaker is the vice-president of planning and corporate affairs for the Canadian Broadcasting corporation.

2. Ms. Whittaker was initially retained on a personal services contract to the Corporation. She reported to the senior vice-president. She is still retained on a personal services contract.

3. No.

4. No. The Corporation makes no remittance to CCG for the services provided by Ms. Whittaker. Ms. Whittaker's contract of employment is with the Corporation and is exclusive to the Corporation. An annual fee is paid by CBC to CCG as a consideration for releasing Ms. Whittaker from her contractual obligations to CCG.

5. (a) and (b). It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide details of its internal management and administration such as its specific financial arrangements with individual employees. The background to this custom is explained in the reply to question No. 2,530 answered November 6, 1975.

6. See the reply to 5 (a) and (b) above.

7. Yes.

8. (a) (i) $230,607.31 (ii) $67,700.69 (iii) nil. (b) (i) $26,525.83 (ii) $4,931.44 (iii) nil.

Note: The figures in parts (a)(i) and (b)(i) include the sums in parts (a)(ii) and (b)(ii).

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Minister have been answered.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed from Thursday, October 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1982 came into force on April 17, 1982, following an agreement between Canada and all the provinces except Quebec;

AND WHEREAS the Government of Quebec has established a set of five proposals for constitutional change and has stated that amendments to give effect to those proposals would enable Quebec to resume a full role in the constitutional councils of Canada;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto sets out the basis on which Quebec's five constitutional proposals may be met;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto also recognizes the principle of the equality of all the provinces, provides new arrangements to foster greater harmony and cooperation between the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces and requires that conferences be convened to consider important constitutional, economic and other issues;

AND WHEREAS certain portions of the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto relate to matters referred to in section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

AND WHEREAS section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province;

NOW THEREFORE the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE

Constitution Act, 1867

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 1 thereof, the following section:

"2. (1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(2) The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

(4) Nothing in this section derogates from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 24 thereof, the following section:

"25. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, the government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate.

(2) Until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the person summoned to fill a vacancy in the Senate shall be chosen from among persons whose names have been submitted under subsection (1) by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates and must be acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 95 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Agreements on Immigration and Aliens

95A. The Government of Canada shall, at the request of the government of any province, negotiate with the government of that province for the purpose of concluding an agreement relating to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province that is appropriate to the needs and circumstances of that province.

95B. (1) Any agreement concluded between Canada and a province in relation to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province has the force of law from the time it is declared to do so in accordance with subsection 95C(1) and shall from that time have effect notwithstanding class 25 of section 91 or section 95.

(2) An agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) shall have effect only so long and so far as it is not repugnant to any provision of an Act of the Parliament of Canada that sets national standards and objectives relating to immigration or aliens, including any provision that establishes general classes of immigrants or relates to levels of immigration for Canada or that prescribes classes of individuals who are inadmissible into Canada.

(3) The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies in respect of any agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) and in respect of anything done by the Parliament or Government of Canada, or the legislature or government of a province, pursuant to any such agreement.

95C. (1) A declaration that an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) has the force of law may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement.

(2) An amendment to an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized

(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement; or

(b) in such other manner as is set out in the agreement.

95D. Sections 46 to 48 of the Constitution Act, 1982 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of any declaration made pursuant to subsection 95C(1), any amendment to an agreement made pursuant to subsection 95C(2) or any amendment made pursuant to section 95E.

95E. An amendment to sections 95A to 95D or this section may be made in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection 38(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, but only if the amendment is authorized by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of all the provinces that are, at the time of the amendment, parties to an agreement that has the force of law under subsection 95B(1)."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 96 thereof, the following heading:

"General"

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 101 thereof, the following heading:

"Courts Established by the Parliament of Canada"

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 101 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Supreme Court of Canada

101A. (1) The court existing under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada is hereby continued as the general court of appeal for Canada, and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a superior court of record.

(2) The Supreme Court of Canada shall consist of a chief justice to be called the Chief Justice of Canada and eight other judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor General in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

101B. (1) Any person may be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who, after having been admitted to the bar of any province or territory, has, for a total of at least ten years, been a judge of any court in Canada or a member of the bar of any province or territory.

(2) At least three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be appointed from among persons who, after having been admitted to the bar of Quebec, have, for a total of at least ten years, been judges of any court of Quebec or of any court established by the Parliament of Canada, or members of the bar of Quebec.

101C. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court.

(2) Where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

(3) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) of any of the three judges necessary to meet the requirement set out in subsection 101B(2), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the Government of Quebec.

(4) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) otherwise than as required under subsection (3), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the government of a province other than Quebec.

101D. Sections 99 and 100 apply in respect of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

101E. (1) Sections 101A to 101D shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws under section 101 except to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with those sections.

(2) For greater certainty, section 101A shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws relating to the reference of questions of law or fact, or any other matters, to the Supreme Court of Canada."

7. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 106 thereof, the following section:

"106A. (1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

(2) Nothing in this section extends the legislative powers of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces."

8. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and sections:

"XII—Conferences on the Economy and Other Matters

148. A conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year to discuss the state of the Canadian economy and such other matters as may be appropriate.

XIII—References

149. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

Constitution Act, 1982

9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part."

10. Section 44 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"44. Subject to section 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons."

11. Subsection 46(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province."

12. Subsection 47(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution."

13. Part VI of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"PART VI

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

50. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate;

(b) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries; and

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon."

14. Subsection 52(2) of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(d) any other amendment to the Constitution of Canada."

15. Section 61 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Act 1982, or a reference to the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1982, shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

General

16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

CITATION

17. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

and on the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

October 1, 1987—That the motion be amended

(a) in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 2.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada;

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society;

(c) the recognition that aboriginal peoples constitute a distinctive and fundamental characteristic of Canada;

(d) the recognition of the multicultural nature of Canadian society, and in particular respect for the many origins, creeds and cultures as well as the differing regional identities that helped shape Canadian society; and

(e) the recognition of the advantages of developing the Canadian economic union."

(b) in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 2.(2) and substituting the following therefor:

"2(a) The role of the Parliament of Canada to preserve and promote, and the role of the provincial legislatures to preserve and, subject to subparagraph (2)(b) to promote, the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph 1(a) is affirmed.

(b) The role of a province in relation to promotion applies from the time it is adopted by a resolution of the legislative assembly of that province."

(c) in paragraph 2 of the Schedule by deleting section 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"25. Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, and until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the government of Canada shall, within six months after the vacancy occurs, call an election in the province or territory to which the vacancy relates for the purpose of filling that vacancy, and, notwithstanding the provision of section 29 of the Constitution Act, 1867, for a term of nine years."

(d) in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by deleting subsections 101C.(1) and (2) and substituting the following therefor:

"101C.(1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province and the elected government of each territory may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province or territory and are qualified under section 101B. for appointment to that court.

(2) Subject to subsection (5), where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

(e) in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by adding immediately after subsection 101C.(4) the following:

"(5) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) and, if within a period of three months, no name which has been submitted under subsection (1) is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, the Chief Justice may make an interim one-year appointment from among justices of the Federal Court of Canada or provincial Superior Courts."

(f) in paragraph 7 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 106A.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"106A.(1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Parliament of Canada after the coming into force of this section, in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a compatible program which meets minimum national standards."

(g) by deleting paragraphs 9, 10, 11 and 12 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the right of a province of a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(c) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(d) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(e) the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(f) an amendment to this Part.

42.(1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 38(1):

(a) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators; and

(b) the number of members by which a province or territory is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators.

(2) Subsections 38(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

42A. Notwithstanding subsection 42(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, the establishment of new provinces and the extension of existing provinces into territories shall be a matter exclusively for the Governor General in Council and the elected government of the territory affected."

(h) in paragraph 13 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 50.(2) and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) the aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including self-government;

(b) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators, representation in the Senate.

(c) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries at the first meeting only;

(d) such other matters as are agreed upon."

(i) by deleting paragraph 16 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"16. Nothing in the Constitution Amendment, 1987 derogates from any of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms or affects Part II of the Constitution Act, 1982".—The Leader of the Opposition.

and on the amendment of Mr. Broadbent:

October 1, 1987—That the motion be amended

(a) by adding in paragraph 2 subsection 25(1) the words "and the elected government of each territory" immediately after the word "province";

(b) by adding in paragraph 2 subsection 25(2) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(c) by adding in paragraph 6 subsection 101C.(1) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(d) by adding in paragraph 6 subsection 101C.(4) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(e) by deleting in paragraph 9, section 41 paragraph (i);

(f) by adding to paragraph 13 subsection 50(2) the following new paragraph:

"(c) aboriginal rights, in particular self-government;"

(g) by adding to paragraph 13 section 50 the following new subsection:

"(3) The Prime Minister shall invite to the Conferences designated in section 50 subsection (2)(c) representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada and the governments of the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory and those groups and governments shall participate fully in all matters that affect aboriginal rights."

(h) by deleting paragraph 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25, 27 or 28 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution.—Mr. Broadbent.

and on the amendment of Mr. Caccia:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 1 of the Schedule

(a) by deleting Section 2.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the recognition that Canada constitutes aboriginal and multicultural societies, with English and French as the official languages of Canada, French-speaking Canadians being centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada and English-speaking Canadians concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec".

(b) by deleting Section 2.(3).

and on the amendment of Mr. Allmand:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by adding immediately after subsection 2.(4) the following:

"(5) Nothing in this section derogates from any of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms."

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to speak in this historic debate.

When the first ministers met this spring to discuss the conditions set by Quebec for joining the Constitution, not many people really believed that they would be able to reach an agreement. It would take a miracle, people said. The day after the agreement was signed, people said it was a miracle.

Mr. Speaker, I have been trained to be sceptical about miracles, and I don't think there has ever been a miracle in politics. I am inclined to believe that the Meech Lake Accord was achieved by one man, our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and that the premiers' readiness to consider the conditions set by Quebec reflect the "maturing" of our Canadian society.

Mr. Speaker, in the course of my speech I intend to focus on the central aspect of the Meech Lake Accord; the recognition in the Constitution of Quebec's distinct character and Canada's linguistic duality. For the first time, the provinces are making a formal commitment to protect this linguistic duality, and Quebec, which from now on will be recognized as a distinct society, will have the recognized right and privilege to protect and promote that which constitutes its specific character.

In the lives of nations there are important events that have become milestones because they have changed the course of history. Madam Speaker, this historic Accord is one of those milestones.

I would now like to take a few moments to correct a serious mistake I am referring to the theory that the claims of modern day Quebec started in the 1960s, and that the measures taken during those years represent a clean break with the years that went before, the governments Quebec had since the 1930s and the leaders of public opinion who had crafted a nationalist ideology in the years before that time. In fact, nothing could be further from the truth.

The history of nations—the history of Quebec and Canada is a case in point—consists of deep political currents that determine its flow and a number of superficial events that sometimes camouflage, sometimes reveal, the meaning of these currents. Quebec in the 1960s—this turbulent Quebec that is said to be at the root of our Constitutional reform—was not, and never has been, a brand new Quebec come out of the blue in our modern history. It was merely developing what had always been there and what had been expressed formerly in other ways. Between Quebec politicians like Maurice Duplessis, who stated: "We must keep what we have", Jean Lesage, who said: "We must be masters in our own house" and Daniel Johnson, who demanded: "Equality or independence", there was never a break. Superficially perhaps, but beneath it all, a steady continuity.

Mr. Speaker, our Francophone society in Canada has been constant in its desire to be recognized as a distinct society, in charge of its own affairs.

Everyone knows that if it were not for the resistance of the Atlantic Provinces, especially Nova Scotia, and if it were not for the French Canadians in Lower Canada, the union of the colonies of British North America would probably had been legislative, not federative. In fact, as indicated by the central authority's use of the power of disallowance after 1867, attempts were made in that direction during the initial years of Confederation.

These attempts to make the provinces into a uniform body, under the authority of the central Government, as others have often wanted to do, could never succeed in the Canadian context, especially where Quebec was concerned.

To quote Jean-Charles Bonenfant, an eminent professor who also was my professor: "The spirit of 1867 was the final acceptance of the existence of French Canadians and a logical consequence of the Quebec Act". He goes on to say: "The Fathers of Confederation made Lower Canada—the future province of Quebec—a province where the French Canadian majority would be in charge of its own affairs, although it was forced to give the English-speaking minority exceptional protection: Article 93 on education, the twelve privileged townships, the Legislative Council and legislative bilingualism as laid down subsequently Article 133 of the British North America Act."

Madam Speaker, how could it have been otherwise? French Canadians are different because of their language, their laws and their history. Since the Quebec Act was passed in the 18th century, and despite a succession of constitutional reforms and systems, Quebec always had the power to create its own institutions, governed by legislation that has developed an essential part of its social structure and still does today.

One of the main reasons why Quebec is a distinct society arises from this different social structure and a different way of doing things, based on a different system of values and regulated, as far as private law is concerned, by a series of laws that go back to the "coutume de Paris" and are thus not based on the same philosophy as the common law of the other provinces. This applies to all Quebec citizens, whatever their origins or language.

French Canadians have always claimed they had all the elements of a distinct society, and in the course of history, they have managed to give their distinct character a firm foundation which they would now like to see recognized. They did so during the parliamentary struggles in the first half of the 19th century, Madam Speaker. They showed their mettle under the Act of Union by gradually introducing what was in fact a double system.

Of course, the strategy has changed over time. As we all know, the State has not always been as strategically important to French Canadians as it was during the first half of the 19th century and still is today. For a long time and, significantly, especially after Confederation, French Canadian leaders made the Catholic school system and the parish the prime instrument for protecting and promoting the French fact in Canada and North America. Unfortunately, among certain representatives, sometimes even the most enlightened, of English Canada, this approach lead to incredible misunderstandings and considerable conflict. In whatever ways Francophones have, over the years, made their claim for recognition as a distinct society, it has always been one of the major currents of Canadian history. Only a blind person would fail to see that.

This is how Quebec's international claims throughout the 1960s—indeed, just like its claims in other fields, communications, to name one—stem primarily from the all exclusive approach taken by previous governments with respect to maintaining their constitutional prerogative. When Paul Gérin-Lajoie stated in 1965 that the Quebec Government could actively participate in an international conference of education ministers, thus exercising his power in an exclusive constitutional jurisdiction, he was in fact doing nothing more than drawing implicit conclusions flowing from the stated position to which Premier Duplessis and his predecessors had been clinging all along. There was nothing new under the sun.

Madam Speaker, why did the undertaking turn out to be so arduous? Why so many obstacles on such a straight road? Why did the staunchest opposition come from the Canadian Government until 1984? Why are the same people again today so adamantly opposed to official recognition of the distinct character of the Quebec society?

Nobody denies the existence of the patently obvious distinctive characteristics of Quebec: 80 per cent of the people speak French. It is the only government in America where Francophones make up the majority. Montreal happens to be Canada's French-speaking cultural community, to the extent that the vitality of our country's Francophone minorities depends on the vitality of Quebec's society. Madam Speaker, the most eloquent testimony to Quebec's distinct character is the deep-rooted link with its electronic media, as emphasized by the Sauvageau-Caplan task force on broadcasting policies: high local ratings, preference for original dramatic productions, and what have you.

So, Madam Speaker, why should anyone speak out against constitutional recognition of Quebec's distinct character? Why does opposition to that still prevail today?

Just as history is made up of deep-rooted trends and passing events, so do we have both sincere and superficial politicians. Except for a very short interregnum in 1979, from 1966 to 1984—almost 20 years—Canada was inspired and directed by politicians who remained insensitive to these deep-rooted trends and were more interested in imposing the abstact formula of a country which they did not understand, or at least did not seem to understand properly.

This country, obviously, is made up of strong regions which want to maintain their own characteristics. It is home to two linguistic communities. It includes a Francophone society whose mainstay is and has always been Quebec, the only government where it makes up the majority. That is Canada as it is, Madam Speaker, not an abstract but a real entity.

The policy of confrontation which we had to put up with through all those years could only lead to the situation we all witnessed: absolutely untractable positions and a separatist threat which was all the more astonishing that it did originate from Quebec's need to take its normal place within Confederation, nothing more than its normal place.

I would not want to suggest that all demands made by Quebec were not to be interpreted, therefore negotiable. I am simply saying that they all stemmed from Quebecers' will to assert themselves, and as such it was not in any way a challenge to the sovereignty nor, of course, the very existence of Canada. Nothing suggests, except in the stubborn minds of a few men who finally managed to impose to most people, Quebecers and other Canadians alike, the somewhat perverse notion that the qualifier "Canadian" quite simply excluded the qualifier "Quebecer", that being Canadian meant being against Quebec, with the all too natural consequence that such a tenet would soon be inversely expressed by Quebecers themselves.

Inevitably, this refusal by the Government in Ottawa to recognize Quebec's distinct character was to provoke a similar reaction from the other side. It was not a happy episode in our history.

However, nothing could be further from the basic reality of this country, especially for the Francophone community. To quote our Prime Minister in his famous speech in Sept-îles, where he promised to bring Quebec back into the Canadian Constitution:

> Quebecers love Quebec and are proud of Canada. They also love Canada and are proud of Quebec. Their hearts are big enough for both loyalties. Very few people who said yes to Quebec said no to Canada, and no one who said yes to Canada said no to Quebec.

That is the Canadian situation, Madam Speaker.

This double allegiance, which many foreigners have trouble understanding, was pledged by all great French Canadian nationalists, ever since Confederation. Lavergne, Asselin, Bourassa— incidently, Henri Bourassa was a typical example: He was a man who was truly French Canadian, who clearly defined the French Canadian fact, and who at the same time was every inch a Canadian. At a time when Canada was the victim of imperialist and extraterritorial intervention, he defended Canada's autonomy against intervention by foreign powers, including Great Britain. This position, taken by a man of vision, would be vindicated several years later when the Treaty of Westminster was signed.

Fortunately, Madam Speaker, in 1984 Canadians and Quebecers elected a man cut from the right cloth, who understood that the very nature of the Canadian federation demanded the intelligent art of compromise, co-operation and standing united for a common goal. For almost 20 years,—we all witnessed this period in our history— Ottawa's stubborn insistence on making Quebec knuckle under, for the sake of an egalitarian vision of this country, nearly broke up both Quebec and Canada. In hardly three years, the patience and intelligence of one man made it possible to restore the common will of all Canadians which has always been, and still is, the strength of our federation.

We can thank the Prime Minister for Meech Lake. For the first time, Quebec sees enshrined in the Constitution its right to protect and promote that which constitutes its distinct character, and it will be able to evoke this distinct identity in all disputes about fundamental rights in the Charter.

Another significant gain is the long hoped for recognition of Canada's linguistic duality, and even more important, a commitment by each province to protect that duality. Madam Speaker, for the first time in Canada's history, each province is constitutionally committed to protect the French language. As was said by Mr. Décary when he testified before the joint committee, it is a major gain for Francophones outside Quebec, both morally and in its practical impact. From now on, the Constitution, the Charter and all language and education rights shall be interpreted so as to guarantee the protection of the French-speaking community. That is a reality. That is a victory for Canada and Canadians, Madam Speaker.

Some critics of the Meech Lake Accord have said that one of the most important achievements of the Constitution Act, 1982, in other words, the rights contained in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, might be jeopardized as a result of the recognition of Quebec's distinct character. Madam Speaker, here again, the Meech Lake Accord is merely proposing a new balance between individual and collective rights. As mentioned time and time again by our Prime Minister, none of the rights in the Charter will be superseded or quashed as a result of Quebec being recognized as a distinct society. In fact, up to now, the interpretation of fundamental rights given by the courts have always been based on sociological realities, including Quebec's distinct character. The Meech Lake Accord will simply state unequivocally what has been so far implicitly recognized.

As a matter of fact so far, any attempt at making Canada a unitary country has failed and if, by its very nature, this country has been strong it is only because of the strength and vitality of its various parts. Madam Speaker, there lie the basic differences between the Canadian and American federations going in opposite directions. The Canadian federation, which was highly centralized at the beginning, had to struggle until it found a proper balance between its component parts through a decentralization process. On the other hand, the American federation which was very decentralized followed the road towards centralization. The Meech Lake Accord, as we are all well aware, reflects this deep-rooted process. We have restored each component of the Canadian society to its proper place. Above all, we have finally given Quebec its proper place; all we had to do was to forget this depressing period of our history when confrontation ruled supreme, to simply open the door, ask all interested parties to get together and give Quebecers and other Canadians something they had every right to expect, namely a country, Madam Speaker.

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Madam Speaker, everyone in the House recognizes that this is a special kind of debate, one that is not within the normal range of quick, 30-second flashes and reparteé in Parliament. We are talking about something which goes to the fundamental heart of the country. It requires from each and every Member on both sides of the House a sense of judgment on what is the best way in which they can serve the interests of their constituents, both in a local sense and in a national sense.

My starting point in trying to address the issue is a recognition of how important federalism is to Canada. Probably of all countries in the world, certainly all those with so-called federal arrangements, federalism is most important to us.

A little joke has been used many times about a question being posed to a Russian, an American, and a Canadian, asking them to define sex. The Russian says: "It is a capitalist conspiracy". The American says: "Sex is simply a natural evolution of liberty and the pursuit of happiness". The Canadian says: "It is a federal-provincial problem". This probably reflects what most Canadians innately understand, that our constitutional, legal, institutional framework setting up the powers between Governments and the way we relate to each other is in fact crucial because Canada could not operate without a federal system.

In a sense our geography is a series of connecting settlements across 5,000 kilometres. A sense of distribution at different levels of Government is required to manage it properly. The fundamental issue of French-English relations as they have evolved over the years also requires a federal system to maintain a dynamic between the two. Certainly the relationship, that is, the connection between an economically and politically strong, powerful central Canada and the peripheries, or the hinterlands of East and West, requires a federal system to adjust it, to monitor it, and to keep it alive and dynamic.

The most difficult relationship in some ways is that of trying to continue to occupy the northern half of the continent when our neighbour is the most powerful nation in the world, and of trying to maintain our independence, uniqueness, and distinctiveness in that relationship. This has also required a federal system to ensure that we could undertake the kind of social experimentation and the variations in developing that distinctive notion of what is Canada.

Today we find that we have a convergence of all those problems. In a sense, debating the Meech Lake Accord and the Langevin agreement is only one part of the great Canadian debate which seems to be taking place on what is our national purpose and how we answer those issues which have seized Canada since its inception, not only in terms of French-English relations but in terms of central Canada's relationship with the peripheries and its relationship with the United States.

Many of us see quite a fundamental alteration taking place in those relationships. It is a fundamental alteration because on virtually every front we now have a Government in Ottawa which basically does not believe in using Government to serve those purposes. It may see Government as an arbitrator, a mediator or perhaps a conciliator, but not as an initiator, a leader or a driving, motivating force to provide some sense of national purpose or direction in dealing with each of the issues. It comes as no surprise; it is not unique.

Canadian history has been replete with a very strong debate, or conflict at times, between two groups of thought or two competing notions of how Canada should operate, that between the community of communities we are simply an amalgam of separate islands somehow related in an archipelago of convenience, versus those who see Canada as something that the sum of which is greater than its parts. This group of thought indicates that the country of Canada has a unique destiny and responsibility of its own which is larger, bigger, more important, and more significant than the sum of its parts. This is the classic debate in which we have all been engaged.

The problem is that that reality is not in any way encompassed by the Meech Lake Accord, the document which was signed by the Premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) several months ago. If I have any real objection—and I know some of my colleagues feel the same—it is that so much of the new reality of the distinctive Canada about which I was talking is not incorporated in the agreement.

If we read the testimony presented by women's organizations before the standing committee, we see that they basically said that the Meech Lake Accord does not incorporate the new reality of women in our society and in our economy, that it does not grant them the kind of recognition of the rights for which they have fought so long. It does not take into account the kinds of concerns which my colleague from New Brunswick and I have in our constituencies about French-speaking Canadians outside the Province of Quebec. It is not incorporated in the Meech Lake Accord; it does not recognize those problems.

The Accord does not take into account the incredibly new sense of western direction, enthusiasm, and energy, to be more in control and managing our own resources. We do not see anywhere a recognition by the negotiators of the agreement of a demand for some accommodation on the part of the central provinces to greater representation at the national level. There is a fundamental flaw made in the country in assuming that provincial Governments will represent regional interests nationally. We are almost trying to devise a new kind of institution called federal-provincial conferences to make that kind of regional representation work.

However, we know that the founders of Confederation made a mistake, one which no successive generations corrected. The Upper Chamber was originally designed to ensure that there would be a sense of region at the national level of government, which was totally and completely destroyed by the fact that it was an appointed body. Because no one got around to changing it has meant that our federalism has always had a real flaw. It has not ensured an effective representation of the interests of western Canada and Atlantic Canada at the national level.

The movement toward that achievement was at a point of maturity, when the opportunity for major constitutional change to have an elected Senate based on some form of equal representation was about ready to blossom forward, but the Meech Lake Accord was signed to cut that off. That accommodation is more difficult now because the Accord establishes the principles of unanimity to make that kind of constitutional change.

In a sense our institutional document is further out of sync with the living reality of Canada itself. It is what political scientists call the living constitution, that kind of amalgam of political, social and economic forces that shift and change from generation to generation but which must give life to our Constitution.

Certainly the Meech Lake Accord does not take into account that since the Second World War there has emerged in Canada a new generation of Canadians, the so-called multicultural third force of Canada, which in some ways is the most dynamic part of our country. They find the Meech Lake Accord frustrates and freezes their ambitions and their aspirations. That is why there has been so much consternation, certainly in our Party and among many other Canadians.

This kind of constitutional initiative serves one very vital and important purpose, to have the Province of Quebec as a signatory, a purpose for which our own Party has fought. In our own policy resolution I spoke on behalf of western Canadians to encourage the convention to join in that ambition, but that noble and very positive achievement has been substantially marred by the other part of the equation which was given in order to achieve that goal.

We have taken certain steps backward. We have been blind to those new realities and we have created a very flawed and imperfect document. In fact, it may have put at some risk the effective evolution of Canada because we have put roadblocks or apparent barriers in the way.

I was reading a book by Donald Smiley called The Federal Condition In Canada. I think most people recognize that Professor Smiley is one of the foremost constitutional experts in Canada. Talking about the sense of national purpose and national policy, he said that there have been three real periods. First, John A. Macdonald in the 1870s had a national policy, which seemed to capture a sense of a broader Canada. Second, the period after the Second World War when we got together to forge a new set of social and economic institutions: the health care system, the regional equalization system and so on. Third, in the early 1980s the Government of which I was a member in its constitutional change attempted a kind of national resource policy. Professor Smiley ended with his comment:

> —if John A. Macdonald were to reappear among us, he would within a month have a surer grasp of the stakes in our current debates than does the person who is now the Prime Minister.

The first Conservative Prime Minister of Canada, John A. Macdonald, would have understood that, aside from simply accommodating regional, linguistic or ethnic interests, a broader sense of vision and purpose is also required. The present Accord fails on that account miserably. It ends up with a scuffling of private interests as a definition of what Canada is all about.

That is why the amendments put forward by members of our Party are so important and essential for consideration by this House. They are not in any way to impair the achievement of the Meech Lake Accord, which is the involvement of Quebec in the constitutional structure, but to say that it could be a much better, much improved document accommodating a much more realistic contemporary sense of what Canada is and what Canada should be. The amendments are simply to say, let us alter and reorganize to achieve a constitutional legal framework which better represents the interests of all Canadians and the reality of Canada. Those amendments are not in any way reducing the achievement. They add and support it. In particular they are trying to say to Members of this House that in no way would damage be done.

We are now locked into a kind of struggle reminiscent of certain Japanese wrestlers, those 400 pound behemoths who get into the centre ring, grasp each other and are afraid to move. It seems we almost have that now with the federal and provincial Governments. They have locked each other into a death grip and each one is afraid to move even though they know that there probably is a necessity for change and amendment.

I would say in parenthesis that perhaps there is some movement, at least on the provincial side. It may appear that there are certain provincial Governments which are now saying that their work was incomplete and not good enough. They must take into account the questions of how they respond to challenges to the Charter, the rights of the Territories and how they deal with the rights of the aboriginal peoples, the new realities of the Canada with which we are dealing.

We on this side of the House can only say Amen to those kinds of efforts because we know that change will have to be made. We also know that there is a smaller reality, namely, that this House will be required to vote in a matter of days or a week on the specific interest.

It is of great and incredible regret that the Prime Minister of Canada, the one person responsible for trying to have a broader vision, was not prepared to use those skills of conciliation, that he is so proud of boasting about, to deal with the kind of representations made in front of the standing committee. He instead stonewalled every opportunity for change, which flew in the face of valid important representations for change.

That, therefore, puts this House of Commons in an awkward dilemma. Because of the unwillingness and impolitic behaviour of the Government, the House of Commons is in a very difficult situation which we all realize. Everyone supports the ambition of Quebec to gain its sense of distinction and place in the Canadian Constitution, but to do that we must agree to an Accord which we also know does not recognize fully the rights and interests of many other Canadians or their concerns. That is the $64 question which colleagues on both sides of the House must face.

I suggest purely on my own account that ultimately we have to come to a choice based upon how to achieve the most effective kinds of constitutional changes for Canada, that will allow us to pursue a country that is modern, contemporary and recognizes its many changes over time. My conclusion is that we will not do it with this Government. It will be impossible to achieve with the kinds of initiatives that we have seen. For example, the kind of wrenching alteration in the fundamental structures of Canada that will be occasioned if the free trade agreement goes through. There is the total uprooting and dismantling of the federal Government's ability to provide direction and leadership on regional development, on social programs and economic development, and, in fact, in meeting international competition because we will no longer have a Government which has the power or strength to provide that leadership. We will have signed it away. We will have constricted our abilities and eliminated our capacity to develop programs to take initiative. It is a further sign that this group of people does not understand that government itself in its own right is a positive, creative, constructive force which must be used for those purposes. They have decided that the great allocator of the Canadian national interest will be the marketplace and that the Government is only there to facilitate that as opposed to providing a public interest, not a private interest, a public interest.

• (1150)

Mr. Blenkarn: What's wrong with that?

Mr. Axworthy: Even the Hon. Member from Mississauga does not understand the difference between public and private interest, that the Government is not simply there to reflect a whole series of private, profit-oriented interests. When people vote for a Member of Parliament they expect him to serve the public interest, and that public interest is bigger and broader than the whole series of individualized, selfish private interests.

Every Government has to accommodate business and labour and everything else, but it should not surrender to them or become captive to them. It should have a broader set of interests than that which is something that the Conservatives of the 1980s do not understand. They have no sense of that kind of public interest. We see it in the individual behavior of Members and in the behavior of the Government. That is why it is so essential, when looking at constitutional structures and institutions, we assure that the sense of public, national purpose is redefined and that we have a Government that understands that, for a change, and will bring those kinds of concerns to bear.

Ultimately, we will fight as hard as we can and for as long as we have a breath left for these amendments. If they are defeated, as the Prime Minister says they will be, then we will need a Government beyond this one which will pursue those same amendments in the same way to ensure that we will have a Constitution that fully recognizes and reflects the reality of Canada. My job will be to ensure that there is the basis for that alternative Government so that we can have an effective and useful Canada with an effective Government that recognizes those concerns. That will be the kind of decision which I will urge my colleagues to take as well.

Mr. Charest: Madam Speaker, I would like to know from the Hon. Member who is from the Province of Manitoba, because I did not hear it and he will excuse me if he has already stated it, whether he intends to vote for or against the Accord ultimately, whether the amendments put forward by his Party pass or not.

I would also like to pick up where he left off and ask him whether or not he intends to campaign during the next election on the amendments that the Liberal Party of Canada put forward today. Could he give us some indication of that, as the Leader of his Party has?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, in answer to the first question, if the Hon. Member had been following more carefully the debate in the House and in other places, he would know full well that the Leader of our Party has said that the kind of amendments we are putting forward will form the basis of a platform in the next election campaign. I will certainly be glad, as a member of that group, to campaign for them for the very reasons I have just stated, for the very reason that they more fully reflect and represent the interests of all Canadians; the women, aboriginal peoples, members of multicultural groups and those in the Territories who feel that they have been ignored and neglected by this particular Accord. It is important that they feel they have a place and a Party to represent them. We will be more than pleased to do that.

As for the first question, I would ask the Hon. Minister in return what his Party intends to do about the amendments. Do Members of his Party intend to vote for them? If he gives me an answer to that, he may get an answer from me.

Mr. Charest: Madam Speaker, I find it unusual that the Hon. Member would want to question me when I put before him a very simple question. I asked the Hon. Member if he would ultimately vote for the Accord whether the amendments pass or not.

The Government side has stated its position. It is quite clear. I myself have spoken on this Accord so perhaps the Hon. Member from Manitoba could tell us, since he is the one who is speaking today, whether ultimately he will or will not vote for the Accord, notwithstanding what happens to the amendments.

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, one offer is as good as another. Since the Hon. Member refused to answer my question, I will exercise the same right.

Mr. Charest: Madam Speaker, to get to the bottom of this, I can inform the Hon. Member that I will vote for the Meech Lake Accord, whether the amendments of the Liberal Party pass or not. I will vote for the Meech Lake Accord.

We already know that an important number of Members of the Liberal Party of Canada will ultimately vote against their Leader on this Accord. I would like to know if the Hon. Member will be one of the Members of the federal Liberal Party of Canada who will vote against his Leader.

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I absolutely and totally appreciate the prurient curiosity of the Hon. Member, but this after all is Parliament, and that may tell something about how he spends his time. He would be much better off looking after the youth of this country than worrying about how Liberal members will vote. We would not have a 14 per cent or 15 per cent unemployment rate among young people if he was doing his job.

I do not care how the Minister will vote. I want to know how the Government will vote. We have not heard that yet. We want to know about the amendments because we have made the case that the Meech Lake Accord is incomplete. We have put forward amendments and, as I understand the procedures of the House, having been here for several years, once the outcome of those amendments is determined, that will certainly determine our vote. I would be more than happy to note how the Hon. Member, a member of a minority in his Party, will vote.

Mr. Hamelin: Madam Speaker, my colleague quotes Professor Smiley of Queen's University. Is it not true that Professor Smiley, like many of his colleagues, was a great supporter of this Accord? Why quote him on something else?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, the quote I used from Professor Smiley was not commenting on the Accord, it was commenting on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He is certainly not supportive of the Prime Minister because he said the Prime Minister does not understand Canada and does not understand the national purpose of Canada. I would suggest that if Professor Smiley wants to support the Accord, that is his business. I was just using him as an authority on the Prime Minister.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, first, I find it very interesting that on such an important debate the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) would feel compelled to attack the Prime Minister personally, and then make references to me personally, references that are completely uncalled for. I take some time to note that because I think it is an indication of the predicament of the Hon. Member and also the attitude of his Party in this debate. Since he wishes to approach it from that point of view, I would be interested in knowing whether he agrees or not with the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who said that the Members of the Liberal Party who would vote against the Accord are anti-Quebecers.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for having damaged the tender, sensitive feelings of the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): If the Chair may interrupt for a minute, I think both the Hon. Member and the Hon. Minister might take time out to get their eyesight checked.

Mr. Axworthy: Pardon me, Madam Speaker. I will certainly take your advice.

[Translation]

I apologize, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to recognize the distinguished person sitting in the Chair.

[English]

First, I do apologize that the Hon. Minister's tender, sensitive feelings have in some way been trampled in the House of Commons. I did not realize we had such a hothouse flower among us that could not bear some comment upon his duties as a Minister. As the old saying goes, if you cannot stand the heat, get out of the kitchen.

I would think that the Hon. Member may want to find a more cloistered occupation to follow when he is defeated in the next election, an occupation that would not hurt him so much.

• (1200)

I want to explain very clearly that the point of our Party presenting amendments was not to defeat the specific goal of the Meech Lake Accord in having Quebec become a full signatory to the Constitution. We just think the Prime Minister struck a bad bargain. It could have been negotiated much more effectively. However, accepting as a fait accompli that we have that kind of mentality occupying high office, we want to signal to Canadians that they should not despair of having a Constitution that will meet their interests and concerns. That is the purpose of our amendments and no other. That is why we believe the Hon. Member and his colleagues would be well advised to realize that those amendments provide an important improvement to the constitutional fabric of this country, one that will provide for agreement rather than the division and disunity which will ensue if the Meech Lake Accord is not changed.

Mr. Charest: A last question, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry, the time for questions and comments is now over.

Mr. Charest: With the House's permission?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the Hon. Minister have unanimous consent for a last question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Charest: Madam Speaker, just for this question I will agree with the Hon. Member that we should not be ruffled by personal references in the House. I will then repeat the question which the Hon. Member did not answer. Does he agree with a member of his own Party, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, who referred to Members of his Party who will not vote for the Accord as being anti-Quebec? If he wishes to answer the question, we will find out whether or not he is really interested in the debate. Get up and answer it.

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I will be glad to answer that. I have been a Member of the Liberal caucus for nine years. I have participated in every debate dealing with the relationship of Quebec to the rest of this country. I can say with great pride that the Liberal Party has done more to provide for constructive development of French-English relations than any other Party in this country. We will still do so when we become the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. Charest: You did not answer the question, though.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I wish to participate in this debate and say why I agree with the two Members who spoke this morning concerning the historical importance of this debate.

I came to Canada as a youngster with my family in the early 1950s. We were fleeing the wars that had ravaged Europe and Southeast Asia. To be able to stand here and participate in a debate over the Constitution of this country is for me personally a very important and moving moment. That I can do so says much about what Canada is. Surely there are very few countries in this world where a newcomer can be elected and participate, as I am doing now, in debating the constitution form of that country. It says something about this country and its broadness of vision that an immigrant can be elected to this place. I am not the only one; there are many others in this House who were born in countries other than Canada. It says a lot about Canada that this opportunity exists for newcomers.

The fact that we are standing here debating the Constitution also says something about Canada. It indicates what a young country we are. We are attempting to define our essence. Surely that is what a Constitution is all about.

This process started in 1982. I had hoped then to have an opportunity to participate in the debate on the Constitution Act of 1982. Unfortunately I did not have the opportunity. Some of the things I want to say today are things I had wanted to say in that debate.

At that time I was disturbed when the former Liberal Government under Mr. Trudeau brought in that legislation because there were several aspects which I did not think were correct. First, I thought it was a power grab by the central Government. The federal Government was attempting to act unilaterally to change the nature and shape of this country in a dramatic fashion. It was not until the Supreme Court came down with quite a historic decision that the Prime Minister realized he had better start talking to the provinces to get their understanding and agreement. That is what happened; compromises were reached and we ended up with the Constitution Act of 1982.

It is interesting to note that the process by which we reached that agreement was one of consultation, wheeling and dealing, discussions, and compromises among the elected Governments of this country. That also says so much about what Canada really is. The federal Government's move in 1981-82 disturbed that balance.

I was also disturbed because the original document Mr. Trudeau introduced would have increased the powers of the federal Government. I for one have always believed that the nature of Canada is reflected in the division of powers between the federal and provincial Governments. I have been a strong believer in the notion of co-operative federalism. To govern a country as diverse as Canada, with its various regional interests, linguistic and economic groups, is best done through a co-operative, flexible, compromising kind of system.

That leads me to my second area of concern about what Mr. Trudeau started in 1982. That was his attempt to cast our Constitution in stone. I believe that to be a major problem still. He attempted to define in legalistic terms where the power should be, what our rights are, and what are the roles of the various Governments. We are living in an age of very rapid technological, social, psychological and cultural change. I believe our Constitution should have remained flexible. What we had was a collection of different Acts and documents, some of them going back to Westminster, the BNA Act, and common law. That was our Constitution. It was not neat, it was not defined in one legalistic document. There were many documents. The Constitution was part of the British heritage of common law as well. It was flexible and open. I believe it would have served Canada much better in the years to come to have maintained a flexible Constitution which would have allowed organic growth and changes as we went into the 21st century and beyond. Casting it in stone by passing specific Bills like the Constitution Act of 1982 has created a rigidity which, I believe, will not serve us in the years ahead. I believe that the co-operative, flexible, organic approach of the past would have served us much better in the future than what we have now.

That leads me to my third concern about the Constitution Act of 1982, that being the areas which were left out. If we were going to begin to define the rights and responsibilities of individuals and various elected bodies, we should have continued. What Mr. Trudeau talked about was really 19th century Liberal ideals. I am not saying that they are necessarily outdated. Individual personal freedoms and rights are important. The document which we have today is still flawed because of its basic omissions, and I will return to that later.

What was missing, in my opinion, was a futuristic outlook. I would have felt much more comfortable and been much more excited had the document talked about some of the issues and concerns which the people of our country will be facing as we approach the 21st century and beyond. The newer technologies of mass communication will create a power for persuasion and propaganda against which I believe the citizens of our country must be protected in the future. That was missing.

I think of the tremendous growth of pollutants in the world today. Our air, water, and soil are being polluted to an ever-increasing extent. There should have been something in the Constitution guaranteeing the right to fresh air and clean water. It would have been admirable to put such rights into our Constitution to ensure that one generation cannot befoul the earth, the air, and the waters for the generations to come.

I am concerned about the erosion which I see of basic social programs such as medicare. We should have included in the Constitution the right to the best medical treatment for all Canadians. That was not included. A country as rich and bountiful in resources as is ours should have included in its Constitution the right to decent housing and to food on the table. Canadians living in this beautiful and bountiful nation should inherit the right to decent housing and food on the table.

All of those things were missing from the 1982 Constitution Act. In many ways the Constitution Act was a 19th century Liberal document and I think we should have had a 21st century document.

Those were my concerns about Mr. Trudeau's constitution. The Meech Lake Accord is some steps further down the road on which Mr. Trudeau started us. I congratulate the Premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on their accomplishment in devising an agreement which includes Quebec, the sister culture, in the Constitution. That was an important achievement. It would have been very difficult for Canadians to have continued to live with a Constitution which Quebec had not signed. That would have helped to create and foster alienation in the future.

However, there are things in the agreement which must trouble us all. For example, with regard to the definition of a separate society, our common sense tells us that the culture and psychology in Quebec is different. We rejoice in the difference because it strengthens Canada. In fact, it was the French culture in Quebec which helped protect Canada from the persuasive influence and power of the United States. Quebec is very important in ensuring that Canada maintains its sense of identity. Without Quebec, English Canada would have become much more Americanized. Quebec reminds us that we are indeed different and that is very important.

However, to define that in legalistic terms is very difficult, if not impossible. That is why it is difficult to have a Constitution which requires a definition for everything, which requires the casting in stone of every aspect of this country. It is an impossible task which entangles us in a legal jungle into which our Constitution is leading us further.

There are things about the Meech Lake Accord that bother me. Many Members on all sides of the House have expressed those concerns. It is wrong that the Yukon and the Northwest Territories will not be allowed to become provinces until all the other provinces agree. That outrages our sense of fairness and justice.

The rights of our aboriginal people is a question yet to be resolved. The country must come to terms with our aboriginal people, our founding fathers—

Ms. Copps: And mothers.

Mr. de Jong: And mothers. To allow this to remain unresolved is as unacceptable as is keeping Quebec out of the Constitution. It must be a priority of this Parliament and all Parliaments to resolve to bring our aboriginal people into the constitutional family.

The override on women's rights is totally unacceptable. It is incredible that in this day and age there is no guarantee that there shall be no discrimination based on gender. There is an override as well on the issue of minority rights. It is totally unacceptable that people can be discriminated against based on the colour of their skin. That issue must also be resolved.

I am concerned about the reform of the Senate. While I agree with the actions of our Senators in holding up certain Bills—because I disagree with the substance of those Bills as well—I cannot accept the fact that unelected people can stop the work of this House. It is unacceptable that entering into the 21st century we are still saddled with an institution left over from centuries ago. I am afraid that the proposal from the Meech Lake Accord will make the bad situation even worse. I doubt very much that we will have genuine Senate reform. The only change is that federal patronage has become provincial patronage and all 10 provinces will have to agree to give up their powers of patronage. Good luck. I am afraid that will never happen.

Another area of concern which has been eloquently expressed is the concern about social programs. Are we giving with the Meech Lake Accord too much power to the provinces? I was opposed to Mr. Trudeau's initiative because I thought he took all the power for the federal Government and it seemed to me that social progress in this country has, on the main, occurred at a provincial level. We have had CCF Governments which have introduced things like hospital insurance and medicare, pioneering new social forms which then became popularized and spread throughout the country. Then the federal Government picked them up and established them as national programs.

Very often it is much easier for those of us who are concerned and interested in social progress to try it first on a provincial level. Social programs are very difficult to implement first on a national level because the federal Government is generally concerned with regional, linguistic and cultural differences. It does not have the support of the electorate of provinces that are a little more homogenized. It is easier to get a provincial electorate behind a certain social program, as we did in Saskatchewan in the early 1960s in terms of medicare. To have brought in medicare without first having it established through the provinces I believe would have been impossible.

Medicare first was initiated through the provinces because of the work done by people like T.C. Douglas and Woodrow Lloyd. Woodrow Lloyd was a man I worked with and for, a man I very deeply respected. The role he played in introducing medicare to this country was heroic. Medicare came in through the provinces. That is where the social experiments occur. That is where the social laboratories exit. I think we must make certain that the provinces have the opportunity of performing the social experimentation.

Certainly, what the Liberals originally introduced in the 1982 Constitution Act would have severely prevented this social experimentation from occurring. It was a power grab by that federal Government. My vision of this country is one of co-operative federalism where both levels of government have an important and vital role to play. It is not a case of the federal Government being more important, or the provincial government. They have different roles to play, but fit together to help shape this country into a strong, vibrant, progressive and growing country. To tilt the power in favour of the federal Government or in favour of the provinces does a disservice to how we operate in this country.

I do not accept the criticism of the Meech Lake Accord that it will stop social progress. It could very well help to engender social programs and allow more social progress to occur by allowing social experimentation in the provinces. It is true that we have in Saskatchewan right now a regressive government where some of the social progress is now being disassembled. I think the federal Government has an important role to play in ensuring that national standards are maintained.

I have stood in my place and asked that the Government curtail funding to the Province of Saskatchewan because of what it is doing with legal aid. The national standards in terms of legal aid are not being met by the Province of Saskatchewan and the federal Government should use the power of the purse. Power should remain with the federal Government. It should not be tilted in favour of one or the other.

I feel that while there are major problems with the Meech Lake Accord because there are things left undone which should be done and the constitutional process is, therefore, not finished. we have taken a few more steps down the road on which Mr. Trudeau sent us. I never liked the road he chose, but once we are on that road we cannot stop. There are many more steps which need to be taken with the Meech Lake Accord. I welcome the recommendation of the standing committee that there be a permanent, standing committee of this House to deal with constitutional amendments. I dearly hope that much of what I said will be wrong, that the Constitution which is evolving will be flexible enough to meet the tremendous challenges of the 21st Century. That is my sincerest wish.

Mr. Berger: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his remarks. I always listen to him carefully when he speaks in this House. However, I was quite astonished today by some of his remarks and I would like to put a few questions to him.

First, the Hon. Member referred to 1982 as a power grab by the federal Government. He referred to the original proposal which he then distinguished from the final proposal. I would like him to name one single power, either in the original proposal or in the final proposal, which the federal Government assumed, one single power the federal Government proposed to have transferred from the legislative authority of the provinces to the federal Government. I may be wrong, but I do not recall that initiative making any such proposal.

Second, the Hon. Member was concerned that the 1981 or 1982 proposal made our Constitution more rigid. He said the Constitution should have remained flexible. I do not quite understand what he is driving at there because I see, for example, the procedure for amending the Constitution of Canada, the general procedure under Article 38, which provides a formula to amend the Constitution with the agreement of the Parliament of Canada and two-thirds of the provinces which have 50 per cent of the population. This, to me, is a much more flexible proposal than the constitutional convention we have been operating under for some 45 or 50 years which requires the agreement of all the provinces and the federal Government.

I thought the Hon. Member perhaps opposed the idea of a Charter of Rights but he did say he thought the Charter was important. I would remind him when he talks about the need to address the question of newer technologies or the right to a cleaner environment, the Charter does that in an organic fashion, in a fashion that will grow and can be built upon over the years, namely, Article 7 of the Charter, which refers to every person's right to life, liberty and security of the person. Although that provision may have up to now been somewhat restrictively interpreted by the courts, I think there is the possibility that the provision, with perhaps a broader interpretation over a period of time, could grow into the kind of concept which the Hon. Member says he favours.

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, I did take notes and I do have some notations so I think I can answer the Hon. Member's questions. First, he wanted to know what sort of power grab the federal Government attempted to commit in 1981-1982 with the 1982 Constitution Act. First, it acted unilaterally when the Prime Minister attempted to just pass the legislation through the House of Commons and the Senate, and that was it. That in itself was, I think, a power grab. As well, there were aspects in the Constitution that certainly disturbed us, for example, guaranteeing interprovincial trade, so that one province could not discriminate against, let us say, companies coming from outside of Canada. We in Saskatchewan felt that provision could have prevented medicare from being introduced in 1961-62 because the provincial public monopoly on medical insurance would have prevented outside insurance companies from operating in Saskatchewan.

In the same way, we felt in Saskatchewan that the same provision would have prevented us from introducing the Saskatchewan Government's automobile insurance because it created a public monopoly, so would have discriminated against outside insurance companies from doing business in Saskatchewan.

Those were some of the concerns we had about the proposals that were introduced by the former Liberal Government. There was no doubt about it, and I think everybody will recognize, that it was a power grab by the central state. The former Prime Minister's disdain for the provinces and provinicial leaders and Premiers was quite widely known. I suspect that the only person he really respected was Allan Blakeney because Allan Blakeney was able to stand toe to toe with him on issue after issue.

Mr. Rodriguez: Unlike his own Cabinet.

Mr. de Jong: The Hon. Member's second question concerned rigidity. Much of what I have said today is that I find going down the road of a written Constitution creates a rigidity. I still believe that. He suggested that the amending formula, after the Constitution Accord of 1982, created more flexibility than had existed before. He described it as what "seemed" to exist in the previous Constitution. Of course, I appreciate him saying "seemed". The Constitution we had before was a collection of many different documents. It was not defined. It was not focused. It was not totally described in legalistic terms.

Mr. Trudeau, after all, was a great lawyer. He thought in legalistic terms, and reality had to be defined in legalistic terms. For Mr. Trudeau if the Constitution was not defined in legalistic terms, it did not have a reality to it. I was suggesting that perhaps had Mr. Trudeau been more of a poet and less of a technocrat lawyer he could have had the spirit and the essence of this country. He could have realized that the spirit was alive even though it was not defined in legalistic jargon and terms.

Had Mr. Trudeau been more of a poet, we could have had a Constitution that had some poetry in it rather than having it read like the Income Tax Act, dry and dull, something from which only legal scholars can get any inspiration.

The third point that my colleague from the Liberal Party mentioned was the Charter of Rights. He suggested that such collective rights as the environment can be built on in Article 7. I suppose that is true. I suppose some of the objections that he has had toward the Meech Lake Accord can also be built on in Article 7. His logic here escapes me.

The way things stand now, one can build on what is there. Surely, a great deal more building has to be done in terms of women's rights, aboriginal people and so forth. I do not disagree with him that building has to be done.

But I am just saying it was a pity that in 1982 the vision was not great enough to encompass the 21st century; that, in essence, Mr. Trudeau's document was backward looking and not a forward looking. Had it been a forward looking document he would have included the right to fresh air and clean water, the right to a decent basic standard of living, the right to basic minimal medical care in this country, basic rights that Canadians should enjoy from here on in.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): As some of my colleagues have done so far, Madam Speaker, I will deal with the Meech Lake Accord which, I think reflects a vision of tolerance as a characteristic feature of Canada in the respect and promotion of its very creative differences.

Having had the privilege to sit last summer on the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Meech Lake Accord, I realized, after a few meetings, that I was taking part in an event of major historical significance. And facing the Canadian coats of arms inscribed with the a mari usque ad mare motto, I realized, for the first time in 20 years, the full significance of this symbol.

As so many other Quebecers, following the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord, I felt for the first time really Canadian, while still feeling like a Quebecer. Thanks to the fantastic results achieved by the Premiers and the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), thanks to their faith in the Canadian federation, thanks to their will to be the builders of Canada rather than small-time politicians who care only for political concepts which inevitably change according to the mood of the time and public opinion, for the first time, I realized the meaning of the Canadian motto A mari usque ad mare, from sea to sea, and I felt a bit more confident of my identity as a Canadian, and as a Canadian from Quebec, I wanted to play my part in the Canadian federation.

I felt better able to identify with this country because I saw that the whole federation was willing to respect my identity and my differences, and I am not speaking about superiority because we are not better than anyone else. The Canadian mosaic reflects these collective differences, which include my own creative differences and my role in this great country. For the first time, I felt that the other communities in Canada, especially the English-speaking community, recognized me, all Quebecers and all French-Canadians as first-class Canadians and as part of this country.

During the hearings of the Joint Committee chaired by Senator Arthur Tremblay and his colleague Chris Speyer, we looked together at all the options offered by this Accord. We looked at what could be fundamental mistakes or weaknesses in the Accord. We heard hundreds of witnesses and dozens of groups who came to express their views on this historic and, according to some people, near miraculous, Constitutional Accord.

I do not know whether some of them acted in good faith or not, but they used what I would call a somewhat fallacious method, and this is unfortunately the trap in which some of our Liberal colleagues in this House have fallen.

Most of them were ecstatic and full of admiration when they saw the beautiful forest we were planting, but immediately after, they got out their axes and began to destroy systematically this historic Accord. Under what pretext? In most cases, because this Accord, as it was made by man, is by definition not perfect. No one on the committee said it was a perfect Accord. However, everyone, including most of our experts, agreed that although the Accord was not perfect, it was an absolutely essential component of the Canadian structure we were building together, and that later on, if need be, we could look at this structure again and make further changes.

In politics like anywhere else, it is much easier to create panic than to create hope, solidarity and unity. It is so much easier to try and scare people. It is so much easier to claim that rights are in jeopardy. For instance, the women of Quebec reminded Canadian women that they could stand on their own two feet and were perfectly able to promote and protect their fundamental rights, rights for which the women of Quebec, like many other Canadian women, have fought vigorously and have now won fundamental recognition.

Granted, the Accord does not recognize, does not pay enough attention to and does not define aboriginal rights as such. It is clear that the aboriginal community, despite continuing attempts, has yet to find its true place, and with force and determination, gain recognition for that place within the Constitution. This could not be done. The Accord does not deal with this specifically. The same applies to the Senate.

Western Canada is very much concerned about Senate reform. As a Quebecer, I must say, and I think most of my colleagues will agree, that the issue of Senate reform is not one of our priorities. We don't lose any sleep over it. I think a proposal to abolish the Senate would easily meet with the unanimous or nearly unanimous support of Quebecers. But that was not the purpose of the nation-building exercise in which the Premiers participated.

There were other issues as well that were brought to our attention during these hearings. There was the whole issue of Francophones outside Quebec. Of course we would have preferred to have the Accord both protect and promote their rights, and we said so in Item 14 of our report, namely that the Constitution should provide that all Governments have a duty not only to protect but also to promote Canada's linguistic duality. However, we realized that in the circumstances and for the time being, it would be impossible to win the acceptance of the entire Canadian community. We did not get the impression, and this was later confirmed by others, that some of the Premiers would not agree to both protect and promote the Canadian linguistic duality in their respective provinces.

There was of course criticism of the distinct society concept.

Some people almost jokingly asked: Does it mean something, or does it mean nothing? If it does not mean anything, why is it there? Reference was made to Quebec's society as being a sociological reality which some people simply would not want to see enshrined in a constitutional statute.

I, for one, state that the distinct society concept does not give Quebec any additional power, either in theory or in practice. The issue of division of powers among the central government and the provinces was not raised. But we happen to know that this concept of distinct society really means something. It will undoubtedly enable Quebec's society to expand as much as possible within its jurisdiction, within its own particular fields.

I can only smile when I hear certain people voice fear and concern about recognizing such a society. They say: You will be granting new powers, creating two societies in Canada, two classes of citizens, some who will get preferential treatment and other Canadian men and women of different ethnic origins who will not be in a position to benefit fully. That suggestion is quite wrong.

We must appreciate the fact that these claims were and are still rooted in Quebec history. One has to bear in mind that francophone Canadians and Quebecers in particular constitute a small society surrounded on all sides by 350 million English-speaking people. My God, this is the way, not to defend our interests to the detriment of anybody else, but to promote our own distinct character if we want to survive.

The assimilation figures for the other provinces and for Canada in general are such that it is obvious that if we are not given the means to remain what we are as a society, we shall not be able to resist for long. Our society is an asset for Canada. It is part of the essence of this country, and what I want myself is to be part of the essence of this country, but for that, I need the means, not to do better than anyone else, but to promote my own identity in security and harmony. The great victory of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was to convince the Premiers to accept this sociological reality, and the miracle is that all of them agreed to consider the concept of a distinct society as an essential component of the Canadian federation. This is the great miracle of this Accord and this is also what makes it so delicate.

This is also why we rejected amendments which, while seeming to improve the Accord, could have destroyed it. It is not because we did not recognize that something must be done quickly in Canada for our native people. It is not because we refuse the right of francophones outside Quebec to develop fully. It is not because we are not sensitive to individual rights. It is not for those reasons, but because we know that it is impossible to do everything at once and that this basic component is essential for Quebecers. We heard the views of those who played a vigorous role in the Quebec referendum, of those who fought to keep Quebec within the Canadian Federation.

When I heard my Liberal friend speak about rights and the public interest earlier, it made me smile because it was under his Party that the country was nearly destroyed. It was because of his Party's philosophy of an ethereal centralizing federalism that Canada was nearly destroyed. It is true the country almost fell apart. It was very close.

I believe this Constitutional Accord is extremely important. I must say I am somewhat concerned about the kind of situation we have in New Brunswick, where a new Premier has just been elected with a crushing majority. It will be difficult in that province to have a parliamentary democracy that reflects public opinion, and I am particularly concerned about comments that, as far as Quebec is concerned, are quite hostile to this Constitutional Accord. I hope he will change his mind about making so-called improvements or changes. Otherwise, I am afraid they will all withdraw their signatures and their commitments. And that would be very serious indeed.

We all know it is extremely difficult to get everyone to agree on certain principles and ideas, to set aside personal perceptions and interests and sit down together and concentrate on the public interest and develop a united vision as nation builders. It makes for a fragile Accord. But it also makes it important and fundamental and fascinating. It should not be tinkered with. If we tinker with this Accord, if we open it up again for the sake of making a few changes, it means releasing everyone from his commitment and his given word. And that is what we must understand.

Our committee understood this. We made about 20 recommendations with the future in mind, when further constitutional conferences will be held. We recommended setting up a standing constitutional committee that would make it possible to spend more time preparing agendas and subject matter. We are confident that in the future, despite the new unanimity rule—even if we did have the seven provinces and 50 percent rule, one cannot run a country by ramming issues down people's throats. One cannot do that. In any case, it takes a consensus and almost unanimous consent. In any case, it would take unanimous consent. It does in constitutional matters. It nearly always does, otherwise confrontation would be the order of the day.

Several witnesses said that if the Accord was not ratified as soon as possible by all parties involved, our Canadian federation might again be in jeopardy. People who do not believe that did not experience the events leading up to the Quebec referendum.

Granted, today Quebec has a government that has made a commitment to the Canadian federation. It is the same government that negotiated the basic elements of this Accord. It endorsed the Accord. And it sincerely hopes, and I am referring to the present Quebec Government, that the rest of Canada will do likewise.

In the future, it will still be possible to propose further amendments, this time with the approval of Quebec, which will participate gladly and show a great deal of interest, for instance, in the issue of Senate reform. And it will be more likely to consider proposals from eastern or western Canada.

I therefore feel that Hon. Members should read the Joint Committee report and in that sense I have a lot of admiration, Madam Speaker, for the position taken by the members of the New Democratic Party who, of course, express reservations and wishes, but who add: Our reservations will never result in destroying the agreement. What those people did, and what I would ask from my Liberal colleagues, both in the Senate and in the House of Commons eventually, would be to look at the Accord as being both fundamental and essential, although imperfect. This country's existence is at stake—not merely surviving but moving forward together as integral parts of this great country. And I would urge them to share that vision which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his colleagues have had of Canada, a vision of tolerance and respect for and promoting those creative differences.

Mr. Berger: Madam Speaker, in his comments the Hon. Member referred to the people of Quebec, Quebecers, as a small minority in a sea of some 250 million English-speaking in North America, and I must confess I do not share his fears in that respect. I believe this small minority is much stronger perhaps than he is. We have the example indeed of the Lamarres, the Lorties, the Castonguays who are leading Quebec multinationals that are extending their activities around the globe. We also have the example of the 10 000 students each year who attend the École des Hautes Études Commerciales in Montreal. And really, I am not under the impression that those people need the added protection of the distinct society concept.

Looking at the Hon. Member, Madam Speaker, I cannot help thinking either that he is quite a grown-up lad, and I would like to ask him why he needs that extra protection, that crutch as one might say, to stand on his own two feet?

Mr. Hamelin: Madam Speaker, I believe that it was the former Prime Minister who said—unfortunately, as is often the case, one of our own proved to be the most willing to bring us down—that Quebecers did not need any crutches such as this Accord. I do not consider the historic demands of Quebec to be crutches, and I do not consider that our will to create—and we did so by asserting ourselves and we did not wait for anyone else to do it for us. Otherwise, we would have disappeared a long time ago, my friend! I am quite happy to see that our small community, in close proximity to this majority of 250 million, was able, in the 25 years since the so-called quiet revolution, to obtain the tools necessary to develop and to produce competent men and women because of whom we can now open up to Canada, to the United States and to the rest of the world. There still remains that we had in Quebec a Government which was able to provide the necessary tools and to make enormous sacrifices—

Mr. Berger: You have full powers!

Mr. Hamelin: We gave ourselves as Quebecers—

Mr. Berger: You have no need for the Meech Lake Accord in that case!

Mr. Hamelin: One moment! I believe that you should reread your history books. You would see that, in spite of everything that has been said about our culture and our language and in spite of generous principles, it was because of this culture and this language that many of us were uprooted and became assimilated in this country. You say that we have no need for protection. The concept of a distinct society involves not only the protection, but also the promotion of this society, and this will enable us to do as much as we can.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am certain that the Hon. Members will want to continue the debate later on. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until 2 o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

1987 EXCELLENCE AWARDS

TRIBUTE TO PERSONALITIES HONOURED, AND IN PARTICULAR TO M^ME LISE WATIER

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outrement): Mr. Speaker, last week in Montreal the newspaper La Presse honoured six people at the Excellence 87 gala. The six personalities chosen were: Denys Arcand, film maker, Ben Johnson, sprinter, Dominique Michel, comedian, Claire L'Heureux-Dubé, Supreme Court justice, Ludmilla Chiriaeff, founder of the Grands Ballets Canadiens and, finally, Mme Lise Watier, businesswoman. I would like to offer my warmest congratulations to each and every one of them.

Mr. Speaker, let me draw particular attention to the winner of that Excellence 87 award, Mme Watier. That dynamic businesswoman now owns, in the cosmetics field, an empire that spreads over more than 650 selling points in Canada and where she offers more than 450 products. And her business is constantly expanding. Indeed, Mme Watier has set her sights on first place in the cosmetics industry in Canada and would also like to penetrate foreign markets, those of the United States and Europe.

Mme Watier respects her male and female customers' tastes and needs. It is one of the reasons why the Watier Group is prospering so well. She is the symbol of the new wave of Quebec entrepreneurs who have won such renown at the national and international levels.

I know that all my colleagues in the House of Commons and particularly those from Quebec join with me to congratulate Mrs. Watier and wish her success in her future endeavours.

THE ECONOMY

STOCK MARKET COLLAPSE—EFFECT OF PROTECTIVE TARIFF WALLS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the stock market collapse in New York, Toronto, London, Tokyo and Sydney reminds many of what happened in the 1930s. They should also be reminded of how that problem became a crisis because protective tariff walls were constructed not only around the United States but around Germany and many other countries.

It has become conventional wisdom for economists to say that the Depression of the 1930s might not have lasted so long or declined so deeply if free trade had been accepted in the 1930s. What about the 1980s and the 1990s? The same wisdom should show us that an expanding world population now gives us more than enough demand for our supply if we can only open up the channels of trade communication around the world.

Protection is the road to recession. Free trade offers the prospect of prosperity.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—THREATENED NON-TREATMENT OF VICTIMS BY DENTISTS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is tragic enough that the slow response of Governments to the AIDS crisis has allowed a climate of fear, ignorance and antipathy to homosexuals to produce such consequences as the recent abuse of human rights.

But it is a disgrace when members of the dental profession who should know better should, in such overwhelming numbers, state that they would refuse to treat AIDS victims. And when their professional organization advocates preventive measures against AIDS which are more consistent with the superstition of the dark ages than with modern microbiology and medicine, that is an outrage.

If dentists are so ill informed about elementary epidemiology, then it is clear that the practitioners of this lucrative health profession are ill trained and their patients ill served, and it is time for reform in their professional training.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CRITICISM OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY POLICIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, have you noticed that the NDP rigidly adheres to any policy set out by the Canadian Labour Congress? For example, Shirley Carr stated that free trade was "selling Canada to the United States". Almost immediately the leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) stated in the House "the Tories are selling Canada to the United States".

Again, the CLC supports the strike by the postal workers and so, are you surprised that the NDP holds up legislation forcing workers back to work for several days costing money for every small business in Canada, to say nothing about the inconvenience imposed on the people?

As a matter of fact, whenever there is a strike of union workers against the people, the NDP is on the side of the union. All of which begs the question: are MPs elected by the unions, or is it the healthy grant the unions pay to the NDP out of money contributed by all the union workers, many of whom never would and never will vote for a socialist candidate, the real reason? The people of Canada have a right to know.

FISHERIES

EFFECT OF LOW WATER LEVELS ON BRITISH COLUMBIA SALMON SPAWNING GROUNDS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, as a result of an extremely dry summer and fall in British Columbia fishermen, both sport and commercial, have expressed concern about the dry river beds, especially those containing prime salmon spawning grounds.

Low water levels in my riding have been recorded on the San Juan, Cowichan, Chemainus and Sooke Rivers, while on the mainland the Fraser River is at a near record low.

I recently toured the Cowichan River and saw first-hand the extremely low water level. The river has traditionally supported 3,500 to 7,000 Chinook salmon but these numbers have dwindled over the years. People fear that last year's record low of 1,200 returning spawners will be broken this year. To date only 400 have been counted by the local fisheries officer who was hoping to see 4,000. The situation is reaching crisis proportions as it is getting well into the spawning season.

• (1405)

While the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) cannot be expected to bring rain, he must provide increased funding for enforcement programs as well as river and stream enhancement programs to bring the stocks back to traditional levels, and he must guarantee the protection of fish habitat from the controllable forces of industrial polluters.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—SUPPORT FROM WHEAT AND LIVESTOCK PRODUCERS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the real story on the effect free trade will have on the various sectors of our economy in Saskatchewan is being told, not by the left-leaning opposition Parties but by the producer groups themselves.

Bill Yeast, President of the Saskatchewan Stock Growers' Association, says we virtually have free trade with the U.S. in the beef industry already and this agreement will be very important in maintaining our access to the U.S. market which in 1985 was worth over $250 million net to the beef industry.

Garth Larson, President of the Saskatchewan Pork Producers Marketing Board, recently stated that protectionism is our biggest problem and that this trade pact will ensure our accessibility to the U.S. market.

Bill Duke, President of the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association, also stated that he thinks Canada now has a better chance of retaining current access and getting further access.

This is proof positive that the free trade agreement is a good deal and it will provide better certainty and security of access to the U.S. market for Canadian exporters. This is precisely what our Government set out to achieve.

TOURISM

HARMFUL EFFECT OF INCREASING TAXES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, tourism is one of the most important industries in Canada. It generates hundreds of thousands of jobs and is worth $22 billion annually to our economy. Unfortunately, every year Canada experiences a tourism travel deficit. In fact, according to Tourism Canada, the travel deficit for this year is expected to increase significantly over last year.

For these and many other reasons, the Government should consider very seriously the implications of tax reform on the tourism industry. Canada must remain competitive. Increasing taxes on our tourism product will only make things worse.

In a recent appearance before the Commons committee on finance, the Tourism Industry Association of Canada had this to say:

> If higher prices are encountered in the market-place due to the sales tax, the hoped for increase in consumer spending will be compromised. If Canadians perceive better value elsewhere, they will be quick to take advantage of it.

The Government should listen to this advice and utilize tax reform to increase the competitive position of Canada's important tourism industry.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—CRITICISM OF NDP LEADER'S POSITION

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, we heard some more confusing rhetoric from the NDP over the weekend about the free trade issue, this time from none other than their Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). We always thought that he and his Party were opposed to free trade. Yesterday he told the Council of Canadians that we should have included Mexico in the negotiations.

It seems members of the NDP believe in free trade as long as the negotiations do not include those horrible Americans.

There is even more evidence of double-speak. In the same speech, the Hon. Member for Oshawa suggested that Canada's preoccupation with the United States is costing Canada its share of very important traditional markets in western Europe—all this coming from a Party that wants to withdraw from NATO. What is that supposed to do, improve our access to European markets?

The fact is that what is good for Oshawa through the Auto Pact is good for the rest of Canada through free trade. It is good for British Columbia, it is good for Alberta, it is good for Saskatchewan, it is good for Manitoba and central Canada, it is good for the Maritimes, and it is good for Newfoundland.

No wonder the NDP has gone down 10 points in the polls in British Columbia and the Conservatives have gone up 10 points. They want an election on the free trade issue. Mr. Speaker, allons-y! Let's go!

POLITICAL PARTIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—CRITICISM OF NDP POSITION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I am fed up with the continual whining and snivelling of the NDP over free trade. From the Leader on down to Donald Wilson, the perennial NDP candidate in my riding, over and over they cry and complain that Canada will lose its sovereignty, that we cannot compete with the Americans, that the Americans will dictate our future, et cetera, et cetera, ad nauseam.

• (1410)

Is it because the American-controlled unions have long been the only support of the NDP? Have they no faith in Canada or Canadians? I have.

I firmly believe that Canadian manufacturers, producers, entrepreneurs, scientists, farmers and, yes, even Canadian union workers, can compete with any country in the world when barriers are removed and competition is equal. I have faith in Canada and this Party has faith in Canadians. Deliver us from weak-kneed, spineless socialists who have no faith in anything, perhaps not even in themselves.

Oral Questions

CANADA POST CORPORATION

OBJECTION TO PRIVATIZATION PROPOSAL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Conservatives attacking the NDP position on free trade I assume they have the confidence to call a national election. However, this afternoon I want to deal with a different issue.

I heard Peter Pocklington this morning speaking on CBC Radio telling the country that labour peace at the Post Office would be achieved through total privatization of the service. This seems to be typical of the Conservative mentality, but we are all familiar with Mr. Pocklington's concept of labour peace. In 1986 one of the most violent strikes in the private sector took place at Pocklington's Gainers plant in Edmonton. It was one of the most vicious anti-labour actions to occur in Canada in recent history. I remember the emotions felt amongst the strikers and their supporters across the country as busloads of scab workers crossed the union's legal picket line and did union work. We all know the stories about the scouring of men's hostels, welfare and unemployment ranks, looking for men and women to cross the picket line.

The Conservative Government created a postal business plan which includes franchising and ensures that thousands of union jobs, most done by women, will be replaced by people working at minimum wage. Obviously this appeals to the Pocklington mentality. With his history of labour relations Mr. Pocklington is being hypocritical in saying that privatization of the Post Office would ensure labour peace. He never had it in his own plant. He should also state that his vision of Canada is not one that recognizes many rights for the working people of Canada.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION ON PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE SUPPORTED FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the statements we heard today from members of the Progressive Conservative Party would lead one to think they should have the courage of their convictions and do what they so often talk about with respect to parliamentary accountability and call an election on the free trade agreement.

It seems to me to be an apostasy of parliamentary accountability, particularly when it was so hard on a former Government for wanting to change the Constitution without a mandate, that that same Party now, when in government, should consider changing the economic constitution of Canada without a mandate from the people and without ever having mentioned such a thing in the election of 1984.

We are reminded of the Liberal hypocrisy in 1974 on another issue. This situation far surpasses that. We are talking about the future of Canada, and the Progressive Conservative Party should have the guts to call an election on this free trade agreement.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

LAUNCHING OF HOUSE OF COMMONS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. Speaker: I am pleased to inform all Members that today marks the launch of House of Commons Awareness Week, a week of educational seminars and displays aimed at sensitizing Members and staff to the needs of the disabled, both as employees and visitors.

[Translation]

Time has come for the disabled to enjoy the same opportunities as those available to other groups.

This stimulating week will be a source of enrichment for all of us.

[English]

Awareness Week: "Getting It Together", takes place for the next five days and I hope Members will join me in thanking the organizers from the House of Commons and the community for a job very well done.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

SITUATION ON INTERNATIONAL STOCK EXCHANGES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has obviously been following the situation last week and this morning of the massive correction on international stock exchanges. The latest figures indicate that about 25 per cent of the total value of the New York Stock Exchange has been wiped out. As of 2.13 p.m. the Dow Jones had fallen by 299 points today.

Has the Minister of Finance been in touch with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States and his counterparts in Europe and Japan? Can he assure the House that there is an international support mechanism in place on a contingency basis?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, obviously I have observed the fall in the stock market over the past two or three weeks. I think the Leader of the Opposition is exaggerating in his reference to this morning's activities on the markets.

I have looked with confidence at the performance of the Canadian economy during the early part of this year. During the first half of the year the economy grew at 6 per cent in real terms which, I think the Hon. Member is quite well aware, is the leading performance among the major industrialized countries.

Looking into the near future I do not see any of the concerns that would normally lead to recession. I think we have a sound economy in Canada which has been more broadly based over the past 12 months in terms of job creation and economic growth. I am confident in the future.

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER CONSULTED BANK OF CANADA GOVERNOR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, did the Minister of Finance consult with the Governor of the Bank of Canada this morning in an attempt to synchronize mechanisms to stabilize the exchange rates, particularly as they relate to the American dollar and the Canadian dollar, in view of the pressure due to the stock market drop in North America and throughout the world?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the level of the Canadian dollar has hardly changed in relation to the U.S. dollar. There has been very little fluctuation in that. There was an initial drop off in the bond market. The latest levels that I have seen are the same as they were on Friday.

The activity in the financial markets in Canada has been located almost exclusively in the stock markets. I think that the stability in the exchange markets and the bond markets is some cause for confidence.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL REVIEW OF SITUATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as reflected by stock values, we have had a dramatic diminishing of purchasing power in North America and around the world which prompts me to suggest that, since the Minister has not responded to my first two questions, he should be in immediate touch with the U.S. Secretary of the Treasury and his counterparts, particularly in the industrial world, and indeed with the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Has the Minister been in touch with his provincial counterparts, the provincial Ministers of Finance and provincial Treasurers, with a view to reviewing the situation on Canadian stock exchanges and reviewing what adjustment programs are in place to protect our work-force?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is jumping a little bit ahead of himself. We have had some activity in the stock markets and I think the Leader of the Opposition would recognize that we have had a very strong market since the beginning of this year.

There have been some corrections in the financial markets, but to suggest that we should quickly put in place all sorts of programs to respond to some adjustments in the stock markets when the economy is performing well and looks as though it will continue to perform well is probably anticipating quite a bit ahead of the realities of the world today.

• (1420)

STOCK MARKETS—EXCHANGE VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the huge drop in the stock markets. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Dow Jones industrial average dramatically plunged last week and the Toronto and Montreal Stock Exchange index also dropped proportionately. This morning the Toronto Stock Exchange dropped by 258 points, and just before coming into the House I found that the Dow Jones average had dropped by 300 points since the opening of the stock exchange this morning.

Since the dramatic fall of the stock market has convinced U.S. Secretary James Baker to say publicly that he will let the U.S. dollar fall against the Deutschmark and the currencies of other U.S. trading partners, what will the Canadian Government's policy be as far as the Canadian dollar is concerned in the face of this new U.S. policy? Will the Government favour a lower rate of interest to ensure that the Canadian dollar will not increase artificially, thereby damaging our competitiveness in the world market?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is taking some liberties in interpreting what Secretary Baker said about the actions that have been taken in the German financial markets.

The specific question is related to the performance of the Canadian dollar and by implication, I believe, the level of interest rates and the activities in the bond market. As I indicated to the Hon. Member's colleague just a moment ago, there has been quite good stability in both the exchange markets and the bond markets this morning. I do not see any reason why we should try to take actions that anticipate something which might not happen. Let us watch to see how things develop before there is any precipitant action taken.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I am not trying to guess what is going to happen. The facts speak for themselves: a 500-point drop at the New York Stock Exchange, a proportional drop at both the Montreal and Toronto Stock Exchanges, something we have not seen since 1929. I am not guessing, I am simply looking at the facts.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO PURSUE GRADUAL INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, this situation prompted the U.S. Treasury Secretary to let the value of the American dollar drop against other currencies, and as a result the Canadian dollar edged up. So I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he intends to maintain the gradual interest rate increase announced by the Bank of Canada, which will not only affect Canadian consumers who must pay more for mortgages and personal borrowings but also, due to the impact this will have on the Canadian dollar, put a damper on our exports and in fact cancel out all benefits which the Government expects to flow from its free trade with the United States.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me address the question the Hon. Member has put in relation to actions we have taken over the past two or three months in Canadian interest rates. Canadian interest rates have gone up. I think that is a reflection of the strong economy. As I indicated to his colleague, the economy in the first half of the year was the strongest of any of the major industrialized countries. There is a natural response of some increase and tightness of money because of the improvement in the economy.

The level of the dollar, though, I think has reflected some increased confidence in Canada as a result of that strong economic activity as well as the increased investment opportunities in Canada which have come about through programs this Government has introduced.

However, I think the level of the dollar and the level of interest rates are a good reflection of the relationships between Canada and the United States, our principal trading partner, as well as the level of economic activity which, as I said, has been very good in this country.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL TAKE MEASURES TO REASSURE INVESTORS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance and has to do with the stock market drop, not only in New York and London but also at the Toronto and Montreal Stock Exchanges. The Minister of Finance has just expressed confidence in the Canadian economy. But other than this expression of confidence, does he advocate taking other concrete and positive measures to reassure investors and the Canadian public who are now quite concerned over the economic situation created by sharply declining stock markets?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is kind of interesting to see the New Democratic Party paying so much attention to the stock market.

An Hon. Member: That is where they keep their money.

• (1425)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I do not want to make a lot of that because there is no question that the drops in the stock markets over the last little while have been quite large by historical standards. What I think we have seen over the past month or so is an indication of stock market analysts and economic analysts increasing their estimates of economic performance in Canada for the balance of the year and into next year. I think that it is much more important for us to look at the real aspects of the economy as opposed to the financial aspects of the economy as reflected in the stock market.

As I said in response to previous questions, I have a good deal of confidence in the current outlook for the Canadian economy. I do not believe that it is necessary to make precipitous changes in that since the economic and financial policies that we have been following have served us very well over the past three years.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET BANKERS AND STOCK EXCHANGE OFFICIALS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, New Democrats are concerned about what is happening on Wall Street and on the stock exchanges in Toronto and Montreal, if the consequences are that Canadian working men and women lose their jobs because of the economic situation.

My question to the Minister of Finance is this. Does he have any concrete and specific actions that he will now take in terms of meeting with the presidents of the banks, with the head of the Bank of Canada, or with the officials of the stock exchanges here in Canada in terms of seeking assurances that this is just a correction and not something beyond that which will launch us into a prolonged economic downturn?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I met with representatives of the chartered banks about two or three weeks ago—I cannot remember the precise date. At that time we had a good discussion of the expectations that they had for the performance in the economy.

The point I would like to make is with respect to the difference a day makes in the attitude of members of the New Democratic Party. On the one hand they are saying to us: "No, you should not put in these encouragements to investment because investment is not a good thing for people in this country—

Mr. Riis: Who said that, Michael?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): They do not want us to encourage foreign investment. They do not want us to encourage investment by small—

Mr. Riis: Who said that?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap says: "Who said that?" I think he has been critical of the investment policies that we have had introduced as a Government.

Mr. Riis: Yes, investment policies.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): I would begin my third question to the Minister of Finance by expressing my concern that the Minister of Finance is more interested in trying to make partisan points against the New Democratic Party than about the concerns that people have over this very substantial drop in the stock market.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I think any impartial observer would agree that what has occurred—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: —in the stock markets in Canada, the United States and Britain is far more than just a correction of markets which have gone too high. It is a very substantial drop, one that provokes a great deal of concern and a great deal of inquietude among a great many people. Does the Minister of Finance not have specific and concrete actions in mind beyond declaring that he has confidence in the situation in the Canadian economy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, am I to interpret that response that the NDP is very supportive of the investment policies that we have brought forward over the past three years? That is exactly what we are talking about. Investment policies are reflected in actions in markets.

I think the Hon. Member is saying that he would like us to encourage a greater degree of investment. If that is the case, then I would suggest that he go right back to the drawing board of the New Democratic Party and try to explain to people why the New Democratic Party is against a number of the investment encouragement policies that we have brought in, also including some of the statements that they have made about wanting to nationalize companies and not wanting to privatize companies.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THE ECONOMY

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of National Defence is tired of waving at the gallery, perhaps we will get on with the Question Period.

My question relates to a very serious issue. As we know, over the weekend U.S. Secretary of the Treasury Baker, who seems to take this matter more seriously than our Minister of Finance, indicated two things. First, they were going to review all previous agreements made by the Group of Seven, and look at how they could bring the U.S. currency down in relation to other currencies. The whole question of exchange rates has an enormous bearing upon the competitive value of Canadian resources and products that are sold to the United States.

I wish to ask the Minister of Finance in terms of the discussion that went on in the free trade agreement negotiations, what arrangements, agreements, or discussions took place in relation to the Canadian dollar? What type of understandings are there about whether we will continue to have total freedom to determine the value of our own dollar, and therefore keep our own exports competitive?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing at all in the free trade agreement that has anything to do with the levels of the Canadian dollar, the U.S. dollar, and the relationship. On a continuing basis we have made the point, as has the Secretary of the Treasury, that it is markets that control exchange rates.

We as part of the Group of Seven—which I should point out the Hon. Member's Government was not a part of, so he would not understand the nature of discussions that we had—at the end of September had a full discussion at the G-7 meeting which looked at a number of the outlooks for the different countries. In that forum we received a good understanding of the expectations for the international economy. I should say that the expectations were quite positive.

CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the expectations may have been positive, but the results on the stock market today are not so positive.

I wish to ask the Minister of Finance about a statement made over one year ago by the then Minister for International Trade of the Conservative Government. When asked a question by my colleague about the relationship between the value of the dollar—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Which colleague?

Mr. Axworthy: The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: —and about the question of exchange rates, the then Minister for International Trade stated, "It is certainly something we are very conscious of and we are prepared to enter these negotiations and we will have to have those discussions with the United States".

I wish to ask the Minister of Finance, if that was the intention of the then Minister for International Trade, would he tell us what discussions were held with the United States on the question of the value of the dollar? Will we find ourselves caught in the same position as the Israelis when they signed an agreement that they had to peg their dollar to the United States dollar? What types of arrangements and discussions have been held between the two countries in relation to the free trade arrangement and the value of our respective currencies?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the substance of those discussions is carried out in the international forum of the G-7. There are seven countries there, each of which discusses the outlook for its economy, and from time to time the relationship of its currency to the other countries is a subject of those discussions.

I have said in the House on many occasions that the level of the Canadian dollar is a level that is set by the market-place. There have been a number of Senators who have made comments on this, and I tell those people in the United States when I meet them face to face, or through Secretary Baker, that it is not our policy to establish a fixed level for the Canadian dollar. It is not our policy to manage in a so-called "dirty float" a level for the Canadian dollar. We lean into the market going both ways, but that is only to moderate the movements in the market-place. That is the policy of this Government, and it is fully understood by representatives of the United States Government.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—BILL C-22—WASHINGTON NEWSPAPER REPORT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I wish to quote from the Saturday edition of The Washington Post. "The morning after reaching a free-trade agreement with the United States, Canadian negotiators demanded the removal of a section pledging Canada to change its drug patent laws, administration and industry sources said yesterday".

This contradicts the Minister of Finance who last week told the House that Bill C-22 "was never a part of the agreement ever". Will the Minister explain The Washington Post story? Did the Government change its mind to cover its political backside?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member did not read the full article which stated, "The United States bowed to Canadian demands—"

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think the question is once again trying to draw some linkage between the free trade agreement on the one hand, and our policy on drug patent legislation on the other hand. No linkage exists.

I have said on many occasions in the House that if Bill C-22 does not go ahead, one thing will be very clear, it will not affect the free trade agreement. But it will affect jobs in Canada, investment in Canada, research and development in Canada, and health care in Canada. It is for those reasons that we are pursuing Bill C-22, and we have so stated on many occasions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I know that you are motioning to me, but I also wish to state that the United States did try to get further changes in our drug patent legislation that are not reflected in Bill C-22, but it was unsuccessful as is indicated in this particular article.

We have not made any commitments with respect to Bill C-22. The free trade agreement stands on its own. There is no linkage with Bill C-22.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Minister did not read the whole article which goes on to state, "Reagan administration sources who were close to the final negotiations said the drug issue was part of the deal when Wilson stepped to the window of the Treasury building just before midnight Saturday and gave a thumbs-up sign to signal there was an agreement".

With this type of damning indictment in terms of detailed information from the United States, will the Minister not do the proper thing and resign?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure I got the last part of the Hon. Member's question.

Surely the Hon. Member knows that on many occasions we have stated our intention to pass Bill C-22.

• (1440)

We have stated it on many occasions to the United States, to the Germans, to the Swiss, to the French, and that is a statement of our government policy. Our policy related to pharmaceutical patent protection was part of our policy in the last election. It has been a part of the direction of the Government for a number of months now. We have stated consistently, publicly, privately, formally, informally, verbally, and in writing that it remains our intention to pass Bill C-22.

That is a statement of fact. It is a simple statement of the obvious. We passed it twice already in this House.

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. When I asked the Minister on October 7 what the Government would do about readjustment for lost jobs due to free trade, he said:

> No job will be lost before January 1, 1989. Nothing will be done until then.

Is the Government really serious about such a ridiculous statement? Does it believe that if this deal goes through businesses will do nothing to readjust their business plans until that date, that they will not lay off and hire until that time?

Will the Minister give us today his official estimate for job losses resulting from free trade and tell us what he will do about it?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member is quoting me, he should quote what I said totally. On October 7 I said that the Government was dealing with labour adjustment every day, as was said by the Minister of Finance before, and I repeated it that day. We have over 1.5 million to 3 million Canadians involved in labour adjustment every year. We put $6 billion every year into labour adjustment.

He wants to create fears among Canadians. He wants to create fears because we face a good agreement which will give Canadians a lot of jobs.

However, as a wise Government we want to see, increasingly, what will represent free trade. In due course we will face the responsibility to face that or anything the agreement will create.

I think I said that this agreement will be ongoing on January 1, 1989. We are working very carefully on jobs, and the best example we have is that we created almost one million jobs in the country over three years. We can face any labour adjustment, but we will do it in due course.

READJUSTMENT PROVISIONS—ABSENCE FROM AGREEMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, it was the Prime Minister who said that a massive retraining program was necessary. It was not us; it was the Prime Minister.

Even the Macdonald Commission, in Volume I at page 316 said, and I quote: "The Commissioner's assessment of the economic costs of free trade indicates that Canadian investors and employees are likely to bear a larger adjustment burden than the United States. A free trade agreement should therefore incorporate explicit provisions which reflect the greater costs of adjustment that Canadians will face".

They were suggesting that the adjustment proposals be written in the agreement precisely to avoid a countervail from the United States. Why was that not done? Why were the readjustment provisions not put right in the agreement to protect them down the line when they will be needed?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): As I told my colleague a while ago, Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada, like any other industrialized nation, is involved in a continuing process of employment readjustment. Why do you insist in making it a problem exclusively related to the free trade agreement? It exists on a yearly basis, and I challenge the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides to prove otherwise.

Mr. Speaker, each year over 4 million Canadians change jobs for career advancement, and that has nothing to do with the free trade agreement.

However, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance—and I too confirm that, with the implementation of the free trade agreement, because of the readjustments—

[English]

BILL C-22—WASHINGTON NEWSPAPER REPORT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who, we all recognize, on a number of occasions said in the House that there was never a linkage between the drug patent laws and the trade agreement with the United States, that it never was a part of the agreement.

Over the weekend The Washington Post very clearly indicated the following:

> Reagan administration sources who were close to the final negotiations said the drug issue was part of the deal when Wilson stepped to the window—and gave a thumbs-up sign—

Is it not time that the Minister of Finance admits that Bill C-22 was part of the trade deal until the Government negotiators realized the political embarrassment it would provide, considering the days and days of rejecting that accusation, and changed it at the last minute? As he says, the United States bowed to Canadian demands that that be taken out of the agreement.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is a continuation of the same types of questions which we have seen in the House, I think for five days or six days now. My answer is still the same.

The fact of the matter is that we signed an agreement, and that agreement did not have any reference to Bill C-22. Bill C-22 was not part of the agreement. There is no linkage between the two.

Mr. Riis: There seems to be some difference of view with the reporters for The Washington Post, the newspaper that uncovered the Watergate scandal, that persisted in asking the questions until the truth came out.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ABSENCE OF TERMINATION CLAUSE FROM AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question, realizing that this line will likely not result in a response.

We have found out that in spite of the trade deal tying our hands when it comes to long-term energy agreements and investment agreements, in other words locking Canada in, that the negotiating team forgot to negotiate a termination clause. It was confirmed by Mr. Reisman's office over the weekend as well that this was an oversight.

Would the Minister of Finance stand and explain why he would permit such an oversight to occur by actually not allowing an escape clause or a termination clause to be part of the agreement before he put his initials to it?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that the issue of the termination clause is a technicality, as I have explained earlier in the House, and that it is being addressed in the final draft.

I should point out that there are restrictions on the U.S. side of the table about the length of time of the termination clause.

It is amazing to me that we just concluded a monumental and historic Commonwealth Conference on South Africa and sanctions, and all the Opposition cares about is the stock market and further distortions on the free trade deal.

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON TWO-PRICE WHEAT SYSTEM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. A few days ago I asked the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds if in fact the two-price system for wheat would be destroyed by the free trade agreement with the loss of licences and the phasing out of tariffs, and the Minister denied that.

Two days later the Premier of Saskatchewan and the Minister of Agriculture for Saskatchewan were telling the Saskatchewan Legislature that in fact the two-price wheat system would be phased out and would be destroyed by the agreement.

Why did the Minister deny that, when the Premier of Saskatchewan was telling that Legislature that in fact the two-price wheat system would be destroyed by the agreement?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Hon. Minister I would prefer to deal with the substance of the issue, which is that the two-price treatment for wheat will be assessed in light of the free trade agreement, and decisions pertaining to it will be taken at the appropriate time.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Whom are farmers supposed to believe—the Premier of Saskatchewan who is saying that it will be destroyed and even says that there will be compensation by the federal Government, or the Minister here who is saying that it will not be destroyed?

Why is the Government phasing this out when farmers are facing the worst financial crisis in the Prairies since the 1930s? Why is the Minister phasing it out at this time?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, probably inadvertently, may be misleading the House. I never did say what he has attributed to me. I said that the two-price system of wheat will be reviewed in light of the free trade agreement and that decisions will be made at the appropriate time.

• (1450)

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON SALMON EXPORTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. The "Elements of the Agreement" say, referring to import and export restrictions:

> All existing quantitative restrictions will be eliminated, immediately or by an agreed timetable, or will be grandfathered under the Agreement.

At present, as the Minister knows, sockeye and pink salmon cannot be exported until they have first been processed in Canada. The agreement provides that some restrictions, such as the United States Jones Act, are exempt from the elimination. Can the Minister tell us whether or not the export of salmon will be prohibited under the trade agreement. If not, why not?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the context of the question in terms of quantitative restrictions. That is what I was looking at. I can assure the Hon. Member that there is no threat to the salmon industry arising out of the free trade agreement.

UNPROCESSED SALMON

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister give the House an assurance that there will not be any possibility of the export of unprocessed salmon from British Columbia to the detriment of shoreworkers' jobs? Will she assure the House that the situation will remain in the future as it is now and that those jobs will be protected?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): I can assure the Hon. Member that there is nothing in the free trade agreement that would cause the consequences he is suggesting. There is no change in the situation. Those rights are protected under the free trade agreement.

GRAPE GROWING INDUSTRY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister for International Trade. Less than a week before the free trade deal was signed the Minister wrote a letter to the chairman of the Ontario Grape Growers Marketing Board in which she told him how concerned she was about the future of the grape growers industry. "Coming from British Columbia, I am very much aware of the concerns of grape growers and I can assure you that we recognize the extreme sensitivity of these growers to competition from the United States."

Can the Minister tell this House why less than a week later she and her colleagues signed an agreement which will mean certain death to the grape growers in the Provinces of Ontario and British Columbia, and which will mean a person like Brian Nash, a fourth generation grape farmer in Canada, will be forced to close his operation?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member's obituary for the grape industry is premature. The Government is undertaking provisions which will offer assistance to any industry adversely impacted.

May I point out that there are many in the wine industry of Canada who feel that the breaking down of interprovincial boundaries, and the creation of new market opportunities in the United States will be beneficial for the industry as a whole.

An Hon. Member: Name one.

CANADIAN AND FOREIGN WINES—PRICE DIFFERENTIAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I challenge the Minister to name one producer, name one company. We heard at a Liberal free trade task force on the weekend that, in fact, Canadian wine industries will no longer be producers of wine. They will be bottlers of wine which will come from the United States because Gallo in California spills more wine than is consumed in the whole of Canada.

How can the Minister make a promise, as she has, that the price differential between Canadian and foreign wines will be changed when she knows that the Ontario Government has agreed to no such price change? The Ontario Government, which has sole jurisdiction for the pricing of wines in Ontario, has not agreed to a single pricing system. How can the Minister have signed a free trade agreement which is the obituary, the RIP and the end, to the wine and grape growing industry in Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): May I point out that the Premiers were thoroughly consulted and advised of our measures on this.

Ms. Copps: They have not agreed.

Miss Carney: If the Hon. Member would let me finish the answer, may I point out that we in Canada make excellent wines and award winning wines. Consumers will now have the opportunity of drinking both Canadian, Californian wines and other U.S. wines so the consumer will benefit enormously under the free trade agreement.

In view of the allegations the Member makes about the discriminatory price mark-ups, may I point out that this matter has already been taken to the GATT by some of our trading partners and we are awaiting the results.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN LEADERSHIP AT COMMONWEALTH MEETINGS—IMPOSITION OF ADDITIONAL SANCTIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): First, on behalf of my Party let me say that we condemn the behaviour of the British delegation toward the Prime Minister at the Commonwealth meetings as an insult to all Canadians. We support the Prime Minister in providing the moral leadership to the Commonwealth in the fight against apartheid which Britain has abdicated.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is it now the Government's position, as suggested by the Secretary of State, that Canada is "suffering from sanctions fatigue" or will it rather demonstrate its strength by imposing these additional sanctions which the Prime Minister has promised for so long and which have remained so far unfulfilled?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think everyone who observed what occurred in Vancouver during the Commonwealth Conference would be very proud of Canada and very proud in particular of the strong and effective leadership given on our behalf by the Prime Minister of Canada to the Commonwealth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There were three major results with respect to southern Africa. The first was an agreement to the intensification of sanctions.

The second was a quite important new development in the actions of the Commonwealth toward southern Africa in bringing together various countries, in this case including Britain, which are prepared to help substantially in contributing to the stability and security of Mozambique, other front line states and other countries neighbour to South Africa.

Third, we have made a beginning which I think will find further detail in reaching into South Africa, both to encourage those opponents of apartheid where it is most difficult to oppose it in South Africa itself, and also to begin to deal effectively with the regime of censorship and the regime of propaganda that have been put forth by the Government of South Africa.

I am honoured in Canada's name to chair the Committee of Foreign Ministers established to maintain both a watch on developments and to provide impetus and some guidance to Commonwealth Heads of government as to other actions that we take. The question of individual actions which Canada might take, and I have no intention of announcing any in the immediate foreseeable future, will be decided in concert with actions that will be taken by other of our friends in the Commonwealth.

CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs be just a little more precise in defining what additional sanctions will be imposed? Further, is it not about time to admit that the policy heretofore followed of waiting to see what will happen before taking action ourselves has been a failure, and that it is about time Canada expressed its leadership by taking some of the sanctions which we understand have already been approved by Cabinet out of the Secretary of State for External Affair's pocket and putting them on the table so that the world will know where Canada stands definitively in that regard?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the limited sanctions for which I have authority, we will consider when it will be appropriate to implement those. We will try to do it, as we have before, in a way that will serve as a catalyst to actions by others.

With regard to Canada's role of leadership, that role is acknowledged by Kenneth Kaunda, the President of the Organization of African Unity; by Robert Mugabe, the Prime Minister of Zimbabwe, and by virtually every other member Head of Government of the Commonwealth Conference who gathered at Vancouver. The reason that leadership is respected is that our Government did not heed the advice so many months ago that we should act dramatically and throw away our influence. Instead of exchanging our influence for a dramatic action that might have been satisfying at home but not very helpful internationally, we have worked strenuously and consistently, as we intend to continue to do, to try to build a consensus that can sheer supporters of apartheid away from that regime and bring as quickly as possible an end to a regime that is offensive to us and offensive to all of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question for Question Period. The Hon. Member for Papineau.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—CONSTRUCTION OF TERMINAL 3

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can he confirm that there is already a major delay in the implementation of Terminal 3 at Toronto Airport, that the successful bidder is backing down on his financial commitment?

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that that is not at all the case. There was a release issued last week in which we advised those who are interested that Terminal 3 is going ahead. The successful bidder has now concluded all arrangements with the Government. They have been approved by the Treasury Board. Construction will be proceeding, I think, in January. There will be a signing of the final agreements in the next several weeks so there is no delay and the private sector will be carrying on with the new Terminal 3, which hopefully will be constructed and in operation in 1990.

REQUEST THAT OFFICIALS APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister seems to be sure of his facts, there is undoubtedly suspicion surrounding the awarding of the contract. I would like to ask him if he will undertake to allow his officials to appear before the Transport Committee to answer questions about these dealings.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is not one shred of suspicion, not a jot, not a tittle, not an iota, not a smattering of suspicion in connection with the contract that was given to the best of the four proposals that were submitted a number of months ago. The whole matter was decided in accordance with the recommendations of departmental officials and their advisers. I accepted their advice and the Treasury Board accepted their advice. There is no suspicion at all except for the unwarranted suggestion by the Hon. Member of suspicion.

There is no suspicion, but I and officials will be glad to come before the Transport Committee at any suitable time and give full information because it will shock and dumbfound the hon. gentleman who, while he was in government, never saw anything done properly as this has been done.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House with respect to business for the balance of the week. We anticipate that the debate on the Meech Lake Accord should proceed through until five o'clock today. Tomorrow we will call Bill C-55. While there is no undertaking from opposition Parties, there is an understanding that that debate may possibly terminate tomorrow.

We will then call the debate on the Meech Lake Accord for Wednesday, Thursday and Friday until such time as that debate is terminated. I have discussed the interpretation of the House Order with the Table with respect to the debate because Hon. Members are concerned about the timing of the vote. I would advise the House that if the Meech Lake Accord debate is concluded Wednesday, Thursday or Friday of this week, the vote will take place at 6.00 p.m. on Monday, October 26, 1987.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say on behalf of the Official Opposition that we are quite prepared to have the vote on the Meech Lake resolution take place on Monday as stated by the Deputy Government House Leader, and we expect that will be the case.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn on the Constitution Amendment, 1987 (p. 9422), and the amendments of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 9585), Mr. Broadbent (p. 9586), Mr. Caccia (p. 9644), and Mr. Allmand (p. 9644).

Mr. Speaker: When the House adjourned at 1:00 p.m., there were six minutes left from the question and comment period, following the speech made by the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin).

[English]

I will now recognize Hon. Members who wish to continue the question and comment period. Since there are no questions or comments, continuing debate.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to have the opportunity to speak on this resolution. Being a Member of Parliament is sometimes very frustrating and very difficult. Then, of course, there are times when one is working on something with which one has a tremendous affinity, something in which one believes very strongly.

When I was elected in 1979 it was the position of this Party that we would work toward one Canada, a Canada with two founding peoples, two cultures, two main languages, but one country. We had dismissed the notion of deux nations and we were moving toward something which we felt would be a mainstay for the future. Not only was it helpful to Canada in maintaining unity and developing a singleness of purpose so that Canadians of French and English origin could be at home anywhere in this country, but it was something that would move away from the prejudices and divisions about which we had worried for so long.

In this the 20th century I think our main concern is that we now have a technology that to a large extent is still governed by 19th century prejudices and shortsightedness. The sophistication of weapons, the nationalism and the religion were superimposed upon the prejudices and fears that we want so much to dispel in this century. Now this dream of one Canada is being thrown away. We will not be able to have that goal to shoot for.

I believe the principle of two founding people and two languages is extremely important to this country, Canada.

Quebec where most of our francophone fellow citizens live surely deserves special attention, but each and every one of our provinces is different from the others. Of course, and I say it publicly, all my Liberal colleagues from Quebec are my friends and I can very well understand their position in this regard. But everyone knows there are francophones and Anglophones all over this country.

We all know for instance that Quebec City was founded in 1608 four years after the founding of Port-Royal. The federal Government must help Acadians preserve their culture. With this agreement, Acadian culture may vanish in a few years, particularly in the provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

[English]

All members of this Party are interested in seeing Quebec as a signatory to the Constitution of this country. I do not think there is anything in politics that I want to see more, because it is necessary to complete the constitutional picture of this country. However, there are times when this just cannot be achieved.

At the meeting on April 30 a difficulty was presented. I think Quebec could have come into the Constitution. I think it is very important that it does so, but the problem is with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The problem is that the Prime Minister was not representing the federal Government. There was no federal presence at that table.

While we could have achieved at that meeting the objectives that Quebec wanted and still have maintained a unified thrust with respect to the Meech Lake Accord, when the other provinces saw an undefended federal caucus they themselves became anxious to obtain other objectives. The federal Government gave more than it was asked for by the Province of Quebec. It is not necessarily wrong to give the provinces additional powers. The question is, what are those additional powers going to be. What is going to be left for the federal Government?

For example, federal spending power is very important. There are programs which have to be implemented universally. We saw that with the Canada Pension Plan and the Canada Health Act. There might be similar programs in the future regarding education, training, or perhaps for doing away with illiteracy before too long. Can that be achieved if the provinces have the right to bail out of those programs? That can happen because provinces can opt out and receive compensations so long as their programs achieve national objectives.

What are these national objectives going to be? We do not know. We do not even know how we are going to define "national objectives". Under the Meech Lake Accord it may be that the federal Government will not have the right to define national objectives. They will have to be defined at First Ministers' Conferences. What kind of position are we going to be in then? What kind of position are we going to be in if it is not Government by this Parliament but Government by First Ministers?

It is important to have consultation with the provinces—very important. It should be maintained, yet not to the extent we have developed it in this country. I imagine that the provinces, during the meetings at Meech Lake, could not believe their ears when they were offered what they were offered. They were probably like 10 children who see an overturned ice cream truck.

In the body of the Meech Lake Accord there is a stipulation that there will be meetings to determine jurisdiction over the fishery. It does not say that this issue will be brought up at the next First Ministers' Conference. It says it will be brought up. It seems to me that the implication is it will be brought up continually until it is resolved. That could mean that Newfoundland will achieve its hopes for jurisdiction over fishing areas adjacent to it. That would be devastating to other provinces in Atlantic Canada. Even now the fishing industry in Nova Scotia is hesitant about investing because they do not know what this clause will mean. Why should it be in the constitutional document? It is an agenda item and it should not be there.

Western Canada is hopeful that the Senate will be reorganized and we will have a Triple-E Senate. How will that happen when all provinces have to agree to changes in the Senate? They also have to agree on the creation of new provinces. How will the Yukon and the Northwest Territories become provinces when the existing provinces and the federal Government must unanimously agree?

Then we have the Supreme Court. As with the Senators, the Supreme Court has to be chosen from a list submitted by the respective provinces and agreed to by the federal Government. If you have a Government of one political Party in the province and another political Party federally, it is going to be very difficult to make a selection. What happens when a province is not interested in achieving unanimity? I do not say that is going to happen, but we must look at the possibility. The Supreme Court is the glue of our Constitution and as such is tremendously important.

The federal system is extremely important. We have in Canada now one of the most decentralized federal systems in the world. We cannot allow it to become more so or this country will become ungovernable. The tendency will be towards a splitting and splintering of our federal system. It is no good for the Prime Minister to say we are going to have consultation and a meeting of minds. That is like General Custer at the Little Bighorn saying he now has the Sioux nation where he wants them. It is just not possible. Either you have a Constitution which defines the country you want or you do not.

A Constitution is inviolate. You cannot change it at will, the way you can change legislation. That is something we have to think very long and very hard about. It cannot be the result simply of the fact that the Prime Minister was able to stay up later than most of the others involved. It has to be something with which we can work.

If Members of this place can truly say that this is the Canada they want, I can live with that. What I cannot accept is Members of this House saying they do not like this, that they have to hold their noses, but they are going to vote for it anyway. I said before, and I will say it again and again and again, that there is nothing I want more than to have Quebec as a signatory to our Constitution and a member of this confederation. That is something I have always worked towards. However, we have to be careful that we do not deviate so far from the path that we cannot get back on. We must have control over it.

It is not a very pleasant thing for me to say that I cannot support this Accord. I will be considered as a Liberal Member who does not support his Leader. Nothing could be further from the truth. I support him completely. I have tremendous respect for him. It is just that I have difficulty seeing this Accord as maintaining the Canada and the constitutional framework for which I have worked for eight years. It is also important that each person state his or her beliefs. Canada requires, more than anything else, honesty from politicians, the people who have some say over whether or not this Accord is passed. If we had that, that is fine. But, if in that meeting of First Ministers at Meech Lake certain Premiers went along for the sake of going along, that is not consensus as I know it. Consensus means acting in the best interests of all parties and building a stronger Canada, not a political Canada in which provinces believe that it is good for them to have more power.

• (1520)

Former Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau said that he understood the position of the provinces. He did not agree with the Meech Lake Accord but understood the position of the provinces because politics is achieving power. He was very kind and I think that position is understandable. However, it can only be condoned if the Premiers really believed that this will be good not only for the provinces but for Canada as a whole. In my opinion that has not been the result.

As this debate winds down it is very important that everyone who has a chance to speak on this very important resolution to ask who is speaking for Canada. Madam Speaker, Members of Parliament who vote against this resolution speak for Canada.

Mr. Cook: Madam Speaker, for all of the reasons mentioned by my good friend, the Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), I am highly in favour of the Meech Lake Accord. I come from a far outpost of the empire, as he does, from Vancouver, which is a very long way from Ottawa. Too long in western Canada we have seen central Canada decide that central Canada is one Canada and that what is good for Ontario and Quebec is good for the rest of us. We have seen many incidents and I do not want to refer to all of them. However, central Canada's demands in the early 1980s that the oil industry in the West subsidize Ontario was devastating to our economy.

I like First Ministers' Conferences. First Ministers' Conferences have really been the only opportunity for the western provinces and the smaller provinces to have an equal say in what happens in Canada. Eleven people sit around a table. We have a representative there from British Columbia. Alberta has one representative, as has Ontario, Quebec and the other provinces. They are all equal at that table.

The Member suggested that the Constitution should not be changed easily. I agree with that. Unless any change in the Constitution is in the best interests of the entire country, it will not be changed. I agree with that as well.

Too long we have suffered from what I call the 75-95 syndrome, 75 seats in Quebec and 95 seats in Ontario. If you have those two provinces in agreement you can ignore the rest of the country. The 28 Members from British Columbia do not have too much impact. I say that in a non-partisan sense. My friends from British Columbia in the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), and the 19 Conservative Members from British Columbia are all interested in what is best for our province as well as what is best for the country. Obviously there are differences of opinion about what is best for the country.

The argument over the Meech Lake Accord is really a philosophical argument. It depends on whether you believe in a unitary state with all decisions being made in the centre, or whether you believe that government should be as close to the people it concerns as possible. I believe that the best government is the government that is closest to the people. I see no similarity between the outposts of Newfoundland and the lower mainland of British Columbia. I see very little agreement between the prairie wheat farmer and the industrialist in southern Ontario. This is one huge country; very broad, very long, very big. Let us get government to the regions so that people can decide for themselves.

The Member spoke of national programs. Remember that under the Meech Lake Accord a province may opt out of a national program but must provide the equivalent of that program and serve its people in the best way it can. That is fair enough.

Quebec is entitled to its own legitimate concerns. Quebec is a unique society. I am delighted that Quebec signed the Meech Lake Accord and delighted that it will be able to run its own affairs in the way it wishes, particularly with regard to culture. Those are the decisions of Quebec and should not be made by someone from British Columbia or Ontario. The same applies right across this vast country.

With regard to a loss of power to Parliament, I believe that Parliament should lose a lot of its power. Anyone who argues against that does not understand the geography of Canada. In a country 4,000 miles wide it is obvious that the regions are considerably different, one from another. The regions should have much more say about what will happen in them. Programs that are suitable for Atlantic Canada are often totally unsuitable for British Columbia. I like the federal conference of the First Ministers which gives one province one vote.

It is suggested that the Senate will never be reformed. I suggest that there is such a demand in this country for Senate reform that the First Ministers will come to an agreement but, again, each province will have an equal say as to what that agreement will be.

It is a very dangerous thing for a Premier to go against his colleagues for narrow interests and then have to return home, because he is responsible to the public and has to seek re-election, whereas the Senator does not. We will have Senate reform and it will come about through the First Ministers.

Frankly, the Meech Lake Accord is the best thing that has happened to this country in a very long time. Those opposed to it are looking at narrow power bases and that is not what will hold this country together. This country will be held together by more diffusion of power to the regions, where it should be on very many issues.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Speaker, there is a lot in what the Hon. Member has stated. As he mentioned, we have been friends for a long time. This, of course, is only a disagreement.

I do not think this is a philosophical argument. This argument goes to the core of how one believes that the country's Constitution and framework should be structured.

The Hon. Member said that he favours government by First Ministers which gives the regions a greater say. Coming from Atlantic Canada, as I do, I can appreciate that. However, I balk at the suggestion that we can give the regions more say only through the First Ministers. I am afraid that if the First Ministers are allowed to control they will have a conflict of interest They are, first and foremost, the leaders of their own provinces. That is what they were elected to be. We would be superimposing upon them a second duty, that is, to act in the national interests. That is not necessarily compatible with the best interests of their own provinces.

If a Premier wants to act in accordance with his role as the Premier of his province, as is understandable, his attitude toward the federal and unified central Government becomes political. We then get into linkages, trade-offs, and bargaining with regard to what the various Premiers want. You get a shopping list and that shopping list is then split up. That is what I am afraid of. If we do not have a strong central government, we do not have the opportunity to have a body which has one obligation, one elected responsibility, and that is to speak on behalf of this whole country. If the Hon. Member has stated honestly—and I believe he has—his intention, then I believe he will be voting the right way, to support the Meech Lake Accord. I respect his opinion and I am not going to try to change his mind. We just disagree.

• (1530)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. Rodriguez: I had a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I regret, but the time for questions and comments has now finished. Resuming debate.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, before I start, I may as well make the statement I wanted to make after listening very carefully to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). He ended up by saying that those who would be voting no in this House are for Canada. I think on reflection he may admit he got carried away with his rhetoric. In fact, he is saying to the rest of us who are going to vote, with just as much passion, for the Meech Lake Accord, that somehow or other we are not for Canada. I think if he reflects on that he will see that he is not speaking necessarily for all Canadians in this House, true and blue, true and pink or true and red.

I am delighted I have this opportunity to participate in a constitutional debate about Canada. God knows, I wanted to do so in 1982, but as fate and the people of Nickel Belt would have it, I was not here to participate.

As I watched the debate from the sidelines, there were things I wanted to say. There were things on my mind I wanted to say about my country and about my vision of Canada and where we should be headed. That is basically what I want to start off with. I have a vision of this country, a country that occupies the northern half of North America, a country that is indeed strong and free to develop its culture, economy and all the attributes of its people in the way we see fit. I have a vision of a Canada that goes back and corrects the injustices that were done to the original inhabitants of this land. Surely, if one were to read history, one would admit in all conscience that in fact we have not dealt justly with the original inhabitants of this part of North America.

I have a vision of a country that is free to select those who shall govern. I have a vision of Canada where its people live in harmony with its vast resources, where its people understand the finite nature of these resources and in fact emulate the original inhabitants and try to live in harmony with this vast wilderness and the vast resources which are ours. I have a vision of this country that the quality of life of all its people is far more important than the quantity of life of a few. Perhaps that is where my socialism comes in.

I see a nation that is capable and able to provide a quality of life that is an example to the world and not a carbon copy of the atavistic, selfish nature I see so often depicted in the land south of our country. I have a vision of this country that encourages the living diversity which is the multicultural complexity of Canada. In fact, we not only want to encourage it, we want to ensure it grows, matures and contributes to the developing of the finest country in the world. That is my vision.

I see the Meech Lake Accord in two aspects within that vision, like a thread through the mosaic. The first aspect is Quebec. We all recall 1980. I had an opportunity to watch from the sidelines and I recall, when the moment of decision was approaching for the people of Quebec to vote "oui ou non", that Canadians were reaffirming their desire for Quebec to stay in Canada. We were saying all sorts of things which we have forgotten. There was a group called People-to-People which circulated a petition from coast to coast with 800,000 names which said "we love you Quebec. Stay in the family. Do not seek sovereignty association". The petition was given to Mayor Drapeau of Quebec. We were in love. It was a love that had been dimmed by time. We suddenly discovered that we loved Quebec and wanted Quebec to stay within the family. Canadian political leaders of all stripes were reaching out to Quebec. I can name some of them. There was Claude Ryan, Jean Chrétien, Pierre Trudeau, the Opposition Leader at that time, now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Leader of one of the opposition Parties, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), Allan Blakeney and a whole host of provincial Premiers. They all said: "Stay in the family". Legislatures in our provinces, which often in the past were seen as hostile, discovered the new love relationship, and Alberta and British Columbia unanimously passed resolutions calling for Quebec to stay in Canada and for "a new federalism".

Most important, the federal Liberal Government promised constitutional changes in the wake of the referendum because Quebec voted no. It voted for Canada. Pierre Trudeau, the day after the referendum in May, 1980—I turned on my radio and there he was, thumbs in his belt—said:

> All together what Quebecers expressed yesterday was a massive support for change within the federal framework. We cannot venture to ignore this will to change which reflects that of all other areas of the country and to fall short of the expectations of Canadians.

• (1540)

Madam Speaker, as Pierre Trudeau said later in this same speech: "Those voters said no because they put their confidence in Canada".

We all know that two years later the dust of time has started to cover over the love relationship again. As so often happens, love turns stale, and two years later they forget. They forget this marvellous Gallic lover across the Ottawa River, forget her completely. The rose is off the bloom. Out of sight, out of mind. Canada got what she wanted, kicked Quebec out of the bed. That is the way it goes in every love affair.

Two years later the Trudeau Government and nine provincial leaders signed the Constitution. So, in fact, we have had a Constitution for these last five years that shut out our lover, shut out one of the most important ingredients in the constitutional family—Quebec. She was left out in the cold. I think that the Meech Lake Accord attempts to correct that. I think the Meech Lake Accord has done that. The Meech Lake Accord has gone back and said to Quebec, "You belong in the constitutional family. Come and take your rightful place at the table with the rest of the brothers and sisters in the constitutional family".

For me, that is a thread through this vision of Canada that is important. It is important because one understands that to negotiate means that sometimes one has to give up to get. That is what Pierre Trudeau never understood.

This is the second reason that I support Meech Lake, and there is no quibbling about it—it is not "I am for it but—" or "I am against it but I will vote for it", none of that. I will tell Hon. Members the second reason. It is that this is a new era. Gone are the days of the gun-slinger with his thumbs stuck in his belt saying, "It is my way or the highway", someone who had no respect for provincial Premiers, or no respect for MPs who were nobodies 300 feet off the Hill.

His interview with The Toronto Star was a prime example of reason over emotion. In that article in The Toronto Star he called the Premiers all sorts of names. He called the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) a name. This is a person who was unable to get agreement with Quebec in 1982. I am not surprised. For me, the Meech Lake Accord is not only a yes vote to Quebec but it is the dawning of a new era in Canadian federalism.

We have an agreement which is more in line with reality in Canada today. As I have travelled it seems to me that people in northern Ontario, in Atlantic Canada, in western Canada, have always felt disconnected from the whole. They always felt there was some great conspiracy in central Canada, that southern Ontario and Quebec could cook things up and freeze them out. I know that, that is what we feel in northern Ontario. We all feel it about Queen's Park in Toronto. I know the whole country feels it about Toronto. That is the reality. In many ways this Accord reaffirms the original vision of John A. Macdonald. As we read history we know that he was a great centralist. He believed that the central Government should have all the power. But he had to back away from that concept because of the pressure from the leaders in the provinces at the time and from people in general. So he had to back away.

We know that the socio-economic reality of this country and, indeed, the geographic reality of this country, demands more decentralized decision-making. It needs to be more flexible and responsive to the aspirations of those of us who live in the hinterlands, who live far away from the Windsor-Quebec corridor.

I think Eric Kierans put it correctly when he said:

> To recognize that the provinces are independent and autonomous in their own areas of jurisdiction takes Canada off the fast track of centralism that would have as its final stop "sovereignty association".

That is the direction in which the Meech Lake Accord is going—decentralization of the power of the central Government. I have no problem with that.

It seems to me that it recognizes that flexibility which says that what is good for Newfoundland may not be good for Alberta, or B.C., or Ontario. It also allows that what is good for Ontario and Quebec is not necessarily good for the Atlantic region, or for the West.

It seems to me that the Meech Lake Accord fulfils and is that thread through this vision that I have of Canada and that in fact it is more democratic. It is open, more responsive and attentive to regional minorities. This is my reading of it. This is how I see it.

It seems to me that the case for Meech Lake was made by Pierre Elliott Trudeau in 1961. In fact, he is now the guru of those who are going to vote no. Here is what Pierre Trudeau said in 1961:

> In the age of the mass society, it is no small advantage to foster the creation of quasi-sovereign communities at the provincial level, where power is much less remote from the people and where political education and general creativeness is related to a more homogeneous and manageable group of citizens.

He makes the argument and, in fact, it is an important argument, one I have always felt was essential for a country this size geographically speaking. In fact, we have to keep that power as close to the people as possible, to the people who have to live with the laws.

Contrast that vision that Trudeau had in 1961 with his actual performance when in office as Prime Minister of this country. I remember well his arrogance and his elitism in this House and outside the House. I remember the way he handled workers, the working class people of this nation, the Lapalme postal workers. We remember his famous words. We remember this giant who believes now in a strong central Government. We heard him. We remember his words, "Why should I sell your wheat?" Those were the words of a person who believed in reason over emotion. I said before, Madam Speaker, that here is a person who believed in reason over emotion. He described the drafters of Meech Lake as "eunuchs" and "weaklings". He decried provincial leaders and Quebec nationalists as "perpetual losers who don't have the stature of vision to dominate the Canadian stage". All this from someone who gave us a perfect example of how collegiality works, of how to negotiate, of what co-operative federalism was all about.

• (1550)

We know that that type of bulwark federalism leads to the type of descriptions we have had of provincial leaders who consistently play off against the federal leadership. We saw that in Alberta and in Newfoundland. In fact, it is this type of bulwark central Government that has led to that type of small provincial politics that is often played in this country.

We all remember an earlier Trudeau who displayed more common sense when he was a CCFer than when he was a Liberal. He stated:

> It is perhaps no coincidence that during the twentieth century, the one party that was the strongest and governed longest is the party that has traditionally stood for provincial rights and embraced in its ranks such provincial free stylers as Taschereau, Hepburn, Angus MacDonald, and Smallwood.

In closing, I wish to state that mine is a full commitment to Meech Lake. I will vote for it. I recognize that we are in our infancy of constitution-making. I see the Meech Lake document as being very fluid as opposed to static. First, it is important to have the family at the table. In the years to come, we can work on making it a more reflective and sensitive document for all the reasons that many Members have stated, and for whatever has been left out. I believe that I speak as an optimist when I say that. I am not pessimistic about Canada. I am optimistic. Whether I like it or not, the Premiers of the provinces are elected by the same people who elect you and me, so it is an exercise of democracy. With goodwill and co-operative federalism we must sit around the table and continue to make our Constitution a living and a maturing document that serves Canadians and not one that Canadians serve.

Mrs. Bourgault: Madam Speaker, it is always a pleasure to be in the House when our friend the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) delivers a speech, because he is full of life, voluble, and very interesting to listen to.

Madam Speaker, I was all the more interested that, throughout his speech, the Hon. Member paid tribute to our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The Hon. Member said: If you compare Mr. Trudeau's vision of Canada and that of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) . . . From what I heard of the Hon. Member's speech, I concluded that our Prime Minister was fantastic; he is a man whose vision of Canada is in line with our times, and different from Mr. Trudeau's vision at the time when he wanted to control everything and leave no powers to the provinces.

In addition, the Hon. Member admits that we are going through periods when—it is a fact in my own riding and I guess it is the same in yours, Madam Speaker—our constituents want to take more part in the decision-making process. Let us only think, for instance, of the Regional Industrial Development Program. I am sure that the voters of Nickel Belt will say: We know what we want in our region; and in Ottawa you are too far away from our ridings, therefore you cannot know precisely what is happening.

I would therefore like to congratulate the Hon. Member who is going to vote for the Meech Lake Accord and I would ask him to tell me as well whether he does recognize the unprecedented leadership shown by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who has been able to conclude a historical agreement at Meech Lake, to bring ten premiers to vote for and agree to the inclusion of Quebec in the Constitution. Does the Hon. Member admit that for the first time in Canada's history, a prime minister has successfully attempted that? Second, how does the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt explain in his own words, for instance, how a member of this House, particularly one from Quebec, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), said that he intended to vote against the Meech Lake Accord . . . Could the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt make some comments about the fact that a member from Quebec is voting against the Meech Lake Accord?

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, first, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for her kind comments. The Hon. Member asked if I would admit that the Prime Minister has done a fantastic job, and so forth. That is another part of the vision that I have of Canada. One person does not go around taking glory for things that have been done in the name of Canada. It takes 10 provinces plus a Prime Minister to make a deal. First, I did not rise to blow the horn for the Prime Minister. I was not head of the parade for his fan club.

One of the things I have learned around here is to give credit. The Prime Minister showed some leadership on this particular issue, the Meech Lake Accord, yes. I give credit where credit is due, because I am also critical when I think there is a reason for criticism. I give the Prime Minister credit for the leadership he exhibited, but I also give credit to the other Premiers who sat around the table to make a deal.

I have real concern about the fact that the same type of leadership was not shown when it came to discussing free trade. We can sign all the Meech Lake agreements that we wish. I have this vision of Canada. But not to turn around, as the Prime Minister is about to do with the free trade agreement, because he knows how to run a branch plant as he did for the Iron Ore Company of Canada in Schefferville where we all know what happened. It was closed down, everyone received the appropriate settlement, and the last one to leave put out the lights.

I wish to caution the Hon. Member that while I say it was a job well done, we stand the risk on the free trade deal of losing the whole ball of wax. We put in jeopardy the vision of Canada that I have, and I will be extremely critical when we come into debate on that matter. But I wish to say here and now that, yes, the Prime Minister did a good job on this, he showed leadership as did the other Premiers. I think it is a document worth supporting.

Mr. Berger: The Hon. Member is to be congratulated for his remarks. They were made with his usual passion and brio. Unfortunately, there are only a few Members who are present for this debate on Meech Lake. I do not think that the Hon. Member was present when I spoke—

Mr. Rodriguez: I listened to it on television.

Mr. Berger: The Hon. Member states that he listened to it on television. Very good.

[Translation]

I would also invite the member from Quebec to read my statements. She might find the answer to the question she asked.

[English]

The Hon. Member has a vision and view of history. He will accept that others have a different vision and perhaps a different view of history. The Hon. Member went through the 1980 referendum and stated that he watched it and participated in it par personne interposée. I was there and I participated in it in my constituency in the east end of Montreal. He quoted Mr. Trudeau who, on the day after the referendum, said that Quebecers voted no because they put their confidence in Canada. I would suggest to him that the operative words of that statement are "in Canada". That is precisely what makes us feel uneasy about the Meech Lake agreement. In my opinion it reverses the policies of the past 25 years, which were designed to make Quebecers and French Canadians feel at home in Canada, in all parts of Canada. French Canadians should not feel that they are somehow limited to la société distincte de la province de Québec.

• (1600)

I invite the Hon. Member to understand my reasoning for feeling that Meech Lake is a step backward. If we look at what was done over the years, with the Official Languages Act and Sections 16 to 23 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, it substantially enhanced linguistic rights above and beyond what was contained at the time of Confederation in Sections 93 and 133 of the BNA Act, 1867. Indeed there was constitutional change as a result of the referendum, and that was represented in the 1981 Constitution and the Charter of Rights. However, Meech Lake reverses that trend, and the rights which were inscribed in our 1981 Constitution will now be weakened as a result of the Meech Lake agreement.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, I welcome the comments of the Hon. Member. I can give him the assurance—but I know that he will not take it—that I have read the Meech Lake Accord and I do not see one iota, one sentence, or one dot or tittle, as the Minister would say, in the agreement which would limit Quebecers from moving anywhere in the country. In fact, the Hon. Member may not be aware of the realities in places like my riding where, for example, 40 per cent of my constituents are Francophone. Over the last 10 years or 15 years I have seen the development within northeastern Ontario of an infrastructure of elementary and secondary French schools. I have seen the development of courts in the French language. I have seen an awakening in the French language in other parts of the country. It seems to me that Meech Lake in fact reinforces that.

Quebec is now sitting around the table. As we want to enhance the Constitution, it is important to have Quebec there. If my hon. friend had his way, I suspect that the alternative to Meech Lake would be to say to Quebec, "Stay out in the wilderness, stay out in the darkness", where it will be weeping and gnashing its teeth for another five years while they continue to impose the notwithstanding clause. As long as we have the family together, the family which discusses and changes together is the family that will stay together. That is my advice to the Hon. Member.

I appeal to him to reconsider his position. In fact, it is very important for Quebec to know that we meant what we said in 1980, when we said to Quebec: "Join the family and we will make right by you".

Quebec is a distinct society, communally, historically, and linguistically. I have no problem with that. I appeal to the Hon. Member who comes from the Province of Quebec to show some leadership and come with the rest of us as we say that this is a second step in a long road of constitution-making together as a family.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn on the Constitution Amendment, 1987 (p.9422). And the amendments of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p.9585), Mr. Broadbent (p.9586), Mr. Caccia (p. 9644), and Mr. Allmand (p.9644).

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, this is an important day for me where I have an opportunity to take part in the debate on the Meech Lake Accord, and the day that historic Accord was signed was a memorable one for the electors of the riding of Trois-Rivières, as for everyone in Quebec and the country.

Madam Speaker, let me first congratulate the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) whose excellent work in this historic issue was mentioned several times by Members and Ministers of the Government as well as Members, I think, of both opposition Parties. I wish to congratulate also the 10 Premiers who agreed to sit at the same table and who made that agreement, the Joint Senate and Commons Committee who did a tremendous job, in my opinion.

You know, Madam Speaker, when we were elected in 1984, the idea that came to mind when the name Meech Lake was mentioned was that of a place of rest and relaxation. But since the Accord, the words Meech Lake are synonymous with historic agreement. It means team work. It means a great country, Canada, is finally united. I think it is extremely important to have a united country while at the same time respecting Quebec's character as a distinct society. You know as well as I do that Quebec is truly a distinct society within Canada. It is a fact, it has been, is and will be part of our experience. And the 10 premiers representing four different political formations, along with the Prime Minister of Canada, acknowledged that fact, without any partisanship. With the result that Quebec which was entitled to a seat at the constitutional meetings will now have it, a good thing for that province, for Canada and also for all socio-economic and cultural decision-makers who will be able to make progress and think from now on about Canada not as it was in 1982 or 1981 or 1971, but as it is in 1987, that is a country with 10 provinces.

To say that the Meech Lake Accord is not perfect, that changes or such and such amendment should be made, quite simply, Madam Speaker, is to express rejection of the Accord. There has been an agreement. As the Canadian Government, we must sign it as must the 10 provinces. There will be a second round. There will be a second stage where, once again, the 10 Premiers and the Prime Minister of Canada will meet, reassess the situation, improve the Accord if need be, as I think is perfectly normal and logical, but a first step has been taken. We must respect it and sign that Accord as soon as possible to be able to go forward, to consider more changes in the future, because not to sign it would bring us back to 1982. In 1982, the Constitution was patriated, not only without the consent of the Quebec Government of the day, but without the consent of the whole National Assembly. It was not a partisan issue, not something about Quebec separating, because the Party in power was a separatist one. The whole National Assembly had refused. And as you know, Madam Speaker, a good number of those in the Opposition were Members of the Quebec Liberal Party. This is something we should keep in mind when we talk about this in 1987 and when we realize the progress that has been made and the point that has been reached.

Madam Speaker, we are making good the mistakes of 1982, as the Prime Minister had promised he would in a speech he made in Sept-Îles during the 1984 election campaign. If I may, for the purpose of this debate, I should like to read part of the speech the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made in Sept-Îles. He said: One thing is sure: No Quebecer has authorized the Liberal Party in Ottawa to take advantage of Quebec's utter confusion following the referendum to ostracize it constitutionally. My Party finds no pleasure in the political morass in which these deplorable events have placed Quebec. If Quebec is weak, Canada is weak too. If Quebec is strong, so is Canada. There is a place in Canada for the affirmation of all identities, for the respect of all aspirations and for the pursuit of all ideals. I know that many Quebecers will not be satisfied with mere words. It will be necessary to take action to reach the objectives which I have assigned for myself and which I repeat here: To convince Quebec's National Assembly to give its consent with honour and enthusiasm to the new Canadian Constitution.

Madam Speaker, those were the Prime Minister's words in 1984, in Sept-Îles, during the election campaign. The Meech Lake Accord is the very reflection of the Prime Minister's promise made in 1984, and it does not reflect it simply because he made it as a Prime Minister, but because of the fact that the 10 Premiers climbed on the bandwagon. And that, in my view, is important.

You certainly remember, Madam Speaker, before you were elected, the situation surely was the same in your constituency as in mine and in a number of others across Canada, especially in Quebec—our MLA's would only speak to our MP's through the media. The only way they spoke to each other in the constituency of Trois-Rivières, or in the constituency of Saint-Maurice, of Champlain, in the 04 area, was through the media. But after 1984, teamwork became possible. No matter who is an MLA, no matter who is an MP, people work as a team. And that is important in my view. That is how a region, a province, a country will grow.

Let us look at what is provided for in the Meech Lake Accord. First, the two official languages are recognized. I think that goes without saying. Second, Quebec's distinct nature is recognized. For the reasons I indicated, this again follows as reasonable. Third, appointments to the Senate and the Supreme Court are made with the concurrence, at the suggestion of the provinces. You know, Madam Speaker, if appointments to the Senate had been made with the concurrence and at the suggestion of the provinces these past 10 years, we might not in 1987 be stymied by the Senate on such a piece of legislation as Bill C-22. And you read today, in both Le Devoir and La Presse, a page sponsored by the Coalition in Support of Bill C-22 on Drugs, which listed the Senators who supported the Bill and those who opposed it or abstained.

It is intolerable for example to see that the Senator representing our region, Mr. Maurice Riel, abstained or did not vote on an issue that will bring 1,500 new jobs and investments of $600 million to Metropolitan Montreal. Had Quebec Senators been nominated by the Governement of Quebec, had they been willing to do their duty, that is to defend their province's interests, these Senators would have been on their knees to vote in favour of Bill C-22 which will bring to Montreal and to the whole province major investments and many new jobs.

Madam Speaker, once more this shows the importance of the Meech Lake Accord. Because the major role of the Senate and Senators, a role that is theirs since 1867, is not a partisan one. Their major duty is to protect the interests of the province they represent in the Senate.

That was their role in 1867. And here they are in 1987 trying to prevent the passage of bills that are important to a province and to the country as a whole.

So I hope that with the Meech Lake Accord, we will find ourselves in a position where, in the medium term naturally, the Senate will play its proper role and the 10 provinces will work in co-operation with the federal Government, as they have been doing since 1984, for the advancement and the welfare of the whole country as well as every region.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I want to ask all Members of this House to vote in favour of the Meech Lake Accord. Let nobody come to us to explain the theories or the principles of 1960. This is 1987 and in 1987, we owe it to ourselves to look at the reality of Quebec, the reality of the Maritimes, the reality of Ontario, of the West and of British Columbia. If we consider everything, if we look at all the people who govern this country and who agree on the Meech Lake Accord, I think we owe it to ourselves to vote yes. My dream, Madam Speaker, would be to see this House vote unanimously in favour of the Accord.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Westmoreland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud).

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank you for this opportunity to speak on this Accord and to participate in this debate which, like Hon. Members who spoke before me, I consider to be historic.

It goes without saying that we are discussing our country's most fundamental law, a law which is the basis for the drafting and interpretation of all other laws.

But I am rising today, Madam Speaker, first to support the amendments proposed by my Leader. I support them first because they will bring more clarity, they will improve the text and will include in the Constitution some groups of our society that were left out.

It is a pity because this is a historic Accord and, as I mentioned earlier, this is a historic moment and we should not leave out certain groups or certain Canadian men and women. And, Madam Speaker, this is why I find it very important to amend the Meech Lake Accord as we are suggesting.

• (1620)

As most Canadians, if not all of them, I am glad to see what this Accord is trying to do for Quebecers. We hear people saying that at last, the Province of Quebec is coming back to the Constitutional fold. It had to be so. In fact, I am one of those who believe that Quebec has never been away from the Canadian family. I think that throughout our history, throughout the debates which were held in this House, and in all federal-provincial agreements, the Province of Quebec was present and I think that Quebecers and Quebec representatives have made their views known and exercized all their rights and privileges as Canadian citizens.

The Province of Quebec is recognized as a distinct society in the first paragraph of the Accord. This clause does not raise any problem inasmuch as it doesn't take anything away from other groups forming the Canadian society.

The distinctiveness of a society is attributable to its culture, its morals, its language, its customs and, of course, its history. So, the term "distinct society", could be applied to many other Canadian groups.

As we are talking about the distinct society concept, we might refer to Acadia, as I believe that we, Acadians, might also be called a distinct society. We have our customs and, as you will certainly recognize, Madam Speaker, we also have our history, part of which has been rather turbulent. Acadians did everything they could to remain Canadians, and even though we have been deported from Acadia at a certain period in our history, we finally came back. We came back here to stay. And of course, we are happy to be part of Canada.

Our territory does not follow provincial borders as Acadians are scattered all over the Atlantic Region. They are mostly concentrated in New Brunswick, but there are Acadians in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and even all along the eastern coast of the United States.

So, we can say that we have our own history, our own customs and, of course, our own language, even though we are told that we speak with an accent.

It is precisely because of that, Madam Speaker, that we have our own language and regional terms. We, Acadians, could therefore claim as a group the right to be called a distinct society, but I would simply like the existence of this group to be recognized, just as the existence of other groups, such as our native people, to name but one. It is precisely because of this that we have proposed the following in paragraphs 1(c) and 1(d) of our first amendment:

> (c) the recognition that aboriginal peoples constitute a distinctive and fundamental characteristic of Canada;
> (d) the recognition of the multicultural nature of Canadian society, and in particular respect for the many origins, creeds and cultures as well as the differing regional identities that helped shape Canadian society;

I believe that we could all agree on this amendment as it recognizes the existence of the various groups which make up the great Canadian family.

I would also like the House to support the second amendment, which states the following:

> "2(a) The role of the Parliament of Canada to preserve and promote, and the role of the provincial legislatures to preserve and, subject to subparagraph (2)(b) to promote, the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph 1(a) is affirmed.

Madam Speaker, it is very important for the Parliament of Canada to play this role of promoting minority groups. Simple protection is not enough; these groups must also be promoted.

New Brunswick has been recognized since 1982 as a bilingual province where French and English have the same status in all matters related to the Government of New Brunswick. The province has therefore been officially bilingual for five years. However, Madam Speaker, there is still a lot to be done. When you call various government agencies, you cannot always get an answer in French. Naturally, progress has been made, but it has been slow and I hope that the new McKenna Government will be able to accelerate the process of making government agencies totally bilingual.

As concerns the promotion of minorities, I shall refer to past experience in New Brunswick, where groups of Acadians were assumed to have been assimilated for all practical purposes because the authorities had been satisfied to protect these groups and to maintain the status quo. Well, to a minority mere protection means assimilation. And those communities which I mentioned earlier, which for all practical purposes were thought to have been assimilated, finally woke up one day and are now in very good health. They are doing very well. Why? Because it was decided that someone should promote this Acadian culture, this group which is known as the New Brunswick Acadians. These people were provided with meeting centres where they could gather for entertainment, sharing common experiences, devising new ways to stick together and develop this culture which was thought to have been lost. This kind of promotion made it possible for these people to wake up, even though these groups were in New Brunswick, Canada's only bilingual province.

So I am firmly convinced, Madam Speaker, that it is very important for Canadian Parliament to assume responsibility not only for protecting minority groups but also for promoting them.

Now we are being told that the Meech Lake Accord is Quebec's turn. Well, I have nothing against that, but my question is this: When will we Acadians have our turn? When will native people and multicultural groups have theirs? I would suggest we ought to take the opportunity we now have to include in Quebec's turn the other groups who feel left out. And I do not believe this Accord is all that fragile, nor that it will quite simply fall apart if it is amended. As a matter of fact, the amendments we are proposing are intended to improve the Accord, to make it clearer, to change the Meech Lake Accord without weakening it, as my colleague has suggested.

In the time allotted to me, which happens to be drawing to a close, I should like to talk about fisheries, which have been included in the Accord. Madam Speaker, I am somewhat concerned over the fact that fisheries will be on the agenda of all future First Ministers' conferences. Fisheries conferences have been constitutionalized. Not so very long ago I heard my colleague say it was quite terrible to see that the Conservative Government was prepared to slap a tax on our bread and our butter. I believe all Hon. Members agree that a tax on bread and butter is something for which Canadians will probably not stand still. Putting fisheries on the agenda of all future federal-provincial conferences dealing with constitutional issues is tantamount to putting our bread and butter on the table and taking a chance that somebody might appropriate them.

For us fisheries are very important. In New Brunswick we have some 6,500 fishermen providing work for some 13,000 people on shore in some 125 fish processing plants. Fisheries are of prime importance to us.

How can you explain that it was deemed necessary and advisable to put fisheries on the table. I suppose, Madam Speaker, that they must have been included in the last instance to accommodate someone who was intent on grabbing the jurisdiction on fisheries. This is completely unacceptable for the people of New Brunswick. It is utterly unacceptable!

Madam Speaker, I would go as far as supporting the amendment put forward by my leader who wants that the roles and responsibilities concerning fisheries be put on the agenda for the first meeting only. As a matter of fact, if the subject of fishery is to come up at every meeting, a degree of instability will mar the fishing industry which will certainly not help the people from the Atlantic provinces and those from New Brunswick in particular.

Madam Speaker, I feel strongly about this amendment. You are indicating to me that my time is almost up and that I have just about one minute left.

In closing, I will talk about a majority group, because up to now I have only dealt with minority groups. This majority group that feels threatened, that feels its rights to equality might have been impaired, is the women's group. We need an amendment to make sure that under this Accord their right to equality will not be curtailed.

Madam Speaker, I take this opportunity to read a few lines from the letter I received from the New Brunswick Advisory Council on the Status of Women: "The Advisory Council supports the amendments to the Meech Lake Accord that will ensure that women's rights to equality will not be reduced".

In fact, that is exactly the purpose of our last amendment which ensures that the Constitution Act of 1987 doesn't allow derogation to the rights and freedoms guaranteed in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Madam Speaker, I will vote in favour of the amendments and I ask all Hon. Members to take a good look at them and to make sure that they don't weaken in any way the Meech Lake Accord.

Mr. Hamelin: Madam Speaker, I thank my colleague representing New Brunswick and, to a certain extent, the French community outside Quebec, for his speech. I can hardly understand what deep motivations induced him to such a decision. Without any hesitation whatsoever, he reopened that Accord notwithstanding the fact that if a community could pretend to be the first founding community of this nation, it is the Acadian community. But more than any other group, the Acadian community has been literally decimated by the culture shock of the surrounding English-speaking population. Nevertheless, there is still a vibrant community in New Brunswick, a province that has recognized our two official languages. Nova Scotia has not done so, even though it is the land of the first bastion of Louisbourg. I have a hard time understanding the deep motives of our colleague who is definitely against the Accord and accuses us of providing minorities with crutches because—

• (1640)

An Hon. Member: Not at all!

Mr. Hamelin: I am not talking about you but about one of your colleagues in your party.

Mr. Gauthier: What is the name of his riding?

Mr. Hamelin: I am sorry . . . It is Laurier. I thank my hon. colleague.

He says that we are providing crutches for minorities. He should remember the astounding rate of assimilation and loss of culture. I am not talking about the bilingualism ratio, for I think it will be an ever more pressing need in our communities to have more and more bilingualism. What I am concerned about here is your community, and I am sorry that you would want to resort to excuses that are nothing more than excuses and that did not stand under the scrutiny of the Joint Committee on the Constitution . . .

When you were talking about women's rights being threatened, this has not been proven by anyone in any way. When you talk about promotion of your cultural reality, of your distinct society, you know very well—and in your own province; I am not sure Mr. McKenna is willing to recognize your distinct society because he is not prepared apparently to recognize this wonderful agreement which enables the great Canadian family to reunify. When you stated in your speech, my dear colleague, that you never—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I must interrupt the Hon. member and remind him to address the Chair and not to start a dialogue with one of his colleagues.

Mr. Hamelin: I am sorry, Your Honour. This is probably because of the enthusiasm and interest caused by the speech of my learned colleague.

I was thinking about what are, in my opinion, unfounded affirmations. Do not forget that, in 1980, the situation was serious, this country almost split in two. Don't you think that if Mr. McKenna and your party are allowed to reopen the Meech Lake Accord, the whole thing will collapse. Dozens of experts told us so, Madam Speaker, dozens of constitutional experts, people from the Maritimes, warned us about that.

I am just as concerned as you are. Even the committee made some recommandations. It went as far as preparing the agendas for the next constitutional conferences. Your desire to solve everything might jeopardize what we already have. That is the problem.

You are an Acadian, I let you react to that. Madam Speaker, I let my colleague reply to these thoughts.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) on a point of order.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I know that you brought to the attention of the Hon. Member the fact that use of the pronoun "you" can be used only when addressing the Chair, not another Member. I know you reminded him in the past, but I think it would be worthwhile to tell him again, because he does not seem to have understood.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member for Charlevoix heard his colleague. We should now give a few minutes to the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent to reply.

Mr. Robichaud: Madam Speaker, I realize the Accord is dear to the heart of the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin), and I respect the Hon. Member's opinion. He says I made gratuitous statements to the effect that women were threatened, but that is not what I said. I said that certain groups felt threatened. And that is precisely the case with women. They feel their equality rights are being threatened. I am sure that was not the intention of the provincial Premiers and the Prime Minister of Canada. It was certainly not their intention, but the fact remains that this majority component of our society feels threatened. And I believe it would be appropriate for us to make the requisite changes here in the House so that this group can feel comfortable with the Constitution and with this Constitutional Accord. And what you said about Mr. McKenna, that he might—

An Hon. Member: What he said.

Mr. Robichaud: Excuse me, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member said that Mr. McKenna might cause the Accord to fall apart, and I may recall what Mr. McKenna said when he appeared before the committee, and I quote:

My belief is that those changes must fundamentally represent two factors. One of those criteria is that it must not nullify the principles agreed to in the Langevin Accord. Secondly, any amendments should further advance or clarify the rights of Canadians.

So I do not see why the Hon. Member feels threatened and feels the Accord is threatened, to the point of saying that the Accord may fall apart. I think it could stand some changes that would make all groups in this country feel more comfortable, and I have every confidence in the Members of this House. I am also confident that the Prime Minister and the premiers will be able to accept certain changes that are being proposed, without in any way diminishing the impact of this Agreement.

Mrs. Bourgault: Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's speech, and of course, his concerns about womens' rights and the historic Langevin Accord. That, too, I found most interesting, Madam Speaker, and I can inform the Hon. Member that as a result of these concerns which were brought to our attention by various women's groups, including the Fédération des femmes du Québec, whose members are very progressive and, in fact, in the forefront of developments in this area . . . Members of this Federation, which is presided over with great distinction by Mrs. Busque, informed me that they went through the Accord with a fine-tooth comb. In fact, as was said by the Hon. Member for Charlevoix following the testimony given before the Special Joint Committee, I really think, Madam Speaker, that our male colleagues are outdoing themselves in defending women's rights, and so forth.

Madam Speaker, I can inform you that the women in the House of Commons, and you are one of them, all agree and are indeed convinced that their rights will not be diminished. How can our rights as Canadian women be reduced by the Meech Lake Accord? I would like to ask this question to my colleague: Is it not possible that the fact of seeking to introduce amendments to include women's rights might not open the way for interpretation . . . Why not other visible minorities, for instance, why should the rights of the handicapped not be specifically acknowledged?

Mr. Robichaud: Madam Speaker, I do not entertain any doubt about the expertise or competence of the group of Quebec women whom you have described as being avant-garde—the Hon. Member did indicate this group was avant-garde indeed, that it did not feel threatened in any way by this Accord. I respect this opinion but through you, Madam Speaker, I should like to suggest to the Hon. Member that the Advisory Council on the Status of Women in New Brunswick is also an avant-garde group, people who are quite enlightened, but in their case they feel their equality rights are threatened. So I think they have the right to command respect for their opinion, just like all other groups who appeared before the committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a number of comments to make on the Meech Lake Accord. I intend to vote for it with members of my Party because we feel it does in fact put in concrete terms the commitment that many Canadians from outside of Quebec made to the Province of Quebec and to Quebecois at the time of the referendum seven years ago. At that time I was in the Ontario Legislature as Leader of my Party and I remember that we all spoke in the debate at that time saying to Quebec and Quebecers: "Please do not vote to take your province out of Canada". We asked Quebecers to stay within Canada and we made a commitment.

I was at the provincial level at that time, but the people in Parliament also made a commitment as well as Canadians from coast to coast, that this country would be different and the conditions which had led Quebecers to consider they might want to separate from Canada would be addressed and resolved, not at some infinite point in the future but as a matter of urgency.

For a time I think there was a real risk and danger that that commitment would become forgotten. I am proud now to take part in a debate where we in the Parliament of Canada, now that I am a Member of Parliament, can participate in the historic event that Quebec and Quebecers are able to say yes to Confederation and, yes, to the rest of Canada as the rest of Canada says yes to Quebec. It is about time this took place. Frankly, I think any Member of Parliament who decides to hang back saying: "It is not quite right, it is not quite the time", is guilty of ignoring just what this historic achievement means and of not understanding that the time is now. We have to honour the commitment made to Quebec at the beginning of this decade.

Of all the sections in the Meech Lake Accord, the most important sections, I believe, are those that speak directly to the agenda, which was effectively set by Premier Levesque and reiterated in a somewhat different form by Premier Bourassa over the course of the middle of the 1980s. There is a response. At last the Constitution of Canada will say what New Democrats have said it should say for many years. From the time of the foundation of my Party back in 1961, we have said that Canada and Canadians must recognize that Quebec is a distinct society. We have tried to say it in different ways, and at times we have been strongly criticized for it, just as the former Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party was strongly criticized in the 1960s when he argued for acceptance of the deux nations that existed in Canada at that time and exists to this day.

We now have in the Constitution, in the Meech Lake Accord, the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians centred in Quebec but present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians concentrated outside of Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada, and the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society. All of the implications of what that means have yet to be spelled out in terms of how the Supreme Court, as the arbitrator of our Constitution, approaches this particular question, but we finally had the courage to say to Quebec: "Yes, Quebec is a distinct society because of the language and culture which is French". This is something so fundamental to the nature of Canada that it must be recognized in the Constitution itself.

Elsewhere—and I will come to that today and possibly when this debate resumes in a day or two—there are the other points that speak directly to the concerns of Quebec, particularly that Quebec have a veto over matters that are primordial and fundamental to the existence of provincial powers in Quebec, and that Quebec have the right to opt out of any transfers of provincial powers to the federal Government.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I was a member of the Quebec Committee of my Party for a two year period, after which we finally succeeded in preparing a policy statement of the New Democratic Party which received virtually unanimous support at our national Convention in Montreal in March of 1987.

This policy statement was a resolution on Quebec and the Constitution on which we worked together. We worked on the basis of equality. The Quebec Committee of our Party was made up of eight members, led by our party Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Madam Speaker, this group was working on a historic statement since it would be the first convention of our party held in Montreal.

I would like to read to the House the formula proposed by our Party. We were able to compare it in March with the formula agreed to by the Prime Minister at Meech Lake, which is now part of the constitution and our statutes thanks to the Meech Lake Accord.

We began by several whereas clauses:

> Whereas Quebec must be invited to fashion with the rest of Canada a renewed Federation devoted to cultural and economic equality; and
>
> Whereas the people of Quebec have the right to determine freely their own future; and
>
> Whereas Quebec is unique by the fact that it is the only province where French is the language and culture of the majority; and
> Whereas such a specificity obviously implies that Quebecers will continue to fashion their economic, social, cultural and linguistic future by means which could be different from those of the other provinces; and
>
> Whereas this unique character is an asset not only for Quebecers, but also for all other Canadians.
>
> While offering an opening to examine other constitutional amendments, it is therefore resolved by the New Democratic Party that:
>
> 1. The preamble of the Canadian Constitution recognize the unique character of Quebec, the only province where French is the language and culture of the majority;
> 2. Quebec must be able to preserve its distinct identity and that one of the means to reach that goal be the right not to participate in constitutional amendments that would lead to a transfer of provincial powers to the federal government and that, when those constitutional amendments have a financial impact, Quebec be entitled to an equivalent financial compensation;
> 3. that Quebec have a veto on any constitutional amendment that would alter federal institutions when those changes are considered as vital for the protection and safeguard of the French language and culture in Quebec;
> 4. Be it further resolved that the Quebec Committee of the federal NDP explore new constitutional provisions both to preserve the language rights of the majority in Quebec and to maintain the language rights that minorities presently enjoy in the Constitution.

Madam Speaker, I see that my time is over and I would like to make further comments on that resolution which was passed almost unanimously by our Convention, last March, and to compare how that Statement of principles of the New Democratic Party was included in the Statement of principles agreed to by the Prime Minister and the Premiers in the Meech Lake and Langevin Agreements signed last spring.

I hope to conclude my speech when the debate resumes in one or two days.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg).

[English]

Mr. Schellenberg: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has some 10 or 12 minutes left in the allowable time for his remarks. I wonder if we might seek unanimous consent of the House to allow him to complete his remarks this evening?

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to complete his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: The agenda, Madam Speaker, has been fixed for five o'clock. We were just asked if we would give unanimous consent. Some of us have other things to do at 5.15, and at 5.30. I have taken appointments and also I wish to participate in the debate in Private Members' Hour. I do not know if I can if the hour is retarded by 15 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have to take it that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) does not agree.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I thank all Hon. Members. On behalf of my Party, we will do our best to co-operate with the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) to ensure that he may leave the House quickly after the resumption of Private Members' Hour.

Madam Speaker, I had just finished speaking about—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair needs unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to continue. Obviously, the Chair does not have unanimous consent. Therefore, I must call it five o'clock.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

AUDITOR GENERAL ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert) moved that Bill C-262, an Act to amend the Auditor General Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, in a month from now I will have been a member of the Public Accounts Committee for eight years. During that period of time the committee has often been frustrated by the time it takes for issues which the Auditor General finds in his comprehensive audits of Departments of the Government to be completed and the time it takes before they can be put before the Public Accounts Committee and Parliament.

I must say that I was exceedingly disappointed when the committee responsible for making the decision as to whether this Bill was votable or not decided it was not of great enough importance to be called a votable Bill. This Bill, or facsimiles of it, have been before the House three times before. In each case the Government has agreed that action should be taken, but in the end either time ran out or the opportunity for changes to the Auditor General Act were not able to go forward.

A meeting of the Public Accounts Committee was held on May 28, 1984, at which the Auditor General made a statement which I think should be before this House. He said that the Auditor General's office had studied the pros and cons of the reporting system and that he had come up with what he thought was an acceptable procedure, and with very small changes in the Auditor General Act it could be put into effect. He said, "We settled on completion-date for reporting plus a short summary annual report as the best and most flexible alternative". In other words, his office made the recommendation that it would be better for the office of the Auditor General if it could make the report after it had completed the comprehensive audit, as short a time afterwards as possible, allowing only for printing time, and then table it with the Speaker who would in turn table it in the House. As you well know, Madam Speaker, the Speaker has a continuing commitment to refer any Auditor General's report to the Public Accounts Committee.

On June 13 of 1984 the Public Accounts Committee made this statement:

> Your committee considered the reporting practices of the Auditor General and in particular the timeliness of his annual report to the House of Commons. Your committee notes that under the present Auditor General Act the Auditor General normally may report only annually to the House of Commons. Your committee favours the reporting of comprehensive and other audits on a completion-date basis. This will enable your committee to deal with the Auditor General's finding in a timely manner and to exert its remedial influences as soon as possible after the audit is completed. The Auditor General endorses this approach because it provides for greater efficiency and flexibility in his reporting to Parliament.

That was the request of the Public Accounts Committee on June 13, 1984.

The amendment that I am suggesting here in this Bill is very simple. As I said, it has been reported by every Public Accounts Committee since 1979. It has been before this House three times and it has been accepted by members of the Opposition and government Members. It is not a votable Bill at the moment. However, the House has the opportunity and the authority to let this Bill, before the end of this hour of debate, go to committee. If the political will is here it can go to committee and what actions should be taken on it can be discussed at that time.

There was an agreement in about 1980 or 1981 with the previous administration to allow—and the wording was even decided upon at that time—the amendments to go through to become part of a changed Auditor General Act. In 1985, to assist in the speed up of the report of the Auditor General, we asked and agreed with the Auditor General that the report be presented in October instead of December, thus allowing a couple of months for attention to be given to it by the Public Accounts Committee in the year that the report was tabled instead of waiting until after the Christmas break.

In the meeting I was discussing on May 29, 1984, the Public Accounts Committee spent a considerable amount of time discussing the pros and cons and the resulting change to the legislation. There was entire agreement at that time on what would be required in this Bill.

• (1710)

The Bill is very simple and straightforward. It has three very small changes. The major change was adding the words "at least". The Bill states:

> 7.(1) The Auditor General shall report at least annually to the House of Commons
>
> (a) on the work of his office; and
> (b) on whether, in carrying on the work of his office, he received all the information and explanations he required.

There are two subsequent clause changes, one ensuring that any report brought before the House or given to the Speaker is laid before the House; and a third clause which takes into consideration that this change has been made in the Act.

A very short change in the Act would give Parliament considerably more opportunity to deal with the Public Accounts of Canada and the Auditor General's report.

The pros and cons when discussed by the Standing Committee on Public Accounts brought it to the decision that what was required was a change in this legislation. The wording that I have put into the Bill is exactly the same as the words suggested by the Public Accounts Committee.

The Bill was presented to the House on October 21, 1985. At that time several Members of the House, both on the government and on the opposition side, commented on the need for the Bill to be passed. Members brought forward many cases in which, had this Bill been in place, we may have been able to save the Government and the people of Canada many millions of dollars. On October 21, 1985 such examples were given as the case of Canadair which cost the Government approximately $3.8 billion. A considerable amount of that money may have been saved had the structure under which Canadair was operating been brought to the Public Accounts Committee and the attention of Parliament eight or twelve months before when the comprehensive account had been finished. Also at that time the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) mentioned the case of the scientific research credit which cost the people of Canada approximately $2 billion before it was entirely stopped. Had that situation been brought before the Public Accounts Committee at an earlier time, we may have been able to save part of that money.

On Tuesday, October 27, the Auditor General's report will be tabled in the House. It is possible and likely that some of the audits in that report could have been completed or may have been completed in August of 1986, which is 14 months ago. By now the Public Accounts Committee and Parliament could have dealt with any of the shortcomings brought to light by the Auditor General in that report. In his 1984 report the Auditor General made the following statement:

> The fiscal year on which I am only now reporting concluded eight months ago. It will be several more months before the Public Accounts Committee (PAC) will have completed its consideration of this Report. I am anxious to see the whole process speeded up.

If one were to look at the evidence of that particular meeting when we discussed that report, it would be found that the Auditor General also indicated that some of the reports completed eight months before, or that were brought to the Public Accounts Committee eight months before, had actually been completed almost one year before that. This meant that some of the reports were two years old by the time they came to the Public Accounts Committee.

This amendment will not change any of the powers of the Auditor General or the Public Accounts Committee. It will change no powers and have no effect on the Parliament of Canada. It will increase the flexibility and the ability of Parliament to deal with those comprehensive audits.

There are three very good reasons why Parliament should pass this Bill, and it has the power to do so today by sending it to committee. It would be better for Parliament because it would always be working on more up-to-date material. It would be better for the Government because it would have a quicker analysis of the programs which have been analysed by the Auditor General.

In the report of the Auditor General of May 29, 1985 he also indicated that not only would it be very helpful to have those reports examined earlier, but that it would also be much more cost effective. Instead of holding those reports and going over them, they would be submitted in smaller booklets. The Auditor General would also continue to publish an annual report which would report on those items which are not necessarily directly connected to a comprehensive audit.

I call upon Parliament, both opposition and government Members, to accept this Bill and send it to committee in order that it can be looked at and the committee can decide whether it wishes to take the action to allow those changes to the Auditor General Act.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I accepted to take part in this debate on Bill C-262, sponsored by my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

At first glance, what is most striking about this Bill is its simplicity and particularly the obvious desire of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert to ensure a better control of public finances through more frequent reports from the Auditor General.

It is not the first time that this Bill is tabled as it has been already debated in 1985 when it was introduced as Bill C-250.

I do not think that any Member will question the absolute necessity of a continuing and quasi-immediate control on Government's spending. In fact, it may seem difficult to study financial statements that are 18 to 24 months old and to correct adequately the problems brought to light.

Obviously, the financial disease which is sapping the strength of the Departments and Crown corporations concerned could kill them by causing a haemorrhage of funds before we have time to react adequately.

With the proposed amendment, it would become possible to bring more rapidly to the attention of parliamentarians urgent matters requiring pressing or immediate solutions. So, the Auditor General might present, and I quote, an important provision of the Bill: "A special report to the House of Commons on any matter of pressing importance or urgency that, in his opinion, should be reported immediately."

• (1720)

The nuance between the present legislation and the bill is subtle, although it does emphasize the need to react immediately without waiting for the annual report on activities of the relevant Department or Crown corporation.

Nevertheless, it seems to me that the Bill, with its present provisions, could lead to some abuse. But it would be possible for the Public Accounts Committee to request, or even demand, special studies on some Departments on the basis of rumours or hearsay, and God knows how much the Opposition likes this kind of thing. The process would be slowed down if too many requests were directed to the Auditor General. His office does not have unlimited resources to undertake numerous special studies while meeting deadlines on its main current assignments, which are to audit financial statements from Departments and Crown corporations. The Auditor General should not be rendered unable to fulfil his primary mandate due to the fact that the Standing Committee on Public Accounts would impose an overburden of secondary responsibilities based, as I said before, on rumour or intentions which are of dubious value even at first glance.

One other drawback has to do with the possibility of partisan politics. Here again, some colleagues thrive on that aspect of our parliamentary life. As it stands now, the bill does not place any restrictions or propose any guidelines with regard to the circumstances which would justify a special study. As the bill now stands, it seems to me that the Standing Committee on Public Accounts could base on any motive whatsoever a request that an inquiry be made by the Auditor General. Unfortunately, we are therefore faced with the possibility that such requests would be made on a purely partisan basis, and this is totally unacceptable.

To maintain its reputation of non partisanship, the Public Accounts Committee must never find itself in situations likely to give rise to accusations of partisanship that would weaken its efficiency. Unhappily, the Bill does not protect it in that respect. Having said this, changes such as these are imperative. We all know of situations that are brought about due to the weakness of the present system. Although the Auditor may find disturbing situations in some Departments and inform these consequently, the present system is such that even after the Auditor General's report has been published and is examined by the Committee, that is 18 to 24 months after the problem has been disclosed, Departments may still not be able to take corrective action.

Madam Speaker, it would be inappropriate to ask this House to amend an Act which is working smoothly if the amendments bear no solutions. As proposed now, they only emphasize problems. Have you ever seen for instance an enterprise, except maybe for those who make the headlines because of their serious financial difficulties, wait from 18 to 24 months after the end of a fiscal year to examine the documents of an auditor? No; this is however the way the Government of Canada manages public moneys, Madam Speaker. This is a serious deficiency which we can all see, unfortunately.

To remedy this problem, the control should come back at the level where the founders of Canada put it in the first place, namely to Parliament and to elected representatives.

When I refer to elected representatives, I want to make the distinction in relation to the other place.

In 1984, Canadians elected their Members of Parliament so that they put some order in the public finances. It is good to see that Bills try effectively to remedy problems and to restore a fair balance. During the last election campaign, Madam Speaker, I recall visiting a garage owner in my area well known for his blunt language and his sound management. He asked me if I had ever been in politics, and I answered that no, unfortunately, I had only a background of business and industrial administration. He told me: "That's exactly what we need. Go to Ottawa and tell the federal people to stop trying to show us how to run our business like a government, and show them how to run a government like a business." Madam Speaker, I suggest that the principle of the law should be kept in this edited section of the Bill, but since it has been introduced by people who are not particularly noted for their business acumen, I mean our socialist colleagues in the House, we should not expect this consideration to be directly affected by the Bill before us.

Madam Speaker, we have been specifically mandated to keep a close watch on federal expenditures and administration and to reduce the deficit which was threatening the growth of our economy, and even seriously mortgaging that of future generations of Canadians. We must therefore take steps which will meet the expectations of Canadians for a better control of our basic public moneys.

In order to achieve our objective and fulfil our mandate, however, we must take the necessary step to identify and eliminate the sources of waste. The responsibility of our Auditor General is to show us where situations exist which might develop into serious problems. He must keep a close watch over public accounts, but because his hands are tied he might not react with enough flexibility and quickness to fulfil his mandate. If he cannot do a good job, we will not be able to assume our responsibility of monitoring public expenditures with precision and effectiveness.

That is the reason why the Bill before us is interesting. Perfectly aware of the possible shortcomings of the current financial control system of the Government, of the comments made by newspaper columnists, as well as the great many letters to the editor coming from our concerned citizens, I feel that the time has come to take the difficult but necesesary steps which are certainly needed. Squandering the taxpayer's money must come to an end. This squandering added to outright losses of money, results in further losses that are considerably more difficult to quantify. How can we assign a monetary value to some of our fellow citizens losing confidence in our parliamentary process, for instance? How can we assign a monetary value to Canadian and foreign investors losing confidence, and becoming reluctant to go ahead and establish or expand their business, after having been previously threatened with seizure by one Party or with nationalization by another?

Madam Speaker, all those considerations deserve very special attention in this debate, because they, combined with the domino effect resulting from the financial mismanagement of the nation's affairs, have an impact on all other fields of activity, whether social, economic or political, in our country.

I therefore urge this Governement to question the reason for that process. We certainly must act before it is too late. We all remember the former Auditor General, Mr. Maxwell Henderson, saying that the Government was losing control over public expenditures. It was time indeed that we came to power and brought this control back to a strong and well-balanced business-minded House of Commons. We have gone a long way since then, but there is still a lot to be done. The Bill now before us is a step forward along the road to nationalization—sorry, "rationalizaton", tongues keep slipping when something is suggested by the Socialist Party—the rationalization of public expenditures. But I am not convinced this is enough. I therefore urge the Government to stop and think the matter over. We must ask ourselves whether everything has been done in that area. Sincerely, I do not believe so. We must also see what additional measures are needed to improve on our financial management.

Madam Speaker, this Government has already done much in that area of financial control and Government expenditures. It is my hope it will stay on that road, finding other means, and that it will be guided along the way by proposals and suggestions such as the one outlined in this Bill. However, we must recognize it is still inadequate and incomplete.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, we just heard a speech written by I know not whom, but the writer of that speech should take note that the Auditor General agrees with the thrust of the Bill under consideration, and that the Minister of State (Treasury Board) (Mr. Lewis) and House Leader also are in agreement. When he was Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, he himself suggested the proposal now before the House, namely that the Auditor General could file reports more often than once a year.

Members of the House have discussed the matter many times, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) mentioned it at least three times and I took part myself in this debate not too long ago, on October 21, 1985. I remember very well that several Members of Parliament, including the Whip of the Party in power, said: It is a good idea—

Mr. Lanthier: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier).

Mr. Lanthier: Madam Speaker, a point was raised and I waited for the Hon. Member to finish his sentence, but I think that it ended on a harsh criticism calling for an answer. If you want to know who made these statements, because some allegations have just been made, I want to say that I, the Hon. Member for LaSalle, wrote that speech.

Mr. Boudria: Do not boast about it if you are the author!

Mr. Gauthier: If the Hon. Member for LaSalle wrote that speech, I advise him to do a little more research from now on and to get better informed because what he said in the House, Madam Speaker, does not hold if you consider that people who usually have much more clout than he in this House have already considered and solved that matter by saying to the Government: Yes, we must give the Auditor General the opportunity to bring forward more than one report. It is, I think, a blunt answer coming not only from some Members but from the Auditor General and, as I said earlier, from the Minister himself, the present Minister of State (Treasury Board) (Mr. Lewis) who used to be Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee... The Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), who presently chairs the Public Accounts Committee, also supported that resolution. The Hon. Member seems to have suddenly decided that he had to speak against this initiative.

Madam Speaker, we have positive comments to make on that issue. I think that Bill C-262 should be passed as it will give to the Auditor General the opportunity to provide the House with the tools it requires to do its job. The AG is senior official of the House. He takes no orders from anyone. He takes no orders from Hon. Members and even less from the Hon. Member for LaSalle. He takes no orders from committees nor the House because his powers have been given to him by the House and parliamentarians.

I fail to understand how it can be alleged that a special study could be requested for purely partisan reasons.

Madam Speaker, that kind of allegation can only be made by someone who does not know the Auditor General's job, who does not understand anything about his role. The Auditor

General is independent from any political pressure and reports to the House of Commons and, as was said earlier, he will report next week by tabling a rather bulky report. Last year, it weighed about one and a quarter or one and half pounds and contained more than 500 pages. The committee must study the report, and Bill C-262 only suggests that the Auditor General be allowed to report to the House as soon as he finishes a study on any subject, contrary to what the interpretation of the Act authorizes him to do presently.

Let us come back to Bill C-262. It proposes to amend Sections 7 and 8.

Subsection 7(1) at present reads as follows:

> 7.(1) The Auditor General shall report annually to the House of Commons
>
> (a) on the work of his office; and
> (b) on whether, in carrying on the work of his office, he received all the information and explanations he required.

The Hon. Member would like to amend this subsection by adding the two words "at least", so that the new subsection would read:

> The Auditor General shall report at least annually to the House of Commons—

And so on and so forth.

Madam Speaker, the idea would not be to have 25 reports a year. The Office of the Auditor General which I have contacted today has advised me that seven or eight reports might be tabled in the House every year, in addition to the statutory annual report which must be tabled before the end of the year, generally in October. Last year, it was tabled on October 21 and this year it will be tabled next Tuesday, October 27.

Madam Speaker, I think Hon. Members could work much more effectively both in committee and in the House. I think the Office of the Auditor General could operate much more effectively if it were to submit to the House for study and consideration some of the chapters as soon as their review has been completed. By so doing, we would not have to deal as we do now with a bulky annual report in November and December and try to understand the report on various federal departments and agencies and devise concrete and corrective measures to ensure a more efficient and healthier federal administration. That is the role of the Auditor General. All that is being requested is that the House accept of its own will that the Auditor General may make special reports, several times a year if it is warranted in his opinion, in order to spread over a period of time his projects or reports on matters that deserve a more careful study.

Bill C-262 would amend section 8 to provide for reports on matters of urgency. Subsection 8(1) at present reads as follows:

> "8. (1) The Auditor General may make a special report to the House of Commons on any matter of pressing importance or urgency that, in his opinion, should not be deferred until the presentation of his annual report."

The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) would like to make the following amendment by deleting the last two lines and substituting the following therefor:

> "8. (1) The Auditor General may make a special report to the House of Commons on any matter of pressing importance or urgency that, in his opinion, should be reported immediately."

The purpose of this amendment is not to enable us to react and ask for inquiries, or to have the Auditor General take his orders from Hon. Members or to abuse a system which is essential for this Parliament. We would like to give the Auditor General the power to make regular inquiries and reports and spread his work over a period of time and make a better use of his human resources so that we will be able, in this House, with the help of our committee, to know how this country is run. It is as simple as that, Madam Speaker.

• (1730)

[English]

I have a few comments to make on where we stand with this Bill. On July 18, 1980, the Auditor General recommended the use of special reports to the House of Commons and the committee. In 1982 these changes to the Auditor General Act were agreed to by the Public Accounts Committee, the Auditor General himself, the President of the Treasury Board, the House Leader of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic caucus. We all agreed this was an important change and that we should proceed. On June 13, 1984 in its fifth report to Parliament the Public Accounts Committee recommended the reporting of comprehensive and other audits on a completion date basis. When a stage and a report is finished, and an audit has been made, it is reported to the House so we can have access to the report. The fifth report went on to say that this would enable the committee to deal with the Auditor General's findings in a timely manner and to exert its remedial influence as soon as possible after the audit is completed. On March 31, 1984, the Auditor General in his annual report to Parliament, under "matters of special importance and interest" brought to the attention of Parliament the recommendation of the Public Accounts Committee of June 13, 1984 to amend—let me emphasize the words to amend—the Auditor General Act to allow for completion date reporting by his office.

I cannot put it any better than that. We had a debate in this House a year or two ago on the same question. I want to congratulate the mover of this Bill because I think it is an important one. I hope the House will see fit to pass it and get it into committee so we can get a proper amendment before us and proceed with what I think is a very constructive and positive effort on the part of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to rise in Private Members' Hour to deal with a very important subject. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) is to be commended for raising it at this time. I share with him a similar set of eight year experiences.

Most of my time in this House I have had a passion for the Public Accounts Committee and the work that it does. Other responsibilities, however, from time to time have not allowed the degree of involvement I would have preferred to have had. It ties up with my background as an academic.

• (1740)

I think we in this House do have a strong obligation, each and every one us, to be conscious of the spending patterns of Government, of the need to make sure that the votes we take in this House and the direction we give to the Public Service of Canada about how to spend the money and which programs to spend it on are followed in a legal manner but also in a cost-efficient and effective manner. By bringing forward a Private Member's Bill, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert is, as other speakers have noted, advancing a cause which the Public Accounts Committee itself has historically advanced and one which the Auditor General has advanced since 1982.

I personally have some trouble with the notion of a series of reports. If that series of reports grows to the point at which every three weeks we get another one, I have fears about how that will be seen, unless we make some amendments on Parliament's side of the fence, and that may indeed be possible in the future.

If we move away from the notion of an annual Auditor General's report and to very common, frequent reporting, what will happen? As a Member of the House who from time to time has difficulty communicating with the general public about the Government of Canada, what it is doing right and what it is doing wrong, I must ask myself if we would lose something that is inherent in the public relations aspect of a major report coming down once a year.

The next question I must ask myself is if these reports are coming along, as the Hon. Member just said, on a completion date basis, what does that do to the committee itself? One of the real joys that I experienced as a new Member of Parliament when I was the Vice-Chairman of the committee and the Hon. Member from Westmount was the Chairman in 1979 was to discover a committee of Parliament that was non-partisan in nature and very consistently so. Members of all political persuasions shared the common goal of wanting to make public expenditures more efficient, effective and cost productive.

Every time an Auditor General's report comes out, there are press conferences and the Auditor General is called as a witness before the committee. The report is explored over two or three sessions so we get the flavour of what the Auditor General has discovered in the previous 12 months about the way the Government of Canada spends money and his feelings about the major areas where change might indeed be needed.

It has been the pattern of the committee to set up a year's worth of work in advance, to say: "Out of this collection of departmental reports and comprehensive audits, what is the committee's judgment about what should be the first topic the committee should tackle and what should be the second and the third and so on; what preparation do we as a committee need for holding hearings, for directing the researchers of the committee to prepare background material for members and for seeking out the proper set of witnesses; and what kind of timeframes are involved?"

I have always gotten a great deal of satisfaction out of that particular committee, in part because of the planned nature of the work. We are able, after the first week or two when the report is first laid on the table, to work quietly and efficiently as a committee without the kind of glare that very often comes from particular committee examinations. I thought that that helped the judgment of committee members. It has been an important part of why the activities of Public Accounts have been less partisan than some of the things I have experienced on the Labour, Employment and Immigration Committee.

If we are topical, there is a tendency to be political. We have an obligation to our own Parties, when there is lots of press about an issue, to advance the causes to which Members have collectively agreed. I think that that is appropriate for 90 per cent to 95 per cent of what we do in this Chamber. However, in the Public Accounts Committee, we are trying to get at the fundamental nature of the Government of Canada. It conducts not so much an examination of decisions made by politicians, by the Government of the day, by the Cabinet of the day, by the majority Party of the day, as it conducts an examination of how the servants of the people of Canada who work in the Public Service conduct the affairs of the nation relating to the instructions which we give them through legislation or policy pronouncements.

Would it be right for that committee to be hopping hither and yon, a day here, a day there and four days over there, simply because there is a constant stream of reports coming before it on different dates at different times? Inevitably, some of those reports would hit the table of the House of Commons when the same subject matter was coincidentally the major topic under discussion the week before in Question Period, or would become for some other set of reasons the major topic in Question Period the week thereafter. Then would we have suspicions that the Auditor General himself was being partisan? Would he all of a sudden be taking advantage of a political event in the country by putting the report on the table at an opportune moment to create maximum publicity?

If we began to worry that this independent office of the Auditor General of Canada was behaving in a partisan political fashion, then I suggest that the very important dimension of independence and non-partisanship which is critically important to the functioning of the office would begin to erode. Over five or 10 years, would it disappear? If it began to look as though the Auditor General was a tool of the Government of the day or a tool of the Opposition of the day, would it then have the kind of impact it deserves and which we so clearly want and need?

One of the real problems Members of Parliament face on a daily basis is having access to information. We have a Freedom of information Act, and through parliamentary reform, we can investigate, but at the same time there are many laws about the privacy and confidentiality that is a right of Cabinet and a necessary part of cabinet Government.

The Auditor General can follow an information trail from the start right through to the end in a way that the law would not allow Members of Parliament to do. The Auditor General can draw conclusions out of that right which Parliament has given him and thus inform us not so much of the specifics but of the generalities of a problem. If he does that for us on an annual basis in a major report that has high public visibility and high credibility and is sort of enshrined—we all know it is coming at the same time of year—then I think the perception of his independence is clearly enhanced. It would not be the Auditor General's fault that he happened to report on transport at a particular time when the annual report was due if it happened to be a political issue, but if he has the freedom of choice of when to report, there will be a lot more coincidences. Reports will appear in the middle of political upheavals of one kind or another.

If that independence and view of non-partisanship were to disappear, then I think we would be losing something that is critically important to this Chamber.

• (1750)

So I urge Members not so much to reject the argument of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert but to continue this debate. Perhaps there is some middle ground where the Auditor General should be encouraged to use the emergency power he currently has. Not too long ago we felt so strongly about the functioning of this House that we asked him to report as soon as he finished an audit, and he did. It was not part of the annual report but it was brought to this Chamber on a timely basis. Perhaps there could be some clarification so that that happens somewhat more often, but I do not think now is the right time to go this far.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I have been rather perplexed at the nature of this debate so far. I looked back over my records, notes and files and found that all three political Parties over the last number of years have said that the ideas contained in this Bill are good ideas. The Auditor General has said that this is exactly what he wants to have done. The Standing Committee on Public Accounts has time and time again requested that these things be done. Financial analysts in every part of the country have at one time or another made representations to the Government saying that this is what they require. The economic think-tanks which meet regularly have said on a number of occasions that these are appropriate measures. The present Minister of State for the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis) said that this was a great idea. I can go on and on listing all sorts of people who have made reasoned arguments in support of these points, but to my surprise, and I suspect that of most of us, when government Members got up today to speak they said that this is no longer appropriate. "We are going to speak against this Bill." They couched it in nicer terms than that, but the essence was that they are not going to proceed. I think I know why.

Every year when the Auditor General files his report there is a flurry in the House and editorials in the papers about how the Government is mismanaging the taxpayers' money. It happens every year and it is rather embarrassing for the Government. It is going to happen again next week. I suspect that what the Government is saying is that it is embarrassed every year because of how it spends taxpayers' money and it does not want to be embarrassed four or five or 10 times a year if the Auditor General were permitted to file reports after he has conducted a comprehensive audit on a government Department or agency.

It seems to me there are two reasons Members of Parliament are elected to form a Government. The first is to collect money from taxpayers in one form or another, and the second is to disburse that money in order to provide services to the taxpayers. One side of this issue is how we collect taxes, but we can leave that debate to another time because we all appreciate that there are many criticisms of that conduct at the moment. However, there are times when the Auditor General ought to have the opportunity to file a report on a particular occurrence if he decides to do so.

Two or three examples come to mind. I remember that not long ago the feeling was that spending in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion was out of control. It became well known that millions and millions of dollars were not accounted for. The Minister was shifted out of the portfolio and a lot of serious questions were raised. I suspect that the Auditor General should have moved in right there and then and conducted an audit and made his report immediately. That was not done because he can only do so if he determines it to be an emergency. I am not sure how he would do that, but obviously a Minister mismanaging a Department is not an emergency.

Then I remember the furore over the scientific tax credit. Tens of millions of dollars were misappropriated, and I suspect in the end all sorts of criminal charges will be laid against those who misused that program. Again nothing was exposed, but I am sure the Auditor General would have loved to have a look at that.

What this Bill attempts to do is simply to change the Auditor General Act with respect to when it reports to the House of Commons and indirectly to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. Given all the people who have suggested that we do this, I do not see why we do not, if we believe the taxpayer has the right to know how the Government is behaving with taxpayers' money. I think there is a will to do just that. I believe Members of Parliament are anxious to do just that. It would be in the best interests of the country and its taxpayers to allow this Bill by my hon. friend from Prince Albert to go to committee for further examination.

I know that my colleague from Ottawa Centre had hoped to make some comments on this Bill today and add his support because he was part of the cry that went out for more accountability so that we as responsible parliamentarians could explain to the people of Canada, our constituents, why the Government is spending money in this or that area and if there is a problem, to identify it quickly.

In the present circumstances, as you will know, by the time the Auditor General gets to a particular audit, it is well along in his year and by the time he reports it might be a year later. By the time the committee gets to it it might be two years out of date. Obviously this is not good enough.

I urge Members of the House to consider this Bill seriously and get on with making this very simple, straightforward change to the Act to allow for more accountability by the Government of Canada.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Madam Speaker, I realize I do not have a large amount of time to speak in this debate today, but if Members of Parliament were to look at what the Auditor General of Canada had to report for the period ending March, 1986, it would also be important for opposition Members, especially the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), to ask themselves some other questions. For example, where was he when the Auditor General was reporting during that unbelievable Liberal reign when the Government went from a $7 million deficit to a $180 billion deficit in 1984 when this Government took power? Clearly he was not even considering the Auditor General's yearly report.

Mr. Hovdebo: Yes, we were.

Mr. Holtmann: Not even once a year. Yet if you read what the Auditor General says now, there has been nothing but improvement since 1983. He goes on again and again about great signs of hope. Just look at his opening remarks.

Mr. Riis: You are being political now.

Mr. Holtmann: I am not being political. It is a fact. Clearly this Government has acted on what the Auditor General has said. Regarding initiatives taken towards accountability, and this is not a selected phrase, he said this Government has been accountable to the people of Canada and is moving very swiftly forward. He said that another sign of hope that those responsible for spending taxpayers' dollars were doing so more carefully lies in the increased emphasis on a need for restraint in public expenditures. It is clear that that initiative was taken from the Auditor General's reports of the past. It is clear that the Government is using the Auditor General's report to make decisions on how Canada should govern itself and how it can be prudent with the taxpayers' dollars. For the hon. gentleman to suggest that it report more often is not what is important at this time.

LABOUR RELATIONS—FEDERAL MINIMUM WAGE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, I rise to make some remarks to the House concerning the response to a question I raised in the House a short time ago on behalf of all those who receive the minimum wage for work under federal jurisdiction.

I find it shocking that there is at the present no regular and automatic method for reviewing and increasing the minimum wage in accordance with rises in the cost of living. The people who need the most protection are receiving the least insofar as there has not been in this country, as there is in many others, a way of regularly and automatically reviewing the predicament of those who need the protection of minimum wage legislation and regulation.

The minimum wage for occupations under federal jurisdiction in Canada has not been changed since May, 1986. That may not seem like a long time with regard to certain activities, but it is a long time for people who are trying to make a living on wages as low as $4, the current minimum wage for occupations under federal jurisdiction. That is especially so when we consider that the cost of living, according to the Consumer Price Index, has risen since the last minimum wage increase by 18 cents on $4.

We are asking people to believe and live as though $3.82 can equal $4, for the person earning $4 has purchasing power equal to that of the person who was earning $3.82 when this rate was struck. That is unconscionable. It certainly behoves the Government to take steps to ensure that there will be prompt review in the future and adjustment of the minimum wage in accordance with the cost of living as well as to ensure that this state of affairs is not repeated. Instead, we must replace the present system with one which calls for a periodic review and an adjustment of the minimum wage in accordance with the Consumer Price Index.

I am aware of some of the arguments brought against the latter suggestion. I point out that if those arguments are sound they should be directed against the indexation of the Old Age Security pension, the Canada Pension, the pensions of Members of Parliament and the pensions of public servants. In each of those cases I cited there is a quite proper and reasonable indexation of the pensions so that the purchasing power remains constant. No one I have mentioned in any of those pension funds needs the protection more than the person who is working for the minimum wage.

The rationale for a minimum wage which Canada and the provinces have had for approaching half a century is that the people with the least ability to increase their income will nonetheless have that which they must have in order to have a basic human existence. There is no one in this House who would deny any fellow Canadian that. I hope that in raising this matter for the consideration of the House, we will see the seriousness of something which I am sure has been overlooked in competition with other priorities, and that at the earliest possible date there will be steps taken to raise the minimum wage in the federal jurisdiction, bringing it more in line with such minimum wage rates as are now enjoyed by workers labouring under provincial jurisdictions such as the Northwest Territories, $5.00; Manitoba $4.70; Quebec and Ontario, $4.55; Saskatchewan $4.50; the Yukon $4.25. We thus see various jurisdictions in this country which have enacted that their workers must earn more, and will earn more, and I hope we will bring ourselves in line with those jurisdictions and, I hastily add, with the United States, Luxembourg, France and the Netherlands, each of which is now adjusting its minimum wage periodically in accordance with either the cost of living or the prevailing wage rate throughout their countries.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Madam Speaker, first of all, I would like to stress that the Government is proud of the measures taken to protect the purchasing power of workers at the minimum wage since it was elected, and we will remain vigilant in this respect in the future.

The present Government made an in-depth study of its policy on the minimum wage in 1985, after which he announced an increase which brought the minimum wage of adult workers from $3.50 to $4 an hour; this is a 14 percent increase in real terms which came into force on May 26, 1986.

Furthermore, before this review, the minimum wage of workers under 17 was $3.25 an hour, 25 cents or 7 percent below the rate for adults. Since there was a danger that gap might fly in the face of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which prohibits discrimination on account of age, and since this Government remains strongly committed to the principle of equal pay and equal opportunity, we did away with the lower wage rate that applied to the young. The federal minimum wage for workers below 17 years of age was therefore raised to the adult rate, a significant 23 per cent increase.

The percentages of those two increases, 14 per cent in the case of the minimum wage and 23 per cent for the former youth rate, compare favourably with the 13 per cent increase in the consumer price index since this Government came to power in September of 1984. This last increase in the minimum wage is the first in over six years, since 1981. Currently, the federal minimum wage is more or less at mid-range of the various provincial rates.

This Government takes its role very seriously as regards minimum work standards. In a number of areas, for instance child care leaves, provisions against unfair dismissals, and provisions relating to lay-offs, the Government has assumed leadership. Our minimum wage policy complements our efforts to ensure a basic protection for those workers who are totally or almost totally deprived of negotiating power. That is the thrust of that legislation. We will go on ensuring decent minimum work standards in the interests of all Canadians.

We realize this is not perfect. But I suggest it can be viewed as a step in the right direction.

AGRICULTURE—GRAIN FARMERS—DEFICIENCY PAYMENT/CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE TALKS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, on October 2 I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) if he was going to make good on a promise he made in late August to western and eastern grain producers to provide some $3 billion in deficiency payments this fall. You will recall, Madam Speaker, that one year ago the Government made a commitment to provide a $1 billion deficiency payment to farmers. That was at the behest of the Premier of Saskatchewan who was locked in a serious provincial election. He called the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at five o'clock in the morning to get his support for a deficiency payment. This was to rescue him and to provide him with a political bail-out in that election.

• (1810)

Farmers are very concerned right now because the Minister made a commitment, or seemed to have made a commitment in principle, to provide a deficiency payment of some $3 billion. That would include the Western Grain Stabilization Fund payment of about $1 billion. In Question Period on August 2 the Minister seemed to welsh on that deal. He did not give any firm commitment that he would provide it. He talked a great deal about the method of payment, the timing of payment and all the rest of it. But he did not give any commitment.

I also asked the Minister in a supplementary question as to whether the hold up was with regard to the free trade negotiations. In fact, there are two developments in the free trade negotiations which have a great deal to do with the grain industry in this country in that it is very clear now that the two-price system of wheat which provides a $280 million a year benefit to Canadian grain producers will be destroyed by the free trade agreement.

The Minister of Agriculture in Saskatchewan, and the Premier of the province, have owned up to that and have made it clear in the legislature. they have even convinced the federal government to provide a compensation for the loss of the two-price system of wheat. But there is another aspect as well. That is to say that in the agreement the United States undertakes to take "into account", I believe are the exact words, Canada's position with regard to its use of its export enhancement program. That program is essentially designed for the United States to buy markets in Russia, Saudi Arabia and other traditional markets for Canadian wheat producers, but not to exclude the use of that export enhancement program when it gives away one bushel free with every three that are sold. When the Minister said that the delay of the deficiency payment had nothing to do with the free trade negotiations, which were in the final throes at that time, I am not so sure that that was not a consideration.

In any event, western Canadian farmers and eastern farmers feel that they have been sold out by the Government on the free trade deal. They are wondering whether or not the Government will now make good on the deficiency payment of $3 billion which the Minister seemed to agree to in late August in the meeting in Winnipeg.

I certainly call on the Parliamentary Secretary in his response this afternoon to give a firm commitment that the Government will provide this deficiency payment and that it will not continue to stonewall into the fall months and the winter.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Madam Speaker, when that question was raised last October 2, details had indeed been given to my colleague by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise).

At the meeting held on last August 27, our Government engaged in a consultation process with some 50 Canadian farm leaders to examine the national agricultural situation. Madam Speaker, it was our Government which established that process, that form of consultation with Canadian farmers, it is not . . . and I remind my colleague that recent polls have shown clearly that Canadians highly appreciate the work done by their Agriculture Minister. The satisfaction level is more than 70 per cent.

One of the main points is precisely the consulting attitude of our Government. As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) recalled on October 2, this was the third meeting with farm leaders as we attempt to find with them ways of cushioning the impact of the continuing world trade subsidy war. The proposal put forward by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is supported by a number of farm groups. We are well aware of that. If the proposal proves to be fair to all producers and if it proves to be market and production neutral, I think it could form the basis of a new program. Our department officials are now analyzing the proposal along with other possible actions by our Government. We have met CFA staff to discuss the matter and clarify various points. No commitment was given with respect to the dollar value of a program.

The farm leaders themselves estimated about $3 billion would be needed. I do not think the negotiations we have concluded with the United States should be taken as detrimental. They are one element amoung others, but there is no connection with this issue and I think, Madam Speaker, we will keep on meeting the needs of Canadian producers as we have done over the last three years. We will also continue our international activities because everybody is aware, and it is the main concern of our Canadian farmers' friends, that the international trade subsidy war must come to an end. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has put agriculture on the agenda of major powers. We will continue our efforts in that sense and I can assure my colleague that Canadian producers will not regret the consultation process we have undertaken with them.

APARTHEID—SOUTH AFRICA—AID TO FRONT-LINE STATES/ECONOMIC SANCTIONS—COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise today to follow up on a question that I asked in the House on October 13 which had to do with the Commonwealth heads of government conference that was going on at that time in Vancouver. I was concerned to receive assurances from the Government that the emphasis placed on one particular agenda item of the conference, that of aid to the front-line states in Southern Africa, would not be an occasion for de-emphasizing the need for tough economic action in the form of sanctions against South Africa. There had been some talk that this might become a substitute for or an alternative to sanctions. That is probably the case as far as Great Britain was concerned. As the conference unfolded, it became clear that Britain was willing to consider this whole matter of aid to the front-line states in a way that it was not willing to consider the question of sanctions.

Fortunately, it appears that all the other Commonwealth leaders did not see this suggestion of increased aid to the front-line states as an alternative to or a substitute for economic sanctions against South Africa. Some of the worry that I had at the time I raised the question has since been alleviated by the conference itself.

This might be an opportunity to say a word or two of appreciation for the obvious sincerity with which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) holds his views of opposition to apartheid in South Africa. On this side of the House, we were all glad to see that the Prime Minister was generally recognized to have shown leadership on this issue, and generally recognized to have held his ground and the common ground of all the other nations of the Commonwealth, except Britain, with respect to the need for preserving those sanctions that are already there, and with respect to accelerating both the substance and the effect of sanctions.

We look forward to Canadian action on that. We not only hope but feel that the Prime Minister, in order to preserve and enhance that perception of integrity on this issue which he came out of that conference with, in a very short period of time will need to indicate what else Canada is prepared to do in order to make good the rhetoric of the Prime Minister.

• (1820)

It is certainly an occasion to notice that the Prime Minister in common with other leaders, resisted the obvious desire of Prime Minister Thatcher of Great Britain to roll back the sanction agenda and to change the focus of the Commonwealth in respect of South Africa.

It is always easier to show independence when it comes to a former colonial master, and we congratulate the Prime Minister on the extent to which he demonstrated that kind of independence of Great Britain. However, we have been independent of Great Britain for a long time now. Where we need to show an equal measure of independence in our foreign policy is the whole matter of Central America and our relationship with the United States, our current colonial master when it comes to foreign policy.

I hope that the same spirit of independence which imbued the Prime Minister on the occasion of the conference in Vancouver will soon imbue the Government in respect of its attitude toward Central America. I hope, in the same way as we have a Canadian Government ready to speak out independently against apartheid in South Africa, regardless of what Great Britain might think, and to advocate policies which are at odds with what Great Britain might think, that some day we will have a Government which is willing to advocate policies in Central America which are at odds with what the United States might think, a Government free to speak up against continuing American aid to the Contras, a Government willing to locate an embassy in Managua, and a Government willing to increase rather than decrease its aid to Nicaragua.

Canada could be doing a variety of other things which I argue today would be consistent with the spirit of independence in foreign policy areas that the Prime Minister displayed in Vancouver vis-à-vis Great Britain. We would like to see that same kind of independence displayed vis-à-vis the United States, particularly in respect of Central America and also in respect of other issues. We look forward to the day when the independent foreign policy perspective which the Prime Minister displayed in Vancouver will be comprehensive.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Madam Speaker, I must thank my colleague for referring to our Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) spirit of independence. In my estimation, if in recent months there was a country which showed openmindedness in all the conferences in which we as a country took part . . . On behalf of the Prime Minister, I am proud to accept this compliment from my colleague.

[English]

In that specific case the Government's commitment to assisting the FLS economies is well known. In total, Canada provides about $140 million in development co-operation to southern Africa annually.

The principal channel through which Canadian development assistance is provided to the FLS is the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, a regional organization of nine southern African states committed to accelerated economic development and reduced dependence on South Africa through increased regional integration and self-reliance. Canada has been one of SADCC's main supporters with annual disbursements of between $25 million and $30 million. These figures will, if anything, be increased over the next five years.

In addition, Canada provides assistance to individual front-line states through multilateral—food aid and humanitarian assistance—and NGO channels, as well as through the bilateral and specialized divisions of CIDA.

[Translation]

The issue of assistance to the front-line states, which we are debating, received attention most recently at the meeting of Commonwealth Heads of Government just concluded in Vancouver. Canada played a prominent role in developing an enhanced Commonwealth program to complement the work of other agencies in the region. Commonwealth leaders agreed to a statement and program of action which commits them, inter alia, to give priority attention to the rehabilitation and protection of the Limpopo railway line and the port of Maputo, to examine transit rights of the landlocked FLS of the region and to establish a special fund for technical assistance to Mozambique. They also announced their readiness to consult with a view to enabling those members in a position to do so, to make appropriate contributions to the security needs of Mozambique and other FLS requiring help.

For our part we have already made known our commitment to contribute $20 million towards the rehabilitation of the Limpopo railway line. We are in the process of examining ways in which Canadian support for the other elements of the Commonwealth statement and plan of action can best be implemented.

We do not consider assistance to the neighbouring countries as a substitute for firm economic action against South Africa. The Okanagan Statement issued on October 16 makes it clear that all members of the Commonwealth, except one, believe sanctions to be effective and have agreed to a "wider, tighter and more intensified application" of them. We fully support that position.

• (1825)

[English]

We are prepared to invoke total economic sanctions, if there is no progress—there is no question about that—but we do not think the time is right. Such a decision would be dramatic but would leave us out of the process of seeking an end to apartheid.

If the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence of the thirty-fourth report later this day.

GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS—FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to its order of reference dated June 23, 1987, I have the honour to present the fourth report, in both official languages, of the Standing Committee on Government Operations.

Your committee examined the resolution adopted by the House on February 10, 1987, regarding the erection of a statue in honour of former Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson, as well as the document entitled "Report on Commemorative Statues to Canadian Prime Ministers and Commemoratives to Other Eminent Canadians", tabled in the House on February 10, 1987.

We are satisfied that a suitable site is presently available on Parliament Hill for the erection of a statue of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson. In the longer term, however, we are of the opinion that alternative sites off Parliament Hill should also be considered in the planning of future commemorative statues.

I wish to thank Hon. Members for their contribution in drafting this unanimous report.

STRIKING—CONCURRENCE IN THIRTY-FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, if the House gives its consent, I move, seconded by the Minister of State for the Treasury Board, that the thirty-fourth report of the Striking Committee presented to the House earlier this day be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and honour, pursuant to Standing Order 106, to present the following petition from a number of western Canadians.

They draw our attention to the procedure proposed by standing committee of Parliament's for dealing with refugees which they feel would fairly and effectively solve the problem of the backlog, which has the support of all the Parties in Parliament, as well as the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress, and many other groups and individuals who have expertise in dealing with refugees.

The petitioners are asking the Government to withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles that were reported from that standing committee of the House of Commons.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question as enumerated by the Minister has been answered. shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, October 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take much time of the House, but I do wish to express my objections to the thrust of Bill C-55.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we were summoned in the midst of the summer recess in order that Parliament could deal with what the Government of the day deemed to be an emergency situation. That resulted from the fact that 174 Sikhs landed on the coast of Nova Scotia. Because of this particular matter, and the queue jumping the Government deemed to be in vogue at that point in time, it required us to return to Parliament. However, we have dealt with that particular Bill, but there are linkages to this particular piece of legislation, Bill C-55.

In my view, the thrust of the Government's legislation points out a number of serious weaknesses, for instance, the pre-screening system, the safe third country concept, the refugee board, the appeal system, as well as the precedent that Canada has set for other countries encouraging them to consider similar action by turning a blind eye to the plight of refugees. The situation with regard to refugees ought to be clear to Canadians. We are a very fortunate country to have in our midst a large number of refugees from all over the world who have come to Canada and have become exemplary citizens for all Canadians to observe and, indeed, with whom to participate and interact.

With its obvious apparent weaknesses, this Bill ought not to pass Parliament. I wish to give credit to my colleague from Toronto who has led the charge in opposition to Bill C-55. He has set out very clearly and unequivocally the objections that he and other members of our Party have with regard to Bill C-55.

It is one issue when queue-jumping takes place and individuals jump ahead of the line who are not legitimate refugees. But the over-all Canadian policy which is now codified into law, particularly an appeal system which I and many lawyers and organizations in the community at large oppose for a variety of reasons, ought to be amended and amended very clearly in order that we can improve upon that system.

In summations, I am opposed to Bill C-55 for many of the reasons which have already been announced by my colleagues in the House. Upon reflection, I would hope that the Government would change this particular Bill in order to address the very serious errors and omissions which are tied into Bill C-55.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few remarks on third reading of Bill C-55. Perhaps it might be helpful if we put this debate in the context of some other things that are happening in the House of Commons. Yesterday, tomorrow, and for the days to come this week we will be debating the Meech Lake Accord. People will be talking about their vision of Canada. They will be asking questions about what is the role of Francophones within Quebec vis-à-vis Anglophones within Quebec. What is the role of aboriginal peoples in Canada? How do Francophones outside Quebec fit into the total structure of Canada? We will be doing a great deal of talking about the type of vision that we have of Canada as a nation.

While we are talking about our vision of Canada, the reality of Canada is being changed for the worst by the actions of the Government. I wish to give a couple of examples. There is the free trade sell-out of Canadian interests to the United States. There was last week's jackboot type legislation that undercut the whole tenor of collective bargaining in Canada when postal workers were forced back to work. Now we have Bill C-55 which is changing the reality of Canada in terms of our traditional openness to refugees from other countries.

I wish to emphasize the present reality. Since World War II Canada has received more than 400,000 refugees from other countries. Those people have made a signal contribution to the social, economic, and political life of Canada. In recognition of the work and attitude of Canadian people toward refugees, last year the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees presented the Canadian people with the Nansen Medal. This was a very signal honour for the Canadian people as a whole. The great majority of Canadian people support the admission of genuine refugees to Canada. They wish the abuses cleaned up, but they wish Canada to continue to receive people from other parts of the world who are in genuine need.

With Bill C-55 we are returning to some earlier attitudes. We are turning back the clock, because the present reality of openness was, of course, not always the reality in Canada. We do not need to go too far back in our history to find some pretty shocking and disgusting incidents of racism. There are situations where racism was not only an incident but was institutionalized in our laws. For example, the Oriental Exclusion Act provided that male workers from Asia could come to Canada to work, but they could not bring their families. This was a cruel type of legislation that helped to perpetuate many stereotypes about Asians. Some of those stereotypes still linger in the minds of some Canadians.

Because people from India were British subjects and hence eligible to come to Canada as immigrants, Canada took a very devious round-about way of excluding them. We passed an Order in Council which required that they come on a boat directly from India without stopping in a third country, when we knew very well that there were no direct passenger lines from India to Canada. It is the same kind of government subterfuge which we see in Bill C-55. The Order in Council eventually led to the Kamagata Maru incident when a boat was chartered to bring people directly from India to Vancouver, and Canadian racism erupted in a very ugly manner which eventually led to the death of a number of Sikhs.

I would like to give some examples of earlier racism. We know the sad story of the turning back of the St. Louis with Jewish refugees on board at the close of the 1930s. These people had no alternative, when Canada and other countries shut the door to them, but the Holocaust of Hitler's Europe.

We can look at the attitude exemplified by R. B. Bennett on June 7, 1928, when he was Leader of the Opposition and spoke about European immigrants in the House of Commons. He said:

> —These people—have made excellent settlers; they have kept the law; they have prospered and they are proud of Canada, but it cannot be that we must draw upon them to shape our civilization.

That kind of racism was widespread at that time. I presume that my grandparents, and perhaps even my parents, supported that kind of statement, a statement which nobody in the House would support today.

On May 1, 1947, Mackenzie King said the following in the House of Commons:

> I wish to state quite definitely that, apart from the repeal of the Chinese Immigration Act and the revocation of order in council—regarding naturalization, the government has no intention of removing the existing regulations respecting Asiatic immigration unless and until alternative measures of effective control have been worked out—

We reject that kind of open racism in Canada today, although at that time Mackenzie King was probably speaking for a fairly broad cross-section of Canadian people.

I could look at the example of my own church, the United Church of Canada. By the time the Right Reverend Hugh McLeod gave his address as Moderator in 1962, I think the United Church had far surpassed him in its openness and its attitude. However, we see in his statement some of the regrettable attitudes which continue to linger in Canada. He spoke of what he considered to be "the disproportionate influx of Roman Catholics by immigration", and said the following:

> Perhaps Roman Catholics have been the only eligible immigrants available in large numbers, and as people they are doubtless estimable and capable of greatly enriching our nation, but as members of a Church which everywhere favours the establishment of a monolithic infallible authority under Rome, they may herald and achieve the end of liberty as we have known it and as we deem it necessary for life. Some will say, "But it is different here", and to them I say, "How is it different here?"

Such statements today can only make members of the United Church embarrassed that that attitude was common within certain sectors of our church just 25 years ago. Of course, the Moderator of the United Church never spoke ex cathedra, but that is illustrative of a certain attitude.

There are people today who want to go back to that kind of attitude. On September 19, 1987 The Vancouver Sun quoted former B.C. Supreme Court Judge J. V. Clyne saying:

> I'd not want to see us cease to be a white country.

Canada never has been a white country, and I do not think it ever will be. J. V. Clyne is living in some kind of racist imagination of his own which has nothing to do with the present reality of Canada or with the kind of vision of a Canada that we want.

We have a new reality in Canada which is ashamed of the racism of the past and is open to genuine refugees. At the same time it recognizes that there has been a change in the place of origin of most refugees. After the Second World War most of them came from Europe. Around the end of the 1970s and into the early 1980s they came from southeast Asia. Today, most of the refugees who are trying to come to Canada come from Central America.

Perhaps another element of reality at which we need to look is the administrative backlog that has been built up. There has been a lack of staff. The Department of Employment and Immigration simply did not have enough people on staff to handle in a rapid and efficient manner people who came and applied for refugee status, so there were delays. As a result of the delays, people would remain in Canada for a longer period of time than what would have been expected to process their case. Because they could stay here for such a long period, they began to use the delays and to abuse the refugee policy. Of course Portuguese Jehovah's Witnesses making false claims of persecution is a predominant example of that. Jehovah's Witnesses themselves do not give any credence to the claims of persecution in Portugal.

There has been a number of studies of the administrative backlog and what needs to be done. The best known would be the study done by Rabbi Gunther Plaut. Standing committee recommendations called for a speedier process, but one which would continue to give people due process and would continue to give them the right to a hearing within Canada, the right to appeal, and so on.

Despite the recommendations of a number of committees, the Government refused to act, and the backlog continued to grow until today when it is estimated to be somewhere between 20,000 and 30,000 people who are backlogged, still waiting to find out their final refugee determination. Some of those people are genuine refugees; some of them are bogus refugees. However, the Government's refusal to act almost indicates that it wanted the crisis to develop.

I want to suggest that Bill C-55 is not aimed primarily at the backlog or at the causes of the backlog. Bill C-55 is aimed at the perceived threat of an influx of refugee claimants from Central America via the United States. It is not aimed at bogus refugees, although it will weed out some of them, but it is aimed at genuine refugees who will also have a much more difficult time getting into Canada.

In one year Guatemala had some 400 people applying to Canada for refugee status. Some 75 per cent of these people were recognized as refugees. In fact, the repressive conditions in Guatemala and El Salvador have produced hundreds of thousands of refugees. Many of them have gone to Mexico where they must exist in absolutely deplorable conditions in refugee camps. Others have entered the United States as illegal aliens. United States policy has made it almost impossible for those people to achieve refugee status.

In 1982, some 12,000 Salvadorans applied for asylum in the United States, and only 26 were accepted. Something like .2 per cent of refugee applicants were accepted as refugees coming from El Salvador.

Last year, the United States passed legislation which provided for fines of $10,000 for anyone employing or harbouring illegal refugees. When they are caught in the United States they are returned to their country of origin. If the country happens to be El Salvador or Guatemala, the refugee returnees are liable to torture, disappearance, or death.

• (1130)

Up until this year, if those people came to Canada they could be given special ministerial permits and relatively quick entry. Then new regulations were published last spring that slammed Canadian doors. It eliminated the list of countries, including El Salvador and Guatemala, to which we would not deport people. In January and February this year 2,300 Salvadorans and 600 Guatemalans came to Canada from the United States and together with about 1,000 Chileans who arrived by air they equalled two-thirds of the refugee claimants at that time.

Professor Reg Whitaker contrasts the difference between our shabby, mean-spirited treatment of Central American refugees with our fairly generous treatment of some 60,000 refugees from Southeast Asia in 1979-80.

Mr. Whitaker asks:

> What is the difference between the enthusiastic support for refugees in 1979-1980 and the closed door of 1987? Is it economic conditions in Canada? Hardly: unemployment is not worse now than then, and inflation is a good deal lower. Nor can it be racism, for Asians were the most discriminated-against group of immigrants to Canada.
> There is only one difference, but it speaks volumes about Canada's vaunted international generosity. The Vietnamese and Cambodians were fleeing Communist regimes recently installed following military victories over U.S. fire power. The Latin Americans are fleeing anti-Communist regimes sponsored by the U.S. Oppression is defined in terms of where the oppressors stand in relation to the Cold War—and woe to any refugees who find themselves on the wrong side of that divide.

If the motivation for Bill C-55 and the restrictive regulations published last spring are not racism, the Government at least is using racism as a tool to push this legislation through. We saw the phony crisis that erupted this spring over the boat people when 174 Sikhs waded ashore in Nova Scotia. Canadians should be asking which is worse, genuine racism or using racism as a tool? I suggest that this Government has been using racism as a tool to pass repressive legislation.

An Hon. Member: False.

Mr. Manly: There was a backlog, which the Government allowed to develop of some 20,000 to 30,000 people in the system and then suddenly when 174 people who happen to be Sikhs came ashore in Nova Scotia the Government discovered that it had a crisis. There were all kinds of inflammatory statements made by Members on that side of the House and members of the press who whipped up the situation.

Mr. Malone: False.

Mr. Manly: The Government called the House of Commons back into session to deal with what was perceived as a crisis. Bill C-84 was introduced. The Government attempted to get Bill C-55 passed in that mood of crisis although the Government had known of the backlog of some 20,000 to 30,000 people for a number of years. It is despicable the way the Government has handled the whole business of using 174 Sikhs to whip anti-refugee sentiment in Canada in order to get this Bill passed.

When the Government introduced it, every knowledgeable group—churches, bar associations and refugee assistance organizations—opposed it and detailed the problems with it. Instead of having a reasoned debate and attempting to make reasoned and reasonable amendments, the Government has attempted to push the Bill through.

Bill C-55 is not the answer to the backlog problem. It hits out at the wrong people. The legislative committees on Bill C-55 and on Bill C-84 were forced to meet while one was being debated in the House. That put a tremendous amount of pressure upon the critics, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) for our Party and the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) for the Liberal Party. It was unfair to the critics and unfair to the witnesses who appeared before the committee who were trying to make their case. The Government attempted to force the legislation through with a hothouse atmosphere. Of course, it did not work.

Major concerns remain even after the Government introduced some minor amendments. These major concerns remain. As Ms. Kutz-Harder from the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees pointed out to the legislative committee:

> A few minor amendments cannot rectify the fundamental flaws of the current Bill C-55.
> We have reviewed the attempts by several groups to propose amendments which try to make sense of Bill C-55 and make it workable and just. However, clause by clause amendments cannot correct the fundamental flaws of the Bill.
> We ask the Government to begin again in the face of a more just and more viable alternative. The most responsible action which this legislative committee could take would be to make the recommendation that the Government reconsider and replace this Bill with legislation consistent with the widely supported alternative procedure, which would better protect genuine refugees and certainly deter abuse.

In its present form, Bill C-55 still gives immigration officials the power to screen out refugee applicants before they get a chance to make their case to the refugee division. It still denies them the right to a proper appeal process.

I would like to close by giving the last word to Victor Velasquez, Vice-President of the Canadian Hispanic Congress who said:

> We are convinced that the Bill worsens the situation of genuine refugees and makes protection for them almost inaccessible and practically illusory. We are facing an abuse psychosis and we are forgetting the universal values that we should maintain as human beings in dealing with other human beings who are fleeing from repression and death.

That is the reality of refugees in our world. Bill C-55 neglects that reality. It is trying to change the reality of Canada as being a relatively open decent society into being one of a closed door with a closed mentality.

I urge the Government to consider again whether it wants to enforce this kind of repressive reality upon Canada in 1987.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the remarks of the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) and, in particular, his remarks about what has been called the Sikh boat load and his suggestion that the Government used the occasion of that to promote racism as fuel for this legislation to pass. I would like to ask the Member to comment on another aspect of that same situation.

Throughout the year we have had growing suggestions associating refugee claimants with terrorism. There were a number of unfounded accusations. For example, Maclean's published that 33 of those people had criminal records. When the former chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), went on the air the day Bill C-84 was tabled, he made the astonishing statement that the Bill is not about refugees but security. He suggested that refugees are security risks or may well be.

In light of the fact that the RCMP then testified to our committee that in relation to the 11,000 people which the RCMP had to examine last year and up to August this year. having no regular visas, there was no evidence of a threat to Canada and that included the Tamil and the Sihks boats, would the Hon. Member comment on how he finds the public perception of the Government's words in cases like that relating terrorism to refugee claimants? Has this done any damage to the public acceptance of refugees?

Mr. Manly: Of course it has, Mr. Speaker. We need only to recall that the first person of the 174 from the boat load dealt with by the authorities before being released to the general public was the person with the highest profile and about whom the most questions were asked as to whether or not the individual might have some unsavory and possible terrorist connections. The Government zeroed in on the person with the highest profile first to get the maximum kind of—

• (1140)

Mr. Malone: You're imputing motives.

Mr. Manly: Yes, I am imputing motives. I think the motives of this Government are reprehensible and the Canadian people will judge it on those motives.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I think that Canadians want a fair and reasonable system for dealing with refugees. I think Canadians want a system that is consistent with our international obligations and the Charter of Rights. Unfortunately, the Bill C-55 before us today, is not that kind of legislation.

Yes, we do have a problem with bogus refugees. We are very well aware of that problem. That problem has arisen because the system has broken down under the weight of paper, memos and files going back and forth. It is a lousy system and people who work in the system know it is a lousy system.

Many recommendations have been made to improve the system. Since it has broken down it has provided people an opportunity to take advantage of it, and there have been bogus refugee claims. The bogus claimants have felt safe to remain in Canada for a very long period of time under the current inefficient system while waiting for the processing of their bogus claims.

I share the concerns of my constituents and the concerns of many Canadians who feel that radical change is needed. Nonetheless, I cannot support this Bill because it will not attack that problem. What it will attack is genuine refugees. I think we will have on our consciences, if this Bill passes, that some genuine refugees will be turned away and returned to countries which are not safe. They will then be sent back to their own countries which they fled in the first place. We have to keep in mind that this inhumane Bill means that some people will die and some people will be tortured.

In my riding, there are a large number of immigrants. Many people are trying to get relatives into Canada legitimately, using the proper channels, and it is very frustrating for them to see other people make bogus refugee claims. That is a perfectly proper concern. We would like to see improvements made in the processing of immigrants and certainly in the processing of family reunification cases. That would be fair and highly desirable, but having an unfair process for refugees does not help immigrants either. It simply creates bad feelings.

I am pleased to see in my own riding that refugees are a matter of concern. A number of local churches have supported refugees. There are local committees on refugees and local agencies, and churches have sponsored particular families. The Woodgreen Community Centre Red Door program and St. John's Presbyterian Church have sponsored refugee families. My own church, St. Barnabas, has recently sponsored a refugee family which is integrating very well, considering their situation of confusion and desperation until they can get their long-term problems sorted out. In the meantime they are being treated well as refugees and their needs are being looked after. The Judgment Centre for Social Faith and Responsibility deals with the refugee question and indeed has come up with a number of proposals for better ways to change our laws.

I would like a take a few moments to look at what happened to get us in the mess we are in and why we need to have a better system. Canada's present law, the 1976 Immigration Act, provides for a system for the examination of claimants and decisions by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee. It is a very cumbersome process. It has broken down because the number of claimants increases faster than the number of staff members needed to deal with the cases, so a great backlog has developed. Once the backlog developed, people knew it would be a couple of years before their claims would be processed and they began to take advantage of that.

There are fraudulent immigration consultants offering services and charging very high fees to people wanting to make use of their services to get into Canada in the hope that they will be able to get themselves settled while they are moving slowly through this very cumbersome procedure. The case of the fraudulent Jehovah's Witnesses from Portugal certainly shocked people. Yet when this happened, did the Government do anything about it? It waited for months before it even acted. The Government delayed imposing a visa requirement for 14 months after the scam was discovered, and 3,500 bogus claimants apparently managed to make their way in.

The Government has only itself to blame for this great pile-up of bogus refugees. It has not acted promptly. The law does need revision. The Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration tabled a report in 1985, as a result of a study. This report proposes a swift, fair system of refugee status determination. The report proposes that a refugee claimant be sent directly to a refugee board without immigration procedures first. The refugee board would consist of people who would be trained to recognize legitimate refugee claims and a decision would then be made by them.

The Government was required to reply to the report four months after it was submitted, but it has never replied comprehensively to the report. Instead of dealing with these quite reasonable recommendations, it brought in its own Bill C-55. This Bill, if it is passed, would send a refugee claimant first to an immigration inquiry to determine whether or not there is any reason not to remove him or her. The immigration adjudicator, a member of the refugee division at this inquiry, examines only for the criteria of eligibility and credibility. This means that he does not judge the merits of the refugee's case itself, but only whether the claimant could have been safe in another country through which he passed and whether he could be removed to that other country.

What is wrong with this, of course, is that there is no guarantee, if the person is deported to the safe country from which he came, that he will be able to stay in that country. Of course, the prime example of this is Latin American refugees who go first to the United States. The United States is deporting refugees to countries where there are reprisals, torture and the disappearance of persons. While the United States will not harm these people directly, it will deport them to a place that will. Canada would then be doing indirectly, by deporting to the United States, what in good conscience we could not do and what would be so clearly and flagrantly contrary to our international obligations as a member of the United Nations. We could not deport people directly to a country where they are being persecuted but some of those people will, by being deported, indirectly end up back in those countries.

The New Democrats very strenuously oppose Bill C-55. It does have a few good points which have been remarked upon by other speakers. But I want to focus my remarks on what is very wrong with this Bill and how it goes completely against the obligations we have undertaken under the United Nations Convention that requires that everyone be accorded the right to make a refugee claim.

The United Nations Charter of Human Rights says that every persecuted person has the right to seek the protection of another Government. The Supreme Court of Canada decision in the Singh case in April of 1985 said that on the basis of the Charter everyone physically in Canada who makes a refugee claim has the right to be heard in person by the body that will decide the merits of the case. This Bill would certainly go against the rationale of that decision. The Charter of Rights also guarantees the right of access to counsel and there is a right of appeal implicit in Canadian law which may be defended on Charter grounds.

• (1150)

Bill C-55 provides the right to appeal on only the most narrow and technical grounds, and limits the right to counsel. Counsel may not be legal counsel or counsel of the person's choice; counsel may be appointed, which would certainly not fulfill the requirements of the Charter of Rights.

Many Canadians have raised objections to Bill C-55. The Catholic Bishops have very strongly asserted their opposition to the injustice of this Bill. They say:

[Translation]

> The Bill presented to Canadians fails to abide by any of the principles we have always supported. It is also regressive as far as our international responsibilities are concerned. Furthermore, it is unfair to refugees and to other countries of first asylum that are already overburdened.

[English]

The Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops called instead for legislation which would give all claimants access to a full, fair, and independent hearing with a meaningful appeal procedure which would deal with the substance, something which Bill C-55 does not do. The Conference notes that this is a departure from our international obligations and how unfair it is to send refugees back to the country from which they came directly to Canada because these countries themselves are often very overburdened with refugees. Canada is exporting a problem which we are certainly able to handle as a relatively well off and well organized country.

According to the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops there is a false premise that Bill C-55 will protect genuine refugees. It will not do that. They say that the preliminary hearing is no more than an elaborate mechanical screening. They note that the abuses which are alleged and are the pretext for Bill C-55 are entirely the result of delays in reforming the present system. The answer, therefore, is to reform the present system.

Finally, they state that they will resist with unflagging determination the concept that this compromise is just for refugees. Refugees are among the most powerless people in today's world. We all know that to be the case. They are exploited, oppressed and fearful. When they arrive they have to make decisions and have decisions made on their behalf at a time of acute stress for them.

Rabbi Gunther Plaut is very well known for his work on refugees. He is a Canadian, having come here as a refugee. He has called for humane refugee procedures which will respect our international obligations. In Heart of the Stranger, a report on refugees, he stated:

> We have a Bill that was constructed by the Commission of Employment and Immigration and is brought forward as the will of the people . . . . This Bill has the wrong focus. It is not a Bill to determine refugee status primarily: it is a Bill on how to deport people primarily . . . . It is filled with constitutional problems. The process it proposes is not shorter but longer.

Unfortunately, all of that is true. All of these criticisms are perfectly correct and are shared by many Canadians; experts, voluntary groups, church groups, and many others who are concerned that Canada live up to its obligations.

The Jesuit Centre for Social Faith and Justice, which is based in my own riding but which, of course, has a mandate much beyond that, has come forward with many recommendations on how to deal with the situation and supports the previous Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration approach which was a much more humane and probably more efficient approach.

The first step that they propose is that the claimant be examined by an immigration officer and referred for inquiry. Second, there would be a hearing before a two-person board which would be held within two weeks and the decision would be immediate. This would cut through the problem of cases piling up for two or three years which makes it possible for bogus refugees to take advantage of the system. Third, if the person is refused he or she could apply for a review to a centralized review board. Again, a decision would be anticipated within weeks. Therefore, an appeal would be allowed but it would be a speedy procedure. Fourth, if the person's appeal was refused, the person could appeal on legal grounds to the Federal Court. There are only four steps. Everyone would get a hearing and it need not take a very long time.

The Jesuit Centre for Social Faith and Justice notes all of the problems associated with the lack of access to counsel. They note the problem, with which anyone who has worked with refugees is familiar, that the person needs a bit of time to find out what is happening. Genuine refugees are scared and upset when they arrive. They may be ill. They have all kinds of problems. In order to make such fundamental decisions they need time to talk to people, to establish trust, and to know whether the advice they are getting is reasonable.

These people have been abused by the authorities of their own countries. They need time to figure out what authority figures can be trusted and where they can get fair advice. The procedure proposed in this legislation does not allow for that. They would be put through the procedure without counsel of their own choice. They would have to make a claim instantly and would have to make decisions before they are properly prepared to do so.

If the credible basis test fails a person can be deported back to the country for which they feel persecution without a full hearing. What is the credible basis and how accurate are the Government's criteria? We know that the Government can make mistakes in these matters. We know that for a number of months Chile was not considered to be an unsafe country. Instead of looking at the person's actual situation there is an objective list. The list can be out of date and the person's circumstances may be different from those of other people. There is no provisions in Bill C-55 for examining the actual circumstances of an individual.

We need a crackdown on abuse. We want a better and more efficient system which works speedily, but it must have proper procedures for control as well. It must have proper appeal procedures, opportunity for counsel, et cetera.

I would like to say a little about the Government's approach to this issue. I am very concerned about the approach contained in Bills C-84 and C-55. This is Draconian and very cynical legislation. It foments bad feelings. At a time when we have unemployment and other difficulties the Government is taking a get-tough approach. With bogus refugees, ambiguous situations, and growing numbers of refugees the Government wants to get tough.

Only very recently Canada became humane in its refugee determination process. We have a sorry history in this regard. We have turned away Jews and Sihks who were persecuted when they returned to their countries. Frankly, we had a racist immigration policy until very recently which, of course, also affected the refugee process. However, Canada finally did sign and ratify the United Nations Convention on Refugees and has done some very good work on refugees. We accepted a large number of people from Southeast Asia and dealt with them in a very humane way.

In the meantime Canada has changed. With Bills C-55 and C-84 we are taking a big step backwards. Instead of building on Canada's recent steps toward being humane, generous, reasonable, and exercising our international obligations, we are going backwards. This is unfortunate.

• (1200)

I call on the Government to live up to its commitments, to show leadership, and not be cynical. I call on it to reconsider and replace Bill C-55 with legislation that would be humane and just, in accord with our principles in the Charter and with the United Nations Convention.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I cannot really say that I am glad to take part in this debate because this legislation is so poor that one would rather not see it before the House. However, I will share a few of my thoughts about the Bill.

In August the Government called Parliament back for an emergency session in order to deal with refugees. We are still here many weeks later dealing with legislation that I believe is politically motivated.

While we are dealing with two pieces of legislation concerning refugees, Bill C-55, which concerns the over-all refugee system, and Bill C-86 which deals more specifically dealing with people arriving here by boat with seeming impunity, we are essentially with one issue. That issue is the fairness of our immigration and refugee systems. The events which have occurred in the last while have caused Canadians to put in doubt our refugee and immigration systems. Many Canadians have the impression that the system is open to abuse because many have spent years trying to gain access to this country for their relatives only to be frustrated in the majority of cases, and suddenly they see refugees getting on a boat and being able to come to Canada where the doors are open to them. People have felt that this is unfair and have demanded that the Government take the appropriate action.

The Government studied the situation and decided that this was a political opportunity to show Canadians that it was responding to their sentiments. Therefore, it drafted some very tough legislation and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that he would call back Parliament for an emergency sitting to deal with queue-jumping and the fact that so-called refugees were getting through an open door while the relatives of other Canadians could not get into Canada. According to parliamentary reform, the House is not supposed to sit during July and August. Yet, the Prime Minister disregarded this and announced that he was calling an emergency session of Parliament so that he could appear to be taking action and showing strong leadership.

It is interesting to note that the Government called back Parliament last summer as well, in a similar situation, choosing to serve its own political interests rather than respect parliamentary reform and follow the parliamentary calendar upon which we all agreed. Of course, the Government is taking every political opportunity it can, because it is so low in the polls it is afraid it will never regain its standing.

Mr. Nickerson: We are rapidly gaining.

Mr. Keeper: I hear a faint echo that the Conservatives are rapidly gaining. It depends whose poll one reads.

It took the Prime Minister 10 days after his announcement to call the emergency session of Parliament. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) explained that the Prime Minister did not have time to write the appropriate letter. However, one would assume that an emergency session of Parliament is meant to deal with an emergency situation.

While the Prime Minister eventually found the time to write the letter in order to call back Parliament, summer has long since passed and the leaves are turning colour. It will not be long until we feel the cold winds of winter, yet we are still in an emergency session, presumably to deal with the emergency.

The fact is that we have dealt with many other pieces of legislation since we have returned. Furthermore, Question Period has functioned in the normal fashion, during which we have dealt with the issues that appear on the front page of The Globe and Mail. In other words, we have been proceeding with the normal day-to-day work of the House of Commons.

Mr. Heap: Was Meech Lake an emergency?

Mr. Keeper: My colleagues asks whether the Meech Lake Accord is an emergency. We dealt with that question yesterday and will be dealing with it in the days to come. Obviously that question must be dealt with, but surely it is not an emergency and not the reason that the Prime Minister called back the House of Commons.

When one considers the delay in calling back the House of Commons and the fact that the Government introduced other business that takes place in a normal session of Parliament, one must question whether the Government really called back Parliament in order to deal with an emergency. Rather, it raises the possibility that the Government was trying to take advantage of a political opportunity as a result of the hysteria and fear developing among Canadians because of the arrival of refugees to this country in boats operated by private contractors.

Clearly, the way this question has been handled in Parliament indicates that the only emergency was for the Government to take advantage of a political opportunity. I question whether the Government is dealing with an emergency when we are here going about the normal work of Parliament on a day-to-day basis.

Let me deal more specifically with Bill C-55.

Mr. Friesen: It is about time.

Mr. Keeper: My colleague wants to hear about Bill C-55. I will certainly give him my analysis and hope that he will meet the challenge and speak to the Bill himself in order to explain his point of view.

• (1210)

Our Party believes that where the refugee system is being abused there is a need for change, but there are ways of changing the system that are fair. There is a need to take action with regard to the refugee determination system. Certainly the backlog which exists in the refugee determination system indicates that the system is not up to par and must be reformed. We support change in this area.

However, once again, rather than reforming the substance of the refugee determination system, rather than changing the system to bring about better results, it appears that the Government is grasping at straws, seeking to grab a political opportunity. The Government came in with heavy-handed legislation, with a sledge-hammer, and really sought to give the impression to Canadians that it is going to be tough on the abusers of the system. There is nothing wrong with being firm, in playing the tough guy role, but if one goes too far and puts at risk the possibility of genuine refugees coming into this country, people who are seeking a safe haven, then the Government itself begins to abuse the refugee determination system by using it for political purposes.

In effect, what the Government has done is said to the Canadian people, "We are going to be tough on abusers". In order to sustain that impression it has brought in legislation so sweeping in its implications that it has put in doubt the opportunity of people who are not abusers, but who are in genuine need of protection, of coming into this country. This is an important point.

Canadians are a generous and compassionate people. For years they have had a reputation of being open to people from other parts of the world when there was a need. Canada is a nation of immigrants, for the most part. Canadians want to help other people who are in danger when it is possible. They want to help people whose lives are at risk. Obviously, they do not want someone coming along and telling a big story just to get into the country, someone who could not normally get into this country. That is not what we are talking about. We are talking about people who are in genuine danger, who are living in some of the countries in Latin America where their lives are at risk because of civil war, those who have decided they are no longer willing to put up with dictatorial regimes and have struggled to overthrow those regimes and, in the process of doing that, have put their lives at risk. These people must seek refuge elsewhere, a safe haven, and Canadians have provided that safe haven. We do not want the system to be abused. We want to be able to continue to offer a safe haven to people who need it.

This legislation allows the Government to play the tough guy. We do not mind if it wants to play the tough guy as long as it does not carry it so far that it actually begins to hurt people. The problem is that the Government has carried it too far. This legislation has a number of key faults, one of which is that people will not be accepted as refugees if they come here from a country that is considered to be a safe country. For example, there are people from a Central American country who are temporarily in the United States and want to come to Canada because the United States will not give them haven because of the attitude of its president, Ronald Reagan. This provision puts the safety of these people in doubt.

Mr. Friesen: Are you sure about that? Ask your neighbour if you are accurate.

Mr. Keeper: I hear the heckling and I appreciate the effort to engage in debate. I would urge the Hon. Member to rise at the end of my comments and enter a full speech on the record—give us his wisdom. We will certainly listen. We are prepared to hear him out because we want the full light of debate to be put on this legislation.

What I am saying is that it is likely that a Canadian Government in establishing what are safe countries would consider the United States to be a safe country. It would certainly be surprising if a Canadian Government in its refugee legislation was to say that the United States was not a safe country. I think that would shock most ordinary Canadians. It might even have a diplomatic repercussion for Canada. Who knows, Ronald Reagan might even tear up the free trade deal and go off in a huff someplace, which would not be a bad thing.

It is likely that the United States would be considered a safe country, yet we know that for people coming from Central American countries, where the United States is involved in its civil conflict, the doors are not open. The American administration really does not consider those people to be refugees.

Yet they are refugees in the international sense of the word, in the sense that their lives are in danger through political conflict in their own countries.

These people are in need of safe haven. They should be able to have an adequate hearing in this country, and if their case is genuine we can open our doors to them. This law is flawed and this is one of the specific ways in which it is flawed. Another flaw is that there is no assurance in this legislation that someone will in fact receive a hearing, that they will be able to tell their story, make their case and indicate the reasons why Canada should accept them as political refugees. There is no assurance that they will have such a hearing. In fact, this legislation has a provision under which many people would be screened out before they could even get to Canada to receive a proper hearing. This legislation is seriously flawed.

It is important to realize that Canadians not only are generous and compassionate when it comes to people needing refuge, we have an international reputation as being a fair and just country. This reputation has been muddied by the international critiques of this legislation. Agencies of the United Nations have said, "Hold it, Canada. This legislation looks like it is going to do harm to genuine refugees. It looks like it is unfair". When an international body such as the United Nations says to take another look at our legislation, the Government ought to do so.

• (1220)

In closing, I wish to say that we were recalled for an emergency session in order to deal with refugees and queue jumping. While we wish the abuses of the system to be eliminated, at the same time we wish Canada to maintain its tradition as a compassionate country that has an open door to people who are in genuine danger and who need a safe haven. This legislation fails to meet those criteria, or meet that test. This legislation gives us a black eye internationally. This legislation has not been brought in to reform the refugee system. The only conclusion I can come to is that it was brought in to bolster the political agenda of the Government, for it to take advantage of a political opportunity to play the tough-guy role on the national stage in order to bolster its Gallop and Angus Reid ratings.

Mr. Hockin: Speak to the Bill.

Mr. Keeper: An Hon. Member has stated "speak to the Bill". I invite the Hon. Member and his Conservative colleagues who are heckling me to rise in the House and speak to the Bill. We will listen to what they have to say. Let them rise and add to the discussions and debate on this Bill. These are important matters, and we have raised crucial questions on the fundamental fairness of this legislation, as have international bodies such as the United Nations. I challenge Conservative Members to rise in the House and refute what we have said. If they cannot refute it, withdraw the legislation.

Mr. Heap: The Hon. Member has referred to the public excitement and anger surrounding the arrival of the boat load of Sikhs in the summer. I am wondering if the Hon. Member can tell us the responses of the people in his own constituency, or in the parts of Winnipeg that he knows, both immediately in the first few days following that incident and since then. The reason I ask is that my own experience was that constituents in Spadina were not nearly as upset at the outset as we have been told in general, and furthermore when they had a chance to learn more about the facts of the case they were even less upset by the arrival of the boat load, but became more upset by the legislation.

I received plenty of phone calls, but they were mostly from people in constituencies represented by Conservative Members of Parliament. Certainly in some cases it was quite evident that they had been put up to it by their Conservative Member who claimed, quite falsely, that the NDP and the Liberals had blocked Bill C-55 in the spring. Of course that is ridiculous since we have only a quarter of the votes we could not do that. The Government had not even tried to have more than three hours of debate on the Bill.

I found that there was not nearly the spontaneous anger at the Sikh boat load, at least in my part of Toronto, that some people had claimed there was all over the country. I would be interested to know what the Hon. Member can tell us of the opinions, both during the summer and at this time, of the people in his riding; church people, non-church people, people with knowledge of those matters, or people who receive their information from the front page of the paper or from television.

Mr. Keeper: I thank my colleague for his question. Clearly this legislation and the events that led up to it require sober reflection. Early in the summer many headlines and television newscasts focused upon the boat people, and the people who were coming into the country. I must say that that type of coverage caused concern, certainly in the short term. I think that the Government saw that. Of course, there was much more hullabaloo and excitement in the press than at the grass roots level. That is not to say that there were not individuals who were generally concerned. A lot of people who were concerned were immigrant people who felt that, after struggling themselves to get their relatives into Canada, it was not fair that someone should be able to come in the back door without getting into line.

I found that as I talked to people and as they became aware of the contents of the legislation, they agreed that the legislation should not be so Draconian that it closes out or puts at genuine risk the possibility of real refugees coming into the country. People wished the abuses dealt with, but they certainly did not want the Draconian type of legislation that the Government has brought in.

The people have also begun to see through the smokescreen of the Government that, while it has been seeking to focus their attention upon refugee abusers, it has done nothing on the central concern of the people in my riding which is family reunification. The Government has done nothing to make it easier for people to bring their relatives to this country. That is where their genuine need lies, and what they wish to see the Government act upon. Even during the hottest moments of the discussion their concern was on family reunification because they were looking at it from a fairness point of view.

There are many people in my riding who follow refugee, immigration and justice matters on a regular basis, particularly people who are involved in the churches. They were shocked and outraged by the legislation. They were disgusted. I do not know the correct word to use to describe how they felt about this legislation. Clearly they were saying that the Government has gone too far. It has gone beyond what is acceptable to Canadians. It is fine for the Government to play politics, but when it goes as far as to bring in the type of legislation that we have in the House today, legislation which will make it doubtful that even genuine refugees can gain access to Canada, then they say that the Government has gone too far, it should back off, and reconsider what is being done.

Mr. Hovdebo: I wish to follow up on that particular train of thought. I found that a great number of people were concerned about queue-jumping. Perhaps the Hon. Member can shed some light on this. My understanding is that the queue for refugee claimants is quite a different queue than the one for regular immigrants, family reunification, business, or commercial entrants. Therefore, even the refugees coming in on the boats were not actually displacing any person in a particular queue. I wonder if the Hon. Member would comment on that.

Mr. Keeper: My colleague has raised an excellent point. It brings some facts to this discussion. The reality and the fact is that no one's place in the line to bring in a relative for family reunification was disturbed by the entry of refugees into this country. In fact, if I understand correctly the comments of my colleague, who is a critic in this area and whom I have heard speak on previous occasions, the line for refugees was not full. In other words, there was still room under the allocations. I would think the same thing would apply under family reunification.

The point is that there are two different lines, two different movie houses. Those people who were coming in as refugees did not in any way retard the entry of anyone's relative. That is not to deny the point that Canadians, particularly Canadians of immigrant origin attempting to get their family members into this country, are not having a hard time. It is like dealing with a brick wall.

• (1230)

The Government has made as much a mess of its family reunification program as it has of the refugee determination process. While it is playing politics on the backs of refugees and putting at risk genuine refugees, when it comes to family reunification the Government is being hard-nosed and is not demonstrating any generosity of spirit.

Most Canadians would agree that preference should be given to the family or relatives wanting to join immigrants living in Canada.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Government brought the House back several months ago—it seems almost like a year ago but it cannot be that long—to deal with a refugee crisis. It claimed that the crisis would be dealt with on an emergency basis by Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act. Today we are talking about Bill C-55, which is also an Act to amend the Immigration Act.

The two Bills were supposed to deal with the so-called emergency. Bill C-84 was supposed to keep people offshore who wanted to get into Canada. It was supposed to keep the door locked. Bill C-55 was supposed to deal with immigrants who managed to land in Canada. The intent of the Bill was to deal with immigrants, refugees, or whoever got into Canada, and to establish ways in which to send such people back.

As I say, we have two pieces of legislation. One is intended to keep them offshore and the other is intended to send them back if they get into Canada. That seems to be the main intent of the two Bills.

We should be looking at what Canadians expect from this kind of legislation or from any Government that is dealing with people. That is what we are dealing with here. We are not dealing with something nebulous which came in from Mars or from anywhere else. We are dealing with people who inhabit and share the planet Earth with us. They expect compassion and knowledge of the situation from any Government dealing with people. They expect the Government to have a listening ear in terms of their concerns, complaints, and the conditions under which they survived and which sent them to us. They also expect such a Government to make judgment on the basis of what it hears with a certain amount of compassion.

Canadians would also expect a very logical approach in legislation which recognizes and understands the problem being solved or supposedly solved by the proposed legislation. They would expect sensibility or a lot of common sense in dealing with these situations and with people in such a way that it arrives at a logical answer to most questions.

Last, and perhaps most important, they expect a certain amount of sensitivity to the needs of the people who are trying to get into Canada. In many cases they have been forced out of their homelands or have found themselves to be in danger. It should also have sensitivity to the fact that if they are arriving at our shores they may not have the kind of documentation or the kind of attitude which we would think is particularly good.

If any of us found ourselves to be in a position where we had to impress someone so that we could remain in Canada, we would be under such pressure that we might say and do things that would not help us along. We would not be ready for the kind of pressure put upon us and, consequently, the pressure would expand and have a real effect on us.

The Bills, the Government, and the bureaucrats should be sensitive to these facts. However, neither Bill C-84 nor Bill C-55 take into consideration any of the things we would expect in legislation dealing with people. It is not legislation which deals with money or property; it is legislation which deals with people, fellow inhabitants of this planet. We do not find compassion, logical approaches to the problems, common sense or sensible solutions, or sensitivity to the needs of people in these Bills.

Although Bill C-55 may have some very good points in terms of dealing with the problems which all of us recognize, it does not fulfill the expectations of people in terms of dealing with immigrants and refugees.

For years Canada has had a policy of welcoming immigrants and refugees according to processes established by law. These procedures were intended to limit abuse of the laws so that there would be no interference with the proper acceptance of immigrants and refugees. We in the New Democratic Party—and particularly our critic who has spent much time on it—know that the system broke down because too many people were coming into Canada. We also know that there was a need to change it and that it broke down because there were changes in the world structure. Refugees were being produced around the world at a much greater rate than we had ever seen before. Also, refugees who had been going to other parts of the world, such as Europe and Third World countries to a great extent, were not being accepted any longer. As well, because of economic situations and starvation in other parts of the world refugees were being created faster than other parts of the world could accept them.

It is interesting to look at the kind of situation which creates refugees or at the number of refugees which are being created every day. In the eyes of the Government, and in the eyes of many people, 174 people landing off the shores of Nova Scotia constituted a crisis about which something had to be done. It resulted in Bill C-84, and Bill C-55 which had been introduced earlier.

I think it is important to put before the House and before the people of Canada the fact that every day for 365 days per year for the last 30 years an average of 700 people have become refugees. These figures are important to know. For instance, today in Central America there are one and a half million refugees. There are two million Palestinian refugees in the Middle East, and some of those refugees from Israel, the Gaza Strip or Jordan are second and third generation. Three million Afghans have fled to Pakistan and Iran since the Russians invaded Afghanistan in 1979. Some two million people were displaced in Vietnam, Kampuchea and Laos over the last 10 years. In 1980 to 1985 some 400,000 people were forced to flee from Uganda. Millions of Africans have been displaced by war, internal oppression, famine and ecological disasters, such as the advance of the Sahel.

All of these are ways in which people become refugees and we think here in Canada—one of the richest countries in the world if not the richest—that when 174 refugees land off the coast of Nova Scotia that constitutes a crisis which requires Draconian legislation to ensure that it does not happen again. Compare the 174 refugees in Canada to the 400,000 who have been forced into refugee status by the famine in Africa.

Where are these millions of refugees going about whom I have spoken? Some of them are coming here but most are going to Third World countries. The average income of the inhabitants of those Third World countries is about $700 a year. I think that should give us a pretty good idea of what kind of a crisis there is with immigration and refugees in Canada. The basis of the Government's reaction to it should be looked at very closely. Can it be considered anywhere near a crisis? Obviously not.

If you were living in Malaysia over the last 10 years, Mr. Speaker, you would have expected 20 times as many boat people to land on those shores or on the shores of Hong Kong, if they could get that far, or on any islands surrounding that area. Every day in the summer 20 times as many as the 174 who landed in Nova Scotia land in Malaysia. If we have a crisis, then their crisis must be devastating.

Our Government decided, however, that there was a crisis and we would have to shut the doors as quickly as possible. As far as I know, no Canadian, outside of this Parliament possibly, has ever suggested that we leave the doors absolutely open to refugees and immigrants. Canadians have suggested some kind of control. That control has been set up and it has worked fairly well.

I know the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) talked about the slowness of family reunification which has been a problem. But still that aspect of immigration has moved along. A certain number have been allowed each year, but the process is slow and needs to be improved.

No one is suggesting that we shut the doors entirely. We are suggesting that we look at the existing structure, what is the Immigration Act, what is being supposedly amended and improved by Bills C-55 and C-84. We should find out whether they actually do what is intended to be done. We find that even as certain objectives and recognition of responsibility are stated as far as Canada is concerned, those two Bills, Bill C-55 in particular, do not do what those objectives say they should.

I think I should spend a little of my time looking at the real faults, recognizing that the Government tried, and we appreciate that, to improve Bill C-55. Unfortunately, the concerns that we, the church groups and immigration groups had back in May when the Bill was before the House still remain. The Government has not dealt with them. The Government used the 174 refugees arriving off the shores of Nova Scotia as a reason to bring Bill C-55 into the emergency session practically unchanged. The Government did not deal with the concerns expressed by churches, refugee groups, lawyers and people helping refugees.

Mr. Friesen: That is not accurate.

Mr. Hovdebo: The Government did not change the Bill enough to alleviate those concerns. The shortcomings are still in the Bill. I suppose we could go over many of the faults in the Bill. First, the one that concerned most people last spring was the denial of the right to be heard. That position was not dealt with in Bill C-55. Nor is it in the changes to the Bill. I know that during 44.5 hours of testimony most people addressed the issue of the right to be heard, but did they not change the position of the Government. Consequently, the situation was not changed.

The UN covenant and protocol relating to the status of refugees signed by Canada in 1967 in Article 33 states that no country shall expel or return a refugee in any manner whatsoever to the frontiers of territories when his life or freedom would be threatened on account of his race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular group or social opinion. The recognized logic of this is that Canada has solemnly agreed that no one who is inside our borders who claims to be a refugee will be shipped out unless and until Canada has decided that the person's claim is unfounded.

We are now setting up a situation which makes it impossible for many people who would claim refugee status in Canada to be heard by the Canadian people. These two Bills will send them away as they come offshore or as they enter the country, even if they have not had an opportunity to be heard. In doing so, we are in contravention of the Convention because this violates Article 33.

Those are the kinds of things which have made me, other members of my Party and members of the public decide that this Bill should be withdrawn to allow us the opportunity to make the kind of changes that will make the system compassionate and humane.

Mr. Keeper: I have just answered some correspondence from residents of my riding and I have a letter here from a Mr. David Bergen of Langside Street in Winnipeg. He takes aim at the Government on a number of issues and says:

—the issue which is uppermost in my mind right now . . . is the Government's anti-refugee and anti-immigration attitude. I feel that the Tories are using the recent arrival of Sikh boat people to stir up racial prejudice and to provide a pretext for closing the door to thousands of legitimate refugees whom Canada is duty bound to accept under the United Nations accord. I fear that Bill C-55 (or the new version of it that the Government seems in such a hurry to get passed) will result in the exclusion of large numbers of people fleeing persecution, especially those refugees fleeing from El Salvador and Guatemala. Most of these refugees have no choice but to pass through the U.S. on their way to Canada, but under the new legislation they would be deported because the U.S. is a "safe country"—ignoring the fact that Salvadoran and other Central American refugees are being deported from the U.S. because the American Government does not acknowledge that a human rights problem exists in those countries whose governments it is propping up.

I also note that the American Civil Liberties Union has found at least 50 cases of people who have been returned to their countries of origin from the United States being killed in El Salvador and neighbouring countries.

I wonder if my colleague would like to comment on the concerns my constituent raised about this legislation. It sure does not sound like the attitude the Government thinks all Canadians have with regard to the refugee determination process.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the denial of the rights of refugee claimants to be heard means that they will be shipped offshore before they are heard. The first test of whether or not they shall be accepted and heard in Canada is the determination that they may have come through what are considered to be a safe third countries. That is what concerns the constituent who wrote to the Hon. Member.

The decision of whether or not a country is a safe third country is done mechanically. The bureaucrats look at a list of countries that are considered to be safe third countries, countries which comply with Article 33 of the Convention. But there have been cases of persons being rejected at Canada's border, sent back to the States and then sent from the States back to their country of origin and there have disappeared. The fact that a country says it complies with Article 33 does not necessarily mean that it does.

This test sounds like a good idea at first, but if we refuse to hear the refugee's story, we do not know whether the third country will be safe for him or whether it will ship him back to his country of origin where he will be persecuted or even killed. The concern raised by the Hon. Member's constituent is a concern which many people have had, and was one of the concerns of the churches, the refugees groups and the law reform groups that dealt with this Act back in its early stages. The safe third country concept does not become a direct violation of the Convention—it is an indirect violation.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to refugees in Africa. I know he is one of the few Members of this House who have some direct knowledge of Africa. I wonder if he could give us his opinion on whether the millions of refugees in Africa all wish to, would have the means or would intend to come to Canada, and if not, what he thinks is their future and what he thinks are Canada's obligations.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I spent four years in northern Nigeria on the very borders of the Sahel. During that period of time we dealt with starvation and famine in the countries of northern Nigeria, Chad, and Niger. Canada has an excellent record of assistance in those countries. However, those people do not want to go anywhere but back to their land. They have no intention of being refugees in any other country but a place where they can wait out the period of time necessary for the situation to change enough that they can live in their own home countries. There is no doubt that we have a responsibility not only to feed them and to make sure they survive, but also to make arrangements which will allow them to move to where they want to live.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

EMPLOYMENT

INVITATION TO QUEBEC PREMIER TO REJECT FREE TRADE AGREEMENT UNTIL GOVERNMENT TAKES MEASURES TO PROTECT VICTIMS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, on October 5 this year, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) admitted there would be losers, that some workers would lose their jobs as a result of the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States.

The same day, an economist at the University of Montreal published a study revealing that Montreal would lose 10,000 jobs in the short term as a result of free trade. Today, a study ordered by the Canadian-American Group sponsored by the C.D. Howe Institute recommends setting up programs to help the victims of free trade. Furthermore, all the experts admit that workers in the textile, footwear, clothing, shipbuilding and railway transportation industries will be severely affected.

Mr. Speaker, before anyone ratifies this Free Trade Agreement, we should first consider the potential victims.

All Conservative Members in this House should force the Government to set up retraining programs ... in fact, older workers will be the worst off because the Government has cut the early retirement program that was coupled with unemployment insurance, and we know that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) is discriminating against older workers with respect to unemployment insurance benefits.

I urge the Premier of Quebec to refuse to consider the Free Trade Agreement unless the federal Government takes steps to protect workers who are potential victims of this Agreement.

CITIZENSHIP

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE—RETENTION WELCOMED

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great sense of satisfaction and pride that I note the tremendous reception the people of Saskatchewan have given to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth.

Although my ancestry is not related to the Commonwealth and I am but a first generation Canadian, I am proud to be a loyal subject of so great and regal a monarch and pleased that the people of Saskatchewan have been so gracious to her. Therefore, I am astonished to learn of a faction in Canada committed to eliminating any mention of the sovereign in a proposed new citizenship oath. That means new citizens would not swear loyalty to the Queen but to the Constitution. Somehow that does not seem right.

There has been so much talk of late about maintaining our sovereignty and differentiating ourselves from our neighbours to the south; what better way is there than belonging to a Commonwealth and respecting an allegiance to a monarch? The Queen's loyalty to Canada has been unswerving.

Three cheers for the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) who assured the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), indeed all Canadians, that it is not the Government's intention to withdraw the reference to Her Majesty from the Oath of Allegiance.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—VICE-PRESIDENT'S VISIT TO CANADA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, this week Ottawa is host to the Vice-President of Nicaragua, Mr. Ramirez. Many Canadians hope that the Canadian Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in particular will use this visit as an opportunity to show the same independence from the policies of Ronald Reagan that he showed in Vancouver from the policies of Margaret Thatcher.

We hope that in the discussions with the Vice-President of Nicaragua this week Canada will be able to consider what it can do in its own judgment and on its own merits, and not have to look south for tacit approval, to use an expression from a newspaper article today, in responding, for example, to a request by Nicaragua that Canada participate in a peacekeeping force, or whatever the request of the five Central American countries might be. This should be an occasion for the Prime Minister to show that Canada has an independent foreign policy not just with respect to South Africa and our former colonial master Great Britain, but with respect to Central America and our current colonial master, particularly since 1984, the United States of America.

PUBLIC WORKS

RED SWASTIKA PAINTED ON CANADA POST PROPERTY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, when I first read the story which appeared in The Edmonton Sun last Sunday indicating that Dave Werner, President of the Alberta Federation of Labour, had painted a large swastika on Canada Post property, I was angry. This, I thought, is an insult to every veteran in Canada who fought against Nazism, and for a democratic Government that reflects the thinking of the people by doing things such as keeping the mail moving so small business and the rank and file would not be inconvenienced, and workers would be properly compensated for their work.

Then I read the story again. Behold, it was not a black swastika, the symbol of Nazism, but a red swastika, the symbol of the virtues of the heart; life, happiness, and good fortune.

Certainly defacing public property was an act of vandalism and the President of that Federation should have outgrown such a juvenile act, but as long as the red swastika remains on that fence it will say to Canada Post: "From the heart; good luck, good fortune and happiness!" I now wonder, because of this grievous error, will the NDP cancel his membership?

RAIL TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR REBUILDING OF SAINTE-ANNE RIVER BRIDGE

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, a decision that will have a serious impact on the economy of the regions of Mauricie, Portneuf and Quebec City was made last August by Canadian Pacific.

The company confirmed it did not intend to rebuild the bridge over the Sainte-Anne River that was swept away by a combination of ice and spring floods last April. It explained that a study had been ordered and the results would be forthcoming in two or three years' time. This is a deplorable excuse. Meanwhile, at a time when VIA Rail is doing so much to improve the quality of its service, millions of dollars are being spent to build intermodal stations in Quebec City and Trois-Rivières.

Canadian Pacific's decision is unacceptable in more ways than one, and it proves that the company has failed to consider the well-being of the community, since the decision is a threat to the economic development of the entire North Shore between Quebec City and Montreal.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister responsible for the Canadian Transport Commission, which has every authority over CP, to take the necessary action to have the railway bridge at Saint-Anne de la Pérade rebuilt.

I also want to express my support for colleagues in neigbouring ridings who are trying to get rail passenger traffic on the North Shore between Montreal and Quebec City restored as quickly as possible.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

RECOGNITION OF WORK OF CONSTABLE FUDGE

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, we all know that the red-coated Mountie is probably the best known and most internationally recognized symbol of Canada. Over the past 114 years the RCMP has acquired a world-wide reputation for excellence, and legends surrounding the force have sprung up, many, if not most, originating in the Canadian North.

Recently the arrest of American fugitive Charles McVey by Corporal Dan Fudge of RCMP Teslin Detachment, Yukon Territory, has again given the force international prominence and perhaps added another northern legend.

As a result of his actions, the Government of the United States recognized him with two presentations. On October 15, 1987, Corporal Fudge was presented with the Outstanding Public Service Medal at the Pentagon by the U.S. Department of Defence. The following day he and another member of the force, Constable Vander Leek, received a citation from the U.S. Customs Service.

I believe we can proudly applaud the excellent work of this unassuming and obviously dedicated young man and rightfully claim that the stuff of legend can still be found under that Canadian symbol, the Mountie uniform.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

IMPORTANCE OF BRUNDTLAND REPORT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Our Common Future, the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development, is currently being debated at the United Nations. This is a landmark, even revolutionary, report in the significance of its rethinking of the issues of the environment and economic development.

It is a report with hope also. It argues both for economic growth and the active combating of poverty, especially in Third World countries, along with concern for sustainable development.

S. O. 21

The Brundtland Report promotes an intertwining of economic and environmental concerns in all stages of planning. It calls on us all, especially in industrial countries, to change our ways, to produce more with less, to develop renewable sources of energy, to change our positions on international development to assist other countries to reach sustainable development as well, and to change our policies with respect to our native peoples. We must consider the real costs of environmental pollution and ensure that it becomes cheaper not to pollute than to pollute.

This is not the time for pious statements about the Brundtland Report. It is a time for a serious rethinking of our ways. This report will require serious study and I hope it will receive it in this House soon. We need social and political change. We can and must do it for "our common future".

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF YURI SHUKHEVYCH

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, Yuri Shukhevych has spent 33 years in Soviet labour camps, prisons, and internal exile. He was first arrested as a 15-year-old boy and sentenced to 10 years imprisonment for the crime of being the son of the Commander in Chief of the Ukrainian Insurgent Army. After serving the original 10-year sentence Yuri was re-arrested in 1958 for his continued refusals to condemn or renounce his father.

Shukhevych's plight has earned him the title of "The Eternal Prisoner". After years of imprisonment his health has suffered greatly. In 1980 part of his stomach had to be removed, followed by operations for cataracts and detached retinas in 1982. He has lost 99 per cent of his vision.

• (1410)

Shukhevych's plight is a warning to us all. As long as the Soviet Government continues to violate the fundamental human rights of its own citizens, the western nations must continue to view the so-called policy of "glasnost" with suspicion. I call on the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Government of Canada to use all of the resources at their disposal to effect the immediate release of Yuri Shukhevych and to send a clear reminder to the Soviet Government of its obligations as a signatory of the Helsinki Accords.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND PREMIER

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my dismay over the comments of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) as reported in The Globe and Mail on October 17, 1987. Apparently the Deputy Prime Minister is upset with the Premier of Prince Edward Island who stated that the energy provisions of the free trade deal were not discussed at the Premiers' briefing.

The Deputy Prime Minister disagrees with Premier Ghiz and he is reported to have said: "Perhaps Mr. Ghiz was more interested in discussing potatoes." I want to remind the Hon. Member that our potato industry is very important, but we are also deeply concerned about our future energy supplies.

The consumers on our Island already pay the highest electricity rates in Canada. I believe that the Premier of Prince Edward Island expressed his genuine concern and I am disappointed that the Hon. Member for Vegreville would make this condescending remark. I am surprised that he would insult all those who are in our potato industry. Surely the Deputy Prime Minister now realizes that insulting Canadians will only make this free trade sell-out look even worse.

POLITICAL PARTIES

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF SOCIALIST PARTY'S DEMOCRACY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, throughout the world, socialist parties are totalitarian and centralist. However, when they see it is to their political advantage, they try and adapt to local custom. In Quebec, they do not use the same vocabulary they use for the rest of Canada. But how different is it?

The socialist leader should explain to the House why his only elected Member in Quebec slammed the door at his Party's meeting in Quebec.

Where is the democratic process in this Party? How come the Director of the Centrale de l'enseignement du Québec, Mr. Michel Agnaïeff, has more clout than the entire Quebec Socialist Caucus? Unless the socialist leader exlains otherwise, we will have to conclude that he is merely a mouthpiece for the labour establishment and the Socialist International.

INCOME TAX

LOW LEVEL OF TAX PAID BY CORPORATIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, average Canadian taxpayers are fed up. They are fed up with a tax system that allows 80,000 corporations with profits of well over $10 billion to escape paying a single cent in tax, while many more only pay a small token fee.

Average taxpayers are wondering why Edper Investments Limited, a holding company controlled by multi-millionaires Edward and Peter Bronfman, paid just $6,000 in taxes in 1986, despite enjoying after tax profits of $207 million.

Average Canadian taxpayers are asking why the Bronfman brothers, estimated to be worth over $650 million, are paying less in tax than they are. Canadians are fed up with this unfairness. They have had it with the Government's tolerating and indeed contributing to it in budget after budget. They are as mad as hell and you can bet that they won't take it any more.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF MANITOBA PREMIER

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, an article appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on October 9, entitled "Does Pawley speak for Manitoba or the NDP?"

It accurately points out that in 1985 Premier Pawley not only advocated free trade with the United States but the creation of a common market. Premier Pawley said that he would support free trade: "as long as we preserve existing jobs, through a program of transition and analysis and at the same time obtain a guarantee to an access to future markets." That is exactly what our Government has achieved.

Now what has happened to Mr. Pawley? The federal NDP Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), and their Vice-President, Bob White, must have got to him.

Everyone knows the NDP support free trade and foreign investment, but only in Oshawa.

Premier Pawley's logic to support free trade in 1985 still exists today. Mr. Pawley's slogan in the last election was: "Standing up for Manitobans", but for whom is he standing up now? The federal NDP? He must stop being controlled by the big unions and their leaders in Oshawa.

Let us give Manitobans the opportunity to realize the benefits of free trade.

TRADE

OPPOSITION TO CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, free trade to this Government is alleged to mean that we as Canadians get access to the American market, but in fact the Americans get us and our economy for free. That is right, Mr. Speaker. According to the President of the United States, this trade agreement puts Canada in a continental union with the United States.

Clearly this is not in the best interests of a united, strong Canada. Realistically it is not surprising, given the Government's record and the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) obsession with pleasing the Americans.

On March 13, 1986, the Prime Minister said: "We will spare no effort to secure our access to the U.S. market". Well, he certainly spared nothing and he gave away our economic sovereignty in so doing. But the good news is that this deal can still be stopped. The United States must continue to be our most important trading partner, but we must not try to buy our way into one major market at the price of our sovereignty as the Government of Canada has done in this proposed free trade arrangement with the United States.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

SITUATION IN STOCK MARKETS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the stockmarkets around the world declined by a record amount. The Dow Jones fell by 500 points and the Toronto Stock Exchange fell by more than 400 points. Similar things happened in the Montreal Stock Exchange.

At 2.03 p.m., just before I came into the House, the Toronto Stock Exchange had fallen by an additional 333 points. That is 733 points in two days.

However, if we can judge by the Minister's answers in the House yesterday, he does not think the situation is too serious. Yesterday in reply to a question the Minister said:

> I think the Leader of the Opposition is exaggerating in his reference to this morning's activities on the markets.

The Minister then went on to say—

Mr. Blaikie: Order.

Mr. Young: Question.

Mr. Garneau: —and I quote: "There have been some corrections in the financial markets". With the situation deteriorating by the hour on Canadian stock exchanges, does the Minister still believe that only "some corrections" have taken place in the stockmarkets which do not require any government action? Or has he finally realized, like all Canadians, that this is a major crisis which requires more than the Minister's passing interest as he watches from the sidelines as the world passes by?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me respond to the Hon. Member's question by saying the Government has taken some action. As I indicated earlier today I have spoken to most of my colleagues in the G-7 countries and there appears to be a broadly agreed point of view that we should be doing what we can to stabilize markets by ensuring that there is an adequate degree of liquidity in the financial markets. This has been done in Canada. For example, the Bank of Canada has acted accordingly.

The result has been a drop in interest rates in this country and other countries as well. I think this will contribute to achieving a greater degree of stability in the stock exchange markets.

However, I think we should be careful to understand that the stock exchange markets are the markets that have been the volatile ones. The bond markets, the interest rate markets, the foreign exchange markets, have been relatively stable during this period.

MINISTER'S POLICY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, it was clear to all Canadians, except, of course, the Minister of Finance, that there was a very serious situation developing in the stockmarkets of Canada and the world. I suggested to the Minister that some action be taken in terms of interest rates. This is exactly what he announced he has done today.

What prompted the Minister to abandon his laissez-faire policy of yesterday? Was he overruled by the Cabinet?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is the time to use these sorts of partisan jibes. I have indicated very clearly what I believe is necessary for achieving greater stability in the markets.

• (1420)

I have indicated to the House, as well as outside, that the underlying economies of Canada and the other G-7 countries are performing quite well. We reviewed this at the G-7 meeting in Washington toward the end of September, and that was the conclusion that we arrived at.

What we have seen is a major decline in stock markets. But I should draw the Hon. Member's attention to the fact that the Canadian market is below what it was at the beginning of this year, but not that far below what it was this year. The point I am making is that there was a substantial run-up in the market during the course of 1987. This has been taken away as a result of the decline, but the underlying economies are still very strong.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister referred to the good performance of our economy. Granted, but I may remind him that those are the same comments President Hoover made in 1929. He even went to a baseball game to show that everything was o.k.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Garneau: It is a historical fact. It's absolutely true.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MORNING DECISION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): I would like to ask the Minister whether the decision he announced this morning to establish greater liquidity in the financial markets was made after consultation with members of the Group of Seven or did Canada act on its own in this case?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I said in my answer that the decision that the Bank of Canada made today was based on consultations with my colleagues in the Group of Seven and consultations by the Governor of the Bank of Canada with other countries. I think the decision to provide for increased liquidity in the financial markets will help stabilize the market. I think we should understand that the present lack of stability is in the stock market, not in the financial or exchange markets.

[English]

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Finance a question which I am sure is on the minds of millions of Canadians today in light of the world-wide stock market crash. The question is the following.

What is the Government doing, and what will it be doing to prevent this world-wide stock market crash from leading to a serious economic downturn, or worse, right here in Canada? Can the Minister gives us a clear and detailed answer, not only in terms of current action, but what it will be doing in the future?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated what we are doing in the markets today through the Bank of Canada, and I think that this is having the desired result. We have seen a substantial drop in short-term interest rates where the bank rate, if it were to be set today, would probably be down three-quarters of 1 per cent.

The House Leader of the Liberal Party is asking what might we do in the future. It is important to realize that the underlying economies—the real economies as opposed to the stock market—in Canada, in the United States, and in other major industrialized countries are operating quite effectively.

If there is a need for further policy responses as things develop in the weeks or months ahead, we can review that at the time. I do not think it is appropriate to jump to conclusions on the basis of one day's understanding of a major decline in the market which took place yesterday.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Well, Mr. Speaker, the Minister speaks of one day, but it was some day!

WORKERS' PENSION FUNDS—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, one of the experts said that the world-wide decline on the stock markets wiped out $3 billion worth of securities held by Canadian pension funds on which millions of Canadian workers depend for a safe and secure retirement.

I want to ask the Minister what the Government will do to restore and safeguard the value of these pension funds, to give Canadian workers the assurance of a safe and secure retirement. Could the Minister give us a concrete answer today?

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member has raised this point. I think Canadians should understand a few things about the state of their pension funds.

One is that there has been a significant increase in stock market prices over the last number of years. As I pointed out earlier, the current level of the Toronto Stock Exchange is what it was toward the latter part of last year, so that we have not lost a major amount in the longer term perspective.

The second and I think more important point is that the large majority of the assets in these pension funds are invested in bonds and in real estate. Both these markets have not been affected by the drop in the stock market. In fact, as I have indicated, the bond market has been up quite significantly and that should result in good profits for pension funds in that part of their investments.

REQUEST FOR MEETING OF GROUP OF SEVEN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

The Minister said that he contacted the Group of Seven. He also said the crisis was a one-day crisis. The Minister knows perfectly well that the crisis is continuing today as well. It is world-wide.

In this context, is the Minister prepared to ask for a meeting of the Group of Seven?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important to realize that my colleagues and I have had many consultations with the Group of Seven, and that we, like the other countries, have taken steps to deal with the situation here in Canada. The Governor of the Bank of Canada has decided to increase liquidity in the financial market, and I think the result is promising. There has been a drop of nearly 1 per cent in the interest rate. That is a good way to encourage stability in the markets.

[English]

REQUEST FOR GLOBAL ECONOMIC STRATEGY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister knows, the crisis which the world is now facing in terms of the decline in stock market values has already vastly exceeded what happened in 1929.

It is encouraging that principal industrial countries are responding in a quicker and more positive direction than was the case in 1929.

However, this having been said, does the Minister not think that it would be useful for the G-7 actually to have a meeting to try to co-ordinate on a global basis an economic strategy to head off what followed 1929?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the views of the Hon. Member. What I should say to him is that we have been having meetings of the Group of Seven on a regular basis. We had our last meeting at the end of September in Washington, at which time a number of matters were discussed.

As I indicated earlier, there have been discussions yesterday and today with members of the Group of Seven. We have compared the situations in each other's markets and compared what we can do to address the great instability or volatility in the stock markets.

However, the result of the decisions we have already taken has been good stability in the foreign exchange markets and a drop in interest rates. I think that, as a preliminary approach to the effects of the drop in the stock market, this is a good one.

We will be watching it very closely. We will be consulting on an ongoing basis. If it is appropriate to have a meeting of the G-7 countries, then we can proceed on that basis at that time.

• (1430)

GROUP OF SEVEN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has said that the G-7 has been meeting on a regular basis. That is true, but the last meeting was two weeks ago. To understate it a wee bit, the world has changed a little since then. The one concrete change announced by the Minister which has taken place here, which is encouraging and is in the right direction, is the move to keep interest rates down. That is the sole initiative, if I understood the Minister correctly today, which the Government of Canada plans to take.

Again, does the Minister not think now is the time that the Government of Canada, in a constructive way, propose to other members of the G-7 that their Ministers of Finance get together for a meeting to map out a strategy to head off a deepening of this very serious crisis?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we did map out a strategy at the meeting we had in the Louvre in February of this year that has served the seven countries and the world well.

Mr. Riis: The results were a little questionable.

Mr. Broadbent: It has not worked very well.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says that it has not worked out well. Since then we have seen a remarkable degree of growth, particularly in the Canadian economy. We have good stability and exchange rates.

Mr. Riis: A trillion dollars lost in one day.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member said the Canadian dollar has gone down since then. That is not true, it has gone up since then.

Mr. Riis: I said a trillion dollar loss.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In that meeting we agreed as countries to undertake certain policy initiatives. The Americans have followed through on theirs as have the Japanese, the Germans, the Canadians and the other countries. We have a strategy. We have been following it and the underlying economies, as I have said, are operating very effectively. I think that is a tribute to the success of that strategy developed at the Louvre.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a question with the Minister for International Trade. This weekend there was a conference on international law which brought together a number of Canada's most distinguished jurists in the area of international trade. The conclusion out of that meeting by a number of the participants was that the proposed dispute mechanism entrenched in the free trade proposal will be a contravention of the Charter of Rights because it only allows appeals and a judicial review by Governments and not by individuals. In fact, this raises the question of contravening the individual rights of Canadians to make application for review.

Mr. Crosbie: That is silly.

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Axworthy: I know there are a number of Tory cabinet Ministers who are unlearned as far as the law is concerned.

I would like to quote from a statement by Gowling and Henderson which I think we recognize is a reputed law firm. It says, "The important question that arises is whether the free trade agreement will deprive Canadian producers, importers or exporters of the judicial review remedy and, therefore, such a procedure would not be in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice as contained in the Canadian Charter of Rights."

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Who is their client?

Mr. Axworthy: That is an important question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: That is twaddle.

Mr. Axworthy: If the only deal which the Government got will contravene the fundamental law of the country, what does the Government intend to do about that kind of serious dilemma in which it puts Canada by signing something which goes against the fundamental law of the country?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the report which the Hon. Member has quoted. I personally fail to understand why a trade agreement that will create jobs, preserve Canada's standard of living and preserve our sovereignty, would be in contravention of the Charter of Rights. If that were true, I suppose the Hon. Member might be suggesting that our membership in GATT, which also has a dispute settlement mechanism, contravenes the Charter of Rights.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the abysmal ignorance of this Minister about the law of this country is incredible to behold.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question without argument.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the fact that the Minister of Trade is unaware is not justification for the Government to go ahead and sign a deal which a number of Canada's most distinguished lawyers in the field of international trade have suggested that the dispute mechanism will, in fact, contravene the Charter of Rights because it denies judicial review. It may be that the Minister does not understand the principle of judicial review. It would seem to me that we are now signing an agreement that will be challenged in the courts and, therefore, will become totally irrevocable.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask that the Hon. Member put his question.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, her ignorance is only exceeded by that of her colleagues.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: You were not recognized, Lloyd. Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

THE ECONOMY

MEASURE TO REASSURE INVESTORS—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister has just informed us he had no plans for calling a meeting of the Ministers of the Group of Seven, and that he has taken steps to provide for a temporary drop in interest rates. Does the Minister have any other measures in mind to reassure investors and to start the process of economic rebuilding that will be necessary after the past two days decline on the stock market?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the conclusions which the Hon. Member is drawing are, to choose my words carefully, somewhat excessive. We have a strong economy. We have an economy that has performed extremely well this year, let alone over the past three years, under a strong economic plan which has been clearly followed by our Government. It has resulted in the nearly one million jobs that have been created and in Canada leading the G-7 countries in economic growth, productivity performance and job creation.

I am not denying that we have had a major drop in the stock markets. That is evident. But what I think we must not do is jump to conclusions that might not be warranted by the facts. We should watch to see what happens with the markets over the next few days and weeks and then we can have a look to see whether some further policy response is necessary. Let us not jump to conclusions.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, we face a situation in which the Toronto market has dropped by some 35 per cent from its peak for this year, in which there has been a world-wide crisis on the stock exchanges which is only outmatched by what happened back in the 1929 crash and the Great Depression of the 1930s.

Simply, apart from a temporary reduction in interest rates, does the Minister have any other specific and concrete measures in mind which he can inform the House of now, or is he still taking a wait and see attitude?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that all Hon. Members should be quite careful about the type of rhetoric which they use in addressing questions.

I have made it quite clear that I am in continuing touch with my colleagues in the G-7 countries so that we can review the situation on an ongoing basis. We have reviewed our economies quite recently. The conclusion we came to at that time was quite a positive one. Let us not jump to conclusions. Let us watch how things develop.

As I said, I believe to the Member's Leader, if there is a reason to have a meeting of the Group of Seven countries then I would be very happy to participate, but let us not have a meeting too soon without ensuring that we know the extent of the situation that we face.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT OF STOCK MARKET SITUATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Millions of Canadians will want to know the effect this crash will have on the so-called free trade agreement or economic constitution with the United States. They will not be able to ask the Prime Minister, but at a private meeting tonight some 150 businessmen from Canada and the United States will be able to ask the Prime Minister in a very private way what kind of effect this crash will have. I would like to ask the Prime Minister why it is that he will meet with Americans for a private briefing when he will not even table the relevant documents with respect to the economic union agreement here in the House of Commons.

• (1440)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the statement of my hon. friend is of course both false and misleading in regard to tonight's meeting. I was invited, as were other Prime Ministers, to address the BCNI and other groups. It is their choice as to the manner of the meeting. I have met in similar circumstances with leading unions, universities, and multicultural groups, and will continue to do so because I think it is of benefit to have a dialogue between Candians.

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister is really interested in dialogue, he will have no objection to our being provided with a transcript of all remarks made during the meeting this evening. So, if indeed his quest for truth is genuine, I should like to ask him whether he is prepared to give us, Members of the House of Commons, the same information he is prepared to give this evening to his American bosses who will attend the meeting to unveil here in Canada the scenario of our economic constitution with the United States? Is he prepared to give us at least the same information?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to send the Hon. Member a copy or transcript of my speech. It will undoubtedly be the most enlightening reading material the Hon. Member has laid her hands on since way back when.

THE ECONOMY

SITUATION IN STOCK MARKETS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance can describe what has happened in the last two days as a decline in the market. I want to suggest, and I am sure most Hon. Members would agree, that Canadians today are feeling very uneasy. The future is anything but sure and they are looking for some strong signal, a beacon of confidence, from the Minister of Finance. So far, all we have heard the Minister say is that he has taken some steps to ease interest rates today.

Does the Minister of Finance really think, considering the uncertainty that exists in our country today, that he ought not to make more of a statement about what action he is prepared to take on this very, very critical issue?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have said we have taken steps to increase the amount of liquidity in the financial markets and that this is having the result of getting interest rates down. I have also said that I am in continuing contact with the other members of the Group of Seven, and I would think that Members opposite would be very pleased now that we are a member of the Group of Seven that we can participate in that organization in these consultative and co-operative approaches to ensuring that we bring the full force of the seven largest industrialized countries to bear on these problems.

I will not repeat the response I gave to the Hon. Member's colleague. We are watching this on an ongoing basis and if further steps need to be taken, we will take them.

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, rather than stand back and wait for the situation potentially to deteriorate further, why would the Minister of Finance not call a meeting of the Group of Seven and propose a co-operative strategy to deal with this very serious situation? If he would not consider that, would he explain why he would not take that positive initiative?

Is the Minister of Finance also saying that, while he has met with the Governor of the Bank of Canada and that interest rates are holding today, he is committed to ensuring that interest rates will not go up in the immediate future?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, to take the Treasury Bill as an example, the Treasury Bill at the end of last week was trading at around 9.68. The latest information that I have here indicates that it is trading at 8.50. That is down over a point in one day.

I think it is very clear that we are taking decisive action, action directed at the immediate problem. We have also held discussions with many of my colleagues in the Group of Seven and we are prepared to continue those discussions. If it is appropriate to have a meeting, then I will be encouraging my colleagues to get together for a meeting.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON FISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. According to Mr. Richard Gutting, Vice-President for Government Relations with the National Fisheries Institute in the United States, the omnibus Trade Bill now before Congress will drastically change the U.S. trade laws, especially as they relate to fisheries. For instance, in future countervail actions, unemployment insurance benefits could be defined as a subsidy to our fishermen.

Will the Minister now admit that our fishing industry under the free trade deal and the dispute settlement mechanism will be subject to even more harassment by American fishing lobbyists? Why did the Minister and the Government not obtain more protection for Canadian fishermen?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the Hon. Member's attention the statement of the President of the Fisheries Council of Canada who said that we will be getting better access to a market of 250 million people for our processed products. That is the view of the Fisheries Council of Canada, not the view of the Hon. Member opposite.

PROTECTION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PROGRAM

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the big fish companies will do well with or without a trade deal. I and my party are concerned about fishermen who are trying to draw unemployment insurance in the wintertime to see them over the year.

According to the document, the fishery will have the full benefit of the protection of the agreement on countervail and anti-dumping. Can the Minister define what she means by protection and can she categorically state today that there will be no more countervail action by the Americans against Canadian fish products in the future?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have told the House on a number of occasions that social programs such as unemployment insurance are not part of the trade deal. They are preserved and protected.

May I tell the Hon. Member of the views of the President of National Sea Products Limited who said that the most important aspect for them was the dispute settlement mechanism which deals with countervail and anti-dumping, and they got that. He said, "It's a hell of a gain for Canada".

FINANCE

PENSION FUNDS—INVESTMENTS OFFSHORE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As the Minister knows, some $130 billion has been invested in Canadian pension funds, and under the changes coming out of the 1985 Budget nearly a third of those funds are permitted to be invested offshore in other countries.

Could the Minister advise the House whether or not he has investigated to find out what amount of those pension funds has actually been invested offshore, and in particular could he tell us how much of those funds are presently invested in the New York Stock Exchange?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first, let me say that the conclusion that the Hon. Member has drawn that one-third can be invested offshore is partly correct. One-third can be invested offshore provided that there is an appropriate amount of investment in small business here in Canada. The whole purpose of that amendment of 1985 was to encourage these very large pools of capital to invest a meaningful amount of their assets in small and medium-sized businesses which heretofore were not the subject of that investment. We are trying to accomplish something that will be good for that sector of the market.

• (1450)

As to the specific question of how much is invested offshore, I do not think there would be a great deal more than the basic 10 per cent limitation in place right now. How much of that is invested in the New York Stock Exchange I could not say. That is probably more appropriate for an Order Paper question.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF OFFSHORE INVESTMENT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister fully understands that members of pension plans are understandably concerned and anxious about the events of the last couple of days. If the Minister has not investigated how much of those funds are invested offshore, will he agree to do so and give a detailed response to the House some time in the next week?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I addressed the basic thrust of the Hon. Member's question in my previous answer. I said that while pension funds are investing in the stock market, and most do, common stocks have done pretty well over the last number of years. The health of pension plans today has been strengthened by the existence of a good stock market in Canada which reflects the basic strength of the economy. In addition, a large part of the assets of those pension funds are invested in bonds. The bond market is very strong today. There are also real estate and other investments.

I think the Hon. Member would do well not to try to cast too broad a net and frighten those people with assets invested in pension funds because the pension industry in this country is a very strong one.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RURAL POST OFFICES—CORPORATION MANUAL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He will know that the Minister responsible for Canada Post said in this House and elsewhere that no rural post offices would be shut down or privatized without consulting the people affected. I have in my hand a Canada Post manual which explains to officials how to proceed with the shutting down of post offices, complete with such gems as this question: "Why can't we have a general town hall meeting?" Then there is a suggested answer for the Canada Post official to weasel his or her way out of it.

How can the consultation process be taken seriously when there is a manual which explains how to avoid consultation?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, of course, in the absence of the minister responsible, I just want to point out that we and Canada Post Corporation have drafted a corporate plan providing for better service in the best interest of Canadians. And we are trying to put it into effect as soon as possible.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING CERTAIN INTERNAL DOCUMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. How can the minister responsible explain that action by Canada Post Corporation? Is it not true that Rural Dignity and other concerned Canadians have every reason to worry when the Government and Canada Post Corporation circulate such internal papers to their staff to ensure the real consultation process never comes?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, once again, my colleague's comments distort somewhat what was the truth. First, the responsibility of Canada Post Corporation is to guarantee the best service at the lowest cost possible. In that regard, the Minister has thoroughly consulted most regions in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada, which led to a corporate plan highlighting the results of those recommendations.

INDUSTRY

FIRESTONE PLANT IN HAMILTON

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, on October 7 the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion assured this House that he would respond to the breakdown in negotiations between Cooper and Firestone by calling a meeting to get the parties back to the bargaining table. I understand that the parties have now done so because the Minister urged them to do so. However, the people of Hamilton need more than communications, they need a commitment. Is the Minister willing to give us the commitment that if these negotiations break down again he will effect some kind of sale of the Firestone plant?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member quite correctly said, when the talks broke down I communicated with the presidents of both companies urging them to get back to the table at the earliest possible moment. They have done that as of yesterday morning. I also indicated to them at that point that I would be following those discussions very closely.

My officials have been in touch with officials of both companies. We are monitoring the progress being made. We are aware that the discussions are difficult. We are committed to seeing those discussions lead to a mutually agreeable commercial settlement of the question being negotiated and I can give my commitment to the Hon. Member that I will be keeping a very close watch on the evolution of the negotiations.

REQUEST THAT UNION PARTICIPATE IN NEGOTIATIONS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, there are 1,300 families involved in this matter. If there are multi-level discussions between the companies and the federal and provincial Governments, can the Minister assure us that he will invite union representatives to participate?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that during this period I also communicated with my counterpart in the Ontario Government as well as the Mayor of Hamilton. We have agreed that should the negotiations break off for some reason or other, which is obviously the opposite to what we wish because we certainly hope for a good commercial settlement, there would be meetings involving all levels of government.

EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT ON EMPLOYMENT—RETRAINING OF WORKERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment. Yesterday he said no special programs for retraining were necessary for workers who have lost their jobs because of free trade. Today we have a report from the Canadian C. D. Howe Institute and the American National Planning Association recommending special training and placement programs to deal with free trade adjustment. Is the Minister going to wait until the last minute, or will he tell us now what he is going to do about these massive changes in the labour market resulting from free trade?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East had quoted the full text, he would have said the study indicates that the number to which he referred will be much lower. I also believe I said yesterday that the Government has mechanisms for employment adjustment in the form of a manpower adjustment program for which several million dollars are budgeted yearly. However, if the Free Trade Agreement creates new situations with which our programs are unable to cope, Mr. Speaker, we will take the necessary action. However, I would rather not assume, as the Hon. Member is doing, that a certain kind of situation is going to develop. Before spending any money, we first want to know what for, then make the studies and spend the funds.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. Will he tell the House exactly what he meant when he said on October 5 before the Canadian Export Association that massive retraining and relocation programs were necessary to combat free trade losses? When will he put his specific plan on the table, and who really speaks for the Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite substantially misquoting what I said. The answer with regard to retraining programs, if and when they become necessary, is one that I discussed at great length both here in the House and with the First Ministers. It has always been the intention of this Government—we do it now with billions of dollars directed to retraining and redeployment—to the extent that any further programs are required, to deal always with the human element first.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

FINAL PAY-OUT FOR 1987

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds. The Minister will be aware that when inflation is taken into consideration the initial prices received by producers this year were the lowest they have been since the 1930s. Western Grain Stabilization Act for 1987? If so, how much is it, when will it be announced and, even more important, when will the producers have it in their hands?

• (1500)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Western Grain Stabilization Act is an important device to help producers in a difficult time. We are presently doing the calculations and expect to be in a position to announce the size of the payment in the middle of next month, as has traditionally happened. In all likelihood there will be a record payment and we are doing everything we can to get it into producers' hands as quickly as possible.

We announced today that there will be an increase on the initial payment on oats. The initial payment has been increased by $25 a tonne which is good news for oat producers. While oats is not a large crop, those people who produce it will realize that this is a significant increase. That is a little bit of good news for producers who have been suffering under the effects of very depressed international grain markets.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question in Question Period. The Hon. Member for Fundy Royal.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IRAN-IRAQ CONFLICT—POSSIBLE ROLE FOR CANADA TO ASSIST ENDING OF HOSTILITIES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is with regard to the Iraq-Iran conflict. Last week an Iranian missile hit a school in the Iraqi capital of Baghdad resulting in the loss of lives, mostly of children. Iran has also launched Silkworm missiles against reflagged ships in the ports of a non-belligerent third party, Kuwait. Yesterday the United States responded to this attack by destroying an Iranian oil platform which was being used as a military base in the Gulf.

In keeping with the Government's policy of constructive internationalism, and in keeping with the Minister's statements of support for both the American position and the need for further action by the U.N. Security Council, what role can Canada assume in helping to bring this tragic conflict to a swift end?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a tragic conflict, and a dangerous one. The most effective role that Canada can continue to play is to continue to urge the members of the Security Council of the United Nations and, most important, the Secretary General, to work toward the implementation of Security Council Resolution 598.

We have been doing that. The Secretary General has been playing a very active role of mediation in that conflict. We wish him the best of success and are prepared to put at his disposition any help that Canada might practically offer.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties and I think you would find unanimous consent to revert to Statements by Ministers in order to permit the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) to make a statement followed by appropriate replies by the opposition Parties. Thereafter the House would return to debate on Bill C-55.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to agree to the request of the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly prepared to co-operate. I would, however, observe that we certainly would have appreciated receiving a written version of the Minister's comments a little earlier. We received it 50 minutes before Question Period. That makes it a little difficult to make an excellent reply, but I am sure that our reply will be more than excellent in any event.

TRADE

TABLING IN GENEVA OF CANADIAN NEGOTIATING PROPOSAL ON AGRICULTURE

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that the Government is today tabling in Geneva a comprehensive negotiating proposal on agriculture in the Uruguay Round of the multilateral trade negotiations. It seeks to enlist the support of all GATT countries for a wide-ranging attack on trade barriers and on subsidies which distort production and trade. It is a major assault on the forces of protectionism.

Of course, we recognize that governments need to respond to the imperatives of their agricultural sectors. We are not saying that governments should not support farmers. We do say that support should be given in ways that do not distort production and trade and that are in conformity with agreed rules.

I am sure that all Hon. Members are aware of the importance which the Government attaches to agriculture. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has taken the lead to raise the issue at the past two economic summits. At Venice he secured from world leaders an acknowledgment of the need to proceed quickly in the GATT negotiations. Various Canadian Ministers have, in different international forums, advanced Canada's view that there is an urgent need for agricultural trade reform.

My colleagues and I worked hard at the OECD ministerial meeting to obtain endorsation of the general principles which should guide the reform of policies which affect agricultural trade. Over the past year I have used a series of meetings with trade ministers from key countries to promote the development of the political will necessary to translate rhetoric into reality.

Most recently my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), spoke eloquently to the ministerial meeting of the Inter-American Institute for Co-operation in Agriculture about the need to reform agricultural trade.

I co-chaired the ministerial meeting of the Cairns Group in Ottawa this May. This is a group of 14 countries, both developed and developing, with important agricultural interests which have decided to work together to seek a major reform of the rules governing agricultural trade.

My colleagues, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State (Grains and Oil Seeds) (Mr. Mayer), and I used that meeting to build further international support for the need for the Uruguay Round of GATT negotiations to deal expeditiously and comprehensively with the problems plaguing agricultural trade. Again last week the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting adopted the Vancouver Declaration on World Trade, a Canadian initiative which re-emphasized the urgency of action on agricultural trade and agreed "on the crucial need for reform of all trade distorting agricultural policies, both domestic and international".

One imperative has clearly emerged from international discussions over the past few months, that is, that the world needs to adopt a comprehensive approach to agricultural trade reform. The OECD has demonstrated that only a broad approach covering all commodities, all countries, and all policies which directly or indirectly affect trade can have any hope of success.

The negotiations in Geneva involve 94 countries whose interests span the whole range of world agricultural production. If we are to have a successful negotiation we must deal with the legitimate concerns and interests of all countries, large and small, developed and developing, exporters and importers. We all know that many of our farmers are suffering, and suffering deeply, from the current agricultural trade crisis. We have promised not to abandon them in the short term and to seek lasting solutions in the longer term.

The proposal we are tabling today in Geneva is designed to achieve that latter goal. While our current programs are aimed at dealing with the symptoms of the problems, we will be using the Geneva negotiations to promote the basic reforms which must occur if we are to get at the underlying causes of the problem.

We are proposing that, in the longer term, over a time frame to be negotiated, all access barriers and all subsidies which distort trade should be eliminated. We consider that, in an interim period of perhaps five years starting from the conclusion of the negotiations, a major reduction should be made in all access barriers and trade-distorting subsidies.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, we are firmly convinced that there is a pressing need for clear and effective GATT rules. Policymakers need to know clearly what actions they can undertake to support their farmers. They need to know what kinds of actions will create trade problems and which ones will not. For example, the Canadian system of supply management is in conformity with GATT rules, in contrast with the open-ended support programs of some other countries which have generated massive surpluses.

The world needs to reduce the frictions which have come to characterize agricultural trade relations. Governments need to have clear rules and traders need to know that conditions of access to international markets will be secure.

The Canadian proposal is the second one to be tabled at Geneva and it should reinforce the push toward reform of the agricultural trading system. We have been working very closely with our Cairns Group partners in developing the ideas which are included in the Canadian proposal, and we are confident that the contribution by that group will also serve to promote our common objectives.

• (1510)

Over the rest of this year, we expect other countries will table negotiating proposals of their own. We look forward to seeing the proposals of the European Community, Japan and other major agricultural countries.

Early in the New Year negotiators in Geneva will be working to maximize the common ground in the various proposals which will have been put forward. We are seeking to reach agreement by the end of 1988 on a negotiating framework for agriculture.

These discussions will be arduous, but we are determined to make progress quickly so that Canadian farmers can begin to obtain relief from the current crisis in agricultural trade.

We are reaping today the results of 40 years of the lack of will of the GATT countries to deal effectively with agricultural problems. GATT countries recognize that we must all mend our ways. Canada is proposing a bold and far-reaching plan to achieve this goal because we know that Canadian farmers need their foreign markets to survive. Canadian farmers are among the most productive in the world. Given a level playing field, they can compete on world markets. Our negotiating proposal offers a way to do that.

We believe that a systematic attack on measures that distort trade is urgently needed. We want to create an environment where farm production decisions are more responsive to market signals. We have seen how export subsidies directly, and domestic subsidies indirectly, can distort and depress international prices. It is time that we returned some sanity to agricultural trade.

By tabling our proposal we are challenging our trading partners to join with us in the search for lasting solutions to the agricultural crisis we face today. We look forward to working with our GATT partners to define those solutions. We believe the solutions we are offering are good ones and we encourage all GATT countries to table their own ideas. In that way we can move directly toward an agreement which will meet the needs of the international community. In that process, all countries will need to take account of the points of view of others so that the final result of the MTN will reflect a true world view of the solutions needed.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we are at least grateful that the Government has finally shown a response in this matter. We have been asking in the House for the tabling of such a proposal since last February when the first phase of the GATT negotiating round on agriculture began. We are glad that finally, after some nine months, the Government has got around to providing at least the rhetoric of a proposal. However, we do not have any details.

Once again, we are treated to the spectacle of a trade proposal being given only in the largest of generalities, without dealing with many of the very serious and crucial issues that must be resolved in order to make such a proposal plausible and realistic.

Let me give an example. Next week, on October 26, the Government of Canada must decide whether it accepts the GATT ruling dealing with the European Economic Community exports of beef to Canada. There was a panel ruling against us and the Government must decide whether or not to accept that ruling.

The Government's decision will have a great bearing on our success in future negotiations for establishing a set of rules. It seems only appropriate that the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), in outlining the Government's so-called proposal, would have given an indication of what stand the Government would be taking. Surely any elements contained in that proposal will be based on that kind of initiative.

Members of GATT and officials of the European Community said that Canada would jeopardize its position in upcoming agricultural trade talks if it ignores the GATT panel ruling. That is a shot across our bow. We want to know what the Minister will do about it, but there was nothing in her statement to give any clue whatsoever.

Let me point to another major inconsistency. The Minister says that it is very important that we have new rules and that all the major players understand those rules. If that is the case, why was the Government of Canada one of the major countries vetoing the application of the Soviet Union to become a member of GATT? The Soviet Union is our largest customer and buys most of our grain. However, when the Soviets were in Uruguay attempting to at least acquire observer status or participant status, the Government of Canada gave absolutely no support and followed the United States in rejecting them. Our largest customer will be kept outside the rules which the Minister says are necessary. Surely a statement in the House should have included some explanation or response to that particular problem.

The most disturbing aspect of this statement is the underlying philosophy behind it. The Minister said, "We have promised not to abandon the farmers in the short term". Does the short term mean six months or a year? When will they be abandoned? Is that kind of philosophy—

Mr. Mayer: We know what you did. You just abandoned them, period. You did nothing.

Mr. Axworthy: The Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) is having a short cardiac arrest. We will give him an opportunity to recover.

Mr. Gustafson: You abandoned the farmers for 20 years.

Mr. Mayer: If you did a better job negotiating the last GATT—

Mr. Axworthy: I remind the Minister that the whole support system about which he is making announcements was brought in by Liberal governments.

The Minister went on to say that the Government is now attempting to deal with a level playing field. The Government's position is a replica of that taken by President Reagan. We will move toward a total market oriented approach.

The Minister talks about reducing subsidies; what kind of subsidies, and what kind of programs? What is the Government prepared to renegotiate? Will it be the transportation subsidies or the Grain Stabilization Act? Incidentally, I remind the Minister that those were two programs brought in by Liberal governments. Those programs were introduced in order to deal with our geography and certain Canadian circumstances.

Will those matters be on the table? Is that what the Minister for International Trade is talking about? Essentially she is saying that the Government will provide a few welfare handouts in the short term while it negotiates away those major subsidies. Those are legitimate questions that western Canadian farmers, in fact all farmers, will have to ask because we have seen what has happened with the proposed agricultural initiatives under the free trade proposal.

That in itself gives a number of important clues about the Government's policy. First, it abandoned the subsidy under the Western Grain Transportation Act for the movement of Canola to the United States. It is the first time that a Canadian government has ever acknowledged that a transportation subsidy is in fact a trade related subsidy. It has established a seriously dangerous precedent.

It has agreed with the Americans who challenged the WGTA and said it was a trade related subsidy. If the Government of Canada has acknowledged this to the Americans, other countries will wonder whether Canada will acknowledge it to them as well. Therefore, the whole freight rate structure upon which Canadian agriculture is very dependent will be part of that negotiation and that so-called new reduction of subsidies about which the Government of Canada is talking.

Let me give a further example. The Government says that it will once again defend supply-management. However, if we consider the free trade agreement, we realize that when the quotas are removed and the tariff is reduced, one of the fundamental ingredients of a supply management system is pulled away.

Miss Carney: You are wrong.

Mr. Axworthy: How is it possible to organize supply management when you remove the kind of regulator by which other cheaper goods can come in and compete with your own supply system? The Government does not seem to understand most matters dealing with trade. The country was much better off when the Minister was away from the trade negotiations. The fact is that that subsidy arrangement with which we are now dealing in the tariff area is a frontal attack upon the supply-management system. That is very clearly seen in the free trade agreement and is something with which we are going to have to cope. It is not going to be part of the Canadian agricultural proposal? Is that what the Minister means? If she does not, she should spell it out much more effectively.

• (1520)

Let me give you another example, Mr. Speaker. We have under the free trade agreement a proposal dealing with the total reductions of the mark-ups on American wines. That does not include European wines which are the largest agricultural export commodity of the European Common Market. We are going to give the Americans lower access but we are not going to give it to the Europeans whose first response will be a challenge under the most favoured nation principle of GATT.

How can one provide a discriminatory ruling in respect of its major agricultural product and then try to get the Europeans to reduce their other kinds of barriers? The Government walks around with two right feet, continually stumbling over them. It does not know what it is doing. All it is doing is putting out a statement that is designed more to confuse and contradict than it is to give any clear explanation.

We challenge the Minister. We want to see more specifically what it is the Government is putting on the table; what kinds of tariffs, what kinds of subsidies, what kinds of programs, so that Canadian farmers will not be greeted with the same kind of fear and apprehension that met them two weeks ago when the Minister negotiated a so-called free trade agreement that will put agriculture in jeopardy.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in representing my Party's response to the Minister's statement on the multilateral rounds through GATT, I would like to make a couple of observations this afternoon.

First, I want to congratulate the Minister for initiating this multilateral series of agreements and negotiations. It is a policy decision that I wish she and her Government had adhered to in the past couple of years. Multilateral agreements make much more sense for a country the size of Canada with the kinds of trading relations we have developed over the years. I think they will be much more productive in the long run. At least I certainly hope they will be much more productive than the bilateral agreements she and her colleagues came to just last week.

I note that the Minister takes some pride in the number of times the Government has raised the question of agricultural trade at the various international forums; the Cairn's Round, the Uruguay Round, the Venice Summit and the Commonwealth meeting. At all of those meetings, agriculture was mentioned.

This gives farmers some heart, but they still note that after more than two years of these kinds of meetings there is still no movement toward a basic resolution of the problem, which is basically a problem initiated by two of the largest grain traders in the world, the European Economic Community and the United States of America. The former had introduced a relatively modest, in today's terms, system of exporting grains at lower prices than they were being sold for within the European Economic Community. That in turn drew the ire of the United States, and some other competitors, of course, but the response of the United States is the one that has hurt us, and all other grain exporters, with the ultimate harm being done to exporters of meats, because it is very difficult to compete in a meat market where the extremely cheap subsidized grains are part of the input of the finishing of that meat.

The response of the U.S. was one of simply lowering what it called its loan rate, which has a habit of becoming the price for world grain. It would be very simple to change that decision made by the United States, and simply reverse it, by raising the loan rate by $1.50. Most farmers producing grains for export in the world right now would be able to come close to meeting their costs, but the U.S. refuses to do this. It chooses instead to use its treasury to pay its farmers instead of demanding that price from the market. The multilateral approach under GATT, while I must say I admire it, has some very large shortcomings in this particular set of initiatives which I think all farmers recognize, particularly if they are exporters of grains.

The GATT round includes 94 countries but does not include as full participants the U.S.S.R. or the People's Republic of China, the two largest grains importers in the world. As well they are two of the largest producers of grain in the world.

Miss Carney: China is it?

Mr. Althouse: Yes, China and Russia are the two largest producers. While China has observer status, as I interpret it, from outside, it appears the U.S.A. is trying to keep the U.S.S.R. from participating in these talks. I am quite concerned about that because it brings back memories from ten or 15 years ago of the United States trying to set the rules for the international grain talks that were going on at that time. The Americans had a firm idea in their heads about who should be considered producers and who should be considered consumers.

In the American view, Japan and the European Economic Community should be on the consumer side forever and ever, amen; the United States and other select groups of countries would be considered to be producers, and there would be certain rules and regulations for the two sides to take part, and that would be how the world markets would be carved up forever after. Unfortunately, the U.S. assessment was wrong. I think its assessment of keeping the U.S.S.R. out of these discussions is equally wrong. It was only a short period of time before both Japan and the EEC became exporters or had export capabilities in the production of grain. There has to be in these rounds recognition that countries do have the capability to switch from being consumers to being producers and exporters of grains.

I hold that both China and Russia have excellent opportunities to become surplus producers, given a climate where subsidies in the more developed countries disappear. I remind the House, because I think a lot of Members are not aware of this, that the U.S.S.R produces grain on a cost-of-production basis. Its state farms have to price the grain out at their actual costs. That is not the case for the production in Canada or in the United States. We sell the grain for what it will bring and it is usually below actual production costs.

As long as the Russians are functioning that way, they are very rational economic beings. They purchase grain because it is cheaper for them to purchase it than it is for them to produce it. But as soon as we and the other so-called more developed countries drop our subsidization program and stop using our tax dollars to subsidize the export of grains, those countries will become competitive and they have the capability to increase production. As soon as prices go up they will indeed increase production. So any agreement, whether under the GATT or as a special grains agreement, that ignores the Soviet Union is doomed to failure.

I think the program announced today does not provide us with very many details. I thank the Minister, however, for having made the effort. I think we are still awaiting an announcement and the tabling of documents from the Department of Agriculture, which has been doing an in depth analysis of what programs are now being provided in this country which would not meet the criteria that Canada has put forward at international meetings. These programs should be tabled for our review. It is not clear from this statement whether the Special Grains Program of last year will be permitted to continue this year. Farmers want to know, as quickly as possible, whether that $2.6 billion to $3 billion will be made available to them this year. Their very lives depend on it.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock there were two minutes left in the question and comment period of the speech of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). Are there any questions or comments?

Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this Bill because it has serious implications for the future of our country. Certainly, over the years the whole immigration process and refugee designation has become so cumbersome that we have had no idea what we were actually doing as far as immigration was concerned.

I know that this Bill was put forward in an attempt to straighten out some of those issues, but instead it only adds to the inequality and the injustices that have already stayed in the system. When we look at some of the main thoughts of Bill C-55, we must look at the fact that there is a denial of rights to be heard. That is in direct contravention of the Accord that we have signed, which in Article 33 states that "no country shall expel or return a refugee in any manner whatsoever to the frontiers of territories where their life or freedom would be threatened on account of their race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular group, or social opinion". This means that when we do not allow a refugee to be heard, we are in direct contravention of the treaty that we signed.

In 1976, the Immigration Act was such that often officials were illegally turning people back without having heard them. When a stop was put to that, instead of this system becoming streamlined and efficient, there was a horrendous backlog. In an attempt to rid ourselves of this backlog, we have in front of the House Bill C-55.

Unfortunately, Bill C-55 does not get rid of the backlog. It gets rid of genuine refugees. That is the great concern that I have. Not only do people not have a right to be heard, but they have no time to prepare themselves for the hearing. There is no higher authority of appeal that has always been there. When we asked for an amendment in order that at least the chairman of the review committee could act in the next stage of appeal, that was refused. It seems to me that what we are looking at is something that traditionally is not what we would want as a society.

Unfortunately, there are many Canadians who do not believe that this type of thing is happening. They think that we are opening up and streamlining our system. It is important that we take a good look at this Bill and recognize that we are saying, "Sorry, if your life is in danger, if you are fleeing, you cannot come to Canada unless you have a visa, unless you have gone to your travel agent and acquired a ticket and you arrive here as a tourist". Basically, that is what we are saying.

When we recognize no safe third country, and look at what is a safe third country, very often we will not allow people to be admitted to Canada from another country. We have no assurances that those countries will keep them for a hearing. We are only saying that we will not hear them. We are really saying that we do not value their lives, therefore, it is all right for them to go back where they can continue to be persecuted and very often executed.

That is a tragedy and a mark on the very forward-looking attempt by the former Prime Minister, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), when he raised the quotas of the Southeast Asian refugees and had them coming into this country. When looking back at that experience of almost 10 years, we will recognize that those people contributed to the economy of this country, to its character, to its culture, and certainly to its future.

It does not take very long for us to do a quick summary of some of the people who came at that time. They went through dire circumstances. They did not have legitimate papers. They did not necessarily come from safe third countries, some of which we would designate today as safe third countries. We opened our gates and welcomed them. They were privately sponsored and they have done very well. They have given Canada a whole sense and thread of culture that previously we did not have in the fabric of our country. I think it has been very important.

That will not happen again. What will happen if this Bill goes through is, unfortunately, something that has been on the agenda of the bureaucrats of the Department for many years. They will be the ones who will decide offshore who is and who is not a refugee. They will decide who is the best economic type of person to let into our country. Through their bureaucratic policies, they will decide what is or what is not humane. That is not the manner in which we have made decisions in the past.

Because there has been a backlog in our refugee designation, all we have done is to bend to what they have been attempting to do for approximately 20 years. Now they are successful. They are the ones who will decide the future of this country, as far as immigration is concerned. In looking not only at refugees but at regular immigrants who wish to bring in or sponsor a relative, if there has been some official decision made, the whole process of appeal is so cumbersome and lengthy that they will never get into the country. Those are the people who are now complaining that they have been waiting. They will not cost the country any money because they are willing to sponsor their relatives and willing to sign the commitment for the people coming in. Certainly, because there has been an infrastructure of family and relatives there, they will be the solid type of people whom we wish to have in our country in the future. We are eliminating a lot of this.

We are putting issues to a very arbitrary type of decision-making when we say that, if a refugee is heard, he has to be heard very quickly, with no time for preparation. They are very fearful of what their conditions are, very often they are not knowledgeable in either of our official languages and, therefore, they have no way of being able to be heard legitimately, whether or not their lives are in danger or they are being persecuted.

We must also keep in mind the fact that we are only taking in approximately 5 per cent of the world refugees in the western world. When we are taking such a small number of refugees in the western world, it seems a tragedy that we are being selective and arbitrary about our decisions. What we are saying is that we do not really care whether or not people's lives are in danger. What we really want is to look at people who are in trouble and say to them that it is not their lives that we are worried about, it is what type of skills they have and what occupation they will have in our country. In that case, we may let them in, but then again we may not. If they are already here, they will be heard quickly. We will never be able to hear them out thoroughly and, therefore, very often their attempt at designation as refugee will not be heard.

Not only is this unfair and unjust, but it is very un-Canadian. It is not the type of thing that our country has responded to in the past. If we look at the refugees that we have opened our doors to, it has always been a positive experience. At times we have become arbitrary and turned it over to the officials of the Department, which unfortunately was what the decision-making was in 1939.

If we read None Was Too Many, which was documentation of the whole process of immigration at that time, we find that bureaucrats in the Department placed an over-emphasis on their decision-making power. With that kind of power they arbitrarily turned people away from our shores. They were sent back to the gas chambers, and we said that it was okay. That has been a blot on our history.

However, we can look back to the wonderful experience of opening our doors to the Hungarians, to the southeast Asians, and to many other refugees. Each time we did that, Canada had a spurt of growth and certainly its mosaic was enriched. We also had a good feeling about ourselves because were were putting our hands out to our brothers and sisters around the world. We were saying that we were not a country which only makes bureaucratic decisions but we are a country which is capable of looking at the whole.

When we signed the international agreement we were complimented by the United Nations. At that time we were told that Canada was in the lead and that Canada was showing generosity. What have we done since? We have contravened the agreement so that the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has criticized us.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is not true, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Dewar: I am sorry, but I have certainly received some correspondence to that effect.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Well, your correspondence is false. That is not true.

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I think I will respond to the questions after, but that is the kind of correspondence I have received.

Over the years we have worked hard to ensure that our reputation would be sustained. I think the Hon. Member who is saying that that is not true took a very personal and active part in ensuring that we would have that kind of generous policy. It grieves and upsets me to say that everyone has been caught in this and that they have succumbed to bureaucratic decisions.

We have talked about the kind of Canada we want when discussing a variety of other Bills. However, surely the whole essence of that is how we treat people individually. If we do not start looking at people as part of the human family, we do not understand the human family or what our planet is all about. It seems to me that this Bill contravenes the goals and visions of our country over the years.

We will be told by our children and our grandchildren that it was because of this kind of Bill that people lost their lives. That is not the reputation we want to build for ourselves. That is not the reputation we want for this country. We have lots of land. We have lots of resources. We have the ability to be humane.

Even though our immigration numbers have been high, we have not met the quotas year after year. We have often been short. We have been short for the last two years or three years. We will probably continue to be short. If we pass a Bill like this one, we certainly will not be able to meet the quotas of people who are trying to save their lives, people who are escaping.

It is important to look at the demography of the country in very practical terms, at what is happening to our birth rate, and at the recognition that we need to increase immigration to maintain our population. We need that population if we are to develop a buoyant and vibrant economy. However, if we continue to bring in restrictive Bills such as this one, we might not even be getting the kind of people we want, because Canada will soon be known to be a country which does not look generously and humanely at people, but as a country which looks at its own economic objectives with no sense of what are the rights of persons to survival.

I am very concerned that we are continuing to consider this Bill and that some of the amendments we have put forward were not accepted. I think they were very slight amendments. We were hoping that they would soften the Bill so that maybe a few lives would be saved which will not now be saved. We recognize that there are people who probably are not qualified to make decisions on whether or not a refugee is a refugee, who are not qualified for refugee designation. However, over and above that is the fact that the hearing and the information will be so short and incomplete that even if they were qualified it would be very difficult for them to make a good decision.

We know some of the things that are happening in Central America now. We know that the United States has closed its doors on refugees. I remind the House that we are only talking about 5 per cent of refugees who are coming into the western world. We realize that maybe the lives of people coming to Canada from Central America can be saved.

According to the Bill, if they do not have their papers, their visas, or their travel agent tickets, we will say "no" and send them back to the United States. The United States has said that it will not keep them, so they will be sent back to where they have been tortured and persecuted. That is not the kind of Bill at which we should be looking or of which we should be proud. We should be ashamed of this Bill, and we should not want to see it expedited.

We recognize the backlog in terms of refugee designation. Clearly something needed to be done. When they attempted to straighten that out, what happened was that the refugee designation system became backlogged because they allowed bureaucrats to make decisions and they did not put in place a decision which streamlined the system and provided adequate time, resources, and staff to ensure that they were heard.

It is no secret that for many years the Department has said that it knew better than anyone else who should come to Canada. With this Bill they are saying that the only people who will be able to designate refugees are our officials who decide what camps to go to, to pick out the cream of the crop, and to send them here. That is a dreadful direction for us to take both in immigration and in refugee designation. It seems to me that there is a better way to do things. We could streamline. We could have two parallel systems, one that is identifying and designating refugees and another which is looking at straight immigration. We also need to increase the family reunification program and our resources for refugee designation.

It is not an impossible task, but what they are doing is just taking 10 backward steps in attempting to amend the Immigration Act with this Bill. I urge Hon. Members of the House to defeat the Bill because it is not the kind of thing of which any of us will ever be proud. It is the kind of thing that can leave us with a legacy where people will say: "What were they thinking of? Did they have no sense of justice and humanity? When the world was getting into a turmoil, what did Canada do?" They will say that Canada restricted its immigration Bill so badly that it was literally impossible for refugees to have their lives saved by coming to this country.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) on a speech which I think was a very powerfully reasoned and moral plea. I think the moral issue she presented is right and was very strongly stated.

Although it is only a few months since she was elected in Hamilton Mountain, I know that she spent a good deal of time talking with the people there before she was elected and that she has been in close touch with them since she was elected. I would like to ask her what she finds about the opinion of the people of Hamilton Mountain or anywhere else that she wishes to mention.

My point is that we were told by the Government that Canadian people all want this harsh law. We have been told that groups like the churches, refugee aid groups, and the Bar Association representing 35,000 lawyers who opposed the Bill were only special interest or pressure groups speaking against the majority of the public.

I would be interested to know what the Hon. Member has found about the expression of opinion from the public in her particular area of jurisdiction.

• (1550)

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I have been to meetings in my riding of Hamilton Mountain. I have had correspondence from groups right across the country. I have had calls from individuals in Hamilton Mountain. The general thrust is that people want to have a fair Immigration Act. They have heard the debate and looked at the Bill and recognized that this is not a fair Bill. It is a Bill that will discriminate against refugee designation. Certainly the consensus that I have heard in my riding from the people of Hamilton Mountain, from some of the collective groups, the church groups, the local labour council, individual parishes and congregations is that we should speak out against the Bill. They would like to stop it because they think it is a backward step and one which will give us an international reputation of not being the just and generous society which they like to think we are.

I think it would be less than responsible if we did not speak out against the Bill. The information I get from the people who have elected me to represent them is that Canada needs a fair and just immigration Bill. This we do not have. Some people have been generously wanting to sponsor family members, but they have been unable to do that. They have wanted to sponsor refugees, but have been stopped from doing that. With the other Bill coming through, people could be charged for helping refugees and could be seen as being criminals in what they thought was an act of charity and love.

I have no hesitation in being able to say to the Hon. Member that the people of my riding and in the district in which my riding is, Hamilton Wentworth, have organized meetings, as have the churches. They have made a plea to us to speak out against the Bill. I spent about an hour in my office just before we came into the House today responding to correspondence asking me to to please do something about this Bill which they are against. It seems to me that we are representing the people who elected us to speak for them as well as for the potential future immigrants who will not now be able to come to this country.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned church groups in her riding. Were they of one particular religious orientation or do they include non-Christian groups? Did they indicate a knowledge of what is in the Bill so that the Member felt they knew what they were opposing, or were they only speaking generally for fairness?

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, the churches, including synagogues and Muslim groups as well as Christian groups, have studied the Bill. They have looked at the lack of a safe third country provision as well as a lack of a provision for a just and adequate hearing. They recognize that there is no avenue for a higher appeal. The know the Bill very well. They fear that there is a sort of popular approach to the introduction of the Bill. People thought that it would be harmless and it would not be as obstructive as it actually is. I think church congregations have been very successful in getting that concern out. We are hearing from the individual citizens now as well as from the collective groups. It seems to me that not only have they studied the Bill but they are doing a good job at educating people around them about what the Bill is all about. I have come across people who at first said they supported the Bill but when they got the Bill and started to look into it they came out in great opposition. The more and more people know about the Bill the more concerned they are about it.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned the matter of no safe third country. We know that particular phrase has been removed from the Bill.

Will the Hon. Member comment on the fact that the United Nations representative came to the committee to speak about the Bill and agreed with one of the government questioners that the UN does not charge Canada with contravening the Convention? But it was pointed out by a later witness that, of course, the UN does not charge us with contravention because there is no such thing as enforcement. There is no policeman to take us into court or put us in jail over this Convention.

We have all seen the four page letter which was sent, which matter was reiterated in greater detail before the committee. There was a demand that there be a guarantee against refoulement of anyone who might be a refugee. One of the questions raised is whether the principle that a person be sent back to a country considered to be in compliance with Article 33 of the Convention is satisfied given the fact that it does not guarantee that such a country will give a person a hearing which Canada denied.

Does the Hon. Member consider that, by failing to ensure that either Canada or the country of departure give a refugee claimant a hearing, we have in fact refused to meet the request of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on that point? Second, when people had studied the Bill they asked for an adequate appeal system. As Members know, no change was made in that respect. Would the Hon. Member consider on that point that we fail to meet the requests? I ask these questions because the Hon. Member got some very high priced heckling from across the aisle from a Member who said that the correspondence was false. I think the heckling from across the street was false. I would like the Hon. Member to make her comment.

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, there is no question in my mind, even though we took out the no safe third country concept, that if Canada does not give an adequate hearing, and we have no guarantee that an adequate hearing will be had from the country to which the person is returned, we are contravening the agreement. Some of the rationale I have heard in the debate in the House of Commons is that it is not our fault that the other country will not give people a hearing. We have already established that precedent by saying that we as a country will not do it, so why should we expect somebody else to do it. I certainly do not think that we met the request from the United Nations High Commissioner. What was being asked was to make sure that we did not contravene the convention in that way.

As well, the appeal process I have described is not there. We even asked for something as minor as to have the chairman of the refugee commission review the process, but that was refused. It seems that we literally do not have an appeal process per se, certainly not the type of appeal process asked for by the High Commissioner. There is no question in my mind that we can be held up for criticism in that we did not meet the conditions. After having signed the agreement we have obviously said we really do not care about it, that if somebody else does not care about it, that is their problem. We are not doing anything to show any leadership about any kind of moral commitment to the resolution of a world problem on which the western world is not going overboard, but for the little bit we do take responsibility we are not taking a lot of moral responsibility. I do think it is a shame.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine)—International Monetary Fund—Finance Minister's message to Washington meeting; the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Pharmaceutical industry—Profits of drug manufacturing companies— Research work—Request for inclusion of guarantees in legislation; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Status of women— Report on battered women—Lack of space in transition houses.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to enter the debate. The constituency I represent has for 100 years been the place in which new immigrants and refugees who came to western Canada first settled. To the people who came from eastern Europe before World War I, the Ukrainians, the Poles, the Germans, the Jews and the Czechs, to mention just a few of the groups, in recent years have been added people from Italy, Portugal, the Philippines, Hong Kong, Viet Nam, Central America, Africa—it would take all my time to list all of the countries from which people have come.

The record of Canada with respect to the entry of immigrants and refugees prior to and during World War II is one of which none of us can be proud. Any Member of Parliament who has read that very important book, None is Too Many, written by Irving Abella, will know how impossible it was for Jewish refugees to enter Canada after the seizing of power in Germany by Hitler and how not only the Prime Minister of the day but indeed the senior officials of the Immigration Department worked so hard to keep out those and other refugees.

Things changed after World War II. We have seen the movement into Canada of several million people, either as immigrants or as refugees. After the end of World War II, we saw tens of thousands of people, people who had lived in the countries of eastern Europe and who had been uprooted and pushed into western Europe as slave labourers during World War II who did not want to go back to those countries which are now communist dominated, come to Canada. Later, at the time of the revolt in Hungary, we saw thousands of Hungarians come to Canada. After the difficulties in Poland, thousands of people came from Poland. Then came Asians from Uganda, Chileans and Vietnamese. Tens of thousands of people have come here as a result of political uprisings, unrest and revolutions and have adjusted to Canada and made important and useful contributions to Canada.

The Conservative Government does not seem to understand what happened. There is no better example of the failure of the Government to understand how the refugee problems developed and how we should deal with them than the way in which this Government reacted to the two most recent situations. A little more than a year ago, a boatload of Tamils arrived on our shores. They were greeted and welcomed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself. A year later, a boatload of Sikhs came, but this time they were greeted by the Government with hostility and were condemned as queue-jumpers.

The Government does not know what to do. It has no principles, it has no policies, and because it is having difficulties, it is being manipulated by senior people in the Department who have always been antagonistic to immigrants coming from what they consider to be the wrong places, from—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is an absolute falsehood, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), if he wants to speak on this or any other issue, would make his own speech and not interrupt with his intemperate remarks.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I wish you would tell the truth.

Mr. Orlikow: It seems to me that as the Conservative Party declines in the polls, the Secretary of State for External Affairs becomes more vituperative and more antagonistic.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are out of date.

Mr. Orlikow: The Hon. Minister says I am out of date. There is no evidence that that is a fact.

The Secretary of State has suggested that when I say that this Bill was drafted by senior officials in the Department, by the bureaucrats, I am wrong.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is not what you said and you know it. The record stands and you were not speaking the truth.

Mr. Orlikow: The record stands. I will give the interjections of the Hon. Minister the consideration to which they are due, and that is zero.

Let us put on the record the facts. The Bill we are debating has been opposed by more groups representing more people than any Bill that I have ever heard debated in this Parliament in my more than 25 years here. Let me list briefly the groups which do oppose this Bill. The Canadian Bar Association, not the most radical organization, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the Canadian Council of Churches, which represents 11 of the major non-Catholic church groups in Canada, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Canadian Labour Congress, and many others—

Mr. Malone: Plus the NDP Party.

Mr. Orlikow: The NDP and the Liberals. The former Conservative Chairman of the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration sat through the hearings and came to the conclusion, based on the evidence, that this was a bad Bill, so he has been removed as the chairman of the committee.

Rabbi Gunther Plaut was commissioned by the former Liberal Government and made a report containing a number of very sensible proposals, all of which have been ignored. The parliamentary committee on which a vast majority of the members were Conservative Members of Parliament joined with the then Chairman, a Conservative Member from Quebec, and made a number of very useful, workable, progressive suggestions about what should be in the Bill. Those suggestions have been almost completely ignored.

The UN High Commission on Refugees has said that this Bill violates the agreement that we signed on this matter. All these groups and individuals have been urging reform of the present slow and bureaucratic refugee determination process which they say fails to recognize genuine refugees.

I say as I said a few moments ago that I cannot believe that this Bill as it is before us today could have been drafted by anybody but senior Department officials. I repeat, I believe that many of them have very definite ideas as to who they think should be able to come to this country and they are not happy with what has happened in recent years with the large number of people coming from countries from which we never permitted or encouraged people to come either as immigrants or refugees.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is false and cowardly.

Mr. Orlikow: Again, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is interjecting.

• (1610)

Let me put on the record some of the views on this Bill held by non-political organizations. First, we have World Relief Canada which serves as the refugee resettlement arm of the Evangelical Fellowship of Canada, an association of 23 evangelical Protestant denominations. They strongly urge our Government not to pass Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 as originally proposed.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member has been making assertions about the motives of public servants who are not here to defend themselves. He is doing that in breach of all the traditions of a parliamentary democracy. He is also seeking to associate with those condemnations, which I can only call cowardly, various organizations which might oppose the Bill. Is he seriously suggesting that the organizations he is listing join with him in attributing base motives to public servants who cannot come here and defend themselves?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, of course I have not said that. I am not suggesting it. I am not implying it. When the Right Hon. Minister reads Hansard tomorrow he will see that I am quoting precisely what those groups said. They said nothing about the motives or actions of senior public servants. I said that and I take responsibility for it and I believe it. If the Right Hon. Minister would take the time to read the book by Professor Abella he would see that that was the attitude of senior public servants in the period before World War II. I suggest there are still some of those around at the present time.

Let me read from a statement made by the Canadian Jewish Congress which says:

> As Jews, we ask you this time not for ourselves but for all those who arrive at our shores seeking refuge . . . (we) implore you not to close the gates by enacting this seriously flawed piece of legislation.

Or the Canadian Bar Association which represents most of the lawyers in this country. They were very clear in their rejection of this Bill. They said:

> Section 3 of the Immigration Act sets out our objectives; the objectives with respect to refugees are: 3(12), to fulfil Canada's international legal obligations with respect to refugees and uphold its humanitarian tradition with respect to the displaced and persecuted.

They reject this Bill. They call on Parliament not to enact this Bill.

I say to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs that if he will not listen to members of the NDP, representatives of the major church organizations, the Canadian Labour Congress, or the Canadian Bar Association, who is he listening to? By a process of elimination I can only come to the view that he and his Government are listening to senior representatives in the Department. Why does he not look at the record of that Department? We had a movement to this country of several thousand Portuguese who claimed refugee status because they were supposedly being persecuted as Jehovah's Witnesses. That was a false claim. It took the Department months before it woke up to what was happening and put through a regulation requiring Portuguese to obtain a visa before they came to Canada.

We saw a similar situation involving a large number of people from Turkey. During the period of time when there was great violence in Turkey and people were being murdered in the hundreds, we had virtually no people from there coming here claiming refugee status. Over the last couple of years, when things were relatively quiet in Turkey, suddenly we had hundreds of them claiming refugee status. Again the Department was, to say the least, slow.

I have no complaints about the people in the Department who I have worked with. I have had requests, as I think every Member who represents an urban constituency has had, from constituents asking for assistance in getting their relatives into Canada. I have had nothing but the utmost co-operation from people in the Department in both Winnipeg and Ottawa. I am not suggesting for a moment that the majority of the people in the Department are not doing a good job, not following the law or interpreting the law as they should be in a sympathetic way. What I am saying, and I believe it to be true, is that there are people in important positions who have never accepted the change in attitude—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Perhaps you should name them.

Mr. Orlikow: —which took place—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If you had any courage, you would.

Mr. Rodriguez: Certainly this Bill was not drafted by the Minister.

Mr. Orlikow: Of course I cannot name them, but I can look at the Bill—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): This is scurrilous.

Mr. Rodriguez: Look at history.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, fortunately I do not have to satisfy the Right Hon. Minister.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You just make blanket accusations and do not back them up with any names. That is shameful.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I have to name names. I think it is the responsibility of the Minister who brought forward this Bill to tell us by whom it was drafted.

As I indicated, virtually all of the important organizations representing millions of Canadians have been critical of the Bill. They have been critical not only of certain provisions and clauses, they have said very clearly and specifically that unless there are major amendments it should be defeated. I prefer to stand with those groups and organizations than with the Government which brought forward this Bill.

If the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs, who I presume had very little to do with the drafting of this Bill, or the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) or the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) want to tell us who drafted the Bill and whose ideas these clauses were based on, then we can decide whether I have been unfair or whether in fact the suggestions I have made as to the origins of the clauses in this Bill are correct. I would be very happy to have the Minister, now or at some point when the committee meets, give us an explanation as to what happened.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Show a little courage, name the names.

Mr. Orlikow: I intend to vote against this Bill, as I have indicated right from the beginning. As I have indicated right from the beginning, I think this is one of the worst Bills with which Parliament has had to deal in many years. It is unfair to refugees. It will be used against many people who, I believe, have the right to come to this country. It will be used to keep out many people who, if permitted to come to this country, would make a contribution as have the hundreds of thousands of people who have come to this country since the end of World War II, either as immigrants or refugees.

• (1620)

I see a tremendous change in the population of my city. There are people of all races, all colours, and all religions there. People like the former Justice Clyne of British Columbia have criticized and attacked what has happened since World War II. They believe that this will destroy the country. I believe, however, that permitting people to come to this country, either as immigrants or refugees, from every continent in the world since World War II has added a great deal to our country. It has helped to make this country a much better place in which to live than it ever was before. Because I believe that this Bill will lessen the number of people whom we permit to come to this country, either as immigrants or refugees, I intend to oppose it.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, I have a number of comments to make. The rhetoric I have been listening to in this debate is starting to get to me. We seem to have overlooked the facts and it may be interesting to go back and look at some of them.

I have heard no mention of the major problem involved with the recent landing on the foggy shores of Nova Scotia of a large group of illegal aliens. That is what they should be called. The terms "refugees", "boat people" or whatever are only euphemisms for people who have deliberately broken the laws of Canada and landed on our shores without any right whatsoever. There are thousands of people throughout the world who are waiting for visas in order to come to Canada legitimately and honestly. Illegal aliens attempt to jump the queue.

When the current Immigration Act was drafted in 1976 anyone in Canada, whether here legally or illegally, was given the right to a determination of their claim by the Minister and to a redetermination before the Immigration Appeal Board of any claim rejected by the Minister. Quite frankly, that was not a bad system.

These were not simply assurances or administrative arrangements, but were rights established in the law which made it impossible to remove anyone until these rights were honoured. The current system began to break down in the early 1980s due to an unprecedented number of refugee claims which, at one point, numbered over 1,000 a week. That was caused by worldwide events beyond Canada's control. Many of these people were claiming refugee status when in fact they were economic migrants.

That is an abuse of Canada's generosity because it constitutes an attempt to remain illegally in Canada. Some of the bona fide refugees, as well, are people from refugee-producing countries who had an opportunity to find a safe haven in another developed country before they came to Canada. Unfortunately, nothing can be done to keep such people out of our very complex process until the Immigration Act is changed.

This Bill provides us with the tools to deal with the high volumes of claimants we are experiencing. It introduces three features which are not found in the current legislation. The Member has totally ignored those three features.

First, individuals arriving from countries that have been designated as safe third countries by the Cabinet will be returned to those countries without being allowed to claim refugee status in Canada. Second, manifestly unfounded claims are refugee claims without any merit because they are based on difficulties not at all related to the Geneva Convention. Third, there will be a streamlined determination process. For persons whose claims appear to have some substance there will be a single level of review by an independent quasi-judicial tribunal and an appeal by leave to the Federal Court of Canada. This will be completed in a few months rather than in several years as is now the case.

The new refugee determination system will offer a simple, high-quality procedure moving us clearly away from the existing cumbersome system of review and appeal. It will provide effective defence against abuse and, thereby, prevent manipulation.

Does this mean that I am against refugees any more than is the Hon. Member? Of course not. I believe that legitimate individuals who, for political rather than criminal reasons, could face death if returned to their country of origin should be allowed to stay in Canada provided that they are prepared to be good citizens of Canada and to work for this country. This is a moral and responsible attitude espoused by the NDP with which I totally agree. If there is real danger to individuals, of course they should be allowed to stay.

Nine out of ten refugees are economic refugees seeking a better life in Canada. Who can blame them? However, entry to Canada must be legal and achieved in an organized and proper manner. Illegal aliens make a mockery of Canada. That is why this legislation is necessary and should be passed.

The 1976 Liberal Government Immigration Act was a humanitarian and charitable attempt to open Canada to help the rest of the world. Unfortunately, it has been used and abused by the desperate and has been overwhelmed. In the interests of all Canadians it must be changed substantially. Why the NDP does not understand that, I do not understand. In any event, let us get on with passing this Bill and cleaning up immigration in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) will be given equal time to respond.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member and wondered what he was talking about.

Mr. Holtmann: You did not understand?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, if the Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) wants to speak, which I doubt that he can, he should make his own speech and not make interjections during my speech. If the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake can read, which I doubt that he can, and looks at Hansard tomorrow, he will see that I never said that the 1976 legislation was good legislation. I never said that all the people who come to Canada claiming to be refugees are genuine refugees. I did say that this Bill does not do the things which the Government says it wants to do. I did say that many groups, which I listed, made suggestions on how the Bill should be changed so that the people who claim to be refugees can be dealt with quickly—rather than taking the years which it now takes—fairly, humanely, and honestly, which these organizations say that this Bill does not achieve.

I will ask the Member who made that statement a question. Maybe he will take the time to make his own speech. What was the difference between the Tamils who came here a year ago and were greeted as genuine refugees and promised humane, generous treatment by the Prime Minister, and the Sihks who came in the same way? I am not saying that either group should have been permitted to come here.

• (1630)

The present law does not permit a quick, fair and humane judgment. I suggest to the Hon. Member who criticizes me, the New Democratic Party and, implicitly all the groups who opposed this Bill, that he or the Prime Minister should tell us what the difference is between these two groups. If this Bill had been in place, would the Prime Minister have greeted one group generously and humanely and called the other group queue jumpers, as he did? If this Bill had been in effect, what judgment would have been made? I think the Government should be explaining this, rather than us explaining the inadequacy of this Bill.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief.

An Hon. Member: Good.

Mr. Young: If they listen, they may in fact welcome my remarks.

I spoke at some length at second reading of this Bill and therefore do not feel that I need to take the full 20 minutes allotted to me at this point in the debate.

My remarks will be based on some comments made by another Member with respect to this Bill. I think his comments were more in reference to Bill C-84 than Bill C-55, the legislation with which we are dealing today.

Mr. Friesen: You heard what he said, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Young: I heard what I said, Mr. Speaker. I do not know if you did. I believe it is absolutely true that part of the confusion that has arisen about this issue is the difference between immigrants and refugees, particularly in reference to those unfortunate people who landed on the shores of Nova Scotia in the summer.

No one would pretend to even argue that they were immigrants in the ordinary sense, nor would they probably be covered by this legislation. In fact, as I understand it, Bill C-84 itself was directed toward those people who landed on the shores of Nova Scotia during the summer months.

I suggest that the Member's comments only add to the confusion that exits in the country and perhaps to the misconception that those individuals somehow or other had denied legitimate immigration claimants access to Canada because they were queue-jumpers over legitimate immigrants. I do not think that is a fair way to characterize this problem.

I want to comment on the excellent work of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), as well as on the time he spent on this Bill both in the House and in the committee. It was a great help to members of my caucus, and I know that while government Members may disagree with him, I am sure they appreciated his contribution.

I have seldom seen any piece of legislation that has been so roundly condemned and opposed by groups and individuals who have been concerned with refugee and immigration matters over the years.

I understand that there were some 40 witnesses who appeared before the committee dealing with this Bill during some forty-four and a half hours of testimony before the committee. All of those 40 committees were in opposition to what the Government was proposing. I am told that there were probably five witnesses before the committee who supported what the Government was proposing, but most of them were officials from the Minister's Department and one was a representative of the airlines, which I believe have their own vested interest in the outcome of this Bill.

I want to read a letter concerning Bill C-55 that was circulated to concerned MP's by a Mr. Donald Anderson, General Secretary of the Canadian Council of Churches. I want to read it because he says what I would like to say much better. He begins:

> We appreciate government work to try to improve Bill C-55. Unfortunately our deep concerns remain. How can we know if a person claiming to be a refugee needs our help if we do not hear their problems? Each person claiming to be a refugee should have a right to have their individual circumstances assessed and their case decided on its merits before competent independent decision-makers. To us, this is the intent of the Convention and Protocol.

He is talking about the United Nations Convention and Protocol to which Canada is a signatory. He goes on to say:

> Immigration programs may legitimately choose who comes on humanitarian grounds and may set priorities on countries they may come from. We understand the attractiveness of this approach. Bill C-55 provides for exclusion of people not on the basis of their individual circumstances, but by a political cabinet decision that the country they transited before arriving in Canada is deemed to adhere to Clause 33 of the Convention, that is, it is deemed the transit country will not return the person in any manner whatsoever to a country where he or she may face persecution. This is a far shot from our obligation to give an individual who arrives in Canada a fair hearing of his or her claim to need our protection.
> Also, there is no meaningful appeal to any of the critical decisions made which can remove claimants from Canada in proposed inquiries and hearings.

He concludes by saying:

> We cannot accept legislation which sets aside a claimant's right to just procedures in the name of administrative convenience. We urge you to reconsider, to abandon this Bill C-55 and to speedily replace it with one conforming with the principles of allowing every claimant a hearing on the merits and a meaningful appeal. There are alternative processes we can surely all support.

Most of the witnesses who appear before that committee, while recognizing that there was something wrong with Canada's immigration processes, also made suggestions on how Bill C-55 could become a more humane Bill, give more consideration to the needs of those individuals who wish to establish refugee status in Canada. Unfortunately, the majority on the committee rejected all of those suggestions that were put forward.

For example, World Relief Canada, which serves as the refugee resettlement arm of the Evangelical Fellowship of Canada, an association of 23 evangelical protestant denominations, strongly urged the Government not to pass Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 as they were originally proposed. Mr. Lorne Waldman of the Coalition for a Just Refugee and Immigration Policy said:

> We would like to ask you to remember in your deliberations the wider context of the refugee issue.
> We feel that Canada should play a role in pressing for peaceful solutions to conflicts in areas of the world that produce refugees.

• (1640)

In conclusion, I would simply say that I think it is unfortunate that the Government has resorted to extreme measures in reacting to what everyone admits is a problem, but which is not as big a problem as the Government is attempting to make it out to be. It is obvious that it is going to have the support of the majority of the House because it has the bodies, but I would honestly hope that at some point down the road the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) will review this policy and come up with something that is much more humane so that Canada can continue to enjoy the reputation we have managed to build up internationally with regard to our approach to refugees and to our immigration policy.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I was not going to give a speech, but I have been moved by what I heard. I thought I would just say a few words that I want to put on the record.

Here we are in the third week of October. This House was brought back on August 10. Why was the House brought back? Do you remember why we were brought back, Mr. Speaker? First, we were brought back because in fact we were being invaded. There was a sort of Asian phobia because the Sikhs had landed on the East Coast. I recall that atmosphere very well. The Government was finally going to show how decisive and tough it was. We heard comments like "queue-jumpers". This boatload of refugees who landed on our shores and claimed refugee status were queue jumpers. They were abusing the system and it was not fair. There was a big argument and the Government mixed up refugees and immigrants until the public could not make out the difference between refugees and immigrants. The Government brought us all back on August 10 and it brought in Bill C-84 which was concocted in the crypts of the bureaucrats here in Ottawa.

The Government got the sensitive Minister—and he understands what I mean when I say he is a sensitive Minister and should be a sensitive Minister—to bring in Bill C-84. And where is Bill C-84 now? It has not been passed as law and Canada has not been invaded. Canada still exists and Bill C-84 is hung up. But the Government decided that while we were here it was going to jam Bill C-55 through, and here it is. We are in third reading of Bill C-55 today. The Government also thought that while we were here it was going to get Bill C-22 passed, and we all know where Bill C-22 is today. It is keeping Bill C-84 company. They are warming each other up in the warm place with the red carpet and the majority of Liberals over there, God bless their souls.

I have to ask myself what kind of government it is that cannot even order its priorities and get its legislation through. What kind of leadership is it exhibiting? It is a government that, for example, could not bear to have the Chairman, its Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, depart from the Party line, having said it believes in the independence of committees? That man showed bravery in standing up in this House and condemning Bill C-84, as well as condemning Bill C-85. He did it publicly.

The Conservatives talk about queue jumping, and we have the case of Mr. Grossmann. It is unfortunate that the Sikhs who landed were not all teachers. It is too bad they did not teach the Prime Minister's children so they could have sent home a written message, because if ever there was an example of queue jumping, that was it. The Prime Minister's wife sent the note to the Prime Minister's Office, which sent it to the Minister responsible for immigration, and he promptly jumped to obey. He asked: "How high?" With special dispatch he sent it down the line of bureaucrats. And do you know what the bureaucrats did? They broke the rules because he was under a status. He had a work permit which did not come to an end until September 30, 1987, yet they were processing him for another status, a landed immigrant status. So they broke their own rules. You want to tell me, Mr. Speaker, that that is not a sign of privilege? I would not want to say that the colour of his skin was white. I would not want to say that, but I would want to suggest that maybe I could think about it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is shameful, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: We have heard about people coming here because of economics, not really being refugees. I could think of other situations. There was a hockey player that Harold Ballard wanted to play for his Maple Leafs. God knows, he needed any help he could get. He brought a Czechoslovakian hockey player here. As far as I know, he was brought here within four days. In four days Harold Ballard had the guy playing for the Maple Leafs. He decided on Sunday he was going to get the guy here to play, and within four days he had him playing. He played that Saturday for the Maple Leafs. We, of course, have a shortage of hockey players. You know that, Mr. Speaker.

I did not see this great fuss made when the tourist liners lined up in Montreal and Polish tourists got off the boat and claimed refugee status. Then there was the case of the Bulgarian wrestlers. I know we have a shortage of wrestlers in Canada. They got into the country. No problem. They were not even Sumo wrestlers. I do not know why the Minister was intimidated, but they got into Canada just like that, and no one said they were jumping the queue. Does it have something to do maybe with the colour of their skin?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is shameful demagoguery. It is shameful.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is not shameful.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It borders on racism.

Mr. Rodriguez: And it was done by the same bureaucrats who sank the ex-Prime Minister, who sits here and heckles me. He should be examining that situation instead of defending the bureaucrats who did him in, and will do him in again.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You have no standards, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: About 60 witnesses came before the committee on Bill C-55. With the exception of about two or three bureaucrats and two airline officials who argued for the Bill, everyone else was against the Bill and made recommendations for changes. I think the Government made two minor changes. There was nothing substantive changed. The people who appeared before the committee, and my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) named the groups, were all experienced in working with refugees. They were more experienced than the Minister or me. Yet the Government never even gave them the benefit of accepting any substantive changes. It is not the Minister who knows how it works, it is the bureaucrats. They are the ones who designed this Bill, and all the Minister is doing is carrying the can for the bureaucrats. As I said, being a sensitive Minister, he really should be aware of these things. We know the standing committee has made recommendations, for example, on family reunification. Has anything been done on that?

• (1650)

Mr. Keeper: Promises.

Mr. Rodriguez: A Tory make a promise. Do you believe that? Changes have been recommended with respect to immigration. The standing committee brought in recommendations with respect to refugees. Has anything been done about putting those recommendations into effect? No way.

The Minister and the Government ought to examine their motivations as to why we have this Bill before us. Why is it that Parliament was recalled on August 11 to pass Bill C-84 to save Canada from an invasion of Asian people? Why are we still here and Bill C-55 is only at third reading? It is such a priority that it keeps getting put down the list and down the list. Here we are on October 20 still debating Bill C-55.

I do hope—and it is the only justification I have ever had for the existence of the other place—that Bill C-55 will go over there and keep those other two Bills company. That is the only hope that I have now that Bill C-55 will have its final resting place over in the red Chamber. I wished to state that because it was on my mind. I have listened to some of the heckling and some of the comments made to my colleagues as they gave their speeches on Bill C-55.

I wish to remind the House that we cannot have two standards for who comes into this country, either as immigrants or as refugees. We must have a system that is fair and just.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Exactly.

Mr. Rodriguez: And a system that is non-discriminatory.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Exactly.

Mr. Fulton: I have a short question for the Hon. Member, because he can probably hit the nail on the head more quickly than many Members in the House. My question is in regard to the politics of Bill C-84 and Bill C-55.

I wish to relay what has happened in my own constituency during the last two weeks, and the type of inaction I have found from the government side. Last week I hand-delivered a letter to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) regarding large numbers of illegal aliens coming into my constituency by boat up the Stikine River. I contacted Customs in Prince Rupert. Those people had not been clearing Customs. Their state of origin was unknown. I contacted the RCMP and they told me that they did not have the budget to go up and do anything about it, but perhaps I could help by getting in touch with the Solicitor General to get something done.

I assume that the Solicitor General has been in touch with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) about it, because it is a serious matter. Those people are entering Canada illegally. They are contravening all types of provincial and federal statutes with their activities while they are in British Columbia.

Having related that to my friend, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), I would like to ask him what he thinks the politics are. Here we have an example right now of where we cannot get an immigration officer, a police officer, or anyone to deal with illegal aliens coming into northwestern British Columbia. But in a situation where a boat load of refugees arrive in Nova Scotia, suddenly it is a national crisis. Parliament has to be recalled. The House of Commons, which costs $180 million a year, has to be thrown into full force. Three months later we are still debating the Bill. Not a single one of those who came in under refugee status to Nova Scotia has been deported, asked to leave, or kept in custody.

I ask the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, what are the politics and the political agenda of the Government in recalling the House during the summer to deal with Bill C-84, and now Bill C-55?

Mr. Rodriguez: It seemed to me that the Minister responsible for immigration should have been on his feet right away asking the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) the question as to where those people are coming from, the ones whom the Hon. Member reported to the authorities as being illegal aliens. I notice the Minister is not interested in that type of information.

The Hon. Member for Skeena asked me about the politics. Look, I am just a lowly back-bencher in the New Democratic caucus. I only look at things and size them up. I asked myself the question, "What are the politics of this situation?" Well, as I described, the Government is on the ropes, down at 23 per cent in the polls.

Mr. Weiner: Twenty-eight per cent.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is looking for something to bring it up in the polls. To its salvation comes a boat-load of Sikhs on the East Coast of Canada. Right away it is a crisis.

I saw the television cameras showing the House of Commons; the midnight oil was burning in the Minister's office; they were planning. The Armed Forces were called out. Our Navy—all two boats—was out there patrolling the 200-mile limit. Information was leaked that there was another boat on the way with the wives and the spouses. The gunboats were out, they were armed, and there they were patrolling and patrolling. This image was on the TV screens. As the image was on, the hysteria was building. It reminded me of what I had been reading in history about the hysteria that Mackenzie King used to whip up against the CCF and the yellow race.

Of course, here was the Government determined to pull itself up by the boot straps from 23 per cent, and here was this golden opportunity to show how tough it was. That is the politics behind that.

Furthermore, it is no secret that the Government knew that a lot of that animosity towards the Sikhs had been whipped up in this country. Even if there were some violent ones, it was applied to the whole community of Sikhs, which is very unfortunate and very untrue. So here was the situation of this boat-load. It had an appropriate group, the Government was going to come in with Bill C-84 and recall Parliament. We all know that Parliament can only be recalled if it is an emergency situation. The Speaker had to be convinced that this was an emergency situation, and Your Honour was convinced of it and acquiesced to recalling Parliament.

I imagine that the stock market could have been falling and we would never have been called back. But this was a national crisis. We had to solve this problem of 200 people. Well, I think that is the politics of it. It is really a disreputable situation.

The Government will inherit the disaster that will follow from this type of action. It has not improved its standing in the polls. It will find out, as have all Governments in the past, that playing this type of game will catch up with it in the end.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more that five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

• (1700)

During the ringing of the bells:

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, as the Whip of the Official Opposition I would like to request, pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a), that the vote on Bill C-55 be deferred until tomorrow at six o'clock and that the understanding also be accompanied by the following order: That the House proceed with Private Members' Hour at this time so that we can proceed with the Bill before us at five o'clock, as normal, instead of going to Government Bills with Bill C-74.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, we are in total agreement with that arrangement on the basis that we move straight ahead into Private Members' Business now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As it is the preogative of the Opposition Chief Whip to ask for the deferred vote, the vote will be deferred until tomorrow at six o'clock.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved that Bill C-214, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am honoured and pleased, under the new rules of the House, to have before us Bill C-214, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone.

The main contents of the Bill are the declaration of Canada, our territorial seas and airspace, as nuclear weapons free. It also calls for Canada, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), at the earliest opportunity to move a motion calling for a world referendum on world disarmament.

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and the former Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake, have had similar Bills before the House for debate. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), who is present for the debate this evening, has a votable motion presently before the House to declare Canada a nuclear arms free zone, to prohibit export of materials or technology for construction or deployment of nuclear arms, and to encourage cities, provinces, and states throughout the world to undertake similar action.

Many recent publications have come out, but one of the better ones, in my view, is the one by Elizabeth Woodworth, a medical historian in Victoria in my home province of British Columbia. She has put together a book called What can I do? Citizen's Strategies for Nuclear Disarmament. In one of its appendices there are a number of quotations from military professionals and statesmen about war and nuclear weapons with which I should like to lead in the debate.

I should like to quote first from Admiral Noel Gayler, U.S. Navy (Retired) Former Director of the National Security Agency, Commander of all U.S. Forces in the Pacific, and Deputy Director of the Joint Strategic Target Planning Staff. He had the following to say:

> There is no sensible military use for any of our nuclear forces: intercontinental, theater, or tactical.

The second quote is from McGeorge Bundy, George F. Kennan, Roberts S. McNamara, and Gerard Smith, from the paper they produced called Nuclear Weapons and the Atlantic Alliance, and I quote:

> It is time to realize that no one has ever succeeded in advancing any persuasive reason to believe that any use of nuclear weapons, even on the smallest scale, could reliably be expected to remain limited.

The third quote is from Chairman Leonid Brezhnev at the 26th Communist Party Congress in Moscow. He said the following:

> The peoples should know the truth about the consequences, ruinous for mankind, which nuclear war would bring.

The next quote is from President Ronald Reagan in his recent Camp David address, and I quote:

> A nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought.

The next quotation is from Rear Admiral Eugene J. Carroll, U.S. Navy (Retired) and currently Deputy Director of the Centre for Defence Information in Washington, D.C., in Nuclear War: The Search for Solutions, from the proceedings of a conference held at the University of British Columbia under the auspices of Physicians for Social Responsibility just a year ago, and I quote:

> You simply can't fight with nuclear weapons, and the first lesson that we have learned as we build up these arsenals is that they serve no rational military purpose.
> "—Both sides are planning, arming, and training for a nuclear war. We are on a collision course in the name of deterrence. Each side says we are building these weapons to deter nuclear war, we are preparing for a war to have peace. We are going to end up with the weapons themselves starting a war which no one wants. They are going to be uncontrollable and unmanageable in time of crisis or under events of stress, miscalculation, or accident.

I want to comment on that quotation for a moment. Just yesterday and today we learned the impact of having massive amounts of so-called co-ordinated hardware and software in terms of the computers involved in the New York Stock Exchange, Toronto Stock Exchange, Vancouver, Hong Kong, London, and around the world.

We realize that if there is anything we can learn from that, it is not just that the stock market is a barometer but that one of the fixes which has come to be involved in that area of the world market-place is the same kind of technology which is involved throughout the world in terms of a nuclear response in a time of crisis. I think we can just hope that the same kind of thought processes which put the chips together for computers monitoring the equity market are not the same kind of thought processors that put together the response mechanisms for the computer hardware for a nuclear response.

• (1710)

The next quote I have is from Dwight D. Eisenhower, 34th President of the United States, who said:

> When people speak to you about a preventive war, you tell them to go and fight it. After my experience, I have come to hate war. War settles nothing.

The next quote is from Dr. George F. Kennan, U.S. Ambassador to the Soviet Union in his speech of acceptance of the Albert Einstein Peace Prize in 1981 who said:

> To my mind, the nuclear bomb is the most useless weapon ever invented. It can be employed to no rational purpose. It is not even an effective defence against itself . . . I question whether these devices are really weapons at all.

The next quote is from Churchill, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom from 1940-1945 and 1951-1955. He said:

> The human tragedy reaches its climax in the fact that after all the exertions and sacrifices of hundreds of millions of people and the victories of the Righteous Cause we have still not found Peace or Security and that we lie in the grip of even worse perils than those we have surmounted.

The last quote is from Albert Einstein. In the final week of his life, in his last signed appeal against the development of nuclear weapons, he said:

> We appeal, as human beings, to human beings: Remember your humanity, and forget the rest.

Many learned and thoughtful people have set their minds on how to deal realistically with the nuclear presence we now find on the planet. There are over 50,000 nuclear weapons, all of them larger than those which eliminated, in the blink of an eye, Nagasaki and Hiroshima. We have to become much more practical. That is why I am encouraged to see so many publications coming out, so many Canadians, physicians and people around the world regardless of nationality, rallying to a common cause to find a way to denuclearize the world through verifiable and balanced means so that the world can go on quite a different course.

There are nuclear weapons free zones by international treaties, the four key ones being the sea bed, Antarctica, outer space and Central America. Seventeen nations around the world have already self-declared, including Japan, Austria, Sweden and New Zealand most recently. Work is under way to declare the South Pacific nuclear free, and hopefully through efforts in this House, if we can manage to get enough Members mobilized on it, to get first a Canadian declaration and ultimately an international treaty to declare Canada's Arctic nuclear free.

There are 169 nuclear free zones in Canada as of June, 1987. Even in my own constituency, cities like Prince Rupert, Terrace, Kitimat, Smithers are nuclear free. Many others are trying to become nuclear free such as the Queen Charlotte Islands and other areas of the Pacific northwest. Major cities, Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Toronto, Montreal, Bathurst, Lunenburg, cities and regional districts representing 59 per cent of Canadians now live in self-declared nuclear weapons free zones. The entire Province of Manitoba has recently passed a resolution before it making Manitoba a nuclear weapons free zone.

My Bill attempts to expand the zones, such as Vancouver where, for example, U.S. nuclear vessels tie up in the downtown area. That city and its councillors have declared all within their jurisdiction nuclear weapons free, but often at the end of a rope at times rest vessels regularly armed with nuclear weapons in the middle of one of Canada's major cities.

The UN has long supported the establishment of nuclear weapons free zones as a means to bring about balanced verifiable disarmament. In 1978, the UN declared in its final report on disarmament:

> The establishment of nuclear weapons free zone on the basis of arrangements arrived at among states in the region concerned constitutes an important disarmament initiative. The process of establishing such zones should be encouraged with the ultimate objective of achieving a world free of nuclear weapons.

Canada has internationally supported nuclear weapons free zones in the international theatre in 1978 and 1982. However, both Liberal and Conservative Governments have preached internationally but hidden from the issue here at home. The present war in the Persian Gulf surely reveals the importance of installing stronger mechanisms to achieve peace and to provide for nuclear weapons disarmament. The most recent silk worm missile attack of recent days against vessels carrying the American flag in Kuwaiti waters and even yesterday's bombing of Iranian oil platforms reveal the escalation in that zone.

Probably a lot of people in this House and in the country realize that over one million Iranian and Iraqi soldiers and citizens have already perished in the few short years of that conflict. Without strong leadership on the peace front this war will spread like cancer with real potential for a nuclear response.

The preposterous arguments trotted forward by the Government when this matter has been raised in the past must be taken head on. I would like to quote from one of the more recent debates where the central argument coming from the government benches is that if Canada adopted a nuclear weapons free zone resolution policy for all of Canadian territory, our obligations to our allies would be diminished. In fact, the former Minister of National Defence, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), on August 31, 1987, as found on page 8630 of the Commons Debates, said in relation to the excellent motion by my friend, the Hon. Member for the Beaches (Mr. Young)

> It would be foolhardy and dangerous for Canada to pass such a resolution.

I think we have to spend a moment and think here. We have the Secretary of State for External Affairs going to the UN and various functions around the world pushing and calling for other states to declare themselves nuclear weapons free zones, fighting for treaties for the sea bed and other areas of the globe, demanding that they declare themselves nuclear weapons free, but the key work to be done at home is put back on the shelf. Yet remarks totally unrelated to the motion and totally without any substantive logical argument are left on the record saying it would be foolhardy and dangerous to pass such a resolution. That flies in the face of two-thirds of Canada's population who have already, through various forms of referenda and the electoral process, declared their immediate areas, be they a city, a town, a regional district or a province, nuclear weapons free.

Canada is nuclear weapons free in the Canadian military sense. But we are linked to weapons production, and by allowing particular U.S. vessels and aircraft to use our territory for transit of these weapons we are drawn further and further into the potential for either accident or conflict.

The NATO argument is constantly trotted out, but do we hear a peep from the same government back-benchers and cabinet members about Canada withdrawing from our historic commitment to provide troops to Norway? Nothing. No major speeches are given across the country by government Members about withdrawing from that sole responsibility in NATO. They point to the New Democrats and say "Oh, they want to withdraw from NATO." What hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker. The Government has already withdrawn our key commitments and has done nothing about the threats to our sovereignty and security in the Arctic. I want to spend a few moments on that.

The Government promised, it is going on years, that there was going to be a Polar 8 ice-breaker to provide the kind of sovereignty and security so dearly required in the Canadian Arctic. I responded to the Secretary of State for External Affairs following the voyage of the Polar Sea, unasked and unwanted through Canadian territory. The Government at that time promised it was going to build the largest ice-breaker in the world. Perhaps it would be built in Vancouver, certainly on the West Coast. I suppose that is being held back for an election promise and then another one years down the road. There is something more dire in the consequences of what the Government is doing.

What we see on the international stage is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) pursuing with vigour issues like apartheid, for which I congratulate him. Also we hear speeches given by Secretaries of State past and present on the need for nuclear weapons free zones and treaties around the world. What we should have on behalf of Canadians in a serious way is a declaration of the Arctic, all of the Arctic as a nuclear weapons and technology free zone. But there is no movement on that.

Instead what is the Government doing? It is proposing to acquire from France, Britain or somewhere outside of Canada, nuclear submarines. For what purpose? Not to be armed to go under the Canadian ice, to go into the Canadian North, but simply to go under the ice and monitor for surveillance purposes, to ping either American or Soviet or other submarines that we know have been lurking and operating unasked, unwanted and contrary to Canadian sovereignty within our territory.

Those who have taken a look at the implications of that policy realize quite quickly that the alternatives are far better in the interests of Canada in sovereignty and security as suggested at a meeting that I attended with people far more knowledgeable than I on military matters, security and sovereignty. We have the technology, in hardware, software and computer submarine monitoring devices, to place the kinds of monitoring devices that we should have had long ago in the Canadian Arctic. We have the technology to monitor the movements of any vessels in, at, near, under or around our territory in the far North. Those are the kinds of technologies that should be implemented now, even before the construction of the Polar 8, so that we will have accurate, ongoing data for the preservation of both Canadian security and of Canadian sovereignty in the area.

Rather than that, what is the Government doing? We have not heard a peep about pursuing a resolution for Canada on a nuclear weapons free zone in the Arctic, not a peep about how to move accurately and properly forward to preserve our internationally recognized legal rights in the Arctic so that if we ever have to go to the International World Court in the Hague to put our case forward for Canadian sovereignty and security, we will have the kind of accurate and formidable legal data that we should have to win such a case.

When I was debating with the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the voyage of the Polar Sea, I was listening to what the Minister had to say about how we have come to secure sovereignty in the eyes of the world throughout all of the Arctic Archipelago, throughout all of that enormous mass of land, ice and water. This Government of all Governments placed sovereignty on the backs of the Inuit people. It said that the presence for thousands and tens of thousands of years on the ice, on the land and on the water in the High Arctic, in the Canadian North, was the root at international law for our sovereignty and security on this continent in the eyes of the world. Yet the same Government has taken no substantive movement on the comprehensive or specific claims of the Inuit or of the Dene, the Métis, the Yukon Indians, the Nishga, the Haida or any other aboriginal groups in Canada.

It is truly a preposterous state of affairs when the Government secures in the eyes of the world sovereignty and security on the backs of the Inuit but takes no steps, within the context of Canada's Constitution, which recognizes and affirms aboriginal title and rights, to give them the same kind of recognition that it provides to any forest company, any mining company, any corporate entity or anyone else.

One must spend a moment reflecting on the enormity of the psychological pressure on people of all generations who reflect at any time in their lives on the implications of nuclear weaponry and the possibility of a nuclear holocaust. Just think for a moment, the cost of one Canadian tank, usually constructed outside of Canada for military purposes, would pay for 520 classrooms for 15,000 children anywhere in the Third World. The cost of one nuclear submarine would pay for the education of 16 million children in the Third World for an entire year.

There are 50,000 plus nuclear weapons in the world now. How can an individual in Canadian society or elsewhere in the world confront that? How can people logically find a way to deal with that directly and to search internally and externally for peace? It is only through individual action and, as a starting point, declarations of nuclear weapons free zones.

The $800 billion that was spent in 1987—and it is expected to be $900 billion in the coming year—on world military expenditures amounts to $1.5 million per minute. How can intelligent, understanding people in Canada or elsewhere stand idly by knowing that every single day, thousands of children in the Third World are dying of malnutrition? If even a small amount of the money going into military hardware was diverted for disease control and for providing food and education, we would have a far better and a far more peaceful world for everyone to live in.

Along with huge and growing trade deficits and debts, we have now seen the U.S. economy begin to turn upside down. Every $1 billion dollars spent on the U.S. military creates 28,000 jobs in the United States. If that were spent in the transportation industry, it would create 32,000 jobs. If it were spent on goods and services, it would be 57,000 jobs or 71,000 jobs even in Canada or the United States if spent on education.

The jobs argument about the nuclear weapons industry is often self-serving drivel. Anyone who can understand the exorbitant costs of these expenditures on regional economies has to be saddened.

This debate must be an affirmation that Canada wants to influence national and international behaviour and nuclear policy. The world can return to peace and stability but only through leadership and the pursuit of peace.

[Translation]

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to talk about nuclear disarmament and about the suggestion made in Bill C-214 which is before us and whose purpose is to establish a nuclear-free zone in Canada.

[English]

I have to say at the outset that I have a great deal of sympathy for the position put forward by my friend who is a member of the NDP. Obviously we share with him all the concerns that he has expressed, but the question surely before the House——the question which Hon. Members must examine is as follows: First, is this legislative measure truly realistic? Will such a unilateral declaration as that advocated by my friend lead to unmistakably concrete results with respect to nuclear disarmament, and will such an approach prove to be a worthwhile contribution to nuclear disarmament?

[Translation]

[English]

I suggest that notwithstanding the sympathy and support which I wish to offer to the spirit of this proposal, it does not meet those tests. I do not believe that a unilateral declaration of a nuclear weapons free zone as proposed is realistic. Second, I do not believe it would be effective. Consequently, I do not think it would make a significant contribution to reducing or eliminating the threat of nuclear war on this planet.

That being said, I want to draw the attention of the House and of my hon. friend to the position of my own Party, the Liberal Party, as expressed at the November 1986 convention in a resolution which went specifically to this point. It was a resolution referred to, I believe, during an earlier debate in this House on the same subject, a resolution put forward by the association represented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). A number of points were raised in that resolution but specifically it resolved that the Liberal Party of Canada move immediately to adopt a more imaginative and rigorous arms control policy which would include making Canada a nuclear weapons free zone.

I want to emphasize at the outset that the Party to which I belong has taken that position, but as our Leader has carefully explained on numerous occasions, that must be done within the context of our international treaty obligations, specifically our obligations to NATO.

Let me say a word on definitions. What is a nuclear weapons free zone? There are many who define it in different ways, but Project Ploughshares, for example, tells us that in its view, it is a defined geographic area within which the possession, deployment, storage, transit, manufacture, testing or other support of nuclear weapons and nuclear weapons systems is prohibited.

• (1730)

I must say that Bill C-214 certainly seems compatible with that definition. In fact, I suggest it goes even further.

As the sponsor of the Bill pointed out, there are such nuclear weapons free zones established by treaty in four areas, namely the sea bed, outer space, Antarctica, and Latin America. In 1985, a zone was also set up in the South Pacific, but it is interesting to note that there the transit of nuclear weapons is specifically provided for. I gather that that zone was designed primarily to address the problem of nuclear testing. Indeed, the Nordic countries, Denmark, Norway and Iceland, have since 1958, I believe, tried to establish a nuclear weapons free zone in their area, so far without success. Similarly, some of the Balkan states have been trying to do this since 1959, specifically Greece, Romania, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and Turkey. Those are examples of either nuclear weapons free zones established by treaty or attempts to do so.

There are also examples of unilateral declarations, such as the proposal we have before us. Specifically, we have the example of New Zealand. You will recall that the U.S. response to New Zealand's position was to remove protection and apply trade sanctions.

[Translation]

So the question is this, Mr. Speaker: Would a unilateral declaration on Canada being a nuclear-free zone be consistent with our NATO commitments? There are many who say yes, like Project Ploughshares whose NATO definition I have just referred to. But there are others who say no.

Mr. Speaker, I will refrain from elaborating on the legality of such a unilateral declaration, that is within the scope of our multilateral obligations, but will this kind of gesture help achieve the goals mentioned by the NDP spokesman?

[English]

As I said before, I do not think that a unilateral declaration would meet the objectives I described at the outset which surely must be the objectives of my friend from the NDP.

That being said, there is no need to be negative when faced with this proposal. There is no need to be negative with respect to the concept of a nuclear weapons free zone for Canada. After all, as the Hon. Member pointed out, we do not have and have not had nuclear weapons ourselves for some years as a matter of policy. Surely in itself that is a statement that others should not have them either.

There is no need to review the unthinkable consequences of any kind of nuclear confrontation on this planet. The question is: Would a unilateral declaration contribute? Or would it not, on the contrary, tend to remove Canada from nuclear policy decisions at the tables of NATO? Might it not compromise our ability to influence our allies on arms control? In addition, could we enforce it? Obviously we could not. Therefore it is not practical, it is not effective, and does not meet that test which I set at the outset.

What would? Obviously a negotiated multilateral nuclear weapons free zone to which Canada could be a party and in which territory of Canada could be involved is of course a realistic alternative. The Arctic is a logical place to begin.

I realize my time is short but I cannot help but mention the statement made by General Secretary Gorbachev in his recent visit to Murmansk on October 6 when he entertained the possibility of a negotiated nuclear weapons free zone in the Arctic. It had been my intention to read rather extensively from his comments because I think they are quite enlightening and should make us optimistic about the possibilities of demilitarization, if one could use that term, of the Arctic area.

He makes specific reference to the nuclear weapons free zone and perhaps concessions that might be made with respect to the Soviet arms currently situated in the Kola Peninsula. I know there is a certain amount of skepticism that one could effectively have a nuclear weapons free zone in the Arctic given the present significance of the Kola Peninsula for Soviet military purposes. Nonetheless, why not give it a chance? Why not find out? Who could object to a verifiable, enforceable nuclear weapons free zone established by treaty to which the superpowers would be parties? That would be an effective way of making a significant contribution to nuclear disarmament. Surely that is the direction in which we should be moving.

In closing, the proposal in Bill C-214 is not realistic. It will not make a significant contribution to nuclear disarmament. However, the concept of a nuclear weapons free zone within the parameters I have described is something that indeed some day we may attain. That day may be sooner rather than later.

[Translation]

Mrs. Anne Blouin (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, this bill reflects a concern that, as the Government is well aware, is on the minds of many Canadians. I refer to the role of nuclear weapons in preserving collective security and Canada's own responsibilities in that regard. Given the awesome destructive power of nuclear weapons, it is understandable that Canadians who reflect seriously on national and international security issues should be especially attentive to their Government's policies in this area.

First of all, I would like to emphasize that Canadian policy and practice are in many respects already in conformity with the provisions of Bill C-214. Canada does not possess nuclear weapons.

In normal peacetime conditions, no nuclear weapons are deployed, tested or constructed within Canada nor transported through Canada. Nor could such nuclear-weapons related activities occur on Canadian territory or under Canadian jurisdiction without the express consent of the Canadian Government.

I would remind the House that Canada's situation in this regard is very different from that of a number of our NATO allies who accept the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory. As for Canadian exports, it is firm Canadian policy that all exports of nuclear material, equipment and technology shall be for peaceful, non-explosive purposes only.

This policy is strictly implemented through bilateral agreements and with the cooperation of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

• (1740)

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it clear that the Government is in principle sympathetic to the broad concept of nuclear-weapon-free zones until such time as the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, which Canada strongly supports, achieves close to universal international adherence. Meanwhile, the establishment of such zones can make a contribution to the objective of preventing the proliferation of nuclear weapons. However, to be effective a nuclear-weapon-free zone must in our judgement fully meet the following criteria: apply to a well-defined region; have the support of the countries of the region; and, most importantly, promote regional and international stability.

From what I have said so far, Mr. Speaker, it should be apparent that the Government's approach is a pragmatic one. Our central concern is to ensure that in current and foreseeable circumstances our policies contribute to national security and international stability.

Canada's national security policy is based on the twin pillars of collective defence and arms control and disarmament. This Government's commitment to collective defence is exemplified in Canada's membership in NATO and NORAD. The primary role of the Alliance is to safeguard the security of member nations by deterring aggression. This Government believes, as do other NATO Governments, that the nuclear deterrence strategy of the Alliance has been a critically important element in maintaining peace in the East-West context for over 40 years. Canada has voluntarily shouldered the obligation to contribute to the capability of the Alliance to implement its strategy of deterrence. As I have mentioned, this has involved a less onerous burden for us than for several other Alliance members who have accepted the deployment of nuclear weapons on their territory. It would neither be consistent with our Alliance membership, nor with our own security interest, for Canada as a matter of principle to attempt to dissociate itself from any or all aspects of the nuclear deterrence strategy. This will remain an essential element of our collective defence until there is much greater progress in reducing levels of armaments, particularly strategic nuclear weapons, and in building a more secure world.

The second central pillar of our national security policy is arms control and disarmament. The Canadian Government, like other Alliance members, recognizes the desirability of moving toward reduced reliance on nuclear weapons. The fact that the USA and USSR are close to successfully concluding an agreement that will totally eliminate the whole category of intermediate-range nuclear weapons on a global basis is a significant milestone in the arms control process. These negotiations began as a result of an Alliance initiative. The progress in the negotiations has in no small measure been due to the ability of the Alliance to maintain a consistent, coordinated approach. The Alliance is similarly providing strong support for the efforts of the two superpowers to negotiate major reductions in their strategic nuclear arsenals. As we move toward a less nuclear world, the conventional balance of forces gains in importance. In this area too, Alliance members are coordinating their efforts to bring about negotiations with the objective of maintaining security through balanced reductions of armaments.

Canada has been able to make a serious and constructive input to these important arms control negotiating efforts, in which we have a direct interest, because of our presence at the table as an Alliance member. Without that membership card, Canada would be relegated to the spectators' gallery. Even in multilateral arms control forums, much of Canada's credibility and capacity for influence derives from our Alliance membership, which signals to others our level of knowledge about and direct involvement in the activities of key deliberative forums.

To the extent that we decline to assume our share of the collective defence burden, Canada's ability to influence events as an Alliance member would be diminished.

The question must be asked, Mr. Speaker, what would really be achieved by passing this Bill?

In many respects, as I have noted, nothing would change. Canada would remain a country without nuclear weapons and with no direct involvement in the manufacture and maintenance of nuclear arsenals. However, by signalling a righteous desire to dissociate ourselves from key aspects of the collective defence strategy of the Alliance, Canada's credibility and influence with our traditional European partners, not to mention the United States, would be significantly diminished. Our own security would certainly not be enhanced and could in fact be compromised. It would, in sum, be a worse than futile gesture which ignores the realities of today's interdependent world. This interdependence is just as real in the area of national security as in other areas.

Finally, this Bill provides that the Secretary of State for External Affairs should request the United Nations to hold a world referendum on nuclear disarmament. Mr. Speaker, in resurrecting this old chestnut, the Honourable Member is not helping to advance the arms control and disarmament process. Although a global expression in favour of nuclear disarmament would be fine in itself, it would not be a substitute for the negotiation of effective international arms control agreements. The call for a referendum fails to recognize that meaningful progress in reducing levels of nuclear weapons must be the product of negotiations among governments. There are no short-cuts or substitutes for the negotiating process.

Even if such a referendum were to be held, it is not clear how the results should be interpreted in view of the global diversity of political systems and approaches to freedom of expression.

Furthermore, practical considerations, such as the enormous expenses associated with such an undertaking at a time when the United Nations is attempting to avert financial crisis, would present a serious constraint.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, when comparing the uncertain benefits with the staggering costs, the utility of such a referendum is highly doubtful. Mr. Speaker, for all these reasons, I would strongly urge my colleagues on both sides of this House to vote against Bill C-214.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to Bill C-214, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone. This Bill deals with a very fundamental issue to which no Canadian is indifferent, which is the role of nuclear deterrence in Canada's defence and security and in maintaining peace.

Canada has no nuclear arms and does not intend to purchase any. It has signed treaties guaranteeing the non-proliferation and prohibition of nuclear testing; furthermore, unlike most of its allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, NATO, it neither stores nor deploys nuclear arms on its territory. According to the terms of the Bill, Canada is technically a nuclear weapons free zone in peace time. However, because of its geographic location, Canada must live with the threat of a nuclear holocaust which, in a conflict between the two superpowers, would make short thrift of neutrality and spare no one. There are only two ways to avert this threat: by maintaining a credible force to deter potential aggressors and through negotiation.

Canadians know that strategic deterrence is provided under NATO's collective security plan, and that we, for our defence, have to count on the nuclear forces of our allies. Today, the mutual deterrence system is effective and stable. Despite some of the worst crises, it has given us more than forty years of peace, and the Government believes this should continue. In this perspective, the Canadian Government's priority is not to create nuclear weapons free zones but to maintain peace zones.

As part of this common effort, since we count on our allies and they count on us to deter a potential adversary, we are in favour of developing and maintaining nuclear forces with the potential for survival that is necessary for an effective and credible deterrence system.

So, Mr. Speaker, even if Canada does not have and does not deploy nuclear arms, it contributes to strategic dissuasion.

Our role and our mandate are clear and have their roots in our geography and history. We must continue to ensure the aerospatial defence of North America, which we are doing through our defence effort and our association with NORAD. We must protect NATO strategic forces by forbidding access to our air space, our territory and our territorial waters to any potential aggressor. And Mr. Speaker, this is the real purpose of the defence program of the Government. Last, we must put our territory and our facilities to the disposal of our allies if required.

We fulfill those obligations and those collective security tasks in the full respect of our sovereignty and our integrity. In peace time we cooperate in the training and development of the dissuasion force. In time of crisis, Canada could authorize the strategic force components to fly over its territory and use its facilities.

It is essential and in keeping with our policy and our commitments that our air space and fire ranges continue to be used for the testing and development of non-armed components, that our Armed Forces train with the Atlantic Alliance Forces and that the dissuasion force ships visit our harbours.

It is not a threat for our country but it is part and parcel of its security and its commitment to peace.

A commitment to peace which results in a sustained negociation effort toward arms control and disarmament. These negotiations are unprecedented because of their duration and intensity, and they are contributing to the dialogue between East and West. Our presence at these negotiations and our ability to influence how they are carried out and what results are achieved can also be attributed to our membership in the Atlantic Alliance. Because of our defence effort and of our role in collective defence, Canada is a valid and credible participant which can and does take certain initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the best way for us to contribute to world peace and security would be to break away from NATO or to weaken the deterrent strength of the Alliance. As abhorrent as might seem the use of nuclear weapons to ensure our defence, their presence is essential to counterbalance the Soviet arsenals. To renounce to these weapons would be a violation of our commitments, but it would also disturb the balance which is essential to maintain world peace.

• (1750)

Mr. Speaker, when I read the proposal of the socialist Member, I am tempted to ask him certain questions about his philosophy for peace and the general ideas of his socialist party for the protection of our western civilization, North America and Canada. I would like to know what his party would suggest as an alternative solution if Canada were to break off its association with NATO as his socialist colleagues have proposed. I find it strange that Canada would be asked to disassociate itself from a very credible international defence force while other members of the same party have asked that war be waged in certain countries. It is true that, since this request was officially made by certain socialist members, their leader decided to demote to the rear rows those who had been responsible for these initiatives, which were to say the least bellicose on the part of people who would like to eliminate nuclear weapons.

It would be better if the members of the socialist party agreed on a way to protect Canadians. If they prefer the protection of the Soviet Union, they should not be living in this country. They should move elsewhere, along with their colleagues. This is why, Mr. Speaker, I oppose the motion of the socialist member because I am happy to live in a free country in North America where citizens are free and prosperous, and it is in fact because of this prosperity that these socialists can become parasites of our western civilization.

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise on this motion after the excellent speech made by our colleague for Lévis who to some extent gave our Socialist friends a good dressing-down. Our Socialist friends, Mr. Speaker, take every possible opportunity to try to scare Canadians. Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, Canadians do not take them that seriously come election time. But, of course, Canadians being what they are, and having a great sense of compassion, will make them comfortable in-between by giving them a feeling of popularity in the Gallup polls.

Mr. Speaker . . .

[English]

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have watched two government Members read typed speeches into the record. The Hon. Member speaking now does not seem to have the vaguest idea of what the debate is about. Perhaps the rules of relevance might be applied to him.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) may go on with his comments.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, he does not even understand French, he does not know what he is talking about, come now! How stupid, really! Go and learn French and then you may come back! Come now!

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member opposite that yesterday was my birthday and last night since on this side we still have friends, someone was kind enough to give me this lovely pen I now have in my hand. So a while ago as I was listening to the speeches, I did a little doodling to try out my new pen and I jotted down a few comments here. So, if the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) finds that irritating, he may do as his colleagues do, if he so wishes, either keep his earphone to listen to the translation or go to sleep. He may do as he pleases, Mr. Speaker, he will not stop me from saying what I have to say, from playing with my notes or read from them, if I so choose, or from discussing this motion which, as usual, does not bring about anything new. Of course, the motion reflects a concern shared by all Canadians, but we should not overlook the fact that nuclear weapons play a collective security-keeping role. We must also keep in mind that Canada has no nuclear weapons of its own. Neither does Canada build them and, as opposed to several of its NATO allies, it keeps no nuclear arsenal on its territory.

But as the Hon. Member for Lévis said earlier, contrary to the Socialists who would like our country to withdraw from NATO, we say that Canada should remain part of it. We said it in so many words and, because we are a responsible government, we have every intention to meet our commitments.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, when people are not in government or are very unlikely ever to be in government, they can express all sorts of ideas, implying that there is in Canada a Department of Defence which should be called a Department of War, that the monies which are used to protect this country which we, and all other Canadians, love, could be used for something else. Of course, after a big meal, if you ate too much, you may think that the money you spent on lunch might have better been used to buy medicines, and so on. Yes, Mr. Spaker, it is easy to say anything you want when you are certain you will never be in government.

But I would like to stress, Mr. Speaker, that our Government is open in principle to the general concept of nuclear weapons free zones. The establishment of such zones may be a positive factor when most countries of a region agree to it and when it can promote regional and international stability.

• (1800)

Canada supported several U.N. resolutions calling for the creation of nuclear weapons free zones. This is what I wanted to say when I was taking notes earlier. There is nothing new in the Hon. Member's proposal.

I want to point out to my friend opposite—but he is not listening, of course—that the few zones that were officially established do not necessarily call for an absolute ban like this motion does. For example, the South Pacific nuclear weapons free zone, which was welcomed by Canada last year, does provide for the transit of ships that may carry nuclear weapons. It shows very well that in the few regions where nuclear weapons free zones have been created, the measures taken are adjusted to the strategic reality and the particular interests of the countries involved.

Mr. Speaker, all of what I just said shows that the approach chosen by the Governement is obviously one of pragmatism. We want to make sure that, in the present and foreseeable circumstances, our policies will contribute to our national security and to international stability.

Our collective defence is one of the main tenets in the national security policy of this Government as is evidenced by our participation in NATO and NORAD, which I mentioned a moment ago.

The first role of the Alliance is to preserve the security of member nations by deterring every form of aggression. Our Government, like all others within NATO, is convinced that the strategy of nuclear deterrence has played, for the last 40 years, a very important role in maintaining peace between East and West. Canada, Mr. Speaker, has agreed on its own free will to contribute to the Alliance and its capacity to enforce its strategy of deterrence even though, as I mentioned, our burden has been lighter than the one of other members.

It would not make sense for Canada, considering that we are a member of the Alliance and that we have specific security interests, to dissociate itself from some or all aspects of the strategy of nuclear deterrence, as is the desire of our colleagues opposite.

As it happens, this strategy is still one of the key factors of our collective defence effort until such time as we make significant progress towards arms control. Arms control and disarmament make up the second mainstay of our national security policy. Echoing the position taken by other NATO member countries, the Canadian Government acknowledges that decreasing dependence on nuclear weapons is a commendable objective.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is up. I would have liked to pursue this line of thought to indicate that the motion is of no use and that my colleague was prompted only by political considerations when he introduced it.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND—FINANCE MINISTER'S MESSAGE TO WASHINGTON MEETING

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on September 25, 1987 I asked a question to the Minister of Finance as he was getting ready to go to Washington to meet with G-7 representatives to discuss progress made in IMF initiatives. If there had been time for a supplementary, I would have ask the Minister to inform the House how he was also informally involved in a dossier that was very much in the news, and I am referring to the free trade talks with our American neighbours. Going back in time, this dossier represents nearly two years of intensive work by Ambassador Reisman's representatives, Cabinet Ministers and particularly the Minister for International Trade (Ms. Carney), with the co-operation of various provinces, including the Province of Quebec, all of whom worked very hard to bring about a historic agreement with United States, an agreement that—

Mr. Speaker, in Canada today, some people keep saying we have between 8 and 9 p. cent unemployment. I keep saying that in Canada, between 91 and 92 people out of 100 are employed. Ninety-one members of the labour force employed in Canada that is not bad. It means a total of twelve million Canadians are employed. Those twelve million Canadians are responsible for a total annual production, a Gross National Product of $500 billion. On top of those $500 billion, our Canadian entrepreneurs and business people have developed export markets worth one-quarter of that amount: $125 billion annually. This means that in Canada, one out of four people in the labour force is working for our export markets.

Mr. Speaker, that is why my Government and our negotiating team want to maintain and expand access to this market in the United States.

Out of a total of $125 billion exported by Canada abroad, our present exports to United States, thanks to expanding marketing networks and the efforts of Canadians, are worth $95 billion annually. This means one job out of five. In recent months, Canadians have experienced some problems with the United States, including our exports of lumber, pork carcasses, cedar shingles, smoked fish, and so forth. The main purpose of our negotiations with our American neighbours and customers is to maintain that one job out of every four in this country. And I say that whatever the Socialists may care to think, with their useless and partisan association with coalitions that are against free trade and in favour of losing that one job out of four. When the Socialists get together with our coalitions, our so-called defenders of the Canadian people, it all rings false. They only want to deprive us of this American market. It does not make sense. They want one Canadian out of four to lose his job exporting goods abroad. Mr. Speaker, Canadians ought to know that the Socialists are using scare tactics to spread fear among Canadians by greatly exaggerating the drawbacks of free trade, while the purpose of free trade, and this we intend to achieve, is to preserve that one job out of four in Canada.

Fellow Canadians, ask your socialist neighbours—there are still a few—ask them how they would have managed to create that one job out of four if we had been unsuccessful in our free trade negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the spokesman for the Minister of Finance, the Parliamentary Secretary, will help me enlighten Canadians even more, particularly the residents of my riding, concerning this important issue, which is to keep the American market open to our good Canadian manufacturers despite the socialists who are intent on keeping Canadians in poverty.

• (1810)

[English]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) on his question and on the remarks he has made. At the outset, I would agree with him that the socialist Party certainly is a Party of apostles of fear. They fear any change. They look for the status quo. They can build only on the past and what the past has shown them. Because they think that way, they cannot anticipate any new changes which might produce something new or some new patterns.

People wonder why a free trade deal is good for Canada. The answer is very simple. It will create business for Canada and, if it creates business, it will create jobs for Canadians.

As my friend knows, the Economic Council of Canada has suggested that there might be a quarter or a third of a million jobs created as a result of this free trade deal. Why and how can we imagine that that would happen? It is very simple. It is a matter of numbers. Canada is made up of 25 million people. The United States has 10 times that many. It is the largest single market in the world.

Why should Canada not have free access to the single largest market? At present, Canadian companies service 25 million people. Why should they not service 275 million people? The simple mathematics are that if they can manufacture for 275 million people rather than for 25 million people, they can increase the size of their plants, their companies, their assembly lines.

This means that to do that they will have to hire people. If they can manufacture tires, generators, light bulbs, or any other commodity to service 275 million people, including the entire U.S. market, why should they not be able to do that?

The fact is that there is no such thing as a status quo in the world market. The unions and the socialists may want to stay where we are, but there is no staying where we are because the rest of the world is going to compete, and somebody is going to get that quarter of a billion people for a market. It may as well be Canadians rather than the rest of the world.

Why should not Canadian business people take advantage of that large market? Why should not consumers benefit from the added variety of product which would be available to them?

I want to add to my comments a quotation from Peter Cook in an edition of The Globe and Mail of last week headlined "Protecting Canada from the worst of enemies". There are those who say that we will be swallowed up by the United States. Let me read what Peter Cook says:

• (1815)

> The critics, in their negative way, contend that getting closer to the United States is a desperately dangerous exercise. It has not been dangerous for Ireland with Britain, or Denmark with West Germany, or New Zealand with Australia. And, as of this moment, tiny countries such as Malta and Cyprus are clamouring to get inside the EC.
> To swallow the arguments of the "antis" is to say that what is good for the rest of the world is somehow bad for Canada.

All of the little countries that are in marketing systems like this have benefited. Even though they are small countries next to large countries, they have benefited. Why should Canada not get the benefit of having a large market at its disposal and let Canadian business thrive?

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY—PROFITS OF DRUG MANUFACTURING COMPANIES/RESEARCH WORK—REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF GUARANTEES IN LEGISLATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on August 20, 1987 I posed a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with regard to the profits of drug manufacturing companies. In my question I noted that from 1968 to 1982 pharmaceutical companies in Canada made some very healthy and substantial profits. This was recently confirmed in the report which was made available by Dr. Eastman, who studied the pharmaceutical industry. In particular, he looked at the profit margins of companies operating as a result of the passage of amendments to the Patent Act, namely, compulsory licensing.

It was very clear from the evidence used by Dr. Eastman that those companies, notwithstanding their serious objections to compulsory licensing, made substantial profits. In fact, their profits were so substantial that they led the manufacturing sector in terms of percentage. At the present time, the profits are higher than those in Japan, Germany, Britain, France and Switzerland. What is perhaps even more appalling with regard to Bill C-22 is that not only will it provide additional profit to companies that are already profitable, but it will take much needed money from those Canadians who need it most.

It should be very clear that who will be paying the higher drug prices in this country will be the provincial Governments—yes, provincial Governments right across this land—and individuals who are not covered by drug programs. Inevitably this comes to the Canadian consumer who will pay the lion's share of the additional profits which will go to multinational corporations as a result of the passage of Bill C-22.

It should be understood that no one argues against profits or the private sector making a reasonable profit. No one should argue against that. I think there is an argument to be made that if one receives reasonable profits and those profits are extended without any guarantees for research and development, for protection of the Canadian consumer and to create jobs, and guarantees of jobs then bad public policy is contained in Bill C-22.

It was adduced at committee, debated in the House and it is very clear that multinational corporations and the national Conservative Government believe strongly in their case that new jobs will be created and thousands upon thousands of new dollars will be funneled into research and development in our pharmaceutical industry. Surely the Government ought to ask those companies in whom it is placing its faith to put up a performance bond as a bare minimum in order to meet the objectives which it has set. Unfortunately, the Government has chosen another route, which is not to seek public guarantees for research and development, for the protection of the Canadian consumer or to create thousands of new jobs. We all hope that would result from any piece of legislation which would be passed by this Parliament.

I have grave difficulties with the answers that we have been receiving to date, and even in Oral Question Period there have been no guarantees whatsoever. It all comes back to profits and who is paying for those profits for multinational corporations. It is done through a number of auspices including provincial Governments and drug plans of another sort, but it is the Canadian consumer who will pay more for drugs.

I think that it is a shame. In fact, six provincial Governments have expressed serious reservations about Bill C-22. Thousands upon thousands of Canadians and organizations of senior citizens and veterans and even the United Church have opposed Bill C-22 for the very serious effects it will have on Canadians, and particularly for the costs that it will impose on Canadians, costs which will drive up the profits of a select few when many, many Canadians do not have the necessary finances to pay for their drugs.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I hope my friend from Nova Scotia who has just spoken had the agreement of his colleague, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), who represents a Montreal riding, with the points of view he has just expressed. I suspect that some of the people of Montreal might disagree with some of the comments made by my friend from Cape Breton.

I would like to correct the emphasis that has been placed on Bill C-22. First, my friend has focused on the word "profits" as though somehow that were wrong. I wonder if he would be able to explain how it is that polio has been eradicated from the Canadian scene by a little discovery known as the Salk vaccine. Did that come about through some kind of magic? Surely my friend will agree that if the pharmaceutical industry is to carry on its research to provide better health for Canadians, it will have to make some profits.

The Hon. Member is rightly concerned that if there are profits, they should be spent in Canada on R and D. That is exactly what will happen. Under the present system which his Government introduced some years ago, only about 5 per cent of sales have been used for R and D in Canada. That will increase to 10 per cent in the years ahead. R and D will be done in Canada in order to provide better health care for Canadians.

If we are to provide better health care and if we are to provide research in Canada, we have to keep Canadian brains in Canada. If we do not have an incentive system within the research industry, that brilliance will go somewhere else, as it already has. Too many of our research scientists have gone south of the border and have helped the industries in the United States.

The Bill is about jobs in Canada. With the increased spending of up to 10 per cent of sales in Canada on R and D, 3,000 new jobs will be created in the immediate future. I would hope that my friend would agree that that is a good thing for Canada and that it is good for the health of Canadians.

To answer shortly, Bill C-22 is first not a Bill about profits but a Bill about health and about the improved health of Canadians. Second, it is a Bill about research and development and therefore it is a Bill about jobs in Canada. As I said, 3,000 jobs will be created here.

Dollars will be spent in Canada and profits will be kept in Canada. This legislation puts the health of Canadians first.

• (1825)

Third, and the Member knows this very well, there is built into the law protection for Canadians against what might be construed as unreasonable profits or profits that escalate too rapidly. The review system will study the profit pictures of pharmaceutical companies and make certain that they include the necessary increase of research in Canada that will provide better health for Canadians.

STATUS OF WOMEN—REPORT ON BATTERED WOMEN—LACK OF SPACE IN TRANSITION HOUSES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, as a lawyer who has practised a good deal of family law I have listened to many, many stories about family violence and wife abuse, including a number involving attempted murder. When I had the opportunity to read the report sponsored by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women written by a sociologist, Linda McCloud, entitled "Battered but not Beaten: Preventing Wife Battering in Canada", the story it told did not come as something new out of the blue. In fact, I served for some six years as a member of the Community and Social Services Committee in Metropolitan Toronto, and we dealt with the establishment of something called the Domestic Response Team. As a result of the problems flowing from family violence and wife beating, we established on an experimental basis a team approach in responding to such calls. It was made up of two police officers and a social worker. The police officers of course went to deal with the violence and the social worker went to deal with the counselling aspect. That program grew from an experimental approach into one that now covers all of Metropolitan Toronto.

As a result of that experience and my experiences as a lawyer, I certainly am familiar with the problems set out in that report. At the same time, that has not prevented me from being shocked by the fact that the report spells out that there is something like a million women each year who suffer from family violence and abuse. It has not prevented me from being shocked by specific examples set out in that report or by the fact there is such a lack of shelter for women in situations of this sort.

I do not know whether you or the Parliamentary Secretary have ever had the opportunity to visit a shelter or hostel. I have not had the opportunity to visit one for women but I have had the opportunity to visit one for men. In fact, I headed a task force that looked into one of the major men's hostels in Metropolitan Toronto, Seaton House, a few years ago. We found that while these facilities provided clean surroundings, hot meals, hot showers and other things which are obviously welcome to anyone in need, at the same time they are not the sort of places that you and I or our families would enjoy spending a night or week in. They are a communal-type of living experience where everyone there, including you, has problems, some more severe than others. As a result, although a person who has suffered from family violence obviously is looking for some shelter in some transition house, these kinds of facilities are not the kind that you and I would really want to go to, notwithstanding the fact we may need to if we do not have a family or friends that will take us in.

If a woman and her children are victims of family violence and have to go to a facility like this, that is bad enough. However, according to the report, one of every two women who attempt to go to a shelter or transition house facility have to be turned away because there are not enough facilities available. That is more than just disturbing, it is extremely shocking, particularly in this International Year of Shelter for the Homeless.

In his answer to my question in the House, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) indicated that since the Government came to power in 1984 there has been a very substantial increase in the number of shelters available for women who have been abused. That is admirable. In fact, the Minister pointed out that of the approximately 265 shelters which now exist about 100 are cost-shared between the federal and provincial governments.

However, the Minister also said that there is some distance to go. It is obvious that when one out of two women is turned away from a shelter there is some distance to go. Canadians are looking to the Government for word that we will close this distance and eliminate it altogether.

I know that the Parliamentary Secretary is a very humane man and has a social conscience as has his cousin, Mr. Colin Friesen, who is a neighbour of mine. He also has a very strong social conscience and is looking to the Parliamentary Secretary for an answer tonight as am I and other Canadians. We are looking for some concrete evidence that the Government intends to close this gap very quickly to ensure that shelters are available for women and families in need of them.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague for raising this matter which weighs on the hearts and minds of many Canadians. It first developed national prominence when it was brought to the attention of the House by our colleague, the Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie) of New Brunswick during Private Members' Hour. It went to committee and a report on battered women was tabled in the House on the subject. I want to compliment my friend, the Member for York East (Mr. Redway), for the work he is doing in sensitizing the public to this issue as well as complimenting our colleague from York—Sunbury who raised the issue five or six years ago for the same purpose.

This subject is recognized by an increasing number of people. It is a societal issue. Transition homes are needed to an increasing degree to help these people.

The matter of providing financial support, shelter, and social services to battered women and their children falls under the jurisdiction of the individual provinces and the territories. The federal Government, through the Canada Assistance Plan, assists Canadians by sharing in costs to provinces and territories for providing financial assistance and social services to persons who meet the eligibility requirements. The province, on the other hand, assumes responsibility for determining eligibility and deciding on the amount or type and extent of social services that are to be provided within the province or territory.

The Canada Assistance Plan shares in the costs incurred by provinces and municipalities for operating transition homes for battered women and their children. The care and social services provided to the residents are shared as assistance costs on behalf of persons in need based on the applications of the needs test. Federal funding is not limited to any predetermined amount and is available to all provinces and territories.

In 1987 CAP shared on behalf of women in need and their children in approximately 130 transition and crisis centres across the country. It is estimated that 265 centres currently provide emergency shelter to women and their children. In addition, the plan provided sharing in provincial costs for counselling, day care, rehabilitation and a wide range of other social services benefiting victims of violence.

Some time ago, Canada Assistance Plan policy was changed to accept the use of an abbreviated needs test in emergency situations for determining eligibility in relation to short term care. This gives provinces and territories the flexibility to simplify their admission policies and provide emergency shelter in crisis situations without losing cost sharing.

It is also important to note that National Health and Welfare through the Family Violence Prevention Division, is concerned that a comprehensive approach to education and prevention of wife assault has to be firmly promoted. The Family Violence Prevention Division provides the necessary liaison and co-ordination of activities, clarifies issues and provides general information. This general information is provided mainly through the National Clearing House on Family Violence. Provincial involvement is necessary if the incidents of wife battering and violence in general within the family is to be reduced.

May I add, for my hon. friend, that if there are a million women who are battered each year, there are a million men who are sick and need treatment. Women need shelter and there is an increasing need for role modeling that is healthy, supportive and constructive within the family, and that will deal with this issue. While shelter is important and we must provide it for these distressed families, there must be a cure for these people who are sick and need to find a different way of handling their problems rather than battering wives.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

EDUCATION—CALL FOR INCREASED FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, today many hundreds of Indian people, most of them young, rallied on Parliament Hill to protest vigorously the Government's decision to limit and restrict its spending on education for Indian and Inuit students.

Thousands of young Indian and Inuit students will be unable to pursue post-secondary education this year because of the Government's complex system of capping expenditures and creating categories of eligibility. Funds for primary and secondary education are being shifted here and there across the country, and Quebec is about to lose nearly $3 million in the process.

Indian control of Indian education is proceeding at a snail's pace. When there is a transfer of responsibility, it is with fewer resources than when it was retained under government control.

I say, Sir, to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), re-examine your spending priorities. I ask, do not cast aside yet another generation of aboriginal young people.

Six thousand one hundred and thirty-nine Indian people have signed documents urging the Government of Canada to fulfil its treaty and trust obligations, and provide the necessary educational funding. Those signatures will be delivered this afternoon to the Prime Minister's Office. The Indian people of Canada do expect a positive response.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EFFECT OF TELEVISING PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago the House of Commons was introduced to the heat of television lights and the ever watchful eye of automated cameras. During the past decade the House of Commons has been trivialized by being televised. The new medium has brought a new message.

The televising of House of Commons Question Period has reinterpreted the rule book without rewriting the rules. The rule of relevance is vanishing. The notion that questions ought not to be argumentative has given way to the new medium that demands heat and attack.

No longer is substance the essence of politics. Very few people measure the warrant, the premise, the presumptions, or the evidence upon which conclusions are drawn. The new medium encourages unsubstantiated accusations. Cute expressions have become a substitute for research. Shrillness and high drama are characteristics that are observably more present than a decade ago.

Parliament, citizens, and the process of thoughtful democracy have been the losers. Our nation and her citizens have turned more negative. Accomplishments are seldom applauded, because in every great achievement there is, no matter how small, a dark phase to be exploited, and television drama and exploitation are synonymous. Television has reduced our character and diminished our procedures.

Ah, TV or not TV, that is the question.

Whether 'tis is nobler in the mind to suffer the slings and arrows of outrageous comment, or by opposing end them . . . Et tu, Brute!

PERSONS AWARDS

PRESENTATIONS TO FIVE OUTSTANDING WOMEN

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the 1987 Persons Awards will be presented to five outstanding Canadian women to honour their contributions toward improving the status of women in Canada.

The "Persons Case" was won on October 18, 1929, by a group of suffragists known as "The Famous Five". Led by Judge Emily Murphy, the first woman magistrate in the British Empire, this group of Alberta women included Louise McKinney, Nellie McClung, Irene Parlby, and Henrietta Muir Edwards. Together they fought to have women defined as persons under the law and succeeded in their struggle.

[Translation]

I want to ask you to join me in celebrating the anniversary of this remarkable achievement by paying tribute to the women who have followed in the footsteps of the Famous Five: Jacqueline Laprise-Demers, Margaret Catherine Harris, Frances Laracy, Kay Macpherson and Norma Walmsley. It is very encouraging to see that their efforts to improve women's social economic status have been acknowledged by the Canadian Government. I hope this recognition will inspire other women to take part in the struggle to improve the status of Canadian women.

As Rosemary Brown once said, "Until all of us have made it, none of us have made it".

PERSONS AWARDS

CONGRATULATIONS TO FIVE RECIPIENTS

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to join the Hon. Member in congratulating the five women who are to receive the Persons Awards today. In 1929, five other remarkable women ensured that Canadian women would be legally recognized as persons, which gave them the right to be appointed to the Senate. Those women were Emily Murphy, Louise McKinney, Nellie McClung, Irene Parlby and Henrietta Muir Edwards, who won this battle through their own efforts.

With the Hon. Member and all the Members of this House, I wish to congratulate today's award recipients, and especially Mrs. Jacqueline Laprise-Demers and Mrs. Norma E. Walmsley, both from Quebec.

TRIBUTE TO LATE ROSA BECKER

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, on this day, the anniversary of the Persons Case, when five Canadian women will receive awards in the Senate this afternoon, in recognition of their contribution to and leadership in improving the status of women in Canada; on this day when we pay tribute to the women who were innovators in our country, either by their activities or by their approach and attitudes, I would like to pay a posthumous tribute to Mrs. Rosa Becker, who died last November in Franklin, Quebec. Mrs. Becker was 54 when the Supreme Court awarded her half the assets she had earned while sharing the life of her spouse for twenty years on a farm in Valleyfield. When the court handed out its judgment in December, 1980, Mrs. Becker was happy that she had helped advance the cause of women through this particular case. When she died six years later, she was working as a maid on a farm in Valleyfield and had yet to obtain a single penny of the money she had been awarded, and all because her lawyer had taken his own fee before handing over the money she had been awarded. She left a message, asking the women of Canada and the Government to change the legislation so that when a similar judgment is handed down, the money and assets are give to the client before the lawyers can take out their own fees.

We wish to pay tribute to Mrs. Rosa Becker and to all women in similar situations.

CRIME PREVENTION

LAUNCHING OF MOBILE WATCH PROGRAM

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, community crime prevention was given a major boost today with the launching of Mobile Watch. Mobile Watch will link cellular phone and two-way radio operators with local police departments in order to provide fast information on criminal activity. All Mobile Watch members will become part of a standardized reporting system enabling them to report suspicious activity to the police as it happens.

Over the next 18 months, Mobile Watch will involve 800 corporations, 40,000 vehicles and 100,000 cellular phone users in the fight against crime. I commend the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher), Metro Toronto Police Chief Jack Marks, the Association of Investigator and Guard Agencies, and the Canadian Society for Industrial Security for developing this outstanding non-profit crime prevention program.

Community crime preventions do work. Mobile Watch, together with Neighbourhood Watch, provide Canadians with a chance to become more involved in maintaining the safety of their community. They send a clear message to anyone contemplating criminal activity—"We're watching you."

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON CAPE BRETON

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the people of Cape Breton whose economy is so dependent upon the operations of two Crown corporations are very concerned about the potentially devastating effects of the Government's trade deal with the United States.

The Cape Breton Development Corporation sells coal to the Nova Scotia Power Corporation under a special arrangement to protect the jobs of Cape Breton workers. This underground coal is more expensive to produce than American coal and would not be competitive.

Sydney Steel, a provincial Crown corporation, receives preferential treatment from Canadian National and from the Canadian International Development Agency in the purchase of steel rails for use in Canada as well as internationally.

Because the Government has agreed with the United States to open government procurement to competition from the United States and because the Government has also agreed to take measures to ensure compliance by provincial and local authorities, there is an urgent need for the Government to clarify this issue. It should tell the people of Cape Breton and of Canada whether provincial and federal Crown corporations and federal government agencies, such as CIDA, will be required to purchase from the lowest bidder, whether American or Canadian, or whether they will be prevented from operating such programs which support jobs and industry in the regions of Canada desperately needing government action to assist in economic development.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF ETHANOL PLANT IN DAWSON CREEK, B.C.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, Agri-Fuels Canada Limited is planning to construct a $90 million ethanol plant in Dawson Creek, B.C. A large portion of the required grain will come from farms located in the Alberta Peace country. The use of ethanol in gasoline has many advantages. The opportunity for farmers to market their grain would create jobs, keep people on the farms and stimulate economic activity to help farmers through these difficult times. The use of ethanol would also result in a cleaner, safer environment.

The market currently exists for ethanol in Alaska. However, in order to ensure the success of the plant, action must be taken to secure a Canadian market. The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle), who has worked hard to ensure this project's success, advised me that Petro-Canada should be making a decision this week on the use of ethanol in its product.

I strongly urge Petro-Canada officials to come to a positive decision to use ethanol from the Dawson Creek plant as a fuel additive.

PERSONS AWARDS

TRIBUTE TO FIRST WOMAN SENATOR CAIRINE WILSON

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleagues in the House of Commons today who have made a very eloquent statement on this very important day, Persons Day. This day would not be complete without mentioning Senator Cairine Wilson who, of course, was the first woman Senator of our country and a resident of Cumberland Township in the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

• (1415)

I am sure all Members of the House will remember and will have heard about the famous debate as to whether or not women were considered persons before the law. The whole debate was created by the appointment of Cairine Wilson to the Senate.

I still have the honour to represent members of Cairine Wilson's family. Indeed, two of her sons still live in the constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. I am sure that this is a very special day for all members of the Wilson family, as well as for all women and, indeed, all Canadians.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

MANAGEMENT'S ACTIVITIES DURING RECENT STRIKES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, once again I am required to bring to your attention the anti-worker actions of the Government and, in particular, its Crown corporation Canada Post.

Following the strike earlier this year by the Letter Carriers Union I presented in the House an internal document of Canada Post which documented the activities of management during that strike. It pointed out that many workers feared harassment and discipline if they exercised their legal right to refuse to do the work normally done by those on strike.

At the same time, I also referred to a Canada Labour Relations Board ruling in Halifax which found Canada Post management guilty of breaking the Canada Labour Code.

We now have further stories on the activities of Canada Post. During the most recent CUPW strike The Toronto Star, among other media, reported that agents of Canada Post were lurking in bushes wearing army fatigues and blackened faces.

They were also reported to be following women picketers home and peering through their windows.

These types of activities are entirely unwarranted on the part of Canada Post. They worsen worker-management relations and they put into question the Government's commitment to civil liberties.

These actions must be investigated. I call upon the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) to initiate an immediate, open and complete investigation into the activities of Canada Post during the recent lawful strike by its employees.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON AUTO PACT AND PARTS MANUFACTURERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I would like to direct a question or two to the Deputy Prime Minister.

In his speech last night to the Business Council on National Issues the Prime Minister said: "We have maintained the Auto Pact, and have made important potential gains for our parts industry". That is quite an astounding claim when the same day the chairman of the largest Canadian auto parts manufacturer called the Prime Minister's agreement "nonsense". He called it "stupid trading". He said that the deal would cost Canada "a multitude of jobs" and that his company would move to the United States if the deal went through.

The president of another major auto parts manufacturer in Canada said this: "I can assure you that if the so-called free trade deal were to go through, my consideration would be to set up plants in the United States".

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister this. How can the Prime Minister of of Canada have the nerve to say that this trading deal is good for Canadian auto parts workers when two of the major auto parts companies in the country say that they will move to the United States and set up plants in that country if the deal goes through?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman wants to quote selectively then perhaps I can do the same. The Automotive Industry Association of Canada called this a tremendous opportunity. Dean Wilson, President of the Automotive Industry Association of Canada, in summing up the results of the recently negotiated free trade agreement said: "We feel very positive about the work done by the Canadian Government, Mr. Reisman and his negotiating team".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the quotes I gave to the House came from people who have responsibility for workers in the country and who manufacture original automobile parts. They know what they are talking about and they have said what they will do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last night's speech delivered by the Prime Minister in Toronto before the big guns of the business community contained a whole series of statements, most of them erroneous. The major car parts manufacturers rightly denounced the Prime Minister and indicate they will move their plants to the United States. Considering that these people reject the trade agreement negotiated by the Prime Minister with the United States, will the Prime Minister agree to withdraw it?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why we would want to withdraw the agreement because we also believe, as a government, that we have the responsibility to the workers of Canada. That is why we have provided a climate through our policies wherein close to a million new jobs have been created since this Government assumed office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: We will continue to take up our responsibility.

One of the key initiatives toward economic growth and prosperity for Canada, and long term durable jobs, is the successful negotiation of the free trade arrangement. The right hon. gentleman should get on board and be part of the action. Be positive for a change, rather than negative.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What we have here is a little more feeble bravado from the Deputy Prime Minister who did not deal with the substance of questions relating to the auto parts manufacturers.

DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, let me move on to other ground on which the Minister may or may not feel more comfortable. It concerns the proposed dispute mechanism between Canada and the United States.

Last night, the Prime Minister said in one breath in the same speech that he had gained permanent access to the U.S. market, then admitted that U.S. trade laws would continue to apply against Canada. He then said that the so-called dispute mechanism: "guarantees fair and impartial application of respective laws", but went on to say that the mechanism would not deal with "fine points of law".

In the same speech the Prime Minister said on the one hand that he had permanent access to the American market; on the other hand that American trade laws would continue to apply in their protectionist vein; and on the third hand—if he had one—that the mechanism would not apply fine points of law. In light of these contradictions of the Prime Minister, affecting one of the essential elements of the agreement, namely, the character of the dispute mechanism, what will the Prime Minister do to explain to Canadians that this is a good deal for Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the agreement says, the dispute settlement mechanism is a binding dispute settlement mechanism. Let me read one sentence for the Leader of the Opposition. It states that the binational panel would apply the appropriate standard of judicial review applicable under the domestic law of the party under whose authority the order was challenged.

The significant point here is that having a binational court of appeal will make the process, whether it is within Canada or the United States, a more fair and impartial process. That is what we have been seeking during the course of these negotiations, an impartial application of the law. Our laws in Canada are very similar to the United States laws. Where we have had difficulty in the past is where we have felt their laws have not been applied in the most impartial way.

TABLING OF COMPLETE TEXT OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance is trying to tell us what is in the trade agreement with the United States. However, all we have so far is a document entitled "Elements of the Agreement".

On October 5 the Prime Minister promised the House that he would table "the complete text of the agreement as soon as the wording is finalized". It is now October 21. Exactly when will that complete text be tabled in the House? When will the Prime Minister keep his promise?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, right now the work is under way to translate the elements of the agreement into the legal text as is the normal process for this type of agreement. I expect that that text would be available some time during the month of November.

VIEWS OF AUTO PARTS MANUFACTURERS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance just told us that it will be another six weeks potentially before we get the complete text of the agreement. How can the Minister of Finance try to convince the House and Canadians that he knows what he is talking about when he claims that the agreement is so good for Canadians in the face of the clear views of leaders in the auto parts industry, for example, when he cannot even give the House a complete text? How can he say he knows what he is talking about in the face of clear evidence from people like the heads of the auto parts manufacturers who say that what they know about the deal shows it is a disaster for Canada?

• (1425)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, possibly I might turn that back to the House Leader of the Liberal Party. If he does not know what is in the final text, why is he criticizing it so much?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MEXICO AND ISRAEL—REACTION TO AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last week we heard the Mexicans say they would never have signed the kind of deal—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: You are talking through your Mexican hat.

Mr. Riis: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: It's a Mexican hat dance.

Mr. Riis: Show some respect for the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: Last week we learned the Mexicans would never have signed such a deal as we did in the resource sector. Today the Israelis have said Canada gave away a hundred times more than the Americans in the deal. Beyond that, we also learned today that before the ink was dry on the agreement, the United States proceeded to violate it.

Specifically we learned that the United States, in violation of a clause to which it is already committed pertaining to both countries avoiding subsidies in terms of trade in agricultural products with other countries, in clear violation of this section of the agreement, has begun to negotiate a grain sale with the Soviet Union and India which entails going after our markets with subsidized grain sales from the United States.

Very simply, having negotiated a deal that is already unfair to Canada, how is the Government possibly going to respond to this hypocritical action by the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party excels even his own former record by that question which contains no fewer than three direct misrepresentations. He misrepresents the Government of Mexico in what it said last week. He misrepresents the Government of Israel, and let me read him part of the relevant statement. I will read it all to him, if he wishes. It was released by the Embassy of Israel:

> With regard to the story which appeared today in the Canadian Press, it is important to note that the general impression created there is erroneous. It is Israel which is now studying some of the benefits accorded to Canada in the draft agreement and the possibilities of incorporating similar benefits in future U.S.-Israel trade agreements.

Mr. Crosbie: Right on!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That's great, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The rules of the House prevent me from calling those misrepresentations what they are, but they have become a consistent pattern of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and he should respect the people of Canada and this Parliament more than using his position to cast misrepresentations around the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will refer the Minister to what the Israelis actually said, which was that the Canadian Government gave away a hundred times more than they got.

PROPOSED UNITED STATES SALE OF SUBSIDIZED GRAIN TO U.S.S.R. AND INDIA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I want the Minister to deal with the problems of Canadian farmers, which he did not deal with at all.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The clause in question, on page 14 of the documents produced by the Government of Canada, specifically prohibits the United States and Canada from having subsidies, right now, after it was signed, in agricultural products sold to third parties. The United States, after it signed this, specifically went after our markets in the Soviet Union and India with subsidized grain products, a clear violation of the accord it signed. How is this gutless Government now going to respond to that?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, speaking of gutless, this Government is not jerked around by Bob White and Shirley Carr.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Whether the actions taken by the U.S. are consistent or not with the trade agreement regarding attempts to take away traditional Canadian markets, they are wrong, and the Minister of State for the Wheat Board and myself have protested them. We will continue to oppose that attempt by the U.S. to seek markets which traditionally are Canadian. More than that, we will continue to show international leadership by trying to reform international trade practices as was symbolized yesterday by the statement tabled by this Government in Geneva on agricultural trade.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to get this very clear. The U.S. signed this agreement in one of its many forms on October 4 or October 5 and specifically committed itself not to subsidize agricultural products. It is now specifically going after Canadian markets in clear violation of that agreement. Is the Minister saying that notwithstanding that, the Government of Canada, instead of clearing up this matter right now, is simply going to say: "Oh, dear, how shameful.!" Is that the Government's response?

Mr. Crosbie: What nauseous dishonesty.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not our response as the earlier exchange indicated. The Leader of the NDP should stop his systematic misrepresentation. I say that not only in the context of this Question Period but more generally. It is not at all in the tradition of Tommy Douglas and David Lewis to abuse his privileges so consistently in this House of Commons.

Mr. Crosbie: A Broadbent initiative.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We have made very clear to the U.S. our view that, specifically with regard to the use of their existing subsidies, to seek traditional Canadian markets is wrong and we want it stopped. We have gone beyond that to try to work with other countries to change international agricultural trading patterns, actions which had never before been taken by a Canadian Government. They are being taken by this one because we know it is better to act with leadership internationally than to simply sit and shout from your seat.

UNITED STATES EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM—GRAIN SALES—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs as well. Today we learned that the U.S. is prepared to spend hundreds of millions of dollars through its Export Enhancement Program to steal our traditional wheat and other grain markets in China and Russia. At the same time it would lower the price Canadian farmers are receiving.

I want to know what specific protest the Government of Canada is making to the U.S. Is it going to call in the Ambassador and tell him to cease and desist in these unfair trading practices?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has only learned today that the U.S. is using its Export Enhancement Program to seek to take over Canadian markets and those of other countries, I wonder where in the world he has been for the last several months when the U.S. was doing exactly that and this Government and others were intervening to try to protect our traditional markets.

He asks what we are doing. Among other things, it is on the list of things I intend to be discussing with Secretary Shultz—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Here we are. The NDP would prefer to sit back and be told how to shout by Shirley Carr. What we are going to do is continue to express to the U.S. at the highest levels, and I will be meeting Secretary Shultz on Saturday, our concern about this program, and repeat our request that the U.S. stop using that program to try to cut in on traditional Canadian markets.

EFFECT ON CANADIAN MARKETS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, it is very clear that the U.S. agreed in the free trade deal to take into account Canada's interests when it uses its Export Enhancement Program. Yet within two weeks of the signing of the deal we find out it is stealing our markets. Why is the Government spending $12 million to promote free trade when it knows the Americans broke the deal within two weeks?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the reason we are seeking this kind of arrangement is because we know it will be very much in the interests of Canadians generally and Canadian agriculture in particular. The deal had been very carefully and fairly negotiated to protect the interests of Canadian farmers who thought their interests might have been threatened, and also to advance the interests of Canadian producers who wanted access to a larger market.

There were in existence U.S. programs which caused us problems before the deal was in place. They are still the law of the United States and are still being applied by the U.S. We made it clear we want those programs stopped. I have done it and I will do it again. We are going to do everything we can to try to continue to protect the interests and traditional markets of Canadian farmers.

UNITED STATES COUNTERVAIL DUTIES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, a few short weeks after the initiation of these free trade talks in Quebec City the U.S. imposed countervailing duties against our hogs and pork. About a year later it did the same thing on softwood lumber. The Government told us that would stop once we got an agreement. The agreement was signed and tabled in this House. Where the hell is the Government's response to this?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: The Emmies are in March.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member has put his question.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I heard the—

Mr. Crosbie: Profane histrionics.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —profanity; I missed the question. Perhaps he could repeat the latter.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has been missing the question for two years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Althouse: The Minister assured us on pork, hogs, softwood, saltfish, raspberries, steel, potash, and a number of other issues, that if there was a free trade agreement the U.S. would not indulge in these kinds of activities. It is clear today that it has continued to indulge in subsidizing exports to India, China and Russia, contrary to clauses in the free trade agreement. Since we have had those assurances over the past two years that this sort of thing would stop once such an agreement was signed, why is it continuing?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Canadian Labour Congress and the political Party it controls, the NDP—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Althouse: That is my question. You answer it!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am answering the question put by the farm spokesman.

Mr. Crosbie: Nauseous and noisy.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I understand how difficult it must be to be the farm spokesman for a Party controlled by the Canadian Labour Congress.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The farmers are listening to you.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Their position historically has been that they should simply do nothing at all about the problems facing Canadian producers; they should not try to put in place a better arrangement—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Egmont.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS—FISHERMEN'S SEASONAL UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister for International Trade told the House "that social programs such as unemployment insurance are not part of the trade deal". She went on to say "They are preserved and protected". The Deputy Prime Minister knows full well that, under the free trade deal, a dispute settlement mechanism or review panel can only review American countervailing duties to ensure that such action complies with existing or future U.S. trade laws. In light of this fact, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he can now say that seasonal unemployment insurance benefits for fishermen will be exempt from future countervail duties.

• (1440)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that that was the subject of a countervail action and it was defeated.

FISHING INDUSTRY—EFFECT OF AGREEMENT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with an omnibus Trade Bill that is before the U.S. Congress at this present time, one which could come into effect before January 1, 1989. The Minister knows full well that the Bill before the U.S. Congress could have very severe ramifications for the fishing industry.

Why did the Government fail to get an agreement from the United States when it was negotiating the free trade deal to exempt fishermen from future countervail duties and future American trade laws?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have made it absolutely clear on this side that social programs of any form are not and have not been a part of the negotiations and are clearly outside the agreement that was signed and tabled in the House on October 5. Anything else that the Hon. Member wishes to talk about is speculation in his own mind.

FREE TRADE—POSITION OF SOCIALIST PARTY IN 1965

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, this morning's newspapers are proof positive of the hundreds of thousands of dollars expended by the socialist party to rant on about free trade with the funds of the very people who, since 1965, have owed their living to free trade in the car industry, unless this is the way Mr. Bob White has chosen to run as a candidate in response to the invitation of the Hon. Member for Terrebonne. To the Minister, if one of the socialists' major sources of funds can be traced back to free trade in the auto industry, I should like to know where they stood in 1965: For or against free trade? For or against one out of five jobs in Canada? For or against—

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In all likelihood, Mr. Speaker, the question was directed to the leader of the socialist Party. But the answer is that, at the time when the House of Commons considered the Auto Pact, Mr. White was against it, the socialist Party was against it, and now Mr. White is—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who will realize that the deal that was signed on the weekend of the 4th has now been broken by the United States. If it is broken in this area, it will be broken when it comes up for shakes and shingles, for softwood lumber, for potash, for fish or for any area at all. The Minister has indicated that he will protest this, that he will go to Washington to indicate our concern. Surely to goodness if the Secretary of State is serious about what the Americans have done, he will suspend the signing of this agreement until the whole matter is resolved?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a couple of corrections, if I might. One always has to do this with the members of the NDP because of their peculiar view of the truth. I did not say I was going down to Washington. I said I would have discussions with Mr. Shultz, which I will be doing in Brussels on the weekend.

Mr. Hovdebo: Answer the question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am not sure why the New Democratic Party wants to shout down answers. The actions of the United States in furtherance of an existing program are actions which we oppose but they are not actions which are in breach of the agreement in issue.

REQUEST THAT SIGNING OF AGREEMENT BE POSTPONED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the text of the agreement says that each party has agreed to take into account the export interest, of the other party and the use of any export subsidy on agricultural goods. The Americans have obviously broken the agreement that Canada signed, which means that they can break it on softwood, on shakes and shingles or on any other areas that come up. Rather than simply make a phone call to protest this, will the Secretary of State do something serious and indicate to the Americans that the signing of this agreement will be put off until this is resolved?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I suppose what the New Democratic Party would do is threaten to take violent action against the United States.

Mr. Riis: What are you going to do? Are you going to wimp out again?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Since their policy—let me refer to the agreement. This part of the agreement says that each party has agreed to take into account the export interests of the other party in the use of any export subsidy on agricultural goods exported to third countries, recognizing that some subsidies may have prejudicial effects on the export interests of the other party.

Mr. Riis: Don't do anything about it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The House Leader of the NDP keeps babbling from his seat and will not let me answer the question. The actions that have been taken by the United States in pursuance of an existing program do not breach the treaty that was initialled.

FISHERIES—UNITED STATES COUNTERVAIL DUTIES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In January of 1986 the United States imposed duties on the salmon and herring fishing industries in Canada. A few months prior to that in 1985, duties were imposed by the Americans on fresh Atlantic groundfish. These duties were imposed while we were supposedly negotiating in good faith with the Americans on a free trade agreement.

Why did the Government sign this agreement without first asking or demanding that the Americans drop these countervailing duties? Is it not true that by consenting to this agreement, Canada has acknowledged and legitimized existing countervailing duties in the United States as well as all subsequent countervailing duties imposed by the United States?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were to check his facts, he would discover that no duties were imposed against herring and salmon by the United States in January of 1986. In other words, he is absolutely incorrect in that assertion.

Second, the imposition of a countervailing duty against unprocessed Atlantic groundfish destined for the United States is a clear example of why the dispute settlement provisions of this agreement have been so necessary and will bring untold benefits to the fishery which in fact in all respects gains immensely as a result of this agreement.

POSSIBILITY OF FUTURE COUNTERVAIL ACTIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. If the United States International Trade Commission decides that its domestic industry is being injured by Canadian imports, then it can still impose duties on Canadian fish, even under the free trade agreement with the United States.

Are we Canadians, and in particular fishermen on the Atlantic Coast, supposed to depend upon the influence of the Prime Minister with the President of the United States to prohibit countervail on fisheries, or is it true that the Prime Minister has failed with his dear pal in the United States to get a legal text that would prohibit future countervail against Canadian fishermen, particularly those on the Atlantic seaboard?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, what seems to irritate the Hon. Member and his colleagues in the minority Parties is that we have achieved a mechanism within the context of this agreement which represents a great step forward not only in terms of dealing with an independent court of arbitration on matters of dispute regarding trade remedy law but in fact a general lowering of tariffs which encourages more processing at home, more exports, and more dollars in the pockets of each and every fisherman and plant worker in Canada.

UNITED STATES EXPORT SUBSIDY PROGRAMS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Secretary of State just made an extraordinary statement when he said that there had been no breach of the agreement by the United States. The agreement says on page 14 that each party has to take into account the export interests of the other party in the use of export subsidies on agricultural goods exported to a third country. If that does not mean that the United States should stop using its export subsidy programs, then what indeed does that clause of the agreement really mean?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the clause means what it states. This allegation is put by the New Democratic Party as they flail around for some other justification to oppose an agreement that they decided ideologically, or were instructed by the CLC, to oppose some time ago. Their allegation is that this is in breach of the agreement. It is not.

Mr. Broadbent: Good stuff, Joe.

GRAIN SALES—UNITED STATES EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I know the Secretary of State is not a lawyer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: But as Secretary of State for External Affairs he is one of our chief negotiators.

I wish him to tell the House what this clause means for the farmers of Canada and the people of this country who are concerned about our sovereignty and our exports, if it does not mean that they are supposed to take into account the export interests out of our country when they subsidize grain sales to the Soviet Union, India, or China. What does that clause mean, if it does not mean that they are not supposed to do that if it threatens our markets? Please tell the people of this country what is meant by that phrase.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Hon. Member has not had my distinguished career at law school, and I thank him for the generosity of spirit that would cause him to make that comment on the floor of the House of Commons.

The Hon. Member and I have been engaged in exchanges before with regard to the Export Enhancement Program in the United States. That program has been in place for a long time. It is a program that we oppose. We oppose it both in its application to traditional Canadian markets, and we have opposed it relatively successfully there, because our share of grain exports has been increasing rather than decreasing during the period in question.

We also oppose it through the GATT. We will be opposing it again in representations that I intend to be making directly to Secretary Shultz to try to protect the interests of Canadian producers.

Mr. Nystrom: What does the clause mean?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I repeat the point that the allegation by the New Democratic Party respecting the agreement, as with so many of their allegations, is false.

Mr. Nystrom: What does it mean, Joe?

TAX REFORM

WHITE PAPER PROPOSALS—INSURANCE COMPANIES' RESERVES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the White Paper on Tax Reform, 1987.

In view of the fact that policy holders are becoming increasingly worried about the proposals which discourage insurance companies from maintaining reserves, would the Minister make a statement on motions to clarify his intentions in the matter?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in my judgment the tax reform proposals do not discourage the insurance companies from creating reserves. What they do is put the provision of reserves for the banks, trust companies, and life companies on a more balanced basis. As the Hon. Member knows, they are designed to ensure that the life insurance companies do pay their fair share of tax. That is the nature of the proposals that we have put forward.

We are listening very carefully to the views of the Finance Committee that has been hearing representations from the insurance industry. We have also been consulting with the industry. We will be making our views known on this particular matter once we have all those views in place.

SOLVENCY LEVELS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that legislation passed in this House in June allows the Superintendent of Financial Institutions to mandate solvency levels, would the Minister think it reasonable that at least those levels be allowed as business expenses for taxation purposes?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are getting into quite a technical area here, as I know my hon. friend does realize and does agree. These matters are before the Finance Committee, and because of the level of technicality that is prevalent, they are probably best dealt with in that committee.

Once the committee makes its report, I would be happy to discuss it further with the Hon. Member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARCTIC CO-OPERATION—PROPOSALS MADE BY SOVIET UNION LEADER

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In his Murmansk speech of October 1, Mikhail Gorbachev made a number of proposals relating to Arctic countries' co-operation in such fields as disarmament, natural resources, and the setting up of a joint Arctic Scientific Council. Has our Government made any formal response to those proposals?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have not received the proposals, although we have naturally noted what was said by Mr. Gorbachev in his Murmansk speech.

We are interested in continuing to pursue the question of Arctic co-operation with the Soviet Union, and indeed with other countries that share, as we do, an important North.

Earlier this year we renewed the Arctic Sciences Agreement. The Hon. Member will know that there have been a number of exchanges, including those by the now Secretary of State when he was Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and spent some time in the Soviet North. We intend to continue that high level of co-operation.

We will look very carefully at the proposals put forward by Mr. Gorbachev in his speech. Naturally, we will not conclude any agreements with them on the basis of a speech that he makes. If there are some specific proposals that might flow from it, we would be interested in pursuing them in detail and formally.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—U.S. EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Surely, the Minister will agree that, regardless of what one thinks of the agreement, it is a very serious matter for all concerned if the Americans are able to take this type of action in spite of the agreement that has been reached between this Government and the Government of the United States.

The Minister has outlined for us what the Government has done before the agreement with respect to this, and what the Government intends to do in the future when all of this is outside the agreement. Given that the agreement does state what it states with respect to the use of any export subsidy, which has been repeated over and over again, will the Minister please answer the question as to what this clause might possibly mean, given that the United States, subsequent to the signing of the agreement, has been able to do what it has done?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is the first question asked by the Hon. Member in his capacity as the foreign policy spokesman for his Party. I wish to congratulate him on his appointment to that position.

The original position that had been put forward by the New Democrats in this Question Period—and I wish to answer the question directly—had been that because of an action taken with regard to an existing Export Enhancement Program in the United States, we should throw out the trade agreement. I find that extreme, and I find its premise wrong. It does not breach the agreement.

I certainly do believe that this action by the United States, with regard to the Export Enhancement Program, is not consistent with the spirit of the trade agreement. That is the point that I will be making to George Shultz when I see him in Brussels on Saturday.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, our allegation was just that, that this did breach the agreement, and that it was something that the Government should take seriously enough to indicate, as was suggested by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, that the signing of the agreement might be suspended until such time as the Americans explain their action.

What we are urging upon the Government is within the context of the Government's own policy that, if it takes this agreement seriously, and if it expects that the United States should behave in a particular way with regard to export subsidies, why will it not indicate to the United States that, pending withdrawal of the action it has taken in the last few days, the Government will not be willing to sign any agreement because the Americans have indicated that they do not intend to respect it anyway?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be both extreme and wrong to come to the conclusion that the Hon. Member has with regard to the intention of the United States respecting the agreement that has been initialled. I think it would be foolish and it would cost Canada thousands of jobs were we to put aside the agreement, or even to suggest that we were going to suspend a signature which is, in any event, not going to occur for some time.

With regard to the principle, not only have we been making that case, and not only about the Americans but also about the Europeans who are using subsidies to try to take away traditional Canadian markets, but we intend to continue to make that case.

I will be making it again personally on Saturday, and we will be adding to our argument the fact that this action by the United States, while it does not breach the treaty, is not consistent with the spirit of that agreement.

VALUE OF AGREEMENT TO FARMERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns subsidized wheat sales by the United States designed to displace Canadian markets.

• (1500)

I want to ask the Minister if what he has told us moments ago is correct in other words, that there was no breach of the agreement. If a sale of millions of tonnes of wheat, oilseed, and milk to the Soviet Union, China, and India at bargain prices does not constitute a breach of the agreement, can the Minister tell the House what in blazes is the value of such an agreement if it does not protect us any more than that? What redeeming value is there for Canadian farmers in such an agreement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question several times.

In terms of the value for Canadian farmers, a number of Canadian farmers who practise supply management had been concerned about this arrangement. The way it has been negotiated leaves them with no cause for concern.

A number of Canadian farmers had been seeking wider access to American markets. As a result of this agreement, an access which was denied them before is now in place.

A number of Canadian farmers know that it is in their interest to have a more buoyant Canadian economy. As a result of this agreement, we will have a more buoyant Canadian economy.

FREE TRADE—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully suggest that the Minister has failed to respond to the question put to him.

Is he now prepared to tell the House just how many times the Americans will have to break the agreement, or the spirit of the agreement, as he puts it, before he gets up to tell them we have had it and the whole deal is off?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I answered this question in English on a number of occasions. I am pleased to answer in French and repeat that farmers and the agricultural community stand to gain major benefits from the free trade agreement which the Canadian Government has signed with the Americans. People working in industries protected by the supply management system will continue to be so protected. As to other Canadian farm producers who are seeking larger markets, American markets, these markets are now open or will be open to them once the agreement has been signed, but right now they do not have access to these markets.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

EDUCATION—AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Eighteen months ago the Government denied plans to implement the Nielsen "Buffalo Jump" of the 1980s.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister explain why his Government, as laid out in the Nielsen plan, has been over the last 18 months cutting funds to Canada's Indian, Inuit, and Métis people across the board in post-secondary education, creation of new bands and reserves, economic development, Bill C-31 implementation, claims and test funding, housing, and the list goes on?

Why is the Government cutting the budgets to those Canadians who face the highest levels of unemployment, the highest rate of infant mortality, the highest rate of incarceration, and the lowest life expectancy of all Canadians?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member shares with the Government the concern for adequate post-secondary education.

I think the evidence clearly points to the fact that greater emphasis has been placed on post-secondary education. For example, the support for Indian post-secondary education now stands at some $93.7 million. This has grown from less than $9 million a decade ago. The number of full-time students has been increased by some 148 per cent, to over 11,000 students since 1981-82.

While that is tremendous progress, as the Hon. Member knows there still remains much to be done, and the Government is committed to doing more.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PRESENTATION OF SEVENTH AND EIGHTH REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the seventh and eighth reports of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business, in both official languages.

The seventh report deals with the selection of a votable item pertaining to the seventh draw which took place on October 8, 1987. May I note that pursuant to Standing Order 36(1)(b) this seventh report is deemed adopted when laid upon the table.

The eighth report deals with the criteria which the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business has developed for the selection of votable items.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS—EXTENSION OF AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties, and I think you would find consent for the following motion to be placed immediately. I move:

> That, further to the order of reference given by the House on September 28, 1987 allowing the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans to travel to Norway from October 24 to 31, 1987, the House authorizes the committee to extend its trip for four days to include a visit to Scotland to examine the Scottish aquaculture industry and questions related to the control of fish diseases.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member of State have unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MIGRATORY BIRDS CONVENTION ACT—PROTECTION OF ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a duly certified petition to present to the House of Commons from members of the Cree Indian Nation resident in northeastern Ontario who consider that the Migratory Birds Convention Act violates their law and custom, as well as their treaty and aboriginal rights.

First, they are urging the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to withdraw the 11 charges made under the Act. Second, they call upon the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) to order the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to stop its harassment of Indian people under this Act. Finally, they ask that the Government initiate a review of the Migratory Birds Convention Act and complete the process of amendment, which was begun several years ago, designed to protect and recognize aboriginal rights with regard to the hunting of game birds.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED TAX REFORMS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present a duly certified petition from constituents of mine in Thunder Bay—Nipigon as well as from residents of the neighbouring riding of Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

The petition protests that the federal Government's White Paper calls for changes to the taxation structure of Canada but does not change an already unfair tax structure for average Canadian families, while allowing wealthy Canadians earning over $100,000 per year not to pay their fair share and in fact to receive a tax cut under the proposal.

The petitioners also protest the fact that the changes permit 60,000 profitable corporations to pay no income tax at all. They particularly protest the possibility of a tax levy on food and on other essential items.

They call upon the Government to restore full indexation to the personal income tax system. It is my pleasure to present this petition to my colleagues in the House.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure—indeed it is an honour—to present, pursuant to Standing Order 106, a petition on behalf of a number of western Canadians who are concerned about the Government's approach to Bill C-55.

They ask Parliament to recall that the standing committee of Parliament dealing with refugee status has proposed a new procedure which, if adopted, would fairly and effectively solve the problems of backlogs and unsubstantiated claims. It has the support of the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress and virtually every other group in the country knowledgeable on refugee issues. Therefore, they ask the Government to withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute it with legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings.

PROPOSED TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM BY AIR OVER CANADA

Question No. 191—Mr. Caccia:

Did the government raise with the International Atomic Energy Agency the issue of the proposed transport of plutonium by air over Canada and (a) if so, on what date and in what manner (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows:

(a) Not applicable.

(b) No, the Canadian Government did not specifically raise the issue of the proposed air transportation of plutonium over Canada with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) as this is not the proper forum. Consultation was carried out bilaterally with the principals involved, Japan and the United States.

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed from Monday, October 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1982 came into force on April 17, 1982, following an agreement between Canada and all the provinces except Quebec;

AND WHEREAS the Government of Quebec has established a set of five proposals for constitutional change and has stated that amendments to give effect to those proposals would enable Quebec to resume a full role in the constitutional councils of Canada;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto sets out the basis on which Quebec's five constitutional proposals may be met;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto also recognizes the principle of the equality of all the provinces, provides new arrangements to foster greater harmony and cooperation between the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces and requires that conferences be convened to consider important constitutional, economic and other issues;

AND WHEREAS certain portions of the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto relate to matters referred to in section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

AND WHEREAS section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province;

NOW THEREFORE the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE

Constitution Act, 1867

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 1 thereof, the following section:

"2. (1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(2) The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

(4) Nothing in this section derogates from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 24 thereof, the following section:

"25. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, the government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate.

(2) Until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the person summoned to fill a vacancy in the Senate shall be chosen from among persons whose names have been submitted under subsection (1) by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates and must be acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 95 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Agreements on Immigration and Aliens

95A. The Government of Canada shall, at the request of the government of any province, negotiate with the government of that province for the purpose of concluding an agreement relating to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province that is appropriate to the needs and circumstances of that province.

95B. (1) Any agreement concluded between Canada and a province in relation to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province has the force of law from the time it is declared to do so in accordance with subsection 95C(1) and shall from that time have effect notwithstanding class 25 of section 91 or section 95.

(2) An agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) shall have effect only so long and so far as it is not repugnant to any provision of an Act of the Parliament of Canada that sets national standards and objectives relating to immigration or aliens, including any provision that establishes general classes of immigrants or relates to levels of immigration for Canada or that prescribes classes of individuals who are inadmissible into Canada.

(3) The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies in respect of any agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) and in respect of anything done by the Parliament or Government of Canada, or the legislature or government of a province, pursuant to any such agreement.

95C. (1) A declaration that an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) has the force of law may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement.

(2) An amendment to an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized

(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement; or

(b) in such other manner as is set out in the agreement.

95D. Sections 46 to 48 of the Constitution Act, 1982 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of any declaration made pursuant to subsection 95C(1), any amendment to an agreement made pursuant to subsection 95C(2) or any amendment made pursuant to section 95E.

95E. An amendment to sections 95A to 95D or this section may be made in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection 38(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, but only if the amendment is authorized by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of all the provinces that are, at the time of the amendment, parties to an agreement that has the force of law under subsection 95B(1)."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 96 thereof, the following heading:

"General"

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 101 thereof, the following heading:

"Courts Established by the Parliament of Canada"

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 101 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Supreme Court of Canada

101A. (1) The court existing under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada is hereby continued as the general court of appeal for Canada, and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a superior court of record.

(2) The Supreme Court of Canada shall consist of a chief justice to be called the Chief Justice of Canada and eight other judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor General in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

101B. (1) Any person may be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who, after having been admitted to the bar of any province or territory, has, for a total of at least ten years, been a judge of any court in Canada or a member of the bar of any province or territory.

(2) At least three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be appointed from among persons who, after having been admitted to the bar of Quebec, have, for a total of at least ten years, been judges of any court of Quebec or of any court established by the Parliament of Canada, or members of the bar of Quebec.

101C. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court.

(2) Where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

(3) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) of any of the three judges necessary to meet the requirement set out in subsection 101B(2), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the Government of Quebec.

(4) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) otherwise than as required under subsection (3), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the government of a province other than Quebec.

101D. Sections 99 and 100 apply in respect of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

101E. (1) Sections 101A to 101D shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws under section 101 except to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with those sections.

(2) For greater certainty, section 101A shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws relating to the reference of questions of law or fact, or any other matters, to the Supreme Court of Canada."

7. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 106 thereof, the following section:

"106A. (1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

(2) Nothing in this section extends the legislative powers of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces."

8. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and sections:

"XII—Conferences on the Economy and Other Matters

148. A conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year to discuss the state of the Canadian economy and such other matters as may be appropriate.

XIII—References

149. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

Constitution Act, 1982

9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part."

10. Section 44 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"44. Subject to section 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons."

11. Subsection 46(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province."

12. Subsection 47(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution."

13. Part VI of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"PART VI

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

50. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate;

(b) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries; and

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon."

14. Subsection 52(2) of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(d) any other amendment to the Constitution of Canada."

15. Section 61 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Act 1982, or a reference to the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1982, shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

General

16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

CITATION

17. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

and on the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

October 1, 1987—That the motion be amended

(a) in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 2.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada;

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society;

(c) the recognition that aboriginal peoples constitute a distinctive and fundamental characteristic of Canada;

(d) the recognition of the multicultural nature of Canadian society, and in particular respect for the many origins, creeds and cultures as well as the differing regional identities that helped shape Canadian society; and

(e) the recognition of the advantages of developing the Canadian economic union."

(b) in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 2.(2) and substituting the following therefor:

"2(a) The role of the Parliament of Canada to preserve and promote, and the role of the provincial legislatures to preserve and, subject to subparagraph (2)(b) to promote, the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph 1(a) is affirmed.

(b) The role of a province in relation to promotion applies from the time it is adopted by a resolution of the legislative assembly of that province."

(c) in paragraph 2 of the Schedule by deleting section 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"25. Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, and until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the government of Canada shall, within six months after the vacancy occurs, call an election in the province or territory to which the vacancy relates for the purpose of filling that vacancy, and, notwithstanding the provision of section 29 of the Constitution Act, 1867, for a term of nine years."

(d) in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by deleting subsections 101C.(1) and (2) and substituting the following therefor:

"101C.(1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province and the elected government of each territory may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province or territory and are qualified under section 101B. for appointment to that court.

(2) Subject to subsection (5), where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

(e) in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by adding immediately after subsection 101C.(4) the following:

"(5) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) and, if within a period of three months, no name which has been submitted under subsection (1) is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, the Chief Justice may make an interim one-year appointment from among justices of the Federal Court of Canada or provincial Superior Courts."

(f) in paragraph 7 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 106A.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"106A.(1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Parliament of Canada after the coming into force of this section, in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a compatible program which meets minimum national standards."

(g) by deleting paragraphs 9, 10, 11 and 12 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the right of a province of a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(c) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(d) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(e) the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(f) an amendment to this Part.

42.(1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 38(1):

(a) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators; and

(b) the number of members by which a province or territory is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators.

(2) Subsections 38(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

42A. Notwithstanding subsection 42(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, the establishment of new provinces and the extension of existing provinces into territories shall be a matter exclusively for the Governor General in Council and the elected government of the territory affected."

(h) in paragraph 13 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 50.(2) and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) the aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including self-government;

(b) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators, representation in the Senate.

(c) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries at the first meeting only;

(d) such other matters as are agreed upon."

(i) by deleting paragraph 16 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"16. Nothing in the Constitution Amendment, 1987 derogates from any of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms or affects Part II of the Constitution Act, 1982".—The Leader of the Opposition.

and on the amendment of Mr. Broadbent:

October 1, 1987—That the motion be amended

(a) by adding in paragraph 2 subsection 25(1) the words "and the elected government of each territory" immediately after the word "province";

(b) by adding in paragraph 2 subsection 25(2) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(c) by adding in paragraph 6 subsection 101C.(1) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(d) by adding in paragraph 6 subsection 101C.(4) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(e) by deleting in paragraph 9, section 41 paragraph (i);

(f) by adding to paragraph 13 subsection 50(2) the following new paragraph:

"(c) aboriginal rights, in particular self-government;"

(g) by adding to paragraph 13 section 50 the following new subsection:

"(3) The Prime Minister shall invite to the Conferences designated in section 50 subsection (2)(c) representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada and the governments of the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory and those groups and governments shall participate fully in all matters that affect aboriginal rights."

(h) by deleting paragraph 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25, 27 or 28 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution.—Mr. Broadbent.

and on the amendment of Mr. Caccia:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 1 of the Schedule

(a) by deleting Section 2.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the recognition that Canada constitutes aboriginal and multicultural societies, with English and French as the official languages of Canada, French-speaking Canadians being centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada and English-speaking Canadians concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec".

(b) by deleting Section 2.(3).

and on the amendment of Mr. Allmand:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by adding immediately after subsection 2.(4) the following:

"(5) Nothing in this section derogates from any of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms."

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties. I think you will find that there is consent for the following suggestion with respect to the rotation of speakers this afternoon.

We would suggest that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) be allowed to complete his remarks and that he be followed by the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer), the very capable chairman of the special committee, who will be followed by the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), with the suggestion that should the Hon. Member for Oshawa require additional time to complete his remarks that the House give its consent to that extension. The next speaker would then be the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) followed by my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). It would then be the suggestion that the House return to the normal rotation of speakers.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of accommodating the House, you will have noticed that the Liberal Party, the Official Opposition, has given up its spot in the rotation of speakers. In doing so, and Wednesday being a short day, it could be that we will only get one speaker on today. I would like the patience and possibly the understanding of the House in that should the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who will speak for the Liberal Party of Canada, need a few minutes extra to cover his points, he will be granted that time.

Mr. Lewis: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There seems to be a disposition in the House to agree with the request of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier. Is there unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke on Monday, I was comparing the position taken by the New Democratic Party at our convention in Montreal in March when we had arrived at the end of a lengthy period of reflection on the question of Quebec and Canada with the actual terms of the Meech Lake Accord.

We called for the Constitution to recognize the uniqueness of Quebec, and the Accord recognizes that Quebec constitutes a distinct society. We said in our resolution, in our Party policy, that Quebec should be able to opt out with compensation if there was any transfer of provincial powers to the federal level with which it disagreed. That is contained in one of the provisions of the Accord. We said that Quebec should have a veto on any amendment that would alter federal institutions when these were considered vital to the security and preservation of the French language and culture in Quebec. As you know, the Accord provides that there is in fact a veto to every province because of the rule of unanimity for changes in federal institutions.

The fourth part of our resolution, which as I say was arrived at after a great deal of sober and serious reflection, wanted the Party to explore new constitutional provisions. The purpose would be to protect the linguistic rights of Quebec's majority while at the same time ensuring the preservation of minority language rights as they now exist in the Constitution. We were not exactly sure how to do that, and put it aside for further study.

I regret that the Premiers were unable to resolve this particular issue in their discussions at Meech Lake and in the Langevin Block. I believe this is a matter which should be dealt with in the future because, as Quebec has indicated through Bill 101 and by other means, there are particular requirements in that province as a French speaking island in a North American continent which speaks English, where the protection of the language of the majority as well as the protection of minority language rights should be sought.

There can be no question about the fact that New Democrats have concerns over the Accord. I share those concerns. But we have to put these in context with the fact that Quebec is saying yes to Confederation. It is in that spirit that I support the Accord and intend to vote for it when it comes to the vote next Monday.

Nonetheless, I and my colleagues share the concern that the Accord passes over the question of whether or not the rights that were won after such a battle by women at the time of the constitutional agreements of six or seven years ago might be downgraded by the Accord. Our experts, our members, who sat on the joint committee, did not believe that. It is not our position or belief that that is the case, but in order to ensure that that does not take place, and in response to the concerns of women's groups across Canada, we believe that the Accord should specifically ensure that women's rights are not overridden by these provisions.

We are concerned that the Accord completely ignores the essential requirement that the Constitution of Canada be amended in order to deal with legitimate concerns of Canada's aboriginal peoples. I believe the commitment at the last round, that there be a constitutional conference on aboriginal peoples and rights, should have been reiterated in the Accord.

We are concerned that one province could veto the Yukon and Northwest Territories from becoming a province sometime in the future.

We are concerned that a northerner cannot be named to the Supreme Court of Canada. We believe that that should be fixed now rather than being left.

I have to say that, given the recent difficulties, perhaps as well the Accord should be amended now in order to curtail for a limited period of time the powers of the Senate of Canada to block legislation that has been adopted by the Parliament of Canada.

When I hear other complaints about the Accord I have to say that I fail to find them convincing. It has been suggested that Canada is becoming balkanized and yet powers are not redistributed in the Accord. It has been suggested that the spending power will no longer be a useful tool for the federal Government, despite the fact that the spending power is being recognized for the first time in the Constitution, according to the terms of the Accord. It is only where we are talking about a shared program in an area of provincial jurisdiction and where a province puts in place a program that meets the national objectives that a province will be able to enjoy the financial compensation which is called for in the Accord. That is a very narrow set of requirements, Mr. Speaker. It is still open for the federal Government to use its spending power exclusively, rather than on a shared basis, in order to act in an area which is largely of provincial jurisdiction.

The question here is the nature of the country. I believe that Canada has to operate co-operatively. I was here in this Parliament as an observer, as a journalist in the 1960s. I have seen the development of the provincial levels of Government in the past 20 years during my active career as a journalist and as a politician. The provinces have much more competence than they had back in those days. They have a much greater share in spending and in the provision of social services. They are closer to being equal partners with the federal Government than they were at the beginning of the 1960s. I do not think there is anything wrong in recognizing that in a constitutional Accord, which at the same time reserves the essential powers already there for a federal Government.

My Party, however, recognizes that we cannot run Canada, a country which is 4,000 miles in breadth, as though it were a centralized small state like the United Kingdom of England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. We must have decentralization. Everybody acknowledges that whether we are talking about regional development policy, economic development policy or the Constitution. I believe we have the right balance in the Accord.

Some people have expressed concern over the provisions recognizing Quebec as a distinct society. I simply say to them that the New Democratic Party since its foundation in 1961 has sought to recognize the uniqueness of Quebec. We have used a number of different formulae but we have not wavered in our recognition that Quebec is a unique society. Yes, of course, that can create some difficulties.

If the alternative is not to have a country that is whole, then surely we must recognize what observers have said from the beginning of the foundation of our country, that having a part of Canada where French is the language and culture of the majority is something unique and distinct and it should be recognized in the Constitution.

It has been suggested that because of the rule of unanimity we are freezing constitutional reform. I disagree. The fact is that most amendments to the Constitution can continue to be made on the basis of the majority plus seven provinces. The rule of unanimity only applies to certain areas where it did not apply before, namely, to the area of federal institutions. I regret that perhaps this makes the process of Senate reform more difficult. The process of the abolition of the Senate will be more difficult. Nonetheless, we can get to that later. We are bringing Quebec in right now and we are not stopping the power of the majority of the provinces, for example, to change the allocation of powers between the federal and provincial levels if that is what they want to do.

I have already dealt with the question of women's rights. I want to note, however, that both the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and the Fédération des femmes du Québec agree with the position that with an abundance of caution, there should be a saving clause. I would hope that Members of all Parties would accept that particular amendment by the New Democratic Party.

I want to conclude by speaking about two important decisions which are now before this Parliament and this country. First is the issue of the Meech Lake Accord, the constitutional amendments, and the second is the issue of free trade. I want to talk about the process that is taking place in those two particular questions.

It is now some 25 years since the beginning of the quiet revolution, 30 years since the beginning of the quiet revolution in Quebec. It is 25 years since Canadians have begun to actively ask, "What does Quebec want?" as it was phrased in Ontario, and to work in different ways to find a new basis for partnership between the rest of Canada and French-speaking Canadians in the Province of Quebec.

When we embarked on constitutional change in 1981, it was after a referendum in Quebec in which Quebecers spoke in favour of Canada, but that was on the basis of a pledge by Canadians from the rest of the country that real action would be taken. Now we have a second run and real action is being taken. The Meech Lake Accord follows proposals made first by Premier Levesque and then by Premier Bourassa. It follows lengthy negotiations. It follows a process of discussion by the premiers as well as by their representatives. It will not be ratified until it has been endorsed by this Parliament and by the legislature of every province. The process has been criticized by the select committee, by the joint committee. Nonetheless, there has been a lengthy process in which every Canadian could become involved, and this for a document of only 12 pages.

When the President of the United States said two and a half weeks ago that Canada and the United States have signed the basis of a new economic constitution for North America, have signed what amounts to an economic union between Canada and the United States, and I look at the process which is being followed, I am ashamed of the Government. I am ashamed of my country that we should enter into this agreement with such a faulty process.

If we sign an extradition treaty with the Republic of India, for example, it is done by the normal executive powers which the Government of the day sustains through having the confidence of the House of Commons. However, there was no mandate for the free trade agreement in the 1984 election. In fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke against it in running for the leadership of his Party back in the early 1980s. There has been no mandate from the people of Canada to have an economic union with the United States.

In previous years, in the 1870s, in 1911, and again after the Second World War, the prospects of economic union was discussed, considered and in one case went to an election, and Canadians indicated that they did not want to lose sovereignty. Of course, there has been a cost. We have lost, perhaps, in terms of our standards of living. Perhaps a few products from United States have not been available in Canadian stores. But we have gained in terms of our nationhood, in terms of the fact that we have done things differently, and that Quebec can now find a place within Canada which it could never find within a unified new nation comprising Canada and the United States. What we have gained is without comparison.

I believe we had better put it on the line and say that it is wrong to let the sovereignty of this country go down the drain without at least giving the people of Canada a chance to speak. I am not afraid, as some members of the Government have suggested, for Canada to go it alone if this is a bad deal. I am not afraid to take the risk of Canada standing on its own, because we have stood alone for 120 years since Confederation. We have often been threatened with absorption by our neighbour to the south and we have withstood that successfully. I am proud of what we have achieved as Canadians and I believe that Canadians are confident enough to continue in that way if we cannot get a decent kind of arrangement with the United States.

I believe this country must have the chance to speak on the Meech Lake Accord, and we are speaking, through our parliaments and through our legislatures. The people of Canada have had a chance to say, yes, they want Quebec in. The people of Canada have not had that chance with respect to the free trade agreement. I believe that before the free trade agreement is entered into there must be an election in which all Canadians can speak. If the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and their Cabinet are in fact not afraid, as they accuse us of being, why will they not take this country to an election in which we can endorse the Meech Lake Accord and in which Canadians can speak loud and clear as to whether they want to give the soul of this country up to the United States?

We are gaining on the Meech Lake Accord. We are proud to be Canadians and we want to keep Canada sovereign, not to give our sovereignty away to the United States. That is why I am going to vote for the Meech Lake Accord. That is why I call on members of the government to back my claim and my Leader's call to have an election on the free trade agreement. Let us take this to the people and see what the people of Canada want. Let them speak up for Canada because this Government will not.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Members's remarks and, in particular, I would like to refer to his comments about the spending power of the federal Government and the ability of the provinces to opt out of national shared-costs programs if the provinces carry on programs or initiatives that are compatible with the national objectives.

The Hon. Member says he is not concerned with this particular provision and the fact that it may inhibit the reform of our social programs or the creation of future social programs. I would like to remind him of the Canada Health Act, adopted by this House in 1984, which sets out in Section 3 the objective of that Act. It says the objectives of the Canadian health care policy is to protect, promote and restore the physical and mental well-being of residents of Canada and to facilitate reasonable access to health services without financial or other barriers. That is the objective.

Under sections relating to program criteria and conditions, one such criterion is that in order to satisfy the criteria respecting comprehensiveness, the health care plan of a province must "ensure all insured health services provided by hospital or medical practitioners", and it goes on in that same vein.

What I am concerned about is that a future Parliament of Canada would not be able to obtain the adherence of the provinces to a condition of this nature. If the government of a province wanted, for example, to exclude certain services such as, let us say, abortion services, and those services were not eligible under a plan of a particular province for reimbursement under medicare, the Parliament of Canada could not impose such a condition which is far different from the general objective of the nature that is described in the Canada Health Act under "objectives".

• (1530)

When the Hon. Member reflects on the difference between an objective, a criterion, and a condition, does it not give him concern that the ability of the Parliament of Canada to legislate and lead the country in the area of social programs is being diminished?

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: —for Laurier (Mr. Berger). In fact, I find the Accord reassuring, because before, the federal Government's spending power was not defined in any constitutional document, except in comments by constitutional experts. Now this spending power will be in our country's Constitution, if the Accord is ratified by the provinces and this Parliament. The Hon. Member says: Suppose a province decides to exclude abortion procedures from its health insurance program. How could Parliament make the province's health insurance system cover these procedures? I think the Hon. Member forgets that in some of the Maritime Provinces and, if I am not mistaken, Alberta, abortions are not covered by health insurance, something I personally deplore, but that is the situation at this time. However, should the Parliament of Canada specify as one of our national objectives that no citizen should have to pay for medical services, I don't think a province could refuse to pay for necessary procedures such as an abortion. So we are strengthening instead of weakening the situation as it is now.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member for Laurier, a Liberal Member from Quebec, is opposed to the position taken by the provincial Liberals in that province. We in the New Democratic Party support the efforts of all Quebecers to make Quebec truly a part of Canada. The Hon. Member was describing the kind of situation that might create problems in the future. And that is why he is opposed to the Accord which is Quebec's chance to truly be part of Canada. I think it is so important for Quebec to be part of Canada and to join our constitutional union, that this must outweigh the criticism the Accord has received. As for spending power as I said before, we have lost nothing, we have only gained, in terms of the federal Government's authority to use that spending power according to rules that are more clearly defined and that seem fair to the provinces and to the federal Government and to augur well for the future.

Mr. Berger: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member said that before, the federal Government's spending power was not defined in our Constitution, that it was simply confirmed by certain experts. Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, the opinion of these experts is that the Supreme Court of Canada, in its various decisions, has confirmed the federal Government's authority to spend in areas that fall under provincial jurisdiction. I would therefore suggest this is a power the federal Government already has under our present Constitution and which has been confirmed by decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada.

I also believe there may be some confusion in the Hon. Member's mind about general objectives. The provinces can subscribe to objectives that are general enough so they can opt out of a social program or receive full compensation from the federal Government or the Parliament of Canada. They do not have to abide by the kind of criteria we discussed earlier, like the integrity of medical services.

I would also like to say to the Hon. Member that my objections to the Accord go beyond the issue of spending power. My objections are much broader and are based on many other aspects of the Meech Lake Accord which, as I see it, goes against what the Parliament of Canada has done in the past 25 years to ensure that all of Canada belongs to both Francophones and Anglophones. It goes against the linguistic equality policies introduced by various governments in the past twenty-five years. Perhaps the Hon. Member would care to read what I said a few days ago on the subject in the House.

[English]

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments but he seems to be saying that he prefers to rely on judgments of the Supreme Court respecting the spending power of the federal Government despite the fact those judgments can be overturned. What the Supreme Court decides today it can change tomorrow. I agree that spending power is a more important part of the de facto Constitution of Canada. If he feels the same, then I suggest it is too important to be left to the Supreme Court. It should be part of our written Constitution. That is the conclusion the Premiers and the Prime Minister came to and they hammered out an agreement which at the same time respects duality when we come to deal with shared-cost programs.

I remind the Hon. Member that spending power is unaffected if the federal Government chooses to go alone in a particular area. The only place where it is affected is in the area of shared-cost programs. In addition, I remind him that it was Liberal legislation, the Canada Health Act of 1974, which, as he says, is meant to protect the integral nature of health services, yet under that legislation certain provinces, including Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and Alberta, decided to withdraw coverage for abortion.

What is really required if we get into that kind of confrontation is for the federal Government to show the political will to spell out the national objectives to ensure that a province cannot duck out of its responsibilities. What the Hon. Member is saying is that his Government did not have that political will three and a half years ago and no Government in the future can have it either. That is of course nonsense.

I would like to conclude by reminding him that the first part of the Accord recognizes that the existing French-speaking Canadians centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitute a fundamental characteristic of Canada. Certainly that is what we have been saying for 25 years. It also says Quebec constitutes a distinct society and if the Hon. Member—

[Translation]

If the Hon. Member for Laurier cannot agree that Quebec is a distinct society and should be recognized as such in the Constitution, that is his opinion and not mine. It is not the opinion of my Party, nor is it the opinion of the people of Quebec, including the Liberal Government in Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, September 21, I had the privilege of tabling in this House the report of the joint committee of the House and Senate which considered and evaluated the Constitutional agreement which we have come to know as the Meech Lake Accord. Before getting to the main part of my remarks I would like to offer the House some preliminary impressions that I formed sitting as co-chairman of that joint committee.

At the outset, when the Meech Lake Accord was drafted and signed, I was not sure, nor do I believe many other Members were sure, just exactly what the implications were going to be for the Constitution. It was not until we began to sit and hear evidence, and we sat week after week, five weeks to be exact, that I became appreciative of the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the First Ministers had drafted a superb document which was going to strengthen Canada. Week after week my belief in this document became more intense.

The second thing I would like to say is that the committee was in an anomalous situation in the sense that we had the uniqueness of having the Leader of the Liberal Party, the Leader of the New Democratic Party and the Prime Minister, as well as all the premiers, agreeing that this document should form part of the Constitution of Canada. Yet there was a body of opinion within the country which felt that they disagreed with the Meech Lake Accord. This was probably best exemplified when the former Prime Minister, Pierre Trudeau, wrote his article which appeared in The Toronto Star.

In those situations I think there was a general determination by all members of the committee that we were going to look squarely and fairly at every issue that evolved from the Meech Lake Accord. That is why I am rather proud that the document, the constitutional Accord report, reflects all of the issues raised, whether or not one agrees with the conclusions. I hope that we have fairly dealt with all issues that were raised during the currency of the hearings.

This afternoon in thinking about what the substance of my remarks ought to be I thought of the testimony of Gordon Robertson and the way in which he approached the Meech Lake Accord in testifying before us. As a result I would like to also set forth the policy considerations that I think are pertinent to deciding whether the agreement struck between the Prime Minister and the ten premiers ought to be adopted.

Like any other politician in the Chamber, this summer in my constituency office I was swamped by telephone calls and other communications with respect to the Sikhs coming to our shores. In my own riding office I received somewhere in excess of 250 communications with respect to that issue. Yet, at the same time, I had a handful of calls or letters with respect to the Meech Lake Accord. So I think that I can say with some confidence that the bar stools of Cambridge do not twirl at the mention of the words "Meech Lake". Yet, this Accord to me is an historic act of national reconciliation which, if adopted, will better reflect Canadian realities.

Conversely, should the Accord not be adopted then one must be prepared to accept, at least in the foreseeable future, that Quebec will remain officially estranged and that a constitution without Quebec will continue to limp along without the willing participation of one of the key parties to Confederation.

Professor Max Cohen has called our Constitution the revered script in our national passion play. From earliest times men and women have sought to reduce to writing the values that a nation hold to be sacred. Our Constitution is now but five years old, but it is incomplete. While the 1982 Constitution Act gave us patriation, the amending formula and the Charter of Rights, the isolation of Quebec as a willing participant in the Constitution left a grievance that would have to be addressed by future Canadian leaders.

Furthermore, with the emphasis in 1982 on the patriation process, and now on the Charter, important questions were put aside concerning the appropriate balance between the federal and the provincial Governments.

The Prime Minister and the Premiers at their Edmonton meeting in August of 1986 agreed to an agenda which would focus specifically on the issues of Quebec and the subsequent negotiations which became known as the "Quebec Round". The atmosphere surrounding the negotiations I think can accurately be described as pessimistic. However, the bargain that was struck by the 11 Canadian leaders was welcomed by many as the miracle of Meech Lake.

It is curious that the word "miracle" was used to describe it by some people. Why did some people describe it in that fashion? I think that was because individuals with such disparate political philosophies and different constitutional track records as Premier Vander Zalm on the one hand and Premier Pawley on the other could arrive at an agreement with the Prime Minister of Canada, as well as each and every other premier, on the thorny issue of the treatment of Quebec.

What questions ought Canadians to be asking themselves with respect to the Meech Lake Accord? It seems to me that the first question should be whether or not the First Ministers were correct in having as their objective and as their priority Quebec as a willing participant in the Canadian Constitution. If this objective was correct then we must go on to ask ourselves whether the arrangements agreed upon have adverse consequences for the rest of Canada. Finally, I think it is important to ask ourselves what the consequences will be if the 1987 constitutional Accord unravels.

It is on these three points that I would like to say a few words this afternoon. From strictly a legal point of view, the 1982 Constitution applies to Quebec. But, in the words of Yves Fortier, a friend of many in this Chamber and a former distinguished President of the Canadian Bar Association:

> The fact is that politically and even morally the 1982 Constitution Act does not apply to Quebec. Those who claim it does are guilty of constitutional heresy.

Or, in the words of Professor Bill Lederman, an individual, whom I respect a great deal:

> Everyone knows in the technical, legal sense it is in force in Quebec. But that is not good enough, particularly for a constitutional document. We always have to be renewing our beliefs in and our allegiance to our constitutional principles. A bare legal technicality is not good enough.

The legitimacy of a constitution rests on the willing assent of the governed. A law that is perceived to be unfair generates resistance and resentment. This is true whether the provisions are found in a statute or in the constitution itself. It is important for us to remember our own history. When Quebec voted for Canada in the referendum of 1980 the Government of the day promised Quebec a renewed sense of federalism. I think the emotion of that time was eloquently captured by Madam Chaput-Rolland in her testimony before the committee. This testimony has been quoted by, I believe, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). It had a profound effect on some of us who were sitting in the room as members of the committee. She said:

> I think none outside Quebec knew the reality of the referendum. I travelled throughout Canada, about a few months later. It was all over, eh? Good. It was not exactly all over. Families against families, towns against towns, fathers and mothers not speaking to their children. During the referendum we spoke with thousands of Quebecers. Women wanted to leave to their children a country as big as the one they had received from their father. That was mainly the article that reached the heart, because your are right: In this country if we put a little more heart into what we are doing, maybe we would be aware of the hurt we inflict on others. And then we came home.
> We went back to the National Assembly, back to our villages, back to our houses, back to the friends that were no more friends; they were on the "yes", we were on the "no". It was not a picnic, it was not a social gathering, it was not a think-tank, it was a battle between brothers, a dangerous, divisive battle, and we still feel it. It was not 100 years ago, it was seven years ago that we lived that referendum. English Canada could not care less one month after, and it stung me and it stung all of us who fought so hard to remain in Canada and to find ourselves outside of Canada.

Madam Chaput-Rolland recalled the lack of national reconciliation following the referendum, and the wide special sense of the betrayal among those who voted no. And so, what was Quebec's position in the aftermath of the passage of the Constitution Act, 1982? Let us examine and remember our history. The Legislative Assembly of Quebec passed a resolution which was agreed to by all Parties condemning the Constitution Act of 1982. It then moved swiftly to challenge the constitutionality of the Constitution Act, 1982, albeit unsuccessfully. Thereafter the Government made the maximum use of what we call the notwithstanding clause, Section 33 of the Charter, which excluded Quebec legislation from the provisions of Section 2 and Section 7(15) of the Charter. Furthermore, Quebec's lack of participation at constitutional conferences limited the chance of success even for reforms that did not require unanimous consent of all provinces.

It seems to me that the objective of the First Ministers was to redeem the promises made to Quebecers during the 1980 referendum and following it. In the result, the reconciliation with Quebec has been made, the Accord has been signed and this leads directly to the second question which I posed a few minutes ago. Does the bargain struck by the premiers and the Prime Minister have adverse consequences to Canada?

Perhaps in a more positive way the question can be framed as to whether or not this agreement is in the best interest of the country. Let me begin by noting that the Accord does not change the distribution of powers in any way under Section 91, Section 92 and Section 93 of the Constitution. Section 2(4) of the Accord specifically preserves the existing powers of the legislatures and of Parliament.

I was very impressed by the testimony of Gordon Robertson who attended every First Ministers' Conference since 1950 until his retirement in 1979. He pointed out that the constitutional negotiations that took place from 1968 through 1971, and later up to 1979, fully expected that there would be changes in the distribution of power.

Perhaps the most controversial aspect of the Accord is the inclusion of two interpretative clauses, namely, that the Constitution is to be interpreted in a manner consistent with linguistic duality across the country, which has been described as a fundamental characteristic of Canada, and with the recognition of Quebec as a distinct society. These principles must be taken into account by the courts along with other rules of interpretation in arriving at a decision on a given set of facts.

As a matter of law, the linguistic duality and distinct society clauses neither grant new powers nor derogate from existing powers. An interpretative clause by definition cannot breathe life into a jurisdiction that does not exist.

The Accord recognizes that within Canada, Quebec is a distinct society. This recognition is appropriate, not only because it is historically and sociologically true but because Quebec's distinct society has already been acknowledged by the courts. The Accord does make explicit what has been implicit in our laws and constitutional arrangements for over 250 years.

It must be remembered that Quebec's distinct society includes not only the French-speaking majority but also the English-speaking minority, the aboriginal people in northern Quebec and the rich and diverse communities of other cultures and traditions.

How, then, will the distinct society clause work? How does it come to have any meaning? In the view of the distinguished constitutional experts who appeared before the committee, the distinct society clause will have an influence on Section 1 of the Charter.

For example, when a Quebec statute is challenged as being inconsistent with some Charter principle, if the court decides that there is an inconsistency or a violation of that Charter value the court will then be compelled to decide whether the provision of the statute can be saved as a reasonable limitation in a free and democratic society. This is a process that constitutional lawyers go through every day before the courts. The court would make that decision using as one factor the linguistic duality, distinct society interpretative clauses in the Accord.

The distinct society provision has not been specifically defined. But then, such phrases as "reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society", which is in the 1982 Constitution has not been defined. The phrase "peace, order and good government" and "property and civil rights" have not been defined with any sense of precision in the past. It has been left to the courts to interpret those phrases in a socially relevant fashion. In due course, a body of jurisprudence will develop which will put contours around the meaning of such phrases.

Another area of controversy pertains to the participation of the provinces in the appointment process of the Supreme Court of Canada judges and Members of the Senate. The evidence before the committee was that it was common practice in other federations around the world to provide for such participation. We found no justification for having the Supreme Court of Canada, which is the umpire of Confederation, chosen exclusively by one of the players, namely, the federal Government. Similarly, our report makes the point that the Senate was intended to represent regional interests at the centre. But when all is said and done, it is still the federal Government and only the federal Government that makes appointments and I think that is a very important point to underline.

The members of the joint committee were acutely aware of concerns that have been expressed by Charter rights, especially gender equality rights. The evidence from experts has satisfied us that those rights were not placed at risk. If Members who sat on the committee thought there was a real legitimate fear that these hard-earned rights were at risk, we would have voted against it in those circumstances. However, the weight of the evidence clearly was that there were no risks with respect to this particular area of concern. These rights have since 1982 been considered by the courts in light of whatever reasonable limits the courts believed to be demonstrably justified. The courts will continue to perform this task in respect of legislation that touches on linguistic duality and the distinct society.

The third question which I raised concerns the consequences of not adopting the Meech Lake Accord. Laurent Picard, former president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, put it this way:

> The choice is not between what you have and what you might have but between what you have and what you will have if the Accord is rejected.

Mr. Picard went on to say:

> Once you have reached an Accord you have created a credibility. You have created a process of understanding. And to break the Accord after that is not going to bring you back to the day before, it is going to create a totally different situation. No government of Quebec will be able to accept less, so the situation will be much worse than it was before.

It is my view that if the Accord becomes discord, if it is allowed to unravel, if the terms of reconciliation are undermined, there will develop a serious breach between Quebec and the rest of Canada which will have long term consequences for the country.

Accordingly, in deciding whether or not the amendments ought to be considered, the Government Members of the committee used the test suggested to us by Dean John White of Queen's University Law School. Dean White said that the deficiencies of the Accord must be serious and they must be likely if the agreement is not to be accepted. The critics of the Accord, in the view of the committee, failed to meet that test.

Our committee did reach certain conclusions. One was that the provincial governments' concerns about giving northern territories the trappings of provincial status were unjustified. Specifically, we felt that it was unfair that a lawyer or a judge from the Northwest Territories or the Yukon could not be nominated by those territorial governments to the Supreme Court of Canada. There is no mechanism in the Accord where such a recommendation could be made to the Minister of Justice for the federal Government's consideration of such a proposal. Accordingly, we are hopeful that this matter will be addressed at the next First Ministers' Conference.

Similarly, we have made certain other recommendations concerning both aboriginal peoples and the amending formula as it applies to the northern territories and we are hopeful that the federal Government will pursue these suggestions.

Finally, it was evident to all members of the committee that a new process must be created so there can be public participation in future constitutional change. Professional associations, interest groups, and members of the public want to have an input before and not after constitutional decisions are taken by First Ministers.

The committee recommended that a joint Senate-House of Commons committee be established with appropriate linkages to the legislatures of each province to report to the First Ministers on matters of constitutional importance which are brought before the committee.

I wish to conclude my remarks by stating unequivocally that as a result of the Meech Lake Accord Canada is the clear and undisputed winner. The inclusion of Quebec into the Constitution in a voluntary fashion is an act of reconciliation which will strengthen and help unify the country, and it will also permit opportunities for reform in other constitutional areas where grievances exist. For this, in my judgment, a huge debt of gratitude is owed to the statesmanship of the Prime Minister and the Premiers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, with this debate on the Constitutional Accord, Parliament is taking another significant step in the historic process of Quebec's entry into the Canadian family. This Accord concerns a number of important fields, but we must bear in mind that the fundamental purpose of the Accord is to repatriate Quebec in our Constitution.

As a country we are living up to the challenge of the unfinished reconciliation of 1982. And the fact that we are living up to the challenge provides all Canadians, men and women alike, with a unique opportunity to celebrate. As a country we can celebrate the end of the constitutional isolation of Quebecers and the fulfillment of the promise made to Quebec during the 1980 referendum.

Mr. Speaker, this Accord meets the aspirations of both the people of Quebec and all Canadians. Thanks to its positive approach towards Quebec, it enables Quebec as a distinct society to resume its place and participate fully and actively in the Canadian federation. We in this Party are very pleased with this outcome. For a few people, Mr. Speaker, the May Meech Lake Accord signalled the begining of this debate.

Still we must not lose sight of our historic perspective: for over 20 years now the constitutional reform has been the concern of Canadians who wanted to say yes to Quebecers. Even without this Accord, from a legal standpoint Quebec is in the Constitution. That is obvious! But imposition through mere legal coercion is unacceptable in a democracy. Citizens whose lives are governed by laws must accept those laws. If they do not accept a law, it loses its moral authority. It is extremely serious when we are talking about the Constitution, the supreme law of the country.

As Leader of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to support this Accord which recognizes the distinct identity of Quebec.

From the time our Party was founded in 1961, until our convention in Montreal in March of this year, the New Democrats have recognized Quebec's distinct identity in Canada. Quebecers feel it is high time, Mr. Speaker, that the Constitution should reflect this reality. From sea to sea, the New Democrats believe that having a province where the language and culture of the majority is French enriches our country.

By recognizing this special character in the Canadian Constitution, we are further defining our vision of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank all members of the committee who helped produce the report on the Meech Lake Accord. It is an excellent piece of work. The Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) and the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) sat on the committee on behalf of my Party. I would like to stress their important contributions and extend my sincere thanks for the work they have done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, together with our caucus, they carefully examined the Constitutional Accord and concluded that it conformed to our principles as Canadians and social democrats.

[English]

I want to say something about the latter point. I have said on other occasions and have indicated in my earlier comments today that this approach to a continuing constitutional problem in our country has been met with resolve by the leaders of all of Canada's federal Parties and by our provincial Premiers. There has been a remarkably creative and productive non-partisan approach to a very important Canadian problem.

I was not at the bargaining table personally, but I want to use the occasion to compliment in this regard both the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of Canada and all the Premiers for doing a very fine job on behalf of the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I also want to add, as a social democrat, that not only is this accomplishment consistent with the broader principles with which all of us as Canadians can agree, but it also is quite consistent with the philosophical objectives of my Party in particular.

In approaching a question of this magnitude from within that framework, we do consider certain aspects of our history as a nation to be of particular relevance and particular importance to us. Our broader vision is grounded on some key elements, on what has evolved as a distinctively Canadian tradition with our particular blend of the values of liberty, equality and community.

We look to our belief in the principles of co-operation which ought to be fundamental, not only in political but also in social and economic organization, and to our belief in the constant need in North America to be working toward a greater degree of Canadian autonomy, a greater mastery over our own destiny. We should also keep in mind that we want a strong public sector and a strong private sector and we give importance to both of these aspects of our social and economic institutions in society.

Finally, in approaching a question of this nature that goes in a sense to the root of nationhood, we want provincial Governments to be seen not as burdensome obstacles to some national vision but as very important entities in the nation of Canada that were there in 1867, that are there now and that have a role to play in their domain which is fully as important as the role of the federal Government in its domain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In that context, finally, we do believe it is imperative in a nation as diverse as ours, culturally, economically and regionally, that we have a federal Government that has very substantial powers, a very real capacity to deal with national and international problems.

We have assessed the Accord from within this particular social democratic framework as well. We find that it is quite consistent with our principles. In particular, we have looked at its provisions to ensure this consistency with regard to three particular items that have been discussed in this debate, and I wish to say something about each of them.

• (1610)

First is the need for an effective national Government. Second is the principle of co-operative federalism. Third is the need to maintain at the heart of our Constitution the integrity of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

On the first of those, the need for an effective national Government, I wish to say to those Canadians who have listened to arguments on the other side that the powers of the national Government of Canada have not been reduced one iota by this constitutional Accord.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: And I would, for this occasion only perhaps, welcome the presence of a former Prime Minister with whom I have had some agreements in the past, but also some serious disagreements in stressing this important reality.

I say to some Members of the House who have raised points of concern about the alleged whittling away of the authority and power of the central Government that in Section 91 of the Constitution there are some 29 specific, unique, exclusive federal powers. I repeat that they have not been altered one whit. They are there to be used by any Government that wishes to show effective national leadership.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In addition, there is one section of this Accord that, prior to the committee stage, got a lot of discussion by the Premiers, by the Prime Minister and by those of us who have a constitutional role to play in opposition, and that is the section that permits the federal Government to spend in areas of provincial jurisdictional authority. I wish to make the point that if there has been any shift whatsoever, it has been to clarify, confirm, and will have written in the Constitution for the first time the right of the federal Government to spend in areas otherwise in exclusive provincial jurisdictional authority.

As a Canadian who recognizes the importance of effective central Government, particularly working in conjunction and co-operation with the provinces to implement certain national programs from time to time, whether it is medicare, as it was in the past, or a child care program, as I hope it will be in the future, we should also acknowledge that in saying this, which I believe to be the case, that we are now putting in writing what was not there before, the right of the federal Government to do this. We should pay recognition to the provincial Premiers who are acknowledging this important role from time to time of the federal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It addresses the concerns that are genuinely felt by some Members of the House, as well as other Canadians. It simply states that if a national program, for example, in child care is brought in, it has a flexibility built into it that enables us to say that if we have a child care program that meets certain national objectives in Prince Edward Island—

[Translation]

The details are not necessarily the same as for a small town in Quebec.

[English]

—or in British Columbia, or in a Prairie community, that the needs for child care will be diverse, reflecting the diverse regions of our country and the diverse sizes of our communities, and as long as fundamental principles are adhered to, established by the national Government, that is precisely the type of national program that we would wish to put in place in any case.

I wish to turn immediately from that question of the continuing need to have a central Government that has effective powers in Canada, where I have said that if anything there has been a heightening, certainly a heightening of the recognition of those powers and not any reduction whatsoever, to the second question of co-operative federalism.

Certainly in my Party the term "co-operative federalism" was used at the 1961 founding convention, and it has been used by members of other Parties, particularly during the period of the Government of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson. I stress that it was a notion pursued by all, by leading elements in all Parties, that in our federal state we have to get built into this great country of ours the notion that when we are embarking upon programs that innovate, co-operation is necessary. But also in the ongoing work that has to be done in the federal state, whether or not we are talking about innovation, we have to be supersensitive as a people to the need to co-operate between the various levels of Government.

Therefore, one of the provisions that I welcomed that was not only in the original draft of the Accord, but also in a subsequent draft, was the right of the provinces to participate in the selection of Supreme Court judges. If Supreme Court judges are going to be making decisions, as they do, in matters that affect federal and provincial powers, and if they are going to make decisions that affect the rights of Canadians, federal citizens as well as provincial citizens, it is entirely legitimate and appropriate that the provinces play a role in the selection of Supreme Court judges. I think that is a good recommendation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I wish to now turn to another provision on the same point of the need for expanding co-operation between the federal Government and the provinces, and the provinces with each other, which is the suggestion that we will be having regular conferences to discuss constitutional reform. In the future, hopefully we will not have to have them because they are dealing, quite literally, with the crisis of unity of the country. If we do institutionalize such conferences—and I will have some more to say about the need to have Canadians participate more directly—hopefully when a problem begins to emerge, at the regular annual conference that discusses constitutional change, the federal Government and the provinces will come together and be able to address the need for change before a problem becomes a crisis. Again, I think that that provision is a good one, and it will be conducive to the spirit and reality of co-operative federalism.

The next aspect of this Accord that I wish to say something about is the Charter of Rights. I wish to say at the outset that my Party would not support the Accord if we believed the rights of Canadians under the Charter were overridden in any way by this Accord. I say in this context that the Charter remains, and it remains as strong after this Accord as it was before this Accord was introduced.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Notwithstanding our belief that the Accord will be good for Canada, we do have some serious concerns and objections. For that reason we have proposed some amendments. I wish to mention at the outset the reasoning that lay behind those amendments.

When any group of Canadians in any of Canada's political Parties receive a constitutional document, and one does not need to be lawyer to do this type of thing, they can find lots of things wrong with it after perusal of some 20 seconds. I am tempted to say if one is a New Democrat, it can normally be done after five seconds, but I will not say that.

The serious point I wish to make is that any constitutional document that one has will always be short of what a person in good faith can deem to be desirable in terms of additional conclusions. We all have an agenda and a favourable item that we wish to have included in a major proposal for constitutional change.

When my Party addressed this Accord it was aware of the plethora of proposals that could be made to add to it. We are also very conscious of the fact that the document was prepared with care, thought about with prudence, and that it is absolutely essential to gain acceptance in the early future by the Parliament of Canada and all provinces. Therefore, we did not want to propose a whole extended range of amendments. That was an important part of our thinking. The number of amendments we had in mind had to be few in number and had to be, of course, totally consistent with the Accord itself. Therefore, we proposed three of them, and I want to speak briefly on each.

• (1620)

The first one was on aboriginal rights. I do not think there ought to be a Member of Parliament who, at this point in our time as a nation, should be ignorant of the moral need to act and to act with speed in redressing the legitimate moral concerns of our aboriginal peoples.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The reality is that in the last Constitution go-around in 1982 we in Parliament entrenched aboriginal rights. It was a historic battle in the many stages of the process, but it was a historic accomplishment at the time. Many of us believed that by the time we got to this round certain specific rights of our aboriginal people needed to be addressed in a further more comprehensive way and, specifically, that the long overdue right of aboriginal Canadians to have some form of self-government ought to be put in place.

Therefore, it was with regret that we did not see a commitment in the Accord to have a further conference on this subject when we had commitments to have further conferences on other subjects which, if I can put it this way, are certainly no more important than the claims of our aboriginal peoples. We have an amendment which deals with that, and it deals with the rights of aboriginal peoples themselves to participate in those conferences which will come up with a settlement of a number of claims, particularly the moral claim of establishing a form of aboriginal self-government in the country.

The second area of concern was the injustice which is now being foisted upon Canadians in the northern part of our land. It is a sad irony, in one sense, that we should be going from a form of isolation in our Constitution of the people of Quebec to imposing another kind of isolation upon Canadians in the North. This is completely unacceptable to my Party. Frankly we do not understand. I have written to the provincial Premiers and to the Prime Minister, and I cannot understand why we cannot get an amendment, even at this point, which would redress this grievance before we put it in place with this Accord. It is this injustice which is now being imposed upon the people of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, both with regard to the process of becoming a province and to their right to participate equally with other Canadians in the selection of Supreme Court judges and Senators.

I repeat that the best way of dealing with one injustice for one part of Canada is not simultaneously to impose another injustice on another part of Canada.

Our third amendment deals with the equality rights of women. We in my Party do not believe that the linguistic duality-distinct society interpretation clause abrogates, supersedes, or overrides sexual equality rights or any other rights guaranteed by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, I add immediately—and on Persons Day how symbolically appropriate it is to be making this point—that in earlier debates and discussions in the development of the Accord some of us said that no matter how remote or how unlikely an adverse effect of the distinct society clause would be in respect of aboriginal rights or our multicultural heritage, Sections 25 and 27 of the Charter should be included in Section 16 of the Accord, as we said, out of an abundance of caution.

As Hon. Members of the House will know, this change was made. We believe that the reasoning or concerns held by Canadians who were sensitive to the possible abrogation of aboriginal rights and multicultural rights were addressed. However, if it was legitimate to make a change to address those concerns, even though we did not believe those rights threatened, surely we ought to be making the same changes as this affects the rights of women. The same abundance of caution should be applied to sexual equality rights. This, in our judgment, could once again be done without in any sense jeopardizing the Accord.

I suppose in this context I would like to make a special appeal to the Premier of the Province of Quebec and to the other Premiers to give some serious second thought to accepting an amendment on this important point.

The equality rights of women in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms were won, incredibly as it may seem, a mere five years ago through a collective struggle. Again to be frank, it was really initiated and carried through by the women of Canada themselves who, by force of their argument and force of their concern, made the rest of us listen. The great struggle they had, which was carried on subsequently in the House of Commons, led to the establishment of Section 28 in our Constitution. It is a matter of which we as Canadians should be proud. Section 28 does for Canadian women what the United States has yet to do for women in the United States. We can be showing leadership in this regard, and in showing leadership, I say to the Prime Minister in this context, I hope he will give some consideration to accepting the kind of amendment we favour, which would reassure Canadian women on this important point and at the same time be totally consistent with the Accord before us.

I would now like to say a few words about some further proposals for future constitutional reform.

[Translation]

I would first like to say a few words about the Charter. Several groups that appeared before the committee expressed concerns that went beyond the scope of the 1987 Constitutional Accord.

The concerns of national womens' groups and their constitutional experts, of visible minority groups and others arose, for instance, from the legal interpretation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms during the first five years of its existence. We must maintain the guarantees for the rights and freedoms of Canadians, including equality rights. A review of the Charter requires considerable participation on the part of the public and sufficient funding to enable all Canadians to make their views and concerns known.

Representatives of our visible minorities presented to the committee some convincing arguments about the need to examine, above all, Section 33 of the Charter, the "notwithstanding" section. We believe that Canada will not have an egalitarian society until the Charter's guarantees equality for minorities can no longer be compromised. We therefore suggest that a future first ministers' conference consider repealing Section 33.

[English]

We also agree whole-heartedly with representatives of ethnocultural associations who, in welcoming the Accord, stressed that constitutional recognition should also be given to Canada's ethnocultural reality as a fundamental characteristic of Canada. We too think that should be done.

The Canadians making these suggestions emphasized that one-third of Canadians are of neither English nor French origin. The Charter already recognizes Canada's multicultural heritage, and it is time that we moved one step further in the constitutional evolution of our country.

• (1630)

I urge the First Ministers to move quickly to recognize in the Constitution Canada's ethnocultural reality as a fundamental characteristic of our nation.

New Democrats also agree with those who told the committee that Canadians must more directly be involved in future constitution making. The Constitution, after all, belongs to all Canadians, not just to the politicians here in the House of Commons or in the provinces. We must have a process that permits the people of Canada to participate in the discussion of constitutional reform before First Ministers deal with certain matters, and not just after. We want changes made in that direction.

I want to conclude with this observation. As I have indicated, the work done by the First Ministers, including the Prime Minister, and the committee that studied this question, has been a first rate job for the people of Canada. The Accord, as many Canadians have said both in this House and outside, is not a perfect document. But this constitutional Accord is a good document, good for Canada, good for Quebec, good for all the other provinces and good for individual citizens who want their rights preserved. We need to support it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: But I say this, that constitutions, no matter how good, do not cause progressive change in themselves. Constitutions lay the framework that permits active men and women to bring about changes that will make Canada a more just and compassionate nation. What is needed, in my view, is the political will now to act within a newly established constitution to achieve these goals.

With this reconciliation of monumental importance with the Province of Quebec and with the renewal of co-operative federalism, we must now strive together to make a better tomorrow for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? Resuming debate. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the resolution on the Meech Lake Accord which brings Quebec back into the constitutional fold, which strengthens national unity and unblocks the process of future constitutional reform.

May I commend the Leader of the New Democratic Party today both for the excellence of his comments and the generous outlook he has taken on the problem of constitutional reform. While I was absent, my right hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), spoke and I commend him as well for the leadership that he has adopted on a very sensitive national issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I have recommended this Accord to my colleagues in the Government. I recommend it today without reservation or qualification to all of my colleagues in the House of Commons. I commend it as well to future generations of Canadians, confident that the Accord will stand the test of time and the scrutiny of history.

Eleven First Ministers from four political Parties support this Accord.

[Translation]

The three national leaders of Canada's political parties in the House support it as well. Today, I sincerely invite all Hon. Members to join with us in this unique act of nation building, in saying "yes" to Quebec, "yes" to Canada, and "yes" to future constitutional reform.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I want to speak today, briefly and from the heart, as a Quebecer and as a Canadian. Our constitution, the fundamental law of the land, is more than words on paper. It defines the terms of our living together, it expresses our prospects for a future together. It enunciates the way we see ourselves as a people and as a nation. The Meech Lake Accord has been scrutinized by the joint Senate-House Committee, which received 301 submissions and heard testimony, I am told, from 131 groups and individuals—from every walk of life, from every segment of our society.

The committee concluded that the Accord should be adopted by Parliament because, and I quote them:

It "represents a reasonable and workable package of constitutional reforms".

I want to pay tribute to the committee and its co-chairmen, the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer), and Senator Arthur Tremblay, for their distinguished contribution to the national life of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: And, Mr. Speaker, I also pay tribute to a Senator, something we do not do very often in the House these days, but I am referring to a Conservative Senator, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, the Hon. Lowell Murray, who played an absolutely vital role on behalf of the federal Government in this great undertaking.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I followed the committee's work quite closely and noticed a common thread running through the weeks of testimony. Canadians know that, without the willing assent of Quebec, our Constitution is fundamentally flawed. Deep down inside, every Canadian knows that. Certain promises were made to Quebecers at the time of the 1980 referendum, solemn promises about constitutional renewal, which were not kept, unfortunately. With the Meech Lake Accord, that promise, made to Quebec on behalf of all parliamentarians, has been honoured on terms that are good for all Canadians. And I think it is a significant aspect of our debate because, Mr. Speaker, we have not acted with haste, nor have we improvised the results, as the NDP Leader indicated.

The Meech Lake Accord culminates more than two decades of intense constitutional debate in this country. Its elements are not new. As my friend the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), the Chief Whip of the Liberal Party, reminded his former Leader when he appeared before the committee, the Hon. Member said, and I quote:

> As I remembered, you mentioned restricting the federal government's spending power; you talked about granting effective concurrent jurisdiction in the field of immigration and in Quebec, there were the Cullen-Couture agreements. You suggested provincial participation in Senate appointments. Your aim, expressed in different bills and your personal convictions, was to allow the regions to have a voice in Parliament.

But the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, a distinguished parliamentarian, might have added that the former Prime Minister had also proposed provincial involvement in Supreme Court appointments and at the 1980 round of constitutional talks he was prepared, and I quote him, "to recognize the distinct French-speaking society centred in though not confined to Quebec " in the constitution. How can it be wrong now when it was proper then? And I commend the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier for his outstanding contribution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: The fact was, however, Mr. Speaker, these earlier proposals did not meet with success, and no one should underestimate the grave risks we ran as a country with Quebec left on the constitutional sidelines, as a result.

[English]

As the Hon. Robert Stanfield told the committee: In 1982 we created two Canadas, one that felt bound by the agreement and another that did not. Only Quebec's agenda was not addressed in the 1982 Accord. Only Quebec was left out. I ask, how would we all have felt had the concerns of women, aboriginal people and multicultural Canadians not been addressed in 1982? I ask all Members of the House to consider the sadness and sense of exclusion the people of Ontario would have felt if such basic constitutional arrangements in 1982 had been entered into without the approval of their elected representatives at Queen's Park. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I would never have agreed to a constitution that left Ontario on the sidelines, and I have worked hard to correct a similar situation regarding Quebec.

Although legally binding, the 1982 Accord did not bind the hearts and minds of Quebecers to Canada. The consequences in a generation or two may have been absolutely incalculable for all Canadians representing all regions of this House from the Gaspé to the coast of British Columbia. Imagine the possibility of another referendum on independence in Quebec where the Prime Minister of Canada would enter the campaign and solemnly promise on behalf of all Canadians to renew the Constitution. The leader of the anti-Canada forces would only have to say that Quebecers had heard such promises once before from a Canadian Prime Minister and were not about to be fooled a second time. What would the federalist forces say to that? What would be said of us for failing to seize this moment at this unique time in our history? What would be said of those in this House of Commons who did not act judiciously as the incomplete Constitution with which we were all left inexorably gave rise to separate Canadas?

In reopening the constitutional debate, in renewing the constitutional process, we had both an opportunity and, I think, on behalf of the people of Canada, an obligation. The opportunity was to seek Quebec's signature on our Constitution on terms that were fair to all regions and that built on the substantial achievements of 1982, patriation, the Charter and the amending formula. Unless we believe in a country whose Constitution represents two-thirds of the population, unless we believe in the emergence of two Canadas, our obligation was to secure Quebec's signature on terms consistent with the national interest. I sought that opportunity as Leader of my Party. I undertook that obligation as Prime Minister of Canada, and on behalf of all Members of Parliament I believe we have delivered on that commitment to all the people of Canada.

Today I wish to speak to both my colleagues in the House and to our fellow citizens in the country. All of us have come to this place with our own perspective and our own sense of Canada, with our own view of the country. This House gives us a unique perspective on our vast and diverse country, a national outlook fully consistent with our roots and origins. Wherever we come from, whatever our outlook, we all love Canada. The voices we hear every day in this House are the voices of Canadians in English and French, in idioms that also celebrate the multicultural diversity of our people.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I cannot imagine too many countries where a fundamental question of nationhood—such as the one posed in Quebec during the referendum—would have been resolved in a fully peaceful and democratic manner. For those Canadians who also call ourselves Quebecers, it was a most remarkable experience. We all remember the solemn undertaking given on May 14, 1980, at the Paul Sauvé Arena, by the Prime Minister of Canada—whom I approved indeed, whom we all approved—on behalf of the Government and people of Canada, and I quote him, "to renew the Constitution". But something else was said that night, and all Quebecers, all Canadians, can still remember these words, and I quote: "We, the Quebec MP's" he said "Are laying ourselves on the line, because we are telling Quebecers to vote no. And we are telling you in the other provinces that we will not agree to your interpreting a no vote as an indication that everything is fine and can remain as it was before. We want change and we are willing to lay our seats in the House on the line to have change" he said.

Mr. Speaker, six days later, in a great springtime of hope for our country, Quebecers did say no to separation. But that affirmation of confidence in Canada was never redeemed. In the constitutional discussions that followed the referendum, and I do not pass a value judgment on anybody's motives, the fact is that after the constitutional debates that followed the referendum Quebec was left isolated and alone. The eloquent promise made on the eve of the referendum to a whole population remained unfulfilled. All Quebecers longed to put these bitter divisions behind them, and it remained for those of us in public life to find a way.

At Sept-Îles on August 6, 1984, I made a pledge of my own, to seek Quebec's signature on the Constitution, on terms that it could sigh "with honour and enthusiasm". I believe the manner in which the members of the Quebec National Assembly said yes to Canada is evident testimony to the genuineness of their commitment and their willingness to enshrine it. All of us will always remember the words of Premier Bourassa at the signing ceremony on June 3, when he said, and I quote: "It is with great pride as a Quebecer and as a Canadian that I am here today to express my deep satisfaction with the re-integration of Quebec within the Canadian Constitution".

[English]

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, it was a long time since I or anyone else had heard a Premier of Quebec make such a profound commitment to Canada, and when that takes place all Canadians, and the profound sentiments of Canadian unity, benefit from one coast of Canada to the other.

I also support the Meech Lake Accord because it corresponds as best it can, as the Leader of the New Democratic Party pointed out, with how we can organize the affairs of our federation and how we can try to live together as Canadians. The Hon. Eric Kierans, who served with distinction at both levels of government in the Lesage and Trudeau Cabinets, captured, I think, the essence of the Accord when he said:

> I am for Meech Lake because it is the closest that we have ever come to the division of powers enshrined in the British North America Act and the real spirit of that Act.

At Sept-Îles I undertook to establish a federal-provincial advisory and co-ordinating body which would operate at the highest levels and seek to harmonize the policies of the two levels of government and respect provincial jurisdiction. I believe the Meech Lake constitutional Accord translates that vision of Canada into reality.

• (1650)

Federal-provincial relations need not be a theatre for dramatic and sterile posturing. They can become, as we are witnessing, with the co-operation of all of the First Ministers, a unique laboratory for effective and productive economic and social action.

I have spoken of the historic opportunity presented by this Accord, but we are no less aware of solemn obligations, in the eyes of our fellow citizens and in the eyes of history itself. It is the obligation of Parliament and the Government, and the solemn duty of the Prime Minister, to uphold the national interest. It is equally the duty of Parliament, the Government, and the Prime Minister to protect the rights of individuals and groups who compose our society. For as one of our founding fathers, George Etienne Cartier, observed over a century ago:

> In a country such as ours, all rights must be safeguarded, just as all convictions must be respected.

I think the Meech Lake Accord is very much in harmony with those principles. It builds upon and in no way negates the significant achievements of 1982, including the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As the joint committee notes, the recognition of duality and Quebec's distinct society will not "have the effect of justifying an erosion of bilingualism or charter rights, or lead to a denial of multiculturalism".

In the view of the First Ministers, all of them, according to the Government's best legal advice, and consistent with the preponderance of expert legal testimony at the hearings, nothing in this Accord overrides the guarantees of the Charter, or takes away in any way from minority language rights, equality rights for women, or Canada's multicultural heritage.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That is the best expert opinion. That is our intent in presenting the Accord. That is our commitment.

Let there be no misunderstanding whatsoever. In voting for this Accord, Members are upholding the rights of our language minorities, English-speaking in Quebec and French-speaking outside Quebec. Let no one misconstrue our commitment, either now or at any time in the future. If I, for one moment, thought that anyone's rights were being overridden by this Accord, I would not have recommended it to my colleagues in Government, and the Government of Canada would never have brought it forward for consideration in Parliament today.

In my maiden address in this House, on the Manitoba language question, I said that in my judgment there is no obligation more compelling and no duty more irresistible in Canada than to ensure that our minorities, linguistic and otherwise, live at all times in conditions of fairness and justice.

That remains my view today, and I know it is the view of every single Member of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: As many people have noted and as many observers have commented upon, we are already reaping the benefits of a stronger and more united Canada.

[Translation]

On September 1, in Quebec, I met with Premier Bourassa prior to the Francophone Summit, in itself another event which relates to national reconciliation, a very significant event in terms of the French dimension of our international personality. I was especially struck by something he said on that occasion: "Never have we known a period of national solidarity as profound as that which we are experiencing today," he observed. I applaud the Premier, and all his colleagues, for their statesmanship and vision. Individually and as a group, the First Ministers had the courage, and summoned the political will, to do the right thing for Canada.

[English]

On behalf of all parliamentarians I salute all First Ministers who participated in this noble objective.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, they are mature men, sensitive and intelligent human beings, and all Premiers knew that as long as Quebec was absent from the table, the Constitution Act of 1982 was dangerously incomplete. And they knew that as long as Quebec was absent, the constitutional process could not go forward on other important issues such as Senate reform, aboriginal rights and fisheries.

[English]

With the Accord, Quebec comes back to the constitutional table and back to the table of the Canadian family. In supporting the Accord we are opening the door to future constitutional reform. For example, without the participation of Quebec, reform of the Senate was both legally and politically impossible. You can talk about it all you want, but it could not have taken place in the absence of Quebec.

On the question of aboriginal rights we came very, very close to achieving a resolution of the principal issue at the 1985 First Ministers' Conference. It is my view that we would have come much closer, given the track record of succeeding Quebec Governments on this very sensitive issue, indeed we probably would have succeeded in 1985, had Quebec been part of the process at that time. Justice would have been achieved for our aboriginal peoples, at least in a substantial measure, two years ago. We must now, in my judgment, manage this issue with great care, as we have done with the Quebec Round.

We are continuing to discuss with aboriginal groups a number of important ideas for a fresh start on constitutional recognition of self-government, as well as the question of constitutional funding. Most of all, as we tried to do in the Quebec Round, we have to get together as parliamentarians to create a climate that can help to ensure success in bringing justice to our native peoples.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, on the important question of gender equality rights, the Joint Committee notes: "We do not believe that the entrenchment of the distinct society duality clause will in any realistic way erode the present constitutional protections of individuals rights, including gender equality rights." I refer Hon. Members to the testimony before the Joint Committee of Mrs. Francine McKenzie, President of the Quebec Advisory Council on the Status of Women, who shares this view, and to the remarkable comments made by my friend, the NDP Member from British Columbia, who has shown strong leadership in this case as in many others. This is what Mrs. McKenzie said:

> Let me remind you that it was because of the special request made by women's groups in 1982 that section 28 was put into the Canadian Charter. In this way, the right to equality came foremost in the constitutional hierarchy and thus for the past five years it has been clear that the constitutional rights and freedoms granted to the men and women of Canada must at all times be exercised in equality.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is a telling argument.

[English]

On the question of the Territories, the joint committee noted that their residents will continue to be constitutionally eligible for appointment to the Senate and the Supreme Court. The Government shares this view and agrees with the committee that First Ministers may wish to examine the matter at future constitutional conferences. This Government will continue to encourage the political evolution of Canada's North. Indeed, we are taking steps to facilitate and accelerate that evolution which will contribute to a much stronger nation.

In perhaps a more general way I would refer Hon. Members to the comments of the Hon. Jack Pickersgill, former Clerk of the Privy Council, Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister, and a senior cabinet Minister who served four Liberal Prime Ministers and Canada with enormous distinction and accomplishment. I am sure there are Conservatives, no longer in this House, who would not agree entirely with that statement because, among other things, Mr. Pickersgill was a most accomplished parliamentarian who took it out on many Tories and a few New Democrats as well. Given his life's work and his tremendous contribution to Canada, I was particularly interested in some comments he made shortly after Meech Lake. He wrote: "On the eve of that meeting," in reference to Meech Lake, "I would not have given the First Ministers one chance in ten of success. I was excited and delighted when they reached accord. Once I read the document I was satisfied it met the requirements of Quebec without in any way reducing the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. I was delighted by the generous and united reception of the miracle of Meech Lake by all Parties in Parliament".

• (1700)

Mr. Pickersgill later said: "If we allow this opportunity to pass, my guess is that it will probably not arise again for another generation, and never again will it arise on such reasonable terms". I agree with Mr. Pickersgill on that. It was for us to seize the moment. It is a great tribute to all Members of the House of Commons that we have done just that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This is about Canada. Although, obviously, the object of the exercise was to bring Quebec back into the fold, we have achieved many gains for Canada with the Meech Lake Accord. We have obtained the return of Quebec to the Canadian constitutional family—a pretty important event—with honour and enthusiasm. One would not want another backing into an important situation of this kind. There had to be the pride, the dignity and the acknowledgement of Quebec's unique role in our development, and that requires enthusiasm. It requires the output of one's mind, but also the output of one's heart.

We have reaffirmed the principle of the equality of provinces, large and small. Since when does Alberta have to be a second-class province in this regard, or British Columbia, compared to some other provinces? Under this agreement all the provinces are equal irrespective of size. I think that is a tremendous affirmation of what we truly believe in in the House of Commons.

As my friend, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, has pointed out, we have, very importantly, for the first time, given constitutional recognition to the federal spending power. We entrenched our commitment for the next round on Senate reform and other issues in our ongoing constitutional process. Canada's First Ministers said all along right from the beginning that if no egregious error was found in the text, we would proceed with the resolution. There are complaints. There are concerns. There are suggestions. But no such egregious error has been indicated.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, without hesitation, that the Government of Canada is not prepared to jeopardize this act of national reconciliation by reopening for renegotiation virtually every section of the Accord, as some would have us do. We believe that this is very much in the national interest of Canada, and we are bringing it forward in that light.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Meech Lake Accord is not only a sound document—it is one that conforms to a consistent, generous and logical vision of Canada. It respects the equality of Provinces and values the distinctiveness Quebec brings to Canada. It specifically reaffirms the strength and the leadership of the national Government in the great constitutional debate. Quite obviously, the Accord is not perfect. But if we wait for perfection, we risk undoing what has been accomplished and will make no progress at all.

[English]

I urge the House to adopt this resolution. The Quebec National Assembly and the Saskatchewan Legislature have already ratified the Meech Lake Accord. I suggest that the House and other legislatures adopt the resolution in exactly the same spirit.

I support the Meech Lake Accord because it is a time for healing in this country. It is a time for redeeming solemn pledges. It is a time for Members of Parliament and Canadians to take the long view of history. It is a time for federal arrangements which better reflect the very nature of our country and the sentiments of our people. It is a time for making Canada whole again. It is a time for putting the divisions of the past behind us so that we can, as a united country, meet the challenges of an increasingly complex and interdependent world.

It is a time to continue the task of building one Canada, united and strong. That is what Meech Lake is all about—one Canada. We saw the emergence of two, and this is about one, built on tolerance, fairness and generosity for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I stand where every Prime Minister from Sir John right through to Mr. Diefenbaker have stood on behalf of my Party and all Parties in this House. All Prime Ministers have been motivated by the concept of the integrity of this country, one Canada. The possible emergence of two was something that had to be dealt with firmly, fairly, equitably and with generosity and vision. That is what leadership is about. This House is invited to take a great act of national leadership and bring Canadians from one end of the country to the other together again in one—

[Translation]

—one Canada, united, strong and prosperous. And that is what Meech Lake is really about!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a privilege for me to follow the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and the Prime Minister in this most important debate. By speaking today, they have both done a lot for Canadian unity.

I would like to begin my comments by quoting the words of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), who said the following in his speech of September 29:

> Canada is a partnership of its peoples and provinces, a partnership which can be willingly embraced but not imposed. This concept is understood and accepted by Canadians from coast to coast.

As I rise in this House today to support the adoption of the Meech Lake Accord, I have to ask myself, after listening to some of my colleagues, whether they have really understood and accepted the quite accurate definition given by the Minister of Justice of the nature of Canada. Our country is a federation, a political system comprised of two levels of Government which must complete and complement each other to serve the population. It is a delicate union of often very different people spread out regionally over an immense continent. Indeed, it is a union which has defied all logic for over 120 years.

• (1710)

We have to marvel at the fact that, throughout our history, we have always been able to solve our problems and settle our differences relatively peacefully. As we know, other countries have had wars and revolutions, but not Canada.

While I fought vigorously against them politically, I must say that I have always admired the democratic understanding of the supporters of independence in Quebec. Mr. René Lévesque and his supporters used elections and a referendum to try to achieve victory for their political ideals. They did not succeed. However, to defeat them, their opponents had promised in May of 1980 a renewed federalism and a new, updated Constitution which would take into account the legitimate aspirations of the various partners in our federation.

That was the beginning of the great constitutional debate of the early 1980s, which led finally, after many years of frustration, to patriation of our Constitution and to entrenchment of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which was a major achievement.

I do not have enough time here to pay tribute as much as I would have liked to the former Prime Minister, Pierre Elliott Trudeau. However, I shall simply say that, because of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, he will be remembered as one of the greatest Prime Ministers of Canada, if not the greatest. On the other hand, while the Constitution Act of 1982 was the crowning achievement for some people, it was unfortunately for many others a show of strength and an agreement excluding Quebec.

In the euphoria of success, we federal Liberals did not fully realize the bitterness of those who had been left out.

We rationalized this situation at that time by saying that the PQ would never have agreed anyway. But they were not alone in condemning this agreement passed without the consent of Quebec's duly elected Government. This explains why the Members of Quebec's National Assembly, PQs and Liberals alike, voted against the agreement. I will even say that, intoxicated with this success, we invited Her Majesty the Queen to come over and celebrate with us this triumph, although she was in the eyes of several opponents at that time the living symbol of colonialism.

Because the constitutional issue had become an open sore, it had to be treated. It had to heal as soon as possible. The Leader of the Conservative Party, for one, was well aware of the need to have it healed. He should be commended for having stated in Sept-Îles in August of 1984, and I quote:

> We must make commitments and take concrete steps to achieve the goal which I have set for myself and which I repeat today: convince Quebec's National Assembly to approve with pride and enthusiasm the new Canadian Constitution.

This is also what Premier Bourassa had in mind when he stated the five conditions which he insisted had to be met before the Government of Quebec could adhere to the Constitutional Act and when he sent Mr. Rémillard, his Minister responsible for Canadian Intergovernmental Affairs on a tour of the provincial capitals to explain Quebec's proposals.

As a matter of fact, Senator Tremblay emphasized this on August 27. I think I should quote part from his remarks to show how we came about getting the accord we are dealing with today. He said:

> What has specifically happened is that Mr. Bourassa's current Quebec government, having set out a number of points in its election campaign—five, which resurfaced later—and having thus obtained an unquestioned mandate from the Quebec people, embarked on the process which has brought us to the Meech Lake Accord; in exchange all the other partners were obliged to make a major concession: specifically, to respect these five points. It happened that the reasonableness of Quebec's proposals made it possible for an accord to be reached.

This is what was also understood by my leader, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), when in May of 1986 he publically accepted in an article published in Le Devoir Mr. Bourassa's five proposals, and made a commitment to have that new constitutional position recognized within the Liberal Party of Canada. Thus the Meech Lake Accord is the response to Mr. Bourassa's proposals. It complements the 1982 Constitutional Act. Our work remained incomplete because Quebec had not signed. Because of that serious shortcoming, this country did not really constitute a whole as we would have liked. The work had to be completed.

The Leader of the Opposition had promised to do so as soon as he would be re-elected Prime Minister. However, this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) did it before him, because it must be recognized that all English-speaking Premiers wanted to see that page turned.

Mr. Lévesque claimed he was betrayed by the latter in 1982, and I am convinced the English-speaking Premiers were eager to make good to Quebec. Such a feeling certainly made things easier for the Prime Minister. Surely we must give the Prime Minister credit for the work he did, but for modesty's sake he must recognize that the success has to be shared with the Leader of the Opposition who took the political sting out of that debate and who very early made it clear that if he were Prime Minister, just like the present Prime Minister, that matter had to be solved. And certainly the Prime Minister will accept to share the limelight with Quebec's Premier, because as Senator Tremblay reminded us, without the specific, clear and bounded proposals of the Quebec Government, it would have been excessively difficult to reach this constitutional accord.

I know the Leader of the Opposition spoke to his colleagues, the Liberal Premiers who were parties to the agreement. I know he even spoke with the Premier of his own Province of British Columbia to make sure there would be that spirit of co-operation and understanding to reach a compromise, a honourable compromise for Quebec.

In any event, this should come as no surprise, because national interest always transcends political groups. Was Prime Minister Trudeau not assured of the support of Premiers Bill Davis and Richard Hatfield when he started off on his historical process of patriating the Canadian Constitution?

This is why I do not hesitate to say today that the Prime Minister did what was to be done to bring Quebec back as a full partner into Canada. Some people suggest the Prime Minister made too many concessions to get that agreement. My answer is no. First, as suggested by the Leader of the Opposition in his speech of September 29, 1987, the Canadian Government keeps its leadership role within Confederation and loses none of the powers it already has under the Canadian Constitution.

Second, when we take an impartial look at the main provisions of the Meech Lake Agreement, it must be recognized that this kind of give and take, under one form or another, already had been proposed by the previous Liberal Government. In fact, those provisions relating to immigration only enshrine some administrative arrangements agreed to by the former Liberal Government and implemented successively in the following agreements: Lang-Cloutier in 1971, Andras-Bienvenue in 1975 and Cullen-Couture in 1979. We, in the Liberal party, would be ill-advised to pretend it is a bad thing.

As a Quebecker and member from Quebec, I am happy with the provisions relating to the Supreme Court because they definitely guarantee the appointment of at least three judges from the Quebec civil law system. This practice has existed for a long time but from now on, it will be a constitutional rule. As well, provinces will now be involved in the selection of members of our highest court. I suggest this is quite appropriate in a federal state and I do not think it is an unreasonable concession.

Then, the Accord states that, until the Constitution is amended in order to reform the Senate fundamentally, provincial Governments will also be directly involved in the appointment of Senators. This is perhaps the part of the Accord that I like least, because no deadline has been set for that desirable reform of the Senate. Therefore, with time, provincial Premiers might come to like these appointments and forget that long-overdue reform. I might add that although I am not pleased, we should not forget nevertheless that the Senate was originally established to reflect precisely provincial interests in the Parliament of Canada and that the former Liberal Government was even willing to let at some time the provinces appoint half of Canadian Senators. It is therefore difficult to believe that this initiative goes too far. It can hardly be claimed, I think.

In addition, the Accord deals with new procedures between Ottawa and the provinces for the establishment of future cost-sharing programs and it allows provinces to opt out with compensation in specific circumstances. Some people fear that provision of the Accord might put an end to major Canadian social programs. I, for one, do not agree with that view. The people's will and the real and pressing needs of Canadian citizens will always win over politicians concerned by their re-election. By the way, the Minister of Justice has well summarized that part of the agreement when he said, and I quote: "This is clearly an area where federal and provincial powers overlap and therefore it is necessary to negotiate accommodations to ensure co-operation and avoid court contests. Such plans can only work with the genuine support of both the federal and provincial Governments, and jurisdictional issues must be avoided in the interest of those who are to benefit from such plans."

• (1720)

In my opinion, this is not an excessive concession but merely an expression of wisdom.

The Accord also provides that a greater number of subjects will require unanimity for amendments and it specifies that there will be annual conferences of First Ministers on constitutional matters.

When I came to Ottawa in 1964 to work for the Minister of Justice, Hon. Guy Favreau, he was working hard to have the provinces agree to a patriation and amending formula. It was the Fulton-Favreau formula, as it was called in those days. Many more procedures have been suggested since then, including the Victoria and the Meech Lake formulas. As a matter of fact, all the successive federal and provincial Ministers of Justice have tried to find one. I sometimes get the impression that a constitutional lawyer must be hiding behind every politician. That is why I am convinced that the search for the ideal formula will go on for years and that many interesting suggestions will come up.

What is before us today is the Meech Lake formula. It reflects the very simple reality that all provinces are equal, regardless of their size, numbers and year of entry in the Canadian federation. Personally, I cannot help but think that the rule of unanimity must prevail, in all justice, for the amendment of some basic institutions in this country. This is not compromise but simply fairness. It may be an exaggeration to have annual First Ministers Conferences to discuss constitutional matters. Once a year may be too much. And discussing fisheries year in and year out may seem a bit ridiculous. But politics is the art of compromise. And if this is the price that the Prime Minister had to pay to convince Newfoundland to support the inclusion of Quebec into the Canadian Constitution, I might find that rather ludicrous, but I cannot hold it against him because he did not abdicate the federal jurisdiction in the area of fisheries, contrary to what some are alleging.

Last, there is in the Accord an interpretation clause which formerly recognizes two basic realities: the linguistic duality of Canada and the distinct identity of the Province of Quebec. Let us consider for a while the crux of the issue, the bone of contention, that is to say the recognition of Quebec's distinct character. In fact, this is the issue which has raised the most heated discussions during this debate. The roots of Quebec's specificity, to paraphrase a term used in the Pépin-Robarts report, are older than Canada itself. The witnesses who have appeared before the Joint Committee on Constitution of the Senate and the House of Commons pointed out that the legal basis of that notion dated back to the year 1713 at least. Thus, the co-existence of two distinct communities was formerly recognized. Others have pointed out that the Treaty of Paris, in 1763, and the edicts of various British governors recognized certain religious and linguistic rights as well as legal rights for the allocation of new lands, according to what they called "the French laws".

As a consequence, throughout our history, the distinctive and actual presence of a francophone community living in a given geographic area affected the legal and institutional structures governing it.

Those institutional frameworks, including the British-North America Act, have progressively allowed the blossoming of a modern French society in America.

As Mr. Claude Ryan said in his Beige Book, and I quote:

> In the Province of Quebec, the laws, legal system, municipal and provincial institutions, voluntary organizations, media, arts, literature, educational system, social and health services, religious institutions and credit unions are mostly French by reason of the language and the culture that permeate them. So, Quebec is, within the Canadian federation, a distinct society due to its language, culture, institutions and life-style.

This recognition of Quebec as a distinct society was Premier Bourassa's first and most important prerequisite. All four claims were accepted, but for all provinces. First, there was the issue of extended powers for Quebec in immigration matters, and this was also offered to the other provinces; second, limitation of the spending power of the federal Government, which obviously does not apply only to Quebec, but to all other provinces wishing to opt out of various programs; third, the new procedure to amend the Constitution, which provides a veto for Quebec and which also applies to the other provinces; and finally, the participation of Quebec in the appointment of judges, which also applies to the other provinces.

However, the distinct identity clause is special and applies only to Quebec. I must say that this major claim could not be rejected. The Prime Minister and the Premiers recognized that fact, and at this time, I feel that I must pay hommage to three of my colleagues who could have objected to the Accord, but who, with generosity and an open mind, have decided to support it. I am thinking especially about the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) who represents, in my opinion, the increasingly tolerant and understanding views of the English-speaking minority in Quebec. In this regard, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce is in agreement with Alliance Quebec, the major movement which defends the English-speaking minority in Quebec and which was not afraid to assert that it was in favour of recognizing the distinct identity of Quebec.

I also wish to pay hommage to two Members who represent the French-speaking minorities outside Quebec, my colleague for Ottawa—Vanier and my colleague for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, both of whom could have said: Something is being done for Quebec, but not for us, French-speaking minorities outside Quebec, and we want it to happen immediately. However, just like the organization which represents all French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec, the Association des francophones hors Québec, which appeared before the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, they were magnanimous enough to say that recognizing the distinct identity of Quebec would not reduce by any means the development opportunities of French-speaking minorities outside Quebec.

I therefore salute these three Members of my caucus who could have taken different stands, but who had the open-mindedness to accept that, at this historic moment, we should say yes to Quebec at a time when conditions are the most favorable even to achieve an accord which will give a generous place to Quebec in Canada, and when, under the leadership of Premier Robert Bourassa, at whose abilities I grow more and more pleasantly surprised every day, Quebec is going through a period of peace and moderation and its demands have never been as reasonable.

In the final analysis, that Accord is good for Canada because it is good for Quebec. It may not be perfect and there will always be room for improvement, but it is the best deal that could be negotiated at this time by the Prime Minister of Canada and all Premiers.

Some of my colleagues who are opposed to this Accord or who have some concerns about it should remember that even former Prime Minister Trudeau and his Minister of Justice, Mr. Jean Chrétien, have not made a perfect deal in 1982. They did not solve the problem of native people. They even had to grant major concessions, such as the notwithstanding clause or the "where numbers warrant" rule. However, they agreed to that deal because it was the best possible one at the time. Then, they were certainly very happy with their achievement that despite concessions and some compromise granted, because in their mind, it was a huge step forward in the constitutional area and they were right to think so. Today, some concessions have had to be made. Some adjustments have had to be left aside. Certainly the Prime Minister and the Premiers have not solved everything during the Meech Lake meeting, but they still have made a deal that will be another major step forward in the constitutional area.

Recently I read the special issue of Life magazine on the American Constitution. In February, 1787, the American Congress instructed the delegates of the 13 states to devise measures to render the federal Constitution adequate to the exigencies of the Union. They assembled in Philadelphia, and for four months they worked diligently in camera to produce a 4,400 word document that is a remarkable achievement, even after two centuries.

Interestingly enough, there was a very strong opposition to the ratification of this text. Those who prepared it were saying: "It is a genuine compromise, you have to take it as a package. Now is not the time to amend it, it is the time to ratify it, otherwise the union will fall apart, and we may never have another occasion to get such a deal".

Those who were opposing it felt that it was not perfect, it should be amended. Too many things were left out, and they were predicting that, if ratified, things would not work out and it would be the end of the Union.

When I was reading the article, I thought I was reading the history of the Canadian Meech Lake Accord. Well, as you know it was ratified. The Union did not fall apart. Soon thereafter a Bill of Rights was added to the Constitution. Over the years, as the United States of America grew and prospered, 16 more amendments were added.

Among those who favoured the Accord were Benjamin Franklin, James Madison, and George Washington, all of whom have a prominent place in the history of the United States.

Who remembers today those who opposed the Accord? Very few. They were so wrong; they had such a défaitiste attitude that nobody wants to remember Elbridge Gerry or Patrick Henry.

[Translation]

To conclude, I want to say that I know that my Leader, the Opposition Leader, would like to amend the Meech Lake Accord to make it more acceptable for more Canadians. That is fine if it can be done. Otherwise, as he said himself, and I quote: "If our amendments are rejected and voted down, we intend to make these amendments part of our Party's constitutional program. We intend to make them part of the platform in the next federal election and put them before the people of Canada. If and when we form a government, we intend to make them part of the ongoing constitutional process."

The Opposition Leader is right to say that, much remains to be done. I am very glad he thus clearly established the future constitutional agenda, and I hope that under his leadership, the aboriginal people will finally obtain what they want, the Senate will become an elected body, Canada's North may have a chance to prosper under the aegis of the provinces and that Canada's multicultural minorities will be even better protected. This is a long-range project reflecting a very clear understanding of where subsequent constitutional reforms should lead us. I may add that although the Leader of the Opposition would like to make some major changes in this document, he had the courage and strength of character to say that if those amendments were not adopted now, he would nevertheless vote in favour of the Meech Lake Accord, and I think he is to be commended for saying so. I want to say that, as a Quebecer and a Canadian, I am very proud of the Leader of the Opposition.

Parliamentarians should forget past struggles and partisan considerations and take advantage of the unique opportunity we now have in this country to say yes to Quebec. That is why I will vote for the Accord, although I realize there is room for improvement and that there are some oversights and shortcomings. I will vote for the Accord, because the Meech Lake Accord is based on a philosophy that is broad and generous enough to accept the distinct character of a province that was fully aware of its identity but failed to obtain formal recognition of that fact. I would go so far as to say, and in fact I am convinced, that this will increase the confidence of Quebecers in the legitimacy of the federal system. To me it is obvious that our country will be more united if the role and specific place of Quebec in Canada are fully recognized.

Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate the concerns expressed with vigour and conviction by some of my colleagues, especially in my own Party. I believe those concerns reflect the intrinsic complexity of constitutional reform. I acknowledge and respect their convictions, because as Machiavelli once said: "Nothing in the world is more difficult to grasp, more perilous to undertake or less likely to succeed than the desire to reform the constitutional system of a State."

Though these words were said in Florence about 500 years ago, they are still true today, in our country as in many others.

Mr. Speaker, Renan described a nation as a daily plebiscite. He stressed that to be a nation, a people must clearly express its desire to live together. During the Referendum, Quebecers expressed that desire, and seven years later, the Meech Lake Accord is a new reflection of that desire. Seven years later, Mr. Speaker, I want to say to every Member in this House and especially the Members of my own Party that all of Canada must say yes. And that is why I fully support the Meech Lake Accord.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I join in the debate today realizing that it is the end of a full day of debate which has included some very special presentations on the Meech Lake Accord by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), and by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) of the Official Opposition.

I come to this debate with a kind of special background. I am one of those elected by the community of Montreal whose first language is English. As the Hon. Member for Lachine I am particularly pleased to have the occasion to share in this historic debate. Lachine provides an excellent example of Canada's two cultures living and working in co-operation. It reflects a wide range of opinions and a mixture of economic and multicultural heritages.

I also come to the debate today as a member of the special joint committee which was established to review the Meech Lake Accord and the representations regarding constitutional change. I spent many hours with that committee over weeks of hearings, hearing and reading informed opinions and concerns of Canadians. I can report that the witnesses who appeared before us were virtually unanimous in their agreement with the important and desirable goal of having Quebec willingly and honourably rejoining the Canadian constitutional family.

Finally, as an active member of the English-speaking community of Quebec and as a proud third generation Canadian, I feel that it deserves my best effort to be a responsible representative of the community which I serve.

In 1984, Canadians elected a Conservative Government to fulfil its publicly announced mandate. The unification of Canada was one of our first priorities, together with enhanced trade, tax reform, a defence policy, improved social programs, and the introduction of fiscal responsibility to government. The first objective, the objective of uniting Canada, required a constitutional process to bring Quebec into the family willingly and honourably. I believe that all Quebec Members of Parliament support this fundamental objective to be part of a country with full commitment to the Constitution.

I should like to refer to the words of Peter Meekison when he said:

> I feel very strongly that Quebec must be part of the Constitution. Moreover, it is not just being part of it. It is sitting around a table like this and having full participation by the Quebec Government.
> I have been involved in this process since 1969 and I know what a significant contribution to the over-all debate Quebecers can make and to have them sit there and not participate, to me, is a tragedy.

After appraising all the opinions and comments of the witnesses, I am satisfied that the process of getting Canada and Quebec reunited has not come at the expense of the rights and interests of the English population which I represent. In fact, let there be no misunderstanding. By supporting the Meech Lake Accord I am saying yes to Quebec, yes to Canada and yes to the protection of minority language rights for all Canadians. All Quebecers, both English and French-speaking, share the essential need to have Quebec as full partner in Canada.

• (1750)

I was attracted to a new issue of the magazine put out by the Commissioner for Official Languages. It arrived at my desk this week. Its title is Language and Society. There are a number of articles on our Meech Lake Accord. In the summaries of this new series and new magazine that all can read, and I hope people will, such thoughts are recorded as:

> Public opinion, particularly among the younger generations, is increasingly supportive of the country's linguistic duality. Despite this, linguistic prejudice still raises its head from time to time in some parts of Canada.

Another comment reads:

> Our minority language groups are still in a precarious situation. Far too many Canadians still do not enjoy the linguistic guarantees provided in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, especially in the educational area.

It goes on:

> Canada is far from being the only country in the world searching for wise and reasonable solutions to the kinds of conflicts that can set language communities at odds.

One of the comments in a letter to the editor to welcoming the new format of the magazine comes from Royal Orr, President, Alliance Quebec. He says that the new Language and Society magazine:

> —is good news for all Canadians interested in the promotion of both official languages.

That is just a summary, Mr. Speaker, of the views that are shared by my colleagues and neighbours in Quebec. Some are of the opinion that the Meech Lake Accord will be accompanied by a diminishing of rights of anglophone Quebecers. But these concerns have been studied by many of Canada's leading legal and constitutional experts and declared to be unfounded. It has been clearly stated by the majority of witnesses and, for that matter, by the Hon. Prime Minister and the Leaders of the opposition Parties that in their interpretation no loss of rights would be permitted by the amendments. In fact, Quebec's signature on the document of amendments to the Constitution guarantees the recognition and preservation of the English-speaking minority in Quebec as part of a fundamental characteristic of Canada. Furthermore, the amendment document goes on to say:

> The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures shall be to preserve that fundamental characteristic mentioned above.

Constitutional change must reflect the reality and the development of Canada as a changing nation in a changing world. At the same time it must provide for growth and preservation of rights and values. The accomplishments at Meech Lake were achieved in spite of the major differences that have been expressed in advance by leaders across the country, in spite of the strong regional interests which have always been characteristic of Canada, and in spite of the many past frustrations of those who had tried to solve the problem.

In his remarks to the House earlier today, the Prime Minister quoted one of our senior parliamentarians, the Hon. Jack Pickersgill, who said that the achievements at Meech Lake were in a sense a miracle with so many differences to resolve. The results were achieved in an atmosphere which was basically are of a common commitment. We came out of the Edmonton, Alberta meeting of First Ministers a year earlier bringing Quebec into Canada and the Constitution as a first priority for Canadians and the Governments of Canada. With the leadership of our Prime Minister this was achieved at Meech Lake. It was based on an approach which is consultation and collaboration. Compromise, yes, but also trust.

I was disappointed in the hearings of the Meech Lake committee in one respect. There was not enough time for all of us to pose all the questions to the witnesses that we might have liked. In particular, I found myself prompted to want to question our past Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, when he was with us. He had an idea of Canada with which Canadians were not comfortable. We had come to Government with the obligation and the opportunity to change the country. I wanted to ask the previous Prime Minister, knowing his particular skills in debate and in intellectual activity, at what point of importance did he place goodwill and trust in a partnership and association that is Canada? I think that is something that has been brought by our Prime Minister to this negotiating table and to the Accord that we are now debating.

There are many essential items in the Accord. One, immigration jointly managed where the provinces wish, which is exactly in line with the agreement that had been reached between Quebec and Canada many years ago in the 1970s. Two, spending powers on federal programs within provincial jurisdiction and an automatic recognition of the rights of the provinces, leaving the need for initiative and leadership by the federal Government. Three, the appointments process to the Supreme Court of Canada and, until it is reformed, to the Senate. I think this was a very generous but at the same time a realistic recognition of the rights of the provinces in these two areas.

Unquestionably the section of the constitutional amendment which has prompted the greatest reaction and comment among my community has been the interpretive clauses calling for the recognition of a language duality and within Canada the distinct society of Quebec. Since the 1970s there has been no question that Quebec's English-speaking community has felt anxious with respect to its historic position.

We have had attacks on anglophone rights in the original Bill 101, Bill 22 and even to an extent today in Bill 101 with the sign concerns under both nationalist and moderate Quebec provincial Governments. Many of these fears were put to rest when, by a majority of Quebecers, we voted no to a separate Quebec and no to a divided Canada. We are proud Quebecers and aware that both communities must continue to look for the balance of mutual acceptance. Much of our community supported Mr. Bourassa in 1985 because of his commitment to find an acceptable solution with respect to bilingual signs. We look forward to his living up to those commitments.

In 1982, when we patriated the Constitution with an amending formula and our Charter of Rights, the Quebec Government refused to participate. Since that time Canada has been, if not legally but morally, ethically and spiritually, incomplete. The Meech Lake Accord repairs the omission of 1982 and represents an historic act of reconciliation. For the first time, it explicitly recognizes the presence of English speaking persons in Quebec as an integral element of Canada's linguistic duality. Quebec's distinct society within Canada which, in my opinion, represents a fact that has been in existence for many years, includes English-speaking Quebecers. As I and much of my community have always felt, we are an essential part of Quebec's distinctiveness. The courts will now be constitutionally directed to acknowledge that reality.

The linguistic duality clause affirms Quebec's role in preserving Canada's linguistic duality. Both linguistic duality and distinct society clauses must be read and interpreted together by the courts. Quebec's role in preserving and promoting its distinct society is thus qualified by its additional role in preserving Canada's linguistic duality.

I must assure this House and the constituents of English speaking Quebec, and most importantly Lachine, that I would not be promoting the Meech Lake amendments if I felt that any rights of the community have been take away. I am confident, based on the expert legal witnesses who came before the committee, that no rights would be altered because of the amendments we have proposed.

As declared so forcefully, so passionately and so effectively by our Prime Minister, the Meech Lake Accord and the constitutional amendment gives us, all Canadians, a united country ready to live and work together for mutual advantage. It is ours. Let us make it work.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 192 will be answered today.

[Text]

SMOKING AREAS—NEW TERMINAL AT TORONTO AIRPORT

Question No. 192—Ms. McDonald:

1. Were any provisions made in the planning of the new Toronto airport terminal for separately ventilated smoking areas and, if so, what are they?

2. Will users of the new terminal have access to smoke free air and, if so, in what areas?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): 1. The new terminal building at Toronto, Lester B. Pearson International Airport, will be owned, designed and operated by a private sector developer. The selected developer will be obliged to comply with all applicable building codes and municipal by-laws including any which govern the provision of non-smoking areas in public buildings. In addition, the developer will be advised of Transport Canada's practices with respect to the provision of non-smoking areas in airport terminal buildings.

2. At this time, the designs for the new terminal building have not advanced to the stage that the owner's plans with respect to the location and/or ventilation of smoking areas have been defined or demonstrated.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am certainly happy to see that one of the questions was answered today. However, before giving unanimous consent to let the rest of the questions stand, I hope the new Parliamentary Secretary will ensure that an adequate number of questions are answered every day and that we do not have a repetition of the situation which was regrettably so in the past where day after day the old Parliamentary Secretary would rise and ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, we will be happy to attempt to facilitate those questions in the manner which they deserve.

Mr. Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary has already started to use the royal "we".

Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed from Wednesday, October 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1982 came into force on April 17, 1982, following an agreement between Canada and all the provinces except Quebec;

AND WHEREAS the Government of Quebec has established a set of five proposals for constitutional change and has stated that amendments to give effect to those proposals would enable Quebec to resume a full role in the constitutional councils of Canada;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto sets out the basis on which Quebec's five constitutional proposals may be met;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto also recognizes the principle of the equality of all the provinces, provides new arrangements to foster greater harmony and cooperation between the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces and requires that conferences be convened to consider important constitutional, economic and other issues;

AND WHEREAS certain portions of the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto relate to matters referred to in section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

AND WHEREAS section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province;

NOW THEREFORE the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

Constitution Amendment, 1987

SCHEDULE

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

Constitution Act, 1867

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 1 thereof, the following section:

"2. (1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(2) The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

(4) Nothing in this section derogates from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 24 thereof, the following section:

"25. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, the government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate.

(2) Until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the person summoned to fill a vacancy in the Senate shall be chosen from among persons whose names have been submitted under subsection (1) by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates and must be acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 95 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Agreements on Immigration and Aliens

95A. The Government of Canada shall, at the request of the government of any province, negotiate with the government of that province for the purpose of concluding an agreement relating to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province that is appropriate to the needs and circumstances of that province.

95B. (1) Any agreement concluded between Canada and a province in relation to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province has the force of law from the time it is declared to do so in accordance with subsection 95C(1) and shall from that time have effect notwithstanding class 25 of section 91 or section 95.

(2) An agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) shall have effect only so long and so far as it is not repugnant to any provision of an Act of the Parliament of Canada that sets national standards and objectives relating to immigration or aliens, including any provision that establishes general classes of immigrants or relates to levels of immigration for Canada or that prescribes classes of individuals who are inadmissible into Canada.

(3) The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies in respect of any agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) and in respect of anything done by the Parliament or Government of Canada, or the legislature or government of a province, pursuant to any such agreement.

95C. (1) A declaration that an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) has the force of law may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement.

(2) An amendment to an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized

(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement; or

(b) in such other manner as is set out in the agreement.

95D. Sections 46 to 48 of the Constitution Act, 1982 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of any declaration made pursuant to subsection 95C(1), any amendment to an agreement made pursuant to subsection 95C(2) or any amendment made pursuant to section 95E.

95E. An amendment to sections 95A to 95D or this section may be made in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection 38(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, but only if the amendment is authorized by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of all the provinces that are, at the time of the amendment, parties to an agreement that has the force of law under subsection 95B(1)."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 96 thereof, the following heading:

"General"

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 101 thereof, the following heading:

"Courts Established by the Parliament of Canada"

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 101 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Supreme Court of Canada

101A. (1) The court existing under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada is hereby continued as the general court of appeal for Canada, and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a superior court of record.

(2) The Supreme Court of Canada shall consist of a chief justice to be called the Chief Justice of Canada and eight other judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor General in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

101B. (1) Any person may be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who, after having been admitted to the bar of any province or territory, has, for a total of at least ten years, been a judge of any court in Canada or a member of the bar of any province or territory.

(2) At least three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be appointed from among persons who, after having been admitted to the bar of Quebec, have, for a total of at least ten years, been judges of any court of Quebec or of any court established by the Parliament of Canada, or members of the bar of Quebec.

101C. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court.

(2) Where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

(3) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) of any of the three judges necessary to meet the requirement set out in subsection 101B(2), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the Government of Quebec.

(4) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) otherwise than as required under subsection (3), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the government of a province other than Quebec.

101D. Sections 99 and 100 apply in respect of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

101E. (1) Sections 101A to 101D shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws under section 101 except to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with those sections.

(2) For greater certainty, section 101A shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws relating to the reference of questions of law or fact, or any other matters, to the Supreme Court of Canada."

7. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 106 thereof, the following section:

"106A. (1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

(2) Nothing in this section extends the legislative powers of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces."

8. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and sections:

"XII—CONFERENCES ON THE ECONOMY AND OTHER MATTERS

148. A conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year to discuss the state of the Canadian economy and such other matters as may be appropriate.

XIII—REFERENCES

149. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

Constitution Act, 1982

9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part."

10. Section 44 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"44. Subject to section 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons."

11. Subsection 46(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province."

12. Subsection 47(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution."

13. Part VI of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"PART VI

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

50. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate;

(b) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries; and

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon."

14. Subsection 52(2) of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(d) any other amendment to the Constitution of Canada."

15. Section 61 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Act 1982, or a reference to the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1982, shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

General

16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

CITATION

17. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

and on the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

October 1, 1987—That the motion be amended

(a) in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 2.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada;

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society;

(c) the recognition that aboriginal peoples constitute a distinctive and fundamental characteristic of Canada;

(d) the recognition of the multicultural nature of Canadian society, and in particular respect for the many origins, creeds and cultures as well as the differing regional identities that helped shape Canadian society; and

(e) the recognition of the advantages of developing the Canadian economic union."

(b) in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 2.(2) and substituting the following therefor:

"2(a) The role of the Parliament of Canada to preserve and promote, and the role of the provincial legislatures to preserve and, subject to subparagraph (2)(b) to promote, the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph 1(a) is affirmed.

(b) The role of a province in relation to promotion applies from the time it is adopted by a resolution of the legislative assembly of that province."

(c) in paragraph 2 of the Schedule by deleting section 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"25. Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, and until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the government of Canada shall, within six months after the vacancy occurs, call an election in the province or territory to which the vacancy relates for the purpose of filling that vacancy, and, notwithstanding the provision of section 29 of the Constitution Act, 1867, for a term of nine years."

(d) in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by deleting subsections 101C.(1) and (2) and substituting the following therefor:

"101C.(1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province and the elected government of each territory may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province or territory and are qualified under section 101B. for appointment to that court.

(2) Subject to subsection (5), where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

(e) in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by adding immediately after subsection 101C.(4) the following:

"(5) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) and, if within a period of three months, no name which has been submitted under subsection (1) is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, the Chief Justice may make an interim one-year appointment from among justices of the Federal Court of Canada or provincial Superior Courts."

(f) in paragraph 7 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 106A.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"106A.(1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Parliament of Canada after the coming into force of this section, in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a compatible program which meets minimum national standards."

(g) by deleting paragraphs 9, 10, 11 and 12 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the right of a province of a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(c) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(d) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(e) the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(f) an amendment to this Part.

42.(1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 38(1):

(a) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators; and

(b) the number of members by which a province or territory is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators.

(2) Subsections 38(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

42A. Notwithstanding subsection 42(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, the establishment of new provinces and the extension of existing provinces into territories shall be a matter exclusively for the Governor General in Council and the elected government of the territory affected."

(h) in paragraph 13 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 50.(2) and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) the aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including self-government;

(b) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators, representation in the Senate.

(c) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries at the first meeting only;

(d) such other matters as are agreed upon."

(i) by deleting paragraph 16 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"16. Nothing in the Constitution Amendment, 1987 derogates from any of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms or affects Part II of the Constitution Act, 1982".—The Leader of the Opposition.

and on the amendment of Mr. Broadbent:

October 1, 1987—That the motion be amended

(a) by adding in paragraph 2 subsection 25(1) the words "and the elected government of each territory" immediately after the word "province";

(b) by adding in paragraph 2 subsection 25(2) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(c) by adding in paragraph 6 subsection 101C.(1) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(d) by adding in paragraph 6 subsection 101C.(4) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(e) by deleting in paragraph 9, section 41 paragraph (i);

(f) by adding to paragraph 13 subsection 50(2) the following new paragraph:

"(c) aboriginal rights, in particular self-government;"

(g) by adding to paragraph 13 section 50 the following new subsection:

"(3) The Prime Minister shall invite to the Conferences designated in section 50 subsection (2)(c) representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada and the governments of the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory and those groups and governments shall participate fully in all matters that affect aboriginal rights."

(h) by deleting paragraph 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25, 27 or 28 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution.—Mr. Broadbent.

and on the amendment of Mr. Caccia:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 1 of the Schedule

(a) by deleting Section 2.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the recognition that Canada constitutes aboriginal and multicultural societies, with English and French as the official languages of Canada, French-speaking Canadians being centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada and English-speaking Canadians concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec".

(b) by deleting Section 2.(3).

and on the amendment of Mr. Allmand:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by adding immediately after subsection 2.(4) the following:

"(5) Nothing in this section derogates from any of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and freedoms."

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I am glad Hon. Members opposite seem to be looking forward to my speech on the Constitution Amendment.

Mr. Prud'homme: It is always a great pleasure.

Mr. Fontaine: I am also glad to see the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) also supports the proposed Constitution Amendment.

Mr. Prud'homme: Not so fast, I haven't made my speech yet!

Mr. Fontaine: For the benefit of the Hon. Members, Canadians in general and the people in my riding, I would like to start my speech by quoting the main clause of this Amendment, and I quote:

"2. (1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

The second important point:

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

• (1110)

Mr. Speaker, those are the most important points: the recognition of Quebec as a distinct society. Another important aspect is the appointments to the Senate. It has always been the prerogative of the Prime Minister of this country to make Senate appointments. Our Government has modified this procedure, and after the Meech Lake Accord is ratified, Senate appointments will be made by the Prime Minister of Canada from lists of candidates provided by the provinces to which the vacancies apply. This is a very significant step, which gives the provinces a chance to make recommendations to the Prime Minister on Senate appointments. This is a definite advantage for the provinces.

As far as Quebec and its immigration policy is concerned, the province will have the option of admitting up to 5 per cent more immigrants in terms of the province's population as a percentage of the population of Canada. This means that we as Quebecers will, in many cases, benefit from increased numbers of francophone immigrants.

Appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada will also be to the advantage of Quebec. Three of the nine justices of the Supreme Court will be recommended by Quebec. Finally, should Quebec or any other province decide to opt out of national programs and national interests, they can still work together with the federal Government, while having the authority to administer their own respective programs, and this applies to Quebec, Ontario and any other province in Canada.

Canada is now the result of discussions by 10 provinces that together have decided to change the rules of the game and have kept for themselves a number of important activity areas. I think it would be useful to take a look, in chronological order, at the various events that led up to the Meech Lake Accord. First of all, since we are going back in time somewhat, I think we should mention one event that was not a very happy one for Quebec. I am referring to March 29, 1982, when Quebec, which had sent 74 members to Ottawa, these 74 federal Liberals forgot that Quebec even existed and allowed an agreement to be signed in Ottawa, without Quebec, an agreement that received royal assent on April 17, 1982, in the presence of federal Liberal Ministers from Quebec, to the detriment of 27 per cent of our population which at the time was completely ignored by its Liberal Members, several of whom are still here, Mr. Speaker.

Another important event that lead up to the Meech Lake Accord occurred on August 6, 1984. In his election speech in Sept-Îles, the present Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) promised to undertake discussions aimed at bringing Quebec back into the constitutional fold. And I quote the Right Hon. the Prime Minister of Canada: "We will have to make pledges and take action if we want to convince the National Assembly of Quebec to sign the new Constitution with honour and enthusiasm". Our federal-provincial policy will be geared to specific objectives: concertation and harmonization of the policies of both levels of Government, and respect for provincial jurisdictions.

Our Government reaffirmed its commitment in the October, 1986 Speech from the Throne, referring to the compatibility of the future Meech Lake Accord with respect for the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms within the scope of the Constitution. April 30, 1987 is the date of a momentous event: for the first time in Canadian history, and this has to be the historic event, the 10 provincial Premiers reached an agreement with the Prime Minister of Canada. The 10 Premiers, representing four different political Parties, unanimously endorsed our Government's proposed constitutional project.

This marked the beginning of a new era. Quebec was urged to rejoin Canada, a suggestion which was warmly welcomed by the Government of the Province of Quebec. Indeed, taking its cue from Premier Bourassa and his team, the National Assembly began consideration of the Meech Lake Accord on June 23, 1987. After a few days of constructive debates which reflected the unqualified support of most Quebecers, the National Assembly readily accepted the Meech Lake Accord. Thus the Government of Quebec—first among the 10 provincial administrations—confirmed that henceforth Quebecers would feel as full-fledged partners in the Canadian community. The new accord rallied widespread support, and Quebecers now belong to this great country. In my estimation, Mr. Speaker, that is the national affirmation message conveyed to Quebec and the rest of Canada, a message which Quebecers must be increasingly aware of. They are now full-fledged citizens of this great country.

Not long after, a second province—Saskatchewan—endorsed the Meech Lake Accord, paving the way for similar action on the part of all 10 Provinces. What is our position here in the House of Commons of Canada with respect to various Members, different Parties, and an untold number of Canadian communities? Yesterday, we heard our Prime Minister's superb speech. We also heard the speech by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and a speech by a Member of the Liberal Party. On the Government side, the benches were full. The seats of New Democratic Party Members were full as well. Among the Liberals, seats were half-empty. Why were those seats half-empty yesterday during the speech on the Meech Lake Accord? Because, Mr. Speaker, there are 10 Liberal Members in the House of Commons who are against the Accord, and despite the fact that their Leader warned them to toe the Party line or else be put out of the caucus, the same Members have nevertheless stated here in the House that they are against the Meech Lake Accord.

We shall see whether the Leader of their Party intends to take disciplinary action. Some Liberal Members have decided to defer their opinion, and I am referring, for instance, to the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). We will have to wait and see what their position will be, but we hope they will close ranks with their Party and act like true Canadians.

However, I must say, to the credit of a number of federal Liberals, for instance, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), that they do support the Accord.

I have heard some of these Members call each other "Rhodesians from Westmount". That is just their way of promoting Party unity and describing Canada to the outside world. At times we would be grateful for this kind of publicity, which is probably meant to satisfy the narrow interests of certain Party Members.

When we listened to the speech by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, I was delighted with his very positive views on the Meech Lake Accord. However, instead of talking about Madeleine de Verchères and Jacques Cartier, significant as they were for the history of our country, and instead of talking about the past and the present, I would have liked to hear him talk about the Canada of tomorrow, the Canada of the future, the Canada we intend to build through our work here in the House of Commons.

I would have liked to hear the Hon. Member and Quebec lieutenant of the Liberal Leader give us his views on the major initiatives in which we are engaged for the benefit of this country and its future development. One of these initiatives is the Free Trade Agreement with United States. I would have liked to hear the former Quebec Minister of Finance and friend of Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa speak out in favour of an agreement that will give Canada an excellent economic base for the future. This Agreement will make Canadians happier and more prosperous, and will, in the final instance, open the door to a better Canada. A better Canada is not just the Constitution and a lot of documents. A better Canada means people who are more prosperous, a more autonomous society, and the Free Trade Agreement is one way of achieving that goal. If we seriously want a better Canada, we will also have to support this historic Free Trade Agreement which protects one job out of four. That is because in Canada, out of a total GNP of $500 billion, $125 billion, one-quarter of that amount, is derived from exports. We have a labour force of between 11 and 12 million. We could say that one-quarter of these workers depend on exports for their jobs. Real Canadians will recognize the importance of our export markets, and especially the importance of the American market, where we sell 80 per cent of our goods and services and sell them at a profit. We sell them $95 billion worth of goods and services, and when I say we, I am referring to our business people, our manufacturers, and our exporters who developed this market and I am also referring to us in the Government who gave this market our blessing through our historic Free Trade Agreement.

I would also have liked to hear the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides explain where he stands on research and development in this country. Madam Speaker, as you know, we are having trouble obtaining Royal Assent for our drug patents Bill. This legislative measure would enable companies to promote research and development. Once enacted, it would prevent certain generic-drug manufacturers from copying the prescriptions of research and development oriented companies and from mass producing such drugs, a tactic which seriously undermines the spirit of initiative and good will of research and development firms. This legislation has remained unchanged since 1968, the kind of legislation likely to attract to this country—and particularly to Montreal—investments of $700 million which in turn would generate 1,300 new jobs in the immediate future.

My contention is that a real Canadian looks far beyond the piece of paper on which the constitutional provisions are printed. A real Canadian—a Quebecer to boot, a friend of Mr. Bourassa—does not buck a government or disregard the views of the Premier of the Province of Quebec. He should voice strong support for Bill C-22 concerning the Patent Act. Madam Speaker, let us bear in mind the fact that twice the National Assembly of Quebec voted in favour of this legislation.

So I would urge the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides to take that into consideration whenever he speaks up in favour of the Constitution and the Meech Lake Accord.

I have a few comments to make about the Members of the socialist Party. I am at a loss to nail down their exact position because the sounds we hear are rather confusing. This brings to mind their main source of income, who also happens to be the vice-president of Canada's socialist party, Mr. Bob White, whom I quote:

"I did not agree the day after the Accord was signed, and I still do not agree."

So we must be wary of their formal statements in the House of Commons, because they do not all see eye to eye with their main financial supporter, Bob White of the Canadian Auto Workers. Incidentally, I might add that he is paid directly from the union dues of the auto workers—and they have been enjoying the benefits of free trade since 1965, the kind of privilege which the socialists are not prepared to recommend for the rest of Canadian labour. What do the socialists want, even though they will say here that they endorse the Meech Lake Accord? They want two Canadas. They want the Canada of Oshawa where the Auto Pact is in force, where unemployment is a mere 3 per cent, the Canada of Oshawa, Madam Speaker. The result of the free trade agreement dating back to 1965 in the car manufacturing industry is that unemployment is 3 per cent, if you can call that unemployment. People in and around Oshawa are doing very well. They do not mind paying their dues to be represented here by socialists who rant on about free trade.

I do not think those people are true Canadians. First they officially support Meech Lake in an attempt to put Quebecers to sleep—and that is not working—then they turn right around and denounce the free trade agreement, all the time knowing full well they have had the same kind of agreement since 1965 in Oshawa, the socialist leader's riding which is their bread and butter, Madam Speaker.

So I think their representations are an exercise in window-dressing. In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I think and I hope that as many Opposition Members as possible will accept this new strong Canada with a distinct Quebec. That will be national collective affirmation. Such is the duty of all Canadians and, hopefully, partisan feelings will vanish and the House will finally agree to vote in favour of our Government's historic accord, the Meech Lake Accord.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments.

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I will make use of this opportunity to speak on the question of the Meech Lake Accord. It is a matter that has perplexed me very much. During the summer I was quite unable to attend to the matter of the Accord because of the phoney refugee crisis stirred up by the same Government. That totally occupied my attention. However, I have studied it as well as I could since that crisis came to its intended, manufactured end with the passing of the two anti-refugee Bills.

• (1120)

I have been perplexed about the Meech Lake Accord because I do believe strongly that it is necessary to bring about Quebec's full, willing participation in the Constitution of Canada. On the other hand, I believe that the price exacted for that, apparently by certain provincial Premiers and perhaps other interests, was extortionate and in some ways damaging to Canada. However, by the process and the structure we have, both the legality and perception of the vote will be on the one question of bringing Quebec in regardless of the price. There does not appear to be any way to cast an effective and intelligible vote in protest against the damaging aspects of the Accord.

[Translation]

Concerning Quebec, it is more than a simple question of language or culture, songs, literature, music, local traditions, and so on. I lived in Quebec for five years, two years as a McGill University student and three years as parish priest in the Gatineau Valley, close to the Gatineau river. I now have two daughters who reside in Montreal; they are married, both are bilingual, and now and then they work as translators; their husbands are francophones, the children—my grandchildren—are francophones. I visited them for a few days last week and, as always, I very much like the City of Montreal. I believe that Quebec is indeed a distinct society, not only Quebec but also the francophones throughout Canada.

[English]

I know something of the concept of the family in Quebec. I should also add that my wife lived there many more years than I. Therefore, I have learned something about their strong protection of the family relationship which I for one, and I think many Canadians, consider very valuable. That is part of the distinct society and it is for that reason they asked for and were given a generation ago a separate and distinct pension system, the Quebec Pension Plan, parallel with the Canada Pension Plan. I have never heard of any harm coming to people in Quebec or any other part of Canada because there are two pension systems funded by the federal Government. I believe it was wise to allow Quebec to handle the pension according to its own mores.

There is other social legislation which I believe is in some ways very sensitive, perhaps more sensitive, to the realities of family life than we find in other parts of Canada, particularly rent control. When my older daughter first moved to Quebec I was amazed at the low rent which she and her husband were paying for a place to live in Montreal. I inquired and found that Quebec was the only province in Canada to continue rent controls after the federal Government discontinued them at the end of the application of the War Measures Act following World War II. I believe that was a very fine thing for the Quebec Government to do. It is not because I ever favoured the Government of Maurice Duplessis, but he did a very good thing in continuing rent controls. I assume he did it because the people of Quebec demanded it and he recognized the justice of their demand.

Quebec is also one of the only two provinces in Canada which has had the good common sense to adopt legislation to prevent strike-breaking. That was a good measure which followed many years of shocking violence on picket lines caused by companies which insisted on hiring strike-breakers to take the jobs of their employees during a shut-down caused by a strike or lock-out. I have seen that law operating when on the road in Quebec. I have seen the Quebec Provincial Police maintaining order on a picket line in a very sober and peaceful way.

• (1130)

I believe that is part of the tradition of peace in Quebec. The people there prefer to live in peace. Quebec throughout this century has established its reputation in Canada for preferring peace. We had a little discussion of that issue during World War I and World War II with respect to conscription. There is no question that the difference is not just one of language. It is a basic moral outlook on the world and I think, although I am entirely of English Canada myself, we would do well to consider the point of view of the people of Quebec who are very reluctant to go abroad to fight. They want to know what it is they are fighting for if they are going to do it. There is a lot of sense in that.

There is also at present strong opposition in Quebec to the militarization of Canada even though a great deal of it is happening in Montreal. There is strong opposition to the unnecessary low-level flights of NATO training pilots and so on.

As I said, Quebec has a very distinct society. It is sensible and necessary that that be recognized. Nevertheless, they voted by a majority of 60 per cent in the 1980 referendum to stay within the Canadian Confederation. It would be unfair and immoral now, eight years later, to just take them for granted and say we do not need to arrive at any agreement with Quebec just yet because we have some other things that need to be done to the Constitution so Quebec can wait. That would be very wrong and destructive to the life of Canada as a whole.

As I said, I believe the Meech Lake Accord is in great danger of doing damage to Canada in other ways. I am not going to discuss all the objections raised. There are some I do not agree with and some I do not weigh so heavily as others. What I am concerned about is that the act of including Quebec was accompanied, I think unnecessarily and unfairly, by acts tending to exclude others. Whether that was done thoughtlessly or in haste or because of blackmail by certain premiers we mere Members of Parliament are not allowed to know. However, the aboriginal peoples have been shut out again and they are the only ones in Canada who have a stronger moral claim to recognition than the people of Quebec. Part of the difficulty is to define their claim.

The claims of Quebec were defined by Premier Bourassa. They got recognition of Quebec as a distinct society. With regard to more provincial power in immigration, through my inquiries I have learned that there has been very little real change in the distribution of powers on immigration. In fact, Quebec was the only province which made any significant use of the existing power.

I think it is fair that they got a role in Supreme Court appointments. They do not make the appointments, but there must be negotiation and agreement on them. With regard to limits on federal spending, I cannot see that the federal spending power has been reduced. Quebec got part of the veto it wanted on constitutional amendments. It is limited to federal institutions and does not apply to all federal negotiations.

• (1140)

Contrary to what some of my friends in Toronto and elsewhere have told me, the people of Quebec did not get all they asked for. They bargained and got part of what they asked for. The part they got was reasonable.

However, as I have said, the aboriginal peoples have been left out. Not a word was said about any attempt to bring them in. Through an amendment we asked that they be brought to a meeting next year and were told by the big boss from Baie Comeau that there will be no amendments of any sort whatsoever.

The Territories have been pushed further out than they were before. They now have to climb over the veto power of every one of the 10 provinces. They have also been shut out from the privilege of nominations to the Senate and the Supreme Court. That was unnecessary. Whether it was deliberate or by oversight, it was wrong.

The growing ethnic minorities in Canada were only very slightly recognized for what is becoming their increasingly solid place in the basic characteristics of our country.

I believe these damaging characteristics of the Meech Lake agreement were unnecessary. They are unjust and are an ominous sign of a very undemocratic process in which 11 men exercise their power in a very arrogant way. They have said that having met and made a decision they will ensure that no changes are allowed to it. Whether they can make that boast stick, we do not know. They can clearly make it stick in this House because the Government has three-quarters of the vote. It really makes no difference whether one, more, or all of the members of the Opposition vote against it.

There is a deeper fault which is reflected in this habitually undemocratic way of conducting constitutional negotiations in the country. The fact is that for all our pleasure at having won the patriation of our Constitution five years ago, we have a Constitution which is in some ways very much less than democratic. In the history of Canada the question of our Constitution has been dominated by the question of Westminster. We asked whether we were free of Westminster and, if not, how we could get free of Westminster. Now that we are free of Westminster we should not take for granted that we have a complete democracy. In fact, I believe that we do not.

Members of Parliament do not have control over the decision as to whether the country goes to war. We can cheer the Government on by a resolution after one man and his advisers have decided whether we should go to war. We have no right of control over treaties. They are not even presented to us before they are signed and are not necessarily presented to us after being voted upon.

Certain treaties have been kept secret. For example, when the Standing Committee on National Defence was studying the renewal of the NORAD treaty and asked the then Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence for the text of all treaties with the United States relating to that, he refused to give them to the committee but said that he would give the titles. He did not, in fact, give them all the titles and they had to go to Washington to find the eight titles which he had deceptively withheld. The Deputy Prime Minister can, therefore, deceive a standing committee of Parliament with impunity. That is a serious limitation on our democracy. They could not even get away with that in the United States.

Parliament has no control over security measures. We have a very weak and indirect committee arrangement which may bring some things to light. However, Members of Parliament are not given the confidence that is enjoyed by Members of the American Congress to examine directly the officers who are supposedly carrying out the mandate of Parliament and the people.

We do not have sufficient protection in Canada for private organizations. Only last week this Parliament adopted a law which enables the Government to interfere in the internal affairs of a private association. That is shocking. Under certain conditions the Government could ban certain members of a union from holding office in that organization. If the Government can do that to one union, it can do it to any union. If the Government can do that to unions, it can do it to churches, ethnic associations, and perhaps even political Parties as such.

Apparently there is nothing in the Constitution which prevents the Government from doing that. There is nothing in the Constitution to prevent the Government from hiring agents provocateurs to disrupt organizations which criticize the Government. I am not talking about subversion but about the disruption of critics.

The issue we are discussing is much bigger than the Meech Lake Accord. The Accord, with its damaging faults, is only a symptom of a much deeper weakness in the Canadian democracy. There is a big struggle coming up over that weakness. It is reflected now very powerfully in the frustration of Canadian people, including many legislators, over the fact that one man and his advisers can negotiate a free trade deal which gives away Canada's control over natural resources and investment activities in Canada and damages many other aspects of Canadian life, including certain aspects of our culture.

The superboss from Baie Comeau tells us that no one will be able to change it, that the legislatures do not have any constitutional power to change it. That is a very serious threat to democracy in Canada.

I shall be voting not only for the amendments which other members of my caucus have moved but for the Meech Lake Accord, because to do otherwise, no matter how I justify it by words, would be perceived legally and by most people as being disdainful of the Province of Quebec, the Québécois, and the French-Canadian people with whom I have some acquaintance and good friendship.

However, I warn the people of Quebec and all the people of Canada that we have moved this year toward a much more authoritarian and even repressive form of government than has ever been imagined, expected, or envisaged in Canada. It will happen very fast unless the people of Canada, including many Members of this House, think about where we are heading. The symbol of that today is the undemocratic procedure used to narrow the question for voting so that the only way I can vote for Quebec is to vote against the aboriginal people and the northern Territories and cast some doubt about the status of women and ethnic minorities in Canada.

I also regret that the undemocratic structure and procedure even causes occasional distortions in the disciplinary systems of political Parties represented in this House. It is for that reason as well that I give that warning about the procedures around the Meech Lake Accord which are endangering the rights of Canadians to determine what will be done in our country.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has made a very thoughtful analysis of the proposal before us. He referred to the damaging characteristics in the Accord which affect minorities and aboriginal people. He also spoke at length about the process whereby this proposal before us, to be voted upon next Monday, has reached the floor of the House of Commons. I believe he referred to the process as undemocratic.

If I did not misunderstand him, he also referred to deeper faults in this document. Yet, to my surprise, at the end of his speech the Member came to the conclusion that he will vote for this measure.

Anyone who listened to him this morning would have difficulty with the logical consistency of the thought process he has adopted. Having criticized the substance and the process, quite rightly, the Hon. Member concluded that he would vote for this measure. He justified voting for the Meech Lake Accord by saying that to do otherwise would be disdainful toward the Province of Quebec. I do not know to what entity he refers, whether the Province of Quebec as a government or as a group of legislators, but to be disdainful in politics is an interesting concept on which the Member may want to elaborate.

To the best of my knowledge there is no constitution in the world that singles out a specific society in a part of the country covered by that constitution in the way that this proposal does in relation to the population in one province. The Hon. Member may want to reflect on the desirability and wisdom of having in a constitution a clause which gives preferential status to the population of a specific territory covered by that constitution.

It would be interesting to know whether the Hon. Member believes it is wise to include in a constitution special recognition for the population in one part of Canada. Does he not think, having reflected on that type of selective legislative identification of one society, since this is a social concept more than anything else, that this error in constitutional drafting by far outweighs his fear of appearing to be disdainful toward the Province of Quebec by voting against this measure?

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I thank the Member for his questions and comment, and for leaving me two or three minutes to answer. The reason why I will vote for this measure, even though I acknowledge the very undemocratic process, is that I believe the greater damage would be to leave Quebec as is for another indefinite term. The earlier damage was perhaps caused by jealousy of others and their lack of understanding. That had to be corrected, as I said in my remarks.

When I referred to deeper faults, I was not referring to deeper faults in the document but to deeper faults in the structure of Canada which existed long before this document or even the 1982 Constitution. There were undemocratic procedures by which the Government could do anything it pleased, in many cases without parliamentary approval, and often without telling Parliament fully afterwards. I did not have time to add that there is no mandate and no system for having a mandate from the Canadian people. Organizations created by Canadians, like unions, churches, ethnic associations and even political Parties, have no voice as such. They are allowed to speak as individuals. The superboss from Baie Comeau says that they can talk, but he will not pay any attention to them. Those are the deep faults that already existed. They were not created by the Meech Lake Accord, but are illustrated by it.

I am glad the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) asked whether I could cite another constitution in the world that gives special recognition to one district. While I am not a constitutional expert, I know that there is an example. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) would be very pleased to know that in this respect Canada is following the example of Nicaragua.

Nicaragua has established a constitution which provides for autonomy in its eastern departments. This notion is almost unheard of in Latin American governments. It is to allow special arrangements for people who live there, notably Mosquito Indians and other tribes as well as the Caribbean peoples who have settled there. This was an essential means of ending a civil war within that part of Nicaragua and it has been successful.

Unlike the Meech Lake Accord, this was achieved in Nicaragua as a result of two years of intensive house-by-house, town-by-town discussion that resulted in a broad agreement across the country. It is having the effect of bringing to an end the armed conflicts in the eastern part of Nicaragua.

We do not have armed conflicts in Canada, but I wish we had a more thorough discussion. Nevertheless, I am pleased to inform the Hon. Member that there is what I believe a good, modern precedent for the action the Government has taken at Meech Lake giving special consideration to one part of the population.

• (1200)

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise in my place to participate in this debate today, along with many other colleagues. May I say from the outset that I find it rather strange that Members of the House of Commons over these last few weeks and months, are participating in a debate on the Meech Lake, Langevin Accord, a document which affects the basic constitution of Canada, and conducting that debate in advance of other signatories to the Accord, that is the 10 provinces, having dealt with that matter in their own legislatures. The fact is that only one of the 10 provincial signatories to the Accord, has passed a resolution in its provincial assembly giving its approval to the Accord.

Nine of the 10 provinces of Canada, representing some 75 per cent of the population, have yet to deal with the Meech Lake Accord in their respective assemblies. Why is that important? It is because an important new principle forms the basis of the Meech Lake Accord. That principle is the concept of unanimity with respect to amendments in important areas. Frankly, I find it difficult to imagine how and why the Government of Canada would deem it appropriate for Members of Parliament to deal with the fundamental law of the land, that is, the Constitution, in advance of having the advice and comments, and not to put too fine a point on it, the potential amendments which may arise out of the provincial legislatures.

This is a document that constitutionalizes the concept of unanimity, based, I presume, on the notion that all partners have an equal say, that every voice in the constitutional family must have its say. How could we pass a document that embraces that concept in advance of hearing from 10 of the legislatures of this nation? There is something fundamentally flawed in proceeding in advance of knowing what the Legislature of Newfoundland has to say about the Meech Lake Accord. What amendments, if any, may be forthcoming? It is the same with Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Alberta and, yes, proceeding in advance of knowing what the Legislature of Quebec had to say. That legislature has spoken. We know that it has passed the document as written, but we do not know what nine other legislatures have to say about the Meech Lake Accord.

We do not know what amendments nine other legislatures may propose to the Meech Lake Accord. Some may presume, perhaps with good cause because of the commitments of the leaders of the respective governments in each of those provinces, that there will be no amendments. However, whether we like it or not, whether it was intended or not, it is contemptuous of the democratic system and of the notion of paying respect and giving an ear to the voices of the provinces, to proceed, particularly in this Chamber, in advance of knowing what will happen in those legislatures.

It is my view, and obviously my saying it will serve no purpose other than making it known, that the House of Commons of Canada ought to have been the last to deal with the Meech Lake Accord. It should have dealt with it in the full knowledge of the debates of all of the legislatures and in full knowledge of all of the proposed amendments, some of which may pass in provincial legislatures, before acting here in this Chamber.

I do not think it is presumptuous to say that the Parliament of Canada has a role somewhat different than a provincial legislature in this matter. I do not think it is presumptuous to suggest that perhaps it has a pre-eminent role. It is the only assembly composed of respresentatives of every part of this country, right across the 5,000 kilometres of this land. The only chamber whose members can speak for every single part of Canada is this Chamber. That is not the case in any provincial assembly. It seems to me that a great opportunity has been lost to have this assembly behave as though it were just one of 11 assemblies.

The last time constitutional debates were undertaken in this House and in committees was 1981-82. As a new Member of Parliament I had a role to play, albeit a small part, in the deliberations of 1981-82. I was a member of the Joint House of Commons Senate Constitutional Committee in 1981, as were other Members who are still Members of this House today.

As a rookie member of that committee, one who had no preconceptions, no notion even of how committees worked, let alone a constitutional committee, I learned some lessons. First, I learned that constitution making is no easy task. I remember the frustration at hearing witness after witness, people concerned primarily with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, representatives of womens' groups, civil liberties associations, native groups, multicultural groups, all saying in essence, if you cannot draft language that is in exact terms with what we give you as acceptable language to us, then the whole exercise is not worth pursuing. If we could not give them a clause affecting their particular group in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, if it was not in their language, we may as well scrap the whole thing.

I remember sitting as member of the committee acknowledging that we had a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, we were bringing the Constitution back to Canada, and feeling frustrated because, rather than acknowledging the important gains being made, albeit imperfectly from any particular point of view, the witnesses were saying if it is not their way, if it is not drafted in their language, it need not happen at all.

I can tell you, Madam Speaker, from experience, as one who faithfully attended every hour of every day of that committee, that the Constitution we wrote in 1981, which was passed in 1982, was not a Constitution that would have met with the explicit approval of any one of hundreds of groups that appeared before our committee. Not one of them would have said that the language they preferred could be found in the document which was ultimately passed by members of all three Parties in this House of Commons.

That was a frustrating experience. I bear that in mind as I observe the work that has been done by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the premiers in drafting and putting together the Meech Lake Accord. Of course, no constitutional document will ever be without flaw. No constitutional document will ever receive the unanimous consent or approval of all the interested players in society.

The role of Members in 1982 was to look at what had been accomplished, to ask ourselves whether or not what had been accomplished, flawed or not, was good work, was worthwhile, whether it would move the country forward and help to bind the country together. That was the role. It was not to look for perfection but to look for progress. It was not to look for a flawless document but to look for what was intrinsically good and sound about that document.

With few exceptions in 1982 Members of the House approved the 1982 Constitution and, with one exception, the Premiers of Canada approved the 1982 Constitution. But it was a very painful, a very important, a very glaring exception, given the fundamental nature of this country in 1982. That exception was the Province of Quebec. There is no question, whether we realized it then, and I think we did—we certainly realize it now—that in proceeding without Quebec we took a substantial risk in that Quebec's role in the Canadian constitutional family would have to be dealt with. That is what the Meech Lake and Langevin discussions, and the Accord, are all about.

As one who has a particular sensitivity, as I just explained, for the notion that no constitutional document is perfect, I still have to say that in my mind the Meech Lake Accord as presented in this House, indeed as presented in the legislatures of the country, contains serious flaws. These are flaws which we in the Liberal Party have sought to address by way of amendment. These are amendments which I believe would have had—and it is clear now that they have no chance of being passed—a much greater chance of being addressed seriously and in a non-partisan manner had this Chamber waited until all the provincial houses had spoken.

Indeed, we can see already in the Province of New Brunswick the election of a new Government with an overwhelming mandate led by a leader who believes that there are fundamental flaws in the Meech Lake Accord that ought to be addressed. There is something wrong with the fact that we shall deal with this document before that leader has had a chance, which constitutionally he has as one of 10 Premiers who must agree to this document, to have his say at a First Ministers' meeting. There is something flawed about the fact that in advance of the Premier of the Province of New Brunswick, Mr. McKenna, speaking to the Prime Minister and the other Premiers at a First Ministers' conference, to lay out his concerns and to find out whether or not there is any room for agreement, for consensus, on some of those concerns, this Chamber should proceed today with this Accord.

We have asked for amendments to clearly define the role of the respective jurisdictions in naming members to the Supreme Court of Canada. We are not satisfied with a court that becomes nothing more than a body of consensus between premiers and federal governments. It is not the role of the court to be a consensus body between premiers and the federal Government. We have raised concerns about the new role and vision for the Senate in the Meech Lake Accord, a role in which the Senate becomes, obstensibly, a body in which the patronage of power, which is what it is and we better call it what it is, which is currently in federal hands is transferred to provinicial hands.

I do not think that there is a Member of this House who would not acknowledge that we need Senate reform. There is not a member of the Senate who would not acknowledge that we need Senate reform, and proper Senate reform which would bring about a democratically elected Senate. Everybody says that they are in favour of that. Every premier that I know, the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition, the Leader of the NDP and the Senators all say that they are in favour of that. How is it then that we find in the Meech Lake Accord a clause that does not move us toward an elected Senate, a democratically elected Senate, but instead that merely transfers the right of patronage appointments from prime ministers to premiers?

It is true as well that when that power of patronage appointment is transferred from a prime minister to a premier, and when that premier and every other premier must give unanimous consent before that system is changed, the premiers will not easily give up the right to make Senate appointments. They will be reluctant. Perhaps it is not too strong to say that having the right to name a Senator will be equivalent to having the right to pick the winner of the 6/49. Either way it is a million dollar contest for the lucky recipient. I am doubtful, sceptical, that many premiers will want to give up that right. We have made it impossible to take it away without their consent because of the amending formula contained in the Meech Lake Accord.

I would now like to deal with the Territories. I have not lived in the Territories, but I spent seven years of my young life living in Labrador. I grew up in the north and have some notion of the isolation that northerners feel, some notion of the sense of being not only on the fringes of mainstream Canada but, in fact, some notion of the sense of being forgotten. Being on the fringe presumes that the fringe is visible, that it exists, that it is acknowledged. While Labrador is not seeking provinicial status, the Northwest Territories is moving toward—not tomorrow but an evolution is happening—provincial status.

What does Meech Lake say to the people of the Northwest Territories? It says that they can become a province of Canada, not when they have evolved politically, economically and socially to a point where they are ready to take control of their own destiny, to be masters of their own ship, to chart their own course, to fasten their own sail, but when the premiers of each and every other Province of Canada say they can. That is the criterion. It is not political, social and economic evolution in the Territories. It is the right of every premier to express whether it is in his and his province's best interests at any given point in time that the Territories acquire the status of a province. I think that is a fundamental flaw in the Meech Lake Accord.

These and other flaws we seek to address in the amendments that we have put before the House. They are amendments that I hope, notwithstanding how they intend to vote at the end of the day on Meech Lake, Members will find appropriate to support. I know that many Members opposite and many Members of this Party have expressed clearly their intention to vote for Meech Lake. But an intention to vote for Meech Lake is not analogous with an intention to vote against the amendments.

Surely no Member of the House would suggest that the document is flawless, that it cannot be improved, or that the concerns of native people, of the people in the Northwest Territories and of women are not concerns worth addressing.

Not one of the amendments respecting these concerns has the effect of negating the fundamentals of the Meech Lake Accord. They would improve and enrich the document. Be they NDP or Liberal amendments—quite frankly I am not concerned about the colour of the tag on them—they enhance the document and reflect the body of concern which Hon. Members have heard from one end of the country to the other and in all our legislatures.

At the beginning I said that I participated in the process in 1981-82 and that I quickly learned that no constitution is ever perfect nor can ever be perfect. In 1982 I voted for a document when I knew that it was not perfect. It was flawed. Indeed, the Province of Quebec was not a signatory to it.

I acknowledge today that this document is not perfect and that indeed it is flawed. However, I hope that amendments are made. I would rather be presented with another Accord upon which to vote. As I did in 1982 with reservations, I shall do again when the Accord is before the House, that is, vote for the Meech Lake Accord.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I just have a quick question for the Hon. Member. I think he urged us to vote for amendments. If we vote for amendments it would mean for certain that the Accord would not become entrenched in the Constitution of Canada, because it has to be passed in identical form in all legislatures.

Is the Hon. Member saying that he wants us to approve something which will kill these amendments, or is he saying that he is in favour of this kind of constitutional change? He leaves me in a considerable state of confusion.

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, far be it for me to lecture such an intelligent and knowledgeable Member as the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) on his basic role as a Member of Parliament. He has earned the right to sit in the chair which he occupies and to carry the title "Member of Parliament". He has earned the right to rise and ask questions in this place. He has not only that right but the responsibility to examine legislation with a critical eye and with an open mind and, where possible, to make legislation better. No Member of Parliament can ever occupy his place, call himself a Member of Parliament, exercise his vote, represent his constituents, and seek to make a better Canada when he starts from the premise that anything presented to him is a fait accompli. We cannot start from the premise that the difficulties of democracy, that is, making amendments and subsequently selling them to the provinces, is an untidy spectacle of which we would rather not be a part.

If we amend the document in this place, under the principle of unanimity those amendments would have to be negotiated with the other premiers. That is the reality. Democracy is not tidy. It is never easy. Sometimes it is difficult, but it is democracy and we are sworn to it.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, as usual the Hon. Member has made a very eloquent and interesting intervention. He has touched upon a number of aspects, particularly the flaws in the proposal before us, and has definitely concluded that the flaws are not sufficient to warrant his opposition to the resolution.

However, there is one aspect, namely, the totality of the impact or the devolution which the proposal will bring about in the sharing of powers in the Canada of the future, in the new Canada, which goes well beyond the question of whether or not the proposal is flawless.

I refer my hon. colleague to the definition given before the joint committee in Ottawa by former Prime Minister Trudeau when he said, "Meech Lake leaves Canada to be governed by federal units". I would be very interested in the comments of the Hon. Member on that assessment.

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the question of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), because I know that he takes very seriously the question of the Meech Lake Accord, as do I. I can tell him that I have had to agonize about how I would vote on this Accord. Indeed, it has only been in very recent hours that I wrestled with the question and that I decided that I could put aside my reservations and vote for it.

However, let me tell the Hon. Member that I go forward and support the Meech Lake Accord because of my belief that Quebec must be part of the constitutional family of Canada. I do it believing that in particular the Party of which I am a Member—and I hope it will be so with other Parties—will go forward in future years and generations with constitutional conferences seeking to improve the document. I hope that we will take those areas which have been identified as flaws or weaknesses in this Accord and address them as a mandate or a platform for future constitutional improvements.

I say to my colleague that I acknowledge that it will be much more difficult in the future than it is today to recognize flaws and to correct them, because of the nature of the amending formula which is of itself part and parcel of the Meech Lake Accord—unanimity. I am not certain whether or not future constitutional amendment is even possible in the final analysis. However, presented with a fait accompli, the Meech Lake Accord, and presented with the reality of Quebec, I have to believe that it is possible.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, would the Hon. Member be very surprised to learn that for all practical purposes Quebec is part of the Constitution right now?

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, for all practical purposes Newfoundlanders are part of Canada right now in the same way as are Ontarians. However, unemployment in Ontario, where the Hon. Member lives, is 5 per cent or 6 per cent. Unemployment in Newfoundland is 30 per cent. Sometimes we have great difficulty believing that we are part of the same Canada.

Within the structures, laws, and tolerance of this nation we as Newfoundlanders seek to become even fuller partners in Confederation. What I am saying is that we cannot tell someone that technically in the law he is a Canadian when he is unemployed. We have to seek to create jobs where he lives. We cannot tell Quebecers that technically they are part of the Constitution when no Quebec Premier or Quebecer has ever voluntarily embraced the Constitution of Canada.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I want to pursue that step by perhaps pointing out that I recall 65 or 70 Liberal Members of Parliament from Quebec voting for the 1982 Constitution in the House.

I want to ask the Hon. Member about an interesting point which he raised, that is, that perhaps the debate is premature and in fact it should be after the provinces have considered the Meech Lake Accord. I think we both share the feeling that we are proposing amendments here which will not be accepted, but that they are ways of making it better, by changing it. However, the situation seems to be that the Government is not prepared to accept them. In any event, it was not prepared to accept that from the beginning. It is like a spider web. If you cut a little bit of it it will all fall down. Does the Hon. Member accept the notion that this thing is so delicate that it cannot be amended as the Government said right from the beginning and as it is doing in this House and demanding in the provincial legislatures?

• (1230)

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member listened attentively to my speech as he always does whenever I rise to speak. He heard me begin my remarks by lamenting the fact that indeed we are proceeding in this Chamber, the nation's Parliament, in advance of hearing what has occurred and what is being said in the provincial assemblies. Of course I lament that.

It is the process itself and the undue haste with which we have proceeded with this matter that has made it extremely difficult for me at the end of the day—and it has been extremely difficult—to come to the conclusion and to say that, notwithstanding all of that, I am prepared to support the Meech Lake Accord. It is my view, as I said it at the top of my remarks, that the process could have been much better served. I suspect, frankly, that a number of Members in this House, who are today saying they shall vote against Meech Lake, would have been prepared to endorse it, provided they had seen the process examined in every house with the possibility of amendment provided for in every house and finally, with full knowledge of what occurred in the assemblies, a debate here in this House. That was a concern to me, a big one. However, at the end of the day, as I said, for reasons I expressed a few minutes ago, I have come to the conclusion that I shall support the Meech Lake Accord, with regret.

Mr. Binns: Madam Speaker, I wish to make a brief comment. I know the Hon. Member has wrestled with his position on the historic agreement and has come to the conclusion that he will support the Meech Lake agreement. I want to give him credit for taking that decision. It is a bold one for him and I like to give credit where credit is due. I am sure in his reflections he will realize that this is an historic agreement which our Government has initiated and which would not have happened were it not for the tremendous leadership of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney). We appreciate the support the Hon. Member is giving to the Accord.

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member could not resist a comment on such a statement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: First, let me thank the Member opposite for his kind words and let me say to him that the duty of any Prime Minister, including the current Prime Minister of Canada, is to seek consensus, particularly in the case of the Constitution, consensus because Quebec was out, and to that extent I congratulate the Prime Minister. But I hasten to add that I think today as we stand here—that is why we proposed amendments—a tremendous opportunity is being lost to fill in some very important—not gaps—holes in the Constitution called native people, the Territories, women, spending power and real Senate reform. Those kinds of challenges are open to us and I regret that the Prime Minister has not provided leadership to ensure that the document lived up to the potential that have been attained with more courage and vision.

The Acting Speaker (Miss Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin).

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): I want to thank you, Madam Speaker, for recognizing me in this historic debate on the fundamental law of our land. So far we have heard much in this debate about what this Accord means for Quebec and how it has been a great accomplishment for Quebec and for Canada. That is certainly the case. However, I would like to consider this Accord in light of what it does for the nation and for all of the provinces, in particular, my own Province of Alberta, and how it is part of a long evolving process in developing a Constitution which truly reflects our country.

We all recognize that our Constitution has been and will continue to be amended. A constitution must reflect the society over which it applies. Our national mood is increasingly one of national reconciliation. Our fundamental laws must reflect our desired harmony.

It has been about six years since Quebec rejected the 1982 constitutional agreement thereby isolating itself from the rest of Canada on constitutional matters. Its lack of full and active participation weakened the federation. Alberta, and of course the other provinces, felt that it was important that Quebec return as a full partner. We would not welcome a partner that would receive unlimited benefits compared with other provinces. We do welcome a partner which receives fair treatment and a partner willing to work toward a fairer Confederation.

The 1987 constitutional Accord does much more than reunite Quebec with Canada. It creates a new representative confederation. It gives new hope to the provinces and new opportunities to ensure that all Governments of Canada will have their concerns heard by the central Government and that governments will reflect on the concerns of their partners.

The Accord also marks an end to the style of federal-provincial relations based on the assumption that to maintain equilibrium, the federal Government must pit one province against another. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premiers have directly rejected the notion of confrontational confederation. There is no doubt that the 1987 constitutional Accord reflects a more decentralized view of Canada than the 1982 Constitution Act. It considers the rights and powers of governments and sets a measure of institutional reliance on federal-provincial co-operation.

I would like to repeat a comment made by the Hon. Eric Kierans to the joint committee which examined this Accord to further this thought. He said this Accord is:

> Simply the closest that we have come to following the original intent and meaning of the British North America Act since Confederation itself. It reflects more accurately the view of what the original Fathers of Confederation thought that they were agreeing to . . . Above all else, they knew that a centralized Canada would not work.

The Fathers also knew that when discussions of centralism and decentralism arose they could not be addressed in terms of winning and losing. We must reject absolutely the notion advanced by some opponents of the Accord that one government won at this negotiation and another government lost.

When a particular project or program begins, the beneficiaries of a program are all citizens. If a federal Government program is implemented, those served by it are Canadians. They may also be Albertans, Quebecers or Manitobans. They are also Canadian taxpayers. The reverse is also true. When a program is implemented by a provincial Government or, for that matter, a municipal Government, the beneficiaries are residents of that province or municipality. Its supporters are provincial or municipal taxpayers. Those people are also Canadians. To say that a particular government won something and another government lost something is an absurdity because it is to say that the Canadians who won are the same Canadians who lost. It is also to say that a program supported by money collected by the federal Government is somehow better or worse than a program paid for by money collected by a provincial Government. We are all citizens of a province and a country. We do not gain or lose anything when powers or programs are transferred. To suggest otherwise is nonsense.

I would like to consider the provincial and national implications of the Accord a little further. Because we each live in a region as well as within the country, we each have a set of particular symbols and particular styles which reflect our regional and national views. To deny that western Canadians and western Canada are different from Maritime Canadians or central Canada would be to deny a natural state of affairs within this country. We all know that it is indeed possible to be a strong Albertan and a patriotic Canadian. The two are not mutually exclusive because the Canadian federation is not a test of strength between different governments. The fact that one can be loyal to one's province does not mean that one cannot be loyal to one's nation. Conversely, to be loyal to one's nation does not mean that one cannot recognize that there are distinct units within it.

We Albertans have long been arguing that we are distinct. We have repeated over and over that we do not want our economy and our resources managed by bureaucrats in Ottawa. We maintain that Canada is too large for centralized operations and that westerners should be looking after the economic and regional issues that are especially important to the West. There is no difference between our wish for self-management and the wish of those who want special considerations for language and culture. Albertans have long said that they are distinct. We cannot argue that other provinces may also consider themselves distinct.

We can acknowledge that Quebec is distinct in its history, its laws, its language and its culture. Quebec has a distinct interest in la francophonie while other provinces are more closely aligned with the Commonwealth. Quebec has a different view of history and of this country's development than does English Canada. The Quebec legal code and its jurisprudence have roots which are distinct from those of other provinces. Quebec has holidays, ceremonies, traditions and works of art which are not part of the English tradition.

These are statements of fact and of the purely obvious and we have acknowledged them for centuries, even before Confederation itself. The constitutional Accord finally acknowledges them in a legal sense. More practically, we have included this important sociological phrase at no constitutional expense to other provinces.

Does the interpretive clause hurt the citizens of Alberta or of any other province in terms of what they can do within their provinces? It does not. Does it mean that Albertans are not true citizens of Canada because they are not distinct? It does not. The provincial Government of Quebec must act within a constitutional status that is not different from that of other provinces. It must follow the division of powers that is outlined for all provinces, yet it will consider its distinct society when acting on the political stage. This merely confirms an existing state of affairs.

This constitutional Accord maintains the equality of the provinces. What Quebec demanded before entering Confederation every province received. The Accord recognizes that the provincial Governments and their creative input are essential to an effective Confederation. It is legitimate, even necessary, for provincial Governments to bring regional views to the national level. As a result, we can look forward to increased provincial involvement in immigration, in Supreme Court appointments, in national programs, in economic management and in future amendments to national institutions. We are finally agreeing to rely on the historically proven and invaluable tool of federal-provincial consultation and co-operation.

That co-operation was not possible until Quebec was an active supporter of the Constitution. Western Premiers realized that. They realized that issues of constitutional concern to them were not likely to be addressed when the Constitution itself was not yet a truly national document. The Premiers recognized that they must first work toward ensuring Quebec's participation before they could work toward a fairer Constitution.

The danger was that constitutional fatigue might overwhelm the momentum, giving way to a permanent state of incomplete participation and the eventual erosion of constitutional and political legitimacy in this nation. Indeed, sentiments have been expressed that as a country we have devoted an inordinate amount of time to constitutional matters to the detriment of other social, economic, national and international goals.

To be sure, the process to recognize that Quebec was treated as an equal partner in Confederation has been a long one. This Constitutional Accord is the most recent step in the process which began before 1867 of developing a Constitution that is true to all parts of the country.

The issues dealt with in this constitutional Accord have been fully debated by politicians, academics and interested Canadians for more than a century. I would like to mention some of the more recent milestones in that debate with a view to understanding how this Accord is the proper extension of our constitutional history.

In 1931, the British Parliament passed the Statute of Westminster giving legal recognition to Canada's independence while reserving the British Parliament's rights on constitutional matters. In retrospect, I find it amazing that Canadians accepted a constitutional package which said that they were masters of their own future but at the same time granted decisions over constitutional matters to another sovereign state. Furthermore, that British statute was essentially the constitutional law of the land for the last 50 years.

In 1968, constitutional discussions began at the initiative of Prime Minister Pearson to examine the questions of a Charter of Rights regional disparities and the timeliness of a general review of the Constitution. At their meeting in February, the Ministers agreed to give priority to finding an amending formula and patriating the Constitution.

At a meeting in Victoria in June of 1971, the First Ministers drew up a draft charter embodying the consensus reached at the February meeting. They agreed that the text was important enough to require the approval of all legislatures.

For those who suggest we are proceeding with undue haste, I want to draw to the attention of Hon. Members the difference between the Victoria Charter and the 1987 constitutional Accord. Although the First Ministers agreed on the proposal, there was a fundamental difference in the process. Provincial legislatures were given 12 days to reflect on and to approve a new Constitution. We have debated and studied the 1987 Accord for at least 10 times as long as the time provided by the Victoria Charter.

The unanimity achieved on June 3 would not have been possible without ongoing debate since 1968 on many elements characterizing this Accord including Canada's linguistic duality, Quebec's distinct society, the amending formula, spending power and provincial participation in Supreme Court and Senate appointments. The Accord is built on the work of the constitutional review of 1968 to 1971, the constitutional exercise of 1975 and 1976, Bill C-60 in 1978, the Quebec referendum in 1980 and subsequent discussions and the effort of 1981.

Constitutional renewal reached a milestone with the Constitution Act of 1982. It gave us patriation, an amending formula, recognition of aboriginal rights and our multicultural heritage, a commitment to reinforce our regional strengths and the extension of provincial jurisdiction over natural resources. These accomplishments are not to be taken lightly, but they were fundamentally flawed by the exclusion of Quebec.

In 1984, the Prime Minister set out his commitment to seek Quebec's return to the constitutional fold. It was his view that Canadians needed to come to terms with Quebec's place in the Constitution. Canadians agreed because they gave him an overwhelming mandate to achieve national reconciliation.

Quebecers also gave their provincial leader the mandate to achieve national reconciliation. They elected a Premier who outlined his desire to opt in, not drop out, of Confederation. When the Quebec Liberals took office in December, 1985, the five conditions they had outlined became the provincial Government's program.

In August of 1986, the Premiers met in Edmonton under the chairmanship of Premier Getty. They agreed unanimously that their top constitutional priority was to seek Quebec's return to the Constitution. They agreed also that other areas of concern to them, like Senate reform, would not be linked to the Quebec round but would be addressed at subsequent constitutional discussions.

In November, the Premiers again unanimously agreed that discussion could be intensified and expanded. They had considered Quebec's five proposals for inclusion in the Constitution and thought that they would be the appropriate basis for discussion. Discussions were indeed continued.

The following April, discussions progressed as far as they could without the inclusion of the First Ministers. The rest is well known. The Ministers announced the unanimous agreement to the principles they had discussed at Meech Lake in April and they put their signatures to those principles in June.

Over the summer, the Accord was scrutinized by supporters and opponents alike. Joint hearings were held by the House of Commons and the Senate. The committee heard from Canadians from all walks of life. The cross-section of Canadians who testified was impressive and included academic authorities, constitutional lawyers, current and former practitioners of inter-govermental and constitutional negotiations, representatives of the aboriginal peoples, representatives of women's groups, human rights specialists and individual Canadians. The committee heard from these people and synthesized their diverse views on the Accord. The committee's unanimous recommendation was that the Accord should be adopted without amendment.

I would like to comment on some of the remarks made by witnesses who appeared before the committee, because many groups did not support the acceptance of the Accord. Generally, however, such groups did not support the Accord either because they felt that they had not been included in it or because they had lobbied for additional amendments which did not come at this time.

These concerns are valid and, indeed, I think all Members should take time to consider them. However, any cultural groups who do not feel that they can turn to the Constitution as a document which represents their interests have overlooked one thing. They assume that because they are not explicitly mentioned in this Accord that they are not part of the Constitution. They forget that the Accord is part of a much larger document, one which recognizes our multicultural heritage and instructs the courts to interpret the Charter accordingly.

Any group which does not support the Accord because it accomplishes less than they seek have overlooked the fact that the constitutional process is not complete. Settlement with our aboriginal peoples, reform of the Upper House, and inclusion of our territories as full provinces are now goals which can be discussed with some hope of resolution. Until we had passed this hurdle, any talk of such things was hindered by the fact that the Constitution itself, the document we would amend, was not itself complete.

If there is anything that can be said about the Canadian constitutional process, it is that we do not conceive our amendments in haste. It is also true that we attempt to address one or a few issues at a time. We have addressed the stated first priority of all of our provincial leaders. Now, with Quebec's participation, we can begin to address the issues that have been so important to the West for so long.

Senate reform is one such issue. Under our current system the Governor General, on the advice of the Government of the day, exercises the discretion of appointing Senators. Those selected must fulfil only the geographical and other qualifications for appointment. Until we can develop an Upper House which more carefully examines important regional considerations, candidates for senatorship will be referred through provincial lists. With the Meech Lake Accord we have Senate reform not only affirmed as a national imperative, but it is the first item on the agenda of a series of First Ministers' Conferences.

Those who would argue that Senate reform is inhibited by this Accord have the onus of demonstrating how Senate reform could have ever taken place without this Accord and without Quebec. We have already seen how difficult it was to secure amendments and additional considerations with the failure of the conference dealing with aboriginal rights. An amending formula designed for 10 provinces works badly when only nine are there. I do not see the fundamental differences that would make Senate reform possible where other efforts have failed.

We must remember that under circumstances other than those made possible by this Accord, the First Ministers' discussions on Senate reform might never have taken place. We might never have had the opportunity to make our views known on an issue so close to our hearts. More important, for the first time in Canadian history all Governments are talking about Senate reform because westerners demanded that it be considered. Alberta has also long demanded that the provincial and federal Governments work together to address specific regional economic problems and opportunities. This has been done in this Accord.

Also long overdue is an effort to ensure an administration of federal programs acceptable to each province. One level of Government cannot legislate in respect of matters over which another has exclusive legislative authority. However, the Government of Canada funds many programs in exclusive provincial jurisdiction. Some are direct grants and others are through transfer payments. With this Accord, if a province chooses to provide its own program compatible with national objectives, it can receive compensating funds.

I and many other westerners are hopeful that this Accord will be a basis for reconciliation of all parts of the country. We hope the welcome hand and sense of importance given to the Province of Quebec in writing the final page of this chapter of our constitutional development will be extended to other provinces who, though they may be legally a part of the country, do not always feel they are treated fairly within it.

In closing, I would like to share a quotation which summarizes this improvement to our fundamental laws. Lord Tweedsmuir, speaking in the 1930s, said:

> Law—should be regarded as an elastic tissue which clothes the growing body. That tissue, that garment, must fit exactly. If it is too tight, it will split, and you will have revolution and lawlessness, as we have seen at various times in our history when the law was allowed to become a strait-waistcoat. If it is too loose, it will trip us up and impede our movements. Law, therefore, should not be too far behind or too ahead of the growth of society, but should coincide as nearly as possible with that growth.

The Meech Lake Accord is a plan to alter the garment to fit a new and reconciled Canada. I might add that it is a garment that I and all Canadians can be proud to wear.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, I have a brief question for the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) whose interesting speech, coming from a Member from Alberta, prompts an inquiry of this nature. He must be aware of the desire of the Premier of Alberta for a Triple-E Senate. After this resolution comes into force will the Hon. Member care to tell us what is the likelihood of that becoming a reality?

Mr. Dorin: Madam Speaker, I think I referred briefly to that in my speech. Certainly I think with respect to those who suggest there could have been Senate reform without Quebec, the onus is on them to demonstrate how that could have happened. The fact is that with the adoption of this Accord and this constitutional amendment we will now put to the next matter of constitutional business the issue of Senate reform. That brings it to the top of the national agenda. It will be discussed within a year. That gives the hope we can achieve an elected Senate.

A Triple-E Senate means a lot of things to a lot of people. I am not sure it has been adequately defined. Certainly all the concepts put forward are desirable and what most Members of this House seek to achieve. We have provided an opportunity to address those issues now that we have completed this Accord.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I have not yet participated in the debate and I do not know if I will, but I would like to say that I listened to the Hon. Member's speech and, coming from Alberta as he does, I would like to doubly congratulate him. He has shown an understanding of what we have been trying to say for years and years—you can be very different and yet remain a good Canadian. His understanding of what Quebec is all about is highly refreshing. He is a new Member of Parliament and the way he has expressed himself on this issue is very refreshing. It shows an openness and understanding of what this country is all about.

Needless to say, if I have a chance to participate in the debate, as I probably will, I will certainly take some of the intelligent words he has been using to describe what we are all trying to do here.

I know it is not easy for some of my colleagues, including the one who just questioned the Hon. Member and my hon. friend and colleague from Saint Henri—Westmount. I hope some of my colleagues will understand. Yes, indeed, we went through great agony in 1982, at least some of us because not all of us voted for it, in voting for something that did not include the Province of Quebec. However, because there were certain important elements in the 1982 pact, they did so, regardless of the fact that "I am excluding myself." That was a much greater agony than that which some of my colleagues are going through now. Yet Quebecers voted for it at that time. They knew they were not voting for a perfect pact or perfect entente. Yet they did so, as some of my colleagues will do so today. It is a step, as only Canada knows how to take. Step by step by step you create a country. We are in the process of making a country and every generation is making its own effort. Surely we are not going to deny the efforts made by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) in his desire to continue building this country. I would therefore like to join with you in congratulating the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member will have the opportunity to reply when the House resumes.

It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

MARINE SAFETY

CLOSURE OF BRITISH COLUMBIA LIGHTHOUSES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on October 2 the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) said that the closure of lighthouses off the coast of British Columbia is "proper, sensible and reasonable". He went on to say, "I hate to see the closure of lighthouses, but the world changes and the world moves on".

The Minister did not say, and we have now learned from Transport Canada documents, that the Department of Transport is closing the lighthouses because, according to it, a human life is only worth $500,000 and the lighthouse keepers off the coast of British Columbia only have the potential to save one life every 16 years.

How can the Government say that the number of lives saved off the British Columbia coast does not meet bureaucratic cost-benefit standards? That is absolutely sickening and outrageous. If you could come down from your seat, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you, as a Member for British Columbia, would share that view.

If the Minister of Transport will not save the British Columbia lighthouses for their beauty, heritage, and what they do to protect our coast, I call upon him at least to keep them open to save the lives that may be lost. Sailors will always be lost at sea, but they should never be lost because the Government cannot find the money to save them and reduces the quotient of human life to a bureaucratic cost-benefit study.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BENNETT DAM VICTIMS—LAND COMPENSATION CLAIM

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, 20 years ago the water rose behind the W. A. C. Bennett Dam to form Williston Lake. Over 150 native British Columbians were flooded out of their homes at or near Fort Graham. Some of these families moved, without compensation or assistance from the federal Government, to Finley Fork and on to Fort Ware. Others moved to Ingenika, some to the Parsnip Reserve, where six homes were built without proper heat or running water, and some to McLeod Lake. In these 20 years the federal Government has done nothing to provide a home, a reserve, or compensation to those flooded out by the Bennett Dam.

The Carrier-Sekani tribal council met with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Quesnel on Sunday, July 12, 1987, to bring their plight to his attention. They have asked for three small plots of land; 300 acres at Ingenika Point, 200 acres at the mouth of the Finley River, and 1,000 acres up the Messilinka at Black Pine Lake.

In March, 1977, I wrote about this tragedy in B.C. Today. Four Prime Ministers have had this matter before them and have chosen to do nothing. The Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) has represented this area for over a decade and has done nothing.

Now is the time to act. These people are not squatters. They are the original owners and occupants of the land and are treated as beggars in their own land by Parliament. Perhaps the November showing of W-5 will help to awaken the Prime Minister to the reality of the Sekani people.

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH BUSINESS COUNCIL ON NATIONAL ISSUES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had dinner with members of the Business Council on National Issues. It is important that Canadians know which are the major companies behind the Business Council on National Issues. Amongst them are Honeywell, Bell, Ford Motor, Shell Oil, Wood Gundy, Du Pont, International Telephone and Telegraph, Sears, American Express, Bechtel Engineering, British Petroleum, Cargill, Celanese, Continental Can, Control Data, General Foods, Goodyear, IBM, Exxon, Kodak, Lloyds Bank, 3M, Merrill Lynch, Mobil Oil, Nabisco, Quaker Oats, Texaco, and Union Carbide.

The head offices of these companies are outside Canada. These companies finance the Business Council on National Issues. These are the companies which set the agenda for the Business Council on National Issues. It is no wonder then, that the Business Council on National Issues supports this so-called free trade agreement with the United States, which is a code word for this economic union.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSSIBLE INCLUSION OF AUSTRALASIAN COUNTRIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, without a doubt the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States will result in increased prosperity for both nations. Canada will thereby avoid being isolated from the world's trading blocs.

However, let us spare a thought for Australia and New Zealand, countries economically and culturally similar to our own. They could very well face isolation. Once free trade between Canada and the U.S. begins to prove its worth, maybe we could invite the Australasian countries to join also. This would be both to their and our mutual advantage.

I commend this idea for further study by the four Governments involved.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TRADE AND TARIFFS

DUMPING OF SUBSIDIZED BEEF ON CANADIAN MARKET

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the GATT administration has called the countervailing duties, which Canadian cattlemen won the right to impose last year, after the EEC had dumped more than 50 million pounds of subsidized beef on our market, a violation of existing trade rules.

• (1405)

Canadian cattlemen have been hit below the belt again. The EC argued that beef and cattle were not the same thing, and that the application should have been made by the packing plants and not the cattlemen, a pretty weak technical point, but the administration accepted it and ruled against Canada. Unless another international trade committee in Geneva later this month overturns this decision, Canada could see millions of tonnes of European subsidized beef again pouring into our country. There is still hope, as GATT reports must be approved by both sides and the EC has in the past refused to agree to some panel GATT rulings.

This ruling is most damaging to our cattle industry and Canada cannot afford to let it stand. Canada should say no, no, no, a thousand times no. It is indeed an excellent opportunity to let the world know that we vehemently oppose the heavy subsidization of agriculture carried out by the European Economic Community.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—CRITICISM OF UNITED STATES FUNDING OF CONTRA FORCES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the visit of the Nicaraguan Vice-President is an occasion for all of us to reflect on the obvious sincerity of the collective will for peace which now exists in Central America and which led to the Arias Peace Plan.

The Nicaraguan Government, for its part, has shown good faith through the reopening of La Prensa and Radio Catolica, through unilateral ceasefires in some parts of the country, and through amnesty initiatives. Some of these were either not strictly required by the peace plan or were accomplished earlier than required.

It is now time for the Reagan administration to realize that it must act for peace and drop the idea of continued funding for the Contras. If President Reagan fails to do so and decides that his will is to prevail over the collective will of Central America's political leadership, then all the world will know, as many have long suspected, that it is not freedom the Contras fight for but the stubborn and dangerous reluctance of the United States to permit people it has long dominated finally to determine their own future.

ENERGY—POLICY OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, we must respect the New Democratic Party's standing in the polls, and their newly found sartorial splendor. However, let us consider just what kind of Canada awaits us should Canadians grant them the privilege of governing.

To quote from the NDP's 1980 energy policy paper it says: "With respect to (Alberta's) claim that since ownership resides in the provinces they ought to be able to derive maximum benefit from their sale, (the NDP believes) that in energy . . . there is a national interest which overrides a 'what the market will bear' philosophy. There is little doubt that Alberta has already gained substantially from price increases".

If but that were true, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that Alberta lost $60 billion of revenue during those dark days of the Liberal-NDP National Energy Program, a lot of money that could have supported our economy during the lean years of the oil industry and helped to prevent bankruptcies.

Yesterday's newspapers featured a two-page letter signed by NDP Vice-President Bob White, which stated that one of the evils that has resulted from a so-called special relationship with the United States has been the dismantling of the National Energy Program. Some tragedy! That is the kind of bad luck that we Albertans could take any day of the week.

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH BUSINESS COUNCIL ON NATIONAL ISSUES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I stand as a Member of Parliament who only two nights ago was denied entrance into a private meeting between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the representatives of the BCNI and American people who will be running the Canadian economy.

The Prime Minister had a private briefing with some Chicago businessmen and CEO's from the BCNI. I want to say that there is not a single woman who is a representative CEO on the BCNI. Will we allow the Government to ram through a so-called free trade agreement which is nothing more than economic union, and deny Members of Parliament the opportunity to participate in the same kind of briefings that are given to businessmen from the United States? I think it is shameful.

I believe it is understandable that when the Government puts out its free trade document it has the Canadian flag in red, white, and blue because that is where we are heading as a country. The only way we will stop it is if we as a people mobilize on the streets of Canada to let the Government know that this deal will not be rammed through. The business interests will not take precedence over the working people. We will fight it right into the next election.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TIGHTENING OF BAIL AND PAROLE SYSTEM URGED

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the brutal murder of Wanda Lee Woodward of Medicine Hat has again focused attention on Canada's bail and corrections system. One suspect was on bail pending trial on a murder charge. The other was serving time for murder and escaped custody while enjoying a birthday visit to the West Edmonton Mall. This latest incident is but one of many which cause Canadians frustration and anger.

The only punishment available in this particular case will be to deny an already convicted murderer his birthday trip to the mall next year. That is not good enough. In fact it is an insult to the victim, her family and to all Canadians.

• (1410)

I am heartened to note that the Justice Committee is beginning hearings which Canadians have every right to expect will lead to a thorough overhaul of our bail, sentencing and parole provisions. Tightening up on bail and parole for violent offenders will be too late for Wanda Woodward and others. Hopefuly, reform will come in time to save other innocent lives.

FREE TRADE—STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTERS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have some remarks about free trade made by leading Canadian citizens which I would like to read into the record. They are quoted in Maclean's magazine:

> Unrestrained free trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furniture and footwear. Before we jump on the bandwagon of continentalism, we should strengthen our industrial structure so that we are more competitive.

I quote another:

> Its silly. Canada must improve relations and trade with the United States, of course. But our natural destiny is to become a global leader, not America's weak sister.

Agreeing with that, I have another quote:

> Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally.

Who said those quotes? Our present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) made the first statement. The Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) made the second statement and the third statement was made by our present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Glory to them!

POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY LEADER

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my constituents who depend on the sale of fish and forest products to the United States are astounded at the hyprocrisy of the New Democratic Party Leader (Mr.

Broadbent). The Hon. Member for Oshawa is against the removal of tariffs that are impinging on our freedom to sell fish and forest products into the United States. At the same time he supports the Auto Pact which gives his constituents in Oshawa secure access to the U.S. automobile markets. A double standard, Mr. Speaker?

The NDP Leader is also against foreign investment, so he says, but does he tell the thousands of people in his riding, who work for the big bad multinational General Motors, that he wants GM kicked out of Canada? You bet he does not. We are tired of the hyprocrisy of the New Democratic Party.

Nova Scotians are entitled to the benefits of freer trade with the United States. Those benefits are enjoyed by auto workers in Oshawa. If free trade is good enough for Oshawa, it should be good enough for Atlantic Canada. We need to trade our products, our fish, our pulp and paper, to keep our plants open, and we intend to trade them.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF WORKERS' RETRAINING PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, this Conservative Government is again attacking our senior citizens, especially those who are still working.

After having tried to de-index the Old Age Security pension, after having denied single, separated or divorced people the benefit of spouse allowances, after having cut unemployment insurance benefits paid to older workers, this Conservative Government has announced, through its Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), that it had eliminated the so-called Workers' Retraining Program, which was actually a pre-retirement scheme. Since August of last year, the Government has cut this program which was available, within designated areas, to 85 per cent of the older workers employed in the textile and footwear industries, and 85 per cent of them were Quebecers.

Since August, the Government has negotiated with the provincial authorities a new but less generous program; the Minister responsible for Income Security has indicated in the National Assembly that he could not agree with what the federal Government had done, claiming that "it should have maintained the former program". Now, because the Government has eliminated this program, 400 working men and women in Canada are on welfare.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge all Conservative Members to stand up, defend older workers, and ask the Government to re-establish the WRP, a program which made pre-retirement possible for older workers.

PHARMACEUTICAL PRODUCTS

BILL C-22—POSITION OF FEDERAL LIBERALS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): This coming weekend, Mr. Speaker, the federal Liberals will be having an economic conference in Montreal. The Montreal community should ask those federal Liberals why, in their caucus meetings with their leader, they supported the Senate's position against the Patent Act; why they prevent Montreal from getting 1,300 new jobs; why they stop pharmaceutical companies involved in research and development from investing $700 million in Montreal; and why they oppose two unanimous decisions of the Quebec National Assembly which is in favour of the Patent Act?

Why do the Quebec federal Liberal Members, most of whom represent Montreal ridings, oppose what would be good for Montreal?

The Liberal Leader's Quebec deputy, a former Minister of Finance in a Quebec Government, will have to tell Montrealers why, as his Leader's Quebec deputy, he is unable to convince his federal colleagues and deliver to Ottawa the clear message from the Quebec National Assembly, the Quebec Government, and the Quebec Premier.

FISHING INDUSTRY—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian fishermen and the fishing industry have been neglected in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) trade deal with President Reagan. Our fishing communities could be devastated by the omnibus Trade Bill now before the U.S. Congress.

As Hon. Members know, in the groundfish countervail case of March, 1986, the U.S. Department of Commerce ruled that seasonal UIC benefits for fishermen were not a subsidy. However, the proposed U.S. Trade Bill would drastically change these laws and, in future countervail actions, the UI Program could be defined as a subsidy.

There will be a line-up of American fishing lobbyists with countervail petitions. The consequences would be absolutely frightening.

Imagine if you will, Mr. Speaker, the impact of a 15 per cent duty on our fish exports. Why did the Government fail to get protection from this American legislation which could be passed before the free trade agreement even takes effect?

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S POSITION ON CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to hear the comments made by some of our colleagues in the New Democratic Party, comments as they refer to the free trade arrangement with the United States. They want to return to the good old days. They do not want foreign investment in Canada, they say. They want a return to FIRA. Yet, of course, they are quite happy to approve of $2 billion of foreign investment in the riding of Oshawa.

Here is what The Globe and Mail reported this morning:

Mr. Winegard: I am quoting, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Keeper: Have some respect for the rules of the House.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member perhaps could be more careful in the reference to a person. I know it is a quote and sometimes in those cases, if it is not creating a disturbance, the Chair might let it go. However, it was creating a disturbance.

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, with any luck the whole thing will create a disturbance.

> —of the NDP) stoutly oppose Canada's free trade arrangement with the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Winegard: How do they reconcile their bitter opposition to Ottawa's positive policy on foreign investment with their own dependence on the same fact, expressed by a highly emotional defence of the Auto Pact as is? Why is foreign investment so good for auto workers in Ontario especially, and so threatening for the rest of the country?

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EXPORTS OF U.S. SUBSIDIZED GRAIN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, six times yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that American actions to harm Canadian farmers by stealing our traditional grain markets abroad do not violate the Government's trade agreement. Then he added twice that they may violate the spirit of the agreement, but that that was not the same thing at all.

I want to refer the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the final paragraph of the agreement signed between the two countries, which states:

> Accordingly, both Parties understand the need to exercise their discretion in the period prior to entry into force so as not to jeopardize the approval process or undermine the spirit and mutual benefits of the Free Trade Agreement.

That is an absolute categorical contradiction of what the Secretary of State for External Affairs told the House yesterday. The official document states in its final paragraph that any breach of the spirit of the agreement pending the final signature is a breach of the agreement itself.

Why did the Minister mislead the House of Commons? Why did he not admit that the Americans have broken this agreement signed between his Government and the Government of the United States?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not mislead the House of Commons. I welcome the late blooming interest of the Leader of the Opposition in the situation of Canadian farmers.

He would know—he might be able to find a farmer in his caucus or, if he cannot, he might be able to find a farmer somewhere in the country who supports him—that the Export Enhancement Program has been threatening Canadian agriculture for some time. We are fighting it.

As a matter of fact there has been no new action taken. The story which was widely quoted yesterday in the House was somewhat misleading. There has been no new action taken under the Export Enhancement Program of the United States.

Nonetheless, I intend to make use of the record of debate in yesterday's Hansard in my conversations on Saturday with Secretary Shultz to indicate to him how much we oppose—

An Hon. Member: We?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —we, Canada, oppose the application of the Export Enhancement Program and how much we expect that the United States will not seek to use this kind of measure to seek traditional Canadian markets.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When the Minister is speaking with the Secretary of State of the United States, he should use the questions in yesterday's debate and not his answers.

[Translation]

POSSIBILITY FOR UNITED STATES TO BYPASS AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have the impression that no member of this Government read the agreement with the United States before it was signed or has read it since.

I shall therefore address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will he now admit that the United States has violated not only the spirit of the agreement, but also its letter by threatening unfairly Canadian grain sales in other countries, and will he now tell us what is the use of having such an agreement if the United States can break it whenever they like without being penalized?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have just replied to this question in English, but in the bilingual spirit of our country, I am willing to reply also in French since the question has just been repeated by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

There has been no violation of the agreement, but I believe that it is very important, if we want to protect the interests of Canadian farmers, that we express our concern to the American officials about the constant use of a program which has long threatened our markets.

[English]

In so far as his suggestion is concerned that I quote both the questions and the answers in the House, he would be surprised to know how many times we have quoted his statements in the House of Commons to Americans and others around the world, causing disquiet as to the alternatives which exist in this country.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State should recognize that his slick answers do not carry in the House and that they look even worse when we read them the next morning in Hansard.

EXTENT OF OBLIGATIONS—REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE SCRAPPED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the paragraph which I cited has as its heading "Standstill". In other words, there is to be a standstill agreement between the United States and Canada during the further drafting and further negotiation of the definition of "subsidy" so as not to prejudice the spirit or intent of the agreement.

Some standstill agreement! The Government stands still why the Americans steal our markets.

We asked for a standstill agreement during the negotiation of this agreement. That was supported by the then Premier of British Columbia. We had lumber and potash taken away from us. The Americans took advantage of us despite the negotiations and throughout the negotiations. Even after the standstill we are having markets taken from us.

I want to refer the Minister to the paragraph in the agreement entitled "Extent of Obligations". It reads:

> The Parties to this Agreement shall ensure that all necessary measures are taken in order to give effect to its provisions, including their observance,—

It has not taken the United States long to prove how much that paragraph really means. I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs and his colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister, if the United States takes these two paragraphs as seriously as it appears to be taking them, namely, not at all, why doesn't the Minister scrap the agreement because the United States is not living up to the spirit of it?

• (1425)

Mr. Gustafson: We have a Government that says it will sell our grain.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is that Canada's markets have been lost. As I have indicated to him already in this House, that is false. His premise is false and his question is consequently irrelevant.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs and it is supplementary to the answer that he has just given. If the Minister is telling us now that this whole activity on the part of the Americans is not in breach of the spirit of the agreement or the agreement—and we believe it is in both cases—how can he reconcile that with his own statement of yesterday when he said:

> I don't think it's consistent with the spirit of the understandings entered into and I'll make that point to him.

Is it unfair to quote him using his own words? Can the Minister tell us which version is correct, today's or yesterday's version?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Both, Mr. Speaker, and they are consistent.

QUERY CONCERNING CANADA-UNITED STATES CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I have a supplementary question for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. In today's latest propaganda piece that we got in our office entitled "Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement Overview" it says:

> The two Governments have, therefore, agreed to consult more closely with each other; to take account of each other's export interests when using export subsidies on sales to third markets—

Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us whether he was consulted pursuant to this paragraph in his own document that he sent to us today? If he has not been consulted, is that a breach of the agreement, or will he change his mind about that tomorrow?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for the third time there have been no new sales. There is no new American program. There is, nonetheless an outstanding American program, the Export Enhancement Program, known to many of us, which we have been fighting and which creates a potential threat to the traditional markets of Canadian grain farmers.

As a matter of fact because of the excellence of Canadian grain farmers and the effectiveness of the Canadian Wheat Board we have not lost any of those markets. Indeed, we have increased our proportion and our share. Nonetheless, that threat is there. We have opposed it before. We will continue to oppose it. As I said in response to his Leader earlier today, I intend to make use of the lively debate that a misunderstanding of the American position, as reported in the newspapers, caused in this House to help make the point that all Canadians, I believe, want to be made when I meet the Secretary of State. I will be trying to have Canadian farmers removed from the threat of the Export Enhancement Program which has been in place for the last couple of years.

UNITED STATES EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which won't surprise the Minister on the same subject. He has just told the House that the Americans have not obtained new sales. Of course, what he did not say is that they have been spending $1.5 billion in the last couple of years for the existing program. They are using that program to go after new sales that are Canadian sales now, and it is that to which the Canadian farmer objected last year and objects to now. That is the point.

The Minister said that the current program in the United States, the Export Enhancement Program, is not in violation of the agreement. Given what the agreement says on page 35 in the last clause, will the Minister please just tell us in straightforward language why it does not violate the agreement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Leader of the New Democratic Party has been, but the Export Enhancement Program has been in place for the last couple of years. It is still in place and we have been fighting it.

EFFECT OF PROGRAM ON AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I really find it consoling that the Minister has told the self-evident truth. We know that. We know that the Prime Minister made a commitment in the context of the free trade talks to get rid of those programs. Some Canadians, including Canadian farmers, thought the agreement signed by the Government got rid of those programs.

Again, is the Minister telling Canadian farmers that the existing Export Enhancement Program, already having committed $1.5 billion in the past year with substantial increases coming, is fully consistent with the agreement? The Americans, with this agreement, will be able to continue to go after Canadian markets to the detriment of Canadian farmers. Is that what he is saying?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In a word, no, Mr. Speaker, that is not what I am saying. I am saying that the Export Enhancement Program has been in place for some time. It has been a threat to Canadian farmers. We have been protesting the application of that program. The threat has not in fact reduced the proportion of world markets available to Canadian farmers because of the effectiveness of our marketing agencies and the Canadian Wheat Board as well as the excellence of Canadian agriculture. Nonetheless, this is a measure we want to have removed. We have tried to get it removed before, and the fact that there is now a trade agreement initialled between Canada and the United States will not cause us to stop our efforts to try to get this Export Enhancement Program removed.

As I understand the position of the New Democratic Party, they are saying that because an old subsidy program of the United States continues to threaten our farmers, we should abandon the new trade agreement. That would be as sensible as saying that because we are still being threatened by the agricultural subsidies of France, Britain and Germany, we should get out of GATT.

UNITED STATES FARM SUBSIDIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it has been a long time since I have heard such a phoney argument. We have just heard from the Minister, not from this side of the House, that this wonderful new agreement he has signed will not protect Canadian agriculture one bit. That is what the Minister has admitted.

Instead of this hocus-pocus that he is trying to pass on to the people of Canada and to farmers in particular, will the Minister kindly get to his feet and say to the people of Canada that this agreement will not stop the American Government from massively subsidizing its farmers who are in direct competition with Canadian farmers? Is he prepared to admit that, and if he is, why did he ever agree to such an absurd agreement?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, let me if I can in very simple terms explain to the Leader of the New Democratic Party what in fact we are talking about. We are talking about what was formerly known when it was first introduced as the BICEP, the Bonus Incentive Commodity Export Program. That program came in in June of 1985. Subsequently, its name was changed to the Export Enhancement Program in December of 1985. That program has been in effect for a little over two years.

The Hon. Member talks about taking away Canadian markets. In the first year of the program's operation, Canada sold over five million tonnes to the Soviet Union. The United States sold 153,000. The same year in China—

Mr. Broadbent: Because we had to force our price down. What about the prices?

Mr. Mayer: I am trying to give the Hon. Member a substantive answer. In the first year of its operation, Canada sold over 2.5 million tonnes to China. The United States sold about .5 million tonnes. We sold five times as much.

This Government has been very supportive of the Canadian Wheat Board. That is why we ran a $200 million deficit in the pool accounts. It was to support the Canadian Wheat Board in its efforts to sell grain on behalf of Canadian farmers. We have been very successful in maintaining our markets, and in fact in increasing our markets in spite of the Export Enhancement Program.

FINANCE

DEMANDS OF SEPT-ÎLES CITIZENS CONCERNING EXEMPTION FOR INVESTMENT CREDIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He will know that, in 1984, the electoral slogan of his Prime Minister in Manicouagan was: "Hope has a name: Brian Mulroney." We also know that there now is a new slogan in Sept-Îles: "Despair has a name: Brian Mulroney." My question to the Minister of Finance is this: After three years of hearing the representation of the social, economic and political interests in Sept-Îles to obtain an exemption for the investment tax credit, can the Minister of Finance now tell us whether he will be able to give an answer to the people of Sept-Îles before they take to the streets on October 31?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Government has been reviewing the economic situation and outlook in the North Shore and that has been a matter of ongoing concern of my Department as well as of the Department of my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology. We are looking at options here, and when it is appropriate to make an announcement, one will be made.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Three years ago he gave the same answer to the people of Sept-Îles. They want more than just concern, they want action. What I want to ask the Minister is this: Doesn't he think that after three years of studies and reviews and promises by the Minister's predecessor at Regional Industrial Expansion, of promises by the Prime Minister's office and promises by just about everybody, that it is time to do something? Is it going to be another case of waiting until people feel they have to demonstrate and take to the streets to make you see reason?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member it was one of the first municipalities I visited after taking over my present duties.

Mr. Malépart: Stop those visits and do something!

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I have met with local authorities—

Mr. Malépart: It is exactly the same in Montreal East!

Mr. de Cotret: Do you want to hear the answer or keep on shouting? Mr. Speaker, my Department, as it promised the Setp-Îles business community and community groups, is preparing a plan for the development of the North Shore, including Sept-Îles. And as my colleague, the Minister of Finance, just said, the investment tax credit is being discussed as part of this plan which sould be released very shortly.

UNITED STATES EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A few minutes ago in the House the Minister said that for the last two years the Canadian Government has been protesting the U.S. Export Enhancement Program. That program spent some $1.5 billion subsidizing American exports in the last two years. Despite that protest, the Americans, starting next month, will be spending $2.5 billion, more than tripling the budget, to subsidize their exports in the next year. Is that how effective this Government's protests are? Is the Government telling us that, within the free trade agreement, the United States can spend some $2.5 billion to subsidize exports to many of these countries that are traditional Canadian customers?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, we have been saying consistently, and if the Hon. Member wants to be fair, he will know, that the Export Enhancement Program is not a new program. To say it again, it is one that has not worked in terms of increasing over-all sales. It has driven down prices and we have been very explicit in saying that we think it is a counterproductive program in terms of helping world grain prices. We not only have protested that at every level possible, we have also taken the protest to a wider context which includes the Europeans.

Again, if the Hon. Member wants to be fair about it and put it into context, he will know that the Europeans are guiltier than the Americans of subsidizing exports. We have taken that action on behalf of Canadian farmers and just recently tabled our proposal for improving those kinds of situations at the GATT.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the more they protest the program, the more money the Americans put into it. The Minister of State for External Affairs said there was a misunderstanding about the American initiatives. Since July 30 the Americans have started some new programs in places like Colombia, Brazil, Iraq, the Philippines, Bangladesh, China and Sri Lanka, to subsidize the export of grain. Many of these countries are traditional Canadian markets. How can the Government sign an agreement when under its very nose, at that very time, the Americans were taking new initiatives in many countries that are very important to Canada? Is there no shame whatsoever in this Government? How can there be this massive sell-out to Ronald Reagan? Why doesn't the Minister stand up for Canada for a change?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, quite simply, the Hon. Member is a total phoney. He comes from a farming community. He is not a farmer himself, but he represents farmers or at least he purports to represent them. He will know, if he talks to them once in a while, that the producers he represents exported a record amount of wheat last year. He will also know, if he talks to them, that we are further ahead in moving grain out of his constituency this year than we were last year. Surely he should give us some credit because in a very difficult time we have not backed away from the market.

• (1440)

We said we are in the market to stay. We have matched the Americans in sales and beat them in quality and in our reliability as a supplier. That is why we have increased sales to our customers around the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL PROGRAMS—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS FOR FISHERMEN

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, when answering a question by the Hon. Member for Egmont, the Minister said that social programs such as unemployment insurance had not been included in the free trade talks. An omnibus bill now before the U.S. Congress may change the definition of a subsidy so that unemployment insurance would be considered a subsidy to the fisheries industry. Why didn't the Minister take advantage of the free trade talks to protect the fisheries from this new U.S. legislation that may brand unemployment insurance as a subsidy to the industry? Where is that protection? Fishermen are very concerned, and the answer the Minister gave yesterday was certainly not reassuring.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me again make it quite clear that social programs are not—repeat, not—a part of the agreement tabled in the House October 5. That is very clear.

As to the omnibus Trade Bill, let me also be clear that this Government has been fighting various parts of that Bill. It has not been passed and there is a very real question about whether it will be. I repeat what I said to his colleague the other day. What he has been saying about the results of that Bill is speculative. I think he should accept that position.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Minister now admits there is no exemption. I wonder why the Minister is trying to spread a false sense of security throughout the fisheries industry, and especially among fishermen. Why did the Minister leave our Unemployment Insurance Program open to attack by the new U.S. bill? Is the Government trying to do what it failed to achieve with the Forget Commission?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me again make it very clear. Unemployment insurance and social programs are not a part of the free trade agreement. Period. Full stop.

WHEAT EXPORTS—SELLING PRICE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Last March during the free trade debate the Prime Minister said his Government's goal was straightforward. He said it was to help Canadian farmers by increasing the predictability and security of access for exports by the farm sector.

Why is the Government signing a deal which leaves the Canadian farmer at the mercy of the U.S. Treasury? If you give away our wheat, we are bound to keep our markets. I want an answer which takes into consideration the price to and income of farmers, not the volume.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a good farmer and knows there are more exporters of wheat than just Canada and the United States. He will know Canada has about 20 per cent of the world market for wheat and the U.S. about 40 per cent. If you do the simple arithmetic that means 40 per cent of the market is accounted for by others.

The Hon. Member's Leader laughs. Maybe he is not aware of some of these points. I am trying to explain it to him as simply as I can.

Mr. Jelinek: He understands only subsidies to General Motors in Oshawa.

Mr. Crosbie: The General Motors ombudsman.

Mr. Broadbent: Keep it up, Charlie. It is very good.

Mr. Mayer: Let me make this point. Canadian farmers are very appreciative of the fact that for a change we have a Prime Minister who is interested in agriculture and is willing to take their problems to the highest councils in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROTECTION OF FARMERS' INCOME

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, despite the considerable amount of gobbledegook in that answer, nothing in the agreement secures any market for Canadian farmers, particularly our traditional markets. Why was the farmers' income not protected in this agreement?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, let me say again that the Export Enhancement Program is not new. It has not come into effect just since the beginning of October. Despite all the figures the NDP quotes, I am not so sure they are accurate with respect to the amount of money being spent.

The Hon. Member talks about gobbledegook. This Government is committed to spending many billions of dollars on agriculture, an increase of over 350 per cent in the first three years of this Government. I think Canadian farmers will greatly resent the fact that the Hon. Member refers to that kind of support as gobbledegook.

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSSIBLE CONSEQUENCE

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. He will recall that I had a brief conversation with him immediately after the announcement of the free trade agreement. A 1964 protocol clarified certain terms of the Columbia River Treaty, one of which was that Canada would sell into the U.S. its entitlement to downstream benefits for a period of 30 years. Since those benefits will be up for renegotiation in about seven years, and since my constituency contains within its present and future boundaries the bulk of the Columbia River Treaty territory, will the Minister inform my constituents and the House what impact, if any, the energy sector of the free trade agreement will have on the Columbia River Treaty and Kootenay West?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the trade agreement initialled with the United States will have absolutely no impact upon the Columbia River Treaty—

Mr. Fulton: They will be sold down the river.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —or upon any subsequent negotiations. Those are the facts. They may not be part of the briefing that the NDP received from Bob White and Shirley Carr but those are the facts.

The consequence that may occur is that this agreement may help B.C. Hydro gain access to transmission lines of the Bonneville Power Authority which are now denied it. This would increase access by B.C. Hydro to U.S. markets.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DID NOT SUCCEED IN PROTECTING EMPLOYEES' JOBS IN CLOTHING, FOOTWEAR, AND TEXTILE INDUSTRIES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, the defender of Canada's financial community, and it concerns the Free Trade Agreement he negociated with the Americans. I am pleased to see that on page 15 of the Agreement, the Government managed to protect jobs in the beer industry and in bottling plants in Quebec, whose products are sold in our grocery stores.

However, I met representatives of Canada's 150,000 workers in the textile, footwear and clothing industry, and they would like to know why you let those jobs go. Why couldn't you protect between 130,000 and 150,000 workers in the textile, footwear and clothing industry, the same way you did workers in the beer industry?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had talked to a broad range of people in that industry he would find there are a number of people who see great opportunities for the clothing and textile industry in the U.S. market. They, as do others in a wide range of industries across the country, see this as a market growing from 25 million people to 260 million people. There will be great opportunities for expanding the business base and therefore expanding employment and job opportunities here in Canada.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHY TEXTILE EMPLOYEES ARE NOT PROTECTED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the answer given by the Minister of Finance does not surprise me, because we don't move in the same circles. His friends are the bosses in our major industries. In the textile industry, only one company out of 5,000 will make more money. The 4,999 others will have to close down. These workers who will lose their jobs want to know why you did not protect them instead of just protecting the rich and the more fortunate. Why didn't you protect all workers in the textile industry under this Agreement?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I could answer the Hon. Member's question directly. There are many small businesses in my riding, and among the many businesses that congratulated us on the Free Trade Agreement, two textile companies employing less than 100 employees told us quite frankly that the Agreement meant their survival, not just during the next few years but during the next 10, 20 or 30 years, and a chance to expand their markets internationally.

UNITED STATES EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On page 14 the agreement says that each party has agreed to take into account the export interests of the other party. Page 35 talks about the stand-still arrangement saying that each party will not undermine the spirit of this agreement.

If that is the case, how is it possible that the Americans can spend $2.5 billion on the Export Enhancement Program in the upcoming year when they have spent only $1.5 billion over the last two years? Does that not break not only the spirit but the letter of this agreement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for the sixth or seventh time today, there has been no new program introduced by the United States. The Export Enhancement Program has been around for some time. The Member of Parliament for Yorkton—Melville is now suggesting that it has been expanded. Figures have already been mentioned on the floor of the House of Commons showing how ineffective that program has been in the past.

With regard to traditional Canadian markets we believe that that program, like a number of other subsidies practised by the United States, Europe, and other countries, is detrimental to fair trade in agriculture. That is why we played such a major role in the Cairns Group. That is why we played such a major role in negotiations under the GATT on agriculture. That is why I will be raising the question of the Export Enhancement Program with Secretary Shultz again on Saturday, as we have done before. We intend to continue to keep up that pressure.

I am afraid that the New Democrats will have to go back to their script-writers in the Canadian Labour Congress for another farm issue because this one will not wash.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament from western Canada I can say that no one believes that gobbledegook any more. This question was not written in Oshawa or Windsor. It was written in western Canada.

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES PROGRAM ON CANADIAN FARMERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister explain how he can say that the American Export Enhancement Program has been ineffective when, year after year, it has driven down the price of our exports? It has hurt our farmers and farm families. What does this agreement mean when the lives of Canadian farmers are being destroyed?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it has been abundantly clear since this debate began that, while the voice may come from Churchill, Manitoba, the directions are coming from the Canadian Labour Congress wherever New Democratic Party policy is concerned.

FISHING INDUSTRY—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Can the Minister outline to the House the tariffs that are now restricting the export of Canadian fish products to the United States and how the recently signed trade agreement with the United States will impact on our fishing industry?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, 70 per cent of Atlantic Canada's exports of fish go to the U.S. At the present time they are subject to a tariff of up to 15 per cent depending upon how much value-added there is. Over the next five years those tariffs will be removed under the free trade agreement which will help the 55,000 fishermen in Canada whose jobs depend on processing and catching the fish that is exported to the United States. This will give Canada a competitive edge over Norway, Denmark, and our other competition.

Gordon Cummings of National Sea Products and Victor Young of Fishery Products International have hailed the agreement. It is a great step forward and will lead to great growth in the manufacturing of value-added products here in Canada. Those who have faith and confidence in Canada greet the free trade agreement with a great deal of excitement and hope for the future.

BILL C-22—SENATE COMMITTEE'S REPORT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Senate Committee examining Bill C-22 has reluctantly accepted the principle of the Government's Bill C-22. However, it has have asked that included in the legislation be a mere confirmation of the Minister's statements made across the country with regard to job guarantees, expenditures on research and development, and consumer protection.

Why does the Minister refuse to include in the legislation those guarantees which he preaches across the country? Why is he afraid of including that in the legislation?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the legislation which was passed by this House twice is a compromise, a balance between conflicting interests, which will ensure greatly enhanced research and development and health research while protecting the consumers.

Ms. Copps: Put it in the legislation.

Mr. Andre: The amendments proposed by a committee of the Senate which are not yet adopted by the Senate do not improve the Bill in my view, and in that of the House, after much debate here and discussion in committee.

The question becomes—

Ms. Copps: Job guarantees.

Mr. Andre: —whether in fact it is the judgment of the non-elected Liberal Senators down the hall or, as the Member's Leader pointed out, in the final analysis a situation in which the will of the House of Commons must prevail. That is the question.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the same Minister. It is very clear that the will of the Government is to accept the word of the multinational corporations bypassing the word of provincial Governments, consumers, and senior citizens.

If the Minister believes in the truthfulness of the statements he made across the country, why is he now afraid to place his word in legislation? What is he afraid of? Why does he not put up or shut up?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had kept his ears open and his mouth shut while this was being debated in committee he would know the answer to those questions.

Built into the legislation are safety valves, if you will, of review by Government and review by Parliament at appropriate times which will allow—

Ms. Copps: Put it in the law.

Mr. Andre: It is in the law. If the Hon. Member for Hamilton East would keep her ears open and mouth shut, she might learn something.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is about a very serious matter which is being discussed today. It is really a matter of trust and I would appreciate a frank response to the question I am about to ask the Hon. Minister.

We are concerned about the possible serious losses to farm families in western Canada caused by the prices which farmers are able to get on the foreign markets for their grain. Does the Minister concur with an expert who recently said:

> Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive.

Does he agree with that?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that would depend upon what the rest of the sentence says, who uttered it, when it was said, and whether this is a Kamloops translation of some other statement.

It is certainly the view of the Government that bilateral negotiations alone are not enough. That is why the Government has been proceeding very vigorously, not only in negotiations with our largest trading partner which has protectionist forces which pose a real and immediate threat to Canada now, but also in the GATT and in direct conversations with countries which are not now members of the GATT but can have some effect upon international trading patterns.

• (1500)

We are working to improve multilateral trade and trading situations on all fronts. We intend to continue to do that.

Mr. Riis: The quote that bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive was a quote in Maclean's magazine of June 13, 1983, by the present Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: If the Government had listened to that advice it would not be in this mess in western Canada right now on this particular deal.

EFFECT ON JOBS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would be more appropriate to quote the Secretary of State from the same article in which he states:

> —free trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost—

Was he referring to the jobs and the farms of western Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since we are in the business of trading quotes, let me quote from the New Democratic Party policy which I believe was renewed this year. It states:

> Expansion of our trade with any and all countries willing to trade on a fair and equitable basis will benefit both ourselves and them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: More, more.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It goes on to state:

> Careful planning is needed to adjust our production to the trade requirements of a fully employed economy. Tariffs are outmoded patchwork attempts to protect domestic industry; they restrict trade while giving less and less protection to the home industry.

Mr. Broadbent: Thanks, Joe. More.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Hon. Member for Windsor West.

SALE OF SUBSIDIZED U.S. WHEAT TO SOVIET UNION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I understood him to say that no new subsidized export sales of wheat had been carried out by the United States since the U.S.-Canada trade agreement had been announced.

Is it not true that on October 15, 1987, the United States announced a subsidized export sale of wheat to the Soviet Union? Will the Secretary of State explain this contradiction, or does it not show that he does not know what he is talking about?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I have been saying all day, whatever actions the United States has been carrying out, they have been carried out under the Export Enhancement Program. That is a program that we believe is unhelpful to the achievement of fair trade in agriculture. We have been opposing it. We will continue to oppose it. However, it is a program that existed before the free trade arrangement was in place between Canada and the United States. Surely that simple fact is understandable to the House Leader of the Liberal Party.

May I ask him, if he believes that the existence of the Export Enhancement Program is reason enough for us to throw out the free trade agreement, does he also believe that the existence of subsidies by the European Community is reason for us to get out of the GATT?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Secretary of State that for the time being he is still the Government and he should be able to answer the questions. He did not answer my question.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, let me give the Secretary of State for External Affairs one more chance. Why did he say earlier in the Question Period that since the signing of the U.S.-Canada trade agreement there have been no new subsidized sales of wheat by the United States when the fact is that such a sale to the Soviet Union had been announced on October 15? Does it not prove, first, that he does not know what he is talking about and, second, that he and his Government made a very poor deal with the United States that harms not only Canadian farmers but all Canadians?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt about why the Hon. Member is in opposition and why we are in government. We are in government because we are prepared to take bold decisions such as the free trade decision which will serve the interests of Canadians far into the future, while the Liberal Party is not only mired in the past, but is involved in deep tearing disputes about what part of the past it wants to embrace.

PRIVILEGE

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from a statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as reported at page 10184 of Hansard. He made a commitment to me that he would pass along a copy or transcript of a speech that he was about to give to a select group of businessmen. That promise was made in the House during Question Period.

Subsequent attempts to receive such a transcript from the Prime Minister's Office have not been successful. We have been informed by the Prime Minister's Office that no transcript will be forthcoming and no copy of the actual speech will be forthcoming.

I suggest that my privileges as a Member of Parliament have been breached because the House cannot function if the Prime Minister is permitted to mislead the House and Members during Question Period. If you find that there is a prima facie case of breach of privilege by the Prime Minister in his refusal to provide me with a transcript of his private meeting with these businessmen from Canada and the United States, I would be prepared to move the appropriate motion.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much whether that is a question of privilege. However, I will look into that matter and get back to the Member.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Government House Leader to give us the customary statement about the business which the Government intends to call for the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, we will continue to debate the Meech Lake Accord resolution today. It is my understanding that the debate will possibly continue into tomorrow. There is an expectation that it will end tomorrow and the back-up legislation for Friday will be Bill C-53.

It is our understanding that the vote on the Meech Lake Accord will be at 6 p.m. on Monday. I would also advise the House that Monday will be an allotted day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn on the Constitution Amendment, 1987 (p. 9422)

And the amendments of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 9585), Mr. Broadbent (p. 9586), Mr. Caccia (p. 9644), and Mr. Allmand (p. 9644).

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, there were five minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin). The Hon. Member for Edmonton West is not here at the moment. Continuing debate.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege to be able to stand in the House of Commons and speak in this debate. In my view, this Meech Lake Accord is so flawed that in good conscience I cannot vote for it. As well, the process of agreement and approval of the Accord has been rushed and is incredibly undemocratic.

I am well aware that my Leader and my caucus have taken a different position, which I respect deeply.

On September 6, 1939, J.S. Woodsworth, the first Leader of the CCF, the forerunner of the NDP, rose in this House in dissent from his Party and had this to say:

> The position of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation will be stated at the earliest possible opportunity by one of my colleagues. I say frankly, that with part of that policy I heartily agree, with some portions of it, I cannot agree. Yet I was never so proud to belong to the group with which I am associated.

Grace MacInnis, former Member for Vancouver—Kingsway, in her book about her father, J.S. Woodsworth, had this to say:

> Here was a man who recognized the right to make the decision for the group, yet who insisted on the right of the minority, even a minority of one, to express its own opinion.

So, in my dissent I am following a democratic tradition in my Party.

In my constituency, some 5,000 kilometres from Ottawa, there is a sizeable body of opinion, both within and beyond the New Democratic Party, and in the rest of British Columbia, and indeed Alberta and throughout Canada, which shares my views. I also believe that the Accord of Meech Lake goes well beyond the resolution of the New Democratic Party Convention of 1987 to which I am bound.

Let me begin by saying that I too believe it is important to get the signature of the Quebec Government on the Canadian Constitution. However, it is not sufficient a priority that nothing else matters. The real priority is a good and sound Constitution for Canada.

• (1510)

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), wanted a deal at any price, and he got one at a great price to the future of Canada. It was not a negotiation. It was in fact a power grab by the provinces. I want to analyse very briefly the result and then go on to some general matters.

First, the Senate of Canada within 14 years will become a provincially controlled body through the power given to the premiers to name the Senators. Either this will be an ineffective process, the new amendment, by the federal Government holding out until it gets its own person on the list, or it will be effective, in which case the premiers will come to love the patronage. It will then be impossible to reform the place or to abolish it.

Eugene Forsey, one of Canada's foremost constitutional experts, and a great Canadian, wrote to me and I want to quote from his letter:

> Also, the "temporary" arrangements for the Senate which can be changed only by unanimous consent of the provinces, is, in fact, all the Senate reform we are likely to get. It will give us a much stronger Senate than the present one, as it will have all the present Senate's legal powers, notably an absolute veto over all legislation, and it will have a political clout the present Senate does not possess. It may mean a shift of power from the House of Commons to the Senate. Is this what we want?

The Supreme Court of Canada, which is like a constitutional referee between the Ottawa Government and the provinces, becomes in effect appointed by one of the parties, the provinces. Remember, this is the court that will get new terms to interpret as a result of the Meech Lake Accord such as a "distinct society" as well as old matters such as the extent of the Charter of Rights and the full definition of native rights we put into the 1982 Constitution.

People in British Columbia are waiting to see what sort of names Premier Vander Zalm will put forward. Will they be of the same calibre of the late Chief Justice Bora Laskin or British Columbia's own present judge, Mr. Justice William McIntyre? I believe not. I cannot find a practising lawyer in Canada, not to mention the Canadian Bar Association itself, that likes this provision of the Constitution. This is not the participation in selection of the Supreme Court by the provinces of which the Bar Association spoke, nor what the New Democratic Party policy had in mind. This is the provinces in effect selecting the court.

The Meech Lake Accord constitutionally entrenches a First Ministers' conference, so again power is shifted away from Parliament, the provincial legislatures and the people, to a new super level of government; the 10 provincial barons and the board chairman, the Prime Minister.

Northern Canadians are discriminated against. They will not get a voice in the Supreme Court. They will not appoint Senators. They cannot form new provinces without unanimous permission; of whom? Of the other provinces. There is now a new amending formula requiring unanimous approval of all provinces for reform to federal institutions such as the House, Senate and Supreme Court. Surely this is too rigid.

Many Members in this debate have suggested we could get onto further reform after we hold our noses and pass the Meech Lake Accord. Do they really understand how rigid and permanent it is? All provinces will now indeed have a veto. Women's equality rights, so hard fought for in 1982, have been put in danger. "A distinct society", put in the interpretation as part of the Constitution, is not in the preamble, as we proposed in the NDP congress in Montreal. This could override the Charter of Rights.

Once again we have shut out the aboriginal peoples. Any move to native self-government in the Constitution will now require unanimity of those very provinces that resist the struggles of the native people, or interpretation by a provincially appointed court, the Supreme Court. Let us not lie to Canada's native people and tell them, as Clause 16 of the Meech Lake Accord does, that nothing here affects them. Five years of conferences for the natives, and no luck. Two days for the Premiers and they carve up Canada. Is it any wonder that Canada's original, aboriginal leaders feel a particular sense of betrayal? Jim Sinclair the Métis leader from Saskatchewan correctly predicted last March when he said, "You will look after your own".

Where is the constitutional recognition of the multicultural nature of Canada? Not in the Meech Lake Accord. Provincial power over immigration could result in a checkerboard of immigration policies across Canada and it is being put into the Constitution after little debate and less thought. In the end this could emerge as a sleeper, one of the most radical and controversial changes of them all.

The Accord says that any province can opt out of an amendment, transferring power from the provinces to Parliament and be compensated by Ottawa. I believe this could make such a future power shift in the national interests, for example, broadening the federal authority over financial institutions, less likely.

Of even greater concern is the new power of the provinces to opt out of future federal spending programs in areas of provincial jurisdiction with compensation. Many experts and commentators have said, as well as all the material in the committee, that such legislation as the Canada Health Act, which forced the provinces to stop extra billing by doctors, could not have passed if this Accord had been in effect at the time.

Michael Walker of the Fraser Institute of British Columbia, no friend of the working people, writes gloatingly:

> This sort of decentralization is apparently directly anticipated in the Accord and is meant to deal with the coming policy regarding child care.

The federal Government would say it wanted to start a national system of child care. Several provinces would say they intended to opt out. The federal Government would then negotiate with them to try to persuade them to stay in. Thus the provinces would get a big share in setting the national objectives of child care, or we could see a hodgepodge of provincial social programs. Either way, Parliament and the federal Government again lose power and the provinces and the courts gain. And who will determine the national objectives? Really, the courts. And who will effectively appoint the Supreme Court? The provinces.

Members should read carefully the brief of the National Association of Poverty Organizations published in April. I used to be a store-front lawyer and acted for this group. There is a group of poor people, and these poor people, especially in my Province of British Columbia, have looked to the federal Government for fairness and help in national social programs. They distrusted the provinces which often take the money and spend it on things other than helping poor people. The poor people know that. They know that instinctively.

Again, the federal Government, in my view, could lose the capacity to deal with effective social programs. This has been given to Canadians as a sort of divine edict, to use Senator Forsey's words, by 11 men who met for two days. Parliamentary hearings were held in Ottawa at the height of the summer, in August, and we are told the whole thing is so fragile, for some unexplained reason, the Government would accept no amendments.

The Prime Minister in his book Where I Stand said that there should be no sessions behind closed doors. He said that Canadians should see and judge those who have been elected to serve them and determine if in the interest of a more generous country they have really answered an urgent and irresistible call to grandeur. If it was true then, why was it not true last summer?

Surely constitutions, which are to last for a long time, should not be made in such haste. Madam Solange Chaput-Roland, in an eloquent plea to the Joint Parliamentary Committee said, "say yes to Quebec". In reality, of course, Quebec is already legally part of the 1982 Constitution and, or course, has been part of the Canadian Confederation since 1867. But I ask you, Madam Speaker, and I do not believe this has been raised in the debate, have the other provinces really said "yes" to Quebec? Or have they just grabbed at power over federal institutions and ran away with those powers?

The provinces received substantial increases in power without a corresponding commitment to uphold the real distinctiveness of Canada, which is a bilingual and bicultural country built on the foundation of the aboriginal people and lately complemented by a multicultural presence. That is Canada. People ask is it not wonderful that Mr. Vander Zalm and Mr. Getty and others have moved a long way from opposing French on corn flake boxes? They are now prepared to recognize Quebec as a distinct society. I say, Madam Speaker, that leopards do not change their spots so easily. I believe the opposite is true. Francophones outside of Quebec got nothing, no commitment from the provinces to include their rights. Because of the principle of duality recognized in the Meech Lake Accord, the Vander Zalms can say to the francophones outside of Quebec, "Go home. Go back to Quebec because it is French in Quebec and English in the rest of Canada". That is a tragedy for Canada.

I favour the recognition of Quebec as a distinct society in order to protect the language and culture of Quebec. But the Meech Lake Accord goes beyond Quebec's distinctiveness. This is the essence of the Accord for me. The price paid was to give all the provinces rights in federal powers and institutions: the Senate, the courts, immigration, this broadly-based premiers' conference, the opting out and the spending power. We have weakened the federal Government which, according to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, also has a role in protecting Quebec's distinct society and the French fact in Canada. That role is not just the role of the National Assembly in Quebec; it is also the role of the Parliament of Canada. That was the vision of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

• (1520)

I have heard that we will have harmony now in federal-provincial relations. I would like to point out that conflict in federal-provincial relations is inevitable in our system and can, if it is handled right, be creative. It was not just Trudeau who struggled with the provinces. We can blame it on the personality of the former Prime Minister, as I have heard many people do. But we should be honest. Sir John A. Macdonald, Laurier, King, Pearson and Diefenbaker, all those Prime Ministers, as well as a future Prime Minister, will have to deal with the same thing. It is in the nature of our system.

Meech Lake in fact rejects the basic assumptions of the 1982 Constitution, as well as the 20-year policy of bilingualism and biculturalism. That is why it goes to the fundamentals of Canadian society.

We should think about it in human terms. I have a constituent who I spent some time with last week who is a friend and who has AIDS. He said to me last week, "You know, I am lucky". "You're lucky", I said, "Why are you lucky?" He said, "Because I live here. I have medicare. I have some social acceptance. We have a tolerant society. I have civil liberties. I have a pension from the federal Government which is going to give me a disability pension. I am lucky. I live in the best country in the world if I have to have this horrible disease".

Socialists and social democrats, should look at the whole recent emerging pattern and add to it the decentralization of the Meech Lake Accord to the anti-labour legislation such as Bill 19 in British Columbia, the recent Alberta labour laws, privatization and deregulation, the cruel new immigration laws and, finally, free trade with its north and south continental outlook, especially in energy and in investment. They will see that the Canada that we know, when we look at the totality, the Canada that we love, the Canada that we fought for, the Canada that we worked so hard to create, is being destroyed. Through the Meech Lake Accord and these other Acts we are creating a different sort of Canada, a less humane Canada. That is why this debate is so important.

I believe working Canadians, if they really had the time to analyse and understand the Meech Lake Accord, would reject it because it is not their vision of Canada. I put it another way. I said, look, it is not Team Alberta with Wayne Gretzky or Team Quebec with Mario Lemieux that beat Team Russia, it was Team Canada. This is what working Canadians, ordinary Canadians, feel about this country. Canada is not a country of 11 equal governments or a community of communities as this Accord implies.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: That vision was rejected in 1982. There is a greater vision, a greater loyalty to a larger entity—Canada. There is a dream of a bilingual Canada where French and English can share this country, or any part of it, anywhere, as equals. This is the dream of Laurier and his tolerant society. It is in the writings of Henri Bourassa. It is the dream of Tommy Douglas who in his speeches said, "But the whole basis of national unity is founded on the principle of equal treatment for all and special privileges for none". That is our dream.

Wake up Canadians. Wake up. Do not be robbed of this vision by some greedy premiers or some wheeling and dealing Prime Minister. Canadians know that. There has been a conspiracy of silence, I have to say, by the other political Parties. Let us be honest with ourselves and fair to working Canadians and their families. In my view they reject a radically decentralized federal Government. They share a greater loyalty to Canada than the sum of the loyalties toward the provinces. That is the flaw in the Meech Lake Accord and that is why it has to be rejected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest and emotion to what the Hon. Member has just said. I think he made, perhaps unconsciously, a very real point. He said that this is not just Team Alberta, not just Team Quebec, that it is Team Canada.

I listened earlier to what the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) said. I publicly congratulate him here. As a Newfoundlander he came to a decision, he wrestled with a decision, but he wrestled with a decision in favour of Canada. That is what every single Member of Parliament in his or her seat is doing right now and will stand up in his or her place to vote for on Monday at six o'clock. That is Canada. That is what the Prime Minister was saying. The speech the Prime Minister made in the House yesterday will ring down through history, through generations of school children who will know the importance of what he was saying.

I would ask the Hon. Member this. As the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe pointed out, democracy is not tidy; democracy is not perfect. There is no document that has ever come before the House that cannot be amended in some way, that cannot be fine tuned in some way to make it a little more perfect than the imperfect nature of democracy. But I would ask the Hon. Member, and I ask him most sincerely, this. In the interests of a better and stronger Canada, which is obviously supported by the great majority of all Members of Parliament from all sides of the House of Commons, when push comes to shove does he not believe in one Canada, not two solitudes, not three Canadas, not a multitude of Canadas? Does he not believe in one Canada? Will he therefore not have the guts to stand up in his place in this House at six o'clock on Monday evening and vote for Canada?

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I believe passionately in one Canada. That is why I gave this speech. I believe that people should feel at home, whether they are French or English, anywhere in Canada. I do not think this is one Canada. When I heard the Prime Minister end his speech by talking about one Canada I did not understand it. This is not Diefenbaker's view of Canada, or Trudeau's view of Canada, or Macdonald's or Laurier's view of Canada—

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): It is the view of all Prime Ministers of Canada.

Mr. Waddell: I do not think it is. I think it is kind of a wheeling-dealing view of Canada. I must say with respect. I think it is a view of Canada, which I tried to say in my speech, which is fundamentally flawed because it allows what I call an abnegation of the federal power. It allows the provinces into the very federal institutions where there should be regional representation, perhaps in the Senate, the court, and so on, but it should not hand the provinces this kind of power. I think that will be worse for Canada. It will lead to a Canada that, as I said in my speech, is radically different.

I am not any more courageous than any other Member for speaking out. I do not have the answers either. I am no guru on this particular matter. I respect what the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe said. I respect the Members of my Party who hold their views just as deeply and passionately as I hold mine, as the Hon. Member from Hamilton does, and I know him.

One of the things that bothers me is when the Hon. Member asks me about amendments. I ask him if he will stand up to support amendments when they come forward. I do not think he will. I think he will not because there is a kind of thinking that we have to get this thing through, although it is imperfect, and Member after Member has said that it is flawed and imperfect. I said in my speech that it will be hard to change the darn thing. It will be hard to amend it because of the rigidity in it and because of giving the plums to these provincial premiers who are not going to give them up easily. Those are my concerns.

I know the Hon. Member is putting his views as passionately as I am putting mine and that he believes in them as deeply. I guess we fundamentally disagree on this matter.

• (1530)

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, in his lucid and impassioned speech, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) made reference to the possibility that the Accord would lead to a less humane Canada.

He mentioned that he had experience in the anti-poverty movement. It would be very helpful to have from him some elaboration of the thought or notion which he raised in his speech as to what would be the social implication. I suppose he was referring to the spending power of Canada if and when the agreement were to be adopted.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, there was a notion advanced by some Hon. Members of the House that this would in fact increase federal power because spending power is in the Constitution. My reply to that is no, because it is in the common law and it would have been adopted by the courts if it had been litigated. I do not think we can argue that it is increasing federal power.

However, we can argue that there is a possibility that it may be decreasing federal power and putting future social programs in jeopardy. Jack London, a distinguished Dean of Law at the University of Western Ontario, made that very point. Also, academics have made the point that in fact we may get a hodgepodge of social programs or social programs which cannot be implemented, and that the national objective, as I said in my speech, could be determined by the provinces.

What I was trying to say as a lawyer was that people feel that instinctively. In bad times they look to the federal Government as the equalizer. Western provinces do that too; that is the irony. They look to the federal Government as the kind of over-all thing which will bring equality to Canadians. When they are in need, they know that the federal Government is there. I think they trust the federal Government more than they trust their own particular Governments. Quebecers also look to the federal Government. That is the point I was trying to make.

I gave the example of the new child care program. We will have to see how it develops. However we are putting in jeopardy some social programs, which will hurt poor people and play into a Conservative agenda.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). We discussed the matter briefly in Vancouver, and I know that he went through a tough time making the decision he has made. I admire him for standing up for what he believes in.

However, I want to understand his thought processes. In 1982 he and his Party supported the Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. At the time it was brought into the House and voted upon, we left out a third of the country. Today we are bringing that third into the Constitution—

Mr. Caccia: We didn't leave it out. Lévesque was in power. Have you forgotten?

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I am speaking to the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway, not to the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who continually speaks from his seat.

I have a serious question for the Hon. Member. I understand the flaws and I understand his concerns. However, how could the Hon. Member have supported and voted for a constitutional agreement which left out a third of the country and this time, when we are bringing that third in,—and let us put aside the warts—he can rise and vote against it? I just want to know his thought processes.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, it is an excellent question. The Hon. Member and I always fight and heckle, but we both respect each other.

I remind the Hon. Member that I believe he voted for the 1982 Constitution as did I. Obviously at the time we felt that it was worth doing. Maybe he voted against it.

Mr. McDermid: I voted for it, but I am voting this time too.

Mr. Waddell: In any event his Party voted for it. However, he should be careful with his choice of words. He said that it "left out a third of the country". I was in Quebec this morning where I am living now. Business was going on. People were living. People were paying their taxes, those who cannot afford wealthy tax lawyers. Everything was happening normally in Quebec.

We must remember that it was a separatist Government in Quebec. Did he really expect them to sign? I do not think anyone expected René Lévesque to sign. We keep forgetting that there were Quebec Members of Parliament in the House and a great majority of them supported it.

Mr. McDermid: And they are supporting it now.

Mr. Waddell: All right, they are supporting it now. However, it was not entirely without Quebec, and I would say that Quebec was legally bound.

It is a good question because it is one of the keys. I suspect—I cannot speak for them; they speak for themselves—that that is the determining factor for many of my colleagues and friends. They are voting for it because they want Quebec in.

The Hon. Member says that I should put aside the warts. I cannot put aside the warts. The warts are too big. To me the whole thing is a flawed vision of Canada. I have been presented with a Hobson's choice on whether or not I want Quebec in.

Of course I want Quebec in. I said that in my speech. However, I think we could have Quebec in at a far lower price than this. I think we could have Quebec in without giving the provinces' right to the federal Government. I think we could have Quebec in without fundamentally changing the constitutional nature of Canada as Meech Lake has done, and that is why I am opposed to Meech Lake.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would not want this opportunity to pass without a member of the Hon. Member's own Party having a chance to say that we appreciated and wished to congratulate the Hon. Member on his well put speech—

Mr. Prud'homme: That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair does not see how that is a point of order. An Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party had the floor for the better part of half an hour. I allowed other Members to question him and to make comments.

I will now recognize another Hon. Member on debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, I am taking part in this debate as it is drawing to a close. I think I may even be the last speaker for the Party I represent in the House. We all know—

Mr. Gauthier: And not the least!

Mr. Prud'homme: I thank my Whip, and I take this opportunity I have, Madam Speaker—

[English]

Since today is the birthday of my esteemed Whip, I hope every Hon. Member will join with me in applauding him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: He is young and going strong.

I prefer to start with a smile because I have seen so many people experiencing so much pain as if Meech Lake were to be the end of this great country of ours.

I cannot do otherwise but remember the great courage of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson. He very kindly invited me to accompany him to Winnipeg in 1964 where he spoke to the Royal Canadian Legion. The legionnaires had expected another kind of speech than the one he delivered that day. He told them that the time had come to have in Canada a truly distinctive Canadian flag. He was booed by the entire crowd, with the exception of Mrs. Pearson, myself, Mary Macdonald, his able secretary, and a few legionnaires.

I would say that 98 per cent of them received his speech very badly. According to these people, and if we listened attentively to the speeches in the House of Commons then, the Canadian flag was to be the end of Canada. It was going to destroy the country. It was going to divide the country forever. I say to you, Madam Speaker, and to these young Pages—because when I give speeches I always talk about the Canada of tomorrow—is there anybody in this country today who would dare say, "Let's revert back and abolish the Canadian flag"? The flag we have today is not the flag that Mr. Pearson proposed. Instead of two red bands there were two blue bands representing Canada's two oceans. The white portion represented the North. Instead of one maple leaf it had three maple leaves, as we see here in our Chamber. As we look up, the maple leaves are there. We can see maple leaves in the Senate Chamber on its ceiling. People seem not to have eyes when they talk about Canada. But there were three maple leaves to represent the three groups of Canada.

Today, Canada is stronger than ever. To believe that the Meech Lake Accord as some colleagues of mine and others have said, will destroy this country is to have no faith in Canadians. Canadians are much stronger.

• (1540)

Mr. Fennell: I agree.

Mr. Prud'homme: The Chief Government Whip has just said that he agreed. He knows, as I know, that all across this land of ours people will always stand up for one Canada, but a different Canada, a different kind of Canada.

I have seen some of my colleagues agonizing over the Meech Lake Accord because there is a clause that talks about Quebec being a distinct society. This morning, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin), spoke. I congratulated him. He has a better understanding of what Quebec is all about than do many colleagues from other parts of Canada and from other Parties. We are putting into the phrase that Quebec is a distinct society only what is known. I speak now in English, but you know that I come from Quebec. You see from the way I express myself that we really are a distinct society, but I am trying to convey these feelings in English and I will do so in French later on. I see colleagues who are passionately, passionately disturbed as though a distinct society were to lead some Quebecers someday to say, "We will use the term 'distinct society' in order to put up our flag at the United Nations". If that were to be, then I would denounce those words. I would fight again if some people thought that by using the words "distinct society" they could create a new country in the United Nations. There can be only one voice for Canada to speak internationally, and that is Ottawa's. But Canada can have that flexibility and that understanding. The clause is there to take away the fear about disappearing. I know it is difficult for many of my colleagues to understand that feeling. Some Quebecers have no other country. Some came from France 300 years ago and claimed Canada to be their country.

They want to be at ease in Canada, but they fear. They are not chicken. They are not afraid. They fear because there is an ocean of people speaking only English surrounding them. They want some kind of assurance. If they are given that assurance, they will become better federalists and they will become better Canadians. That is what I see in this clause.

This morning a dissident voice in the New Democratic Party said, "I will vote against the Meech Lake Accord." Maybe there will be two or three. Maybe some will be absent.

Mr. Keeper: I hope.

Mr. Prud'homme: A colleague says he hopes. In any event, the truth will come out. But let me not be distracted. In 1982 the Liberals from Quebec voted yes for the agreement, but very reluctantly. Why did they do so? Why did the majority of us do so in 1982? We did it because it was a step forward again in the Canadianization of our institution. It was to be the end of having to go to Great Britain. We had to amend our Constitution. It was a step in that direction. We were caught between two sentiments. One to say "Yes, I am voting for it". But my province did not vote for the agreement. As a federal Member, a proud Canadian, I voted for it because it was a step like designating my Canadian flag, like designating my national anthem, a step toward being myself, a true Canadian. That is why we said we would vote yes in 1982.

There was another step forward, the Charter of Rights. In our minds the question was whether to vote against that step because Quebec did not or because there were two great new elements. The first was that we had to go to Great Britain to beg its Government to amend our Constitution. The second was the need to have a Charter of Rights. We had to evaluate whether that was more important than the fact that Quebec did not vote yes to the agreement.

The majority of Liberals from Quebec had to make that choice. Yes, it was agonizing I can tell you, Madam Speaker. Yes, we went through long debates. But the agony that most of my colleagues went through then was much greater than the agony that some people are going through today. We had to vote against our own province which did not participate. What helped was a Government there which did not believe in federalism. That made our task easier, I must say. But we paid a price for it. We were accused of being traitors to our own people. It is not the kind of feeling that you like to get every day, but we did vote for it because we believed it was in the best interests of Canada.

As you know, Madam Speaker, my Party has introduced amendments. We do not believe that by voting for that this agreement is perfection or that it is the greatest thing on earth. In no way it is, but it is a step forward, Madam Speaker. We would prefer to have these amendments included.

[Translation]

Who am I, me, Marcel Prud'homme, Canadien-français, Marcel Prud'homme—

[English]

—a Canadian of French-speaking background. Not Marcel Prud'homme, French Canadian because I am not a French Canadian. When will the rest of Canada learn that I am a Canadien-français, not French Canadian? I did not translate that into English. In French we all call ourselves Canadiens-français. That has been translated by French Canadians so the emphasis seems to be more on the word "French" than "Canadian" in English. While in French we willingly say Canadiens-français—so I did not translate. But who am I, Marcel Prud'homme, Canadien-français to deny to the native people their own distinctiveness? After all, my ancestors took this land away from the natives. The natives should be recognized. That is why our amendments make sense. I will repeat it in French so people cannot say that we switched something in English that cannot be said in French.

[Translation]

Allow me to ask the question in my own words: Who are we, as French-speaking Canadians living in Quebec, to deny our native people the same recognition that we demand for ourselves? And that is why, even if the Liberal amendment is not included, we wish, together with Quebec, once fully integrated into the Constitutional Act, they will support the efforts made by our First Ministers, including the Prime Minister of Canada, whoever he may be, whether he is the present incumbent or my own leader, when he calls a federal provincial conference on native rights. Then, you will have one major province that will generously support our natives and make it possible for them to obtain their rights just as we are seeking our own. I regret, therefore, that our amendment is not there. I just cannot understand that people do not realize it would be important. It is not included.

• (1550)

[English]

Mr. Trudeau himself was a great Prime Minister whom I served loyally from 1968 to 1984, even though I came to the House of Commons before him in 1964. Even he did not get all of what he wanted in 1982. He did not get all of what he wanted in 1970 in Victoria. That would have solved the problem. He played a great part. He did what Mr. Pearson did with the Canadian flag and the Charter of Rights. He did what Mr. Louis St. Laurent did when he abolished the last appeal at the Privy Council in London. That was not anti-British or anti-English, that was pro-Canadian.

This is always that sentiment which I do not understand. As soon as we are pro-Canadian, we look as if we were anti-French or anti-British. I am neither because I respect both. Today, I am proud to rise in the House of Commons under a British parliamentary system. I have always defended that system as being one of the best political systems.

My colleague, the Chairman of the IPU, knows of the feeling I express here today, the same feeling I express around the world when I accompany him to meetings of the Interparliamentary Union. I believe in the British parliamentary system. It is part of my Canadian heritage, but I believe also in la culture française. That is why I feel richer. I have the best from these two great cultures.

People are afraid that the provinces will be consulted on the appointment of judges to the Supreme Court. But, Madam Speaker, I ask you, what is Canada about? Canada did not start with the federal Government. Canada started because of the wish of the provinces to have a superior Government to speak internationally.

I do not despise provincial bureaucrats. I am not scared of provincial Governments. Let's call a spade a spade. I know that some people despise the provincialists. It is as if we were like "father knows best" here in Ottawa and we knew what is good for every part of Canada.

I believe very strongly that Canada is a modern, unique country with provinces which like to be important and with a federal Government that must be important, but there is only one voice that speaks for all of Canada outside Canada. I am not afraid of provincial participation, because that is how Canada was built. It was built because of the wishes of the provinces to have a federal Government and not vice versa.

I am not afraid of the provinces participating. How scandalous would it be if the provinces were to recommend someone for the Supreme Court? Would they recommend dummies because they are the provinces? They will have to be responsible for the people they recommend. They will have to recommend prominent people in their own provinces. I am not afraid of that kind of participation.

I wish we had written this Accord. As my Leader said, if he had been the Prime Minister, he would have negotiated differently. Of course, he is not the Prime Minister. He will go alone Monday night at the time of the vote to give his agreement and I will vote with him.

I would prefer it to be different. I do not like to see the agony some of my colleagues are going through, and I believe them to be totally, absolutely sincere. I am not calling them names or saying they are brighter. I am no less a Canadian, and I say this in English, because I will vote for the Accord than those who will vote against it because they think the federal Government is in danger.

I did not come here to reduce the power of the federal Government. If I had wanted to have a provincial career, I would have stuck with provincial politics and tried to make a career there, but I believe in Ottawa. I believe that we can have that ability, that understanding, that comprehension, between the federal and the provincial Governments together.

We have put forward amendments that will respect the multicultural aspect of Canada. Again, this is what is so unique about this country. These provisions will come. I repeat, for the attention of some of my colleagues, who can deny the immense contribution that has been made by new Canadians?

We must understand the evolution of Canada. A land that was not ours was taken by the French settlers, who were then defeated by the British settlers. That is the evolution of Canada. It was a French colony and then a British colony. We had no flag of our own, no national anthem of our own, no Supreme Court of our own. This is the beauty of this country. Without killing each other, without fighting each other, we went through a certain evolution.

I want to commend greatly one of my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), and my two colleagues—

[Translation]

Francophones from outside Quebec have their champions, and I mean first the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier) who is celebrating his birthday today and the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). I can appreciate in all friendship the concern expressed by my colleague from New Brunswick about the survival of the Acadian people. If he feels it is in jeopardy, I share his concern. I can understand what it means.

But I must say—

[English]

I would like to repeat in English that I am a passionate believer in a multicultural Canada as it is well defined. Multiculturalism does not mean that there is a division, but one brings to Canada one's heritage to show that Canada is more civilized than any country in the world. We are bilingual not because French and English are nicer than Italian and Portuguese, but because we have French and English for historical reasons. Because we are more civilized than others, we do not want others to lose their cultures. We think it is enriching for the country.

We will be better Canadians and better internationalists if we give respect to people who do not look like us, who do not have the same colour, language or religion. We think this respect is of immense benefit to Canada. Multiculturalism should be part of the Accord, but it will come, as will native rights. It will come, it must come.

• (1600)

Please, let us not believe for a moment that by giving our assent to this we are giving in to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I am not giving in to anyone. If we want to be partisan, I will say that my Leader spoke first. He opened the door to depoliticization. My friend is smiling, but it is true. My Leader in his great interview in Le Devoir, opened the door to allow the Prime Minister to say: "I can go forward because this man has depoliticized the debate". That is a contribution that we should remember.

[Translation]

Well, Madam Speaker, thank you for—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the Hon. Member have unanimous consent to conclude his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for asking my colleagues. I will conclude, for I do not like to overtax the Hon. Members' patience. But I want to tell them that all those amendments we are hoping for, but which will not pass, will be part of the future. What is not done today will be done tomorrow. Another Prime Minister will have an opportunity to make his contribution to Canadianization and protection. And I would like to repeat that Mr. Trudeau in 1982 was not the happiest man in the world because he did not get all he had set out for, but he gets credit for that gesture of Canadianization. He severed that last British link to allow for constitutional amendments. He gave us a Charter of Rights. That was a tremendous move forward. But Quebec was not there.

An Hon. Member: Yes, but Quebec was there legally.

Mr. Prud'homme: There is a colleague there who says Quebec was there legally.

[English]

I do not want Quebec to be in legally only. It does not lead to a constructive participation in the Canadian affair.

[Translation]

In that way, we believe, we can be wrong. I do not question my colleagues' sincerity. There are three here in my own Party who do not share my views. I do not want to have an acrimonious, a passionate debate. I am passionate, that is normal, my country is involved. It is natural that I should be passionate, but I do not want them to believe I am insulting them by having a different view. If it were still possible to convince them that a vote for this will not be such a disaster, if I could still convince them somewhat, maybe our amendments will be put to the vote, we will probably vote for them, and if the amendments do not pass, of course we could wait and abstain from voting. Hon. Members will decide on Monday. But I want to thank you and I want to add that I also would have preferred arriving at something different, but in human matters, one cannot always have everything one would hope for. But I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that when in casting my vote on this issue, I take to heart and keep in mind the feelings voiced by my colleagues on multiculturalism. I say so in French, because I am one of the great supporters, because I understand what multiculturalism means. I do so in Quebec, where this is not as popular as you might think.

[English]

I do not do that in English now. I am doing it in French. I believe in it.

[Translation]

I support multiculturalism. I believe in provincial participation. I believe above all that we should have that conference one of these days and make our first citizens, those who were here, Madam Speaker, before you, and I, and even before your ancestors and mine came here to America. Well, I would hope that sometime in the future we complete what we are now doing, as Mr. Trudeau tried to complete what was done by others before him. This is how we built this country. This is how we built Canada, everyone contributing in his time what was possible.

In conclusion, I would like to thank you, and I would like to say I am concluding on the same thought which I expressed at the beginning. If you think it was easy to have a Canadian flag, you should have been here. I was, as a young MP—I listened to all the speeches for months. People said it would be the end of this country. So I ask you to be confident, to have confidence in Canadians and confidence in this country, the same confidence I had when I travelled all over western Canada to convince westerners that a basically Canadian flag would not be the end of Canada. So perhaps by Monday, if we discuss these issues a little more, we may be able to convince some of our colleagues to take a different view. However, I can assure them, especially those in my own Party, that they have my full and unqualified respect, whatever their decision will be. They are just as good Canadians as I am.

[English]

I want them to believe that I am as good a Canadian as they are even though we may vote differently next Monday.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Clinch: Madam Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member. I have a short question. The Hon. Member knows that I represent an Acadian constituency in New Brunswick. There is now some concern in New Brunswick about the new Liberal leader, the Premier elect Mr. McKenna, who has expressed some reservations about the Meech Lake Accord. I have before me a copy of an interview Mr. McKenna gave to Maclean's magazine, in which he said that he had some concerns about women's rights, the rights of anglophones in Quebec and the rights of francophones outside Quebec. I listened to the Hon. Member's comments, and I have a great deal of respect for what he said in the House today. If he had a chance to speak directly to the Premier elect of New Brunswick, Mr. McKenna, about his concerns—and what about the Acadians in New Brunswick, in the Acadian peninsula I represent, what should we tell them today?

Mr. Prud'homme: I thank the Hon. Member. I know Mr. McKenna personally, and I discussed these issues with Mr. McKenna. He has some concerns and so do I. I am concerned about the fact that our native people are unhappy. They are not included in the Meech Lake-Langevin Accord. That is how things turned out. I don't want to second-guess Mr. McKenna but I think he will advise his fellow Premiers of his reservations. I hope Mr. McKenna will not only inform his colleagues of his concerns, as the Hon. Member just said, but will also try and persuade them to make some changes at the next federal-provincial conference, to complete what is being done today. For instance, I am sure Mr. McKenna, like myself and many of us at the federal level—I am sure the Hon. Member would like to see his Party add the word "promote" to the "preserve" clause, or at least the federal Government could easily persuade the provinces that——not only to preserve the two languages but to promote them. Why would the provinces disagree with that? That would be another step forward. That is my kind of Canada and that would be the kind of Canada of Mr. McKenna. I am sure that at the least he will want to be assured that we will tackle his rightful apprehensions.

[English]

• (1610)

We must congratulate New Brunswick because it is the only province which has accepted—

[Translation]

—the rights entrenched in the Charter and the only province to declare itself officially bilingual.

[English]

Let us look at what is happening in New Brunswick now. The social climate is much different now than it was 25 years ago when I arrived here as a Member. If I could choose what I were to be in life I would identify very much with the Acadians. Although I am from Quebec, I have always been extremely active in La Fédération des francophones hors Québec whose champion has always been the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). My colleague is a young Member and could join and become the champion of——the rights of Acadians.

[Translation]

[English]

I say that in English especially—

[Translation]

—because it must not have been easy for Acadians to survive and to make themselves understood in New Brunswick. Yet, my colleague is now here as an Acadian and he must recognize that the situation has improved because Mr. Robichaud and Mr. Hatfield took some action. The fact that Mr. Hatfield has just suffered a crushing defeat does not mean that we should not pay him the homage he deserves for having understood the Acadians. All this is cumulative. I wish to share these thoughts with you, my hon. colleague and friend from New Brunswick, who are a proud Acadian, because it makes me feel a bit more Canadian myself to see people outside Quebec who share certain things with me, such as my colleagues for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) and yourself.

This is why Quebecers should not be narrow-minded. We have to understand that there are a million others like ourselves outside Quebec, and we have to show sympathy and understanding for these people and be able to help them. Quebecers have not done much in the past to help French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec. I can see that the Government Whip seems surprised that I would be so frank, especially in French. This is virtual political suicide. However, it is true. We, Quebec francophones, have not been that generous in helping French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec to survive. They fought proudly without much assistance, and the federal Government should now accept not only to protect them, but also to promote their development. Perhaps Mr. McKenna could agree quickly with his provincial colleagues to try to convince the Government to add the concept of promotion to that of protection in this clause. The Prime Minister would agree to this and so would I, and it could be approved very easily and quickly in this House, but it seems that this is not possible at this stage. In that case, let us get on with this stage and begin immediately to work on the next one which will be to try to reconcile my friends about multiculturalism and about the matter of women, who also feel that they do not have the protection they should have.

In any case—

[English]

It is all very beautiful and generous for women of Canada from outside of Quebec to believe that they should protect their little sisters in Quebec. Well, their little sisters in Quebec are way ahead and do not need any protection. They are strong and can defend themselves. I dare the provincial Government to touch the rights of the women of Quebec. I can assure you that no provincial Government in the Province of Quebec would dare to tamper with the rights of women in Quebec. Let us call a spade and spade in both languages. I thank the Member for his question.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments is nearly over. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) had already indicated his wish to speak. I am at the disposal of the House. If the House wants us to continue questions and comments for a few minutes, I am quite willing to proceed in that way. I shall recognize the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) and come back to the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Clinch) afterwards.

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, I would like to commend my colleague for his passionate speech, notwithstanding the fact that I disagree with him fundamentally on whether the Meech Lake Accord is supportable in its present form.

The Member said something a moment ago with regard to women in Quebec. It is not only the women in Quebec who ought to be concerned about the Meech Lake Accord. Women throughout Canada ought to be concerned that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is being adversely affected by the Meech Lake Accord. I know the Hon. Member disagrees with me on that point.

I know that the Member is passionate when he speaks about multiculturalism. He understands what multiculturalism is all about. However, I am afraid that there is a general misunderstanding in Canada about what multiculturalism is.

Would the Hon. Member not agree that multiculturalism means more than only those who have come to Canada from other countries? It means more than people who have origins other than English and French. Would he not agree that multiculturalism includes anglophones and francophones in Canada and people from all parts of the world rather than being restricted only to those who are neither French nor English?

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I will not abuse the time of the House. Some day there will be a Prime Minister whose major preoccupation will be what concerns the Hon. Member. This is the subject of my life, it is the only reason I stay in Ottawa. This country is so unbelievable. It continues to be built every day. Each generation makes an imprint. Some day there will be a Prime Minister who will see that the time has come. The difficulty will be to put it in legal language.

My friend will likely be the Minister of Justice in the next Liberal Government. His preoccupation will be how to put the sentiments of multiculturalism in legal language in the Constitution. I hope to be here when that time comes, and I do not think it will be that far in the future. That will be the next gesture of government. There is no doubt in my mind that the next gesture of government should be to make the natives happy and to repair the immense damage that we have caused them in the past. I am not opposed to this at all, but it seems that now is not the time.

With regard to Mr. Trudeau, he wanted to get a lot more but took only as much as the times permitted him. I know that he was not happy, but he took what he could, knowing that someone else would finish the job, as someone else will finish the job begun today using our amendments as the beginning of their thinking for future amendments and future conferences.

Mr. Clinch: Madam Speaker, with a great deal of respect, the Hon. Member has expressed concerns about specific things. However, the bottom-line recommendation which the Hon. Member would make to the Premier-elect of New Brunswick is that there may be some things which can be improved in the future but that the Meech Lake Accord must be signed in the interests of Quebec and all of Canada.

• (1620)

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I am well aware of his sentiment. If I vote for it on Monday it is because I believe we should do so.

I hope the colleagues of the provincial Premier, Mr. McKenna, and the Prime Minister of my country (Mr. Mulroney), will listen to what Mr. McKenna proposes and attempts to do this eventually, sooner than later, but not necessarily at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): At this time, the Chair would like to take the opportunity to tell all Hon. Members that I feel very privileged to have been able to listen to all of the speeches that have been made throughout this debate. It is very heart-warming to know that Canada is in very good hands.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to indicate that I think it is important for the House to note that it is the fifty-eighth birthday of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I am sure all Hon. Members will join me in congratulating the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It has been done in French and English. The Chair joins with all Hon. Members in offering best wishes to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Brisco: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In acknowledging the birthday of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), since he and I were classmates at college, I believe there must be a profound error in the years attached to both of us.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

• (1630)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to the order of Thursday, October 1, 1987, the Whips of the Government and the Official Opposition have asked me to defer the vote for 48 hours. The vote is therefore deferred to six o'clock next Monday. The bells will then ring for no more than 15 minutes.

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, September 25, 1987, consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan that Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I must admit that it is somewhat of an anticlimax for me to rise after such an emotional and passionate debate as that on the Constitution. We are now discussing Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, a very important measure which has thus far given rise to a very serious debate to which I now want to make a modest contribution.

After three years and some months in power, the Conservative Government has finally brought forward for second reading a Bill on the environment.

Before this Bill was introduced, the House and the Canadian public will recall, I hope, that environmental issues had only been debated on so-called opposition days, that is on the days when the Opposition, whether the Official Liberal Opposition or the NDP, propose a debate dealing with the environment.

As we ourselves raised such issues on various occasions, I would like to recall briefly the issues on which we proposed debates in this House. We raised the issue of the budgetary restrictions at the Department of the Environment. Hon. Members will recall the many questions that we asked the Government about the cutbacks in certain services, such as the Wild Life Service and the testing done on birds' eggs to determine the level of dioxin and other toxic substances. Then, there were major negotiations on acid rain with the Americans, and we urged the Government to settle the matter as soon as possible to allow us in Canada to maintain our quality of life, our forests, our freshwater lakes, our aquatic fauna which is threatened by toxic emissions from the industrial centres and smokestacks furnaces emitting thousands of tons of toxic substances each day which then fall in the form of rain on Canada and pollute and poison our environment.

We in the Liberal Party have urged the Government to solve the problem of toxic substances dumped in the St. Clair and Niagara rivers as well as in the St. Lawrence, our largest river. I personally asked why we are still allowing the dumping of industrial toxic substances in the beautiful Ottawa River which runs not too far from here and which has been used for a long time as an open sewer by some municipalities. On opposition days, again, we have pressed the Government to support and approve international reports, to support world commissions on the environment and development so that here, in Canada, some positive steps could be taken.

You know, Madam Speaker, the disastrous record of the Conservative Government as regards toxic substances. In November, 1984, as I said earlier, the Government made cuts in the Canadian Wildlife Service, depriving it in particular of its capacity to study the impact of substances on wildlife in order to assess the effects of those products on Canadian health. In November, 1984, the Government cut funds from the Guelph Toxicological Research Centre in Ontario. The Minister of the day, who fortunately has been removed, had prevented experts from telling the truth to Canadians regarding contamination by toxic substances. The most striking example is the controversy around the contamination of the St. Clair River. The Government stopped publishing Storm Warnings, an important publication which described the movement of toxic substances through air, soil, water, all the way to our food products.

We in the opposition wanted to debate with the Government, here in the House, the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement and the need to hold public consultations on that issue, on the fact that those huge fresh water reservoirs are becoming more and more polluted by reason of carelessness and neglect.

Thus, Madam Speaker, as I said earlier, this is a very important and timely Bill. I am not an expert, an engineer nor a biologist, but a chiropractor. I made a career in that profession. I always have taken a great interest in health, and I still do. I am aware that—

Mr. Brisco: Hear!

Mr. Gauthier: I see my colleague from Kootenay West with whom I studied in 1949 and, as he said earlier, we have been working together for a long time. I remember having studied such important subjects as nutrition and toxicology, which are both matters of national concern. If I am wrong, I stand to be corrected, but the number one concern of Canadians is the quality of life and the environment. Thus, it is not only appropriate but essential that this House pass a Bill with teeth, a Bill that will give us the tools required to clean up our environment and our waters and to get the quality of life that we are all aiming for.

I would like to use this occasion to give an overview of the pollution situation especially as it affects my riding, Ottawa—Vanier. I will talk about the Ottawa River in which toxic wastes still are discharged today. Tons and tons of those substances are dumped in it every year. Sometimes, I watch the Rideau River which flows through my riding and which admittedly is no longer very beautiful to look at today because of all those waterweeds. The phosphates carried by the rain waters which wash or drain the farm lands where large amounts of fertilizers are used contribute to the growth of weeds which deprive the water of its oxygen, asphyxiate the river and cause it to die biologically.

I remember that as recently as two or three years ago, it was discovered by accident on Leeds Avenue, in my riding, that tarry substances had been buried away in the days when natural gas was made from coal. The residue had been buried in the ground. And when the time came to build roads and structures, workers suddenly came across a sticky and terribly polluting mass of coal tar, chemical products and toxic substances that had to be removed at a cost of several million dollars. The same thing happened on King Edward Avenue where a Bank of Canada building was erected on the site of the old Bank of Canada, and when they decided to renovate the building, they found, there again, toxic substances which had to be removed to clean up the environment.

All of this, Madam Speaker, is to indicate that we are quite concerned about the environment and we want powerful means to prevent not only the private sector, but also governments, from polluting. Who does not remember trial where federal Government agencies and departments, the Bank of Canada and five or six other departments and agencies were charged with having dumped—I finally have the list here—last May 12 it was. And I raised in the House the legal proceedings facing the Bank of Canada, the National Research Council, the federal Department of Transport, that of Supply and Services, which had dumped toxic products such as paint strippers, solvents, pigments, hardeners and lacquers into the Ottawa River, in my riding. When they, were brought to justice, they claimed they could not be prosecuted because that area was regulated by provincial legislation. And the judge said: Indeed, the federal level of Government is not subject to provincial environmental laws. If the private sector to which this Bill C-74 will apply . . . and the main purpose of that Bill, if I remember correctly, is to put the burden on polluters and make them pay for damages to us, Canadians, and to society.

Therefore, if the private sector is subject to that legislation, should our governments, including the Canadian Government, not also be subject to the most elementary pollution laws? It is quite normal in my view that the federal Government should be subject as everyone else to measures that prevent and deter polluters and that will chastise, and I repeat chastise the federal Government for those actions that I find absolutely unacceptable, for breaking such a fundamental law as the Environmental Protection Act.

At the time, the Minister answered in this House that the problem would disappear as soon as Bill C-74 was passed by the House. If that is true, Madam Speaker, I am pleased that finally we will have a law with teeth.

But if he had assumed his responsibilities at the time as Minister in charge of Environment, he would have told his colleagues responsible for the Bank of Canada, responsible for the agencies I have mentioned, Supply and Services and others, the National Research Council—our main research body that was polluting with removers, paints and dilutants and other toxic substances—the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) should have told those people: Do not do that, because if you do I will slap your fingers. He did not say: Stop that. No, he simply suggested: Wait, Mr. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, be patient. When the Bill is passed we will see to it that those errors are corrected.

Madam Speaker, these are incidents which took place in my constituency that I find sad and worrying.

I want to speak very briefly about the background of the Act. I know that second reading deals with the principle of a Bill. As I said earlier, the principle of Bill C-74 is to protect the environment and to protect human life and health. This is a rather large Bill that, in my opinion, entails serious responsibilities.

In doing some research about the Bill, I noted that the Act has been amended since 1981. The main concern is that it is not tough enough to allow the identification and assessment of new chemicals before they are used and released in the environment.

The objectives of the amendment, as they were then defined by Environment Canada, were the following: first, identify new chemicals in Canada, because new ones are created almost daily. Second, make it mandatory for users, manufacturers and importers of new chemicals to provide information allowing an assessment of their potentiel environmental and health effects. Third, give the Government the authority to regulate or ban dangerous chemicals.

I want to stress here that that applied not only to the production, here in Canada, of these dangerous chemicals but also to their exportation. Madam Speaker, I know we are not supposed to study the Bill clause by clause on second reading, but if I read the Bill correctly, there is no provision in it that would prevent a Canadian corporation from exporting dangerous chemicals. My colleagues will correct me in committee if I am wrong but I think I read the Bill correctly, and it would allow Canadian companies to produce toxic chemicals in Canada not for use in this country but for export.

The Minister, reacting to those concerns, made all kinds of promises. Everything would be corrected if only we were a bit patient. Madam Speaker, I can find nothing in this Bill that would help clean up the Niagara River, which is important to us, or the St. Clair River. There is nothing in there, that I know of, that would oblige anyone to clean the river up or to reduce air pollution by industry.

In December, 1986, the Minister tabled a Bill or rather a preliminary Bill which had more teeth. The second reading of the Bill was moved on June 11. It was a first step, Madam Speaker. I see that my time is almost up, but I was just starting my remarks.

I will conclude, Madam Speaker, but I am sorry I do not have more time. I would have liked to talk more on a matter of great importance for the quality of our life in Canada. This Bill should be a positive step albeit small, in the right direction. I think that we will support this Bill, but we should realize that it is not the answer to our problems. This Government should not hesitate to move as quickly as possible and show leadership. We would support more important steps in order to clean up our water and give Canadians the clean environment they are entitled to and a proper protection of their life and health against pollutants and toxic substances.

Mr. Redway: Madam Speaker, I listened, as I always do, with interest to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). He usually presents a clear and factual picture in dealing with any problem about which he is talking or to which he speaks in the House. So this time, Madam Speaker, you can imagine my surprise and my concern when I heard his comments respecting the Government's record in the area of toxic wastes.

The Hon. Member neglected to refer to the fact that within the last year there has been an agreement between the Government of Canada, the Government of the United States, the State of New York, and the Province of Ontario in respect of dealing with chemical dumps along the American side of the Niagara River, which is a major source of toxic waste flowing into the Niagara River and Lake Ontario. Under that agreement there is to be a reduction by one half of the toxic wastes flowing into the Niagara River by the year 1996.

In addition, he did not refer to the funds and efforts made by the Government this year in respect of cleaning up the tar ponds in Nova Scotia. Of course he did not refer to the funds made available and the efforts of the federal Government this year in terms of the clean-up of the Windermere Basin in Hamilton Harbour.

He failed to refer to the fact that right now there is being negotiated—or it has likely been negotiated, subject to the approval of the federal Government and the United States Government—another water quality agreement respecting the clean-up of the Great Lakes themselves.

There has been a very substantial number of steps taken in respect of these matters which the Hon. Member failed to address.

Having been given this opportunity, I am sure he would want to rise now to correct the impression that he has left and to praise and laud the Government for all the steps it has taken to date. I am sure he knows full well that this is only the beginning of efforts by a Government which has only been in office for three years.

When we have been in office for 20 years, as was the case with the former Government supported by the Hon. Member, of course we will have a record which will be some seven times to ten times as good as our record now and thousands of times better than that of the former Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) will take the next opportunity to answer the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Gauthier: I assure you, Madam Speaker, that I will.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE RAISED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)—Environmental Affairs—United States transboundary acid rain emissions/Canadian position; the Hon. Member for London—Middlesex (Mr. Clifford)—Road Safety—National safety code for trucking.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

SMOKING CONTROL ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore) moved that Bill C-209, an Act to control smoking in public buildings and facilities, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the next 20 minutes I hope to explain, first, why I introduced this Bill, a Bill which aims to control smoking in public buildings and facilities; second, why it is a difficult area in which to get legislative action because of all the competing and vested interests, both private and public; third, to turn in some detail to the nature of my Bill and look at its provisions; and fourth, to look at some of the other initiatives which have also been under way this year on this very important front of dealing with Canada's number one health problem. By the use of that phrase, Canada's number one health problem, I have already indicated the reason that I felt it was important to have legislation such as this before Parliament.

The figures estimated in this country are that 35,000 Canadians die each year from tobacco-related causes. If 35,000 Canadians were dying each year because airplanes were crashing and taking that number of lives, or if 35,000 people were dying from some other disease—and I refer to several which have recently been much featured in the public media for whom the number of fatalities is gratefully so much smaller—you would think that on the floor of this House there would be a tremendous outcry and demand for action. Yet action has been slow in coming.

In 1982, the federal health Department warned that non-smokers are being subjected by smokers to far greater risks than previously believed, including one of the worst cancer-causing substances. The majority of non-smokers seem blissfully unaware of the health hazards due to exposure to tobacco smoke. That was a statement in 1982 of a federal health Department bulletin on chronic diseases in Canada. As a consequence, smokers do not receive enough negative feedback from non-smokers to have a major impact on the problem.

One study of non-smokers in the working environment demonstrated that what is called passive smoking, the inhalation by non-smokers of tobacco polluted air, was equivalent to smoking 10 cigarettes a day. The air of rooms contaminated by tobacco smoke contains carbon monoxide, formaldehyde, many chemicals known to be carcinogens for humans and/or animals and many other noxious and toxic substances. An even greater danger than smoke exhaled by smokers is sidestream smoke that drifts directly from smouldering cigarettes. Smokers' lungs and cigarette filters have trapped some of the worst pollutants, but the so-called sidestream smoke contains those in full strength. The chemical NDMA, one of the most potent carcinogens known, is present in sidestream smoke at concentrations 50 times greater than in mainstream smoke, that is smoke exhaled by someone who is smoking a cigarette. It has produced cancer in all animal species tested by various methods of exposure, including inhalation of a single dose. A non-smoker exposed to air heavily contaminated by tobacco smoke inhales as much NDMA in one hour as a smoker does by smoking 15 non-filter or up to 35 filter-tipped cigarettes. That information was in a 1982 study done by the federal Department of health.

The figures continue to show that each year health-related illnesses in Canada due to tobacco use continue to be serious. As a result, on April 17 I introduced, in the first session of this Parliament, Bill C-287. That was, in fact, the first legislation introduced in the 33rd Parliament to deal with this issue. It was shortly thereafter followed by another Private Members' Bill and a government Bill.

In October, when the second session of Parliament got under way, I reintroduced a Bill, which is in the present form that is before us. Although the other legislation has served in this House and in the legislative committee as a vehicle carrying much of the debate and public discussion of this number one health problem, I wanted to have a further opportunity this afternoon to give Members a chance to debate the merits of this legislation that I have proposed.

This will also give me a chance to put on public record my continuing deep concern about this issue and, indeed, to note that, because of many initiatives taken from different quarters by other Members as well as myself, there is some real progress coming. I say some real progress because—and I come to my second main point—that is an area where it is difficult to get action because of competing interests. There, of course, is the difficulty that Government itself faces with the Department of Agriculture looking out for the well-being of those in the farming community who are growing tobacco and over the years have received financial assistance from Government to that end, while at the same time the Department of National Health has a large portion of its budget allocated to the health needs of Canadians who are suffering as a consequence of smoke inhalation, direct or indirect. A third vested interest in this on the government side is the Department of National Revenue, which busily raises, through taxes on tobacco products, many millions of dollars that are used to pay both agricultural subsidies and health care costs.

Just as within Government, it is not an easy issue on which to focus because of those conflicts, in the private sector as well. I refer, for example, to an article written last month, in The Globe and Mail's Report on Business magazine which stated that where there is smoke there are profits. The writer goes on at length to talk about the ability of the tobacco industry to stay healthy while its customers get sick. He describes that as being one of the most amazing marketing feats of all time.

There are many millions, indeed billions of dollars, involved in this area. We have arts and sports groups that are worried because they receive in this country some $10 million worth of corporate sponsorship every year. At the same time, there was an advertisement on October 6, again appearing in The Globe and Mail and other papers, organized by the Non-Smokers Rights Association, in which a number of other people speak out on behalf of Bill C-51, people from the arts community. So there is a division there.

Earlier this year in June, a committee of this House of Commons reported that some 500 Ontario tobacco farmers might be forced out of business in the next two years. They recommended that Ottawa divert some of the annual $1.6 billion collected here from cigarette taxes to help producers switch to alternate crops.

• (1710)

I will not take any more of my time going on in that vein. I think you, Mr. Speaker, and others here readily appreciate that it is a very mixed field that we are walking across, with many interests, all strong, all sincere in their points of view, all quite eloquent and articulate in putting their points forward. Yet, in the face of that, there nevertheless remains what I believe to be the important public interest of getting on with some action to deal with the control of smoking in federal buildings and facilities. That is the nature of the Bill I introduced, the one I now want to discuss.

Bill C-209 is not moralistic legislation, it is not puritanical or punitive legislation, it is health legislation. I am looking at this issue in terms of the health consequences on our country. I am trying to deal with the issue in a reasonable way, a way that can evolve toward a better balance between those many interests.

The provisions of the Bill would apply to federal Government premises including buildings, aircraft, trains and the Parliament Buildings. The general rule contained in this legislation is that smoking would not be permitted in any federal workplace or area to which the public has access unless one of the exemptions applied. I contemplate three exemptions: First, when the terms of a collective agreement actually provide for smoking; second, smoking in specified areas designated for smokers; and third, places where non-smoking areas could not be provided because the cost would be prohibitive or major structural changes would be required. In those extraordinary cases, a ministerial certificate granting the exemption would have to be issued on those grounds.

I think this represents a reasonable blend of the interests of all parties concerned: The health needs of everyone, the concerns of non-smokers, the position of those who do smoke, and the financial and physical restraints involved in the Government converting public premises to non-smoking areas. This is what I call the doctrine of reasonable accommodation.

I write my legislation with the doctrine of reasonable accommodation at its core because I think it is important that this kind of legislation succeed. I am mindful of the lesson of the prohibition era, which is that legislation that is drafted too restrictively can in fact be counterproductive. We all know what happened during the prohibition era. The law was just unrealistic and unenforceable in the real world and had consequences that went far beyond what was ever contemplated by the people who initially addressed the health concerns they had about the abuse of alcohol.

Yet health concerns and the public interest do require that we start making some real progress in this area. That is why I wanted today to have this chance to look at some of that progress. There has been a lot of action on this front this year. I will conclude by referring, as I said I would, to some of these other initiatives.

Certainly the introduction by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on April 30 of Bill C-51 was significant. This legislation would prohibit the advertising and promotion of tobacco and it also deals with the labeling and monitoring of tobacco products. In all frankness, I can say that unlike many people who are active in this area, I do have some reservations about that. As someone who believes fundamentally in the importance of democratic rights and particularly in the freedom of expression, I am concerned that we would prohibit the advertising of a product which itself is not illegal. I put that on the record because I am not adamant on all fronts on this matter and I think there are serious philosophical concerns about such an approach.

I have no problems with the provision in Bill C-51 for stronger and more visible health warnings so consumers will be more fully informed about the serious hazards of using tobacco products, nor do I have problems with other parts of the legislation. The efforts made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to promote the national program to reduce tobacco use carried out with the co-operation of the provincial health ministries and national voluntary health agencies are very much the way to go in this area.

There has been some real action on a couple of other fronts. Bill C-51 has yet to return to the House, but meanwhile, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) have, for their own part, been taking very positive steps, and I think it is important to put those steps on the public record.

For example, back in May, the Minister of Transport sought comments about the prohibition of smoking on aircraft flights of two hours or less, and that has led to some action. I have here a copy of The Canada Gazette dated September 10, 1987, containing these new regulations which prohibit smoking during flights of less than two hours. These new regulations will be in place before the new year as they can come into effect within 90 days after appearing in The Canada Gazette.

Very simply, the regulations state that no person shall smoke any combustible material on an aircraft operated by a Canadian air carrier on a flight carrying passengers which has a scheduled duration of two hours or less. There are a few qualifications about flights originating outside the country, but that is the main thrust of it. It is also worthy of note that under these regulations, where a crew member is aware that a person is smoking on a flight of two hours or less, the crew member shall—

Mr. Waddell: Throw them off?

Mr. Boyer: The Hon. Member says he will throw them off. The regulation states that the crew member shall request the person to stop smoking, the reasonable approach, and if the person does not immediately stop smoking, the air carrier shall cause the person to leave the aircraft, but at the next point of landing. That goes some way toward what is already contemplated in Bill C-209.

I would also point out that the private sector is responding as well. Canadian Airlines International, on October 5, banned smoking on most of its North American flights. This decision followed a four-week trial period. Eight out of 10 passengers, states the airline, preferred a smoke-free environment. Passengers reported that the healthier fresh air made the flights more enjoyable and more comfortable.

There have also been certain initiatives on the Hill. In June of last year, under Mr. Speaker Bosley, there was a designation of non-smoking areas on the Hill. A number of other steps have been taken including initiatives by the Minister of Agriculture to see that farmers who grow tobacco crops can be assisted by the Government in switching to alternate crops.

I wanted to put those initiatives on the record because I think they are all part and parcel of the spirit of my Bill C-209. It is not that one day, one act or a single step has changed the whole situation. This is part of a shift to focusing essentially on the health concerns of Canadians to try and find a way of overcoming the problems and vested interests in a way acceptable to all, and the sooner the better.

• (1720)

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the NDP I would like to reply to an excellent speech given by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer). I wonder where that is. Could that be somewhere in the west part of Toronto, down near Browns Line, where Mimico, Longbranch and New Toronto used to be?

Mr. Boyer: Alderwood.

Mr. Waddell: Alderwood.

Mr. Boyer: Where the Hon. Member is going to run.

Mr. Waddell: I do not know. I tell the Hon. Member that some people were asking me to run in the next election there. While I grew up there, and that is why the Hon. Member and I know a little bit about it, I do not know about that.

Mr. Boyer: You are welcome to run.

Mr. Waddell: He welcomes me to run. That is interesting.

I rose to speak on the Member's Bill and I must say I think it is a good Bill and we in the NDP will support it. I liked one of his lines. He quoted someone, and not being Joseph Biden he acknowledged the quote, that the tobacco industry stays healthy while the customers get sick. It is true. It really is a problem but it is being tackled consistently, bit by bit, step by step.

The Hon. Member referred to airlines. MPs do a lot of travelling, especially when you are from the West Coast, and it is a pleasure to be on a smoke-free airplane. I admit it must be tough for those who smoke. I am lucky that I am not a smoker but I feel for them a little bit when they cannot smoke for two hours. I guess through a little law and a little peer pressure they are being forced to give up smoking.

I want to say a few things about the Bill and the general issue. Many Canadians suffer from conditions exacerbated by environmental tobacco smoke. Among those are 5 per cent of Canadians who are asthmatic, who suffer from other lung complaints, who have rhinitis, or who wear contact lenses. Anyone who wears contacts can detect the smoke on the lense and it is a problem. It is of course more serious for those who have asthma or other similar diseases. Smoke is responsible not only for irritation of these complaints but also but because it causes death among non-smokers. I had the Library of Parliament get together some studies on this issue and I want to read from that brief.

Smoking became an issue for non-smokers with the publication of two studies which found that the spouses and children of smokers have an increased risk of serious health problems. One study found that children with parents who smoke experience much higher rates of respiratory illness, including colds, influenza, bronchitis, asthma and pneumonia, as well as reduced lung capacity. A recent federal Health and Welfare study concluded that the risk of lung cancer is as much as 3.4 times greater for non-smokers married to smokers than for non-smokers who are not exposed to cigarette smoke. The same study published in The Canadian Medical Journal found that one in five Canadians has a serious medical condition such as asthma, emphysema, heart disease or angina aggravated by exposure to cigarette smoke. A non-smoker exposed to second-hand smoke in the workplace for 20 years suffers the same ill effects as a person who has smoked 10 cigarettes a day during that period. That is really quite remarkable.

The authors of the report describe airborne tobacco smoke as an occupational health hazard that should be banned or restricted to well-ventilated buildings, but apparently only 10 per cent of the air in most buildings is fresh while the rest is recycled. This means that smoky air is being circulated throughout most office buildings, exposing non-smokers to high levels of toxic and cancer-causing chemicals. Second-hand or sidestream smoke contains higher levels of cancer-causing chemicals than smoke inhaled by a smoker. Unfortunately, air filters do not remove these toxic substances.

I am also informed that in October, 1985, there was a report from Health and Welfare Canada that noted 1,050 non-smoking Canadians die from lung cancer each year. Lung cancer is one of the most severe diseases, fatal most of the time, and caused by smoking most of the time. Yet over 1,000 people who do not smoke die from lung cancer, perhaps one-half of these because of second-hand smoke or passive smoking. The evidence is there that non-smokers who inhale second-hand smoke also suffer and their rights need to be protected.

The initiative by the Hon. Member is the only way to go. The Government promised a comprehensive legislative approach last year and we did not get one. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) introduced a Bill which would ban tobacco advertising and most tobacco promotion, but never brought it back for second reading. This is just like the former Liberal Minister of National Health and Welfare, John Munro, who introduced a Bill in 1972 which died on the Order Paper. The Government announced a program but it includes no guarantee of smoke-free public or workplaces. The Treasury Board initiated a policy for the federal Public Service but that falls quite short of similar plans introduced by even the private sector. We think the Government should be ahead of the private sector on this issue. The government program does nothing for smoking in public places nor does it cover federally-regulated workers like bank clerks, telecommunications workers, the military or the RCMP.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), introduced a Bill similar in intent to this Bill. It restricted smoking in federally-regulated workplaces to separately ventilated areas. It would provide smoke-free public places, that is the lobby of a public building or bank or a military facility. It said that the workplace of a federally-regulated worker should be smoke-free.

I have only a short time left but this is an important initiative. It is part of a campaign by Members of this House. It is not easy. There is a tobacco lobby which opposes this legislation. That is why there have been delays in the past, probably, in government Bills and so on. However, we are seeing an interesting development in that this comes from a Private Member. It speaks a lot for our reformed House.

As I said, we in the NDP are pleased to support this initiative and I am personally pleased with the initiative put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood.

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Madam Speaker, I looked forward to speaking to this Bill. I have spent 25 years working with young people concerning the effect of smoke and smoking on their lives and lifestyles. I have had some experience with young people and of course adults in that time and I know what it is like so far as smoking or not smoking in public places concerned.

Today I want to confine my remarks to this issue as it affects public transportation and the users of public facilities. There are some advantages and certainly some disadvantages in imposing legal constraints such as those proposed in this Bill. The legislation attempts to accommodate, in their place of work, within reason, both smokers and non-smokers who are employees in the federal Public Service. A problem exists in that some of the people in these public places are not federal employees but employees of the private sector. When the space is shared, it is very difficult to effect legislation which applies only to public sector employees. In such circumstances, legislation such as Bill C-209 could be difficult to enforce.

• (1730)

At present, Transport Canada has in place guidelines for managers and supervisors designed to minimize the harmful effects of tobacco smoke in the workplace. These will remain in place pending consultations with the Public Service unions that will result in smoking being restricted to designated areas by the fall of 1987. Hon. Members will be aware that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski) referred to this objective in April, 1987, when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) announced his plans for new initiatives, including legislation, to reduce tobacco consumption by Canadians.

On that occasion it was also announced that there would be continued efforts to reduce smoking by Public Service employees during 1988, leading to a total ban by January, 1989, under a new regulation to be made under Part IV of the Canada Labour Code. It is hoped that these measures will serve as a catalyst and an example to other levels of government and to the private sector.

The Transport Canada guidelines were not intended to invoke a complete smoking ban, nor are they being applied in such a way as to interfere unduly with operational activities by segregating smokers from non-smokers. Instead, they suggest a number of measures which can be taken to minimize the harmful effects of tobacco smoke which we have heard much about today from the Hon. Member.

Above all, however, managers and employees, smokers and non-smokers, are asked to be guided at all times by practical considerations in the application of smoking restrictions, and by the important principles of consideration and courtesy between smokers and non-smokers. We are starting to see some good signs in this regard. We are starting to see voluntary constraint by the general public, which is becoming concerned about the rights of others. I have recently seen more mutual respect exhibited with regard to both primary and secondary tobacco smoke by Canadians in all areas than I have ever seen before in my 25 years of observing this.

The Transport Canada guidelines are intended principally to benefit employees whose work is carried out at a fixed location. Those who operate means of transport, notably the Coast Guard fleet, must deal with their conflicting interests somewhat differently.

The Treasury Board has implemented a policy which prohibits smoking at all service counters, desks, and wickets where the public is served. People are restraining themselves in that regard on their own initiative. They know that their smoke offends some people, and they are withdrawing. It is not unreasonable for the federal employer to require employees who smoke to be subject to certain restraints during normal working hours in buildings and workshops since they are free to smoke as much as they wish once they leave public facilities.

However, the majority of the Coast Guard fleet spend more time at sea than alongside, and it would be unrealistic to anticipate a total ban on smoking aboard Coast Guard vessels. After all, we must realize that the vessel becomes their home as well as their place of work. It is only reasonable that they should be allowed to do on board what they would do on shore.

With regard to transport terminals, restrictions on smoking in public waiting areas and facilities in federally-operated air passenger terminals were introduced in 1982. However, this is a complex issue which, in the case of airports and large railway stations, involves renegotiation of contracts in order to place restrictions in concession lease agreements for shops and restaurants as well as enforcement costs. In these places we are dealing again with agencies and their employees who are not federal employees even though they work in a federally leased space.

Similar considerations apply to railway stations serving other commercial purposes, although there are now some five rail passenger stations that have segregated smoking areas, and VIA hopes to increase the number significantly.

With regard to aircraft, Hon. Members will recall the Minister of Transport's announcement on November 17, 1986, of a proposal to ban smoking on all flights of two hours or less in Canadian commercial aircraft. The proposed new air regulations, which would govern smoking on both domestic and transborder flights, were published in Part I of The Canada Gazette to solicit public comment on January 3, 1987. All comments received have now been reviewed, and publication of Part II is expected later this fall.

These new regulations have been supported wholeheartedly by the Canadian public. I am sure that my colleagues in the House, who travel the airways of Canada as I do, would agree that the smokers of Canada are exhibiting tremendous restraint. They realize that in the confined air space on an aircraft there is limited air circulation. They appreciate the fact that tobacco smoke affects all travellers, whether or not they are smokers. I believe that the entire traveling public is genuinely interested in complying with these new regulations in good spirit.

The flight to Ottawa from London, Ontario, is of one hour and a half duration and is a no-smoking flight. Virtually everyone on the flight knew that there was a Member of Parliament on board, indeed a Member who is also a member of the Transport Committee, and I did not hear one complaint. I, therefore, assume that Canadians now consider this to be part of their lifestyle and part of their obligation to their fellow citizens.

These new regulations will require Canadian air carriers to post signs prohibiting smoking on such flights and that crew members request any passenger who is smoking to stop. If a passenger does not stop smoking upon request, the air carrier, under the new regulations, will be required to have the passenger removed at the next available stop. I have never seen or heard of this happening. Because of that I repeat that I believe Canadians have accepted this and are working it out on their own. They do not need legislation to force them to do this.

In conclusion, while it is clear that tobacco smoke can be a serious source of annoyance and physical discomfort to non-smokers, as well as a health hazard to some, it is questionable whether legislation of the kind proposed by Bill C-209 would provide a practical solution to the problem.

I want to talk about self-regulation. We have seen a tremendous growth of this. The Canadian public should be congratulated on their own efforts to control their own lives and develop their own habits. Self-regulation and restriction based on consultations between employees and their managers have so far proved to be an effective means of accommodating both smokers and non-smokers in the workplace. Legislation at this time would probably diminish the context of mutual respect within which new initiatives leading to a total cessation of smoking in federal workplaces are now being adopted.

We should consider that people working this out among themselves are doing an admirable job. I am pleased that federal Departments and Ministers are interested in these matters, but let us not underestimate the Canadian public. Let them decide and work this out on their own.

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Madam Speaker, rising in this debate on the Private Member's bill introduced by my colleague, I should like to comment on the possible impact of tobacco smoke on non-smokers and their health. Needless to say, I agree with the previous speaker, perhaps laying more emphasis on the consideration the Government has been giving this issue over the past year and a half, and on the measures which have already been taken. They appear to be satisfactory for the time being and may very well pave the way for further measures which, if I may put it this way, would be more closely geared to individual capability.

It has often been said that tobacco smoke causes untold harm to the health of smokers and non-smokers alike. Canadians are growing increasingly aware of this fact. Scientific evidence concerning the smoke of other people was recently highlighted and explained by American Surgeon General Koop in an article or report on the impact of smoke on the health of non-smokers.

Tobacco smoke contains gaseous particles and products, including in excess of 60 substances likely to cause cancer or other illnesses. According to Surgeon General Koop's report, the smoke from the burning end of a cigarette contains more toxic products and cancer-producing substances than does the smoke inhaled or exhaled by the smoker. In fact, undeniable conclusions of a number of studies indicate that the risk of lung cancer for a non-smoker increases by about 30 per cent if he or she is exposed to the smoke of other people. Smoke from a burning cigarette combined with smoke exhaled by a smoker is a threat to the lives on non-smokers.

When the parents smoke, there are higher risks of pregnancy complications, including infants weighing less at birth and a higher risk of stillbirths. Children of smokers are also more prone to bronchitis and pneumonia than children of non-smokers. Not only do these children have respiratory infections more often, but they may have a greater risk of developing some type of cancer later.

In a recent report on air transport environment, the United States National Academy of Science describes the dangerous effects of smoke in airplanes and recommends that the United States Congress consider banning smoking in passenger airplanes. In a subsequent report, the Academy also concludes that the risk of lung cancer increases for non-smokers when they are exposed to tobacco smoke. The Academy also notes that children exposed to secondary smoke are more prone to respiratory and pulmonary infections.

Scientific research on tobacco smoke and the health of non-smokers leads to three general conclusions:

First, involuntary smoking causes disease, including lung cancer in non-smokers.

Second, children of smokers are more prone to respiratory illnesses and symptoms than children of non-smokers. The rate of lung development is lower for children of smokers.

Third, separating smokers from non-smokers in the same area can only reduce, but not eliminate the problem of secondary smoke exposure.

Since the Canadian public is informed about the dangers of tobacco and the risk incurred by passive smokers, they are asking for many changes as regards the use of tobacco products in public places. Throughout Canada, in public and workplaces, a special room is reserved to smokers. Municipal and provincial Governments as well as labour and management are taking active steps to change policies relating to smoking in a closed place. The smokers' rights are being questioned when smoke increases the risk of illness for those who share the environment.

At present, our Government subsidizes non-governmental organizations such as the Canadian Lung Association and the Canadian Cancer Society which are actively working for the promotion of a non-smoking society. In fact, those groups of health and public interest play a crucial role to change society's attitude regarding smoking. That is why, as a Government, we intend to continue supporting their efforts.

In October, 1985, the Department of National Health and Welfare, provincial departments of Health and many national non-governmental organizations have announced the implementation of the national program against smoking, another step that will improve the co-operation efforts for a non-smokers' generation. The program was first aimed at teenagers from 12 to 17 years of age, a vulnerable age when one is most tempted to smoke or to start smoking. The program will also deal with the ever-increasing use of tobacco among the youth, the effects of other people's smoke on non-smokers and the consumption of chewing tobacco or snuff. The program will also try to inform the public about the adverse effects of tobacco and its dependency factor.

Furthermore, new flight regulations proposed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) that would prohibit smoking on domestic and transborder flights of two hours or less, on aircrafts belonging to Canadian airlines, will become effective as of December 9, 1987. Most large Canadian cities have restricted smoking in public places and are gradually adopting increasingly stricter by-laws in this respect. For instance, a municipal by-law passed recently in Vancouver has in fact limited the number of areas where smoking is allowed in most public buildings in that city, including places of work. For instance, if people working in a given department cannot agree on smoking at work, their premises become non-smoking areas by default. Smoking is also prohibited in taxis, retail stores, at service counters and in queues.

This year, Quebec also passed a Bill restricting smoking in various public places. It is the first provincial legislation dealing with this question. The Quebec Bill consists of two parts. In the first part, smoking in government offices, hospitals, schools, public transit and many other public buildings is either prohibited or restricted to certain designated areas. In the second part, municipalities are authorized to adopt additional measures in this respect in their respective jurisdictions.

The scope of measures to restrict smoking in federal offices has intensified in the past two years. Since no air purifier exists that can filter out both the particles and the invisible toxic gases contained in tobacco smoke, the original plan, which consisted in restricting smoking to specially designated areas, has been changed. The plan is now to gradually prohibit smoking altogether. Consideration had been given to providing independently ventilated premises, but the expense would have been prohibitive. Consequently, the policy announced on April 22, 1987 provides that smoking in the workplace will be prohibited by 1989. During the month transitional period which started on October 1, 1987, smoking will be allowed only in areas specially designated for that purpose. In fact, since August 20, 1987, employees have had to refrain from smoking at all service counters, in waiting rooms, and in offices and at counters where they deal with the public.

No-smoking signs will keep reminding the public of the campaign against smoking.

I believe it is fair to say that most of us realize the difficulties smokers are facing as a result of these changes. I am confident that we will be able to find ways to achieve the goal set by the Government, which is to provide employees with better protection against involuntary exposure to tobacco smoke in most federal workplaces.

[English]

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this Bill. Indeed, last night, in a period of an hour's relaxation with my family, I was reminded of the nature of this Bill. I am of that legion of people who are perhaps affected by legislation of this type in that I am, regrettably, a smoker. My wife has the unfortunate habit, in my view, of being able to have one cigarette a month. I find that frustrating. She may go for several months without having a cigarette. Last night in the presence of our nine-year-old she lit up a cigarette. I think my son demonstrated the unacceptability of that practice by saying: "Mom, you have lit a cigarette. Why?" he challenged her. Why did she do this? She did not need to and he did not like it. That is pretty pertinent. That strikes home, and I am comforted by the fact that children today have this awareness, particularly, in this case, my son Jason.

However, what I must do is to address the context of the Bill before us. Bill C-209 is intended to protect the health of smokers and those non-smokers who are forced to inhale the second-hand or sidestream smoke produced by smokers. Clearly, the best way of protecting smokers is to either kill or cure them.

This Bill was introduced in the House on October 7, 1986. The announcement made by the Government of Canada on April 22 concerning this issue has rendered this Bill redundant.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the President of the Treasury Board of Canada (Mr. Mazankowski), and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) announced bold new initiatives which go much further than the goals of the Bill we are presently debating.

The Government's initiatives will offer increased protection of the health of all Canadians, not just the health of some of the workers under the federal jurisdiction, as this Bill would do. Let me describe briefly to the House some of the features of the program announced by the Government as they pertain to smoking in the workplace. The issue of workers' exposure to second-hand smoke is, of course, the responsibility of Labour Canada. That is the Department with the mandate to administer the Canada Labour Code, Part IV, which addresses all matters related to the safety and health of workers under the federal jurisdiction. Acting under this mandate, the Minister of Labour has requested all employees under the federal jurisdiction to restrict smoking in their workplaces to specially designated areas. That in itself, I must add, sometimes creates a problem in terms of specially designated areas because you end up with a collection of hardened and committed cigarette smokers all busy burning up their lungs and the oxygen in a very crowded environment, which perhaps in itself will serve as a disincentive to smoking. However, that is only the first step.

The Minister has also asked the review committee, which was established by Labour Canada, to carry out a full-scale technical review of the Canada occupational safety and health regulations, in order to develop a special regulation on smoking in the workplace. This committee is composed of representatives from labour, management and government. It has been asked to have a regulation ready for implementation in 1989.

Lending support to the initiatives taken by the Minister of Labour, the former President of the Treasury Board of Canada, now Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret), announced that the Government intends to ban smoking in all Public Service workplaces by January 1, 1989.

With over 200,000 employees, the federal Public Service is by far the largest employer under the federal jurisdiction. It seems to me that with this kind of support the Government's initiatives will surely reduce the risk from exposure to tobacco smoke in the workplace. I have no doubt that my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), drafted this Bill with the best of intentions. That is the nature of the man and the nature of his work. Unfortunately, it has some deficiencies which are not easy to remedy in a legislative sense.

The most serious deficiency I see is that this Act would not cover all employees who are presently protected by Part IV of the Canada Labour Code. While the word "employer" is defined to include all employers who are presently under the jurisdiction of Part IV of the code, both Section 3(1), which states the purpose, and Section 5(1), which states the application of this Act, would appear to exclude a large segment of employers. All banks would be excluded. Certain airlines, bus companies, ferries and so on would also be excluded. It seems to me that the logic or fairness of providing health protection to only some employees under the federal jurisdiction and not to others does not lend itself to full endorsement of the proposed Bill.

Another section that concerns me a great deal is Section 6. It is a short section and I shall quote it. It reads:

> This Act does not apply in respect of an employee and employer who, by written agreement, have stated that this Act shall have no application.

The meaning of this section is unclear. Does it mean that an employer can arbitrarily exempt any employee from this Act and permit that employee to smoke at his or her work-station even though that employee may be surrounded by non-smokers? If that were indeed permissible under this Act, it would defeat the whole purpose of enacting such a piece of legislation.

I do not want to leave the impression that I am against any legislation that would restrict smoking in the workplace. Neither am I saying that there are no worthy features in this Bill. On the contrary, I find the fact that it does not resort to complex and technical measures to solve the problem of smoking in the workplace as being noteworthy. All I am saying is that the Government has not only pledged but has acted upon its promise to take legislative action to restrict smoking in the workplace. I feel that that passage of the Bill before us today will only tend to plant seeds of doubt in the minds of Canadians in terms of whether it is the intention of the Government to proceed further. They will begin to wonder whether the actions taken by the Government are indeed adequate.

I am convinced they are adequate. I am convinced that the initiatives taken by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Labour deal with this issue fairly and squarely. So I urge my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore, to bring his ideas on this issue to the attention of the Labour Canada review committee, which I mentioned earlier, and set aside his Bill.

I should like to conclude, if I may, by commenting on the subject of the airlines, which was addressed by two of the speakers in this debate. As do other Hon. Members, I have the need to travel back and forth across this great nation. Being a western Member, my flights are of four or five hours' duration. Quite frankly, I find that smoking or not smoking in a section designated for smoking is really quite unpleasant. If I decide that I do not want a cigarette, that I really do not need a cigarette, I find those around me who are smoking create an unpleasant atmosphere. If smoking were banned entirely on our major carriers, on long-distance flights across this nation, it really would not bother me one iota.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—UNITED STATES TRANSBOUNDARY ACID RAIN EMISSIONS/CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, it is to acid rain that I would like to draw your attention and that of the House tonight. In particular, I would like to draw to the attention of the House a statement made in the United States two weeks ago when Assistant Secretary of State John Negroponte in speaking on Canada-U.S. acid rain relations told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, first, that emission reductions, which, in other words, means pollution control measures, cannot be defined at the present time; and, second, that the administration's analysis of the document published by a group called NAPAP in the United States shows that the administration in Washington and its understanding of the scientific issues continues to support the policy of the Reagan administration. Mr. Negroponte went on to say that to act now, that is to act by way of imposing pollution control measures in the U.S., could have serious and unnecessary social economic consequences.

Imagine, this is the message from a senior official in the American State Department. Therefore, the question that I have to ask tonight in following up one that I asked of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) a few months ago is whether he will actually admit that despite all the claims made so far by the Government of Canada he still believes that President Reagan will deliver on acid rain and meet Canadian expectations.

His expectations were whipped to an unusual high in this House last April by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on the occasion of President Reagan's visit. His expectations, based on the statement here, have been shattered. What John Negroponte's statement does is this. It reveals that the administration's position on acid rain controls has not changed one bit. It has not changed in the past three years and, by accepting the acid rain envoys' report, the Prime Minister has given President Reagan an excuse for inaction. That was a fatal mistake.

It is worth while putting on record John Negroponte's statement since it reveals a number of things that Canadians in your province, Madam Speaker, in my province and in every province which is downwind to American acid gas pollution should know. In addressing the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on October 8, Assistant Secretary of State John Negroponte also made these remarks which I would like to bring to the attention of the House.

When President Reagan and the Prime Minister met for their third summit in Ottawa on April 5 and April 6 the President stated, "The Prime Minister and I agreed to consider the Prime Minister's proposal for a bilateral accord on acid rain, building on the tradition of agreement to control pollution of our shared international waters". "It should be emphasized"—and these are the words of John Negroponte—"that in making this commitment, the President agreed to a process, not to a specific outcome".

• (1805)

These are the important key words which must be understood by the Department of External Affairs. They must be understood by the Secretary of State for External Affairs by his Parliamentary Secretary, and by the officials here and in Washington. The Americans have said "Yes, we will consider", and "consider" means just that in English if one looks it up in the dictionary. It means that one considers or looks at a proposition. It does not imply acting on it.

I fault the Prime Minister for having created the impression, in the statements he made after the departure of the President, that the President had agreed to acid rain controls. That was the mistake.

The key words in John Negroponte's comments were that "the President agreed to a process, not to a specific outcome." Therefore, the State Department is leaving its options wide open to do anything that it wants to do.

What does it want to do? We have to look further in the document, issued compliments of the U.S. Embassy in Ottawa, to find the following:

> The administration's position is also clear. There is a significant long term concern, but, in view of our present understanding and remaining scientific and technical uncertainties, the need for or form of, additional emissions reductions cannot be defined at the present time.

Imagine that!

John Negroponte went on to say:

> The administration is prepared to take further action, as necessary, as the uncertainties are resolved. The recently released interim report presents the current state of knowledge about half way through the NAPAP's ten year scientific investigations of the problem. The administration's analysis of this document shows that our understanding—> —of the scientific issues continues to support our policies. To act now, in the face of these uncertainties, could have serious and unnecessary socioeconomic consequences.

"Our" meaning that of the State Department. He continued:

Imagine, that is the thinking of the State Department. They are light-years behind what goes on out there in the environment. They do not understand the consequences to our ecosystem or our resources.

I will be very happy to hear the interpretation the Parliamentary Secretary would like to give us on this very significant and unfortunate statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Madam Speaker, obviously and in the mind of this Government there is no doubt that acid rain remains the most serious environmental issue between Canada and the U.S.A. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made acid rain one of the principal subjects of discussion when President Reagan visited Ottawa in April. At the Prime Minister's urging, the President agreed—and all Canadians will agree—to consider the Prime Minister's proposal for a bilateral accord on acid rain.

The resolve and persistence of the Government have been amply and repeatedly demonstrated. The Hon. Tom McMillan, the Minister of the Environment, has spoken out on acid rain forcefully in the United States and Canada. The release by the United States of the unsatisfactory executive summary of the National Acidic Precipitation Assessment Program Report was met with a vigorous and firm response. In June, the Parliamentary Committee on Acid Rain, under the able chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling), visited Washington and presented the Canadian case. From the beginning, our aims have been clear. We seek to remove a threat to the Canadian environment. We aim to achieve something, not just demand it.

Our objectives on acid rain have been clearly and repeatedly stated, but let me repeat them again for the Hon. Member. Canada wants a bilateral Accord that specifies targets and schedules necessary to prevent the damage caused by the transboundary flow of sulphur dioxide. Broadly speaking, we believe that a level of sulphur deposition which our environment can safely sustain will be reached when two things happen: Our national acid rain abatement program reduces annual Canadian-origin deposition levels in eastern Canada to no more than 2.3 million tonnes—an objective we should achieve by 1994; and the transboundary flow of sulphur dioxide from the United States is reduced to no more than 2 million tonnes annually.

Madam Speaker, there is nothing mysterious or hidden in any of this. We have an environment that needs to be protected; a scientifically sound target level at which the necessary protection will be achieved; a domestic abatement program to deal with that half of the problem which is of our own making; and a negotiating strategy to address the part of the problem that originates in the United States.

In discussions with American officials since the President's announcement in April, Canadian officials have enunciated our approach clearly. I can assure the House that the Government and its officials are resolved to pursue this opportunity as effectively as we can and to achieve something that answers the needs of the Canadian environment.

ROAD SAFETY—NATIONAL SAFETY CODE FOR TRUCKING

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to rise on this occasion and speak on behalf of the constituents of London—Middlesex—an area which is one of the transportation hubs of Canada—to talk about our concerns. It was very interesting, in fact enlightening when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) answered my query about a national safety code when I was worried about killer trucks on the highways of the United States and the potential of them doing damage on Canadian roads. I wondered what his reaction would be and that of his colleagues, the Ministers of Transport in the provinces and the territories.

I was delighted when he answered that there would be a national safety code. The Ministers agreed to a national safety code which will be effective for Canada January 1, 1988. In fact, Madam Speaker, the Minister went further and said that the Ministers agreed to sign a memorandum of understanding committing themselves to the implementation of it and agreed to a timetable which would be phased in by 1990. Further, they gave their approval to a cost sharing formula for the development and implementation of the code, including the establishment of a national computer link which would permit all jurisdictions to take timely action against unsafe conduct of the operators of commercial vehicles regardless of where an offence is committed in Canada.

It looked like safety was well on its way to being looked after in Canada. However, I have one or two concerns from my question to the Minister and I would like to address them. It would appear to me and certainly to my constituents that the national safety code is dependent upon uniform implementation across the country. The truckers and those involved in this field of transportation in my riding feel that some degree of provincial flexibility might be desirable but, nonetheless, common sense must prevail.

If there are certain provinces which do not meet the time frame proposed in the Memorandum of Understanding, it will lead to the possibility that the federal law would prove invalid since it would not be applied equally across the country. It seems, therefore, that provincial co-operation is crucial in getting this program off the ground. My constituents feel that unless there is more co-ordination a great opportunity will be lost. The regulations would merely exist on paper and could not be enforced. In fact, my constituents have some very specific questions which they would like me to address to the Minister because they are inherent in what has to happen.

What is the current status of negotiation with the provinces? Will there be a significant level of uniformity across Canada? This is very important, Madam Speaker. How can we have trade of goods from coast to coast if we do not have a transportation system and policies which will allow us to be competitive? We realize that there are different roadbeds with different carrying capabilities from province to province and we know there will be difficulties. We are not sure what that will lead to in terms of uniformity.

• (1815)

Some degree of uniformity is required from coast to coast. If there is no uniformity, it will be difficult to enforce the federal law. In fact, it may even prove to be unconstitutional. Are the provinces essentially pursuing their own regulations and resisting attempts to establish some common ground which a national code needs and in fact on which a national code is founded?

We realize that some provinces have very distinct problems with road designs and road widths and inclines which all affect the weight and the length of transports which can be applied to the roads in those provinces. We realize that there are great differences in the roads, but given that, what will happen to the ability of the provinces to have the required regulations put in place? How does this affect the national safety code's scheduled implementation date? Will this delay or in fact put to rest a uniform transportation system for goods and services from coast to coast?

This is indeed very important. It is just one aspect of the new legislation which the Government put in place under Bill C-19 which became law this fall. Canadians want safety on their roads, but they also want a very efficient transportation system.

The truckers, the people who provide this system for Canadians, want to be competitive with our friends south of the border. They do not want to have to give up their businesses to the Americans. They want to be competitive so they want to know what the National Safety Code is all about and if it will be applied uniformly in all provinces and therefore what they have to do to measure up.

I hope that the Minister can enlighten us on the national safety code, which was a great vision. Where is it today and what can Canadian truckers expect tomorrow?

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to the Hon. Member for London—Middlesex (Mr. Clifford). The national safety code for motor carriers basically consists of two components. The first defines minimum safety standards and practices for drivers, carriers and vehicles. The second defines government standards which are necessary for enforcement purposes to ensure industry compliance with the national safety code.

The code will be phased in over a two-year period commencing on January 1, 1988, with full implementation expected by January 1, 1990. The phase-in approach is due to the provincial legislative requirements which are necessary for implementation of certain national safety code standards.

I would like to assure the Hon. Member that most parts of the code will be in place in most provinces by January of 1988. I would also like the Hon. Member to know that the federal Government contributed $24 million to the developmental costs of the code.

It should be noted that a number of standards are already in place today such as the single driver's licence concept, the classified driver's licence system and security of load, just to name a few. The federal Government and all provincial jurisdictions agree that a national safety code is paramount to ensuring that safety on our highways does not decrease as a result of regulatory reform. All concerned have committed themselves to continue their diligent work on the development of a uniform National Safety Code for Canada and to ensure that the timetable for implementation of the code is met.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

SUPREME COURT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-53, an Act to amend the Supreme Court Act and to amend various other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: There are five motions at the report stage of Bill C-53, an Act to amend the Supreme Court Act and to amend various other Acts in consequence thereof, standing in the name of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

All of these motions deal with the elimination of gender references and all were asked for my members of the legislative committee which considered this Bill.

[Translation]

I am given to understand that these amendments have been proposed at the committee stage. However the drafters of the Bill were not prepared to proceed at that time.

[English]

All of the motions are in order and will be debated together. If a division is required, a division on Motion No. 1 will be applied to Motion Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5. The House will now proceed to debate Motion Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-53 be amended in Clause 1 in the English version by striking out lines 10 to 15 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) by depositing with the Registrar, for each judge who has heard the case, a written opinion, a copy, signed by the judge, of the written opinion with which the judge concurs or a statement certifying the judge's concurrence".

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-53 be amended in Clause 2 in the English version by

(a) striking out lines 4 to 6 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"from the delivery of judgment may sign a copy of the opinion with which the judge concurs or, where the judge has written an opinion, give the opinion to a judge"

(b) striking out lines 17 to 20 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"ten an opinion may sign and deposit with the Registrar a copy of the opinion with which the judge concurs or a statement certifying concur-"

(c) striking out lines 24 to 26 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"Registrar shall send notices of the deposit of judgment to the solicitors of record for the case or their agents."

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-53 be amended in Clause 5 in the English version by striking out line 10 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"order, and if the appellant intends to limit the appeal,"

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-53 be amended in Clause 9 by striking out lines 8 and 9 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"counsel, the Attorney General or the counsel may apply to the". Motion No. 5

That Bill C-53 be amended in Clause 13 by

(a) striking out lines 26 and 27 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"counsel, the Attorney General or the counsel may apply to the"

(b) striking out, in the English version, lines 32 to 35 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"appellant who is in custody and who desires to be present at the hearing of the appeal before the Supreme Court of Canada is intitled to be present at it."

(c) striking out, in the English version, lines 45 to 48 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"unless rules of court provide that entitlement or the Supreme Court of Canada or a judge thereof gives the appellant leave to be present."

• (1010)

He said: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, at the legislative committee, I had in fact undertaken to bring forward these amendments I have just moved to make the wording of the Bill gender neutral. There were some discussions in the committee with regard to the application of the interpretation Act in these circumstances but, notwithstanding that fact, I did believe that the gender neutral position was covered by the interpretation Act and I nonetheless agreed to facilitate this particular legislation by bringing forward these amendments. These five motions are the result of that. I think you will find unanimous consent to proceed without any dispute with respect to these amendments.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to indicate that we support these amendments, but in offering our support and our part of the unanimous consent required I would like the Minister to notice how easy these amendments were to achieve, and to remind him of the commitment which was made in connection with the statute consolidations that gender neutrality would be sought.

On behalf of the Liberal Party, I indicated that we recognize that there were cases where gender neutrality, because of the limitations of the English language and the rules of grammar, sometimes has too high a price and that in the revising of a statute, particularly a criminal statute, to remove the gender orientation of a pronoun sometimes makes the language so complicated that it is hard for a citizen to understand. I indicated for our part that we were sympathetic to that kind of problem and that we were not insisting that every "his" and "him" be removed.

The ease with which these changes were achieved in these five cases shows that there has been a half-hearted effort to apply the general policy of avoiding "his" and "him" in the language of legislation. It does not sound like a very big issue, whether "him" or "his" appear in a statute or whether that can be avoided in the English language.

[Translation]

And for francophones who may be interested, the problem does not arise because the grammar is different and the gender of the pronoun depends on the following noun rather than the subject.

[English]

For Anglophones, it is important. The Minister and some of his colleagues are supporting a conference that I attended last night, to which I was very glad to be invited, of the National Association for Women and the Law. The indignation which one feels over the situation of women under the criminal law in general is so immense, and there is so much substance to their grievance that this type of change we are considering today is hardly responsive. It is very small, yet it is important symbolically.

In agreeing with these changes, I want to criticize the fact that it was even necessary to mention them and that the Government was not following its policy of doing everything that could reasonably be done with the English language to avoid getting into this situation in the first place. These amendments have our support and we concur in the unanimous consent required to receive them at this time.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I am pleased today to speak on behalf of the New Democratic Party, being a critic of everything these days, expert on nothing. However, I am pleased to see that the Minister has cleaned up his sexist language. He called it "gender neutral", which I think is the proper term.

I note that the Minister had a little assistance, as usual, from the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) who when speaking in this House on September 14, 1987 said, as reported in Hansard, at page 8920:

> I was pleased to hear the undertaking of the Minister that he intends to support an amendment to delete those odious provisions. I made strong representations to the Minister on this point. I indicated that I intend to propose an amendment to delete this provision and I welcome his agreement to support my amendment and agree to the deletion of this very backward and regressive provision of the legislation.

I am pleased to see that the Minister, although he did not say so in his introductory remarks, is bringing forward our amendments. I would hope the Justice Department would not require, under its very able Deputy Minister, that the Minister be forced to rise to bring these amendments to this kind of legislation. As the Liberal critic said, they should know enough by now to bring that in in the first place, but we thank them for the fact that they did and I am pleased on behalf of our party to support these amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 standing in the name of the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 inclusive agreed to.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-53, an Act to amend the Supreme Court Act and to amend various other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I believe there have been negotiations and we would like to proceed with third reading of this Bill right now.

Mr. Hnatyshyn moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to address the House today on third reading of Bill C-53. At the outset, I want to acknowledge the assistance of Hon. Members who have taken an interest in these amendments and in particular to express my appreciation to the members of the legislative committee who considered the Bill in a thoughtful and timely manner.

When I rose to speak on Bill C-53 at second reading, I indicated that I would be bringing forward amendments to the Bill to preserve the present practice regarding appeals as of right. That commitment was fulfilled at the legislative committee and was supported by all members of the committee. I also brought to the attention of the committee certain statistics dealing with the current workload of the court in order to demonstrate the need for the provision in Bill C-53 regarding applications for leave to appeal.

Bill C-53 is a step forward in many respects. It will benefit counsel, litigants and the court itself through the changes to the Supreme Court Act dealing with the delivery of judgments and the time periods for bringing appeals and applications for leave to appeal. As well, the amendments which deal with fairness and security are positive changes. The legislation will now provide the Supreme Court of Canada with the authority to assign counsel to an unrepresented accused.

• (1020)

We must give our highest court the tools it needs to carry out its responsibility. We are, as I have stated before on several occasions, well served by the men and women who sit on the Supreme Court of Canada. Their ability and integrity is well known to all of us. They are faced, on a daily basis, with the challenge of interpreting our Constitution and with fundamental legal issues of national importance that affect all Canadians.

This Bill will be a help to the court in discharging its role and in marshalling its time effectively to address these matters of such great importance.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, I also am very pleased to be able to support this Bill and to have it pass through the process of the House of Commons expeditiously and in a great spirit of co-operation. That co-operation included acceptance by the Minister not only of amendments this morning but important amendments in committee. It is certain that Canadians are very proud of the highest court in this land and that is a tribute to the calibre of people that sit on it, the way in which they work, and the support they have had from Governments of Canada, present and past.

When the amendment package was proposed it was important for us to be satisfied that it would improve the court. We were concerned, as I indicated, about some constrictions on access by Canadians to the highest court. We wanted to be certain that they were justified and necessary. It is true that this country's lawyers, through their organizations, indicated they were happy with the Bill the way it was.

The Minister told us as well that there had been consultations in the proper manner with members of the Supreme Court of Canada. He indicated in committee that they were content with the proposed changes. Of course, there is more to it than that. There is the point of view of the citizens of Canada and that is the job of this House. We accepted that the Bar was happy, the Bench was happy, but were the changes satisfactory from the point of view of the citizens of Canada?

We have dealt with the amendments on gender neutrality and I have spoken about those already. I am glad to see them included in the law. I would also point out that we were not happy with the restriction of the appeal by right which existed under the old law and which would have been taken away under the Bill proposed by the Government. Therefore we are glad that the Government agreed that this right would continue as before in at least a couple of respects. It means that someone who has had an adverse judgment and over which there was some disagreement among judges on the way up will have an appeal of right. This right was restored at our urging as well as the urging of a number of the media and public interest groups across the country, as I think the Minister would acknowledge.

We have before us a Bill which changes the rules somewhat. For example, it reduces to a certain degree the visibility of the Supreme Court of Canada because it will now be handing down written judgments rather than giving them orally in open court. Certain arguments for leave to appeal which were formally argued in open court and in front of the public and the media may now take place on paper without the necessity of an oral hearing. This will save money, yes; it will save time, it is true. However, it takes something away from the visibility of the court. On the other hand, the reason we supported these amendments was because we felt and continue to feel that the time of the court is a precious asset of the Canadian people and we have to be certain that it is used wisely and well.

[Translation]

So we were and we are still prepared to support the Bill as amended, and hopefully Canadians will accept the few restrictions imposed through this measure. But at the same time as we have so spared the precious time of the court—the most important in Canada—to safeguard our rights and freedoms, we readily admit that the Supreme Court of Canada has such a heavy workload and is under so much pressure that indeed an attempt must be made to save time and make better use of it. In conclusion I would say that we are quite pleased to support the Government by way of the amendments we have proposed. We hope the Bill will be sent to the Senate and that we will soon have the kind of legislation as envisaged in these amendments.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I would like to speak to this matter on third reading. I did not have the advantage of attending meetings of the committee but I understand the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is quite correct when he paid tribute to members of that committee. Indeed, this seems to be a good example of Parliament at work in the sense that some amendments have been accepted and some rejected. That is the way it should work.

I believe this is the first Bill to come before this House in a long time which deals in a substantive way with the Supreme Court of Canada. The court is very important, and right now very busy. I can see the court's problem and that of the Minister of Justice because he is responsible for the administration of justice in that court. His problem lies in trying to bring in reform of an extremely busy court, reform which will not restrict too much the people's right of appeal.

All the cases that appear before this court are important. They are also very visible. The Thatcher case and the Morgentaler case are two examples. The Charter of Rights has made things even more difficult for the court. Of course, when the Meech Lake Accord goes through the court will have an even larger workload with which to deal. However, I will not get into that today.

To get back to the Bill, the amendments that the Liberal critic and the Minister spoke about, concerning not restricting the right of appeal if in fact a judge on the way up, as it was put, registered a dissent, restore that right of appeal to the highest court of the country. I think it was wise to allow that procedure to continue.

If the Minister will forgive me for a moment, I would just tell him that when I started in law I was a community lawyer in Vancouver. A woman came through my door one day. She was on bail, having been charged with the murder of her husband in Burns Lake, British Columbia. It was a very tragic case. She did not have a lawyer and asked me if I would take the case. I took the case. It was my first murder case. I went to Burns Lake for the preliminary hearing and to Prince Rupert for the trial where she was acquitted. The Crown appealed. I will never forget getting the notice on the twenty-eighth day. The case went to the Supreme Court of British Columbia where we lost, two to one. Former Chief Justice Ferris dissented. The great happiness of the acquittal in Prince Rupert turned into great sadness at the loss in the Court of Appeal in Vancouver. However, because there was a dissenter, we were entitled as of right to go to the Supreme Court of Canada. I am happy to tell the Minister of Justice that we won in the Supreme Court of Canada.

• (1030)

That is a concrete example of what I am talking about. Had this woman not had the right to appeal she could stand convicted of murder today or, at the very minimum, have gone through another long trial. I believe that justice was done in that case.

I acknowledge that there is a problem. The Supreme Court of Canada judges are extremely overworked. I want to pay tribute to them. We have an excellent Bench in the Supreme Court. They are very hard-working Canadians.

However, all is not sweetness and light. The Government retained the provision that you do not have the right to an oral hearing on the appeal. That may have been a bit of a compromise. The Government may have thought that since the court is so busy it had to cut back somehow. However, as I understand it, if you file for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court you do not necessarily get an oral hearing. You can do it by written submissions.

I want to quote the words of Thomas Berger, a distinguished lawyer in British Columbia who was a member of the Supreme Court of British Columbia for 11 years. These words were quoted by my colleague, the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), on September 14, 1987, in this House as reported on page 8917 of Hansard. Mr. Berger said:

> To reduce the whole matter to paper seems to me to downgrade the role of advocacy; this is not in keeping with the traditions of our bar.
> It is not simply that this contributes to the openness of the justice system at the very highest level; my argument is that it enables the court better to understand the exact question that is before it. This contributes to better decision making.

I believe that in spite of the understandable difficulties of a very busy court, it would be better to provide in law that those seeking leave to appeal to the highest court of the land have the opportunity to present their application orally, in person or through counsel, for the reasons set out by former Judge Berger, that it does keep the openness in our justice system at a very high level. It also enables the court to understand the case better. Sometimes you have to hear counsel, to get the words up from the paper in order to appreciate that there is a question of justice.

That is what the courts are about when all is said and done, when all the law is applied, all the paperwork is put through, and all the cases are cited, read, and reread. That is what courts are about in a free society. When a good judge and a good court see a situation which is not just, they will find a way of making it just. That is the best part of our legal system. There are bad parts of our legal system as well, but that is the best part. That is why we should agree only reluctantly to a cut-back in oral presentations to the Supreme Court on applications for leave.

There are other provisions in this Bill to which I have no objection, such as depositing copies of judgments with the registrar so that the full court does not have to appear to give judgment, reference to time limits, and so on.

I think we should consider the views of the Supreme Court judges with regard to appeal, their workload, and what the court is doing. I think it is appropriate in the constitutional system to have more contact with the Supreme Court judges, the court, and the Justice Committee, perhaps on an informal basis, so that parliamentarians get an understanding of what the Supreme Court is doing. In the last five years we have consistently, through the Charter of Rights and other laws, given more and more work to the Supreme Court of Canada.

In conclusion, I do disapprove of that part of the Bill. I suggest that Members may want to read the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Burnaby, our justice critic, on September 14, 1987 in this House, as well as the remarks of the Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) who is also a lawyer and spoke in this debate as well. He shared some of his experience in the courts.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Waddell: On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, October 22, 1987, consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan that Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House last considered Bill C-74, there were seven minutes remaining in the period of questions and comments following the remarks of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Hon. Members who wish to continue with questions and comments now have the floor.

[English]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I would like to respond to the question put to me yesterday by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) as reported at page 10300 of Hansard. The Member seemed upset that I had not mentioned in my speech the Canada-U.S. agreement with regard to the chemical dump along the American side of the Niagara River. It is indeed a very important environmental concern.

However, it is also important to draw to the attention of the House that it was a former Liberal Government that started negotiations with the American Government to try to find a solution to this environmental concern. In October, 1984, after many months of negotiations, the Canada-U.S. Niagara River Toxic Committee published its report. Three years have passed since then. This is a plan on paper only with no funding from either side. There has been very little pressure on the part of Canada to have the Americans clean up the pollution on their side of the Niagara River. I am still concerned that there have not been any real, concrete measures taken at this time. That is what I was trying to explain in my speech yesterday.

• (1040)

We also know that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has had some difficulties either with Treasury Board or the estimates of his own department. Over the years his department has been subject to cuts. There has been a cut-back of 106 person-years and in three years the Tory Government has removed $64 million in spending power, so his departmental estimates have not kept up with inflation.

We know that the cut-back in person-years has had an effect on pollution studies and control of toxic substances which may find their way into the food chain. For example, one scientist has been assigned to the Niagara study. I do not believe that is sufficient for a very urgent and important problem that must be resolved.

Yesterday, my hon. friend expressed surprise at my not giving him and his Government all the kudos he would like. I had to be somewhat apprehensive about—

[Translation]

—the political will and indeed the decision-making power of this Government to take action so that the Niagara River, like the St. Clair River and all others which flow in this country—yesterday I mentioned the Ottawa River—and which are under stress, if I may put it that way, toxic stress . . . As far as I am concerned, Madam Speaker, we must take action immediately, make the necessary appropriations, hire the required staff and scientists and provide them with whatever tools they need to clean up our rivers and settle the problem.

[English]

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to Bill C-74 today. I believe this Bill is the most important piece of federal environmental protection legislation to come before the House in the last 10 years.

Today, as we wind down second reading, I propose that we get back to what really matters in this debate, the purpose of Bill C-74 and what it will do for Canada and Canadians.

During this debate the House has heard a number of unfounded observations on the part of the Opposition. Before proceeding to rebut some of those criticisms I want to set the record straight as to the objectives and purposes of this Bill. Canadians are anxiously waiting for the passage of this legislation in order that we may get on with the job of better protecting our environment. As far as protection of our environment is concerned, this Government subscribes to the concept of "anticipate and prevent". As a result of Canada's failure in the past to enhance the principle of prevention, we all know too well that problems have come back to haunt us.

One such threat has become a component of our daily life, toxic chemicals. We live in a global chemical society. We plow chemicals into our fields, release them into the air, treat our food with them, wear them, and use them in thousands of products. Each day Canadians enjoy a quality of life enhanced by but dependent on the use of chemicals. Life without chemicals has become virtually impossible, perhaps unthinkable. The benefits to Canadians from chemicals are significant. They are also immediate. However, our short term benefits are creating a long term legacy of continuing problems. We must be sure that we do not make decisions today that cause problems for tomorrow's generations.

Bill C-74 also concerns protecting the Canadian environment from damage before the fact. The Canadian environmental protection legislation provides for an investigation to determine the potential impact of a new substance before it enters the Canadian commerce. Without the new Act, Canadians would continue to be at risk from toxic chemicals. Biologically engineered substances would still pose a threat until an indisputable case of environmental or human damage could be demonstrated. This could be years after the release of the substance into our environment. The Canadian Environmental Protection Act is designed to prevent another PCB or chlorofluorocarbon problem in this country.

Bill C-74 provides greater information gathering powers for the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). It will be possible for the Minister to obtain data on other uses of a substance, precautions for safe handling, recommended methods of disposal, and safety measures to be taken in case of an accident. He will be able to assess whether a substance new to Canada or one already existing in Canadian commerce is toxic or may become toxic. The Minister may collect data and conduct investigations on the nature of that substance as well. He may seek out the effect of its presence on the environment, on human life and health, as well as the extent to which the substance can become dispersed and will persist in the environment.

In addition, the Minister may collect data on the ability of the substance to become incorporated into biological tissue and cause biological change, important for both environmental and health reasons. He may additionally investigate methods of controlling the presence of the substance in the environment and methods for testing the effects of its presence.

These powers to gather information feed into all important aspects of Bill C-74 that allow control of all aspects of the life cycle of toxic substances, from development through manufacture or importation, transport, distribution, storage and use, their release to the environment as emissions at various stages of the life cycle, and their ultimate disposal as waste.

Bill C-74 goes even further in its provision for environmental controls. The responsibilities of the various federal bodies are also underscored in this piece of legislation. It allows for adoption of regulations governing federal works and to protect federal lands and water where not currently provided for. In keeping with the federal team approach to protection of our environment, federal departments and agencies are looking at environmental considerations in their program development. They are scanning legislation to see where there are gaps that the Canadian environmental protection Bill can plug successfully.

The Government of Canada intends to set the example for other Canadian jurisdictions. In keeping with the concept of "anticipate and prevent", the new Act will require the Minister of the Environment to create environmental quality objectives and guidelines as well as guidelines for the release of substances and codes of practice. The objectives, guidelines and codes will relate to recycling, reusing, treating, storing, disposing of and reducing the release of substances. It is in this area that the Government of Canada is counting on extensive co-operation with provincial and territorial governments and with industry. This is in keeping with the traditional partnership and consultative approach that Environment Canada has used almost since its creation as a department about 15 years ago.

In the area of Canada's international commitment, Bill C-74 contains provisions to control sources of air pollution in Canada where a violation of an international agreement would result. This would also be applicable where air pollution affects another country and reciprocal legislation exists to control the sources of that pollution.

Provisions under the current Ocean Dumping Control Act will be incorporated into the Bill. These provisions will allow issuance of permits to control dumping at sea from ships, barges, aircraft and man-made structures, excluding normal discharges from offshore energy facilities. This will maintain Canada's federal domestic legislation that fulfills our international commitments under the London Dumping Convention. There are also provisions incorporated from the Canada Water Act for the control of nutrients such as phosphates water conditioners or cleaning products. Natural amounts of nutrients such as phosphates that enter the environment are not toxic. However, excessive amounts of nutrients can interfere with the use of fresh water by humans, animals, fish and plants.

One very important component of Bill C-74 is the provision allowing for agreements to be signed with the provincial and territorial governments for administration of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. There has already been preliminary discussions with provinces and territories, individually and among federal and provincial environment Ministers, at meetings of the Canadian Council for Resource and Environment Ministers.

There have been suggestions in the House that the federal Government is going to use these agreements to abandon the field, so to speak, as far as enforcement of the Environmental Protection Act is concerned. An essential feature of any agreement signed with the province or territory will be the enforcement and compliance policy for the Act. Such a document was released in draft form for public consultation on June 26 of this year. Provinces and territories that sign agreements for administration of the new legislation will be required to adhere to that policy. These agreements, in order to ensure nationally consistent enforcement, will also spell out procedures for audit and evaluation of enforcement and compliance activities under the Act.

During the debate, it has also been stated that each province has been given a veto over the application of the Act in its jurisdiction if the province feels it has comparable legislation. This is simply not the case. No provision of Bill C-74 gives any veto to provinces or territories. Under Canada's Constitution, the provinces, of course, do have responsibilities to protect the environment. In that regard, the Minister must offer to consult with them on proposed regulations that would govern releases of toxic substances to the environment.

We must also offer to consult with provinces on regulation development in such areas as manufacturing, commercial and processing activities giving rise to these releases, and storage, display, handling, transport and disposal of toxic substances. But I think this is simply a confirmation in legislation of the manner in which this Government conducts its business, that is, with extensive consultation. However, a requirement to consult does not imply a provincial veto. The Government of Canada still retains the right to act to protect the environment.

We have heard some disappointment expressed that pesticides and chemicals used in foods are not included in the proposed Bill. There is currently in place both federal legislation and a regulatory system for pesticides under the Pest Control Products Act administered by Agriculture Canada. That Act provides for control over the manufacture, storage, display, labelling, distribution and use of pesticides in this country. The Environmental Protection Act is designed to complement the Pest Control Products Act and not to make it redundant. Therefore, in areas where the substance is not regulated under other Acts, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act will apply. For example, if the pesticide was being manufactured or imported for use as a flame retardant, Bill C-74 would apply.

The same would be true if the pesticide appeared on the list of substances requiring pre-export notification to a receiving country. Where this is a matter of toxic affluence from pesticides, a leak or spill, or toxic pesticide wastes which are not dealt with specifically in the Pest Control Products Act, a regulation could be made under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. As well, of course, appropriate provincial legislation may come into play.

While pesticides remain under the Pest Control Products Act, this does not mean that Environment Canada has no role to play in this field. In addition, Environment Canada, like the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, acts as a technical adviser to Agriculture Canada in the registration process. Environment is also involved in monitoring the fate of pesticides in the environment, of course.

The Minister of the Environment considers his Department's role in the pesticides area so important that he has secured and allocated seven additional person-years and yearly funds of $3.2 million to ensure complete and comprehensive environmental evaluations of pesticide products. His Department's research and monitoring program, which will provide necessary environmental data to undertake regulatory evaluation of pesticides, began in 1986 and is making, I understand, all hope for progress.

Another criticism of the Bill is the omission of a statement which would prohibit the export of substances banned in Canada. This Bill calls for compulsory notification for export of regulated substances. This is consistent with requirements of the United Nations Environment Program and with criteria laid down by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, both endorsed by this country.

We will, of course, require that export of banned or regulated substances be preceded by compulsory notification of the receiving country on the occasion of the first export shipment. It will then be up to the receiving country to determine compliance with its laws.

While the export of these substances will not currently be prohibited under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, Canada could take that step because the proposed Act does allow the making of regulations for the total, partial or conditional export of a substance or product containing that substance. But we should not forget that the banning or restriction of a substance in Canada would have to be done under the Act after taking into account affects on our environment or the health of our residents.

The same environmental conditions and health factors might not come into play in countries with completely different climates, vegetation, pest and parasitic problems, and the like. Those countries may have a use, even a need, for the very substance which Canada has chosen to restrict or ban in this country under our Environmental Protection Act. It is for this reason that an outright prohibition of the exported substances banned or restricted in Canada does not appear in Bill C-74.

Several speakers have decried the absence of an Environmental bill of rights for all Canadians. The rights of individuals have been addressed in this Bill. There is extensive opportunity for public participation and enforcement of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. For instance, a person subject to loss or damage as a result of an action prohibited by the statute has the right to seek an injunction in the courts to stop or prevent the action. Any 12 persons can petition the Minister to investigate an alleged offence. The Minister has an obligation to report his findings.

When reporting to an inspector or other official the alleged release, leaked, spilled, dumping, and so on, of a substance to the environment, a person has the right to have his or her identity kept confidential. Individuals may petition the Minister to have a substance included on the list of priority substances to be studied and the Minister must respond with his decision.

A person may appeal a decision not to regulate a substance as toxic and that appeal will be considered by a board of review. Individuals will have the opportunity to appear before boards of review established under the Act and a board of review will be empowered to award costs to those appearing before it.

One element requested for inclusion in an environmental bill of rights, namely, standing and access to the courts, is a right already enjoyed by Canadians. Private individuals have the right to prosecute federal summary conviction offences.

Madam Speaker, I recognize my time has expired—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I regret I have to interrupt the Hon. Member.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

PROTECTION OF INDIGENOUS PEOPLES—REVISION OF CONVENTION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the 152 member states of the International Labour Organization, the ILO, are in the process of revising a Convention which was approved 30 years ago concerning the protection of indigenous peoples in independent countries. The Government of Canada must send to the ILO by October 31 its response to the proposed revisions. Although the deadline is just a week away, and although the ILO directed its member states to ensure the participation of their indigenous peoples in the revision process, so far Canada has refused to share its draft response with indigenous peoples here.

In view of the importance of this Convention to the indigenous peoples of Canada—it is the only existing international Convention providing for their protection in the area of labour relations, land use and ownership, and social and cultural rights—and the opportunity this process of revision offers Canada to play a leading role internationally, I request the Government to provide a text to the indigenous peoples immediately so that their views can be incorporated into Canada's response.

SHIPBUILDING

PORT WELLER DRY DOCKS—AWARDING OF REFIT CONTRACT URGED

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, for years the shipbuilders of Canada have been crying out for a national shipbuilding strategy. They desperately need policies to encourage a sourcing of vessels at home.

There is high demand for Atlantic fishing trawlers, and there are military requirements of a big and small nature. There is the ongoing replacement and the expansion of the Canadian Coast Guard.

Yards have been restructured, improved to meet that demand, some with federal government assistance and some without. Such rationalization or restructuring does not in itself bring in new business. Much of it is by way of allocation. The Government must recognize the Canada-wide employment needs and technical development opportunities that shipbuilding and its allied industries bring.

Port Weller Dry Docks in St. Catharines, the last Canadian shipbuilding yard on the Great Lakes, is reduced to a skeleton staff. Hundreds of dry dock workers are on layoff. This is at a time when a press report indicates that an Atlantic seaboard yard speaks of full employment and orders not yet begun.

It is a timely opportunity for the Government to demonstrate sensitivity to the region of Niagara and award the mid-life refit of the Ontario-based Coast Guard vessel Simcoe to the Port Weller yard now.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR SUBMARINES—CALL FOR PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, recent newspaper stories indicate that the Government is proceeding as rapidly as possible to place orders for nuclear-attack submarines. The Department of National Defence knows that if these orders are not placed before the next election they never will be placed.

Nuclear-attack submarines mark a dangerous shift in Canadian policy. No one really believes that their primary purpose is to patrol our coastline and protect Canadian sovereignty. In today's world, nuclear-attack submarines make sense only if they are part of the Pentagon's Maritime Strategy.

That Maritime Strategy of the Pentagon calls for the rapid escalation of the use of force in any crisis between the two superpowers. Our participation in that strategy will make war more likely, not less likely.

I therefore call on the Government to hold public hearings on its defence White Paper tabled several months ago and to put the purchase of nuclear-attack submarines on hold until those hearings are finished.

TRADE

SOVIET UNION—IRAN OIL DEAL

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Tass news agency has recently reported that the Soviet Union has agreed to import five million tonnes of crude oil from Iran in exchange for two million tonnes of refined product. Using the facilities of the New York Mercantile Exchange, I calculate that five million tonnes of crude could be exchanged for in excess of four million tonnes of refined product.

Sir, do these observations point to the innate superiority of free market versus socialist ways of doing business, or just to the fact that the Soviets are not at all adverse to using 19th century imperialist techniques to exploit a customer or supplier who is at their mercy?

What is not at question is that the Iranians would be far better off were they to cease their senseless war with Iraq and rejoin the civilized world.

HOUSING

URGENT NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO TACKLE PROBLEMS OF HOMELESS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, in 1986 100,000 Canadians in this country were at some time without shelter. What is even more disturbing is the steadily increasing number of young people, women and families who have no place to go.

There are three major reasons for this phenomenon: Lack of income, the large number of psychiatric patients who are released from hospitals, and the lack of affordable housing.

The Conservative Government is proud of the fact that Canada's economy is in good shape. However, the gap between rich and poor is steadily increasing, while the Conservatives do nothing for the homeless and those with substandard accommodation. In a country as rich as Canada, with such a severe climate, we cannot tolerate citizens being homeless. That is why I invite all Canadians to sign the petitions that are now being circulated. These petitions ask the Government to take steps immediately to deal with this heart-rending situation.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—CALL FOR ENDORSATION BY NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, here is what one Canadian organization has to say about free trade:

> Expansion of our trade with any and all countries willing to trade on a fair and equitable basis will benefit both ourselves and them. Careful planning is needed to adjust our production to the trade requirements of a fully employed economy. Tariffs are out-moded patchwork attempts to protect domestic industry; they restrict trade while giving less and less protection to the home industry. Their growth is an inevitable result of an economy that tolerates unemployment. Only through a positive approach can Canada enjoy the benefits of expanded trade without hardship to specific groups and communities.

Who said that? Why, it is Resolution B.2.1 from the NDP blueprint "Resolutions Reference". According to the NDP, this resolution was "still current" as of last October. It has remained on the books unchanged since the NDP's founding convention in 1961.

I urge the NDP to forget about Bob White, Shirley Carr, and the other irresponsible fear mongers. I urge the NDP to listen to its own advice and endorse the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on August 29, 1983, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was first elected as a Member of Parliament representing constituents in Central Nova in my home Province of Nova Scotia. He promised jobs, jobs, jobs, for the people of Central Nova. Well, they did not get the jobs, jobs, jobs, or anything else. Once again we see the Prime Minister telling people what they want to hear and then not delivering the goods.

The Prime Minister of Canada is a coward. This weekend he was supposed to be—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that in Statements by Members it is a tradition, and a firm one, that they are not to be used to attack personally any Hon. Member of this Chamber.

An Hon. Member: Especially when he is not here.

Mr. Speaker: It does not matter whether they are here or not.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

POPULATION OF SEPT-ÎLES—ATTITUDE OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, this week we heard that in Sept-Îles, union and municipal authorities and the Chamber of Commerce met in a way that was unprecedented to organize a massive demonstration against their Member of Parliament, who also happens to be the Prime Minister of Canada, and his failure to take measures to deal with the economic recession in their community.

We also heard that despite his promises, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has once again cancelled his plans to visit the riding of Central Nova which he represented before the 1984 election. Instead, he will meet with 500 major financial backers of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Sept-Îles are right to protest against an unemployment rate of 32 per cent. I will be there to join in the demonstration on October 31. But I wonder what kind of country this is, when our Prime Minister ignores the people who sent him to Parliament and whom he represents as a Member of Parliament. He only has time for the financial backers, the big corporations, and not for the average citizen in this country.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON WESTERN ECONOMY

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the Canada-U.S. trade agreement is good news for Saskatchewan and the West. The agreement takes an important step toward ending the insane global grain wars as both countries seek a level playing field in North American grain subsidies and work together in global negotiations.

Red meat producers will gain exemption from U.S. meat import laws. Canadian cattlemen will no longer be blind-sided by American disputes with third countries.

The agreement will end the protectionist threat against our energy exports. Exciting new opportunities will be created for western development in oil, natural gas, hydro, and uranium. Reduced tariffs will cause consumer prices to fall. Our production costs will be lower, and our ability to add value will be improved—a key factor in western diversification.

Our future lies in the prosperity of free trade, not in the poverty of protectionism. Consumers, energy producers, grain farmers, cattlemen and pork producers all stand to gain through this historic initiative.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON ROLE OF UNITED CHURCH

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in a free and democratic society it is extremely disturbing to see the blatant attack by Canada's Trade Minister on the United Church of Canada. The attack came in the form of a threat to the church and its members for taking a stand in opposition to the Mulroney free trade deal. The Minister attempts to muzzle the United Church by inferring that the advertisement placed in newspapers on Wednesday might be misleading and that the Government might investigate it.

Here we have a Government that uses the tax dollars of all Canadians to pay Ambassador Reisman to openly attack the duly elected opposition Parties, particularly the NDP; spends $12 million, at least, of taxpayers' dollars to promote Conservative policies on the Mulroney free trade deal; and then has the gall to attack the United Church and threaten its membership for speaking out for their view of Canada.

At this very moment the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is meeting privately behind closed doors with major donors to the Conservative Party's coffers. It might well be appropriate to investigate just how many taxpayers' dollars are being spent on organization and travel by the Prime Minister to this meeting, obtain the resignation forthwith of Ambassador Reisman for using taxpayers' dollars to attack duly elected MPs, and for the Government to apologize forthwith to the United Church for its unprecedented attack on the church's right to a democratic voice in the affairs of our nation.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

TARNISHING OF MEMORY OF THE LATE BILLY BISHOP, V.C

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the memory of Billy Bishop, one of Canada's greatest heroes, continues to be tarnished by the National Film Board's movie, The Kid who Couldn't Miss.

For many years Billy Bishop's deeds during the First World War have been a source of pride and inspiration for all Canadians, and they have been well documented by reliable sources such as the British War Office, and the official historian of the Canadian Department of National Defence.

The Billy Bishop story speaks for itself: 72 confirmed enemy planes shot down, 25 of which were during a 10-day period. Bishop was awarded the Victoria Cross for an individual attack on a German airfield. His other decorations include the Companion of the Bath, two Distinguished Service Orders, the Military Cross, and the Distinguished Flying Cross. He continued to serve Canada in the Second World War, being a model and an inspiration for service personnel.

The National Film Board initially labelled this film a "documentary", yet it is based on unreliable, and at best, circumstantial evidence. Over $400,000 of taxpayers' money has been spent on a project that does not even include references to accredited archives.

I urge, Mr. Speaker, that this wrong be redressed and that the memory of Billy Bishop receive the honour and respect that it deserves.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

INFLUENCE OF FRANCOPHONES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, this morning, the title of an article by Michel Vastel published in the newspaper Le Devoir says: "French power in the Conservative Party a shadow of former self". I agree with Mr. Vastel, who lists a series of projects Quebecers are still waiting for. Hon. Members will recall the Picard Report, Pichette Reports no. 1 and no. 2 from Montreal East, the paper mill in Matane, the Sept-Îles question, the banking centre, the space agency, the Old Port of Montreal, and the shipyards. All these projects are on the backburner, which clearly shows that the Conservative Ministers and Members from Quebec have no clout in this Conservative Government. This becomes very clear when we consider that the Conservative caucus is opposed to a tax on food, and the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are maintaining their option to tax the bread, milk and butter of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, what Mr. Vastel says is so true: French power in the Conservative Party is dead.

EDUCATION

NATIONAL FORUM ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to draw the attention of the House to the fact that National Universities Week is being celebrated beginning today until November 1. The dates are particularly auspicious in that the National Forum on Post-Secondary Education is starting in Saskatoon on Sunday.

There could be no better time than the kick-off of Universities Week to take a moment to examine the Canadian university scene. The 70 degree-granting universities in Canada range in size from enrollments of a few hundred to tens of thousands of students. I am particularly proud of the fact that two such institutions are located in my constituency, the Atlantic Baptist College and Université de Moncton, which is the only French-speaking university outside the Province of Quebec.

I am particularly pleased that the federal Government and the provinces are joining with other interested sectors at the National Forum to consider the future of our universities and colleges as we approach the 21st century, and to consider issues of vital importance to higher education in Canada. There will be many challenges ahead for our universities, but they are well equipped to respond to them and grasp the resulting opportunities.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

ELIGIBILITY FOR DISABILITY BENEFIT—WIDER DISTRIBUTION OF INFORMATION URGED

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, many Canadians are not aware of the stringent requirements that have to be met in order to qualify for a disability benefit under the Canada Pension Plan. In fact, the applicant has to be practically comatose to become eligible. Once total disability has been proven, the next obstacle to be overcome is the earnings contribution formula.

The claimant is required to have had five years of earnings and contributions to the plan during the 10-year period immediately prior to the date that the application is made. Those requirements are unfair, and many individuals have been denied benefits simply because they were unaware that those provisions existed.

I call upon the Government to consider providing this information to every individual who applies for or is in receipt of sickness benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act. The same information could also be provided to every member of the medical profession to make them aware of it.

Finally, the Government should extend the eligibility rules in order that Canada's disabled can receive the benefits that they believed they were paying for.

HISTORIC EVENTS

THIRTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF HUNGARIAN REVOLUTION

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, today marks the thirty-first anniversary of the 1956 Hungarian Revolution. This is a special occasion for Canadians of Hungarian origin, and for all Canadians who support the cause of freedom.

The valiant revolution began on October 23, 1956, and for a brief moment in history the Hungarian people won their freedom and independence. Factory workers and students joined together to demand the withdrawal of Soviet troops from their country. The demonstrations were, at first, peaceful. But when the political police, the AVH, began to fire on demonstrators, there was no turning the tide of a national uprising. By October 28, the battle for independence was won, and peace and order were re-established.

Armed Soviet intervention crushed that independence but a few days later. Many men and women lost their lives in this battle to establish freedom and independence for Hungary. It is appropriate that Canada, as a bastion of democracy, pay tribute today to those brave individuals who gave their lives for this noble cause.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—U.S. TRADE REMEDY LAWS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

On March 13 of this year the Minister for International Trade told CTV that the objective of any trade agreement, "would be the elimination of countervail by both countries".

In a quote in the Wall Street Journal on April 3 of this year, the Prime Minister was reported to have said to a group of reporters, "U.S. trade remedy laws cannot apply to Canada. Period".

Yesterday Canada's chief trade negotiator, Simon Reisman, is quoted in the daily press as stating, "It is just plain dumb." "—that this agreement should provide us with an exemption from American trade remedy laws is just the silliest proposition I have ever heard".

In effect, the chief trade negotiator for our country is calling the views of the Prime Minister of Canada, and the Minister for International Trade "silly" and "dumb". He has stated that he never negotiated an exemption from countervail or trade remedy law.

The main purpose of the Government, apparently, and those who support this agreement, was to obtain an exemption from U.S. protectionism, namely, from U.S. trade remedy laws. Why did the Prime Minister of Canada say that this would be the result of the agreement? Why does the Prime Minister of Canada continue to say we are exempt from U.S. protectionism while his chief trade negotiator says it is simply not so?

• (1120)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, maybe I could draw the attention of the Hon. Member to Item D, Application of this Arrangement on Page 21, where it says:

> This arrangement shall be in effect for five years pending the development of a substitute system of laws in both countries for anti-dumping and countervailing duties.

That is the objective of the free trade agreement. We have set in place a process to achieve the substitute system and that will be in place as the discussions continue between the countries.

UNITED STATES SUBSIDIZED GRAIN EXPORTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that citation contradicts not only the Prime Minister but also the chief trade negotiator for different reasons. The agreement signed by the two Governments will apply, through this binational review panel, American trade law and American trade practice to Canadian exports into the American market. Nothing has changed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Brilliant, John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That happens to be the fact and that was not the reason given for this agreement by the Prime Minister of Canada.

Negotiations over the next five or seven years on subsidies and the other definitions under American trade law may or may not succeed. At the moment we have no exemption from American trade law, and that is admitted by the chief trade negotiator.

I have another quote for the Minister of Finance or the Deputy Prime Minister. On March 16 of this year, the Prime Minister in the debate in the House of Commons on trade had this to say as quoted in Hansard:

> Let me turn to the area of agriculture. Our goal is straightforward. It is to help Canadian farmers by . . . ending the deeply destructive subsidization of exports . . . our desires must be respected and our wishes accommodated. Otherwise, there will be no deal.

That was the undertaking of the Prime Minister given to the House of Commons.

On October 15 the United States announced a subsidized export grain deal with the Soviet Union. Yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs proved so incompetent that he did not even know about it. The Prime Minister said there would be no deal if the United States continued to subsidize farm exports into foreign markets. The United States continues to subsidize grain exports to foreign markets. If this is so, why the deal with the United States?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there were two quite distinct questions in that long presentation by the Leader of the Opposition. I will answer one. If I have the time, I will answer the second.

The first one relates to the application of the trade remedy laws of each country. What I think I heard the Leader of the Opposition say is that he would prefer that we, by implication, just remove our trade remedy laws and let the United States have total access to this country without countervail and without any anti-dumping laws during this five year period during which we will be developing new rules. I think that would be the stupidest thing for this country to consider doing.

If we had done that, I can absolutely assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition would be up on his feet asking: "Why did you do this? Why have you opened up the Canadian market for pillorying by the United States without any protection for Canadian business?"

That is why the existing laws will be kept in place until the new rules are in place.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the principal reason this Government said it sought the deal with the United States was to gain exemption from American protectionism. The chief trade negotiator now admits categorically that there is no such exemption because American countervail, American trade remedy laws existing in future will continue to apply. The Government has not achieved secure access to the American market.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to get back to the Deputy Prime Minister. Does he know that yesterday, at the very moment when the Secretary of State for External Affairs was telling me in the House that the United States no longer subsidize wheat export sales, American officials in Washington were announcing a new subsidized sale of wheat, to Yemen this time?

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister—

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yemen?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yemen. The Minister of Justice may not know where that is but there was a straight commitment from the United States.

[Translation]

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister: Just how far can the incompetence of his colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs extend? Just how far can the incompetence of this Government go?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition made that clarification because there has not been confirmation of the United States selling grain to our traditional markets.

The Right Hon. Leader talks about Yemen. In 1981-82 we did not sell anything to Yemen. In 1982-83 we did not sell anything. In 1983-84 we sold 24,000 tonnes. In 1984-85—

Mr. Lapierre: You probably never will.

Mr. Mazankowski: If the hon. backbencher in the Liberal Party wants to answer this question, I will let him do that. I think in the interests of providing the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition with some information and, indeed, all Members of the House, this information should be put on the record.

In 1984-85, Canada sold 118,000 tonnes, in 1985-86 we sold 10,000 tonnes and in 1986-87 we sold 21,000 tonnes. I cite those figures because it is hard to imagine that Yemen could be considered one of our traditional major customers.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are thinking of Yeoman, Saskatchewan.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: The Leader of the Opposition should not try to exaggerate the situation. I know he wants to because he is trying to get his fingers into the agricultural pot, but he is having a lot of difficulty.

UNITED STATES EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM—SALE OF WHEAT TO YEMEN

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that no new action has been taken under the U.S. Export Enhancement Program. At that precise hour the United States announced a sale of 20,000 tonnes of wheat and wheat flour to Yemen. There was no consultation. The Americans did not come to Canada to consult on the matter. They were prepared to give away one bushel from U.S. stockpiles for every three being sold. Isn't this simply another glaring example of a breach of the agreement signed on free trade? This will continue to drive down prices of grain on the world markets and hurt our Canadian farmers?

When will the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance stand up for Canadians and for Canadian farmers and stop this takeover by the United States which is clearly a breach of the spirit of the agreement signed by the Minister of Finance two weeks ago?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition in its desperation is trying in every way to discredit the merits of the free trade arrangement. By so doing, it is really overstating the case.

Yemen has not been considered as a traditional market for Canada. As a matter of fact, the United States has outsold Canada since 1981-82—the latest figures I have—on a consistent basis. I suppose it is fair to say that the United States would consider Yemen as a traditional customer of its own.

What is important, which the Hon. Member should recognize, is that Canada's share of international world trade has increased from 20 per cent to 24 per cent, thanks to the efforts of the Canadian Wheat Board, thanks to the efforts of the Government, thanks to the efforts of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and of the Secretary of State for External Affairs who have been taking this issue to the world forum, the multilateral discussions, to bring about some sanity and stability to the world grain market. It is more than just a problem between the United States and Canada, it is a world-wide problem of all grain producers and the Hon. Member should recognize that.

• (1130)

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): The Deputy Prime Minister should recognize that the United States Enhancement Program is driving down world prices in grain to the lowest level since the 1930s in real terms.

The night the agreement was signed, Clayton Yeutter told officials of the United States Treasury Department that Canadians did not know what they signed and that in 20 years they will be sucked into the United States economy. With attitudes like that on the part of the United States Secretary of Trade who is the most senior person in this regard, does the Minister of Finance, who also signed that agreement and has already heard what the Secretary of Trade said about him, really believe that the United States will not flout this deal if and after it has been ratified? When will the Minister stand up for the position of Canadians and Canadian farmers under this deal?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think Mr. Yeutter has denied having said that, but let me just comment on this. I have heard this Hon. Member and the Leader of the New Democratic Party making all these outrageous statements indicating that Canada will become totally a part of the United States, that we will become the 51st State and that we will be totally sucked into the U.S. economy.

Surely we can have confidence in this country. We have watched tariffs drop over the last 30 or 40 years and we have seen ourselves become more drawn into the international economy. As we have been drawn into the more integrated nature of the international economy, we have been successful, we have created a better standard of living in Canada, we have created more jobs and more varied jobs, and we have a stronger economy, stronger social programs and a stronger culture.

Why is it that this Hon. Member and the Leader of the New Democratic Party have so little confidence in Canadians, in the gumption of Canadians, in the desire of Canadians to demonstrate that they are Canadians and proud of it? How can they walk away from this sense of confidence in the future of this country?

PROMISE OF FULL AND OPEN DEBATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister but first I would like to remind the Minister of Finance that it was not the Opposition but the Minister himself who said a few years ago that a free trade agreement with the United States would be simplistic and naive. It is interesting how he has changed his mind.

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister concerns the Prime Minister's promise to have a full and open debate on these free trade proposals. On Wednesday he met with an elitist business group in a closed session in Toronto and today he is meeting with a wealthy group of Tory contributors in Halifax in another closed session. Incredibly enough, he has cancelled the scheduled public meeting with the people of Central Nova. Is this what the Conservatives mean by full and open discussion, closed meetings with financial contributors to the Conservative Party?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, once again, and we have seen it day after day, the Leader of the New Democratic Party is making false statements in the House and again he has made another false statement.

Mr. Broadbent: What is the false statement?

Mr. Mazankowski: There is not an open meeting today in Halifax, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: No, it is a closed meeting.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I just committed an egregious error. It is an open meeting and I want to inform—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How much does it cost?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Leader of the Opposition spoke to 3,000 people and I guess it cost $300 to hear him. I do not know if they got their money's worth, but, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETINGS WITH CERTAIN GROUPS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister says it is an open meeting and I am pleased to accept that correction, but he has not denied the other element of criticism that came from the people of Central Nova and from two Members of Parliament on the Conservative side of the House, which is that this is an elitist gathering. In the words of the Hon. Member for Halifax West, access to Government should not be controlled on the basis of income.

The Deputy Prime Minister has not denied that the Prime Minister cancelled the meeting which had been promised for three years and was scheduled for yesterday in Central Nova. I repeat, given the importance of this issue which affects all Canadians, is it appropriate for the Prime Minister to go around speaking to elitist groups that can afford to give $1,000 each to the Conservative Party? Is that what it is about?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the New Democratic Party would agree that that is a rather unfair charge.

Mr. Broadbent: They are your Members who made the charge.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Prime Minister has met with farmers, with union leaders, with women's groups, with people from all walks of society and he will be continuing that process. Due to pressures in Ottawa, particularly with respect to the stock market, Meech Lake, the Commonwealth, and a number of things of that nature, it was necessary to postpone the visit to Central Nova.

I can assure the Hon. Member, since he is interested in this, that the Prime Minister will be visiting Central Nova within the next two to three weeks. In so far as a full parliamentary debate is concerned, there have been discussions among the House leaders to get this document referred to committee so that the committee can study it fully. I understand there have also been discussions with respect to the possibility of a debate in the House. That commitment has been made by the Prime Minister and that commitment will be fulfilled.

REQUEST FOR TELEVISED PARTY LEADERS' DEBATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, given the importance of this issue to the people of Canada, whether they are in Nova Scotia or on the prairies or anywhere else, and given the fact that the central reality of modern society is that the best way for a population to have access to a serious debate is by watching one on television, will the Deputy Prime Minister, on behalf of the Government, undertake now to make a commitment to the House that he will arrange with the television networks of Canada a public debate on this important issue to take place between the Prime Minister of Canada, the Leader of the Opposition, and myself as Leader of the New Democratic Party?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that is a new proposal. The Leader of the New Democratic Party has shifted ground. First he was complaining about the lack of a public debate and a debate within the House of Commons. I think we have satisfied that. He now wants to extend it further.

My sense is that the committee will have an opportunity to travel so that Canadians right across the country will have an opportunity to be fully informed—

Mr. Broadbent: What about a public debate?

Mr. Mazankowski: There is a public debate that goes on here every day and opposition Parties have six opposition days between now and December 10. There is one on Monday. If they want to have a fully televised debate, we can have it in the House of Commons. What has the Hon. Member got against the House of Commons?

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

CENTRAL NOVA—POSTPONEMENT OF PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the lavish $1,000-a-plate dinner in Halifax. I want to tell the Deputy Prime Minister what his colleague from Halifax West has said. He said: "The entire concept of screening people who attend the event strictly on the basis of the amount of money the have is an insulting elitist concept."

• (1140)

Why has the Prime Minister refused to meet with the people of Central Nova who are drastically affected by high unemployment? Why has he betrayed them? Why has he insulted them by not going to Central Nova to meet with them?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I thought I answered that question. The Prime Minister indicated that due to other pressures he was forced to postpone that visit. He will be visiting Central Nova in the very near future.

In so far as the elitist charge is concerned, perhaps the Hon. Member would explain why the Liberal Party charged $300 a plate to hear the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I heard a lot of complaints about people not getting their money's worth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the Minister that the people of Central Nova do not find this insulting behaviour—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: —demonstrated by the Prime Minister to be acceptable at all.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET DELEGATION FROM CENTRAL NOVA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister undertake to the House right now that the Prime Minister will meet today with those people who are travelling from New Glasgow in Central Nova to Halifax and discuss important regional issues affecting their community? Or is he going to continue to break his promises to the people of Central Nova?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, without concurring in the rather unfair and extraordinary comments I can only say this. If the Right Hon. Prime Minister does not meet with those folks today I can assure the Hon. Member that he will meet with them at a later date. He indicated that he will be visiting Central Nova in the next two, three or four weeks.

The Hon. Member should recognize that this has been an extraordinary week. There have been the pressures of the stock market, the Meech Lake speech, and the Commonwealth Conference. The Prime Minister has every intention of visiting Central Nova and he will.

PRIME MINISTER'S PRIORITIES

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister has a problem with scheduling and has to make a choice about whom he is going to meet with, why does he not meet with the people of Central Nova instead of rich contributors to the Tory Party? Hasn't the Prime Minister got his priorities all wrong?

Mr. McDermid: Tell it to the CLC, they are your biggest contributor.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that is a repetition of a question I have answered.

CONDITIONS IN CENTRAL NOVA

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in Trenton, Nova Scotia, in the riding of Central Nova, the unemployment rate is 40 per cent. Over the last year Trenton Car Works closed down putting 2,000 people out of work. Given that fact and the fact that the people of Central Nova desperately need government assistance, why is the Prime Minister not dealing with that problem instead of meeting with Party supporters in Halifax?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first, I do not think it is necessary for the Hon. Member to attempt to represent the people of Central Nova. They have an excellent representative—

Some Hon. Members: Who?

Mr. Mazankowski: —the Hon. Member for Central Nova, the Minister of National Revenue. If the Hon. Member were to look at the facts he would see that a proposal has been put together to revitalize Hawker Siddeley and get it back into operation by providing orders and jobs. An economic development program has been established, as well as a program under the Canadian Jobs Strategy. Notwithstanding the fact that there are some difficulties, clearly action has been taken and the Hon. Minister of National Revenue is representing that area very well.

TRADE

ANNOUNCED SALE OF UNITED STATES SUBSIDIZED WHEAT TO SOVIET UNION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, by way of brief preamble I want to say that the Liberal Party has just put down a motion calling for a debate on the free trade deal. Monday is an Opposition Day and that is when the motion will be debated. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will be opening the debate and we will see whether the Leaders of the other Parties, particularly the Prime Minister, pick up the challenge and take part in that debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Getting back to the matter of the subsidized sale of wheat by the U.S. contrary to the letter and spirit of the free trade agreement, the Deputy Prime Minister said earlier in Question Period: "There has not been confirmation of sales to our traditional markets." Was it not announced on October 15 that the U.S. would be carrying out a subsidized sale of wheat to the Soviet Union? When did Russia cease to be a traditional market for Canadian wheat?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think what I said, to the best of my knowledge and information, was that the U.S. has neither confirmed nor denied such action was taking place. I think the Hon. Member is being somewhat presumptuous.

RELEASE ISSUED BY U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand an official release from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Foreign Agricultural Service, with the dateline of Washington, October 15. It says:

> George J. Pope, acting general sales manager for the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Foreign Agricultural Service, today announced that the Commodity Credit Corporation has accepted a bid for an export bonus to cover a sale of U.S. wheat to the Soviet Union.

What I said has been confirmed by the U.S. Why did the Deputy Prime Minister not know about this? Why is he trying to cover up the fact that contrary to the letter and spirit of the free trade agreement the U.S. is selling subsidized wheat to the Soviet Union? Why does he not know about it? Why does he not admit it? Or is there a secret side deal to let the U.S. move into our markets while Canada, under a weak Government, backs out?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there are no secret side deals or hidden agendas. If the Hon. Member is referring to the special 65,000 tonne sale to Russia which was a quality controlled shipment in order to do further testing, I will acknowledge that sale may have been made. However, 65,000 tonnes are just a drop in the bucket of grain sales. If that is what the Hon. Member is referring to, then he is really stretching again.

He talks about credibility and trust. I was around here when the Hon. Member was in opposition and campaigned in the 1980 election. He made the profound statement then that if the Liberals ever formed the Government and interest rates went up, he would resign.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Resign, Herb.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yet he is still around. He served that Government and he is still around. I guess that is why we call him "Amazing Gray".

Some Hon. Members: Resign, Herb!

Mr. McDermid: They went up to 23 per cent, Herb.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, if we can stop fighting past elections, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Throughout negotiations with the U.S. both Governments kept on saying that U.S. Congressmen would have to vote yes or no on the trade treaty. That would stop Congress from making changes to help U.S. special interest groups.

Will the Minister confirm what press reports now say, that the Senate Rules Committee has ruled that amendments will be possible to cut back Canadian access to maritime shipping? In short, the U.S. is once more changing the rules after the game.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let us be quite clear on this. The fast-track proposal provides that on January 2, I think it is, legislation will be put forward by the President which will be voted either up or down without amendment. That is what we have been saying all along and that still stands.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, that may be what the Government says but it is not what the Senate Rules Committee or what representatives of both the House and the Senate are saying today. The Minister should be aware of that fact and doing something about it.

CANADIAN MARITIME INTERESTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): So I should like to ask this question: What must be done? What is he going to do to object to this major change which might damage Canada's maritime interests?

• (1150)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I responded to that question. We have a difference of opinion. The Hon. Member's second question shows that his interpretation is different from my interpretation.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR DETAILS ON SEPT-ÎLES AND MR. KEITH MORGAN

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wonder to whom I should direct my question. I am told that the Government has gone on strike or on tour. Ironically enough, Mr. Speaker, the former Member for Central Nova must go into hiding, the former Member for Manicouagan would rather not go anywhere near Sept-Îles, and he is now considering running in Charlevoix. Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate why the Prime Minister is so anxious to cover his tracks. As a matter of fact, acting Member for Manicouagan Keith Morgan told the Canadian Press that Sept-Îles residents had not done their duty by failing to submit real concrete projects on which they might get to work. The residents of Sept-Îles have been asked to stop waiting for hand-outs and expecting ready-made solutions to everything.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Sept-Îles have prepared a file this thick, they met with the Prime Minister on a number of occasions, officials of the Prime Minister's Office, several Ministers, including the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. How is it that—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Lapierre: I ask the Minister of Finance or whomever is responsible on the other side, if they know, whether someone like Mr. Keith Morgan was representing the Prime Minister when he spoke to the press. Otherwise, will he be sent packing immediately because he insulted the people of Sept-Îles?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology responded quite clearly to that question yesterday or Wednesday in the House. He said that he is meeting with representatives of Sept-Îles, that there are plans under consideration for an economic proposal for the North Shore, and that the announcements flowing from those discussions will be made at a very early date.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT GIVE IMMEDIATE AND FINAL ANSWER TO PEOPLE OF SEPT-ÎLES

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, How can the Minister of Finance possibly claim this will be done at a very early date? The people of Sept-Îles met with the Prime Minister on March 24, 1986, December 3, 1986, March 26, 1987, May 4, 1987 and September 21, 1987, after various Government Ministers had promised them a quick response. I think they now have every right to be impatient.

This is what I want to ask the Minister of Finance: Since we cannot believe the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion when he promises quick answers—remember Sept-Îles, Matane, the Picard report, the space agency!—Could the Minister of Finance do his duty and give the people of Sept-Îles a final and immediate answer so they will not have to organize a demonstration to make you see reason?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hate to knock the Hon. Member off track, but it has been announced that there has been an offer made on Matane.

Mr. Lapierre: You blew it and you know it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member said that no action was taken on it. The proposal has already been made.

The Hon. Member is talking about jobs in Quebec. Maybe he should speak to the Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie and ask him why he is supporting quick action on Bill C-22 to get pharmaceutical jobs in Montreal. Why is the Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie writing letters and copying them to the Leader of the Opposition? The Leader of the Opposition is weaseling out of his responsibility to run his Party and get the Senators—

Mr. Ouellet: You're all wet.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —from Quebec to get the job done.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—U.S. EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Deputy Prime Minister I will direct my question to the Minister of Finance. It is with regard to the free trade agreement. On October 5, the day the agreement was tabled in the House of Commons, the Minister of Agriculture was commenting on the U.S. subsidies and grain wars. He said:

> There is a commitment to consult with us prior to extending the Export Enhancement Program into our traditional markets.

As of November 1 the budget of the U.S. subsidy programs will be more than tripled. Since July 30 the U.S. has moved with more initiative into several traditional Canadian markets such as China, the Soviet Union, and Brazil.

Was there any consultation with Canada before the budget was tripled and these new American initiatives were taken? If there was consultation, why is the Government so ineffective at putting forward the case of Canadian farmers and Canadian people?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that question is just a repetition of previous questions. The Government has been extremely effective in building up the market share of Canadian wheat producers—

Mr. Broadbent: By reducing the price of wheat.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —at a time when other countries are not doing that job. We have been able to increase our participation from something like 20 per cent to 24 per cent. Those numbers are in Hansard and I think the Member understands them.

We have been effective. There have been consultations with the United States on this and they will continue as a result of this agreement.

There are things in this agreement to protect Canadian agriculture and gain access to United States agricultural markets. The red meat sector in western Canada would see this as an enormous benefit to its industry.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have all the figures here. I know that we have kept our market share, but at what price? We now have a lower price than we have had in real terms since the 1930s in order to protect that market share.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, was the Minister of Agriculture telling the House of Commons the truth when he said on October 5 that there is a commitment by the United States "to consult with us prior to extending the Export Enhancement Program into our traditional markets"? I want to know whether the Americans made that commitment.

I want to know whether that agreement really means that the Americans cannot introduce any new Export Enhancement Programs or that they can use the existing program, triple or quadruple the budget, and take away Canadian markets?

What does that commitment mean, if anything at all, for the farmers of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I heard the Hon. Member say that we have increased our market share. I am glad that he acknowledges that.

Mr. Nystrom: We all know that, but at what price?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): He then says "at what price". We do not control the price. The price is controlled by the international market and we have—

Mr. Broadbent: American subsidies.

Mr. Nystrom: Subsidies, Mike.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —made many appeals in international fora as well as on a bilateral basis with the United States.

At the same time we have increased substantially the amount of support for the grain and oil seed sector in order to protect our farmers from the acts of other countries.

With regard to the specific question, the Hon. Member must realize that that is an international program. It does not relate directly to Canada. We cannot control that program directly as a result of a free trade agreement.

We have, however, received the commitment of the United States to take into account the export interests of the other party in the use of any export subsidy on agricultural goods exported to third countries. We are consulting with the Americans on that and will continue to consult. We will hold them to that agreement.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CRIMINAL INJURIES COMPENSATION PROGRAM—FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and is with regard to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Program. Innocent victims of violent crime should have assistance to help them restore some semblance of normalcy to their lives. The Minister knows that assistance can come in the form of support groups and professional counselling.

Given the importance of that assistance to the innocent victims of violent crime, can the Minister tell the House what his plans are for funding of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Program?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for that question. He has long had an interest in victims' rights, not only in Saskatchewan but as a Member of Parliament.

I have been in communication with my provincial counterparts with regard to the federal contribution to crime compensation programs across the country. I hope to be in a position soon to announce the level of funding which I am sure will be well received by Members of Parliament and the provinces.

The way in which we treat victims of crimes is an area which has been neglected for too long. I intend to correct that situation.

FREE TRADE

REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF CERTAIN GROUPS OF WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, the Minister admitted he had sacrificed jobs in the textile, clothing and footwear industry. As I said yesterday, the Minister and the Government are to be commended for protecting workers in the beer industry.

However, I met with workers in the rubber and plastics industry, and they would like to know why the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister of the Conservative Government did not make the same effort and let the Free Trade Agreement protect these 86,000 workers in Canada, 22,000 of whom work in Quebec. We know from a report that was published in Montreal that, initially, 10,000 jobs will be lost, and that workers in the rubber and plastics industry would be among the victims. I ask the Minister of Finance why, when the agreement was being negotiated, he preferred not to protect those workers although he did protect workers in the beer industry.

• (1200)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is drawing unfair conclusions as to the effects of the agreement. Second, he distorted what I said in response to a question yesterday in relation to the textile and footwear industries. I did not say that. In fact, from from it. I said the opposite. I said there are representatives of the footwear industry, as an example, who are looking at this as a major opportunity under the free trade agreement with the United States, providing them with a tremendous opportunity to sell into a market of 260 million people instead of just 25 million people. Surely that is an opportunity for an industry that will create jobs.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF ELECTRICAL INDUSTRY WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister. He forgot, or purposely omitted, to say that the U.S. will also have an additional market of 25 million. It is much easier for them to cover the Canadian market than for Canadian companies to cover the U.S. market.

To get to my question, it concerns workers in the electrical products industry. We know that according to a reliable study by the Economic Council of Canada, 5,500 workers in this industry will lose their jobs. Will these jobs be lost in Montreal, at Canadian General Electric and Northern Electric? Why didn't the Minister of Finance manage to get it in writing, as he did for the beer industry, and why wasn't he able to do this for workers in the textile, footwear, rubber and electrical products industry? We know 5,500 workers will lose their jobs as a result of this Agreement. Why didn't the Minister negotiate to deal with the situation? And the same applies to Bill C-22. If you want jobs and research, put it in the legislation!

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do want to see jobs for research. I cannot understand why the Hon. Member does not have the sufficient degree of influence over his Party and his Leader to get action on this Bill which will create jobs today, create jobs next month and create jobs next year.

He is talking about holding out some expectation that possibly five years, ten years or twenty years down the road some people may lose their jobs. Why is he not concerned about today, and getting action, getting his Leader to move, and getting the Senators off their fannies to act in the interest of the people in his riding of Montréal—Sainte Marie who feel let down by the impotence of that Member.

Mr. Speaker: There will be a question by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre and a question by the Member for Western Arctic, and that will close Question Period.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

EMPLOYMENT IN SEPT-ÎLES AND CENTRAL NOVA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Union leaders, the Chamber of Commerce and municipal authorities in Sept-Îles have organized a week-long demonstration to protest against unemployment and the failure of their Member of Parliament, the Prime Minister, to deal with their economic problems.

Could the Minister of Finance explain why the Prime Minister will be away from Sept-Îles for a week, and why he was not at a meeting last night to meet his former constituents in Central Nova, where the unemployment rate is 40 per cent? Does the Government have any special measures to announce to ensure that constituents in Sept-Îles and Central Nova will have jobs?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, obviously previous New Democratic Party questioners in this regard have been impotent and ineffective. They have had the Member for Ottawa Centre simply repeating other untrue and unfair allegations with respect to the availability of the Prime Minister.

The Deputy Prime Minister has pointed out that this Prime Minister is more accessible than any Prime Minister in the history of our country. Our Prime Minister understands the average working person a heck of a lot better than the people in the NDP.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET REGIONAL GROUPS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Justice is correct in saying that his Prime Minister understands the average working person in Sept-Îles or Central Nova, why will the Prime Minister not meet with working people in those communities where the unemployment rate is 32 per cent and 40 per cent respectively? Why will he not meet with them and fulfill his promise to get jobs, jobs, jobs in those parts of the country that he represents?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I reiterate the fact that the Prime Minister is probably more sensitive with respect to the regional disparities in our country which we have inherited as a Government and which we are addressing head-on. The Hon. Member is incorrect. The Prime Minister will meet with these representative groups.

In fact, as a priority of this Government, he has directed his Ministers to work on questions of regional development. Our record with respect to increased employment in this country is almost a million new jobs since we came to office. We will continue working now and as a Government after the next election.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

COMPOSITION OF NATIONAL ADVISORY BOARD

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Canadian Federation for the Humanities point out that there is no apparent representation by social scientists on the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology. They request that at least one person with a background in the humanities be appointed. Is the Government considering this request?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, the Board is made up of eminent scientists, industrialists, representatives from universities in the various disciplines of science, and has been tremendously helpful to the Government in focusing on the challenges and opportunities before us as we move into the twenty-first century.

Indeed, Bill Taylor, a very eminent social scientist who is also the President of the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, is an active member of the board. As for future appointments, these representations will be taken into account.

POINT OF ORDER

STATEMENT BY MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, a minute ago during Question Period the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) stated that certain comments I made during the Question Period were untrue. I am sure the Minister of Justice did not mean to deliberately mislead the House when he suggested that it was untrue to say that the unemployment rate was 32 per cent in Sept-Îles and 40 per cent in Central Nova and that it was untrue to say the Prime Minister is failing to go to Central Nova and would not be at the demonstration in Sept-Îles in eight days. Could the Minister of Justice be asked to correct the record, as I am sure he did not mean to accuse another Member of misleading the House?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, quite apart from the fact that this is a clear abuse of the use of a point of order, I simply want to reiterate my statement, now that the Hon. Member has come up with these serious allegations. His allegation with respect to the availability of the Prime Minister is false, incorrect, and unworthy of the Hon. Member. I stand by my words.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I believe that the Hon. Member and the Hon. Minister are entering into debate. This is not really a point of order and I believe it would be better to choose another time to have this debate.

Tabling of Documents

• (1210)

Question Period is now over. We will now proceed with House business.

Mr. Cassidy: On a question of privilege, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy)

Mr. Cassidy: On a question of privilege. I would ask you to consider, Madam Speaker, whether the comments made by the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) were in fact parliamentary when he accused me during Question Period of making statements that were untrue and apparently accused me of misleading the House. I would ask you to take that under advisement as a matter of privilege because I do not think that is acceptable in the House of Commons under our parliamentary rules. As I indicated before, the reasons I will not repeat, but I do not think that kind of behaviour should be acceptable in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would not want a debate to be started on that. The Hon. Member, I am sure, will take my word that the "blues" will be checked and if the Chair does find there is a problem and that the matter should be raised again with the Minister, we will do so at that time. Does that have the agreement of the Hon. Member?

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to 15 petitions, Nos. 332-3088 to 332-3093 inclusive, 332-3097 to 332-3100 inclusive, 332-3107 and 332-3136 to 332-3139 inclusive.

I want to point out to the House that these petitions were certified in May, June and July of this year. They were only tabled with the House on September 9. I believe there has been sufficient delay in responding to these petitions that there could be criticism from the people who signed these petitions. I want to make it very clear that these petitions, despite the fact they were certified by the Clerk of petitions in May, June and July, were only tabled on September 9 and the Government has responded within the required 45 day period from the point of tabling.

Statements by Ministers

UNITED NATIONS

ANNIVERSARY OF ORGANIZATIONS FOUNDATION

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to make a statement on the occasion of United Nations Day.

Tomorrow will once again mark United Nations Day. On that day, 42 years ago, amid the chaos and violence of war, the United Nations was founded. It is reassuring to contemplate both the conditions under which this world body was born and the purpose for which it was created.

If today we are sometimes disturbed and discouraged over the seeming intractable and persistent problems facing the world community, let us take heart and renewed courage and determination to persist in making the world a better place to live. Let us recall that a commitment to a strong United Nations, and to its programs, offers one of the enduring hopes for the betterment of the human condition.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, Canada is pursuing its efforts to strengthen the structure of the United Nations. To that end, it is working from the inside, with energy and perseverance, to ensure that reforms improve the effectiveness and efficiency of UN operations and administration. By acting on its principles, for instance by forgiving the debts of Third World nations faced with serious financial problems and by continuing to make a major financial contribution to the UN, Canada reflects the convictions of Canadians. In fact, Canadians believe that the best way to promote peace and justice in through fair economic development, that the struggle for justice and human rights is a cause that deserves material support and that all nations should share both the benefits of development and the burden of poverty.

[English]

Canadians, of all people, recognize that we are very much dependent on the health of the international community. United Nations Day should serve, therefore, to remind us afresh of our commitment to responsible and responsive internationalism and to the ideals of the United Nations Charter.

[Translation]

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, Canadians know and support the United Nations. Many Canadians, both English-speaking and French-speaking, have served with organizations that are part of United Nations, inspired by the ideals and goals set down in the Charter forty-two years ago. Many Canadians have served in UN peacekeeping forces throughout the world, and Canadian lives have been lost for the sake of world peace. Today—

[English]

All nations of the world look to the United Nations for leadership, maintaining peace and ensuring development while protecting the environment. Peace, development and the environment are the magnets which today attract nations to the United Nations with the same intensity as did the ideal of peace in 1945. However, the United Nations can only be as strong as the political will of each member nation.

It would be a mistake to believe that the United Nations can impose its will on the world. It cannot. The speed with which the United Nations can proceed depends on the speed of its member nations. Therefore, it is important for Canada to ensure that our enthusiasm for the United Nations is shared by nations whose reluctance these days slows down the implementation of the United Nations' over-all mandate.

In 1952, a distinguished Canadian, Lester B. Pearson, became President of the General Assembly. Canadians take great pride in the contribution he made and the legacy he left. It is interesting to note that in his book Peace in the Family of Man, Lester B. Pearson concluded with these words:

> People—must be made to see that internationalism is quite as important to them, as practically and immediately important, as national loyalty and interest; important not merely in an academic and remote or idealistic sense, but important as something which immediately and concretely affects their well-being, their very lives.
> We must apply the science and art of politics to the affairs of the international community with the intensity of personal involvement that we give to domestic affairs.

Mr. Pearson's words were as true then as they are today as we once again celebrate United Nations Day.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I am honoured to speak for my Party in recognizing the achievements and goals of the United Nations which was founded in 1945 to end the scourge of war. Since that time its achievements have been many. Canadians want to defend and strengthen the United Nations and we take a critical view of those who undermine its legitimacy or its relevance.

In 1985, when polled on the question, "How important do you think it is that we try to make the United Nations a success?", 83 per cent of Canadians said it is important or very important.

Disappointment with the United Nations should be addressed to the lack of commitment and co-operation among member states rather than faulting the international institution itself. The Soviet Union should be commended for recently paying all its outstanding debts to the United Nations, especially those for the peacekeeping missions it had long refused to support. No nation should withhold funds because decisions taken collectively go against its particular viewpoint. We hope the example of the Soviet initiative will not be lost on the United States.

Global interdependency has increased since the founding of the United Nations, as have the complexity of the problems facing human kind, including the threat of nuclear weapons, poverty, underdevelopment, human rights abuse, malnutrition and environmental degradation. No nation can solve these problems alone. Now is not the time to abandon the United Nations' system. Collective co-operation is needed to ease the Third World debt crisis, to end the Iran-Iraq war, to end apartheid in South Africa and to defend the delicate balance of the Guatemala peace accord.

• (1220)

Canadians can be proud of our contribution to the United Nations. We have participated in more observer groups and peace-keeping missions than any other member state. Numerous Canadians have distinguished themselves in service to the United Nations and its agencies.

Recently, our mission led the drive to strengthen the role and involvement of women within the United Nations, and a Canadian woman, Madam Therese Paquet-Sevigny, has become the first woman to be named Under-Secretary General.

Canada is respected as a middle power and is in a favourable position to steer a sane course between the posturing rivalry of the superpowers. Above all, we can support the process of replacing dependency with interdependency, particularly where the poorer countries strive to defend their interests on an equal footing with rich, developed countries.

I would like to take this occasion to commend the work of the United Nations Association in Canada for its perseverance, hard work and educational activities to inform Canadians about the United Nations. Canadians should know that the United Nations is our institution, for behind the United Nations, as the Secretary General has said, "stands the single, collective constituency of the human race, a vast silent majority which wants peace with justice and dignity, with freedom from fear and want and the hope of a better tomorrow".

PETITIONS

ROAD SAFETY

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions signed by residents of Brantford, Ontario, Halifax, Nova Scotia, Cold Lake, Alberta, and Sudbury, Ontario.

These 117 signatures are in addition to the 30,346 others which have already been tabled. The petitioners are aware of the fact that since 1974 federal regulations on car safety allow installation of self-inflating bags for drivers of passenger cars. They know as well that during the April 1987 debate on highway safety it was established that a self-inflating bag on the driver's side would reduce the number of deaths and serious injuries.

For these reasons the petitioners urge the Government to commit itself to make mandatory: first, the installation of three point adjustable lap and shoulder belts for rear seat passengers; and two, the installation of front seat air bags.

[English]

OPPOSITION TO LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present a petition from a number of residents of Canada from the cities of Toronto, Edmonton, Westmount and Montreal. They are concerned with the Government's practice of promoting low-level flight training of pilots from NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base in Goose Bay, Labrador because it disrupts the way of life of many of the native people there and, furthermore, it constitutes a war-fighting aggressive action that tends to endanger world peace.

Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will end all low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there. In duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

CONFERENCE ON PROTECTION OF OZONE LAYER

Question No. 193—Mr. Caccia:

1. At the diplomatic conference for the protection of the ozone layer held in Montreal on September 14-16, 1987, were corporations invited to provide food and entertainment to delegates and, if so, which corporations?

2. Were inviatations made formally and, if not, by what method were they made and by (a) whom (b) which Departments?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): 1. Yes, Du Pont Canada Inc., Allied Chemical Inc., Alcan Aluminum Ltd., City of Montreal.

2. Yes. (a) Assistant Deputy Minister, Conservation and Protection, (b) Department of the Environment.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: I would ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended by 10 minutes. Therefore, Private Members' Hour will begin at 2.10 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan that Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, when I terminated my remarks just prior to the beginning of Statements by Members at eleven o'clock, I was dealing with the point of one of the requested inclusions in an environmental Bill of rights, namely, standing and access to the courts.

I was pointing out to Hon. Members that this is a right already enjoyed by Canadians. Private individuals have the right to prosecute federal summary conviction offences. They also have the same right for indictable offences, only, of course, with the permission of the court. In both instances it is possible for provincial Attorneys General to step in and assume the prosecution.

This power to intervene is specifically dealt with in the Criminal Code and pertains to all federal offences, not just those found in the Bill before us this morning. The power of the Attorneys General to intervene is fundamental to the administration of justice in Canada. This authority should not be dealt with, I would suggest, in an ad hoc manner by attempts to change it through the Canadian environmental protection Bill.

Involvement by the public in federal decision making is already possible in the development of regulations. This has been true, I guess, since the beginning of our Confederation in the normal call for comments when proposed regulations are published in The Canada Gazette in Part I.

• (1230)

The role of the public has been further guaranteed by the Government in its March, 1986, citizen's code of regulatory fairness. This is a very important development, which I do not think has received the attention that it deserves from the Canadian public. I understand that it has been the practice of Environment Canada in its policy to have public consultation on regulatory matters, even prior to the existence of this code to which I just referred. Therefore, citizens can already exercise powers under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. Their role in enforcement will be larger now than ever before under any other federal statute.

Over the past days of this debate, several of my colleagues have stated and reiterated the vital role that this Bill will play in the task of protecting our environment. We have underscored the methods proposed to attack the problem head on. We all concur that the responsibilities rest with each one of us to ensure a healthy environment for our children and for our children's children. However, the responsibility at present rests with this House to get on with the passage of this Bill. I propose that we do just that.

I look forward to a more detailed debate of the Bill once it gets to committee. Therefore, it is not my intention to prolong this stage of the Bill.

Ms. McDonald: I wish to ask the Hon. Member a question on the environmental bill of rights. The Hon. Member made reference to the concept, and seems to be under the mistaken impression that there is in effect an environmental bill of rights in this Bill before us today. That is not the case, and it has been a major criticism on the part of environmental groups and experts in the country.

Earlier in his speech, the Hon. Member referred to consultation and he pointed out that there would be consultation with the provinces. Certainly, I would heartily agree that there ought to be consultation with the provinces, although not a lessening of standards for the environment on the part of the provinces. The provinces ought to have the right to increase standards but not to decrease them.

The Hon. Member did not mention, apropos consultation, consultation with environmentalist groups. Those groups were very much excluded from the process. The Bill was expanded rather after the fact that a consultation had taken place on only a part of the Bill. They feel that they have been excluded from this process. They have asked the Government to pass this Bill, get on with things, but to go back to square one, as it were, to meet with them and come up with a real environmental bill of rights that will do the types of things that they have been asking to be done over the last number of years.

Mr. Daubney: I thank the Hon. Member for her question. I do not think I indicated in my remarks that there was an environmental bill of rights contained in this statute. I pointed out that there perhaps is what is tantamount to that in there, in that there is ample opportunity for citizen participation in the investigation process, and in the research process. I suggest that the Hon. Member examine the sections, from Section 100 on, which deal with the investigation, some of which I referred to in my remarks, such as the opportunity for any 12 persons to petition the Minister to investigate an alleged offence.

In terms of the comments of the Hon. Member on consultation, up until now it has been my understanding that there has been significant consultation by the Department and the Minister during the last several months with environmental groups, certainly with the provinces, and with companies that will be involved. I would suggest that it is the type of consultation that must occur in any democratic confederation such as ours. I think that it has occurred in this case. Perhaps there is room for more consultation and discussions. I am sure that the Minister will be prepared to talk and continue to talk to people. Certainly, there will be a monitoring of the legislation once it is in force to ensure that it is meeting the requirements of all Canadians.

As I suggested in my remarks, it is an important step forward. It is the type of legislation that will give us the instrument to deal with our commitments internationally, and our genuine commitment that was underlined this week at the United Nations General Assembly by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to give effect to the Brundtland report, that important study and commission which recognizes, as does this Act, the important connection between the environment and the economy.

It is those types of provisions contained in the Bill before the House which will give the Government, in conjunction with other Governments of the country and citizens, the right to take part in developing the type of interaction that has to occur if we are to deal with the serious environmental problems that will face us in the future.

In closing, one such example is the ozone treaty. It is an extremely important historical development in terms of environmental protection. The meetings took place in Montreal under the leadership of the Government and the Minister of the Environment. We need this Bill to be enacted in order to give effect to our commitments under that treaty.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments on the principles involved in Bill C-74, and on where it falls short, in my opinion.

We must realize at the beginning that when we are talking about the environment and we look at specific examples that are site-specific we are talking about a global problem. Whether we are talking about Ladysmith Harbour, Cowichan Estuary, something to do with the Love Canal, or low-level flights in Labrador, we are talking about a global problem.

I have a great deal of concern that our parliamentary system is not addressing that global problem in the global context. When I say "our parliamentary system" I do not only mean the Canadian parliamentary system, I mean parliamentary systems all over the world. Parliamentary democracy is the best hope that people of our world have that there will be an intelligent approach to environmental problems. Certainly dictatorships have done an even worse job of addressing the environment than parliamentary democracies.

This is something that we collectively as a House of Commons have to address; the fact that environmental problems in our world are outstripping our ability to control them and deal with them in a constructive manner. We live in a world where there are 5 billion people. That population is growing, yet the resources on which those 5 billion people depend are finite.

The Brundtland report which was released this past spring points to the very real problems that we have, and that we in the developed world sometimes ignore. Because we are able to exploit resources that are a thousand miles away from us and the degradation is sometimes hidden from our eyes, we neglect to see what really is happening in the world.

The Brundtland report makes the basic observation that we cannot continue to have the type of anti-environmental policies in the developed world that lead to underdevelopment and poverty in the Third World, and hope that this will be sustainable in the medium-level or long-term future. The future of our world depends upon finding models of development that can be applied throughout our world, not only in the industrialized West, but in the Third World, that will enable all people to live together with some dignity and prosperity.

The types of pressures that the developed world places on the environment are different from the types of pressures placed on the environment in the Third World. For example, I can remember when the external affairs committee visited Tanzania, and drove through the countryside and saw stacks of charcoal by the side of the road. This charcoal was made by chopping down the local forests. It was sent into the City of Dar es Salaam to provide much needed fuel for heating and cooking. It was a source of energy. Yet that source of energy was directly responsible for destroying forests. The destruction of forests in our world is a shame and a crisis that will affect all of us in a very short time unless we find some way of addressing it.

The Brundtland report pointed out that already we are beginning to experience some of the problems that we have inflicted upon our world. They are coming back to haunt us. There was the African famine of three or four years ago. Now there are reports that we again have drought in Ethiopia and millions of people's lives are at risk. This is not simply a cyclical matter of drought in the sub-Sahara area. There have been cyclical droughts, certainly. It is also a result of the fact that we have abused the environment. For example, 45 per cent of Ethiopia used to be covered by forests. Today about 4 per cent is covered by forests. This kind of human abuse of the environment is causing many of our problems.

We have seen the effects of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster and the Bhopol chemical disaster in India. In Canada a couple of years ago a Senate study talked about the growing problem of the destruction of our land, the salinization of Canadian land. We are concerned about the disappearance of whole species of animal and plant life.

Recently a number of us from our Party, and I think from other Parties, wrote to the chairman of the World Bank, Barber Conable, and urged that the World Bank's development policies should take much greater cognizance of the need for environmental protection to be built into every project undertaken by the World Bank. Sometimes World Bank projects have been very short sighted where dams have been built and areas flooded with no consequence to the total environment in which the dam has been placed. Instead of having positive development, we end up with another environmental disaster.

The Brundtland report suggested having a United Nations declaration on the environment, similar to the United Nations declaration of human rights that has become a standard through which people from all over the world can appeal. We should have that kind of universal standard for the environment.

This is not simply a Canadian problem or a problem in Tanzania, India or wherever, it is a global problem. We all share it and we should be working to develop a United Nations approach to this. This is particularly appropriate now with United Nations Day falling tomorrow.

In the same respect, it has been urged that Canada itself should adopt an environmental bill of rights which would guarantee to the Canadian people certain environmental standards. The Government gave some lip service to this concept, but Bill C-74 does not begin to address the need for an environmental bill of rights. It adds a preamble which has some very laudable wording and goals in it, but it does not have any effect in law.

Let me point to some of the things it says:

> WHEREAS the presence of toxic substances in the environment is a matter of national concern;
>
> WHEREAS toxic substances once introduced into the environment cannot always be contained within geographic boundaries;
>
> WHEREAS the Government of Canada in demonstrating national leadership should establish national environmental quality objectives, guidelines and codes of practice;
>
> WHEREAS it is necessary to control the dispersal of nutrients in Canadian waters;
>
> WHEREAS some of the laws under which federal lands, works and undertakings are administered or regulated do not make provision for environmental protection in respect to federal lands and undertakings;
> AND WHEREAS Canada must be able to fulfil its international obligations in respect of the environment;

The preamble concludes that therefore the Government passes the following law and so on. What we would like to see is a basic declaration of rights of Canadians as far as the environment is concerned. Perhaps we can get a better idea of some of the problems with Bill C-74. We support it as a small step forward, but it is not the kind of Environment Protection Act that Canadians really need. I would like to give an example.

A couple of weekends ago I had the opportunity to take a trip through the Cowichan Estuary and up the river. We were concerned about the low water levels on the Cowichan River because the levels affect the salmon. The mill was closed. It was a Saturday morning and all was very quiet and peaceful. The colours were changing in the mountains and it was a very beautiful scene. We saw fish and seals eating the fish. There were ducks and hunters were out trying to shoot the ducks. As we went up the river we saw some Indian people spearing fish and then we saw a great blue heron which flew out from the trees on the edge of the river and glided across the river. The blue heron is a magnificent and beautiful bird, Madam Speaker.

Just a few miles north of the Cowichan River at Crofton a colony of blue herons with 57 nests were counted last year but not one egg hatched from those nests. Canadian wildlife officials have been sampling eggs from the blue heron colonies in four specific locations in British Columbia over the past number of years and have found dioxin levels in three of the samples. The highest level has been at the Crofton area. Not one of those eggs in the 57 nests hatched this past year.

This is a kind of mini-environmental disaster for that particular colony of great blue herons. It has frightening implications for all of us because blue herons happen to be at the top end of the food chain. They tend to live on fish and sea creatures which themselves will ingest minute quantities of dioxins. Blue herons at the top of the food chain are more subject to the problems of dioxins than animals lower in the food chain.

There has been a lot of circumstantial evidence about why none of the 57 nests produced a single hatched egg, and it looks as though the problem is related to dioxins. We are not completely sure what the source is, whether it is from the Crofton pulp mill which employs a good number of people in my constituency and is extremely important to the economy of that area, or whether it could from the kind of wood preservative used by the local sawmills. Does it come through ingestion of fish or shellfish? Some of the preliminary testing has not shown very high levels of dioxins in local fish, but we have asked that the fisheries people do more testing to determine the problem. There is some question about the use of shellfish in that area. The contamination of the whole British Columbia coast poses a threat to human beings. There has been a much higher percentage of dioxins found in British Columbia than anywhere else in Canada. The great blue herons are used as a kind of thermometer for registering dioxins and it has been shown that they are under much greater stress in British Columbia. Some of the colonies appear to have moved away from the coast where we have a large number of our pulp mills. The total population of great blue herons is probably diminishing on our coast. That says something about the degradation of the environment which has very important implications for human beings.

The question we need to ask is how would Bill C-74 make a difference to that situation. If the route of the dioxins to the blue herons was from a sawmill or a pulp mill using PCBs or wood preservatives to the fish or shellfish and then to the blue herons, then Bill C-74 would make no difference at all, because Clause 38(2)(b) of the Bill provides that the Minister can act only if he has consulted with other Ministers of the Crown in right of Canada to determine whether any action can be taken under any other Act of Parliament to prevent the significant danger referred to in subclause 1.

• (1250)

The Fisheries Act gives the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon) the power to control deleterious substances which affect fish habitat or fish, so the authority is already there. Bill C-74 will not provide any further protection to solve that particular problem if in fact the pattern of dioxins had been from an industrial plant to fish and then to the blue herons.

If some other route was followed, the Minister of the Environment could place the discharges that were responsible for the dioxin level on a list of substances to be regulated, but this is a lengthy and cumbersome process. There is no simple answer.

Pesticide regulation rests with Agriculture Canada and it has input from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and from Environment Canada. Fisheries and Oceans and Environment Canada have jurisdiction over water quality as it affects fish, and there are sometimes little jurisdictional jealousies among people who work in those different departments. This Bill does not clear up that jurisdictional jealousy.

As I said, we have not established conclusively that heron eggs suffer from dioxin levels. If they do, the source could either be pulp mill effluent or wood preservatives used on lumber. The blame is tossed back and forth from one industry to another.

Environment Canada is looking at PCBs used in wood preservatives as a priority chemical to be controlled in spite of the fact that Agriculture Canada has registered that chemical, and it has since backed off. Under Bill C-74, if PCBs become a priority substance they will be tested and regulations will be drawn up which will be subject to review by a board which will include industry. Once passed, it would restrict the chemical.

One official from Environment Canada told my office that this is a process measured in years. This brings me back to the initial comment I made, is that our parliamentary system seems to be so slow in dealing with the mounting environmental crisis that the crisis is outstripping our ability to deal with it. Certainly the process envisaged in Bill C-74 moves very slowly.

The Environmental Contaminants Act, which Bill C-74 would replace, deals with new chemicals excluding pesticides and existing chemicals but does not apply to chemicals covered by other Acts. The pressure to put PCBs on the priority list to be examined by Environment Canada is being resisted. The province is saying that ten parts per million is considered by the industry to be a very onerous restriction. The chemical that is being developed to replace PCBs will have a lower acceptable level of five parts per million because it is more acutely toxic to fish, but there is less information to suggest that it is a chronic health hazard. We are replacing one group of chemicals with another which we hope will be less hazardous to our health, even though we know that it is more toxic to fish.

There is a whole host of areas where the Government now has the power to act. It has the power to act under the Fisheries Act, for example, but it has not acted. For example, the Fraser River as it flows into the ocean becomes practically a sewer for different kinds of chemical wastes, but the Department of Fisheries has not acted to clean up the mess. Bill C-74 will not help that situation. Ladysmith Harbour has a long-standing problem and Bill C-74 will not solve that because the Government already has legislation in place and Bill C-74 will not infringe on that legislation.

Therefore, while we support this legislation as a small step, it does not begin to address the fundamental problems of the environment in Canada or the world as they exist in 1987.

Mr. Daubney: Madam Speaker, I want to make some comments on the earlier part of the Hon. Member's speech. First I recognize his genuine and significant commitment to environmental issues over the years.

The Hon. Member referred extensively to the Brundtland report on which I touched in response to a question put by one of his colleagues about half an hour ago. I think it is important for the people watching to have some perspective on just how important a report this is and how this Government has recognized that and acted in a very significant way to respond to it.

First, before it handed down its report, when the commission visited Canada in the spring of 1986, the Minister of the Environment made a presentation to it. Subsequent to that, a task force on the environment and the economy was established by the Minister consisting of Government, industry and environmental groups. This task force reported almost exactly a month ago, and the Government is now actively pursuing the recommendations it made.

As I mentioned, earlier this week, I believe on October 19, the Minister of the Environment made a very significant presentation to the United Nations General Assembly. It is important and worth pointing out that he was the first Canadian Environment Minister to address the General Assembly.

The Prime Minister of Norway, Gro Brundtland, who of course chaired the committee, was very impressed by Canada's quick action in establishing the task force and responding in practical terms to some of the recommendations. I understand she was also very pleased with the Minister's commitment expressed with such strength and vigour in his UN speech.

I also remind Hon. Members that this House, in an opposition day on May 15, unanimously accepted the recommendations of the Brundtland report. I would simply point out to the Hon. Member and his colleagues on his side of the House the importance of getting on with this Bill so that we can start to implement the commitments that we are making and will continue to make to ensure that the recommendations of this very important commission are put into force.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, certainly I would want to commend the Minister for his personal commitment to the environment and I think it is highly commendable that he did go to the United Nations to raise this. I think it has to be raised in a great number of forums. I appreciate, and I think Canadians appreciate that he went to the United Nations to raise it because I think it is important.

I am also concerned about the lag time. The Minister spoke about the slowness with which we are dealing with this Bill. We have no intention of holding it up, but I am concerned that the Bill itself move slowly in order to address the problems of our environment. It is a very small step to deal with a very serious problem. We, like the Hon. Member, want to see it move forward, but it is important that Canadians understand from this debate that it does not begin to give the kind of total protection of the environment that its title somewhat grandiosely suggests. It is a good step but a small step, and there are many further steps that need to be taken.

• (1300)

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, at the outset I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) for his endorsement of the efforts of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to represent environmental issues for Canada. The original suggestion that the stature of the Minister is international in scope is of course based upon his efforts to address not only Canada's environmental problems but global environmental problems. To the degree to which his Government allowed him, I think the former Minister of the Environment, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), also enjoyed international stature in the environmental sense. However, what has occurred since then with our Government has been a quantum leap forward. I disagree with my friend from Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands. This is not a small step forward. It is a very major step forward. Until now there has been no way in which the Government through legislation could truly track the life-span of new and existing chemicals and their interaction with the environment, whether it be plant life, the air, animals, birds, or human beings.

I have had an ongoing interest in environmental issues going back to 1974. For example, I can recall in the mid-1970s when the Government of Canada, and the then Minister of National Health and Welfare, Marc Lalonde, were persuaded to fund a study into the effects of lead fall-out on the residents of Trail and greater Trail. That was instigated by studies which determined that some horses, particularly foals, were affected in their bone structure and general health by lead poisoning. There are those of us familiar with the effect that that has on bone and soft tissue. However, half-way through the study the Government decided not to fund it any longer. It was through my efforts, supported by Local 480 of the Steelworkers Union and Dr. Smith, the public health officer, that Marc Lalonde, who is difficult to persuade at any time, was persuaded to complete this important study.

I recall seeing patients in my office, workers at the smelter, who suffered erosion of their teeth because of acid in the air in the zinc plant. I saw people with a hole through the nasal septum big enough to put a gold ring through as a result of tissue erosion. I can say now that were it not for the forceful actions of Local 480, those working conditions would not have been improved. They have a continuous and ongoing concern about those working conditions.

I have a constituent who is a victim of paint spray in a body shop he owns. We cannot even find out what the chemistry is that is causing the problem because the company producing the paint does not want to tell us. Yet he has respiratory involvement, circulatory involvement, dermatitis, psychological impact, and all kinds of other sensitivities which he never had before. He has lost the ability to work in his profession in his body shop, and he is a very skilled tradesman.

It was I think a year ago that we saw on television prairie farmers suffering nausea, vomiting, dermatitis, and vertigo as a result of the inhalation of fumes from herbicides or pesticides sprayed on their farmland. There is concern that this Bill does not address that problem. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney), in his speech which began yesterday and finished today dealt with that very appropriately. Those concerns should not be concerns of major importance to the public.

In speaking to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King), I reflected upon the problems created for fruit farmers in spraying their trees. The ignorance displayed in not using a face mask when spraying fruit trees, for example, resulted in death in one case. The same concerns can be raised over the life span and effect of other chemicals. Certainly a significant group of my constituents have been very concerned about the application of herbicides and pesticides by the B.C. Forest Service, CP Rail, Burlington Rail, and the Department of Highways. Many of them appear to have a better knowledge of the chemistry involved than the provincial Departments we are dealing with.

It is important to all of us that we get a handle on this. It is in that context that this Bill addresses such a multitude of subjects. It is a Bill of such scope and dimension that I do not think any of us truly appreciate it at this stage. To address the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands, who says that changes should be made to the Bill, there needs to be more improvement, I say that may be that is so, but we will have that opportunity in committee. I hope this Bill will be before that committee very shortly.

The magnitude of environmental issues today boggles the mind. If it were not for the fact that life in Canada north of the 49th parallel was very hard in the days of the pioneers, I think some of us would wish we could go back to that time and start all over again with the knowledge we have now of the environmental impact of the things we do. However, that is not to be, so we must endeavour with great energy to reverse that process.

Reference was made to the blue heron. Not too long ago this Government funded in part an experimental boiler for a pulp mill in my constituency. We put $380,000 into a project that will cost approximately $1.5 to $2 million. When that boiler is in place the pulp mill will experience a reduction of about 90 per cent in both water-borne and airborne pollutants. That is Canadian technology at work in concert with other pulp and paper companies across Canada, and the Province of British Columbia. If that technology works, and we have every reason to believe it will, it will generate jobs in a market which is just waiting for that Canadian technology.

There are at least 40 different locations right now in Canada where that technology can be applied. There are about 80 or more in the United States. There are about 400 known applications worldwide right now. That technology originated in Canada. In fact, the first model which originated in my constituency will, in my view, make a very significant contribution to the reduction of air and water-borne pollutants coming from pulp mills.

I would like to correct the Hon. Member in one context. He made reference to pulp mills using wood preservatives. It would be the first time, to my knowledge, that they have resorted to that. I cannot understand why wood preservatives would ever be used in a pulp mill. They never made that reference with regard to dioxins and other products which are contained in some wood preservatives.

Major contribution to the environment has been made by the Minister of the Environment. He and the Member for Davenport, when he was the Minister, gained international stature. Canada has been recognized at the table of the United Nations and is in the forefront on concerns for the environment. I thank God for that.

There are no simple answers. This is a very complex subject ranging from dioxin to the ozone layer to the food chain and to a host of new chemistry about which we do not, as yet, know a thing. All of those will require the very close scrutiny of the Government of Canada through this Act, the Fisheries Act, pesticide control by the Department of Agriculture, and the Ocean Dumping Control Act.

My colleague from Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands expressed concern that this issue was not addressed in this Bill, but it was addressed in another Bill. Frankly, I see no reason why, if ocean dumping is well addressed in the Ocean Dumping Control Act, it should be moved into the Environmental Protection Act. That would only expand the debate and delay the Bill further. The same would apply to the Fisheries Act. We need not take portions out of that Act and put it in this Bill.

This is a very comprehensive Bill which will, in my view, move Canada forward in its concern for the environment. It is not the final answer. We do not yet know what is out there. The Minister would be the first to admit that this is not the final answer, but it is a quantum leap forward and a contribution and example to the world.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to contribute to this debate although this is not a subject on which I profess any wide knowledge, certainly not worldwide knowledge such as some others have, including my colleague, the Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly). However, I am concerned with this subject and the way in which it has affected the residents of Spadina and another part of Toronto for some years.

In 1972 I became aware that a lead smelter a few blocks from my house was polluting the neighbourhood. The lead smelter had grown up from a scrap-yard which had concentrated on smelting lead. I was very interested in the remarks of the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) who described dealing with a very similar problem at Trail in conjunction with Steel Workers' Local 480. I commend the Hon. Member for his part in the work that was done there. I commend the steel workers for their part in it as well.

I will describe a little of the difficulty that we had in approaching this problem. I was then the alderman for the ward concerned. The company concerned was Toronto Refiners and Smelters at the corner of Bathurst and Front Streets. Within a year or so another company, Canada Metals, owned by the same outfit which owned the Trail smelter, Canada Pacific Investments, was causing the same problem two or three miles east at the foot of Pape Avenue.

We lacked almost entirely the legal tools needed to deal with that problem. We could not get action directly from the provincial Government, which at that time had jurisdiction over air quality. We had to use the local board of health. The local board of health, of course, has some very peremptory powers, but mostly on a different scale. It gives the medical officer of health power to order the repair or replacement of a faulty sanitary toilet if it is causing trouble to the neighbours. That does not go very far toward correcting a problem with a smelter.

When we directed the company, through the board of health, to stop spewing lead dust on to the neighbouring streets and houses in which people had been living before the plant was established, we were met with massive legal action. We were met with costs in the range of $100,000. Fortunately, the provincial Government allowed city council to reimburse three members of the board of health who were specifically acted against in a civil suit by a combination of the lead companies.

We learned that there is an international lead-zinc research organization which sends specialists throughout the world to testify, where necessary, that a little bit of lead does not really hurt you and to try to overshadow any local experts who may be able to show that there has been or is likely to be a harmful effect from the ingestion of lead, especially in children of pre-school age.

We were finally able to make enough public fuss that the provincial Ministry of the Environment was pressured to take action in the matter. After several years it issued control orders requiring the companies to clean up to some extent. The problem has not been very well monitored and the pollution has continued, not at the same rate, but at a rate serious enough to require the replacement of the soil for the second time. Soil was replaced on the orders of the provincial Government because it was unfit to be on the property of families, especially those with small children. That was done at public expense rather than the expense of the company. The evidence now shows that the soil in some of those areas has been polluted a second time. Even though there was provincial legislation, the control has been very weak.

There was also a labour problem. Upon inquiry we found that in at least one plant workers who were tested by the company doctor for lead content in their blood were told not to worry, that they were okay. Not every family doctor has the knowledge or equipment to test for small quantities of lead in the blood. Therefore, we had some of them tested elsewhere, and the level of lead content found in their blood was medically shocking. They were shocked. They were quite unhappy at the thought that the company-paid doctor misled them. The fact is that the philosophy of the company doctor is that the patient is the company since it pays his bills. Therefore, he will give the workers such information as the company wishes him to give them.

• (1320)

The workers in the plant found that not only was the neighbourhood being polluted, their health and lives were being endangered by lead. At that time we could find no help from the federal Government. However, I want to say, to the credit of the Speaker of the House, that in 1979 he was the Minister of the Environment and, in correspondence with me, indicated that he hoped to introduce a law that would enable the federal Government to take some action in cases like that. He was unable to finish that project.

An Hon. Member: Thanks to you guys.

Mr. Heap: I hear an Hon. Member say thanks to us. I was not here then but I understand that the Hon. Member's Party produced a foolish budget and did not even make sure they had enough people in the House to support it. They are still kicking themselves for that, but do not like to admit who really was at fault.

However, I wish to commend the Speaker, the then Minister, for at least attempting to take action on this.

This law is at least a beginning, part of which is to identify toxic substances. However, there are some problems with that aspect, as with others.

Labour groups and other environmentally concerned groups who appeared before the committee pointed out that the definition of a toxic substance, while very wide in one sense, is very weak in another sense.

It states:

> For the purposes of this Part, a substance is toxic if it is entering or may enter the environment in a quantity or concentration or under conditions
> (a) having or that may have a significant immediate or long-term harmful effect on the environment that is likely to interfere with important biological processes;
>
> (b) constituting or that may constitute a danger to the environment on which human life depends; or
> (c) constituting or that may constitute a danger in Canada to human life or health.

That is a very broad definition. The problem is that it is also very vague. The Government may or may not declare a substance to be toxic. There is not much provision in the act to reassure the public that the Government will act on that matter. I will deal with that question in more detail later.

A further problem is that the arrangement between the federal Government and provincial Governments seems quite unsatisfactory because it allows for indefinite waffling between Ottawa and one or more provincial capitals. It allows for an indefinite period of consultation, before which the Government may not act.

One can envisage Ottawa blaming a province and a province blaming Ottawa, each one saying the other is not moving. This is very unsatisfactory from the point of view of the public who would like to see some action. The Bill does not prevent the Government from acting, by law, but allows for passing the buck between the federal Government and the provinces, as in university funding, for example. The federal Government and the Ontario Government blame each other for the fact that universities are short of funds. The same danger can exist with this legislation. The Government will not want to put the funds into the work, and therefore leave it to the provincial Government, which will say that this is a federal responsibility.

Furthermore, according to Clause 38(2), there must even be a consultation before an emergency order can be issued. We had this experience in trying to get an emergency order to clean up or temporarily close in order to clean up these lead smelters in Toronto. The local board of health did not have sufficient legal clout to do that. In effect, the legislation was not strong enough. I do not know whether the provincial legislation was strong enough or whether there was simply a lack of will on the part of the provincial Government since it took so long to take action.

There is some risk in this case that the federal Government will simply delay while consulting with a provincial Government even on an emergency order.

Let me turn to the general problem of the need for minimum legislation. The Canadian Labour Congress stated:

> The general principle ought to be: Unless the provinces have stronger legislation, the federal Government should move in to establish minimum—but strong and effective—national standards of environmental cleanliness.
> There should be consultation with the interested parties, certainly; but this should not prevent speedy and effective federal Government action on the environment at the national level.

In other words, there should not be so much buck-passing with respect to emergency orders and particularly legislation. There should be a clearly established federal responsibility for a minimum standard. There is nothing stopping a province from implementing a higher standard, but it should not be allowed to tolerate a lower standard.

Many people have often spoken about the need for a bill of environmental rights. While it is true that there is the right of 12 people to petition the Minister for information for an investigation, it does not give them the right to initiate any kind of civil action. That is a very serious defect in this Bill. Unless they are prepared to show that individually they are being harmed or likely to be harmed, they cannot use Clause 128 and Clause 129 to initiate civil action. While they can use Clauses 100 and 101 to get information, it can be a very slow process, and it is unclear whether they will be able to initiate actions after they have the information.

Of course, there is no provision for funding such an action. As I said, companies like Canadian Pacific Investment, which are in the business of polluting, can spend millions of dollars on their international lead and zinc research outfit in order to combat anyone, such as workers in the plant, neighbours down the street, or even people in the community who may be trying to get the information and lay a charge under civil action but do not have an expensive researcher on retainer. In such cases, it will be a contest of the elephant against the mouse.

It is the same in the matter of determining what is toxic and what is non-toxic. Yes, 12 persons may be able to petition to have the Minister investigate a certain substance to see whether or not it is toxic, but they will not have the right to initiate civil action in the matter. Therefore, while the Government is acquiring information, and that is good, and of course it is necessary to have the information, the likelihood of corrective action is in great doubt. In spite of public requests at the hearings in this matter, the opportunities for the public to secure corrective action are very limited.

Finally, I wish to refer to one large omission under this Act. There are others, but the one with which I am very concerned is its neglect to deal with environmental dangers of nuclear energy and radio-active substances. It is also a matter dealt with not in my ward but within Metro Toronto, when previous Governments, federal and provincial, left radio-active soil in a dump in Scarborough without even informing subsequent developers and homeowners of what might be in that soil. They found out later on, after the homes had been bought and the owners had begun to live in them, that they were living on a radio-active dump. It has taken years of expensive and tortuous litigation for those homeowners to get some satisfaction from one or the other levels of government.

Apparently this law does nothing at all to correct that defect. We may be told that that is all taken care of by the Atomic Energy Control Board. If so, that is a sick joke, because, as we found out when the new appointments were being made about a year ago, almost all of the members of that board were engaged in making profits, or else they come immediately from companies which are engaged in making profits out of the atomic energy business. That is putting the fox in charge of the chicken coop. Those men are not going to restrict their profits by having concern for the health and safety of the people in the neighbourhood or the countryside around them.

Therefore, we have neither under the atomic energy legislation, nor in this EPA, any serious means by which the public can ensure protection for itself against mistakes, excesses or negligence on the part of those who conduct our nuclear energy plants and industries, and the transportation of toxic substances which sometimes travel on a railway line through Metro Toronto, and so on. None of that is under sufficient control. It is unfortunate that that aspect has been omitted from this Act.

As I said, my colleagues and I are supporting this Act. I am specifically thankful that some steps have been taken, because I know the problem we had a decade ago in Toronto, and still have. I regret the Act is so cautious and particularly so afraid of allowing the public full modern necessary access to the remedies concerned.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the speech of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) who, as usual, has thoroughly examined the matter before us. I did not hear him comment, however, on one aspect of the Bill which might interest him and on which I would seek his views. The Hon. Member is probably not aware of the fact that in Bill C-74 there is a clause which does not empower the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to stop the export of substances that are prohibited for use in Canada, but which Canada may want to export, for instance, to developing countries for economic, commercial and other reasons.

This, of course, raises a moral question which I am sure the Hon. Member for Spadina is particularly keen and qualified to examine, namely, whether Canada should be engaged in the export of substances, in this case it would be toxic substances, that we do not permit for use in our own jurisdiction, but for which we would not have any compunction at all to seek to have exported.

I must admit that I could not understand the reasoning of the Government in not including a clause to the effect that the Minister would have the power to stop exports of substances of this kind once they are forbidden for use here. Evidently, the political will was not sufficient in Cabinet and, therefore, we have to address the question here at second reading and subsequently in committee.

It is with this thought in mind that I would invite the Hon. Member for Spadina to give us the benefit of his reflection on this clause as he assesses it from a moral point of view.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his comment. I am aware of the defect he mentions, and there are many defects in the Bill I did not have time to touch upon, and I agree that it is a serious defect. I cannot match the Hon. Member's expertise on the subject, but I heartily agree with the principle to which he has appealed, that if a substance is too poisonous to use for Canadians, it is too poisonous to use in anyone else's country.

It is a disgrace that we should knowingly permit the export to other countries, as the Hon. Member says, probably to third world or what I would call "former colonial countries"—more colonial than Canada—those people who are in a sense economically weaker, of substances which perhaps some Canadian company wishes to sell to its profit or wishes to use in a subsidiary in that other country, notwithstanding the fact that it is likely to do harm to those people such as might be prohibited by law to be done to Canadians.

This is, of course, part and parcel of the growing practice of multinational corporations which are seeking to shut down industries in Canada so they can open them up in former colonial countries that lack even such protections as we have here for the environment, for the conditions of labour and, of course, for the wages of labour.

When I was in El Salvador, I was invited by the Vice Minister of Planning to encourage Canadians to invest in what he called "our low wages, our low-wage industries", and I am quite sure that any Canadian who wished to export a manufacturing enterprise to El Salvador and wished to use toxic substances, would find no hindrance from the Duarte Government. They would be welcome. The workers then would have to choose between starvation or starvation wages along with toxic substances. So it is immoral, as the Hon. Member has suggested, and I hope it will be looked at seriously in committee.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his answer, which was as thoughtful as usual. On the domestic front, and I refer particularly to Manitoba, two of its major rivers, the Assiniboine River and the Red River, are seriously contaminated with toxic chemical substances. The Government of that province is reluctant to take the necessary action. It being a New Democratic Government, that may not be good news to the Hon. Member for Spadina. Nevertheless, I would have to put to him the following question: Since the Government of that province is not doing what the Hon. Member, I am sure, would like that Government, and also the Government of Canada, to do, namely, to clean up and to prevent the pollution of toxic chemicals of major waterways in that province, does the Hon. Member see in this particular Bill the means to intervene in the Province of Manitoba to get the New Democratic Government there to do the things which are needed in order to clean up the pollution of toxic chemicals in those two major rivers?

• (1340)

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member was speaking about a city that I know because I was born there and I grew up there. I was very familiar with those two rivers, the Red and the Assiniboine. When I swam in them when I am was a kid they were dirty enough, but I would not swim in them now. I believe this Bill, and this was the main point I was making at the beginning of my remarks, does not provide for clear responsibility by the federal Government. I am not familiar with the current discussions in Manitoba about the action for remedying the quality of the water caused by pollution in those two rivers.

The situation at present is that there is no federal responsibility, as I said when I was describing what happened in Toronto a decade ago. After this Bill has been passed there may or may not be effective federal responsibility. I am not clear on that. My colleagues are not clear on that either. We are not clear as to whether or not it will simply provide for buck passing. I think that in both cases, whether it is between a provincial Government such as a Liberal one, a New Democratic one or a Tory one, and the federal Government, there will be attempts to pass the administrative costs of the remedial action to the other level of Government. That is why I wish that this Bill would more clearly assert the obligation of the federal Government to act if the provincial Government does not.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): If there are no more questions or comments, we will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I want to spend a few minutes on this particular matter given its importance, not only to the people of Canada but on a global scale.

First, I think it is unfortunate that the Government really missed an opportunity here by coming forward with the kind of Bill that it has come forward with. There was absolutely no public discussion prior to the Government, or the Minister in this case, drafting this particular piece of legislation. I think that is also very unfortunate.

The Government, like most others, for some reason when it comes to environmental concerns seems to feel that it and only it has the knowledge and the authority to deal with environmental problems. In fact, usually the response to environmental concerns is that the person raising those concerns is just trying to frighten the general public, or that the concern that has been identified is really not as critical as people say it is.

I want to give two or three examples of this which might be helpful. A number of years ago I had the opportunity to chair a task force that went down to the Niagara Peninsula to take a look at what was happening to the Niagara River as a result of chemical dump sites. These were located primarily on the New York side of the Niagara River and were, first, located in the worst place that they could possibly be located and, second, they were too close to that river. As a result of these locations, and particularly because the excavations rested on dolomite rock which, as you probably know, Madam Speaker, is a highly porous rock, these toxic wastes had begun to seep through the rock into the underground water system and were leaching into the Niagara River.

I want to tell the House that the people in those communities had become quite fearful for their own safety over the years and had gone to some great lengths to try to convince Governments, both at the provincial and the federal level, that this was a matter that deserved some attention. By the way, these were people whom I would class as probably being in very upper middle class income groups who were expressing those concerns. They were people who had never protested anything in their lives and who felt that if they spoke in a reasonable way to Governments, they would respond to their approach. They found something quite different.

They found that Governments did not respond for a whole variety of reasons which I do not want to take the time to go into now. But the Governments in fact did not respond to these concerns. Some of those groups were forced to take some actions which, for them, were quite revolutionary to raise public awareness and to bring some media attention to the views that they were expressing. They had real reason for concern.

Across the river from many of these communities was the Hyde Park dump site, which was also a part of the same corporation, the Hooker Chemical Corporation, which had been largely responsible for the Love Canal travesty. I want to tell you, Madam Speaker, when I went over to take a look at that Love Canal site I had imagined a small community, a small village or something like that. This was a whole subdivision of houses that had been built and constructed on this chemical dump site and which had been discovered largely through the work of Dr. Beverly Paigen, who had acquaintances who actually lived in the community on the Love Canal site. She had heard about the high incidence of cancer in that community, as well as the highly abnormal defects in births in that community, and she did some work on that. In fact, she was the person who brought it to the attention of the public.

That whole Love Canal community is now ringed off by wire fencing. People cannot get access to it, naturally, because the basements are now flooded with chemical wastes. I want to tell the House that after I took a look at that community and saw what could happen to other communities around the Niagara River site, and other members of that committee were with me and saw it, I left there in complete shock. It raised my interest in environmental concerns a great deal.

I want to talk about one simple thing that means a great deal to my own community in the east end of Toronto. Not so very long ago kids could go down into Lake Ontario during the summer months to swim. One cannot do that any more. One cannot do that any more because of the pollution in Lake Ontario along the bottom of my own constituency in Beaches and along Broadview—Greenwood. One cannot swim on most of the recreational beaches in Metropolitan Toronto in the summer months any more because of the pollution in that lake.

There would be a very simple solution to that problem, if Governments had the political will to do something about it. Most of the pollution that I am referring to comes largely as a result of overflows in the storm sewage system. For years it has been recognized that the whole sewage system should be separated in order that the regular waste sewage does not overflow during heavy thunderstorms, for example, in the summer months.

• (1350)

The Federation of Canadian Municipalities made a recommendation to the federal Government within the last year that called for an expenditure—and it is not only in Metropolitan Toronto, but also in other large metropolitan communities—of some $12 billion over a five-year period that could be shared by municipal, provincial, and federal Governments. It is my understanding that the provinces and municipalities have agreed to enter into such a cost-sharing agreement. However, the federal Government refuses to do so, on the basis that if municipalities see a need to upgrade those sewer systems, then they should raise taxes at the municipal level, or do something else to raise the taxes in order that they could do the work themselves.

The federal Government ignores the environmental concerns. It also chooses to ignore the fact that part of this proposal clearly showed that, if the federal Government entered into such an agreement, some 60,000 jobs a year could be created over a five-year period as a result of that effort to clean up the environment. Governments are extremely short-sighted when looking at environmental concerns, and when looking at proposals that will not only clean up the environment but will create jobs in the process.

On the task force that I was on, I had the opportunity to take a look at a chemical producing plant in Sarnia, Ontario, where there was extremely bad pollution, especially air pollution coming out of that plant, a number of years ago. The employer was persuaded by environmental groups and the Ontario Government of the day to clean up that plant. When I was there, there was a whole display inside the plant about pollution control equipment. The company now boasts that, as a result of cleaning up the environment on that work site, it created new additional jobs and new technologies for that particular corporation. Cleaning up the environment can also be a job creation project. It is not only a question of expending money, jobs can also be created in the process of doing a socially useful thing.

In conclusion, I wish to state that the environment does not belong to us to abuse, destroy, and to use as some kind of large sewage waste disposal system. Our environment is only borrowed by us for future generations. As elected representatives and people who can do something about environmental concerns, we have a responsibility to act on them in that type of principle.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Accordingly the Bill is referred to a legislative committee.

Motion adopted, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

[English]

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties that, due to the time, we should move directly to Private Members' Business. This will allow us to finish the business of the House at 2.55 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent to call it two o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. It being two o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

ORGANIZED CRIME

ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

The House resumed, from Thursday, August 13, 1987, consideration of the motion of Miss Nicholson:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of appointing a Royal Commission to investigate organized crime in Canada and to include in its report observations and recommendations on:

1. the extent to which organized crime is present and active in Canada, particularly in such activities as drug trafficking and loan-sharking;

2. the extent to which organized crime is connected to the institutions of Canadian society;

3. action taken by the governments of other countries to investigate and curtail organized crime activity;

4. legislation to enable the government to identify and appropriate the proceeds of organized crime;

5. effective and appropriate punishment in instances of organized crime murder conspiracy; and

6. possible guidelines for enforcement agencies in dealing with witnesses against organized crime.

And on the amendment of Mr. Kaplan:

That the motion be amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"and that the Royal Commission report within six months of its appointment."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House last considered this motion, the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) had the floor. The Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton—Strathcona): Madam Speaker, the last time I referred briefly to the situation of organized crime in our country.

[English]

In the seven minutes available today I wish to deal with the question of the current crime trend, the extent of hard drug trafficking in this country, and something about the Kefauver Commission in the United States which dealt with the matter proposed in the motion, namely, that there be a royal commission to look at organized crime in this country.

The crime rate nationally is up. For violent crime it is up approximately 31 per cent across Canada. In Manitoba, violent crime appears to be up about 84 per cent in that province since 1980. From the latest statistics, it is up approximately 45 per cent in Saskatchewan, 33 per cent in Ontario, and property crimes are up in seven of the ten provinces. In Vancouver, the crime rate is up to approximately 35 per cent. Why is this? Is this because of organized crime, or is this because of spontaneous crime perhaps due to unemployment or some other cause? What part of the present crime has been created by organized crime, which I define as being crime organized by two or more people, and not something spontaneous?

That brings us to the illegal drug problem in our country which has been worsening now for several years. The RCMP estimate that the amount of illegal drugs sold in this country is now in the $10 billion a year range, which is more than the sales of General Motors each year. I know that some people dispute that figure. Worldwide illegal drug sales have been estimated to be in the trillion dollar range. One of the questions that comes out of that is, who will control our domestic industries 20 years from now, if illegal drug people continue to pocket that type of money, tax free, year after year, and to invest it as they like in whatever they like?

I am told by the RCMP that a substantial portion of a large new development in one of our major cities is now being financed by recycled drug proceeds. Not very long ago an individual in the Province of British Columbia was found to have $3.2 million in probable drug money in a suitcase. A heroin drug ring in the City of Montreal has removed an estimated tens of millions of dollars from this country during a two-year period. Hon. Members will recall that 30 tons or tonnes—I do not know if it was metric or not—of hashish were seized not long ago off our East Coast. In short, unless we try some new approaches, the problems of hard drugs are likely to worsen as time goes by.

One excellent manner to start, and I am speaking as a former Crown Attorney, is Bill C-61 which has been introduced in the House and received second reading. It provides an effective anti-drug push, and it is something that Canadians would like us to pass.

As the law presently stands, if an individual has $1 million in his bank account obtained from illegal drug profits, unless that money can be shown to have been part of his method of doing the crime or directly linked to the crime no one can touch that money. The proposed law would give us the chance to seize such property, real estate, bank accounts, and the like, which is the only way ultimately to get at drug traffickers. In other words, the philosophy should be like the English common law. If I buy a million dollar insurance policy on my wife, then I murder my wife, I should not be entitled to have the million dollar proceeds.

The search provisions in the Bill are important; the ability to seize money and property. Under the Bill, if passed, what is called the in rem clause is important because if an accused person dies or leaves the country, under the Bill if passed, his assets may be seized. What motivates drug traffickers is known to be one thing, money. A young person said not long ago, "I can make a million dollars selling drugs and the state will never touch it", an RCMP drug enforcement person reported. Forfeiting drug profits must be the major focus of beefing up our legislation. An effective in rem clause similar to the one in the U.S. legislation would help us do that. It would also be consistent with our Charter of Rights, just as the American provision has been found to be consistent with its Bill of Rights.

It seems to me to make sense to confine the new forfeiture provision to drug matters only because all of us take a serious view of drug trafficking. If we expanded into too many other things the banks and others would get excited about it. It might be wise to restrict the provision just to drug trafficking.

A matter which might be looked at by a royal commission is the question of heroin arriving by mail. Canada is one of the few countries that does not allow people, up to a year or so ago, to open the mail no matter how overwhelming the indication is that a particular letter or package contains heroin. We should obtain a provision whereby, with a judge's order and overwhelming evidence that an envelope contains heroin, the Government should be allowed to open such mail it seems to me.

I recall speaking to a customs officer a few years ago who suggested that thousands of letters come into Canada every year containing heroin. If the motion is passed I hope the commission would look into that because it is a very serious problem, particularly for our young people. Again, if I may try to drive the point home, a study in the United States found that 237 heroin addicts in the City of Baltimore over a 10 or 11 year period committed half a million crimes in that city.

I have defended these addicts. They simply have to rob seven days a week in many cases if they are heroin addicts in order to have the money to pay $50 or $100 for two caps of heroin a day.

May I draw the House's attention to the Kefauver U.S. Senate committee report of 1951. That commission dealt with the extent to which:

> Gangsters and racketeers continue to pursue their vicious careers and invest the spoils of their illegitimate activity in legitimate enterprises.

I know that was 30 years ago in another country, but the principle, it seems to me, is, unfortunately, still valid today in Canada. The Kefauver committee found that the professional criminals in the United States were putting that money into the liquor industry, banking and finance. Two of the commission's recommendations were, one, that personnel of federal law enforcement agencies should be materially increased, their salaries increased. I think our own law enforcement people would like to see that done too. Two, a racket squad should be organized in the U.S. Justice Department. Perhaps if this commission were appointed it might wish to recommend that too.

In short, I think there is much to recommend the suggestion by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a few remarks on behalf of the New Democratic Party and myself. Basically, we support this initiative by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Mr. Nicholson).

I was listening to the remarks by my friend from Edmonton. He and I were both Crown attorneys in Vancouver, but I think he is older than I am. I believe he was a Crown attorney a year before I was under Stewart McMorran who was a well known Crown prosecutor in the City of Vancouver. How Mr. McMorran managed to hire in the space of two years the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), whose views on most economic things are at the opposite end of the spectrum, and me, I don't know.

Mr. Dick: His first choice was intelligent.

Mr. Waddell: The Associate Minister of National Defence heckled and said that the second choice was intelligent, and I thank him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Organized crime is prevalent in our country although it is hard to tell how deep and in what particular regions it is more so than in others.

In the areas of importation, manufacturing and distribution of narcotics, and illicit drugs in the drug trade, the Hon. Member for Edmonton talked about the tragedy of the need for heroin. It is a terrible problem. The Member has prosecuted and maybe defended, as I have, people who have been charged with heroin possession and with trafficking. They are basically sick people but they are also robbers, but one has to think of the victims, something we have never fully dealt with in Canada. We have never really dealt with the problem of legalization and whether we could use the British model. However, it has all sorts of problems. There is no easy answer. The Member was right in identifying it as being part of the problem. What about the people who manipulate the addicts and earn tremendous profit? That problem has to be attacked continually.

Then we have hijacking and prostitution. In the area of pornography we think the Government's new Bill on pornography will force more of this type of thing underground, not so much the really bad stuff, because that is there anyway, but erotica which could be classed illegal. There are some dangers to that. It could go underground and organized crime would become involved. Escort services, gambling and even in the video poker game machines organized crime has been known to get involved. Then we have the smuggling of aliens and immigrants, the terrorizing and extortion of immigrants, and the extortion of small business. What about car thefts, armed robberies, fencing of goods, arson and stolen securities? The whole area of white-collar crime is there.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) speaking in the House on May 4, 1987, made reference to a prison. He said that if a prison had only white-collar criminals in it, how different it would be because people in prison tend to be lower-income and poor people. The Member from Burnaby talked quite eloquently in reference to this Bill the one time it was debated. He said that we need to look into the whole matter of white-collar crime, environmental crime, and pollution in terms of criminal offences. We need to look into the whole area of worker safety and the kind of safety provided for workers. What about people who do not pay minimum wages and try to get away with it? We have not thought of those things as crime although they are. We would like to see that aspect broadened.

I am from Vancouver and I do not know whether Members are aware but there is another area that should be looked into, namely that of gangs. We have heard and saw a lot on television about motorcycle gangs and the wars between the gangs in the Province of Quebec. We saw pictures of bodies that were pulled out of the St. Lawrence River. I had a young boy in my riding, 16 years of age, who had been in and out of school. His mother came home a month or so ago and found him bound, gagged and shot to death in her apartment. The police believe the slaying had to do with one of the gangs in Vancouver. This is pretty tragic stuff and it goes far beyond the normal activities of juvenile gangs, the kind of activities we have seen in the past.

• (1410)

Vancouver is about where San Francisco was 10 years ago, with inter-gang rivalries possibly leading to violence. The Co-ordinated Law Enforcement Unit in British Columbia, a branch of the police force, identify a number of gangs and say that there are about 200 people involved in the city's major gangs, which include the Lotus-Jung Ching Gang, the Red Eagles, the Viet Ching and the Big Circle. The Attorney General of British Columbia has just appointed a 14-member unit, which costs about $800,000 a year, to look into these gangs and try to bring these people to justice.

Two and a half years ago, Jim and Lily Ming, restaurant owners, were kidnapped and brutally slain in a ransom bid case in Vancouver. I do not believe that that case has been solved.

In my area of the country, there is a growing problem with gangs, and not just juvenile gangs. There has always been a problem, as the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) said, with narcotics. He and I used to work in a building which was located on a street called The Corner at Main and Pender. Especially at Main and Hastings, the whole narcotics and heroin trade was centred around that area about 15 years ago. Unfortunately, that trade has expanded so that we cannot identify just one corner. Organized crime is manipulating the drug trade, the protection rackets and the thefts. Those things have to be looked into.

I will not say much more about that. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Trinity on her motion. I would like to see its terms of reference expanded so that it would look into gangs and also consider the nature of white-collar crime. I was going to say that white-collar crime is growing, but I do not think it is growing, it is just not prosecuted enough. We tend to prosecute the poor people rather than the rich. There is sometimes one law for the rich and a different law for the poor. The breaking of pollution and environmental laws and some of the securities frauds affect all of us. We are all victims of those crimes, and that area should be looked into as well.

Again, I congratulate the Hon. Member on her motion. Let us not be satisfied with the Bills the Government has brought in which, as government Members have pretended, will solve some of the problems, because they will not.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, I am very happy to have an opportunity to speak to the motion of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), a highly respected member of this place. She has presented an important motion to us today. As Chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, I want to congratulate her particularly for drawing to the attention of the House and of the people of Canada this very important matter.

Our Government is certainly well aware of the problem of organized crime and my colleagues on this side of the House will be discussing this afternoon some of the many initiatives this Government has taken in combatting organized crime. There has been improved legislation, enhanced resources, improved systems of collecting, analysing and disseminating intelligence on organized crime and as well as new arrangements with foreign Governments.

I want to focus my remarks on one part of the Hon. Member's motion, part 6, which calls upon the House to consider the advisability of appointing a royal commission to investigate organized crime in Canada and to include in its report observations and recommendations on a number of matters, including possible guidelines for enforcement agencies in dealing with witnesses against organized crime. I think the Hon. Member has quite rightly focused on an important part of the question.

I would point out to my colleagues that this is a matter which is currently being examined by the Ministry of the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher). It is being examined by his Department in collaboration with provincial Attorneys General and Solicitors General and other federal Ministers concerned with law enforcement issues.

I think we all agree that witness protection is part and parcel of a serious commitment on the part of the Government and law enforcement agencies to pursue forcefully organized criminal activities. I am sure some Hon. Members are aware that in the United States, the federal Government instituted a witness protection program aimed at organized crime. This program is administered by the United States marshals' service.

The need for a wide-ranging formal program in the United States is, I would suggest, based on the magnitude of the organized crime problem there. Fortunately, we in Canada are not faced with a problem of a similar magnitude. That is not to suggest, however, that it is not a significant problem worth addressing.

Hon. Members are of course aware that the administration of justice is a provincial responsibility and as a consequence, the majority of witnesses requiring protection or relocation, perhaps even new identities, are the responsibility and, will continue to be so of provincial authorities. The federal Government, through the RCMP and other federal Departments, does, however, provide assistance to provincial officials in the form of documentation required for the witnesses to establish new identities. The RCMP also assists other police forces in other aspects of witness protection.

These flexible arrangements which provide for witness protection have been generally satisfactory, I would suggest, in meeting the needs of Canadians over the last number of years. Hon. Members will appreciate that the Government and departmental officials are constantly monitoring the effectiveness of the various programs, however, and of the arrangements related to law enforcement in general and organized crime in particular.

Witness protection has been identified as an area requiring examination. As I mentioned earlier, this examination is in progress by the Ministry of the Solicitor General and provincial representatives.

In considering this matter, the Government is proceeding carefully, and so it should. The arrangements pertaining to witness protection must ultimately serve to increase the number of successful prosecutions of those criminal cases where there are threats of intimidation or violence against witnesses and their families which are occasioned by the implicated criminal group.

The arrangements must also serve to increase the willingness of witnesses to reveal and testify about criminal offences of which they have some knowledge. In this context, it is important to determine the principles of the arrangements, the eligibility criteria for witnesses and the range of services that should be afforded witnesses who testify against organized crime groups.

• (1420)

Earlier I referred to the witness protection program in the United States. It is generally acknowledged by American officials and academics that their program experienced considerable difficulty and growing pains. Let me just mention some of the problems.

First, there is under-funding and under-resourcing. Then there is difficulty in relocating and changing the identity of professionals. If you are a doctor or businessman it is pretty hard to change your profession. Adverse publicity for the program has been experienced. Then there is the problem of the commission of criminal offences by witnesses after relocation and change of identity, a very serious problem, I understand. They also have to ensure that the new identity is not used as a shield to evade creditors. There are problems resulting from separation and divorce of program participants, and access to children. There is failure to develop the required expertise, that is counselling and administrative services, rapidly enough to prepare the witness properly to adjust to the new life and new job. There are difficulties in providing identification documentation. Generally speaking, there is a careless, insensitive and unsympathetic attitude to the witness' trauma and problems in re-establishing themselves.

Given the U.S. experience we can appreciate that the administration of witness protection is difficult, often distasteful, and always unrewarding as the vast majority of witnesses in such programs are themselves criminals. The RCMP experience has included many of those difficulties. It is important that Governments and enforcement authorities bear these experiences in mind when considering any new arrangements to protect organized crime witnesses.

In closing, the important point is that the issue of witness protection is under careful consideration by both federal and provincial authorities. The motion, in referring to the advisability of appointing a royal commission to inquire into this matter, seems to be somewhat superfluous. I believe such an inquiry would not add substantially to our existing knowledge, something which is being added to in our current consultations and inquiries. It would in fact run the risk of unnecessarily consuming scarce resources and perhaps even delaying achievement of the objective which I am sure Members on all sides want to achieve. I simply urge caution on the part of the Hon. Member for Trinity and other Members in considering whether or not they should support this motion, at least parts of the motion.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, if I may, I will preface my remarks by adding my commendation to that of my friend of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for her concern over a matter which really concerns all of us, the impact of organized crime on Canadian society. It is rather trite to say that this phenomenon is a plague on practically all democratic Governments. We all read the papers and know that fortunes have reportedly been amassed by those unscrupulous and evil persons at the expense of the weak or desperate in our society.

I have been most impressed by the quality of the speeches made so far in this debate. They show the concern Members have about the continuance of organized crime in this country we call Canada. I sense a genuine will to put some truth into the old adage that crime does not pay. Unfortunately, all too often it has been seen that crime does sometimes pay.

Honest businessmen, friends of yours and mine, are lured by greed and the prospect of immense profits to join hands with disreputable representatives of the underworld. In addition to the obvious motive of greed, experience has shown that a sense of adventure and intrigue has seduced some of these dupes who are not even aware that they themselves are becoming snagged in the murderous tentacles of formidable criminal organizations until it is too late.

In Canada, with our constant exposure to graphic depictions of the presence of organized criminal activities in the American news media, as well as the well-publicized domestic examples, we have come to view the presence of such rogues much as bathers who recognize that predator sharks often lurk out of sight beneath the surface of the ocean only metres from the shore; cold, unfeeling and ready to take advantage when the opportunity presents itself. Just as counter-measures have been found to protect those who flock to the beaches every summer, I am confident that effective counter-measures will be developed to address this scourge of criminal organizations intent on operating against the interests of Canadian society.

Many Canadians will remember that Members of this House have on several occasions sought to improve the Criminal Code so as to improve the effectiveness of those practical tools, such as electronic surveillance, which are employed by the police. There has been continuing co-operation and consultation between the provincial authorities and federal officials in this area.

As several Members who participated in this debate pointed out, the Government is very much aware of the problem of organized crime in Canada and internationally. They discussed examples of Canada's participation with other states in agreements intended to stymie international criminal conspiracies. Mention was made of the sufficiency of present legislation in regard to the punishment of criminal conspiracy to murder. I respectfully agree with the views advanced by the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis). By providing that the maximum penalty that may be imposed for such offences is life imprisonment, the Parliament of Canada has signaled how serious it considers such acts, and created an appropriate sanction for such an offence.

Mention was made of the thorough federal-provincial analysis of the role of organized crime completed in June of 1983, as well as proposals that legislation be created to take effective action to trace, seize and confiscate the fruits of crime. That is one more step in the enforcement of the law in order to ensure that crime does not pay.

It is clear that the Government has recognized the threat to Canadian society in general, and the criminal justice system in particular, posed by the perception that fortunes are being made through the exploitation of the drug trade, loan sharking, extortion and other nefarious activities by persons and groups who have remained, thus far, insulated from the heat of police investigation or other criminal prosecution.

I share the view of a previous speaker who ventured the opinion that there really is no need to ask a royal commission to examine this matter, both because of the substantial costs involved, as well as the fact that scant information not already in possession of law enforcement officials would likely be developed.

• (1430)

I have no doubt that such an inquiry would prove fascinating for the general law-abiding citizen and extremely lucrative to the media—which would be expected to keep us informed on the daily developments—and perhaps the legal profession. However, just as the disclosure of any piece of information may endanger the life of a spy in intelligence matters, the public disclosure of many pieces of information relating to criminal organizations might put the lives of informers at significant risk.

In closing, I would like to echo the belief previously expressed in this debate that the precious resources existing in this country to combat crime would be better utilized in the investigation and prosecution of criminal conspiracies rather than in the protracted hearings of a royal commission which would, as has been said so frequently before, not likely provide knowledge which federal and provincial criminal intelligence resources had not already provided to authorities.

I do not minimize the issue, Madam Speaker. As I indicated at the outset, I commend the Hon. Member for Trinity for bringing this matter forward, but I sincerely believe that it is in the interest of all Canadians that proposed legislation to address the proceeds of crime and deal effectively with drug traffickers not be retarded or delayed in any way.

The Government initiatives, mentioned on earlier occasions, will, I am sure, be welcomed by all Members in this House who believe that concerted efforts are required now to reduce the mayhem caused by organized crime in this great country of ours. Now is the time to start an action program.

[Translation]

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Madam Speaker, I intend to speak for a few moments about organized crime and that part of Motion M-44 which proposes that this House appoint a royal commission that would conduct an investigation and make recommendations on legislation to enable the Government to identify and appropriate the proceeds of organized crime.

First of all, I think the Hon. Member is to be commended for the interest she has shown in this matter. All Members present undoubtedly understand how important it is to society that our laws allow for confiscation of the proceeds of crime.

Organized crime may take the form of a more or less permanent understanding between individuals, for their mutual benefit, as in the case of crime syndicates which have specific criteria for their membership and an established organizational structure. This definition can also apply to individuals who join forces for a single transaction or even to individuals acting independently.

There have always been people who, either alone or with others, have chosen the path of crime to reach their goals. In most cases, our penal laws have, in the past, provided adequate redress through the use of traditional sanctions such as fines and imprisonment.

However, during the second half of the twentieth century there has been a marked increase in profit-related crime, of which drug trafficking is an excellent example. There is no comparison between this new kind of crime and the kind with which our predecessors had to contend when they drafted our penal laws. There are even individuals, some with no previous record, who are willing to risk arrest and conviction, even when the law provides a maximum penalty of life imprisonment.

Madam Speaker, these people are prepared to risk a jail term because of the enormous profits generated by drug trafficking. The illegal profits involved in certain crimes are so great that there are certain national and international crime organizations that devote all their energies to the perpetration of these crimes. These organizations take advantage of today's modern communications, means of transportation and banking procedures, and the limited jurisdiction of national legal systems to amass illicit wealth.

The Criminal Code contains several provisions allowing for the confiscation of various items, the possession of which is illegal. These include restricted firearms, obscene publications, hate propaganda and counterfeit money.

The provisions, however, apply only to the tools used to perpetrate an offence and to possession of smuggled items. They do not provide for confiscating the illicit proceeds of—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. Unfortunately, I must interrupt the Hon. Member for Longueuil (Mr. Leblanc), since I have just now realized that the Hon. Member has already spoken to the motion before the House today, as well as to the amendment which is also before the House.

I am sorry but it is my duty to interrupt him at this time, although I regret having to do so, and recognize another Member who may wish to have the floor.

The Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane).

[English]

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Madam Speaker, it is rather interesting that in debate on this issue we are all saying that it is a very laudable motion and that we are very excited that the Member has brought it forward, yet each one of us in turn is giving reasons why we should not do this. We know that there is a problem in Canada. We know that there are socially unacceptable elements operating in our communities. We know that organized crime has a foothold in our society. We are groping to find the best way to fight that.

The biggest problem is that a royal commission would cost a great deal of money. I, for one, believe that that money should be spent trying to solve the problem by working with the people in our communities so that they are not vulnerable to those involved in organized crime.

The Government of Canada is making a great effort to fight organized crime through various Departments.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) will soon be tabling legislation in the House to implement mutual legal assistance treaties with other countries, which will include provisions designed to promote joint investigations aimed at curtailing organized criminal activity. This initiative was announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the Throne Speech. The pending legislation will enable the Government to identify and appropriate the proceeds of crime, thereby taking the profit out of some of the activities involved therein.

Currently the RCMP participates with provincial and municipal police forces in investigations of organized crime. There have been many situations in New Brunswick recently in which investigations involving the RCMP and provincial and municipal police have resulted in the apprehension of a great number of people involved in drug trafficking. We are seeing more and more instances of co-operation between Governments as they jointly try to cope with the spread of organized crime, particularly in the area of drug trafficking.

The RCMP co-ordinated the publication of an annual report, the Criminal Intelligence Service of Canada, which reports on organized criminal activities in all jurisdictions throughout Canada. They are providing the information to municipal and provincial police forces so that they, in turn, can get the benefit of the work being done by the RCMP in collecting statistics in this area.

• (1440)

It is recognized by the Government that drugs have become the focus of many organized crime activities in this country. As a result, the RCMP drug enforcement program employed a force of 999 persons located in 122 federal units from coast to coast during 1985 and 1986. Detachments which have no dedicated drug units also have a responsibility to enforce laws pertaining to illicit drugs and the trafficking thereof.

Furthermore, the Speech from the Throne referred to the government initiative in the area of developing and implementing a national drug strategy. The secretariat of the Solicitor General has worked with officials of the RCMP, the Departments of Justice and National Health and Welfare to develop mechanisms to improve federal and international efforts to combat drug trafficking and use.

Obviously much can be done with the money that would be spent on a royal commission. As a municipal politician, I can think of the advantages to the citizens of my particular city when our police officers were able to come to Ottawa for the training programs that were being put forward by the Solicitor General and the RCMP to train them in surveillance, the apprehension of those trafficking in drugs, and to train them in the proper methods by which they will charge someone with the offence. These programs were extremely beneficial to those communities and would be an excellent use of additional funds from the Government of Canada.

We can also think of those who are perhaps most vulnerable to the activities of organized crime. They include the less fortunate and young people, such as those who rely on teenage prostitution for support. There are young people in our society who do not steal for pleasure but because they need food.

I was an educator in New Brunswick in 1970. One of my 13-year old students was stealing lunches from other students and stealing from neighbourhood houses. He was not taking anything that he would use for pleasure, or stealing money that he would use for selfish purposes; he was looking for food. Since there obviously was not enough support at home to meet the needs of that child, he made himself vulnerable to others who might encourage him to get into criminal activities.

We must make an effort to put the money where it will work in our communities, through our social agencies and local police forces in order to fight poverty, social injustice, and remove some of the causes that make young people particularly, but also anyone else in our society, vulnerable to the activities of organized crime.

While a royal commission may be a nice idea and an attractive mechanism by which the Government can say it is doing something, I think we all realize it would not accomplish much. If the money for such a royal commission is available, it should be provided to the provinces and municipalities to give greater professional training to those involved in fighting crime and give greater opportunities to those who may be less fortunate and therefore more vulnerable to the activities of organized crime and the lure that it presents.

I believe that Canadians want results, rather than the showcase of another royal commission. In order to achieve those results we must go to the root of the problems which exist in every community of this country. We have an obligation as Members of Parliament to direct federal money in the area where it will give the most advantages and best long-term results in fighting organized crime.

[Translation]

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, before speaking to the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), I should like to commend her for drawing the attention of the House to the question of organized crime.

[English]

While there may be some merit in the Hon. Member's suggestion for a royal commission, there are other matters which should be considered. For example, it is time for the introduction of effective legislative apparatus to confiscate the proceeds of crime. This Government fully supports such an endeavour because the time for action has arrived. Any further delay will distance Canada from the efforts of virtually all other western democracies to limit the growth of these criminal umpires. Because of the absence of such legislation in Canada, we would appear to the criminal element to be a haven for such activity when compared with our international partners.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I would be remiss if I failed to mention the efforts made by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and other provincial and municipal police forces.

Indeed, each year at the Canadian Police College the RCMP provide training for policemen from the four corners of the world and send experts to various countries, including Commonwealth nations, where they teach the skills required to fight against the different types of crime now under consideration in the House. Canadian law enforcement officials, particularly RCMP officers, work in close co-operation with their counterparts in other western democratic countries to fight against every kind of crime, especially organized crime which knows no borders.

We can readily appreciate the legitimate concerns of the Hon. Member over organized crime. However, Canada is still at one with the provinces when it comes to renewed law enforcement efforts, and a royal commission would contribute precious little to existing or soon to be implemented fight mechanisms.

Madam Speaker, I realize that the motion sponsored by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) attests to deep concern about the extent of organized crime in Canada and the weakness of law enforcement measures, but I want to assure her that the members of Canada's police community and other devoted criminal justice experts are dealing with the problem with utmost competence. Our Government has confidence in them, and they deserve the support of all Hon. Members and of the Canadian public at large.

[English]

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, in view of the time, I would ask whether I should proceed with my remarks or perhaps call it 2.55 p.m.?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair is quite willing to accept either alternative. Shall I call it 2.55?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until Monday next at eleven a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

At 2.50 p.m. the House adjourned.

SMALL AND MEDIUM BUSINESS WEEK 1987

TRIBUTE TO CANADIAN ENTREPRENEURS—IMPORTANCE OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to draw your attention to the fact that this is the first day of Small Business Week 1987, a very important event in Canada.

Small Business Week gives us an opportunity to pay tribute to Canadian entrepreneurs. After all, the entrepreneur provides the spark that starts small businesses. An entrepreneur is someone who takes risks, works, worries and finally creates something that did not exist before.

The theme of Small Business Week 1987, the creative power of entrepreneurship, is therefore very apt.

[English]

The facts speak eloquently of the importance of small business to our national economy. There are more than three quarters of a million small businesses in Canada. Some 155,000 new ones are started each year. They employ 40 per cent of the workers and are creating 67 per cent of all the new jobs our economy produces, 100 per cent in some regions of the country. Local entrepreneurs, therefore, form the cornerstones of the Government's regional development policies.

Close to a third of all small businesses are owned by women and small businesses provide well over three million jobs for young men and women in Canada, an impressive 50 per cent more than big businesses provide. Small businesses are increasingly the mainstay of developed economies world-wide. They are turning more and more to small enterprise, to information-based, high technology, service-oriented activities, and away from megaprojects.

[Translation]

I think the Government, educational institutions and the private sector have a duty to encourage and support entrepreneurship.

Governments must first of all do everything they can to create an environment that is conducive to the development of entrepreneurship. Our Government has always tried to provide an economic climate in which people with ideas would be encouraged and supported.

The results are conclusive. For the first time in eight years, the prime rate, the inflation rate and the unemployment rate are all below the 10 per cent line. Interestingly, for the entrepreneur these lower rates mean an annual savings of $1,000 on every $33,000 of debt.

All observers have acknowledged our budgets were favourable to small businesses.

We have also implemented a plan to reduce the paper burden, and we have started to deal with regulatory and tax reform. And we are now liberalizing our trade relations with United States.

[English]

Canada's small business community welcomes freer trade. A survey of 22,528 business people conducted by the CFIB in 1986 proved that those who foresaw positive results and new opportunities from freer trade outnumbered those who saw a negative impact by nearly three to one. Now that we have a deal, Canada's entrepreneurs can and will seize the new opportunities of this historic free trade agreement and they will have far greater access to the largest, richest and closest market in the world.

Small business persons in this country are not afraid to compete because they have confidence in their abilities and so does the Government. Our efforts cannot stop there. We must all, Government, education and the private sector, turn our efforts toward stimulating new entrepreneurship across our country.

[Translation]

Increasingly, our education system will have to include entrepreneurship as a career choice for students. One is not born an entrepreneur, one becomes one. We can and we must teach entrepreneurship and consider it on the same level as medicine, law or engineering.

We must make Canadians understand the importance of entrepreneurship. We must encourage Canadians, especially our young people, to become entrepreneurs, and we should support them.

[English]

I want to thank the organizers of Small Business Week 1987, the Chamber of Commerce of Canada and the Federal Business Development Bank, to commend them for their efforts and to wish them the utmost success. Let us hope that Small Business Week will contribute not only to a greater understanding and appreciation of Canada's entrepreneurs but, most importantly, to the development of new entrepreneurs upon whom so much of our future depends.

[Translation]

I call on all Members of this House and on Canadians from coast to coast to join me in paying tribute to Canadian entrepreneurs and promoting entrepreneurship during Small Business Week 1987.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to thank the Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism), who gave us prior notice of his statement. Speaking on behalf of the Official Opposition and the Liberal Party of Canada, I too wish to pay tribute to the men and women who, with perseverance, creativity and courage, have started many small businesses, some of which have later become full scale enterprises. These men and women, as the Minister pointed out, are responsible for 70 per cent of the jobs in this country. During the recession in the first part of this decade, when big companies were closing and jobs were being lost, small businesses were still creating jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I must admit I am somewhat disappointed today. I expected the Minister would take advantage of this opportunity to announce new programs that would help develop small businesses and promote their growth, and thus create even more jobs.

Looking at the statistics, if every small business could create one more job, we would have about 800,000 new jobs, which would reduce unemployment considerably in this country. However, the Minister just went on mouthing the usual phrases, that it was a good thing this sector creates so many jobs and that there was so much development in this sector. Where are the programs?

Of course, the Minister referred to reduced tax rates. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to remind the Minister that in its tax reform, the Government reduced general corporate taxes from 36 to 28 per cent—a total of 8 per cent, and reduced the manufacturing tax for large companies from 30 per cent to 23 per cent—another 7 per cent. However, the tax rate for small businesses was reduced from 15 to 12 per cent, a meager 3 per cent. In fact, he increased the tax rate for small manufacturers by 2 per cent, raising the tax from the present 10 per cent to 12 per cent, effective next year if the tax reform becomes effective on January 1, 1988, as promised by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, that is what this Governement has done for small business. Today, the Government is paying tribute to this sector, to all these men and women who have contributed so much to the economic development of our country, and at the same time, the Government has proposed measures to discourage this development.

The tax reform also includes the $500,000 capital gains reduction. We agree with the principle, but on closer inspection, it is just window dressing. It does not really do anything for small businesses because, as we all know, 50 per cent of small businesses are not incorporated, and the measure only applies to the sale of shares. Among the other 50 per cent who are incorporated, Mr. Speaker, the majority do not sell their shares, only their assets. So until this measure also applies to the assets of small businesses, our small Canadian entrepreneurs will not be able to take advantage of this exemption.

In the past few months, the Minister has been congratulating himself on having created an advisory committee to cut paper burden. I may remind him that in 1983, the Liberal Government set up a similar advisory committee to deal with all these problems that were impeding the economic development of small businesses. In the fall of 1984, when the Conservative Government came to power, the advisory committee, which included representatives from various small business groups, was abolished outright, and it was not until 1986 that the Government acknowledged its mistake and reinstated the advisory council. What the Conservative Government has done for small businesses in the last three years boils down to a great big zero.

I am very disappointed, Mr. Speaker, because the Minister could have taken this opportunity to unveil really new programs.

I should like to recall that in 1985 the former Minister of State (Small Businesses) had undertaken to consult all Canadians precisely to learn what small businesses are all about. The Government spent a small fortune, Mr. Speaker, but we never did get the report because apparently it was printed but not distributed mainly because it did not have anything new to say. After three years I would have hoped that since the new Minister has held this portfolio for a year now, I would have hoped . . .

When I learned Friday that the Minister would be making a statement in the House today to mark the opening of Small Business Week I was hoping he would announce new programs, but no such luck. All we got are still more pious wishes, but small business has no use for pious wishes, it wants action, it wants to create jobs and help the community. But the Government has failed to respond, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on behalf of my Party. Small—and medium-sized businesses are a major component of our society. They create a lot more jobs than the big multinationals ever do, and the small business international fund will remain the major source of new jobs for Canadian men and women. Small businesses now employ 42 per cent of Canada's paid labour. As emphasized recently by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, small businesses with fewer than 19 employees accounted for 86 per cent of employment between 1975 and 1982, while companies with more than 100 employees reported a 6 per cent employment drop.

Mr. Speaker, that is how important small-and medium-sized businesses are here in Canada.

• (1110)

[English]

Recently we in the NDP organized a task force concerning the creation of jobs. One important area we identified was the need to do more for small business. We recommended the following nine points and I want to put them very quickly on the record.

First, ensure that banks provide more loans to small businesses at rates given to big businesses.

Second, establish a more aggressive "buy Canadian" program which includes government contracts and is targeted to small business and community enterprises. That of course becomes more difficult with the free trade agreement if it indeed goes through.

Third, provide risk and venture capital for small businesses.

Fourth, provide greater opportunities for women to establish small businesses, including a commitment by the banks to treat women in an equal manner. Recently it has been women more than men who have been successful in establishing small businesses.

Fifth, identify areas in which small businesses could expand to meet consumer demand now covered by imports. Again I have concerns about this area when it comes to free trade.

Sixth, provide small businesses with relevant financial, marketing and management assistance through federal "one-stop shopping centres" to be organized in conjunction with local business communities.

Seventh, reform the Federal Business Development Bank to refocus its activities on small businesses, especially those most in need.

Eighth, direct the Canada Patent Development Corporation to work with small business to help them patent new innovations and market those patents world-wide.

Ninth, change the tax system to make severance pay tax exempt and allow the tax-free use of RRSPs to start up new small businesses.

Those are some of the recommendations our Party made as a result of its special task force on jobs two years ago.

[Translation]

The payment is very important in this country and we have to go to great lengths to emphasize the major role of this business in the creation of jobs for Canadians, both men and women.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE ON BILL C-254

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-254, an Act to amend the Citizenship Act (period of residence).

[English]

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—TENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the tenth report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. This report is a summary of the work of the committee in the past year and is an attempt to highlight some ongoing problems we think need to be addressed.

• (1120)

The committee is greatly impressed with the dedication, hard work, and competence of public servants in general who come before us insofar as their commitment to delivering the programs of their departments. However, we are finding that public servants still are not cost-conscious and that opportunities are lost to improve the Government's revenues. There is not sufficient attention paid to safeguarding the Crown against liability and financial loss.

We have gone through a number of reports on different departments to highlight some of these problems and our proposed solutions which have already been addressed in other reports before the House. This report is a compendium of those.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of tabling my twenty-fourth petition, which of course conforms to Standing Order 106. This petition deals with the eventuality of a tax on food and was signed by most of the residents of the Coopérative de LaSalle in my riding of Ottawa—Vanier.

It read as follows:

whereas since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular on medical and dental supplies, snack foods, candy and soft drinks;

whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal is studying the possibility of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services, including food;

whereas food constitutes a vital element in day-to-day life and the imposition of this tax would have the effect of seriously penalizing certain categories of taxpayers such as the aged, families, unemployed, low-income taxpayers and youth;

wherefore the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—UNANIMITY CLAUSE AND ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions from residents of the Yukon Territory who wish to take this opportunity, having neither been consulted nor signatories to the Meech Lake constitutional amendment, to register their concern about the unanimity provision for the creation of new provinces. They humbly ask this House to consider further conferences on aboriginal rights and self-government.

OPPOSITION TO THE ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a great many petitions from residents of Vancouver Island and the Gulf Islands in British Columbia. They are concerned about the dangers posed by the presence of nuclear-powered and/or nuclear-armed vessels in Canadian ports to both the environment and Canadian citizens. They call upon the Government not to proceed with the purchase of nuclear submarines.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour of tabling a petition signed by 1,721 constituents of my riding of Laval-des-Rapides and by other residents of the Montreal area who object to the Government's tax reform proposal to introduce a tax on food.

The petition notes that since 1984, the Government has already introduced twenty-five new taxes and tax increases.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to reject the Government's proposal to make Canadians pay a tax on food.

This democratic protest is an expression of the dissatisfaction Canadians feel with the Government's policies.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement and the replies thereto Government Orders will be extended by 14 minutes beginning at one o'clock p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

> That this House condemns the Government for its inept negotiation of a trade agreement with the United States that undermines Canadian sovereignty and requires excessive and unacceptable concessions by Canada but gains virtually nothing in return, that still fails to provide protection for Canadian industries from restrictive United States trade laws and that caves in to all United States demands in key sectors, especially agriculture, energy, automobiles, financial services and investment while threatening hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs without the Canadian Government's providing any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) who is in the House to participate in this debate has said that there ought to be a Leader's debate on this issue. He and I are here today. We are willing to take on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in a debate on this issue at any place and at any time. We believe that Parliament is the right place and that this is the right time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I recall the secret Government free trade communication strategy document that was leaked over two years ago. It said:

> The strategy should rely less on educating the general public than on getting across the message that the trade initiative is a good idea. In other words a selling job.

From the outset of these negotiations the Government of Canada has deliberately kept Canadians in the dark, deliberately kept the facts from Parliament, and deliberately refused to give us the parameters of the authority of the negotiating team. That has been the Government's strategy from the beginning and continues to be its strategy. It is a cynical, manipulative and misleading tactic. There is one thing wrong with it; Canadians are not stupid, Canadians will not be fooled, and Canadians will not buy this trade deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada went into this trade negotiation under three naive assumptions. The first was that obtaining an agreement with the United States would somehow magically exempt Canada from protectionist sentiment in the United States, particularly in the U.S. Congress. That was naive from the outset.

Leading members of the Congress, the U.S. Senate, and the House of Representatives told us publicly and privately on trips to Ottawa that there was no way Canada would gain an exemption from U.S. trade remedy law as set forth in the 1974 trade law of the United States or, indeed, in the Omnibus Bill currently before the Senate and House of Representatives. We were warned that there was no way that would happen. Yet the Government laboured under the naive assumption that a signed agreement would somehow exempt us from that.

We can see from the agreement that we have not been exempted. American trade law and practice, present and future, will continue to apply to Canadian exports. We have not gained secure access to the American market.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The second naive assumption was that we could get a quick fix. Instead of dealing multilaterally and internationally through the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, as we did so successfully during the Kennedy Round and the Tokyo Round, the Government tried to get a quick fix to our trade problems by dealing bilaterally and directly with the United States. Going head-to-head, face-to-face, one-on-one with the strongest economic power in the world, which is ten times stronger than we are, when our Government wanted to deal politically more than their Congress wanted to, we were bound to get a lousy deal. That is what happened. We got a lousy deal.

• (1130)

Of course, the third naive assumption was that the United States really wanted free trade with Canada. The United States does not want free trade. It is clear now that they have always wanted fair trade according to their definition as it is set out in the 1974 congressional law and as it is set out in the Omnibus bill.

Fair trade means trade in reciprocal terms, trade on their terms. They used the level playing field but it is their playing field, with their rules, their linesmen, their goalposts, their ball and their uniforms. That is what the United States always wanted in a trade agreement and that is what they have received in this particular deal.

The timing could not be worse for Canada. The United States and the Reagan administration has been pulling world demand into their market. The American market has kept the world economy going, but it became evident over the last number of months that a trade deficit of the proportions being run by the United States and the extent of the budgetary deficit, financed by Japan and Germany, could not continue forever and that the United States could no longer fuel world demand.

It has become evident that it will have to convert itself into a neutral and surplus position, which will be at the expense of every other country in the world. There is no way that the United States Congress and the United States administration, particularly in light of last week's events on the stock market, can afford not to take control of their trading position. Therefore, nothing could be worse in terms of timing and nothing will reflect congressional sentiment more acutely.

[Translation]

But the Government was naive. They presumed that by simply sitting down with the United States and negotiating a trade deal we would, as if by magic, be exempted from the American protectionist legislation and guaranteed free access to the U.S. market. But there is no magic in international trade. There is no miracle and no ready-made solution either, and it is clear that the results are not there for Canada.

To achieve his objectives, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) needed to convince the Americans of two things: first, to write down specifically in the agreement that Canada would no longer be subjected to any American protectionist legislation and, second, to set in place a binding dispute settlement mechanism to settle any dispute between the two countries. These conditions were essential. Well, the Mulroney Accord does not meet either of these conditions. The Accord does not guarantee free access to the American market. It does not protect us from protectionist legislation.

[English]

What does the dispute mechanism say? It is still to be determined whether it is constitutional under American law. The dispute mechanism is only a review panel. It applies American law and American practice to our exports. Nothing is changed. Its only leverage under the American administrative tribunal is to analyse whether those tribunals have applied correctly American law and American rules according to their practice. It does not change the law to which Canada is subject regarding the American market. It changes a judge and prolongs the process.

When we consider the softwood lumber case, it prolongs the process probably by another litigious year. That softwood lumber case would have been decided under the same law and rules. Furthermore, that 15 per cent tax for our softwood lumber going into the American market has been grandfathered and made part of the treaty.

In March, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) said that the objective of any trade agreement would be the elimination of countervail in both countries. In April, the Prime Minister said that the U.S. trade remedy law cannot apply to Canada. That seemed quite clear and sensible. The only reason to attempt to seek an agreement would be to get an exemption from U.S. trade law. The Minister for International Trade and the Prime Minister understood it then, but last week the chief negotiator for Canada, Simon Reisman, said that it is "just plain dumb" to think "that this agreement should provide us with an exemption from American trade remedy laws, is just the silliest proposition I have ever heard."

That flies right in the face of the Prime Minister's remarks, and right in the face of the instructions obviously given to him by the Minister for International Trade when she went public on that very important issue. She was right then and the Prime Minister was right then; without an exemption of U.S. trade law an agreement is not worth the paper it is written on. That is the reason we oppose it.

Why does the Prime Minister continue to tell us that that is what he achieved in this agreement, when his chief negotiator says that it is just not so. In his revised summary of the agreement, Mr. Yeutter says:

> The U.S. countervailing duty and anti-dumping laws—defined as U.S. statutes, legislative history, regulations, administrative practice, and court decisions—will remain intact and unchanged. Hence, U.S. petitioners will retain all their rights under existing U.S. law, just as Canadian industries will keep their rights under Canadian law.

We are back to where we started. We do not have that secure access to the American market that the Prime Minister promised and which he himself recognized as essential for any deal.

Let us also get rid of some of the philosophical baggage. This is not a free trade arrangement. This is a selective trade arrangement and Members of Parliament and Canadians are entitled to look at this deal on its merits. Some industries are in; some industries are out. The British Columbia wine industry and the Ontario wine industry are in; the breweries are somehow out. Apparently communications are out while textiles are in.

[Translation]

How does one explain that to textile workers who are vulnerable, while brewery workers are protected? How does one explain that to the footwear and clothing industry workers who are vulnerable, while the television community is protected? How does one explain that to the electronic industry workers in Quebec and Ontario who are vulnerable, while the Dow, Labatt, and Molson brewery workers are protected? We must therefore scrutinize the agreement and realize that we have gained very little while giving up a lot.

[English]

We did not get that secure access to the American market. Yet we have opened our investment to the Americans, opened our culture, opened our capital markets, and our agriculture. We changed the Auto Pact and have become a storehouse in a continental energy policy.

We have lost control over investment because the thresholds have risen dramatically. I said in the House some three weeks ago that takeovers will be unlimited and it will be open season for the Americans.

Our service sectors, particularly our financial markets, are now open and we will have lost control over those markets as an element in determining Canadian economic policy.

No one could have predicted that a continental energy policy would be in this agreement. There was never any sense that we were not only negotiating a trade agreement but that we were selling the resource base of this country or, to put it in more realistic terms, giving away the resource base of this country.

Since Confederation we have always resisted American pressure by building a country east and west and north. We built a railway, we built an airline, we built a broadcasting system and we built a pipeline. We moved against those natural forces that would have brought us into the American orbit. Yet the Government, in one fell swoop, and with one signature, has thrown that away. Our oil, gas and coal are now directed into a continental resource basket and we have become a resource storehouse for the United States. We no longer control our own energy policy.

How many times were we told that our cultural industries were not on the table? Yet Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. Trade Representative, told us in his summary: "Canada has agreed that cultural measures it takes will not impair the benefits the U.S. would otherwise expect from the provisions of the agreement". Just to make sure that we got the point, he revised his summary and stated:

> The U.S. retains the right to redress any adverse commercial effects of any future cultural measures enacted by Canada.

The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) is here and she may want to speak about that.

The warning is clear. If a future government of Canada decides to support Canadian art and culture in a way that the Americans consider has an adverse commercial effect on them, then they will retaliate. That is the interpretation the U.S. puts on this agreement. So much for culture not being included.

• (1140)

How many times did the Prime Minister and his Ministers tell us that agriculture was not on the table? We do not have much time to go into that this morning but I will say that the whole supply management structure of this country is vulnerable because the seasonal import protection is lifted.

[Translation]

U.S. multinational corporations now will be able to make an onslaught on our markets with their fruits, vegetables, dairy products and even their TV-dinners. In that area, Canadians cannot compete with the Americans, for no fault of their own. Our season is too short. Our winters are cold here in Canada. There is no way farmers here with a three-month growing season can compete with farmers down South who enjoy a twelve-month growing season. If in order to please the Americans we sacrifice our farmers, and our fishermen, we will end up depending on them, even for the food we eat.

[English]

How many times did the Prime Minister tell us that the Auto Pact was not on the table? But there it is in the agreement, changed, perhaps gutted, and we will have to wait for the final print to see exactly how much it has been gutted. Our auto parts manufacturers, Frank Stronach in the lead, the largest in the country, and the second largest, from Belleville, Ontario, have said that as a result of this agreement they are going to move their plants into the United States. That is what they said.

How many times did the Prime Minister tell us that the agreement would create thousands and thousands of jobs? Yet after the deal was signed, on his first pronouncement, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) announced that up to 500,000 jobs could be lost.

I might say, and not in any way peripherally, that two-thirds of the jobs which are vulnerable under this trade agreement with the United States are filled by women, jobs in the textile industry and in the service industries, and I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, we will have more to say on that particular subject as this debate proceeds.

The whole history of these negotiations before, during and now that we see the principles of agreement, has been that the Government has thrown away our cards, our sovereignty and the tools we need for political and economic independence. Even before the Government sat down at the bargaining table the Foreign Investment Review Act had been changed and the National Energy Program had been scuttled. During the course of the negotiations it was book publishing, then during the course of the negotiations, it was our drug manufacturing situation; then potash; and then softwood lumber. Now we have added to that list the auto pact, agriculture, energy, financial institutions, the wine industry, textiles, and capital markets. It amounts to the most massive sell-out in Canadian history, and I and my Party will never accept it. Neither, we believe, will the vast majority of Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's trade agreement will mean deep changes for this country. Never was that option discussed during the last election campaign. The Prime Minister has no mandate to trade away our sovereignty. I will fight that agreement. I will fight it to the point of running the next election on it. You have my word for it. That is a promise.

And if Canadians give us their confidence, if they make us their government, never will I feel bound politically by that agreement signed by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade, under orders from this Prime Minister. We never signed that Agreement. We will not live with it.

[English]

We did not negotiate the deal, we are not bound by the deal, we will not live with this deal, and if the deal and the final contract reflects the principles and the general terms of agreement we have seen, we are going to tear the deal up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I happen to believe that Canadians can compete with anyone, including the Americans. I believe we can compete without sacrificing our sovereignty and political independence. The exclusive focus on the American market, our most vital market and one that is absolutely essential for us, has cost us markets in the Pacific Rim and markets in Europe, and I went into those figures the last time I had the honour to stand in the House on this issue.

We need a global multilateral approach. We have always had greater leverage with the United States using the international negotiations to cut the deals we have cut from the Tokyo Round to the Kennedy Round. Using those international negotiations we have achieved our present situation where 85 per cent of everything we move across the border already goes in free of duty. The mistake the Government made was to go head-to-head with the United States for political purposes when it was drooling for a deal, sacrificing our principles, our citizens, our businesses and control over our economy.

It comes down to a simple question. Do we have faith enough in our fellow citizens and in ourselves to compete with the world and win? Or do we need an exclusive deal with the United States and hope it will do it for us? That is a prospect, by the way, which looks less and less likely as the United States finally has to come to terms with its own trade deficit and its own economy as a result of the cataclysm of last week. Are we willing to yield to the Americans that style of control over our economic and political decision-making process? I do not believe we are and I do not believe we should.

I have faith in this country. I have faith in Canadians and I have faith that we are mature enough, talented enough, confident enough and tough enough to make our own choices in our own way for our own future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, after having listened to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), I believe it is a real sad day for British Columbians, that he would reject an agreement supported by British Columbians.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. St. Germain: On Saturday, in a forum—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members will have noticed that during the right hon. gentleman's lead-off speech he was extended every courtesy by all Members of the House. I think we would want to have the same courtesies extended to other Members.

Mr. St. Germain: I would like to ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition a question. The entire lumber industry has taken a position in favour of this agreement. It has said that had a dispute settling mechanism been in place, as proposed in the agreement, it would have been able to deal successfully with the softwood lumber issue and the shakes and shingles issue would not have surfaced as it has. We also look today at the potash industry in Saskatchewan. But let us stick to British Columbia because the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition represents a riding in British Columbia.

How about the Bentleys, the Bensons, the Clarkes and all the people in these industries who are advocating that we support this initiative. How can the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, in the face of this support, oppose something that would benefit western Canadians so vastly and so greatly, especially our province, the Province of British Columbia? I ask him to respond to that question because he cited in his delivery the adjustment factor.

I would like to tell the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, if he does not know, that with respect to shakes and shingles, on Friday, October 23 last, the federal Government lived up to its promise. It made a promise to assist and adjust for the unfair tariff imposed on shakes and shingles and delivered a $9.4 million program to the areas most affected by shakes and shingles. I ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition how in the face of this support he can stand here and oppose such a positive initiative?

• (1150)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the first public meeting I held after this agreement was announced happened to be in my own riding of Vancouver Quadra. There were about 800 or so people there at Point Grey Secondary School where the support and the questions reflected a deep concern on behalf of the citizens of my riding, that in exchange for precious little their Government had given away a good deal. On the hot-line show Jack Webster came out of retirement. We had the hot-line all over the Province of British Columbia. The first 14 out of 15 questions were to this effect, "John, hang in there. Do not let Brian sell us out".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Chairman of the Canadian Council of Forest Industries, Adam Zimmerman, has so far refused to take a position on the agreement until he sees the final document. So what the hon. gentleman says does not reflect the official view of the forest industry.

I say to the forest industry of British Columbia what has happened is that the 15 per cent export tax forced on us by the Americans because our Government did not have the guts to take it through the courts and on to the American system—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —that 15 per cent tax has now been grandfathered. If it is moved into stumpage, as the Province of British Columbia is negotiating to do, that moves the threshold of tax against our industry from $600 million up to $1 billion at the stumpage level. That would affect not only our ability to penetrate the American market but the Japanese market and the world market.

I am saying also that in terms of the forest industry it ought to be recognized that that type of penalty made permanent and grandfathered under this agreement penalizes into perpetuity the industry unless the Canadian people wake up and this Government yields to the opposition I believe will be mounted.

Let me state one further thing. In terms of whether the softwood lumber issue would have been decided any differently, the same law would apply. The same regulations would apply. We have no new definition of subsidy that might relieve stumpage from under that classification. The same law would apply. The same regulations would apply. All we have now is a new review tribunal which is bound to apply that law and whose only jurisdiction is to see whether American law and American trade practice has been fairly administered and applied by American tribunals—a very narrow jurisdiction.

I am saying to the hon. gentleman that the forestry industry in British Columbia, indeed in the country, is no better off. Indeed, it is worse off because that 15 per cent tax has now been grandfathered and made permanent under the agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and came to the conclusion that in politics—

[English]

It is easier to sell fear than hope.

[Translation]

—it is easier to sell fear than hope, it is easier to resort to scare tactics than to do anything else. And at long last, after three and a half years, the Leader of the Opposition has found a cause.

Mr. Speaker, what I fail to understand is to see someone who was once the staunch defender of Quebec interests—I am referring to the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau)—be party to this.

An Hon. Member: You do not know anything!

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, keeping in mind that Premier Robert Bourassa is also a Liberal at the provincial level, I wonder how any Quebecer can stand still when hearing arguments which fly in the face of those made by our new federal scarecrow. Mr. Speaker, I should like to recall that in outlying regions such as mine which heavily depend on better trade with the United States with respect to pulp and paper industries, forestry and lumber, we who inhabit these outlying regions have had to live with unemployment rates ranging from 20 per cent all the way to 90 per cent, the so-called Canadian nationalism notwithstanding. You never did find other solutions. We have taken a fresh approach towards the United States and the rest of the world, and we hope that this new historic accord will benefit all regions of Canada, not only Toronto and Bay Street—

Ms. Copps: Sept-Îles is doing fine!

Mr. Hamelin: Precisely, the situation on the north shore might even be better if we had an opportunity to expand our trading horizons, if we were protected from the vagaries of the marketplace. Mr. Speaker, why should all our resources, all our markets and all our opportunities always invariably benefit the select few in certain regions of Canada?

I should like to ask the Leader of the Opposition how he can explain to Quebec Hydro management that his position does not jibe at all with that of his close friend Robert Bourassa, who happens to be a strong supporter of free trade. That is my question to the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we have a hope in this country, but it is a Canadian hope, not an American hope, not a hope—

When he goes back to the Province of Quebec I suggest he should discuss the matter with labour unions, workers and agricultural producers. Saturday afternoon I met a few UPA representatives—that is the Union des producteurs agricoles—who are against the agreement with the United States. He ought to debate the issue with textile workers, footwear and clothing workers, and I believe he will be much wiser next time, if he rises in the House, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that the 10 minute question and comment period has expired.

Mr. Charest: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: It better be a point of order because I know he can bootleg anything in. Watch him.

Mr. Charest: I believe they are nervous today, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Charest: They have reason to be. My point of order, Mr. Speaker, is that I would seek unanimous consent of the House so that I may ask a question of the Right Hon.—

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Gauthier: Go get Mulroney and we will answer questions.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker—

• (1200)

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the absence of our House Leader and Deputy House Leader, I do understand that it was agreed in discussions between the Parties today that after the initial speech by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) the next speech would be by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) on behalf of the Government, and following that the Leader of the New Democratic Party would speak.

I assume that the Government members intend to stick by the agreement that they made in private this morning.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I was advised by the Deputy House Leader that because this is an Opposition Day, I speak for the Government of Canada third in this debate.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is in some difficulty here. There may or may not have been an arrangement among the Parties. I should advise Hon. Members that the Chair was under the impression that there had been some arrangement. But, if there has not been, then the Chair is in the position of recognizing the next Member who rises.

The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as was stated a moment ago by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), we had clearly been told that the Government had decided to speak second. It has this right in this type of procedure as the governing Party. But if the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) is unprepared to defend the indefensible, we on this side of the House can well understand that. I will willingly speak at this point to add to what has been said on behalf of my Party.

The people of Canada at no point since the Second World War have had the occasion to witness such an incredible sell-out of Canadian interests as we have seen presented by the Government of Canada in the last two weeks to the people of Canada on this subject.

I wish to begin my comments with a quote from an early speech made in the House by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) after he formed the Government. The Prime Minister stated on November 7, 1984, and I quote:

—we have only been in power for two months, but I can tell you this: Give us 20 years, and it is coming, and you will not recognize this country.

This was stated by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons two months into office.

I have a quote from Ambassador Yeutter, the principal person involved in these negotiations from the American side. Ambassador Yeutter stated last week, with the same 20-year time span in mind, "The Canadians don't understand what they have signed. In 20 years, they will be sucked into the U.S. economy".

I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that I wish the Prime Minister, when he made his comments, had told the people then that he had this 20-year scenario in mind. I can tell the Prime Minister that the New Democratic Party and Canadians from coast to coast do not accept the premise of Mr. Yeutter's conclusion. They do not accept these trade talks. They do not accept the Tory view of Canada that the only way of becoming a confident Canadian is to become an American. We believe that confident Canadians will stand up in this historic debate to fight to preserve an independent Canada, whatever the Tories may wish to do.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have reached a turning point in our history. As an independent country, we must answer the most important question we ever had to deal with in the latter half of the twentieth century. The Trade Agreement has raised a profound concern from coast to coast about the future of our country.

As a Canadian, I firmly believe that our country's survival is at stake. Canada's survival as a sovereign and independent nation is threatened. It is as serious as that. The Mulroney Government has made all the concessions in its negotiations with the Americans: concessions in the service sector, in the agricultural sector, in the cultural sector, in the energy sector, and even concessions on investment control and regional development.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Government's negotiations is clear. Mr. Mulroney and the Conservatives want to give Canada away piecemeal. However, Mr. Mulroney may be the Prime Minister but he does not own Canada. It is our Canada, it belongs to all Canadians and he has no right to give it away.

Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign, the Prime Minister promised more equity and honesty. He has done the exact opposite since that time, and I am referring to pensioners and tax reforms and especially the various regions in our country. We keep hearing the same thing, time and time again. The Prime Minister says one thing and does the exact opposite. Instead of honesty, openness and equity, Canadians have had broken promises, deceit and no equity. Once again, what the Prime Minister promised and what he did were two different things.

Before the election, the Prime Minister said that free trade would have an impact on our sovereignty and that he was opposed to it for that reason.

[English]

This was not only stated by the Prime Minister before the election, but by other present Ministers of the Crown who, when asked to give their opinion of the impact of this type of deal on the future of Canada, had extremely serious and negative things to say.

The present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), a former Prime Minister, stated that he opposed this type of agreement because jobs would be lost in critical sectors of the Canadian economy. He was correct in 1983 when he stated that, and it is correct today when he is the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He should be standing by that opinion today when he said it in 1983.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Before the last election, the present Secretary of State stated that such an agreement would make Canada the weak sister of the United States. He opposed it at that time, and I say to him that if he had integrity and if his Government had integrity, instead of bringing this preposterous proposal before the people of Canada, he should be standing up and saying in 1987 what he said in 1983.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Finally, Mr. Speaker, in this regard I add the words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who rises in a rather condescending way from time to time and likes to lecture members of the Opposition on the so-called real world out there in the economy. We think that we have an understanding of the real world, particularly in North America, and particularly in terms of our relationship with the United States. Before he became Minister of Finance, in 1983 he stated that such an arrangement with the United States, and these are his words, "would be simplistic and naive".

The words uttered by the Prime Minister before this agreement came into place in 1983, the words of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the words of the Minister of Finance, all of whom stated that we would lose critical jobs, we would lose our sovereignty, we would become a weak sister, that such an agreement was naive and simplistic, were correct, and Canadians believe that they are correct now.

Canadians are sick and tired of the Government which is now in control with its large majority that has systematically stated one thing and done the opposite, whether it is about pensioners, tax reform, or commitments to the region, and now about the very fate of our nation being in doubt. We are fed up with this duplicity, Mr. Speaker, and so are the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We have had occasion in the House and outside the House to call into question a number of the important details of this agreement. I wish to add to that, what I say with care, the duplicity in the whole process that the Government has involved us in. Let us look at some key elements. What the Government has been telling us here in the House is one thing, and what we find in the documents, and what the Americans themselves say are in the documents time after time turns out to be something different.

• (1210)

For example, the U.S. version says that the matter of Bill C-22 was in fact part of the deal. It is in the Yeutter briefing documents. It has been said publicly in statements outside of Washington in the United States. We have read it. The Americans have read it. However, once again the Government denies it. It signs one document on October 4, thinks about its implications, and then takes steps to get another document arranged for October 5 for release to the people of Canada.

We opposed that drug legislation before it was associated with this deal, and we oppose it now. We say that the Government is wrong to sell out our interests in general in this deal and in particular in the drug industry. We also say that the right to make laws in the pharmaceutical field, which would bring low prices and good benefits to the people of Canada, and sovereignty in this field should reside in Canada for Canadians, not be shifted to the United States of America.

The Government has insisted that Canadian culture is not a hostage in this deal. It has said that before the deal, and it has said it since. If we read the briefing documents prepared for Mr. Yeutter—and again we see statements made by American officials since then—another picture emerges.

In the document prepared for the American ambassador it was said categorically that the Government of Canada within a matter of weeks would give Americans in this industry exactly what they wanted. A film mogul in Hollywood yells, "pay attention to us" and the Prime Minister and the Conservative Government say, "right; how soon can we do it?". We believe that the film industry has been dominated too long in terms of its distribution by an American set of companies serving their interests. We believe that the cultural interests of Canadians should be served by making changes which are long overdue. Again we criticize the Government not only for the bad deal in general but for selling out that cultural interest in particular.

Let me refer to another example. The Prime Minister says that we now have secure access to the American market—he has said this since the deal—and that we have protection from unfair and punitive U.S. action with the so-called wonderful dispute settlement mechanism which has been put in place.

While the Government is saying that, what do the Americans say? They are saying quite the opposite. If we look at the briefing notes prepared for Mr. Yeutter we see that he was asked to deal with the specific question and we see the proposed answer from the highest U.S. officials. The question was this. "If these provisions had been in effect when we took our actions on shakes and shingles and on specialty steel, what would the outcome have been?" It was a hypothetical question for Mr. Yeutter to respond to after the so-called fair dispute settlement mechanism had been put in place. What was he told to reply? It was: "We believe there would be no major difference whatsoever".

The Canadian Government has boasted that it has something wonderful. The Americans who are more direct and honest have described the dispute settlement mechanism for the phoney thing that it is. I say to the Minister that it is time the Government was frank with the people of Canada. I also say to the Minister that she may think a deal is acceptable which will not change circumstances for the workers in her province in the shakes and shingles industry, but we say that it is much more important that Canadians, whether they be in shakes and shingles or tubular steel, who are affected get something fair instead of the hypocrisy which the Government is trying to pass off on them.

Not only has there been hypocrisy and misleading information given at different times about what they got in this deal, having listened to government spokespersons, I ask the House to consider how even their language has begun to shift since the deal has come down. I quote what the Prime Minister said on April 2 of this year before the deal was announced. With reference to the unfair remedy laws so frequently passed in the United States, he said, "The trade remedy laws cannot apply to Canada, period". That is what the Prime Minister said. He said that what the Government was after was getting exemption from these unfair laws. They are his words; not mine.

Now that we have the sham before us, about which the whole country knows, how is Mr. Reisman describing the same situation? The other day he was quoted in The Ottawa Citizen as saying, "That this agreement should provide us with an exemption from American trade remedy laws is just the silliest proposition I ever heard". He should have told that to the Prime Minister last April when he said that that is what he would get for us.

I have a couple of gems from the Minister herself upon which I hope she will comment when she gets to her feet. With reference to U.S. trade laws, she said the following before the deal came down: "They are not fair. If things were working smoothly, neither side would need a change. The simple fact is that the present laws are not working".

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Who said that?

Mr. Broadbent: The Hon. Minister for International Trade said that on March 16. Those were her words; not mine.

The next example upon which I hope she will comment is even better. She said: "That is why we are seeking to negotiate a new trade treaty with the U.S.—to change these rules so that we avoid these kinds of border disputes".

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Who said that?

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister for International Trade said that. Now, after they have negotiated something which does not change the law one bit and which still leaves the American Government with all the authority to impose unfair trade remedy legislation, what does the Minister say? She seems to have changed her tune, because she no longer says that these laws were wicked or bad or had to be done away with. What she says is: "Our problem is not the law". Suddenly it is not the law. In fact, she goes on to say—and I hope she says this all over British Columbia as well as elsewhere in Canada "the Americans have good laws in this area". She also said that our problem is that we believe they are unfairly applied. They are not bad laws; they are just being applied badly.

Our problem is that we have a Government of Canada which does not understand what the real interests of Canada are all about. That is our problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: That's enough.

Mr. Broadbent: Conservatives on the other side are saying "That's enough". I can understand why they are saying "That's enough". If there is anything a Conservative Cabinet Minister cannot stand it is the truth. Since there will be a Cabinet Minister speaking, he will not have that inflicted upon him, I am sure, in the next 20 minutes or so.

Before I conclude I want to say that there are many other aspects of this deal. Whether we talk about the betrayal in the automotive sector where they said that the Auto Pact was not affected, whether we look at the results for the Big Three or the automotive parts sector which are profoundly affected, whether we consider our agricultural interests in western Canada who thought that they were to be protected from unfair subsidies—again if we read the document the wording on the surface looks good—however, we learn that the Government is prepared to accept subsidies in the agricultural sector continuing from the United States as long as they were put in place before the agreement came into force.

We thought and western farmers thought that the whole point of the agreement was to get rid of such subsidies. Once again the Government has let down western Canadians, I say to the Minister.

I think my time has nearly expired, but perhaps I could ask for permission to continue for a few more minutes. I would like to ask for the permission of the House to do that.

• (1220)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) has asked for permission to continue his comments for a few minutes. Is there such permission?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I express my appreciation to Hon. Members from both sides for that consideration. I want to conclude by doing two things, first by speaking very briefly about what we are trying to defend in this debate and then by moving a short amendment to the motion which we will be strongly supporting.

I think it is worth remembering that when we on this side of the House say that the future of Canada is at stake, we believe that very much and we hope that the Government will use the occasion to take on our arguments. If they are wrong, we hope they will show us where they are wrong, though we think the Government is seriously mistaken.

I want to say in this context that we in this Party are seeking to protect the continuation in the future of a certain kind of Canada, a Canada that is very important to us. We in this Party do not believe that the Canadian dream is now or has ever been simply a variant of the American dream. We believe that we have, particularly in the Canada of 1987, a different kind of nation, a qualitatively, significantly different nation from the United States, and one that every Canadian should be doing everything he or she can to preserve.

It is for that reason that I want to talk about two or three key elements of that difference and maybe the Minister would deal with those. She is showing a little concern. If she disagrees with these, I hope she will speak to them. We have a whole day's debate before us.

First, it is my view as a Canadian that in this country of ours we have a very different commitment to a particularly different mix of the values of liberty and equality. We have added to that in the history of our country a sense of community that is very important, indeed. Therefore, we have in this country, as they do not have in the United States, a unique fusion of a very good Charter of Rights, constitutionally entrenched, and a parliamentary democracy. That has made for a different kind of Canada and will continue to make for a different kind of Canada.

Second, we in this Party believe that most Canadians now accept that this nation of ours, unlike the United States, has a strong commitment to a private sector in the economy, but we also have and have had for decades a strong commitment to a good public sector in the economy. That is not part of the American dream. That is why we have created and kept in place institutions like the CBC, Petro-Canada and Air Canada. Whatever the Tories or their provincial equivalents may want to do elsewhere, we in this Party intend to maintain this strong balance of public sector and private sector as part of our history.

Third, we have as part of the Canadian ethos something that is not a part of the American ethos, a belief that certain values should not have a price tag. That is why we have medicare and pension systems that provide a particular set of rights for Canadians which do not exist in the United States. The United States has a certain safety net beyond which it hopes the American poor will not be allowed to fall, but they have been allowed to fall and they are persistently allowed to fall beyond it. We say, and I repeat, that there are certain values beyond the market and that is why we have made a commitment to medicare as a part of our notion of citizenship, and we believe in that profoundly.

I could go on to indicate three or four other distinctly important values, and on another occasion I would like to do that, but I do not want to abuse the time that has been given to me by other Hon. Members. I simply want to say that the Canada we are now defending is a different Canada from the Canada of 1911 when we last had this great national debate. We have improved qualitatively. We have matured. We have a great nation from coast to coast made up of many different kinds of people, a nation different from that of 1911. We have traditions that have grown and are different from those of that period. We in this Party are saying that we are not prepared to sacrifice these traditions, this Canadian heritage, to become part of one simple, global North America. That is our commitment. We want to remain an independent Canada within North America.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I therefore move:

That the motion be amended by changing the period at the end of the paragraph to a comma, and adding the following:

"And for these reasons, this House urges the Canadian Government to abrogate the trade agreement with the United States at the earliest possible opportunity".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Leader of the NDP is very simple. He represents the riding of Oshawa which has virtually zero unemployment. That is good for the people of Oshawa and we are pleased about that too. The entire corridor from Windsor right through to the Quebec border also has virtually zero unemployment.

Given that this situation does exist, and this is good for this area, and the reason that this is in place is because of the auto pact that exists for this particular area, why is it that the vice-president of the Canadian Auto Workers, Mr. Bob White, and the Leader of the NDP are so opposed to this free trade agreement? It is synonymous with the free trade that exists in the Auto Pact. Why is it that he preaches fear of foreign investment while his own riding is controlled by General Motors, a foreign company? The entire Auto Pact is made up of foreign companies including Chrysler, Ford, American Motors, Honda and the rest of them.

Why is it okay for that area to have a free trade arrangement and zero unemployment but it is not right for the rest of the country to enjoy the prosperity that the people of that area are enjoying? Why can Newfoundlanders, British Columbians and those in the rest of the country not enjoy the same prosperity as that which free trade and foreign investment has brought to the riding of Oshawa and other parts of Ontario?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for the question and I want to assure all Hon. Members that I did not pay him to ask me that question. In answering the question I will put a challenge to the Hon. Member. If he will agree to pay half, I will pay the other half of the cost of a full page advertisement, say, in the Vancouver Province that will put his question in toto and my answer in toto.

• (1230)

The Hon. Member asked a serious question and I want to give a serious answer. He said that unemployment in the Windsor-Oshawa belt is zero. It is not quite zero but I will accept the essential argument that unemployment, compared with many other parts of the country, is indeed low. However, the key point he makes is just false. He says this happened because of a free trade agreement in automotive trade. With respect, that is not so. The Americans wanted completely free trade in 1965. The Government of the day said no, we cannot have free trade. The industry is overwhelmingly owned in the U.S. and they would simply sell all their cars and parts in Canada and keep the plants in Michigan or, subsequently, Georgia, California and other states. The Government then negotiated the Auto Pact which had a requirement for a certain level of investment in Canada.

Mr. Hopkins: A Liberal Government.

Mr. Broadbent: A Liberal Government. The NDP Leader of the day, unlike what the Conservatives have been saying, was not opposed to the principle of the deal, if you read his speeches. Quite the contrary. Our Party asked that it be improved, that we take steps to provide supplementary unemployment benefits for workers displaced when the industry was rationalized. We suggested steps to be taken to increase benefits for Canadian consumers. I am pleased to say the Government responded with a special supplementary unemployment benefit program for those workers. I hope the Government learns from that if it should ever be able to go ahead with this deal, which I hope it is not.

The key point I want to make is that the Auto Pact required the Americans to make investment in Canada on a continuing basis roughly in proportion to their sales in Canada. That is not free trade but it gave employment opportunities to Canadian workers. If they did not make that investment, there was a mechanism which would come into effect and force the Americans to pay thousands of dollars in tariffs to get their cars in here. That was put in place to encourage them to make investment in Canada. It is the Conservative Government today, in this free trade pact, that wants to remove that mechanism, and we are opposed to that proposal for that reason.

Mr. Stewart: That is balderdash.

Mr. Broadbent: We in this Party have said that wherever we can duplicate this arrangement with foreign investment in Canada, we favour it. If we can bring American investment into British Columbia, Alberta or other parts of Canada with a net benefit to Canada, not just profit maximization for the U.S., we want that kind of arrangement.

If the Hon. Member can say his Government is prepared to leave the Auto Pact alone and it will pursue for all of Canada, not just Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) or Windsor, the kind of framework which exists in the Auto Pact, he will have the support of every New Democrat from coast to coast.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the speech by the Hon. Member for Oshawa and was struck by his comments regarding the duplicity of the Government with respect to what it was saying before the free trade deal became public and what it is saying now. Time and time again the Government said agriculture was not on the table. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said that. Yet it is clear that most areas of agriculture are in the agreement. What we have been trying to pin down is the actual impact of the agreement on, for example, the two-price system for wheat.

I asked the Minister responsible for grains and oilseeds on October 5 about what impact the removal of the licensing power of the Canadian Wheat Board over wheat, oats and barley would have. This will occur as soon as the support levels in both countries are equal. This will apparently occur for oats and barley by January 1, 1989, and for wheat perhaps in the next year or so when the current U.S. program runs out of funds. The Minister said absolutely nothing of the sort would occur.

Two days later, in the Saskatchewan Legislature, we had a comment by the provincial Premier, who also happens to be the provincial Minister of Agriculture, saying that the two-price wheat system would have to go under the free trade agreement. He went on to say that the federal Government had promised to provide compensation of $280 million.

When I asked the Minister last week if the two-price system would be destroyed she gave a kind of gobbledygook answer. Her response was that she would prefer to deal with the substance of the issue, which is that the two-price treatment of wheat will be assessed in light of the free trade agreement and decisions pertaining to it will be taken at the appropriate time.

We have the Premier of Saskatchewan saying one thing. We have the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board saying something else. We have the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) saying something else again. People just do not know—

Mr. Speaker: I very much regret that the question and comment period has expired.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have just heard from the 19th century!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: The Luddites.

Miss Carney: It is the Conservative Government which seeks to lead Canadians through the end of the 20th century and into the 21st. It is the Opposition which is leading Canadians backward into the future. That is the only alternative they offer Canadians. That is no alternative at all. They offer myths and misleading statements, that is all. However, Canadians will not be conned by cowards in this debate. That is what the Opposition is doing in this case. Canadians have confidence in themselves, their country and their ability to compete. That is why a majority of Canadians favour a free trade agreement.

When I say the Opposition has no alternative, I want you to look at what they said. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), who is not here—I suppose it is time for tennis—is not giving me the courtesy of listening to my speech as I listened to him.

Some Hon. Members: Where is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)?

Miss Carney: Tennis is a sensitive subject for them. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition says he will tear up the trade agreement. That is his alternative. That is no alternative. It is nothing but protectionism. He is going to tear it up! What is more likely is that the voters of Vancouver Quadra will tear up his nomination papers because being against free trade is betraying their interests.

• (1240)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The Minister referred to the absence of certain Members from this House. We on this side of the House did not make any reference to all the Ministers who were not in the House this morning.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: There has been some mention from both sides of the House as to whether Ministers or other Members were in their places. Hon. Members know, of course, that Hon. Members have many obligations. That is, of course, why we refrain from commenting in the Chamber. I ask for the co-operation of all Hon. Members. The point raised by the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) is, of course, in accordance with the rules. The Hon. Minister has the floor.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, the members of the NDP have a very simple position. They are against free trade. They do not suggest anything else. My colleague, the Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), made an interesting point. The Leader of the NDP, the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), is against foreign investment except when it is in his riding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Did you hear my answer two minutes ago?

Mr. Nystrom: Be honest, Pat.

Miss Carney: The Vice President of the NDP is Bob White. Bob White, head of the auto workers and Vice President of the NDP, is against free trade except when it involves his union members.

I would like to quote John Crispo, the professor at the University of Toronto who pointed out that Bob White's position represented "an indefensible double standard". Professor Crispo said:

> Here he is representing the group of Canadian workers who have had by far the most access to the American market under the Auto Pact and he's got the gall to wander around the country and lead the opposition to free trade which would give other workers—"brothers and sisters" he has the nerve to call them—something of the same degree of access.

Mr. Broadbent: That's a big lie.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Tell the truth for once, Pat.

Miss Carney: Those are the battle lines in this debate—the future versus the past.

I would like to quote a person who is not a Conservative, a well-known Liberal, Donald Macdonald of the Canadian Alliance for Trade and Job Opportunities. He said the following which is central to this debate:

> The battle will be between two different perceptions of Canada. I don't see Canada as a sort of sheltered workshop for the inefficient, the incompetent or the less than capable. I see our country as one with a very considerable capacity, a very considerable record of success, and with an agreement of this kind—and others to come—the ability to use these talents out in a broader world market.

That is our vision of Canada, that is the Conservative vision of Canada, and that is Canadians' vision of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: The Opposition has ignored the agreement itself in its remarks today. I would like to refer you, Mr. Speaker, to the requirements and objectives which the Prime Minister set out to Canadians as the criteria on which this agreement should be judged.

First and foremost was the proposal to pursue a new trade agreement "involving the broadest possible package of mutually beneficial reductions in barriers to trade in goods and services". That is what the Prime Minister promised and that is what we delivered.

The Right Hon. Member who speaks for the Opposition says that that is virtually worthless, that it is virtually nothing. He cannot be thinking of his own constituents in Vancouver who, through the elimination of tariffs and non-tariff barriers under this agreement, will have at their disposal a market of about 35 million within a two-day truck haul.

Mr. Waddell: Providing the Americans don't countervail.

Miss Carney: The hypocrisy of the Opposition is worth noting.

Mr. Fulton: We tell the truth. There is a little difference.

Miss Carney: His constituents will have access to a market of 35 million within a two-day truck haul. The people from Kingston, instead of being lake-bound and forced out of the U.S. market by many tariff barriers, will now have access to it. I do not think that the elimination of tariffs is "virtually nothing" as the Opposition says.

Furthermore, we achieved our objective of a more predictable set of rules.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) on a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, the word is "hypocrisy" not "high-pocrisy". In either case, it is not allowed in this House.

Mr. Kaplan: It's unparliamentary however you pronounce it.

Mr. Speaker: I heard the word. The word was not directed at a particular Hon. Member. The Hon. Minister.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, they are obviously worried about any debate on the merits of the free trade agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: Any time, any place. You name the network.

Miss Carney: We achieved our second objective of better rules and a dispute settlement mechanism. We have given ourselves five years plus two more to deal with the rules which apply to a free trade agreement. That is a major accomplishment. It has never been achieved anywhere else in the world in any kind of agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: We initiated these negotiations with the United States in order to enhance the largest two-way trade in the world. Canadians have always traded to prosper. We export one-third of all the goods and services we produce. We compete with the best in the world. Today three million Canadians depend on trade for their pay cheques. Like it or not, nearly 80 per cent of our exports are sold to the United States. That figure rose to that level under the previous Liberal administration.

Faced with American protectionism we had two choices; to withdraw into Canadian protectionism and isolation and watch our standard of living decline, or attempt a bold move on behalf of all Canadians.

Mr. Cassidy: A sell-out.

Miss Carney: The first was irresponsible. The second secures our future.

Mr. Broadbent: Tories can only have two thoughts at one time.

Miss Carney: We did not enter into free trade negotiations only to get the best possible economic deal. If that had been our goal, we would have joined the United States years ago. We are not interested only in the best economic deal. The Prime Minister conducted these negotiations with a strong sense of requirement for our political and economic self-determination. That is why he gave specific commitments to the Canadian people at the very outset. They were very well defined.

He promised that the agreement would maintain our political sovereignty, and it does; that it would maintain our social programs, and it does. The attempts of the Opposition to say that medicare and unemployment insurance are at risk by this agreement show how pitiful their arguments are and the depths to which they will go.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: This agreement preserves our commitment to regional development, our unique cultural identity, and our agricultural marketing systems. We have delivered on each of these commitments to Canadians.

Mr. Cassidy: You have capitulated.

Miss Carney: Far from threatening our political sovereignty, this deal will strengthen it for it is far easier for an economically strong and united country to stand in dependent and sovereign than one weak and divided.

It is interesting to reflect on a comment which Premier Bourassa made to me. He said that the single most important act of a Prime Minister in achieving nationhood was the signing of an international treaty, the Treaty of Versailles, by Robert Borden on behalf of Canada. A strong Canada is enhanced by a strong economy and market opportunities abroad.

I would like to tell the House about the good luck charm that Simon Reisman carried with him during these negotiations.

Mr. Axworthy: Get serious.

Some Hon. Members: Tell us about it.

Miss Carney: The Opposition says "tell us about it".

Mr. Axworthy: A great big albatross.

Miss Carney: I am delighted to tell them about it. His good luck charm was an 1857 Prince Edward Island penny from the time when P.E.I. was still a colony. On the penny was inscribed the slogan: "Free Trade and Self-government". He carried that talisman with him because it rings as true today as it did then. Free trade and self-government are mutually reinforcing. A strong economy is the best bulwark for sovereign independence.

• (1250)

Canadians will always remain proud Canadians and with this agreement we will continue to make our own determinations on how we live, on our social policies, on medicare, unemployment insurance and pensions. Anyone who believes otherwise has not read the agreement and is irresponsible to suggest it.

Since the Opposition spends its time saying what is not in the agreement, let me tell the House what is contained in the agreement. We have agreed to phase out all tariffs between the two countries within 10 years. The only exception is a snap back for horticulture, which has an extra 10 years of protection.

We have agreed to eliminate most of the technical and health standards which have often been used as non-tariff barriers at the border. Farmers were aware that this item was keeping them out of some of their markets.

We have agreed to set rules for trade and services, an unprecedented provision in international law. Trade in services is the fastest growing sector in world trade. For the first time there will be rules between the two countries for trade in services. We have also included provisions that will allow workers to go to the United States to deal with the goods and services they sell there.

We have provided greater access to each country for investors.

We have secured markets for Canadian energy, such as British Columbia natural gas, Alberta oil, Saskatchewan uranium, and Ontario and Quebec electrical power, by enshrining this Government's energy policy.

The Opposition ignores the fact that this Government dismantled the National Energy Program. They want the freedom to put it back. We opened the borders in energy and we are saying that if the Americans do not put up barriers at the border, we will not turn off the tap. That is a fair agreement between two countries. We have secured our markets and by doing so we have secured the investment for the energy resources that Canadians need.

We have given agricultural producers new markets across the border to help cattlemen, hog producers and potato growers, among others.

We have improved the potential of the auto industry by giving Canadian parts and after-market parts makers the opportunity to compete in a much bigger market, under tougher rules of origin and by keeping in place the very safeguards to which the Member for Oshawa has alluded.

We have expanded the opportunities to compete for Government purchases in the other country. We have created effective procedures and institutions for the joint administration of the agreement and the binding resolution of disputes over the application of countervail and anti-dumping actions, and have been given time to adapt those laws to emerging market conditions. We have laid the foundation for future co-operation to expand and enhance the benefits of the agreement.

Let me explain some of the implications for Canadians. There will be lower prices for consumers as tariffs come down and there is more competition. Preliminary estimates show that it could cost $8,000 less to set up a new home in Canada by the time this agreement is in place. A Canadian earning $23,000 a year will have an extra $850 a year to spend.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Where are your facts?

Miss Carney: They laugh! They do not like these facts. I will tell you where I get these facts. I am quoting Andrew Cohen, Director of The Consumers' Association of Canada, who says, "There is something in free trade for all consumers". Let me quote other Canadians. Jack Carr, Chairman of the University of Toronto's Economics Department predicts that, "There will be more employment, wages will be higher, there will be more benefits". We will be exporting goods and services to the United States, not jobs. David Culver, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Alcan, says: "We do not have to say to ourselves perhaps we better build the plant in the United States in order to be sure we are inside the barriers . . . We can now invest in a bigger plant in Canada, secure in the knowledge that the plant will have access to the U.S. market". Multiply that many times, and the result is more jobs in Canada, some 350,000 more jobs according to the Economic Council.

I have already indicated that Canadian professionals and service industries will have better access to the U.S. market since they will be able to travel there to work on jobs or service what they have sold. Chris Gree, President of the Canadian Association of Management Consultants, says: "I am very, very excited. With our world class expertise and our Canadian structures, I think it can have a blockbuster impact on our clients and our profession".

The Canadian auto industry will have growth potential with changes in the rules of origin and continued Auto Pact safeguards. The President of the Motor Vehicles Manufacturers Association, Norman Clark, says: "It is a reasonable basis for liberalizing trade". Larry Buganto, Chairman of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers Association calls it a step in the right direction. Dean Wilson, President of the Automotive Industries Association, describes it as: "A tremendous opportunity for the automotive after-market industry". He also said: "We know already that our workers and our plants are just as efficient as those in the United States, if not more so, so I look forward to a healthy increase in export sales". He has the kind of confidence we are looking for.

You are indicating, Mr. Speaker, that my time has almost expired. I would ask permission of the House to continue.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Minister would want a minute or two to finish her remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss Carney: I anticipate that I will take about as much time as the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

I want to deal with the Canadian agricultural producers because they will have greater access to the U.S. market, with less harassment. The President of the Canadian Pork Council and Chairman of the Alberta Hog Producers Marketing Board supports the agreement. He said: "I am extremely pleased, hogs being a commodity that was hard-hit by the American protectionist mood". Charles Gracey of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association says: "This is a great day for Canada". Don Jarvis, Vice-President of the Grocery Products Manufacturers says: "We will gain access to a huge market in the United States". Paul Sim of the Canadian Wheat Growers says that the agreement: "Removes the big club that is being held over our head as far as U.S. protectionism is concerned".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: Let them laugh at the wheat growers of Canada.

Canadian fishermen and fish processors get far more access.

Secure markets for Canadian energy will attract investment. Bob Lamond, President of Czar Resources, said: "Investor confidence in the Canadian energy industry was destroyed by the NEP and we are now seeing it rebuilt".

In closing, I want to talk about the dispute settlement mechanism. It gives us an umpire which we did not have. It provides confidence in the knowledge that unfair applications of U.S. trade laws or Canadian trade laws will be less likely with an umpire. The Opposition says that we are playing with American baseball uniforms and using American bats. We would like to have an impartial umpire who can use a binding dispute settlement mechanism.

I agree with the Hon. Member for Oshawa that we have embarked upon an historic undertaking. It is understandable that there should be this kind of debate but I know that Canadians are world class traders and world class competitors. Whether they are the fishermen of Newfoundland, the potato growers of Prince Edward Island, the auto workers of Ontario, or workers in research and development in the west, I know they welcome the opportunity this Government has given them to show how good they can be.

• (1300)

It is Canadians who will make this agreement work. It is Canadians who will build a stronger and more vibrant Canada by rising to the challenge of the world competition rather than withdrawing, as the Opposition suggests, into the 19th Century. I firmly believe Canadians will choose our vision of the future. Protectionism leads to depression and liberalized trade leads to prosperity. Those are the lessons of history. That is the choice facing us all. There is no other. This Government and the people of Canada know that the Opposition offers no alternatives. We know that the free trade choice is in the best interests of us all.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). She started her speech today by saying that the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) is opposed to foreign investment, is opposed to free trade, and has never given a single alternative to free trade. I want to deal with two points; first, the Minister saying our Leader was opposed to foreign investment and, second, that he did not give any alternatives.

I want to ask the Minister why she says this, in light of the fact that when the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) posed a question to my Leader on that very point a few moments before she rose to speak, my Leader said very clearly that we support the principles in the Auto Pact, but they are not free trade? It is a trade agreement. He said on behalf of our Party that if we could have Auto Pact type principles, sector by sector, our Party would support that kind of approach.

Our Leader also said to the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody that we do not oppose foreign investment if we have an arrangement where foreign investment works for Canada, where we have guarantees, where we have an accord. He made that very, very clear. Our Leader as well as other people have also spoken many times in this House about an economic strategy, an industrial strategy, particularly where it concerns foreign investment.

I want to ask the Minister of International Trade why she cannot be more honest and truthful in this House and tell the Canadian people that the Leader of our Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa, does propose some alternatives to this free trade negotiations, that he did point out that the Auto Pact is the kind of agreement we in this Party support, and we would support that kind of agreement, sector by sector, where there are built-in guarantees for the people of Canada?

It is the time to be honest with the people of Canada. It is the time to tell the people the truth, and I want to know why the Minister of International Trade will not be forthright rather than trying to distort the position of the New Democratic Party? Please answer that question.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, let me go to my notes for what the Hon. Member for Oshawa said. He said it is a massive sell-out.

Some Hon. Members: It is.

Miss Carney: It is not a massive sell-out. We have dismantled the investment barriers that create the kind of vibrant economy the Hon. Member enjoys in Oshawa. He is the one who is suggesting that it should not be opened up to foreign investment.

He also said—and I hope he campaigns on this—that Americans are more honest than Canadians.

Mr. Broadbent: I never said they were more honest than Canadians.

Mr. Nystrom: Answer the question, Pat.

Mr. Broadbent: They are more honest than you.

Miss Carney: That is what he said, that Americans are more honest than Canadians. I hope he goes to an election on it.

Mr. Broadbent: That is not true. You are at it again.

Miss Carney: Those are exactly the words. If he is in favour of the Auto Pact, as he has not been in the past, but as he says he is now, may I point out that he should be in favour of this agreement because it protects the Auto Pact, it makes rules of origin tougher, which benefits Canadian auto makers and workers. I have already quoted the chairman of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association. I have quoted the Automotive Industries Association. I have quoted other people in the industry. If the Hon. Member were being honest, and if he was putting the interests of his voters ahead of his own, he would be for the free trade agreement because it improves the Auto Pact.

Mr. Nystrom: You didn't answer the question, Pat.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). In the trade agreement the Government of Canada seems to be saying "Me, too" to any international negotiations with regard to trade, that when it goes to the MTN, the Uruguay Round, Canada is going to backing up the United States in the elimination of agriculture subsidies.

I wonder if the Minister could tell us precisely whether the Government of Canada will be supporting the United States with regard to Section 11 of the GATT, which would remove the power of countries like Canada to have supply management systems and to have border controls? Clearly it is the position of the United States that that section of the GATT should be removed. It is crucial to Canada as to whether or not the United States succeeds in that regard. The United States has made it clear. It has published its position and proposals to the GATT. The Canadian Government has filed its position secretly. The Minister will not make them available to the farmers of Canada and to Canadian citizens generally.

Since this document says we are going to support the United States in the removal of all agriculture subsidy programs, I wonder if the Minister can tell us if the Government will be maintaining, and fighting and opposing, the removal of Section 11 which provides for supply management systems such as we have in dairy and poultry products? Or will she knuckle under and agree to the United States' support for the removal of that section of the GATT?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member was not in the House last week when I rose and in a Ministerial statement outlined our Canadian proposal for the MTN Round on agriculture.

I would first like to point out that the bilateral agreement we have signed with the United States is considered a major achievement by our international trading partners who feared that if the world's two largest trading partners could not sign an agreement, the MTN would fail. That was their concern. That is why our international trading partners are so pleased we have achieved this. That is why 49 countries of the Commonwealth last week in Vancouver signed the Vancouver Declaration on Trade, urging trade liberalization.

Mr. Foster: Will you please answer my question?

Miss Carney: It is funny, the Hon. Member takes forever to put the question but I am not allowed to answer it.

I wish to point out to the Hon. Member that in my statement in the House I pointed out that our Canadian position is that we expect to get credit, as I have said, for the fact that our programs in Canada are consistent with Article XI in the GATT. It is the programs of other countries which are inconsistent with Article 11.

Mr. Tobin: Such as?

Miss Carney: The Hon. Member does not want me to take the time to answer that. He is already urging me to adjust his question. I am pointing out very clearly that I said in this House that Canadians will be seeking credit for the fact that our programs are consistent with Article XI. I would be interested to know whether he quarrels with that. I also outlined the role we had taken in the Cairn's Group, with Australia, leading the 14 nations of the world to account for 25 per cent of agriculture trade, and the efforts we have made consistently for trade liberalization in agriculture. If he is not familiar with the position, I would be very glad to send him copies of the speeches I have given in this House on the subject.

Mr. Foster: Would the Minister table the GATT documents?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Minister. I am not sure if it is a question or a question of privilege. First, if I can be direct, she did not have the decency to answer the question put by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) who pointed out that I had said something totally different to what she attributed to me. She did not deal with the question.

Beyond that, she went on to make two important misstatements of fact that I would like her now to correct. First she said I opposed the Auto Pact in the past. I have been a Member for 19 years and I challenge the Minister to produce one statement in 19 years to back up the outrageous accusation she just made. If she does not, will she have the honesty to withdraw it?

Second, she said that I said in my speech that Americans were more honest than Canadians. Again, if she can show that in a speech, then she can stand by it. Otherwise, I ask her to withdraw it. I made no such claim.

Miss Carney: You did so.

Mr. Broadbent: I may well have said, if she checks the record, that the American officials, the Americans are more honest than this Government. That I would stand by. Would she please produce the facts to support her outrageous allegations, or at least have the integrity to withdraw them immediately?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken in this House many times quoting the Hon. Member for Oshawa, quoting his own words about how the Auto Pact is to be renegotiated—

Mr. Broadbent: Improved, yes.

Miss Carney: —but changes have to be made in the Auto Pact. I will present those pages from Hansard shortly after today's debate, shortly after the lunch hour. I will ask my staff to get it.

• (1310)

Second, in terms of his speech about Americans being more honest than Canadians, that is my personal note of what he said. I ask you to check the "blues", Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Broadbent: Check the "blues"!

Miss Carney: If he is wrong, I expect him to apologize. If I am wrong, I will withdraw the statement.

Mr. Speaker: I have to advise the House that the 10 minute question and comment period has expired.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has the floor. I might indicate to Hon. Members that in view of Statements by Ministers there was a 14-minute extension into the noon hour. It might very well be that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry would like to have the Chair call it 1.14 p.m.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if you would call it 1.14.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will have the floor at 3 p.m.

The House stands adjourned until 2 p.m.

At 1.12 p.m. the House took recess.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

EDUCATION—PROTEST AGAINST FEDERAL FUNDING FORMULA

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, last week representatives of Canada's First Nations gathered on Parliament Hill to protest cutbacks in funding for Indian education. Petitions with more than 6,000 signatures were sent to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) office rejecting the current policies and demanding that the Government live up to, first, the spirit and intent of the 1973 policy on Indian control of Indian education; and second, its trust responsibility to provide adequate resources for an Indian education system that is of high quality, and provides for the economic and social advancement of Indian people.

If Indians, like all Canadians, are to be self-sufficient and fully productive then education is essential. I ask the Government to withdraw this shameful funding formula and to live up to its moral and political obligations.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT PROGRAMS ASSIST ALL FARMERS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the programs initiated and carried out by the Progressive Conservative Government are to be commended and encouraged. They have been a tremendous help in balancing the ill effects of the EEC and U.S. Farm Bill's subsidization programs.

In spite of those excellent efforts, a number of farmers have been left out and adversely affected, even although indirectly in some cases, by the said subsidy programs and certainly by the high interest rates of the early 1980s.

For instance, the pulse farmers, who harvest very important alternate crops such as mustard, sunflower, lentils, peas, corn, buckwheat, sugar-beets, and soya beans have seen the prices decline drastically because of the subsidy wars, plus the subsidies on some of the pulse crops by other countries. Also the hay and alfalfa farmers, and irrigation farmers, were left out of the SCG programs.

Every branch of agriculture is important and no farmer should be left to carry the burden alone because of economic conditions over which he or she has no control. I urge that either new programs be introduced, or the present ones revamped to show all Canadians engaged in agriculture that this Progressive Conservative Government does care.

TRADE

WINE INDUSTRY—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian grape and wine industry has been sold out by the Government of Canada in its free trade agreement with the United States.

"The wine industry has bottled its last Canadian vintage if the federal government approves the proposed Canada-U.S. free-trade agreement", an industry spokesmen said Tuesday.

Without the competitive advantages the industry now enjoys, the wine industry cannot afford to purchase grapes from Canadian producers next year, said Jan Westcott, President of the Canadian Wine Institute.

He said Canadian grape growers stand to lose $20 million to $22 million in annual sales to wineries, and face the potential loss of 16,000 full and part-time jobs in Ontario and B.C.

On August 14 the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) stated that there would be a 10-year adjustment. Yet before the agreement even comes into effect, the Canadian grape producers will not be able to sell their grapes because of the free trade agreement.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the destruction of the wine and grape industry will be complete and immediate within this year. It was requested by President Reagan; it was ordered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney); it was carried out in a merciless manner by the Minister for International Trade. It is one of the most shameful acts in Canadian agricultural history.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

DEFENCE COMMITTEE'S INSPECTION OF FORCES SERVING IN EUROPE

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, "Let him who desires peace, prepare for war".

Those words, first spoken hundreds of years ago, were quoted again last week to the members of the Standing Committee on National Defence during a fact finding tour of several West European countries.

The committee met with the troops in the field during their fall exercise in north eastern Bavaria, and visited the NATO base at Geilenkirchen, Germany, home of the airborne early warning force, unique, Mr. Speaker, in that the E-3A aircraft they fly are manned by multinational air crews from 11 of NATO's 16 nations, including Canada.

We were able to study and compare the military reserve system of Germany and Switzerland with our own. We also received briefings on defence operations at our Canadian Forces Europe headquarters in Lahr, and at our NATO and SHAPE headquarters in Belgium.

We were duly impressed with the professionalism of our men and women serving in Europe; impressed with the enthusiasm and leadership of all ranks. We departed convinced that the policy and direction of the White Paper with respect to our European commitment is valid, meaningful, and will contribute to world peace.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES POSITION ON CONTROLS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago, speaking on Canada-U.S. acid rain relations, Assistant Secretary of State John Negroponte told the U.S. Foreign Relations Committee that "emission reductions cannot be defined at the present time", and that the administration's analysis of the NAPAP report shows that the administration's understanding of the scientific issues continues to support its policies. "To act now", that is to impose acid rain controls, "could have serious and unnecessary socio-economic consequences".

Will the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) admit now that despite all claims made so far by the Government of Canada, President Reagan will not deliver on acid rain? Will he admit now that Canadian expectations, whipped to a high last April in Ottawa by the Prime Minister on the occasion of President Reagan's visit, have been shattered?

Assistant Secretary of State Negroponte's statement reveals that the administration's position on acid rain pollution controls has not changed.

When he accepted the acid rain Envoys' Report, the Prime Minister gave the President an excuse for inaction for five years or more. Clearly and unfortunately the Government's acid rain policy with the United States is in shambles.

SMALL BUSINESS WEEK

TRIBUTE TO DYNAMIC ENTREPRENEURSHIP OF SMALL BUSINESS COMMUNITY

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, the theme of Small Business Week, 1987 which runs from October 25 to October 31 is "Entrepreneurship: Creating Opportunities". It is a most appropriate theme. The men and women who own and operate small businesses in Canada create employment, investment, and economic development opportunities in every region of the country. Over the last two years they have created more than 70 per cent of the new jobs in this country and contributed 25 per cent of our Gross National Product.

The federal Government recognizes and appreciates the economic importance of small businesses in Canada. We are committed to supporting and encouraging the creation of small businesses, the development of skills to ensure their successful operation, the acquisition of technological innovation, and improved access to financing and to domestic and international market opportunities.

In addition, we want to encourage more young people to choose entrepreneurship as a viable and rewarding career option. The hard work, creativity, and dynamism of Canada's small business community should serve as an example which will encourage our young Canadians to seize the opportunities afforded them by entrepreneurship.

I invite all Canadians to join with me, the Federal Business Development Bank, and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in saluting Canada's entrepreneurs during Small Business Week, 1987.

THE CONSTITUTION

PAMPHLET ON MEECH LAKE ACCORD—ABSENCE OF REFERENCE TO NORTHERN TERRITORIES

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my outrage at yet another example of the Government's reprehensible attitude toward the northern Territories.

I have learned that a pamphlet put out by the Government promoting the Meech Lake Accord does not even mention our northern Territories. The pamphlet talks about how the Accord strengthens the Canadian federation as well as celebrates the diversity of Canada. Diversity, Mr. Speaker, yet the diversity of the North, a third of Canada's land mass, is not even mentioned.

On the front of the pamphlet we see the flags of all provinces and the Canadian flag. By the way, the pamphlet was paid for by Canadian taxpayers including those from the northern Territories. Nowhere on the pamphlet do we see the flags of the Northwest Territories or the Yukon.

How can the Government put out a pamphlet saying that it strengthens the Canadian federation when two of the Territories are not even represented?

This exclusion is a complete insult to northerners. We always suspected that the Government felt that we were second- class citizens. Now we have the proof.

On this historic day when the House will vote on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord we find that this neglect in not even mentioning the Northwest Territories and Yukon is insulting and unfair.

I received the pamphlet from a constituent who asked me to return it to the sender. I will do so with this message: We in the North are fed up with our treatment by the Government. Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we will not take this lying down.

TRADE

VOLUME OF ONTARIO INDUSTRIAL EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, in an excellent article yesterday, columnist Doug Fisher said in part:

> Ontario is producing over half our total merchandise export to both the world and the United States and almost half of the latter is in automotive products.

He went on:

> Can you see the unbelievable irony implicit in those latter totals? Tie them to the blistering attack on the free trade deal by Bob White and the automotive unions.
>
> Such high production and export is a direct consequence of the main accord we already have with the U.S., the automotive agreement negotiated two decades ago by Simon Reisman, today's villain and traitor to White and Broadbent.
> Want more irony? Back when this marvellous deal was made, who was dead set against it? Yes, the Canadian head of White's union, and the federal NDP.

When one analyses the historic trade trends and interdependence with the U.S., where would we replace a large loss of exports if the strong protectionist mood succeeds in the U.S.? "The Common Market? Japan? China? The U.S.S.R.?" asks Fisher. "John Diefenbaker and Pierre Trudeau failed in finding significant alternatives".

• (1410)

In closing, Fisher states:

> What do you think we will get from the Bob and Ed show and from David Peterson if, as they clamour, we reject the treaty and the Americans, as is likely, dismantle the Auto Pact?

They should stop the dishonest hype and hypocrisy. It is time the opposition Leaders were honest with Canadians about the tremendous benefits which will accrue to our citizens from this historic free trade initiative.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RURAL POSTAL SERVICE—GOVERNMENT'S VIEW OF FUTURE

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, following many representations from individuals, organizations and municipal councils in my constituency, I would like to ask the Minister responsible for Canada Post to tell us officially what his true intentions are as concerns the rural postal service.

Rumours are going around in certain municipalities and certain businessmen having been asked, before any consultations take place, whether they would be interested in taking over services now provided by local post office.

Mr. Speaker, this climate of uncertainty is a cause of major concern among the public. It is abnormal for the municipalities involved not to be aware of the true intentions of the Minister.

Has the Minister asked the Canada Post Corporation to make changes in existing delivery services or in the location of the post office in certain municipalities? If so, what will happen to the level of service in rural regions? Will there be a service reduction in certain municipalities? Will Canada Post install collective mail boxes or superboxes?

Some municipal councils object to any change or reduction in service and to the closing of post offices in rural regions. Customers in these municipalities are worried. It is important for Canada Post and the Minister to consult the representatives of the municipalities involved and to take their views into account when developing new policies. Canadians must be better informed about the objectives and projects of Canada Post and the Minister responsible, and it is the duty of the Minister to see to it that they are.

FINANCE

CREDIT CARD COMPANIES—CALL FOR CUT IN INTEREST RATES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the credit card companies have done it again; that is, they have failed to do it.

When the Bank of Canada discount rate rose in midsummer, credit card issuers could not wait to increase their charges on unpaid balances, but last week the bank rate was cut by a record amount and all chartered banks reduced their prime rates. Credit card rates have not come down 1/100th of 1 per cent.

Once again most credit card issuers have shown their forked-tongue policy. It is to increase rates quickly if the cost of money goes up, but to leave them at their highest when the cost of money comes down.

These companies still have a chance to keep faith with their customers by making an appropriate adjustment in the near future. If they do not do this, it will be clear to us all that they need legislation to keep them honest, and the House and the Government should support Bill C-266 with its proposal for a floating rate.

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—THREATENED RECURRENCE OF FAMINE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, once again African drought and famine take their tragic toll of human misery. The failure of summer rains in parts of Ethiopia resulted in a 100 per cent crop failure in some areas. The early warning system has given the world community notice so that if we take prompt action we can avoid a cataclysmic tragedy on the scale of the one of 1984.

Between five million and seven million people are at risk, and approximately one million tonnes of emergency food aid costing $200 million will be needed by December and January when the famine will be at its worst. Canada has already indicated that we will be giving an additional $10 million for Ethiopian aid, a commendable first step.

The tragedies of drought and famine are compounded by those of civil war. For 26 years Eritrea has been fighting Ethiopia for independence, and this past weekend we were shocked to hear that Eritrean guerrillas blew up a food convoy bound for starving Tigre Province. In addition to providing emergency food aid, we know that Canada will work with other nations to encourage a peaceful and just solution to the Eritrean conflict.

CITIZENSHIP

REQUEST FOR GRANT OF CITIZENSHIP TO FAMILY OF IRIS MASON

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, on September 11 I rose in the House to ask the Secretary of State, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), to exercise his statutory authority to grant citizenship to the family of Iris Mason. That family was the victim of torture in Chile.

They came to Canada as refugees and were given landed immigrant status. When they applied for Canadian citizenship an adverse security ruling was made and they were denied citizenship. They appealed to the Security Intelligence Review Committee which examined the evidence, found it to be without merit, and urged they be awarded citizenship. I asked the Minister to give them citizenship. He said he would look into it over the weekend. Weeks have gone by. Recently he told me it was before the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). I checked with his office and they know nothing about it.

It is time for the Government to stop stalling with this Kafkaesque-type of excuse, take this application seriously, give them Canadian citizenship, and finally bring an end to the troubled course of the Mason family in Canada.

TRADE

AN IMAGINARY CONVERSATION

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend a discussion between Howard Pawley and Mr. Big of Oshawa was overheard by a fly on the wall. "But, but, but, Mr. Big," said Howard, "do you really think we can convince western Canada to oppose free trade?"

"Shirley says we can," said Mr. Big between puffs on his Havana cigar, "and Mr. White thinks we can, too."

"But, but, but, Mr. Big," said Howard, "they tell me that Oshawa already has free trade, and that Oshawa is doing well by it."

"You just leave Oshawa to me", said Mr. Big. "What is good for Oshawa is not necessarily good for Manitoba. Besides, Mr. White likes Oshawa just the way it is."

"But, but, but, Mr. Big, has Oshawa's free trade really resulted in billions of dollars invested in Oshawa?"

"Now, Howard," said Mr. Big, "you really would not want that kind of money in Manitoba. You westerners are rich in natural resources, why do you want manufacturing, too? Besides, Shirley will send you hundreds of campaign workers for your next election. You would not want to have to rely on your own people, would you?"

"No, no", replied Howard. "But, but, but, Mr. Big, what will I do with all of my hydro and my hogs and potash if I can't sell them to the Americans?"

"Don't worry, Howard," puffed Mr. Big. "Shirley and Mr. White have the perfect solution. They will help us run a national campaign to convince workers to eat more pork and leave their lights burning all night."

"Even in Oshawa, Mr. Big?"

"Don't be silly, in Oshawa we prefer steak and New England lobster by candle-light. And, Howard, remember to buy your Ministers a new car every year."

TRADE

BRITISH COLUMBIA WINE INDUSTRY—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we all know that the Prime Minister sold out Canadian interests to American interests.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Oh, sit down!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What I want to know today is why the Minister for International Trade, who is from British Columbia, sold out British Columbia interests to California.

On August 14 the Minister wrote to the chairman of the B.C. Grape Marketing Board and these were her words:

> I am very much aware that the grape industry has some unique characteristics . . . If policy changes affecting the grape industry do result from the Canada-U.S. trade agreement, they will only occur slowly and after full consultation with all segments of the industry.

The Minister broke her word. Under this Conservative sell-out, 50 per cent of the protection accorded to the B.C. wine industry will expire within the first year. In the words of the grape growers, this will cause the premature death of a Canadian industry.

Why did the Minister break her word to the British Columbia grape growers? Why did she break her word to the British Columbia wine industry? Why did she break her word to the people of the Okanagan Valley?

• (1420)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I deny the allegations made by the Right Hon. Member about breaking my word. If anyone has broken anything, it is he who has broken faith with the Canadian people through his tactics in opposition to free trade. What the Hon. Member is doing on this issue is scandalous.

With regard to the wine industry, several spokesmen for that industry have said that they are looking forward to an opportunity to compete in the U.S. market. They believe that they make good Canadian wine and that those good Canadian wine products will find markets in the United States.

Secondly, I wish to point out to him that our other trading partners have taken Canada to the GATT on the issue of discriminatory price mark-ups that this issue has been protected behind and the case is currently before the GATT.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, that reply certainly does not indicate that the Minister is any advocate of the British Columbia wine industry.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is a sad day when the Minister politically responsible for British Columbia sells out British Columbia in order to keep the Prime Minister happy. The B.C. Grape Marketing Board and the Association of B.C. Grape Growers have told their members in a recent communication:

> All of our segment of the industry is now at risk of disappearing almost immediately.

What does the Minister now say to the British Columbia grape growers, the British Columbia farmers, and the British Columbia vineyard workers since she did not have the guts to stand up for their interests?

Will the Minister explain to the people of the Okanagan Valley why the wine industry was sacrificed while the beer industry was protected?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, rather than being non-supportive of this industry we used British Columbia wines at the Commonwealth Conference.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: I know that the Opposition objects to the practice of supporting the wine industry. People in the wine industry have said that they believe that their good wines will sell well. We have faith in the Canadian product on international markets.

The Prime Minister has said repeatedly that everything necessary will be done to assist those grape growers who cannot adjust. However, it is too early to write an obituary for that industry.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the British Columbia wine industry would like to be the sport for the last supper of the Conservative Party in British Columbia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OKANAGAN VALLEY WORKERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not recognize that over 20,000 Canadians work in the grape-growing and wine industry? I have recently received submissions from and had meetings with members of the Ontario Grape Growers Association and the Wine Institute of Ontario who feel the same way as their counterparts in British Columbia. They feel betrayed by their own Members of Parliament and by the Government.

Will the Minister from British Columbia explain why the single largest losers in this trade deal with the United States are the grape growers and the people who work in the wine industry? Why has she singled out for attack the 6,000 families in the Okanagan Valley in British Columbia who depend for their livelihood on the vineyards, fruit growing, and the wine industry of the province?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the families to which the Hon. Member refers are aware that the price discrimination practices against offshore wine, California wine, were so high that we have been taken by our trading partners to the GATT to account for them. The Member is always talking about the GATT. However, when we are called before the GATT because of extraordinary discriminatory pricing measures he does not even want to talk about it.

I repeat that we have heard from members of the wine industry that they are looking forward to an opportunity to have access to the North American wine market.

• (1425)

They believe that Canadian wines can compete.

Our best products can compete. We make good wine. We believe that that good wine will be marketed. I am sorry if the Hon. Member does not have any faith at all in the Canadian wine industry.

GATT HEARING ON WINE PRICING PROCESS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Considering the answer she just gave in the House, what side is she on in this dispute? If in fact there is still a case pending where the Government of Canada is supposed to be defending the interests of the grape growers and wine producers of Canada, is it not true that the statement she just made in the House is a clear concession that the Government of Canada is not supporting those producers or those grape growers, that she has already surrendered, just as she surrendered on every other trade case this country has had before us in the last three years?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the only surrender here is the failure of the Opposition to deal with the facts of the case. The facts of the case are that we have been taken to the GATT, hauled before the GATT by our trading partners on this pricing process. We are waiting for the decision. He will have to explain to Canadians how he believes that acknowledging that fact, which is well known, is somehow surrendering.

REQUEST FOR SUPPORT FOR INDUSTRY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it was not members of the Opposition who just stood in their places, as the Minister just did, and said that that case in the GATT is justified.

Miss Carney: I did not say that.

Mr. Axworthy: Those are exactly the words she used.

Miss Carney: I did not.

Mr. Axworthy: When will she begin standing up for this country? When will she stop giving in every time a trade case is before us? Why does she not stand up and say that the grape growers and wine producers have a legitimate right for the kind of support they have because they create in this country a valuable industry that employs 20,000 people?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has stated something that is not the case. I did not say that the case was justified. I said that the case was before the GATT, which is a fact. The people in the industry understand and know that. I have said that we are awaiting the results of that and we will inform the House at the time.

Let me return to the facts of the matter. We believe that Canadian wineries which make good products, which people on both sides of the border would want to buy, will do well. That is an advantage to them, which some of their own spokesmen have acknowledged.

OKANAGAN VALLEY WINE INDUSTRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister and concerns the same subject. A month ago when I met with the wine producers and other fruit growers in the Okanagan Valley, they told me that they had been assured by the Minister that their interests would be looked after in these important free trade negotiations. Coming from British Columbia and knowing the importance of this industry to the people of British Columbia, particularly in the Okanagan Valley, why did the Minister let them down completely?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have the advantage on the Hon. Member because my family comes from the Okanagan. I know it very well. I know that the advantages of this free trade agreement to the Okanagan far outweigh the kind of disaster that he is trying to point out.

May I point out again that this industry will have seven years to adjust under the free trade agreement.

Ms. Copps: No way.

Mr. Axworthy: They have one year.

Miss Carney: They have seven years to adjust because it will take that long to get rid of the discriminatory price mark-ups. Other rights that that industry enjoys, in terms of estate wineries and boutique wineries, all have been grandfathered in the agreement.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that she is from the Okanagan. She knows that people in the industry, management and workers, know that they will be hit right now. She knows they will lose 50 per cent of their tariff protection not in 10 years but next year. That is the reality and the Minister should know it.

The Minister has made promises to the working people and the industrial people there. Given the impact on the Niagara Fruit Belt in the Province of Ontario as well, what does the Minister say to these workers? Is she saying to the wine producers of Canada: "Let them drink beer"? Is that her answer?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): No, Mr. Speaker. I am saying to Canadians, including Hon. Members, let them continue to drink good wine and let them export it to the United States.

• (1430)

SITUATION OF WORKERS IN WINE INDUSTRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that for climatic reasons, as well as many others, the industry in Canada is not in the position to accept the onslaught it is going to get now from American imports. Just for once, instead of just taking shots, would the Minister tell us in straightforward language what the Government plans to do for the 20,000 workers and their families who are going to be affected? Give us an answer.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think by far the best job protection for people in the wine industry is to have expanded markets, not restricted markets. I think that is something which those in the industry recognize.

I would like to point out, because of the doom and gloom the Hon. Member is spreading, how often he has been incorrect in the past. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, in 1984, in response to our Budget, he said: "This will destroy thousands of jobs."

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Miss Carney: "The effect of this program will be a net increase in unemployment."

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: More!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Shefford.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we just heard the Minister for International Trade admit that she forgot to defend the interests of her constituents. I suppose she learned that from the Prime Minister.

In fact, I may remind the Prime Minister that in 1984, he ran for election—

Mr. Speaker: The question, please.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): The question is quite simple, Mr. Speaker. In 1984, when the Prime Minister ran for election in the riding of Manicouagan, his slogan was: "Hope has a name: Brian Mulroney".

In 1987, the authorities of Sept-Îles are saying, and I quote: "Sept-Îles does not have a Member in Ottawa to defend its interests, because for some reason, the Member for Manicouagan has remained silent during the last three years." This was signed by the mayor and others.

My question to the Prime Minister is as follows: Saturday, these people will have to take to the streets and organize a demonstration to make him understand that they are in need, that they are unemployed. Could the Prime Minister make it unnecessary for them to go to such lengths and give us an immediate answer on the investment tax credit?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of my constituents in the riding of Manicouagan, I deeply appreciate the Liberal Member's interest, and my constituents would have appreciated it even more if we had received the same support when the Canadian Government decided to build a penitentiary at Port Cartier. We would have appreciated that very much. That is the hypocrisy of a Liberal Party that gave us its temporary support. Something has been done. For instance, on the weekend, $10 million was invested in the fisheries sector in the riding of Manicouagan, which was greatly appreciated by the people. Thanks to a major highway project, we have been able to improve communications for many of our constituents on the middle and lower North Shore. The same applies to the 138. We have plans for an airport in the North. We have a huge riding, about 1,200 kilometres long and 900 kilometres wide, almost a country in itself, which requires a lot of action on the part of the Government. I hope I can count on the support of all Members of this House whenever I intervene in the future.

QUERY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WISHES TO SETTLE ISSUE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister wants to measure the impact of his last week announcement, I invite him to come with me, next Saturday, and meet his constituents so that he will realize what they think of his total disregard for their concerns. For the last 20 months, people from Sept-Îles have been asking for government action on the investment tax credit. You did absolutely nothing for them. Will you have the courage to tell your Finance Minister and his colleague the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion, who is not looking after his responsibilities, to settle this issue once for all, instead of procrastinating as he has been doing for the last 20 months?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the constituents of Manicouagan have very sound judgment. The last time they saw a Liberal Member in my riding was in 1984, when the former Member came to welcome me at the airport. He lost his deposit, and the same thing will happen to you.

THE ECONOMY

INTERNATIONAL STOCK MARKETS SITUATION—REQUEST FOR MEETING OF G-7 FINANCE MINISTERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who will know that the stock prices on the Wall Street Exchange are down by about 8 per cent so far today, and a similar drop of some 230 points, or 7.4 per cent, has taken place on the Toronto Exchange, unfortunately resuming the sharp drops that began in the beginning of last week. Can the Minister report on the situation? Can he say what actions the Government or the Bank of Canada will be taking with respect to the continuing problems on the exchanges? And in view of international concerns, is Canada now seeking a meeting of the G-7 Finance Ministers to take concerted action on a matter which clearly is not going to go away in a week?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm to the House that the stock markets are off again today. We have stability, though, in the exchange markets and bond markets. The interest rates are quite stable today which, I am pleased to say, is the result of a good degree of co-operation between the G-7 Finance Ministers and central banks. I have been in touch, as I have reported to the House, with my colleagues. I have been in touch with some of them over the weekend as well. We will continue to do this.

I think it is clear that the activity that is going on in the United States, and the conversations and discussions between the administration and Congress, are quite helpful, and we will watch the outcome of that before we take any further steps.

QUERY WHETHER MINISTER WILL ACCEPT FINANCE COMMITTEE INVITATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance. Considering that the collapse of the stock markets continues to be very serious, that the upwards move of last week did not last, that stock prices are down again today, and that the Minister promised last week to consider the possibility to meet with the Parliamentary Finance Committee in order to explain the investment and economic situation in a forum maybe quieter and wider than the House of Commons, is the Minister ready to confirm that he will accept the invitation of the Finance Committee to appear before its Members and explain them the problem and the remedy?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed with the Chairman of the Committee on Finance the invitation of the committee. I have indicated to him that at an appropriate time I would be quite prepared to meet with the committee, and we will discuss it further with the chairman of the committee before making a final decision on that.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RURAL POST OFFICES—REQUEST FOR HALT TO CLOSURES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Since he is not here, I will ask the Prime Minister. Communities like Wilno, Glenbumie, Oakland, in Ontario; Bloomfield Station, New Brunswick; head of St. Margaret Bay, Nova Scotia; Candiac, Saskatchewan; Warspite, Alberta; St. Georges de Champlain, St. Mathieu de Parc, and St. Jean des Piles in Quebec, are living with the fear of losing their local post offices. Will the Minister, now that he is in the House, stop any closing of local post offices until Canada Post implements a meaningful consultation with the community? Will the Government stop those closures now?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member is giving me advice contrary to that offered by his colleague, the former Postmaster General, the Hon. Member for Papineau, who says it is important that there not be political interference in the operation of the Post Office.

The intent of the passage of the Canada Post Corporations Act in 1981 was that the corporation should act free of the kind of political interference now being encouraged by the Hon. Member. Without taking the Hon. Member's list as fact at all, I will certainly pass the Hon. Member's representation on to Canada Post.

[Translation]

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. I should like to know whether he will take his responsibilities as Minister responsible for Canada Post, and I should like to know when Canada Post will implement the recommendation of the House committee which reads as follows, and I quote:

> (a) that no closure of a rural post office, or change in postal service, be undertaken without meaningful consultation and the consent of the community affected;

When will you implement this policy?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member was out of the House at the time or perhaps he has not checked the records. That particular committee report was responded to in full. The report was tabled in the House. I suggest that the Hon. Member look it up.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know, I am sure, that many Canadians are dismayed that Canada continues to test the Cruise missile, and more dismayed at the short notice which is given of these testings. The next one is to take place tomorrow.

I want to ask the Prime Minister this. Why does Canada continue to test the Cruise missile, given that there has been progress? When will the Government return to the view that it formerly held that if there was progress in the talks with respect to disarmament that Canada would cease testing the Cruise missile?

Hon. Pat Carney (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the testing of the Cruise missile has never been tied to the achievement of the INF reduction in Europe. That point has been made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I also want to point out that the test that is taking place is fully in compliance with the agreement.

POSSIBLE HALT OF TESTING—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, that is not the view that the Government once held. It is not what it led Canadians to believe.

So I have to ask the Government this, and I hope that the Prime Minister will respond. Under what conditions will the Canadian Government agree to stop the Cruise testing? Or will it be forever moving the goal post back with respect to the conditions under which Canada will stop testing the Cruise?

Hon. Pat Carney (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, the testing that is being carried out is fully consistent and represents no change in government policy between this Government and the former one.

To respond to the Hon. Member's question I would like to repeat the remarks made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs last week when he said that one of the reasons we were able to get the Soviets to the table was that they knew it was not going to be possible to split the Alliance. It is important, in our judgment, that commitments made by the Alliance be kept by the Alliance if we want to continue to make progress on arms control. That is the Government's position.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CANCEL INVOLVEMENT IN TESTS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns the Government's decision to allow further testing of the Cruise missile in Canada tomorrow by the U.S. Government. Yesterday, in Brussels, the U.S. Foreign Secretary said that, summit or no summit, an INF agreement will be signed by the two superpowers.

Given the fact that there was a linkage between Canada's decision in 1983 to test Cruise and our solidarity with the NATO Alliance to get the Russians to take away the SS-20s from eastern Europe, why does the Government continue to deny that linkage? Why does it not simply tell the Government of the United States that it no longer wishes to be involved in Cruise missile testing in Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a strange observation coming from that side of the House, since we are proceeding under an agreement signed by a Liberal Government.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REFUSE PERMISSION FOR FURTHER TESTS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, clearly, when that agreement was signed by the previous Liberal Government there was a linkage between an INF agreement and Cruise missile testing in Canada. I ask the Minister again, given the fact that the U.S. Foreign Secretary said yesterday in Brussels that summit or no summit an INF agreement will be signed, why does the Government not therefore do the proper thing and refuse to allow the United States to test the Cruise missile further in Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we applaud the projected signing of an INF agreement. We agree that we do not need a summit to do that.

I wish to make the point that we have never linked the two efforts. For the Hon. Member to say that the former Government took an opposing view is not substantiated by the facts.

TRADE

UNITED STATES SUBSIDIZED GRAIN EXPORTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister in charge of grains. In the dying days of our trade negotiations with the Americans their trade enhancement program for grains was switched from being a temporary program to end next summer to being instead one that is an integral part of their Commodity Export Program which will have an additional four years and, apparently, no limit on financing.

Can the Minister tell us what the result was of the discussions between the Minister of Foreign Affairs and the American Secretary of State over the weekend with regard to that matter which was raised in the House several times last week? Have the Americans now agreed to abide by both the spirit and the intent of the clause on page 14 which was much discussed in the House last week?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can answer the first part of that question. The Hon. Member may wish to ask a second question of my colleague.

We have a statement from the Secretary of State for External Affairs which states, and I will quote it for the House: "I have discussed with Mr. Shultz. I have done three things: One, discussed it with him; two, handed him a letter on the matter; three, just for his absolute identification given him the transcript of answer covering the Question Period of, I believe, it was Wednesday in the House of Commons". He went on to say—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: "The discussion is not over but he certainly knows our concern about the use of that program".

NEGOTIATIONS TO END GRAIN SUBSIDIES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to either Minister. If the Americans persist in treating this particular program as a permanent program, can either Minister tell us how we are going to negotiate the Americans out of it? Will this now be part of a series of programs of subsidies which the Americans have which, before this program was included, included some $50 a tonne more subsidy of grain than what we have? Will we now be negotiating these out on a prorated basis? Or will we be snookered into negotiating dollar for dollar so that when the negotiations are all over they will still have $50 more subsidy than we have?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, last week in the House I tabled the Canadian approach to the agriculture trade negotiations that are taking place in Geneva. We have followed the first player to the field, just as the Americans have done. We have made our proposal in Geneva. It will be followed shortly by members of the Cairns Group and our trading partners such as Australia. It is our firm intention to get rid of all of the elements of the subsidy wars that are taking place and which are victimizing Canadians and Canadian farmers. I am sure that the Hon. Member will receive much more information on this subject as the next few weeks progress.

Mr. Althouse: Can we have a copy of that proposal?

ENERGY

USE OF GRAIN-DERIVED ETHANOL AS GASOLINE ADDITIVE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last May I asked the Minister of Energy about the use of grain-derived ethanol as an octane-enhancing additive for gasoline. The Minister advised that consultations were being carried out and he expected that a decision could be made about the end of May.

Will the Hon. Minister advise what progress is being made toward establishing this new vital industry in western Canada?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government is very aware of the importance of ethanol, particularly in western Canada. My Department made a study, and we are now drafting recommendations for Cabinet. In order to do that we will have meetings next week with the western provinces, Agriculture Canada, and the farmers to ensure that our recommendations to Cabinet will be in line with where the farmers want the Government to be.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR NEW REGULATION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The House will remember that following the difficulties that disturbed stock exchange operations in the late 1920's, the Government stepped in to control financial institutions. In the United States, there was the Glass-Steagall Act. In Canada, several pieces of legislation were passed to identify and divide the various functions into the so-called four pillars of the financial system, namely, the banks, the insurance companies, the trust companies, and the real estate brokers. All of this was designed to control the companies and the financial industry, as well as rebuild market confidence. As we are moving into the 21st century, Mr. Speaker, we realize that financial institutions have at their disposal all sorts of sophisticated instruments, computers, etc. Would the Minister review the financial institution de-regulation policy and show international leadership in trying to develop new regulations to deal with the technological tools which are used and bring about a higher degree of confidence in the financial places which are now opened 24 hours a day?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question of the Hon. Member.

I do not think, at this stage in any event, that there is any suggestion that, because of the structure of the financial services industry, the events of last week were brought upon by any possible weaknesses, with one exception. That is the question of the so-called program trading through computerized programs.

My colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, certainly has made that observation. He has been in touch with our colleagues in the provincial Governments to raise the question. It is more within their jurisdiction to review, but we wished to raise the question with them.

In the event that we see something worth pursuing, I may well wish to raise this at the G-7 meeting. It is a little early at this stage to draw any conclusions.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONDUCT STUDY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Minister that it is not easy to link deregulation with the crash that we experienced. One thing is sure: we had the "Big Bang" in London last year, and now in Canada we are engaged in the deregulation process.

I ask the Minister if he will lead the way with the other industrialized countries to study that question, and ensure, as we did after 1929, that we have regulation to better control the system that is now open 24 hours a day and which uses very sophisticated computers. The Minister should take that opportunity to discuss that on the international scene.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I certainly would not want to reject the suggestion of the Hon. Member. I do wish to caution him in suggesting that there is some weakness in the financial structure, or some weakness in the regulation of the financial system today that has led to the events of last week.

That certainly has not been the case in any of the discussions that I have had with participants in the industry. Further, I have had some discussions with regulators in my Department, as well as with the Bank of Canada.

The integrity and the solvency of the financial system appear to be quite strong after the events of last week. Some of the conclusions drawn by the Hon. Member I do not think are warranted.

However, his comment on reviewing the state of deregulation to see whether there are any moves that may be made is a valid one, and certainly I will take that to heart.

TRADE

FISHING INDUSTRY—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. It concerns the requirements by certain provinces, including Newfoundland, for the further processing of fish landed in that province before being shipped out of the province.

In view of the concern expressed by the Premier of Newfoundland that processing jobs will be lost in the fishing industry if these regulations are eliminated, can the Minister assure the House that the agreement signed by her Government will not prevent the Government of Newfoundland, and other provinces, from insisting on further processing of fish products?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is asking if the rights which existed before the free trade agreement are protected in the free trade agreement, the answer is yes.

PROVISIONS OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the agreement states, "Both parties have agreed they will not maintain or introduce import or export restrictions except in accordance with the GATT, or as modified by the Agreement".

Can the Minister show us where in this agreement there is a modification that looks after this problem?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): The situation is unchanged. If we attempted to put in the agreement all of the situations which are not changed, I would suggest that we could not accommodate the Member's request for that type of information.

The situation that existed before the agreement is the same as the situation which exists after the agreement.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FOR FISHERMEN

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister for International Trade on the subject of fish.

There is nothing in the trade deal to militate in any way against the omnibus Trade Bill which is now being considered in the United States. We understand that, under that omnibus Trade Bill, the definition of subsidy will be broadened to include unemployment insurance for fishermen. If that is the case, then the Government has sold out what is essential to the survival of East Coast fishermen.

I wish to ask the Minister for International Trade how she can have the face to go to the Atlantic and attempt to sell this deal which so clearly lets down a fundamental and essential interest of East Coast fishermen?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn the tables on the Hon. Member and ask him how can he go to see the fishermen of Newfoundland, other Newfoundlanders, and other Canadians, and attempt to convince them of such an obviously phoney issue?

Medicare, social programs, and unemployment insurance are not on the table. There is nothing in the trade agreement that would lead to them being on the table.

DEFINITION OF "SUBSIDY"

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence whatsoever that there is any protection in this against the omnibus Trade Bill.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is nonsense.

Mr. Rompkey: It is quite clear that the definition of "subsidy" will be broad. There is no question about that.

How can the Minister give an assurance, and where is the evidence that there is unemployment insurance protection for fishermen? Where is the evidence?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the evidence is in the elements of the free trade agreement that my colleague, the Minister of Finance, and I signed in Washington. That is the evidence.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES CHARGED TO FARMERS

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

I am wondering when the interest rates that farmers pay to the Farm Credit Corporation will come down.

Could the Minister explain why the bank rate dropped only 1 per cent when the Bank of Canada rate dropped 1.5 per cent? This affects the farmers' ability to pay back.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anyone in the House who would not agree that the events of last week were quite precipitous.

The drop in the Bank of Canada rate and the drop in the market rates were quite substantial, 1.5 percentage points. I do not think that we have seen anything like that in many, many years, if ever.

The drop in the prime rate by the chartered banks was probably more cautionary than anything else. It possibly reflects their expectations that there might have been some reversal. As time progresses and we understand where rates will stabilize, I expect that the chartered banks would reflect the prevailing market circumstances at that time.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER VISIT CENTRAL NOVA

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I have been waiting for him since Friday to come into the House, because I wish to put this question to him.

The Prime Minister came into the House in 1983 through a by-election in Central Nova. He has not been back to Central Nova since 1983, in spite of the fact that he promised to do so.

When does he intend to keep that promise and go back to visit the people of Central Nova?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have been working with the Hon. Member for Central Nova, the Minister of National Revenue, on some important concerns, namely, Hawker Siddely which has now been moved into a position where it can be saved. Some 400 to 450 employees are in the process of being called back to work in Central Nova right now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The second phase of Hawker Siddely, which will guarantee long-term durable employment in the heart of Central Nova, in Pictou County, is well in train and will be resolved within the time frame set out of six months. That will guarantee the future of that industry in Central Nova.

We have brought forward a $10 million Pictou County development fund to attract smaller industry to Pictou County. A $40 million highways agreement has finally been concluded to ensure that tourism comes to Central Nova.

We have lots more that I will announce when I go down there in three weeks time on November 17.

PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT TO HALIFAX

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. On Friday the Prime Minister had a choice between meeting the people of Central Nova, the unemployed of Central Nova, and the well-heeled Tories of the 500 Club. You had an option, Mr. Prime Minister; the Prime Minister had an option—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt will put his question.

Mr. Rodriguez: Why did the Prime Minister pick the option of meeting with the well-heeled 500 Club Tory aristocrats rather than the unemployed workers of Central Nova who were there demonstrating?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, indeed my hon. friend is quite wrong. There were some protestors outside the hotel and I went to meet them. I did not shy away from them. I went to meet with them.

Anybody with a brain in his head knows that this is not representative of Pictou County or of Central Nova but I went to see them anyway. I also went in to see ordinary Canadians who support the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. Broadbent: Ordinary Canadians!

Mr. Mulroney: Yes, most of whom have not given, as has the Canadian Autoworkers Education Centre, $26,000 to the NDP. These are small Canadians.

Let me tell him that I will never apologize for meeting with ordinary Canadians who want to support democratically a Canadian political Party.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to bring to the attention of the House that the Hon. Member for Terrebonne wishes to rise on a question of personal privilege.

PRIVILEGE

DECISION OF MEMBER FOR TERREBONNE TO SIT AS AN INDEPENDENT MEMBER

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I came to politics with a great deal of idealism and a concern for justice and the common good. I admit that my way is not an easy one. I am a progressive social democrat who will fight for his principles to the very end and who will feel indebted only to his fellow citizens. When I see that injustice, inequity or danger of any kind threatens my fellow citizens or the democracy and freedom we have in this country, no political party is going to make me remain silent, under threat of expulsion from the party.

I have been publicly and privately repudiated by my Leader for having criticized an ultra leftist group that is a threat to the democratic values of this country, and for having said out loud that the group uses undemocratic methods and is, in fact, opposed to the recognition of Quebec's distinct character and to Bill 101. I shall go on saying this as loud as I can, and I want to warn the citizens of Quebec and Canada. My repudiation leaves me no choice. I must draw my own conclusions and accept the consequences of my actions.

However, I have two questions for my Leader. Why did he let me become a member of his Party? Did he think I was too naïve to notice what was going on in his Party?

Mr. Speaker, it is with feelings of profound relief that I announce here in the House that I am leaving the ranks of the New Democratic Party.

As an Independent Member, I shall go on fighting for social and fiscal justice, in accordance with the principles of social democracy and political humanism. I shall continue to tell my fellow citizens the facts. And finally, I want to make it clear here in the House that I am and always will be a Quebecer first and a Canadian second.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED INTERCEPTION OF TELEPHONE CONVERSATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. No, I do not intend to resign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I do not know what else the Hon. Member has to say, but I would be pleased to hear him.

Mr. Nunziata: My question of privilege relates to a conversation which my office had with an inmate at Joyceville medium penitentiary last Tuesday. I would submit that my privileges as a Member of Parliament have been breached in that the Correctional Service of Canada intercepted a telephone conversation last Tuesday between my office and an inmate who happens to be a constituent as well.

Mr. David Pratt, my executive assistant, happened to receive a call in my office from the wife of an inmate who is also the head of the inmates committee at Joyceville. She indicated that her husband wanted to speak to me, and my assistant, Mr. Pratt, proceeded to contact the inmate in question at 4.10 p.m. on Tuesday.

My assistant relayed the contents of that conversation to me. I asked him to call the inmate again and to advise him to meet with the warden to express and indicate what were his concerns.

At 4.10 p.m. on Wednesday my office contacted the inmate, and the inmate relayed a list of concerns with regard to the situation at Joyceville. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that there was a riot there a short time ago, and these concerns related to the riot and other matters.

As a result of this conversation the inmate was transferred to the maximum security penitentiary at Millhaven and put in segregation.

I tried to make contact with the warden late Friday. I have yet to receive a call from the warden. I indicated my concerns to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) after Question Period on Thursday. My office also contacted the office of the Solicitor General on Thursday and, to date, we have not received a reply.

This morning there was a general lock-up at Joyceville. The situation at Joyceville penitentiary is serious. As a result of the actions of the warden there is extreme concern. The inmates have been locked up.

One of the reasons for the inmates taking the action they took this morning was because the head of the inmates committee, my constituent, was fired and transferred to a maximum security penitentiary.

I would submit that my privileges as a Member of Parliament have been breached on two fronts. First, with regard to my ability to deal with my constituents in an unfettered fashion, my privileges were breached in that the conversation was intercepted or listened to. Second, in my role as the opposition critic for the Solicitor General I would submit that I ought to have unfettered access to inmates and to have conversations with them in privacy, without having the Correctional Service of Canada, which is responsible to the Solicitor General, listening in on the conversations.

• (1510)

I would ask that you investigate the circumstances of this particular matter, Mr. Speaker. If you find that there is a prima facie case of breach of privilege, I would be prepared to move the necessary motion.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to my colleague's comments and his question of privilege. I am not sure if he is suggesting that it was a wiretap or that there was a guard listening to the conversation on the other end. In any event, my colleague indicates that he has contacted the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) who unfortunately is not here today. I will undertake to contact the Solicitor General and endeavour to discover exactly what the situation is. I think we would be in a position to report to the House some time in the very near future.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the issue here is not whether the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) can or should offer an explanation for the intervention. The issue, in my opinion, is that this House has been held in contempt by someone who has attempted to interfere with a communication of a Member of Parliament.

Just as it would be contemptuous for anyone to prevent a Member of Parliament from having access to the precincts of this House, similarly in modern terms, for a Member of Parliament, from his office on Parliament Hill or from elsewhere, to be impeded or listened to while attempting to speak to a constituent is in my view an offence, not only against the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) but indeed against all Hon. Members of the House and the House itself.

Beauchesne's definition of parliamentary privilege clearly states that parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament by Members of each House individually. The next part is very important; it states that without this privilege they could not discharge their functions, and it exceeds those possessed by other bodies of individuals.

I submit that a Member of Parliament cannot exercise his or her functions as a Member of the House if there are any attempts to interfere with a communication to or from a Member of Parliament.

I want to refer you further, Mr. Speaker, to Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice. In the definition in Chapter 5, page 70 of Volume 20 of Erskine May, it gives the following definition of what constitutes privilege:

> Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament—
> The particular privileges of the Commons have been defined as: 'The sum of the fundamental rights of the House and of its individual Members as against the prerogatives of the Crown—

Let us not forget that the person about whom we are talking in terms of interfering with a Member of Parliament is not just a citizen attempting to interfere with Parliament. That of course would be an offence in itself, but the fact that an employee representing the Crown, the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher), has made this attempt creates a further offence, according to the definition in Erskine May.

I would submit further that in other definitions of what constitutes contempt against this House, contempt has been defined as an offence against the House or an insult or injury against the House, which is, indeed, or can be constituted as contempt. It further says in Maingot for instance, that contempt is whatever the House deems to be contempt.

I would submit that any kind of interference or attempted interference with a Member of Parliament attempting to have access to a constituent is indeed an action that I believe would warrant your very thorough investigation. I know the Hon. Member has indicated that he feels that this affects his privileges in this House, but I would submit that it indeed affects the privileges or could affect the privileges of all Hon. Members and of Parliament itself.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I think this is a very serious allegation that has been made by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) who is the Solicitor General critic for his Party. Like any critic, indeed any Member, he should have untrammelled access to his constituents, and especially in the role of Solicitor General's critic to people who are imprisoned, without anybody listening in. He claims in the House today that indeed people did listen in, one way or the other.

I think this is a matter, therefore, that should be referred to the committee because that is what the committee is for. Rather than waiting for the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) to reply, or waiting for further explanations, surely we could refer these matters to the committee and let the committee look into them. That seems to me to be what the committee is for. It is a serious allegation and it should be referred to the committee as a prima facie case of privilege.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the request made by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). If you find that there is a prima facie case of breach of privilege on the grounds that he has stated, he has made it very clear that he will be prepared to move the appropriate and required motion referring the matter to the Standing Committee on Elections and Privileges.

I have not had the opportunity to research all possible precedents in this regard but I do notice that on page 22 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation No. 69 reads:

> A question of alleged wiretapping of telephones was referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections in 1972, but the Member making the allegation refused to appear before the Committee and therefore no evidence of wrongdoing was discovered.

The citation is based on Journals, May 24, 1972, pages 321 to 326.

I would say that what we have here may well be very similar to what led the Speaker of the day to refer the question of alleged wiretapping of telephones to the Committee on Elections and Privileges. We have here what I submit is an improper interception of a telephone conversation between a Member of Parliament and a constituent. I do not think it really matters whether the interception of the conversation was by what would amount to wiretapping or simple listening in by a guard or other official. In either case, I would say that there was an improper interference with the rights of communication between a Member of Parliament and a constituent, a right which I think is reinforced by the fact that the Hon. Member is the Official Opposition critic for the Department of the Solicitor General and in that capacity, his executive assistant was talking to the constituent in question.

It would seem to me that there are actually two likely breaches of privilege here. One arises out of the interception of the telephone conversation, but I would submit that there is a second one and that is the alleged and apparent retribution by officials against the Hon. Member's constituent for raising the concerns and question with the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston has reported to the House and to you, Sir, that after the conversation in question the constituent was removed as head of the prisoners' committee at Joyceville, was sent to a maximum security prison and was put into what used to be called solitary confinement. If this is the case, I suggest that it is a breach of an Hon. Member's privileges to take action against a citizen who was using the rights of access to an Hon. Member, which every citizen including someone incarcerated in a penal institution ought to have. I submit we have two breaches of privilege. One is the improper interception of a telephone conversation. The other is the retribution by officials of the Solicitor General's department against the Member's constituent for raising the concerns in question.

• (1520)

Therefore I submit, not only because of the comments I have made but because of the other worthy comments of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston and the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), that it is well open to you, Sir, to find a prima facie case of breach of privilege.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because I appreciate that this is an opposition day and I do not want to impinge on their time.

I have listened to the comments of my friends across the way and I must admit that I appreciate there is no question, there must be free and unfettered access by a constituent to his or her Member of Parliament. I do not think that is in issue.

The issue here is complicated somewhat by the fact that my hon. friend's constituent is incarcerated and there are preventive measures normally taken in institutions with respect to communications with those incarcerated. I suggest that we will be further enlightened on this matter by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher).

However, it might be instructive if I were to advise the House that the chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General has advised me that his committee will be touring penitentiaries in the very near future. I think the subject matter of what communication can take place between an incarcerated constituent and his or her Member of Parliament would be a subject matter worthy of some further investigation on a general basis. In any event, I will take it up with the Solicitor General and get back to the House.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard an intervention by way of an application concerning a question of privilege by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). Other Members have contributed to the debate. I accept with some thanks the Hon. Minister's indication that he will be taking this matter up with the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) and reporting back. In view of what the Chair sees as the serious nature of this case, perhaps the Hon. Member could discuss the matter further with the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) to see when the Solicitor General might be able to make a comment which might be helpful to the Chair.

I see the Hon. Member for York South—Weston nodding in agreement, and I take it he will speak with the Minister and between the two of them get back to the Chair to indicate when I could hear the Solicitor General on this matter.

Mr. Nunziata: If I may, Mr. Speaker, I take it that you simply wish to solicit some information from the Solicitor General. However, if the facts as I have alleged them are accurate, my question of privilege remains and I would still request that the matter be referred to committee for investigation.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair understands completely the position of the Hon. Member. It would be helpful to the Chair if I could hear from the Solicitor General, and I am indebted to the Hon. Member for co-operating in that regard.

I want to say something else, especially to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) with regard to a matter raised a few days ago. There has been some effort to try and get all the parties back in the Chamber to address the matter further. It had been my hope that that might be done this afternoon. However, in view of the fact that it is an Opposition Day the Chair is reluctant to use more time this afternoon so I again ask the co-operation of all Members and I will try and get the matter back on the floor of the House as soon as possible.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

> That this House condemns the Government for its inept negotiations of a trade agreement with the United States that undermines Canadian sovereignty and requires excessive and unacceptable concessions by Canada but gains virtually nothing in return, that still fails to provide protection for Canadian industries from restrictive United States trade laws and that caves in to all United States demands in key sectors, especially agriculture, energy, automobiles, financial services and investment while threatening hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs without the Canadian Government's providing any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers.

And the amendment of Mr. Broadbent (p. 10365).

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my remarks by reporting to the House on two very comparable experiences. Last Thursday, when I was in Alberta, I participated in a province-wide hotline show. We took some 15 or 20 calls on the question of free trade, about 80 per cent of which were either totally opposed to free trade or questioned the validity of the proposal. Last night in Toronto I was on a television hotline show which lasted for about two hours. We had over 6,000 responses, of which 76 per cent were against and 24 per cent for.

I am not saying those figures are definitive. I simply want to point out that Canadians view this matter as one of the most serious, indeed crucial decisions that they and this Parliament will have taken in our generation. No one should be under any illusion that this is simply another ordinary Government initiative such as putting a tax on dog food or something like that. This goes to the very heart, soul and mind of this country. Canadians are deeply concerned and they want to comprehend what it is all about.

It was in that spirit that we presented this resolution today. I want to note that this is the first time we have had the opportunity for any kind of extensive debate on this issue since the initiative was announced. I appreciate the initiative taken by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) to present their positions on behalf of their Parties. I can only regret that the Leader of the Government was not in the House to present the Government's position. Obviously he was not meeting with his constituents in Sept-Îles; that is quite clear from his answers in Question Period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has been here long enough to know that he should not reflect upon the presence or absence of any Member in the House.

Mr. Caccia: Oh, come on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is fine. I do not intend to argue with any of his colleagues either. I just want to bring that to his attention.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I assume that you will not deduct the intervention from the time allotted for my speech.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): You are stooping awfully low now, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, Canadians will be looking to the political Parties to put forward their case, even though it is very clear, and has been right from the day this announcement was made over two years ago, that the Government does not want to put its case in front of the Canadian people. It may want to put propaganda in front of them but it is not prepared to put forward its argument justifying such a major uprooting of the entire Canadian system at this time.

The point of this debate should be to get down to the essentials. Let us ask why the Government undertook this incredibly momentous decision to fundamentally alter the entire fabric of Canada from an east-west relationship to a north-south relationship. I want to quote the advocates of the free trade proposal. These are not the people who oppose it, they are those who have been in favour. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) loves to point to the Economic Council of Canada. They said that any agreement should clearly define those subsidies which can be attacked with countervailing actions because they do not fit current definitions.

Tom D'Aquino, President of the Business Council on National Issues, the corporate spokesman for Canada, said that remedies must be based on a commonly established set of principles and mutually acceptable definitions of behaviour, a remedy process where both Americans and Canadians have equal access, and a dispute mechanism with teeth.

The Macdonald Royal Commission said there must be new rules applied to countervailing duties and subsidies.

The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) said we must sign a deal that ensures there will no longer be countervailing duty powers. The result would be the elimination of countervailing duties by both countries, she said.

• (1530)

I could go on. The fact is that the bottom line, the unquestionable goal, the unalterable objective of the Government was to secure an exemption from U.S. trade law, to eliminate the use of countervail and anti-dumping, to find ways to move Canadians away from the harassment based upon those trade remedies. Has that been achieved through this agreement? Would anyone even try to suggest that U.S. trade law no longer applies, that there will not be countervail powers attached, that we have somehow been exempted from those trade laws?

We got a meaningless, Mickey Mouse mechanism which simply provides a review procedure to determine whether U.S. law has been applied. We already had that. We could already go to the International Court of Trade. We could already go to the GATT for such definitions.

I suggest further, Mr. Speaker, that not only did the Government not achieve anything of significance, it has taken a major step backward. The small print of the agreement says that if this country chooses to use the binational mechanism we forfeit our right to go to GATT. At least we could challenge the law under GATT. At least we can say that the definition of "subsidy" used in U.S. trade law is unfair. We could say, as we have in many previous cases, that the American attempts to dictate to this and other countries what their domestic programs should be is completely beyond the definition of what is fair or unfair in trade. Under this agreement the Government has abdicated our right to use GATT in order to challenge that law.

We saw the signs in the softwood lumber case. The Government refused to challenge that case under GATT and, therefore, set in train the precedent which we now see entrenched in the principles of the agreement.

I assert that not only did the Government not achieve that which it said it was going to achieve, but it has in fact retreated substantially from the defences that Canadian industry had against unfair trading practices applied by the Americans. Not only is it not an achievement, it is an absolute deficit. It is a withdrawal, a backward step. As soon as Canadians find out that the Government has achieved surrender, not victory, they will turn rapidly on this document.

By the very standards set by the Government itself and its allies the prime purpose was to get secure, guaranteed access. The Government has failed totally. It has achieved nothing close to that objective. In fact, the Government is an accomplice in further reducing the right of Canadians to try to achieve proper protection against unfair trade actions by the United States. That is very clear in this agreement.

The other side of the equation is also important, that being what we give up. I was in the riding of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), Vegreville, Alberta, and after looking at the agreement someone commented that this deal was similar to the Edmonton Oilers trading Wayne Gretzky and Mark Messier to the Los Angeles Kings for future consideration and a free trip to Disneyland. That about described the equation of this deal.

Not only did we not get what the Government said we would get, but what we put on the bargaining table and negotiated away for time immemorial is breathtaking. It is far beyond anything that one could have imagined when this began. I believe that we still do not know the half of it. I believe that we still do not know of all the secret nooks and crannies in this agreement. However, we know enough to know that the price we paid for this agreement far exceeds any benefit that we could achieve.

The agreement totally enfeebles the powers of the Canadian Government and the provincial Governments to pursue the public interest of Canada, to bring forward policies and initiatives to respond to the various interests of Canadians.

The Government talks about its new vision. I think we know what the new vision is. In his first public address on this agreement, which took place in New York of course, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that we are opening "a brave new world". We know what the brave new world of the Tories is. It is a world which uses jackboots on refugees because the Government does not want to defend their rights. The brave new world will increase drug prices by $200 million or $300 million. The brave new world of the Tories includes tax increases of $2,000 for average Canadian families.

However, that is simply a prelude to what we see in this agreement. This agreement is a total open sesame on foreign investment. According to this agreement, the Canadian Government will no longer have the right to require foreigners who invest in this country to produce jobs, to do research and development, or to produce export performance. We can no longer apply to them a test to learn whether their foreign investment is producing anything of economic value.

We need that test because we know that from 1984 until January of last year, $22 billion of foreign investment came into Canada, 95 per cent of which went for takeovers and acquisitions rather than new jobs or new enterprises. We know that those foreign-owned corporations do not produce jobs in this country. The jobs are produced by Canadian companies. Those are not Grit figures. They are Statistics Canada figures which show that for $5 billion worth of investment by a foreign company something like 17 new jobs are created.

It is ludicrous that we would surrender the right to require a foreign owner taking over a Canadian company to produce an equivalent number of jobs in Canada. The Government will wipe that right off the books.

Another example is procurement, and it is an interesting one. According to the statement made by Mr. Baker and Mr. Yeutter in the briefing to their own congressmen, under the procurement arrangement U.S. businesses will have exactly the same right to compete for government contracts worth over $25,000 as have Canadian companies. Furthermore, we cannot impose upon them any requirement to invest in this country, to establish a factory in this country, or to provide jobs in this country.

Our good friends in Montreal stole the CF-18 contract from us in Manitoba, but they may not even be able to get that any more. It could go to someone in Hartford, Connecticut, and we would not see even a nickel's worth of production from it.

When I was Minister of Transport we initiated a major modernization of the radar systems in Canadian airports at a cost of $900 million. Several firms put forward bids, two of which were American and which we accepted. However, we set a standard. We said that if they wanted to do business with the Government of Canada they had to establish a factory here. They built one in Kitchener-Waterloo which now employs several hundred people. They had to provide subsidiaries in Halifax, Winnipeg and Saskatoon. They had to create thousands of jobs in this country because we were spending $900 million of taxpayers' money. Under this agreement they do not have to do that any more. It is incredible that we would give that away. It is absolutely beyond belief.

With regard to agriculture in the West, farmers have told me that we are surrendering the Canadian capacity for self-sufficiency in food. That will be eroded. The Canadian Wheat Board no longer has the right to provide licensing for the import of wheat, barley and oats. That breaks the generations-long tradition of a two-price wheat system which provided close to $300 million to the farmers of western Canada when they desperately needed it.

The Western Grain Transportation Act is now an unfair trade practice. We have always used freight rates as a way of compensating for our geography. We have always compensated producers for the necessity to transport their wheat, potash, minerals and forestry products over long distances by rail. We do not have a Mississippi water system. Most of our commodities are far from port. We have always had a subsidized freight rate system. For the first time, a government of Canada has acceded to another country's demands that those freight rates be considered an unfair trade practice.

• (1540)

Under this agreement, we acknowledge that anything moving to the United States is no longer eligible for freight assistance under the WGTA because it is an unfair trade practice. When all our competitors in the grain business and those others who enjoy subsidized freight rates see that precedent, they will hammer us with trade action cases until we go dizzy.

Today we saw the complete wipe-out of an industry in the area of tender fruits and vegetables and wine. No matter how the Minister tries to evade the issue, the fact is that removing the seasonal tariffs, even by some snap-back retaliation which will never work, we are putting the people in our fruit and vegetable industry in jeopardy.

I talked to the potato producers in Manitoba. They know full well that it is their marketing system that is under attack. I suggest that we are seeing duplicity in this House. Every time the Minister of Finance or the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) says that the supply management system has not been touched, I suggest that they do not know much about supply management. One of the essential ingredients is the use of tariffs to ensure that cheaper goods cannot be imported to undermine the supply of that product. It is nonsense for Members of the Government to say that supply management or marketing boards will not be touched. If they knew anything about it, they would at least admit that. They should at least have the honesty of their convictions, rather than trying to hide behind the foolish nonsense we hear every day.

Let us consider another so-called commitment the Government has made. The Government says that it will not touch regional development and that it is not in the agreement. Indeed, it is in the agreement in some very substantial ways.

As I said at the outset, the only thing that was not touched by this agreement was preventing the United States from taking countervail actions against Canadian goods, services or products. Let me refer to a recent decision by the ITC, to see what it considers is countervailable. According to this agreement, that so-called binational panel must take into account American precedents and American law. Let me read the American law and American precedents in the ITC decision, 1986. What is countervailable? Investment tax credits to industries, programs for export market development, regional development incentive programs, industrial and regional development programs, community-based industrial adjustment programs, agricultural rural development agreements, general development agreements and economic regional development agreements are all countervailable. All those regional programs that we have used in Canada to try to ensure a fair sharing of goods and services in this country are now subject to trade law and are being entrenched in this agreement.

It is no wonder that the Deputy Minister of Finance, who I presume advises his Minister from time to time, said to a committee that in fact we will have to do regional development very differently because this agreement no longer allows for those kinds of grants to Michelin or other companies as was possible under IRDA agreements or general development agreements.

Who is the Government trying to fool? What is its real agenda? Canadians know that this is simply a cosmetic agreement to cover up something else. I believe the cover-up is part of the Government's ideology, shared by the Reagan Administration, that they do not believe there should be regional development programs like these. They do not believe that there should be freight rates or that Governments can be used in a constructive, positive way to apply goals and standards for a market economy. They do not believe in a political economy, but have idolized the market economy. They believe that a market economy will make the proper allocation of programs.

I suggest that the Government talk to the starving people in the inner cities of Canada and the people in the hinterlands of Canada who are without jobs because their research programs and regional development programs are being cut back. They know that they require government participation.

The most important fact to remember is that this country has been built into a distinctive society because we have been able to use Government in an effective way, by building proper transportation systems, communications systems and regional development programs.

Successive generations of Canadians and their Governments have known that one of the reasons that we have been able to stay on this northern part of the continent and establish our own identity and do things our way is that we have the power and ability to make our own decisions. The Government is abdicating the rights of Canadians to make those decisions. It is beginning to put a fence around our political institutions and slowly eviscerate the capacity of Canadians to decide for themselves who and what they want to be.

The point is that it was not necessary because there have been alternatives. Every Member of the House knows that in the past we have succeeded in opening trade around the world through international trade rules that limit the power of big nations. That is why 80 per cent of our goods now go to the United States tariff-free.

The most ironic statement of all was made by the Minister for International Trade this morning when she said: "We want Canada to be world traders". In the last three years our trade with the Pacific Rim declined 25 per cent. Our trade with the Middle East has gone down 20 per cent. The Government has cut back export development programs, other than to the United States. It has closed embassies and trade offices.

In other words, our trade with the rest of the world has shrunk under the Tory Government. It is far less than it was three years ago because the Government does not want to trade with the rest of the world. It wants to lock itself into a North American fortress, run by the ideological right wingers in the White House. That is what this agreement is all about. It has nothing to do with opening world opportunities. Its purpose is to serve that deliberate and diabolical attempt to frustrate the decision-making ability of the Government and serve that ideological goal.

That is why the Government has a fight on its hands, one that it will lose. The sooner it calls an election so that we can prove it, the better off we will all be.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the sentiments expressed by my hon. friend in the Liberal Party. Let me bring to his attention a statement which was made by his Leader.

First, I am sure that as a westerner he shared the agony and pain of the abandonment of businesses and the wholesale sell-out of the petroleum industry when his Liberal Government introduced the National Energy Program. He knows as well as every other Canadian that Marc Lalonde openly admitted that it was an attempt to destroy the power base of Alberta and its economic strength.

The New Democratic Party has been accused of being partners to that program. While it says it had nothing to do with it, we know better. It supported that action in other ways because it very much fits in with its philosophy as a centralist Party in Ontario.

On October 5, as reported at page 9636 of Hansard, the Leader of the Liberal Party said:

> We have already made a good many concessions... We have already dropped the Foreign Investment Review Agency, our national energy policy—

He went on to say:

> Before the negotiations, the Government gave away the Foreign Investment Review Act. It really did a job on that one.

He went on to talk about the National Energy Program. Is the Liberal Party still wrapped up in the National Energy Program? Will the Liberals go out in the next election and tell Alberta, British Columbia, southern Saskatchewan, southern Manitoba, Fort St. John, Fort Nelson and Dawson Creek that they support the National Energy Program? That is the first question I want to put to him.

• (1550)

My second question will be very brief. If the Hon. Member has done his homework as an energy critic at some point, he will know that British Columbia Hydro has a far greater capacity than it has customers. He will know that the blockade is from the Bonneville Power Administration. He will also know that this agreement will open up that Bonneville Power roadblock and allow B.C. Hydro to sell off power to California in order to pay off the debt to the benefit of the rate that consumers are paying today for their power. Let him answer that.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, once again I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I assume it was not a set-up and I will take it at value because it gives me the opportunity to talk about something I did not have time to talk about in my remarks.

First, let us talk about the Hon. Member's own riding of Kootenay West. What we have experienced there in the past year is that for the first time this country has allowed the sale of a public utility, an electrical power company. Investment Canada, in the dark of night last year, on December 22, at midnight, without any reliance upon documentation or evidence, allowed the sale of the Kootenay West Power and Light Company. We have never done that before. It is symbolic and indicative of exactly what I pointed out, that there is no understanding or comprehension on the part of Conservative Members that Canada must maintain the right to manage its own resources, especially its important energy resources.

Of course, we support the sale of power, natural gas and oil, because under previous administrations that was permitted. However, we always wanted to ensure there were certain tests applied; first, its availability to Canadians, and, second, a fair return to Canadians. That is what we have given away. We have obliterated the right of a national energy board to set any standards whatsoever for the sale of our energy. What we have is the federal United States Regulatory Commission being able to set regulations on its side of the border, which it had retained the right to do under this agreement, but we have given up our right.

I guess that is what a Tory calls a good deal. If we give up something and they keep what they have, I suppose, under the Prime Minister's definition, that is a good deal. Somehow or other, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is going to write a new text book which will say: "We give up. We surrender. You keep yours and we all go home happy". That is a kind of perversity of logic, and it is the reason there is such distrust of this agreement. That is why there is such distrust of the Prime Minister. Canadians realize he does not have the capacity to defend effectively Canadian economic interests and that includes our energy resources and our resources, generally.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg Fort—Garry (Mr. Axworthy) said something interesting, something I have heard for the first time, in a speech that was extremely effective and informative. I heard for the first time the observation that if we as Canadians choose the binational mechanism to resolve a dispute, we would then abdicate our right to choose GATT as a mechanism for resolving that very same dispute. That comes as news to me. I would like to know whether I understood the Hon. Member correctly and, if so, whether he could elaborate on that point.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that this has been a part of the deal about which the Government does not talk. Somehow it has forgotten to inform Canadians. I read its little colouring book it is sending around to the supermarkets, somewhere tucked between the National Enquirer and People magazine, explaining the trade deal. However, what the Government does not say is that we have given up a right we negotiated back in 1946-47 at Bretton Woods, under the GATT, which gives any country the right to request a panel of impartial people, drawn not from the two parties in the dispute, but from outside that dispute. We have surrendered on that point.

What does that mean? In the last 10 years we have taken about nine different cases to the GATT. We have been successful in seven of them. Back in 1972, when the Americans imposed a major duty on East Coast tuna fish, we challenged it in front of a GATT panel. The Americans settled even before the panel reached a decision because they knew they had a bad case. When the Americans challenged us on FIRA, we took it to GATT and we won there as well. In other words, we had an impartial group, and we know full well that the Americans, or most other countries, take their decisions seriously because once they begin to run with impudence to those decisions, they know the international trade system breaks down. The Americans right now say their number one trade priority is improving the rules of GATT.

We had an opportunity. We saw it most clearly. What an opportunity we had in the softwood lumber case! That was a test case for Canada. The Americans were claiming that by their definition of a subsidy, our stumpage fees and other forms of support programs for our resource industries, were an unfair trade practice. That is a challenge not only to Canada but to every other country around the world which exports commodities.

If we had taken the case to GATT and won, we could have put to rest the American claim that its definition of "subsidy" must predominate. The Americans would have had to force back into their own administration and Congress the fact they had been ruled against. But what did she do, that wonderful Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), who fights on the beaches against all these trade practices? She decided not to go to GATT. Now we have compounded the problem. It is within the agreement that if one chooses to use the binational panel for review, one forgoes the right to go to GATT. We forgo the right to challenge the law itself, or the premise of the law. So what we have limited ourselves to is a panel that will review someone else's law, someone else's precedence and decisions, and we have given up the right to challenge the very premise and basis of those decisions. That is a definition of a retreat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the time for questions and comments is now terminated. Debate.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to participate in the debate on free trade. We all know that this type of debate is going to give rise to a good deal of partisan rhetoric and a good deal of emotion as well. However, I think it is too important a debate to have the type of excesses, the type of rhetoric and the type of distortions we heard from the previous speaker, be it on investment, be it on the effects on the wine industry, on grain transportation, or you name it. Those are excesses which should not be a part of this debate. We should be dealing in facts and in the precise nature of the agreement, and from there, draw the conclusions that will allow Canadians to judge the effectiveness and impact of this agreement on our future as a country.

This agreement is of vital concern to all Canadians. What I want to do in my time is to deal with some of these specifics of the agreement and then draw some conclusions from that.

Let me start, if I can, with the financial sector. This is the area of the agreement with which I have had the most involvement. There are two basic questions. What does the agreement do for our financial sector? And what does it do for Canadians who make use of the services from the financial sector, be they regular customers of the banks and trust companies or investors or Canadian business?

Let us take a look at it. The agreement preserves the access of our banks, our trust companies and insurance companies in the very, very important United States market. It preserves the current status of Canadian institutions in the United States and, in some ways, that is actually better than the treatment of domestic United States banks. It addresses some of the problems that the American laws are beginning to cause for Canadian banks which want to take advantage of the substantial elements of financial reform that we brought in almost a year ago. It ensures that Canadian institutions will benefit from future easing of the restrictive U.S. laws that are in place now, and I want to come back to that point.

It also provides a new source of capital for our banking institutions. It will enliven competition. It can only help the millions of Canadian borrowers and savers. Finally, it affirms the directions that we took. I believe that was supported in a general way by all Members of this House, in terms of financial service reform, something that we commenced last December.

In short, we have achieved an agreement that permits healthy competition, greater access to the United States market, and a more secure position in the most important financial market of the world in the United States. We know that our financial institutions are strong. They have been described by many as being world class. The reform proposals that we put forward last December are intended to bring our Canadian financial sector right into the real world in a very competitive way. We want them to be better prepared for the changing circumstances in the international markets and better equipped to meet competition both at home and abroad.

So let us look at some of the specifics of the free trade agreement as it relates to this sector. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that our reform of the financial sector allows banks to engage in the securities industry through an affiliate. One of the specifics of the trade agreement is an undertaking by the Americans to amend the regulations of the Glass-Steagall Act which would have caused problems for Canadian banks that are taking advantage of that reform. Right now, Glass-Steagall prevents our banks, as well as American banks, from engaging in the securities business in the United States, whether it is through an affiliate or through a direct operation of its own. As presently interpreted, it would mean that a Canadian securities dealer that is taken over by a Canadian bank would have to reduce its operations sharply. That is not desirable.

[Translation]

The Americans have agreed to give particular consideration to the case of Canadian brokers and to broaden the scope of securities negotiable by Canadian brokers who are affiliated with banks so as to include government securities. This would therefore include securities issued by all administration levels in Canada—federal, provincial and municipal—which amounts to a sizable sales figure.

[English]

It is not only only a healthy chunk of their business, it is about 80 per cent or 90 per cent of the business of some of the larger Canadian firms that are doing business in the United States. So the agreement means that Canadian securities dealers which are acquired by Canadian banks will be able to stay in business, and in most parts of its business, in all the United States.

It means that securities subsidiaries of Canadian banks can compete in the United States market in an area in which they have a clear competitive advantage. It will allow Canadian banks to take greater advantage of the increased powers that our regulatory changes of last year will bring about.

There is another important provision relating to Glass-Steagall. We have been guaranteed that any amendments to this Act in the future will apply to Canadian companies, Canadian banks, in the same way as they will apply to United States banks. This is not an idle promise. Glass-Steagall has been around for some 50 years, and there is every expectation and indication that the United States administration, many members of Congress, and certainly many members of the financial sector in the United States, want to see it changed. In fact, Senator Proxmire has started to hold hearings on the liberalization of the Glass-Steagall Act. So this assures us of the benefits of any liberalization that will come about.

Some have said we should have had a complete exemption from Glass-Steagall. I think that anybody who is following with any degree of sensitivity what is going on in the United States Congress will know that that is not realistic. In fact, it could even be described as being naive. But, needless to say, the moves that are in the free trade agreement are welcomed. They will certainly build a stronger future for our industry in that market.

The United States has also agreed to preserve existing Canadian privileges dating from the 1978 International Banking Act. These provisions ensure that Canadian banks operating in the United States can continue to provide services across state lines through their existing United States branch network. American banks, as I am sure you know, Mr. Speaker, cannot do retail banking across state lines. So, together, these provisions preserve our existing access to the United States market. They open up some new opportunities for our banks.

One final observation is this. The health of the Canadian banks, the Canadian financial sector, depends on the health of the Canadian economy. It depends on the health of their clients. I want to read from The Toronto Star what the Chairman of the Royal Bank had to say. He said:

> The Royal Bank is convinced that the proposed Canada-U.S. free trade agreement is a good one for Canada and Canadians; and that we could reject it only at grave peril to our future prosperity.

He goes on to state later in the article:

> The Royal Bank services, and is intimately involved with, the fortunes of clients in practically every sector of the Canadian economy.
> We realize full well that some of our customers will gain more, and others less from the agreement. In expressing Royal Bank support for the agreement, we have the best interests of all our customers in mind—

There is very good reason for that. It is because if the Royal Bank's customers do well, as Mr. Taylor expects from this agreement, then the Royal Bank will do well.

The second group of provisions works in the interests of our domestic rights and serves Canadian consumers and our domestic financial markets. We have agreed that the U.S. Schedule B banks will no longer be subject to the 16 per cent aggregate ceiling on foreign bank subsidiaries. Our experience has shown, since the Schedule B banks were first permitted in 1980, that Canadian banks can compete quite effectively with United States banks and other foreign banks. As a group, the Schedule B banks have not shown high levels of profitability. But they have been able to increase financial resources available in Canada to Canadians. They have brought new competition and new ideas which have clearly benefited Canadian businesses and individuals.

We have also agreed to exempt United States investors from the rule that prevents Canadian Schedule A banks from being more than 25 per cent owned by foreign interests. In practice, this rule is a redundancy. No investor or group of associated investors can own more than 10 per cent of one of our major banks. These banks are also so widely held that no one, foreign or Canadian, can even come close to controlling them.

Indeed, the agreement we signed with the Americans keeps the needs of our financial industry very much in mind. Since last December 18, when we issued the policy paper on financial institution reform, our policy has been based on the premise that large firms should not be able to acquire other large firms in the financial sector. It is also based on the premise that any financial institution with more than $750 million in capital must be publicly traded. This applies to all financial institutions in the country, whether they are Canadian, American, British, French, German, or any other nationality. In essence, we are distinguishing between two types of financial institutions, big ones and small ones. When one gets to be big two things happen. First, no single interest can buy one out; and, second, one must offer one's shares to the general public.

I would add one more point. The Government of Canada retains the power of review of the activities of all players in the financial sector that we regulate, Canadian and foreign alike. We will continue in the future, as we have in the past, to exercise our judgment about what is right for our financial system. We will continue to review each application for admission on a case-by-case basis to ensure that the best interests of Canada are served.

That brings us to the part of the agreement that relates to investment. Attracting foreign investment has been one of the goals of this Government. As one of the leading newspapers has pointed out recently, this is one of the goals of free trade. It is not one of the costs, as my colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry just said. Why do we say that as a Government, Mr. Speaker? Because investment creates jobs. It brings new technology, new production ideas, new management, new trade opportunities, regional development, all of which together lead to a healthier economy and an economy that will produce more job opportunities than would be the case without that investment.

• (1610)

This is one of the fundamental differences between the Progressive Conservative Government and the Liberal and the New Democratic Parties. We view investment as being positive. It is one of the key elements of our economic policy.

One of the first things that we did when we came into office was to improve Canada's chances of attracting foreign investment. We scrapped the Foreign Investment Review Agency and created Investment Canada. We told the world that Canada was open for business once again.

The world has responded. We have seen investment in Canada grow and almost double in portfolio investment, and slightly less than double in direct investment. That has been one of the principal factors that has created those 959,000 jobs that we have seen since September of 1984. That is one of the key results of our changed attitude toward foreign investment.

This free trade agreement continues that same direction. But it does not mean that foreign investors will have unbridled liberty to do whatever they wish to do. We maintain our powers to approve, to veto, or to set conditions on the acquisition by any foreign interests of any of the large companies in Canada. We have left in force the ownership restrictions in those sectors of our economy that define what we are as a nation, notably, energy, air transportation, banking, telecommunications, publishing, broadcasting, cinema, and all the cultural industries that are so important to our future as a country.

What the trade agreement does is to strengthen the policies on investment that we have in place. It has already aroused great interest among investors in Europe and Asia. They now see Canada as a very important base on which they can service the great American market. They see Canada as a stepping-stone into that North American market. The assured access that the free trade agreement gives to Canada will be a significant element in future investment decisions by both Canadian and foreign investors.

The trade deal works both ways, of course. The United States will accord Canadian investors the same rights as their own citizens. It will exempt Canadians from any legislation that puts restrictions on foreign investment. That, in an era in which the Congress is beginning to consider such restrictions, is an important element of stability for the many Canadian enterprises that wish to expand beyond their Canadian base.

There are few areas in which foreign investment is as critical to Canada as is the automotive industry. Surely, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, who represents an auto town, cannot oppose the fact that the American auto industry invests in Canada. Surely he cannot oppose the $2 billion in new investment that General Motors has recently put into his riding in Oshawa, creating jobs and ensuring that Oshawa will be a key participant in the North American auto industry for years to come. In fact, that Party does not oppose it. It has made the Auto Pact an article of faith, the same Auto Pact, I remind Hon. Members, that that Party so violently opposed when it was signed 22 years ago. Now the Auto Pact is living proof of the advantages of two of the elements of our trade agreement with the United States, investment and free trade. The question is, how can an article of faith in one industry be a threat and a sell-out in all of the rest?

The auto industry as a whole accounts for approximately one-half of Ontario's exports. It is taken very well care of by the Auto Pact. But what about the other half? Does it not deserve the same type of treatment, the same type of access to its closest and biggest market, and the same type of protection from the rampages and vicissitudes of United States protectionism?

When the NDP talks about sell-out, what in the name of sanity is it talking about anyhow? There has been no sell-out anywhere, certainly not in the Auto Pact. Let us not forget that our chief negotiator, Simon Reisman, is the same chief negotiator who negotiated the Auto Pact to the best interests of Canada some 22 years ago.

Since then our auto trade has been strengthened. It is strengthened further by this free trade agreement, not weakened. All the Auto Pact safeguards for the Canadian industry remain intact. We retained for the North American producers the right to import products duty free from third countries, and will do this only if they keep their one-to-one assembly to sales ratio.

The Auto Pact is subject to review and cancellation. By wrapping the free trade agreement around the Auto Pact we have preserved the Auto Pact. Indeed, the agreement will expand free trade to include new sectors of the industry, replacement parts and tires. Now, if this is a sell-out, why is it that American auto parts makers who sell to the Big Three are protesting that the agreement will send even more of their business to Canada?

In addition, the free trade agreement opens up the North American market to our auto parts manufacturers. This will lead to increasing business for them. Why do I feel confident of that, Mr. Speaker? Because the performance of this industry supports that fact.

Let us look at what has happened over the last four years. The percentage share of North American parts markets by the Canadian auto parts manufacturers has gone from 7 per cent to 9 per cent. Their employment has gone from 41,000 to 63,000, up by approximately 50 per cent, while the United States has gone from 325,000 to 378,000, up by approximately 15 per cent. Total shipments by Canadian parts manufacturers has gone from $5.6 billion to $12.9 billion, again from 1982 to 1986. That is why we have confidence that this industry will be able to reap tremendous advantages from the free trade agreement.

[Translation]

Allow me to deal briefly with another facet of the free trade agreement, trade in services. There can be no doubt that services make up that sector of our economy which is the largest and fastest growing. Two-thirds of all Canadians are now working in the service sector, and that is where most of our future employment opportunities lie.

[English]

They are vital industries to Canada, and they are strong industries. They are one of the industries that we have been intent in getting on the table in the GATT round. They are an industry in which both we and the Americans have a vital stake in seeing traded freely throughout the world. We set the example by opening them up with this trade agreement in North America.

This brings us many advantages, not the least of which is easier access to some of the advance technology that our industries need. I wish to discuss one such advantage, which is a very interesting one. It deals with the provisions that cover the movement of Canadians across the border for business reasons. No longer will Canadian sales and service people be stopped at the border when they are on their way to sell new wares or service existing contracts. They will no longer have to prove that no American can do the job.

Let me move to one element of the trade agreement that bothers me in the manner that the debate has developed in the last couple of weeks. That relates to our sovereignty. The free trade agreement will do many things. But one thing it will not do is to result in any loss of our sovereignty, either political or cultural.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As the Leader of the New Democratic Party has stated, it will not end up in the United States absorbing Canada in 25 years' time.

Let us look at the last trade debate. In 1911, Canada was only 44 years old, and searching for its identity. The United Kingdom still regarded us as a colony and not as a country. But look at what has changed in 1987. Our situation has become entirely different. We have developed as a strong country and as a world leader. We are the seventh largest industrialized country in the world. We have forged our identity over 120 years. We have distinguished ourselves in two world wars. Many Canadians died fighting for their freedom, and were known around the world as being one of the key protectors of freedom in those two world wars.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have a very mature economy that is specialized and at the same time quite diversified. We are able to compete with the best. We have very mature social programs in health, a pension plan, unemployment insurance, workers' compensation, just to mention four. We have our Constitution, our culture, whether it is ballet, art, or opera. We have our sports figures who are well known around the world. We have had Expo 67 and Expo 86. We have organized two Olympic Games. Why is it that opposition Members have doubts about our sovereignty or identity? Do they think that the United States will or can take this away from us? Do they not have any pride or confidence in our strength as a country?

• (1620)

Much of the development we have seen over the past 50 years has happened as we have developed closer and closer ties with the United States and away from the United Kingdom. We have been able to do this because during the whole period of time we have had a strong economy.

We have been leaders in the world in NATO, NORAD, GATT, IMF, and OECD. We are members of the G-7. We have been a leading member of the United Nations since its start. We are one of the two leading countries in the Commonwealth and the Francophonie.

We have participated in these organizations as a strong sovereign nation. We have done so, in the best interests of a more secure Canada. As we have done so we have earned greater respect from the nations of the world, and we have become more influential as a leading player in the international scene. The case is very clear to me. The free trade agreement is good for us economically. With confidence in ourselves, our abilities, and our achievements we can face the future with the conviction that the agreement can help us grow as a country and mature as an independent sovereign nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before recognizing Hon. Members on questions and comments, the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) has a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties, and I just wish to put on record that tomorrow will be an allotted day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

That this House condemns the Government for its inept negotiations of a trade agreement with the United States that undermines Canadian sovereignty and requires excessive and unacceptable concessions by Canada but gains virtually nothing in return, that still fails to provide protection for Canadian industries from restrictive United States trade laws and that caves in to all United States demands in key sectors, especially agriculture, energy, automobiles, financial services and investment while threatening hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs without the Canadian Government's providing any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers.

And the amendment of Mr. Broadbent (p. 10365).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I was particularly struck with the strident and, I must say, quite sincere sounding statements of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his appeal to confidence and in his appeal to the sense of moving ahead which the country has experienced in recent years. Of course it is not a sense of confidence which is limited to those who want to tie us more closely to the United States as the answer to our economic problems. It is equally strongly and, perhaps one might say, more strongly felt by those who feel that they would wish the country to do its own directing of its own future.

However, I want to ask specifically whether this lack of confidence, which is supposed to characterize those who oppose free trade, was also what lay behind the statements of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on June 2, 1983, of course before he was Prime Minister. He said that "opening the floodgates to trade with the United States would endanger Canada's economic and political sovereignty". He went on to say:

I favour making a top priority of re-establishing an excellent and productive relationship with the U.S. That does not, however, include free trade.

I would like to point out as well, quoting again from the same article, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) made precisely the same point by indicating that he adamantly opposed free trade. He said that freer trade would be very dangerous for the economy because it would hit the industrial heartland of Ontario. "If we create havoc here", he went on to say, "we are going to be paying for it across the country".

How is it that it is possible for Conservatives to express those sentiments out of power and presumably to have confidence in the country, yet when opponents of the trade deal express sentiments of the same character, echoing precisely the same kinds of concerns and commitments to Canada's independence, that is somehow an indication of lack of confidence in the country?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think we have an example again of the NDP living in the past. We have to look at what is going on in the world today and to set our paths and policies in relation to what is happening in the world today.

It is very clear—and I am sure the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) would be the first to agree with me—that the protectionist pressures in Washington are enormous and far different from what they were back in 1983 or before.

During the same period of time we have also seen some major achievements by the Canadian economy which tell me that we can look with confidence at our ability to compete. At that time in 1983—and the NDP will be able to check the record—Canada was right at the end in most of the records of performance of Group of Seven countries. Since then we have proven ourselves to be number one in growth, number one in employment creation, and number one in productivity improvement.

That combination of factors gives me confidence that we can move ahead and take comfort or draw strength from the achievements we have been able to put behind us during the course of the past few years. We can look forward and see much more opportunity, much more growth, and a much higher standard of living for our people by entering into the agreement.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance what will be the consequences of the free trade agreement with respect to sale prices, and will this benefit Canadian consumers?

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think this question is sometimes put aside when we look at the more precise implications of a free trade agreement.

The one person right across the country who benefits from free trade is the consumer. The consumer will get lower prices. The consumer will get a broader variety of products.

Mr. Lapierre: If he has a job.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I hear the Hon. Member opposite. Any of the economic studies which have any relevance to this debate will show that there will be more jobs created as a result of a free trade agreement than without a free trade agreement. There is no reason to expect that there would not be jobs for consumers. If the Hon. Member wants to discuss that with the Premier of the Province of Quebec, a Liberal who shares the same Party background, I think he will find that the views I have expressed are shared by that Premier. The real winner in a free trade agreement will be the consumer.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I commend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for the very positive presentation he made, particularly in respect of the impact of free trade on financial services.

Just this past weekend I was told by a commercial realtor in Metro Toronto that one of our chartered banks is now negotiating for the rental of 75,000 square feet of space in New York City in anticipation of business growth in that area. The head of an insurance company told me within the past 10 days that he is awaiting a chance for access into the United States market. What the Minister has told the House is certainly corroborated and supported by representatives of the business community.

• (1630)

I want to put a question to the Minister. Such predictions as those I have cited have been based on the assumption that business would continue to prosper on both sides of the border. Since then, there has been a record stock market collapse and many alarms about the possibility of a recession. What impact does the Minister see the prospect for free trade having on business in light of the recent changes and upheavals in the investment industry?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a very pertinent question at a time like this. One of the lessons we have learned from the past is that when we have seen substantial declines in stock markets, there has been a tendency for Governments to pull in their horns, to seek protectionist solutions. I think the timing of this agreement is particularly important to Canada in light of what we have seen in the equity markets over the past week and a bit.

If we are able to find approval for this agreement within Canada and the United States, then North America might be able to avoid the problems that entered into the economy in the 1930s when there was a tremendous increase in protectionist pressures, which aggravated the difficulties caused by the recession. In fact, that protectionism came at a time when it reinforced the natural forces of contraction that were developing within the economy.

I think it is very important for Canada, in looking ahead, to approve this agreement and get on with developing access to the United States market. We should allow ourselves the opportunity to avoid the problems of the past and some of the effects caused by the stock market which we have seen in the past by moving ahead with confidence today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow a short supplementary question.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question since the Minister has referred to these various studies. The Minister has a reputation for honesty and I want to put this question to him very directly.

I am certain that the Minister has read the Economic Council's study very carefully or he has had staff briefings on it, and I would like him to tell the House quite clearly that assumptions made within that Economic Council study are contrary to the facts of the trade agreement with the United States, particularly with respect to services. The Economic Council assumed that services would not be included, but they are included in this agreement. One could go on to mention three or four other major assumptions which the Economic Council made which are not part of this agreement. I would like the Minister to indicate that fact to the House.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think any of the studies that have been done to date were not able to take into account the complete range of items included in the agreement itself. I would expect, though, that some of these organizations, whether they be the Economic Council or private organizations, will be revisiting the work they have done. I would expect that we will see, sometime in the fairly near future, new, updated studies based on the facts of the agreement as they came out in the final negotiations.

Having said that, I think we will see that there will still be a positive impact on job creation in Canada after the free trade agreement as compared to what it would be without the free trade agreement.

Let me make two comments that I think are important. One is that no economic model can calculate what the status quo would have been. I indicated in my remarks, and I think we all would agree, that the status quo would have involved a good deal more protectionism than is the case today, and that is clearly prevalent in the attitudes expressed daily in congressional debates.

The second point I would make is that no economic model is able to measure the so-called animal instincts to which Lord Keynes referred in his great work. The animal instincts, the investment attentions and confidence, the things that come from a greater degree of investment and consumer confidence, are very, very important elements in the future growth of an economy. We saw that very clearly, as I recalled in this House on a number of occasions, in 1984 and 1985.

When we came into office, there was not the sense of direction in the economic policies of the Government that we were able to introduce in the November 8 agenda paper and subsequent Budgets. As that confidence developed, as people saw that we did mean business, there was an increase in investment and an increase in consumer confidence. The Hon. Member's Leader said we would lose somewhere between 100,000 and 200,000 jobs, and that was the general assessment of Members on the other side of the House. In fact, as Hon. Members know, we have created 959,000 jobs during that period of time.

I say "we" meaning Canadians, because Governments did not do it themselves. Governments provided the framework, the encouragement and the motivation for the private sector to get free from some of the shackles that existed before and get on with the job of creating opportunities in Canada. That is what brings about economic growth. It is a fundamental difference, I understand, between the Government and the opposition Parties on the other side of the House, but it has been proven time and time again in the last three years that the route we have taken works. This free trade agreement is a continuation and a reinforcement of those policies that have been so successful.

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in—

[English]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I think if you would check the roster, you would see that it was the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) who spoke before the Minister, and I had assumed—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, I noticed that, but there will still be time to recognize the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), and I believe the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) will have the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this important debate on Canada's future and to see that once again today the House of Commons is interested in the whole question of free trade. Earlier today I heard the Minister for International Trade say that the Opposition is seeking to go back to the situation of 20 years ago. To refresh her memory about our history I would point out to her that this debate on the possibility of forging closer links with the United States has been going on in Canada since 1878, ever since the reciprocity era. And, every generation or so, Canadians ask themselves this question. Historically, on each occasion since 1878, in 1891, in 1911, in 1947-48, each time, after considering the option to get closer to the United States, to become a new State, the Canadian people rejected it. On each occasion, the sense of being Canadians prevailed over the economic theory pursued by some people and in particular by the wealthy elements in our society.

We are now discussing that issue because of a Government initiative and, Mr. Speaker, it is very strange when you read again the statements made in June 1983 by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He said about free trade:

• (1640)

[English]

It affects Canadian sovereignty and we will have none of it.

[Translation]

The same Prime Minister is now struggling to promote a trade agreement with the American administration which was signed in a rush, behind curtains, five minutes before midnight, which he signed on his knees; and Parliament, without any mandate from the population, is now debating a fundamental issue for our future as a country.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this debate is illegitimate since it doesn't have public support. It is not good enough for the Government to make such a commitment and to make such basic changes in our society without consulting the people who will be affected. During the last election campaign, none of the Conservative Members in this House has ever spoken about free trade. It was never on their agenda. And now, led by some interests of God knows where, they decided . . .

Mrs. Bourgault: The Canadians' interests—

Mr. Lapierre: If the Hon. Member opposite could wait her turn—they tried to give Canadians the short end of the stick.

Mr. Speaker, we will fight against that agreement to make sure it will never be implemented. We will make sure that a Government who has betrayed the confidence of the canadian public—and this is what I call the tyrany of the majority—who is presently trying to push through a measure that will have tremendous consequences on our future as a country—

Mr. Speaker, we are told about the protectionist trends in the United States and this agreement has been presented to us as the answer to all our problems. However, if you look at the last statistics, we have a trade surplus with the United States and it is on the rise. At the present time, Canada has, each year, a trade surplus of almost $20 billion. If you believe that the Americans sat at the negotiation table to maintain or increase that trade surplus, you must be dreaming.

I think that Government Members, who should take advantage of the positive trade balance of Canada, have opened the door to harmonizing our trade, which means dealing on an equal basis, and under such circumstances our trade surplus would not last very long.

Mr. Speaker, we saw how this agreement was negotiated. It was negotiated secretly and there was a series of denials and refutations. From time to time, the Government has leaked some information which often was contradictory. Mr. Speaker, Canadians have a right to be fully informed of what happened around that table. They have a right of access to the studies on the impact of free trade. Presently, the Government is trying to make us bite the bullet without putting all the facts on the table.

Mr. Speaker, the Government is acting cowardly and insiduously to keep the public in the dark in order to favor a few people. Look at the main proponents of this agreement. Have you seen small businessowners among them? Do they include ordinary people? Until now, only presidents of large multinationals have applauded this deal. No one else has done it. Look at the president of Alcan. I am not at all worried for him. He was able to arrange some cozy deals for himself. The Prime Minister and his Ministers were not embarrassed at all to rise and tell us that the Bill on pharmaceutical products had nothing to do with free trade.

A few days later, however, we discovered the document initialed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) which included a paragraph on that very issue. Naturally, they did not remember what they had signed. It has been lies from the beginning.

Canadians are therefore entitled to ask certain questions. They are entitled to wonder whether their future is being compromised by a gang of amateurs, and I fear that is the case, Mr. Speaker.

As for the Americans, they have looked at all this, and from their reaction, they seem to think that they are the big winners in this deal. They are saying: "We have fooled them. In any case, the Canadien Government was determined to succeed and we had them where we wanted." They certainly had, and they obtained everything that they wanted.

The Prime Minister told us that there were two essential conditions, guaranteed access and a binding settlement mechanism. At our very great surprise and disappointment, in spite of all these nice speeches, at this very moment, all the American protectionist measures still apply to Canadian products. The protection measures provided in Section 201 of the 1974 Trade Act still apply. The anti-dumping measures still apply. The compensatory rates provided in the 1930 Tariff Act still apply. The trade reprisals still apply. We were supposed to have a special status. We had been told not to worry, that there would no longer be any problem with a free trade agreement. All the problems are still there. As recently as today, another Bill was tabled in the American Congress, this time to restrict electricity imports. I am certain that this must also be in the spirit of free trade. What is even worse, the famous tribunal will not be a real tribunal. Its only power will be to interpret the application of American and Canadian laws, but not to judge whether they are appropriate or not. The situation will remain exactly as before.

At the very moment I am speaking . . . Often did I ask questions on behalf of wood producers in my riding who were concerned about the 15 per cent tax on softwood lumber, and I was told: Wait until the free trade agreement comes out. But they had no reason to wait, for the 15 per cent tax is now a permanent feature of the free trade accord. And they call this solving the problem.

As for hog producers, they were told to wait for the free trade agreement. The accord has now been signed, but the $10 a head surtax still applies. What have you settled?

An Hon. Member: Tell him about the footwear industry. We will get out clothes from Taiwan.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, she is yelling that apple producers do agree. For sure she is raving, since we export hardly any.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you one thing. This panel will change nothing in the daily application of the American protectionnist legislation. Economists like Marie-Josée Drouin, from the C.D. Howe Institute, say that this panel is actually nothing at all. People realize everywhere that setting-up the binational panel is really creating serious problems for us.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us have a look at some of our industries. Let us consider the case of farmers. Last week-end, I visited the Agricultural Fair where I had an opportunity to meet a UPA delegation, and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) had a long conversation with them and was made aware of their concerns, Mr. Speaker. We could easily understand their situation. People of Portneuf, can you imagine, instead of relying on the instinct and experience of farmers, the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) would rather trust a Montreal newspaperman who probably has never milked a cow in his whole life.

Mr. Speaker, I have a lot more confidence in the common sense of our farmers who can see the dangers involved. I have more confidence in Quebec producers who say they stand to lose a large share of the poultry market. When Quebec producers tell me dairy farmers will be at risk, I have a lot more confidence in them than in a bunch of Conservative ninnies. I have a lot more confidence in the membership of Agropur, Mr. Speaker, when they explain that their survival depends on being able to produce yogurt and processed cheese, than in that bunch of ignoramuses. They would have us depend on U.S. producers—for shame!

• (1650)

Mr. Speaker, I think the Conservative Members who represent rural ridings are pathetic. They should listen to their farmers. Those people in the UPA, Mr. Speaker are defending their own interests, but their interests happen to be our market basket. When a country ends up depending on another country for all its food—I don't want Canada to be another Lesotho, surrounded by South Africa. Mr. Speaker, they tell us: Don't worry, the farmers will be able to compete. Mr. Speaker, have you ever seen people with a three-month growing season for market gardening able to compete with U.S. producers in the South and Southwest who produce crops twelve months of the year? Mr. Speaker, it does not take a Grade 12 certificate to know that we have a cold climate here in Canada, and that we cannot compete because of what the energy costs would be in certain sectors. Mr. Speaker, it costs more to raise pigs in Canada. After all, we have to heat during winter. The way the Canadian Government is treating Canadian producers, however, they are starting to think what they are going to do with all those pig and chicken farms. Mr. Speaker, there won't be any left in the long run. I hope Conservative Members will wake up before it is too late. Mr. Speaker, look at the headlines in Le Devoir: Free trade may mean end of agricultural industry. It's true. The wine industry in Ontario and British Columbia was sold down the river because the U.S. president had a preference for California wines. And that while 20,000 people earn a decent living in the wine industry! I fail to understand how the Government can sacrifice an entire industry just to do the U.S. president a favour. That shows the kind of negotiators we have.

And what about industrial jobs? Some Quebec Members here who blindly support their Leader will go down to defeat with him. But the fact is that in Quebec, according to studies conducted by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in the clothing, footwear and furniture industries, 50,000 jobs are threatened, and 30,000 more in the mechanical manufacturing industry.

Mr. Speaker, in Quebec only, in the printing and publishing industry, 22,000 jobs are threatened. In data processing, 17,000; in the jewelry, rubber and plastic goods industries, 13,000; in electrical manufacturing, 17,000; in metal products manufacturing, 37,500. Those studies were conducted by experts from the Quebec Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. When I heard the Minister of Employment and Immigration suggest that up to 500,000 jobs were threatened, I can believe him because here only we have 350,000 to 400,000. Therefore, I cannot accept that no one in this Government has ever thought of having transitional measures.

Instead of helping people adjust, you did the exact opposite. You have the textile industry. For several years we have had great respect for older people leaving the textile, clothing and footwear industries. We wanted, for instance, to protect this 54-year old lady working as a seamstress on a overlock, twin-needle machine. That lady had often been suffering from arthritis because she had been working in basements, and was entitled to early retirement with a decent standard of living. Hard-nosed Conservatives cut that program but they had nothing with which to replace it. You should have your heads in shame. They said: Do not worry, we will have programs for that! You had the beginnings of programs but you cut them off. Therefore, I cannot trust that you will care for the most needy in our society. We know where the Prime Minister's priorities are. To this day, whom did he meet for a briefing on his free trade agreement? He went to Toronto to meet a group of fat cats. Then he told himself: That might be good for fund-raising!

So he went to Halifax and met the 500 Club. He did not discuss this with ordinary people. On the contrary, he has gone into hiding. This coming Saturday he might travel through his own riding and send out feelers, he would find out that his free trade story is not a magic potion by any means. He would realize that people have reasons to be concerned. I urge you to get out of Ottawa. I hope we will have a short parliamentary recess, that would enable you to meet ordinary people, to get away from your brainwashing caucus which has you convinced this is a good deal. It is good only for the big people. I happen to know they make up your traditional clientele but, let us face facts, the interests of Canada do come before those of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Speaker, I could elaborate on the energy sector. The food issue has been raised, so now let us talk about heating. For 30 years the Americans have been dreaming about getting ready access to our natural resources and now, thanks to this Government and this Prime Minister, their dreams have become reality. History tells us that Canada used to be the world's wheat basket, now we have become the American's reservoir. Even in times of crises they will feel free to siphon off our resources at any time. You should hang your heads in shame. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, these are our very own resources. But henceforth, as my leader said yesterday, what is theirs is theirs, and what is ours is theirs as well. Yet we are talking about a basic issue. We all know an energy crisis can break out from one moment to the next. We are fully aware of the very explosive situation in the Middle East, and if Canadians have to line up at service stations in times of crises, oil will flow down huge pipelines directly to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, we are not contemplating our nationalistic navel, we are simply talking plain common sense. I understand that this Government is very sensitive to foreign interests, so much so that it grovels before them. However, this is unreasonable. We shall know the whole details within a few weeks, because we have only had a preview until now and it has left a bitter taste. When we have the 2,000 page document promised by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, we shall examine it carefully. I believe that Canadians will then realize that the Americans are really the winners in this deal.

Mr. Speaker, I had many other things to say. I believe that this debate will go on for a long time. One thing is certain; this will probably be the most important decision ever made as far as the future of Canadians is concerned. It will probably be the most important decision as far as the future of our children and our culture is concerned. I do not especially want my children to become like the Louisiana Cajuns.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I find it very strange to listen to the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) and to the other members of the opposition. I listened to the Leader of the Liberal Party and to the NDP Members. If I may refer to my own Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine riding, I would like to say that my constituents supported with the previous Liberal Government for 25 years. The Liberals kept pushing the famous Canada Works Program to create jobs. I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Shefford who has just spoken and who was born, I believe, in our region, that the Canada Works Program put people to work for ten weeks at cutting branches and that this did nothing to help our development. All that changed in 1984. The Prime Minister said: You can get $1.25 for every dollar spent in this country by the federal Government, whether in Quebec, in the Magdelen Islands, in Newfoundland or in British Columbia.

That is good, Mr. Speaker. It is good because we do not give money for nothing, to private enterprise or anybody else. But speaking about free trade, I must absolutely get back to it, Mr. Speaker.

• (1700)

[English]

Mr. Speaker, let me quote from Hansard on February 24, 1972. The Leader of the Opposition, who was Minister of Finance at the time, was addressing the issue of trade with the United States. He said:

> The division of the world into large trading blocs, to which I referred a few moments ago, presents particular dangers to Canada as a major trading nation and one of the few industrialized countries without free access to a market of 100 million people or more.

Of course, we are talking about a population in Canada of 25 million. He went on to say:

> We in this country must now use what influence we can bring to bear to press for a resumption of the postwar movement toward greater liberalization of international trade. The dangerous alternative would be a move backward toward greater protectionism.

There are more than 200 protectionist Bills in the United States which are a serious threat to our economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope the Hon. Member will put a question, or we will have to carry on because we do not have that much time. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

[Translation]

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Fine, Mr. Speaker, given the opportunity, I could have spent more time on that subject.

Mr. Speaker, the only point I want to make in thirty seconds before asking my question is that for men and women of Canada, of Quebec, and even more so for us in Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine and other eastern Quebec ridings, it was difficult because we saw development more as a matter of politics than an economic issue. We have changed all that since 1984.

Here is the question I wanted to ask: During the twenty-five years the former government was in office, for us, for our development, Mr. Speaker, I am not denying it, I did the same thing with the people of my riding, with my partisans, and I said the same thing: Give me a chance. And in three years, I put more money in my riding than it ever received before—and we cut—

The question I wish to put to the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) is the following. He said—let him answer the question . . . If during twenty-five years those people in his Party did not do anything and gave money to their friends while forgetting about regional development . . . Let him answer, if he wants to return to office, let him say how he will change their policy, because you can be sure that next time the Progressive Conservative Party—

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I suppose the Hon. Member was speaking for his own Party. He is a bit confused about Canada Works and U.S. Works. I imagine he wanted to do some comparisons.

What I wanted to say to the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) is that free trade is much more than Canada Works or basement renovations. I can tell him that for people like my parents, who live in the Magdalen Islands and fortunately did not vote for him, it is important to be from the Magdalen Islands or from the Gaspe Peninsula or from Bonaventure, but they don't want to be Americans. They believe in the value of the Canadian challenge, and traditionally, despite hardship, although the Hon. Member did not succeed in getting funds for his area under the Eastern Plan, although he did not look after his area, these people have the will to be Canadians, and values—

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): —I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Lapierre: —I think the Hon. Member is rising on a point of order—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine, on a very short point of order.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, it will be very short. The point I tried to make is that on Îles-de-la-Madeleine in the Gaspé we had 25 years of Liberal Government. We could not do it. The point that should be made now about what the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) said, is that the people must have value for the dollar.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is a good point of debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: I should like to conclude my reply, Mr. Speaker. I am afraid the Hon. Member does not know anything about free trade. I also think he is mistaking oranges for tomatoes. The fact is that a Liberal policy is a two-prong policy: developing markets abroad and developing domestic markets within a global formula. We strongly believe in GATT's international machinery, while developing a domestic policy which would enable Canada to meet the challenges of international competition. That is exactly the commitment my leader made a few weeks ago before a group in Toronto.

Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member should understand is that, strictly speaking, and far from solving any problem in the Magdalen Islands, the proposed free trade accord will jeopardize several programs made available to the people of these islands, whether they are the regional economic development assistance programs . . . the Prime Minister himself admitted that the unemployment insurance and social benefit programs have been jeopardized. In a way, it is the wringer process: once the tip of the hand is caught in it, the shoulder is often pulled in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has expired. Debate. The Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State responsible for Science and Technology (Mr. de Cotret) has the floor.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to follow up on my Hon. colleague's comments.

Mr. Speaker, the free-trade agreement is the outcome of a collective effort which pooled the energies of ten, hundreds, and thousands of Canadian men and women who were determined to see the fulfilment of the promises made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), which promises are endorsed by all Cabinet members and all members of his Party.

Since we came to Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, we have been adressing a long term job based on the implementation of two basic goals, national reconciliation and economic renewal.

And now, Mr. Speaker, we have something tangible because the Government's direction is based on concret achievements that are bound to bring a fundamental change in the whole political and economic history of Canada.

As far as national reconciliation is concerned, the previous Government proved to be unable to come up with even the shadow of a proposal that would be satisfactory to all partners. It took this Government's own tenacity and flexibility to arrive at a new constitutional accord finally being signed, whereby the pointless confrontation of the last decades gave way to a climate conducive to dialogue and open co-operation between the central Government and the provinces.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, the Meech Lake Accord is something solid, something real that is taking us light years away from the noisy rhetoeric and far fetched policies of the Liberals, whose arrogance and carelessness led the country to the brink of breaking up.

Turning to economic renewal, that cannot be separated from the free-trade agreement. To us, freer trade is the key to Canada's continued economic, social and cultural development. The free-trade agreement will in no way hinder the economic reforms this Government is in the process of implementing. To the contrary, this progressive opening-up of the American market will increase our ability to carry on our regional development policies.

Mr. Speaker, the agreement does not force upon the Government new restrictions as to the grants it is extending to whatever type of industry.

I would like to dispel any doubts in this regard. It is very clear and obvious. We will continue to develop programs that really take regional characteristics into consideration but, from now on, we will have at our disposal more powerful tools to support the development of traditionally disadvantaged regions.

• (1710)

There will be no change either, Mr. Speaker, in the operations of subsidized businesses exporting to the United States. The free trade Agreement does not protect those businesses from countervail measures that the United States might take against them. But both countries can now rely on the action of an organization, a dispute settlement committee, precisely when anti-dumping duties and countervail duties are imposed. If a dispute occurs and the committe concludes that the laws have been incorrectly or unfairly applied, that new organisation will be able to correct the situation because its decisions will be binding. This is a protection mechanism which Canada did not enjoy until now and which will put our country on an equal footing with the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the Government will continue to take action to promote regional development, in particular in the areas of resource management, research, scientific development and policies regarding transportation, education, training, small business development and energy.

The new decentralization approach will not be questioned by the free trade Agreement. Some support or subsidy programs will obviously have to be amended within the next five years. Those adjustments would have been required anyway because of our desire to increase the efficiency of our regional development programs. An economic agreement with the Americans does not change anything in that respect. With the free trade Agreement, we are given a legal framework that will be much less arbitrary if countervailing actions were requested by the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I have summarized the expected impact of the Canada-United States trade Agreement on regional development. Why should we worry and moan when the free trade Agreement increases our opportunities to interact and negotiate with the United States?

My colleagues from the opposition do not sufficiently trust their conciliation capacities. But the old fears the Liberals and the New Democrats seem to be entertaining are not really important. The main thing is that we have been elected with the strongest majority in Canadian history and that, as such, it will rest with us to ensure that our trade agreement with the Americans will open a new era of prosperity for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I find this very comforting. I think that, by rejecting the free trade Agreement, the opposition shows its total ignorance of history, its disregard for the lessons of the past and for the economic environment. The opponents of the free trade Agreement do they not realize that, outside of our borders, there is a global economy based on technology, on the free circulation of information and capital, a world which, until now, was excluding Canada from the three major trade blocks made of Japan, the European Common Market and the United States? On last October 3rd, Canada was the only industrialized country with no access to a market of 250 million people.

We know that Canada will never be absorbed by any other country as long as Canadians want to live in a country of their own. We know also that Canada, thanks to freer trade after World War II, grew as a stronger and more independent country than ever before. There is no reason why the gradual and wise implementation of a trade deal with the United States would not be the catalyst we so desperately need to reach greater heights.

Free trade will in no way destroy the common values shared by all Canadian men and women. We took great care to exclude from the accord all factors that could affect our cultural industries, social programs and other elements considered essential to our national identity. I sincerely believe that we should not think only in terms of immediate costs and benefits and look for mere band-aid solutions to present irritants. That way of thinking has been inflicted on us only too often by previous Liberal administrations.

Mr. Speaker, I have stated a few times that this Agreement does not only recognize our economic interplay but further reflects our social and political differences. So, logically, there is something in it for every region of this country. As a minister and a member of Parliament representing a Quebec constituency, I have naturally taken a special interest in the benefits that that province will be able to derive from our deal with the United States. I can tell you right away that Quebec is one of the regions that will benefit most from the free trade Agreement.

In fact, lower tariffs will favor the processing of Canadian resources to be exported, thus creating jobs and new investments in Canada. These lower tariffs will correct a situation that has been lasting for generations and that, as a ball and chain, always slowed down the economic growth of Quebec.

Finally, all serious economist foresee a drop in consumer prices and in manufacturing costs to our industries. After complete implementation of the free trade Agreement, we expect the purchasing power of consumers, including those from Quebec, of course, will increase by 3 to 12 percent as a result of increased competition on most markets. In clear terms, this means that thousands of Canadian and Quebec families will be able to acquire more goods with their money and to have a more decent life, above poverty level.

As for Quebec itself, Mr. Speaker, the energy Agreement removes for good the threat of American embargos affecting Hydro Quebec exports. As you know, Mr. Speaker, Quebec's économic future depends largely on the development of new hydraulic resources and on the sale of hydro power to potential customers, and the New England states are the most directly concerned. The energy agreement will greatly facilitate our negotiations with states interested in securing our surplus hydro-electric power. Here again, there is great potential for employment creation in the near, medium and long term.

As promised, the Agreement does not interfere with marketing boards for agricultural products, eggs and poultry. Canada retains the right to decide what kinds of agricultural marketing programs are appropriate. This should help to reassure certain agricultural organizations in Quebec which, in our view, have been too quick to react to the intentional scare tactics of my Liberal and NDP colleagues. This type of useless rhetoric will do no good for Quebec agriculture. Certain provisions of the Agreement will, however. For example, potato growers and hog and cattle feeders who export to the United States will benefit from an absence of tariffs and a much stronger guarantee of access to the American market.

There will be a mutual exemption from legislative restrictions applying to meat imports in both countries. We should keep in mind that tariffs on fruit and vegetables will be phased out over a ten-year period. This will give Canadian farmers who must face American competition in Canada ample time to adjust. Moreover, Canadian agriculture will get more protection since the trade deal gives Canada the right to temporarily restore tariffs on fruit and vegetables, over a twenty-year period, if prices fall. Quebec farmers must be persuaded, Mr. Speaker, that their industry not only will not be negatively affected by the Canada-U.S. trade deal, but that it will finally beak out of the stagnation that it suffered because of captive markets with little if any prospect for growth.

Besides, let us not forget that two-thirds of Quebec pulp and paper exports are purchased by the U.S. Elimination of tariffs on these products will tremendously increase their competitiveness on the American market.

And what about our Montreal based engineering and consulting firms which have earned themselves a worldwide reputation, Mr. Speaker? To sell our expertise and our achievements in this area is one thing, but to provide a reliable customer service is another challenge. In the past, U.S. immigration regulations often prevented Canadians from working with their American clients in order to provide them with the after-sales services to which they are entitled. Under the new undertakings concerning temporary entry for business purposes, the people involved in our service industries, including our engineering consultants, will find it a lot easier from now on to enter the United States, to better serve their customers and therefore increase their sales volume.

Moreover, reference is also made to an increase in revenues of close to $4 billion for Canadian industries which will have better access to the United States Government procurement contracts.

Now let us move on to the automotive industry, for which NDP tenor Bob White has voice so loud a concern that we must give him the reasoned reply he deserves. No one in the Government can explain Mr. White's attacks against this trade deal, or his predictions that the Auto Pact will meet an untimely end.

I will explain to those who may not know it that the Auto Pact, which was signed in 1965, is essentially a bilateral free trade agreement involving cars and trucks.

The most unrelented Auto Pact critics have become, with the passage of time and because of the results obtained, its fiercest champions. It is a fact that, because of our competitive costs, the number of cars built in Canada greatly exceeds the minimum quotas provided for under the Pact. With the Free Trade Agreement, these protection clauses will remain intact. As a matter of fact, the Auto Pact will be further improved and completed with the October 3 agreement, especially through the elimination of tariffs on spare parts and tires, previously excluded from our agreements with the United States.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the climate now is very favourable to investments in Canada and our costs are very competitive. I have every reason to believe, therefore, that Asian car manufacturers, for whom the access to the North American market is vital, will gracefully accept the terms of the agreement which will more or less directly affect their operations both in Canada and in the United States.

Within the wider context of the regulations contained in the Free Trade Agreement, I have the very steadfast conviction that the automotive industry, both in Canada and the United States, will help improve the well-being of workers and consumers alike.

• (1720)

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to emphasize the fact that the setting-up of a special bi-national panel designed to solve trade disputes and the commitment by both parties to negotiate new trade legislation over the next five years will enable Canadian and American investors and business people to work in an environment that will be more in tune with the realities of today's world.

The free-trade agreement has nothing to inspire those people who fret at the mere idea that a change might affect their daily routine. I am sorry that my colleagues from the Opposition do fall in that group of passive people who would rather suffer from undue constraints than face up to the reality and do what is needed to get out of it.

This time, the moment has come for Canadians to listen not just to their hearts, but also to their reason and their intelligence. The free-trade agreement will bring dividends to those who will take the trouble to roll up their sleeves, meet the challenge, and use the boundless opportunities available to them on the American markets. We will have to be strong, we will have to have determination and use the free-trade Agreement as a springboard to other markets, as a springboard into the upcoming century.

Mr. Speaker, this is a wonderful opportunity to bequeath to our children and grandchildren a better world economically, socially, and culturally.

Mr. Speaker, in our mind, this is a cornerstone of our program of national reconciliation, economic renewal and international relations.

[English]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gesture to give me a chance to put the position of our Party yet again, perhaps, in a slightly different way from what our Leader did in his comments earlier.

I think that the Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) has, as his colleagues have, talked a great deal about the lack of confidence of the Opposition. He is quite right. There is a tremendous lack of confidence which we feel. It is a lack of confidence in this Government and this Government's activities over the past three years in what we expect that it will bring to us with this one-sided deal which has been presented to the Canadian people. I have no apology for this lack of confidence. Nor do I think that most people in the country find anything that contradicts their feelings about this Government in that lack of confidence.

I want to do three things in the time that we have left in this debate. First, I want to give a general assessment of this pact which, in its 36 pages, threatens to do more damage to the people of Canada and to communities right across the country than has any other treaty that this country has ever entered into. It is a pact which has details within it that, frankly, I cannot believe that a sovereign Canadian Government would have been prepared to sign. It contains details that leave me with the sense that we have a deal here which has been developed by this Government, given to the people of this country, and hidden throughout the process of negotiation. This is a deal which, first, is unfair. Second, it is a deal which has in its explanations a great deal of untruths. Third, it is a deal which is tremendously destructive to the people of the country and to the communities in which we live.

• (1730)

There are so many parts to this deal to which one could refer which indicate this so clearly. We could talk about the jobs which will clearly be lost as part of this free trade agreement. For instance, we could talk about the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and his own statements recorded on tape that up to 500,000 jobs will be lost. He was never prepared to confirm those comments in the House, but he was prepared to go outside the House and reconfirm that up to 500,000 jobs could be lost.

We could talk about the tremendous threat to women because of the manner in which the service industries, for the first time in any trade agreement, have been completely liberalized. Of course, services employ approximately 83 per cent of the women in this country. I am convinced that the competition which will come in that service sector will destroy small scale businesses throughout the country which employ large numbers of those women.

Marjorie Cohen, one of the eminent economists, with whom presumably the Minister of Industry does not agree, and he certainly did not make reference to her in his speech, has done a very detailed study. In a book, which has recently been published, she has indicated very clearly that the service sector is very much at threat and the women within that service sector will be the victims of that threat.

We could talk about investment on the subject of which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) earlier this afternoon tried to suggest that the question in front of us with this free trade pact is whether or not we wish more investment in this country. That is not the question. The question opened up by this free trade agreement, by this trade pact, is not a question of open investment. It is a question of takeovers which will take from the total of 7,500 firms which were formerly protected by review procedures so that an American company could not come in and simply take over a firm and shut it down to get rid of the competition. It will reduce that figure from 7,500 to only 500 firms in this country which are protected.

That type of change is inexcusable. It leaves small companies, such as those whose representatives I was talking to this morning in Guelph, with a sense of tremendous vulnerability, and a reality which faces them that at any stage they can be taken over without any review whatever on the part of the Government of this country. They can be shut down, turned into warehouses or small subsidiary operations, and again and again jobs will be lost as a consequence.

We can talk about film distribution. The Government has claimed that it has done nothing with respect to film distribution. Yet, within the U.S. briefing papers from that Government, there is the following statement, "The Canadian Government has also promised to solve Jack Valenti's problem on film distribution within the next two weeks". We know quite well that there has been a commitment made which at this very moment the Department of Communications is trying hard to struggle with, because it is very difficult, I would say it is impossible, to protect a place for Canadian films in the future, and at the same time to satisfy the motion picture industry of the United States which Jack Valenti represents.

We can talk about agriculture, which indeed tomorrow on our opposition day we will focus on as one sector which has been hung out to dry by the Government.

Mr. Mayer: That is not true, and you know it.

Mr. Langdon: That is one sector which has been given a tremendous set of threats, attacks, and sabotage as far as this fundamental and basic industry in our country is concerned.

As a country, what do we get in return? We get a toothless tiger; a hopeless, ineffective, completely unacceptable system of appeals which is so far from anything the Government talked about prior to the free trade signatures on that piece of paper that it is ludicrous.

For instance, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) told the House of Commons at one stage that it would be absolutely ridiculous to accept a tribunal which did not have rules. Yet that is exactly what has been accepted, a tribunal which will make judgments, not on the basis of agreed rules, not on the basis of some type of common definition of subsidies, but instead on the basis of United States laws.

It is unbelievable that a Government of this country would sign an agreement which puts the future of this country, the future business activities of this country in the United States completely under U.S. law. With respect to the appeals mechanism, there is no capacity for it to do anything but apply U.S. law, and in the process back up what the Government itself has criticized as laws that are unfair to this country.

One could continue, but I wish to spend a few moments dealing with perhaps the most amazing attempt to sell this agreement for something that it is not that we have yet seen in this country. I am referring to the attempt to sell the provisions which deal with the auto industry as somehow something that will benefit the country. The reality is that there are three key parts of the agreement in respect of the auto industry which affect our future, especially the future of communities like mine and others right across the country that depend upon the auto industry.

• (1740)

First, there is the elimination of the stick, which has enforced the safeguards that have made the Auto Pact a successful exercise in sectoral trade between Canada and the United States. That goes. It is eliminated. It is finished.

Second, there is the elimination of the possibility of putting Japanese and Korean companies under the auspices of the Auto Pact. Again this means that we cannot ever get the 60 per cent Canadian content which we had hoped to get at some stage in the future from these Japanese and Korean companies. There will be no capacity to enforce that kind of law and get the resulting jobs, parts purchases, and prosperity that the country could have from a policy of that sort.

Finally, the duty remission provisions were something which we as an independent country had the possibility of being able to use to help our parts producers. That, too, is eliminated as a possibility in the future. Existing duty remission schemes will have to be done away with.

In respect of the hard sell about the auto industry, there has also been a tremendous lack of truth. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), for instance, said to the House on June 23: "We do not intend to alter the Auto Pact". Yet, in each of the detailed ways I have indicated, that Pact has been altered. All we have to do is to look at the U.S. assessment in briefing papers on the subject. They say quite clearly that the opportunities for increased domestic sourcing of parts, that is sourcing of parts in the United States, and therefore the creation of jobs in the United States, have been increased by the changes about which I have been talking.

Perhaps there is a sense above all of sadness about the agreement because alternatives existed. Different approaches could have given us jobs, given us reasonable trade relations with the United States, and given us much more prosperity for the future. We have passed those up. We have before us an agreement which will hurt Canadians, will leave Canadians much more vulnerable than they have been, and will seriously restrict the freedom of the country in respect of all our economic policy-making in the future.

It is for that reason that we have moved the amendment, and we oppose the agreement which has been placed before the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 82(9), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House.

Accordingly, the question is on the amendment of Mr. Broadbent. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Broadbent), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed from Thursday, October 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1982 came into force on April 17, 1982, following an agreement between Canada and all the provinces except Quebec;

AND WHEREAS the Government of Quebec has established a set of five proposals for constitutional change and has stated that amendments to give effect to those proposals would enable Quebec to resume a full role in the constitutional councils of Canada;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto sets out the basis on which Quebec's five constitutional proposals may be met;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto also recognizes the principle of the equality of all the provinces, provides new arrangements to foster greater harmony and cooperation between the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces and requires that conferences be convened to consider important constitutional, economic and other issues;

AND WHEREAS certain portions of the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto relate to matters referred to in section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

AND WHEREAS section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province;

NOW THEREFORE the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE

Constitution Act, 1867

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 1 thereof, the following section:

"2. (1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(2) The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

(4) Nothing in this section derogates from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 24 thereof, the following section:

"25. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, the government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate.

(2) Until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the person summoned to fill a vacancy in the Senate shall be chosen from among persons whose names have been submitted under subsection (1) by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates and must be acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 95 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Agreements on Immigration and Aliens

95A. The Government of Canada shall, at the request of the government of any province, negotiate with the government of that province for the purpose of concluding an agreement relating to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province that is appropriate to the needs and circumstances of that province.

95B. (1) Any agreement concluded between Canada and a province in relation to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province has the force of law from the time it is declared to do so in accordance with subsection 95C(1) and shall from that time have effect notwithstanding class 25 of section 91 or section 95.

(2) An agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) shall have effect only so long and so far as it is not repugnant to any provision of an Act of the Parliament of Canada that sets national standards and objectives relating to immigration or aliens, including any provision that establishes general classes of immigrants or relates to levels of immigration for Canada or that prescribes classes of individuals who are inadmissible into Canada.

(3) The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies in respect of any agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) and in respect of anything done by the Parliament or Government of Canada, or the legislature or government of a province, pursuant to any such agreement.

95C. (1) A declaration that an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) has the force of law may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement.

(2) An amendment to an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized

(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement; or

(b) in such other manner as is set out in the agreement.

95D. Sections 46 to 48 of the Constitution Act, 1982 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of any declaration made pursuant to subsection 95C(1), any amendment to an agreement made pursuant to subsection 95C(2) or any amendment made pursuant to section 95E.

95E. An amendment to sections 95A to 95D or this section may be made in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection 38(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, but only if the amendment is authorized by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of all the provinces that are, at the time of the amendment, parties to an agreement that has the force of law under subsection 95B(1)."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 96 thereof, the following heading:

"General"

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 101 thereof, the following heading:

"Courts Established by the Parliament of Canada"

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 101 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"Supreme Court of Canada

101A. (1) The court existing under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada is hereby continued as the general court of appeal for Canada, and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a superior court of record.

(2) The Supreme Court of Canada shall consist of a chief justice to be called the Chief Justice of Canada and eight other judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor General in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

101B. (1) Any person may be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who, after having been admitted to the bar of any province or territory, has, for a total of at least ten years, been a judge of any court in Canada or a member of the bar of any province or territory.

(2) At least three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be appointed from among persons who, after having been admitted to the bar of Quebec, have, for a total of at least ten years, been judges of any court of Quebec or of any court established by the Parliament of Canada, or members of the bar of Quebec.

101C. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court.

(2) Where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

(3) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) of any of the three judges necessary to meet the requirement set out in subsection 101B(2), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the Government of Quebec.

(4) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) otherwise than as required under subsection (3), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the government of a province other than Quebec.

101D. Sections 99 and 100 apply in respect of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

101E. (1) Sections 101A to 101D shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws under section 101 except to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with those sections.

(2) For greater certainty, section 101A shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws relating to the reference of questions of law or fact, or any other matters, to the Supreme Court of Canada."

7. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 106 thereof, the following section:

"106A. (1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

(2) Nothing in this section extends the legislative powers of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces."

8. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and sections:

"XII—CONFERENCES ON THE ECONOMY AND OTHER MATTERS

148. A conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year to discuss the state of the Canadian economy and such other matters as may be appropriate.

XIII—REFERENCES

149. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

Constitution Act, 1982

9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part."

10. Section 44 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"44. Subject to section 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons."

11. Subsection 46(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province."

12. Subsection 47(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution."

13. Part VI of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"PART VI

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

50. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate;

(b) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries; and

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon."

14. Subsection 52(2) of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(d) any other amendment to the Constitution of Canada."

15. Section 61 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Act 1982, or a reference to the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1982, shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

General

16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

CITATION

17. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

and on the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

October 1, 1987—That the motion be amended

(a) in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 2.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada;

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society;

(c) the recognition that aboriginal peoples constitute a distinctive and fundamental characteristic of Canada;

(d) the recognition of the multicultural nature of Canadian society, and in particular respect for the many origins, creeds and cultures as well as the differing regional identities that helped shape Canadian society; and

(e) the recognition of the advantages of developing the Canadian economic union."

(b) in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 2.(2) and substituting the following therefor:

"2(a) The role of the Parliament of Canada to preserve and promote, and the role of the provincial legislatures to preserve and, subject to subparagraph (2)(b) to promote, the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph 1(a) is affirmed.

(b) The role of a province in relation to promotion applies from the time it is adopted by a resolution of the legislative assembly of that province."

(c) in paragraph 2 of the Schedule by deleting section 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"25. Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, and until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the government of Canada shall, within six months after the vacancy occurs, call an election in the province or territory to which the vacancy relates for the purpose of filling that vacancy, and, notwithstanding the provision of section 29 of the Constitution Act, 1867, for a term of nine years."

(d) in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by deleting subsections 101C.(1) and (2) and substituting the following therefor:

"101C.(1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province and the elected government of each territory may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province or territory and are qualified under section 101B. for appointment to that court.

(2) Subject to subsection (5), where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

(e) in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by adding immediately after subsection 101C.(4) the following:

"(5) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) and, if within a period of three months, no name which has been submitted under subsection (1) is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, the Chief Justice may make an interim one-year appointment from among justices of the Federal Court of Canada or provincial Superior Courts."

(f) in paragraph 7 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 106A.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"106A.(1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Parliament of Canada after the coming into force of this section, in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a compatible program which meets minimum national standards."

(g) by deleting paragraphs 9, 10, 11 and 12 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the right of a province of a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(c) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(d) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(e) the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(f) an amendment to this Part.

42.(1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 38(1):

(a) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators; and

(b) the number of members by which a province or territory is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators.

(2) Subsections 38(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

42A. Notwithstanding subsection 42(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, the establishment of new provinces and the extension of existing provinces into territories shall be a matter exclusively for the Governor General in Council and the elected government of the territory affected."

(h) in paragraph 13 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 50.(2) and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) the aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including self-government;

(b) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators, representation in the Senate.

(c) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries at the first meeting only;

(d) such other matters as are agreed upon."

(i) by deleting paragraph 16 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"16. Nothing in the Constitution Amendment, 1987 derogates from any of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms or affects Part II of the Constitution Act, 1982".—The Leader of the Opposition.

and on the amendment of Mr. Broadbent:

October 1, 1987—That the motion be amended

(a) by adding in paragraph 2 subsection 25(1) the words "and the elected government of each territory" immediately after the word "province";

(b) by adding in paragraph 2 subsection 25(2) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(c) by adding in paragraph 6 subsection 101C.(1) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(d) by adding in paragraph 6 subsection 101C.(4) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(e) by deleting in paragraph 9, section 41 paragraph (i);

(f) by adding to paragraph 13 subsection 50(2) the following new paragraph:

"(c) aboriginal rights, in particular self-government;"

(g) by adding to paragraph 13 section 50 the following new subsection:

"(3) The Prime Minister shall invite to the Conferences designated in section 50 subsection (2)(c) representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada and the governments of the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory and those groups and governments shall participate fully in all matters that affect aboriginal rights."

(h) by deleting paragraph 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25, 27 or 28 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution.— Mr. Broadbent.

and on the amendment of Mr. Caccia:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 1 of the Schedule

(a) by deleting Section 2.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the recognition that Canada constitutes aboriginal and multicultural societies, with English and French as the official languages of Canada, French-speaking Canadians being centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada and English-speaking Canadians concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec".

(b) by deleting Section 2.(3).

and on the amendment of Mr. Allmand.

That the motion be amended in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by adding immediately after subsection 2.(4) the following:

"(5) Nothing in this section derogates from any of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms."

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to order adopted Thursday, October 1, 1987, the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) to the motion on the constitutional amendment, 1987.

Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to register my abstention from the last vote.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I draw to the attention of Hon. Members the fact that the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy) has the floor on a point of order, and I would ask that courtesy be extended to him.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to register my abstention from the last vote. I was present—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Calgary East has the floor.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I abstained from the last vote, but I would like my constituents to know that I was present in the House and that my abstention was for a good reason which I will explain to them.

Mr. Speaker: It being 7 p.m. the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

At 7.05 the House adjourned.
