THE WINTRY DAY.

Is it in mansions rich and gay,
On downy beds, or couches warm,
That Nature owns the Wintry Day,
And shrinks to hear the howling storm?

Ah! no

Tis on the bleak and barren heath,
Where Mis'ry feels the shaft of death,
As to the dark and freezing grave
Her children not a friend to save—

Unheeded go!

At tables, with profusion's heap?

Is it in chariots gay to ride,
 To crown the splendid midnight ball
 To revel in luxurious pride,
 While pamper'd vassals wait their doom !
 Ah ! no !
 'Tis in a cheerless, naked room,
 Where Mis'ry's victims wait their doom !
 Where a fond mother fanath'd dies,
 While forth a frantic father flies
 Man's desperate foe !

STANZAS ON MAY.

SWEET May! once the parent of Love, we behold,
 Sighing sad for her verdant array;
 While the glow of her bosom is check'd by the cold,
 And her tears tremble still on the spray.

Say, Nature, oh! why is this change so severe?
 Why does Spring wear so chilling a frown?
 Why does noon still present, unaborb'd, morning's tear?
 Why does May still expect her green gown?

All Nature is alter'd ! Her energies now
 Shall no more in our vallies prevail ;
 For no swain on the mountains repeats the soft vow,
 And no damsel breathes love with the gale !

Warthenes the bosom of Nature to sigh,
 While she gazes with anguish around ;
 While the tear of Religion falls fast from her eye,
 And each dawn blushes deep on her wound.

SONNET to the SETTING SUN

PARENT of beauty, I oft, as I behold
The veil of evening thy resplendent shroud,
See thee empurple yon slow-falling cloud
And o'er the ocean show'r a paler gold.

And from this height discern a deeper hue,
Steal o'er yon wood, checking the linnets' lay
Hear its mellifluous cadence die away,
And mark the rock-rose droop beneath the dew ;

For July 1801. Col: Potten L. J. R. & Cap
24th went Passengers.

The grandeur of his powerful hand I own,
 Who clothes in amber light thy morning throne,
 And bids thee in the zenith radiant shine;
 But when from western skies thy beauty flows,
 His mercy in thy soften'd splendor glows,
 And fills my passive soul with love divine!

 What content is sure to find:
 Oh, what joy, all joys excelling,
 When the peasant sees his dwelling:
 Warm mud walls and roof of thatch,
 When he lifts the rustic latch;
 And the wood, fire's cheerful rays,

APPROACH OF WINTER.

HARK! the wind whistles loud, 'tis the summons of death,
To the delicate Orphans that Autumn has left;
See the frost bitten leaves, how thy strew every path,
See each plant, shrub, and tree, of their honours bereft!

The deep-drenching rain; and the harsh sounding flood,
The mist mantled evening, and time-spangled morn,
To the feeble dependants of flesh and of blood,
Alternate, announce the dread Season's return.

Now farewell a while to the musical grove,
 Where pleasure and innocence often were seen !
 Far well, ye fair harbours of trien' ship and love—
 Simplicity's gambol—Mirth's dance on the green !

While the rigours of Nature forbid us to roam,
 Let Art the defect of an us ment supply ;
 From abroad let us turn our attention to home—
 And feature what the season seems thus to deny.
