For Her Sake;

—OR—

The Murder in Furness Wood.

CHAPTER LIII.

Lady Clanronald fell quickly into her new place as guest where she had once been mistress. There were no collisions now between Lady Cameron and herself. Every one was delighted to see her, and the servants could not show her sufficient respect and homage. She was still the young mistress to them. Hughes, the gardener, with whom she had so often quarrelled, would have sacrificed his finest flowers to bring a smile to her face; Mrs. Seldon, the housekeeper, could not show her sufficient attention; the old butler never ceased talking of the change in her, and shook his head gloomily when matrimony was mentioned.

Lady Cameron was a most considerate and kind hostess, and Lord Clanronald a perfectly passive guest. The mistress of Furness agreed with him in everything; but if she had been suddenly called upon to say why, she must have owned that a tinge of the old hostility to her step-daughter lay at the root of it.

Lady Clanronald enjoyed the peace of the first few days at home. It was keenest pleasure, yet keenest pain to revisit the old familiar places where she had spent the happiest days of her life. Her old friend, Lady Colwyn, was delighted to see her, and gave her a genuinely warm welcome. She looked at Diana steadfastly—for she, like others, was struck by her altered appearance.

"You have changed from a beautiful girl into a beautiful woman, my dear," she said; "but you do not look like a happy one."

Lady Colwyn found a different Diana from the blithe and gay girl she had known but a few years before. She was most kind, loving, and affectionate to her old friend; but she had nothing to tell her. Lady Colwyn tried to draw her into a conversation about Ronald's Court, about her husband, about the ordinary affairs of life, but Diana had nothing to say. She

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Relieves the Ailments of Change of Life.

"During Change of Life I had hot flashes, dizzy spells and every month I was wild with misery. I had a constant dull pain, and would always feel tired. I suffered in this way for five or six years and was treated by a physician and took different remedies with no benefit. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me and I took it, and I believe I would never have been well if it had not been for the Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I am recommending your medicine to all women alike as I was, for I think it will carry them safely through the Change of Life, and relieve the ailments that come at that period."—Mrs. ALEXIS C. NANGLE, Galatia, Ill.

Women who suffer from nervousness, "heat flashes," backache, headaches, and "the blues," should try this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and if consultations exist write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of their 40 years' experience in such cases is at your service.

parried every attack, she politely evaded all her questions. She persisted in talking about Lady Colwyn, while Lady Colwyn persisted in talking about her, so that the interview was not altogether satisfactory. They had, however, one theme in common—Sir Royal, for whom Lady Colwyn had the greatest affection and respect. She spoke of his failing health, and Lady Clanronald was sorely troubled at the sad news.

"He is coming to dine with us to-night," she said; "then I shall see him."

"I find you so changed, Diana—I cannot think how or why," Lady Colwyn remarked presently. "You do not seem one bit like the Diana who went away five years ago. What is it, my dear? Can you not trust an old friend such as I?"

"I do trust you, Lady Colwyn," said Diana—"I always did. You are my true friend, I know."

"Then tell me you are happy, Diana!" she pleaded.

"Everybody has a different standard of happiness," replied Diana, evasively. She could not say "Yes," and she would not say "No."

"I see," said Lady Colwyn, with a quiet sigh. "You will not trust me; but I understand." And, though her ladyship did not venture to speak on the subject again, it was always uppermost in her mind, for she knew that her dear young friend was unhappily married.

Diana's troubles were not long in abeyance. She had had some faint hope that her husband would refrain from excess while under her father's roof; but before three days had passed that faint hope expired. He had the grace to withdraw when he felt conscious of having indulged to freely; but Diana had all the misery of knowing his condition, even though he was not in sight. Lady Cameron saw it, Mr. Cameron soon perceived it, and then they understood the sorrow and the shame of Diana's life.

It was near the hour when Sir Royal was to arrive at Furness, and Diana looked forward with some impatience to the moment when she should see her kind, true, dear old friend.

The light still lingering in the western sky rested on the budding trees, and the fragrant spring flowers. Diana had dressed with unusual care. She did not wish her old friend to find her so greatly changed as her father and Lady Colwyn had; she wanted to see in his eyes, if in no other, a gleam of recognition of the "child Diana." Her dress of a pale-blue brocade embroidered with flowers suited her fair stately loveliness. A feeling of delicacy forbade her wearing the Clanronald jewels. She wore a bunch of delicately-tinted garlands in the bodice of her dress, and one in her hair. She wished to see him young, fair, and charming in the eyes of the man who had always lavished on her such a wealth of honest affection—and yet she had but little heart even for this effort. She could wear costly dresses and fair flowers, but she could not take the shadow from her eyes, or the look of care from her face. Lovely as she was, she glanced at herself despondently.

"Royal will know," she said to herself—"he will know when he sees me. Even were I to laugh and talk the whole time, I could not deceive him. He always found out my childish troubles; he will not now fail to detect my heavy load of sorrow."

Diana had dressed early, hoping to have a chat with Sir Royal before dinner; but when she entered the drawing-room it was empty. She threw a shawl over her shoulders, and, opening the long glass doors, went out on to the terrace; and the sweet soft dreams of her early girlhood seemed to come back to her as she learned over the balustrade, the fair glad dreams that had never been realized.

"If I could but live my life over again!" she sighed. "How cruelly have I wrecked my life and hopes!" A few minutes later Sir Royal, looking from the open glass door, beheld the face and form of the one he loved so well. His heart beat fast; a fire flashed in his eyes that had not shone there since he had last seen her; his face crimsoned, then turned deadly pale. He tried to realize that it was Diana—Diana, who in every childish trouble had sought him, who had kissed him in her ecstasies of delight, who had confided to him her little anxieties and childish secrets.

He went toward her slowly. She did not hear his approach until he uttered her name, and then she turned to him with a cry of joy.

"Oh, Royal, is it you?" she said. "I have been longing to see you."

"And I see you, Diana," he responded. He took both her hands in his and held them while he looked into the lovely face. "Why have you gone out of my life, Diana?" he asked. "Why have you never written to me or sent any messages to me?" Then, with his eyes still fixed on her face, he dropped her hands, saying as he did so, "I see—I see it in your face. You are not happy, Diana, and you would not let me know."

"Do not talk of me," she said. "Tell me about yourself, Royal. You look ill; they tell me you are ill. Is it true?"

"I have again suffered very severely with the old pain and confusion in my head. But, Diana—raise your face, dear, and let me see it—what have they done to you? Who has taken the brightness and the hope and the youth from your face? Who has done it?"

"Time," she replied, with an attempt to smile. "You forget that I have been away five years."

"I do not forget," he cried. "How could I, Diana, when I have counted the hours—every hour for five years? Ah, no, I have not forgotten! But it is not time that has obliterated all trace of the happiness that once shone in your eyes. Time has done nothing to you but made you more beautiful. Time has not written the story I read on your face. Tell me what the shadows mean that lie in your eyes. Tell me what the pain and repression and sorrow mean," he asked hurriedly.

But, before she had time to answer, a thick hoarse voice was heard shouting:

"Diana, Diana, where are you?"

She knew by her husband's voice that something was amiss. Sir Royal noticed how she started and turned pale as the words fell upon her ears.

"Diana, where are you?" repeated the hoarse voice. "What do you mean by mooning out here? Why do you not answer when I call?"

"I am here, Ronald. Do you want me?" she responded.

"If I did not want you, should I take the trouble of coming all this way to find you?—Then he stopped abruptly, seeing Sir Royal for the first time. He looked slightly confused, then turned to his wife, with an angry scowl.

"Ronald, this is my old friend, Sir Royal West of Westwater," she said, anxious to avert a storm.

Lord Clanronald bowed, and murmured a few words of what should have been acknowledgment and welcome, but which sounded more like an oath.

Sir Royal did not offer to shake hands with the man he despised, nor did he say he was pleased to see him again, or inquire about his health. He simply bowed. He wanted to know what had wrought the sad change in the "child Diana."

"Seeing that neither of the gentlemen was pleased at the rencontre, Diana repeated her question.

"Do you want me, Ronald?"

The manner in which he answered her was almost brutal.

"I have told you that, if I had not wanted you, I should not have run after you. Where is the key of my jewel-case?"

"I do not know," she replied.

"You do know!" he cried, his anger increasing as he went on. "Julia tells me that he saw you at my toilet-table yesterday, and now the key is gone!"

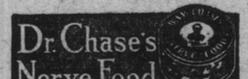

Healthy, Happy Boys and Girls

Is your child healthy? Is he or she up to standard weight, of good color, with plenty of rich, red blood to nourish the growing tissues?

For children who are thin, pale, anaemic, under weight, nervous, restless, sleepless, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is of the greatest benefit imaginable.

Being mild and gentle in action, and yet wonderfully potent as a restorative, it soon makes the blood rich and builds up the feeble nerves.

"I assure you," she said, turning her pale, beautiful face to him, "that I went there to replace a solitaire of yours which I had found."

"It is a lie!" he shouted. "You went to spy among my things, to search for love-letters, I suppose. You want a divorce, do you? and you expect to find something among my papers which will help you? You will be disappointed, my lady."

"You forget, Ronald," she said calmly, "that Sir Royal is here."

"I do not forget," he retorted. "Sir Royal is welcome to hear."

But Sir Royal interrupted him with a polite bow.

"I pray you," he said, white with suppressed rage, "do not mention my name. Lady Clanronald," he continued, turning to Diana, "this is no place for you. Allow me to take you to the drawing-room. I will return and help this gentleman to find his key."

There was a quite significance in his tone which subdued Lord Clanronald, who walked away, muttering some very unparliamentary remarks as he did so.

Motorist Received a Scare.

Friday evening, a motor car owned by a lady living on Circular Road, went over a steep embankment and out into a hole in Rennie's River, the driver and another lady receiving a bad scare. They were rescued by another motorist procuring a plank and putting it out to the water surrounded car to form a bridge. It appears that the car, a Buick, recently purchased from a well known M.D. of the West End, was coming in the Mill Road and had turned to go out Dwyer's way, when, going up grade, the driver in changing gears, in some way reversed the engine with the result that the car shot backwards over the bank and into the river where it struck a boulder and turned at right angles to the direction from which it came. Saturday afternoon a number of men with a team of horses pulled the car ashore, none the worse for its immersion. Dozens of motorists visited the scene and some interesting snapshots were taken by Mr. B. Hayward.

DOES A COLLEGE COURSE THIS YEAR WANT ME TO LEAVE HER WHETHER TO GO TO COLLEGE NEXT YEAR. She tells me that she has taken business courses and is making more money than the girl who went to college. She had a white wash fence, will be the impress of that wider experience." Thomas Balle Aldrich.

A letter friend who is completing her high school course this year wants me to advise her whether to go to college next year. She tells me that she has taken business courses and is making more money than the girl who went to college. She had a white wash fence, will be the impress of that wider experience." Thomas Balle Aldrich.

Only One Answer to Such a Question. Of course, there can be but one answer to such a question. At least, it is my opinion that a woman who expects to get an increased earning power out of a college education that will repay the money and time invested and then divide on top of that, has no business to go to college, but she must be conservative) to be disappointed.

With a man the chances of making money on his investment are much larger because his earnings are not likely to be cut off by marriage after a few years, and in the long run (many people think) the average college man does overcome the time handicap and pull ahead of non-college man.

But if one puts aside the money part of view one comes to quite another conclusion.

What College Does for One. Perhaps the quotation at the head of this talk has seemed somewhat far afield from the subject. To me it means up what college means. Mr. Rich was not speaking of time spent at college, but he might well have been for that is just what college does for one.

Thanksgiving Day.
Services in Anglican Churches

AT THE CATHEDRAL.
Yesterday was celebrated throughout the Diocese of Newfoundland as Thanksgiving Sunday, when all devout Anglicans rendered thanks to Almighty God for the mercies vouchsafed to them and the Dominion during the past year. At the Cathedral of St. John the Baptist, as in all the other Parish Churches of the city, the services were in keeping with the theme of the day. The Lord's Supper was administered at 7, 8 and 11:15 o'clock. The order of Morning Prayer was said at 11, Rev. J. Brinsford taking the office, the Rector, Rev. L. G. Jeeves, reading the Lessons. A special Te Deum was sung, the setting being that of Smart in F. The Anthem "Praise the Lord O My Soul" (Mauder), was magnificently rendered by the choir. Altogether the service was one to uplift and exalt. His Lordship the Bishop was the preacher, taking as a basis for his sermon the opening words of the General Thanksgiving Collect. The theme was "Thankfulness to God," and the preacher interestingly illustrated and applied his subject. The sermon was a masterpiece and the language in which it was phrased, as well as the beautiful thoughts touched upon brought comfort and consolation to the many who mourn their loss to them in this world, but waiting on the heavenly shore for the final reunion. At Evensong the service was full choral, the officiating clergy being the Rector and Rev. J. Brinsford. The latter took the order, the former reading the Lessons, and preaching a most practical and instructive sermon on the day and its purpose, taking as his text the words, "The Harvest indeed is plentiful, but the laborers are few." The Anthem was the same as at the Morning Service, and the soloist, Miss L. Stafford, was heard to much greater advantage, the clear notes of her voice ringing out like the peal of a silver bell. A by assisted by the full choir, it might be said that the success of both services was due to the splendid singing, no less than to the inspiring and beautiful words of the liturgy. The offertories were in keeping with the spirit of the day, and there is every reason to believe that the anticipations of His Lordship the Bishop have been realized.

ST. MARY THE VIRGIN.
Immense congregations attended the Thanksgiving Services in the above Church yesterday—especially at Evensong, when seating capacity was at a premium. At 8 a.m. there was a celebration of the Holy Communion, a large number of communicants being present. At 11 o'clock there was Matins, followed by Holy Communion. The Rector took as his text, II Kings, chap. 25, verse 30, and dealt on God's gift of grace to man, the gift by which man is enabled to enjoy all other gifts and blessings from the bountiful Hand of the Almighty. At Evensong, preaching from St. Luke, chap. 17, verses 17-18, the Rector spoke of the gratitude to God which is due Him from His creatures, and springs from a realization of temporal and spiritual blessings received from above. Among temporal blessings were mentioned good health, human friendship and affection, the comforts of home life and joys of mind. Spiritual blessings, as the means of grace and the hope of glory were also spoken of. An appeal was made to the hearers not only to give of the temporal things, but to offer lives consecrated to the service of God and dedicated to His glory. It was pointed out that any thankoffering without this would be unworthy. The services throughout the day were exceedingly hearty and inspiring, a special feature being the singing of a solemn Te Deum at the close of the evening service. The total thankofferings will be far in excess of any previous year. Organist Lloyd and his choristers, who now number about forty, are to be congratulated on the splendid lead given by them in the different parts of the worship. Many visitors attended St. Mary's yesterday, and must have been impressed by the offering of prayer and praise.

AT ST. THOMAS'S.
In common with the services held throughout the Diocese yesterday, those at St. Thomas's were of a nature appropriate to the theme of and to fight so that the next Thanksgiving Day may find us even more than now responsive to the call of God. At Evensong, His Lordship the Bishop was the preacher, and took as his text the 20th verse of the 5th chap. of the Epistle to the Ephesians, and in his sermon showed why our thanksgiving should be no passing emotion, but that it should signify a deeper feeling than that which we often exhibit in a customary "Thank you." The feelings we exhibit on Thanksgiving Day must be a characteristic outpour of our feelings to God for all His unspokeable gifts, and it must exceed the ordinary feelings of everyday gratitude, as so customarily expressed. As we think of God's great gift of Himself to us, we see the sacerdotal character, and in the light of such we cannot render lip-phrases only. Gratitude is imperative with us as we realize that our existence is based in God alone, and His inscrutable ways, for noteworthy as have been the advances made in the national sciences in late years, the greatest scientist is baffled in the explanation of the lowest forms of life. We ought to be grateful as we think of our utter unworthiness, knowing that God has given to all of us, even the less fortunate, gifts passing human understanding. Our lives should be lives of gratitude, even as gratitude resulted in the great Christian enterprises of the heroic missionary, Bishop MacKenzie, who toiled for his Master in Central Africa. We should cooperate with God, and even as gratitude should beget appreciation and thankoffering, so ought we to carry out the great Gospel message of preaching to all men, or making it possible for all to hear the Word of God. His Lordship also stated that his ambition was to make the Diocese of Newfoundland the most missionary Diocese of North America, and he expressed his belief that such was possible, if churchmen gave to the missionary cause in proportion as they gave to other social purposes. [May we not echo the wish that soon the church will fulfil His Lordship's plea, and that in giving to others, we ourselves have gained much of benefit to our own welfare.] —S.J.H.

JAPS REGISTER PROTEST.
TSING-TAO, Shantung Peninsula, Nov. 23.—The Japanese residents of Tsing-Tao, after a warm debate have sent a memorial to the Govt. of Tokio declaring that they will not surrender the rights they have acquired in Shantung. Viscount Kikujiro Ishii, former Japanese Ambassador to the U.S., commenting to-day in the Asahi on the reservation adopted by the U.S. Senate on the clause of the German Treaty concerning Shantung, said he doubted whether the other powers would approve the reservation. The Senator, he declared would probably revive the dropping spirits of the Chinese, who have lately evinced an inclination to open negotiations with the Japs. The reservation will have no practical effect on the Shantung situation, since all the rights are in the hands of Japan, and the question can hardly be submitted to the League of Nations. Viscount Ishii continued: "The only effect America obtains is the goodwill of China. However, the reservation may place an obstacle in the way of the Sino-Japanese relations, resulting in an unfavorable situation, both for China and Japan, as well as for America in the far east."

Smyth's Message to Christmas Buyers.
Preparedness marked our purchases for the Xmas Trade. Early in the year we got the "do it now" spirit and we've come out with a line of unsurpassed values—the greatest quality goods for this
"THE VICTORY CHRISTMAS."
Last year two hundred and sixty-two persons (as proven by a store inventory) selected second-choice gifts at our store because of late buying—putting off the day. We sold what they wanted one week before, and they had to choose substitutes. This happens every year. Why let it happen this? Our Xmas Goods are open now. Just three weeks more to Xmas. We sold to Xmas buyers on last Saturday. We are selling more to-day. Your gift may be gone to-morrow.
We have warned YOU! Don't put it off! Our Xmas Campaign begins now. Watch for our daily announcements.

S. O. S. Calls.
DISABLED STEAMSHIP "ROMAN" SENDS OUT DISTRESS SIGNALS.
New York, Nov. 20.—"S. O. S." calls were received here by the coast guard office this morning from the steamer Roman, bound from New York for Marseilles. Her position was given as latitude 39.35, north, and longitude 63.50, west, which is about 35 miles east of Sandy Hook. The steamship Roman left New York for Marseilles, November 17th with a general cargo. She is owned by the U. S. Shipping Board and registers 1876 tons. Later information received through radio by naval communication service here is that the steering gear of the Roman has broken down and that the ship is being buffeted by rough seas induced by high northerly winds. At the office of the coast guard cutter service preparations are being made to dispatch a cutter to the assistance of the ship in the event that some other vessel nearer to land does not answer the radio call.

Are you going? Where? To the C. L. B. Band Dance, British Hall, to-morrow night, November 25th. Tickets: Gent's, $1.00; Lady's, 50c.—nov24,tt

Food Prices Will Go Down.

(From the Philadelphia North American.)

It may seem like a reckless prophecy to assert that the formidable item in the cost of living, the price of food, which has risen steadily for the last twenty years, has reached the crest of increase, and will soon reveal a downward tendency. Such, however, is our belief. The laws of economics, operation of which was arrested by the abnormal conditions which prevailed during the war period, are already beginning to reassert their controlling influence. The recession of food prices from the highest level will not come, perhaps, immediately, and will not be rapid or uninterrupted; but comparison of the average prices, made henceforth at three months intervals, will show a perceptible decline. During the winter ahead of us, milk, butter, eggs and sugar will probably remain at top prices, while there is likely to be a much easier buying market for cereals, meats, fresh and cured fish, canned goods, fresh and dried fruits and dry groceries generally. Reasons for the welcome change will readily suggest themselves. A year ago America was under pledge to send 20,000,000 tons of foodstuffs during the succeeding twelve months to the nations associated with her in the war. With this year's harvests, Herbert C. Hoover told a committee of Congress two weeks ago, we shall have a surplus of between 16,000,000 and 20,000,000 tons. The enormous European demand which it was expected would follow the cessation of the hostilities did not materialize, because prices of American foodstuffs were so high that the cost, with transportation and exchange losses added, became almost prohibitive for countries financially prostrated by the war. On this account the export of American meats has been greatly curtailed, and the refrigerators are filled to bursting with all kinds of packing house products purchased at top prices. As Mr. Hoover said:

The speculators and export buyers immediately after the armistice bought and bought and bought, expecting that Germany would demand large quantities of food. But Germany, short of funds, tightened up her belt another notch, kept on rations and waited for the harvests, which were satisfactory. As a result, the large holders of food for Germany are still holding it, and wholesale prices are falling.

When the Government guarantee of wheat is removed there will be a recession in the price of flour, possibly bread, and all the cereals that have been used as substitutes for wheat flour will drop likewise. Food production has been greatly stimulated during the war, and much of the increase in yield will be permanent, because of improved methods and extended facilities.

Death of Inventor of Famous Gun.
There died in London in the early morning of Friday, November 24, 1919, Sir Hiram Maxim, the inventor of the gun which bears his name. Born in the United States in 1840 he came of old Puritan stock, of which he was not a little proud. From an apprentice in a wheelwright's shop he became one of the world's Gun Company, the Maxim Nordenfildt Gun and Ammunition Company, and Vickers, Son & Maxim, Ltd., retiring from the last-named directorship on his 71st birthday, in 1911. He then said he would devote himself to flying machine work. He once admitted that he had "done a lot in the way of inventing," and the late Lord Salisbury introduced him to King Edward as "the man who had prevented more men from dying of old age than any other man who ever lived." His best-known invention was the Maxim gun, once described by Sir Ian Hamilton as "that invention of the devil." Sir Hiram himself declared it to be beneficent as it shortened wars. The idea for the gun came to him when he received a powerful "kick" from an United States military rifle as a boy, and the plan which he developed was to use the energy derived from the recoil to load and fire automatically. When his gun had been perfected he was asked to fire before the British officials at Enfield. They asked for a gun that did not weigh over 100 lbs. that would fire 400 rounds a minute, and 600 rounds in two minutes. He made a gun that weighed 50 lbs. and fired 2,000 rounds in three minutes with one pull of the trigger. The automatic system had come to stay. Two-thirds of all the Japanese killed in their war with Russia he claimed were due to the Maxim gun. When the now deposed German Emperor saw the gun fired in competition with all the other machine guns of the time, he placed his finger on it, and said: "That is the gun, there is no other." Since that time the Germans have supplied themselves with 56,000 Maxim guns. Sir Hiram invented many other things, his claims including smokeless powder.

land when forty-four and became naturalized, always expressing pride at being the first American to be knighted here.

LIFT OFF CORNS WITH FINGERS

Doesn't hurt a bit and costs only few cents

Magic! Just drop a little Freezone on that touchy corn. Instantly it stops aching, then you lift the corn off with the fingers. Truly! No humbug! Try Freezone! Your druggist sells a tiny bottle for a few cents, sufficient to rid your feet of every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and caluses, without one particle of pain, soreness or irritation. Freezone is the discovery of a noted Cincinnati genius.

Whims of the Wealthy.

That possession of much of this world's goods is frequently attended by the weirdest eccentricities is amusingly illustrated by the following curious instances:—

In Vienna there lived a wealthy man, a Pole of noble origin, occupying sumptuous apartments in the heart of the capital's fashionable quarter, who, when he wished to summon his servants, did so by means of bugle-calls. A favourite pastime of this eccentric was to drive a stage-coach, attired like an ordinary driver of such a vehicle, wherever he might find aristocratic cars to be most numerous.

The Viennese asserted that while he spent a fortune each year upon his raiment, yet he was never clad in any save the discarded garments of his valet. On one occasion the Pole astounded the guests at a ball by appearing in a costume of pure white, with the notable exceptions of shirt and tie, which were entirely black. To complete the oddities, it may be added that when dining, which he invariably did alone at a table d'hote, he maintained his reputation for crankiness by reversing the usual order of things and beginning his meal with a demitasse, working backward to the soup.

It was not long ago that there died in an Eastern town a wealthy eccentric who, though he had never for years been outside the ground surrounding his residence, was accustomed to boast each day that he had walked to certain towns, generally at a great distance from his house. What he actually did was this. Whenever he decided that it would be an excellent idea to visit a distant town, he ascertained its exact distance from his home, and covered it on foot on a carefully-measured walking-track maintained on his premises for this purpose. Should he desire to call on his friends near by, he would do so by proxy, at the same time conducting a conversation with them by means of the servants, whom he sent in relays with certain questions, with strict injunctions to bring the answers as quickly as possible.

A well-known Parisian, according to his own statement, for many years defied the weather by drinking a solution of camphor, which, in his opinion, was an excellent substitute for clothing. It was said that winter and summer alike found him sleeping without a particle of clothing, with the windows of the apartments thrown wide open. It was his custom also to stroll in the garden, even on bitterly cold nights, in a garment much resembling that ordinarily worn by normal people only at night.

Among the wealthy eccentrics of England was a man who lived near Hastings. His fad excited much attention and amusement among his neighbours. Punctually at noon each day he would appear in his front yard with a crimson turban on his head, his feet covered with richly embroidered and jewelled sandals, and with a coolie cloth round his waist. "In the father of light and good," and immediately afterward prostrate himself before a quaint miniature temple wherein was enshrined a grotesque idol with diamond eyes. What made his eccentricity remarkable was the fact that he was not of Eastern origin, nor had he ever been converted to any religious faith or cult of the East.

St. John's.

Obituary.

MRS. ISABEL HENDERSON.

It was just seven years ago last Sunday evening when at 6 o'clock Mr. Henry Henderson, one of the best known and most respected of the citizens of St. John's entered into rest. On Sunday last at the same hour his widow passed away at her home on Waterford Bridge Road. Mrs. Henderson, formerly Miss Isabel Urquhart, who was of Scotch parentage, was born in Montreal but came to live in St. John's after the death of her father. Her mother was a sister of the late William Thorburn, well known by many of the older generation. She leaves one sister, Mrs. Robert Laurie, six daughters, Mrs. Charles Morris of Chicago, Mrs. A. Stewart and Mrs. M. McLeod of this city, Mrs. A. V. Wood of Vancouver, Mrs. R. D. Fullerton of Montreal and Miss Margaret Henderson, also two sons, Mr. Wm. Henderson, in the Electrical profession at Toronto, and Mr. C. U. Henderson of the Reid Newfoundland Co. Mrs. Henderson's illness was of long duration borne with cheerful confidence. To her family the loss is irreparable, but must ever be sweetened by the knowledge that to the beloved mother the passing meant reunion. After bidding adieu to each member of her family with words of praise and gratitude upon her lips she passed peacefully and happily to her reward. Mrs. Henderson was a devout member of the Presbyterian Church. Quietly and unobtrusively she did valuable work for those amongst whom she dwelt. Her influence was always for good, and by her gentle kindness she won and retained the affection and esteem of a large circle of friends and acquaintances. St. John's has lost a lady elect through the death of Mrs. Henry Henderson.

Berliner Representative in the City

Mr. B. Goldran, special representative of the Berliner Gramophone Company, of Montreal, Canada, is in the city on business for his firm. This firm, which is the maker of the famous "His Master's Voice" records, is favorably known in St. John's, as proven by the large number of records handled by the local dealers of the head firm, The Royal Stores, Ltd. Mr. Goldran is a travelling representative, and in the course of each year passes over many thousands of miles in the interests of his company. He was here a few years ago, and states that he sees a vast improvement in the city since last time. In Mr. Goldran's opinion there is a great future awaiting St. John's.

Nearing Completion.

The last bucket of cement was put on the walls of the new building at Mt. Cashel at 3.45 p.m. Saturday. Bro. Ennis is to be congratulated on the excellent work done by himself and his boys. With the aid only of some five men they built this new building, which will be one of the finest stone ones in the city. Only the roof and the interior are yet to be finished.

Deluge of Whisky.

114,000,000 GALLONS RELEASED IN U. K.

London, Nov. 19.—One hundred and fifteen million gallons of whiskey were released from war-time restriction to-day and may be distributed to all comers who can persuade the dealers to sell.

The announcement of the removal of the restrictions, which was made without warning in the House of Commons by the food controller, Tuesday, came as a surprise to the members, who greeted it with loud cheers.

The liquor trade was equally surprised, and was besieged by the well-to-do among the public as soon as the unexpected news spread. Many orders of from fifty to a hundred dozens were placed immediately, in addition to numerous commissions for smaller quantities.

Although it is figured that enough spirits has been thus freed to supply every man, woman and child in the country with thirty-six apiece, it is doubtful if the public will find it easy at present to increase consumption to a great extent. The government maintains control of the maximum price, which for whiskey is ten shillings and six pence per bottle, and it is not believed that the dealers will sell much more than figure as the existing high duty will remain.

Moreover, restrictions on distillation during the war and the necessity of mature stocks may lead the dealers to hold large quantities. On the other hand it will be possible now to sell all the American whiskey which had reached and is still reaching England, though clearance from the customs may be slow.

Another Coal Strike.

Intelligence comes from Cape Breton that a coal strike has been ordered in the Minto Collieries, and the miners have gone out, as a result of the order by the U. M. W. of Canada. This strike is the result of the refusal of the owners to grant a demand for a ten per cent. increase in wages. Unless the Company makes substantial concessions to-day the United Mine Workers will commence transporting the striking miners and their families to Alberta.

Job, for best display of White Wyandottes; cup for White Orpingtons, by Sir John Crosbie; cup for greatest number of points in the largest class of birds, presented by the Poultry Club; cup by the Board of Agriculture for Rhode Island Reds; cup by President LeMessurier, C.M.G., for the best White Plymouth Rocks; cup by Percy Johnson, Esq., for the best display of White Leghorns. Manager A. McDonald, of the Dominion Iron and Steel Co.'s mines at Wabana, Bell Island, has kindly sent a voluntary gift of twenty dollars to be distributed as special prizes as a donation from the Fire Brigade Club. Mr. W. R. Butler is erecting the special wire coops and stands and will superintend the feeding and care of the birds. Mr. John F. Calver is Show Manager, and will be glad to have any entries to-day from competitors. A fine collection of birds from the yards of Messrs. Chas. H. Hayward and W. R. Chancer is expected by to-day's express from Grand Falls, and it is hoped to have 600 birds on exhibition, besides rabbits and other pets. The judge will be Judge Frank Jackson, of Sydney, who has been appointed to come here especially to make the awards. This exhibition is given annually to show what Newfoundland can do in producing poultry, and as the Association has gone to a lot of trouble and expense to make this demonstration, it confidently expects to see the public in large numbers attending the seventh annual exhibition.

New Command.

Before the war, the number of people in Great Britain holding Government securities was 340,000; to-day it is more than 20,000,000.
March 20th, 1867, a Connecticut young woman opened an account with the Winsted Savings Bank by depositing four hundred dollars. She has neither withdrawn nor added a cent since then and the amount in the Bank to her credit to-day is $3989.12.
Americans spend about $750,000,000 a year on moving pictures. There are 15,000 motion picture theatres in the country, with a seating capacity of 8,500,000. Twelve hundred new houses are under construction, at an approximate cost of $79,000,000.

Members of the House of Commons, who were opposed to the passage of the "Conditional Prohibition" law, declare that the Act will be attacked in the courts the first time it is invoked. These point out that the Act was passed on Sunday, and declare that the Lord's Day Act, until the statute is repealed, is binding on Parliament, as on other elements of the community. They point to the rules of the House to show that Sunday sittings are irregular and further, falling back on precedent, claim that such a course was never followed before by the Canadian Parliament. Even during the famous naval debate, a Sabbath truce was called. The bill in question was put through the House of Commons shortly before 1 o'clock last Sunday morning.

Shah Feted.
BRILLIANT LONDON BANQUET — POTENTATE'S CAP.
(Daily Mail, Nov. 2.)
An olive-skinned, full-faced young man, self-possessed, and with scarcely a smile—that is how the Shah of Persia struck one as he drove from Buckingham Palace with his suite through troop-lined streets on Saturday to attend the banquet of the Corporation of the City of London and to receive an address.
The banquet was a brilliant affair, presided over by the Lord Mayor and attended by many well-known persons, Prince Albert in the Service uniform of the R. A. F., with two rows of medal ribbons on his left breast, was there, and so was General Birdwood, Earl Curzon of Kedleston, Sir Neville MacReady, and hundreds of men famous in the City of London.
A fanfare of trumpets heralded the entrance of the Shah and his suite to the banquet, and when the trumpets ceased the orchestra opened up into a march as the Shah, with the Lord Mayores on his right hand, paraded round the banquet hall.
Wonderful Headdress.
His Imperial Majesty's wonderful headdress drew all eyes to it. Made of black velvet with a white plume and a gorgeous cluster of scintillating diamonds in front of it, the Shah's cap was the most brilliant thing at the luncheon. He wore it throughout.
In comparison with this his dark blue uniform gilt buttoned and with great gold lace epaulettes, was put in the shade, and the Lord Mayor's picturesque robes were out-dazzled.
All the famous old dishes of the City were served—turkey soup, baron of beef, and partridge—but the Shah drank comparatively little wine. On the other hand, he smoked innumerable cigarettes, carefully putting out the ends by means of a finger dipped in water, and his first smile came when Prince Albert gave him his first after-luncheon cigarette.
Prince Albert sat on his right, the Lord Mayor on his left, and when his health was drunk he ceremoniously clinked glasses with each.
The Shah speaks but little English, but his French—in which language he spoke in reply to Earl Curzon's toast of his health—was very distinct and easy to follow.
Few Smiles.
To say that at the Guildhall on Saturday he was the Shah who did not smile is scarcely an exaggeration. Even Earl Curzon's story of how as a boy at Eton, he stood in a crowd and shouted himself hoarse in greeting to the great-grandfather of the Shah did not cause him to relax a facial muscle.
In the evening the Shah accompanied the King and Prince Albert to the Empire Theatre to see the Russian Ballet. The royal party, occupying three boxes, was loudly cheered, the entire audience standing to greet them. The Shah took the salute several times. The programme consisted of "Cleopatra," "La Boutique Fantasque," and "Les Sylphides."
A deputation of Indian Moslems waited upon the Shah at Buckingham Palace on Saturday afternoon, and presented an address of greeting.
Yesterday the Shah visited the Persian Legation, where he received deputations from the Parsee and Persian communities. With Prince Albert and other guests he was entertained at luncheon at the Legation.
Visit to Windsor.
Later, accompanied by Prince Albert, he motored to Windsor Castle and went over the State and private apartments. In the royal library he was much interested in some valuable Persian manuscripts.
On leaving the castle the Shah and Prince Albert, on their way to the Albert Memorial Chapel, were seen by a large number of Eton boys, who made a rush for the royal car. The Shah was much amused at the interest taken in him by Etonians and repeatedly saluted them.
He placed a handsome wreath, suitably inscribed, on the tomb of King Edward, and at the Frogmore Mausoleum paid a similar tribute to the memory of Queen Victoria. His Majesty and Prince Albert afterwards motored back to London.

Superstitions About Mirrors.
WEIRD BELIEFS THAT HAVE COME DOWN THROUGH THE AGES.
Mirrors have played a curious part in the history of superstitions in the folk-lore of every country.
Long before the first mirrors of glass were manufactured in Venice, in the reign of Edward I. of England, long even before the Greek and Roman ladies used, in their toilets, hand-mirrors of burnished bronze (which were the accepted symbols of Venus Aphrodite), beliefs and fancies, some playful, some eerie, had clustered thick round the primitive mirrors of pool and lake and pond.
Milton's "Eve."
Any kind of still water that gave a recognizable reflection was a mirror for pre-historic man—and woman. For instance, for Milton's "Eve," whom Milton in "Paradise Lost" describes as relating her experiences to Adam, on the banks of a clear lake:—
As I bent down to look, just opposite A shape within the watery gleam appeared.
There I had fixed Mine eyes till now, and placed with vain desire Had not a Voice thus warned me: "What thou seest, Fair creature, is thyself!"
Not all her sons and daughters, however, were so wise as Eve! For many of them the shadow long suggested some super-natural malignant being—a local water-spirit, a nymph, or demon of the lake.
There are the magic mirrors of divination; the globular mirrors, or crystals, beloved of psychic science and modern occultists.
Some such mystic mirror, perhaps, was the Urim of the Bible—a kind of globular jewel by which the high priest determined the guilt or innocence of those whose faces were reflected in it. At any rate, some kind of crystallogamy of very great antiquity. Buddha denounced it as a superstition which his followers were to avoid; and called it "a low art." In Japan, however, a very sacred ecclesiastical tradition attaches to mirrors. They are symbols of Divine Power, and Divine Life and Right.
A Japanese "Fygmallon."
In the Shintoist Temple, a mirror of steel is one of the few sacred symbols; and there is a story of a Japanese "Fygmallon" who brought his "Galates" to life by placing a mirror in the statue's breast, to reflect the life-giving sun-rays.
Homelier superstitions linger round our homelier looking-glasses. There are still many houses in England (and many more, probably, in Scotland, Wales, and Ireland) where the looking-glass in the chamber of death will be turned carefully to the wall, or covered with a cloth, lest things invisible, and no mere reflection of the quiet dead face, should be seen in its depths. Then there is the belief in some extraordinary ill-luck that is bound to follow one who accidentally breaks a looking-glass. Very few of those who still cherish this belief could explain its origin; but its origin is nevertheless fairly clear, in the old idea of a mirror as the habitant of the shadow, and of the shadow as the soul. The destruction of the mirror would be, on this showing, awesomely suggestive of the destruction of the soul or the life.—John o' London's Weekly.

all the articles sold, their prices, and the names of the purchasers.
These men had been trained to exercise their memory from their earliest youth, to fit them for public debate in the national assemblies. All these performances, however, remarkable as they are, fall short of the achievements of the once world-renowned Corsican, Guilio Guidi. This young man was a student of law at Padua, where he visited Muretus, a distinguished physiologist of the day. Muretus, who had heard stories of his wonderful memory, took the opportunity of putting it to the test. In presence of a large company he dictated words, classical, barbarous, connected and disconnected, until he wearied himself, the writer who took them down, and the listeners—all except the Corsican.
Alert and fresh when Muretus ceased dictating he repeated every word in exact order. Beginning with the last, he went over the whole list again, then he gave the first, third, fifth, in any order that was asked.
Some painters, too, have had wonderful memories. Gustave Dore painted portraits from memory. Abercrombie saw a copy of one of Rubens' masterpieces done so accurately from memory that it required careful examination to distinguish it from the original.

Marvels of Memory.
Capablanca's remarkable feat at the recent Chess Congress at Hastings, when he played thirty-five games at once, reveals an extraordinary mental grasp. Those who have seen his play say that he shows great swiftness of decision and his brain seems so constituted that this elaborate and complex game seems quite simple to him.
Taine, the French historian, tells of two American friends of his who used to play chess on an imaginary board while walking down the street.
Great men in other walks of life have also owed much to their exceptional powers of memory. Lord Macaulay could recite all the 7,758 lines of "Paradise Lost." Ben Jonson said he could repeat all that he had ever written, and whole books that he had read. Sasaubon wrote of Scaliger, the celebrated French scholar, that he never read anything that he did not remember. In three months he committed to memory all the Greek poets.
Other memory feats of a more mechanical kind are recorded. Hippas, a Greek rhetorician, was able to repeat, in order, a series of 500 words after once hearing them. He was beaten by Seneca, who could recite 2,000 names in order, and repeat the list backward at will. Themistocles, the Greek General, was able to call by their names the 30,000 citizens of Athens; Cyrus, the Persian Emperor, took pains to learn the name of every soldier in his army. Hortensius, a celebrated Roman orator, after sitting all day at a public sale in Rome, correctly enumerated 104 from memory

The Omen.

AN INDIAN FRONTIER STORY.

The devotion of her look was affording amusement to the chaperons and elderly officers who, by reason of physical infirmities, were convinced that dancing is a hollow vanity and therefore abstained from it, but not from comments upon people and frocks.

She was dancing with Taunton. It was a case of true love, and it had not run smooth. Miss Rossini was torn between a desire to obey her parents and the wish to give way to Taunton's entreaties. A weakness of will—sweetly feminine—was her worst fault. Her promises were governed entirely by the speaker of the moment. To her father she swore eternal renunciation of Taunton; to Taunton, eternal fidelity in her love; and yet, if truth is to be judged only by its intention, she was not guilty of falsehood.

The strain was telling on her, and the garrison was sorry for her; it did all in its power to help along the meetings of this much-enamoured couple, and succeeded only too well.

Captain and Mrs. Rossini were persons of a type not prevalent in the Service, with an eye very much on the main chance worldly wise to a degree. A rich man in Calcutta, who had taken a fancy to the little board-school miss and who sent numerous letters, rolls of music, books and boxes of sweets, was looked upon as a far better match than a lieutenant—even a most exemplary lieutenant, as Taunton certainly was.

And so it happened that the long notes of the music were bearing the two onward with the other dancers, snatches of singing, of conversation, and of laughter sounding with the music, until there broke in suddenly, drowning it all, a clang, a roar, a hellow of thunder. The music hesitated for an instant, for an instant there was a cessation of movement and exclamations of fear; then the bright figures swayed on, and the chatter was resumed.

But Taunton's eyes had lost, somehow, the look of perfect content; the girl's head was farther away from his shoulder, and the swing had gone from their step. They stopped by an open window to let the now fresh wind blow over them. There came a sudden gust which wafted in a great dark butterfly that, in the rays of artificial light, seemed dead black, the omen of impending harm. It fluttered for an instant dazed and wind-beaten, fluttered and circled round; then, spreading its sable wings it floated steadily, relentlessly towards Taunton and the girl beside him. She watched it with parted lips and frightened eyes as it came towards her out of the lightning-streaked night, unable to move until it sank and settled on her light hair. Then she threw up both arms, and brushed it off with a heavy blow.

II.

An orderly crossed the room to the adjutant, who was speaking to the bandmaster.

"Well, play if you can find the music," the adjutant said, coolly. He was back again in ten minutes, speaking hurriedly to Taunton. Taunton answered, bowed his head, and turning away, crossed to where Captain Rossini stood with his daughter. "Good-evening, captain," he said, and waiting for no reply, put his hand on Lucia's arm, and drew her aside with an air of proprietorship that left the father aghast.

"Lucia, listen, dear. I've hardly time for even this good-bye. Don't look so frightened; it amounts to nothing. Simply some trouble over at the agency that makes it necessary for me to go up there instantly with a detachment. You know there has been expectation of trouble for some time. My dear child, you must not look like that; how silly of a soldier's daughter! I tell you I'll be back in a few days."

He took her out on the steps. The music drowned their voices. Eager and passionate voices they were, too. He spoke of telling her father a secret.

"He must know at most in a few weeks," Taunton repeated. She answered that it was mean and cowardly for him to leave her "to bear the brunt of it alone for days. I'm worried to death already," she cried, pleadingly.

A tear dropped on Taunton's hand, and melted his firmness in a moment. He began to plead.

"But, Lucia, he must know in a few weeks at most. I've let you persuade me too long already. We ought to have been brave and open in the first place, or else have gone up and made our confession immediately. What the deuce ever made me give in to your silly fears, I can't understand."

Then more protests, more pleading. "Don't tell him yet," she again entreated. "Oh, my love, do you think the black butterfly meant anything?"

"Of course not. Lucia, I'm doing wrong to give in to you, I know it; and—but here comes Murray, he mustn't catch me here. Good-bye, little girl, good-bye. I wish you were braver. Adios."

Taunton ran to the troops' quarters. The girl stood brooding in the darkness.

III.

A clash of accoutrements, a tramping of hoofs, the wind blew fresh once more, the leaves rustled and shook down the drops, and the world went on.

It was a beautiful morning after the storm.

A second lieutenant sat upon the steps of Captain Rossini's quarters, beside the captain's fair daughter, who was smiling and talking in her old lively way. The second lieutenant gathered hopes.

So they talked and laughed, and watched guard-mounting in the sunshine of the cool, summer morning. When it was over, and the adjutant and officer of the day, and ex-officer of the day, were going their ways, there came the sound of the hoofs of a galloping horse, and a courier from the agency drew up at the commander's quarters, while the people on the porches craned their necks and strained their ears in a vain attempt to hear the mud-splashed man's message.

Rossini's house was next to the commanding officer's. Lucia jumped up and ran down near the courier.

"Lucia! come back here! What do you mean?" thundered the captain.

"I am going to see what has happened to my husband," she said, deliberately, and did not wait to notice the look on his dark face.

The second lieutenant clung to the railing for support. The courier's words were low; but Lucia heard the tidings of death as plainly as if he had shouted them aloud. She flushed—and then turned very pale. There came a queer thud in her heart, and a whirl in her head, and all she saw was thousands upon thousands of black butterflies that flew around her. She laughed and put up her hands to seize them, hit at them, struck at them, shook her clenched fists at them, fighting off the dull wings that only herself could see, and then fell to the ground. When they picked her up, her soul had joined that of her gallant husband.—Spare Moments.

In a Nutshell.

Like the sun, the modern gas fire warms solid objects—such as the furniture of a room or its occupants—without appreciably raising the temperature of the intervening air. At the same time the products of combustion in their passage up the chimney flue keep the atmosphere in healthy motion.

That is gas fire science and gas fire hygiene in a nutshell.

Chief Steward Was Unable to Stay on Ship

Was So Run-Down He Had to Lay Off—Is Wonderfully Built Up By Tanlac.

"Well, sir, if I keep on improving like I have in the past few days I'll soon be able to go back on the job," Mr. C. Miller, of 36 Mullock Street, St. John's, Newfoundland, as he purchased his third bottle of Tanlac at Connor's drug store, recently, Mr. Miller is chief steward on the steamer Prospero, and states that he had suffered so much from a complication of troubles, during the past several months that he was forced to lay off, not being able to look after the duties of his position.

"Up until a few months ago," he continued, "I tipped the scales one hundred and eighty-five pounds and a healthier man couldn't be found anywhere. Then I began suffering from nervousness and indigestion and going down in weight and strength. My stomach got so out of order that I could not eat a meal without just suffering agony afterwards and then I got sciatic rheumatism so bad I could barely hobble around. Finally the rheumatism spread until I ached all over. I dropped off forty pounds in weight and was so weak and miserable that I simply had to give up my position on the boat and do nothing but try to find relief.

"I was under treatment four different times, was also in the hospital for a time and was kept on a special diet, but never did I get better and begin to pick up until I began taking Tanlac. When my friends told me about Tanlac and urged me to try it, I had little idea it would help me, but now I am ready to say I have never seen the equal of it in the sixty-two years of my life. I have only been taking for a short while but I am already in better shape than I have been for a long time. Why, I can eat the biggest kind of meals and never have a pain or an uncomfortable feeling afterwards, and as for the rheumatism, it has left me entirely, for I can walk all over town and never feel a pain on an ache. Why, before Tanlac proved its value to me I would not have believed such wonderful results possible. I am already feeling a great deal stronger and am picking up in weight and strength every day. My nerves have quieted down and I am improving so rapidly that I will soon be able to work again. There's nothing too good to say for Tanlac and I am glad to make this statement for what it may be worth to others who are needing just such a medicine."

Here is another instance of the remarkable reconstructive powers of Tanlac. Mr. Miller is only one of many thousands who have used it with the same wonderful results. Tanlac proved of great benefit to him because it contains certain medicinal properties which enrich the blood and promote a healthy appetite for nourishing food. Tanlac has been very successful in overcoming nervousness and sleeplessness, not from a quieting effect on the nerves, for it has no such effect, but by strengthening the nerves and bringing back the normal state of health through its effect on the appetite and nutrition of the body.

Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Connors, under the personal direction of a special Tanlac representative; in Harbour Buffett, by Thos. Wakely & Sons; in Placentia, by James Murphy & Son; and in Topsail, by J. K. Bursell.

"Behold, there came the champion, the Philistine of Gath, Goliath by name," whose height was "six cubits and a span."

When you realize that a cubit is equivalent to one foot nine inches, it will be seen that Goliath must have stood nearly twelve feet in his sandals.

Coming to more recent times, the nearest approach to Goliath's height is one John Middleton, of Hale, Lancashire, who was nine feet three inches high. His limbs were in proportion, for record mentions that his hand measured seventeen inches in length.

King George the Fifth's porter was nearly eight feet tall, while Frederick the Great had a regiment of Grenadiers in which no man was under seven feet high.

The Westminster Aquarium exhibited, in 1880, an eight-foot Chinese giant, named Chang-Woo-Gow.

The King's Pleasures.

(Pearson's Weekly.)

If you asked the king what he liked best, it is fairly certain that he would reply, "A good day's shooting."

On the one occasion on which the writer had the opportunity of a chat with His Majesty his talk was almost entirely of shooting. It was very plain that his whole heart was in this sport. He does not despise fishing, and has killed many a spring salmon on Scottish rivers, fishing sometimes as early as February, when often the cold is so bitter that the water freezes on the line, making it most difficult to cast a fly.

Though intensely keen on naval affairs, the King cares little for yachting, and he has not his father's delight in racing. He likes to ride a good horse, but was never very fond of hunting.

His main outdoor taste is farming. It is a curious thing that the main ambition of most sea captains is to settle ashore on a farm. If the King were a private gentleman he would most certainly farm his own land, and do it uncommonly well, too.

Plays Good Tennis.

Of outdoor games lawn tennis is His Majesty's favourite. He is a man with a delicate digestion, and needs plenty of exercise. Right up to the outbreak of war he played tennis almost every day—in summer in the open, in winter on a covered court. He sometimes would play half a dozen sets in an afternoon. Since his accident in France, when his horse fell upon him, his activities in this direction have been somewhat lessened. Besides, he has had no leisure. There is probably not one of his subjects who is so overworked as the King.

He plays a sound game of tennis, and though he has not a very strong service is good at the net.

Golf he has never taken to, though both the Prince of Wales and Prince Albert are fond of the game.

The King's delight in stamps is well known. In this matter he is no amateur, but goes in seriously for the study of philately. So long ago as 1903, he was asked by Sir William Mulock, then Postmaster-General of Canada, to give his advice on the preparation of a new die for Canadian stamps. He at once undertook the task, and as the "London Philatelist" said at the time, the design showing King Edward in his coronation robes, was far and away the best that had appeared in stamp form.

King George's collection of stamps is estimated to be worth at least £200,000.

Of stamps collecting he once wrote to a personal friend, "It is one of the greatest pleasures of my life."

Another indoor pursuit of the King is billiards. He likes an occasional game, but has never had time for sufficient practice to be sure of exceeding a break of twenty.

A curious hobby of His Majesty is the collection of bables' photographs. But then there is no man alive more fond of children than he, and not a better father among all his subjects.

As may be imagined, the King has little leisure for reading. True, he keeps well abreast with the news of the day, but apart from that, almost his only literature is books on travel and exploration. He frequently studies the reports of the Geographical Society.

The King's tastes in the matter of food are very simple and very English. He is fond of a good English cheese, and cares little for fancy cookery. At dinner he drinks a light wine or whisky and soda. He cares nothing for champagne, and rarely if ever touches port.

He smokes cigars, a choice but mild brand, and used to consume as many as a dozen in the day, but of late smokes less than he once did.

Press Briefs.

In Sweden the public houses are closed on Saturday—pay day—while the savings banks are kept open until midnight.

Workmen who have just broken up a sewer man-hole of solid concrete which was constructed at Lodi, California, seven years ago, say that a frog which had been lying dormant in the concrete took an hour's sun bath after being released, and then hopped away.

With an ordinary jackknife, Dominique Pelletier, of Providence, R. I., has made a wooden model of a sedan touring car, 14 inches high and 3 feet long, with the equipment inside and out complete in every detail. A four-cylinder engine of wood has small copper wires running from the "spark plug" to the "distributor." The removable hood has curved ventilating flanges on the side, and a wooden bumper in front with a square wheel in the rear marks the vehicle as one "fully equipped for touring." The car is also equipped with lighting facilities, a small battery concealed in under the floor furnishing lights for headlights and the special tonneau light that is built into the top. A dust pan is included in the construction of the car.

More Heat on Less Fuel.

Many thousands of users in City, Town and Country have learned from natural experience that the Caloric, the Original Patented Pipeless Furnace, heats the homes better than they were ever heated before, in all kinds of weather. Also that it save one-third to one-half the Coke, Coal and Wood. If you want real winter comfort, if you want to turn your houses into homes, and if at the same time you want to cut your heating expenses to practically one-half, install a Caloric. The cost of installation and maintenance, in money and labor, is much less than the number of stoves required to heat the same space. Thousands of Caloric users have paid the first cost of their furnaces through the saving of fuel. It can be installed as quickly in the old houses as in the new, frequently in a day, because it has but one register, and requires no pipes in floors or walls.

More than fifty thousand Calorics are giving satisfactory and economical service in all types of homes, up to eighteen rooms in size, as well as in churches, stores, factories and other buildings.

Read the following testimonial from one of our customers:—

St. John's, Newfoundland,
 November 12, 1919.

Messrs. Bowring Brothers, Ltd.,
 Hardware Department.

I have installed the Caloric Pipeless Furnace in my home (it is also the first Caloric in Newfoundland) and find it to give all the satisfaction claimed by its manufacturers. I would therefore recommend it to anyone that wants the most perfect system of heating by the circulation of warm, moist air through one register.
