Some of the accommodating young men around that institution, seeing a Telegraph reporter apparently vainly scanning the streets for an item, induced the young lad to let the ox go. Very little urging was required, and off the ox started, but at the same moment the owner appeared on the ward and caught the rope, to stop his GARDNER LOCK STITCH team and save the cargo on which his hopes of raising a loan were centered. He secured the rope, which was fastened Golden Grove, scented the fresh air of his home, and would not be stopped. The ox ran, the owner held are and the first prize as the most to the horn of his quadruped, but the aniox ran, the owner held on, and was dragged along Prince Wm. Street on his back. Several gentlemen (among them a popular official connected with the Savings Bank) endeavored to assist the C. E. BURNHAM & CO., owner in his contest with the wild and fiery ox, by catching hold of the stakes of FURNITURE. the sled. The stakes snapped like pipestems Market Square. Here, the grand stopping place of all runaways, saw the team brought to a stand still, and the owner
