Passing Away. O River of Time ! how ceaselessly Thou flowest on to the boundless sea! Whether upon the sunny tide The sweet Spring blossoms drop and glide, Or whether the dreary snow-flakes only Falt in the Winter cold and lonely-Whether we wake or whether we sleep, Thou hastest on to Eternity's deep.

'Iwas long ago, in my life's sweet May, My childhood silently floated away : har the noon-bells distinctly chime, buth glides by on the stream of time. Asys, though sunny or overcast. tealing away to the changeless past ; mark their flight with a smile of cheer, r not with a sigh or falling tear.

So often, so sadly, the people say, Passing away ! still passing away ! That the words have borrowed a pensive tone, And a shade of sadness not their own ; And I fain would reclaim their notes again From their minor key on the lips of men, And make the refrain of my gladdest lay, ' Passing away ! ever passing away !'

For what is the transient? and what will last? What maketh its grave in the growing past? So and what lives on in the deathless spheres. Where nought corrupts by the rust of years ? Boes Time, who gathers our fairest flowers, Destroy no weeds in this world of ours? What rises victorious o'er dull decay ? And what is that which is passing away?

Our time is flying. The years sweep by Like flitting clouds in a breezy sky. But time is a drop in the boundless sea Of an infinite eternity. As our seas are spanned by the arching skies, 'Neath the presence of God that ocean lies, And though tides may fall in life's shallow bay Eternity's deep is not ebbing away.

A Baltimore Pastor gives to the Episcopal Methodist the following account of a Watch twelve months ago :

her kitchen to get the dinner, would say "hue. band likes beef steak and roast turkey, and the ch ldren like plum puddings and mince pies, but then three hundred a year will not pay for such things-yet there are the whales. Shall we have a nice dinner and trust to the whale, eat codfish and potatoes," So a hund, d times they must have been in doubt as to what they might afford themselves, and if they were not very prudent they probably found at the end of the year that their hopes had led them to contract debts and which the whales had not helped them to pay. Some of our churches have a custom analag-

ous to this, and open to quite as many objections. They agree with their pastor for a certain sum and a donation visit, which they calculate will wield one or two or three hundred dollars. The pastor knows that, with the most that he can expect, he must live very economically ; but all the year he must be anxious about that donation visit. There are as many contingencies which may affect him as there were to affect the coming of Dr. Beecher's whales. If he was

A. was forty years younger I should hope soon to resume my ministry; but as it is I have little or no prospect, and it remains for me to cultivate patience and exercise resignation. Old age. however, is not what I once supposed it to be pression, but in my seventy-fourth year I find neither. To borrow trouble of the future is minst my creed. I do not expect to cross the river till I reach it, and have no wish to die before my time come. When it does come I trus, supporting grace will come with it.

Is there not something very wrong in this? You do not hire men on your farms, or clerks in stores, for a certain sum AND A DONATION. You do not deal with any other class of men on this principle. Why should you deal thus with your pastors ? They need the whole of their seanty wages as much as any other men, and they need, too, to know what their wages are. When you engage a man, tell him just what you we can build the new church and have it out of men of this country, holding high position in the tainly it affords a most favorable opportunity can give him. If a part is to be raised by a donation visit, see that he is not a ig of the uncertainty which always a? visits. It is easier for you to pay hod dollars more than you expected that lose fifty or a hundred.

While I am talking to you about y ters, let me tell you there is another wa you often defraud them and embarrass of cruelly. You do not pay them punc anow men who have gone into new place have not received more than oue-tenth of salary befere the close of the year , and this too, when the expenses of moving had exhausted their pockets to the last dollar. Can you think that a family lives under such circumstration without trials ? I tell you that the trials sometimes so severe that faith and patien under them, and the temptation to seek some other means of support becomes too strong for resistance.

And this is an evil which may be so easily remedied-indeed, it is because it might be so easily remedied that it is so hard for the pastor to bear it. He knows that you might pay him with a hundredth part of the inconvenience to yourselves which he is suffering ; therefore he smarts under a sense of unkindness on your part. A Year in Heaven. A year uncalendared, for what Hast thou to do with mortal time ? Its dole of moments entered not That circle mystic and sublime. Whose unreached centre is the throne Him whose awful brow Meeting eternities are known As but an everlasting NOW ! The thought removes thee far away, . Too far beyond my love and tears ; Ah ! let me hold thee as I may, And count thy time by earthly years.

A year of blessedness, wherein -Not one dim cloud hath crossed thy soul. No sigh of grief, no touch of sin. No frail mortality's control. Nor once hath disappointment stung, Nor care, world-weary, made thee pine. But rapture, such as human tongue Hath found no language for, is thine : Made perfect at thy passing-who Can sum thy added glory now ? As on and onward, upward through The angel ranks that lowly bow-Ascending still from height to height, Unfaltering where rant seraphs trod, Not pausing 'midst their circles bright, Thou tendest onward unto GOD.

A year of progress, in the love That's only learnt in heaven ; thy mind Unclogged of clay, and free to soar, Hath left the realms of doubt behind ; And wondrous things, which finite thought In vain essayed to solve, appear To thy inquiries fraught With explanations strangely clear. Thy reason owns no forced control. As held it here in needfal thrall : God's mysteries court thy questioning soul, And thou may'st search and know them all.

A year of love : thy yearning heart Was always tender, ever to tears. With sympathies, whose sacred art Made holy all thy cherished years ; But love, whose speechless estacy Had overborne the finite, now Throbs through thy being, pure and free And burns upon thy radiant brow, For thou those hands' dear clasp hast felt, Where still the nail-prints are displayed ; And thou before that face hast knelt, Which wears the scars the thorns have made.

A year without thee ! I had thought My lonely heart would break and die. Ere time had meek quiescence brought, Or soothed the tear it could not dry : And yet I live to faint and quail Before the human grief I bear. To miss thee so! then drown the wail That trembles on my lins, in prayer, Thou praising ! while I weakly pine ; Thou glorying ! while I vainly thrill ; And thus between thy heart and mine, The distance ever widening still.

A year of tears to me : to thee The end of thy probation's strife, The archway to eternity, The portal of immortal life
