The Toronto Globe encourages British Columbia to make war upon the United States. It says: "The Bush is an insignificant little concern. Half a dozen armed seafarers acting in combination against her might easily board her, capture her, bring her crew into port and demand their trial for piracy."

THE FRENCH ELECTION.

It would appear from the telegrams that the government of France has been established. The general election that took place on Sunday gave the administration, if not a large, at least a united majority. It seems that not only the fate of the Ministry but the fate of the Republic itself hung upon the issue of Sunday's election.

ADDRESS TO HON. MR. DEWEY.

Presented by the Mainland Pioneer and Benevolent Society.

On Saturday last while the Hon. Mr. Dewey was en route to Ottawa, he was presented with the following address by the Mainland Pioneer and Benevolent Society.

To the Hon. Edgar Dewey, Minister of the Interior and Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs.

Sir, The Mainland Pioneer and Benevolent Society have much pleasure in sending you a hearty and cordial welcome to this section of the province on the present occasion, and they beg to assure you, not only on their own behalf, but on behalf of their many friends in this community, that it is with very great regret that they were recently compelled to send you to the limited time of your disposal, to attend the public and private functions that welcome more substantial and practical in shape than any other that you have had the opportunity to see.

In the early days of our colonial life we had the good fortune to see you as our representative in the legislature in the then crown colony of British Columbia. You also, in your professional capacity, were a member of the House of Commons in the United Kingdom. We had the fullest opportunity to see you in your various capacities, and we are sure that you will have had the opportunity to see you in your various capacities, and we are sure that you will have had the opportunity to see you in your various capacities.

It is with much pleasure that we see you again in this country, and we are sure that you will have had the opportunity to see you in your various capacities, and we are sure that you will have had the opportunity to see you in your various capacities.

It is with much pleasure that we see you again in this country, and we are sure that you will have had the opportunity to see you in your various capacities, and we are sure that you will have had the opportunity to see you in your various capacities.

TRAINING BY NIGHT

(Copyright by J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, Pa., and published by special arrangement through the American Press Association.)

CHAPTER III. USE HURSTON was not the only young man in New York in Helen Knowlton's life.

According to classic ideas, her features were not perfect. Her eyes were physical, but her eyes were a stranger nose, or a handsomer mouth than hers when she was talking or laughing.

As to her character it was peculiar. When she came to know her intimates she found that she was the most singular combination of baby and woman he had ever met, and so she was.

When she was a child she had a habit of being very particular. Her mother told her that she was a prima donna, of all persons, should possess.

Helen Knowlton's parents had died when she was a baby, leaving her in charge of an aunt, Miss Rebecca Sanford, her mother's sister, who was known to half of Helen's friends and the whole musical profession as "Aunt Rebecca."

There were, naturally, a great many visitors to the little Gothic cottage in West Twentieth street, where the prima donna made her home; but they all had to pass the eye of Aunt Rebecca before they could see her niece, and even then the matron seated herself in the room and let the visitor be man, woman or child and never left him or her had gone.

And the making of a costume with so much interest that she would forget all about the ordinary pleasures of life, and be wholly wrapped up in the dry details of her profession.

"If an audience only knew how much better it gets from an artist when she gives her something in return, she would say, 'I think it would always show a sympathetic spirit.'" She had little to complain of on the score of coldness in her. In New York she was always treated as something more than the particular favorite of every auditor, and the applause when she came upon the stage only ceased that they might hear her sing.

It was surprising that a woman of this sort should have had many admirers. It was said in society that she could marry any man she wanted—that they would only be too happy to bestow their wealth and fortunes upon her.

When Archie Tillingshast told his cousin in Seattle that he had been in Chicago. She said as she was in a drawing room, her mind was on the gallipoli time, and it could work as well in one place as in another.

Just at the time of which I write, she was absorbed in the study of her new part, and the thousand and one things that had to be attended to before the eventful night on which the opera was to be produced.

It was beginning to think that he was in love with Helen Knowlton; and he was, to a certain extent. He thought her cold, but he also thought her beautiful, and he liked to be considered the favored suitor of the most popular prima donna in the country.

Helen Knowlton loved West Hastings as much as she loved music, and she was sure, and he didn't ask her to marry him. I think that if he had put the question seriously she would have refused him.

There were, naturally, a great many visitors to the little Gothic cottage in West Twentieth street, where the prima donna made her home; but they all had to pass the eye of Aunt Rebecca before they could see her niece, and even then the matron seated herself in the room and let the visitor be man, woman or child and never left him or her had gone.

And she would be with touching the tangle of her garments perhaps a dozen times in the evening.

It was a great occasion, and the new opera was a complete success. Helen never sang more beautifully.

At the time Rush Hurston saw him escorting Miss Knowlton to her carriage at the stage, he had a sudden idea that he would be a success in the music business.

When she was a child she had a habit of being very particular. Her mother told her that she was a prima donna, of all persons, should possess.

Just at the time of which I write, she was absorbed in the study of her new part, and the thousand and one things that had to be attended to before the eventful night on which the opera was to be produced.

It was beginning to think that he was in love with Helen Knowlton; and he was, to a certain extent. He thought her cold, but he also thought her beautiful, and he liked to be considered the favored suitor of the most popular prima donna in the country.

Helen Knowlton loved West Hastings as much as she loved music, and she was sure, and he didn't ask her to marry him. I think that if he had put the question seriously she would have refused him.

There were, naturally, a great many visitors to the little Gothic cottage in West Twentieth street, where the prima donna made her home; but they all had to pass the eye of Aunt Rebecca before they could see her niece, and even then the matron seated herself in the room and let the visitor be man, woman or child and never left him or her had gone.

And she would be with touching the tangle of her garments perhaps a dozen times in the evening.

It was a great occasion, and the new opera was a complete success. Helen never sang more beautifully.

At the time Rush Hurston saw him escorting Miss Knowlton to her carriage at the stage, he had a sudden idea that he would be a success in the music business.

When she was a child she had a habit of being very particular. Her mother told her that she was a prima donna, of all persons, should possess.

CLERGYMEN IN POLITICS.

It is curious to see how the same questions come before the public in every civilized community and under every form of government. There is no doubt that in France, the clergy in that country claim a right to take part in the contest both as electors and advisers of the laity. The Bishop of Marseilles is the first to assert the rights of his order. He has issued a circular to his clergy telling them that the election of deputies is a matter in which they are concerned and that it is sinful to vote for a man whose principles they cannot approve. When the Minister of Public Worship heard of this circular he issued a circular in his turn. He addressed it to the Bishops and reminded them that the clergy were forbidden by the laws of the Republic to interfere in political matters or to exercise pressure on the consciences of their flocks under pain of incurring certain penalties prescribed by the penal code, or exposing themselves at least to measures of repression at the hands of the Government. The clergy have protested against the action of the Minister, and the Minister has threatened to issue a circular to the Bishops of France. He has threatened that they are citizens and have a right like all other citizens to take a part in the election. It seems, however, that the course taken by the minister is strictly in accordance with the concordat which defines the status of the clergy of the Church of Rome in France. It does seem hard and in accordance with the principles of republicanism, to interfere with any class of citizens in the lawful exercise of their political rights. Why should not a clergyman, if he sees fit to do so, take an active part in an election as any other citizen? It is hard to give an answer to this question, which is perfectly satisfactory to people of liberal views. It is well known that clergymen, Protestant as well as Catholic, do not often take part in any election as an active part in political contests, and when they do, their interference is looked upon with unconcealed jealousy and disgust by laymen of their own denomination. Such things as political sermons are sometimes heard of in this and other countries, but it is very rarely indeed, that a minister of religion in good standing takes the stump. There are many reasons for this. One is the universal dislike to the active interference of clergymen in politics and for the odium that attaches to the title "political parson."

It is by many considered unseemly for clergymen to make political speeches and to take part in a political canvass. For them to do so is a violation of those unwritten laws which are called the "proprieties." The calling of the clergyman in "secular" and practical politics are perhaps improperly considered the prerogative of sacred. The general opinion is that the political atmosphere is one which a clergyman who is not worldly-minded and who wishes to be considered devoted to his calling, ought not to breathe. Political practice are the "mud" which a minister of religion cannot touch without being defiled. This may be prejudicial, but if it is, it is a prejudice which is very general in every country. But we think that the chief reason why the action of clergymen in politics is so generally contemned is that it is regarded as unfair—as an improper use of the influence which they have gained and which they cannot but exercise as ministers of religion. It is quite true that a minister is a citizen and is entitled to all a citizen's rights and privileges. But the opponents of clerical influence contend that it is altogether impossible to separate the citizen from the clergyman. As a citizen the politician does not care a hoot about the clergyman's opinions on political matters. They may be sound or they may be unsound, and they are just as likely to be unsound as sound. But of the clergyman's influence as a voter and a political campaigner he cares a very great deal. What he says about politics, whether he intends it or not, carries with it the weight and the authority that properly attach to his utterance on religion. He speaks, and he cannot help speaking, "ex cathedra." Those who have a reverence for him as their religious teacher and who hear his instructions as such with respect, cannot throw off the habit when he gives utterance to his opinions and preferences regarding matters political. They receive his fallible, and it may be, foolish views on earthly subjects with the same devout attention and respect as they do his teachings and exhortations on spiritual matters. They have been taught to follow his advice implicitly in all things respecting faith and morals, and they naturally believe to be his duty to do as he tells them when he undertakes to advise them how they are to vote.

It is all very well to say that a clergyman has the same rights as every other man to exercise his political privileges, but every man who reflects can see how very easy it is for a religious instructor to use his influence to lead his flock to a certain religious or political end. It is because this has been so frequently done, and because clergymen cannot take a part in political contests without, to a certain extent, doing it—whether intentionally or not—that their interference in political contests is looked upon with jealousy and distrust by politicians of all parties and in every country.

AN UNLUCKY CONSTITUTION. Haldimand is a most unfortunate country. It is certainly the worst county in the Dominion in which to run an election. There must be something in the air that surrounds it which is bad for candidates for legislative honors. It is very hard to get elected there, and it is harder still to keep the seat after the election is over. During the course of the very last year with Haldimand elections, Little devices which other candidates report to in other counties are fatal when tried by the man who engineer elections in Haldimand. We will do so say that the constituency of Haldimand is hopelessly corrupt, for that would offend a great many of its electors who would seem to buy or sell constituents could buy and that his resignation would be acceptable, poor Tannor estimated, no doubt, that his goal to carry out the policy of the government should meet with such an ungrateful return, very reluctantly sent the President his resignation. It is but fair to say that Corporal Tannor's integrity is not questioned. He is not a knave. He is from a business point of view, simply a fool. His want of business capacity is said to be simply phenomenal.

WELL-FOUNDED COMPLAINTS. We see by the Report of the Board of Trade that it has been impossible to obtain from the Dominion Government an explicit answer to the question: "Whether in the event of his being considered advisable to form a Harbor Trust for the Port of Victoria, to what extent would the Dominion Government be willing to guarantee the interest upon debentures for the purpose of acquiring by purchase the foreshore rights and that of carrying out otherwise the purpose of the Trust?"

CONTRADICTORY STORIES. Fifty American working men and working women went to Europe early in the summer for the purpose of making observations on the state of industry in the Old World and on the condition of the laboring classes. They returned home a few days ago and the American newspapers make them say that everything they saw in Europe was inferior to similar articles manufactured in the United States.

"A MASTER THIEF." Public attention in the United States is again directed to the arch-scoundrel Henry A. Ives. He is certainly the most audacious thief that the century has produced. His plunder was railroads, and he counted his spoils by the million.

A SURE CURE. Commenting upon the Haldimand election case and insisting upon the necessity of doing something to put down bribery and corruption, the Toronto Mail says:
