NEW MEMBERS

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Chief Electoral Officer certificates of the election and return of Hon. Roch La Salle, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Joliette, and Dean Heap, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Spadina.

INTRODUCTION OF NEW MEMBERS

Hon. Roch La Salle, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Joliette, introduced by Right Hon. Joe Clark and Hon. Flora MacDonald.

Dan Heap, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Spadina, introduced by Messrs. Edward Broadbent and Neil Young.

THE HONOURABLE MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE

REGRETTABLE ABSENCE THROUGH ILLNESS

Madam Speaker: We have introduced two new members, but there is a very old member who is not in the House today, and that is very unusual. Of course I am speaking of the Hon. Stanley Knowles, the member for Winnipeg North Centre. He has just called me on the phone to tell me that he is with us all in thought, and I think he is doing pretty well. I know I express the sentiment of all this House by sending him our best wishes for a speedy recovery. Get well, Stanley, fight through it, and come back very soon!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO NEW PAGES

Madam Speaker: I would also like to welcome our pages who are with us for the first time today and say to them that they are the darlings of the House, that we always appreciate everything they do for us and that we hope they will find this experiment rewarding.

DOMINION CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS ACT

JUDGMENT ON SPADINA ELECTION PETITION

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received from the Hon. Mr. Justice Osler and the Hon. Mr. Justice Cromarty, both of the Supreme Court of Ontario, the two judges appointed for the trial of a petition pursuant to the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, a certificate of judgment in the matter of an election in the electoral district of Spadina.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ASSASSINATION OF EGYPTIAN PRESIDENT, ANWAR SADAT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan):

That the House express its deep sense of shock and sadness over the assassination of the late statesman, Anwar Sadat, President of Egypt, and send its sincere condolences to the family of the late President and to the Egyptian people, and that the House express its renewed support for the continuation and implementation of the Camp David Peace Accords, which are a message of peace that the late President brought to this troubled region.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF POLISH REFUGEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Because of the increasing concern over the political upheaval in Poland, and because citizens of that country are suffering from obvious hardships, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That the Canadian government act quickly to ensure that those Polish citizens seeking refugee status in Canada be accepted as conventional refugees; that provision be made within the refugee quota to allow Canada to accept more Polish refugees than presently announced by the minister, in view of the ever-increasing numbers in Polish refugee camps in Austria; and that the Canadian Polish Congress be commended for, and aided in, its efforts to assist needy Polish entrants to Canada.

Madam Speaker: Does the House give its consent to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR REDUCTION OF INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter which has now reached crisis proportions to Canada's farming, small business and fishing communities.

High interest rates are bludgeoning these critical economic sectors, as demonstrated in the 26 per cent increase in business bankruptcies between the months of August and September. In light of this catastrophic situation I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That the Liberal government admit that its historic high interest rate policy has failed, and that this House urge the government to take immediate steps to reduce interest rates and refrain from driving these critical economic groups to their knees.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED MEASURES TO AID FARM INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, at a meeting with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on October 8, the wives of some 300 farmers from the Bruce-Grey constituency, and later, a Port Elgin Chamber of Commerce meeting of 275 people, confirmed the crushing impact of high interest rates on the Canadian farm community. So I rise on this matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the terms of Standing Order 43.

In light of the number of farm bankruptcies, which are up 147 per cent over the 1979 figures, the record number of forced sales and foreclosures, the record rate of Farm Credit Corporation interest rates, the near depletion of the Farm Credit Corporation lending budget, and the resulting threat to Canada's food security because of the total lack of government action and commitment in solving or alleviating any of these problems, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise):

● (1415)

That the government immediately enact the appropriate measures necessary to meet this national farm crisis, measures such as the immediate infusion of funds for the Farm Credit Corporation lending budget, the extension of the Small Business Development Bond to unincorporated farmers, and a national moratorium on farm bankruptcies, foreclosures and forced sales, until the merits of each case can be examined and new measures can be enacted.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE IMPACT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, having returned from extensive visits with many Canadians and seeing first-hand the heartbreaking results of this Liberal government's deliberate high interest rate policy and the results of this Liberal government's deliberate high unemployment levels which have jumped to 8.2 per cent in September, the highest increase in unemployment in one month since 1945, of which 45 per cent are youth aged 15 to 24, and after seeing the demoralizing effect they are having on small merchants, the agricultural sector, and the human suffering and weeping in Canadian families because of the loss of their homes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie):

That this House instructs the Minister of Finance to introduce immediately measures to alleviate the impact of record-high interest rates and record-high unemployment levels among our youth, single-parent families, home owners, the agricultural sector, and small merchants.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

WINTER OLYMPICS

CHOICE OF CALGARY AS SITE FOR 1988 GAMES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the city of Calgary's successful bid to host the 1988 Winter Olympics and the strong commitment of support which this project has received from the federal, provincial and municipal governments, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Gingras):

That this House express its pride in and continuing support for the 1988 Calgary Olympic Games which will not only act as an inspiration for our own young athletes but will also serve once again to reflect the greatness of Canada to the rest of the world.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Public Interest Research Group in the United States has released a report indicating that the water in the Niagara River presents a serious health threat; and in view of the fact that some of the toxic chemicals present in the Niagara system are proven to cause cancer, birth defects and damage to the central nervous system; I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar):

That unpolluted bottled water be provided to all those communities presently drawing water from the Niagara system until such time as an independent panel of scientific experts reviews the findings of the Research Group and all current medical information on the pollutants.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSING

CALL FOR LEGISLATION TO PROTECT HOME OWNERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas about half a million mortgages will come up for renewal during the next 12 months, and every night more than a million pillows are wet with the tears of Canadians who fear the loss of their homes because they are unable to meet the gigantic increases in interest rates which the Liberal government permits and condones, and whereas the mortgagor, in many cases, rather than foreclose, forces the sale of a house at bargain prices, which robs the mortagee of his house and his equity in the house, therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

That the Right Hon. Prime Minister bring in legislation at once to protect the homes of Canadians who are caught in this high interest squeeze.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

SUGGESTED REVIEW BY STANDING COMMITTEE OF INTEREST RATE POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The government's high interest rate policy has resulted in interest rates in Canada 4 to 5 per cent higher than those in the United States. For example, the Bank of Canada rate is 18.95 per cent, the Euro-dollar rate is 14.5 per cent. This government's T-bills are quoted at 18.55 per cent; American T-bills are 13.53 per cent. Banker's acceptance money for 30 days in Canada is quoted at 18.9 per cent; in the United States at 14.35 per cent. First mortgages in the United States are 16 to 16.5 per cent, and Americans deduct the interest from their income taxes. Candians pay 21 per cent and more without relief. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), the same motion moved in a previous session by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray):

That this House immediately order its Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to undertake an immediate review of the interest rate policy of this government and of the Bank of Canada, and that for this purpose the Governor of the Bank and the Minister of Finance appear before it to explain their actions.

FISHERIES

CLOSING OF NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT SCALLOP FISHERY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc), under the recommendation of the New Brunswick members of the Scallop Fisheries Board, and under protest of the Prince Edward Island members, has closed down the scallop fishery in the Northumberland Strait, leaving Island fishermen, who want to work, unemployed, at a time when unemployment among Atlantic fishermen is reaching crisis proportions. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That this House condemns the Minister of Fisheries for ignoring the welfare of P.E.I. fishermen by again rendering a political decision in favour of his own constituents.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given that an independent American study has indicated that the sewage treatment plant at Niagara Falls, New York, has been dumping virtually untreated chemical waste into the Niagara River for three years, and further given that, in spite of his campaign promises, the Prime Minister has failed to press U.S. authorities on this grave bilateral issue, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That this House condemn the Prime Minister for once again failing to live up to his campaign commitments, thereby assuring Canadians' lack of trust in him and his government.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE OF PRESENTATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister, who will know that the lack of interest in economic policy shown by his government has, over the last several months, driven literally thousands of Canadians out of their homes, out of their businesses, out of their farms. The Minister of Finance has been vaguely promising that a budget will be introduced. Can the Prime Minister tell the House of Commons today the date on which a budget will be presented to this House of Commons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I should first point out to the Leader of the Opposition that what he calls lack of interest by this government in economic matters has resulted in a growth in Canada during the first nine months of this year of 6.3 per cent in real terms. That is real growth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: It is certain when the economy grows at this speed that Canadians' expectations remain high. People who are unable to defend themselves, those who were mentioned in the various Standing Order 43 motions that you have heard just now, those who have been hard hit by this inflationary process, by this high growth that goes to others and not to them—it is certain those people need consideration.

I understand the party opposite has been waiting all summer to talk about the economy. I hope they will talk about the economy and not just ask questions, but that they will be prepared to listen to the answers. Some of them will be mentioned in the budget, Madam Speaker. The Minister of Finance has indicated repeatedly, I believe, that he plans to bring down a budget before the end of this month.

ASSISTANCE FOR HOME OWNERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I guess it is no surprise to the people of the country, particularly those who have been forced out of their homes, out of their businesses and out of their farms, that even after three months around the world, three months away from here, this Prime Minister still cannot decide on a budget date. He might be able to wait; the people of Canada who are the victims of his economic policy cannot wait. If he cannot give the House of Commons a straight answer on that, perhaps he should go away again and let the country carry on in his absence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Surely the Minister of Finance must know; perhaps he can brief the Prime Minister on the date. We would like to know the date of the budget. Also we would like to know, if the Prime Minister could address his mind to it, what the Government of Canada will do to help, among others, one of the groups of victims most acutely hurt by the disinterest of his government, by the refusal of the Liberal government to care about the economy, the Canadians who are being forced out of their homes.

I remind the Prime Minister that his own throne speech indicated that the government will act to assist those unable to bear the burden of renegotiating their home mortgages in the present abnormal situation so that the spectre of foreclosure can be avoided. That spectre of foreclosure has become a reality to hundreds of thousands of Canadians across the country. I want to know from the Prime Minister whether there will be, in the budget that ministers refuse to announce the date of, specific help by the Government of Canada for those Canadians who are being forced out of their homes. Will that be a part of the budget whenever the budget comes down?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition is asking me to tell him, before the budget date, what will be in the budget. I am sure he would be the first to complain that I was breaking the conventions of this House—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —by letting out budget secrets. He himself has had some experience as prime minister, and he knows that budgets are only known on the dates that they are read by the Minister of Finance.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF ASSISTANCE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister well knows that while he might be sitting in some comfort, a lot of Canadians across the country are not, and that many Canadians now who are forced to consider renewal of their mortgages—and there will be half a million of them in the next twelve months—need to know immediately. They cannot wait for whatever date is in the mind of the Minister of Finance; they cannot wait for the Prime Minister to turn his attention back to Canadian affairs. They need to know immediately what kind of help will be offered. The Minister of Housing has said one thing. It has been contradicted by the Minister of Finance.

Could not the Prime Minister indicate to the House now that there will be help for Canadians who will be forced out of their homes? Can he not tell the House of Commons and the people of Canada who are waiting for his word, now that he is back in the country, what kind of help will be available to them to stop them from being forced out of their homes, forced to give up their investment, forced to abandon their future, because the Liberal Party does not care about the economy of the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the reason is obvious why the Leader of the Opposition wants me to tell what is in the budget before the budget date. The Leader of the Opposition is very anxious to start making speeches that he plans to make during the budget debate. I encourage him to continue to rehearse those speeches. I am sure he can improve them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I think the House will realize that his third question is an exact repetition of his second. He wants to know whether the budget will contain certain things, and I repeat that it is against the conventions of this House to say what is in the budget before the budget is brought down.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR A MEASURE TO OFFSET HIGH INTEREST RATES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question will also be directed—

Some hon. Members: He has not changed—

Mr. La Salle: —Madam Speaker, those opposite have not changed, and in view of the way things are going in Canada, I came back just in time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. La Salle: My question is supplementary to those asked by my leader to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, whom I salute, and he has certainly noted since his return from his travels that the present economic situation is a major concern to thousands of Quebecers and Canadians especially with regard to interest rates.

The Prime Minister has refused to reassure the home owners and tenants who will be faced with great hardship and guarantee that his budget will include concrete measures to help them keep their homes while at the same time promoting a recovery of the building industry.

Can the Right Hon. Prime Minister assure the House today, since thousands of Canadians are listening to us, that action will be taken to help these Canadians keep their homes and promote recovery of the housing industry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, you will recognize that the hon. member for Joliette, whom I salute in return, has asked exactly the same question as his leader. This does not surprise me, but I wish to remind him that in this House, both languages are official, unlike the situation in that other assembly to which he tried to be elected. Here, both languages are official; we have heard the question in English and he is now repeating his question in French, which is fine. I shall point out to him as I pointed out to his leader that the budget should be tabled before the end of the month and that it is the practice that the contents of the budget be not revealed before the evening when it is brought down, and that if he is so set on contributing to the preparation of a budget, he has chosen the wrong capital and the wrong party.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, if the Right Hon. Prime Minister wanted to tell me that he speaks English better than I do, he is quite right. However, the Prime Minister has not proven to be more able than I in economic matters, for instance.

Madam Speaker, my question is this: In view of his answer, the Prime Minister shows an almost outrageous indifference for small home owners and tenants. The Prime Minister is aware that these people are worried, but I wonder if he realizes the extent of that concern among small home owners and thousands of his fellow citizens. The only thing that I want to know, Madam Speaker, is whether the Prime Minister, or else his Minister of Finance, if the Prime Minister is not able to do so, can assure these people that there will be compensation formulae, corrective action and direct financial assistance available to them so that they can keep their homes and remain good citizens?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I should point out to the hon. member that I made no comment about the way he speaks English, or French for that matter. I simply said that he was repeating in French the same question as the one his leader asked in English. If he insists on asking it a second time—

Mr. La Salle: We want an answer.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, but I have already replied to the leader, of the hon. member for Joliette. If he wants me to repeat it, I shall—

An hon. Member: Yes, or no.

Mr. Trudeau: It is either yes or no, Madam Speaker, or else it is yes and no, but in any case, the hon. member will find out on budget night.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DEPARTMENTAL DOCUMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister who is allegedly responsible for housing. The government has been attempting to downplay the families who are going to be confronted right now with the housing crisis. I should like to ask the minister if he will produce the secret document that has been prepared in his department that shows how 85,000 Canadian families will lose their homes by Christmas because they cannot afford to renew their mortgages. Also, will he assure us that the government will take action to make sure that those families can maintain their homes?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question does reflect the Prime Minister's comment on conventions of the House. The Leader of the New Democratic Party, I am sure, is referring to a document which was prepared for me as the minister and which, under the new information act, would be made available when that legislation is presented to the House. Following those conventions, that will be available.

I would hasten to add, Madam Speaker, that it is commonly known how many mortgages are up for renewal in the next 12 months, and the difficulties that Canadians are facing at the present interest rates are commonly known.

Mr. Nielsen: What is the remedy facing us now?

Mr. Cosgrove: Those are facts that are known and recited by members on both sides.

Mr. Crosbie: What are you doing about it?

Mr. Cosgrove: As the Prime Minister indicated, although we await the budget, I invite you to take a look at what this government has done in the last 12 months in housing.

An hon. Member: We have!

Mr. Cosgrove: I invite you to consider, for example, that unlike the previous administration, we reintroduced support for the industry through the MURB provision in the last budget. That resulted, I am sure, Madam Speaker, in an additional 15,000 starts in the last 12 months. On top of that, to assist Canadians of modest income, we increased social housing under section 56(1). That is a good record, and I am sure that record will be continued.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the minister should try that answer on the 85,000 families who are going to lose their homes.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA BE INSTRUCTED TO IMPLEMENT LOWER INTEREST RATE POLICY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question now for the smiling Minister of Finance. The Governor of the Bank of Canada just recently said that, notwithstanding the insignificant drop in interest rates, his policy as Governor of the Bank of Canada is that Canadians should expect, for the foreseeable future, a continuation of the high interest rate policy.

My question to the minister is straightforward. Since the Liberals promised in the last election campaign to bring down interst rates, will he instruct the Governor of the Bank of Canada now, to implement that policy, or will he fire him?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I was smiling, but that question certainly would put a frown on anyone's face who is interested in examining the economic realities we face and who is dealing with them in a serious way, rather than through rhetoric. The hon. member knows that the quickest way to bring down interest rates in Canada is not through firing the Governor of the Bank.

Mr. Crosbie: Fire the government.

Mr. MacEachen: He ought to know that the best way to bring down—

Mr. Crosbie: Let's have an election.

Mr. MacEachen: —interest rates in this country is to bring down the rate of inflation. That is precisely the argument that the Governor of the Bank has made. I hope that at some point the argument will sink into the opaque mind of the hon. member.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, so much for another Liberal promise that has clearly been broken in that answer.

LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH ECONOMIC SITUATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I should now like to ask the Prime Minister a question which has absolutely nothing to do with budget conventions. We have been away for three months in recess, and during that period record numbers of small businesses have gone broke, farmers are losing their farms, and there has been a 100,000 increase in unemployment in one month. Right across the ledger there is economic disaster. Could the Prime Minister tell us why we came back this week and there is not a single piece of new legislation to deal with the economic crisis before us?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is referring to the record of the economy. In my first answer today I indicated that, indeed, there were many citizens in this economy and many groups in the population who are suffering from the inflation this government is trying to fight, and that it would be our intention in economic measures in the future, as it was in the past, to alleviate the suffering of those who are in most need. I do not have to remind the hon. member of our increase in the guaranteed income supplement to the old, and so on. It is fully indexed.

An hon. Member: It's all gone!

Mr. Trudeau: Well, the hon. member says, "It's all gone." He does not realize that it is fully indexed and that, as inflation goes up, these pensions go up. The nature of inflation is that some people get hurt more than others. That is why we have brought in and we will bring in measures to help them. However, I do not believe the hon. member is showing the true picture when he quotes a few indicators of people who are really suffering, and says, that that is how the economy is performing. I told the Leader of the Opposition that in the first nine months of this year real growth in this country went up at 6.3 per cent. That is higher than the United States, which is way below that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: No, no, I understand. If the hon. member wants me to tell that to a person who has just lost his job or is losing his house, this will not be a consolation. I just want to explain to the hon. member that when he says that the economy is performing badly, he should say that it is performing badly for some people, not for Canadians—

An hon. Member: Most of them!

Mr. Clark: You're all right, Pierre.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And Chénier, you're all right, too.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Madam Speaker, this is the first day of this sitting, and it seems to me that we are giving a bad example to the pages whom Your Honour has welcomed so generously.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order. The pages were warned by me this morning that there are rough days in the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Oral Questions

MEASURES REQUESTED TO AID FARM INDUSTRY

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, I do have an example of the sector of the economy where it is not functioning very well. I want to pose a question which is similar to the subject matter raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Bruce-Grey, in his motion under Standing Order 43. While the Minister of Agriculture wrestles with his conscience and soberly considers his future, I want to put my question to the Minister of Finance, if I could get his attention.

I am certain that the minister, through dialogue which he has had with his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, is very much aware of the fact that a combination of high interest rates, high farm input costs, coupled with low market prices, has caused a financial crisis in the farm community today. In the short term, because I really think that it is serious, would the Minister of Finance now announce and implement a moratorium on farm bankruptcies, foreclosures, and power of sales immediately? Second, would he also transfer immediately—now—an amount of money in the neighbourhood of $500 million to the Farm Credit Corporation to be used exclusively for refinancing the agricultural industry today? These are short-term solutions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member that among the sectors of the economy that are currently receiving my consideration as I prepare for a budget, is the farming sector. I have had a number of discussions with the Minister of Agriculture, with farm representatives, and with representatives of the provincial governments. I will be addressing all the questions of the economy in the budget. But I would ask the hon. member—

Mr. Crosbie: You will be stripping them, you mean.

Mr. MacEachen: —to consider whether he is really serious about the suggestion of transferring half a billion dollars at the present time in the light of the strictures which I have received so frequently from his leader—

An hon. Member: How about your energy tax?

Mr. MacEachen: —and from the former finance critic, about increasing the deficit. The advice from that party has been to decrease the deficit. I heard the Leader of the Opposition, not so long ago, with his own voice, advise me—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —advise me, by radio, to reduce the deficit. Therefore, while I am prepared to consider specific proposals, I believe that I would like to get one which is more selective than the rather huge deficit-increasing suggestion that the hon. member has made.

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Obviously, if he had a little better management, he could at least come up with an extra $1 billion, to say nothing as far as what he will come up with concerning the new national energy agreement. I believe that is in the neighbourhood of $50 billion. Perhaps that is an area at which the minister could start looking.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: I do appreciate the problem of the Minister of Finance, but when he is putting together his budget would he consider accepting the challenge of the Bank of Montreal as it relates to the amendments required in the Small Business Development Bond? Would he also seriously consider the implementation of the agri-bond principle as well as the annual averaging trust account principle? Would he give very serious consideration to those three recommendations?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am familiar with the suggestion made by the Bank of Montreal with respect to the extension of the Small Business Development Bond program to unincorporated farmers. Indeed, the Bank of Montreal has said that it expected to make this financial instrument available to unincorporated farmers in the expectation that the Minister of Finance would pick up the bill. Last week I had a suggestion from presidents of two of the banks. They proposed another scheme which involved the Minister of Finance and the taxpayers picking up the bill. In these circumstances I would like the banks to strive more diligently to find schemes which would cause them to bleed a bit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

MEASURES TO AID MARITIME REGION

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the unprecedented increase in unemployment in the Atlantic provinces, the highest in Canada, as well as the severe drop in employed people, and in view of the closure of fisheries plants, lumber mills and small businesses, and whereas the maritimes are the first hit, the hardest hit, and the last to recover from the effects of high interest rates and restrictive monetary policies, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he is contemplating any new and immediate initiatives or strategies to deal with these urgent matters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO HOME OWNERS RENEWING MORTGAGES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): I thank the minister for his answer. I had hoped that the poor people of the maritimes might receive a more encouraging comment. When will the minister make a commitment to do something for Canadians who are losing their homes because of high interest rates, high home heating costs and high unemployment? Since the previous government had plans to deal with all three of these problems, will the minister make a commitment to eliminate at least one of these situations?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has raised the question of home owners who may be facing and are facing renewal of mortgages at much higher rates of interest. There is no question about the fact that that is a serious concern to the government and to myself, as minister of finance. I have indicated to the House several times that I have been involved with the financial institutions which, in my view, have a responsibility in this situation.

Mr. Clark: Who elected the banks, Allan?

Mr. MacEachen: That includes the banks, it includes the mortgage companies, and it includes the credit unions and the caisses populaires, all of which are involved in the mortgage business and deal directly with home owners facing renewal. The object of my several meetings with the representatives of these institutions—

Mr. Clark: Was to duck.

Mr. MacEachen: —was to induce them to do what they could to enter into special arrangements to permit home owners to carry their obligations. I am happy to say that in certain instances, flexibility in arrangements has been offered. For example, the caisses populaires have flexible arrangements permitting their customers to carry on. I believe more can be done by the financial institutions to offer special arrangements.

• (1450)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Twenty four per cent is flexibility?

Mr. MacEachen: Something has been done, but more can be done. After their part has been played, then it will be a question for the government to determine what its responsibility is under the circumstances.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA BE INSTRUCTED TO LOWER INTEREST RATES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Clark: There isn't one.

Mr. Heap: If the Minister of Finance was in Canada during the month of August, he may recall that there was an expression of a sense of outrage by the electors of the riding of Spadina over the government's policy of trying to cure high prices with high interest rates. In fact the electors of Spadina sent me here to remind him of that particular sense of outrage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Heap: My question to the minister on behalf of the electors of Spadina is simply this: when does the Minister intend to give instructions to the Governor of the Bank of Canada to lower the interest rate structure to a tolerable level?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, before answering the hon. member's question I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate him on his first question in the House of Commons—

Mr. Crosbie: And for getting rid of Coutts.

Mr. MacEachen: —and to say in reply that if he reflected upon the situation for a bit, I think he would agree with me that an instruction to the Governor of the Bank to lower interest rates might have the desired effect in the short run. But it would lay the foundation for even greater inflation and higher interest rates after that. I am sure that the electors of Spadina did not have that counterproductive solution in mind when they sent the hon. member to Parliament.

ALLEVIATION FOR THE UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also to the Minister of Finance. On Friday, for example, we learned that another 144,000 Canadians have become martyrs to the theory that high interest rates will cure inflation and restore the economy. These people do remind us that the minister's cure for inflation is worse than the disease itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Heap: Since the minister seems unwilling to consider any change in policy regarding high interest rates, what does he intend to do to alleviate the misery that is being encountered now by a million or more Canadians who are unemployed as a result of high interest rates which are mowing down employers?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I take exception to the hon. member's diagnosis of the problem. It is not the anti-inflationary stance of the government that is causing unemployment, it is inflation itself that is causing unemployment and slow growth in all of the industrialized countries of the world.

I want to tell the hon. member that unless we succeed in getting inflation down and bend every effort to getting the rate of inflation down, then there is not much hope of growth or future employment for Canada, or any other industrialized country for that matter. That is the situation.

RAILWAYS

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and it concerns the transportation of dangerous goods. Since Bill C-18 was passed over a year ago and since the Canadian Transport Commission issued its regulations following up on the Grange inquiry's report, a couple of weeks ago, could the minister tell us what is the status of his ministry's work with respect to the regulations to supplement Bill C-18 and thus bring us safer transportation methods for dangerous goods?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is right in identifying these two developments as being of major importance to the transportation of dangerous goods. Indeed, the bill the House passed a year ago has progressed. Laws have been passed by some of the provinces, which are complementary to that bill. Regulations are being drafted. It is expected they will be ready by early summer, 1982. As well, federal inspectors are being appointed, and so on.

With respect to the Grange report, 12 recommendations have already been acted upon and three are now the subject of decisions by the CTC. The Canadian Transport Commission will be issuing orders in the coming days. Therefore, progress is being accomplished, and I would be delighted to send a more detailed report to my hon. friend.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO HOME OWNERS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for housing whose earlier response indicated his insensitivity to the social unrest that the government's high mortgage rate policy is causing to so many Canadians. For instance, thousands of women are being forced into the labour market in order to bring a second income into the family hoping that with it they will be able to keep their homes, but in a stagnant economy jobs cannot be found. Without jobs, people are unable to keep their homes. It is a vicious circle caused by high interest rates.

Is the minister at all prepared to do anything, anything except tell home owners, as he did on September 15, to grit their teeth and hang on until the budget, because I can assure him that there are a good many people who would rather sink their teeth into the government?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would like to assure the hon. member that earlier in September, I had the opportunity to meet with—

Mr. Crosbie: Surrounded by mounties.

Mr. Cosgrove: —approximately 50 people representing those who expressed the same sentiments, probably in a much more vociferous manner than did the hon. member this afternoon. Some of the positions presented to me on the day of the convoy of anger to the House were from people in the same circumstances as those which the hon. member has just expressed. Eloquent expressions were made to me and to other members of our caucus. We listened to them for approximately one hour. I communicated their message to members of my government and to my caucus. I believe the Minister of Finance has responded to that question. He has indicated that along with other people in the marketplace, such as the financial institutions playing their role and taking their responsibilities seriously, the government too will take its responsibility.

RENTAL OF VANCOUVER APARTMENT FOR SENIOR CIVIL SERVANT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the minister has made it clear just in that last response that he has done nothing, and it does not appear as though the government is prepared to do anything. Since he is not taking his responsibilities seriously as minister of housing to thousands of Canadian families who are losing their homes, can he tell me why he, as Minister of Public Works—or perhaps it was the Secretary of State for External Affairs—authorized the rental of an apartment in Vancouver at $4,000 a month for the next five years for a senior civil servant in charge of transpo? He does nothing for beleaguered home owners, but he authorizes the expenditure of $4,000 a month in rent for a senior civil servant. What in heaven's name is he thinking of?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, in response to the hon. member's introduction that I am not taking my responsibilities seriously, I would like to assure her that I am. I would like to assure her that since interest rates have gone into the above 15 per cent category I have met not only with home owners and people affected in that regard, but I have also met with people associated with housing construction. As a matter of fact I will be meeting with representatives of HUDAC tomorrow afternoon. I have met with provincial ministers responsible for housing. I have also prepared advice for the government, which it is presently considering. I have taken those responsibilities seriously, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Kempling: What about the $4,000 a month expenditure?

• (1500)

Mr. Cosgrove: I would say, Madam Speaker, that it is very easy for any member in this house to take any particular item of expenditure and throw it up as an example in that scene. But I would ask them to consider as well the increased commitment of this government, for example, to those most in need, the co-ops and non-profit people and those with low and middle incomes who have been assisted recently right across the country with the increased allotment for those kinds of people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VIA RAIL

CUTBACKS IN PASSENGER SERVICE—REQUEST THAT MINISTER RECONSIDER DECISION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Given the record high level of unemployment currently and the fact that the Minister of Transport, by his statement of July 27, in which he announced the cutback of Via Rail service by 20 per cent, will directly affect the jobs of 1,600 railway workers, plus countless hundreds of others who will be indirectly affected, and given that this decision will inflict severe hardship upon millions of Canadians who need and use the trains, not to mention the economic impact particularly with regard to tourism, and given the fact that since the minister's announcement we now have a new energy agreement with projected gasoline prices rising to $4 a gallon, which in itself will necessitate an expansion and further development of public transportation systems rather than a reduction—in light of these new factors I would ask the minister if he will not now reconsider the shortsighted, illogical and arbitrary decision he announced by way of a press conference on July 27, thereby denying Parliament, the CTC and the Canadian public an opportunity to respond to his decision?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I find answering the question is not easy because my friend posed at least three questions in the same sentence, that is, energy, the effect on labour, and other matters.

I have a suggestion to make to him. There is one thing I have missed throughout the summer. It is the lack, unfortunately, of the opportunity to meet my colleagues on both sides of the House to explain that decision we made on July 27. If he wants to co-operate with others I am sure a way will be found for the committee on transport to invite me to appear, at which time I will go and explain and justify the policy in terms of all the questions the member has raised.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, I am sure the minister knows very well that the hearings we conducted were public and open to anyone, any Canadian or any group of Canadians who wanted to appear, and he certainly would have been welcome. As a matter of fact a lot of Liberals, members who call themselves Liberals but who have some second thoughts about it now, did appear before us, as did members of other political parties. Just for the purpose of clarification, Madam Speaker, is the minister saying in his answer that he is prepared to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Transport before a decision is taken? If the minister were to do that I think it would certainly restore some confidence in the mind of the Canadian public that there is in fact some semblance of democracy in this country. If he does not, then the minister is clearly breaking with tradition, historical patterns, and perhaps even convention.

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, I did not intend to do that. What I had in mind was that during the summer the committee had a mandate to investigate generally transportation matters in Quebec and Ontario, if my memory serves me well enough. It seems to me that if the committee wanted to hear our explanation of the policy, that could have been located within its mandate.

My hon. friend is quite right when he says that 1,600 employees of either VIA or CN and CP will be affected. My hon. friend is aware that $30 million are in a program to take care of the situation by way of pre-pensioning, by retraining and so on and so forth. There are answers to the three questions he has raised and I am looking forward to the opportunity of giving them.

REQUEST THAT STANDING COMMITTEE CONSIDER MATTER OF PASSENGER TRAIN ABANDONMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport, who has been described as the worst thing to happen to passenger trains since Jesse James. Jesse James held up the railroads, and the transport minister is holding up 1.2 million VIA Rail passengers.

Since the federal government has bypassed public hearings by the Canadian Transport Commission, has ignored the demands of the public for better train service, and has violated statutory agreements and federal and provincial statutes, will the minister now at least refer this matter of passenger train abandonment to the CTC or refer it to the Standing Committee on Transport? Rather than just showing up and explaining what he has already done, will he refer it to the committee in such a way that the committee might have an opportunity to undo the damage he has already done? Will he consider doing that?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have already explained quite a number of times why the government felt it should go by way of orders in council, which is quite legal. The reasons are essentially two. The first one is that such a reference to the CTC was made before, in 1976, and the results were not those that could have been expected. That is the first one. The second reason is simply that had we gone to the CTC we would have had to give indications or directives to the CTC which would have been considered by my hon. friends as a disguised way of giving orders.

Figures have been mentioned, for example, that this decision will affect 1.2 million travellers. That is not so. The commuters in this 1.2 million figure will continue to commute. The only thing we have suggested is that the provincial governments should take responsibility for those commuter services, and I dare say they will.

REASONS FOR MINISTER'S DECISION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, it may be clear to the Minister of Transport why the government has done what it has done, but many Canadians fail to understand how the minister is going to improve train service, create jobs, save energy and promote national unity by abandoning the Atlantic Limited and the Super Continental, two of the most heavily patronized trains in Canada. We would like to know how he figured that one out. If the minister's case for abandonment is as good as he says it is, why is he afraid of scrutiny in a public forum, the transport committee, the Canadian Transport Commission or Parliament itself? The people of Canada are furious about these cutbacks and they want a chance to show how well-founded their anger is. They want to be able to show the minister. I ask the minister just what is he afraid of?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not know where my hon. friend was three or five minutes ago when I suggested—I was the first one to do it—I would go to the committee and give explanations of the announcement I made on July 27. I am sure that through the committee we would reach a great number of people. That is the answer I have given to the question already asked, three or five minutes ago.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO COMBAT UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. The minister will know that last month this country suffered the largest single increase in the jobless rate since 1945. He will also know there were 101,000 additional people unemployed in a single month. This now means we have in this country 980,000 people looking for jobs they cannot find. Those figures are devastating for the individuals involved and they should be unacceptable to the government. I ask the minister what he or his government intends to do to put these people back to work?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has referred to the unemployment statistic released for the last month for which the data is available. I must say that the figure came as a real surprise because the preceding figure was 7 per cent in August. It was the lowest unemployment figure in Canada since 1976. In addition to that, within the past year Canada was the only major country that showed a decline in unemployment. To record the largest single month-to-month increase ever in Canada was a very definite surprise and not forecasted by anybody. One wonders whether it represents a basic trend in the economy or whether it represents some aberration or a sampling error. In any event I take the hon. member's question at its face value and I wish to assure him that the over-all economic situation, including high and rising inflation and unemployment as registered last month, will be very much a part of the over-all economic policy I will be presenting as soon as possible in the budget.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, I might say that the people who are unemployed and looking for work regard this as more than a sampling technique, as I am sure he knows, and are very interested in something more solid. It is time, Madam Speaker, the minister got out of theory and into practice, because people are being hurt. In particular, when the minister was talking in the past about employment growth he always talked about an increase in growth. We have dropped in employment growth by 188,000 jobs since last May, when the minister took credit for it.

I would finally ask the minister, when he brings in his budget, when he deals with any economic statement he wants to make, will he bring in real programs that help real people, and simply not sit in his office theorizing on the phone?

An hon. Member: Real jobs, too!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am to some extent, surprised by the hon. member's question, suggesting that we are not interested in real people, that we are not developing programs for real people. It is my understanding that it was real Canadians who benefited from the best employment performance of any country over the last year. That occurred in Canada. We had the lowest unemployment figure in August that we have had in five years.

Mr. Crombie: Had.

Mr. MacEachen: We had the best unemployment drop—

An hon. Member: Give us an example.

Mr. MacEachen: —of any major country in the world, over the last year. But when these statistics—

An hon. Member: Bring yourself up to date.

Mr. MacEachen: —when these statistics were evident to the hon. member he was not getting up in his seat and saying, "Well done, you have helped real people in Canada." He gets up and talks when the figures get gloomy. It is my intention not to keep them gloomy, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I have time for one question more by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

REQUEST THAT MORTGAGE RATES BE REDUCED

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, interest rates are breaking families not only economically but, equally as important, they are breaking families socially. People are losing their families and their homes by being forced to take third and even fourth jobs to meet the increased rates.

Since the government claims that our interest rates must float around United States interest rates, will the government reduce mortgage interest rates to bring them into line with United States interest rates which are currently 3 per cent to 5 per cent lower than in Canada? Will the minister responsible for housing answer that question?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I believe that the Minister of Finance has addressed that question in his answers this afternoon. I would like to repeat part of my answer earlier pertaining to housing, that I am aware of the difficulties that are being faced by families. I have received representations not only in Ottawa, not only in this forum, but in forums right across the country. I have had the opportunity in the last couple of months to meet with people in every province. I am fully aware of the difficulties being faced by Canadians.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BENJAMIN—ABANDONMENT OF RAIL SERVICES BY ORDER IN COUNCIL

Madam Speaker: I have notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, the matter of which I gave you notice is one that I sincerely believe affects the rights and privileges of all members and infringes on and violates my privileges as a member of this place. It concerns order in council 1981-2171 which orders the abandonment of several passenger train services across Canada.

Madam Speaker, I am not here to ask you to judge the legality or illegality of the actions of the government; I am here to ask you to find a prima facie case of privilege. Based on the actions of the government, whether legal or illegal, my privileges have been infringed upon.

I will briefly cite three schedules in the order in council and then state my question of privilege, which is in three parts.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I would prefer it if the hon. member would state his question of privilege immediately; he can talk about the schedules later if there is a prima facie case. He must go immediately to why he feels his privilege has been abused.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My question of privilege is the following. Since order in council 1981-2171 overrides legislation of provinces and this Parliament, my privilege in carrying out my legislative duties has been violated because I am prevented by this order in council from asking for and obtaining a hearing before the Canadian Transport Commission on VIA Rail passenger routes ordered abandoned by the order in council. The law provides for such hearings. The order in council prevents it.

The legislature of British Columbia in 1910 ratified an agreement with the Canadian Northern Railway which said in part that, in exchange for property and timber rights, the company was bound by statute to maintain a regular daily first-class passenger and freight service between Victoria and Jasper. I would like to be able to present that case before the Canadian Transport Commission. The order in council prevents me from doing that.

Second, the order in council permits the government to take these actions without presenting legislation to which I could speak or endeavour to amend or improve or defeat. Also, the Canadian Transport Commission previously held hearings at which I and other hon. members appeared and ruled that 15 of these 21 routes ordered abandoned by the government in their order in council be retained.

I have no way of getting at this fiat in Parliament through the statutes or government legislation, or even through a private member's bill, certainly not in this session of Parliament. I can only do this through questions or debate which the government can, and will, ignore. I cannot appeal or attempt to amend, defeat or even approve legislation which violates legislation in several of the provinces and in the Parliament of Canada. I submit, Madam Speaker, that this impinges not only on the integrity of this place but on the individual rights of an hon. member.

In 1882 the Quebec legislature ratified an agreement with the CPR in which the province conveyed to the CPR ownership of the Quebec-Montreal-Ottawa and Occidental Railway.

Madam Speaker: Order please. I am afraid I have to interrupt the hon. member. It seems to me quite obvious from what he has said that he does not have a prima facie case of privilege. I must remind him to look at Beauchesne and realize for himself that if he is not satisfied with the manner in which the government has undertaken a certain action, that does not constitute a question of privilege. The dissatisfaction of the hon. member deals with an interpretation of the laws and statutes, and the hon. member of course knows that I am not able to interpret the laws and statutes. There is a difference in interpretation, I can see that; but it is not for me to determine that that difference in interpretation constitutes a question of privilege, and I will determine that that difference in interpretation does not constitute a question of privilege. I must therefore tell the hon. member that I cannot hear him any further and that he cannot pursue his question of privilege.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I was hoping you would allow me to complete the third point. There are three points in my question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: Order. In the time I gave the hon. member he was not able to convince me that he had a prima facie case of privilege. Therefore, I am afraid I cannot allow him any more time.

MR. JELINEK—INTRODUCTION OF SPORTS BETTING POOL—ALLEGED DENIAL BY MINISTER

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I did indeed serve notice of my question of privilege earlier today relating to questions I put to the minister of fitness and amateur sport on June 26 and June 30 relating to his subsequent announcement in the form of a press release dated September 14 regarding the introduction of a national sports betting pool. Obviously this is the first opportunity, Madam Speaker, to bring the matter to your attention and, in order to make my point, I hope you will permit me to quote quickly and briefly from Hansard for June 26, 1981.

In my first question to the minister I said in part, and I quote:

> It has now come to my attention that the minister is well on his way to extending federal gambling programs to what is known as all-sports betting—

The minister answered, also in part, by saying, and I quote:

> I would inform the hon. member that the government has no such plans.

I went on to say, and I quote again:

> Is the minister telling us that neither his department nor any other department of government has been considering sports betting? . . . At the same time can he assure the House that all-sports betting or any other new gambling operation will not be implemented, now or in the foreseeable future, by that government?

After sarcastically ridiculing me in this House the minister concluded, and I quote again from Hansard:

> We do not contemplate any such scheme as the hon. member has mentioned.

Just a few days later, on June 30, I brought to the attention of the minister a sample betting ticket entitled "Sports Select" which was produced by the federal government outlining 15 National Hockey League games to be bet on by the purchaser of the ticket to be sold to the Canadian public at one dollar.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I can see that the hon. member is making many quotations from Hansard, but I would like him to tell me right now where he feels that his privilege has been breached. I see nothing in the presentation he has made up until now which would allow me to find a prima facie case of privilege. Obviously the hon. member is not satisfied with an answer given to him by a minister, but that does not constitute a question of privilege, so the hon. member will have to make some effort to indicate to me where his privilege stands.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, if you will bear with me, you will note that I will conclude that the minister violated my privilege as a member of Parliament and, indeed, the privileges of all members of Parliament by either deliberately misleading the House at that time—as my colleague says, not telling the truth—

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member of course knows that he cannot say that a member has deliberately misled the House. He risks having to withdraw, and I ask him to withdraw that because he cannot say the minister did it deliberately. He might say he misled the House, but "deliberately" is a different matter. I ask the hon. member to rephrase his sentence so I can listen to him.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, it is on the record that he said he had no knowledge of this scheme, including no knowledge of this ticket which was produced by his department.

On September 14 the minister released a press release which says, in part, and I quote:

> —legislation would be introduced as soon as possible to permit the operation of a sports pool program—

The record says—not me but the record—that he was deliberately misleading the House. I am not saying that. The record of Hansard—

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot say indirectly something he would not be allowed to say directly. I ask him to withdraw that phrase. I cannot accept it in the House. Would the hon. member please rephrase that sentence and come to the point of his question of privilege; otherwise I will just have to cut him off.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, I withdraw the statement that he was deliberately misleading the House. The record shows that he deliberately misled the House. As a result—

Madam Speaker: Order. I am sorry. It is just as if the hon. member were quoting in the House an article in the newspaper saying something unparliamentary; he is using the subterfuge of quoting an article to say something he would not say directly. I think the hon. member can make his case without being unparliamentary, and I ask him to try to do that.

Mr. Jelinek: I have withdrawn my personal statement saying that he deliberately misled this House, but the rest of what I said stands.

The issue at hand in my question of privilege, therefore, is that both on June 26 and June 30 of 1981 the minister of fitness and amateur sport categorically denied that he, his department or any other department of his government was contemplating or even considering the introduction of a sports betting program—and the record speaks for itself—and then just a few months later while Parliament was in recess, on September 14 to be exact, the minister proudly and ceremoniously announced that indeed they would be announcing such a program. It is obvious, since a program of this magnitude requires months of preparation and planning, that the minister of fitness and amateur sport on those dates either misled this House or did not know what was happening in his department. If he was unaware of these activities in his department, then he should do the only honourable thing open to him, and that is to resign from his responsibility as a member of the cabinet within that portfolio.

If, on the other hand, he was intentionally misleading the House, then I humbly ask Your Honour to judge whether I do indeed have a prima facie case of privilege arising out of the minister's obvious attempts to mislead this House. Should your judgment be a positive one, it would be my intention to move that this whole matter be brought to the attention of the appropriate standing committee.

Madam Speaker: I think I can rule immediately on this matter. I think the hon. member will agree with me that it is obviously a matter for debate as to whether the minister was aware or could make the kind of statement he made in the House in answer to a question of the hon. member. A minister may change his mind. He may not be ready to make an announcement, and it is up to the minister to express the matter in the way he feels he might express it. He stands or falls on the way he deals with these questions in the House. Therefore that is a matter for debate. I am afraid it is not a question of privilege, and I do not find a prima facie case.

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order on that same question of privilege, if I may—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. No, the hon. member cannot come back on the ruling. I have already ruled, and I can hear no more on this particular question. The hon. member knows the rules. I am just applying the rules hon. members have made for themselves.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I would like to talk about something related to the preceding question of privilege. It is just related.

Many people in Canada say that this minister of fitness and amateur sport lied when he went ahead with this.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member is debating and referring directly to a question on which I have already ruled. I am afraid I cannot hear him.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TABLING OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL RESPECTING ROSTER OF CABINET MINISTERS AND APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 41(2), I am tabling a copy of an order in council establishing a roster of acting ministers and a copy of the membership of the cabinet committees. For the convenience of hon. members I suggest that these be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard. I am also tabling a copy of the order in council appointing parliamentary secretaries.

• (1530)

Madam Speaker: Is it agreed that these documents should be appended and printed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It is so ordered.

[Editor's Note: For text of orders in council above referred to, see Appendix "A".]

PETITIONS

MR. ROCHE—CANCELLATION OF VIA RAIL SERVICES THROUGH EDMONTON

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition protesting the government's decision to cancel transcontinental VIA Rail services through Edmonton. This petition, signed by 30,000 people in Edmonton, was assembled by the Kinsmen Club of Edmonton and handed to the PC VIA Rail task force in September. It is the largest petition ever sent to Ottawa from Alberta's capital. The petition requests that the government rescind its decision, and it assumes an added urgency with only 31 days left before the government's decision takes effect.

MR. CLARK—PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I ask leave to present petitions from home owners in Midland, Ontario and in Saint John, New Brunswick who were part of the convoy of anger who came to Parliament Hill to try to force this government to pay some attention to the plight of Canadians who are being forced to abandon their homes by the deliberate high-interest rate policies of the Government of Canada.

The petition from Midland, Ontario contains some 1,660 names; the petition from the Saint John Home Owners Association contains some 3,478. I should forewarn you, Madam Speaker, that there will be several more to come.

MR. WENMAN—PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present these initial petitions on behalf of a large number of Vancouver lower mainland residents who are in dire straits because of exorbitant interest rates and a corresponding lack of interest shown by the government toward the plight of home owners. The prohibitive cost of taking out new mortgages and renewing old mortgages are depriving Canadian citizens of their basic right to shelter. Therefore, these petitioners have asked as follows:

Wherefore the undersigned do hereby protest the Government of Canada's policy on housing and interest rates and do pray that the House of Commons will act to ensure that

1) Interest rates be reduced,

2) Adequate, affordable housing become recognized as a major government principle and objective—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member can only make a brief statement about the petition. He cannot read the whole petition. Once the House has received the petition, it will be examined and I will report on it later.

Mr. Wenman: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I refer you to Standing Order 67(8). I recognize that no debate shall be permitted upon the presentation of petitions. However, I refer you to the last part which gives an exception. That exception is:

—if it complains of some present personal grievance requiring an immediate remedy, the matter contained therein may be brought into immediate discussion.

Recognizing that all members of the House from all sides have just previously indicated the immediacy of and necessity for discussion of this matter, I think I can personally within my petition directly refer to matters of personal and immediate concern relating to individuals within this petition who, in effect, will lose their homes if we do not have discussion and a resolution.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Standing Order which the hon. member is now reading to me and on which he raises the point of order, I remind him, pertains to the report. The report has not yet been given; the hon. member is simply presenting his petition. He is allowed a very brief statement on the matter with which the petition deals. However, discussion takes place only later. The phrase the hon. member is reading refers to once the report has been made. It has not been made. The petition has to be examined by the bureau to ascertain whether it is in accordance with the rules and regulations of this House.

Mr. Wenman: For further clarification on the point of order, Madam Speaker, am I to understand that in presenting this petition it will be examined and, if found to be correct as to form, the Speaker will again call it in the House of Commons tomorrow in order that I might proceed with a debate, in view of the imminence regarding this matter?

Madam Speaker: The petition will be reported tomorrow or on another day. The hon. member is treating this petition as though it were a matter of immediate urgency, that it supersede everything in the House and be debated immediately. He has not made that kind of request to the House.

The hon. member may present the petition. I will report on it tomorrow or at another date. We will then see what rules apply. For the time being the hon. member may not continue with his statement. All he can do is let the House know the subject of that petition and he has done that.

MR. McDERMID—EFFECTS OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition from residents of the regional municipality of Peel and the regional municipality of Halton, which includes residents from my riding. I would like to present this petition on behalf of 6,725 people who feel that this government must enact legislation or introduce budgetary measures to assist all those suffering from the current level of interest rates, such as home owners, farmers, small businesses and those on fixed incomes.

I believe, Madam Speaker, that this petition reflects the attitude of most Canadians who feel that they have waited long enough for some form of remedial action by this government.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO INCREASE MAXIMUM AMOUNT OF LOANS

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-84, Act No. 2 to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I wanted to table some documents but I fear I missed my opportunity. I therefore seek the consent of the House to table the text of an agreement between Alberta and British Columbia and of an agreement between the Government of Canada and British Columbia.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to let the Minister table forthwith a document, as he intented to do?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It is agreed.

ENERGY

TABLING OF AGREEMENT WITH ALBERTA OF JOINT STATEMENT OF PRIME MINISTER AND OF PREMIER OF BRITISH COLUMBIA AND FISCAL MEASURES

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I wish to table, in both official languages, copies of an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Alberta on pricing and taxation of energy resources as well as the joint statement by the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of British Columbia on oil and gas prices and on the relevant tax measures. By courtesy, copies have already been distributed to members.

Madam Speaker: I have received three notices of motion for emergency debates, two of which are quite similar in nature. Since I received the one from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) first, I will allow him to make his statement first.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

[English]

THE ECONOMY

ALLEGED ECONOMIC CRISIS FACING CANADIANS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise to ask leave of the House of Commons, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), to move the adjournment of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the economic crisis facing Canadians today.

[Translation]

Over the three-month long summer recess, interest rates reached record highs and, in spite of minor fluctuations, they are not likely to fall below their current level in the foreseeable future. These rates have pushed Canada gradually toward a recession and have compelled many Canadians to either sell or give up their homes.

● (1540)

[English]

Canadians who have invested carefully in the future find themselves penalized by economic policies they could not have anticipated and from which there is absolutely no protection. I believe it is proper and necessary for the House to debate this spreading paralysis in the economic life of Canada so that the views of the House of Commons will be taken into account by the government as it prepares its fall budget—a budget which must find the means to halt the decline in economic performance before the current tragedy deepens.

This matter, Madam Speaker, is particularly urgent, given the refusal of the Government of Canada even today to indicate the date of a budget that could begin to address these problems. If you accept this application for debate, Madam Speaker, I am naturally prepared to move the appropriate motion.

Madam Speaker: The Chair does recognize the importance of the matter raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). In making a determination there are certain criteria set out in the Standing Orders that have to be considered, and that is what I have done in light of the notice which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has sent me.

For instance, the provisions of Section 16(d) of Standing Order 26 are, of course, very clear. It reads as follows:

—the motion must not revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session pursuant to the provisions of this Standing Order;—

As hon. members are aware, the subject of the economic conditions of this country was discussed, referring to some of the same matters mentioned in the advice, on December 18 and 19 of last year in a marathon debate under the provisions of this Standing Order. This is still the same session.

The Chair has on other occasions tended to resist applications dealing with matters that appear to be of a chronic or continuing nature, as opposed to sudden or unexpected occurrences.

[Translation]

Although I recognize the merits of the arguments put forward by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) in his motion, I waver but I cannot in view of the rules of this House and the remarks I have just made, authorize an emergency debate, as requested by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I am sure he will have a great many other opportunities to deal with these important issues in the House and I urge him to avail himself of these opportunities as they arise.

S.O. 26

[English]

The hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Mr. Nielsen: A point of order, Madam Speaker. In the past your predecessors and I believe you yourself have established the precedent of calling motions under Standing Order 26 in the order in which the Chair received them or the order in which they were received by the Clerk. In this case, I believe yesterday at around 10.30 you received a submission by the member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) with respect to VIA Rail. I do not believe the Standing Order 26 that you were about to recognize was received until long after the office—

An hon. Member: What about Joe?

Mr. Nielsen: What about the Leader of the Opposition? The Leader of the Opposition had his filed at 10.05 a.m. yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, in keeping with that practice, which has been prevailing for such a long time in this place that it has almost the force, one might say, of a convention, I suggest that you recognize the hon. member for Vegreville since his notice was filed prior to the one on my left.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member will recognize that yes, it is true that I have been in the habit of recognizing questions in the order in which they come into my office. I hope the times are correctly noted because I have to rely on the notes that appear on the notice when it comes to my office.

Of course, the courtesy to recognize the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is a normal one. I did want to recognize the hon. member for Oshawa because the question he raised is of a similar nature. I did say that before recognizing the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. For this time I think the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) will abide with me and allow me to recognize the hon. member for Oshawa. Then we may deal later with the hon. member for Vegreville.

Mr. Lambert: But not as a precedent.

Madam Speaker: There is no rule. It is true that I am in the habit of doing this, but from time to time, for reasons I might have—I hope they would not be capricious—I might do something else.

Mr. Nielsen: May I just reassure myself that your action in this particular instance is not to be construed as a precedent?

Madam Speaker: Indeed.

ALLEGED NATIONAL ECONOMIC CRISIS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Thank you, Madam Speaker. I hope the member who just spoke will agree that the issue before us, the Canadian economy, is a little more important than who gets to move which motion first.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae), to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 26 for the purpose of debating a specific and important matter requiring urgent and immediate consideration; namely, the record increase in the non-food consumer price index in September, the ruinous levels of interest and mortgage rates, and the record 100,000 increase in unemployment which took place in September—all of which make it urgent that we have an immediate debate on which can only be described as a national economic crisis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I can only repeat that the request made by the hon. member for Oshawa is quite similar in nature to the application which I have received from the Leader of the Opposition and on which I have just ruled. I will also rule on the request made by the hon. member for Oshawa. I remind him that some of the questions he has spelled out in his application have been dealt with earlier in this House on many other occasions. The problems to which he refers are of a continuing nature and do not justify the allowance of a debate of an emergency nature.

I, therefore, regret I cannot receive the application of the hon. member for Oshawa.

VIA RAIL

ABANDONMENT OF PASSENGER SERVICES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 26, seconded by the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), to ask leave of the House to consider a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It arises out of the announcement made on July 27, shortly after the House adjourned for the summer recess, of drastic alterations in Canada's passenger rail service which affected some 19 per cent of the lines, deprive 1.2 million Canadians of service and result in the loss of an estimated 1,600 jobs of railway workers.

This action has not been debated, nor approved by the Canadian Transport Commission or the House of Commons. It will inflict untold hardship upon those whose jobs will be lost. It will have a serious social and economic impact upon others affected both directly and indirectly. These cuts will substantially diminish the comprehensiveness and utility of our rail system and hamper future attempts to promote public transportation systems and fuel economy.

I believe it is extremely important for Parliament to debate this impending termination of rail service before the order in council implementing the cuts takes effect on November 15, 1981. For dozens of communities and tens of thousands of individual Canadians, this is an emergency situation on which Parliament is entitled to be heard. Madam Speaker, if you find this situation does justify the invocation of Standing Order 26, I will be prepared to move the appropriate motion.

Madam Speaker: Again there is little doubt that the matter raised by the hon. member is of national interest and of great concern to Canadians generally. However, in determining whether the question raised may require an emergency debate, I have to measure this application against a number of criteria.

The hon. member realizes it would be difficult to apply the provisions of Standing Order 26 in the case of decisions taken by outside entities while carrying out their normal functions, namely, the Canadian Transport Commission. It is obvious that modifications to rail service in this country are made on a continuing basis. These matters have been constantly rejected by the Chair as not constituting a proper subject of debate under the provisions of this Standing Order. As a former minister of transport, I am sure the hon. member is aware of other avenues in which he can raise his concerns. Of course, if is with reluctance that I cannot accept his application.

METRIC COMMISSION ADMINISTRATION

Question No. 588—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. What was the cost of operating the Metric Commission during 1979?

2. What was the total cost expended on the Metric Commission since its inception?

3. Under what legislation and under what provisions is the financing of the Metric Commission handled?

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): In so far as Metric Commission Canada is concerned: 1. Operating costs for fiscal year 1979/80 were $6,740,991. Contributions under the workers' metric tools assistance program for the same period were $2,113,941.

2. The total operating cost from June, 1971, to March 31, 1980, was $31,165,669. Contributions under the workers' metric tools assistance program over the same period were $3,034,541.

3. Metric Commission Canada was established by order in council PC 1971-1146, dated June 10, 1971, pursuant to section 18 of the Government Organization Act of 1969. This authorization is incorporated into the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce Act, chapter 972. The parliamentary vote is vote 5 under the trade industrial program, Industry, Trade and Commerce.

CMHC—ACQUISITION AND SALE OF DWELLING UNITS

Question No. 592—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) As of the date the answer to this question is prepared, how many (i) dwelling units (ii) other types of establishments, have been repossessed by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation for non-payment of mortgage fees (b) what is a breakdown by province under each category (c) what is a general description of the categories of places under the description of "other establishments"?

2. What does the government plan to do with such properties and what are all the detailed plans in this regard?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am advised by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. (a) (i) The total number of units acquired by the mortgage insurance fund from January 1954, (the inception of NHA loan insurance) to March 31, 1980, is 44,890, while the total number of units acquired by CMHC from 1946 to March 31, 1980, with respect to its direct uninsured lending is 21,980 units.

(ii) Not applicable.

(b) A breakdown of repossessions by province is not available.

(c) Not applicable.

2. The government plans to sell the acquired properties as quickly as possible, recognizing market conditions.

CMHC's marketing program is as follow:

(a) single detached and condominium units are offered for sale at current market value;

(b) multiple unit projects are offered for sale to the private sector through the request for proposals (RFP) technique. Proposals are invited from proponents with demonstrated financial and management capability and satisfactory credit standings. Projects not included in an RFP are sold on the open market through the multiple listing services or public tender call. In the case of non-profit projects, where provinces, non-profit groups or co-operatives indicate interest in acquiring the projects, these organizations are given first priority over disposal on the open market.

METRIC COMMISSION

Question No. 811—Mr. Towers:

1. By year, what was the total amount of funds disbursed on the metric conversion program?

2. (a) How many persons are employed under the program (b) how many man-years are allocated to the program?

3. (a) How many contract employees or consultants are employed under the program (b) what was the total amount of funds disbursed, by year, on contract employees or consultants?

4. (a) How many contracts with consultants has the metric program (b) who are the recipients of the contracts and what is the total amount of their emolument, by year?

5. What was the total amount of money disbursed to date, for paid media advertising to publicize or promote the metric conversion program?

6. How many letters of comment has the Metric Commission received from concerned Canadians regarding the implementation of the program and how many were letters (a) of complaint (b) praising the program?

7. Are weights and measures that have been adopted in the Canadian metric conversion program fully compatible and interchangeable with weights and measures used by other nations which use the metric system (b) is the Canadian "tonne" fully interchangeable with all other nations?

8. What percentage of Canada's trade is carried on with nations using the metric system?

9. Does the government possess information on the plans of the critical path of the government of the United States with regard to implementation of a metric system in that country and, if so, what is such information?

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): In so far as Metric Commission Canada is concerned: On the date this question was asked, a complete significant answer was not available. This information has now been compiled as of January 31, 1981.

1. The amount of funds spent and/or disturbed by the commission by fiscal year is as follows:

Fiscal Year	Expenses	Contributions (Workers Metric Tools Assistance Program)
1971/72	$ 44,541	$
1972/73	530,943
1973/74	1,590,792
1974/75	2,634,101
1975/76	3,316,100
1976/77	4,380,300
1977/78	5,753,000	120,600
1978/79	6,174,901	800,000
1979/80	6,740,991	2,113,941
1980/81*	3,963,581	1,447,158

*Note: Fiscal Year 1980/81 up to January 31, 1981

2. (a) As of December 15, 1980, 96 persons were employed by Metric Commission Canada;

(b) As of December 15, 1980, 96 person-years were allocated to Metric Commission Canada.

3. (a) As of December 15, 1980, Metric Commission Canada employed nine contract employees or consultants;

(b) The total amount of funds disbursed and/or authorized by year for those contract employees or consultants employed on December 15, 1980 is as follows:

Fiscal Year	Amount
1978/79	$ 61,900
1979/80	46,650
1980/81 to Dec. 15/1980	147,790

4. (a) During the 1980/81 fiscal year, Metric Commission Canada had seven consultant contracts in force.

(b) Consultants under contract during fiscal year 1980/81 (up to January 31, 1981) including funds disbursed and/or authorized by year are as follows:

Consultant	Fiscal Year	Amount
1. Mr. Brian Dixon	1980/81	$ 3,699
2. Intertask Limited	1980/81	15,000
3. Bob Mellor and Associates	1978/79	33,000
	1979/80	26,150
	1980/81	34,200
4. Public and Industrial Relations Limited	1980/81	17,715
5. Mr. Alan Rogers	1980/81	21,900
6. Bryce Taylor Leisure and Recreational Consultants Ltd.	1980/81	21,426
7. Ms. Nola Wade	1980/81	25,000

5. Due to budget limitations, Metric Commission Canada has a policy of not buying media advertising time and space. On one occasion only, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Office of Information and Public Relations, on behalf of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, did spend $130,000 on March 31, 1975, for newspaper advertising relating to weather conversion.

6. The number of letters of comment received by Metric Commission Canada during the period April 1, 1974, to March 31, 1980 is as follows:

	Total Letters	(a) Letters of Complaint	(b) Letters Praising the Program
April 1/74 to March 31/75	66,033	—	108
April 1/75 to March 31/76	98,827	77	121
April 1/76 to March 31/77	42,947	112	160
April 1/77 to March 31/78	34,969	157	147
April 1/78 to March 31/79	25,956	72	106
April 1/79 to March 31/80	22,799	99*	88

*Note: During the fiscal year April 1, 1979 to March 31, 1980, 826 printed form letters protesting metric conversion were also received.

7. (a) The Weights and Measures Act, Section 4, which received royal assent on April 7, 1971, stipulates that "Le Système international d'unités" should be the basis of all units of measurement used in Canada. These SI units and their prefixes are given in Schedule 1 of the act. These units are fully compatible and interchangeable with most weights and measures used by other nations employing the metric system. Some countries are slower than others, however, in phasing out the use of certain non-preferred and non-coherent multiples or sub-multiples of metric units which have become obsolete.

(b) The Canadian tonne or metric ton, meaning 1,000 kg, is a fully interchangeable unit with all other nations. To avoid confusion in verbal communications, the expressions "metric ton" (in English) and "tonne métrique" (in French) should be used to distinguish the tonne from the short and long tons in the imperial system.

8. It is estimated that over half of Canada's trade is already being carried on using metric units. Almost all of Canada's trade is with countries which are either in the process of converting to the metric system or with countries which have historically used metric measurements. The 1980 issue of the Exporters Encyclopedia and World Marketing Guide published by Dun and Bradstreet International Limited states that, "The U.S. is the last industrial country to go metric: only Brunei, Burma, Liberia and Yemen have not adopted the metric system or are in the process of phasing in its use". Since that time, both Brunei and Liberia have announced their intentions to adopt the metric system. Forty-five countries, including the U.S. and Canada, are signatories of the Treaty of the Metre and financially support the research and activities of the General Conference of Weights and Measures (CGPM). Contributing members of CGPM represent only a fraction of the countries in the world using metric measurements. The CGPM co-ordinates the ongoing development of the metric system of measurements units of which the International System of Units (SI) is the latest evolution. All countries profit from the improvements being made to the metric system whether they do or do not contribute financially to the operation of the CGPM.

In 1979, the United States accounted for 72 per cent of Canada's imports and 67 per cent of her exports. It has been estimated that as of December, 1980, over 45 per cent of the exports to the U.S.A., in 31 leading sectors, are described in metric units. The automobile and parts related manufacturing sector in the U.S. and Canada is the leading industry in this regard with about 70 per cent of manufacturing and orders for parts now in metric units.

Outside the U.S., many countries produce and accept only goods described in metric units. Most countries in the European Economic Community and the European Free Trade Area have passed laws which call for the exclusive use of SI units. The EEC is Canada's second most important export market after the United States. Japan, another metric country, is third. In 1979, 14.7 per cent of Canada's exports went to countries which have passed such legislation.

Overseas trade in metric units has become sizeable for many sectors of the Canadian economy. Total Canadian agricultural exports have exceeded $6 billion per year which represents approximately 40 per cent of farmers' cash receipts. Over 80 per cent of these export products are shipped to metric countries such as the EEC (21.3 per cent), developing countries (22.8 per cent), and Japan (17.7 per cent). Consequently, approximately one third of the farmers' cash income is dependent upon exports to metric countries. During 1979, the Canadian fishing industry processed products having a market value of approximately $1.713 billion. Over 77 per cent of this value was exported with over 50 per cent of exports going to countries that use only the metric system or are well advanced in converting to its use.

9. Federal government policy concerning metric conversion in the United States is co-ordinated through the interagency committee on metric policy which is chaired by the chairman of the U.S. Metric Board. The role of the U.S. Metric Board is to educate, inform and assist those parties who make a decision to convert. At the federal level, both the U.S. departments of commerce and defense have issued metric conversion plans. The U.S. federal alcohol administration act has been amended and prohibits any sale or import of wines and spirits bottled after January, 1979 (for wines) and January, 1980 (for distilled spirits) unless they are in specific metric only sizes. The conversion of gasoline pumps to litre dispensing is being accomplished by amending state legislation where required. Over 18,000 pumps have been converted as of December, 1980. The U.S. petroleum industry expects that more than 50 per cent of the pumps in the country will be converted by December, 1982.

The voluntary conversion to metric measure by U.S. private industry is being co-ordinated by the American National Metric Council which is funded entirely by its members. As of December, 1980, 46 ANMC sector committees were involved in the planning, scheduling and implementation of metric conversion programs. Several sectors are further advanced than their Canadian counterparts. Dr. Louis Polk, chairman of the U.S. Metric Board, reported at a December, 1980, USMB meeting in New Orleans that the United States was already metric or going metric in 44 different product areas which he listed.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

Question No. 892—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In the past five years, have the payments from the Canada Pension Plan Fund been covered by the contributions and, if not (a) what years are involved (b) in each case, by what amounts were the contributions exceeded by the payments?

2. Is it estimated that contributions will be exceeded by payments in the present fiscal year and, if so, by what amount.

3. In the past five years, did the government at any time find it necessary to use the accumulated assets of the fund in any year to meet a deficit and if so, what was the amount used in each year and the total amount used in all the years?

4. Is there a possibility of the fund eventually running out of money and, if so, does the government have any plans to correct this situation and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes;

(a) not applicable,

(b) not applicable.

2. No.

3. No.

If no changes are made to the legislation governing the Canada Pension Plan, the possibility does exist that the CPP fund could be in a deficit position by the year 2003. However, it is anticipated that an increase in the CPP contribution rate put into effect sometime before 2003 would eliminate the possibility of the fund running into a deficit. The question of the future funding of the Canada Pension Plan is under continuing study by both federal and provincial governments.

"METRIC MONITOR"

Question No. 1,009—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 91 which states in part that the total cost of printing the "Metric Monitor" to date amounts to $971,624, what are all the reasons justifying such an expense?

2. Is it government policy to expend funds on printed material concerning the metric system whether or not the system has been endorsed by Parliament?

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. The mandate of Metric Commission Canada established under section 18 of the Government Organization Act, 1969, includes the following purpose, to "furnish, publish and disseminate information concerning conversion to the metric system" (order in council, PC 1971-1146, June 10, 1971).

2. The Parliament of Canada made the metric system legal in this country as far back as 1871, as part of our first law on weights and measures. The Canadian government tabled in the House of Commons in January, 1970, the white paper on metric conversion which received support from all party leaders in the House of Commons. A program of guideline dates for metric conversion was approved by the government and debated in the House of Commons on March 17, 1975. The Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs studied this matter at length and reported it back to the House of Commons on December 17, 1976, with a recommendation that the House consider the advisability of adopting this program and introduce additional legislation to facilitate metric conversion. Subsequently, the Statute Law (Metric Conversion) Amendment Act, 1976, was passed by the House of Commons on July 25, 1977 and received royal assent on August 5, 1977.

Order Paper Questions

"CULTURES CANADA"

Question No. 1,050—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does volume 1, number 5, May, 1980, issue of "Cultures Canada" highlight or promote the public image of Liberal politicians or members of Parliament and, if so, is it government policy that this pamphlet should be used for such purposes?

2. Does the front page of the issue praise the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) and the hon. member for La Prairie and, if so, for what reason?

3. Does the issue contain anything of the views, accomplishments, suggestions etc. of the multiculturalism policies of other parties in the House of Commons and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): 1. Since its inception in 1979, "Cultures Canada", the official newsletter of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism has pursued an independent editorial policy. This newsletter's primary objective is to keep interested individuals abreast of the numerous processes concerning policy development and its implementation including profiles of individuals who are actively committed/involved with multiculturalism.

2. The front page of the issue does not praise the individuals mentioned. It simply reports on the minister's direct involvement in resolving the W5 issue and elsewhere on the same page it provides broad information on the newly nominated parliamentary secretary to the minister of multiculturalism.

3. Previous issues of "Cultures Canada" contained information on the views, accomplishments and suggestions on the multiculturalism policies of another government administration.

Question No. 1,051—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does volume 1, number 5, May 1980 issue of "Cultures Canada" refer to the hon. member for La Prairie as being chosen the Liberal candidate for the constituency and that he had won his seat with a majority of 33,000 votes and, if so (a) in what way is this connected with multiculturalism (b) is it government policy through such publications to promote the political fortunes of Liberal members of Parliament?

2. Does the issue refer to the member's hobbies and cultural activities and, if so (a) in what way is this connected to multiculturalism (b) is it government policy to promote such activities of Members of Parliament?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): 1. Since its inception in 1979, "Cultures Canada", the official newsletter of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism (CCCM), an advisory body to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, has pursued an independent editorial policy. This newsletter's main objective is to keep interested individuals abreast of the various processes occurring in the area of policy development, its implementation and the individuals who contribute to the shaping of said policy. The minister's predecessor and various members of the CCCM have been highlighted in the newsletter. The information provided on the member for La Prairie is factual in its mention of election figures.

2. The member's hobbies and cultural activities are mentioned to provide a more complete picture of the newly appointed parliamentary secretary to the minister.

Order Paper Questions

CFDC—FILM "OUT OF THE BLUE"

Question No. 1,324—Mr. Friesen:

1. (a) What was the projected and final cost of the film Out of the Blue (b) what was the cost to CFDC?

2. (a) How many persons were hired without union contracts, if any, to work on the film (b) how many persons other than Canadians, were hired without work permits authorized by the Department of Employment and Immigration?

3. (a) Who was the first director of the film (b) was he/she fired in favour of Mr. Dennis Harper and, if so, for what reason?

4. Is the film to be certified as a Canadian film and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications):

1. (a) According to the initial offering memorandum with which the producers approached investors dated July 25, 1979, the projected budget was $2,199,418.

(b) To be answered elsewhere.

2. (a) and (b) The Secretary of State's Canada Film Certification Office has no access to this kind of information.

3. (a) Mr. Leonard Yakir.

(b) See 2(a) above.

4. Yes.

(a) The producers are Canadians.

(b) An aggregate of six units of production for the key creative personnel was acquired for the individuals employed in the film.

(c) Not less than 75 per cent of the aggregate of the remuneration paid or payable to persons for services provided in respect of the film (other than remuneration paid or payable to, or in respect of individuals who are the producers or who performed the duties of the key creative "point" positions, or remuneration paid for processing and final preparation of the film) was paid or payable to, or in respect of services provided by, Canadians and;

(d) Not less than 75 per cent of the aggregate of all costs incurred for processing and final preparation of the film was incurred in respect of services provided in Canada.

Canadian Film Development Corporation:

1. (a) To be answered elsewhere.

(b) None.

2, 3 and 4. To be answered elsewhere.

RCMP—COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Question No. 1,329—Mr. MacKay:

For the fiscal year (a) 1977-78 (b) 1978-79 (c) 1979-80, what was the per diem rate to the legal counsel at the Commission of Inquiry into Certain Activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The chief counsel of the Commission of Inquiry into Certain Activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was paid at the rate of

(a) $100 an hour,

(b) $100 an hour,

(c) $100 an hour.

DONKIN COAL MINE

Question No. 1,434—Mr. Crosby:

1. Was a proposal made to the government of Nova Scotia to assist in the development of the Donkin Coal Mine in Cape Breton, directly or through the Cape Breton Development Corporation, once exploration work had been successfully completed and, if so, what was the proposal?

2. Did the government provide funds to assist in the development of the mine for future fiscal years and, if so, in what amount?

3. Who are the officers in the public service responsible for negotiations between the government of Nova Scotia and the government on the mine?

4. Was a report made to the government or any agency thereof respecting the economics of developing the mine and, if so, does the report recommend for or against development?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansin): The response for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. It is difficult to say whether a proposal was made to the Government of Nova Scotia or made by the Government of Nova Scotia in respect of the development of the Donkin Coal Mine in Cape Breton. What is public knowledge, however, is the fact that a proposal was discussed for the development of the Donkin Mine through a separate corporation with shareholdings by Consolidation Coal Company of the United States, the Government of Nova Scotia, the Cape Breton Development Corporation (Devco) and with an expression of interest from Alberta.

2. No.

3. The responsibility for coal development in Cape Breton generally rests with the president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. There have been no negotiations as such between Devco and the province of Nova Scotia in respect of part (1) above.

4. Several studies on the economics of developing the Donkin mine have been undertaken. Analytical observations have been made on the most appropriate timing for the development of the Donkin mine.

SHIP CONSTRUCTION SUBSIDY

Question No. 1,529—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Was the construction subsidy given to Canadian shipyards reduced from 20 per cent to 9 per cent and, if so, what were the reasons behind the government's decision?

2. By province, what are the government's estimates for jobs which will be lost in the shipbuilding industry as a result of this action?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. Yes. On applications received by June 30, 1980, the rate of subsidy was 20 per cent. On applications received after that date, the rate is 9 per cent. This change was in accordance with an announcement made by the previous government in December, 1979. It was confirmed by the present government on the basis that consultations be held by a government team, with industry, with organized labour and with the provinces before making a decision on future policy for the shipbuilding industry. These consultations are now under way.

2. No jobs will be lost as a result of this action. As one indication of the health of the industry, Dome Petroleum has recently purchased Davie Shipbuilding and has announced expansion intentions.

CF-18 INDUSTRIAL BENEFITS PROGRAM

Question No. 1,541—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Did the government contract for industrial benefits for any province by name in the contract with McDonnell Douglas Corporation for the new fighter aircraft and, if so (a) which provinces were named (b) what is the total dollar value of any industrial spin-off allocated to any specific province?

2. What is the total dollar value of any industrial spin-off assured to the province of (a) Prince Edward Island (b) Newfoundland (c) Nova Scotia (d) New Brunswick (e) Quebec (f) Ontario (g) Manitoba (h) Saskatchewan (i) Alberta (j) British Columbia under the terms of the contract?

3. Will the government be meeting with (a) Standard Aero Ltd. (b) Boeing of Canada (c) Bristol Aerospace Ltd. (d) C.A.E. Aircraft Ltd. (e) Standard Aero Engine Ltd., all of Winnipeg, concerning the awarding of contracts as a result of the new fighter aircraft contract and, if so (i) on what dates (ii) on what date will the government be announcing the contracts and their dollar value?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. The CF-18 contract with McDonnell Douglas requires that the province of Quebec be the location for two new manufacturing facilities, with a total investment commitment of $63 million expected. No other specific industrial benefits are contracted for any province.

2. The majority of industrial benefits are secured in favour of Canadian industries in general, but it has been estimated that these benefits, amounting to $2.91 billion, will accrue to all provinces in all regions of Canada. See also question 882 answered June 12, 1980.

3. (1) The government regularly meets with officials of Canadian aerospace firms within the context of established programs.

(2) These companies have or will be given an opportunity to participate in the CF-18 industrial benefits program.

(3) There has been established an office which provides general advice and assistance to all Canadian firms seeking participation in the CF-18 industrial benefits program.

(4) Of course, individual companies must be willing to take advantage of these opportunities.

(5) Bristol Aerospace, for example, has received orders from the General Electric (Aircraft Engine Group) for over 600 shipsets of the F-404 engine exhaust frames. It is anticipated that this business will continue over the next several years to reach a total estimated value of $80 million. At the same time, Bristol declined to bid on any portion of the structural components package put out by McAir.

(6) The government intends to publish occasionally on contracts awarded to Canadian firms which are of general interest, and to publish regularly on the over-all progress of the program.

SALARIES OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 1,615—Mr. Cossitt:

What is the total number of public servants receiving equal or higher annual salaries than the total indemnity paid to a Member of Parliament and (a) what are their names and job designations (b) what is the salary and the department in each case?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): As of October 17, 1980, the indemnity of a Member of Parliament was $30,600. Members also received a non-taxable expense allowance of $13,500. This allowance increased for certain electoral districts that over large geographic areas; as of October 17, 1980, it was $17,900 for ridings in the Northwest Territories and $16,600, for those outlined in Schedule III of the Canada Elections Act.

As of October 1980, there were 23,187 federal public servants as defined in Schedule I, part 1 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act earning over $30,600 per annum. Of these, 2,430 earned more than $45,000 per annum. These figures, however, include only personnel for whom the Treasury Board is the employer: they do not include governor in council appointments or employees of Crown agencies.

From the totals given above it is obvious that the cost in terms of time and money of attempting to list this number of persons by name, job designation, salary range and department would be prohibitive.

DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT OF CANADA LIMITED—ADVERTISING

Question No. 1,774—Mr. Stevens:

For the current fiscal year, what are the estimated expenditures of de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd. for (a) advertising (b) free or subsidized publications (c) other information conveyed to the public?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

(a) Estimated expenditure for advertising is approximately 0.5 per cent of annual sales. The precise figure is held as confidential by the company in recognition of the commercial market conditions within which it operates.

(b) Estimated expenditure for free publications is:

"High Lift" $80,000

(Controlled circulation, free brochure, sent to people in the trade and the firm's employees).

(c) Estimated expenditure for other forms is:

Employment advertising $191,000.

(This budget is particularly high this year owing to Dash 8 personnel recruitment needs).

ADMINISTRATION OF GOVERNMENT FUNDS

Question No. 1,901—Mr. Stewart:

1. What are the names of the funds, such as the Prairie Farm Assistance Fund, Public Service Superannuation Fund, Canada Pension Plan, etc., administered by the government which are comprised of voluntary or compulsory contributions from Canadians?

2. Which of the funds are held on deposit in general or consolidated revenue?

3. What, if any, rate of interest is paid to each fund?

4. What amount, if any, is saved by the government because it is required to borrow less by using the funds?

5. What interest earnings have been denied, where interest is not paid, to contributors using commercial interest rates and what are the names of the funds?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The list below states the trust funds comprised of contributions by Canadians, as of the date this question was asked.

2. All the funds are held on deposit in general or consolidated revenue.

3. The list below states the rate of interest, if any, paid to each fund, as of the date this question was asked.

4. None.

5. None.

GRAINS SOLD UNDER CORN COMPETITIVE FORMULA

Question No. 2,103—Mr. McKnight:

1. For each crop year from 1976-77 to 1980-81, did the Canadian Wheat Board sell bushels of (a) barley (b) oats under the corn competitive formula and, if so (i) how many bushels by grade (ii) at what price?

2. For the same years, what was the number of bushels of (a) barley (b) oats purchased by the Canadian Wheat Board by grade and at what price?

3. What is the definition of the corn competitive formula?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. For the crop years 1976-77 to 1980-81 the board sold the following quantities under the corn competitive formula. The information is shown for each pool account which is the selling period for the crop year.

Pool Account	Barley (Tonnes)	Oats (Tonnes)
1976-77	373,606	150,739
1977-78	50,251	117,324
1978-79	34,967	116
1979-80	65,572	51,598
1980-81	Not complete as yet

In order to protect the interests of western producers, it is the Canadian Wheat Board's policy not to divulge details of grades and prices on any sales, whether to the domestic or export market.

2. The following table shows the quantities and initial prices of the principal grades of barley and oats purchased by the Board from producers by pool account for the crop years 1976-77 through 1979-80.

Barley

3. Under the domestic feed grain policy the Canadian Wheat Board prices its offerings of feed grains to the domestic market on the basis of a formula which ensures that those grains are competitive with U.S. corn landed at Montreal. This formula takes into account the feeding value of wheat, oats, and barley relative to U.S. corn and soymeal. The formula price for the various feeding grades of these grains is set daily, based on the costs of U.S. corn and soymeal landed at Montreal. Handling and transportation costs from Thunder Bay to Montreal are deducted and the price is quoted instore Thunder Bay.

PENITENTIARIES—DISCIPLINARY ACTION

Question No. 2,111—Mr. Friesen:

1. Were there incidents in 1979 and 1980, of such a nature to precipitate internal or other inquiries which led to disciplinary action against inmates at (a) Shulie Lake Institution (b) Springhill Institution (c) Dorchester Penitentiary (d) Westmorland Institution and, if so, in each case (i) on what date (ii) what was the nature of the offence (iii) what was the punishment?

2. In which cases were the reports of the incidents made public?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General):

1. (i), (ii), and (iii) Data are maintained on all incidents precipitating internal or other inquiries, and, as well, on disciplinary offences by inmates. However, the two are not correlated or cross referenced and to do this would require an extensive research project for which the Correctional Service of Canada has neither the manpower nor the funds. The purpose of internal or other inquiries is to establish the facts that contributed to the incident so that action to prevent a recurrence of such an incident can be taken; it is not for the purpose of taking disciplinary action. Although an inmate may be involved in an incident and be subsequently charged with a disciplinary offence, this is not related to the convening of an inquiry.

2. It has never been the practice of the Correctional Service of Canada to make the report of inquiries public. Inquiries into most incidents often contain explicit information regarding the security of the institution which, if made public, could seriously threaten institutional security. Inquiries may also contain confidential information regarding the identity of individual staff members or inmates, which if released, could constitute a serious violation of an individual's civil rights or place the safety and wellbeing of a person in jeopardy.

Question No. 2,123—Mr. Friesen:

1. Were there incidents in 1979 and 1980, of such a nature to precipitate internal or other inquiries which led to disciplinary action against inmates at (a) Leclerc (b) Laval (c) Montée Saint-François (d) Sainte-Anne-des-Plaines (e) Archambault (f) Cowansville (g) Regional Reception Centre (h) Correctional Development Centre (i) La Macaza (j) Federal Training Centre and, if so, in each case (i) on what date (ii) what was the nature of the offence (iii) what was the punishment?

2. In which cases were the reports of the incidents made public?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): See reply to question No. 2,111 answered this day.

LIQUEFIED NATURAL GAS TERMINAL

Question No. 2,129—Mr. Howie:

1. Since January 1, 1980, were studies conducted by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources concerning the location of a site for a liquefied natural gas terminal and, if so, what site or sites were recommended?

2. (a) Was any site in New Brunswick considered (b) was a site recommended and was it rejected and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: 1 and 2. No studies have been conducted by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources concerning the location of a site for a liquefied natural gas terminal. On October 14, 1980, the Minister of EM&R stated in the House, regarding the Arctic pilot project and the site of the regasification terminal, that "the decision at this point is up to Petro-Canada and the National Energy Board".

CANADIANS LIVING BELOW POVERTY LINE

Question No. 2,137—Mr. McGrath:

1. What is the number and percentage of unattached (a) Canadians (b) female Canadians (c) male Canadians over 65 years of age currently receiving no private pension income?

2. What percentage of the Statistics Canada poverty line does the combined old age security and guaranteed income supplement benefits for unattached persons represent for 1980?

3. What percentage of the poverty line does the combined OAS and GIS benefits for couples represent for 1980?

4. (a) During 1980, what was the number of Canadian families living below the poverty line (b) what percentage does this figure represent (c) how many families were (i) male headed (ii) female headed?

5. Of all (a) female headed (b) male headed families in Canada in 1980, what was the number and percentage living below the poverty line?

6. Between 1973 and 1980, in absolute terms, did the number of (a) female headed (b) male headed families living below the poverty line increase or decrease?

7. What percentage of all children live in families below the poverty line?

8. For 1980-81, what is the estimated cash contributions to the ten provinces and the territories under the Established Programs Financing Arrangements, excluding tax transfers and associated equalization for (a) hospital insurance (b) medical care (c) extended health care?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Health and Welfare and Statistics Canada as follows: 1. Based on 1976 data, the estimated population without private pension income was:

Unattached individuals aged 65 and over	Estimated population	Percentage
(a) Both sexes	490,000	74%
(b) Females	352,000	75%
(c) Males	138,000	72%

2. The income guaranteed to unattached persons through the old age security and guaranteed income supplement programs represented 82.19 per cent of the Statistics Canada low income cut-off for a medium-sized city (population 30,000-99,999) in 1980.

3. The combined income guaranteed to two-pensioner couples through the old age security and guaranteed income supplement programs represented 102.41 per cent of the Statistics Canada low income cut-off for a medium-sized city (population 30,000-99,999) in 1980.

4. Data have not yet been collected for 1980, neither are final estimates available for 1979.

(a) It is estimated that 614,000 families were below the Statistics Canada low income cut-offs in 1978.

(b) This figure represents 10.3 per cent of all families.

(c) Of the 614,000 low income families in 1978:

(i) 410,000 were headed by males and (ii) 204,000 were headed by females.

5. It is estimated that in 1978 there were:

(a) 204,000 low income families headed by females, and this figure represents 35.9 per cent of all female headed families.

(b) 410,000 low income families headed by males, and this figure represents 7.6 per cent of all male headed families.

6. The change cannot be calculated because data for 1980 and final estimates for 1979 are not available. Estimated numbers for 1973 and 1978 are as follows:

	Estimated numbers of
	Low income families		All families
	1973	1978	1973	1978
(a) Female headed families	204,000	204,000	453,000	568,000
(b) Male headed families	537,000	410,000	4,820,000	5,374,000

The number of low income families has decreased. The number of female headed low income families has remained stable, although it has decreased as a percentage of the total number of female headed families.

7. It is estimated that in 1978, 12.4 per cent of all children under 16 years of age lived in low income families.

8. (a) Hospital insurance $2,480,300,000.

(b) Medical care $859,600,000.

(c) Extended health care $640,400,000.

Question No. 2,142—Mr. Friesen:

1. 2. In which cases were the reports of the incidents made public?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): See reply to question No. 2,111 answered this day.

Question No. 2,146—Mr. Friesen:

1. Were there incidents in 1979 and 1980, of such a nature to precipitate internal or other inquiries which led to disciplinary action against inmates in the prairies region at (a) Stoney Mountain Institution (b) Rockwood Farm Annex (c) Saskatchewan Penitentiary (d) Saskatchewan Farm Annex (e) Regional Psychiatric Centre (f) Bowden Institution (g) Drumheller Institution (h) Edmonton Institution and, if so, in each case (i) on what date (ii) what was the nature of the offence (iii) what was the punishment?

2. In which cases were the reports of the incidents made public?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): See reply to question No. 2,111 answered this day.

Question No. 2,167—Mr. Friesen:

1. Were there incidents in 1979 and 1980, of such a nature to precipitate internal or other inquiries which led to disciplinary action against inmates in the Pacific region at (a) Mission Institution (b) B.C. Penitentiary (c) Elbow Lake Institution (d) Ferndale Institution (e) Kent Institution (f) Matsqui Institution (g) Mountain Institution (h) Regional Psychiatric Centre (i) William Head Institution and, if so, in each case (i) on what date (ii) what was the nature of the offence (iii) what was the punishment?

2. In which cases were the reports of the incidents made public?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): See reply to question No. 2,111 answered this day.

NRC—AID TO QUEBEC COMPANIES

Question No. 2,175—Mr. Herbert:

1. In the last year, did companies in Quebec receive aid from the National Research Council and, if so (a) which ones (b) what was the amount in each case (c) for what purpose?

2. Is any assistance given to firms concurrently receiving aid from either the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and, if so, what is the budget for (a) Quebec (b) Canada (c) for similar assistance in the next year?

3. What amount was contributed by the National Research Council in the past 15 years to Hydro-Quebec?

4. What liaison mechanism is established with the Department of Agriculture that determines the respective responsibilities and participation of both funding groups?

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—FINAL PAYMENTS

Question No. 2,203—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is it the policy of the Canadian Wheat Board to announce final payments of grain sales and, if so, on what date was the latest announcement made?

2. (a) Is it the policy of the government to announce final payments of grain sales and, if so, on what date was the latest announcement made and in the name of which cabinet minister (b) has any official or non-official complaint been brought to the attention of the government and, if so (i) in what form (ii) on what date (iii) by whom (iv) what was the response of the government and on what date was it made?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport):

1, 2. (a) It has been the practice for many years for both the Canadian Wheat Board and the government to concurrently issue press releases providing the results of the Board's pool account operations and the final payment levels. The most recent announcements were made on January 9, 1981, and pertained to the 1979-80 pool accounts. The announcement by the government was made in the name of the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

(b) On January 9, 1981, the Canadian Wheat Board advisory committee passed a motion as follows:

"That in future announcements of final payments be made by the Canadian Wheat Board and not by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board or the minister's office."

The government has noted this motion but has not responded to it.

GOUZENKO COMMISSION RECORD

Question No. 2,227—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 50 which in part gives a list of the names of those persons appearing in the Gouzenko commission record along with details of prosecution, etc., for persons who had become fugitive, what is an up-to-date list of the disposition of all cases (a) subsequently dealt with (b) not disposed of (c) not dealt with?

2. In each case, what is the present location of all the persons listed?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development):

1. (a), (b) and (c): The following is a list of those persons against whom charges arising out of the revelations made by Mr. Igor Gouzenko were laid and which were disposed of finally subsequent to December 31, 1946:

Harold Samuel Gerson:

Verdict of October 11, 1946, set aside by Ontario Court of Appeal and at a second trial, found guilty on October 9, 1947, of conspiracy to commit an offence under the Official Secrets Act and sentenced to four years imprisonment.

James Scott Benning:

Appeal allowed and conviction quashed by Ontario Court of Appeal, April 24, 1947.

David Gordon Lunan:

Appeal dismissed on February 28, 1947. Also sentenced to one year for contempt of court for refusing to testify in the prosecution of Israel Halperin, which term to be served consecutively.

Philip Durnford Pemberton Smith:

Appeal dismissed by Ontario Court of Appeal on April 24, 1947.

Frederick Poland:

Acquitted on first charge on January 16, 1947. Second charge dismissed.

Israel Halperin:

Acquitted on March 4, 1947.

Henry Harris:

Found guilty on January 27, 1947, on two charges of conspiracy under the Official Secrets Act and sentenced to five years imprisonment. Appeal allowed by Ontario Court of Appeal on May 27, 1947, and conviction quashed.

Raymond Boyer:

At first trial, jury unable to reach verdict on March 31, 1947. At second trial, found guilty and sentenced to two years imprisonment on January 31, 1948. Appeal dismissed by Ontario Court of Appeal on November 30, 1948. Subsequent petition for leave to appeal to Supreme Court of Canada dismissed on December 17, 1948.

Sam Carr:

Found guilty on April 8, 1949 (after extradition to Canada from the United States) on a charge of conspiring to utter a false document contrary to the provisions of the Criminal Code and sentenced to six years imprisonment. Appeals to Ontario Court of Appeal dismissed on September 27, 1949.

Freda Linton:

Surrendered to RCMP on April 11, 1949. Charges withdrawn by the Crown on May 3, 1949, due to insufficient evidence.

2. Whereabouts unknown.

WOOD HARVESTING

Question No. 2,251—Mr. Lapointe (Beauce):

Since 1976, were wood harvesting contracts granted to specialized companies and, if so (a) by which department (b) to which company and for what amount in each case (c) were tenders called and, if not, in what way were the contracts granted?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment):

(a) Yes, wood harvesting contracts were granted to specialized companies.

(b) and (c) The following companies were awarded harvesting contracts.

DEMONSTRATION ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Question No. 2,263—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) To the knowledge of the government, what were the names and sources of funds of the organizations involved in the demonstrations on Parliament Hill during the visit of the President of the United States (b) were any foreign powers involved and, if so, which powers (c) was the Communist Party of Canada and the demonstrators and, if so, was there any evidence that their activities were financed from abroad?

2. Did some of the demonstrators enter Canada from Ogdensburg, New York through the constituency of Leeds-Grenville and, if so (a) what did they state as their point of origin (b) what reason did they give for entering Canada?

3. Does the government have any information as to how some 2,000 persons could find the time to perform such a highly organized demonstration?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and the Ministry of the Solicitor General as follows:

1. (a) The names of organizations known to have been involved in the demonstrations on Parliament Hill during the visit of the President of the United States are as follows:

Canada-El Salvador Solidarity Committee

Workers' Communist Party (Marxist/Leninist)

En Lutte

Socialiste des travailleurs

Communist Party of Canada (Marxist/Leninist)

The Greenpeace Foundation

Pollution Probe Canada

Anti-Acid Rain Committee

Amnesty International

The government is not aware of the source or sources of the funds used by these organizations for the demonstration.

(b) No foreign powers were known to be involved in the demonstrations.

(c) The Communist Party of Canada was not known to be present during the demonstration. This organization is not identical to the other Communist parties which were represented.

2. It is impossible for the commission to establish the number of people who may have entered Canada from Ogdensburg, New York for the purpose of participating in the demonstrations on Parliament Hill during the visit of the President of the United States.

3. The government is not aware how the persons demonstrating found the time to do so.

PORT FACILITIES AND THE CAST GROUP

Question No. 2,325—Mr. Crosby:

1. Did provincial governments make direct capital investments in port facilities operated by the National Harbours Board and, if so, what was the amount in each case?

2. Did the province of Nova Scotia invest in the Fairview Code container terminal at Halifax and, if so (a) in what amount (b) is the government obligated to or does it intend to pay back to the province the money invested and, if not, for what reason?

3. Was the Canadian Transport Commission advised of the intention of Canadian National Railways to invest first $7 million and then $42 million in the Cast Group after the inquiry held prior to 1979 and, if not, for what reason in each case?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.

Port of Saint John $25 million.

Port of Halifax $6.5 million.

2. Yes.

(a) $6.5 million.

(b) No, this amount will not be repaid as the amount was a grant by the province of Nova Scotia intended to improve the viability of the over-all project. The major portion of the cost was borne by the National Harbours Board with the terminal operator being responsible for the provision of container crane and equipment.

3. In July, 1980, CN invested $7 million in non-voting preference shares of Eurocanadian Shipholdings Ltd. In October, 1980, a second investment of $42.6 million was also made in non-voting preference shares of Eurocanadian. The non-voting status of these shares means that there was no change to CN's equity position within the Cast group. Since the requirement on CN to advise the CTC about share purchases relates only to those cases where CN's equity position is being altered, there was no reason to notify the commission of these two purchases of non-voting shares.

Order Paper Questions

FEATHERBED FILE

Question No. 2,361—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 23 which states in part that it is not in the public interest to provide additional information on the Featherbed file, what are the (a) names and job designations of all persons who made such a decision (b) criteria used by the government to measure whether or not something is or is not in the public interest?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): (a) and (b) This is clearly a matter of judgment by myself as it is my responsibility, as Solicitor General of Canada, to answer any question or notice of motion for the production of papers concerning my ministry.

CODE OF CONDUCT

Question No. 2,365—Mr. Foster:

1. (a) What number of Canadian companies operated in South Africa in 1979 and in 1980 and, for each year, what were their names (b) what number are operating in 1981 and what are their names?

2. What number issued "public reports" in (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 concerning their compliance with the government's code of conduct and, for each year, which companies did so?

3. What number issued "public reports in sufficient detail to permit assessment of their progress in realizing the objectives of the code of conduct" in (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 and, for each year, which companies did so?

4. What number met "the objectives of the code of conduct" in (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 and, for each year, which companies did so?

5. In what number of companies did the minimum wage of black employees exceed "the minimum level required to meet their basic needs . . . by at least 50 per cent", in (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 and, for each year, which companies did so?

6. Did the government take, or does it propose to take, action to ensure that Canadian companies operating in South Africa realize "the objectives of the code of conduct" and, if so, what is such action?

7. Is the Canadian Embassy in South Africa responsible for following developments closely and for reporting on the extent of compliance of the companies with the Code?

8. Does the government propose to take action to strengthen the provisions with respect to implementation and publicity in the Code or at least to bring the provisions into line with codes of conduct adopted for other western companies operating in South Africa and, if so, what is such action?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1 and 2. The Department of External Affairs does not maintain regular and comprehensive records of Canadian companies operating in South Africa. The code of conduct was sent to the companies listed below, a number of which may not have had operations in South Africa in 1979, 1980 or 1981 and one company has indicated that it is not a Canadian company.

1. Albany Canada Ltd.
2. Alcan Ltd.

The following company has indicated that it is not a Canadian company:

1. Texas Gulf Ltd.

The following companies have issued public reports for 1979 on their implementation of the code of conduct.

1. Alcan Ltd.
2. Bayer Foreign Investments Ltd.
3. Ford Motor Co. Ltd.
4. Inco Ltd.
5. Massey-Ferguson Ltd.
6. Quebec Iron and Titanium Ltd.

The following companies have issued public reports for 1980 on their implementation of the code of conduct.

1. Alcan Ltd.
2. Bayer Foreign Investments Ltd.
3. Ford Motor Co. Ltd.
4. Inco Ltd.
5. Massey-Ferguson Ltd.

The following company has issued a public report for 1981 on its implementation of the Code of Conduct.

1. Alcan Ltd.

The following companies have stated that they have taken note of the standards outlined in the code, but have not issued public reports:

1. Bata Ltd.
2. Cominco Ltd.
3. Laurasia Resources Ltd.
4. Reed Stenhouse Ltd.

3, 4 and 5. With respect to questions Nos. 3, 4 and 5, the annual public reports which the government believes should be made by companies on their implementation of the code of conduct are intended to provide pertinent information to interested Canadians. The extent of progress in realizing the objectives of the code is a matter for their (interested Canadians) judgment.

6, 7 and 8. In response to questions Nos. 6, 7 and 8, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has each year drawn the existence of the code and its provisions to the attention of Canadian companies which may be operating in South Africa, and has encouraged the issuance of annual public reports. The operation of the code is under review in the light of the experience gained to date.

"CULTURES CANADA"

Question No. 2,368—Mr. Stewart:

1. Is Cultures Canada a publication of the multiculturalism directorate of the Department of the Secretary of State and, if so (a) how often is it issued (b) what number of man-hours are allotted to the publication (c) what is the total cost per issue and what is the unit cost per issue (d) how many copies are printed per issue and to whom are they distributed?

2. (a) What is the name of the printer and what is the cost of printing per issue, including paper costs (b) is the publication printed externally and, if so, are public tenders called for design and printing?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the multiculturalism directorate and the Department of Supply and Services as follows:

1. Yes, Cultures Canada is a publication of the multiculturalism directorate of the Department of the Secretary of State.

(a) Ten issues per year.

(b) One quarter person-year is allocated to the publication by the multiculturalism directorate. The amount of time involved in printing is not known as suppliers do not include this information in their bids.

(c) The average total cost per issue is $3,422. This includes the costs for the original rough designs, writing, editing, layout, markups, final artwork, typesetting and the printing charges by the Department of Supply and Services. The unit cost per issue is 57 cents.

(d) Six thousand copies per issue of Cultures Canada are printed. They are distributed to ethnic organizations, libraries, Members of Parliament, educational institutions related to multiculturalism and private individuals who have requested the newsletter.

Issue No.	Printer	Cost
1	See reply to question No. 1,049 answered October 6, 1980	$ 981.00
2	Canadian Government Printing Office Main Plant	1,163.91
3	National Printers (Ottawa)	1,153.33
4	National Printers (Ottawa)	1,128.48
5	National Printers (Ottawa)	1,145.92
6	Lowe-Martin (Ottawa)	995.49
7	Lowe-Martin (Ottawa)	997.75
7 (Reprint)	Lowe-Martin (Ottawa)	976.62
8	Lowe-Martin (Ottawa)	962.48
9	Lowe-Martin (Ottawa)	959.92
10	Lowe-Martin (Ottawa)	905.72

(b) Issues Nos. 3 to 10 were printed externally and tenders were called in all cases except for Issues Nos. 4 and 5. This requirement was negotiated with the previous printer because of a short lead time of two days requested by the Department of the Secretary of State.

See also question No. 1,049, answered October 6, 1980.

The Department of Supply and Services (CGPO) did not contract for the design of any of these issues, however, the rough designs were acquired by the Department of the Secretary of State by means of a letter of agreement with Communications Consultants Ltd. for a cost of $775.

FUEL TAX REBATE

Question No. 2,371—Mr. McKnight:

For the past two years to date, what percentage of the total cost incurred with respect to the filing and processing of the application regarding the fuel tax rebate for farmers was administrative?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): For the two years ending April 10, 1981, the cost of filing and processing the application for refund of excise gasoline tax for farmers in estimated at 0.85 per cent of the total cost for refund of excise gasoline tax for farmers.

FEATHERBED FILE

Question No. 2,376—Mr. Cossitt:

Since the government instituted a review as to whether or not the Taschereau papers on national security should be released for public view, will it reconsider its refusal to make public the Featherbed file and, if so, will some person or persons be appointed to review the matter and report to Parliament?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): The hon. member is referred, inter alia, to question No. 22 answered March 4, 1981; question No. 23 answered April 7, 1981; questions Nos. 24 and 26 answered July 18, 1980; question No. 25 answered January 12, 1981; question No. 100 answered June 26, 1980; and question No. 1,334 answered January 21, 1981.

TRUST FUNDS FOR INDIAN BANDS

Question No. 2,392—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,021 (a) what is the total amount held by the government in trust for treaty Indians and is the trust fund broken down on a band basis (b) is the money spent on behalf of status Indians who may be band members or is it spent on behalf of treaty Indians?

2. Is the government using treaty money to support the activities of Indians who are only status Indians and, if so, on what basis is the government using the treaty funds?

3. If treaty trust funds are maintained for individual bands, which members of the bands are entitled to benefit from the funds?

4. Does the government use treaty trust funds resulting from the sale of treaty lands other than for the benefit exclusively of treaty Indians and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Parts 1, 2, 3 and 4.

As stated in the reply to question No. 2021, answered on April 9, 1981, trust funds are maintained for individual Indian bands rather than on the basis of treaties. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has no record of a treaty trust fund and no accounts known as treaty trust funds.

URANIUM TRIOXIDE REFINERY

Question No. 2,435—Mr. Blaikie:

1. Did the Department of National Health and Welfare participate in the Atomic Energy Control Board Review of the proposed uranium trioxide refinery at Blind River and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, did the department confirm AECB's decision to give site approval for the refinery?

2. Was the proposal reviewed by the Radiation Protection Bureau of the Department and, if not, for what reason?

3. Is it government policy to grant site approvals in cases such as this without review by the radiation protection bureau?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1 and 2. The radiation protection bureau of the Department of National Health and Welfare reviewed the original proposal for a uranium hexafluoride refinery at Blind River. The views of the bureau were presented at public hearings. The bureau has reviewed the new proposal for a uranium trioxide refinery at Blind River. This review will be sent to the Atomic Energy Control Board in June 1981.

3. The Department of National Health and Welfare acts as the principal, though not exclusive, health adviser to the Atomic Energy Board. This is an advisory role to the board.

PURCHASE OF LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 2,443—Mr. Young:

1. What is the base purchase of manpower seats in ESL (English as a second language) at George Brown College for 1981?

2. What are the supplementary purchases in ESL at the college?

3. What are the policies concerning sponsored immigrants and manpower training in ESL seats?

4. Was there a reduction in the number of seats purchased for 1981 in upgrading at the college?

5. Is there a change in policy of manpower retraining concerning upgrading and, if so, what is the change?

6. Is there an indication of the base and/or supplemental purchases in ESL for 1982?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. 500 for fiscal year 1981-82.

2. 60 as of May 12, 1981.

3. Second language courses are offered by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission to immigrants who need this kind of assistance to remove the employment barrier which impedes their job search efforts. Training allowances are paid only to immigrants in the "independent" category and to government-sponsored refugees who are either convention refugees, members of a designated class or holders of a minister's permit.

4. Yes: 37 less in academic upgrading courses for fiscal year 1981-82.

5. Since April 1, 1981, lower level upgrading courses (below grade 7) are no longer purchased by the commission. Trainees in educational upgrading courses must now be either 21 years of age or over, or have been away from school for at least two or three years according to the eligibility criteria that have been adopted in each province. More emphasis is now placed on the usefulness of upgrading in a client's career development plan. The volume of higher level upgrading course purchases must be directly related to the number of planned training places in skill courses with a grade 11 or 12 prerequisite.

6. No. It is too soon to estimate purchases for fiscal year 1982-83.

(1) Pension payments, pension funding payments and preretirement leave, are included in the coal loss vote and as such as included in the figures appearing under coal losses above as well as in the separate column for these amounts.

(2) The net funding requirements to cover the coal loss for the year ending March 31, 1980, were actually voted through supplementary estimates (B) for the year ending March 31, 1981.

INCOME TAX

Question No. 2,467—Mr. Cossitt:

1. By province, what is the estimated number of persons or limited family companies that engage in all forms of agriculture and what is the estimated percentage of those who pay income tax?

2. In the last year for which figures are available, were there more investigations and/or prosecutions for non-payment of income tax in any two particular provinces and, if so, which provinces and what was the number of investigations and/or prosecutions?

Mr. Claude Tessier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): 1. The number of taxfilers who reported any income (or loss) from farming and the percentage who paid taxes for 1979 (latest year available) is as follows:

	Persons Engaged in Agriculture
	Number	Number Who Paid Taxes	Per Cent of Total
Newfoundland	496	313	63.1
Prince Edward Island	3,426	2,275	66.4

British Columbia	26,951	20,049	74.4
Others*	550	358	65.1
Canada	429,351	268,562	62.3

* Others includes Yukon, Northwest Territories and non-residents who reported farming income.

2. In the fiscal year 1980/81, the two provinces which had more investigations and/or prosecutions for fraudulent non-payment of income taxes were Quebec and Ontario. The numbers are as follows:

	Number of Investigations	Number of Prosecutions
Quebec	48	25
Ontario	116	69
All Canada	257	158

1979/80	4	605,566.30	158	5,697,811.15	6,303,377.45
1980/81	4	6,121,897.00	120	5,907,721.89	12,029,618.89

Loans by definition are repayable, these loans are interest free. Contributions up to 50 per cent of project costs are repayable only when profits are deemed to be above fair and reasonable. Any contributions beyond 50 per cent of project costs are repayable on a formula basis. Hence, loan repayments normally exceed contribution repayments.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—COST OF BOOKLETS

Question No. 2,499—Mr. Stewart:

1. Did Graphic Realm Ltd. receive $148,552 from the Department of Justice for the provision of saddle-stitched booklets and, if so, what was the (a) title of the booklet (b) cost per booklet (c) number printed?

Due to the result of additional pages and overtime, the value of the contract increased to $85,386.49.

1. (a) Title of the booklet—The Senior Citizen;

(b) Cost per booklet—27.9 cents;

(c) Number printed 305,835.

2. The booklets are distributed, on request, to individuals, groups, organizations, and through the Canadian Unity Information Office travelling exhibitions.

TRIDENT AIRCRAFT LIMITED

Question No. 2,506—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Were arrangements made to sell the moveable assets of the Trident Aircraft Company of Sidney, British Columbia and, if so, on whose instructions?

2. (a) What organization was put in charge of the disposal (b) did the firm have experience in winding up aircraft production enterprises and, if not, on what criteria was it chosen?

3. (a) What value was placed on the machinery, machine tools and material inventory to be liquidated (b) did the assessors have access to the records of purchase to evaluate the stock (c) what amount was realized from the liquidation sale?

4. Were arrangements made between federal and provincial authorities to divide the proceeds of the liquidation of the company and, if so (a) what were they (b) what amount was returned to the federal treasury and what amount to the provincial treasury?

5. What amount was paid to the auction company that conducted the sale?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. Yes, with the exception of the aircraft, tooling and documents necessary to manufacture the Trigull aircraft (the "production package"), and two large pieces of production equipment. Agreement was obtained between Trident, British Columbia Development Corporation and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The production package is held at Sidney, B.C., while efforts continue to locate a company capable of putting the Trigull into production on a sound commercial basis.

2. (a) Maynards Industrial Auctioneers.

(b) The firm was not commissioned with the winding-up of Trident Aircraft Limited. Maynards is experienced in the disposing of machine tools and materials with which it was contracted to do.

3. (a) The estimated value of equipment to be disposed of (i.e. excluding the production package) was $200,000 to $300,000.

(b) Yes.

(c) All items have not been sold as yet.

4. (a) The federal government has first call on proceeds subject to B.C. law.

(b) The federal government has received $75,000 to date. The provincial government has received nothing.

5. No payment has yet been made to Maynards. The company's standard charges will apply, 12 per cent.

CMHC—YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 2,516—Mr. Oberle:

1. What residual functions do the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation provincial directors for British Columbia/Yukon and Alberta/Northwest Territories have in the housing activity of the two territories?

2. How many housing units were produced or rehabilitated in 1979 and 1980 in the (a) Yukon Territory (b) Northwest Territories under (i) section 15.1, private and non-profit (ii) section 40, rural and native housing (iii) section 34.1, urban rehabilitation (iv) section 34.1, rural rehabilitation, of the National Housing Act?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am advised by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1. None.

2. The NHA activities in the two territories are as follows:

CUSTOMS POSTAL STATIONS IN CANADA

Question No. 2,520—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. (a) What is the distribution of customs postal stations throughout Canada (b) what are the criteria for establishing the stations?

2. How does the distribution in Mississauga, Ontario compare to the national average in terms of (a) number of persons served per station (b) distance of the station from the persons served for communities with a population of 25,000 or more?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue):

1. (a) There are 231 customs postal stations throughout Canada. The distribution of these stations by province is as follows: Newfoundland, 15; P.E.I., 3; Nova Scotia, 20; New Brunswick, 20; Quebec, 55; Ontario, 77; Manitoba, 3; Saskatchewan, 9; Alberta, 5; B.C., 21; Yukon, 2; N.W.T., 1.

(b) Customs postal stations are established when there is sufficient public demand to warrant separate facilities, keeping in view the need to provide for the maximum utilization of limited staff resources. In this regard, Customs postal stations are normally provided from offices which serve other modes of transport as well as postal.

2. (a) There is an average of approximately 100,000 people served per customs postal station. The west Toronto customs postal station serves those communities in west Toronto as well as Mississauga which comprises approximately 750,000 people.

(b) As per the Canada Gazetteer Atlas, 1980, there are 124 communities in Canada having a population of 25,000 or greater. There are 68 of these communities served by customs postal stations located within the "core" area. It is estimated that the majority of the people in these communities live within 10 kilometres of the customs postal station. The remaining 56 communities are served by customs postal stations located outside their "core" areas. The majority of the people in these communities, on the average, live approximately 15 kilometres from a customs postal station. The majority of the people in Mississauga live approximately 13 kilometres from the customs postal station at 330 Keele St.

CENTAUR THEATRE—CONTRIBUTIONS

Question No. 2,532—Mr. Herbert:

1. In each of the past five years, did the government or any of its corporations or agencies make a contribution to the Centaur Theatre in Montreal and, if so, for what amount?

2. For the same period, to the knowledge of the government, what amount was contributed by the government of Quebec?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): 1. Financial assistance from the Secretary of State Department to the Centaur Theatre in Montreal:

1975: $500,000 capital assistance

1. I am informed by the Canada Council as follows: Grants to the Centaur Theatre in Montreal:

1975-76	$140,000
1976-77	167,500
1977-78	175,000
1978-79	190,000
1979-80	210,000

1. I am informed by the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission, the Public Archives, the National Library, the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, the National Film Board, the National Arts Centre, Teleglobe Canada, the National Museums and the Canadian Film Development Corporation, as follows: No.

2. This information should be sought from the government of Quebec.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNORS—SALARY AND ALLOWANCES

Question No. 2,543—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the lieutenant governor of each province, what amount was contributed by the government in each of the past three years and what amount is projected for this year for his/her salary, allowance or anything else?

2. Are some provinces awarded considerably larger sums than others and, if so, for what reason?

3. Does the lieutenant governor of Quebec receive the highest figure and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications):

1. (a) The annual salary of the lieutenant governors is $35,000 as laid down in 1975 by chapter 56 of the Statutes of Canada, 1975.

(b) (i) Allowances for expenses incurred in the provincial capitals:

	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82
Nfld.	$12,000	$12,000	$12,000	$13,000
P.E.I.	10,000	10,000	10,000	11,000
N.S.	12,000	12,000	12,000	13,000
N.B.	12,000	12,000	12,000	13,000
Que.	18,000	18,000	18,000	20,000
Ont.	18,000	18,000	18,000	20,000
Man.	15,000	15,000	15,000	17,000
Sask.	15,000	15,000	15,000	17,000
Alta.	15,000	15,000	15,000	17,000
B.C.	18,000	18,000	18,000	20,000

(ii) Allowances for travel expenses and the cost of receptions outside the provincial capitals (the sum of $120,000 is provided in the budget and this is divided according to estimates submitted by the lieutenant governors):

	1978-79 paid	1979-80 paid	1980-81 paid	1981-82 paid
Nfld.	$22,077	$22,077	$ 9,109	$15,000
P.E.I.	8,599	2,142	5,920	5,000
N.S.	5,295	6,650	5,934	8,000
N.B.	16,808	5,396	5,602	7,000
Que.	14,281	6,245	14,559	15,000
Ont.	26,757	18,211	16,465	20,000
Man.	9,590	8,188	10,945	10,000
Sask.	18,862	12,731	13,436	15,000
Alta.	8,030	3,358	3,857	8,000
B.C.	16,449	13,265	11,845	15,000

2. The above tables show the amounts received from federal government. The provinces make contributions for their lieutenant governors, notably for staff, office, official residence and car. These contributions vary from province to province.

3. See paragraph 2.

NOTICE OF REASSESSMENT

Question No. 2,562—Mr. Cossitt:

1. When the Department of National Revenue sends out a notice of reassessment to a taxpayer showing an additional amount owing above what was paid, is interest charged from the date of the notice of reassessment and, if so, for what reason?

2. Does the department take into account the time it takes for the notice to reach a taxpayer by mail and, if not, for what reason?

3. Does the department take into account the time it takes for the payment to reach the department from the taxpayer by mail even if it is returned immediately and, if not (a) for what reason (b) is extra interest being charged as a result of circumstances beyond the control of the taxpayer and will the government take steps to change the situation?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Yes. In addition, interest is charged from the expiration of the time for filing the return of income to the date of reassessment as prescribed under section 161 of the Income Tax Act.

2. Yes.

3. When a notice of assessment or reassessment is issued, interest is calculated to the date of the notice. Provided payment in full is received within 30 days of the date of the notice no further interest is charged.

BILATERAL TAX TREATIES

Question No. 2,573—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did the government enter into a new tax treaty with various countries in December, 1980, which meant that pensions paid by the other countries to persons living in Canada could be taxed by the paying country?

2. (a) Does the new treaty state that the paying country will not levy any tax on the first $10,000 or £5,000 of pension in a year (b) does the exemption apply to pensions paid by Britain to residents in Canada and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Bilateral tax treaties with Austria, Barbados, Indonesia, Italy, Republic of Korea, Malaysia, Romania, Spain, and the United Kingdom came into force in December, 1980, or January, 1981. The treaties have articles which provide generally that pensions paid by these countries to people living in Canada may be taxed by these paying countries with the exception of the Romanian treaty which does not have a pension article.

2. (a) The Canada-Italy treaty provides that pensions may be taxed in the paying country but only to the extent that the amount paid to a resident of the other country exceeds $10,000 or 12 million liras, whichever is the greater. The Canada-United Kingdom treaty provides that pensions may be taxed in the paying country but only to the extent that the amount paid to a resident of the other country exceeds $10,000 or £5,000, whichever is the greater.

(b) The exemption does not apply to pensions paid out of public funds of the United Kingdom or Northern Ireland or of the funds of any local authority in the United Kingdom. United Kingdom negotiators insisted that this exemption should not apply to these specific United Kingdom government pensions.

RCMP "E" HEADQUARTERS

Question No. 2,574—Mr. McKinnon:

Will the RCMP "E" Division headquarters be moved from Victoria to Vancouver and, if so (a) how many persons now working in Victoria will have their positions moved to Vancouver (b) for those employees who decide to move, who will absorb the additional expenses including (i) the differential in housing prices between the Vancouver and Victoria areas (ii) increased interest costs resulting from those obliged to accept new mortgages for Vancouver homes (iii) removal expenses (c) was a poll taken among those persons employed in Victoria to determine how many would not move to Vancouver even though their positions were transferred (d) did the RCMP and the Solicitor General authorize the move with no idea of the costs involved?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Yes.

(a) 195.

(b) Government funding will be provided in accordance with Treasury Board relocation directive.

(i) and (ii) Treasury Board relocation directive does not make provision for government funding of such expenses.

(iii) Government funding will be provided for removal expenses in accordance with Treasury Board relocation directive.

(c) Yes.

(d) No.

OLD AGE SECURITY

Question No. 2,575—Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

1. Did the government renew or attempt to renew discussions with the government of the United Kingdom with a view to convincing that government to reconsider its policy of refusing to index the pensions of British pensioners after they take up residence in Canada?

2. Is it the present policy of the government to pay to Canadians born in other countries only one-fortieth of the old age security pension for every year of residence in Canada, with a ten-year minimum qualification period, and, if so, has the government considered an alternative to the policy?

3. Does the government consider Canadians of British origin are left without an adequate pension from either the United Kingdom or Canada?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The minister has approached the government of the United Kingdom about this issue on more than one occasion. On January 9, 1978, following the exchange of a number of notes, the minister met in London with the Hon. David Ennals, then British secretary of state for social services. No tangible results were effected. (Prior to this meeting, the Hon. Marc Lalonde had discussed the subject with Mr. Ennals in April, 1977, and on two separate occasions in June, 1977, and December, 1978, the Prime Minister drew the attention of his British colleague to this issue). On October 22, 1980, the minister met with the Hon. Patrick Jenkin, secretary of state for social services, in London. The first subject raised was the possibility of there being a reciprocal social security agreement of the standard type between Canada and the United Kingdom, which would ensure the indexing of pensions paid by the United Kingdom to beneficiaries residing in Canada. Mr. Jenkin indicated ways by which he has had to cut social expenditures in the United Kingdom. He then stated categorically that it would not be possible for the United Kingdom to contemplate any new agreements, and that there was no possibility at all for an agreement between the two countries in the foreseeable future. Since then, there has been no change in the attitude of the British authorities.

2. The Old Age Security Act stipulates that a person who was under 25 years of age on July 1, 1977, or who was over 25 on that date but had no prior residence in Canada after his or her 18th birthday, would earn the right to an old age security pension at the rate of 1/40th for each complete year of residence in Canada after age 18, subject to a minimum of 10 years for payment in Canada and 20 years for payment abroad.

3. All benefits paid under Canadian legislation are paid in accordance with that legislation and are not based on citizenship. In the case of the Old Age Security Act, benefits are paid on the basis of residence in Canada and are the same for all beneficiaries. In the case of the Canada Pension Plan, benefits are paid in accordance with contributions made. The government regrets that the government of the United Kingdom does not index its benefits paid to U.K. citizens living in Canada.

However, this is the prerogative of the government of the United Kingdom.

BUREAU OF MANAGEMENT CONSULTING

Question No. 2,586—Mr. Howie:

1. Were consultants provided by the Bureau of Management Consulting to the Canadian International Development Agency from April 1, 1978 to date and, if so, by fiscal year (a) how many (b) what amount was paid for their services?

2. Does the use of the bureau circumvent the normal consultant approval procedures within CIDA or the government consultant approval procedures set out by the Treasury Board?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. From April 1, 1978, to date the Bureau of Management Consulting, in accordance with the mandate of the Department of Supply and Services to provide management consulting services on the request of departments, provided consultants to CIDA to work on fifteen different projects in five different branches of the agency. The number of individual consultants who worked for varying lengths of time on these projects, and the amount paid for their services, are expressed below:

	Fiscal Year
	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	(April & May) 1981-82
(a) No. of consultants	66	55	89	59
(b) Amount paid	$2,552,000	$1,971,000	$3,056,000	$471,000

2. The use of consultants from or through the Bureau of Management Consulting does not require approval from the Treasury Board. The use of consultants from or through the Bureau of Management Consulting is subject to the consultant approval procedures within CIDA.

DREE—FULL-TIME STAFF

Question No. 2,588—Mr. Howie:

How many full-time employees were on the staff of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion as of April 1 (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Department of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows:

(a) 1,933;

(b) 1,879;

(c) 1,945.

DIPP CONTRIBUTIONS TO CAE ELECTRONICS LTD.

Question No. 2,598—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Is the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, under the defence industry productivity program, contributing to CAE Electronics Ltd. 50 per cent of the non-recurring unrecovered development costs associated with the production of a Boeing B757 simulator, a Boeing B767 simulator, an Airbus A310 simulator, and an Airbus A300 simulator to a total of $4,607,666 and, if so, to the knowledge of the government, did the company identify a potential or existing market for the simulators?

2. Does the company expect a certain future sales value for the products and, if so, what is that value?

3. Does the company have any firm contracts for the simulators and, if so, with whom?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. As stated in reply to question No. 2,508 on June 4, 1981, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is contributing to the development of simulators. Contributions are being made to CAE Electronics Ltd., Montreal, Quebec and total $4,607,666. Identification of potential export markets is a requirement for DIPP contributions.

2. The company expects a certain future sales value of $118.5 million for these simulators. Additionally, a potential market exists for these products of up to $820 million.

3. The company has firm contracts totalling $53.4 million for these simulators with the following airlines:

United Airlines, U.S.A.

TOA Domestic Airlines, Japan

Singapore International Airlines

Lufthansa German Airlines, FRG

Eastern Airlines, U.S.A.

British Airlines, U.K.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE—NEW DESK

Question No. 2,599—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Prime Minister recently obtain a new desk for his office at a cost of approximately $2,500 to be paid for by the government?

2. Was the desk constructed of limestone and, if so, did the limestone come from the area of Cambridge, Ontario?

3. Were other areas where limestone could be obtained given consideration?

4. Was consideration given to the large quantities of limestone available in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville and, if so, was it not selected on the grounds that (a) it possibly would be "bugged" (b) it possibly would be treated with a harmful substance or in any other way dangerous to the welfare of prime ministers?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1. The desk has not been received as yet. However, the approximate price of the limestone ordered and cut, is $2,500. The labour to finish it and the installation is extra to the basic cost.

2. Yes, the desk is Amable Limestone from the area of Cambridge, Ontario.

3. Yes, a province wide search was made for the most suitable limestone.

4. Successive editions of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms make it clear that "A question, oral or written must not be ironical, rhetorical, offensive, or contain epithet, innuendo, satire or ridicule . . . be trivial, vague or meaningless . . . be hypothetical . . . contain inferences . . . contain imputations . . ." and even if the authorities of the House permit such questions to be put down, the government will not answer them.

VIRUS LABORATORY

Question No. 2,600—Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

Will a new virus laboratory be constructed by the Department of Public Works in Ottawa and, if so (a) what will be the exact location (b) on what date will construction begin (c) what will be the nearest residential communities and the distance between each community and the laboratory (d) are there public health considerations and, if so, how will they be met?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): The Department of Agriculture has identified a requirement for an animal virus laboratory, and has been discussing its provision with the Department of Public Works. However, no final decision has been taken yet on the location of this facility: Ottawa or some other city.

"LAND/TERRE" NEWSLETTERS

Question No. 2,622—Mr. Stewart:

Did the Department of the Environment pay $48,000 to J. Phillip Nicholson, Ottawa, for four Lands Directorate newsletters and, if so (a) what is the newsletter (b) what was the number distributed (c) to whom was it distributed (d) what services did Mr. Nicholson perform?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of the Environment and Supply and Services as follows: Yes. A contract was awarded to J. Phillip Nicholson, policy management consultant, Ottawa, Ontario, on May 7, 1981, for $48,000 for four Lands Directorate newsletters entitled "Land/Terre" in English and French.

(a) The Land/Terre newsletter was planned as a principal source of contact between and among all professionals, academics and interest groups concerned with Canada's land resources. It has been designed to provide a national view and accounting of events, issues and discoveries at all levels across the country.

(b) To date, there have been three issues of Land/Terre. The numbers distributed for each issue are as follows: Volume 1, No. 1: 7,000 English and 1,100 French; Volume 1, No. 2: 10,500 English and 1,800 French; and Volume 2, No. 1: 10,500 English and 2,000 French. The fourth issue was distributed in August, 1981.

(c) The newsletter has been distributed to the following: professional planners, land managers and researchers; government officers and senior managers; municipal, provincial and federal elected representatives; non-government special interest groups; educational institutes and professionals; publishers; reporters; and private individuals.

(d) Production of four separate 12-page English and French issues of Land/Terre (Lands Directorate Newsletter) and delivery of 10,500 English and 2,000 French copies each of the four newsletters. Included in the work is the planning of contents and stories, researching and drafting stories and articles, editing the English copy, supervising the layout design, graphic design, illustration, and production of the text; as well as execution of graphic design, illustration and layout to produce camera-ready copies.

ASSISTANCE—FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

Question No. 2,623—Mr. Flis:

1. By province, what is the number of farmers who applied to the Farm Credit Corporation for assistance and what number (a) received (b) did not receive assistance?

2. For what reasons was the assistance refused?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Farm Credit Corporation advises: 1.

Province	Requests for loan	(a) Received loan	Process of being reviewed	Voluntarily decided not to proceed	(b) Declined by FCC
Alta.	1441	376	157	233	675

Que.	1319	302	254	302	461
Alt.	235	105	24	17	89

2. Principal occupation would not be farming after loan, does not qualify for phase-in loan; purpose for which loan funds were requested does not fall within FCC lending policy; loan request refused as applicant already had a viable unit or had sufficient resources to obtain financing elsewhere.

ACCIDENT IN CÔTE STE. CATHERINE LOCK

Question No. 2,627—Mr. Benjamin:

1. Did the Department of Transport or the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority investigate or prepare a report on the accident in the Côte Ste. Catherine lock at 1700, November 28, 1980 involving the Ungava Transport and the Canari and, if so, what were the findings of the investigation or report?

2. Were there any damages and was any liability assessed?

3. Did the department or the authority bill the owner or operator of either vessel and, if so, for what amount and what was the name of the owner or operator?

4. To the knowledge of the government, what is the safety record of Halco and the record of its involvement in marine incidents and accidents?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The Coast Guard and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority investigated this casualty, which occurred at 16:54 November 29 (not 28 as noted in the question), 1980. The findings of the inquiry were that the casualty was caused by an incorrect engine movement, to which the ship's staff was not alerted, due to a malfunction in the alarm equipment. The Ungava Transport could not be held by the mooring wires and continued ahead, being stopped when the bow struck the lock breast wall. The yacht Canari ahead of the tanker in the lock, was struck in the stern and then was swept aside in the forward movement.

2. The stem of the Ungava Transport at the 12′ draught mark was punched in for some two feet and the vessel holed. The yacht suffered considerable hull damage. The authority sent a formal notice to Halco, Incorporated, owners of the Ungava Transport, holding them responsible for the damages sustained by the authority, as well as the expenses incurred in helping the owner of the Canari. Neither the Coast Guard nor the Seaway authority assess liability between vessels in such cases, this being the function of the courts or insurance adjusters. Settlement is still in the course of negotiation between Halco and the owner of the yacht, Mr. John P. Harney of Picton, Ontario.

3. The Authority will invoice Halco, Incorporated, an amount of approximately $14,000.

All Casualties Involving Hall Corporation Shipping Ltd. (Halco) Vessels Reported to Transport Canada since 1975 (inclusive)

	Fire	Collision & Contact	Groundings	Strikings	Other	Casualty Total	Number Deaths	Number Injuries
Tankers	1	3	4	2	3	13	0	0
Cargo	2	4	14	5	4	29	7	4
Total	3	7	18	7	7	42	7	4

The seven deaths were all involved in the Cartiercliffe Hall fire which was the subject of a public inquiry.

Many of the reported casualities are of a minor nature.

Only the more serious injuries are normally reported.

INSURANCE ON BANK ACCOUNTS

Question No. 2,628—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the present limit of insurance provided by the government on bank accounts and term deposits with bank and trust companies now limited to $20,000?

2. Is the government aware that the amount of the limit of this insurance in the United States is now $100,000?

3. Will the government, in view of inflation and the consequent erosion of the value of the dollar, give immediate consideration to increasing such insurance coverage in Canada to the same amount as in the United States?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): In so far as the Minister of Finance is concerned, I have been advised by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation as follows: 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. The government is giving attention to the possibility of amendments to the CDIC Act and its policy will be announced in due course.

PRIVATE RAILWAY CARS

Question No. 2,631—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is a complete list and a description of all private railway cars in the custody or under the direction of the Department of Transport for use by cabinet ministers or other persons?

2. What is a list, by categories of persons, of those entitled to use the cars?

3. On what date did the Department of Transport acquire the cars and, in each case, on what date was the car manufactured?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. There are presently two units of private railway cars under the custody of the Department of Transport and are described as follows:

cars Nos. 1 and 2, a government-owned two-car unit primarily for the use of the Royal family and Governor General but also available for other authorized users with the Governor General's agreement.

car No. 5, a single car unit with facilities to accommodate up to seven persons.

2. Authorized users of the private railway cars are the Governor General, the Prime Minister, cabinet ministers, and commissioners of the Canadian Transport Commission.

3. Railway cars Nos. 1 and 2 were manufactured in 1966 for acquisition by the Department of Transport in the same year. Railway car No. 5 was manufactured in 1929 and was assigned to the Department of Transport in 1967.

PRIVATE RAILWAY CAR

Question No. 2,632—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was railway car number 53 returned to the Canadian National Railways in Montreal from Ottawa on May 21, 1981, by direction of the Minister of Transport?

2. Was this car used on many occasions by various cabinet ministers in the past?

3. For what reason was the railway car returned to the CNR?

4. Did the Department of Transport decide that it no longer wanted custody and, if so (a) for what reason (b) was the decision in any way due to the asking of questions involving the use of the railway car by cabinet ministers and was it considered to be embarrassing by the government?

5. Will the car be replaced and, if so, by what?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. This car was used on several occasions by various cabinet ministers in the past.

3. Surplus to anticipated future requirements.

4. (a) See answer to part 3.

5. No.

SALE OF CONDOMINIUM UNITS

Question No. 2,634—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Did the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation sell 577 condominium units at an average price of $20,500 on November 10, 1980, in buildings bearing municipal addresses 7170 Darcel Avenue, 7230 Darcel Avenue and 7280 Darcel Avenue, Mississauga, Ontario?

2. (a) Was the sale made to 1641-9459 Quebec Incorporated (b) was there a loss by the corporation or by the mortgage insurance fund from the sale and, if so, in what amount?

3. What is all the information with respect to public tenders concerning the offering of the buildings to the public?

4. Did the same company purchase, on the open market, condominium units in the same building for between $44,000 and $47,000?

5. What are the names of the principals behind the company that purchased the units?

6. Was an effort made to turn over the units at the exceptionally low prices offered to the Ontario Housing Corporation or to make the units available for public housing?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1. CMHC sold 572 units in a project consisting of 602 units located at 7170, 7230 and 7280 Darcel Avenue, Mississauga. The project is now known as River Royal 1, 2 and 3. The basic selling price was $20,500 per unit, however, the agreement for sale provides for certain ongoing sales considerations, obligations and restrictions:

(a) The purchaser must refund to CMHC the cost of renovating those units used for rental purposes, up to $2,000 per unit. This cost is over and above the $20,500 per unit and applies to all units leased by CMHC between the signing of the offer and the closing of the transaction.

(b) The purchaser has agreed not to resell units for condominium ownership for a period of five years, without prior agreement from CMHC with respect to conditions and price.

(c) The purchaser has agreed to pay CMHC 30 per cent of the difference between the approved resale price of each condominium unit and the $20,500 purchase price.

2. (a) The units were sold to three separate companies as follows:

	Name of Purchaser
7170 Darcel Avenue	1641-9459 Que. Inc.
7230 Darcel Avenue	1641-9467 Que. Inc.
7280 Darcel Avenue	1641-9475 Que. Inc.

These companies are designated by "Le Groupe Carrefour Limitée", the company that originally submitted the proposal.

(b) The estimated loss on final transaction could be approximately $11 million of which $5.1 million comprises interest, legal and foreclosure costs incurred in the claim settlement process. The remainder of the loss is attributable to conversion from condominium use to rental.

3. Multiple unit projects are offered for sale to the private sector through the request for proposals (REP) technique rather than by public tender. CMHC advertises that it is placing a number of units on the market. Proposals are invited from proponents with demonstrated financial and management capability and satisfactory credit standings.

4. The purchasers of the Darcel buildings bought 15 condominium units in the same project from in situ home owners as a condition of sale imposed by CMHC. The prices paid for these units reflect the investment of the unit owners rather than the current market value.

5. The names of the principals in the three companies who purchased the project are:

(a) Aménagements Les Boisés St-Jérôme Inc. (represented by Gilles Leroux)

(b) 100597 Canado Inc. (represented by P. Thompson, Jr., Maurice Mayer and James Lawdon)

(c) Birer Realty Inc. (represented by Herman Bistricer)

(e) 107088 Investments Ltd. (subsidiary of 3 Way Development Corporation and represented by Henri Cynamon)

6. No. While CMHC encourages the sale of suitable market projects to private or public non-profit and co-operative organizations, it is seldom that large projects such as this one can be transferred to the social housing sector.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES AT AIRPORTS

Question No. 2,636—Mr. Herbert:

Does the Department of Transport monitor the provision of services in both official languages at airports that are not administered by the Department and, if so, in what manner?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian air transportation administration's official languages program was developed and implemented at airports owned and operated by Transport Canada. Accordingly the department monitors the provision of services in both official languages at only these airports. The department does not monitor the provision of these services at airports not administered by it.

BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Question No. 2,637—Mr. Herbert:

1. What number of air traffic controllers at the Sherbrooke airport are bilingual?

2. Is full bilingual service to be provided at the airport and, if so, by what year is it expected all air traffic controllers will be able to operate in both official languages?

3. Is the airport administered by the Department of Transport and, if not, who is responsible for the staffing of air traffic controller positions?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Since air traffic control service is not provided at the airport there are no air traffic controllers stationed at Sherbrooke.

2. There are no immediate plans to construct a control tower or provide air traffic control service at the Sherbrooke airport. However, essential flight services are available at Sherbrooke from a Transport Canada flight service station staffed by fully bilingual flight service specialists.

Order Paper Questions

3. Sherbrooke airport is owned by Transport Canada and operated by the municipality of Sherbrooke. Staffing of the flight service station is the responsibility of Transport Canada.

Question No. 2,638—Mr. Herbert:

1. What number of air traffic controllers at the Ottawa airport are bilingual?

2. Is full bilingual service to be provided at the airport and, if so, by what year is it expected all air traffic controllers will be able to operate in both official languages?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. There are five bilingual air traffic controllers at the Ottawa airport.

2. Transport Canada has no immediate plans to provide bilingual air traffic control service at the Ottawa airport.

POLISH APPLICATIONS MADE THROUGH VIENNA

Question No. 2,660—Mr. Flis:

1. How many individuals from Poland made application through the Vienna post of the Department of Employment and Immigration since the strike situation arose in Poland?

2. How many of the applications were independent and how many were made under the self-exiled designate class?

3. Was there a significant increase in the number of applications since the uprising in Poland?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. In the 10-month period of August 1, 1980, to May 31, 1981, 590 persons listing Poland as their country of last permanent residence made application in Vienna to come to Canada.

2. Seven of these applications were for the independent class and 583 were for the self-exiled persons designated class.

3. Yes. In the 10-month period before August 1, 1980, there were a total of 244 applications made in Vienna.

TESTIMONY OF MR. LIDINSKY—CAST SHIPPING GROUP

Question No. 2,667—Mr. Crosby:

1. To the knowledge of the government, did a Mr. Richard Lidinsky give testimony before the merchant marine subcommittee of the United States House of Representatives about a "James Bond-type" company and is the company known as Canadian Air-Sea Transport North America Ltd?

2. Is Canadian Air-Sea Transport North America Ltd. the company in which the Canadian National Railways invested more than $50 million and, if not, is it related to the Cast shipping group?

3. Did the Cast shipping group cause container and other marine traffic to be diverted from United States ports to Canadian ports and, if so, to which ports and did the diversion result in the loss of 5,000 jobs in the United States ports, as alleged by Mr. Lidinsky?

4. Did the Canadian ambassador to the United States or any Canadian officer send a diplomatic note to a representative of the government of the United States respecting proposed legislation to regulate maritime trade between Canada and the United States?

5. Did the Cast shipping group sign a 15-year "sweetheart lease" in respect of facilities in the port of Montreal, as alleged by Mr. Lidinsky?

6. Are any cabinet ministers involved in the Cast shipping group, as mentioned by Mr. Lidinsky, and, if so, what are their names?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Transport Canada, the Department of External Affairs and the Privy Council Office as follows:

1. Yes, it has been reported that he did refer to Cast as a "James Bond-type" company, however, that statement was not part of the written submission of Mr. Lidinsky. It was also reported that other witnesses made favourable comments about Cast.

No, the company is not known as Canadian Air-Sea Transport North America Ltd. but its correct name is Cast North America Limited.

2. The Canadian National Railways has invested more than $50 million into the parent companies of the Cast shipping group.

3. Cast is one of the companies that carries containers of United States origin or destination between North America and Europe. To the knowledge of the government there is no evidence to support such a statement that the Cast shipping group is the cause of cargo diversion through Canadian ports. In 1980, 101,481 containers of Canadian origin or destination moved through United States ports and 106,857 containers of United States origin or destination moved through Canadian ports. The government has no evidence to support the allegation by Mr. Lidinsky that 5,000 jobs were lost in the United States as a result of these container movements. The ports in which this loss was alleged to occur were not specified by Mr. Lidinsky's written submission.

4. While the Canadian government recently sent a diplomatic note to the U.S. department of state on proposed legislation being considered by the U.S. Congress, the legislation did not concern the regulation of maritime trade between Canada and the United States but the extraterritorial extension of the authority of the U.S. federal maritime commission to regulate shipping between Canada and third countries if United States origin or destination cargoes were carried. The Canadian government opposed this legislation both because of its extraterritorial dimension and because of its inconsistency with established principles and practices of maritime trade.

5. Mr. Lidinsky's allegation that the Cast shipping group signed a 15-year "sweetheart lease" for use of facilities in the port of Montreal is false.

The Cast group has signed with the National Harbours Board a lease for a 15-year period commencing January 1, 1980, for use of the port of Montreal facilities. This agreement is considered to be one of the most stringent and lucrative ones signed in favour of the port of Montreal facilities.

6. The conflict of interest guidelines for ministers of the Crown tabled in the House on May 1, 1980 require that cabinet ministers with holdings in business ventures divest themselves of such interests either through selling or by placing them in a blind trust.

Cabinet ministers have no known financial involvement in the Cast shipping group.

ARTICLE ON MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Question No. 2,668—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Does the Department of National Defence or any other department or agency subsidize the magazine "The Canadian Military Journal"?

2. Was Department of National Defence and Department of Veterans Affairs advertising carried by the magazine and, if so, what amount was spent (a) in 1979 (b) in 1980 (c) as of July 1, 1981?

3. (a) Was a 12-page fulsome article on the Minister of Justice carried by the magazine in the winter 1981 issue and, if so, was it paid for by the Liberal Party (b) were 8 photographs of the minister included in the article and were they provided by a department and, if so, which department?

4. What is the circulation of the magazine?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Justice, National Defence and Veterans Affairs as follows:

1. No.

2. Yes

National Defence	Veterans Affairs
(a) $2,200	(a) Nil
(b) $2,800	(b) Nil
(c) $1,650	(c) $1,300

3. (a) (i) An article on the Minister of Justice did appear in the winter 1981 issue of "The Canadian Military Journal".

(ii) This matter does not fall within the administrative responsibility of the Government of Canada.

(b) At the request of the Canadian Military Journal, the Minister of Justice supplied photographs from his personal dossiers.

4. See Part 3(a)(ii) above.

CANADIAN AIR TRANSPORTATION ADMINISTRATION BOOKLET

Question No. 2,693—Mr. Jelinek:

1. How many copies of the booklet "The Canadian Air Transportation Administration" were printed and which company was awarded the printing contract?

2. Was the contract awarded through public tender and, if not, in what manner?

3. What was the total (a) cost of publication (b) circulation?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. 258,525 copies; Baslaw, McCarney & Mann Ltd., Ottawa, Ontario.

2. Yes.

3. (a) $65,029 (incl. $6,750 federal sales tax).

(b) An initial distribution was included in the above contract price; subsequently, approximately another $1,200 was spent on distribution.

CPP—LOANS TO PROVINCES

Question No. 2,694—Mr. Riis:

1. Do the provinces have to pay back the money loaned to them from the Canada Pension Plan fund?

2. Since the inception of the Canada Pension Plan, what was the total amount of collected funds received from pension contributions?

3. What amount of the contributions was paid out in benefits?

4. In 1980, what was the administrative cost for the Canada Pension Plan?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Finance and National Health and Welfare as follows:

1. Yes, the provinces do have to repay funds borrowed from the Canada Pension Plan. Sections 112 and 113 of the Canada Pension Plan provide that excess moneys in the plan may be invested in provincial securities, securities of provincial Crown agencies and securities of the Government of Canada having a term to maturity of 20 years, or such lesser term as is fixed by the Minister of Finance. By the terms and conditions of the securities there is a contractual obligation in which the provincial borrower "promises to pay to the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General for Canada to the credit of the Canada Pension Plan Investment Fund" . . . the principal sum that was borrowed. Interest is payable semi-annually.

2. The total amount of contributions collected under the Canada Pension Plan as of March 31, 1981 was $19,759.7 million.

3. Since the inception of the Canada Pension Plan, $8,637,406,000 have been paid out in benefits. The following is a breakdown of the benefit payments by fiscal year.

1966-1967	50.8
1967-1968	1,268.5
1968-1969	15,567.0
1969-1970	47,346.4
1970-1971	89,235.8
1971-1972	144,379.2
1972-1973	206,275.3
1973-1974	278,157.3
1974-1975	398,965.6
1975-1976	587,833.7
1976-1977	833,251.2
1977-1978	1,059,068.3
1978-1979	1,328,410.2
1980-1981	2,012,524.3

4. The administrative cost of the Canada Pension Plan during the fiscal year 1980-81 was $66,732,910. This amount includes the costs incurred by the departments and agencies involved in the administration of the Canada Pension Plan (Department of Health and Welfare, Department of National Revenue, Department of Insurance, Department of Supply and Services, Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, Public Works).

Order Paper Questions

AERONAUTICS ACT TASK FORCE

Question No. 2,709—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is there an Aeronautics Act task force and, if so (a) on what date, under what authority and for what period of time was it established (b) what are its terms of reference?

2. Since its inception, who has been employed on the task force and what are their (a) qualifications (b) terms and conditions of employment?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The Aeronautics Act task force was created in the early summer of 1978 by the Canadian air transportation administration and announced by the then minister of transport, the Hon. Otto Lang, on July 26, 1978. The task force is mandated to review and make recommendations on amendments to the Aeronautics Act and the subordinate legislation made pursuant thereto as well as the applicable enforcement procedures. It was anticipated that the project would be completed within approximately two years. As a result of the complexity of the subject matter, delays occasioned by the Dubin inquiry and operational requirements, it is now expected that the task force will complete its work in the fall of 1981.

2. A variety of persons have been employed on the task force, both from within government and from the private sector. Some have been lawyers, in most cases with aeronautical background, but most have been technical specialists. Task force members have been recruited from outside the public service by contract or by term appointments, or by secondment from other organizations within the public service.

CENTRALIZING OF DATA BANKS

Question No. 2,717—Mr. Beatty:

Is the government considering plans that would in any way centralize data banks now under the control of more than one department or agency and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): No.

NATIONAL DEBT FOR 1981

Question No. 2,727—Mr. Beatty:

What is the national debt for 1981 and what will be the total amount paid in 1981 for carrying charges on the national debt?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): The gross public debt of the federal government at the end of the fiscal year 1981-82 is estimated at $133,680 million. The total amount estimated in the budget for carrying charges on the national debt in 1981-82 is $12,350 million. In a speech to the Vancouver Board of Trade delivered on July 6, 1981, the minister indicated that public debt charges would be some $1½ billion higher than estimated in the budget.

AIRPORT WEAPONS DETECTION EQUIPMENT

Question No. 2,729—Mr. Beatty:

1. For each year since weapons detection equipment was installed, by airport, how many persons were (a) refused permission to board aircraft (b) forced to surrender concealed weapons before boarding?

2. In how many instances were charges laid against individuals carrying concealed weapons and, in each case (a) what was the charge (b) was a conviction ultimately registered?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The list below contains the information reported to Transport Canada by the major Canadian air carriers and the RCMP. For the years 1972 to 1975, see reply to question No. 3861, Thirtieth Parliament, first session, answered February 19, 1976. It should be noted that the criteria for statistical collection relating to airport security and weapons detection equipment was changed in 1976. This would account for the higher figures for years 1974 and 1975 in respect of question 1(b). Air carriers no longer tabulate and report on all the potentially dangerous type articles and offensive weapons removed from passengers for safe keeping during the flight. Emphasis is now placed on the detection of real firearms and explosive devices during pre-board screening.

1. (a)

Year	Airport	Number
1976	Montreal (Dorval)	1
1977	Edmonton Municipal	1
1978	Wabush	1
1979	Edmonton Municipal	2

	Calgary	1
	Fort McMurray	1
1980	Montreal (Dorval)	2
	Saint John	1
		14

(b) Statistics as to the number of persons forced to surrender concealed weapons before boarding have not been maintained by the air carriers. The number of weapons detected during pre-board screening are reported as follows:

Airport	1976	1977	1978	1979	1980	1981
Dorval	8	1	2	0	4	1
Mirabel	3	1	0	0	1	0

CANADA-CUBA AGREEMENT

Question No. 2,738—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was there a recent financial settlement between the Canadian and Cuban governments for moneys owing to Canadians by the government of Cuba and, if so (a) what was it, in terms of cents against dollars (b) what is the total amount that will be received?

2. What are the names and job designations of all persons acting on behalf of Canada, directly or indirectly, who negotiated the settlement?

3. (a) At any time did the Prime Minister or anyone representing him, directly or indirectly, have anything to do with the settlement and, if so, what were the dates and details (b) did the Prime Minister discuss the matter with Premier Fidel Castro?

4. For what reason was a larger settlement not insisted upon, in view of Canada's continuing to trade with Cuba and diplomatically recognizing Cuba when many countries in North and South America do not?

5. Was it government policy to make a low settlement and was it in any way occasioned by the Prime Minister's visit to Cuba a few years ago and by his statement "Viva Fidel Castro"?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes.

(a) This is impossible to determine until after the Foreign Claims Commission has reported to ministers on the eligibility and quantum of individual claims.

(b) $850,000.

2. The agreement was negotiated by officials of the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Finance, acting under the instructions of and reporting to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Finance.

3 (a) No.

(b) No.

4. The settlement is expected to provide reasonable compensation to eligible Canadian claimants.

5. Government policy in repect of the settlement was in no way occasioned by the visit of the Prime Minister to Cuba.

Order Paper Questions

SOLAR HEAT—BROCKVILLE FEDERAL BUILDING

Question No. 2,754—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was solar heat installed in the Brockville federal building in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville and, if so (a) what are all the details (b) who made the decision and on what date (c) what was the total cost?

2. Were tenders called for the installations and, if so (a) what were the names of the bidders and the amount of the bid in each case (b) were the tenders invited or publicly advertised (c) were any firms contacted privately and, if so, which firms?

3. (a) Was the purpose of the installations to heat the building (b) is the government aware that the heating panels specified are estimated to be capable of providing only enough heat to heat a hot water tank for washroom purposes and, if so, for what reason are they being used?

4. Are such installations planned for the future and, if so (a) what are all the details (b) who made the decision and on what date (c) what is the total estimated cost (d) will public tenders be called?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1. No.

2. N/A.

3. N/A.

4. A packaged solar domestic hot water heater is planned for the Brockville federal building in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville.

(a) Over 5,000 systems are planned for future installations over the next four years in every region of Canada for 14 federal government departments and 15 Crown corporations as part of the purchase and use of solar heating (PUSH) program.

(b) This program is designed to foster the development of an indigenous regional Canadian solar industry and was announced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in July, 1978.

(c) Total cost of the program will be $125 million over five years.

PAMPHLET—"AN INVITATION"

Question No. 2,791—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Parks Canada publish a pamphlet in both official languages under the authority of the Minister of the Environment entitled "An Invitation", on the subject of the St. Lawrence Islands National Park?

2. Were 12 pictures used as illustrations in the pamphlet and were ten of the pictures included either under French-language headings or in the middle of French-language promotion material and, if so, for what reason was there not an equal number under English-language headings or promotion material?

3. What were the names and job designations of all persons responsible for drawing up the pamphlet, including those who wrote the pamphlet and those who decided where to place the photographs?

4. How many copies of the pamphlet were printed and (a) who printed them (b) what was the total cost?

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): 1. Yes, a pamphlet entitled "An Invitation" was published for St. Lawrence Islands National Park. The publication has a limited life-span designed solely for the 1981 summer park interpretive program.

2. Seven photographs appear on the schedule of events section of the pamphlet. The section is bilingual and the photographs are not related to any particular language designation. To accommodate the placement of the front cover little panels, space was not available to include any of the photographs which were to appear in the English section. Therefore, a decision was made to include the panels on the English side and place the photographs on the French side of the pamphlet.

3. Dave Warner, acting superintendent, St. Lawrence Islands National Park, Don Ross, park naturalist, St. Lawrence Islands National Park and Mary-Jane Lamb, interpretative/media specialist, St. Lawrence Islands National Park

4. 20,000.

(a) Hesson and White Printers Ltd., Kingston, Ontario.

(b) $3,264.55.

COST OF INQUIRIES

Question No. 2,796—Mr. Mazankowski:

To date, what was the total cost of the (a) Report of the Mississauga Railway Accident Inquiry (b) Commission of Inquiry into Bilingual Air Traffic Services in Quebec?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport):

(a) $1,126,468.

(b) $2,364,613.

COMMISSIONER OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Question No. 2,871—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Privy Council Office for the Commissioner of Official Languages at page 32.26, volume II of the 1979-80 public accounts of Canada, with particular reference to hospitality services (a) what was the name of each type of service (b) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts of a value more than $2,000, to whom was it paid (c) are guidelines used to determine when the commissioner will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (d) of the $7,845 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) members of provincial parliaments, legislative assemblies and the national assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant-Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council):

The Commissioner of Official Languages reports directly to Parliament and not through a minister. Questions can be made directly to him.

ADMIRAL ROBERT FALLS

Question No. 1,196—Mr. Cossitt:

In the past two years up to the date the answer to this question is prepared, how many trips did Admiral Robert Falls make to and from Canada to other places, particularly Europe and, in each case, what (a) was the means and class of transportation (b) was the destination (c) were the dates (d) was the purpose (e) was the cost to the taxpayer (f) were the names and job designations of all those accompanying him and attached in any way to Armed Forces staff rendering services of any kind whatsoever to him?

Return tabled.

IMPACT ON PETRO-CANADA OF NEP

Question No. 2,006—Mr. Wilson:

What is the expected impact on Petro-Canada of the National Energy Program for the fiscal years 1978 and 1979 using actual figures, and for the years 1980 to 1984 using estimated figures, before NEP on company forecasts as prepared in using tax assumptions in place prior to the October 28, 1980 announcement of the NEP, and stating such assumptions, and after NEP on company forecasts, revised to reflect the impact of the NEP using the following standards of measurement (a) cash flow from operations (defined to mean the gross proceeds from the sale of all hydrocarbon substances including royalty income therefrom; less all Crown, freehold or other royalties, operating costs, administrative expenses, interest expense and income or other taxes currently payable; and making no deduction for depletion, depreciation or amortization or deferred taxes) (i) conventional areas before and after NEP (ii) Canada lands before and after NEP (b) capital spending on oil and gas exploration and development in Canada (i) conventional areas before and after NEP (ii) Canada lands before and after NEP (c) source and application of funds before and after NEP?

Return tabled.

NUMBER OF FIRES ON NCC PROPERTY

Question No. 2,138—Mr. Lawrence:

1. How many fires have occurred on National Capital Commission properties within the city of Ottawa in each of the past 15 years and, in each case, what was the (a) total dollar value of the resulting damage (b) assessed total value of the property?

2. Does the NCC carry fire insurance on its properties?

Return tabled.

INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF THE DISABLED

Question No. 2,318—Mr. Elzinga:

1. To date, which projects were approved for funding by the Canadian Organizing Committee for the International Year of the Disabled?

2. For each group receiving funds, what was the name, address and amount granted?

Return tabled.

PLEASURE CRAFT

Question No. 2,495—Mr. Greenaway:

1. In each year 1978 to date, how many pleasure boats of (a) power (b) sail (c) other types were imported and, in each case (i) from which country (ii) what was the length of the craft (iii) what was the province of destination?

2. (a) For the same period, how many boat building manufacturers of (i) power (ii) sail (iii) other craft were registered in each province (b) how many of the companies exported (i) power (ii) sail (iii) other craft and to which countries were they exported?

3. For the same period, how many (a) power (b) sail (c) other boats were sold in (i) Canada (ii) British Columbia?

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 2,584?

[Text]

Question No. 2,584—Mr. Cullen:

Was Canadian citizenship awarded to any persons under subsection 5(4) of the Citizenship Act and, if so, what number were (a) "in order to alleviate cases of special and unusual hardship" (b) "to reward services of an exceptional value to Canada"?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): In reply to Question No. 2584, I should like to say that since the current Citizenship Act came into effect on February 15, 1977, 47 persons have been granted Canadian citizenship under Section 5(4), to wit: (a) "to alleviate cases of special and unusual hardship", 46; (b) "to reward services of an exceptional value to Canada", 1.

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, in rising to make a brief point of order, may I preface it by congratulating the hon. member for Don Valley East on being appointed the latest "Dr. No". I hope that he will not suffer the fate of his predecessor who is now sitting across the way in outer Siberia.

In any event, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary something which I have raised for five and a half years. I felt that perhaps it was inappropriate to raise the matter on the first day—but, on the other hand, when it has been five and a half years perhaps it is appropriate—as to why question No. 30 has not been answered. As his predecessors will tell him, I have raised this question and each time I received the answer that it will be answered soon. It is now about five and a half years, give or take a day or two, which seems to me to be a long time. I have simply asked for the members of the Canadian Transport Commission who have passes on Air Canada, their wives who have passes on Air Canada, and certain other interrelated questions. It is very simple, but in five and a half years the government has not been able to tell us.

Therefore, I think I should give the parliamentary secretary notice that if he cannot tell me today—and I know it is premature, since I believe he was appointed about fifteen minutes ago, to expect that he would be good enough to be quite that fast—I intend to raise this matter as often as the Chair will permit me to do so in order that it will not take perhaps ten and a half years.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I take note of this suggestion. I should point out, if the question has been on the Order Paper for five and a half years, that the party to which the hon. member belongs could have answered it when it was in government.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall all notices of motions stand?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, July 15, consideration of Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and Motion No. 3 (Mr. McGrath).

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise reluctantly today because I feel that it would be much more appropriate for the House to be considering both of the motions under Standing Order 26 since they are of far greater importance to the country at this time than Bill C-48.

We debated Bill C-48 for three days prior to the recess in July. We have been considering proposed legislation of this sort for approximately eleven years. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) said during his short remarks on this piece of legislation that he was very sorry that legislation had not been in place for that period of time prior to this. We have been waiting for governments, of which he has been a member, to bring in that legislation for eleven years.

We could easily put this off for another few days to listen to the comments of hon. members on the very serious problems affecting the country in the areas of interest rates, high unemployment and transportation policy, as the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) proposed. But having said that, we must continue with the consideration of Bill C-48.

Before I continue, I should like to say on behalf of hon members on this side of the House who sat on the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works that we recognize the very strong contributions made by the witnesses on Bill C-48 during the early part of this year. On behalf of my party I should like to thank the officials from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the representatives from the industry, native peoples and governments of the north, fisheries representatives, people interested in the environment, as well as government officials who came all the way from Norway, for their very strong contributions in developing an understanding of what is a very complex bill. I am only sorry that the government has not seen fit to listen to their representations. Many of their very worth-while suggestions and proposals have not found their way into the amendments before us.

If you recall, Mr. Speaker, this bill was rushed in on very short notice just before the summer recess. That was contrary to the understanding that I had with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As a result, some very important amendments were missed. I want to say at this point that I hope the government and the New Democratic Party will allow these amendments to be introduced following discussions with my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), who will be responsible for this bill and who will be negotiating with his colleagues.

This bill is one of a series of pieces of legislation which arise out of the energy program which was first announced last October. It displays ineptness and a lack of understanding of an energy policy on the part of this government.

Since the summer adjournment, two energy agreements have been concluded, one with the province of Alberta and one with the province of British Columbia. The government is very proud of these agreements and has been quick to congratulate itself from one end of the country to the other. But these agreements have just resulted in a larger revenue grab than ever by two levels of government, and a tax increase which over the next five years, including the energy agreement and the energy program, will result in over $50 billion falling due to the federal government.

Consumers who trusted the government in the 1980 election, who accepted what the government said when it was in opposition—to vote Liberal to keep energy prices down—have now been hammered further by energy price increases that were inconceivable when they cast their ballots in February, 1980. On top of the record inflation we have today, the record interest rates and unemployment of 8.2 per cent, these new energy prices will have a greater impact than if they had been introduced in the early part of last year. The government's flip-flop, its lack of negotiation last year and these Liberal failures, take a tremendous human toll when added to high interest rates and high unemployment.

The problem has not been solved yet, Mr. Speaker. Drill rigs are still leaving the country. There is still a job loss in the energy services organizations in Alberta and the major energy projects at Cold Lake and Alsands are still on hold.

All this makes it more important than ever that we ensure that Bill C-48 is good legislation. The government has seriously damaged the development in provincial lands so we must do everything we possibly can to ensure there is orderly and progressive development of the Canada lands. We must not add another failure to the government's long list of failures in its first 18 months of office.

Let me review the Conservative Party's position on motion No. 3 which is now before us, Mr. Speaker. This is essentially a jurisdictional issue. We feel that rather than grab the jurisdiction of the various parts set out in Bill C-48 unilaterally, it is essential that the government negotiate. The government should not grab these lands as the result of the simple, innocuous amendment that is before us in motion No. 3.

The rate of development and the impact of this development on the communities involved is of great importance to people in Canada. We on this side of the House are very concerned that all the people directly affected should have the opportunity to participate in the formulation of policies leading to that development. This is a jurisdictional dispute, Mr. Speaker, a dispute which we feel must not be acted upon in a unilateral way. The Government of Canada must respect the regions and work with them in the development of these lands. That would not be the case as Bill C-48 stands.

The position of the Conservative Party was set out in a letter from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) to the Premier of Newfoundland in September, 1979, which stated quite clearly that Newfoundland should own the mineral resources of the continental margin in so far as Canada should own them; that ownership and legislative jurisdiction would be consistent with and subject to the division of legislative competence between the federal government and the provinces; and finally, that the Government of Canada would continue to have legislative jurisdiction in certain areas such as environment, shipping and so on. The position that we have taken, therefore, is to give the coastal provinces the same jurisdictional position on natural resources as is the case with the landlocked provinces of this country.

There is a very good reason for this, Mr. Speaker, and I think it is very clear to anyone who has travelled, particularly to the east coast, to the provinces of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, as I did in the summer of 1980 with my family. The island of Newfoundland is mainly rock with the resources in and under the sea. The livelihood of the people is related primarily to the sea, as has been the case for many years. We in this party recognize that and have put our policy position around that recognition.

Throughout this entire debate, Mr. Speaker, I have been struck by the lack of participation on the government side by members from the Atlantic provinces. I have asked myself where the members from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have been during this debate. We have not heard from the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey). He is listening now and I hope—

Mr. Rompkey: Check Hansard for last year.

Mr. Wilson: We did not hear from him on Bill C-48. I hope we will hear from the Minister of National Revenue on this particular amendment regarding jurisdiction as it relates to the province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Rompkey: I am on record publicly and in this House.

Mr. Wilson: Let us hear from the minister in this debate and on this amendment. Where is the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen)? Where is the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan)? Where is the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc)? We have not heard from any of them. Who from the provinces is defending the government's position? I think we heard from the hon. member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons), but I do not see him in the House today. All members would recognize that his contribution to the debate was but a frivolous interlude and nothing more. It was a little bit of humour one evening, which is all we normally get from him. That is all we have had from him in this debate. We need to hear from the heavyweights so I hope the Minister of National Revenue will make a contribution later today.

As a Member of Parliament from Ontario my position is very clear. I am concerned about future supplies for this country. I am concerned that we will be able to settle this jurisdictional dispute so that we can get on with development and reduce the imports that we are so dependent upon now. I also see this as an opportunity for development that will involve the manufacturing industries of Ontario and Quebec to a very great extent.

Ontario and Quebec are very major resource provinces today. They have vast wealth. I am prepared to share this, as I am sure the residents of the Atlantic provinces would wish to share; but we need to get a balanced development of these resources to ensure the development that we need in the future. The potential is great but we must get on with it. I want to see all the Atlantic provinces share in the development of this country, but not through the transfer of payments and equalization. I want to see them share in the development of their resources, the resources of their own economies. The goal is to make them the "have" provinces. The federal government and the rest of Canada will share, in an extensive way, in the development of these resources through the new energy taxes as well as through income taxes. Therefore, let us have less transfer of payments needed to be paid to those provinces by such development.

Another reason for sharing is the very major impact of this development on the local economy and local society. Let me just recount to the House a story which was told to me when I was in Newfoundland. It was about the early part of the seventies, 1972 or 1973. About a dozen businessmen, competitors but all concerned about the development of the oil industry in the province of Newfoundland, got together and asked, "What is likely to happen to our province if this development goes ahead?" They felt that the best thing they could do was to go over to Scotland and Norway to talk to people who had been directly affected by the developments which had taken place over there. They completed a two-week trip, made a report, and sent the report to Ottawa.

The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, having seen the report, summoned them to Ottawa for some discussion. What they got when they arrived here was a very condescending, patronizing approach by the department. The province of Newfoundland had just hired the first geologist ever to advise the government. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources berated the representatives of Newfoundland for having hired this geologist. The department said, "You do not need a geologist. You can rely on us, on the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. We will look after you; leave it to us."

But what happened? This is the key. What happened was that over the next two years of development, the only moneys which came through the local economy of the province of Newfoundland were customs fees—not customs revenues, just fees—to pass goods, duty free, through the port of St. John's and back out to the offshore rigs. No equipment, food, or otherwise, was purchased from the local economy.

That is what has made the people in Newfoundland so upset. It was after watching two years of this and having been told by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources "We will look after you", that they have taken action and such a strong position in ensuring that the development of their resources will be controlled by themselves and will have the optimum effect on their local economy and their local society.

The impact on their society will be great. Projects of the magnitude of Hibernia will cost about $6 billion to $8 billion. There will be an economic impact as a result of this development, as well as a social impact through urban development, through crime and social problems. We have heard from the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) about the problems which have occurred in Fort McMurray as a result of the major developments there. The people of Newfoundland are concerned about these developments and their effects on the local economy and local society. They are also concerned that local individuals are trained to participate in local industry. Finally, they are concerned about the impact on the environment. That is why it is very important that the jurisdictional issue here be very carefully studied and handled by the government.

My colleague, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), has discussed at some length the jurisdictional issue as it relates to the province of Nova Scotia. The premier of the province, Mr. Buchanan, has sent a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicating the long history of jurisdiction by the province of Nova Scotia over Sable Island. If hon. members recall, it was the inclusion of Sable Island which gave rise to the initial debate on this particular issue. Bill C-48 is attempting to include Sable Island and to change the jurisdictional boundaries of Nova Scotia in a very provocative manner by slipping in this two-word amendment without having the proper jurisdictional discussions with the province. The province of Nova Scotia is seeking to retain jurisdiction over the land which it has held for 350 years. Regardless of the outcome of the jurisdictional dispute on the offshore, Sable Island is a separate matter, and ownership of that particular property must be established on the same basis as it has been over the past 350 years.

In conclusion, let me say that in this motion we are seeing a difference in the view or concept of Canada as between the governing party, the Liberal Party, and the Progressive Conservative Party. We want to see balanced growth of this country. The government would prefer to see that this growth be centralized and controlled closely from Ottawa. We want to see that the provinces have the freedom to grow and to fulfil their own aspirations, because we see that the growth of one part of the country will be helpful to the whole country. It will be a tragedy if the Liberal Party rejects this philosophy and forces a tightly controlled development of the resources of the provinces, and particularly the Atlantic provinces which have not fared too well in confederation. If the Liberals are not able to come to terms with the development of areas which are distant from Ottawa, such as the Atlantic provinces, or, as is now so evident, the western provinces, it would be a real tragedy for this country.

The reason so many members of our caucus, over 20, have participated in this debate on this one particular motion is that we feel so strongly we should have balanced growth within this country, growth which is within the control of those people who are most affected. The Liberals, I am afraid, are concerned that if one part of the country grows too quickly, it will cause them problems. We see that if growth comes in various parts of the country, all the country will benefit by it. That is why we recognize that there is real strength in freeing those parts of the country, as they have the ability and the means through resource development, to build their own societies. They should have the freedom to grow and the freedom to expand within their own country.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise somewhat reluctantly to address Bill C-48 because it is the second time I do so. I must admit that I find the stalling tactics of the opposition on this very important legislation quite reprehensible.

Perhaps it is now a good time to review Bill C-48, its origins, how it came about, and what has happened to it in the process. The purpose of this bill is to regulate companies exploring and producing oil on the Canada lands; that is, in the northern territories, in the high Arctic and, of course, the offshore. That is agreed.

The inadequacy of the legislation which Bill C-48 will replace was first recognized over ten years ago. After much study and a careful analysis of all aspects of this country's energy industry, the federal government issued a policy statement which contained the essential elements of an energy strategy for Canadians. Bill C-20 was first introduced to incorporate this strategy. Bill C-20 was a predecessor of the present Bill C-48, but it died on the Order Paper.

It was a year ago approximately to the day that the National Energy Program was introduced in Parliament, in October, 1980, and Bill C-48 came into being. At that time the opposition vehemently criticized the government for delaying the implementation of such important and much needed legislation.

• (1620)

I am somewhat amused to hear the comments of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). Last December 11 with reference to this bill he said:

> The broad objectives of this legislation are worth while and certainly acceptable. One might go so far as to say that they are motherhood; they are intended to increase production and Canadian ownership, as well as to provide a very stable tax environment. I agree with the minister when he says that it is important to have this legislation. We have been waiting for it for about ten years now.

Yet we hear the same member saying today that he does not think there is any particular rush. He agrees with the minister on the need for legislation, but surely he must agree that if there was need for speed a year ago, there is an even greater need for speed now. The hon. member is pressing us to take action.

What has happened since then? In January, the bill was referred to the House of Commons Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. Committee members deliberated for some 135 hours. The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre is quite right when he pays tribute to all of those people who participated right through from January to June of this past year. There were 140 witnesses and related experts who appeared before the committee. Well over 100 amendments from all three parties were considered during these hearings which resulted in 3,200 pages of testimony and, as a result, a number of amendments have taken place.

In July 1981 the committee reported back to this House on the bill. Then, as is their right and as is becoming their practice, the opposition proceeded to reintroduce most of their amendments, amendments which were considered and disposed of in the committee during its previous deliberations. So in July the House once again began debate on Bill C-48, or rather on opposition motions to amend Bill C-48. Already 30 Members of Parliament have spoken on this amendment.

Here we are back in the fray again today, finding that we must once more waste the scarce and valuable time of the House to debate Bill C-48. We have tolerated a deliberate, concerted effort by the opposition parties to obstruct progress on this bill—

Mr. Waddell: That is democracy.

Mrs. Erola: Democracy is appearing before the committee. We have 3,200 pages of testimony to prove that. Hon. members opposite can discuss but they cannot decide. It is obvious to me that members of the opposition are trying to impose the indecision which characterizes their internal party bickering on this House of Commons. It goes on and on and on.

I find this delay quite shocking, Mr. Speaker. It is impossible to expect companies to operate in an environment when they have no idea what the ground rules will be. This delay, going back to 1970, has cost Canada valuable years in reaching oil self-sufficiency. You agree. Therefore, it is important that we get on with the job right now.

The government has been trying to move this legislation forward. How much has Conservative obstruction cost this country in terms of our stated shared goal of reaching energy self-sufficiency? How many Canadian oil and gas companies have been denied an opportunity to participate in promising Canada lands exploration due to this opposition?

Mr. Siddon: There is no money left for home owners.

Mrs. Erola: I think it is now evident that the National Energy Program and the Canadianization policy that is an inherent part of it over the summer has received the support of the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia through the new oil and gas agreements. The hon. member has said that the government is grabbing the lion's share of the revenues.

Mr. Siddon: You are.

Mrs. Erola: Let us have a look at those revenues. Prior to the National Energy Program, the percentage shares were as follows: Canada 11 per cent; Alberta 42 per cent; and industry 47 per cent.

Mr. Siddon: At the gas pump?

Mrs. Erola: We are talking about revenue sharing.

Mr. Taylor: Whose oil is it?

Mrs. Erola: In the period 1980 to 1986, the breakdown of revenue sharing will be: for Canada $54.3 billion, which is a 25 per cent share; for Alberta $64.3 billion, which is a 30 per cent share; and for the industry $94.2 billion, which is 45 per cent of the share. Members of the opposition call this a federal revenue grab.

An hon. Member: It is a rip-off.

Mrs. Erola: I think the people of Canada will make that decision. Speaking of the people of Canada, a recent poll by the Canadian Petroleum Association indicates that some 84 per cent of Canadians supported the government's Canadianization objectives.

I think it is very significant that the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre, who speaks, as he indicated, for the province of Ontario, chose to ignore the fact that just yesterday the province of Ontario announced that it too was participating in the Canadianization drive by acquiring a 25 per cent interest in Suncor. It is interesting that the National Energy Program not only has the support of the producing provinces but also the support of the major consuming province of Canada, namely, the province of Ontario. We are looking for and getting support for this program from Canadians from every region of this country.

Again, I find it very amusing that the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre chose to ignore the fact that his province, the province which he says he represents, is now participating in the Canadianization program.

While we are considering Bill C-48, opposition members have urged us to seek an agreement with Alberta. That has been achieved. I want them to examine that agreement, as I did just a moment ago, in terms of what it does for the province of Alberta and for the people of Canada.

Mr. Siddon: Fourteen-cent gas, is it?

Mrs. Erola: In 1986, Canadians can expect to pay 79.4 cents per litre for gasoline and 56 cents per litre for heating oil. The levels are currently 37 cents and 25 cents respectively.

Let us have a look at what is happening in other countries. In 1986, Canada's gasoline prices will be lower than those currently being charged in most industrial countries. In Italy the price charged for gasoline is 92.6 cents per litre; in West Germany the charge is 76.3 cents per litre; in the United Kingdom the charge is 89 cents per litre; in France the charge is 86.1 cents per litre; and in the United States the charge is 42.9 cents per litre.

Mr. Siddon: You broke your promise.

Mrs. Erola: Yet in Canada we will not be paying those prices even by 1986.

However, getting back to Bill C-48, I would like to remind hon. members that the primary objectives of Bill C-48 are to promote Canadian ownership and participation in the very promising oil and gas activities on Canada lands—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Haven't you been doing that all along?

Mrs. Erola: —to accelerate the search for oil and gas and to hasten the arrival of oil self-sufficiency. I find the comments made by the hon. member from Etobicoke quite interesting and amusing; interesting in terms of Newfoundland. It is well known that the Canadian government has said to Newfoundland that it will receive 100 per cent of those revenues until that province reaches the "have" stage, and then the revenues will be shared, as is the custom, with all Canadians, with one another.

Let us be honest. Without a specific legislative framework such as Bill C-48, oil companies would be able to exploit our offshore resources answerable to no authority, with no inducement to protect the environment, pay royalties or ensure Canadian participation. I do not think any Canadian would accept that. We, the national government, are negotiating a comprehensive settlement with the coastal provinces. We must exercise our responsibilities to manage and husband those precious resources. We must have the means to do so until such time as that settlement is finally achieved.

I urge all hon. members opposite to reflect quietly on their past behaviour. This House will soon have very important budgetary proposals before it. The constitutional question will require final determination by this House of Commons. So, let us get on with the job; let us get Bill C-48 on the road, and let us get on to energy self-sufficiency.

• (1630)

I should like to close by saying that I came back to this House with a certain amount of enthusiasm. I thought we were going to sit here, deliberate seriously and get on with the business of making Canada grow. I have been, in the last three hours, more than disappointed and amused. I must say that perhaps the addition of a few extra women would serve this House well because the behaviour of this House has been something I have been very, very familiar with in the north, and I would liken it to moose in rutting season.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill C-48 at the report stage. It is a bill which seeks to regulate the oil and gas interests in Canada Lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act.

I listened with great interest to the comments of the hon. lady, the Minister of State for Mines, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mrs. Erola). I found some of her comments were interesting. Speaking as a Nova Scotian, it is obvious to me that she has not been in Nova Scotia lately or she would not have spoken to this House as she did.

The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) mentioned that members from Atlantic Canada should address this particular issue. I had an opportunity to speak to this bill at second reading and I welcome this opportunity to place my arguments again before this House. In the time allotted to me I shall attempt to relate my remarks to my native province of Nova Scotia and to the economic impact which this bill, if passed in its present form, would have on our people.

I know the House will understand if I digress for a moment to mention that Nova Scotians who support the Conservative Party are today walking tall as a result of the outcome of the provincial election in my province on October 6. This election showed my party returned to power with 37 seats, while the Liberals hold only 13, and the NDP, since it elected only one, has lost its status as a party in my province.

An hon. Member: An interim setback.

Mr. Crouse: One of the NDP members says it is "an interim setback". If you call going backwards almost to anonymity going forward, I guess it all depends on how you read the signs. We are rather pleased with this.

During the campaign our premier asked for a strong mandate so he could take a message to Ottawa indicating that Nova Scotians do not like present federal policies. This, of course, is an understatement. I learned while campaigning with the premier and my provincial colleagues that Nova Scotians at all levels of society are demanding that the federal Liberal government do something about high interest rates, about high mortgage rates, about high rentals, which are now higher than they have ever been in the history of this country; do something about the debased purchasing power of the Canadian dollar and take some action generally to fight the economic problems facing all Canadians.

This bill is related to one of the planks of our premier's program, which is to develop self-reliance in energy for Nova Scotians through resource development. To make this possible we must, of course, have a stronger say in the over-all development of our offshore resources. While of late we could not help but note the more amicable attitude taken by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) in finally reaching an agreement between Alberta and Ottawa—which gives us some cause for hope that similar agreements may be reached in Atlantic Canada—there is, however, considerable doubt as to how this will be achieved.

The return to the House of Bill C-48 at this time, when we are faced with so many other problems in this nation, only serves to reinforce these doubts about the government's intentions. In my opinion this bill is obviously improperly worded and should be withdrawn completely from this House.

When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources introduced this bill to the House on December 11, 1980, he called it the key element in the successful fullfilment of the government's national energy program. He waxed eloquent as he stated that our offshore regions cover an area of some 2.5 million square miles. The territories alone, he said comprise another 1.5 million square miles. Together this is what the Liberal Party calls the Canada lands, an area which is almost twice the size of the ten provinces combines.

The minister claimed that oil and gas rights have already been issued for 350 million acres in the Canada lands and that the bill will convert existing rights to the land management regime establishing it in a meaningful way. This same minister, when speaking at the report stage of Bill C-48, added insult to injury so far as we in Atlantic Canada are concerned when, as reported at page 11472 of Hansard of July 13, he stated:

When the resources belong to the people of Canada, would it be responsible to have a situation where the premiers or heads of various governments could veto development?

In the next paragraph he stated:

The notion that a particular region of this country could prevent the people of Canada from getting the benefit of resources which belong to them is one which we as a government cannot accept.

These words are fighting words thrown in the face of Atlantic Canada's premiers. I ask this house: by what authority does this government and the federal Liberal Party say that the resources off Atlantic Canada's coast belong to all the people of Canada? Maybe the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) can answer that question. I would like to hear him expound on this particular thesis.

As Nova Scotians we have based our claim to these resources as far back as 1621 when King James I granted the Royal Charter of Nova Scotia to Sir William Alexander. At that time, in recognition of the utter dependence of the colonies on the sea as a means of transport, he granted as well the water adjacent to our shores to the provinces. In recognition of this dependence, the king included as part of our territory a band of sea stretching about 100 miles seaward from our coast. This particular band easily encompasses Sable Island and covers a large section of the grey area, the controversial Georges Bank, and it also covers a large section of what we call the Scotian shelf.

These boundaries were observed for many years despite numerous conquests and treaty settlements. In fact, Canada's Constitution, the British North America Act of 1867, provided that Nova Scotia's limits would be exactly the same after confederation as they were before.

This claim is further supported by a parliamentary document entitled "Offshore Mineral Resources, Legal Aspects", which says at page 2:

At Confederation, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario retained ownership of the "lands, mines, minerals and royalties", and all public property then belonging to them.

This was embodied respectively in Sections 109 and 117 of the British North America Act. This proviso was also made applicable to Prince Edward Island and British Columbia when they joined Canada. In the western provinces the situation differed initially, as the natural resources were reserved to the federal government when Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba were carved out of what was then called Rupert's Land.

However, the British North America Act of 1930 subsequently transferred the same rights to those provinces, and when Newfoundland became part of Canada in 1949 it was put in a similar position by term 37 of the Terms of Union. Thus, I point out to the House, there is historical and legal justification for provincial resource ownership. This is why I suggest Bill C-48 should be withdrawn. It should be reconsidered and its wording should be changed so its enactment in its present form will not rape, rob, pillage and plunder an area which has too long been classified as a have-not area.

We have worked hard in Atlantic Canada, especially in Nova Scotia, to literally pull ourselves up by our bootstraps. Now that we have clearly established and reaffirmed the provincial right to control land-based resources, as is clearly written into the British North America Act, the claim of the Atlantic provinces to rights covering undersea oil and gas resources off our shores can surely no longer be denied us Nova Scotians, in my view. Now more than ever before there is legitimacy in the argument long held by Nova Scotians that the undersea resources should be deeded to those of us who live in Atlantic Canada in compensation for the mineral-rich lands which other provinces have received early in this century. The Atlantic region has far too long been ignored in its request to be given the same consideration which the federal government gave other provinces through the provision of land where great treasure has been found. Land which, incidentally, all provinces originally held in joint ownership. I feel very strongly about this issue or I would not have taken the time and the effort to speak twice on this same measure.

We do not want the federal government to give us anything to which we are not entitled. We are not beggars and we are not begging, but neither do we want the federal government to take away from us those lands and resources which we feel, we know, and we believe we legitimately own in law under the terms of Bill C-48.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: Those are our lands. In the pirit of justice, fairness and equality, Sir, and in compensation for having surrendered our claims to the northern lands given other provinces, the day has surely arrived when our federal government should no longer hold us in bondage, making us come like a beggar hat in hand here to Ottawa looking for crumbs. It should make up for the oversights of the past and enlarge our territories by recognizing that the land under the sea, to the limits of exploitability, belong to us. We would thereby find our place in the sun.

I can assure you, Sir, that we will be like other provinces. We will be willing to share, but we feel we must have the opportunity throughout the eighties and the nineties to make Nova Scotia self-reliant. In simple language, we must be able to pay our own way. That is all we are asking.

The oil and gas finds off the east coast are promising, exciting and, I believe, they are substantial. Their development can provide us with revenues, lower cost fuels and a competitive source of power for homes and industry. We as Nova Scotians must be assured that supportive industries that foster oil development under the North Atlantic, that support and maintain drilling and the eventual production of raw fuels, are based in Nova Scotia or in Newfoudland, as much as possible. There will be plenty for both our provinces and we want to have a say.

We have been looking for the light at the end of the tunnel for years, Mr. Speaker. Now light is slowly dawning. New opportunities are being thrust upon us. We feel we have to be ready to meet the challenge and to provide trained, willing and eager Nova Scotians to profit from the job opportunities opening up.

I urge the House again to withdraw this bill at this time because the timing is wrong. If it passes in its present form, what does it do? It places not just a little club but a very big club in the hands of the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It makes a mockery of the proposals put forth by that hon. gentleman to the Premier of Nova Scotia on July 21. In that letter, the Prime Minister stated that he shared Premier Buchanan's view about the desirability of beginning to devise co-operative administrative arrangements and a system of revenue-sharing which will prove acceptable to the two levels of government.

Said the Prime Minister in the second paragraph:

> This issue cannot remain unresolved much longer. It is therefore the intention of the federal government to see the matter resolved through the legal process while federal-provincial discussions concentrate on the more germane aspects of administrative mechanisms and revenue-sharing.

In the third paragraph, the Prime Minister states:

> In this context, I would like to propose that we undertake an intensive round of negotiations this fall with a view to resolving all outstanding matters by February, 1982. If by then we have not reached an agreement, we should await the outcome of the legal process, which would of course mean that any future negotiations would start from a different base.

Mr. Speaker, that is the big club we would be giving the right hon. gentleman if we passed this bill now. If we used the right hon. gentleman's own reasoning, there should be no further debate on this bill, in fairness to Premier Buchanan and in fairness to Premier Peckford of Newfoundland, until February of 1982. This could mean that, pending the outcome of the negotiations and the legal process, the discussions could then start from an entirely new base. Those were the Prime Minister's own words.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the stakes are very high for Atlantic Canada. They are too high for us and for the federal government to rush in at this moment to try to settle this matter in a hurry.

I am pleased to see the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané) in the House since I wish to quote briefly from his own document. The hon. gentleman, in Volume No. 1 of his magazine Evolution, states, on page 11, that the onshore impact of offshore activity could produce 20,000 to 30,000 direct jobs, some 150,000 indirect jobs, and investment could reach $8 billion. The article goes on to list the fields in which this activity would take place, such as temporary and permanent service bases, repair, maintenance and steel platform fabrication yards, pipeline installation and pipeline coating yards, partial processing facilities, gas processing and treatment plants and marine terminals. I am only listing a few of the possible golden opportunities that await those of us who live in Atlantic Canada. All these are quoted in the booklet put out by the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that Nova Scotians and citizens of Atlantic Canada are going to fight. We are going to fight hard for our rightful place when administrative arrangements and revenue-sharing decisions are made by government authorities. It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that this government did not give more time to resolving the difficulties we face owing to the breakdown of the Law of the Sea Conference instead of concentrating its efforts on Bill C-48. When the 150-nation UN conference adjourned this summer in Geneva, the Times of London summarized its results as follows:

> The old regime has not been cast aside and cannot yet be, although its days are numbered. The new order is almost ready, and is waiting to take its place, but it cannot yet occupy the centre of the stage.

The bombshell was dropped at that conference by United States Ambassador James Malone when he said:

> The political and economic interests of the United States need to be better protected in the decision-making system of the proposed international seabed authority.

This causes me to ask, where does the breakdown of this conference leave Canada and Canadians? Most of what we have obtained so far in maritime terms beyond the old three-mile limit has been obtained only by unilateral declaration. They include the economic zone. While the 200-mile fishing zone may be safe, I submit to this House that the 200-mile mining and drilling zone is definitely in jeopardy. We claim—only by unilateral declaration—sovereignty over the Arctic archipelago, the waters in between, and the Arctic islands. We claim—only by unilateral declaration—national jurisdiction over the continental shelf and its resources, principally petroleum. None of these declared assertions of jurisdiction will be recognized internationally if the Law of the Sea convention is not concluded and ratified.

Since we are unable to defend our claims with armed force, there may well be invasions of our proclaimed sovereign areas by those who want to drill for oil within the 200-mile limit or drag for minerals on our continental shelf, unless the convention becomes accepted international law.

What we do have under the 1958 international convention on the continental shelf is jurisdiction on the seabed and in the subsoil out to the limits of exploitability, which today means about 1000 feet. On the east coast, this barely covers Hibernia. In other words, the Law of the Sea convention was an attempt to provide the sanction of international respectability and legality to what we and other states have done unilaterally.

In light of its importance, I cannot help but wonder why the Right Hon. Prime Minister failed to convince President Reagan, for example, that the Law of the Sea was an important item both for Ottawa and the North-South Summit at which, I understand, it was not discussed. By failing in this regard, we stand to lose important economic jurisdiction and potential energy resources, especially in Atlantic Canada.

Since the Law of the Sea will determine whether the potential oil and gas resources off our east coast belong to Canada or to the world and since the conference will take place again in Venezuela only in the fall of 1982, I say, for the final time, that Bill C-48 should be withdrawn until this government gets its priorities straight and until this government is certain that its unilateral actions are backed by international law. For all these reasons, I am opposed to this legislation in its present form and wording.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the hon. member who last spoke would permit a question since, I think, he has some time left.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): No. I am sorry to inform the hon. member that the time allotted to the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) has expired. However, with the unanimous consent of the House I can permit a question to be put to him. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I was wanting to intervene on a point of order to ask if I might have some minutes to speak. However, I understand we have until six o'clock this evening. In view of that perhaps we could agree to that.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have just a short question for the hon. member. I followed the Nova Scotia election. The hon. member made reference to Nova Scotia and to the position of the government. As I understand it, the Premier of Nova Scotia has now said that he has a deal with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and that he agrees to what the Prime Minister offered him in a letter which was sent this summer. I have read the letter, and it appears to me that the Prime Minister has offered revenue sharing and 100 per cent of revenue for a period, but in fact he has retained federal control.

I wonder if the hon. member, who made reference to the position of the government in Nova Scotia, could explain to me why the Government of Nova Scotia has given up its claim to offshore control and why its policy differs with the policy of the Conservative Party here in the House. Perhaps he could clear that up for me because I think there is plainly a conflict.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, this explains why the NDP now has only one member in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Waddell: A smart answer, but it does not answer the question.

Mr. Crouse: The simple fact is that we have not given up our claim to offshore resources. What we want to have is a stronger voice in administrative arrangements and in the revenue sharing which will accrue to our province when the offshore oil and gas developments take place. We want to have a say as to where the drilling equipment will be built, where the oil pumping platforms will be constructed, and who will man them. There is a host of ancillary industries which are allied with this enormous type of development. When we look at the figures I have put on the record as taken from the minister responsible for DREE and see the potential, we want to know precisely the areas in which our province will share. That is why I raise these issues and place them on the record today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before I recognize the next hon. member to speak, I want to make my apologies to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), who earlier approached the Chair and indicated that one of the members of his party would like to speak. Subsequent to that I see that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) is rising to be recognized, and I have to remind hon. members to my left that the Chair is obligated to move from left to right in that order. So I will recognize next the Minister of National Revenue and thereafter, if he rises, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller).

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak this afternoon, but both the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) and the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) have referred to me, and I feel, moreover, that it is important to put the facts on the record, in view of the allegations and positions put forward by the opposition.

The main case the opposition is putting forward is ownership. Ownership is completely irrelevant in this issue. Hon. members opposite are arguing on the grounds put forward by the Premier of Newfoundland. When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was head of the administration, he wrote a letter to the Premier of Newfoundland. If the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre had gone on to quote the letter at greater length than he did, I think he would have shown that that letter was so full of holes as to be meaningless. The then prime minister granted ownership on certain conditions, and those conditions certainly depended on federal jurisdiction. In my opinion, that letter from the then prime minister was really not worth the paper on which it was written and, indeed, did not address in a legitimate way the question of ownership because that issue cannot be addressed.

Ownership is not the relevant issue, and I think we should put that to rest. Let me give an example. The province of Newfoundland owns the forests of Newfoundland, it owns every tree in Newfoundland, yet we have signed three DREE agreements with that province to improve the forest industry there and to build up the provincial forest service. There is no way it could have been done without federal participation. That resource is completely and utterly owned by the province, but I submit it would have been impossible to develop the forests of Newfoundland without federal participation. The question of ownership in that case is completely and utterly irrelevant.

Let me give a second example. A mine in my riding is being closed down. It is not a question of ownership. The province owns that mine. it owns all the minerals under the earth, yet where is the province coming for help? It is coming to the federal government.

I submit again that ownership is not the relevant issue. Just because you own something that does not mean you have jurisdiction over it or you control it because the important concept here is not ownership at all but, indeed, jurisdiction and control, and that is what we have been trying to point out to the Government of Newfoundland for the last two years.

Now it seems that the Government of Newfoundland is starting to see the light. We have not changed our position at all, but the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had to go to Newfoundland to clarify that position on television in order to get the provincial government to start to negotiate, hopefully in good faith. The principle we have been stating ever since the 1979 election—and that position has not changed at all—is that we want to negotiate with the province of Newfoundland and, indeed, with the other maritime provinces on the basis of revenue sharing and jurisdiction. We have said consistently that 100 per cent of the provincial-type revenues would go to the provinces as if the resources were onshore. The Prime Minister has quite clearly said that whatever revenues the provinces would normally get would go to them as if the resources were onshore. I do not think it can be made much clearer than that. That, it seems to me, is very clear. Revenues would be treated as if the resources were onshore and as if the provinces indeed were controlling those resources onshore.

The second thing we have offered is joint jurisdiction. We have said that it should not be the provincial government alone or the federal government alone, but indeed the federal jurisdiction applying concurrently its jurisdiction to that problem.

The people of every province in this country, particularly Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, are very fortunate because they do not have only one government working for them, they have two. Some people in my province have been asking me for the past two years to choose between being a Newfoundlander and being a Canadian. I refuse to make that choice. I am proud to be a resident of that province and at the same time proud to be a Canadian.

I reject those who ask me to make a choice. I will not make that choice. That is the essence of Canadianism. The people of Newfoundland are fortunate, and they know they are fortunate to have not one but two governments acting on their behalf. That is what we are saying.

Surely the federal jurisdiction and the provincial jurisdiction together are more important, powerful and effective in the long run than both governments working separately or indeed, even worse, both working at loggerheads. That is what we are proposing. Hopefully, if we can get the provinces to focus on the issues and negotiate in good faith, we can have an agreement, one that is good for Newfoundland.

I agree with my colleague from South Shore that we need those revenues, not handouts or dependence. We want real jobs and real money coming from those jobs for resource development. I agree with that. All Newfoundlanders want to see that.

The only way to do that is to get a deal that will be good for Newfoundland and good for Canada. Here is the importance of Bill C-48. While Newfoundland has a very real need that we can and must address to the resolution of these negotiations, Canada has a need as well. Those resources off the east coast of Canada are just as important as the resources in the Beaufort Sea and the resources in Alberta.

Until we can have a package, program and policy that encompasses, uses and plans the development of all those resources jointly, we will not be able to solve the energy problem in this country and have a great impact on the more serious problem of inflation.

We are fortunate, we can achieve self-sufficiency in Canada. However, there is a Canadian need now and we must address it. We in Newfoundland have to see not only to our own need, which is very real and urgent. We can solve that and it must be solved. We can have money going into Newfoundland. If the province of Newfoundland had started negotiating two years ago as it is doing today, we could have had a deal. Those revenues, which are sorely needed, would be going into that province.

The other consideration is the Canadian need. That must be addressed. The question of ownership is not the relevant issue. Who owns what is immaterial. It can be put aside. Who gets the money, who has the jurisdiction and control are the relevant issues. Those are the matters we should be talking about, not spurious, irrelevant issues that really do not matter in the long run.

Now that the negotiations are going on, now that the Government of Newfoundland and indeed the Government of Nova Scotia have come around to seeing that we must negotiate along those lines, I hope we can have an agreement and will create those jobs which are very necessary in eastern Canada.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): On a point of order.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the minister?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich on a point of order. Perhaps I should recognize him first.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) has just gone to great lengths to disown the notion that we are talking about ownership. As he was speaking, I was reading in the interpretations of definitions in the second part of this bill, referring specifically to Canada lands, the term "belongs to" or that belongs to Her Majesty in right of Canada. That carries some aspect of ownership to my understanding of English, or "in respect of which Her Majesty in right of Canada has the right to dispose of or exploit—"

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. If the hon. member had indicated he wanted to ask a question, which is where he is going, I would have recognized him for that purpose. However, if the hon. member is on a point of order, will he draw the attention of the Chair to that point of order?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is that the minister seemed to have been deliberately obfuscating the issue by disowning the notion of ownership, whereas the ownership seems to me to be in the definition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. The hon. member is making a point of debate. I can understand that he may feel it to be an appropriate definition. I recognized him on a point of order. I would have recognized him equally with no difficulty on a question. Perhaps the hon. member would like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey), and if the minister is agreeable he can answer it.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Can the minister reconcile his disowning the notion of ownership with the terminology used in clause 2 that Canada lands means "lands that belong to Her Majesty in right of Canada?" Does that not mean ownership? Further, does it not mean ownership when it goes on to say "or in respect of which Her Majesty in right of Canada has the right to dispose of or exploit the natural resources?" There is less ownership in the second instance than in the first. Perhaps he can explain what I find difficult to understand.

Mr. Rompkey: I would hate to go through my whole presentation again. Obviously the hon. member has completely misunderstood the point I was making. The point I was making is that the question of ownership as I see it is not a relevant issue. It is what the opposition have been talking about this afternoon, but that is the obfuscation.

In my opinion, the question of ownership is not the relevant issue. The relevant issues are revenues, control and jurisdiction. Those are the relevant concepts. I submit that whatever is read in the bill or is not read, the point I was making is the relevance of various aspects of this question over others.

I say that the opposition have been emphasizing what are minor aspects of it. What I am trying to put on record is what I see to be the important aspects of this issue.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I have one brief question for the minister. I listened with great interest to his address. When any revenue-sharing agreement expires, does not the owner of the land remain in the dominant position, the supreme position, the only desirable position?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, my answer will have to be the same. I would have to go through my whole presentation again. I seem to have difficulty in making my point to the opposition. Either they do not understand what I am saying or they refuse to accept what I am saying. Let me state it again for the record.

In my opinion the issue on the east coast of who owns the resource is not at this point in time the relevant issue. The relevant issues to our people are who gets the money and the benefits and do we have adequate control and jurisdiction. Those are the relative concepts, not the concepts of ownership.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I was beginning to wonder whether I would be recognized today. Now that we have settled most of the jurisdictional disputes between the official opposition and the government party. I would like to make some points on behalf of the New Democratic Party. First, in reply to the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mrs. Erola) who is temporarily out of the House—

Mr. Blais: The Minister of Mines.

Mr. Miller: Thank you very much. The minister made reference to the behaviour of members in the first three hours. I think there is justification for the kind of energy being demonstrated on this side of the House, if not on the other side. We have all been in our constituencies. Many members have been across the country, talking to people in extreme difficulty attempting to meet mortgage payments, inventories and bank payments, whether they be farmers, small-business men, fishermen and, in particular, the hard-hit home owners looking at interest rates of 19 and 20 per cent. The behaviour in the House that we should be critical of, I think, Mr. Speaker, is the behaviour of the government that comes back after three months without any answers to the economic problems that the Canadian public is facing right now.

• (1710)

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Miller: The hon. minister was also critical about the time delay in passing Bill C-48. Mr. Speaker, the members on this side of the House were aware that when the bill was first introduced, it was a poor one. Having gone through many committee meetings, it is still a poor bill. At this stage of the bill, it is still a poor bill. We will still be debating a poor bill, I suspect, after the government imposes closure on us and passes Bill C-48, despite the kind of economic and resource grab and interference that Bill C-48 is going to have in the Northwest Territories, Yukon and in our offshore resources.

Mr. Speaker, the motion of the official opposition before us, is basically a very clumsy way of giving resource ownership, and probably an unconstitutional way of giving resource ownership to the provinces. The motion is not going to receive the support of the New Democratic Party. It is not because we do not support the concept of provincial control and ownership of resources; because we do support that concept. The recent party convention endorsed that policy; we are committed to the policy of ownership of offshore resources to the provinces. We worked very hard in the constitutional debate to assure that onshore resources were, indeed, under provincial jurisdiction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Miller: The motion does not go far enough. If we are going to eliminate from Canada lands all that area in the offshore Arctic, offshore east and west coast, surely we should make a further amendment to delete all reference in Bill C-48 to the Yukon and Northwest Territories. We would then be effectively able to get rid of this bill and would send it to where it should be relegated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, there are many concerns about Bill C-48. Again, the Minister of Mines was critical because of the amount of input that this bill supposedly has received. Most of that input has come from the industry. The committee was refused permission, although the all-party committee originally granted approval to travel to the north to talk to the Dene people. That approval was withdrawn when the Liberal government recognized the kind of opposition that it was going to receive in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories.

The input from those people in the north has not been received and will not be received at this stage of the bill. We are dealing with a bill that gives almost complete control over the Northwest Territories, the people in the north, development of the north, to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). It has taken complete control of northern and Indian development from the hands of the minister responsible to those areas. The bill has not had any input and does not give any jurisdiction to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) has been particularly silent on Bill C-48.

Regardless of the kind of motion we are discussing today, and regardless of the NDP support for the concept of provincial ownership, we find ourselves in the position of not being able to support this motion. We are not able to support the bill as it stands. We feel it is morally wrong to impose upon the northern people a bill of this nature without adequate input from that sector of our public, from that community in the north that is so dependent on orderly development of resources in the north.

At the moment, the northern people have little to say on the pace of development, and have no say where that development should proceed in regard to land claims. It is totally immoral in terms of the approach the government has taken toward our northern brothers and sisters.

The future environmental problems are also going to be affected by this bill. We should consider offshore resources as being not only oil and gas. In our rush for spoils in oil and gas off the east and west coasts in the Arctic, we have tended to neglect in this debate the resources that have been very important and should continue to be very important, particularly to the members from Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. Those fishery resources seem to have very little protection in this bill. I am very disappointed that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has not taken the opportunity to draft a bill that recognizes the economic impact of oil pollution and of disasters that are inevitable in the kind of exploration we are expecting to take place off the east coast. I am very disappointed the minister has not taken the opportunity to put down in a concrete manner and to impose in this bill some of his own interests in the interest of the Atlantic fishery. The bill reflects the industry's input, the Liberal Canadianization plan. That is getting a great deal of play in the papers. The public, by and large, thinks they are getting something; that finally we are going to wrest away from the control of the Americans, British and Germans our interests in oil and natural gas. We are now going to have Canadian ownership; but that Canadian ownership is going to come largely at the expense of the Canadian taxpayers who are going to pay up to 93 cents on every dollar in oil exploration in northern waters and offshore. Rather than looking at private Canadianization, we should be looking at giving the federal government a greater role in public ownership.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Miller: I suggest that is the way to go, rather than fiddling around with incentives and grants that only give Canadian ownership to private interests for private profits.

I am somewhat bewildered by the Tory position. As my colleague says, I suppose, it is not unusual; but I think it is becoming more obvious. It is possible I will never understand the Tory position.

An hon. Member: No intelligent person would understand it.

An hon. Member: It is incomprehensible.

Mr. Miller: The Tories believe in private enterprise, free enterprise and the privatization of Petro-Canada.

An hon. Member: And then they change their minds.

An hon. Member: Suncor socialism.

Mr. Miller: Fortunately, there are some enlightened Tory premiers that have recognized, for the public good and their own survival, economic and political, that they will have to enter into public ownership of energy resources. I would like to congratulate Premier Davis on his purchase of Suncor. I am also pleased that Premier Peckford is not going to allow the energy resources of his province to be left completely in the hands of private industry. He is proposing a 40 per cent back-in for PetroPeckford in Newfoundland.

I am hoping within the next few days we will hear Premier Lougheed announce he has now bought Imperial Oil and we would have Petroberta.

• (1720)

When I read the Tory motion, originally I thought they were really talking about private ownership of offshore resources rather than provincial ownership, so that the major oil companies could develop them without being hindered by the National Energy Program or a provincial jurisdiction. Certainly I am encouraged that the Premier of Ontario wants a window into the oil industry and he sees it through public ownership. The same policy was being advocated by the NDP in the 1960s. We advocated the purchase of Imperial Oil which could probably have been obtained at that time for something like $2 billion, but unfortunately it was not accepted by the Liberal government at that time.

However, in looking at Bill C-48 and this particular motion, I re-emphasize that we sympathize with Tory attempts to get provincial ownership of resources, because if those resources are owned by the provinces, they can be developed at the pace and the rate which provincial governments see as being beneficial to the public. It is one of the key reasons for ownership of those resources by the provinces. They know better the type of development they need. They know better just how fast, how rapidly and in what way those resources should be developed.

We in this party would like to see co-operation in the development of offshore resources between the provinces and the federal government so that all Canadians can benefit from those resources. We cannot see how the provinces and the federal government can separate jurisdiction and ownership of those resources and still protect the kinds of things over which the federal government still has control, such as the fishing industry. There must be some co-ordination between the provinces and the federal government in oil, in fishing, in navigation, in the area of pollution and in who will pay for it.

When we listen to the premiers making demands for offshore resources and revenues, we would like the premiers and the federal government to consider that along with that ownership goes some of the responsibility to deal with economic issues, such as the fishing industry, pollution and the types of things which accompany the responsibility of ownership. This is the position of my party. We will be speaking on several other motions which we have moved, hopefully in an attempt to see some improvement in this bill. If we do not, hopefully we will see major improvements in the environment and in the way the north is handled. Hopefully the people of the north will have some say. It would be very, very difficult for any member of my party to support Bill C-48 as it stands at present.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on motion No. 3. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

I have a series of motions which have been grouped for debate. Those are motions Nos. 4, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56 and 57. They will be voted on in a manner which I can perhaps detail later. In the meantime I will go through the motions to which I have referred seriatim, and I will be looking for a mover and seconder in each case.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 2 by adding immediately after line 17 at page 4 the following:

"'spill' means an amount of 100 litres or more of oil and any other substance deemed foreign to the environment."

Motion No. 51

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 80 by striking out line 10 at page 62 and substituting the following therefor:

"oil or gas including one that is authorized".

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq) moved:

Motion No. 52

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 80 by adding immediately after line 33 at page 62 the following:

"(4) Where a person allows the discharge, emission or escape of oil or gas in accordance with regulations made pursuant to subsection (3), that person shall, in the manner prescribed by regulation, report such discharge, emission or escape of oil or gas to the Chief Conservation Officer.

(5) Where a Chief Conservation Officer receives a report pursuant to section 19(4) or 19.1(2), he shall give notice forthwith to the aboriginal peoples of Canada who may be affected in a manner prescribed by regulation."

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 80 by striking out lines 39 to 44 at page 64 and substituting the following therefor:

"(ii) any economic loss or damage resulting from a spill or a discharge, emission or escape of oil or gas that is authorized under subsection 19(3) including, among other things, loss of use of real or personal property or natural resources; loss of profits or impairment of earning capacity due to injury or destruction of property or natural resources, including both individual and collective loss of hunting, fishing, and gathering opportunities of aboriginal peoples; and loss of tax revenue due to injury to real or personal property; and".

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

Motion No. 55

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 80 by striking out line 1 at page 65 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) all persons to whose fault or".

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved:

Motion No. 56

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 80 by striking out line 16 at page 66 and substituting the following therefor:

"damage, costs or expenses occurred or became evident to the claimant but in".

Motion No. 57

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 80 by striking out line 23 at page 67 and substituting the following therefor:

"shall direct a public inquiry to be made and may".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question on motion No. 51 will be put to the House, and a vote on this motion will dispose of motion No. 4. The second part of the ruling is that the question on motions Nos. 52, 53, 55, 56 and 57 will be put to the House separately. I take it that the debate may be sufficiently wide-ranging to cover all the motions I have indicated, but perhaps it might be appropriate to suggest that motions Nos. 51 and 4 might be the focus of attention of those hon. members who wish to speak now, because that seems to be the order in which they have been grouped. Therefore I recognize the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, in addressing myself to motions Nos. 4 and 51, I think I will take some liberty in dealing with the other five motions as well because we may not have another opportunity to speak to them.

The environmental resolutions which have been grouped for debate by Madam Speaker show how inadequate this legislation is when it comes to the protection of the environment. The lack of concern for the environment is demonstrated by the government very clearly. The environmental provisions of this bill are equal only to the contempt the government has shown to people north of 60 when introducing the new regime for oil and gas exploration.

Members will remember that the committee which was studying this legislation supported a unanimous motion to travel north of 60 and how the Liberals came to the next meeting, packed it with members who were not present when the first motion to travel was passed, and rescinded it. That kind of activity became the trademark of the behaviour of Liberal committee members. What is the fear on the government's side about travelling north of 60? Are they afraid to find out the truth, that Bill C-48 is in fact a blueprint for the interests of Canadians south of 60 and has not achieved the bare minimum to protect culture and environment in the north?

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has a hyped-up sales pitch that Bill C-48 will play a vital role in Canadianizing the oil and gas industry. The environment is disturbed just as much regardless of who owns the machinery. The important issue is the regulatory regime. Ducks disturbed by aircraft and polar bears slicked with oil have little concern about whose pockets are filling fastest from the exploitation.

What is important to the biological environment is a system of checks and balances that demands of industry the most benign form of interaction possible. The sneaky reversal of the committee's plan to travel was equalled at a later date when the Liberals and my Tory friends on the right made a sweetheart deal to close off debate on the bill while it was still in committee. Anyone familiar with parliamentary procedure knows that the reason we are debating this bill now is that the Liberals and Tories are in the same sticky swamp and that report stage debate was taking place because the Conservatives went into the deal with the Liberals with a few parliamentary screws loose.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-48 is designed to speed up the exploration for oil and gas on what have been called Canada lands. That in itself may be laudable from a narrow supply point of view, but with the lack of environmental provisions in the legislation I am afraid we are looking at an environmental disaster in the making.

How can proper baseline data be collected when the permit structure is of such an accelerated design? Important biological studies will never be done for several reasons. First, the legislation is designed to speed up oil and gas exploration without any balancing mechanism to protect plants or animals, and second, the legislation is purposely drafted to avoid dealing with environmental impact costs.

It is therefore inevitable that many species will be unduly disrupted, damaged and in some instances completely destroyed. Bill C-48 is written with such a singular vision and preoccupation—to extract oil and gas—that even the proposed role for the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) has been sidelined.

Bill C-48 is much like a court composed of a prosecutor only. The minister has opted for all the powers of decision despite the obvious conflict of interest.

Let me first deal with what I think is the major fault of this legislation regarding the environment. Some of my colleagues have talked about the other silent partners in this legislation—the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc)—however, the minister who sits most idly while his department is bypassed by the monolithic energy department is the Minister of the Environment.

At the March 12, 1981, meeting of the Fisheries and Forestry Committee, I asked the minister about some of the environmental concerns passed on to us by groups such as CARC, the West Coast Environmental Law Association, the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union and many other groups. Besides referring a question about staff requirements to his departmental officials, the minister said that he was "happy to have this kind of question because, as minister, I never feel that my colleagues give me quite as much in the way of resources as I need to undertake the important work of the north".

That statement, Mr. Speaker, is shocking. It shows just how little the Minister of the Environment knows about Bill C-48. If the minister does not do anything about his participation in Bill C-48, he will be standing with one toe in a lake killed by acid rain but up to his neck in oil slicks and tales of the demise of Canada's wildlife resources.

Why are we concerned about the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and particularly this minister, when it comes to the environment? Let us look at the record of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and its track record with the environment.

The Minister of the Environment should read some of the reports produced by his own department. A report prepared in April of last year documents the concerns senior departmental officials have about offshore exploration and the problems they have in relation to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Perhaps the most condemning comment is found on page 13 of the report which reads: "The lack of environmental consciousness exhibited by EMR is a concern." I regard this as a tough statement for public servants to make. This is a comment from a government official, not a member of the opposition. It is clear that EMR is a proponent department. A proponent department like EMR is by mandate and definition primarily, if not totally, concerned with getting oil and gas out of the ground and from under the water. Mr. Speaker, that is expected of them. But there is a need for adequate checks and balances, and these are not present in Bill C-48. I say and the NDP says that the proper check on EMR's mad dash for oil and gas should rest with the Department of the Environment.

No moves have been made to give formal protective status to the 150 or more identified and internationally recognized ecological sites north of 60. There are still only six federal wildlife biologists north of 60. There have been no settlements of claim with Canada's first Canadians north of 60—to protect and enhance their culture and traditional interaction with wildlife and the environment.

Bill C-48 is, I am sure, epic poetry—music to the cash register ears for which it is written, but Bill C-48 is an obituary to many cultures and species.

The report I referred to earlier goes on as follows: "The Department of the Environment should act as spokesman in respect of environment, identifying to and for the government, environmental concerns." We know Mr. Speaker, that the proposed national resources management administration which I understand will be announced next week by the government, will include representatives from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, the Department of the Environment and others, but we also know who pushes whom around in this government and in other governments. I predict, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans will gather a lot of dust in this arrangement. I challenge the government to publish the minutes of the meetings of this council. That way, we will see whose interests are being protected and whose interests are being raised.

In fact, on June 18, 1981 in committee, the minister said he would release the terms of reference of the council. Because of the Liberal-Tory deal to close debate in committee, however, we do not have those guidelines. I would ask the minister to table those terms of reference in the House during this debate.

Mr. Speaker, the minister's proposed council is not laid out in the legislation and I would like to raise a few points about why it should be if it is relevant to the amendments before us.

One of the criticisms of the federal government's environmental assessment procedure is that it is not enshrined in legislation. I have expressed my concerns about this matter, and I would certainly want improvements in the assessment process before it is legislated. I should like to refer to a number of reports that show why the lack of a legislative mandate to protect the environment in Bill C-48 is such a bad move by the government.

A report done in December 1978 by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources says that there has been "slow acceptance at senior levels of the long-term need to make environmental evaluation a basic element in both the economic analysis and planning processes." In layman's language that means that senior people in the department are not particularly concerned about the environment. The report refers to the environmental assessment and review process as it relates to the department.

The report also says there are problems in EMR in implementing the necessary processes. This point was pursued by the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee. In a letter to members of the committee studying Bill C-48, it expressed serious concerns about the lack of staff in EMR to carry out minimal environmental research.

The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—the silent partner—is no better. Despite the fact that EARP was established by cabinet in December, 1973, by December 1980 the department had still not established procedures on environmental screening—after over eight years. A recent article in the Ottawa Citizen makes reference to pressure being exerted on the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to grant exploratory rights before legislation recognizing native rights is passed by Parliament. The government's hypocrisy is shown by its intention to proceed with the Norman Wells pipeline despite the completely unchallenged work of Mr. Justice Thomas Berger.

Mr. Kelly: What does he say?

Mr. Fulton: What is the government afraid of? I hear a member opposite yapping, so we will see if he has something to say.

Mr. Kelly: What is his reaction?

Mr. Fulton: They have been running around the country saying that Bill C-48 is "neutral" on land claims, but when pressed to come up with a legal opinion we see what a charade the government parades as the truth.

At this point I want to remind the noisy member opposite that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development agreed on June 1 to provide a legal opinion on whether Bill C-48 affects land claims negotiations. He promised that when native people were present at committee. To date we have not seen that opinion. In fact, the minister has written to me indicating that he does not intend to provide any legal opinion. One could well assume that Bill C-48 has much worse implications for the resolution of aboriginal title and rights than was previously thought. Again, it is the Liberal gain—promise everything when the TV lights are on but in the cool mushroom atmosphere of cabinet privacy, sing a different tune.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the environment will take the back seat on this legislation and our party will continue to argue for recognition of the need to protect the environment from Liberal abuse, and Canadians from Liberal deception.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) and myself recognize the importance of the environment and would give the government and all Canadians a mandate to protect the delicate ecology of the north and the offshore, both in British Columbia and in Atlantic Canada.

Having documented the concerns our party has over the feeble position of the Minister of the Environment on this bill, I would like to make some points on the specific amendments presently before the House.

Our motion to define a spill as "an amount of 100 litres or more of oil and any other substance deemed foreign to the environment" will give the government a legislative mandate to control chronic oil pollution, which, as my colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) has pointed out, could present us with more long-term environmental problems than even major oil spills that rigs like Ixtoc in the Gulf of Mexico last year caused.

● (1740)

On June 6, 1981, the minister had this to say about my definition for quantifying a spill:

> We would rather leave it open, and then if we want to act on a one-litre spill, we can act on a one-litre spill.

I do not know if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources thinks that statement fools anyone. If 100 litres is too big, then I will stand aside—and I am confident my colleague, the hon. member for Nunatsiaq will also do so—for a further amendment taking it from 100 litres down to one litre. I will support the minister's own proposal of one litre; but let us see a quantifiable legal definition.

I just want to quote from a report written by Environment Canada in June, 1978, that says:

> —the cumulative effects of small leaks and spills over long periods of time are capable of devastating salt marshes, fish spawning areas, shellfish areas, etc.

Let us look at the experience elsewhere. In Wales, the harbour authority has defined a spill as anything over a few barrels. What this has done is to give a mandate to the local authorities to watch the chronic oil pollution problem closely, but it has also meant that the companies involved have taken the time to train their employees properly and have recognized the importance of controlling these kinds of spills. Incidentally, when a quantified level was set, the spill rate in Wales dropped to one spill in 100 from previous levels.

In committee, the minister would not release the proposed regulations that he says would govern a spill. In fact, when he was asked by another of my colleagues if he might define a spill as 10,000 gallons, he said he might make exceptions such as in the regulations. That is just not good enough. If the minister thinks 100 litres is too big and one litre is about right, but that 10,000 gallons is okay, I think it is clear, in the interests of clarifying this for the minister himself, that we should have a quantifiable level spelled out in this legislation.

Our next motion, No. 51, seeks to amend Bill C-48 by including "authorized" spills under the environmental sections of the bill. Undoubtedly there will be authorized spills, such as the Baffin Island oil spill project, which we have already seen, where studies are being done to assess whether chemical dispersants will be effective in dealing with oil spilled in the Arctic, and also to determine the impact of oil in the Arctic environment. However, to exclude these spills from the environmental sections of Bill C-48 or other bills is wrong.

For example, we all remember the disastrous oil spill test of last year. We assume it was authorized last year when polar bears were used in a test and two of them died as a result of being covered in oil. That is perhaps an acceptable experiment from a biological point of view, but the damage to the ecology even from authorized spills may be serious enough that the liability and other provisions of this legislation must cover them, as well.

Once again, the minister will say it is in the regulations. This is a minor change that will show that the government is, in fact, concerned about the environment. I urge the government members to include authorized spills under the general environmental aspects of Bill C-48.

Motion 52, which we are presently considering, seeks to broaden the provisions of this section by giving advance notice to people who are affected. That is important in light of my earlier comments regarding the need for the public to know about this government's intentions regarding environmental pollution by companies.

Motion 53, which is presented by my colleague from Nunatsiaq broadens the provisions for liability. It is clear that should oil and gas exploration proceed as outlined under Bill C-48, and with the inevitability of a spill, there must be adequate protection of those people whose livelihood will be destroyed or drastically altered. To the fishermen on both coasts and to the aboriginal people in the north who will be affected most dramatically by a speed-up in exploration, this amendment will offer some minimal amount of protection.

There will be massive exploration carried out under this new regime. There is no doubt about that. The people who will bear the brunt must have assurances that their livelihood will be protected. The government's proposals do not go far enough and must be changed.

I hope to deal with Madam Speaker's ruling on Motion 54 at another time; however, let me say that Beauchesne's Section 7 of Citation 773 does not apply because Motion No. 54 does not place any charge upon the public treasury. Motion 56 is closely related to Motion No. 53. We are proposing this particular amendment because of the need to recognize problems associated with identifying the time when a compensation period can start.

In order to illustrate this I would like to cite a few examples. We are faced here with the possibility of damage to a person's livelihood as the result of an oil spill. For example, an oil spill may occur, go unreported and disappear from view, as did much of the oil in the Gulf of Mexico with the Ixtoc spill where it mixed with the water column. It will then resurface at some time later to foul the fishermen's nets, a boat, a shore, a bird-nesting area, or whatever. Under the present legislation, fishermen or other individuals would have a severely limited opportunity to pursue compensation.

I also want to mention briefly a parallel case. The Canadian Environmental Law Association has presented the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with proposed changes to the Nuclear Liability Act. Their purpose is to see changes to the legislation that would enable victims of radiation exposure to claim at a later date. As members know, people who work in the nuclear field may develop cancer which only becomes apparent long after exposure. The limitation period in the Nuclear Liability Act should be changed to allow for compensation claims at a later date. It is under the same principle that I feel Bill C-48 should be changed.

Motion 57, which we have also moved, calls on the government to conduct an inquiry when there has been a spill or an accident caused by an operator who is acting under this legislation. It is clear that in the case of a spill, the minister should order an inquiry. How better to learn and avoid repetition? To be honest, I do not trust any government nor should it be left to a minister's discretion, such as is proposed in Bill C-48. An inquiry must take place.

I sat in committee during almost all the meetings at which Bill C-48 was considered. We heard evidence from a number of environmental groups, and all of them pointed out the serious deficiencies of this bill when it comes to consideration of the environment. The NDP fought in committee to present amendments, and we will continue to fight for the amendments which we have proposed.

Let me conclude by saying that no witnesses appeared before the committee to propose that there be no environmental regime, which is what Bill C-48 contains at present under the existing regime put forward by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, under normal circumstances, one might express pleasure at participating in this debate during the report stage of Bill C-48. It is a most important piece of legislation which will set the rules for all future gas and oil exploration and development on Crown lands. But there can be little pleasure—certainly little pleasure for me as one member—in being associated with what is actually a sham. Sir, I say "sham" with some care and advisedly because the government is only pretending to consider the views of Members of Parliament and the public in connection with Bill C-48. Although true of the bill as a whole, that is especially true of the environmental dimensions, including the seven motions coupled for debate today.

Bill C-48 was devised to accomplish a number of things. Its stated and ostensible purpose—its purpose for public consumption—is to introduce a new oil and gas exploration and development regime for federal lands in the north and offshore areas. The legislation is central certainly to the government's National Energy Program and therefore to its grand design to Canadianize the petroleum industry. The government's hidden agenda, however, is to proclaim the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) as the energy czar for all of Canada, with powers that not only undermine the private sector but also usurp the responsibilities of other cabinet ministers.

Motions Nos. 4, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56 and 57 inaugurate Parliament's consideration of the environmental provisions of Bill C-48 at the report stage. In addition to the seven motions we are debating now, many other motions on the environment will be debated, including ones that I and my colleagues in the Progressive Conservative Party are sponsoring. But probably few of these motions, maybe not even one, stand a ghost of a chance of passing, for the government has steadfastly refused from the beginning to depart from the narrow course it has set for itself. Doubtless the minister will ensure that the trained seals in the Liberal caucus will vote to impose this set of far-reaching rules and regulations for energy development on a land mass greater than all the ten provinces combined. Judging from their supine performance and track record in the standing committee, the same yes-men will neither understand nor care about the profoundly harmful consequences the bill will have for the country as a whole.

A measure of how determined the minister is to get his own way is the fact that not one of the dozens of recommendations made by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans for changes in the bill has been accepted. Concerns expressed by the Department of the Environment have also been ignored, as have those of the government's own independent advisory bodies, for example, the Environmental Advisory Council. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) himself was not, to my knowledge, invited to appear as a witness before the Commons Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works which dealt with the bill, nor have non-government environmental organizations fared any better.

It is bad enough that the Minister of the Environment has been ignored, but so have reputable organizations which made excellent representations at the committee stage. Their views were dismissed out of hand by the government. Is it any wonder then that we in the opposition have had little success in having Bill C-48 changed to reflect sound environmental principles?

Some of the specific environmental concerns expressed about the bill are embodied in the seven motions currently being debated as a group in the House today, tomorrow and, we hope, Friday and beyond. Other motions not yet before the House, including some of my own, are more fundamental. One in particular, strikes at the heart of what is wrong with the bill from an environmental point of view. I am referring to the amendment proposed by me in committee and now put forward as Motion No. 36 in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). The motion would delegate to the Minister of the Environment responsibility for administering the major environmental provisions of the bill. As the legislation stands, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and, to a lesser extent, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), are delegated that responsibility.

I realize that we are not debating Motion No. 36 today but I want to discuss the seven that we are debating in the context of other motions. Without such an approach I do not think a full understanding would be possible. As the legislation stands, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and, to a lesser extent, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have delegated to them the main environmental responsibility under Bill C-48. As my colleague, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) has pointed out, that fact makes a mockery of environmental principles because those two ministers have the strongest vested interest in energy development. They should thus be the last ones asked to protect the environment from the very activities they themselves have a mandate to promote. The problem was recognized in the 1970 throne speech of a government preceding the existing one. In part, that throne speech reads:

> There is an inherent conflict of interest . . . between those who are seeking exploitation of non-renewable resources and those who are charged with the responsibility of protecting the environment.

Bill C-48 violates the principle that proponent departments in the energy field should not be the custodians of the environment in the face of activities in which they have a direct interest. Otherwise, it would be like hiring the town arsonist to be fire chief.

My comments apply especially to Clause 49, which we are seeking to amend this session. It would establish a multimillion-dollar environmental studies fund to be controlled not by the Minister of the Environment but, rather, by the Minister of Energy, for south of 60 and by the Minister of Northern Development for north of 60. The fund is supposed to finance studies of a broad, baseline nature so as to ensure that resource activities on Crown lands respect both the environment and the lifestyle of the native peoples and other residents in the areas affected. But because ministers of proponent departments, namely the two I have mentioned, will administer the fund rather than the Minister of the Environment—who is by definition a disinterested party, somebody without a vested interest in the developments which may well threaten the environment—fishermen, native peoples and coastal residents, will have to go begging, cap in hand, to the minister of energy and to the minister of northern affairs for environmental studies, to be carried out. How can anyone be confident that either minister will respond objectively to requests for environmental studies when the resultant findings might document the wisdom of halting pet projects of those two ministers?

In my view it is essential that the minister responsible for the protection of the environment have an arm's length relationship to projects that might threaten the environment. Bill C-48 violates that principle in spades.

During the committee stage of Bill C-48, the minister of energy, his officials, and his parliamentary secretary, whom I see on the other side of the chamber today, stressed that co-ordinating mechanisms would be established to ensure that the Department of the Environment would be consulted on all environmental matters related to resource development on Crown lands. But I ask again, why has the Minister of the Environment been given the secondary role in what is essentially an environmental area? The government has the cart before the horse. In this context, it is the minister of energy who should be consulted by the Minister of the Environment, not the other way around.

We are taking enormous risks with the future of Canada if we do not build proper environmental safeguards into any regime for resource development in the frontier areas of our great dominion. When I say that, I am referring to the Arctic and the maritime offshore. The Arctic alone covers some 40 per cent of the territory of our entire country. Although vast, it is the most environmentally vulnerable of all regions. Because of the frigid climate, a major oil spill or well-site blow-out in the Arctic could spell disaster for the delicate ecosystem and for the traditional lifestyle of the native peoples who depend on it for survival. We cannot afford the luxury of waiting until after the damage is done to take action because, according to experts, the damage may well be irreversible.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1) I do now leave the chair until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

NORTH-SOUTH RELATIONS

SUMMIT MEETING IN MEXICO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, tomorrow, October 16, the citizens and governments of more than 100 nations, including Canada, will observe the first World Food Day, which will serve as a rallying point in the search for solutions to end world hunger and poverty. The natural right of all human beings to food was backed by the report of the Parliamentary Task Force on North-South Relations, which placed particular emphasis on food and agricultural production. The report was supported by all parties in the House, and its main thrusts were endorsed by the government.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras):

That this House affirms its desire that practical steps be discussed by the heads of state or government of 22 countries who will meet next week for the historic North-South summit in Mexico so that early progress can be made in negotiating the economic issues now dividing North from South and, further, that the text of this motion be sent to the governments of all 22 states.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF POLISH REFUGEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. There is a desperate situation in Austrian refugee camps, where over 20,000 Polish refugees are waiting to be relocated. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That the Canadian government act quickly to ensure that those Polish citizens seeking refugee status in Canada be accepted as conventional refugees; that provisions be made within the refugee quota to allow Canada to accept more Polish refugees this year than presently announced by the minister; and tha the Canadian Polish Congress be commended for, and aided in, its efforts to assist needy Polish entrants to this country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I too have a motion under Standing Order 43. In view of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) recent statement that the government is willing to provide financial help only to those who are in dire straits, and in view of the request by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to increase the length of the runway at his local airport in Port Hawkesbury at a cost of millions of taxpayers' dollars so that he can land his JetStar, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That the Prime Minister declare cabinet members with short local runways not to be considered in dire straits, and further that the government also reject the proposal to buy the Minister of Finance a smaller jet as a more economical solution to his terrible travel predicament.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT'S COMMITMENTS TO NATIVE PEOPLE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas high interest rates, increased cost of living, and unemployment are particularly devastating to the native people of Canada, and whereas the government has already made cuts to programs for native people, such as the native Outreach Program, and further cuts to native housing, winter works, health care, education and training programs are evident in a misguided attempt by this government to economize in the very sector of the Canadian population that requires the most intensive assistance, the native people of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the government commit to this House that the budget for Indian Affairs and Northern Development will not be cut and that the government renew its pledge to fulfil its commitments to the native people of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DELAY IN PROCESSING PENSION APPLICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Canadian veterans, those men and women who fought for this country, have to wait an average of 46 months to have their pension applications processed, and many will wait over five years. The War Amputations Association has been forced to take legal action against the Canadian Pension Commission to overcome the bureaucratic blockade. This disgraceful dilemma compels me to move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That the new Minister of Veterans Affairs be directed by this House to introduce corrective legislation immediately, using the 90-day United States process as an example, since many Canadian veterans are dying during the five-year processing period.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

DEMAND FOR LOWERING OF INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said yesterday in the House of Commons, small businesses, along with farmers, fishermen and home owners, are indeed suffering as a result of his government's callous and insensitive monetary policy. In an effort to rectify the situation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

That this House urge the Minister of Finance to direct Governor Bouey to lower interest rates to reflect the Canadian level of inflation immediately, extend the life of the Small Businesses Loans Act, increase tax credits for research and development through to production, and increase small business deduction limits to $200,000 annually and to a $1 million lifetime limit.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORTATION

PROPOSED ADOPTION OF A TYPICALLY CANADIAN LOGO TO IDENTIFY LRC TRAIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

I had the opportunity, with my colleagues on the transport committee, to travel on the new LRC train made in Canada by Canadians. As that train is not sufficiently identified as being made in Canada, and as we must promote that product of Canadian technology, just as Japan and France do their own rapid trains, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise):

That this House invite VIA Rail and the manufacturer to adopt a typically Canadian logo to identify the LRC train, namely, a maple leaf that would stand out both outside and inside the LRC train.

Madam Speaker: Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POST OFFICE

CALL FOR IMPROVEMENT IN SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, since the government plans to increase postal rates by almost 100 per cent while service is deteriorating to the point where some deliveries travel at the rate of one mile a day, and since the first priority of the Post Office should be to restore some semblance of efficiency and confidence in its operations rather than forcing Canadians to pay exorbitant charges for first-class postage rates when they are receiving third-class service, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley):

That the Liberal government adopt as its first priority quality of service and postpone any rate increases until such time as the quality of service has been brought to respectability.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to underscore a report that the Liberal caucus has, without equivocation, endorsed the policies of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). If the members of the Liberal caucus are in full possession of the facts—and their faculties—they would be wise to heed the Prime Minister's advice to the press in Fiji when he said, "Don't follow me boys; I'm headed for a topless bar." Therefore, Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That Canadians, including the Liberal caucus, do not continue to follow the Prime Minister for, if we do, we shall all be shirtless and, hence, topless.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

REASONS FOR LEVEL OF CANADIAN INTEREST RATES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. This past summer many home owners, many farmers and small-business men were literally kicked in the teeth by the record high interest rates we have been seeing in this country. Many of them have asked me a simple question which I would like to put to the Minister of Finance now. Why is it Canada must have interest rates that are 3 to 4 percentage points higher than comparable rates in the United States?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I want to tell the hon. member he ought to be encouraged by the development today which saw the bank rate drop by 64 basis points, which means that the bank rate has dropped almost 3 percentage points since its peak in August. I believe that is a more satisfying answer than an erudite explanation to a question which ought to be put on the Order Paper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You have got to be kidding.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, the arrogance of that answer to people who have been suffering this summer, and are going to be suffering for a long time under the policies of this government, is just incredible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): May I make some suggestions to the minister and ask him to comment on three of them. Is the reason because government spending has been running faster than the rate of growth in the economy, by almost 20 per cent for the current fiscal year? Is it because of the weak Canadian dollar, weak because of the policies that have been followed by the government? Is it because the government continues to pursue a policy of high government borrowing, which puts pressure on interest rates for all Canadians? Would the minister comment on those three possibilities?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has been appointed as finance critic for his party. Surely, when citizens ask him questions, he should be able to answer them without coming to the House of Commons to seek illumination. I am sure the hon. member for St. John's West did not have to come back to get answers to questions which he was asked when he was in that post. I would suggest he follow his procedure.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, when I was appointed finance critic, I had hoped that by putting straight questions, legitimate questions, to the Minister of Finance, I would get answers. I am not asking my colleague here to give me the answers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Might I ask one very simple, basic question? Many Canadians know that the high interest rate on Canada Savings Bonds of 19.5 per cent has been forcing banks, trust companies and caisses populaires to hold their savings rate up and thus keep their mortgage rate as high as it is today. Is the minister considering reducing the level of the savings bond rate so that the whole level of interest rates can come down? Savers are getting a bonanza, but mortgage holders are getting killed.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think that is an improvement in the questioning.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Now try the answer.

Mr. MacEachen: It is a question directed to a matter which is under the administration of the Canadian Minister of Finance, and I am glad to answer it. The questions of interest rates in the United States and monetary policy in the United States, I would draw to the attention of the hon. member are not under my administration.

Mr. Crosbie: Thank God for that.

Mr. MacEachen: When the rate was set for Canada Savings Bonds, at that particular time it was necessary to set the rate in order to compete with other financial instruments. It was set at 19.5 per cent.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. MacEachen: Since the setting of the rate, of course I have set a limit on the amount of purchases by any individual. The concern that the hon. member has raised today was raised in earlier meetings with me by members of financial institutions because they, too, expressed the fear that this particular rate might have the effect of not permitting mortgage rates to drop. The fact of the matter is that, since the limitation was placed upon the individual purchase of Canada Savings Bonds, mortgage rates have dropped. I would hope, as a result of today's action by the Bank of Canada, that the chartered banks will find it possible to reduce their prime rates.

MINISTER'S POSITION RESPECTING CHARTERED BANKS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister, who certainly fits the pattern of his Liberal predecessors. Every time there is a period of economic stress, someone else is to blame—the Americans, international conditions, the weather, and I even remember that anchovies off California at one time was the problem. Yesterday the Minister of Finance blamed the Canadian banks. He may be right; he may be wrong.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jarvis: But, Madam Speaker, there is one irrefutable fact. It is the Minister of Finance and his colleagues who were elected to manage the Canadian economy, not the chartered banks of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis: Yesterday the minister said that he wanted the banks to search more diligently for a scheme which would cause them "to bleed a bit." When he said that, was it his attitude that it is up to those groups he accuses, rightly or wrongly, of ripping off home owners, small-business men, farmers and fishermen, to search for the answer to redress this rip-off? Is that the abdication of responsibility that he is now putting forward in the House of Commons?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, that is not the point of the answer. If the hon. member recalls, yesterday one of his colleagues brought forward a suggestion which had been made by the Bank of Montreal, namely, that that institution would extend the application of the Small Business Development Bond to unincorporated farmers, with the expectation that any costs which would flow from that extension would be picked up by the taxpayers of Canada. It is my view that in these circumstances it is fair to suggest to the financial institutions, particularly to the banks which have received very important powers from the Parliament of Canada, that they make a response in their capacity to meet the current challenge as a result of high interest rates. That is the point, and I think it would receive a very strong response among Canadians who expect the banks in these circumstances to do their part.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

ROLE OF BANKS—MINISTER'S VIEW

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, there is someone more powerful than the banks in terms of economic policy. The power lies within the Minister of Finance; the legislative power and persuasive power. He knows it full well.

I want to ask him, plainly, if it is his view that the banks are getting fat off the backs of home owners, small-business men, farmers and fishermen? Is that his view? If that is true, does he intend to use his power and discharge his responsibility to redress this wrong? He can impose a scheme to redress that wrong and relieve those Canadians, if he wants to exercise that power.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member is persisting in his efforts to take the banks off the hook in this particular circumstance. He does not know—

Mr. Stevens: You are on the hook.

An hon. Member: You are the hooker.

Mr. MacEachen: He does not know whether the banks are behaving responsibly or not. He does not know whether there is a rip-off or not. I wonder what the Conservative Party knows about economic policy in this country at the present time.

An hon. Member: What do you know?

Mr. MacEachen: I know there is a role for the financial institutions in the present crisis. They have to take their responsibilities; they have to be fair; they have to be compassionate, and they have to make special arrangements to meet the needs of their customers. That is what I have asked them to do, and I expect them to deliver on that request.

Mr. Clark: What a fraud.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN THE GALLERY OF THE HON. TIEMTARBOUM, MINISTER OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND CO-OPERATOR, AND OF THE HON. SANFO, MINISTER OF ECONOMY AND PLANNING OF UPPER VOLTA

Madam Speaker: I should like to draw the attention of the House to the presence in the gallery of His Excellency Mr. Tiemtarboum, Minister of External Affairs and Co-operation of Upper Volta, and His Excellency Mr. Sanfo, Minister of Economy and Planning of the same country.

HOUSING

ACCESS TO DEPARTMENTAL DOCUMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to begin by saying to the Minister of Finance that the hook is big enough both for the government and the banks.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I should like to put a question to the minister who is responsible, allegedly, for housing. I asked him yesterday if he would produce an internal document for all Members of Parliament that clearly outlined the housing crisis in Canada. At that time he refused to do so. I have since confirmed that at least two Liberal backbenchers have been given this report and, possibly, many more members of the Liberal Party. Will the minister provide, as a matter of right, to every Member of Parliament and, beyond that, to all people of Canada, access to this document instead of restricting it to certain members of his own party?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I should like to comment on the phrase that the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party has used twice in the opening of this resumed Parliament, namely, "allegedly responsible for housing". I am glad he recognizes that I, together with ten ministers of the provinces, share in the provision of support for housing across this country. I am glad that he recognizes and sees that shared responsibility.

Mr. Clark: What are you doing?

Mr. Cosgrove: I have to repeat my answer to the hon. member of yesterday. Yes, I would be happy to provide background papers that are used by the government in preparation of policy and in preparation of the budget, in accordance with the rules of this government and the conventions of this parliament.

FUTURE OF HOME OWNERS AND RENTERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, according to the conventions of the Liberal Party, that means that we will never see the document. That is why I asked the question. I should like to ask the minister if he will confirm that, in the same document, it is shown that not only home owners are faced with this crisis but that during 1982 more than three million renters in our country will see their rents go up by almost 100 per cent, to an average of $750 per month? Will he confirm that that is also in the document? I also repeat, given the alarming situation which affects home owners and renters all across Canada, will he produce that document for all Members of Parliament?

• (1430)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, again I would have to indicate to the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party that, as the Prime Minister indicated yesterday, I cannot discuss the budget before it is presented, or anything that has to do with it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: The document to which I referred yesterday, which I had in my mind—I do not know which document the hon. member has in his mind—is work that is prepared for me to give advice, as the minister, to the Minister of Finance in preparation for the budget. Therefore I cannot discuss that document before the budget is presented.

On the matter of alarm, I would say that the headline in The Toronto Sun this morning—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: —saying that 85,000 Canadians will lose their homes before Christmas, has to be the result of the irresponsible statement of the Leader of the New Democratic Party yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: Further, I would have to say that this government has indicated it will not permit that. It has indicated that in the budget it will protect those people. That has to be the height of irresponsibility by the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, it is precisely because we want to get the correct figure that we have demanded the document which the minister is refusing to provide to the people of Canada. That is the important issue, and I intend to raise this matter on a question of privilege at three o'clock, because certain hon. members sitting on the other side of the House have that document. But I would like to go to the Minister of Finance—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I will. At three o'clock, I will name them. I would now like to go to the Minister of Finance.

BANKS AND BANKING

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO FORCE BANKS TO REDUCE MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Considering that in recent weeks the Minister of Agriculture has been complaining about the banks, that even the minister allegedly responsible for housing has been complaining about the banks, and that yesterday the Minister of Finance said the banks should bleed a little, will the government, at long last, quit whining about the banks and bring in legislation which will force the banks to put up mortgage money which the average Canadian can afford?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, when a decision is reached to bring in any such legislation, I assure the hon. member that he will be among the very first to know.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR PROGRAMS TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): My question, Madam Speaker, is directed to the Prime Minister. On April 24 last year, the Prime Minister made a commitment. He said:

> We will not reduce the deficit at the expense of creating more unemployment.

On January 10 last year, he said:

> We must endorse the right of every Canadian to have a job.

Eight hundred and ninety-one thousand Canadians were actually out of a job at the beginning of September. These are not aberrations. They are not sampling errors, as the Minister of Finance claimed yesterday. They are flesh and blood human beings in dire straits because they are out of jobs.

In Newfoundland, almost one fifth of the whole labour force—17.8 per cent—are out of jobs. Half of all of the fish plants in Newfoundland are closed and the people are out of work.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Crosbie: Order, yes! What we want is some order and justice, not just words.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: My question to the Prime Minister is this: what special programs will he now institute? Never mind waiting for this mythical budget. What will he now announce? What can he announce in the next few days to put some of these people back to work, to carry out those promises that the Canadian people trusted him to carry out when he made them last January?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am rather pleased that the hon. member is drawing attention to the commitment I made last January, and some months before that, that we would do our best to create jobs while at the same time fighting employment, because—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: You've wrestled employment to the ground, Pierre!

Mr. Trudeau: Because I happen to—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You've wrestled the country to the ground!

Mr. Trudeau: I do not know what hon. members are getting excited about over there, Madam Speaker. They must realize that they have a whole session ahead of them; and if they start shouting on the first day, what will they do for an encore next month and the months after that? It is not watching them that is bothering me; it is listening to them, and they are shouting too loud.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Try answering the question!

Mr. Trudeau: So, in terms of job creation—

Madam Speaker: Order!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Prime Minister!

Mr. Trudeau: In terms of job creation, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Clark: Back to Fiji, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: —during the year ending in August, 1981—that is the 12 months finishing last August—372,000 new jobs were created, and that is twice as many as the 200,000—

An hon. Member: Where?

Mr. Trudeau: —in Canada—which were created in the 12 months before that. Internationally, Canada has continued to outpace every other major industrialized country in the creation of new jobs.

Mr. Nielsen: In interest rates, too.

Mr. Trudeau: If one compares the first quarter of 1980 to the first quarter of 1981, the growth in employment in Canada has gone up 3.6 per cent. The next fastest was Italy, at 1.9 per cent. The next was Japan, at one per cent. In the United States, it was zero. In Germany, it was zero. In France, it was minus 2 per cent; and in the United Kingdom, it was minus 5 per cent.

Therefore, it seems to me that is the answer to the hon. member for St. John's West, that indeed we have created jobs at a faster rate than any of the other major industrialized countries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

JANUARY, 1980, STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): We can see, from the Prime Minister's weak answer, how many trips he has been on to get those figures.

Mr. Clark: That's right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: What we are excited about is that while the Prime Minister is on more roads than Bob Hope and Bing Crosby, 891,000 people are unemployed. In Newfoundland, 4,500 of 9,000 fish plant workers; 650 trawler men—over half the trawler fleet force—are unemployed. Ten thousand fishermen are unemployed; 17.8 per cent of our people are unemployed; yet the Prime Minister does nothing except travel around the world with his platitudes. That is what we are excited about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order! I would appreciate it if the hon. member would put his question.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes. My question to the Prime Minister is this: what did the Prime Minister mean when he said, on January 10, 1980, "We must endorse the right of every Canadian to have a job?" Was that just a gigantic bluff, or did he mean it? If he means it, what is he going to do about it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member shouted less and listened more, he would know what we have done about it.

Mr. Crosbie: What?

Mr. Trudeau: We have created jobs at a rate faster than any other industrialized society.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That's great comfort on UIC.

Mr. Clark: They all work for Petro-Canada, don't they, Marc?

Mr. Trudeau: I understand that the hon. member is now the critic on foreign affairs.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are the critic on foreign travel.

Mr. Crosbie: And I've got a lot to criticize.

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure the hon. member has a lot to criticize, but why does he begin with critizing the foreign travels of the Prime Minister to the Commonwealth, or to Korea—

Mr. Crosbie: They produce nothing.

Mr. Trudeau: Are these trips that he would advise against, as a critic?

Mr. Crosbie: I would advise you to look after us first.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the hon. member shouts that he would advise that we look after him first. That is the job of his leader; that is not my job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member raises the question of Newfoundland. He should know that we have assigned special employment funds for Newfoundland.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You gave Rompkey a job.

Mr. Crosbie: Two million dollars.

Mr. Trudeau: But if the hon. member wants to do some shouting, maybe he would shout at Premier Peckford, who is the premier of that province, and I would ask him what he is doing to match our special help for the fishermen in Newfoundland.

HOUSING

HIGH INTEREST RATES—INQUIRY WHETHER MEASURES WILL BE TAKEN TO HELP RENTERS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I shall direct my question to the minister responsible for housing. I was very happy to hear him say earlier, contrary to what his leader said yesterday, that he would defend and protect home owners, and I conclude from this that, contrary to what the Prime Minister suggested yesterday, the minister intends to do something. In the document mentioned earlier it is also recognized that renters—and speaking of renters, the Prime Minister is well aware that there are more renters than home owners in Quebec—would have even greater problems than home owners because of current interest rates. Can the Prime Minister at least tell us whether he will introduce measures to help not only home owners, but renters as well?

[English]

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, yesterday when I spoke both inside and outside the House on the government's commitment in the Speech from the Throne to assist people who need help most, I was not contradicting either the leader of the party, the party, or anyone else in the party. I was reflecting and repeating the commitment of the government in its Speech from the Throne, the commitment of the Minister of Finance and the commitment of the Prime Minister made earlier in September that we will indeed carry out the commitment to assist home owners as we undertook to do on those occasions.

Mr. Epp: How?

Mr. Cosgrove: In answer to the inquiry about assistance to renters, yes, Madam Speaker, we are aware of the tight rental markets and the difficulties of young people in tight rental markets. It is for that reasons we increased the amount of social housing commitments across the country last year.

It was a commitment on the part of this government newly coming into office which contradicted the advice given to the hon. member's leader in the last government, which was to totally wipe out all of the social programs, under the Matthews report. That is what we have done. I have indicated that, by looking at our record, hon. members will see that we will continue that commitment.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. Since it is impossible to obtain a valid and encouraging answer for all Canadians, I shall direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I repeat that there is a much greater proportion of renters than of home owners in Quebec. Since I was asked earlier what we had done for renters, I must point out that I remember quite well, and the Prime Minister will also remember, we had suggested a program for home owners and that this program was opposed because it provided nothing for renters. In these circumstances, since nothing has been done either for renters or for home owners, could the Prime Minister, in his desire to serve people that he knows quite well are now having problems, show some compassion and assure them that some corrective action will be taken in the short term since the Prime Minister and all his colleagues from Quebec are well aware that these people are suffering hardship and expect an answer from the capital? This time, I hope that I have the right capital, Mr. Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I pointed out yesterday in an answer to the hon. member that I agree that many people in Canada, including home owners, renters, and other groups of people, such as farmers, and so on, were suffering from the results of inflation. This is why I told the hon. member, as I had already told his leader, that we intended to address this problem in our budget in an effort to alleviate the hardships of those who are hit the hardest. I must also point out to the hon. member, who knows the Constitution very well and who keeps a jealous eye on the powers of jurisdiction of the province of Quebec, that rent control comes under provincial jurisdiction and that, if he believes that renters are being badly treated, he should appeal to those responsible for rent control in Quebec.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the fact that the minister's industrial strategy has been decisively rejected by his government; in light of the fact that we now have over 1,000 more lay-offs at Chrysler in Windsor, lay-offs at de Havilland, and mine closures in Newfoundland, the collapse of businesses across the country because of the government's high interest rate policy and because of the collapse of consumer demand, will the minister now reconsider and keep the one promise that I am sure overjoyed the Canadian population, and that is that he would resign if interest rates rose above 14 per cent?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, it is obvious that my hon. friend will be gone from this place a long time before I will.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Another broken promise.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, I am not sure the minister's support is the kind I was anticipating, but my supplementary question is to another one of the cabinet's emasculated rebels, the Minister of Agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: A steer.

Mr. Rae: He is one of the steers in the cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

AGRICULTURE

STATEMENTS BY MINISTER RESPECTING POSSIBLE RESIGNATION

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. The minister delivered a manifesto at Nukko Lake in June, in which he stated:

Some serious work is being done about changing the banking system in this country—

This statement was later denied totally by the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Agriculture delivered another manifesto in Port Elgin just recently, in which he stated:

I won't stay on as your minister of agriculture if something isn't done in the next few short weeks to bring relief to farmers, that is practical and workable.

Could the minister tell us if this threat of resignation is to be taken in the same category as that coming from the emasculated rebel from Windsor West, or is this in another category? Can we expect the minister to resign if something is not done immediately?

An hon. Member: When Gene?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That cheering is the kiss of death.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will have to wait.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: And so will the farmers.

ARTS

PROGRESS REPORT ON COPYRIGHT ISSUE—MEASURES TO HELP CREATIVE ARTISTS

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The minister has undoubtedly noticed in the galleries the presence of prestigious representatives of the stage. Considering that a few months ago the minister issued a release on copyright, could he give us a few details on the progress of that file and could he reassure the artistic community by telling them whether the government is contemplating the adoption of measures to remove the financial difficulties which many people are facing, particularly the creative artists who are at the beginning of their careers?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. We are all aware of the great interest he has in the cultural and artistic world. Just as he did, I noticed the presence in our galleries of two of our own artistes, Mrs. Diane Juster and Mrs. Denise Filiatrault, whose presence here in the Canadian Parliament I am pleased to note.

As to the gist of the question, Madam Speaker, I will say that in my opinion one of the most significant legislative measures we could consider by way of general legislation to help the artistic, cultural, and creative community in general, would be a revamping of the Copyright Act. My colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and myself have decided to go ahead and to give the very first priority to such a bill. I have actually announced the setting up of a committee within my department which includes Mr. John Hylton of Toronto, Mr. André Raynaud, a well known Montreal economist, and Mr. Claude Brunet, a lawyer who is an expert in that field. I have every confidence, Madam Speaker, that with the co-operation of my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, we will be able to bring forth a bill within approximately 12 months at the most.

As to the second part of the question asked by my colleague, concerning fiscal measures aimed at helping the artistic and cultural sector—

Some hon. Members: Answer the question!

Some hon. Members: Order!

An hon. Member: They are not interested!

Mr. Fox: —a suggestion which is extremely challenging, that is obvious, and which concerns Canada's entire artistic and cultural community, but excluding my colleagues across the aisle, I must say to him that of course the matter comes under my colleague, the Minister of Finance, and that if he has precise measures to draw to his attention—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peterborough.

VIA RAIL

CANCELLATION OF PASSENGER SERVICES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I will try to be as brief as the minister who preceded me! Intercity VIA Rail service will shortly be terminated between Toronto, Peterborough and Havelock. I remind the minister and this House that this is the last passenger rail service connecting these communities at present. The figures supplied to the minister have never been audited and the minister refuses to have them audited. In light of the fact that yesterday in the House the minister agreed to appear before the Standing Committee on Transport to give reasons for the termination, could the minister agree to have those figures that were supplied to him by VIA Rail, audited prior to the termination of these VIA Rail lines which will eliminate 20 per cent of the passenger rail service in Canada?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I must say I am very, very sad to hear the interpretation given to that part of the policy statement we made on July 27. What we said was that commuter trains should be operated by the provinces.

Mr. Clark: And economic policy by the banks!

Mr. Pepin: In the past commuter trains were not subsidized by the federal government. The Leader of the Opposition should know that. What we suggested was only that. I take almost for granted now that Mr. Snow, the Ontario minister of transport, will do that. At the meeting in Winnipeg he asked me would the Canadian government make sure that costing order R-6313 would be made available to the provincial government in order to take over that responsibility should they decide to do that, as I suggest they will.

An hon. Member: What about the audited figures?

Mr. Pepin: It is completely wrong to believe that the commuter transportation at Stouffville, at Havelock, and Barrie will be eliminated. We have given one year to the provincial government of Ontario to discuss these things—

An hon. Member: Havelock is not a commuter line.

Mr. Pepin: —and take over these responsibilities. So, it is a pessimistic view of the world which is reflected in the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

APPOINTMENT OF ROBERT TITLEY AS DIRECTOR OF RAIL PASSENGER SERVICES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the minister has obviously forgotten his letter and his communication with the minister of transport in Ontario, Mr. Snow. He advised Mr. Snow that the rail lines between Havelock and Toronto are not to be considered as commuter service and are therefore not the responsibility of the provincial government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: My supplementary question, notwithstanding the Minister of Transport's own background with Power Corporation, which until recently owned Voyageur-Colonial, is this: would the minister agree that his department is in danger of becoming, or has already become merely an arm of the bus lobby, especially in view of the recent appointment of Mr. Robert Titley, formerly an executive with Voyageur, as a new director of rail passenger services with Transport Canada? Appointing this gentleman as director of rail passenger services is like appointing the fox to look after the chickens.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order! The first was a supplementary. The hon. member cannot have a third supplementary.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I think the question is so unfair and so low in style that I do not think I should honour it with an answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: If my hon. friends are looking for that kind of background, they should know that my father was a CN employee for 45 years.

With respect to Mr. Titley, an officer of my department, he is also a former employee of the Canadian Transportation Commission. That should be sufficient.

Mr. Clark: Maybe he works for Petro-Canada.

Mr. Pepin: Those are two points to underline the unfairness of the question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—POSITION TAKEN BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Next week the right hon. gentleman will be attending the North-South Summit meeting in Mexico. I know he places great hope in this, as I do, and I wish him well.

In that particular part of the world violence and war are destroying much of what the development cause of the world is hoping for. In regard to El Salvador, since the last sitting of this House last summer, President Mitterand of France, President Portillo of Mexico, and other countries like Ireland, Norway and Nicaragua have said they believe that the FDR in El Salvador is a legitimate political force which must be taken seriously, and they have called for negotiations to stop the war. In light of that development, what is Canada ready to do, and what is our present position?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I welcome the hon. member's support for my visit to Cancun next week to deal with the problem of injustice as it exists between North and South countries. I am satisfied that the hon. member's party is less reactionary in its view of the problems of injustice than the party opposite me.

An hon. Member: What about your own party? What about the 991,000 unemployed here?

Mr. Trudeau: It seems to think any effort to help the Third World is wasted on the Canadian people.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Clark: That is a falsehood, and you know it.

An hon. Member: That is even below your standard. That is not true; it is a cheap shot.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You should apologize.

Madam Speaker: Order. There has been too much heckling today. We are spending too much of our time on heckling and not enough on questions.

An hon. Member: Look on the other side, too.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition says that is a falsehood. I would like to know the meaning of his innuendoes that he has made repeatedly these past two days that I have been travelling too much. All of my travels in the past year have been to countries of the Third World or directly connected to discussions of a solution to the problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is why you were skiing in Austria.

An hon. Member: Is that why you were in Fiji?

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Why do you not answer the member's question?

Mr. Trudeau: One member shouts Austria and another asks about Fiji.

An hon. Member: Answer the member's question.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. I would appreciate it if the Prime Minister would try to ignore the hecklers and, as much as possible, give his answer.

Mr. Trudeau: I am sorry, Madam Speaker, but there are too many innuendoes and direct accusations coming across the floor.

An hon. Member: If you cannot stand the heat, get out of the kitchen.

An hon. Member: We are over here!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I think even the NDP realize I cannot deal with 20 questions at the same time.

An hon. Member: He asked the question.

Madam Speaker: I have to recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon East if he has a supplementary question.

An hon. Member: Let him answer the first question.

An hon. Member: Yes, and make the Tories listen.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

QUERY RESPECTING CANADIAN ASSISTANCE TO INITIATE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I do not really feel the question I asked was one to be laughed about. In the last two years 30,000 people have died. It was two years ago today that the junta, seven members, took over the country. Since then there has been a civil war in which the poor have suffered and died by the thousands. Colonel Adolfo Arnoldo and Dr. Hector Dada, two of the junta members, have indicated there is no possibility for the war to come to an end. Nor is there any possibility for elections next March, as had been promised.

I believe that Canada is truly a neighbour of the north to El Salvador. I seriously ask the Prime Minister, and I would hope that this House would seriously listen, what positive action is Canada ready to take to help the negotiations begin?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the—

An hon. Member: Tell it to Reagan!

Mr. Trudeau: What is that?

Mr. Clark: Stop play-acting Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not have any lessons to accept from the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Clark: You should.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): A lesson in good manners would be helpful.

Mr. Rae: Answer the question!

Mr. Trudeau: If the members of the New Democratic Party are asking questions and are interrupting me in my own answers, I don't feel I have to answer those questions.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INVESTIGATION OF UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that the minister inaugurated an investigation into the effects of urea formaldehyde foam insulation last June, could the minister explain what the findings of this commission have been, and when he intends to take action on its findings?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I must inform the House that the investigation is still ongoing and should be completed sometime in November. As soon as I receive the report I will make it public and the government will naturally take the required action following its publication. In the meantime, I can tell the House that tests are now being performed in several Canadian homes in order to determine the extent of the problem, to reassure those whose concerns are unfounded, and also to provide advice to those whose health may be affected by this substance. Canadians are being kept abreast of the results of the tests. As soon as we have obtained a representative sample we will also make it public in order to shed as much light as possible on this whole issue.

POST OFFICE

STATEMENT MADE BY POSTMASTER GENERAL

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, if I could get his attention. During the course of the postal strike this summer I think perhaps all hon. members might agree that the dumbest comment uttered by any Canadian fell from the lips of the Postmaster General when he said:

> I can't accept that businessmen have to rely on the Post Office to make a living. If they do, they better find other ways.

I ask the Prime Minister whether this statement reflects government policy and, if it does not, will he publicly rebuke the Postmaster General for exhibiting such insensitivity and ignorance on such an important subject?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question because it gives me the opportunity to explain clearly what I said at that time in the context of the strike. I think that what I said was nothing but a plain truism, meaning that people cannot rely exclusively on the postal service during a strike. I am absolutely astounded by the way this statement was interpreted and blown all out of proportion. I surely am the first to recognize that the Post Office is absolutely important and vital to thousands of small businesses in Canada and that the impact of a strike may be greater for small businesses than for other sectors of the economy. But what I meant by that statement was that the business community had to use some degree of ingenuity in a strike situation rather than ask the government to legislate the employees back to work. The government did not legislate at the time—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ouellet: The strike was settled, and I think that it is in the interest of good labour relations that it was—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ouellet: —without Parliament having to interfere.

[English]

Mr. Speyer: Madam Speaker, that is as pitiful a defence as we have ever heard in this House.

COST OF POSTAL STRIKE TO SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the minister responsible for small business. On the basis of studies done in his department, could he tell us what was the cost to small businesses of the postal strike?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I do not have that information.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Wednesday, October 14, 1981 and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Order as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BROADBENT—DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS TO MEMBERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege pertaining to an answer given to me in the House yesterday by the minister responsible for housing and repeated again today. The question of privilege concerns a very important document which outlines the crisis in housing in Canada today.

I want to say at the outset that the question of privilege, however, does not deal directly with the thousands who are going to lose their homes, as important as that is; nor does it deal with the problems of renters, as important as that is; nor does it deal with the thousands of people who have lost their jobs as a result of the cutbacks in housing, as important as that is. The question of privilege pertains to the fact that a document prepared by a minister of the Crown has been made available, not to other ministers of the Crown involved directly in cabinet work, for which there is a long-established tradition—even though we do not accept all of that tradition—of keeping such documents secret and private, but that a document, which we think contains information which every Canadian should have in his or her hands, has been made available to certain members of the House of Commons who are not ministers of the Crown and denied to other members of the House of Commons.

More specifically, I know that the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre), who is not in the cabinet, has had this document made available to him. My information is that it has been widely distributed to hon. members on the government side. Therefore, my question of privilege is that in terms of their rights members of the House of Commons ought not to be distinguished as to whether they sit to the left of Madam Speaker or to the right of Madam Speaker; every member of the House of Commons ought to have precisely the same rights.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry that I have to call the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) to order. This question of the distribution of certain documents to some hon. members and not to others has often been raised in the House as a question of privilege and, of course, hon. members will recall that I have had to rule that in those particular cases they were not prima facie cases of privilege.

I must remind the hon. member that, first, as the hon. minister has not quoted from the document, he is not required to table it in the House; it is also his responsibility to circulate certain documents to whom he wishes. That is entirely his responsibility. The Chair is not able to determine what documents are essential to a debate; that is the responsibility of the government.

This might be a legitimate complaint on the part of the hon. member, and he might bring it up on other occasions, but he certainly cannot raise it as a question of privilege. Therefore, I must rule that he does not have a question of privilege.

PETITIONS

MR. WENMAN—PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My point of order is to request of you, under Standing Order 67(8), that my very brief petition be read by the Clerk.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member might request that. The report has been tabled, so I think that request is quite legitimate. However, the hon. member will know that he cannot have the petition read unless he has the unanimous consent of the House. Therefore I must ask the members of this House if they give their unanimous consent to having the petition presented by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) read in the House. Does the House give its unanimous consent to the request?

● (1510)

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I think that it would be a departure from the ordinary routine of business in the House. Therefore, we cannot give our consent to his suggestion because we indicated that a budget would be brought in within the next few weeks and that any debate of the kind suggested by the hon. member would tend to delay our proceedings and consequently some worth-while budget measures. We are thus unable to give the required consent for that reason.

[English]

Madam Speaker: The hon. member does not have the unanimous consent of the House to have his petition read. Therefore, I cannot accede to his request.

Mr. Wenman: Madam Speaker, I rise on a separate point of order, but under the same provision, Chapter XII, 67(8). I must say I was not suggesting that we have a debate as was outlined by the minister. I was simply asking that it be read. That was the permission I was seeking. Perhaps he misunderstood the question. I was asking simply for a reading of the material that had been brought forward.

Madam Speaker: The minister did say that a reading would interrupt the normal business of the House and, therefore, he could not give his consent. As well, he understood from the hon. member that it was just a matter of having it read. He did not give his consent to that. Therefore, the hon. member does not have a point of order.

Mr. Wenman: My point of order relates to the next section, which reads:

—if it complain of some present personal grievance requiring an immediate remedy, the matter contained therein may be brought into immediate discussion.

The first request I was making, and which was rejected on the basis of unanimity, was for a reading. At this point I am asking for this because of the personal imminence of the situation. I can give a specific case where in fact a group of Canadians will lose their homes if this matter is not discussed now. It is imminent and significant that the matter be discussed at this moment on their personal need. That is the reason for the petition and why the petition should be discussed.

There is nothing in Standing Orders to suggest this cannot be discussed. Because of that and because of the concern expressed by the members of the House of Commons, I would now request that we have not a debate but a discussion of this subject matter.

Madam Speaker: My understanding of the situation is that if the hon. member did not get consent for a simple reading of his petition, for reasons which I do not have to describe, obviously someone in the House felt it was not urgent or opportune to disrupt the normal business of the House in order to deal with what the hon. member has suggested the House should do. The logic of this situation is that if hon. members do not want the petition to be read, then obviously they will not want to discuss it.

I remind the hon. member that petitions in this House have not usually been discussed. The rule read by the hon. member I believe refers to a different meaning of the word "petition" from the one which is accepted within the confines of our rules. When petitions are tabled in the House, a report is made as to their form. They might be read by the Clerk upon request if there is unanimous consent.

The only precedent I can find with regard to some follow-up to a petition was in the case of Mr. MacInnis where the petition was referred to a committee. It was not discussed in the House at the time the hon. member is now suggesting this one should be. I think I can resolve this matter quickly by asking the House if it gives its unanimous consent to discussing the petition or to some kind of follow-up to that petition. Does the House give its consent to the suggestion?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I am just about to announce an opposition day for next Tuesday. That will give the hon. member the opportunity to raise any issue he wishes.

[English]

Madam Speaker: The hon. member not having unanimous consent, the matter has therefore been disposed of.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): On the point of order, Madam Speaker, I wish to quote from Beauchesne, page 213, citation 694:

> While a member has clearly a right to ask that a petition be read, it is a privilege, like many others, subject to the approval of the House itself. In case of opposition, the Speaker will put the member's motion "that the petition be read", formally to the House.

Nowhere can I find that it requires unanimous consent.

Madam Speaker: I quote from Beauchesne, citation 695, at page 213:

> A petition having been presented, and being in order as to the form, may, with unanimous consent, be read by the Clerk, and may thereafter, with unanimous consent, be referred to a committee.

That is citation 695 of Beauchesne.

Mr. Deans: On the same point of order, I would suggest that the member is not asking that it be read by the Clerk but that the member himself be allowed to read it, which is not what is referred to in 695 but rather what is referred to in 694.

Madam Speaker: I have to remind the hon. member that he may be asking for that, but that provision does not exist under our rules. The only thing that can happen with a petition is that, with the unanimous consent of the House, it may be read by the Clerk, not by the hon. member. Other things may then happen if unanimous consent is given to the reading of the petition.

Mr. Wenman: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. You mentioned that the precedent that has been set is that petitions have been read in the past and, second, that they have been referred. There is no precedent in this House of Commons relating to discussion, as is stated under section 67(8). This would be a new precedent. You in fact would be creating a precedent by this decision.

I would ask that you give this very careful consideration and perhaps reserve judgment. The discussion of petitions is the most basic and fundamental right of democracy; it was a right before democracy was even created. The right of petition being a pre-democratic right, that right of petition must be given full opportunity in this House of Commons. Therefore, I ask that you consider it very carefully because there is no precedent that I can see nor that you have quoted which relates to immediate discussion, or in fact to a full majority being required for that.

Madam Speaker: I will not entertain any further discussion because I have already ruled on this question. There is no precedent where a petition has been discussed in this House. I go by the rules which do not tell me clearly that a petition can be discussed if certain things happen. There is no precedent that allows me to permit the hon. member to have his petition discussed. The procedure by which that can happen did not take place in this House. The hon. member did not get unanimous consent for the first part of that procedure. That is why I ruled that we could not pursue the hon. member's suggestion. We should close debate on this because I have already ruled on it and the precedents of the House are quite clear.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate the new House leader for the Progressive Conservatives (Mr. Nielsen) and to tell him that the House leader usually inquires on Thursdays about the business of the House. Since he no doubt forgot to do so today, allow me to briefly summarize the business of the House for the next days. First of all, today and tomorrow we will proceed with Bill C-48 dealing with oil and gas and the Canadianization of our oil industry. Consideration of this bill will extend into Monday. Next Tuesday will be an opposition day, after which we will resume debate at the report stage, and I do hope that we will complete third reading of Bill C-48 before next Thursday. This work schedule will be followed for now and in the future until further notice, and I am thinking in particular of the notice provided for in the House order for the conclusion of the constitutional debate. Should the government decide to use this order of the House to end the debate on the Constitution, it must give notice, and I want to make it clear that this notice could be given any time as of today. However, the normal order of business will be as I just indicated and will not be changed unless the House is otherwise advised, which includes the possibility of the notice required under the agreement reached for the conclusion of the constitutional debate.

● (1520)

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I was intending to rise just before orders of the day were called, as I believe to be customary, to establish the routine business. In any event, it would have given the House the opportunity of proceeding more efficiently through the daily routine business without interruption. I wonder if it is going to be the intention of the government House leader to continue the practice of holding House leaders' meetings.

I was grateful to him last week when he called me about 45 minutes before his press conference to inform me of the business of the House for the remainder of this week. My colleague from Nepean-Carleton informed me that in the past it has been customary to hold regular House meetings on a weekly basis, with rare exception. I believe it would be desirable to continue that practice; however, perhaps the government has something else in mind as a result of the changes to my left as well as here. I would hope we could re-establish the custom of holding those meetings.

Perhaps that would do away with the necessity that faces me now of inquiring of the government House leader whether it is the intention to allot the remaining four opposition days, which I understand must be allotted before December, so that we may deal with them in an intelligent manner with the House leader for the New Democratic Party.

Secondly, in view of the reluctance of the Prime Minister and of the Minister of Finance to provide members of the House with information as to the date of the budget, perhaps the House leader could be more forthcoming and inform members of the House when that budget date might be.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, there is no question of reinstating the practice of holding meetings of House leaders because this practice is still being followed. There is therefore no need to reinstate it. We did not meet this morning quite simply because there was no change from what I had mentioned to my hon. colleague on the telephone last week and because I wanted to confirm it for the benefit of the other members on both sides of the House. It is certainly most essential for us to meet as often as necessary, and I do not restrict this to one meeting a week. It has sometimes been necessary to meet several times a day, and this could happen again. We have had that experience not so long ago. However, it has also happened that we did not have to meet in over a week because the business of the House was not proceeding quickly enough. If we were to complete the debate of Bill C-48 sooner than expected, I would certainly hasten to call a meeting, even before next Thursday. If my learned colleague tells me that we shall be voting at the report stage of Bill C-48 on Monday, I shall be happy to hold a meeting Monday evening to plan the next day's business. However, let us wait and see what happens, but the principle involved is very important: it is necessary for the House leaders of all parties to meet in harmony as often as need be to ensure the smooth running of this Parliament. This is the responsibility of the House leaders. I congratulate the House leader of the Progressive Conservative Party on showing concern and I can assure him of my full co-operation in this regard.

As concerns the date of the budget speech, it is of course up to the Minister of Finance to set it. I am not in a position to contradict the replies that he or the Prime Minister have already given about this matter. It seems that the minister will be able to bring down a budget probably at the end of this month or in early November. In any event, I want to point out that the order of business will be announced as early as possible after we learn what will happen and that the only thing which could delay any bill, including the budget bills and the budget itself, would be a change in priorities; but if this were the case, I can assure the hon. member that he would be so advised within the time limits provided under any agreement or our rules.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I listened very carefully to the government House leader; however, he did not cover the point I raised with respect to the allotment of the remaining four opposition days. I suggest to him we should have an early meeting, because it is simply impossible to deal with a division of allotted days between ourselves and the other opposition party in the House if we are going to be given them piecemeal. We must have some foreknowledge of when they are going to be called so that we may deal with them. I wonder if he might cover that point.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, there is no established practice with regard to a formal meeting for the designation of allotted days. On the contrary, it is a prerogative of the government under Standing Order 18(2) to set the sequence of government business. And my colleague knows quite well that I cannot break away from tradition and undertake to seek the advice of hon. members opposite every time we want to designate an allotted day. However, I want to say in all fairness that if he wants to submit a list of convenient days, as his predecessor used to do, although I cannot promise to accept his suggestions, I can assure him that I will give them very serious consideration.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I have a couple of matters I would like to raise. First of all, I am happy to meet at any time. I recognize that members of the House are expected to be prepared to deal with any matter on the Order Paper at any time, but it is difficult to order one's own life when we know we only have an understanding as to the business of the House until Tuesday of next week. More specifically, when the information was given out earlier this week on what we were going to deal with, the government House leader indicated we would go to Bill C-23 in the event we completed Bill C-48.

I would like specifically to ask whether or not it is still the intention of the government House leader to proceed to that piece of legislation immediately in the event we complete Bill C-48 by the end of next week. Failing that, I wonder if we might even get a hint as to the order of business that might be called for next week in order that we can alert people to be as prepared as possible and thereby expeditiously deal with the matters that are before us.

Before I sit down, Madam Speaker, I might say, in regard to my colleague for whom I am filling in temporarily, that his state of mind would be improved considerably if the government were to give serious thought to legislation dealing with widows' pensions. I am sure he would be back in the House forthwith, and happily, if he could see passed through all stages and given royal assent a bill which would improve in particular the lot of women in this society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I also wish to take this opportunity to congratulate my hon. colleague on having assumed those important duties and to wish a speedy recovery to his predecessor. He has now asked what bill would be brought in if consideration of Bill C-48 was completed by next week. I cannot go back on what I said to him last week; on the contrary, however, if it should happen that we had to change the priority which I had indicated to him he would certainly be advised in due time. As for the business for next week, I gave a good indication a while ago in my reply to the House leader of the Progressive Conservative Party. However, if my colleague wants to have an idea of what we will be doing in the following weeks, and that seems to be the intention of his question, I will remind him that we are still in the same session that followed two elections held in less than a year and that there is still a backlog of bills on the Order Paper.

Up to now we have passed 65 bills but there are still about 20 on the Order Paper and each of them is important. We would like to dispose of them before Christmas. There is also the budget debate coming up; and as a result of the budget some bills will have to be considered and also of course that major bill on oil and gas now under consideration. Essentially this is our calendar up to Christmas and I hope that we will make sufficient progress to enable us to begin 1982 with a new session, but I cannot at this time make such a commitment. However, I wish to assure my two colleagues that we will meet as often as necessary and, of course, starting next week.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I want to ask a question with respect to the responsibility within the ministry for a certain statute. As my hon. friend knows, Bill C-43 dealing with freedom of information is before the committee in the name of the previous secretary of state. There is now a new Secretary of State; in the recent shuffle, the Minister of Labour has become the Secretary of State. The minister who had joint responsibilities for that portfolio and that of communications is now the Minister of Communications. Could the House leader indicate who will be responsible for the conduct of the legislation through the House, namely, the legislation known as freedom of information?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, according to the latest information, the minister who has piloted the bill through the House so far will continue to do so; should technical alterations in the bill be indicated, we will take what steps are necessary to obtain the required consent and make what changes are required. That is the gist of the information I was given; should I be mistaken, I shall see to it that the hon. member is advised accordingly as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker will remember that on a number of Thursday afternoons prior to the summer recess I asked the government House leader what intentions the government had with regard to responding to the fourth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. At that time the government House leader indicated that the government was working feverishly to come up with a response to the committee's fourth report, to the report of the select committee of the Economic Council, as well as to other proposals dealing with parliamentary reform. Now that the House has been reconvened, may I ask the minister whether he could indicate when this material will be put before the House?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: It is true that the reports mentioned by the hon. member do have a bearing on parliamentary reform generally and, more specifically, on the structure of committees. I have already indicated that we worked very hard on parliamentary reform during the last few weeks; we are still doing so. But the question remains as to whether or not the proposed reform should be negotiated with House leaders before the end of the current session or early in the next one. That is a matter on which I should appreciate the views of the hon. member and my other colleagues. In any event, I am not in a position to say today exactly when the proposed amendments and improvements to our Standing Orders will be brought in; that is, before the end of this session or early in the next one. That is something that will in all probability be determined in the next few weeks.

In the meantime, it is absolutely unthinkable that we should devote the time of the House, that is so precious, to a premature study of those reports which are doubtless important in themselves but which one way or another will be considered by the House or in committee within the framework of a reform of our Standing Orders.

OFFICIAL REPORT

DISTRIBUTION OF DAILY ISSUE

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): As Madam Speaker is no doubt aware, usually we have the distribution of Hansard prior to the opening of the House. As of 3.30 today we have not had yesterday's Hansard distributed or made available to hon. members. I am just wondering whether there is an explanation for what has happened, or is this a sign of things as they are to be in the future?

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, but I cannot even offer an explanation. I learned just now that indeed Hansard has not been distributed, but we do not really have an explanation. Something seems to have broken down in the printing, but I will see to it that Hansard is distributed.

PETITIONS

MR. HUDECKI—RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN CHILD

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, it is my privilege to present to the House this petition on behalf of 6,507 deeply concerned citizens from the Hamilton area, including myself, requesting the Government of Canada clearly to define and guarantee the right to life of the unborn child in the proposed charter of rights, and that this guarantee be granted to all from the moment of conception to natural death, acknowledging the dignity and the worth of human persons, including those still in mothers' wombs.

MR. CLARK—PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise again today to present some petitions on behalf of Canadians across the country who are asking for help for those citizens of Canada who are threatened with the loss of their homes as a result of the deliberate high interest rate policy of the Liberal government.

I must say that I regret that the government House leader refused two earlier petitioners in this matter the opportunity to have their grievances stated in their Parliament, but that is consistent with the practice of a government which would force these Canadians out of their homes.

I am presenting petitions from the city of Pickering with 1,061 signatures, from the cities of Oshawa and Toronto with 342 signatures, from residents of the Durham Condominium Corporation of the city of Pickering with 416 signatures and also one signed by 829 residents of the city of Mississauga.

MR. CORBETT—VIA RAIL—CUTBACKS IN PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I should like to present a petition to the House signed by some 11,400 New Brunswickers and other citizens of Canada who are completely discouraged and disgusted with the arrogance and unilateral decision taken by the government to cut certain VIA Rail services.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

ELECTORAL PERIOD

Question No. 118—Mr. Cossitt:

Is the government prepared to recommend to the House of Commons that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to examine various means of shortening the period of time necessary for holding general elections including the developing of a permanent system for registering voters?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): The idea of a shortened election period was discussed in previous Parliaments, notably in 1976 when the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections studied the Chief Electoral Officer's report, "An Examination of Possible Ways of Reducing the Electoral Period". In its seventh report of April 29, 1976, the committee recommended that the government consider shortening the election period to 47 days. On November 5, 1979, the previous government introduced Bill C-21, which proposed to reduce to a minimum of 47 days the period required to hold general elections and byelections. Bill C-21 was never debated in the House of Commons prior to the dissolution of the Thirty-first Parliament. On January 26, 1981, the present government introduced Bill C-58, which is virtually identical to the earlier bill. Bill C-58 received second reading on July 3, 1981.

The feasibility of various ongoing voter registration systems was examined by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections as part of its study of the above-noted report by the Chief Electoral Officer. In its reports of April 29, 1976, the committee made no recommendation about the establishment of a permanent system for registering voters.

CFDC—BACKING FOR PRIVATELY OWNED COMPANIES

Question No. 1,322—Mr. Friesen:

1. (a) What are the names of the privately-owned companies which receive financial backing from CFDC (b) on what date did they first receive financial assistance (c) what was the cost to CFDC for (i) 1979 (ii) 1980 (d) what are the projected costs for 1981?

2. In what location is the head office of each company?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows: It is the practice of the CFDC not to reveal the amount of its investments in individual productions in order to protect the producers and other investors' interests in their dealings with third parties. This business practice is followed by other government bodies, such as the Federal Business Development Bank, etc. However, the information provided herein on the films produced with the participation of the CFDC is available from the annual reports of the corporation.

(b) This information is not readily available in a meaningful form as the production companies are, in many cases, limited liability companies established for the production of a specific film. However, the CFDC's financial participation in the individual film may have commenced in previous fiscal years with loans made to the producer for development of the script and the property, prior to the production company's incorporation. This is in keeping with the corporation's policy of participating financially in the production and, since 1981, distribution of individual films, rather than providing operating capital to companies.

(c) CFDC's financial participation in the production of these films was:

(i) for 1979-80	$8.95 million
(ii) for 1980-81	$6.1 million

(d) The corporation's operational budget includes $2.75 million for assistance to the production and distribution of Canadian films. This amount is additional to the $4 million interim financing fund announced by the Minister of Communications on June 6, 1981.

REVENUE CANADA—AREA COLLECTOR FOR VICTORIA

Question No. 2,183—Mr. Miller

1. On how many days last year was the area collector for Victoria actually in Victoria supervising national revenue customs operations for Vancouver Island?

2. Does the area collector for Victoria live on Vancouver Island and (a) if not, is the government paying for his transport accommodation and food when he is actually on the Island (b) if so, what amounts have been paid and for what items?

3. On what date was the present area collector for Victoria hired?

4. How much time has he spent on Vancouver Island supervising customs operations in the past year?

5. How many customs employees resident on Vancouver Island applied for the Victoria area collector's position?

6. Was the present area collector for Victoria hired as a PM4 to allow him to qualify as a PM5 in Vancouver after he has met the qualifying time as a PM4?

7. (a) How many persons are in acting supervisory positions in the Pacific regional office (b) what are the positions in which acting supervisors are currently placed (c) on what date will the positions be filled with permanent staff?

8. (a) Did 16 persons apply for a PM2 position at Sidney and were all applications judged to be not qualified (b) did any of the applicants have previous experience in the position (PM2) (c) does the Department of National Revenue or officials have a specific candidate they wish to place in the position who failed to qualify on the first competition (d) on what date will the next competition be held for the position?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Since being appointed the area collector for Victoria on June 2, 1980, he has actually supervised customs operations at that point for a total of 98 days, as of the date this question was asked.

2. The area collector resides in Victoria when supervising the local operations, however, commutes to Vancouver on the weekends where he maintains his residence.

(a) When in Victoria the collector is not compensated by the government for transportation, accommodation or food except when visiting his outport operations, i.e., Nanaimo, Campbell River.

(b) No amount has been paid.

3. See reply to No. 1 above.

4. See reply to No. 1 above.

5. One employee who actually resided on Vancouver Island applied for the Victoria area collector position.

6. The present area collector for Victoria was the successful candidate in a national competition and was appointed to the PM-4 collector's position. He was not hired as a PM-4 to allow him to qualify for a PM-5 position in Vancouver.

7. (a) There are presently three persons in acting supervisory positions in the Pacific regional office.

(b) The positions in which acting supervisors are currently placed are:

PM-6 manager B.C. and Yukon operations

PM-5 manager regional operational services

PM-5 manager investigations.

(c) It is expected the aforementioned positions will be filled by permanent staff within the next few months.

8. (a) All applicants for a PM-2 position at Sidney were tested in accordance with the normal selective criteria and were judged as unqualified. There were 20 applicants originally, four withdrew, the other 16 were interviewed.

(b) Of these applicants, 12 had limited supervisory experience either in an acting capacity or when performing similar functions.

(c) The Department of National Revenue or its officials do not have a specific candidate identified to place in the position.

(d) The anticipated date of the next competition for the position will be in five to six months.

OHIP PAYMENTS

Question No. 2,790—Mr. Herbert:

1. Does the government contribute part of the cost of the Ontario Hospital Insurance Plan (OHIP) premiums to public servants and, if so (a) how many public servants receive the benefit (b) what is the basis for the payment?

2. Was the contribution of the government increased when the premium was increased?

3. Is the amount of the federal benefit taxable by the (a) government (b) provincial governments?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board):

1. The government, as employer, pays a portion of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan premiums of federal public service employees.

(a) That contribution toward OHIP premiums is made on behalf of approximately 100,000 employees, and

(b) until the recent increase to the OHIP premium rates effective July 1, 1981, the government contribution was based on 50 per cent of the premium for single employees and employees with one dependent, while for employees with more than one dependent the contribution was slightly greater than 50 per cent of the premium ($20.60 of the total premium of $40).

2. The government contribution was not increased when the OHIP premiums were increased effective July 1, 1981, so that employees assume the full cost of that premium increase.

3. The government's contribution, as employer, toward the OHIP premiums of federal public service employees, is a taxable benefit in the hands of those employees, and is therefore subject to both (a) federal and (b) provincial income tax in the same manner as any other taxable income from employment.

TRAVEL OF OFFICIALS FROM PRIVATE COMPANIES ON CF VESSELS

Question No. 2,805—Mr. Skelly:

1. Were officials of Noranda Mines Ltd. and MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. transported between Powell River and Vancouver Island on July 15, 1981 aboard a Canadian forces vessel and, if so (a) under what circumstances (b) which vessel was employed?

2. Was compensation made to the Crown and, if so, in what amount?

3. Are Canadian Forces vessels now available to certain parties, including union officials, to travel between industrial installations on the coast of British Columbia?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes.

(a) and (b) A group of industry officials, in response to an invitation by the Commander Maritime Forces Pacific in accordance with his community relations program, embarked on HMCS Gatineau which was conducting routine exercises in the area between Powell River and Nanaimo.

2. Not applicable. See answer to parts 1 and 3.

3. The travel aspect of this activity is purely incidental. Groups, such as industrialists, union officials, youth movements, service clubs, chambers of commerce, political leaders, etc., are routinely hosted at Canadian Forces installations in order to better acquaint a wide cross-section of Canadian society with the aims, missions and activities of the Forces, their personnel and equipment, as part of ongoing community relations programs.

SUPERANNUATION FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 1,681—Mr. Stewart:

1. On what date was the superannuation plan for public servants, RCMP and the military established?

2. What is the current percentage of payroll deducted from an individual contributor and what is the government's matching contribution?

3. Are contributions held in a separate trust fund or do they become part of the government's general revenues?

4. What percentage of interest was paid when the fund was first established and what is the current rate paid by the government?

5. What amount is currently in the pension fund?

6. What amount of interest did the fund earn in each of the past ten fiscal years?

7. What would the fund have earned in interest if contributions had been invested in Canada Savings Bonds in each of the past ten fiscal years?

8. What payments have been made from the fund in each of the past ten fiscal years?

9. To the knowledge of the government (a) how are some of the larger pension funds of large Canadian corporations handled (b) are companies required to hold the funds in trust (c) what are some of the average interest earnings per annum in relation to three or four of the larger private sector pension funds?

10. Is the rate of interest paid to the Public Service Superannuation Fund reviewed and, if so (a) how often (b) by whom (c) are representatives of the Public Service consulted before a rate of interest is struck?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, October 14, consideration of Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and Motions Nos. 4 (Mr. Fulton), 51 (Mr. Fulton), 52 (Mr. Ittinuar), 53 (Mr. Ittinuar), 55 (Mr. Lalonde), 56 (Mr. Fulton) and 57 (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker will recall that on July 13, 1981, at the time Your Honour gave your rulings on the appropriate motions to be put to the House, you indicated with regard to Motion No. 54 that the matter could be further discussed at an appropriate time.

● (1540)

I should like to ask, if I may, that the matter be discussed now since that motion will be coming before the House very quickly; and in the event that the decision is upheld or reversed, I ask that members be given time to prepare for the debate.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member may rise on a point of order and proceed now if he wishes.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): On the same point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, it is the same point of order as that raised by the previous member regarding Motion No. 54 which I drafted. I drafted it with great care taking into account precisely the point that Your Honour raised. Citation 773(7) of Beauchesne reads as follows:

An amendment is out of order if it imposes a charge upon the public treasury—

I took great care in drafting the motion. The two points to which Your Honour referred were in relation to the formation of the compensation fund.

On today's Order Paper the motion reads, in part, as follows:

"19.2(1)(a) A compensation fund shall be established by the Minister of the Environment to provide for damages.

No cost is involved there. It goes on:

(b) the compensation fund shall be funded by all persons who obtained an authorization under paragraph 3.2(1)(b) by letters of credit totalling at least $500 million.

Funds are definitely mentioned in subclause (b) but they would be raised from the industry itself and the various corporations involved. There would be no direct charge under those letters of credit against the public treasury. The motion continues:

(c)(i) the compensation fund shall be administered by a board appointed by the minister and will be called the "Compensation Fund Board."

(ii) in addition to federal officials the board referred to in (i) above shall consist of representatives from onshore and offshore fishing organizations, native groups, territorial and provincial governments, and industry.

Again, there would be no cost to the public treasury. That clause was discussed in committee and it was specifically drafted so that members of the board would be extracted from all those areas of the country—from provincial, municipal and territorial governments, native organizations and fishing organizations—and they would be voluntary members of the board. The costs of the necessary travel and so on necessary in order to participate in board activities would come out of the compensation fund itself and not the public treasury.

The other points raised in Motion No. 54 relate to the actual administration of the fund and the fact that the governor in council can make regulations to govern the administration of the fund. That would not cause any direct draw to be made on the public treasury.

With all respect to the Chair, I think it is clear that Motion No. 54 can be considered as an amendment that does not fall within citation 773(7) of Beauchesne. It is clearly something that can be debated. It is a viable amendment and, in my view, is certainly one of the most important components for the protection of the public interest in Bill C-48.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have a motion under discussion that, in effect, would provide for the establishment of a board to come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) and which would administer funds obtained from licence holders through letters of credit. I understand the argument from the hon. member opposite is to the effect that somehow this proposed amendment does not infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown.

I would draw the attention of the hon. member and the House to page 182 of Beauchesne, citation 540, which reads in part as follows:

—an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown not only if it increases the amount but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge. And this standard is binding not only on private members but also on ministers whose only advantage is that, as advisers of the Crown, they can present new or supplementary estimates or secure the royal recommendation to new or supplementary resolutions.

The principle here is simply that the initiative with respect to financial expenditures must come from the Crown and the grant be made by Parliament. The reverse situation, one which the expenditure of money is recommended by Parliament and the Crown would concur, is impermissible.

Motion No. 54 sets out Clause 19.2(1)(d) as follows:

(d) any person(s) claiming for damages may apply directly to the compensation fund—

Then it goes on:

(e) the board shall review the case and make payment to the person filing the claim.

Accordingly, the amendment requires that payment might be made to all claimants. However, subclause 19.2(1)(f) provides that the compensation fund shall recover its award from the letter of credit. Thus there is always, initially, a charge on the Consolidated Revenue Fund under the scheme which may or may not, where no fault is found, be recoverable from the letters of credit.

In respect of two of the government's amendments to this bill, a revised royal recommendation has been obtained from the Crown on the advice of the responsible minister. However, this option is not available to a private member who does not have any position as an adviser to the Crown. It can also be argued that the motion would extend the objects and purposes of the financial allocation in respect of the bill, since no such administrative body is contemplated under the present bill. It is an entirely new review system.

The current section of the bill which this scheme would replace provides a strict liability recovery without review, with recourse to the courts where damages incurred are in excess of the strict liability limit. This must of necessity be a much more limited system in terms of administrative cost than the amount proposed by the hon. member opposite. If the motion in fact infringes on the financial initiative of the Crown, I submit that no question can be heard upon it nor can an amendment to the royal recommendation be obtained on the initiative of the member.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment briefly on the intervention made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). I have looked at Motion No. 54 very carefully and my understanding of the motion conforms with that of the hon. member for Skeena, not with that of the parliamentary secretary. The pith and substance of the motion is not the establishment of any board, any modality or any instrumentality for the administration of the fund in question; the main thrust of the motion, as I understand it, is the establishment of a multimillion dollar compensation fund based not on money from the treasury, not from the federal government per se, but on letters of credit from parties actively involved in exploration or development on Crown lands.

In the case of environmental damage from such activities as exploration or development on Crown lands, compensation to affected individuals or groups would be awarded from funds based on the letter of credit of the individual operator found to be at fault. So the money does not come from the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey), the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) or from the consolidated revenues of the Crown; it comes from a fund especially established for that purpose which would place a burden on people found at fault and in violation of the environment.

For that reason, I do not think the motion violates any parliamentary, governmental or political convention that this House must follow. I urge Your Honour to bow to the very strong argument made eloquently by the hon. member for Skeena and to favour his interpretation, which conforms with my own, rather than that of the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I first want to urge upon Your Honour the importance of the ruling on this amendment. I submit that the portion of Beauchesne which was quoted by the hon. parliamentary secretary is an inappropriate section to be used under the circumstances. Citation 540 of Beauchesne speaks directly to any change in the amounts appropriated by the government, by the Crown, within the bill before us.

We on this side of the House, including my colleague the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), are not attempting to make one single dollar change to the amounts to be appropriated by the Crown for the purposes of this act. As the parliamentary secretary indicated, Section 540 of Beauchesne says that no amendment can increase, nor can it alter, the terms and conditions relating to the amounts of money appropriated. The amendment before Your Honour in no way alters the terms and conditions attached to the amounts of money to be appropriated by the government for the purposes of Bill C-48. My hon. colleague from Skeena has drafted an amendment, the financial consequence of which will fall upon the sector of the economy which is most involved, and will not require one single dollar of expenditure by the Crown. Therefore, to rely on Citation 540—

Mr. Nielsen: Could I ask the hon. member a question at this stage?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) seeks to ask the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) a question. Does the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain consent?

Mr. Deans: I guess that if he has a question, Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate.

Mr. Nielsen: I would refer the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) to 19.2(1)(c)(ii).

Mr. Deans: Of what?

Mr. Nielsen: Of the composition of the board—of Motion No. 54. I take it we are discussing that. The second subparagraph of paragraph (c) says "in addition to federal officials", and then the paragraph goes on to talk about the composition of the remainder of the board. Who would be paying the salaries of those federal officials? On appointment to such a board, would they cease being federal officials? Would their salaries be suspended? I am a little at a loss to know how a federal official could continue to be a federal official while his salary is being paid by someone else.

Mr. Deans: I know that the hon. House leader for the official opposition is asking this question somewhat facetiously—

Mr. Nielsen: No, no.

Mr. Deans: —since he knows full well that the federal officials mentioned in this section are already mentioned in the bill, that they are not additional federal officials but the same federal officials.

Mr. Nielsen: Who pays their salary?

Mr. Deans: In addition to that, if it were the wish of the government to deal in one way or another with that particular portion, I put it to Your Honour that the federal officials named do not in any way impinge upon the right of a Member of Parliament to move an amendment of this type for the purpose of setting up a board which will be financially carried by a sector other than the public sector. If it were the wish of the government, it can deal with the matter of the federal officials as a subsequent amendment to the entire bill.

I want to put it to Your Honour that the important point here is that the purpose of that section of the parliamentary procedure which denies to a private member the right to bring in a money bill deals directly with the power of the Crown to administer all matters of finance which require public expenditure. I say to Your Honour that it would not only be inappropriate to rule this particular amendment out of order, but it would also do a grave disservice to the role of Members of Parliament if they were not able to move that a privately funded body be put in place to oversee the possible environmental damages of the actions of private bodies operating under the act.

Therefore, I ask that Your Honour give very careful consideration to this matter, because it has far-reaching consequences which are even beyond the amendment that we have before us. It can reach to the very right of individual members to move legislation setting up bodies which will be funded outside of Parliament and to which the Crown has absolutely no financial obligation, and would render the role of Members of Parliament somewhat less than it has been widely held to be.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any other hon. members on this same point of order? I believe the hon. member for Skeena has been recognized once on the matter and cannot be recognized a second time.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have just three brief points, basically agreeing with the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan). I do not know whether the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) agrees with his colleague, the hon. member for Hillsborough, but I take it that he does, as well as the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

My three points are simply these: first of all, that there is no charge on the Consolidated Revenue Fund, either indirectly or directly, on the face of this legislation; second, that this amendment fits in with the scheme of those other amendments which we are debating now; third, I submit that if there is any question in Your Honour's mind, it would be better to err—if I can use that word—on the side of putting it before the House and having it debated and voted upon, rather than chucked out, as it were, on a preliminary matter or as a technical objection. In other words, it would be better to put it before the House if it is not absolutely clear from the argument. I think it is clear, but perhaps it is not considered to be absolutely clear. It seems to me that it makes better sense to put it before the House and have it debated and voted upon, because that would be the better way to approach it. Those are my three points on the matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any other hon. members who wish to be recognized on the point of order with regard to Motion No. 54? If not, the Chair will defer decision on the matter and we will resume debate on Motion No. 4.

Mr. Deans: May I rise on a further point of order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain on the same point of order or another point of order?

Mr. Deans: On a further point of order, if I may. On Motion No. 4, including Motions Nos 51, 52, 53, 55, 56 and 57, we would like to ask whether or not it might be possible to have Motion No. 34 included since it deals primarily with the same subject matter and it has been ruled in order as suitable subject matter for debate at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent of the House to have Motion No. 34 included with the same grouping for both purposes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq) moved:

Motion 34

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended by deleting Clause 49 and substituting the following therefor:

"49. (1) There shall be established in the accounts of Canada a revolving fund to be known as the Environmental Studies Revolving Fund.

(2) The fund shall be under the administrative responsibility of the Minister of the Environment and shall include a sub-fund for each prescribed area of Canada lands.

(3) The fund shall be used to finance studies into the environmental and social aspects of any activity before, during, or after the work has taken place.

(4) (a) The minister shall order initial regional, environmental and social studies before any activity is to take place.

(b) Where deemed necessary by studies carried out in (4) (a) above, the minister shall order the necessary studies into each activity.

(5) The studies referred to in subsection (4) shall be submitted to appropriate environmental and social impact assessment and review procedures before a decision to proceed is granted under this act or any other act of Parliament.

(6) Following the studies and impact assessment and review procedures referred to in subsections (4) and (5), the Minister of the Environment shall determine whether exploration agreements or production licences shall be granted.

(7) Every effort shall be made by the minister to ensure that persons who may be affected by the proposed activity are notified of the impact assessment and review procedures. Notices of public hearings related to such procedures must be published in The Canada Gazette.

(8) The minister shall provide funds, in accordance with regulations to be determined by the governor in council, to public interest groups, representatives of aboriginal peoples and other persons or groups who may be affected by oil or gas activities to allow them to conduct research, prepare submissions for public hearings and otherwise participate in the impact assessment and review procedure.

(9) All reports from the fund shall be public.

(10) There shall be credited to the relevant fund all amounts levied in respect thereof under this section and there shall be charged against the relevant fund all amounts directed to be paid therefrom under this section.

(11) Every party who is an interest holder on the coming into force of this act shall, at the times and in the manner determined by the minister, deposit for payment into the relevant fund an amount based on the rate fixed by the minister for the purposes of this subsection.

(12) The rate to be fixed by the minister under Subsection (11) or (18) shall be based on the area of Canada lands subject to the relevant interest that are situated within the relevant area or prescribed region, regardless of the nature of the interest.

(13) Where an interest owner consists of two or more holders, any levies under this section shall be collected and remitted on behalf of the interest owner by the representative of the interest owner for that purpose.

(14) Every party who, after the coming into force of this act, enters into an exploration agreement under this act shall, at the times and in the manner determined by the minister, deposit for payment into the relevant fund an amount based on a rate that equals the sum of the rates fixed under Subsections (11) and (17) with respect to the relevant fund.

(15) No interest holder is liable to make payments into the relevant fund under both Subsections (11) and (14) in respect of the same Canada lands unless those lands were Crown reserve lands in the period between the making of payment under Subsection (11) and the entering into of the exploration agreement referred to in Subsection (14).

(16) The minister may direct payment from the relevant fund of the reasonable costs of such environmental studies relating to the area or prescribed region subject to the relevant fund as the minister determines are necessary, after consulting with the relevant advisory committee established for such prescribed region under Subsection (22).

(17) The rate referred to Subsection (11) shall be fixed by the minister in such a manner that, as far as possible, the payments into the relevant fund under that subsection do not, in the aggregate, result in there being an amount in the revolving fund established under Subsection (1) that exceeds the total amount fixed under Subsection (21).

(18) Where the amount of the relevant fund falls below one-half of the total amount fixed under Subsection (21), every interest owner who has made a payment into the relevant fund under Subsection (11) or (14) shall, at the times and in the manner determined by the minister, deposit for payment into the relevant fund an amount based on the rate fixed by the minister for the purposes of this subsection.

(19) On January 1st of each year the minister shall adjust the fund to reflect the rate of inflation and shall assess, according to Subsection (11), a rate to bring the fund back up to the amount set out in Subsection (21).

(20) The minister shall, when fixing the rate referred to in Subsection (11), as far as possible, ensure that the amount does not exceed the limit placed on the fund in Subsection (21).

(21) The fund shall not exceed 100 million dollars.

(22) Advisory committees shall be established for the prescribed regions by the minister to advise the minister on all matters relevant to this section save for Subsection (23), and such committees shall include representatives from the oil and gas industry, public interest groups, aboriginal peoples and other persons or groups who may be affected by oil and gas activities in such regions.

(23) The Government of Canada is committed to enter forthwith into discussions with the aboriginal peoples of Canada, who may be affected by resource development activities in Canada lands, on:

(a) appropriate environmental and social impact assessment procedures and other protections regarding Canada lands and the inhabitants thereof, particularly aboriginal peoples; and

(b) appropriate legislation to be recommended by the Government of Canada in order to implement the matters agreed to under this section.

(24) The governor in council may make regulations for the following matters:

(a) designation of prescribed areas referred to in Subsection (2);

(b) preparation and submission of environmental and social studies;

(c) rules respecting the environmental and social impact assessment and review procedures;

(d) eligibility and other requirements for funding of such persons or groups referred to in Subsection (8);

(e) administration and operation of the Environmental Studies Revolving Fund; and (f) creation of advisory committees referred to in Subsection (22).

(25) The minister shall report annually to Parliament on the operations of this section."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There will be a modification to include Motion No. 34 in the grouping of the clauses for the proposed purposes.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, yesterday, at the end of the day, I was half way through my speech on what were then seven environmental motions which would amend Bill C-48 at the report stage of Parliament's deliberation on the legislation. With Your Honour's indulgence, with the remaining time, I now wish to complete my remarks. All of those motions relate to Clause 80 of Bill C-48, concerning oil-spill type pollution from resource activities on Crown lands and standards for compensation to parties hurt by it. Motion No. 4, as I understand it, would actually amend Clause 2, not Clause 80, by adding a definition of "spill". The proposed definition would, I think, helpfully broaden what is considered a violation of the environment under the legislation.

● (1600)

Motion No. 51 would remove any distinction between an authorized and an unauthorized spill for the purpose of, for example, awarding damages to an offended party. To my mind, Motion No. 51 makes a lot of sense on the grounds that pollution is pollution whether the source is authorized or not. Moreover, damage to either the general environment or to a party's property is no less severe just because the cause is authorized.

My party and I welcome Motion No. 52, which would require that the proper authority be informed beforehand of any authorized pollution, and that the same authority, in turn, give immediate notice to the aboriginal peoples and others who may be harmed by the discharge. Perhaps such requirements will, for example, help the native peoples protect themselves against pollution from activities at their back door. At the very least, if I may say, these people will know what is being done to their habitat in the face of resource development in their area.

Motion No. 53 substantially clarifies the liability of anyone who has violated the environment under the terms of the bill. It does so by specifying that compensation must be paid when pollution impairs, for example, one's source of income through loss not only of personal property but also of the natural environment from which the income is produced. To my mind, this motion would make the bill much more sensitive to the particular circumstances of native peoples, who are often hurt more by the indirect effects of pollution than by its direct impact on their personal property. In my view, in the view of my party and I think in the view of others in the House, compensation should be paid in either instance.

I must confess that the import of the minor amendment—I think it is minor—proposed by the Minister of Energy in Motion No. 55 escapes me, so I shall reserve judgment until a fuller explanation is provided, perhaps by the parliamentary secretary who was in the House a few moments ago and who no doubt will be speaking later.

Certainly Motion No. 56 has my full support, for it rightly seeks to recognize in the bill itself that damage to the environment often becomes discernible long after the actual offence has been committed. Thus, any time limit on when a claim for compensation may be instituted must be sensitive to such situations. At present, Bill C-48 does not reflect that reality. I welcome Motion No. 56 because it attempts to redress the problem.

Motion No. 57 would require the minister to launch a public inquiry into any activity that violates the environment by the standards of the bill. As the legislation stands, the minister may initiate an inquiry, and I stress the words "may initiate". But he is not required to do so. In my view, the minister should be required to do so under specified conditions.

We have dealt with Motion No. 54 and I have expressed myself on that question. I regret that it was not included in the original grouping of the motions under debate now. Let me stress that the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee was very much in favour of the idea behind Motion No. 54. I think the motion as expressed and moved reflects pretty well the import of the representation made vigorously by CARC and it certainly reflects something of my own thinking on the question.

If I may conclude, the bill before us at the report stage will govern the way in which some $300 billion will be spent on the exploitation of energy resources on Crown lands in the next decade alone. Some $300 billion will be spent in the next ten years, but trillions of dollars will be spent by the end of the century. It is clear that the government intends to have only a tiny proportion of such large amounts devoted to the protection of the environment. That will be of as much concern to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) as it is to me.

Worse still is the government's decision to perpetuate in Bill C-48 its habit of entrusting environmental responsibilities, not to the Minister of the Environment, who I see in the House today, but rather to ministers whose principal preoccupation and mandate are the promotion of resource activities that pose the greatest threat to the environment. The resultant conflict of interest is so apparent that one is hard pressed not to assume it constitutes a deliberate effort on the part of the government to undermine the role and responsibilities of the Minister of the Environment himself.

If we do anything else today and in subsequent days in the context of these motions, it should be to redress that very serious problem which I think is more fundamental than the specific problems addressed in the motions themselves being discussed this afternoon.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the opportunity, with the regrouping of these motions together, to say a few words to the House about this particular bill. As hon. members know, I have taken every opportunity to describe and defend this bill both here in the House, privately with members of the House of Commons and with members of the committee, before whom I have appeared several times during the first part of this year. I think hon. members will testify that I have invited constructive proposals on every occasion and in every forum and I have considered the views tendered most carefully. In this regard, it is worth remembering that suggestions were made by some 140 witnesses who appeared before the parliamentary committee.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As I understand the rules, the minister is not to give a speech on what he has or has not done on this bill, or on what the committee has done. We are debating these particular motions. He should address his speech to these motions. These are motions and proposals before the House and he should debate them.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I am amazed to hear that kind of comment from my friend in the New Democratic Party. While I have barely said a few words about the motions before us, I think it is important to put the situation in perspective. I invite my hon. friend to show some patience. He will find that I am going to say a few words about the specific motions he is talking about. In the event the hon. member has forgotten already, I thought it important to remind him that we have had very extensive debates on this particular bill. We have heard 140 witnesses. A large number of amendments have been proposed by the government, by the Conservatives and by the New Democratic Party. A good number of these amendments not only were considered but also were adopted by the committee. In that respect, I think I have certainly exercised my responsibilities to maintain the coherency and consistency of the legislation.

Bill C-48 is an important part, but it is only part, of a comprehensive program that is designed to protect Canadians from the dangerous and volatile energy crisis prevailing in almost every country in the world. As such, it is indeed a fundamental element of our energy program and policy.

• (1610)

The programs now before the House deal with the important questions of protecting the environment from oil and gas exploration and development. My colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) and I have pledged to develop northern resources in harmony with the aspirations of aboriginal peoples and local territorial officials with due regard for the fragile northern environment.

Mr. Waddell: Nonsense!

Mr. Lalonde: I expect the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to be able to address this issue tomorrow and I hope that the hon. member opposite from the New Democratic Party who is interrupting—

Mr. Waddell: It is complete nonsense.

Mr. Lalonde: —and who is talking through his hat again, will be here tomorrow to listen to what my colleague has to say rather than shooting off his mouth as he is tending to do today.

The provisions of this bill allow millions of dollars to be devoted to environmental studies involving local inhabitants in planning their own collective future.

Other provisions of this bill—

Mr. Waddell: It is going to be all done in Ottawa.

Mr. Lalonde: —will strengthen the already rigorous regulatory powers of the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act. I would like to remind hon. members that hundreds of wells have been drilled in Canada's frontier over the past two decades without one single instance of environmental mishap. Our experience and expertise ensures that such mishaps will be avoided by all practical methods of effective regulation and supervision.

My partner in this bill, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—

Mr. Waddell: Silent partner!

Mr. Lalonde: —will be collaborating closely with the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) on ecological matters. I will resist members opposite who attempt to fracture and fragment authority further by having groups of ministers responsible for different provisions of this bill. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in particular must retain the undivided authority to balance the various diverse interests of the north. I fully endorse this view and expect to do the same as far as exploration and development below 60 degrees is concerned.

If we want this administration to proceed effectively, we must have one minister in charge of and responsible to Parliament for implementation of various aspects of the legislation. The public has to be able to identify a minister who is responsible for all aspects which are covered in the bill before us.

Mr. Waddell: Nonsense!

Mr. Lalonde: I do not know, Mr. Speaker, what has happened to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) during the summer, but he certainly seems to have been struck by a strange disease, perhaps called babbling disease!

Mr. Waddell: It is just nonsense you are spouting. It is complete nonsense.

Mr. Lalonde: I think the hon. member might take a little time—

Mr. Waddell: You have taken all the power unto yourself. Roberts has gone.

Mr. Lalonde: —to cool off. I suggest he get a glass of water and cools off before coming back.

Despite the excellent environmental record of the government and regardless of the strict environmental provisions in this and other legislation, an oil or gas spill remains a possible occurrence. Should such a thing occur, the government has made available two methods for prompt and sympathetic compensation. First, we have preserved the ability of claimants to use the existing judicial channels which have always been their right. That will continue to be their right if this is what they prefer.

Second, the minister will hold what I would call blank cheques from oil and gas operators which can be drawn to compensate claimants without proof of fault or negligence. This means that claimants will have two avenues open to them, one, the judicial process, the other a direct claim to the minister who will be in the position to compensate those claimants without such claimants having to prove fault or negligence by the operator.

This step, in particular, represents a very considerable improvement over the previous situation and should any accident occur, people in the north or people concerned with offshore development will find themselves with two avenues to follow whereby they can be rapidly and fully compensated for any damage they may sustain.

While there remains a number of other important provisions to protect the environment, the environmental studies and the virtually unlimited compensation provisions are worthy of support by all three political parties in this House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this legislation and these motions which we are considering in the House today are legislative measures of extreme importance aimed at guaranteeing that the oil development in the Canada lands, that is to say in the Arctic and offshore, will be carried out in an orderly fashion to ensure the environmental protection, which is of great concern to this government. This bill, in particular, provides a mechanism whereby the citizens will have the possibility of obtaining compensation should they suffer some damage as a result of oil exploration in particular. They will have the option of filing claims either before the courts or directly with the minister and they will be paid a compensation with funds which will be supplied by the oil companies. This will enable offshore fishermen for instance, to get compensation quickly and without even having to prove that the operator was at fault or negligent.

In addition, the legislation we are studying today is a basic component of the energy policy of Canada since it will provide for orderly development, as I said, in the petroleum sector, but it will also ensure that Canadians will be able to enjoy much greater control over their resources and much greater ownership of future development. Indeed this legislation provides that any development must be owned and controlled, at least up to 50 per cent, by Canadians. I know that several members want to speak on this subject and I have no intention of unduly extending the debate.

[English]

I note that over 30 members spoke on Motion No. 3 only and this is only one of 57 motions that we have to consider. I urge hon. members opposite to give careful but speedy consideration to this bill. This bill has been extensively considered and debated. In fact, for ten years this issue has been debated without resulting in legislation. We now have agreement with the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia. We are in negotiation with the province of Saskatchewan. We are in negotiation concerning offshore resources with the Atlantic provinces. As far as the industry is concerned, it now has certainty as to the price it can expect for any discovery it will make and the price it can expect for the products it will discover.

• (1620)

Conditions are now adequate for development taking place on Canadian lands. We need those resources. We are proposing a bill which ensures that this development will take place with full respect for the highest concerns in the area of the environment. I urge hon. members to support this bill and adopt it so that we can get on with the job and ensure that the people of the north and the people of the Atlantic provinces benefit soon from the developments they wish to see take place in this regard. The developments will benefit not just the people of the north but all the people of Canada.

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to speak in a debate in the House which concerns the north, however meaningless that debate may be in terms of substantive changes to the bill in question.

When I spoke in the House in December, I expressed some anxiety that northerners would be forced to pay all of the environmental costs of the non-renewable resource development which this bill intends to accelerate and that they would receive none of the benefits that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) intimates. I will talk about their concerns later in this debate in connection with the motions in question.

I would like first of all to talk specifically about the environmental aspects of this bill which affect northern people. My colleague the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) has already discussed the general inadequacies of the environmental regime proposed by this legislation. As far as northerners are concerned, the proposed amendments represent an absolute minimum of what is required to protect that land from irreparable environmental damage.

We have a large economic stake in the preservation of our environment and, on principle, should have much more input into environmental decisions affecting us. I do not think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has ever really consulted people from the north in this regard.

I will address each of these motions individually. Motion No. 4 concerns the definition of an oil spill as "100 litres or more of oil or other foreign substance". This amendment is very important to northerners, as a huge oil spill would have disastrous consequences, as most hon. members know. That is obvious, but chronic dumping of small amounts can be just as damaging to the ecologically sensitive Arctic waters. Northern hunters and fishermen must be protected against gradual destruction of their source of livelihood. It does not matter whether marine fish and mammals are killed slowly or all at once; the result is the same and equally destructive to the traditional northern economy.

Motion No. 51 concerns compensation for authorized as well as unauthorized spills. There are two important principles at stake here which must be protected. One is that those who suffer the economic and social costs of environmental pollution must always be eligible for appropriate forms of compensation. The other principle is that those who cause such pollution must always be held responsible for their actions.

As the bill stands, people affected by oil spills fortunate enough to have the blessing of the government would not be eligible for such compensation. We think this is wrong. It will not matter to the people in the area of a spill if the pollution has government approval. The effect on the environment and on people's lives will be the same. To free the government from any liability in such cases, therefore, will be to deny people who are affected their basic rights. I urge my fellow members, therefore, to support our motion and thereby prevent the government from applying a double standard to the issue of compensation. And, I repeat, it does not matter whether oil spills are authorized or not. What matters is that people's rights to be compensated for the effects of environmental pollution must always be maintained without exception.

Motion No. 52 also concerns provisions for compensating spills. Specifically, it requires that authorized and unauthorized spills be reported to the chief conservation officer and that he in turn notify the peoples affected. In many ways this motion is a follow-up to the one I have just been discussing, since it tries to put into practice some of the principles I have already mentioned. If we agree that people should always have the right to be compensated for damage done to the environment on which their lives may depend, then it seems only reasonable that we also grant those people the right to know about the causes of that damage. In other words, if we grant them the right to claim damages, we must ensure that information about the sources of pollution is made available to them. Compensation provisions for peoples in the current bill may prove meaningless in many instances if reasonable notice of such spills is not given to the people who may be affected.

It should not be left to the aboriginal peoples to piece together, after the fact, where and when oil spills have occurred and who should be held responsible. To make the provisions for compensation effective the northern peoples will need ready access to information on the nature and source of any oil spills which may have affected their environment. It should be the responsibility of the government to see that this type of information is collected and made available to those people. The proposed Subsection 19(4) is designed to ensure that information on all types of oil spills is acquired by the chief conservation officer. This would include both authorized and unauthorized spills.

The proposed Subsection 19(5) is intended to guarantee that information about all types of oil spills is communicated to those peoples who may be affected so that they may begin the process of obtaining appropriate compensation without undue delay.

Motion No. 53 refers to kinds of damages for which people may claim compensation. From the point of view of my constituents the bill as it stands is far too narrow in scope, which is something—if I may have the attention of the minister for a moment—I have not been able to communicate to the minister and his colleagues. It means that aboriginal peoples cannot claim for loss of their future incomes if these have been reduced by the effects of pollution. Furthermore, it means that people cannot claim for damages to property which is not privately owned. For instance, if a walrus herd or a fish run is seriously affected by an oil spill, then the people whose livelihood depends on them cannot seek compensation for the loss they suffer.

In this regard the people of the north are not even getting the same deal as east coast and west coast fishermen who, under Section 746 of the Canada Shipping Act, are allowed to recover for loss of income, including future income, resulting from damage to the fish stocks caused by pollution, even though their fish are not in privately owned water. And they are not getting the same deal as the aboriginal peoples in Alaska, who are eligible to receive compensation for any and all damage done to the lands "structures, fish, wildlife or other biotic of natural resources upon which they rely". This is a provision of the trans-Alaska pipeline authorization act of 1973.

The purpose of our proposed Section 19.2, therefore, is to ensure that people can receive compensation for all types of possible losses caused by oil spills and other types of pollution. This will include individual and collective losses as well as the loss of future income.

I would like to emphasize that the proposed amendment to Clause 49 of this bill does not ensure the adequate environmental protection which is urgently required for Canada lands. They are merely interim measures until a comprehensive regime can be put into place through appropriate legislation, which I advise the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) to introduce.

I note that Motion No. 34 has now been included in this group of motions, and I will speak to it. Motion No. 34 concerns one of the key environmental provisions of this bill. It deals with the environmental studies revolving fund. Bill C-48 as it is presently drafted divides the fund into two, giving discretionary power to both the Ministry of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Ministry of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Our motion calls for the establishment of a single fund under the Ministry of the Environment. Perhaps those two can start fighting.

While we see the value of government involvement in the resource sector, it is imperative that the government remove discretion on environmental studies from the departments which have the greatest interest in advancing the pace of development, namely, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The amendments proposed in Motion No. 34 are based on the following principles. First, it must be clearly indicated that social as well as environmental considerations are covered by Clause 49 of this bill. Second, environmental and social studies and procedures in relation to Canada lands must be under the jurisdiction of the Minister of the Environment.

Proper environmental and social impact assessment and review procedures must be established. The present federal Environmental Assessment Review Process—EARP—is totally inadequate. The new procedures need not be established under Bill C-48, but the bill should at least contemplate such procedures as an integral part of the decision-making process.

Persons or groups directly affected by oil and gas activities under the act must be funded so as to enable them to participate effectively in the relevant environmental and social studies, public hearings and impact assessment procedures.

Interest holders, that is the oil and gas producers, should bear the cost of funding the environmental studies revolving fund and should fund, at least in part, those persons or groups affected by oil and gas activities in a prescribed region of Canada lands.

Advisory committees comprised of representatives from the oil and gas industry, public interest groups, aboriginal peoples and other groups or persons directly affected by oil and gas activities should be established from the prescribed regions within Canada lands.

Subclause (23)(a) of Clause 49 commits the government to discussions on environmental and social impact procedures. Considering the enormous impact of accelerated resource development in the north, it seems incredible that there is no legislated environmental impact assessment process in place. I advise the Minister of the Environment to get started on that. A comprehensive review of the existing procedures for assessing environmental and social impact is imperative in order to mitigate the negative effects of development in the north.

In the National Energy Program, the minister has stated that "our energy options are wide enough to preclude any sudden rush to energy choices that may compromise our social and environmental goals". His statement was a reaffirmation of the government's responsibility to inhabitants of the north and "the preservation of the peculiar ecological balance that now exists in water, ice and land areas in the Canadian Arctic". The government should demonstrate some consistency between what it says and what it does. Discussion of the environmental and social impact procedures is crucial to sound and responsible planning for northern development.

Subsection (23)(b) of our amendment in Motion No. 34 foresees the drafting of appropriate legislation following discussion of social and environmental impact procedures proposed in (23)(a). A precedent for such provisions is found in Section 2.5 of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. Sincere discussions should lead to enlightened legislation on these matters.

Madam Speaker has suggested that Motion No. 54 is inadmissible. That is really unfortunate because for native northerners some sort of mechanism which would help them to obtain compensation without having to resort to costly court procedures would be most welcome.

Bill C-48 as it is presently drafted limits claims of liability to two years after the damage has occurred. This does not make much sense considering that some damages to the ecology are not immediately evident. The amendment suggested by the hon. member for Skeena in Motion No. 56 is much more reasonable in limiting the time for claims to two years after the damage costs or expenses occurred or became evident to the claimant.

If oil and gas activities in Canada lands results in death or injury or danger to public safety or the environment, we feel that the public has a right to know the facts. A public inquiry in these cases should be mandatory and not left to ministerial discretion.

I would like to conclude by repeating what should have already been made obvious over the past six months. Northerners are not happy with Bill C-48, with perhaps the exception of my hon. friend from Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). They were not consulted on the contents of the bill before it was introduced and they have legitimate fears about accelerated oil and gas activity on their lands. They will shoulder the burden of the serious and inevitable negative consequences of exploration and development and they still have no guarantee that they will have any of the benefits.

Environmental protection is one of the northerner's deepest concerns because when boom-and-bust non-renewable resource development has passed them by and when southern resource developers have abandoned their operations taking the resources and profits with them, northerners will still have to find a way to make a living from a scarred and radically altered land. Therefore, as the bill stands, without any of these amendments it cannot be supported.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to stand today and speak on Bill C-48, particularly Motions Nos. 4, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57 and now No. 34, all dealing with the environment. I put forth the proposition that the window dressing it gives to the protection of the environment is just that.

I would like to refer to the remarks of the minister who spoke just a few moments ago. He said that the government had spent a great deal of time describing and defending the bill. I agree. That is exactly what the government has done, resisting at every opportunity concrete suggestions as to where the bill could be improved.

It is important to put the bill into perspective. To do this, we have to go back a bit in history, actually to the time of confederation in 1867. Under the terms of confederation, Quebec, Ontario, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia formed the confederation of Canada. Each province brought in its resources and the control over those resources.

In 1870 the three prairie provinces were transferred from a trapping and trading preserve of the Hudson's Bay Company. That took in virtually the rest of Canada except British Columbia. Those three prairie provinces became virtually a colony of the new confederation. That was not dissimilar to what is happening today with the ten provinces and it is not unlike the position the Yukon and Northwest Territories find themselves in today.

I would like to zero in on 1870, at which time Manitoba was declared a province. However, it was still de facto a colony because it could not control or own its natural resources. That was a direct result of the Riel rebellion. It does not take much to know exactly what happened at the time of the Riel rebellion.

When development of the resources was taking place, the people within that area had absolutely no say as to how they would be developed or how the environment would be protected. There was no consultation other than window dressing. We have a repeat of that in Bill C-48, particularly as it relates to the amendments under discussion and to the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

I have discussed this a number of times. I have discussed these amendments with my colleague, the member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). There is dissension, there is upset in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, because we are, in fact, repeating history and treating the citizens of the Northwest Territories, be they Inuit, be they treaty Indian, be they Métis, be they white, in exactly the same way as the federal government in pre-1870 treated the province of Manitoba, and again in 1905 in the way Alberta and Saskatchewan were treated. Alberta and Saskatchewan were carved out of the colonial territories and called provinces.

We all know that the Northwest Territories and the Yukon are some day going to want to be classed as provinces, to be brought into this great country of ours as equal partners. Now is the time to start treating them that way. It was all done in 1905. The confederation of provinces at that time in 1905, when Alberta and Saskatchewan were carved out, kept the resources, if you look back to the wording, for the purposes of Canada. That is exactly what is happening today with the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. We are going to develop the resources in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories; we are going to look after all the environmental aspects; we are going to look after the rate of development. We are going to look after all those things for the good of Canada. It is all going to be done from Ottawa.

It is important to put things in perspective, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) said earlier. I did not get all the quote, but I think I have the gist of his argument. He said 140 witnesses appeared before the committee. How many of those 140 did the minister, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources or the bureaucrats in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources actually listen to? Not one, to my knowledge. Where did the submissions go? I do not know. They did not appear in Bill C-48. Where were the native people? Where were the Inuit? Where were the northerners?

An hon. Member: Where were the Tories?

Mr. Shields: Where were the NDP?

An hon. Member: Where were the Tories when we voted to go up there?

Mr. Shields: Why did we not meet in the north on the home ground of the people of the Northwest Territories and Yukon, as was proposed?

An hon. Member: Because you sold out.

Mr. Shields: It was within the minister's power to do exactly that: to allow the committee to travel. The request was made; the request was denied. How do hon. members think the residents of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon feel when there is absolutely no consultation, or at best a very small window-dressing type of consultation?

The minister says that we will develop the north in harmony with the aboriginal people. How does he know it will be in harmony with the aboriginal people if he will not sit down and discuss it on their home grounds? How is it going to affect their way of life? It is going to have a dramatic effect, we all know that.

I live in the town of Fort McMurray. When I first moved there 17 years ago it was a very quiet community of somewhere around 3,000 people. Because of an impending megaproject development, the Great Canadian Oil Sands at that time, the government of the province of Alberta decided in that day to class it as a new town and to administer that new town from the city of Edmonton, from the seat of government in the province of Alberta. This is some 300 miles south of the town of Fort McMurray.

They came in with their experts from Edmonton and said, "We are going to develop your town. We are going to develop the area. We are going to be conscious of the environment. We are going to preserve your natural resources. We are going to make this a model community." We had experts; they were in the form of old-timers who had been born there or had lived there for some 30, 40 or 50 years. They were old-timers like Clare Peden, Walter Hill, Alwyn Tolen, Andy Gaudet, Mac McCormick and Alice Haxton. They were not consulted, or if they were it was window-dressing type consultation. It was not until the people in Fort McMurray decided, in their wisdom, that they were going to control their own destiny, that they were going to be taken off new town status, that they were not going to let the government control the development in the community, that the community actually started to develop in the way that the people in Fort McMurray wanted to develop it.

I relate this only because it is exactly the same situation we are facing here today. Ministerial discretion in Bill C-48, particularly as it relates to the environment, is absolutely scary. The minister says that he is going to collaborate with the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts); he will collaborate with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc). He says, and I quote, "I will not have the authority given to other ministers that rightfully belongs to me". In other words, the minister of energy is going to become a superminister: "I am going to develop the north; I am going to do it in my way; I will consult once in a while with the minister of fisheries; I will talk to the Minister of the Environment. But it is me; I am going to take the responsibility. I will not have the authority given to the other ministers that rightfully belongs to me."

I say to the minister, Mr. Speaker, that the authority does not belong to him. The authority belongs to the people of Canada. The authority belongs to the people in the Northwest Territories. The authority for development belongs to the people in the Yukon. But true to the Liberal way of doing things—"Just watch me!" That is what we keep getting.

I go back to the minister's first statement where he said, "We spent a long time describing and defending this bill, pounding away." Then he has the audacity to come into the House and say that we have been talking about this for quite a long time and we should get it out of the House. We will get it out of the House, Mr. Minister, through you, Mr. Speaker. I suggest we will get it out of the House if he will for once listen to what the amendments say and realize what they do.

We do not wish to see the power that the minister wants for himself placed all in one hand. We would like to see this set up in a way that would be more equitable. We want to see more involvement of the residents of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. The minister said that there is compensation and that we could go through judicial channels, knowing darn well that judicial channels can take five or ten years before things can be settled. Then when the settlement is reached, the man who uses judicial channels finds a good portion of his settlement is eaten up by lawyers' fees. Surely we have enough foresight to see some of the problems that will arise. Surely we should set up a board which will judge fairly.

The minister controls the great giant, PetroCan. If a claim is made against this company, the minister hears his executives—and of course some of the executives of PetroCan are even on his own staff—telling him one thing and then he is supposed to sit there and judge and say, "Yes, you have a claim against PetroCan; we will pay it." Surely it is ludicrous to think that he can sit there and do that. Mind you, he is making himself into a superman. Perhaps he thinks he can do it, but I do not think any man could do it. There are no King Solomons, particularly in the Liberal Party.

The minister referred to the judicial process, and then he went on to say that he will hold blank cheques. He could write a blank cheque to compensate anyone he wants at any time. I say that that has shades of a pork barrel. I clearly see the opportunity of misusing this power, if he has blank cheques and people come in for compensation. I see lots of compensation before elections. Is that truly what the minister wants to be accused of later on? He is putting himself in an intolerable position. I wish the minister would heed the advice we are trying to give him.

The minister went on to say that they would carry on development in an orderly fashion in the north. By whose definition will it be in an orderly fashion? I know, it will be by the minister's definition and by the definition of the bureaucrats in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. I should like to suggest that perhaps there is another definition of orderly development, and that is that of the people living in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. The minister should go and talk with some of the people who have experienced and seen orderly development in places like Cold Lake, Bonnyville and Grand Centre where there have been projects coming in and then not coming in. That is not orderly development. That same thing will happen to the minister and his department. It was not orderly development in Fort McMurray when Great Canadian Oil Sands built their megaproject there. It became considerably more orderly when Syncrude arrived, because the local people had the autonomy to make decisions at that point in time. The local school boards had the autonomy to say that they would build schools. The local hospital boards also had autonomy. If they had to wait, as they did previously with Great Canadian Oil Sands, for a government only three hundred miles away to make the decisions, the experts and the bureaucrats could not make them. I suggest that the experts, the bureaucrats and the minister cannot make decisions for the people in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. I urge the government to give consideration to the proposed amendments.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Veterans' Affairs—Backlog of pension applications; the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes)—Manpower—Request that minister meet with women's outreach groups; the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—VIA Rail—Request that standing committee consider matter of passenger train abandonment.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and Motions Nos. 4 (Mr. Fulton), 34 (Mr. Ittinuar), 51 (Mr. Fulton), 52 (Mr. Ittinuar), 53 (Mr. Ittinuar), 55 (Mr. Lalonde), 56 (Mr. Fulton) and 57 (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the tragedy of Bill C-48 is being demonstrated in the debate today, that is, its effect upon the environment. We have an area which is equivalent to, or possibly larger than, the United States, but certainly larger than most nations in the world, coming under the Canada Oil and Gas Act.

In dealing with offshore, Arctic and northern resources, the federal government had an opportunity to develop a regime in those areas which would have really considered the people in the north and their desires. It would have given them an opportunity to have some say in how development proceeded and when it proceeded. It would have provided an opportunity to co-ordinate through this act co-operation among several federal government departments and provincial governments. They could have dealt with fisheries and oceans matters and the concerns of the fishermen in regard to this act. They could have had ample co-ordination with the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) in some of the areas of responsibility on which he should be speaking. Certainly in regard to northern development we would have expected that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) would have played a large role in drafting legislation which would have a tremendous impact upon northern communities and their resources. But we are dealing with an act which does not involve any co-operation between ministers. We are dealing with a bill which will put massive powers in the hands of one minister who is responsible for no one, except for the massive grab of resources in the north and off our coasts.

We should be aware of why they are in such a desperate rush for the spoils, for the oil and gas in the north and off our coasts. This is the responsibility of the government; it lies right on its head. Because of its economic and energy policies of the past, Canada finds itself in the position of a net importer of energy, dependent upon foreign oil for supplies to eastern Canada in particular. It was a policy of selling out resources in the 1950s, 1960s and early 1970s at very low prices to any buyers, without any idea of the long-term needs of Canadians in the main centres in the south or certainly any consideration of what the massive energy projects at this time would mean in the north and off our coasts. It was a sale of energy at $3 and $4 per barrel for oil to the United States until the 1970s. Then we finally realized that we were becoming short of our own energy supplies and had to go to foreign markets with exorbitant prices. OPEC prices have led us to a situation where many Canadians are lulled into the position of almost accepting any kind of energy development regardless of where it is, the environmental concerns, the fisheries concerns, or the concerns of the northern community. The minister has no concerns. Certainly he is not listening to those concerns or accepting a policy in this bill to reflect the real concerns people have expressed in committee and in the petitions which have been received, some of which were submitted by constituents of mine.

May I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely private bills, notices of motions for papers and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Motions Nos. 22 and 5 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

● (1700)

STUDY OF GRAIN TRANSPORT IN WESTERN CANADA

The House resumed from Thursday, October 16, 1980, consideration of the motion of Mr. Herbert:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest completed study on grain transport in western Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House last debated this motion, the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) had the floor.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat ironic that by tomorrow it will be one year since we engaged in this debate. We spent one hour talking about the motion of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), on October 16, 1980. It seems doubly ironic because the motion asks that a report be made public that was, in effect, already public, but was not available to the House of Commons when all farm leaders and anyone interested in the grain business had easy access to it.

I was about halfway through my comments on the report and the comments that had accompanied it when we were interrupted almost one year ago. You may recall—although I doubt that most hon. members will—that we were discussing various problems in the transportation and movement of grain from country points to the point of unloading into ocean shipping. I had pointed out that most of the recommendations of the report were either well in hand or work was going on toward them. We had gone through improvements to the country elevator system, improvements that needed to be made with regard to co-ordination on the railroad and improvements in allocating grain.

One aspect of the report has not been completely put into place in this regard and that is basically the proposal in the Booz-Allen report to start paper pooling of rapeseed. Paper pooling has gone on with all other western grains for a good number of years. It is simply a matter of making certain that the grain that is picked up from the various elevator companies is allocated to their terminals at the other end in approximately the same ratio as it was unloaded from the elevators in the country. No one loses any grain in this way. There is the advantage of not breaking up trains into 15 or 20 pieces so that a Pioneer elevator car goes to the Pioneer terminal while three other cars go to the Saskpool terminal and seven go to the United Grain Growers terminal. Instead, the whole thing would be dumped in one terminal. They would simply keep track of how much of each grade and variety goes into the terminals and at the end of the week or month they would try to unload the trains in such a way that the amounts of grain shipped would coincide with the amounts of grain received.

That kind of agreement has not yet been worked out for rapeseed. This means extra breaking up of trains and extra time taken at the seaports because companies insist on having their own carloads of grain unloaded at their own terminal instead of working the thing out on paper.

Aside from that, most of the other recommendations of the Booz-Allen report are well in hand. I was somewhat surprised to hear the hon. member who raised the question in the first place—an issue that is now two and a half years old—direct most of his remarks to the Crow rate and the problems he thought it was causing for the railroads. I was surprised, not because I did not expect that kind of comment from the government side, but because the Booz-Allen inquiry was specifically instructed not to deal with that issue and it did not. I was surprised that the bulk of the discussion from the government side seemed to revolve around the Crow rate. It seems to me that the real reason for introducing this motion is not to gain access to a document that is, in effect, public but is, once again, to provide an opportunity to make comments about the Crow rate.

I think the understanding of the Crow rate is not as complete in eastern Canada as it might be. Without going through the history of it, I would like to point out what a present day move away from the Crow rate would do to the agricultural industry in western Canada. The examples I am going to give today will be from Alberta and this is specifically for the purpose of making the best case possible for the people interested in the Crow rate. Many groups in Alberta are now on the side of those who want to do away with the Crow because they think that in some way it will assist the economy of the province and will particularly assist livestock producers in the province.

I should like to quote from a recent issue of the "Wheat Pool 'Budget' " which is published by the Alberta Wheat Pool. An article in the December 1980 issue reads as follows:

Livestock feeders and other analysts sometimes envisage a much larger cattle and hog feeding industry if statutory rates for moving grain across Canada were eliminated. Impressive figures are often quoted reflecting supposed increase in employment, investment and value added benefits if only the Crow or statutory rate could disappear.

In Alberta . . . If the Crow rate was removed and assuming that the number of cattle fed in Alberta would increase, the economic import could be measured in terms of additional barley consumed and additional packing plant activity.

Let us look at some real numbers now. The article goes on:

If the number of cattle fed increased by 10%, about 6.9 million bushels of barley would be required to feed them. The production of 51 million additional pounds of beef at a margin of $20 per hundredweight—

This was written last Christmas and now there is no margin per hundredweight.

—would provide a net benefit of $10.2 million to the feedlot operators of Alberta. If the number of cattle increased by 25%, an extra 17.2 million bushels of barley would be used and a net benefit of $25.4 million realized.

Remember that figure, Mr. Speaker; a net benefit of $25.4 million. The article goes on:

If statutory rates, however, for grain transportation disappeared, it can be assumed that the price at which feeders buy barley in Alberta would decrease by approximately the increase in the freight rate.

This must be placed in the context of the current situation where approximately 114 million bushels of barley per year are exported from Alberta. The article goes on as follows:

The 42 cents increase would apply on all of this except the additional barley utilized by feeders. In the case of 10% increase in cattle production the higher freight rate would apply on roughly 107,500,000 bushels of barley. With a 25% cattle increase, 97,200,000 bushels would be affected. This would represent a monetary loss to Alberta grain producers of $45 million and $41 million respectively.

It must be remembered that this is being compared with a $25 million gain. To this would also be added the net loss in the value of barley consumed which would amount to a loss of income of almost $60 million. So in order to realize a gain of about $25 million in Alberta, which would be the chief beneficiary of doing away with the Crow rate, farmers would need a loss of $190 million to $200 million annually. That would be the benefit of doing away with the Crow rate, Mr. Speaker! I think the recent announcement by some government ministers on October 9—

• (1710)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I want to enter the debate to support the motion made by the hon. member opposite requesting a copy of the latest completed study on grain transport in western Canada. At the outset, I must confess that my interests are not directly related to the matter of western Canadian production of grain and grain movement within that area, but that my interests are of a more general character.

First and foremost is the matter of the flow of information to Members of Parliament, to which we have addressed ourselves on various occasions in this House. We have before us Bill C-43, which provides for access to information of a general character. It is unfortunate that this bill is being held in committee and is not being processed through this House. I can cast blame in the direction of my colleagues to the left in the New Democratic Party who have held that bill in committee day after day, month after month, when the people of Canada and the members of this House could have the benefit and the advantage of the information which ought to flow forward under the bill. This is just one more example: a report which could be requested—indeed, demanded—under proper access to information legislation of the kind proposed in Bill C-43.

Our concern must be broader than the particular information which is now requested to be brought before this House. We must find a general solution to the matter of the free flow of information, not only to members of this House, but to all Canadians who need and desire that kind of information. There should be no difficulty for any member of this House to support the motion, and to support the hon. member in not only requesting but demanding this report and any other information which is necessary to make intelligent assessments not only of grain transportation and production, but a great variety of other matters of interest to members of this House.

The grain industry in Canada is one which suffers from or is exposed to a high degree of government control and regulation. That is another reason for requiring the administrators of those government controls and regulations to make full and complete disclosure of what is happening in terms of the implementation of the regulations and the effect of their administration. I believe that the private sector should be given every encouragement to grow and develop in this country. I believe that it is a part and parcel of the solution to the economic woes of this country to encourage and foster the private sector in its growth and development. But as it happens, for historical reasons the grain industry has been subjected to great government control. We have organizations such as the Canadian Wheat Board, the Canadian Grain Commission and so on, all of which have an element of control over various aspects of the grain industry.

We think of western Canadian grain producers as being affected by this regulation, and we think of eastern millers as being equally affected. But there are a great many other aspects of industrial Canada which are affected by the policies applied to the grain industry in Canada. Of course, my special interest relates to the shipping industry. At first glance, one might not relate the problems of the Canadian shipping industry to this particular subject. But let me tell Your Honour, and let me make it very clear to every member of this House, that the Canadian shipping industry is very much affected by this control and regulation which is applicable to the grain industry.

By way of example, it was stated very recently that there is a threat that the Government of Canada will remove the subsidy payable in respect of the eastward transportation of grain and grain products by rail and shipped to export markets through the port of Halifax, the port of Saint John, and other east coast ports. The removal of this subsidy at this point in time would result in something like a $23 additional expense per tonne which would eventually have to be paid by the primary producers of the grain. This would also destroy a very important branch of the Canadian east coast shipping industry.

From the port of Halifax alone approximately 400,000 metric tons of grain are shipped to European and export markets. In addition, another 200,000 tonnes of flour are shipped through the port of Halifax to Cuba and beyond. I understand that flour has been purchased by the Russian government for delivery in Cuba. There is a program sponsored by the Government of Canada whereby flour is given to Third World and developing nations as a kind of gift from the Government of Canada. Much of that flour moves through the ports of Halifax and Saint John. Over 600,000 tonnes of product are moving through the port of Halifax. Just to give some idea of the magnitude of the tonne movement of grain alone, in 1980 there were 25 ship landings in the port of Halifax. In terms of revenue, even to the National Harbours Board, that is a considerable sum of money when one realizes that the wharfage charges per vessel amount to several thousand dollars. In addition, of course, there is the employment of stevedores and all the spin-offs which result from that kind of port activity.

Therefore, when the Government of Canada is considering a matter like the subsidy paid on eastern movement through east coast ports of grain and grain products, there is a broad backlash to any change in policy. It is one more piece of evidence showing how so many Canadian industries and so many Canadians are affected by government regulatory policies. Therefore, when the government says that it must cut back on government expenditures, it must recognize that the problem has been created by government involvement in the particular field in the first instance. Thus, it is not a simple matter of the saving of taxpayers' dollars. It is a matter of destroying the whole policy which has been put in place for historic reasons and which has existed for many years.

My concern in this matter of acquiring information on the grain industry and in assessing government policies which affect it and the other related industries, such as the Canadian shipping industry, is that we must be very careful and cautious because the economic result of changes in policy could be quite disastrous. If the port of Halifax, for example, were to lose that kind of grain movement of over 400,000 tonnes of grain and over 200,000 tonnes of flour, it would be a major disaster. It would result in a great deal of direct loss of employment and revenue to the port and to the Canadian shipping industry. It is with that in mind that I concern myself with this subject. But it is also of concern in the search for greater freedom in the distribution of information, not only to members of this House, but to Canadians in general.

On the Atlantic coast, and particularly in the province of Nova Scotia, we are experiencing difficult economic times. The port of Halifax this week has suffered the loss of one of the major shippers, Trans Freight Lines, which compounds the problem which has been created by the removal of Dart container lines to the port of Montreal. This is all involved in and related to policies of the Government of Canada in the transportation field.

I hope that members on the other side can exercise more influence over the policies of the Government of Canada; and hon. members on that side should also remind themselves of their great responsibility in this area. They must assure Canadians that government policies and changes in government policies are not brought about for the benefit of one particular area or region of Canada to the detriment of another area or region of Canada. This is why we stand so often in this House and talk about the energy problem, as my friends from Alberta do, while my colleagues from the east coast talk about other government policies. We are concerned that the Government of Canada does not always recognize the adverse effect of its policies on particular areas of Canada. The east coast is a definite example. Western alienation arises from the improper application of and changes in government policies.

I want to take this opportunity to say to the government that this is one more illustration where the policies affecting grain and grain transportation can result in great harm to an area of Canada affected by changes in government policy. What we need is total disclosure of information and the opportunity to assess those government policies so that all can be assured that the policies are fair to all Canadians.

I would like to yield to some of my other colleagues who want to speak on this subject, particularly the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) who, as a western Canadian, I am sure has great concerns, just as we all do.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words on this important subject this afternoon. Grain transportation is very important not only to western Canada but also to all of Canada. It is particularly important now when we have extremely high interest rates, interest rates that many of us feel are not necessary.

One of the reasons we have to suffer high interest rates, we are told, is that we have to attract foreign capital to Canada. It seems to me that rather than borrowing the money and raising interest rates to attract foreign investment, a better way would be to sell the products we are capable of producing in Canada. I would argue very strongly that one of those products is grain. If we can sell grain as well as other such products and if we had the proper kind of transportation system to get those products to export markets, that way would be better than raising interest rates. It would be much healthier for the whole economy. We would be earning dollars. Those dollars would be earned, not borrowed, and would not have to be paid back.

Grain transportation is a subject very important to western Canada, but I think all Canadians would agree that it is a subject of considerable national significance.

The government member who moved this motion is interested in producing a copy of the latest study on grain transportation. I am sure that all of us would be in favour of more government openness as far as government studies are concerned.

It is interesting to note also that we should have this subject introduced under Motion No. 4 today. It is roughly a year ago today since the co-ordinator Dr. Hugh Horner, of the Grain Transportation Authority, resigned. Since that time the government has not seen fit, nor has it had the courage, the inclination or the interest, to appoint a permanent co-ordinator to replace Dr. Horner. In fact, the Grain Transportation Authority has been without a co-ordinator for longer than it had one. That gives hon. members some idea of the importance which this government attaches to grain transportation in western Canada. As I have pointed out, it is vital and important to the whole country.

Although we are taking some time in the House today to talk about this subject, I learned this afternoon that the Department of Transport is in the process of what I think will amount to the dismantling of the Grain Transportation Authority. I learned today that a study on the effectiveness of the Grain Transportation Authority is to take place, under the direction of Mr. Tony Burgess, a member of the Grains Group. I think it is well known that he was, at best, lukewarm to the idea of a Grain Transportation Authority in the first place. It is obvious to those who have followed the success of the Grain Transportation Authority that someone who will look at it in terms of its effectiveness, who was really not in favour of it in the first place, is less likely to give it a fair hearing.

The Grain Transportation Authority has been in existence for about two years. Half of that time the Grain Transportation Authority has not had a permanent co-ordinator. Instead it has had an acting co-ordinator. If a feasibility study is to take place on the effectiveness of the Grain Transportation Authority, at least it could have been operating under a permanent co-ordinator and not an acting co-ordinator, because I think that is an unfair position in which to put the acting co-ordinator. I think also that the timing of doing an assessment on the Grain Transportation Authority is unfair because it has not been given a fair chance to operate. So I say again that I think it is ironic that the member who moved this motion is a government member. We are more concerned about grain transportation on this side because we have more members from western Canada and are the first ones affected.

Our party would be very much in favour of having all studies inquiring into grain transportation made public. We heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announce figures on the embargo payments here two or three months ago. We were told when the embargo payments were made that we would have access to the information which the government used to decide on the level of compensation. We have seen none of those yet. Therefore, in the name of openness and freedom of information, as far as the government is concerned it should make public as many studies as possible. After all, studies are paid for by the taxpayers of Canada, and those Members of Parliament who are concerned with the wellbeing of our constituents should have access to that information to provide it to our constituents.

There are many things I could say on this matter. Grain transportation is a topic worth several days of debate in this House. The Booz-Allen report, which is not mentioned in the motion is, I gather, what the hon. member is referring to when he refers to the "latest study". It is some two or three years old now. Two Snavely reports have been issued as well as several other reports done internally on grain transportation. On several occasions we have tried to get copies of some of the work done by the Grains Group within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and also Transport to some extent. We have been unsuccessful there. If the hon. member opposite who moved the motion could prevail on some of his colleagues on the government benches to see fit to make more than the Booz-Allen report public, we would all appreciate it and it would be to the betterment of grain transportation in western Canada.

I believe it was the member who moved the motion who spent a good deal of time on the Crow rate. Last summer quite a bit of agreement on a solution to the problems associated with the Crow rate came to pass. The Crow rate is a very complicated and touchy subject as far as many westerners are concerned, but we did see groups who were affected by the Crow in western Canada having come virtually to a consensus. They had agreed on most of the major stumbling blocks, but the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stepped in and said that unless there was unanimous agreement his government was not prepared to move on a solution to the Crow rate.

At that time it was pointed out to the Prime Minister, and I think it needs to be said again, that it was fine for the Prime Minister to be unilateral as far as the Constitution was concerned, but when it came time to deal with a practical matter, a matter affecting western Canadians' livelihood as well as our ability to feed and clothe our families, immediately we have to be unanimous. I think that was a very sad situation for the Canadian way of doing things which is by consensus. Again I have to find a certain amount of irony in this, although I fully support the intent of the motion as far as making information more freely available, which has been paid for, and gathered by the government.

I know time is getting short. I do not know if any government members wish to speak, but I know that my colleague from Red Deer (Mr. Towers) has some words to say. I would like to yield whatever time is remaining to him if that is possible.

• (1730)

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the debate initiated by my colleague for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) is extremely important in view of the fact that it concerns transportation in Canada. As it is directly related to the issue of grain, we are dealing with the two elements which have brought about relatively fast development in this country, both on a geographic and an economic level, and this to the advantage of all areas of the country since both eastern and western Canada benefit greatly from grain transport. What I found somewhat surprising was the fact that the papers which our colleague requested for examination have already been made public, which means that there was no government restriction to direct access to this information. In any event, I would like to emphasize in this regard that the Department of Transport has done a lot in the last ten years to modernize the Canadian railway system. I was listening earlier to my colleague opposite, who is also a member of the transport committee, and we were able last year to visit various places in Canada and many associations, where several groups made suggestions and comments about the areas where the Canadian government could be much closer to the people with a view to upgrading existing equipment.

I repeat that not only does western Canada benefit from grain transport and not only does central Canada receive all the benefits of agriculture and western grain, but that the east also benefits from it. In this regard, in a very recent report, Harbours Board Canada showed that the quantity of grain shipped from Vancouver has been substantial in the last ten years because of the Canadian railroad network, and that moreover, with the Ridley Island project north of Vancouver, we shall gain one of our most important terminals for grain shipments by 1985. It is therefore quite obvious that the matter raised by my colleague for Vaudreuil affects not only western Canadians and transport itself, but also the economy as a whole. I know that in the last three years, the Canadian government has decided to invest $70 million a year up to a maximum of $700 million to modernize the railway network of Canada. On top of that, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has announced that during the next three years, total expenditures to modernize Canadian railroad equipment will be indexed by 10 per cent, which amounts to $40 million more for the next three years. Three times $70 million give $210 million, plus $40 million, which means $250 million. I therefore believe that the government has demonstrated its will to modernize Canadian railroads. However, in my opinion, the minister cannot be accused of not having requested information from—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to our Standing Orders, the time allotted to the motion of the hon. member for Vaudreuil has expired.

[English]

According to Standing Order 48, a minister of the Crown has the right to a five-minute reply at this point. I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bockstael) seeking to be recognized. The unanimous consent of the House for him to be recognized in place of the minister would be required. Is there consent?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, does the mover of the motion not have the floor for the first five minutes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 48(2) is very specific. It states:

> When debate on a motion for the production of papers, under the order "Notices of Motions (Papers)", has taken place for a total time of one hour and thirty minutes, Mr. Speaker shall at that point interrupt the debate, whereupon a minister of the Crown, whether or not such minister has already spoken, may speak for not more than five minutes, following which the mover of the motion may close the debate by speaking for not more than five minutes.

Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, since the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board is not a member of this House it has been one of the real problems that we have had to come to grips with in trying to get whatever bits of information we can regarding the movement of grain in western Canada. I question the right of another minister to speak to this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The order of the House is quite clear. Any minister of the Crown has the right to speak for five minutes at this point. The parliamentary secretary wishes to be recognized. Is there unanimous consent to recognizing the parliamentary secretary?

Mr. Nielsen: We on this side will provide that unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank hon. members opposite for giving me this opportunity to reply on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). Throughout this debate on a private member's motion there was reference made to the Hall commission report, the Snavely report, and the Booz-Allen report. Many of these reports are highly technical and voluminous. They have been and are still available to anyone requesting them.

The department is prepared to provide a staff person to help give briefing details on the contents of these reports to any hon. members if it would be helpful. The reports have been available for some time. The Booz-Allen report is the latest; it was published in July 1979. Unfortunately, this report was not printed in both official languages. If it is required, the department is prepared to undertake the production of a summary translation of the Booz-Allen report for any hon. member requiring it in the French language.

We want to congratulate the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for having raised this question. Grain transportation is not only a western issue. Central and eastern Canada have a deep vested interest in the health of the grain industry. During the winter months when the Seaway is frozen, an ambitious rail shipping program is undertaken. Grain moves by rail from Thunder Bay to Montreal, Quebec, Saint John and Halifax. Each port has grain elevators and benefits from this transshipment. It is therefore important to note that the hon. member for Vaudreuil has rendered this House a great service in drawing to our attention the fact that these reports should be made available to all hon. members.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I feel I should make a few remarks at this time to explain, first of all, why I would put such a motion on the Order Paper. As I said in my remarks in October of last year, I noted in the spring of last year that the subsidy on the Crowsnest Pass rates between 1974 and 1977 had increased by some 70 per cent. The variable costs of Canadian National during the same period increased by some 40 per cent, and the variable costs of Canadian Pacific in that same three-year period increased by 62 per cent.

Figures in my possession—I am speaking of the spring of 1980 since the response to the motion is dated April, 1980—show that we could be involved in an expenditure to the consumers, whether it be through taxes or a cost incurred by the two railways, in the order of $1 billion. This is not an objection to the spending of those moneys. I look upon the benefits which are obtained from such subsidies as being a national benefit.

I felt, however, that there is insufficient knowledge, particularly in my part of the country, of the amount that is contributed to help the western farmer. I felt it would be a good thing therefore that any information available to the government should be made public. I therefore asked for an order of the House. I think it important that I read the motion again. It reads:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest completed study on grain transport in western Canada.

I had no knowledge at that particular time of what the latest study was. It turned out to be the Booz-Allen study which has been made public and was available to the public.

I wish to take the minute remaining to me to talk about our system because it is relevant. A motion is put on the Order Paper in order to ensure that the public at large is not only made aware of a document but has access to it. When a document is tabled, any member of the public has access to that document.

• (1740)

When the response is made in this House, one cannot at that time have any knowledge of what is in the document and, for that matter, one is in the rather embarrassing position of having to request a transfer for debate, because, of course, there has to be an instant response.

Having seen the document, the Booz-Allen report, which was sent to my office, and having referred to it in my remarks on October 16 of 1980, it is abundantly apparent to me that not only has the document been made public but also that it has had a considerable degree of circulation in the public domain. However, I reiterate that the motion referred to the latest study and, until the document was seen, one could not tell what the latest study was.

I should raise one other point. When a document is tabled, presumably one can make some request that it be sent to the appropriate committee for study. I do believe that is important and can only be done after the document has been tabled in the fashion described. Under the circumstances I feel that perhaps there should be a change in our procedures. Perhaps a member should be given at least 24 hours to make the decision on whether a motion should be transferred for debate.

Under the circumstances it would appear to be a futile exercise to go through the procedure of voting on whether we want to have a document which is already tabled and in general circulation. I therefore request the unanimous agreement of this House to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has requested unanimous consent to withdraw his motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Ordinarily, Mr. Speaker, it would be my custom to accept the hon. member's assessment that he has seen a copy of the report which he says has been made available to him. I do not know whether that is the latest report of the study he has requested. I have not seen the Booz-Allen report, and there are many hon. members on this side who are in the same position; plus the fact that the motion is in keeping with the government's own stated intention to become freer with information.

I would therefore like to see the report, and I withhold that unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

It being past six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At 6.21 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and Motions Nos. 4 (Mr. Fulton), 34 (Mr. Ittinuar), 51 (Mr. Fulton), 52 (Mr. Ittinuar), 53 (Mr. Ittinuar), 55 (Mr. Lalonde), 56 (Mr. Fulton), and 57 (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to continue the comments I started before the dinner hour. At that time I was discussing one of the reasons for the big rush into northern and offshore energy resources. That was basically the sellout of our resources in the 1960s and early 1970s to anybody who would buy them. Now we are in the position where we must, in all haste, it seems, despite environmental concerns, rush into northern and offshore oil drilling, exploration and exploitation.

Much has been said about the silence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). I should like to speak about the matter of fisheries now and the silence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) which is equal to that of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I would point out that Canada is currently the world's leading fish exporter, selling about $1 billion worth of fish abroad in 1980.

We have rich fishing grounds off both our eastern and western coasts. Landings by east coast fishermen in 1980 were valued at $491 million; landings off the west coast were valued at $174 million. In all, over 76,000 full and part-time fishermen depend on fishing for all or part of their income, as do another 25,000 fish plant workers. The Canadian Labour Council, in its brief to the national resources committee estimated that for every three jobs created in the fishing industry, two more are created elsewhere, and in processing, two jobs are created for each direct processing job.

In my own province of British Columbia, and on the east coast as well, sports fishing is also part of the way of life. It provides recreation as well as being a revenue source through tourism. As well, the fishery is one of the main supports of the traditional way of life of many coastal native Indian communities. Without the fishery, which has been a part of their lives for many thousands of years, native people in my own riding of Nanaimo-Alberni and elsewhere on Canada's coasts would lose a crucial source of food and employment.

It is simply unbelievable that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has not sought greater protection for the many Canadians who need the fishery—protection from possible damage to the marine environment due to the adverse effects of oil spills, well blowouts and other damage. It is unbelievable as well that no provisions are made for adequate compensation in the event of a disasterous spill or blowout. This is particularly hard to believe in light of the knowledge we have gained in recent years about the awful consequences of such environmental emergencies.

In February, 1970, for example, the tanker Arrow sank at Chedabucto Bay near Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia. About 190 miles of shoreline were contaminated with oil and countless fish and shore birds were killed. It cost Canada $3 million to clean up the mess even though much of the shoreline could not be restored.

In 1978 off the coast of Brittany, the Amoco Cadiz went aground. The captain of this Liberian freighter was accused of "gross dereliction" which could not and should not be excused. This did not help the French fishermen, oystermen or lobster farmers whose livelihood was destroyed by the 64 million gallons of oil that were dumped over the 100 miles of ruined shoreline. Clean-up costs for this, the largest oil spill in history, were estimated at $600 million. Again, in March of 1979, in Cabot Strait the British oil carrier, Kurdistan, hit an iceberg, split in half, and dumped its cargo of about 29,000 tonnes of bunker oil. This spill cost $7 million to clean up. But the greatest, largest marine oil disaster that we have ever seen was not an oil spill at all; it was a well blowout in the Gulf of Mexico, the so-called Ixtoc blowout. In June of 1979, an offshore oil well owned by the Mexican Oil Corporation Pemex started spewing oil uncontrollably into the Gulf of Mexico; by the time it was capped ten months later it had spilled 140 million gallons of crude oil, some onto the coast of Texas and Louisiana. The cost of this clean-up was close to $1 billion by the time the well was capped in March of 1980. The blowout meant losses for resort owners, for Gulf shrimp fishermen and for Pemex itself.

In May of this year, a spokesman for Dome Petroleum admitted in Resolute Bay that his firm would not be able to control or clean up an oil spill in the Beaufort Sea should such a disaster take place. Yet Bill C-48 sets the stage for full speed and full-scale development of the Beaufort and other northern areas.

Again we can say that ministers entrusted with the protection of the north and its people have failed to take care of the areas entrusted to them. The Inuit people of Baffin Island say that this amounts to little more than "cultural genocide"; their spokesman pointed out to Dome that if a spill in the sunny, warm and ice-free Gulf of Mexico could not be prevented or controlled, then there is little hope of preventing one in the often dark, cold and icy Arctic.

We should not lose sight of the concerns that have been expressed by the Ministry of the Environment concerning the chronic, creeping effluent generated by offshore drilling and exploration activities. The ministry is so concerned, in fact, that in a report issued in 1978, it says that "the long-term degradation of the world's continental shelves may not be due to catastrophic spills. It may be due to the gradual deposition of small amounts of pollutants over time." These pollutants—drill cuttings and fluids, solid industrial and domestic wastes, industrial fluid wastes and oily production water and the onshore facilities and pipelines associated with offshore works are the ones identified—are capable of devastating salt marshes, fish spawning grounds, shellfish areas and the estuaries and channels that fish need to feed and spawn in.

At the same time, the report says that most of the problems are not technical but rather "traceable to specific weaknesses in offshore drilling and production procedures and management systems." In other words, we should not blame the tools or equipment, but rather the care and consideration for the environment with which they are used. The report goes on to say that for the government, "the only adequate response is to require offshore operators to meet high standards of housekeeping and water disposal."

This bill, as it has been presented to the House, does not set such high standards. It does not, for example, establish clearly enough the definition of an oil spill; for this reason the NDP has asked for changes that would clearly state that an oil spill should be defined as any amount of 100 litres or more of oil or any other substances foreign to the environment. We should be establishing the sort of high standards of housekeeping—

Mr. Lalonde: It is a low standard.

Mr. Miller: —and water disposal sought in the environment minister's own report.

Mr. Lalonde: We cover it, from one drop on.

Mr. Miller: Oh, the minister assures us now that it is his intention to cover oil from one drop on. It was one metre on—

Mr. Lalonde: Anything is an oil spill, anything.

Mr. Miller: Well, that's quite reassuring, but—

Mr. Lalonde: Why only 100 litres?

Mr. Miller: —it really does not point that out in the bill, as we interpret it. We cannot take the assurance of the minister that it will cover spills any less than—

Mr. Fulton: We know what his guarantees are like: ironclad.

Mr. Miller: Eighteen cents to the gallon. We should also cut down our haste in allowing offshore oil drilling and exploration.

Mr. Lalonde: You want to lower the levels.

Mr. Miller: We have had a moratorium on petroleum development off the west coast of B.C. for ten years. Bill C-48 would allow the lifting of this moratorium. At least I appreciate the minister's finally listening. I do not know if he is hearing, but he is listening.

Mr. Lalonde: You bet.

Mr. Miller: Bill C-48 would allow the lifting of this moratorium. It would allow the foreign-owned petroleum companies which own leases on the west coast to go ahead with drilling as soon as possible. In other words, they will be able to drill before we are assured they will adhere to the kind of production procedures and management systems that the environment ministry's report of two years ago called for.

Mr. Lalonde: Nonsense.

Mr. Miller: In fact, the only thing that currently stop Chevron Standard Limited and other large lease holders off the B.C. coast from going ahead with drilling as soon as this bill is passed is a jurisdictional dispute between the federal government and the province of British Columbia.

Mr. Lalonde: Nonsense.

Mr. Miller: Surely this is not enough to assure commercial, sports and native fishermen that they will be able to look forward to their fishery ten, 20 or 25 years in the future.

So we must add the name of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) to the list of those whose silence has been so noticeable during the time the government has pushed this bill through Parliament. We must add his name because the provisions for protection of the environment in the case of a spill or a blowout are so weak. So here we have the ministers who are entrusted with protecting native people, the northern environment, the fisheries and oceans of Canada and the coastal environment; we have them accepting legislation that will put these people and these common trusts in severe jeopardy; we have them silently accepting legislation, in her words, for which others had felt some responsibility until now. These ministers have hardly taken the initiatives they should have taken to make sure that their responsibilities were carried out under this bill. The energy minister has told the national resources committee that these ministers will get their chance to set up resources management committees after the bill is passed; but we do not see it here in the legislation, and we cannot take the assurance of the minister into consideration under the conditions in this bill. Let us see it, and then we will believe it. The minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) has been called a silent partner to Bill C-48. Certainly, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans can also be classified as a silent minister.

An hon. Member: Silent, I don't know about a partner.

Mr. Miller: Well, he does not seem to be in partnership under the bill anyway.

We should clearly establish in this legislation the responsibility of firms that undertake work in our north or off our coasts. Such firms must be made accountable for any environmental damage or economic loss to fishermen, shellfish harvesters, residents, other companies and others affected by the bill.

This bill is also weak in the provision it makes for inquiries into oil spills and other mishaps. In fact, as currently worded, the bill puts it at the discretion of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) whether an inquiry into an accident will be held, and it says nothing at all about public inquiries. We would like to see it clearly stated that an inquiry must be held and that it must be conducted in public. This is the intent of Motion No. 57, which has been moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

These amendments, if adopted, would certainly improve the quality of Bill C-48 as a piece of legislation; but their adoption would not, I suggest, end the fears of fishermen, and other coastal Canadians who depend on the oceans and coastal waters of the nation to gain their living. It would not reassure the resort owners. It would not reassure the native hunters and fishermen who believe so strongly in the land and in their communities. The reason it would not reassure them is that they have no faith in the ministers of the government opposite who have done so little to live up to their mandates to protect the environment and the people. This is why the members of my party have worked so hard in their constituencies, in the committee on natural resources and in the House to get the government to reconsider Bill C-48, to slow down its general rush through the House in its desire to get at Canada's offshore natural resources.

Mr. Lalonde: Eight months in the House.

Mr. Miller: Eight months in the House, and we still have a poor bill, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Lalonde: Some rush.

Mr. Miller: We should be taking steps to assure Canadians who will be affected by this legislation that they will not have to pay the costs of social upheaval and environmental damage without seeing any of the benefits that these developments will provide. When we have fully taken care of the concerns of those who justly fear for their homes and their environment and their livelihood; when we have made sure that the benefits will go to Canadian taxpayers, workers and suppliers; when we have put proper environmental safeguards into effect, then we should proceed with the development of our resources in the full knowledge that we are not going to sacrifice more than we gain in the process.

• (2020)

In conclusion let me say that this rush to northern and offshore resources is reminiscent of the rush to exploit the conventional oil reserves in Alberta and Saskatchewan and to sell them off at low prices. You are rushing into an area without considering the kind of input which the people in the north and those dependent on our offshore resources, such as fishing, have asked the government to consider.

This bill could stand many amendments. We in this party are disappointed that those environmental concerns expressed to the government in committee have not been addressed in any way in this bill.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure this evening to speak on Bill C-48, and the amendments that are attached thereto, Nos. 4, 34, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56 and 57. I understand that Motion No. 54 is still under consideration. I hope that the government will attempt to come to grips with Motion No. 54 in the near future because I believe it is vital to this bill and to the wellbeing of the country as a whole.

First, my concern about the bill is primarily from an environmental standpoint. I think it is imperative we recognize that although it is necessary to press on to energy self-sufficiency in Canada, environmental concerns and the concerns of the little people of this country are taken into consideration, specifically, the fishermen who are involved with this particular exploration. We cannot afford to eliminate the difficulties which this bill might impose on them. We cannot afford to eliminate those difficulties from our thoughts in our mad rush to develop new energies of which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is fully aware. They are short lived at best in the total concept of energy necessities over the period of the next few decades.

In the opinion of many Canadians, as well as that of a good many members of this House of Commons, this bill in all of its ramifications leaves a great deal to be desired. What it attempts to do, unfortunately for the people of this nation, is to set up a mega-ministry. This was aptly pointed out by the hon. member who spoke previously, but it will not work in the best interest of Canadians who have to continue to make their livelihood and to feed their families.

In the minister's wisdom and in the judgment of the bureaucrats who are anxious in their own way to appease his insatiable appetite, what we are faced with is a situation in which the minister has provided himself with more and more power. The agreement with which we are faced between the various ministries of the government—and it would be interesting to know the details behind it—is that the minister of energy will now take on the robe and cloak of spokesman, critic and absolute authority for the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) under whose jurisdiction, I believe, this bill should fall; as well as that of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc). Speaking of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, I am shocked that he is not in the House this evening and that he has not shown sufficient interest to be here when a subject of such vital concern to his department is before the House and will be before the House for the next while. Also, it is just as disconcerting that, for some reason or another, the Minister of the Environment, who should be just as interested, is not here this evening.

Mr. Lalonde: He was here this afternoon.

Mr. Corbett: Yes, he was here this afternoon, but after all it is his job, and his department and his salary are being financed by the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Lalonde: He is working now.

Mr. Corbett: It is his responsibility to be here and to appreciate the concerns of other Canadians because there are more than two Canadians in this House of Commons and in this country besides the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of the Environment. But apparently the minister has been given the task by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to attend to a more important function, and that is the matter of the Constitution. Why has the minister not been given the opportunity to voice those concerns that must be his as the Minister of the Environment, or does he care? I suggest that the entire portfolio of the Minister of the Environment is nothing more than a paper tiger. Interestingly enough, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources took exception a few moments ago to my remark that the Minister of the Environment should be interested in environmental concerns. But I see that that was passed by, as most other things are, by this government.

The amendments and the bill call for the establishment of two funds. It is very difficult to determine what these two funds intend to establish and do. Apparently $50 million or $100 million will be set aside. Perhaps the minister would like to give us his wisdom and tell us exactly how much the amount will be when he responds to the various positions that have been put forth in this connection. However, there are to be at least two funds set up, perhaps jointly funded, for the study of environmental impacts as well as for social studies. The term social studies is a very nebulous term, but it has to do with the impact the bill will have, primarily with regard to the Arctic region of Canada, which comprises some 40 per cent of the land mass.

I would suggest that this government has probably spent more money on studies and on the studious pursuit of the realities in Canada than any other government in the history of confederation. Despite the amount of money they spend on their education and their efforts to gain so-called knowledge for the benefit of their members, it is absolutely astounding that members opposite should portray themselves as such a studious group. They have to be the most inept government in the history of even their own party.

We have seen the definition in this bill of an environmental study. Again, it is nebulous. We have seen their definition of social study exercise but we have seen no reference to what they plan to do in the event that people in this country end up suffering. That is the history of that government.

Just take a look at our current situation. I could take up not only my allotted time but a full month or even a year to talk about the government's callousness toward things like VIA Rail, mortgage rates, etc.

I would like now to turn my attention to energy. What will happen in this country if there is an oil spill, gas leak or some other catastrophic event? What they are doing is preparing themselves only for known situations.

Mr. Speaker, in the short period of time we are discussing, energy exploration is relatively new. The fact is it is minor oil spills, the mystery spills, as they are called, that are the most devastating to the people of this nation. That is the issue we should be addressing ourselves to. It is the garbage which is deposited into the sea, into our environment, which we must concern ourselves with.

I suggest that my colleagues and most of the people in this nation who make their living from the sea agree that there is very little attention paid to the mystery spills and garbage being dumped into the sea. The government has said that fishermen and other people who are adversely affected by these oil spills will be compensated in some manner through a fund yet to be determined. But no provision has yet been made. There is no particular direction given to those affected as to how they might make application to this never-never fund which is not even in existence.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if this government is truly interested in the best interests of Canadians and in Canada, as it would have us believe, it would set up a specific fund with a specified amount of money—certainly close to the amount it is prepared to spend on environmental studies—for the compensation of people whose daily lives could be adversely affected.

Mr. Speaker, it has been stated by knowledgeable people that a major oil spill in an environment which is so ecologically critical would have a tremendously adverse effect. I refer, of course, to an accident involving a tanker or a well site blowout. This government makes no provision for any compensation for people living in areas affected by such a situation.

I would like to take this opportunity to point out a matter about which the government is already totally aware. This is the proposal for an oil refinery to be erected in the State of Maine to which the province of New Brunswick has taken exception, to which I have taken exception, and to which apparently the government has taken exception. The government has stated it is prepared to pass regulations to make sure that the oil refinery in the State of Maine is not fed.

The time has come for the government to realize that it is the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) who should have a high profile in any decisions which are made that could adversely affect fisheries or any aspect of life in Canada. In order to do that, the government will have to be firm and will have to tell people in other jurisdictions that they will not be allowed to infringe upon the environment and the way of life we enjoy as Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I have a report before me which is put out by the Department of Fisheries and by Environment Canada which is an environmental risk index for the siting of deep water oil ports. I would like to quote from that report. It says:

> It is possible to build a deep water oil terminal wharf off Eastport with depths alongside in the range from 80 to 90 feet. However, entrance to such a facility is via Head Harbour Passage, which is noted for its strong tidal streams, tide rips, and whirlpools. Its narrowest point is 1,800 feet wide between the coast of Campobello Island and a 27-foot shoal. Tidal streams in this passage sometimes attain a rate of nearly five knots. At the intersection of Head Harbour Passage with Western Passage, tide rips and whirlpools are formed at certain stages of the tide.
> These strong tidal streams in the narrow entrance to Eastport would make it extremely difficult, and at times impossible, to manoeuvre and berth VLCC's in this area. In fog and reduced visibility, the difficulties of navigating such vessels would be further compounded.

This has been brought to the attention of the government on many occasions. The establishment of this company in Eastport, Maine, would result in the emission of half a ton of sulphur dioxide and a ton of the oxides of nitrogen and 300 pounds of particular matter into the air every hour of the day, 365 days of the year. What has been the government's response to this proposal? This response has been forthcoming from this government since 1974. It is prepared to pass a regulation, if necessary, to prohibit the passage of super tanker traffic through Head Harbour passage.

Let me bring hon. members up to date on what has transpired. The Environmental Protection Agency has been ordered to grant a permit to the Pittston people which would allow them to discharge waste water into the Bay of Fundy region. There is a referendum going on today in the town of Eastport as to whether the residents of that community want the Pittston group, which has one of the worst histories of protection of the environment on the entire North American continent. Today those people are being asked to consent to the Pittston group's moving into Eastport. The time has come for the government to act. If the government is prepared to pass a regulation, let the government pass it now. Let the government deal with matters of environmental concern. Let hon. members opposite no longer pay lip service to the fact that the environment of our Canadian children and grandchildren must be protected in the future.

This government has made no move whatsoever in that direction, and it will be a sad day indeed if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is allowed to speak for the absent Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) and for the Minister of the Environment, absent this evening, both of whom should be heard. It will be a shame, and a shame on the government if it allows that to happen! These ministers, who should know and who should have a voice respecting where environmental funds are being expended, should be involved in the decision-making process. If they are not being denied that right, then certainly the citizens of Canada, the people who make their living from the sea and the people who have to feed their families are being denied that right of being involved through their spokesmen who are supposed to represent their particular interests in this House of Commons.

I urge hon. members present not to allow that to happen. It is the duty of every one of us who represents people who have to feed families in these days of dire plight to ensure that those people are ably and aptly represented.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, to follow up on the comments of the previous speaker, I believe that it is of course important to put things back in their context. He regretted the absence of the Minister of Environment (Mr. Roberts), and at the same time tried to separate the protection offered in Bill C-48 from all other legislation aimed at protecting the environment in the Arctic and elsewhere in Canada.

Of course, the pace of northern development will accelerate, probably in spite of the gloomy prospects by our colleagues opposite and especially their former energy critic, who was under the impression that this bill would prevent his friends, the companies, from investing in the north. I do not think that the motions now before us bring any major surprises. I see some members of the New Democratic Party are here tonight to defend them, and I have but one regret, and that is that at the time of the vote in the committee, they were not even there to move these amendments. This is perhaps a belated reaction. I remember that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was in a great hurry that day. He was not there to introduce his amendments, when the committee could have disposed of them one way or the other. However, the bill provides these two funds for the environment. A while ago, I heard someone say that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) had been completely ignored in this matter, and as we all know, this minister will be responsible for the environment fund north of the 60th parallel. We must also remember that all the other provisions included in the EARP and other environmental provisions still apply.

Let us look at the amendments proposed. Our colleague from the north came back earlier to the arguments which we heard during one of our trips over there, and especially with regard to the definition of a spill. I believe that he has misunderstood or else that he is becoming exclusive in his wish to overspecify, because if he excludes the general terms of the section as presently drafted and limits application of this provision to spills of over 100 litres, the bill will not protect us against smaller spills, and I do not see any advantage in having such a restrictive definition. In fact it might be a mistake, or perhaps not enough lawyers on the other side have examined this motion, but it would be completely useless to include this restriction. Frankly, I believe that it would be harmful and would prevent any control over the smaller spills that many people fear.

With Motion No. 51, even authorized spills would come within the purview of the act. Obviously, this amendment would create a legal contradiction since illegal authorized spills would be included. I fail to understand how something which is authorized can be illegal at the same time. This is of course a problem of semantics, and in any case to dispel the fears of hon. members opposite Section 19.2(1) will provide for a spill, whether authorized or not, which occurs offshore.

As for Motion No. 55—

[English]

It would make the person from whose work the spill resulted liable for actual loss or damage suffered by any person as a result of any such spill. He would be held responsible for what he has done, and I do not see why we need that new amendment.

Motion No. 52 provides for the reporting of authorized spills to the chief conservation officer and for the giving of notice of any such spill to the aboriginal groups affected. Such provisions could be made and would be more appropriate in regulations made in respect of authorized spills as provided for in subclause 19(4).

Mr. Waddell: Yes, but that will never be done.

Mr. Lapierre: You never know. We should be hopeful. It would be hard to put that in the bill and oblige the minister to give notice. Notice could be given to whomever is concerned, but we should not put it precisely in the bill. I think the place for that is in the regulations, and when the regulations are out and printed, I am sure hon. members will be able to check on them. If you are not satisfied, I am sure you will voice your dissatisfaction.

• (2050)

Mr. Blaikie: We will not be able to debate them.

Mr. Lapierre: I am sure the bill will not be here forever.

Mr. Blaikie: Neither will you.

Mr. Lapierre: Maybe you are looking for that.

Mr. Blaikie: It is never forever when there is closure.

Mr. Lapierre: The motion would delete from subclause 19.2(1) the liability of a person responsible for a spill or debris for the cost and expenses reasonably incurred by the Government of Canada in acting to deal with such a spill or debris. In place of that provision, the motion would substitute a broad provision for liability, economic loss or damage resulting from spills or debris including loss of hunting, fishing and gathering opportunities of aboriginal peoples.

The provision was suggested in committee as well and, in substance, was adopted in an amendment to Clause 19, subclause 19(3). I do not have to repeat it. The version was adopted on the basis that with the addition to the existing provision on "actual loss or damage", of "loss of income and loss of hunting and gathering opportunities of aboriginal peoples," all of the essentials of the proposal would be included. The one notable exception that may be raised relates to the collective loss in certain circumstances, recognizing the right to bring class actions.

I do not think we are in a position to authorize that type of class action. Everyone realizes how the provinces are working on class actions. In Quebec, for example, there are bills with regard to that. I am sure the provinces will be given the opportunity to bring class actions.

As a result of the original wording in subsections (a) and (b), in cases where damage occurred in excess of the strict liability limits, there could be no additional recovery by an injured party from the negligent operator, only from any other persons who contributed to the damage. Thus, where there was negligence, and no contribution to that negligence from any other party, the injured party would be precluded from recovery above the strict liability limits. This, however, is not the intention; the new wording provides that where there is negligence, there may be recovery from any person responsible. This would include the negligent operator, subject to the strict liability provisions in subparagraph (a). Any amounts paid to the injured party as a result of subparagraph (a) would be deductible from the amount recovered on the basis of negligence, under paragraph (b) as a matter of common law.

[Translation]

Finally, as far as Motion No. 56 is concerned—

[English]

The motion would amend the limitation provision in respect of claims under Clause 19.2. The period now provided is two years from the date on which, for example, the damage resulting from the spill occurred, but not later than six years from that date. The proposed amendment would extend the first period to the extent that the date on which the damage occurred may, in some circumstances, not be coincidental with the date on which the damage became evident.

The sense of the amendment is not unreasonable, but when the vote comes, the government will have to reflect on it.

Motion No. 57 would amend clause 19.4(1) so that the minister would be required to establish a public inquiry in every circumstance where a death, injury or danger to public safety or the environment resulted from a spill or debris or an accident related to any activity to which the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act applies.

The bill now gives the minister the discretionary authority to establish an inquiry under the Inquiries Act in circumstances such as those described above. Amending a clause in the manner proposed would unnecessarily restrict the minister's discretion. There may well be circumstances where no inquiry need be held. The proposed amendment would nevertheless require the minister to hold a hearing in every instance, and leave him open to action if he failed to do so. Indeed in that sense the amendment goes against the normal drafting convention—a lot of people like conventions these days—in that, for the above reason, such obligations are not normally placed on a minister in such circumstances.

In so far as the nature of the hearing is concerned, whether or not it is public, again the proposed amendment would unnecessarily restrict the minister's discretion. There may well be circumstances, for example, where the nature of the inquiry to be made dictates that the hearing should be held in private in order to obtain the necessary information, or that the nature of the inquiry is such that a public hearing would be unnecessarily burdensome. Conversely, should it be appropriate, there is no reason why the minister cannot direct a public hearing under the provisions of the bill.

The motion is, in addition, somewhat inconsistent internally in that it provides that the minister must hold a hearing. However, he is not obliged to appoint qualified persons to conduct that inquiry, but may do so.

[Translation]

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the proposals we are debating tonight have of course been discussed at length in committee. The pros and cons have been weighed. Still I must congratulate all my colleagues of the New Democratic Party who have paid particular attention to the whole environmental question. I am convinced that, had they had the thoughfulness and patience to wait for the votes, these amendments could have been submitted directly to the committee and we probably would have been able to negotiate some of them. I know that my colleague from Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) has done a lot of work. Indeed he is the author of several amendments in this bill and it would have been appreciated if other members had worked along that same line and with the same openness of mind.

I am convinced that the members of the Progressive Conservative Party did not have quite the same interests and perhaps not the same sensitivity. This bill may be far from perfect, of course, but I suggest that if there are abuses or if the fund turned out to be unnecessary or if there were other circumstances the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) would not hesitate to act, probably on the recommendation of his colleague the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) or of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). Earlier someone was concerned by his absence in the House this evening. Well, we have been given the formal commitment that the Minister of the Environment would be consulted and party to all environmental problems which might crop up in the development of the Arctic. The minister's name does not appear in Bill C-48 but I think that is much more for reasons of an administrative nature than for reasons of environmental conscience.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that with this bill we will not witness another performance such as we saw in committee where hours and hours were wasted in mini-filibusters. Not only will Canadians benefit from the development of those resources but so will those who are waiting to invest and develop those regions of the country to the benefit of all the people. I hope they will not hold them hostage through Bill C-48 by saying: it has to be changed, thus trying to prevent the development of the Arctic. I know that all hon. members are anxious to see Canada achieve self-sufficiency as soon as possible. I also know that in spite of our differences, we are all in favour of preserving our resources, but that we want a Canadian industry to develop the far north. Nobody can deny that great progress has been made as a result of this legislation; still, because it dates back some 20 years it had to be reshaped and streamlined to meet the needs of the economic reality of this day and age—in fact we are almost faced with an energy crisis—and that this bill is a cornerstone of our energy policy. We have met considerable opposition from the very beginning, especially because hon. members on the other side had no faith in our energy policy, but we had concrete results after only a few months. We have reached agreements both with Alberta and British Columbia—and we hope we will reach similar agreements with the others very soon. We were called all sorts of names— I shall forever remember that the hon. members of the Progressive Conservative Party, these self-appointed champions of Alberta, were so mean. And yet, on the night the agreement was signed, we quickly ran out of champagne because of the large number who wanted to celebrate the occasion. Perhaps the people felt that we had chosen the hard line. In connection with this bill, people are dissatisfied, but I am sure that as soon as the facts are known, there will be major finds and discoveries in the north, and that as soon as Canadians feel more secure, they will all be in favour of this bill; I suggest that the opposition would be wrong and irresponsible if merely for the sake of political gain, it delayed the passing of this bill which most Canadians are demanding, especially those who are anxious to participate in the development of the north.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hills): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I was younger than I am now, one of the things I learned from my elders and many other people was that actions speak louder than words. It seems to me Bill C-48 is one of the government actions which speaks louder than the words they have so appropriately enshrined in the constitutional package with respect to treaty and aboriginal rights. When you add Bill C-48 to the announcement of the go-ahead on the Norman Wells pipeline, when you add it to what is happening in James Bay, and when you add it to a number of other things this government is responsible for, it gives one the feeling that perhaps the celebration with which the aboriginal rights amendments in the Constitution was greeted may have been a bit premature; at least so long as the government is being run by the present party in power.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Bill C-48 is not neutral, I think, with respect to aboriginal rights or land claims. I will not say any more about it except to say I think it is intellectually dishonest to claim that any such piece of legislation can be neutral with regard to such a matter. Anything that has such an effect on a region in which these other things are in dispute can hardly be said to be neutral. That is simply a position not worth defending; it is indefensible.

I want to speak tonight about the question of the environment. That is what the amendments are addressing right now. I should like to say to the House Bill C-48 is an unusual, conceptual opportunity, if you will, for the House of Commons and, indeed, for the Canadian people. It is in the response of the three political parties to Bill C-48 that we can see some of the differences that exist among the three parties in the House.

Let us begin with the Progressive Conservative Party. All along they have been with the oil companies. They do not make any apology for this. They think the private sector can do a better job than the public sector; with the exception of the Conservative government in Ontario which seems to be ideologically backsliding of late. The Tories have been with the oil companies. Their major objection to Bill C-48 has been that it involves more public ownership, and it involves more involvement for Petro-Canada. They are not that concerned about the environment. There are some members of the Conservative Party who are concerned about the environment, but if they want to be intellectually honest, I think they have to realize that as long as they want to be defenders of the profit motive, they cannot at the same time be defenders of the environment. Much of the damage that has already been done to our environment has been done in the name of the profit motive; shortcuts that have been taken, technology that has not been installed, rivers that have been polluted, people that have been poisoned. All this happened because you could save money by not doing it. You could increase your profit margin by not doing it.

The Conservatives and the NDP oppose Bill C-48 fundamentally for different reasons. I want to make this clear.

Then we have the Liberals. The Liberals are moving down the road toward state capitalism, or what we might call ministerial capitalism. This bill gives all power, in heaven and earth, to the Minister of Energy (Mr. Lalonde). It does not even distribute it among other ministers in the cabinet. It gives the minister and the government more power over the corporations and more power over northerners in general. I would submit in the final analysis it gives the minister more power over northerners than it does over the corporations, because it still gives the corporations far too much of a free hand. What we are concerned with here is not just the corporations but with the people in the north who are being ignored, not only in substance but also in process, in the way this particular bill has come into being and is proceeding.

My party agrees with public ownership. We are not upset that Petro-Canada is getting more of a role to play in the development of our oil and gas resources. However, we have a different idea about what public ownership is and what it ought to mean for the Canadian people. Mr. Speaker, we want the Liberals to know we are not satisfied that Petro-Canada exists; that is not good enough. We want to see Petro-Canada simply embody a certain kind of economic development, indeed human development. It is about time we started to talk about human development and left this narrow economic vision behind. We have a different idea of what Crown corporations are from that of the members opposite when they speak about Crown corporations and public ownership.

We want Crown corporations to be environmentally responsible. As I said before, we want them to embody a new kind of development. Because they are backed up by the wealth of the nation, and because they are backed up by the collective mandate of the Canadian people who say we want to be involved through our government in the development of these vital resources, we want them to do it in a different way. We do not want them operating at arm's length like any other business. We want them to make the kind of sound decisions that should be made. If they do not have the technology to deal with an oil spill, then let them not drill. If they do not know how to deal with certain environmental problems, then let them wait until they do.

These are the kinds of decisions that can only be made by institutions which are not in bondage to the profit motive. In that respect, we support the notion of public ownership; but we do not think it is the kind of public ownersip we are getting from the Liberal government. This distresses us. The idea of compensation, the idea that after all the seals are dead and all the fish are floating belly up someone will be compensated—is totally inadequate. There are things in this world, I would like to tell my hon. friends opposite, that there is no compensation for. He has a narrow, legalistic, individualistic view of the world which supposes that somehow people can be compensated for the general destruction of the environment which belongs to everyone. For the neglect you make possible in this bill, the whole world ought to be taking you to court. The notion of compensation will just not wash when it comes to the environment. The government will have to rethink its categories. It will be too late by the time it gets around to it, but nevertheless it will have to do so.

Another thing we do not like about the kind of development we receive from the great Canadianizers over there is that it is development from the centre, out to and on the periphery, and it is the development of the north by people in Ottawa. It is not only state capitalism, it is state, centralized, ministerial capitalism. We believe that development in Canada needs to be more decentralized, more democratic, and needs to take more account of what the people north of 60 believe about development in their area. We believe that economic development, even if it must be public, has to respect the various northern communities, because in the final analysis a publicly-owned polluted world is no better than a privately-owned polluted world when it comes to the quality of the environment. Hon. members opposite should not think that they are making any great moral strides simply by allowing Petro-Canada certain rights north of 60. We will not be satisfied by that.

We see here a kind of frozen, arrogant vision on the part of the government at a time when Canadians are looking for leadership. They are looking for some way to be led out of the treadmill on which they find themselves in regard to energy consumption. Instead, we find the Liberal government frantically digging up the country, trying to find and extract whatever resources they can so that they do not have to face the difficult questions of conservation and demand, so that they can meet their balance of payments because they did not develop the economy of the country correctly in the first place. They have this frozen vision. I think it is tragic. We see it in the emptiness of the answers of the government day after day. Whether they are questions on finance, energy, or whatever we ask about, we are lucky to get anything that even bears a remote resemblance to an answer.

The government is not facing the question of demand versus supply. It is not facing the question that we cannot continue to have the present kind of energy consumption and that simply finding resources in the north and getting them out as quickly as possible is a self-defeating proposition in the final analysis. We must change our way of consuming these resources, not just for our own sake but for the sake of people of the future and people around the planet who exist now. If they are to have a reasonable share of the opportunity to live abundantly, we in Canada and we in the western industrialized nations will have to come to some very, very difficult realization of where we stand with regard to energy consumption and energy growth. This is what is so empty about Bill C-48, apart from its total inadequacy vis-à-vis the environment. What is empty about it is that it does not recognize any of these realities.

I do not have much more to say, except that Bill C-48 has all kinds of power, but no purpose, no perception or perspective; it is just raw, unadulterated power. It is sort of the bare bones of what is left of the Liberal vision of Canada. I regret that this is the case. We need to begin to see, whether publicly or privately—and of course I prefer publicly—that in public ownership there is the possibility of the kind of development which cares for the future, cares for the planet and cares for everyone in the world. Until we receive that kind of public sector development from the Liberal government, the New Democratic Party will not be satisfied.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I was most interested in the comments of the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) who indicated that there was perhaps some value in the amendments before the House. He went through the amendments and suggested, perhaps obliquely, that there should be some changes and that the minister should look again at the propositions put forward by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) and the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

I was very disappointed in the efforts of the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). He did not talk about the amendments of his colleagues. He proceeded to talk about nationalization, Crown corporations and public ownership. He did not pay attention to the fact that the greatest oil spill this world has ever seen was caused by a national oil company in Mexico. It was an oil spill which it took nearly four months to stop. It caused the greatest amount of pollution ever. There is no magic in public ownership with respect to pollution. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill ought to know that. Rather than rave on about public ownership, I am surprised that he did not deal with some of the worth-while amendments his colleagues put forward. I say, "worth-while" not because they are well written or well thought out, but because they get to the important points which must be dealt with and are not dealt with by the minister in the bill.

First the minister is faced with Motion No. 4 which defines a "spill" as a spill of gas or oil, some gunk or whatever, which may be in excess of 100 litres. The minister said, "I would stop all spills, even spills as small as a drop." The minister knows that it is important that there be some quantitative definition of a spill. After all, if the kid who fills up the fuel tank of a diesel tractor and happens to overflow it a bit, we cannot end up with a public inquiry, a report to a conservation officer, and the rest of it. That is impractical. When someone spills half a barrel of fuel amounting to 100 litres or more, this is very damaging to the environment.

Mr. Lalonde: What about 50 litres?

Mr. Blenkarn: I challenge the minister to make an amendment and define what is a spill in the act, other than the absolutely stupid definition in clause 80, Section 19(1) wherein it reads:

—"spill" means a discharge, emission or escape of oil or gas other than one that is authorized—

In other words, if he says that it is okay and it is authorized, it is not a spill. Slop it all over the place, dump oil on everyone, it is not a spill if it is authorized. The minister said that if one drops a drop of extra oil, it is a spill, but if he authorizes it any way you fellows want to put it, that does not count.

I see the minister smiling over there. How could he conceivably suggest to the House of Commons that if he authorizes some company or some agent of a company to spill oil, dump oil, dump bunker or whatever, it is not a spill, he is not liable for it and the company is not liable for it; no one is liable for the damage? The damage may exist, the environment way be hurt, but the minister specifically says that the Crown is not liable. The Crown can authorize a spill and the Crown has no liability. Presumably the person authorized or directed to spill has no liability either. I guess the people in the riding of my colleague, the hon. member for Nunatsiaq bear the brunt of it. That is the kind of thing that happens. It is all right if the minister authorizes it. Surely the amendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Skeena, with respect to Section 19.1 and the amendment with respect to the definition of "spill" must be carried, because they are sensible amendments.

The minister is in the House and after I have finished speaking, I expect him to stand up and say that he is going to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to file amendments which would be better written and better described than these. I think the drafting by my colleagues in the NDP is just horrible and incompetent but the minister could file amendments that would cover those problems.

I should like to deal with the question of liability for a moment. The bill is not clear enough in making an operator or concessionaire who has an oil lease or whatever from the minister, absolutely and completely liable. In the United States, when the legislation with respect to the trans-Alaska pipeline authority was proposed, it provided that all damage, no matter who caused it, no matter how it was caused, whether by negligence or otherwise, was the responsibility of the person or operator involved. In other words, it was "no fault" legislation. That is the kind of legislation we have in Ontario with respect to spills caused by those who transport oil products and the like and with respect to those who store oil products and the like.

I have a client who, by mistake, turned the wrong valve and it let out not much more than 100 litres of stuff into a small creek. He did his best to clean it up and paid a $5,000 fine in my riding of Mississauga. He did his best to stop it; it was not his fault; it was a mistake and there was no evidence of negligence. There is no fault legislation in that province, and there should be no fault legislation in this bill.

The same thing applies to the construction industry. A number of members of this House who have been involved in the construction industry know that when a man on a construction job does not wear his hard hat, the employer is fined. It does not do the employer any good to say, "I told him to wear his hard hat and I supplied him with it." It is the employer who pays the fine and who is penalized. There should be the same requirement with respect to pollution and environmental matters in the north. It should be no fault legislation and this bill does not have it.

Amendments Nos. 51 and 55, although poorly drawn, attempt to create a no fault situation and they must be supported in the event that the minister does not bring in better amendments. I challenge the minister to do something that must be done. He has a poor bill and he ought to know that and he ought to clean it up.

I want to go on now to the question of damages, Mr. Speaker. There is provision in this bill that a person be entitled to collect in a lawsuit, of all things, the actual loss or damage that he suffers. There is now an attempt by the minister in Section 19.1(3) to define actual loss or damage. I want to say to the House and the minister through you, sir, that the normal interpretation of actual loss or damage is what is generally known in civil courts as the kind of damage you can get in a contract lawsuit—actual, proved damages. There is an attempt in subsection (3) to broaden it but it does not broaden it properly, and the minister knows that it does not because he had the benefit of good legal counsel. It is important that this House understand that the terms "actual loss or damage" are really terms that define loss or damage to real proven losses.

Let me demonstrate, Mr. Speaker. Suppose that because of a spill in the riding of Nunatsiaq a musk ox herd is destroyed. Which person can sue for the loss of the musk ox herd? Whose herd is it? You can sue for your actual loss or damage, but who owns the herd? Who knows who owns the herd? Maybe the Crown owns the herd or maybe the aboriginal people own the herd. Can they prove they own that herd? Under no circumstances can they, but the act says it is only a person who can sue. Which person? Can a band sue? Can a community sue? Under no circumstances, Mr. Speaker. A person can sue, but he must show that he has lost something. How does a person show he has lost something because a musk ox herd was destroyed or a herd of walrus was destroyed or a bunch of beluga whales was destroyed? How do you show that you have lost something? If you can prove that you have been hunting these particular animals and that you have lost a cash amount from the sale of their hides or whatever, and you can prove what you have sold at other times and you anticipate a loss in future years because you can no longer hunt them because they do not exist, then only you can get compensation. What about your children, then? Your children do not count. Only you can sue. You cannot sue for your children or your children's children. If the herd is wiped out the best you can get is your actual loss or damage. That is what the minister has done to the people in the north.

I say to my friends in the NDP that I am glad they brought these amendments forward—but they are not good enough. They are poorly drawn, they are incompetently drawn. I say that it is the obligation of the minister at this point to take the major amendment of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq, Motion No. 53, and redefine it to include all kinds of damage going into the future. When you destroy a place where you can gather things in the wild, when you destroy a herd, when you destroy, perhaps, the spawning ground of trout, then you have done something for which it is almost impossible to prove damage.

I was thinking about this earlier, Mr. Speaker, and I said to myself that even if you could prove damage, how would you do it? I was in Baker Lake once. The people there go fishing for lake trout. They feed them to their dogs. They toss a fish to the dogs. What do they use the dog for? They do not need a dog now because they have a skidoo, so what is the value of the dog? As a matter of fact, if there is no feed for the dog, perhaps then they would kill the dog and not have any problem. But what are their damages? A can of dog food? A bag of Kibble, or something like that? Will they have to go to the supreme court of the Northwest Territories to collect the value of a can of dog food or a bag of Kibble? That is the kind of thing that is in the concept drawn up by people in Ottawa who think that the north boundary of Canada is the Meach Lake resort and that the south boundary of Canada is the Ottawa airport. They do not understand what is going on. They suspect that because there has been some damage, one can start a lawsuit. One could start a lawsuit if it is worth taking a lawsuit and worth hiring a lawyer; but would one hire a lawyer because one does not have a fish to feed one's dog? Where are the damages? With what does one pay the lawyer, even if one does collect?

An hon. Member: Fish.

Mr. Blenkarn: The answer is that, and that is not an answer. This statute is not an answer to protect people with respect to the hardship they will suffer if there is, in fact, environmental damage. There was a suggestion made by the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee. There was a suggestion made in amendment 54, which may or may not be before the House, that there be some sort of fund, that there be some sort of compensation board to which one can apply and the compensation can be assessed by an assessor, the concept which perhaps exists with workmen's compensation. Perhaps that is the way we should be going. However, this concept of actual loss or damage to be determined in a court of law, despite the easing of that concept in Section 19(3), is just not good enough for Canada. It is certainly not good enough under these conditions. It is not what we would accept in southern Canada. I point out to Your Honour that the people of Mississauga would not accept the proposition that if someone dumped some oil in a creek, the ratepayers along the side of the creek would only be entitled to their actual loss or damage. How does one figure one's actual loss or damage when the water in the creek in the backyard gets polluted with oil? What is one's actual loss or damage? One does not drink out of the creek and one does not fish out of the creek. What is one's loss or damage? I must really say that this minister has not thought it out. It is about time that he and this House understood that this section, in terms of damage, is not good enough. It is no answer. If the minister will not produce better amendments than those which are before the House, then this House has an obligation to vote for the amendments presented.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: Before I finish, I want to deal with two other amendments. First, in connection with amendment No. 57, which involves "may" or "shall", there has been a lot of discussion in the past dealing with statutes concerning what "may" or "shall" should mean. Section 19(4), found on page 67 of the bill, calls for a public inquiry if there is death, injury or danger to public safety or the environment. It says that the minister may direct an inquiry. The problem we have here is that the section probably encompasses too many conditions. Clearly, if there is a death on an oil rig, perhaps there are other procedures which could be followed, in terms of a coroner's inquest and the like, or other police procedures. Perhaps a public inquiry would be required. However, the section goes on to include danger to public safety or the environment. When it is apparent that there is something which may pose a danger to public safety or the environment, surely to goodness the minister has an obligation to call an inquiry—not "may" call an inquiry, but an obligation to do so. In as much as the section does not divide the issues between death and injury, and that particular problem, we must vote in favour of the proposed amendment.

I again say to the minister that he can cure the problem. He can cure the drafting. If he will cure the drafting, that would make better legislation. However, in the event that he will not, then the proposed amendment in Motion No. 57 must be carried.

Lastly, in connection with damages and the limitation on damages alluded to in Motion No. 56, one can only sue for one's loss or damage if one sues within three years of the event. The problem there can be very simply demonstrated by one simple case: somewhere in the back boondocks someone makes a spill on the spawning grounds in a creek, or whatever, of salmon or trout; and because these fish do not come back to their spawning ground for four years in some cases, one does not know that there is any damage because one continues to fish for the next three years; and then all of a sudden there are no fish. All of a sudden, four years later, there are no fish. One looks at the statute and finds one is out of court because the damage occurred three or four years ago. Therefore, I say to this House that Motion No. 56 and the other amendments must carry unless new amendments are presented to this House by the minister. I ask the minister to do that before this bill is put to a vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the debate we are addressing tonight is really on a very important motion, namely Bill C-48. It is probably one of the most important bills that we have debated in this House since I have been around because it affects so many areas of our lives. It will have a dramatic effect on the north and on the offshore areas of Canada. It will have a dramatic effect on the environment of both of those areas. It will affect the future job prospects for our young people. It will affect the future of our industry, and it will affect the opportunities for our young people in Canada. More specifically than that, Bill C-48 will be affecting the northerners. It will affect those people in several ways; first of all, in terms of development, and in terms of spin-off from that development, such as transportation, jobs, and even education. This bill will really have an effect on everyone in Canada. In fact, it will affect anyone who uses oil and gas, which is virtually all Canadians.

Therefore, I should be taking pleasure in participating in this debate; but, in fact, I am finding very little pleasure in participating, probably because of the weeks that we have spent on this bill in committee. Those weeks have left a bad taste in my mouth. If Your Honour can imagine it, we are dealing with an important bill which will have such a dramatic effect on the northern parts of our country and the offshore areas, and yet the committee which has been dealing with this bill has not once travelled into the area which will be affected. I have never seen such a glaring and obvious example of a government from afar. It is the kind of thing we hear complaints about all the time. It is the kind of thing which has been reinforced in committee on this particular bill. A good number of witnesses appeared before us in committee from native groups, northern communities, northern business people, environmental groups and industry, and the list goes on and on. Each of those groups was treated the same, but the government acted a lot like the proverbial three monkeys: their eyes were covered and they did not want to see anything; their ears were covered, and they did not want to hear anything. The only exception to that rule was in fact, their mouths, which seemed to be open all the time and going in a number of different directions. The government clearly demonstrated its blind, unthinking, unhearing, unswerving ambition to achieve its own goals; goals which had no concern for the people who will be affected. The government demonstrated its set mind. Its mind had been made up. There was no intention of changing it. That became more and more apparent as committee time went on and on.

Therefore, as I speak tonight I have a tendency to feel that it is nothing more than an exercise in futility. Just pausing briefly, let me say that I think it is important that we look at the purposes of this bill which is so important to all of us. It is a bill which really introduces new guidelines or a new regime for oil and gas production in what is commonly called Canada lands. In other words, it is the rule books. It is the game plan. It is the whole system which will control the development of oil and gas in the Yukon, in the Northwest Territories and in the offshore areas of Canada.

The effects of this bill will be seen long into the future. We can see that it is important. It is dramatic. That is the purported purpose. But after those weeks in committee, a person begins to question what the purpose of the bill is. You begin to wonder if it is not any more than an opportunity or an attempt to crown the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) as nothing more than the emperor of the north, something to allow him to rule unfettered and undeterred the very people who will be affected, such as the northerners, the natives, the environmentalists and the business people. In fact, he is even undeterred or unfettered by his colleagues, such as the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) or the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). Effectively, what has happened is that time spent in committee has reduced what should have been a lofty opportunity to nothing more than a simple play for power.

I want to focus for a few moments on the motions before us tonight, Nos. 4, 51, 52, 53, 55, 57 and now also Motion No. 34. All of these motions really focus on the environmental concerns in Bill C-48, and as such they are an extremely important part of this bill. The question is what kind of treatment will they receive at the hands of the government? Looking back at the committee hearings we can see that the whole debate tonight will probably fall on deaf ears.

The Minister of the Environment, who should have been keenly interested in this bill and should have been keenly and dramatically involved in its drafting and in the various elements of it, did not even appear before the committee. One begins to wonder why. Perhaps it is because emperors do not like shadows. What happened to the environmental groups which appeared before us, such as the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee? A number of those groups appeared before us, but they were ignored. Their submissions were never reflected in this bill. Once again, I envision those three monkeys.

This is a crucial time in terms of the development of Canada's north and in terms of Canada's offshore. It is not a time for covered ears or covered eyes. It is a time for keen and careful listening and a time for thoughtful and careful watching. It is a time for us to discuss Canada's future. The area that we are discussing tonight is really Canada's last frontier. It is Canada's future garden of resources. It is even Canada's future breadbasket. In other words, this whole area is Canada's golden opportunity. Through Bill C-48 I think all Canadians right now are gambling a bit with our future, and we are gambling heavily on this particular part of our great country. Any time anyone gambles, the first thing one should do is look at the odds. We have to cover those odds and we have to do our best to increase our chances for success.

Today, as we look at this bill, that is exactly what we have to do at this time. We have to lay the groundwork, the footings and the foundation now for whatever will happen in Canada's frontier areas in those Canada lands. If we wait until tomorrow, or next week or next year, it will be too late. Things are beginning to happen now and now is the time when we must address these fundamental issues.

Environmental concerns really become fundamental and become key to this whole discussion and issue before us tonight. I think environmental concerns really mean the difference between two options, one is short-term development, which will benefit a few people, and the other is long-term development, which will benefit all Canadians. Obviously for all of us, the short-term option is really no option at all. What we have to strive and seek for is a long-term option. That is what we want, that is what we need, and that is what we must achieve.

To my way of thinking when one talks about the environment, there are two elements to the discussion. The first is the physical element, the second is the social element. The physical element means the land, the water, the tundra and the air; all of those things that can concretely touch the tangible aspects of the environment. The second area of the environment is the social one. That is more difficult to grasp because it affects people, such as natives, Eskimos, Indians and white men who live in the north. It affects their livelihood and their whole way of life.

This evening I want to focus primarily on the physical elements of the environment, and hopefully, if time permits, touch to a small degree on the social elements of the environment.

Last summer I travelled to Taiwan. Taiwan is an interesting country. It is a small country but it has a great many people contained in its small land mass. In fact, the whole of Taiwan is smaller than the riding I represent, yet it has a population four times that of all of Canada. In Taiwan, environmental concerns become very obvious. If you take a few acres and damage them, that damage sticks out like a sore thumb. It becomes so obvious that anyone can see it. Therefore, concerns become much more magnified.

To contrast that, two weeks ago I travelled to Inuvik in the Northwest Territories. It seems that in the Northwest Territories you can fly for miles and miles and miles. One does not see any sign of man. There are no signs of an end to that country. As far as you can see, it seems to be water, land, water, more land and more land. To spoil a few acres in that vast area would be like dropping an ice cube in the Great Lakes. One would think that it would have virtually no effect.

Just to envision how much land we are talking about in this particular area, let me say that we are talking literally of 40 per cent of the entire area of Canada. It is a tremendously vast and unspoiled area. Just because of its size, we tend to think that we have nothing to worry about, but the truth of the matter is the vastness and seemingly endless area gives a deceptive impression. This huge area does have a very thin skin; it has a very fine ecological balance. It is slow to repair itself and it is slow to heal after it has been abused.

Now is the time for some serious listening and serious thinking. Now is the time for serious discussions concerning the environment in that area. It is now that we have to lay those plans to address the situation before it is too late. Now is the time to protect this very fragile environment.

Now I want to look briefly at the motions before us. First, let us look at Motion No. 4 which reads in part:

"spill" means an amount of 100 litres or more of oil and any other substance deemed foreign to the environment.

Obviously the purpose of that motion is very simply to define what is meant by a spill. Colleagues and other speakers before me have done a good job of demonstrating just how essential it is that we know what a spill is and that we define that particular element in this type of bill.

Motion No. 51 simply tries to differentiate between an authorized and an unauthorized spill. It wants to remove the distinction in terms of environmental damage and in terms of responsibility for that damage. I think it is obvious that damages are damages, whether they are caused by an authorized spill or by an unauthorized spill.

● (2150)

Motion 52 is an interesting motion. Having lived in part of Canada's north, I found it particularly interesting. It says very simply that any spills must be reported to the chief conservation officer. He must then notify as quickly as possible the aboriginal peoples who might be affected. That may seem like an unimportant amendment to many people, but what often happens in an area so far removed from its government, the bureaucracy here in Ottawa being responsible, is that the people most directly affected are the last to hear about it. I feel this amendment is essential.

Motion No. 53 expands liabilities and deals with some of the liabilities that result from a spill. It is important because it takes into account such things as livelihood, as an area where people can glean their livelihood. That, too, is of fundamental importance when talking about an area such as the north.

Motion No. 56 is also unique to the north. It recognizes the fact that what may seem like slight damage today, may have a significant effect tomorrow. Damages which may have occurred a short time ago, or even earlier, may still be the subject of a claim.

Motion No. 57 states that the minister must launch an inquiry in the event of a spill. That is important because one of the things which became obvious while studying Bill C-48 was the massive amount of ministerial discretion provided in the bill. This motion clearly addresses that question. The minister does not have an option; he must report that spill and launch an inquiry.

All these motions are important because they attempt to address the environmental concerns in the north. They attempt to begin this new regime, game plan, on a sound and solid footing.

The question that begs an answer is whether the government will listen and for once make some real and positive changes to Bill C-48, or will it be the same as we experienced in committee?

I want to touch briefly on some of the social aspects of the environment in this part of our country. Having lived there, I know what it is like to have one's resources exploited. I know what it is like to have decisions about your environment made by bureaucrats and governments from afar. I know what it is like to lose jobs to southerners and to travel thousands of miles just to get some education. I have seen the traumas people go through to get the education they require, just to be employed in their own home towns.

This government has to recognize that these people will be dramatically affected by the provisions of Bill C-48 because of the unique northern environment. Their entire living environment is likely to change. The government has to recognize this problem and to deal with it so we may all benefit. The short term benefits for a few is not a solution for us in this particular situation. We must look for a long-term benefit for all. I believe that Bill C-48 is literally Canada's future. The government should carefully consider the serious impact of this bill. I hope it will listen, hear and make some meaningful changes to Bill C-48 which will have a positive effect on all Canadians.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak in support of my party's amendments.

First, I would like to speak to amendment No. 4, which requires that there be some quantitative definition of what constitutes an oil spill, setting it at 100 litres or more. The hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) has said there is no need for such a definition, it can be left to ministerial discretion.

I might point out that in my coastal riding in British Columbia there was an oil spill. It resulted in an oil slick three quarters of a mile wide and a mile long. The people who contacted the environmental agency were told it was an insignificant spill, and no action was taken. We have tried to find out what guidelines there are for action in case of an oil spill. Up to this time we have seen no action on the part of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). That is why I say it is absolutely essential there be some specific quantity set in a definition so we will know whether or not there is a spill. The 100 litre definition, I think, is important because it indicates that incremental spills continued over a period of time can be just as devastating to the environment as one much larger spill. It is important that we have that definition.

Another important amendment requires that notice be given to the aboriginal peoples most affected by a spill, as well as environmental officials. There should be financial protection for the people who are affected. Another amendment makes an inquiry after a spill mandatory.

All these amendments are essential if we are going ahead with this kind of legislation. The Indian people in British Columbia have the slogan "The Land is the Culture". You cannot separate the environment from the total life of the native people in the north. Next week the minister responsible for multiculturalism is hosting a gala in honour of the tenth anniversary of the multicultural policy. I remind hon. members of this House that culture is more than a matter of dances, singing and folk tales. It is a whole way of life, and unless we take some action to protect the environment, we will see a culture destroyed.

• (2200)

In June, when the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) appeared before the committee, he promised there would be a legal definition. Why have we not seen that definition? We require it. It is not obvious, as he says: people want to know how land claims will be affected. I think the minister owes it to this House to provide that definition.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—BACKLOG OF PENSION APPLICATIONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, on July 15 of this year I directed a question to the then acting minister of veterans affairs. My question was the following:

At present there is a backlog of 4,500 pension applications which are taking up to five years to process. The pension chairman has stated that he is hamstrung by the present veterans legislation. He says that the delays will get worse. Statistics provided by veterans organizations show a 50 per cent death rate while waiting for pensions to be processed. What is the minister going to do about this?

I received a non-answer, and no action has been taken since that time.

I would like to take a moment before I continue with the debate to congratulate the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. Campbell) on his appointment to the cabinet as Minister of Veterans Affairs. We wish him well, and I want to assure him that he will receive full co-operation from this side of the House.

However, we must ask the minister to table new veterans legislation immediately. We cannot wait for the McCracken inquiry. Mr. McCracken is to file some kind of report in 1983. I will go into some statistics as to why we cannot wait until 1983 for some action. All the minister has to do is to obtain a copy of the United States legislation whereby veterans pension applications can be processed in 90 days. If that can be done in 90 days in the United States, it can certainly be done in 90 days in Canada.

I just want to give an example of the types of letters we are receiving from constituents. I want to read from a letter I just recently received from a lady veteran in my riding who, in 1978, appealed an assessment on her pension. At that time she was told she would have to wait up to two years before she could get it. She said the following in her letter to me:

My God, I could be dead by then! Maybe this is what they want, but I certainly do not.

In September of this year, the same lady veteran received a letter from the Bureau of Pensions Advocates telling her that they might get around to giving her some kind of answer in June of 1982. That is a national disgrace. We cannot accept that, and we cannot wait until 1983 for something to be done about it.

I am sure the minister is aware that there has been a recent decision which could make thousands more Canadian veterans of the Second World War eligible for pensions. This decision was made by the War Veterans Allowance Board. This means that there could be thousands more applications in the near future. If what there is now cannot be handled, I do not know how thousands more will be handled.

The minister will have to give serious consideration to leaving the pension commission here in Ottawa. One of the problems he will have will be the moving of the pension commission to Prince Edward Island because the pension commission deals also with RCMP and Department of National Defence pension applications, so I want the minister to have a look at that.

We on this side of the House are not saying every veteran is entitled to a pension. What we are saying is that veterans are entitled to answers within a reasonable period of time, not up to five years. There are even cases in which it takes over five years before there is some type of answer to pension applications. Even by 1986 there will still be about 650,000 veterans in the country with whom to deal, so the problem will not disappear. It will get worse.

I recently received an answer to an Order Paper question which gives complete detail on this complicated procedure. I have here three pages of red tape. It is nothing but a bureaucratic blockade. I am sure it is designed strictly to give defeated Liberal candidates jobs on these boards and commissions. They are loaded with them. This is the most ridiculous blockade I have seen in my life. I suggest the minister look at this complicated procedure in his department.

● (2205)

My colleague from Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) received a letter from the Royal Canadian Legion at Port Carling which states:

It was resolved at our last general meeting that I write you and draw to your attention the disgraceful and deplorable situation regarding war veterans pensions.

This is a concern right across the country. All members receive these kinds of letters.

The Royal Canadian Legion Ontario Command sent a letter to their veterans whom they assist with pension applications. They tell them not to expect any kind of answer for at least two years. That is absolutely ridiculous. They then have to wait another three years to find out whether they will get a pension.

Another group in Ontario is organizing under the name of The Unsatisfied Veterans' Association. I quote in part from their letter:

—we plan to recruit as many unsatisfied veterans or dependants as possible. Once we have coast to coast members, we plan to hold a nationwide protest at all DVA offices throughout the country.

Their main concern is the slow processing of veterans' claims, which is a concern right across this nation.

The McCracken inquiry certainly is not acceptable. The minister will have to take immediate action. He should get hold of the American legislation. If they can do it in 90 days, we should be able to do the same.

The minister is even being sued. The War Amputations of Canada based in Ottawa says that the medical advisers to the pension commission often recommend how pension applications should be decided, exceeding their authority and usurping that of pension commissioners. They have launched a legal action stating that many medical examiners are breaking veterans pension laws. Mr. Chadderton, the chief executive officer of the group said in an interview that the medical advisers are a bureaucratic blockade.

I hope the minister will give some information this evening as to what he is going to do about this bureaucratic blockade. Will he give us a commitment that he will table new legislation, not in 1983 or 1984 but immediately? The veterans are entitled to better treatment. We demand immediate action from the minister with regard to this disgraceful situation.

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I first want to thank the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) for the opportunity to add to the answer he received from the then acting minister of veterans affairs on July 18, 1981.

I first want to say it is true that the Canadian Pension Commission is experiencing some delay in the processing of applications for disability pensions. However, I think it is fair to point out that the majority of the difficulty is at the first level only. As the hon. member is aware, this problem was addressed directly by the then acting minister of veterans affairs. I want to assure the hon. member and this House tonight that I am committed as well to providing prompt and effective service to the veterans and their dependants.

The American legislation to which the hon. member refers is fundamentally different from our Pension Act. These differences can be seen in the manner in which the veteran is treated. In Canada, the Canadian Pension Commission acts as a medical detective on behalf of the veteran and researches the medical grounds on which it bases its decisions. It tries to relate present day disabilities to the relatively short period of time of military service over 36 years ago.

Most applications received by the Canadian Pension Commission are for disabilities that are associated with aging, such as arthritis, heart, chest and back conditions or failing eyesight or hearing. The gunshot wounds and the obvious war-related injuries were dealt with years ago. The Canadian Pension Commission must research carefully each case, or risk having to turn down the veteran's application. The Canadian legislation gives the veteran the benefit of the doubt, and the Commission does an excellent job of helping veterans find the relationship between today's disability and the wartime service so that they can be considered for pension. In fact, Mr. Speaker, at the first level, 40 per cent of all claims received are approved. If we consider all stages of appeal, 54 per cent of all claims registered by the commission are approved in whole or in part. When we consider that we are dealing with events which are at least 36 years ago and are trying to relate them to present medical conditions, the difficulty becomes obvious.

The United States situation has a much younger veteran population—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. minister that the adjournment to date is so structured that every minute beyond the three minutes he is allowed is depriving another hon. member of his opportunity for debate. It is a tradition that the Chair is strict in that regard. Perhaps the hon. minister might take a sentence to wrap up what he is saying. Then I have to recognize other members.

Mr. Campbell (Cardigan): In summary, the Pension Act was created by Parliament on the advice and recommendation of veterans' organizations and the Woods committee. I am sure the hon. member would agree with me when we say that he gained very little support in his efforts to change the basis of our pension legislation.

Adjournment Debate

MANPOWER—REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET WITH WOMEN'S OUTREACH GROUPS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am sitting here wondering when we are going to see legislation that acknowledges a debt of gratitude that all Canadians owe to those who have served them, instead of producing defensive, bureaucratic gobbledygook. Pensioners are hurting. I hope we see legislation put before us quickly.

I would like to begin by congratulating the new Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bujold). I welcome him to the late show. It is unfortunate he has to be here so late in the evening. I can assure him that we are both here because on June 16 the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), once again refused to answer very simple and basic questions. That is a habit he has. I hope he will not lead us astray this evening with a script that will again not answer my questions, and that will attempt to lead Canadians astray. This is the pattern we have noticed over the past 14 or 15 months. It would be refreshing to see a change.

On June 16, I asked the minister two simple questions. First, would he meet personally with representatives of women's Outreach groups? He replied, "My officials will meet", trying to leave the impression he would meet with them when, in fact, he did not have the courage to say, no, he would not meet them." The second part of my question was also very simple. I asked: will he guarantee to this House that the moneys available for women's Outreach programs in Canada this year will at least be equal to those of last year? We got a long song and dance. If you studied what the minister said, you would find that he will increase the bureaucracy and cut the budget of women's Outreach groups; yet he tried to leave the impression all was well. In the interim, when not one of us was here to question him, this minister, who does not make statements in the House but makes statements to the press, put out another press release. In the press release of September 17, he bragged that for Outreach there is an additional $2 million. Then come the critical words: "it is being made available." What is the difference between those words and the words "is being given to?" There is a sense of certitude about expenditures that are being given to groups. There is no sense of certitude about moneys being made available. If you listen and study the wording of this minister, you are immediately suspicious that he has got himself another headline; he has left Canadians with the impression he is providing funding to Outreach. The cautious, clever man, or the cautious, clever woman in an Outreach group, would look at those words, "is being made available," and would say, "I bet come January 1 will find another announcement of other moneys being made available." This $2 million that sits here now will not go into Outreach. I defy the parliamentary secretary to rise now and guarantee that it is going to Outreach, not to any other purpose, or is it simply available as a possibility and in one month, two months or three months will be made available to some other group for the purpose of another headline?

In the same press release, the minister told us that he was in the process of evaluating Outreach and that when the evaluation is completed he will decide whether that $2 million will be given. Then we dig a little deeper and we find that the minister has hired a firm from his riding, as he does so many things for his riding. It takes the power of the ministry to serve all Canadians. He put it in a little chunk of Winnipeg. It is the evaluation of a Canada-wide program. Then we become suspicious that there will be a report down the road which indicates clearly to Canadians that Outreach is not so good, that the minister does not really have to take the available $2 million and give it to them, that he could take that $2 million and not spend it, or give it away someplace else. The parliamentary secretary should rise and tell me that that will not be the conclusion. He should do that clearly when his turn comes.

There is a little bit more double talk. In May the minister came to Alberta and said, "Why are you native people so upset about what we will do to Outreach?" On about May 15 he said, "Don't worry". Then on July 1, within six weeks, all employees are fired, funding is terminated and the equipment is turned back to the Crown corporation. That is the word of the minister with whom we are dealing in the House. He did not make the announcement in the House, he made it to the press. He went out and made the killing announcement to the press, not to the House where we would have a chance to question him, to bring it up in the adjournment debate.

I say to the women and the native people of Canada in Outreach, that if they look at the main estimates, this minister, in the crunch with other ministers of the Crown, lost so much money in his over-all budget that 20 per cent of the programs of that department, as we have known them, will not take place in this budget year. No matter how hard we push, he will not tell us where those cuts are occurring. We will have to read the budget with the care which is required to enable us to conclude that Outreach is one of them and that what replacements there are will simply consist of a few more bureaucrats.

I bring to the attention of the parliamentary secretary the new report of the special task force. Recommendations Nos. 13 and 109 indicate that Outreach is cost-effective and that people with special needs are helped. The minister should pay attention, increase the funding, and make it happen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. This is the first time since the resumption of this session this fall that we have had an opportunity for the adjournment debate. On behalf of other occupants of the chair, I should like to inform hon. members that the rules are seven minutes for the questioner and three minutes for the reply. This occupant of the chair, and others as well, will from this moment on ensure that hon. members are not permitted to exceed those times. I am sorry this evening has not gone off very well, but I would ask hon. members to co-operate if they can.

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank my colleague from Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) for his good wishes, and I trust that the answer I will give him tonight will not prompt him to follow up with another question of this kind.

In the first part of his question, he mentioned that the minister had refused to meet with women's groups. I think it is a lot more useful to solve certain problems and to allocate more funds than to meet people without having anything specific to tell them. The hon. member says that the announcement that was made in September should have been made in the House. Unfortunately, the House resumed sitting only yesterday, so it would have been difficult for the minister to make that announcement in the House. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the answer the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) gave in June still holds true, but I would like to add certain facts.

First of all, the Treasury Board approved the allocation of an additional $0.5 million to the Outreach program for 1981-82. These funds come from other commission programs and were allocated to the regions.

Secondly, despite what was said earlier, that the minister allocated the majority of funds to his province and his region, the short-term contracts which the Ontario region signed with the sponsors of Outreach projects were because of a lack of funds changed to provide for 12-month terms. Thirdly, the hon. member for Egmont mentioned the various policy options presented to the minister with regard to the Outreach program. The minister is now examining these options concurrently with the report of the Task Force on Employment Opportunities for the '80s.

Finally, the hon. member for Egmont also said that at the time the minister wanted to secure additional funds for the Outreach program. I am therefore pleased, Mr. Speaker, to advise the House that, as mentioned previously, an additional sum of $1.5 million was recently approved by cabinet and the Treasury Board for 1981-82. The minister is now—reviewing the allocation of those funds which will be used to finance existing and new projects for women and the handicapped. However, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that the minister hopes these additional funds will allow him to increase by a third the number of Outreach projects for women.

VIA RAIL—REQUEST THAT STANDING COMMITTEE CONSIDER MATTER OF PASSENGER TRAIN ABANDONMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had the opportunity to ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) a question concerning the cutbacks he announced in passenger rail service on July 27, to take effect on November 16, a brief month away from now. My colleagues and I thought it very important that on the first day of Parliament since the announcement, we should be front and centre in our opposition to these cutbacks. The minister avoided face to face criticism for a while by waiting until after Parliament recessed for the summer to make his announcement, but now he is going to face the music, whether he likes it or not.

Yesterday I asked the minister whether he would refer the cutbacks to the Transport Committee of the House of Commons and cancel them until after the committee has had a chance to pass judgment on them. Earlier, he had offered to come before the committee and explain his decision. That is not enough, Mr. Speaker; it is not what we are after. An explanation of such a stupid decision makes it no less stupid and no less regrettable. I am asking the Minister of Transport to refer it to the committee in such a way as to make possible the reversal of his July decision.

This decision must be reversed, Mr. Speaker, for the sake of energy conservation, for the sake of jobs, for the sake of tourism, for the sake of the future of passenger rail service and for the sake of national unity.

Mr. Speaker, since I have been in this House I have not been one to get up and play the national unity game. I do not take kindly to everyone using national unity as a blanket in which to wrap themselves and thus be saved from having to defend their arguments, while they in fact do more harm to national unity than help it. But I sincerely think that such significant cuts in western Canadian and Atlantic Canadian train service, so that new equipment can be purchased for the Quebec-Windsor corridor, is a grievous error.

Like the government in general, I guess the minister just does not realize what he is playing with when he plays with the ability of Winnipegers to go by train to Saskatoon or to Edmonton or the ability of Edmontonians to go to Vancouver directly by train.

The railroad is not only a fact, it is a symbol of Canadian togetherness. And having one man from Ottawa hacking and slicing away at our rail system, by order in council yet, without public or parliamentary input, is a grievous, grievous error indeed. It shall never be forgotten. Never! The centre shall never live down this attack on the regions. By the next election, the only thing protecting the Liberals west of Thunder Bay and in the maritime provinces will be the game laws!

Democracy demands that the cutbacks be suspended and re-examined by an informed public. If the government proceeds, then I can only assume that we are much further along the road to government by decree than I really wanted to believe. I for one will not be content until we have a fully integrated and comprehensive transportation system in which passenger rail plays a crucial role, whether it is taking campers to their cottages or tourists from sea to sea. I spoke about this in my first speech in this House of Commons nearly two years ago this week. I will speak out as long and as often as it takes to get through the thick skulls of the Liberal government that it had better sit up, respect and invest in passenger rail service.

• (2225)

I am very anxious to hear from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bockstael). He comes from Winnipeg. He has Symington Yard in his riding. However, it will not be his riding for long unless he can help persuade the government to renege on its stupid decision to make the cutbacks in VIA Rail.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, over the years a number of inquiries and royal commissions appointed to look into the problems of railway passenger services recognized that there existed a duplication of services and an overcapacity in the Canadian railway system. This overcapacity in the system is still largely with us today, and we continue to subsidize and maintain a large mileage of uneconomic, low density passenger traffic lines—

Mr. Blaikie: Trains were full.

Mr. Bockstael: VIA Rail was established in 1977 to rectify this situation by the end of 1980. Its objectives were to attain a reduction in subsidies to rail passengers—

Mr. Blaikie: In Winnipeg.

Mr. Bockstael: —to have a rail framework that would put an end to the duplication of services; to establish rail fares that reflect an improved commercial viability; to have rail service maintained where no other travel alternative exists.

In order to maintain transportation subsidies within a framework of responsible spending of taxpayers' money, the minister would have been forced to give the CTC very explicit instructions to attain this objective.

Mr. Blaikie: They had lots of money for Mirabel.

Mr. Bockstael: Members would have complained that the minister was interfering unduly in the role of the CTC. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) wants to have the matter reviewed by the Standing Committee on Transport. The minister welcomes the opportunity to defend and justify the government's plan in a public forum. He has indicated his willingness to appear before the Standing Committee on Transport to do so.

Mr. Blaikie: Big deal.

Mr. Bockstael: Perhaps, when all the facts are on the table, members will realize that the plan makes a good deal of sense.

Mr. Blaikie: Don't say that in Winnipeg.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted, and accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock.

At 10.28 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

SUMMIT MEETING IN MEXICO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, today the citizens and governments of more than one hundred nations, including Canada, will observe the first World Food Day, which will serve as a rallying point in the search for solutions to end world hunger and poverty. The natural right of all human beings to food was backed by the report of the parliamentary task force on North-South relations, which placed particular emphasis on food and agricultural production. The report was supported by all parties in the House and its main thrusts were endorsed by the government.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith):

That this House affirms its desire that practical steps be discussed by the heads of state or government of 22 countries who will meet next week for the historic North-South Summit in Mexico, so that early progress can be made in negotiating the economic issues now dividing North from South and, further, that the text of this motion be sent to the governments of all 22 states.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF POLISH REFUGEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I too have a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 which should receive the unanimous support of this House. Whereas on a relative basis the people of Poland during World War II suffered as great a loss of both life and property as any other nation in that catastrophic conflict, and whereas following World War II, as before, many persons of Polish ancestral background settled in and became distinguished Canadian citizens, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That the government introduce forthwith measures which would admit to this country Polish immigrants in such numbers so as to alleviate the hardships that presently exist within the Polish refugee camps in Austria, and in the meantime work to ensure an adequate supply of food and essential medical services to those still living in the Austrian refugee camps.

Madam Speaker: Does the House give its unanimous consent to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AID

CANADIAN COMMITMENT TO DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my motion also arises out of the fact that today is International Food Day. I hope my motion will meet with the same success as that of the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) earlier. In light of the fact that current trends will see about a billion people suffering from hunger and malnutrition by the year 2000, and that in 1980 Canadian development assistance was reduced to .42 per cent of our gross national product, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That the Government of Canada honour its commitment to meet the official United Nations target for development assistance of .7 per cent of our GNP.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

FUNDING FOR AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, farmers under the Farm Credit Corporation are faced with unreasonably high interest rate increases and a very limited amount of working capital in the fund. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House call on the government and the minister responsible to reconsider their attack against the farm economy and arrive at a reasonable interest rate that will be workable for the expansion of the farm economy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POST OFFICE

INAUGURATION OF CROWN CORPORATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of some urgency under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Today, to mark the official transformation of the Post Office into a Crown corporation, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will be getting the symbolic last and first letters. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That, in the letter to the Prime Minister, the following note be enclosed:

Dear Pierre:
Just a note, to let you know
The 30-cent stamp will be quite a blow
To Canadians from coast to coast
When each day they go to post
Letters to their kith and kin
With news from home contained therein
A home they'll lose to interest rates
While we continue to blame the fates;
So take a stand, oh, mighty "me",
And reduce for stamps the price to be
For if you don't, my travelling chum,
Next time you'll be booted in the Place where you sit and contemplate the Universe unfolding as you think it should.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HOUSING

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. There currently exists a mortgage crisis in Canada that is sucking citizens deeper and deeper into the watery grave of foreclosure and debt. The government is stealing the equity of home owners by virtue of its current policy, or rather lack of policy on housing and mortgage rates.

As a case in point, a husband and wife, both teachers, with a combined salary of $42,000, put down $30,000 on an average Vancouver home of $150,000. By stretching, they paid 35 per cent of their income to meet monthly mortgage payments of $1,300. One year later their payments leaped to $2,100 per month, which effectively gouged 63 per cent of their income. They cannot sell, even at the loss of their $30,000—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That preamble is really a bit long. It is not exactly in the form a Standing Order 43 should be presented. I would ask the hon. member to move his motion.

Mr. Wenman: Even if they could sell, the vacancy rate in Vancouver is .1 per cent. These people are in dire straits. I therefore move—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Please let us know what you are moving.

Mr. Wenman: I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis):

That the government make mortgage interest a tax deduction or a tax credit, and that limits be placed on mortgage interest increases upon renewal.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

DECENTRALIZATION OF DIVISIONS AND SECTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, in the light of the announcement by the Minister of Finance that 106 jobs in the philatelic mail order section of the Post Office will be moved to Antigonish in his riding, and in the light of the announcement to a managers' meeting in Montreal last week confirming that the citizenship records division of the Secretary of State's department will be relocated in Sydney, Nova Scotia, and in the light of the promises of other Liberal Members of Parliament to put jobs in their ridings, by decentralizing the Civil Service, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That this House demands that the Liberal government put a stop to the wasteful, demoralizing, and cost ineffective program of balkanizing Canada's civil service.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

SUPPLYING OF FUEL TO FROBISHER BAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of the fact gas prices in Frobisher Bay are 33 per cent higher than in Ottawa, and home heating oil is 60 per cent higher, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Supply and Services take immediate steps to extricate the government from its current 15-year contract with Shell Oil to provide fuel to Frobisher Bay, and to have the government, through Petro-Canada, assume full responsibility for the provision of gas and home heating fuel in the far north.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VIA RAIL

CALL FOR SUSPENSION OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL CANCELLING PASSENGER SERVICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, since the federal cabinet has again broken its trust with the Canadian people by abolishing some 20 per cent of the VIA Rail passenger system, without reference to Parliament or any recourse to public hearings, and given that the Minister of Transport has confirmed his incompetence by stating falsely that "Railways are one of the least energy-efficient, energy-economic methods of transportation", I therefore move, pursuant to Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell):

That the cabinet orders enacted on August 6, 1981 under Subsection 64(1) of the National Transportation Act be immediately suspended so that all VIA Rail services shall be continued beyond November 15, 1981, and also that no new service cuts be contemplated until a thorough appraisal can be made of the important role of VIA Rail in meeting the transportation needs of Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SOCIAL SECURITY

RELIEF URGED FOR PENSIONERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, whereas statements made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) over the past 18 months reveal the fact that the government had identified the suffering of those pensioners who live on incomes below the currently accepted poverty line, and because the government has taken no action to relieve the suffering of those people who comprise more than half of all Canadian pensioners, mostly women, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright):

That this House instructs the Minister of Finance to stop trying to solve the problem of inflation on the backs of pensioners and include in his budget substantial relief for those elderly people currently living on incomes below the poverty line.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON COST INCREASES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The CPI figures this morning indicate that gasoline and heating oil prices have risen an incredible 46 per cent to 55 per cent during the past 12 months. The minister knows that this represents a huge tax increase to the federal government. Also the minister said in the House that he will not fight his battles on the backs of the poor. In his 18 months of office why has the minister done nothing or taken no action to help people who just cannot cope with energy price increases of that magnitude?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have just two comments to make about the question.

Mr. Nielsen: How about an answer?

Mr. MacEachen: The first one is that the hon. member has been among those who have advocated more rapid energy price increases than we have provided for in the agreement with the province of Alberta.

Mr. Clark: That is a falsehood.

Mr. MacEachen: I draw to the attention of the hon. Leader of the Opposition the comments made by the member who has just answered the question at the recent Conservative national meeting, in which he spoke quite forcefully about the necessity of substantial energy price increases. I happen to agree with him on that point. There are price increases involved that have been indicated from the very beginning. What we have done in an energy price agreement with the province of Alberta is to bring about a settlement which has placed less of a burden on the consumers of Canada than he would have permitted as a member of the former Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADDITIONAL COSTS TO FARMERS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I can play with figures the same way as the minister can play with figures. The point is that the prices for energy have risen 46 per cent to 55 per cent. That has been taken up largely by taxes for the federal government. My question was: why has the minister done nothing to return that to those people who just cannot cope with those price increases?

My supplementary question concerns farmers. The farmers have been hit not only by high energy prices which affect their fuel costs, as well as costs of their fertilizer made from natural gas, but also by interest rates. Obviously this will mean higher food prices to all Canadians.

Why, in his 18 months in office, has the minister failed to address this issue, an issue which will cause countless Canadians to stretch their food budgets tighter and tighter and make it much more difficult to live in the country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am not sure whether the hon. member is now asserting that the Government of Canada should totally cushion the impact of energy price increases. I gather that that is not his position. It is essential, in the interests of the operation of the economy that, as much as possible, energy price increases be absorbed. I want to tell him that very shortly after we formed the government, we increased substantially payments to those most in need in Canada, as we said we would. It was an increase in the Guaranteed Income Supplement which was much more generous than any proposal ever contemplated by the former government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: We constantly remind hon. members of the opposition of this fact, that the GIS increase was undertaken, and that it is fully indexed against inflation. That, in our view, covered the group which most needed our attention. I agree with the hon. member that, if our financial circumstances warranted it, it would be desirable to try to protect more and more groups, but we did say that we would help those who needed help most, and we provided that help.

• (1120)

Mr. Nielsen: You also said you would keep fuel prices down.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR MAINTENANCE OF INDEXATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the minister has just been presented with a windfall over the next five years of over $50 billion. Surely the minister can find room for some of that money to be addressed to these very specific problems and still take into account the importance of reducing the federal budget deficit.

The minister knows that this $50 billion in taxes is about the most regressive form of tax that could be levied on the Canadian people. Another very regressive form of taxation would be the removal of indexation on the personal tax deductions. Would the minister today, if he is not willing to make any effort to help those people hurt by the energy price increase, state in this House that he will not remove indexation from the personal tax deductions?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in a sense I am confronted with the same dilemma that every Minister of Finance faces before a budget, that is, to be asked to disclose by denial, the contents of a budget.

Mr. Jarvis: You have done it before.

Mr. MacEachen: I have no comment to make on the hon. member's question except to say that I would not recommend that the Conservative Party spend funds this year to advertise against indexation, as they did before the last budget.

FORESTRY

LAY-OFFS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and it deals with the depressing state of the British Columbia forest industry. In August of this year the unemployment rate in the forest industry was 11.8 per cent. One month later it had jumped to nearly 18 per cent, not including lay-offs. What is happening in British Columbia is that, on a daily basis now, hundreds if IWA workers are being laid off across the province. Many people with as much as 35 years of seniority are being laid off because of market conditions. This is having a devastating effect on communities across the province. Entire communities are falling on their faces.

It seems to me that the time has come for this minister to say what he is going to do, not only to assist that industry but to help the people of British Columbia who, for the first time ever, have fallen down because of the high interest rate policy of this government.

Mr. MacEachen: What is the question?

Mrs. Mitchell: They don't care about British Columbia.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would be glad to answer the question, but I did not hear a question in the statement made by—

Mr. Clark: You have not answered one in two years.

Mr. Riis: Whether it is called Thatcher economics or Reaganomics or MacEachenomics, high interest rates have devastated the B.C. forest industry.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Riis: What are you going to do about it? What is the minister going to do about that industry and the people who are being so adversely affected? That is the question.

Mr. MacEachen: That is a statement.

Mr. Riis: That is a question.

Mr. Clark: It only affects western Canada. He doesn't care.

Mr. Nielsen: He is going to move the stamp collection.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance and it arises from his replies to my colleague, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre. The three issues on the minds of Canadians are interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1125)

Miss Carney: While the modest drop in the bank rate this week is welcome, it still means that most small businesses are paying at least one per cent over prime, or 21 per cent, to stay in business. Our party feels that interest rates will have to drop sharply before Canadians feel the economy is under control.

Does the minister find the current levels of interest rates and inflation to be acceptable, since he is apparently prepared to do nothing about them?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, I certainly do not find them to be acceptable. I have frequently expressed my views on that subject. It is my objective to do everything possible, within the capacity of the budget, to help reduce interest rates. I have found no easy way of reducing interest rates in an inflationary environment.

Mr. Crosbie: Speak to Herb Gray. He had all the answers.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre spoke about the inflation rate which was announced today. It is still a high inflation rate. It is not possible, in my view, to make a substantial reduction in interest rates until we succeed in bringing down the inflation rate in this country and in other countries of the world. I share the hon. member's concern about interest rates, and will seek her assistance in doing everything possible to bring down the inflation rate in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADVICE GIVEN BY ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also addressed to the Minister of Finance. I think I speak for the members of our party when I say that, while his views are welcome, action speaks louder than words.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: This week the Economic Council of Canada said that the government's high interest rate policies can reduce inflation only at heavy cost to the economy. Therefore, I ask why is the minister continuing to defy the advice of the official economic advisers to the Government of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not know what the hon. member has in mind with respect to advice received from the advisers, to the government. I think it is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance to accept or reject advice, depending on its suitability at the time it is given. However, on this point, I am not aware of rejecting anyone who has come forward with advice that makes sense and which would reduce interest rates.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REPORTED PAYMENTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA MULTIPLE MURDER CASE

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. I want to ask him whether he is aware of any circumstances whereby the RCMP or their agents pay, or expedite the payment of money to accused persons or their families, in trust or otherwise, for the purpose of obtaining evidence relevant to the offence with which an accused is charged. In this connection, I refer specifically to the Olson multiple murder charges in British Columbia. I would ask the hon. minister if he would clarify this situation, and also ascertain whether there has been any attempt to suppress the media concerning these reports which, of course, may or may not be true.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I am fully aware of the circumstances to which the hon. member is referring, but in view of the fact that the matter is presently before courts I think it would be inappropriate for me to say anything at all about it which might affect the process in any way.

EFFECT ON PAROLE SYSTEM

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I can respect the feelings of my colleague in this matter, but the implications of this matter, if true, are tremendous under our present parole correctional system, because this kind of payment could lead to a situation where an accused could conceivably be released after a fairly short period of time, and he or his family could profit by the payments made in order to expedite his conviction.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Since there was no question asked in the supplementary, I will return to the question and simply note that, so far as I am aware, no efforts have been made—certainly none by the Solicitor General or anyone in my ministry—to suppress or influence the press in any way on this subject.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my questions have to do with a growing nightmare for many tens of thousands of Canadian home owners who have urea formaldehyde foam insulation, and who are victims of one arm of government not knowing what the other arm is doing. We now have at least two different cabinet ministers saying two different things, and the others are running for cover.

I want to ask the President of the Treasury Board if he authorized his then parliamentary secretary, now the Minister of State without portofolio, to say, on September 18:

● (1130)

The Treasury Board has accepted the principle of evaluating damages, and compensating victims.

How does this square with the statement made in Vancouver last weekend by another cabinet colleague, the government Leader in the Senate, who said:

No consideration has been given by the government to assisting UFFI victims.

Which statement is correct? What is the government's position in getting people out of the mess that you got them into?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, my former parliamentary secretary, who is now Minister of State, is not in the House. I think the hon. member neglected to mention that a subsequent statement was made, as I recall, clarifying those remarks.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What is the position?

Mr. Scott: Madam Speaker, perhaps the President of the Treasury Board will consult with his new cabinet colleague and find out what he did say, and get him to clarify his remarks. It still remains the biggest, most gigantic goof-up by this government or any other government I can remember. The statement made yesterday by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to the effect that testing is being done and results will be revealed, offers no consolation whatever to the many hundreds of thousands of angry and worried people out there who do not know whether to take the insulation out or not.

TESTS CONDUCTED BY ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I will put my supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has her department determined what is a safe level of formaldehyde gas in the home? Since her own expert advisory committee on UFFI has reservations about single readings of formaldehyde measurements and is not prepared to recommend any level of formaldehyde exposure as safe, have her officials told the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that the tests being conducted at this time may, at best, be suspect, if not meaningless.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Madam Speaker, I have never said such a thing nor did the senior officials of my department. I would simply wish to clear up a few points and say that within the government's working mechanism concerned with that most unfortunate issue, namely the committee chaired by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, my senior officials worked on the basis of the report drafted by experts on urea formaldehyde foam and indicated that as a result of several readings—and we have given the specifications—a certain level of toxic vapours would be considered, keeping in mind the limited scope of the scientific knowledge of Canadians on this subject, as being a danger index and that is what we are telling the people.

[English]

EFFECT OF UREA FORMALDEHYDE ON HOUSE SALES IN WINNIPEG

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the minister in charge of housing. This week the Winnipeg Real Estate Board has taken the unprecedented action of delisting houses that have urea formaldehyde insulation in them from their list of houses for sale. In fact they have gone even further. They are also delisting homes which had urea formaldehyde insulation in them but have had that insulation removed.

In view of the devastating effect this will have on home owners, not only will home owners be faced with a loss in terms of having to remove the insulation but they will now have difficulty even listing homes for sale in the Winnipeg area, what responsibility does the minister feel he has, in view of the fact that the insulation was approved by him and accepted through the CHIP program? What advice does the minister have for people who are now trying to sell their homes, and cannot?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the use of UFFI was one of the approved substances—

Miss MacDonald: By you.

Mr. Cosgrove: —as the hon. member has indicated, on the list by CMHC under the CHIP program, for which there was a subsidy provided by the taxpayers themselves.

The question of responsibility flowing from that role—

Miss MacDonald: Is yours.

Mr. Cosgrove: —the question of the government's response in all of these circumstances, as has been indicated by my colleague previously, is under the chairmanship of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The government is presently carrying out the testing and it is also looking at the area of responsibility. When that committee, under the chairmanship of that minister, reports, the answer will be available.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

DECENTRALIZATION PROGRAM

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. There were reports last night in the press and again this morning concerning an announcement that is alleged to have been made by the Minister of Finance that the government will be moving, to his riding, the philatelic mail order section of the Post Office. There has also been an announcement that it is the intention of the government to move the citizenship records division of the Department of the Secretary of State to Sydney, Nova Scotia.

I want to ask the minister whether or not that is true. If it is true, why is it being done in view of the fact that this program which the former Liberal government entered into, was perhaps the most cost ineffective one a Liberal government has ever entered into in its checkered history?

Mr. Crosbie: Checkered is right.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, it is well known that there were a number of cancellations made by the previous Tory government, all of which, as I recall, were moves which happened to fall in Liberal ridings, such as the philatelic service in Antigonish, Nova Scotia.

Mr. Nielsen: Which ones didn't?

Mr. Johnston: The decentralization policy is one that was adopted by this government many years ago, and one which, I understand, has general approval as being a very sound policy in terms of helping develop certain regions of the country where there is additional employment and where there are cost benefits to be realized, and where sensitivity and service to the public are maintained.

This government has never backed off the policy, per se, of decentralization, in keeping with the criteria I have just mentioned. In due course I suspect that ministers will be making announcements from time to time of specific decentralization projects. For example, I recall my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue last year announced the move to Jonquières of the taxation data centre.

JUSTIFICATION FOR PROGRAM

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the minister is quite right. There were 19 projects cancelled or deferred by the Clark government for very good reasons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: All in Liberal ridings.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The cost was astronomical. It was $200 million in 1979 dollars. If the government required restraint at that time, this wasteful government requires even more restraint today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Is there any possible way that such a wasteful, demoralizing, cost ineffective and patronage-ridden program can be justified in terms of restraint? Has the minister considered what his responsibilities are as President of the Treasury Board, who is supposed to be the guardian of the public purse rather than the guy who lets it all run out?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I neglected to congratulate the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton on his elevation to critic of Treasury Board policy. I would like to welcome him to that post.

I am surprised the hon. member would regard this as an exercise in patronage. When I look at completion of projects, I see at Surrey, B.C., a data centre. I see in Winnipeg, Manitoba—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is waste.

Mr. Johnston: I see in Fredericton, New Brunswick, in Halifax, Nova Scotia, and so on over a period of years, very successful decentralization projects. I am sure people in those areas would take great issue with the post facto declaration of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are a spendthrift.

THE ECONOMY

INCREASED COSTS OF GOODS AND SERVICES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Last year when there was a major increase in the cost of living, on a certain day the Prime Minister gave the condescending advice to Canadians that they should change their priorities. With the figures that came out today, with the single exception of food prices which went down for seasonal reasons, we have had a record increase in the cost of home ownership, a record increase in the cost of transportation, and a record increase in energy prices. Since these costs affect all Canadians, what advice does the Prime Minister give today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am sure that any advice I would give would be described by the hon. member as condescending, and I wonder why he is asking me for advice.

An hon. Member: Kissy, kissy.

An hon. Member: Take a trip.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, here we go again.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1140)

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Those who answer the questions I think could help the situation by simply concentrating on the questions rather than on the hecklers. I guess that does encourage the hecklers. I would ask the Prime Minister, and others, if they would just concentrate on answering the questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I could not understand what you were saying because the howling mob over there was making so much noise.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I realize I have the sympathy of the members opposite. I want to tell them now that I am not going to raise my voice in order to be heard over a howling mob, which is a fascist tactic in the first place. Nothing obliges me in this House to shout, and I do not plan to do it. They can interpret it the way they want. I will give answers if people are interested in listening to the answers, but otherwise I wont't.

BANKS AND BANKING

PROPOSED MORTGAGE SCHEME

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, for two days in a row the Prime Minister has used some heckling on this side of the House as an excuse to avoid answering serious questions. When is he going to assume the responsibilities of his office? I would like to ask him a question quite specifically concerning one area of major increase, and I refer to the cost of home ownership which went up some 13.9 per cent, a record increase, as indicated in the figures announced today.

Simultaneously it came out today that the banks, whose profits are at record levels, have announced what only can be described as a sleazy scheme to perpetuate unacceptably high mortgage rates and increased debt loads for home owners. Will the Prime Minister assure the people of Canada that the government will not accept this proposed scheme on the one hand and, secondly, will the government assume its responsibility by directing the banks to put up mortgage money that ordinary families in this country can afford?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would point out that the hon. member had absolute silence when he asked his question, and I expect that kind of silence when I give the answer. It is very simple. He talks about a "sleazy scheme". I do not know what the scheme is, Madam Speaker. I have never heard of it.

REQUEST THAT ACTION BE TAKEN WITH RESPECT TO BANKS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, it is a little disturbing that the man who sits just to his right, symbolically and literally, has his officials in active discussion, according to news reports, with the banks in developing this sleazy scheme. I want to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is aware of the scheme the banks and other financial institutions have said they have agreed to and, if so, will he assure the House that the government will not accept it? Secondly, quite apart from that, will he take concrete action to make mortgage money available via the banks whose profits are at unacceptable levels, so ordinary families can retain their homes?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member asks about a scheme that has been proposed by the banks. I noticed there was a press report saying that the banks had proposed a scheme that would produce mortgage rates of 16 per cent. The hon. member has added "banks and other financial institutions". To my knowledge there has been no scheme proposed by the banks and other financial institutions.

I mentioned yesterday that a week ago today the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Bank of Montreal released a proposed plan by which mortgage rates would be made available for renewers, and that plan would cost the Treasury on an annual basis about $500 million. If that is the plan the hon. member has in mind, it certainly has not been accepted by the government because, as I understand it, it would not be directed specifically to those most in need of assistance and might have spill-over effects that would help, to a great extent, the high income earners of the country.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF POLISH REFUGEES

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The minister is no doubt aware of the extreme hardships facing Poland today and the mounting concern which Canadians with Polish relatives are feeling in their efforts to assist family members. Does the minister have any plans to respond to this increasingly serious situation for the Polish people, over and above the measures already announced for those Poles in the camps in Austria?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, during the last year we increased the level of nationals from eastern Europe from 2,000 to 4,000. This summer, in fact, we took an additional thousand and sent a special team to our offices in Vienna to process them. That team has just returned. We are meeting with them to discuss what additional measures might be taken, and I can tell the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park that this weekend, and on Monday, I will be meeting with members of the Polish Congress and community in Canada to discuss the additional measures we are presently looking at, to make sure we have full consultation with that community before we go ahead. I will be pleased to report to the member and the House on those measures as soon as those discussions are completed.

VIA RAIL

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RECONSIDER DECISION ON FUTURE OF PASSENGER SERVICES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Each day more and more Canadians become horrified and angered at the prospect of losing their rail service, a service that is needed and used; for example, the Atlantic which carries 200 to 250 passengers in winter months and 400 to 500 in the summer months, the Super Continental which carries an average of 350 passengers daily, the Toronto-Havelock service, which carries 200 to 300 passengers daily, and the Toronto-Barrie service which carries 425 to 500 passengers daily.

Since the minister's decision is obviously based upon inaccurate or outdated information, Canadians and members of this House of Commons are wondering why the minister is proceeding in such a roughshod manner, ignoring the wishes of the people who are directly affected, ignoring the rights of Parliament and the CTC. I would ask the minister if he would not now reconsider his decision and at least defer the implementation of that decision until all the facts can be made known, either through the avenue of the CTC or by a proper reference to the Standing Committee on Transport?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, again today the hon. member asks me the same three questions in one sentence that he asked me two days ago. I have already given my answer to them. I am quite eager and willing to go to the committee of which he is a member, and explain the government's decisions, give the statistics, and elaborate on the policy we have adopted.

He should not give the whole series of numbers of railway travellers in the country. This is all well known. Last year VIA sold 7 million tickets and the amount of subsidies paid to VIA was $490 million. If one can divide, it is quite clear that every time VIA sells a ticket it costs the Department of Transport $70 in taxpayers' money.

The policy we have adopted is a rational one. It is based on the adoption of the concept of intercity transportation, the maintenance of one transcontinental, the maintenance of service to communities which would otherwise be isolated, and the transfer of commuter services to the provinces, where they belong in the first place.

I am quite eager and willing, and I anticipate with pleasure the delight of explaining all that to the committee. But there is no possibility of changing our position, which was a mature one, well thought out by the committee and the cabinet. It went to the economic committee of cabinet three or four times. It went to cabinet three or four times. We are not about to change that decision, which was a difficult one to make and was made in very great seriousness.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I am sure the minister knows that the figures which he cites are as readily challengeable as his statement that you revitalize a rail passenger system by abandoning it. I challenge that statement in the same way. Since the announcement by the minister there have been obvious alternatives advanced, even by his own department and by VIA Rail, by which those heavily travelled routes could be retained while at the same time effecting some cost savings in the over-all VIA budget.

● (1150)

Would the minister not now consider producing those documents and studies, and refer those documents to the standing committee so they could be adequately considered and individual Canadians directly and indirectly affected will have the opportunity to come before that committee and respond? That will necessitate a deferral. Would the minister consider doing that, in light of the obvious alternatives which may produce a desired saving while at the same time saving some of the heavily travelled routes?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, what the committee will do is subject to the will of the committee. I understand its very able chairman is discussing that now with members from the different parties. We will leave it to him to develop a consensus on the subject.

I am aware that the member, who was my predecessor in the Department of Transport, was also concerned about the rising subsidies being paid to VIA. I understand he paid a lot of attention to it. The only conclusion I can reach from what he says now is that at the last moment he would have chickened out of making a decision.

INDUSTRY

LOCATION OF AEROSPACE TRAINING CENTRE INSTITUTE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): My question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In July a federally appointed task force studying the possibility of establishing an aerospace training centre institute recommended that it be established in Winnipeg. These recommendations were to be passed on to the President of the Treasury Board. Could the minister inform me whether he has made a decision and, if so, when will the funds be allocated so construction can be started in Winnipeg?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would like to answer that question because the report was prepared under my direction. We are presently examining a report—

Mr. Clark: In what capacity?

Mr. Axworthy: As the minister of employment looking at the whole area of supply of skilled labour in the aerospace industry. We are looking at a number of recommendations made by that industrial group. It has just put forward a number of proposals about how we can genuinely increase the supply of skilled workers for this very critical industry across Canada. We are looking at and discussing that report with those directly concerned, and we will be making recommendations to cabinet shortly. At that time I am sure the hon. member will be well informed of that decision.

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT TO WINNIPEG SITE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): There seems to be considerable pressure from the Quebec caucus and from the minister of energy that they want this institute located in Quebec. Will the minister inform us whether the institute will be definitely built in Winnipeg? Will he be able to fight off these Quebec forces? Let us stop writing off the west.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Cheap!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I want to point out to the hon. member that it is not our style or approach to pit one region against the other.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: I also want to say in this case—

An hon. Member: Stop smiling, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: —because the question of supplying skilled workers for the aerospace industry is one of national concern affecting all regions of the country, I am sure we will find proposals which will satisfy the needs of every region of Canada and not select one against the other.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—POLICY OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Yesterday, following my questions to the Prime Minister, I carefully read Hansard, as well as going over the tapes. I feel my question was not answered at all. I want to ask the Prime Minister, in his position as head of our country going to Cancun for the meeting on North-South issues, and because El Salvador is a typical example of an underdeveloped country suffering great oppression, what is Canada's policy on El Salvador at this time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, there are two problems I believe the hon. member has in mind. One is the economic North-South problem. The other is the political problem of the civil war in that country.

I would be in agreement with the conclusion of the hon. member and the hon. members of the committee who discussed the North-South problem that there would be less tension in the world if there were more justice in the rapport between the poor and rich countries. If there were more justice, there would be less disturbance in those countries. As far as the North-South tack on the problem of El Salvador is concerned, I think I would be in harmony with the hon. member's thinking, in that regard.

In regard to the political problem, particularly civil and military disturbances, I cannot agree with the position that the hon. member suggested yesterday was that of a great number of countries in supporting the Portillo-Mitterrand statement. I think it is an exaggeration to say their position has been supported by many countries. A few Latin American countries, including Cuba and Nicaragua have supported it, but I am informed that Panama has not, nor has Norway, contrary to what the hon. member has said. Our position has been stated in the House by the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

An hon. Member: Both with Conservative governments.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member has great knowledge on the subject—I agree with the minister behind me, Norway is not a Conservative government. Nor is Panama.

An hon. Member: You had better check.

An hon. Member: They have not taken office yet.

Mr. Trudeau: We know that the government in El Salvador has called for elections at the municipal and regional level. They are organizing those elections to be as free an expression of the peoples' will as possible. They realize the danger of strife from one side or another.

They are planning to make those elections available to the people through the television and radio media. They are honestly trying to get an opinion of the people on what the government of that country should be.

They have asked the OAS to send representatives. I think it is incumbent on both sides to make an effort to have these elections—at least in the municipal and regional levels—held in a fair and just manner. If they can, that is the proper way to set up a government, not establishing a co-junta which would not have the people's authority. If there can be a fair test of the people's will, I believe that is the course that should be followed and encouraged.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STEPS TO IMPLEMENT CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I believe the chance of having elections at any level in El Salvador has passed as a possibility. Indications are that violence has cleaned out all the opposition or they are now in exile. Would the Prime Minister tell us what Canada would be ready to do in fulfilling the policy he believes is still possible?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the government of El Salvador has suggested there might be international observers apart from those of the OAS whom they have invited. That would open the door to other international observers. Maybe Canada, maybe members of this House would volunteer to be observers in that process. If so—

Mr. Paproski: I will go.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member from Edmonton says he would like to go.

Mr. Paproski: I will go with you, Pierre, as long as you go first.

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure he would be a good target for those who don't like—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1200)

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I just noticed the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition seeking the floor. I would ask the hon. member to defer to his leader.

THE BUDGET

PRESENTATION ON TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 3

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a simple two-part question for the Minister of Finance. First, does the minister know the date of the budget? If he does know the date of the budget, will he have the courtesy to tell the House of Commons that date today?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will be glad to give the date to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. It had been my plan, as stated by the Prime Minister, to bring in the budget in the month of October. As the right hon. member knows, since that time the Prime Minister has suggested that there be a meeting of federal provincial premiers in that week. Because of that event and the probable necessity of taking action in the House, I have now decided to make it clear to hon. members that I have set the budget date for November 3.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO AID ELDERLY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we are pleased to at last have that date, although there are many people in the country who believe that acting on the economy is a priority more urgent than dealing precipitately with the Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My question now has to do with the contents of that budget. The Minister of Finance has spoken about the increase in the GIS. He will know that, according to both the Canadian Council on Social Development and Statistics Canada, even with that increase, some 1.5 million elderly Canadians are today living below the poverty line. He will also know that his energy policy has resulted in an increase in home heating fuels for these and other Canadians of 55 per cent. He will know that we proposed aid to those people, both through reduced increases in heating oil costs and an energy tax credit. He has refused to help those low-income Canadians.

Will the minister tell us now whether his budget will provide specific help for the 1.5 million elderly Canadians living below the poverty line, people who have been severely hurt by the deliberate policies of his government, or does he intend to ignore these people and leave them literally out in the cold this winter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, when the right hon. gentleman allowed his minister of finance to bring in a budget, he established a price schedule of energy increases which were higher than those that are now in place as a result of agreement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: When he permitted his minister of finance to bring in that price schedule, he also permitted him to bring in a budget that made absolutely no provision by way of increase in the guaranteed income supplement. We brought in that measure, which is significantly better for that group of people than the energy tax credit for which they would have had to wait a year and a half.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: A very brief supplementary for the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

PLIGHT OF PEOPLE WITH LOW INCOMES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the minister's statements today have the same truth as his statements about energy before the last election. I am not particularly interested in an exchange of arguments about figures with the Minister of Finance. I am interested in the plight of 1.5 million elderly Canadians living below the poverty line faced this year with a 55 per cent increase in the price of home heating fuel. The Progressive Conservative budget provided help to those Canadians. The Liberals refuse to help them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I would rather hope that there might not be that howling from the howling mob across the way.

Mr. Trudeau: What's the matter? Can't you take the heat?

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister asks if I can take the heat. The problem is that a million and a half low-income Canadians cannot take the cold this winter. They will not be able to. The Prime Minister might find the plight of elderly Canadians amusing. We on this side of the House do not find it amusing. We want the government to help them.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows it is past the time at which we should be getting to Routine Proceedings. I allowed the question, but it will have to be brief.

Mr. Clark: I should not have responded to the hecklers, Madam Speaker. I apologize for that. Will the Minister of Finance include in his budget some help to those low-income Canadians who have been so deeply imperilled by the price increases introduced directly by this government, or does he intend to continue to ignore low-income Canadians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I cannot understand why the Leader of the Opposition wants to erase from the record his period as Prime Minister when he proposed to this House energy price increases greater than those that are now in place because of an agreement reached between the government of Alberta and the federal government.

When this government was trying to get a better deal, trying to get the lowest possible increase in energy prices, the hon. member for St. John's West was telling the Premier of Alberta, "Hang in there, Peter". I did not hear the Leader of the Opposition asking him to lay off, or asking the Premier of Alberta to take a more moderate view. The fact is that the Leader of the Opposition said nothing. He had no energy policy in that period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

TABLINGS OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Thursday, October 15, 1981, and find that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PETITIONS

MISS MacDONALD—BURDEN OF HIGH MORTGAGE RENEWAL RATES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition from 768 residents of the city of Kingston, Kingston Township and Pittsburg Township, protesting the unbearable burden that high mortgage renewal rates are placing on home owners.

They fear the loss of their homes and ask that the government immediately introduce measures to relieve oppressed home owners and, at the same time, return unemployed building trades people to productive work. I feel that the views expressed in this petition have the endorsement of Canadians from coast to coast.

MR. CLARK—EFFECTS OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have more petitions to present today from individual Canadians who are bearing the burden of the deliberate high interest rate policy of the Government of Canada. Some of these petitions today come from the constituency of the minister responsible for housing. I would beg leave of the House to lay upon the Table the signatures of some 199 residents of the city of Scarborough.

In addition, I would like to add to the list of 3,478 names from Saint John, New Brunswick submitted earlier this week, a petition signed by an additional 2,311 residents of the city of Saint John seeking some redress from the deliberate high interest rate policy of the Liberal government.

MR. COSGROVE—REQUEST FOR COPIES OF PETITIONS

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, yesterday after the presenting of petitions I had someone approach your office with a request that apparently has not been made before, that copies of these petitions that are made available and obviously directed toward an area of jurisdiction that I entertain be made available to me so that I can respond individually to them.

Mr. Nielsen: You can get them any time you want. They are on the Table.

Madam Speaker: That can and will be done.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Order Paper Questions

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,996, 2,285, 2,685, 2,721 and 2,749.

[Text]

CABINET MINISTER USING DND AIRCRAFT

Question No. 1,996—Mr. Cossitt:

Will the Department of National Defence adopt a policy of making available at the end of each calendar month, a list of all aircraft used by cabinet ministers including the name of the ministers, the dates used and the points of origin and termination and any stops in between and (a) if so, on what date will it be adopted (b) if not, for what reasons?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): As stated in response to question No. 169, by Mr. Cossitt, which was tabled and printed in Hansard on October 7, 1980, page 3,419 and 3,420, travel on DND aircraft by cabinet ministers and Members of Parliament is controlled by the Minister of National Defence. The list of executive aircraft used by cabinet ministers, as approved by the Minister of National Defence in accordance with the guidelines outlined in question No. 169, will be available on a monthly basis effective October, 1981 (on request).

MR. ALAN MARTIN

Question No. 2,285—Mr. Lewis:

Was Mr. Alan Martin, a Liberal candidate in the 1980 election, employed by the government from February 18, 1980 to date and, if so (a) what was his annual salary and what were his duties (b) for how many working days was he employed (c) was an expense allowance paid to him and, if so, in what amount?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the office of the Auditor General is concerned:

(a) For the period June 5, 1980 to September 30, 1980, Mr. Alan Martin was employed on contract at the rate of $450 per day, as a member of an Audit Advisory Committee;

(b) 4.6 days;

(c) No.

In so far as the Department of Public Works is concerned: Mr. Alan Martin was engaged by contract on July 21, 1980.

(a) No annual salary was involved. Payment for services was at the rate of $350 per diem. His duties were as follows:

"To prepare a report including recommendations for management improvement in the office of the minister, based on an analysis of the office organization, methods and procedures and personnel employment and requirements, with due regard for effectiveness, efficiency and economy."

(b) The equivalent of seven working days.

(c) Travel expenses were paid in the amount of $322.15.

In so far as the National Capital Commission is concerned: Mr. Alan Martin has not been employed by the commission. However, he was appointed a member of the National Capital Commission for a term of three years, effective March 13, 1981. As a member he receives no salary or emolument but he is entitled to be paid reasonable travelling and other expenses incurred by him in the performance of his duties. (National Capital Act. 1958, C. 37, S7).

In so far as the office of the Comptroller General of Canada: Mr. Alan Martin was employed under a personal services contract in September, 1980, and paid a fee of $1,225 plus travel expenses of $265.70 for a total of $1,490.70. His duties were as follows:

> "to review parliamentary documents and provide advice to the minister on their appropriateness".

In so far as the other departments and agencies are concerned: No.

COMPLAINTS TO POST OFFICE

Question No. 2,685—Mr. Beatty:

1. Since March 1, 1980, what was the total deficit of the Post Office Department?

2. For the same period, how many complaints of lost or delayed mail were received by the Postmaster General?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): 1. Since March 1, 1980, to June 30, 1981, Canada Post's total deficit was approximately $685 million.

2. For the same period as above, the Postmaster General received 5,661 complaints of lost or delayed mail.

PERSONS ALLOWED BAIL ON CHARGES OF RAPE AND MURDER

Question No. 2,721—Mr. Beatty:

1. For each year since 1975, by province or territory, how many persons were permitted to await trial on bail on charges of (a) murder (b) rape and how many (i) did not subsequently report for trial at the appointed time and place and what was the offence with which they were charged (ii) are currently still at large?

2. How many such persons (a) were ultimately convicted of the crime with which they had been charged (b) are currently awaiting trial?

3. How many such persons were charged with committing a second offence while on bail and, of these, how many (a) were subsequently convicted of the second offence (b) are still awaiting trial for the second offence?

4. How many persons charged with (a) murder (b) rape are currently out on bail awaiting trial and what is the distribution by province or territory?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development):

No information on which to base answers to this series of questions has ever been gathered on a national basis. The administration of criminal justice is, constitutionally, a matter for the provincial authorities. No consistent reliable or comparable data has been published which would aid in the answers to these questions.

However, it is hoped that programs now being developed by the new Canadian Centre for Justice Statistics, a section of Statistics Canada, will eventually permit such information to be collected on a national basis.

SOVIET DIPLOMATS EXPELLED

Question No. 2,749—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. During the calendar years 1968 to 1980, by country, how many individuals were declared persona non grata and expelled from the embassies of the U.S.S.R. and the Soviet satellites?

2. In each case (a) what was his/her name (b) did he/she have a connection with the KGB or the relevant national intelligence service and, if so, what was the connection?

3. Was a connection established between the diplomatic appointees to Canada and local Canadian organizations such as the FLQ or the Communist Party of Canada and, if so (a) what was the connection (b) which individuals were involved and with which organizations?

4. Were any of the individuals declared persona non grata elsewhere, before coming to Canada, and, if so, how many and what was the name in each case?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Twenty.

2. (a)

V.I. Sokolov	U.S.S.R.	1980
V.F. Trofimov	U.S.S.R.	1980

(b) It is not the practice to reveal what is known about specific intelligence service affiliation of foreign officials.

3. In no instance was the basis for declaring these officials persona non grata related to a connection with the FLQ or the Communist Party of Canada.

4. As far as the government can determine, none of the above individuals had previously been declared persona non grata elsewhere.

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed, from Thursday, October 15, consideration of Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada Lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and Motions Nos. 4 (Mr. Fulton), 34 (Mr. Ittinuar), 51 (Mr. Fulton), 52 (Mr. Ittinuar), 53 (Mr. Ittinuar), 55 (Mr. Lalonde), 56 (Mr. Fulton) and 57 (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order with regard to the groupings. I do apologize for raising another one, but I want to ask the indulgence of the House to alter the grouping slightly. You will note in the decision of the Chair regarding the grouping of Motions Nos. 4, 34, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, and 57 that the voting procedure to be followed was that the question on Motion No. 51 would be put to the House and the vote on this motion would dispose of Motion No. 4.

Having had an opportunity to look over both of those motions, I want to suggest it would be inappropriate to dispose of Motion No. 4 with a vote on Motion No. 51, given that Motion No. 4 deals simply with the clause of the bill dealing with definitions, while the clause referred to in Motion No. 51 relates to the provision dealing directly with oil and gas spills. Thus the two are not necessarily related one to the other. The definitions clause would stand on its own merit, even if Motion No. 51 were to be rejected.

I should like to ask that we divide Motions Nos. 51 and 4 into two separate votes.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I should like to have the attention of the Chair because I have a suggestion to make that concerns the Chair. I had no prior knowledge that the hon. member was going to raise this point of order. Since it requires a careful reading of the motions that he speaks about, and since there is no urgency in making an order on the matter today, I suggest the Chair hear final argument, if any, on Monday, since we will be on the same item of business on Monday, and suspend any action at this time.

Mr. Deans: I have no objection to that suggestion.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Agreed.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, having spoken on this subject so many times before in the House of Commons, my first response to an invitation to speak about environmental legislation might simply have been to file my many speeches contained in Hansard and the minutes from the environment committee meetings that I have made over the past seven years.

During that time the government has continued to fail to add real substance to all environmental legislation. As far back as January 31, 1978, the then member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine said, of my private member's attempts to place environmental legislation before this House of Commons: "First, I would like to congratulate my colleague from Fraser Valley West because, as I have just said, he is a member of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and is greatly concerned with the environment. It could be perhaps said, as all members of this committee are aware, he certainly shows great obstinacy about this problem."

That is why I am standing again today, Mr. Speaker. I should like to continue that obstinacy and my fight for the environmental ethic that is right, that is known to be right, if not by this generation of legislators, certainly the next generation of legislators that will replace us here.

So often the government has brought forward legislation on the environment that is sound in principle, sound in intent; but when you start to look at it, it is full of qualifications, discretion and loopholes; so full, in fact, that the intent is totally negated in the final version of the legislation. This bill is certainly no exception. Having spoken out strongly and in a supportive manner on the environment, the environment has still been given a back seat to the expediency of the energy crisis.

The point is important because of the flexibility the government has established. The response by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is that we need to have good faith—that the government will act and that the government needs discretion. It needs a lot of "may". There are a lot of "ifs"; if this happens, something else will happen. The "mays", the "ifs", the "discretion", are subjective. This subjectiveness is relative and changeable according to the basic intent of the individual minister that holds that portfolio, of the government and of the broad will of the population meeting any immediate crisis as it sees it at that time. Therefore, we need to look at the government's intent.

As I look at the government's intent over the past seven frustrating years, I find that intent is very questionable. While it might initially sound good, the practice has not lived up to any of the billing that has, in fact, been brought forward in the placement of legislation before the House of Commons. For example, one of the main factors we see in this legislation is that the Department of the Environment is not the "need" agency again.

What does this allow for? The Department of the Environment, when the environment is being endangered, is the front line of protest. The Department of the Environment listens sympathetically. It indicates it will press the government; but, of course, it makes the usual qualification that all it can do is press the government because it has no authority.

I am not just imagining these things, Mr. Speaker. These are statements that have been made by ministers. These excuses have already been used time and time again when we are faced with an environmental crisis or threat of any kind.

For example, in 1976 we were talking about Beaufort Sea drilling. We had legislation before us at that time that provided that the minister of the environment "may"—again at his discretion—do certain things. Which minister was the legislation talking about? It was not talking about the then minister of the environment. Even the Minister of the Environment has "mays" and "ifs"; but in this case they are talking about the minister of energy.

● (1220)

In response to that drilling in the Beaufort Sea, the minister of the environment said on March 19, 1976, in the forestry committee, in reply to a question by myself:

> Of course, we do not have the authority to oppose in the sense that we can block the decision.

They can only advise. Those are the words of the minister. Under the bill before us the Minister of the Environment will also be able to say, "I do not have the authority". He does not have the authority because this bill did not give the authority to the correct minister, the Minister of the Environment.

Then he was asked, "Who has the authority?" He went on to say:

> The permit is issued by Northern Affairs, not by us.

Thus, they are not responsible, and that is the end of the issue. Where do we go from there? We go back to the vested interest instead of in fact a person who has the specific vested interest of the environment and the capacity to act.

The next thing the government tends to do to ensure that one cannot pin down who is really responsible is that it divides the jurisdiction between two, three or four departments. Then each department in turn passes the buck to the next department, and then one gets going in this big circle. I have been through the circle. Anyone who has tried to do anything in the environment has been through the circle. By the time one gets through that circle, one is so tired and worn out, because there has been so much verbiage, that one does not know where to go, so one gives up. The process itself, the sand-in-the-gears process or the passing-the-buck process, in fact destroys the whole capacity of environmental people who are genuinely concerned. It destroys their whole thrust and, in effect, the vested interest rides over in its traditional manner through its access to government. This is again an example of split authority.

When I first came here I complained about these things, but I had no personal experience to show that they were true. Now I have sat through the proceedings of the committee and of the House of Commons. I see what is happening now. It is another piece of legislation where exactly the same thing will happen.

I asked the then minister of the environment, Mr. Marchand, whether he thought he should have the authority. I have referred to. Well, he wanted to say, "I think it would be a good idea", but he stopped right there, caught himself and realized that he was not supposed to say that. He went on to say:

> You know what kind of jurisdiction we have in Environment, and as the federal government. This jurisdiction is not only split between departments, it is split too between federal and provincial governments.

After we get through three federal departments, down through that cycle, then the next cycle to which we are referred is back to the provincial. Then after that we will be referred back to the municipal. I have been through that cycle too. We sat in White Rock and saw desperate local politicians watching an identified oil slick floating toward the shoreline. I might say that it was a beautiful shoreline. I was a member of the provincial legislature at that time. I was frustrated. I got on the telephone and called the provincial authorities. They said, "No, the oil slick is way out there. It is out in federal jurisdiction; there is nothing we can do." Then it floated to shore. As the tide went out, it was left on the shore and they said, "It is now on the shore; that is municipal jurisdiction". Of course, the municipality had no equipment to fight it. Then what happened? The oil sat there on the shore and in the end the municipality cleaned it up with a bunch of environmental volunteers. The government passed this buck from department to department.

The legislation before us maintains that trend. While it sounds good, it will ensure that there is very little effective result for the people who will be damaged or may be hurt by the actions of the government in co-operation with vested interests. By the way, I respect those vested interests. I respect the need for development. I want the need for development. I do not want to see environmental legislation ever become sand-in-the gears. The government shows an intention, but in fact it is a sand-in-the-gears process.

We need to clarify and make more expedient all environmental law. This bill had potential. When we started with this bill and its expression of intent, it had potential. Again, as expected, that potential has been limited to such an extent as to make it relatively ineffectual. There is another example. We can go from 1976 to 1979. One would think things would have improved three years later. In response to my question, as reported on page 3 of the March 19, 1976, committee meeting, Mr. Marchand said, "I do not have the authority." Actually in that case I think the minister did not want the authority or the responsibility because to be minister of the environment is not an easy job. It is a job where one must make decisions or should have to make decisions. One should be forced by legislation to be able to make decisions and to make decisions stick in the best interests of the environment and of the nation as a whole as it relates to its productivity. We see a shifting of responsibility. I talked about that oil spill and the minister replied on March 20, 1979:

> —in the case of this particular oil spill, the Coast Guard and the Ministry of Transport are the lead agencies.

Again it is, "Not me, not me". As we travel on through piece of legislation after piece of legislation, indeed it is unfortunate that these things continue to happen.

I have many specific concerns about this bill. My concerns relate mostly to the fact that this bill should have provided an opportunity to the House of Commons. It should have been one of our last opportunities to entrench environmental principles, values and ethics into the legislation. The reality of the government has shifted. The expediency has shifted slightly toward energy expediency as opposed to environmental reality. But this was a chance. We might not get another chance for a long time. I have been sitting here for a long time awaiting environmental legislation so that we could discuss the issues again and reinforce the issues. At a time when environment is slipping, it needs more emphasis, not less, in the longer term interests of our nation.

This specifically was an opportunity to include some form of automatic or compulsory before the fact environmental impact assessment rather than a specific environmental impact assessment law. We now have some review procedures which are very fuzzy and woolly on the "may" flexibility attitude. This would have been an opportunity to include some "shalls" and an automatic provision for environmental impact assessment.

Now we tend to wait for an accident to occur. The oil arrives on the shore or appears underneath the ocean from a broken pipeline or whatever. The damage is done. Then they say, "We must make an assessment of the damage." They are willing to assess the damage, but they are not really willing to put an assessment on the potential of damage to prevent it before it happens. The whole thrust of legislation starts from the crisis backwards, instead of anticipating and preparing for what might occur through an initial environmental impact assessment. I am not saying that this assessment needs to be long or complicated, but we need that initial assessment. It needs to be a "shall be" assessed, not a "may be" assessed, as this legislation and all other environmental legislation before the House of Commons in fact indicates.

I might make one minor exception. The current minister put some teeth into the Fisheries Act. He tried to remove an awful lot, but he put some in. It is too bad that the government did not have the same initiative and incentive to do so in this piece of legislation.

I am concerned about access to public information—not just access but about freedom of information and public access as well as the publication of that information. It is one thing to table a document in this House and make it public, but it is another to have that document available to the public. As usual, that opportunity is missed in this piece of legislation; it should be there.

This legislation could have firmly established the Department of the Environment as a lead agency of government. I want to come back to the question of what the intent of the government is. Does it intend that the environment should be a major factor in this bill? The intent that the government demonstrates is that the Department of the Environment will not be the lead agency. I think this is the beginning of the end of a phasing out of the Department of the Environment. It will become less and less important. Since the time that Madam Speaker was minister of the environment, virtually nothing has happened. This is the first real response in any form of legislation and that is unfortunate, as I see it as a downgrading.

We are almost back to the point of wondering whether the Department of the Environment is necessary at all. When confederation was conceived and the division of authority and responsibility was listed, the environment was not included. At that time people did not think about it but in the 1960s and 1970s it was determined that the environment was important, as it is today and will be tomorrow, and they realized that an ongoing emphasis should be placed on it. Where is that enthusiasm now? At least it established a very professional bureaucracy. We have a competent, complicated bureaucracy in place now and there are competent support groups in the community that bring forward very informed and enlightened information on the environment. The structure is there but the power has not been handed over. The government has not handed over the power because it does not have the intent or the will to establish the department as a lead agency of government. I am concerned about that, Mr. Speaker.

I am also concerned about the control of the environmental studies revolving fund. How is it possible that something with that name could come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources? If that is not obviously an environmental matter, I do not know what is. Why was it not placed under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Environment? That question has not been answered.

I am concerned that the liability provision is too limited and access to benefits is too difficult and improbable. The limitation period is too short. We seem to have the idea that once a problem occurs, we handle it and that is the end of it, when actually environmental problems are often of a long-term nature. That liability should be covered in the legislation and it is not. The period mentioned is too short.

I have mentioned the lack of clarity in regard to jurisdiction and authority and I should like to emphasize it again. We must decide who is responsible and give them full responsibility. If the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is to have input, that is fine; if the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is to have input, that is fine too; but the authority should be given to the environmental agency, the lead agency. This would make for speed and it would clearly help industry and environmentalists to know where the buck stops. They would know that their objective could be reached or rejected, instead of going around in circles.

I am also concerned about the potential irrelevance and the waste of time and money in the allocation of what may turn out to be senseless programs. I am not sure that the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources or the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development can establish the priorities for spending the limited funds available for compensation or for studies. The bureaucracy with the expertise is within the Department of the Environment, not those other two departments. The control should be placed with it so that we can be sure the money will not be wasted on patronage projects. Even worse, in my opinion, is that if the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources allocates the money, it will go to buy apologists for what that department wants to do to the Department of the Environment. It will pit environmentalist against environmentalist and leave no money, no authority, no ability with the Department of the Environment to prepare its case. Instead, the other side will be funded. Again, the vested interests receive the advantage and the case for the environment is unheard.

I see that my time is drawing to a close, Mr. Speaker, so I shall conclude.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I was going to signal to the hon. member that his time has expired, but nevertheless he could continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, I will quickly conclude.

Mr. Wilson: Take your time.

Mr. Wenman: It is good to see that a Conservative conservationist is in favour of that ethic, too. It is not the preserve of any one party or any individual in this House.

The environmental ethic grew out of political expediency. The government is now trying to kill the momentum of earlier initiatives on the environment to meet the new political expediency that it now perceives as the energy crisis. The government is wrong, philosophically and morally, in its attempt to have its cake and eat it too.

Although members of the environment community are young, they will not be defeated in this case. Young as they are, they are also intelligent and articulate and will not be deceived by this double standard or the confusions that I have mentioned. While some in this community have been bought as apologists for the vested interest of government and big business, the younger generation has environmental ethics implanted deeply in its value system. It is unfortunate that they and Canada will have to wait for their generation to replace ours in order to accomplish the potential and the protection of our environment in a legislative format in this great country of ours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity this afternoon to speak to this particular grouping of motions. It is a very important grouping and refers to the very sensitive environment of northern Canada and offshore areas as well as to the people of northern Canada.

When Bill C-48 was introduced some months ago, I listened to the minister articulate at that time the general thrust of the bill and it sounded nothing short of excellent. It was an effort to begin a process of Canadianization of the petro-chemical industry, starting with oil and gas. There was a sensitivity toward a northern environment and the offshore environment as well as a sensitivity toward people from northern Canada.

Members of this party felt very good about the bill. Then, of course, it went to committee and we had an opportunity to examine it clause by clause and very quickly changed our minds. Upon analysis, the bill showed a real contempt for the people north of 60, an insensitivity to the cultures that exist north of 60 and a complete disregard for and insensitivity toward our fragile northern and offshore ecology.

This does not come as a particular surprise. I guess one has to say that one is a bit ashamed to have some optimism in the early stages of this discussion to think that, in fact, the Liberal Party had changed its tack and was now going to become a party of sensitivity toward the environment and to the people of Canada, especially to the people of northern Canada. As of late, we have seen something in British Columbia which I think demonstrates this even further. That is the decision of the British Columbia government to proceed with burning Hat Creek coal, extremely low grade coal, in an effort to generate electrical power for British Columbia and for export.

At the same time, we understand that concerns about acid rain are increasing, and that there has to be a concern, like never before, regarding the effluent limits, the quality of our effluent entering the atmosphere, in an effort to combat the hazards of acid rain. However, when I inquired of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) how he felt about the Hat Creek proposal, which is a proposal to burn vast amounts of extremely low grade coal with extremely high ash content and with an extremely high content of sulphur and nitrous oxides, his response was, "We have regulations in place now; everything is fine, thank you". That was contrary to the report that the parliamentary task force came out with just a few days ago, indicating that, indeed, things are not all right and that very strict and courageous legislation is required, and required immediately. I, for one, am not optimistic that those difficult and hard decisions will be made, because it would require a government which has a commitment to the environment and a commitment to making difficult decisions; and neither of those commitments adequately describes the Liberal Party of Canada.

I think that the thin edge of the wedge began to show in the committee when the recommendation was that the committee travel throughout northern Canada in an effort to allow northern Canadians to have input into this particular discussion. Now who in their right mind would say that taking discussion of this particular bill, Bill C-48, throughout the part of Canada which will be directly involved would be a bad thing to do, would be too expensive and would be unnecessary? The government decided that. The members of the government on that committee decided that, no, they did not want to seek public input. They did not want to go to the northern parts of Canada and allow people to have an adequate say in this particular piece of legislation.

While I notice that hon. members across the aisle are nodding that that is not the case, sitting through those committee sessions it became very clear that public input of any real substance would not be sought; indeed, the committee members voted in that way, through a stacked vote, to ensure that northern peoples would not have opportunity to dialogue on this important piece of legislation.

It begs the question: Why is the government afraid of public input on Bill C-48? I suspect that in the hearts of government members, they know that what they are attempting to do with Bill C-48 is inappropriate as we enter the 1980s. When I say "inappropriate as we enter the 1980s", I refer to a sensitivity which is growing across the country, particularly with young people. There is a growing understanding of our complex ecological environment, and understanding of the intricate and comprehensive ecological webs that make Canada possible, and a growing understanding of the fragile and unique environment north of 60. Here is a part of Canada which still bears the imprints of groups of people who lived in that environment decades ago. Machinery which was brought into the area 40 or 50 years ago still leaves its imprint across those tundra wastes. Ask the native people of northern Canada what has happened to the caribou herds, to the movements of the sealing populations, and to the whale hunt. One could go on and on but the response will always be the same. They are changing, and changing not for the improvement of life north of 60, but changing for the betterment of life south of 60.

The intent of Bill C-48 is to accelerate exploration for oil and gas in the lands that we call Canada lands, including the Yukon, Northwest Territories and offshore. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) says that it is a step to Canadianize the oil and gas industry. What we are saying in these particular amendments we are debating at the moment is that, regardless whether these are foreign companies operating in the sensitive environmental areas or whether they are Canadian owned and controlled companies, the problems are still the same.

This bill lacks sensitivity to that very crucial and critical environment, both in human and in natural terms. We are going to be seeing the decimation of a culture that we have come to describe as the Inuit culture. We are going to see the disappearance of the Métis culture of northern Canada, and we are certainly going to see the ecological balances of northern Canada upset dramatically if Bill C-48 proceeds as it is presently proposed.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), who spoke previously, indicated that real environmental impact assessments are not called for in this legislation. In any textbook, in any symposium, or in any discussion around a sensitive environment, the bottom line that one would always expect is the need for a sophisticated system of environmental impact statements; but Bill C-48 virtually totally ignores that. It is after the fact, which again portrays and demonstrates very clearly this government's lack of interest in preserving that fragile ecological balance in northern Canada and offshore.

Exploration, at what cost? I become very frightened when I look at bills such as Bill C-48 and see all of the powers that are vested in ministers' discretion. I become very concerned when I see the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) being given the power to make decisions on the state of affairs on the Canada lands. This is no reflection necessarily on the existing ministers. They are all fine and very capable individuals. They are not here, of course. However, what about future ministers? What about people who will be filling those positions in years to come? Do we have confidence in those people? We do not even know who they are; yet Bill C-48 is asking us to have open-ended confidence in the Liberal government, in the Liberal cabinet, in their ability to make decent, sensible, sensitive decisions regarding, primarily, the lands north of 60.

An hon. Member: Good guys.

Mr. Riis: One might be very reluctant to give them that vote of confidence today, let alone an open-ended vote of confidence for the future; yet this is what Bill C-48 is requesting of us.

I want to identify two or three areas in which I think the government's insensitivity toward the environment in this legislation is very clearly demonstrated. In the northern parts of Canada, in excess of 150 different sites are now internationally recognized as being critical, historic, preservable, ecological areas. The recommendation is that they should be preserved intact so that for generations to come people will be able to benefit from the knowledge, understanding and appreciation of those particular areas. There is no formal protective status in Bill C-48 for these 150 special world sites. I am sure I speak for everyone in this House when I say that we are concerned about the wildlife of northern Canada. We recognize that we are viewed the world over as having special concerns about our wildlife in the north.

While we have taken some small steps over the last number of years to preserve the wildlife of Canada, only six federal wildlife biologists are given the responsibility for that vast expanse of northern space. How on earth could six wildlife biologists even begin to patrol and manage that particular area adequately? They would have difficulty doing that on Prince Edward Island, let alone on Canada lands north of 60.

What about the claims of the native people in the lands north of 60? Surely before Bill C-48 proceeds any further, this is a sensitivity that we can no longer ignore. Here are peoples whose lives, let alone cultures, are in serious jeopardy. Here are people who live in one of the most fragile environments in the world, into which we are now rushing pell mell to explore for oil and gas, who have no say in the proceedings, no say about what happens to their own land and whose land claims issues are totally ignored. Good grief, how could any group of people in a House of Commons responsible for that major and crucial part of Canada be so insensitive?

I must say that I am very proud that the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) have brought forward amendments which recognize the importance of our northern environment and the need to protect the delicate ecology of this area, amendments that also reflect a sensitivity toward those who have chosen to dwell in the northern parts of Canada.

As my colleague from Skeena has just indicated to me, where are the Tory amedments in these areas? We have heard so many speeches from them expressing their concern about the people in northern Canada and their concern for the environment. The rhetoric sounds great. Their concerns sound as though they are legitimate. But action is what counts, Mr. Speaker. Where are those amendments that demonstrate the Tories' legitimate and real concerns for the northern ecology and northern peoples? They are absent from this discussion, and I think it important that that be pointed out.

I am concerned that in this piece of legislation we ignored some ministers whose voices should be heard. What about the voice of the Minister of the Environment? He will be literally absent from this process and discussion on bill C-48.

Mr. Rose: He is speechless.

Mr. Riis: What about the voice of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans?

Mr. Rose: He has sunk.

Mr. Riis: Again, without representation crucial offshore areas will no longer be playing a realistic role in these discussions.

What about the voice of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

An hon. Member: He is on the reservation.

Mr. Riis: What role will these ministers play as Bill C-48 unfolds? I think we have to admit that these people will be playing virtually no role, that the sole voice and force of Bill C-48, as it unfolds, will be the minister responsible for energy in Canada. If that is not a vested interest, I do not know what is. Here is a man who has been given all kinds of opportunities to make decisions, quite apart from Bill C-48, concerning the northern peoples and northern environment and, at the same time, he has been given the responsibility for exploring for oil and gas in that region. That is real Liberal hocus-pocus in action.

One could go on and on regarding the shortcomings of just this small part of Bill C-48. It is a travesty. It is certainly a reflection of Canada's southern residents as being insensitive to and unappreciative of what the northern parts of Canada have to offer.

However, I shall cease commenting further on this collection of amendments in order that we can get on with Bill C-48. We do not want to be accused of holding up the bill because the next set of motions deals with what it means to Canadian business and Canadian entrepreneurs. What does this bill do to ensure that what efforts go on in northern Canada benefit Canadian business and Canadian manufacturers? Implicit perhaps in my question is that it will do very little.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my comments will be limited to the next three or four minutes. I listened to the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) with a great deal of interest. I must say that one particular portion of his speech intrigued me when he said that his party looked very carefully at this bill, that they were very warmed up to it. But I suggest to the hon. member and his party that they have made a very grave error. We have had five major energy bills since 1972, when I came to this House. This is the sixth one. The New Democratic Party supported the other five bills. They made amendments and used their bargaining power to do so. I think the New Democratic Party has made a gross error in not voting for this bill at second reading. However, I think that error can still be rectified. As far as I am concerned, to have the NDP opposed to all of this Canadianization does not make sense to me.

Mr. Fulton: Just read the bill.

Mr. McRae: My constituency is in northern Ontario. Ontario is a large province, but my area, which is relatively small, has been negotiating with our pulp and paper companies. After a period of 50 or 60 years, we have now reached the point where we are running out of trees in our area. This is because the province of Ontario has been manipulating. The smaller the jurisdiction, the easier it is to manipulate.

I would have been much happier if those resources had been in the hands of the federal government, particularly at this stage when the federal government is really concerned about global corporations, multinational oil companies and the effect they are having on our country.

Regarding the offshore resources of the north, or Newfoundland, if control of these resources is in the hands of a province, the territories or the Dene people, they can be easily manipulated. I have talked to the Dene people and I have talked to people in Newfoundland about these things, and they have said they are not easily manipulated. But the history of the native people in this country has shown that they have been constantly manipulated. It is easier to manipulate a small jurisdiction.

I support the government in this area. The most fair and sensible thing to do to maintain these resources intact is to have a sharing arrangement like the one offered to the province of Newfoundland and the one apparently offered to the province of Nova Scotia concerning their offshore resources. Therefore, these resources will not be manipulated as easily as they could be in smaller jurisdictions.

The history concerning the manipulation of resources is the same all over—in Australia, in the United States and so on. Wherever resources were in the hands of a small area, they were manipulated. I suggest that we go for a sharing arrangement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When the House rose at one o'clock, I believe the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) had completed his remarks. The Chair will now recognize the hon. member for Edmonton East.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, as always I am very pleased to rise in my place and speak in this House during what will surely be an historic session. We are dealing today with the report stage of Bill C-48. I want to say, first of all, that I attended literally all of the committee hearings on this bill and have made a number of recommendations, as did other members of the Progressive Conservative Party, recommendations which are all on record. We spent some eight months on this bill in committee and heard from representatives from industry, from the banking society, from environmental groups, from the native people, from territorial governments and other organizations.

Effectively the government has told us that all the amendments which are to be made to this bill have been made in committee. At the report stage when speaking in this House we are speaking more for the record, indeed, waxing long and loud on a topic that is dear to most of our hearts; that is, environmental management in Canada.

I am not going to speak so much about the detail of the amendments before us as I am going to speak on the over-all umbrella of environmental management and environmental awareness in Canada. The federal government is today moving in a somewhat different direction on environmental management in Canada, and I think it is a direction that has to be examined carefully by Canadians and the Canadian government.

The decade of the 1970s saw a great awareness of environmental issues. In particular, the first half of the 1970s was an era or a time in Canadian history when environmental concerns, awareness and action was pervasive across the land, literally starting with the formation of the first department of the environment in the province of Alberta, formed by the Social Credit government in Alberta in the spring of 1971. Since that time literally every government in Canada at the provincial and national levels has formed a department of the environment.

In addition, the Canadian Council on Resources, whose first chairman was the hon. Mr. Levesque, changed its name. Environmental aspects were incorporated into that council, which became the Canadian Council on Resources and Environment Ministers. The environment took on a very prominent role in the considerations and discussions of ministers across this nation. A new realization of the relationship between development and preservation and development and Environmental management of those resources evolved in the 1970s.

At the beginning of the 1980s we are now embarking on a new direction. We are now saying we must develop at all costs. Particularly in one area of resource management, the energy industry, we are now saying that the need to sustain energy at present society consumption levels must take preference over environmental management, environment concerns and environmental direction. That is why I say this whole area of movement into a new era of environmental awareness and action must be examined carefully.

I remember so well the 1972 Stockholm conference on the human environment as I was a Canadian delegate. Well I remember a resolution by the United States delegation which said unequivocally that a nation must be responsible for its pollutants as they migrate across international boundaries. I remember how we all supported that resolution of the United States of America. I am not overly excited with some of the congressional statements of today, that perhaps the migration of pollutants across international boundaries is not so important any more and must take a back seat to other considerations. This is rationalization in the 1980s regarding the maintenance of a way of life that was developed in an inefficient way.

It is this attitude that I see also creeping in in Canada, not only at the federal level but, indeed, at the provincial level. Now that we have gone through that decade of environmental awareness, we must find a different direction, and to a large degree we are moving forth step in step with the United States, not only in monetary and economic policies but in environmental policies.

Recently this government signed an energy agreement with Alberta. Three precedents were established within that agreement as far as I am concerned. It was a reasonable national agreement and a reasonable agreement for the province of Alberta. What were those three precedents? The first is an indication of a new era of federal-provincial relations which says that to conclude an agreement the federal government will negotiate in a serious manner with one province and then impose that agreement, one by one, on each of the other provinces in Canada.

• (1410)

I believe the federal government has questioned the value of first ministers' conferences. During the tenure of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in this House, his government has had more first ministers' conferences than any other government in history. I believe the government has decided that first minister's conferences accomplish very little and a new system must be found, and that is to reach an agreement with a province without meeting all of the first ministers and then imposing that agreement on the other provincial governments. This is exactly what is happening with the energy agreement.

I believe the government feels that by placing ten Premiers around the table in front of television cameras, Canadians see these ten Premiers and the Prime Minister sitting together as equals and the stature of the Prime Minister is thus depreciated in the context of confederation. I believe we are seeing a new era in federal-provincial relations, evidenced by the agreement between Alberta and the federal government.

The second and equally important precedent is that provinces can now cut flowing resources and interrupt them with impunity. I repeat, provinces can now cut flowing resources with impunity to accomplish their own objective. It does not matter whether they are resources owned by the provinces or developed and owned by the private sector. Alberta did it with oil. What province will be next? Will Newfoundland cut its electrical production by 10 per cent, 20 per cent or 30 per cent to restructure their agreement with the province of Quebec? The precedent is there. Alberta indicated that if there was an emergency in Canada with regard to the supply of oil they would restore production, therefore negating the use of the emergency powers. I found it very hard for the federal government to act against Alberta cutting this resource when Section 57 in the constitutional resolution said unequivocally that the provinces were the sole governments that could legislate in the area of conservation, production and distribution of their resources.

The third precedent I see is that there is not one clause in the agreement with Alberta about environmental concerns, no allocation of a single dollar, either federally or provincially, for environmental management as a result of the development and exploitation of energy resources in Canada. This five year agreement envisions a massive tertiary recovery process which has tremendous environmental consequences. It envisions heavy oil plants which could result in enormous environmental consequences. It envisions additional oil sands plants and exploration and development of new sour gas finds in Canada.

I received a phone call recently from people in Pincher Creek who suffered from sour gas and hydrogen sulphide pollution for years, unknown elements, indicating to me that there is a new direction in relationship to the control of sour gas in southern Alberta. Hydrogen sulphide, sulphur dioxide and acid rain emanating from this type of development is increasing in southern Alberta.

I want to come back to Bill C-48. There is a new environmental direction prevalent throughout this bill. If I were to paraphrase a metaphor effectively depicting the role of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) in this bill, I would perhaps say that he is going to be as effective as a toad among an army of ground hogs all intent on drilling holes in the ground. The Minister of the Environment will not be very effective in relation to Bill C-48.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is right.

Mr. Yurko: There are two environmental aspects to this bill. First, the environmental regulatory function is entirely under the thumb of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) through the resource management branch of Energy, Mines and Resources. Second, there is the study, investigative, and research function. To perform this function you need money. Within this bill there is a structure for two funds. One fund is under the direction and administration of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The second fund is under the administration of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). Somehow the Minister of the Environment has to direct the flow of this money under the direction of the other two ministers. The Department of the Environment provides input into massive development of oil and gas on Canada lands through an interdepartmental forum known as the resource management environmental committee. This committee is the main interdepartmental forum through which formal communication can take place on environmental issues relating to offshore oil and gas activities. It provides a co-ordinated approach to environmental assessment and research programs for offshore operations under the administration of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Let me enlighten the House as to who is represented on this committee. The first representative is the resource management branch of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. The second representative is the office of environmental affairs in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. The third is the fisheries management branch within the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. The fourth representative is the ocean science and survey section under the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. The fifth is the atmospheric environmental service under the Department of the Environment. The sixth is the environmental conservation service under the Department of the Environment, and the seventh is the environmental protection service under the Department of the Environment. Three representatives on this committee are from the Department of the Environment, two from Energy, Mines and Resources and two from Fisheries and Oceans.

• (1420)

The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is not even represented on this committee. I find that strange. More important, it is not the Department of the Environment and its minister, not even the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and its minister, which have over-all control and funding of investigations as a result of this committee, but rather the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and its minister. This is not even in the control and regulatory function, who is totally within EM&R. It is in the study function, investigative function and research function.

One would think if foremost in the minds of these civil servants were environmental matters or fisheries that that committee would be under the auspices of the Department of the Environment or the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, not the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Obviously that is subordinate to the new philosophy of development at any cost.

I know the internal jockeying, persuasiveness and arm-twisting that goes on in such committees. As the former minister of the environment in Alberta, I have done a lot of public hearings and conducted studies. I know how often the minister must act as the adjudicator, take the initiative and push the committee in a certain direction which is relevant to the requirements of the day. It will be the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who will be controlling the direction of this study committee. The least we can do is transfer the responsibility of this committee to where it belongs.

Where is the Minister of the Environment in all of this? What is his role in Bill C-48? One can almost say he is the water boy for the energy football team which is being quarterbacked by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and coached by the Prime Minister. A great football team, a great football game! The projected energy reserves on land in Canada are six billion barrels of oil and 85 trillion cubic feet of gas, which is equivalent to 20 billion barrels of oil. On the west coast offshore, we have mainly gas reserves of supposedly seven trillion cubic feet which is equivalent to two billion barrels of oil.

In total offshore resources we have approximately 15 to 20 billion barrels of oil and 250 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, equivalent to some 60 billion barrels. Apart from the heavy oil in the oil sands, one just has to look at these figures to see the tremendous amount of development activity that will occur in Canada in offshore the next 25 to 50 years.

This is a big ball game. The equivalent of 60 billion barrels of energy puts us in the big league. Because the game is so vast, the Minister of the Environment and the national government had better play a more significant role in the whole area of development than that identified in Bill C-48.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I might indicate that, after some discussion with the Chair, one member from the New Democratic Party would like to get away this afternoon. Since I see no member to my right, perhaps members might convenience the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle). If it is agreeable, I will recognize him now and then proceed to the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is quite satisfactory to me, Mr. Speaker. There may be others who also have to get away. I give my concurrence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): We will proceed accordingly.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I feel happy and privileged to speak to Bill C-48 in the area that concerns the environmental sections, Motions Nos. 4, 34, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56 and 57, under discussion at this time.

Bill C-48 will without a doubt have a great influence on the future not only of our country but of the whole planet. It will make a very significant mark upon the environment of a great part of this planet. When one faces a problem of this magnitude with effects that could go down not just through our generation but through many generations that will follow, I and many others believe with me that we are facing a serious moral issue of a magnitude that we have very little experience in handling. Basically we are dealing with a moral issue that does not just affect me and those around me at this moment; it will affect the lives of literally millions of people who are yet unborn, yet unthought of, in various ways.

First, when we begin to deal with something that is finite, that has a limit—and the kinds of energies we are looking at now are something that will be used up or taken away—that is one big question. The other moral question is: In finding or taking away this source of finite quality, what is the morality in the sense of breaking down the environmental structure of the planet? That is the question we face.

When we were young, morality was something that could be handled quite easily. If as a little kid I broke the neighbour's window, my family would send me over to say I was sorry and we would have to make some kind of restitution. Morality was simple, we could handle it. However, what happens when you break a structure that will have an influence for 20, 30, 40 or how many centuries are left on the planet? That is basically what this kind of bill is doing.

In the recent past, and I am talking of the past 100 years, our forefathers—my father, my grandfather and so on—felt there was no great problem in using up all the resources they could see. Many times I spoke to my father, now dead, asking why his generation felt it was perfectly morally legitimate to take over pieces of land from Winnipeg to the Rocky Mountains and use the resources in one generation without leaving any kind of reserve for the future, using them up many times in such a way that they literally destroyed the environment within two decades.

If people can remember the thirties in Saskatchewan, and some in this House certainly can, then they would remember the way the prairie was dug up, broken down, blown away and destroyed, never to be returned to the kind of land it was. We are again dealing with a situation of that kind. What is the morality of now doing that to the planet? I in no way claim I have the right answer to a question of that kind, but I do know, in looking at other situations and seeing other places, that the model of development in the field of energy at this time is one that has already broken down great sections of the planet.

A couple of days ago I was in Chicago and south of Chicago, down toward Notre Dame, Indiana. When you drive from Chicago to Notre Dame you go through the steel area of Gary and so on. Right there, as a cold, hard fact, we have a kind of an abomination, a desolation where the industrial model that was developed in the last 100 years has literally destroyed and broken down part of the planet. The air is gone; the water is gone; the land is gone. The people there live in a rusting, broken desert. That space on the planet 100 years ago was a fruitful, green garden. We are asking those kinds of questions.

What I would like to do in my speech today, Mr. Speaker, is to introduce into Hansard what I would call a scriptural phrase—a group of "voices crying in the wilderness". In this discussion I should like to introduce the thoughts of some people whom I consider in the present day, in the moral situation created by this bill, to be voices crying in the wilderness. I refer to church groups.

When Bill C-48 was announced and its effects were beginning to be known, on March 18 of this year two Anglican and three Roman Catholic bishops issued a statement in relation to the morality of this bill. They were the Right Rev. Jack Sperry, Anglican Bishop of the Arctic; the Right Rev. R. Ferris, Anglican Bishop of the Yukon; the Most Rev. Hubert O'Connor, Roman Catholic Bishop of the Yukon; the Most Rev. Paul Piché, Roman Catholic Bishop of Mackenzie-Fort Smith; and the Most Rev. Omer Robidoux, Roman Catholic Bishop of Churchill-Hudson's Bay. Their statement is as follows:

As leaders of the northern churches, we appreciate the work of the northern political leaders during their two-day conference at Yellowknife, March 18 and 19, 1981, and we support their firm opposition to Bill C-48.

Bill C-48 denies the aboriginal rights of the native people, as well as the present mandate of the northern institution of government. It is a negation of the present and future rights of all the residents of the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory.

We therefore join the Yukon and Northwest Territories government, Committee for Original People's Entitlement, Dene nation, Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, Council of Yukon Indians, and Northwest Territories Métis Association in urging the Government of Canada to completely withdraw Bill C-48.

Furthermore, we call on the Government of Canada to effectively involve northern native and political leaders in the drafting of any new oil and gas legislation so as to ensure that the people of the north will truly benefit from the future development of resources.

This statement was issued by the five northern bishops on March 18 and 19, 1981.

On March 25, 1981, the Most Rev. Rémi J. De Roo, Chairman of the Episcopal Commission for Social Affairs of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, wrote a personal letter and a telex to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in which the same concerns were brought forth in regard to this present bill. He wrote as follows:

In effect, this proposed legislation would further entrench the people of the north in a situation of colonialism in Canada. It not only threatens to violate the aboriginal rights of the native peoples but it also threatens to deny all the peoples of the north some of the basic democratic rights and freedoms which we have come to know and expect in other regions of Canada.

The telex also indicated the great fear of danger to the environment in this bill's proposals.

On June 9, 1981, as all hon. members are aware, the Canadian Conference of Bishops wrote a personal letter to each member of the House of Commons. They outlined their basic fears and lack of true preparation and consultation in relation to the same bill. Every Member of Parliament received that letter.

On June 12, 1981, the Most Rev. Joseph MacNeil, Archbishop of Edmonton, who is the president of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, prepared a statement on why the bishops' conference opposed Bill C-48 on two grounds: first, the environmental impact; second, on the question of the involvement of the native and local peoples, or their non-involvement, I should say, in the preparation of the bill.

On June 17, 1981, the Minister for Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) replied to the letter of Bishop Rémi De Roo that was sent to all members of the House of Commons. They indicated that the bishops did not know what they were talking about. I think it would be possible for the bishops to say the ministers might not know what they were talking about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ogle: The letter reads as follows:

From the specific comments you make on the bill, we believe that you have been seriously misinformed as to its content and implications.

It is an opinion, I agree. Then they went on to say:

As Canadian citizens we are saddened that, before you took a stand, no effort was made to reach us in order to give us an opportunity to at least expose our point of view and go with you through the proposed legislation. We respectfully submit that, had you done so, you might have reached very different conclusions as to the intent and the nature of the legislation. In fact, you might very well have become convinced, as we are, that Bill C-48 represents a major improvement over the previous situation for all Canadians, including the aboriginal peoples whose interests the government as well as yourself have very much at heart.

Following that reply, a meeting was arranged between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and a representative of the Canadian Bishops Conference, Bishop Sherlock of London. The bishops again set forth the reason why the churches had this grave concern about the moral issues that were involved in the bill and which were not being properly handled.

● (1440)

Bishop Sherlock, in a report following that meeting, said that the meeting was amicable but that he did not think anyone was convinced. I suspect that was exactly the situation.

Following that, on October 14, the day upon which the House resumed, Bishop Remi J. De Roo sent a final letter asking the Government of Canada to rethink the comments in its former letter in respect of Bill C-48. He pointed out the reasons why Canadian bishops feel that we are dealing with a serious moral question.

That is the state of the question and how Canadian churches have attempted to influence what is going on. However, I feel that they are literally voices crying in the wilderness. The difficulty at this time is for us to grasp the seriousness of the total problem which Bill C-48 envisages. It is simply just that; it is difficult.

How do people, myself and yourselves, make a serious moral judgment about a matter which is so huge? I would say that we should make it carefully. We should look at the serious lack of judgment in relation to the environment, to native rights and so forth, in the development of the west, from where I come. In that instance they were not considered. What was the final effect? What happened there? What happened to the rights of native peoples? What happened to the land, the soil, the water and so forth? We have a bit of history to call upon.

No one can predict exactly what will happen in the future. All I can say is that my recent experiences in Canada, North America and other countries indicate that the planet is breaking down at a rate which I am sure no one 20 years ago would have ever expected. The pollution of the oceans, the pollution of the air, the destruction of land and the disappearance of trees could not have been foreseen just a few years ago. When I was in high school I do not think I ever heard the word pollution. Now it is a word that little children know about. This is something which has happened in our life time. It has been a sort of movement without knowledge into the environment. Pollution and the changing of natural connections or, as someone said a little earlier, national networks of the environment are far bigger problems to face than even atomic bombs. We know the effect of atomic bombs, but we do not know the effect of these encroachments into the environment.

I am happy for this opportunity to present a few words and thoughts. I hope they will have some influence upon the final decision in regard to this bill.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the amendments we are considering this afternoon are concerned with environmental hazard. They are attempting to define a spill, to report a spill, the liability of the person responsible for a spill, the setting up of a compensation fund for recompensing injured parties, the responsibility for long-range damaging effects of spills and inquiries into spills. These are all centred around the notion of environmental hazard. We are discussing a physical contaminant and the threat it poses to the plant and animal ecology of a vast region and to the society of that region.

The hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) related some of the effects of the proposals before us on society. All these matters relate to amendments in this area. Most of them are amendments to amendments to another bill.

In this connection and as an aside, I should like to complain about the absence in the bill as presented to us of the sections of the original act which we are intending to amend in that absence. Hon. members are required to reach for the relevant volumes of the Revised Statutes of Canada in order to see how the original text read. Having done so, they are required to determine whether in fact it is being changed in a desirable way and to speculate on why the changes are being made and whether they are acceptable. I hope the draftsmen who prepare bills in the future will bear this in mind and be of assistance to us in readopting a long-established practice, which is perhaps even a convention of the House, that the old and new legislation should be printed on opposing pages for easy cross-reference by those of us in the House who are dealing with these measures.

I should now like to return to the proposed amendments, the spills and the responsibility therefor. They are all related to the environment. The spills under consideration and the associated liability would be taking place in the so-called Canada lands, or in offshore waters which are carefully defined. Although I admit spills can occur on land and cause damage, my concerns here are only with marine disasters.

Clause 76 refers to exploration and drilling for, and the production, conservation, processing and transportation of, oil and gas in the Canada lands. My concern is basically with the maritime disasters which can occur. I will confine my remarks to this maritime aspect of the Canada lands.

My concern in this connection is paramount because the area in which these disasters could occur is not only great but vast. I cannot help wondering whether the ministers concerned have any real appreciation of how great and vast the newly-defined maritime area is. Of course, this is defined in Clause 2 of the bill which was being discussed on Wednesday. Also it is defined, in so far as the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act is concerned, in Clause 76 in almost the same terms. To the extent that those terms may differ from those in Clause 2, I think we may have cause to wonder as to the reason for those differences; but I will just leave that aside for the moment.

What really concerns me Mr. Speaker, is whether the minister, members of this House and the Canadian public have any clear notion of the extent of jurisdiction being assumed for environmental protection purposes in offshore waters by this bill in the glib phrase "Canada lands" or, perhaps more properly, "Canada lands and Canada seas". Over what sort of area does the bill extend Canada's jurisdiction for environmental concerns? That is my first question.

My second question is whether Canada is in any position to assume that extended responsibility. I speak about extended jurisdiction over water only, or over water, ice and archipelago. I think we can all envisage the land mass north of 60, but perhaps the seaward extension, according to this definition, is much greater than any of us realize.

We are talking of the 200-mile limit and then to the edge of the continental shelf, whichever is greater. First of all—and I think this needs to be underlined—the 200-mile limit would extend Canada's jurisdiction for environmental protection over an extra 1,300,000 square miles, on the east coast, the west coast and in the Arctic. In that I include the archipelago in the Arctic. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, 1,300,000 square miles. This is slightly greater than the land surface of Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan combined. Are we ready for that responsibility, at sea and from the air, in terms of clean-up? When the jurisdiction of the Canadian government was extended to the 200-mile limit by order in council for fisheries purposes, I asked whether we were prepared to assume that responsibility.

If we go out to the continental margin, we add another 285,000 square miles to that 1,300,000 square miles, most of which goes beyond the 200-mile limit found off the east coast—Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and the mouth of the St. Lawrence. Therefore, we are required to add another Alberta to the Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan surface area that we have to bear in mind is the new jurisdiction over which Canada will assume its responsibility in environmental terms.

What does that mean in relation to the present known land and lake surface of Canada as we can more or less grasp it in our minds? It is almost 40 per cent more than the land mass that we can see from the edge of the Arctic coastline down to the sixtieth parallel and on down to the forty-ninth parallel. That is a tremendous area of jurisdiction.

I wonder if hon. members are aware that what is involved in this extension of jurisdiction is, in reality, an extension for economic purposes to the limits permitted under the Law of the Sea Convention to create, in effect, Canada's exclusive economic zone, or the EEZ, foreseen in that convention.

By sheer coincidence, the definitions in Clauses 2 and 76 of the bill use the wording that appears in Article 76 of the Law of the Sea Convention. What seems to be happening now happened once before. Canada is proceeding unilaterally to assume jurisdiction over an exclusive economic zone of 200 miles, as well as over an additional area to the edge of the continental margin, if that is farther offshore.

We seem to be proceeding unilaterally, as we did in the case of fisheries in assuming jurisdiction over the 200-mile fishing zone. That action, which was effected by order in council, was preceded by a number of bilateral treaties securing recognition—buying recognition, if you will—from countries which had historic rights in that area. This time the claim is being made by legislative action and there is no evidence that the government has concluded any bilateral agreements with neighbours or others, or that counter-claims against our pretensions will not arise in future.

I am not taking serious issue with the government on these grounds for behaving in this way, but I think we should be aware of what is going on. I suspect that one reason for this action is the fear that the Law of the Sea Convention may be in jeopardy because of the attitude of the United States and its explicit objections to the Law of the Sea Convention which were revealed in Geneva during the summer.

Is this, then, I ask myself, a pre-emptive strike on staking claims out to sea? I think it might be. Be that as it may, I have to ask myself whether Canada is in a position, with its maritime surveillance forces—surface and air—and its clean-up forces, to tend this extra real estate which is 40 per cent more than we now "own" and which we seem only indifferently able to regulate for environmental purposes as it is. Are we biting off more than we can chew, let alone digest? That is one of the questions which inevitably strikes me when I consider the extent of the claims in this bill.

My suspicions about this legislation were aroused following the intervention of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) on Wednesday last when he claimed that the matter was not one of ownership but of how proceeds resulting from the exploitation of the resources found in that land and sea area are to be shared. There is no evidence in this bill of sharing.

I would believe him if he would agree to an amendment which would permit the introduction, particularly in the offshore areas—not the land and lake areas—of some notion of the Queen in right of the provinces as well as the Queen in right of Canada, if only as an and/or proposition, so that the Queen in right of the provinces would know that there could be an element of sharing in the resources that are available. As matters now stand, it is only the Queen in right of Canada who will have a role in the proceeds of Canada lands and federal jurisdiction in the exploitation of offshore resources.

Canada lands and federal jurisdiction are readily understandable in terms of terra firma. Surely we can all understand that. We are talking now of north of 60. When it comes to the offshore areas, that meaning is fraught with federal-provincial conflict unless some acknowledgement is made in the matter of the claims which the Queen in right of the provinces might have.

A simple acknowledgement of this would do much to dampen current fears of a sea grab, if I may use an expression parallel to the land grab notion with which we are all familiar. Therefore, I have misgivings about the text before us on two grounds: one, I fear that Canada is in no real position to assume the full measure of the environmental commitments it is proposing to assume in this bill; two, I fear that by ignoring the Queen in right of the provinces, the claims, in fact, are a federal claim to ownership for all time without impediment or fetter, thereby storing up for Canada further grounds for federal-provincial conflict, which we just do not need these days.

There is another aspect which worries me. Others before me, and the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko), in particular, spoke about the questionable or light role—or probably the absence of it—that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) would have to play as minister under the terms of Bill C-48. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) are the only ministers mentioned who would have any powers. Yet the legislation acknowledges the environmental impact of oil and gas development. Why is the Department of the Environment excluded?

One other department has been excluded, and I draw this to the attention of the minister sitting in the House. The Department of Transport is excluded from playing any role under this bill. Yet his department, under its jurisdiction, has in existence a maritime pollution claims fund, which is a vehicle which could easily be adapted to this particular bill for claims for damage in environmental terms under this bill. Why has his department been completely set aside? Therefore, I add a third concern. I mentioned the one about the federal-provincial conflict. I have also mentioned the absence of the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin).

Mr. Pepin: From the bill, not from the House.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I do feel that this bill has shortcomings. It ought to go back to the drawing board and be brought forward with a more mature package of proposals for the consideration of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I was hoping that this had been announced previously. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), whom I saw sneaking out behind the curtains a few minutes ago, was going to speak on this issue this afternoon.

An hon. Member: Monday.

Mr. Nickerson: On Monday, I look forward to hearing him then. We have heard lots and lots, ad nauseam, from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) on this issue; but we have heard very little from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who presumably is to be charged with the administration of Bill C-48, once it becomes law, over an area of about 1.3 million square miles of land and water. I hope that when he speaks in this House, he will defend the viewpoints put forward by the people of the north. I have not heard him do that to date, but maybe he will turn over a new leaf. He is fully aware of the viewpoints of the people of the north. They have been made abundantly clear to him on many occasions. I hope that he will speak, as he maintains he does, on behalf of his constituency in the north. However, I doubt that that will happen. Everything that this disappointing minister has said to date has indicated that he is nothing more than a tool of the Ottawa bureaucracy. They are the people he will defend when he speaks in this House, not the people of the north.

The issue of Bill C-48 is one which has received wide attention throughout the north. I spent the last three months back in my constituency, and I also had occasion to visit the Nunatsiaq and the Yukon constituencies. I can assure Your Honour that practically no one in Canada's northland will go along with what Bill C-48 has to say. Regardless of all the differences of opinion among various people in the north, some wanting to do one thing and some wanting to do another, when it comes to Bill C-48, they are all united in opposition to the Liberal government.

I have been advised today that the petition signed by a substantial percentage of the electors of the Northwest Territories is on its way down to Ottawa; it was mailed this morning. Hopefully, in about three weeks' time, I will be able to put that petition before this House.

An hon. Member: Optimist.

Mr. Nickerson: Four weeks? Five weeks? Numerous telegrams, wires, telexes and letters have been sent to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). So far, they appear to have had very little effect. I have in my hand one which was sent on the 15th, just yesterday, to the three gentlemen whom I have mentioned before. This is a telex, which is in complete opposition to Bill C-48, signed by the government of the Yukon, the Council of Yukon Indians, the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, the Cope Organization, the Dene Nation and the Métis Association of the Northwest Territories, I do not think that I could subscribe to everything in this particular telex, but there is a challenge at the bottom. This is something to which I would certainly be prepared to subscribe. I would hope that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will take up this challenge. This telex states:

> We know Mr. Lalonde has defended the National Energy Program and Bill C-48 to the public in Ontario and Alberta. We challenge him to come to the north, to present his defence of this legislation to the northern people who will be most affected by its passage before the bill is law.

I hope that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will have the decency to take up that challenge.

As I have said before in this House, in my opinion Bill C-48 is the greatest land grab, the greatest grab of resources by a Liberal government in the whole history of Canada. We have debated Bill C-48, a copy of which I have here, since Christmas of last year, if I remember rightly. Some changes have been made, mainly of a technical nature. I guess the bill has been improved somewhat. However, if one looked through it now, one would find that it is very much of a cut and paste job. I hope that the government will take this bill back and maybe redraft it. Even if it will not make any changes in the underlying philosophy, it should at least tidy up the drafting and come back with a bill which has not been chopped up and switched around with small additions here and there, but one which makes sense right from the start. In my opinion, it will be pretty difficult for the courts to interpret some of what we have heard.

It is said that maybe some minor improvements have been made in the technicalities of the bill; but the concepts contained in Bill C-48 remain identical to those of the bill when it was first presented. The concept remains that Ottawa should have complete control over all the so-called Canada lands whether, in fact, they really belong to the provinces or to the territories. The industry should be highly regulated. There should be a good deal of ministerial discretion. You do not know what the rules and regulations are in advance, but you have to come to Ottawa and you make your own deal with the minister. What is ministerial discretion? The minister can tell you how you can look for oil, how you can drill for it, to whom you can sell it and how you can transport it, along with everything else, but we do not know the rules in advance. It is a highly regulated and controlled industry. It is one in which there will be practically no room for the little guys, especially the northerners, the people without much capital. They would like to get into the oil and gas business. They would like to get into the land plays, but because of the regulated nature of the industry, the way it is seen from Ottawa, the little guys, the northerners, will be kicked right out of the northern oil patch.

But worst of all for the north and for the northerners, Liberal policy comes through quite clear in this bill, namely, that the resources of the north will in perpetuity, for ever and ever, belong to the federal government in Ottawa. This is something to which we cannot subscribe. In no way would the gentlemen over there want another Alberta on their hands or another Saskatchewan. They cannot see the possibility of provincial status in the north ever being attained.

On this side of the House where we recognize and have to recognize the legality of the fact that at the present time the lands of the territories are held by Her Majesty in right of Canada, we acknowledge that the nature of that ownership is one of trust. The land and resources of the north are held in trust by the Government of Canada for the people of the north. At some point in time they will be rightfully turned over to the people of those areas.

It was said before that the views of northerners have been made quite clear to the government. But has the government listened, Mr. Speaker? Has the government listened to what has been going on for the past six months or the last year? Maybe the government has had a twinge of conscience.

Mr. Nielsen: No way.

Mr. Nickerson: The government has not actually done anything about it.

Perhaps I might digress for a moment or two, Mr. Speaker. You gave that privilege to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. With respect to Motion No. 2 there is a preamble which hon. members on the other side want to put in front of the bill. I do not like preambles to legislation. I think the law books should contain law and not motherhood statements in front of a particular statute. Anyway, if that is what hon. members on the other side want to do, let us examine what they want to say. Before the law they want a whereas clause. Part of the whereas clause will read "Recognizing that in particular the inhabitants of areas directly affected by energy activities would play a growing role in that development."

That is all the government has done. All the arguments, all the letters and all the great speeches that have been made in this House—that is as far as the government can go. I would submit they are no more than empty platitudes. What we need is something real. I have been playing with words and I have come up with something that we might put in place of the above whereas clause. It is something with some teeth in it and something that means something. Instead of the government's preamble, we suggest the following or something like it:

And whereas it is acknowledged that Her Majesty in right of Canada presently holds the lands and resources of the Northwest Territories and Yukon in trust for the inhabitants thereof and hereby agrees to enter into agreements with the governments of the respective territories to share the public revenues derived from the production of hydrocarbons therefrom.

In our clause you have the acknowledgement that the lands and the resources of the north should be held not in perpetuity by the Ottawa government, but held in trust and should be managed as well as any good trustee would manage those resources for the people who live there. They should be managed as well as are the land and resources in the southern provinces of Canada.

In addition, what that would do would be to open up the question of revenue sharing. Many submissions were made on this subject to the committee when it looked into this matter. I think in general members on all sides of this House—not the government members, the frontbenchers, or government departments, but the backbenchers on that side and the members on this side—believe that agreements should be entered into whereby the very large amounts of public revenue to be generated as a result of Bill C-48 should be shared with northerners and used to help the people who live in those areas through the provision of public services. As a matter of right, people should have access to some of that revenue.

Within the bill we have before us, we see that only lip service has been paid to the wishes and the requirements of northerners. What is being said is, "We are not going to give you any real control over these matters, but we will come to you and ask you for your advice. We will set up a little advisory board here and a little advisory committee there and you can have your say, you can collect $25 or $100 a day honorarium and we will listen to you." But we know what happens. There are thousands of these committees already all over the north. Some bureaucrat from Terasse de la Chaudiere arrives, listens to the people, writes notes and minutes and takes them back to Ottawa. Nobody sees what happens to them. I suppose a report is written and it is submitted to the lowest level of bureaucracy in Hull. Then this report has to go step by step by step up to the assistant deputy minister and, the deputy minister, but at any one of these stages, that report can be filed or put into the wastepaper basket. It never sees the light of day. That is the nature of consultation which this government has always practised with the people of the north. Very often this government does not even do that because decisions have already been made in advance. They send someone up north to try and justify the decisions that have already been taken.

We have seen this with the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Department of the Environment and everything else. We do not need people to come up north and say "Yes, we will listen to your views, take them back to Ottawa, put them in the mill and see what comes out the other end." What is needed is delegation of authority to the people who live there.

Let us take the environment as a case in point. Presumably we are supposed to be talking about an environmental amendment. People do not want to be consulted about the seals, the seagulls, the rabbits and everything else in the north and then have someone return to Ottawa and make up rules and recommendations, hopefully taking their advice into account. What they want is the authority to make their own rules. We are not talking about the offshore areas because presumably the federal government has some constitutional right to be in that area. But the federal government does not have to have it in the land areas of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. If the area were a province, that responsibility would lie with the province. In fact under the Northwest Territories Act and under the Yukon Act, that responsibility has in a way been given, but then it has been taken back by the federal government. Right now in the Northwest Territories there is an act of the local legislature, called the Environmental Protection Ordinance. But it is not in force because, as I said before, the government there has no money and no source of revenue. The government there cannot afford to hire inspectors or to carry out the necessary studies. Because these areas are funded through the Government of Canada and do not have access to their own discretionary income through taxation of natural resources, there is nothing they can do about it. The federal government comes in with its bulldozer, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and takes that away from the people, asks for their advice and then does nothing with it. The federal government does precisely what it wanted to do in the first place.

We must recognize that with the very few people who live in the north with so large a requirement for public expenditure, personal taxation through income tax and sales tax will never really raise the required amount of money. The only way we are going to raise the money needed for the provision of those public services is through taxation on resources, particularly oil and gas.

What we want is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to let go and to allow the people of the Territories to control what goes on there through their own institutions. We want them to let loose some of the purse strings, allowing the people there access to sufficient moneys to carry out properly those functions they should be carrying out.

I understand that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker. I have a great deal more to say on this subject and, hopefully, during the next week or so we will have an opportunity to debate Bill C-48 again. The things I have referred to are by far the most important issues about which northerners are concerned, particularly when we talk about the exploitation of hydrocarbons in the north.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I too want to speak on this bill because it demonstrates and illustrates some vitally important principles about which many people in this country are increasingly becoming concerned. The bill in the first place exemplifies probably the biggest land grab in the history of the world. It is a grab from those who need it the most and who will need it in the future, with no thought to the future development of this great nation.

It has been said that where there is no vision, people perish. This bill demonstrates that this government is showing no vision and is, probably blinding its eyes to the future. This government is grabbing a tremendous amount of land in the north, thereby barring the people there from ever having a source of income with which to establish a province, or from having the ability to operate economically as a unit.

I think what is sad about Bill C-48 is that it demonstrates that this government of the whole country is denying one part of the country the chance of ever reaching its great potential. This government is anxious to get its hands on money, so anxious that nothing else matters.

Another thing that bothers me about this bill is that it does not reflect the thinking of the people of this nation. Representations have come forth by the score suggesting changes to certain parts of this bill, but this government is not prepared to listen.

The amendments we are discussing this afternoon introduced by members of the NDP in my view represent the thinking of a very large proportion of the people of this country. However, there is not even a minister of the Crown who is concerned with this bill present in the House and listening to these arguments. When democracy began, the whole idea was that one person would represent the wishes of a number of other people and bring the thoughts of those people to the assembly. This is a useless exercise in this place; ministers are not even in the House to hear the arguments.

I was in the Alberta legislature for many years and I do not remember a bill concerning a department ever being discussed when the minister was not in his seat listening, taking notes and giving cognizance to the arguments put forward by members, on whichever side of the House they sat. That is democracy.

An hon. Member: They are doing other things.

Mr. Taylor: An hon. member says they are doing other things. The most important thing a minister has to do is to sit in this House. That is what they are elected to do. They should sit here and listen to the arguments of the people and bring forward legislation which reflects the thinking of the people. This government is getting so far away from democracy, it is no wonder the people are calling the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a dictator and the government dictatorial. It is the government's own fault because of the way these ministers are acting and carrying on. When the truth hurts, they start to yowl—howl, I mean. The people are gradually getting fed up with the anti-democratic procedures of this government. This bill illustrates to no end exactly what I am talking about.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: If you want to speak, I do not mind sitting down, but do not yell and howl and say nothing. I would like to hear hon. members defend the things the government is doing. All the new parliamentary secretary is saying is "yes, yes, oui, oui, Mr. Prime Minister", in order to get a promotion. That is the type of thing that is going on on that side of the House. Hon. members there are more concerned about promotions than they are about representing the wishes of the people, and we can see that every day. If the cap fits, put it on.

Instead of this bill representing the thinking of the people, it represents the thinking of a handful of bureaucrats. They are the ones who have the minister's ears. The ministers think that if they listen to the bureaucrats and then bring forward legislation, we should all say "yes, yes", even if it is contrary to the thinking of the people who sent us here. I am not prepared to do that. I see democracy going down the drain in this House led by this government, and I am not going to allow the government to drive me out of my own country. I am prepared to stay and fight for democracy and the wishes of the people who sent me here, whether the Liberals like it or not. That does not bother me one bit. The government is obsessed with power. It has to have power. Members of this government want to be dictators. They want to order things, but they do not think about reflecting the thinking of the people. We have seen examples of this all around us.

The majority of the people do not want unilateral patriation of the Constitution with a charter, but that does not matter. The government not only disregards what the people want, it spends taxpayers' money to tell the people why they should do what the government wants. That is anti-democratic, not democracy at all. They do not object for one minute to spending money telling the people why they should be doing this and that. Did hon. members ever hear about democracy? They are supposed to take direction from the people, not tell the people what they want. That is totalitarianism.

I want to show how that is being carried out by this bill, and I want to look at some of the actual clauses. I suggest to those who think that what we are saying is not right that they should talk to some of the people in the north who are experiencing these things. The environment is very important. The important elements of the environment are clean air, clean water and, probably, reclamation of the land. I do not see any of that exemplified in this bill. This involves a jumble of confused responsibilities, and the minister responsible for the environment is left entirely out in the cold. He is not even going to have a say. The responsibilities are given to other ministers. I wonder why the Prime Minister appointed a minister for the environment. Clean air, clean water and the reclamation of the land is the basis upon which the environment has to be controlled.

I was happy when the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) a few years ago as a minister in the Alberta government introduced a clear water and clear air bill. This government would do well to follow his example.

Let us deal with one or two of the specific motions in this particular bill. I refer first to Motion 4. It astounds me, after having spent more than 40 years in the legislature and a couple of years in the House of Commons, to see a bill which does not define one of the most important elements involved, and that is spill. They know it is spill.

• (1530)

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Taylor: But they do not say what it is. It could mean a dozen things.

An hon. Member: It could mean cariboo blood.

Mr. Taylor: They went part way in section 80. They defined it to mean certain things in only one or two clauses. They said a spill means a discharge, emission or escape of oil or gas other than one that is authorized by the minister.

Mr. Nielsen: Tell that to a dead cariboo.

Mr. Taylor: It certainly means an escape of oil or gas, but nowhere can it be found what a spill actually means, whether it is somebody spitting on the ground, a spoonful of oil falling from a pipe, or a small gas leak in a pipeline.

What is it? They have the answers, sure. Their all-knowledgeable minister of energy knows everything. Sure, he knows when it is a spill and when it is not a spill. In other words, bureaucrats will tell him and he will jump because this government is controlled by bureaucrats, not by the people who elected it. They refuse to define spill in this section.

A spill means more than just oil. When you talk about 100 litres of oil or 10 litres of oil, that is one thing, but the government should say what it considers a spill. It also means the escape of poisonous air. Clean air is important also. It can kill animals and make humans sick.

The definition put in the amendment by the hon. members at least defines it. The members on the other side will not support this because the minister says, "No. I know what a spill is. Don't you dare put in anything." I will wager not one member on that side will vote for this amendment. If they do, I will be glad to buy them a dinner.

Spill means an amount of 100 litres or more of oil and any other substance deemed foreign to the environment. That is what a definition is. It is not the best definition but it is a good one. The minister of energy must have had it given to him by members of this House but he will not accept it. Even if he knew what a spill is and is performing his function perfectly, which he has yet to prove, he is not going to be there very long. The shorter the better, as far as I am concerned.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: Some day the members on that side, when they are sitting over here, will wish they had put in a definition. When we are the government, we will define what a spill is. This government is so secretive, they do not want anybody to know what a spill is.

I will move on to amendment No. 51, at page 62 of the bill. It would not hurt hon. members to turn to page 62 and see what they are voting for, instead of voting the way they are told.

The bill says that in Section 19(1) to 19(4), —"spill" means a discharge, emission or escape of oil or gas other than one that is authorized pursuant to subsection (4)—

Now, that is strange. They define it and then say it is only applicable to these four sections. Let us read subsection (4):

The Governor in Council—

The cabinet.

—may make regulations authorizing the discharge—

Did you hear that? The government can discharge poisonous air. It goes on to read:

—may make regulations authorizing the discharge, emission or escape of oil or gas of such types, in such quantities, at such locations, under such conditions and by such persons as are specified in the regulations, but Her Majesty in right of Canada has no liability whatever to any person arising out of such authorization.

Did you ever hear of such legislation? It is astounding. They can decide to poison a part of this country and there is no liability.

An hon. Member: They have been poisoning Ottawa for years.

Mr. Taylor: It is a wonder we are able to live with the amount of bad air issued around this House.

This is more serious. This could destroy the animals of the north. It could destroy the people of the north if we have a man fanatical enough to use this section. This is totalitarian legislation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: Laugh if you like. Read the section; do not accept what the minister told you. Read it yourself. You can all read.

An hon. Member: Are you sure?

An hon. Member: I doubt it.

Mr. Taylor: Read it. It says:

The Governor in Council may make regulations authorizing the discharge, emission or escape of oil or gas of such types, in such quantities, at such locations, under such conditions and by such persons as are specified in the regulations, but Her Majesty—

The cabinet, the ministers responsible who are not even here today.

—in right of Canada has no liability whatever to any person arising out of such authorization.

I would like to go back to the first section. It reads:

"spill" means a discharge, emission or escape of oil or gas other than one that is authorized—

It is a spill. If an oil company does it, it is a spill. We protect people from gas leakage from railway cars. The hon. member from Mississauga was very anxious that we should have control over gas in tank cars. What about controlling it in the north? Northerners are human beings too. They have just as much right to live in clean air and on good land as we. They are Canadians the same as we are. An hon. member the other day said the bill should be withdrawn. It should be withdrawn. If members opposite were doing the job their constituents want them to do, they would not be supporting this.

An hon. Member: We are.

Mr. Taylor: The hon. member says they are. It is strange that when 60 per cent of the people of Quebec do not want a charter, they should vote for it. They should talk to the people. They spend the people's money to tell them what they should do. They have the gall to say they reflect the thinking of the people. They do not.

This bill is a danger to the country and to the people and should not be passed. The amendment that is proposed will, if passed, do some good, but not very much. I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are indicating I have only one minute left. I am sorry because I could go on for hours. I will make one other point.

The other day the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) talked about the minister giving documents to certain Liberals but not to everyone. This bill will authorize that type of conduct. Under 19.5 and 19.6, the minister may supply copies of the report in such manner and in such terms as he considers proper. If he considers only the Liberal members, he can, at public expense, give information to one party and not another. Is that democracy? Those opposite have their priorities and terms all mixed up. That is a totalitarian government, not a democracy. It is time members opposite started to think for themselves rather than doing only what the minister tells them. The minister should stop doing what the bureaucrats tell him and start reflecting the thinking of the people of this country. Then we could have the greatest country in the world.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I preface my remarks by saying that the only person whose orders I strictly obey is my wife, so I do not plead guilty to the charge the hon. member directed to members on this side of the House.

In any debate one attempts to use as much factual information as possible in order to arrive at what is, hopefully, the wisest evaluation of the legislation being proposed in the House and before the nation. That is not always the case. Most of us realize that as well as having facts to argue on a particular case, we have to deal with the mythology that for some reason or other, tends to permeate any debate at any level. This debate on Bill C-48 is no exception. In fact, from what I have heard in the House in the last few days and in committee in the last few months there is probably more mythology involved in this debate than in almost any other debate, other than perhaps the debate on the Constitution.

In the short time allotted to me today, I would like to look at some of the myths that have developed and are promoted by their proponents as being the hard truths of the argument. I would like to start with one of the myths that was forcefully and colourfully projected into this debate today by the preceding speaker. That myth is that the central or national government is perpetrating through Bill C-48 one of the greatest or most momentous land grabs in the history of the Canadian people.

The offshore and the north are vested and always have been vested in Her Majesty in right of Canada. I do not think there is anyone in this House who can dispute the accuracy and legitimacy of that statement. It is vested in Her Majesty in right of Canada because all the federal states of this world have vested the rights of the offshore, and, presumably, if they have an Arctic, in the national government in one way or another.

I would defy any member opposite to point out a federation in this world that has done otherwise. Assuming that the federation has an offshore and a north, despite the fact that the waters and domains have historically been vested in the central government, it has not prevented its regional or provincial governments from making a jurisdictional grab of their own.

If you look at Australia or the United States, you find that in both of those federations the provincial or state governments have contested in the courts the legitimacy of the federal government's control of the offshore. Those states and provinces have lost their cases, just as the province of British Columbia lost its case when it brought a similar one to the courts of Canada.

There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that the offshore and the north belong to Her Majesty in the right of Canada. I would be delighted if this government would take that issue to the courts to be decided once and for all. This sort of mythology is dangerous. It leads to divisions in society and the state which members opposite and those who believe in that argument would deplore. I would like this government and this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to take that issue before the courts.

Mr. Fulton: Say that when you are travelling in the north.

Mr. Kelly: One does not have to travel to the north or to the offshore to understand that argument. Its veracity does not change with geographical location. If the argument is true in Ottawa, it is as true in the offshore and in the north. That is something we should be aware of.

I would ask the Prime Minister today to take those disputes to the courts in order to have proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that those lands belong to Her Majesty in right of Canada. Because they do belong to her, they are legitimately controlled by the Government of Canada. They are controlled by the federal government in the best interests of the people of those areas, but not exclusively in their interests. The benefits that derive from them should be used primarily for the benefit of the Canadian people.

One member opposite said in his speech that this bill is designed for the people who live in the south. By saying that, I assume he thought he was bringing some illumination to this argument, the horror that Bill C-48 should be used on behalf of the Canadian people. It must be used for the benefit of the Canadian people. It would be wrongly used otherwise. I challenge him to repeat that argument.

The hon. "Smith Brother" from Skeena was the one to proclaim that most loudly in the House. I invite him to debate that issue and promote that point of view in the south, anywhere and everywhere, to see the sort of reaction he would get from the Canadian people.

This oil and gas belongs to all Canadians. We cannot say that about the provincial deposits of oil and gas. We learned that in the tragic confrontation with Alberta. We know that the oil and gas of Alberta are vested in Her Majesty in right of that province and are now controlled by the government of that province primarily on behalf of its residents.

This is the one opportunity that the Canadian government has to ensure oil and gas security of the Canadian people with resources on Canada lands. I cannot understand why Canadian politicians want to take the only resource that we can constitutionally and realistically describe as Canadian and give it to the respective provincial or regional jurisdictions. I cannot comprehend the motives of that kind of argument. These are Canadian resources. They must be controlled by the Canadian government on behalf of the Canadian people.

An hon. Member: You are from Toronto.

Mr. Kelly: You are correct, I am from Toronto. You are absolutely right without being relevant. What does it matter if I am from Toronto? I could as easily be from Victoria, Halifax, Quebec or Montreal. They are all Canadian cities populated by Canadian residents. It is our obligation to make sure that those people, no matter where they live, have access to Canadian resources.

There is something drastically wrong with the body politic in Canada when a Canadian politician, speaking in this House on behalf of access by Canadians to Canadian resources, is considered either to have a malicious intent or to misunderstand the nature of confederation or the needs of its people. I cannot comprehend that line of thinking. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, and on behalf of Canadians from coast to coast whose future they are putting into jeopardy, I absolutely reject it. I sincerely hope the sensitive thinking, nationalist members of this chamber would reject it as firmly and decisively as I have.

• (1550)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelly: The second great myth, perpetrated by a number of members opposite, is that this dastardly, scheming, evil Liberal government—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelly: We are horrible. We are guilty of every sin in the book and others that have not been invented yet. This horrible, arrogant, malignant government is taking Bill C-48 and rushing it through this House with breakneck speed and shoving it down everyone's throat, whether they like it or not. That is the second great myth of this debate on Bill C-48.

If recent developments have indicated anything, Mr. Speaker, it is that oil and energy have become the most vital commodity of any state in the world today. There is no question about that. I would defy anyone on the other side to say that is wrong. Oil and gas have become strategic characteristics of our economy. They will remain so in the next 10 or 20 years. There is no doubt about that.

If everyone were to accept that, would they then accept the corollary that if energy is the single most important aspect of our economy today, then this government or any party that forms the government should have as its top priority the energy security of the state? It must provide that energy security as quickly and efficiently as possible. Does that sound realistic to you? Do you quarrel with that? I do not think he does, despite the florid colour of his face and his eagerness to interrupt.

If you were to accept the reality of the two arguments, Mr. Speaker, I think you would have to say it is incumbent upon this government to produce legislation that will provide that energy security as quickly as possible. This bill is designed to do that. There is lots of oil and gas on provincial lands, Mr. Speaker. But we have been taught a lesson: this government does not have direct access to their oil and gas resources.

If we think in terms of the survival of our economy on a national basis, then we cannot depend, as a national government and as a people, on access to provincial resources. This is why we must have access as quickly as possible to the resources that are, indisputably, on Canadian land. Those lands are on the offshore and in the Arctic. How can anyone say, after eight months of deliberation that we are shoving this bill down the opposition's throat? Those people are so far removed from reality of the argument I have just developed, that I think their opposition borders on the criminal. If this government is guilty of any crime, it is not that it is proceeding too fast, it is that it has been proceeding too slow.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Kelly: If I have any criticism of this administration and of this minister, it is that he has tolerated obstruction, he has consented to abuse. I believe at times we are too democratic, so much so that we believe these anti-democratic arguments and that we neglect the real vital interests of the Canadian people in so doing.

Mr. Fulton: We know what you are like in committee. We have seen you.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Kelly: If I had been the minister, the bill would have gone through committee a lot sooner because I think the interests of the Canadian people are that important.

• (1600)

I am pleased to talk about the environment. The third great myth of this debate is that Bill C-48 has the potential to obliterate the northern environment and the native peoples. This vehicle, especially as far as the latter is concerned, is their salvation, not their destruction. If I had more time this afternoon, I would develop that argument.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely notices of motions, public bills, and private bills.

Municipal Affairs

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

Motion No. 43 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

AVAILABILITY OF INCREASING GRANTS IN LIEU OF PROPERTY TAXES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of increasing the grants made to municipalities in lieu of property taxes for the use of property by Crown corporations and agencies so that these grants equal the sums paid by private organizations.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of presenting what I believe to be a case that should be brought to the attention of the federal government. Sometimes I think that in our democratic system we in the federal field forget that there are two other forms of government which are very important to the wellbeing of Canadian citizens. Sometimes we overlook the responsibility that the federal government has to both the provincial and municipal government, but primarily the municipal government. This is why I have proposed this resolution. I am pleased the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) seconded this motion. I know he is vitally interested in this aspect of responsibility in so far as who pays for what is concerned. I do not propose to take too long in making my discourse this afternoon because I know he wants an opportunity to make a few comments in regard to this resolution.

The resolution reads:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of increasing the grants made to municipalities in lieu of property taxes for the use of property by Crown corporations and agencies so that these grants equal the sums paid by private organizations.

The phrase "grants in lieu of taxes" is just a fancy way of saying that the federal government does not pay taxes on real property but, instead, makes arbitrary and unrealistic cash grants to municipal governments. Under Section 125 of the British North America Act, the federal government cannot be taxed by any other level of government. However, since 1877 the federal government has made token payments to towns and cities where it owns land and buildings. These token payments are totally unrelated to the actual tax assessment.

We can take the CBC in Red Deer as an example. The CBC owns and operates broadcasting facilities. In 1980, it paid the county of Red Deer the grand sum of $809.38 as a grant in lieu of taxes. Had the CBC been required to pay the actual property taxes based on assessment, its total bill would have been $4,460. In a nutshell, the county of Red Deer lost over $3,600 on the transaction, yet the municipal government is forced to make available all local services at a loss, I might add. Tenants like that, the county of Red Deer does not actually need.

As a result of the federal government position on paying local taxes, the property tax base of some communities is substantially eroded since the property tax is often the major source of revenue for local authorities. This is the point I wanted to make. These people have a right to be heard.

Large cities such as Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto, Calgary and Edmonton are caught in a tighter vise. Large federal government property holdings represent a considerable loss of potential holdings and represent a considerable loss of potential revenue. In some areas the federal government further impairs revenue generating capabilities of local authorities by precluding or limiting zoning and development. There is no question in my mind that the federal government places unfair burdens on local governments. Because it does not pay its fair share of taxes, the federal government escapes the responsibility of paying its true share of the costs of police and fire protection, sewage disposal and water. I do not mean to say that the taxpayers of Canada will be loaded with any extra taxes. It just means that there will be a more equitable relationship between the levels of government paying the taxes. Because of the federal government, the municipality may also have to undertake expenditures to provide or upgrade roads, schools, and other such facilities to serve the needs of central government employees and their families.

There is no question that the presence of the federal government provides benefits such as jobs, payrolls and new residential property tax bases. But do these benefits offset the fact that the federal government is not a good corporate citizen? In a city such as Ottawa, the shortfall between grants in lieu of taxes and actual assessment runs into the millions. The same is true for many other of our larger cities where the federal government has large holdings. The adequacy of federal contributions has been challenged by local authorities in every region of Canada, especially in Ottawa. Mr. Speaker knows that delegations have appeared before standing committees of the House trying to present their case to the federal government.

The dissatisfaction is based upon three arguments against existing legislation. First, certain properties are excluded from grant calculations such as parks, museums, monuments, etc. This means lost revenue of almost $8 million to the city of Ottawa.

The non-payment of business taxes on federal commercially-assessed properties is the second argument against the existing legislation. The federal government's reply is that it is not a business, it does not compete, it does not engage in profit-seeking activities and it does not generate a business income. I must question this. The CBC in Red Deer certainly competes with other commercially-licensed private broadcasters. Not only do the private broadcasters have to make a contribution to the subsidy going to the CBC, they also make a contribution in taxes because they are totally taxed on their assessed property. Such is not the case with the CBC.

The third argument concerns the deductions from the main grant of amounts representing municipal-type services provided directly by the federal government. In effect, the federal government opts out of municipal services. Other taxpayers do not have this choice. Would there not be chaos if large companies with their own security forces had the right to opt out of their share of the municipal police force costs?

The present formula is patently unfair and out of touch with reality. There is no question that the federal government has the ability and the resources to pay its fair share and thus become a better corporate citizen and be more responsible to Canadian taxpayers. And pay it should, so that there is equity for all taxpayers, business and residential, in any given municipality. If the federal government expects services to be provided, in fairness it should compensate the municipality. The payments should be prorated to put the federal government on approximately the same footing as other local taxpayers. If this situation is not corrected, the federal government could, if it chose, provide a grant in lieu of taxes to any municipality for PetroCan service stations or any other of its oil properties. This is what happens with the CBC, a Crown corporation. Therefore it could also happen with PetroCan. I am not saying that it will, but it is possible under the present regulations.

If the government is supplying a service to the people that is not provided by any other body, I am not so worried; that is not creating a problem for me. I am concerned, however, when a government facility is in competition with private industry and does not carry its fair share of the tax burden. This is unfair to the taxpayers of Canada, Mr. Speaker. Now is the best time to correct this anomaly before it gets out of hand.

Thank you for allowing me to present this case at this time. Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): This is a good motion, Mr. Speaker, and one that deserves the full attention of the House. I should like to start by referring to a couple of statements made by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), who is responsible for legislation affecting grants in lieu of taxes to municipalities, with regard to the principle involved in this resolution that the federal government should be required to pay the same taxes that private citizens would be required to pay.

He has said that the federal government is not competing in the marketplace with private enterprise and that it does not want to be considered a business. Is that because it does not do business and does not compete with other private enterprises? I would suggest that is not the real reason. It may be the rationale it uses for not wanting to pay the grant in lieu of taxes but, as the minister said on May 28, 1980, according to a newspaper article, for the federal government to pay business taxes across Canada would cost the government $75 million annually. That is why it does not want to be considered a business, Mr. Speaker, so that it will not have to pay taxes to a local municipality. But who pays, Mr. Speaker? Obviously, the residents of the municipalities have to pay while the federal government gets a free ride.

Unfortunately the minister is not in the House today. He should be, because this private members' motion involves a very important principle which falls square in the middle of his responsibilities. He had promised that a task force would examine this whole area, but an article in the Ottawa Citizen of July 9, 1980 reads in part:

—Cosgrove told the committee the task force would not deal with this question and there was no chance the government would accede to the request anyway, because of fiscal restraint.

The government is really saying, then, that this is not a matter of the merits of the proposal for the federal government to pay grants in lieu of business taxes as a private corporation would, but it is really a matter of fiscal restraint. The government just feels that it cannot afford to pay. Who better can afford to pay, Mr. Speaker, the federal government with its broad revenue base or a local municipality or property owners?

This is not surprising, however, because when the minister introduced Bill C-4, he saw that the principle of the bill was flawed and he promised that a task force would deal with it. But he never delivered on that promise, Mr. Speaker. He promised that a study would be done on this whole matter of grants in lieu of taxes within a year, and that it would come before a parliamentary committee. That has never happened, and it is not surprising because this minister has promised other things which have not come about.

He made noises about municipalities being recognized in the Constitution. Why would he do that? He did it because municipalities are concerned with having adequate revenues, and one way that they hoped to get adequate revenues was through some positive recognition in the Constitution. We all know how far that idea is from reality, but the minister and the government made that promise. This minister promises but does not know how to deliver.

It is important that this subject should get an adequate hearing because it involves fundamental principles of democracy. The federal government should not be able to act in an arbitrary, unregulated fashion in a local community. It should be subject to the same laws, regulations and legislative authority as any other resident. If there is one thing that the Liberal government has demonstrated, however, it is its utter petulence, arrogance and lack of appreciation of the democratic process.

People are fed up with being run over by this government. People are fed up with the government's misuse of arbitrary authority.

This private member's motion raises a very important subject which deserves serious consideration. It has obviously raised some concerns on this side of the House, although I have yet to see any evidence of real concern on the other side. The matter is important to the individual taxpayer because it means that as long as the federal government gets a free ride in the communities across the country, the local taxpayer has to pay more in property taxes. We all know how difficult it is to be able to afford a House today, particularly with this government in office and the way it is running the economy in general.

This is a worthy motion and I wish the government would wake up and respond to it.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Savard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in a Notice of Motion tabled on April 30, 1980, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) in Alberta suggested that the House consider the possibility of increasing the grants in lieu of taxes paid by Crown corporations to the Canadian taxation authorities so that these grants equal the taxes paid for buildings owned or used by private organizations. First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the House that the Canadian government now has one of the best and most comprehensive grant programs in the world, and it has worked very well for over 30 years and that our assistance and advice have been requested many times by other countries who wished to improve their own grant programs. There now exists a consultation procedure between Canadian representatives and our American counterparts. The United States wishes to improve their program by learning more about the operation of our grant program.

Not content to sit back and relax, the government has made a deliberate effort within the last few years to improve our own system even more by developing new legislation, methods and approaches, which will enable us to reinforce not only the relationships between the local and central governments but also the fiscal powers of municipalities. The basic plan of the government for improving the grant program consists in developing a system which will deal essentially with the buildings of federal departments and Crown corporations which provide services as though these buildings were taxable. In the case of Crown corporations whose basic role is not to provide services, the plan is similar except that these corporations will be asked in addition to pay subsidies in lieu of the commercial occupancy tax. The amendments to the grant mechanisms of Crown corporations will be regulated on the one hand by the new Municipal Grants Act, and on the other hand, by the draft regulations on grants paid by Crown corporations, the final version of which is now being prepared.

The Municipal Grants Act of 1980, which was passed by the House on July 17, 1980, and promulgated on December 5, 1980, provides in Section 8 that the governor in council may make regulations for carrying out the purposes of the act. Paragraph 8(1)(f) concerns the regulations which will provide for the mechanisms to be used by Crown corporations listed in Schedules III and IV of the act concerning their grant programs in lieu of taxes paid to the various taxation authorities under whose juridiction come the buildings of these corporations. Preparation of the draft regulations on the grants paid by Crown corporations is virtually completed after lenghty consultations and negotiations with the corporations, companies, commissions, boards and orgaizations established to fulfil certain functions for the Canadian government. I expect these regulations to be published shortly in the The Canada

Gazette and I trust that those concerned will have enough time to give their comments before they are promulgated.

It would now be appropriate to go back a few years and explain why it was decided at the time to improve the grant in lieu of taxes programs for Crown corporations before promulgation of the new legislation on Crown corporations and the revised Financial Administration Act. Most federal Crown corporations have paid grants in lieu of property taxes since the implementation in 1950 of the grant program for departmental buildings. Instead of paying grants, some of these corporations have in fact paid their property and commercial occupancy taxes directly. Throughout the years, however, a number of complaints have been made concerning the grant practices of certain corporations; in addition, there has been public concern about the differences among the practices of various agencies.

In an order issued in March 1967, the cabinet stated that all federal Crown corporations would have to pay grants for their buildings on a basis generally not less generous than that provided in the Municipal Grants Act for payments related to departmental buildings. There has never been any strict legal obligation for the Crown corporations to comply with this, and the government has been considering establishing a stricter measure.

Mr. Speaker, the Municipal Grants Act of 1980 and the proposed regulation on grants paid by Crown corporations have provided for the review and the streamlining of the procedures followed by Crown corporations with regard to grants and have aligned these procedures on those followed by departments. Therefore, Schedules III and IV of the 1980 act on grants to municipalities were established to include all known Crown corporations. Corporations listed in Schedule III are in general functionally dependent on the Consolidated Revenue Fund and are subject to the guidelines contained in the regulations respecting grants in lieu of property tax or frontage or land tax and the local improvement or development tax. These guidelines are closely modelled on those included in the legislation governing departmental buildings.

Corporations included in Schedule IV usually operate without having to use funds from the Consolidated Revenue Fund and they must not only comply with the guidelines governing grants in lieu of property, frontage or land tax, but they must also pay grants in lieu of business occupancy tax. Crown corporations are divided into two separate schedules, with respect to grants, for a very logical reason.

Certain corporations, namely those listed in Schedule III, are not independent of the federal treasury in the sense that they need financial assistance from the government to operate and they are not commercial concerns. Generally speaking, those agencies are akin to federal departments since they do not compete on the market and do not sell goods or services at prices which would provide a return on invested capital. The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the National Capital Commission, the National Research Council of Canada and the Northern Canada Power Commission are examples of federal agencies falling into that category. Conversely, the corporations listed in Schedule IV are generally independent of the federal treasury; they may on occasion be required to compete with the private sector and they have to try to make profits. Among the federal agencies included in that category we might mention Air Canada, the Bank of Canada, Eldorado Nuclear Limited and Petro-Canada. The grants paid in lieu of real property tax and business occupancy tax by the corporations listed in Schedule IV put those corporations on roughly the same footing as private sector organizations: the grants are the equivalent of the taxable amounts claimed by the taxing authorities.

Mr. Speaker, it would have been extremely difficult in the past to take stock of the agencies which might have been defined as Crown corporations and to decide which ones ought to pay grants in lieu of the business occupancy tax. For several years, however, a Privy Council Office task force has been hard at work on the problems linked with Crown corporations. The end result of that activity was Bill C-27 on Crown corporations, the purpose of which was to ensure the control, the management and the imputability of Crown corporations by defining them, listing them and classifying them in schedules. The bill was introduced in Parliament in 1979 but, for various reasons, it was not passed. I expect it will be reintroduced in the near future so as to include certain amendments to implement the recommendations made since 1979 which take into account the different status of a certain number of corporations created since then.

The government has decided that even if there were a direct link between the schedules listing the Crown corporations in the new Municipal Grants Act and those included in the new Crown Corporations Act, it would be altogether inappropriate to give to the Municipal Grants Act a basic role with respect to the policy concerning Crown corporations. The new Crown Corporations Act will define that policy and whenever it comes into effect it will contain a reference to Schedules III and IV of the Municipal Grants Act, 1980. That reference will be kept up to date as new Crown corporations are set up or as old corporations are phased out or are reclassified. It is important that any new agency be automatically subjected to the guidelines set out in the Municipal Grants Act. Once the schedules to the proposed new legislation on Crown corporations are firmly established, the Municipal Grants Act, 1980, will finally be amended accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with a view to taking into consideration any amendment made to the schedules and establishing an automatic link between the schedules to both acts.

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time that I have had the privilege of participating in a debate in this House since we have come back from the summer adjournment. I do so with some enthusiasm with respect to this particular piece of parliamentary business which is before us.

As the House knows, the wording is quite simple and the resolution is quite simple: that in the opinion of the House, the government should consider the advisability of increasing grants made to municipalities in lieu of property taxes, compensating for the use of property by Crown corporations and agencies, so that these grants should be comparable to the taxes paid by private organizations.

If I followed the parliamentary secretary correctly, he said that in the last little while there has been a vast improvement in the legislative framework within which grants in lieu of taxes are now paid. He is quite right. However, I think it would be very foolish of any of us to assume that the bill that was passed, which was piloted in this House by my seatmate, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), when he was minister of finance, is the last word. I know that the minister of finance at that time did not consider it to be the last word, nor should the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Savard), nor should his minister.

He is as aware as I am that there are a number of things which can be done to improve the position at the moment. I think he is aware of its importance. I know the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) is aware, and I am grateful to him for the privilege of seconding this most worth-while motion. I will not go over the ground, but if the parliamentary secretary speaks to his minister from time to time, I hope he will inform him that there is a great deal to be done in the business tax area. I think we are past the point, at least in terms of the operation of the Canadian government, when it can be argued that the government is not in business. In many ways it is in business. Some would regret it. Some would welcome it, depending on one's philosophy. But there are many aspects of government operations that have about them all the indications of business in the commercial world. They compete in many ways with the commercial world. There are almost 500 Crown agencies that have been identified thus far. There may be more. They are in business in many ways, so that process must go on.

To the extent that those businesses in the name of the Crown are located in some of the 2,000 municipalities across the country that benefit from their presence and from this legislation, it is important that we settle and resolve once and for all the position of the local municipalities with respect to business taxes. They are meant to compensate municipalities for services which are rendered to businesses and agencies of all kinds the costs for which are borne on the backs of the local ratepayers, and to the extent there is not an equitable contribution by government at all levels to that local tax base, those taxpayers have to pay a lot more. It is that balance that we ought to be seeking. I commend that to the parliamentary secretary and I ask him to take that message to his minister.

One other matter recently came up right here with respect to the national capital. It occurred in the House of Commons today. I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) about two decentralization programs, one involving the Post Office and the other involving the ministry of the Secretary of State (Mr. Fox). I gave him an opportunity, first, to deny that it was true that those two agencies were being moved, and, second, to deny that the government was not in fact revitalizing, rejuvenating and reviving the process of decentralization which the former president of the Treasury Board in the Clark government had the good sense to cancel, to the extent that it was reasonably possible to do.

All hon. members will recall our decision to cancel or defer the move of 19 of the agencies that were to move, because of the nature of the service they provided and because of the lack of cost benefit in the move. I supported that decision. As hon. members know, in some cases the process was so far advanced that this could not be done. If this is the case, and if the government is planning on doing that, then the government could affect dramatically the tax base of all municipalities within the national capital region. On both sides of the river we have regional governments. Their taxation is based on a proportionate sharing of the cost of the provision of services. If the tax base is eroded in one municipality, perhaps Ottawa or Hull, then to the extent that funds are necessary to carry the municipal services that have been put in place, other taxpayers have to bear that cost.

I want the government to understand, because I do not intend to let this matter drop, that much more is involved than just physically relocating bodies and work; it has a profound effect on local municipalities. It also has a profound effect on families and a whole host of other things that I will debate at another time. But it does relate to the issue that is still outstanding and unresolved between the municipalities within the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton which I know best, and the federal government. It is something which must be dealt with and cleared up.

We are still not at idem with respect to the amount that is appropriately owed under the existing statutes. The business tax matter is not in it at all. The hon. member for Red Deer says that we owe $8 million in arrears in the city of Ottawa, and that affects all the municipalities around on this side of the river.

The mayor of Ottawa, quite properly, has called for a meeting to settle the issue, to engage representatives of all levels of government in settling the issue. Speaking for myself, I am prepared to go to such a meeting if the minister is prepared to invite us.

The other matter on the horizon bearing on municipal services is the whole question of established program financing. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has indicated that he intends to reduce transfers to the provinces for certain programs and post-secondary education, as well as for social programs, parts of which have a municipal base; all of which arise from the provincial base.

I do not have figures to substantiate this, but I would like someone to show that the general principle is wrong. The general principle that I refer to is that there will be a crimping from the provinces to the local municipalities, to the extent that the provinces are denied those funds heretofore available by transfer from the federal government. The services will have to be provided. The cost will have to be borne somewhere. What will happen? They will be borne to a greater and greater degree on the business taxpayers, and the property taxpayers in the municipalities.

I ask the parliamentary secretary to implore the Minister of Finance, his own minister, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) to take a look at the unanimous report of this Parliament which said that it was wrong for there to be any change in the present basis. To do so at this time would cripple the delivery of services in some areas. That was the unanimous report. That was not the opposition speaking. That was not just the New Democratic Party speaking, it was the Liberal government's own backbenchers speaking as a result of a reference given to them to study the matter, with the approval, I suppose, of the government, and those were their conclusions.

The representatives decided that the program which has been initiated will have an effect on provinces, on municipalities and on taxpayers, and thereby it will have also an effect on renters in all communities. This is a proposition which ought to be avoided and ought not to be advanced by this government. I would ask the parliamentary secretary to take that message to his minister.

It is important, I think, that we recognize that at the root of our system of delivery of services to people are the municipalities. Governments have a duty to pay their way to the fullest extent, not to hide behind constitutional niceties that one Crown cannot tax the other; not to use semantics and nomenclature; not to use the word Crown or the concept of the Crown to sneak out of or to get away from obligations which are owed by virtue of service. I hope we are moving in that direction.

The parliamentary secretary has raised the question in terms of the goodness of the program. He said that other countries are looking at us, that we have a good program, I do not doubt that at all. I am proud of it and if we are leaders in that field, then it is a feather in our caps. All of us should be pleased about that. But I must add this caveat, that we have not yet reached the end of the road.

I think we should take a look at a number of government programs, such as, for example, the Canadian Oil Substitution Program, which is of interest to municipalities. I am a supporter of that program. I think it is a good idea to get people off using oil if we can, and on to using something else. But many cities in Canada, many municipalities in the country, have programs for the renovation of various schools and public facilities. One of the principal motives behind these programs is the conservation of energy. I am sure if hon. members asked many municipal leaders, they would say quite frankly that they would like to substitute oil based equipment with gas or electrically based alternatives as far as possible.

I was quite stunned to see a letter from the head of a municipality in the national capital region in fact it was the Mayor of Ottawa—saying that she had made inquiries with the Renewable Energy Secretariat of Energy, Mines and Resources Canada, and with the Ontario minister of industry and found that municipalities or their agencies were not entitled to apply for a grant under that grant program of conversion. The reason being, of course, that it is a tax-incentive program designed for private individuals and corporations.

It seems to me it would be helpful to municipalities—if we are talking about grants generally, and this has been the subject of this debate—if the parliamentary secretary suggested to the minister of energy that they re-examine that program to see whether the tremendous users of energy might not have grants given to them to entice them to change, so they would in fact have some incentive to help the government in its own energy conservation program, a program in which all Canadians should be engaged. I understand that is not the case at the moment. I commend that as one proposition the parliamentary secretary might take to his minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). In terms of municipalities, I think it would be helpful to the government's program of conservation if that proposition could be advanced.

I regard the resolution as important not just to the City of Ottawa, and not just to municipalities within the national capital region, but to the 2,000 of them in the country. There are post offices everywhere and public buildings of all kinds in municipalities. Even if we have the best system thus far, and I am not going to dispute that today, the parliamentary secretary knows, as his speech implied, that there are areas in which it could be improved.

I commend the hon. member for Red Deer for allowing us to debate this matter in order that we could bring to the attention of the ministry and the government the support there would be in this House of Commons on all sides for improvement to the present system. The basis of our democracy is a healthy, strong local government, and the statute with regard to grants in lieu of taxes is important. The contribution of the federal government to the welfare of people living in these municipalities could be made even more significant by some improvement to the system, perfect as it is now.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the notice of motion of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), may I remind him that it has already been suggested that the program providing grants in lieu of property taxes for the use of property by Crown corporations and agencies should apply not only to property taxes but also to business occupancy taxes. First of all, I should like to go back to the origins of the municipal business occupancy tax, and then show why the federal administration feels that only some designated Crown corporations should pay Canadian tax authorities grants in lieu of taxes.

Mr. Speaker, going back to the turn of the century, we find that in fact the only source of revenue available to municipalities for financing local services was property taxes. Even then, it was obvious that unless they could find new sources of revenue, local governments could not afford the expenditures needed to increase and improve their services.

As time went on, Mr. Speaker, the federal government and the provinces made studies and set up commissions entrusted with looking into the matter. Generally, the resulting reports stressed the need for municipal authorities to levy an additional tax on the capital or rental value of buildings occupied by financial or business companies, that is, a special tax levied by the municipality on properties used for business purposes I repeat, for business purposes. That tax is justifiable for the following reason: When someone can reasonably expect to make a gain or profit by carrying out a commercial activity in a municipality and by supplying the risk capital required and the know-how, but when in fact he also benefits from local services, facilities, labour, transportation services as well as the purchasing power of the municipality, it is only fair then that he should pay out an additional amount to municipal coffers just for the privilege of benefiting from a large number of the elements necessary for making a profit.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot dispute the fact that the term "commercial operation" refers to a gainful occupation, a craft, a profession, a function or any other activity performed more or less continuously with a view to making a profit. It is a concise definition drawn from precedents dealing with the assessment of taxation in Canada. It is also a definition which apparently includes some criteria or basic principles. It has been noted that some Crown corporations which are operating without relying on the Treasury, will have to pay a commercial occupancy tax when it comes into effect. In order to justify the payment of such a tax on the federal buildings or Crown corporations listed in Schedule III of the new legislation on municipal subsidies we would have either explicitly or implicitly to equate the services of the federal government with those of a commercial operation. Now such an equation is totally unfounded. These departments and corporations are service-oriented and not profit-oriented, and thus one cannot consider them as carrying out a commercial activity in the conventional sense.

In Canada, Mr. Speaker, the great majority of municipalities and provincial governments do not pay any business occupancy tax on the properties owned by them or managed by corporations, organizations or councils created by them, except for those which are specifically profit-seeking, such as hydro-electric commissions or provincial liquor stores. However, one should note that the province of Quebec has innovated by establishing a program which, since 1980, calls for the payment to municipalities of grants in lieu of business occupancy taxes and property taxes on almost every property owned by its departments and Crown corporations. Because of the close financial links between the provincial and municipal administrations, the province is able to cancel or to roll back other forms of financial aid. This possibility does not exist quite in the same degree in the case of the federal government.

The business occupancy tax does not apply in several areas of Canada. Also, there are many ways to determine its rate. It may be a fixed percentage of the annual amount of rental revenues or a fixed amount, or else a percentage of the assessment. Since this percentage is different depending on the type of business activity, in some cases a provincial statute makes the payment of the business occupancy tax mandatory. In other cases, provisions stipulate that the tax becomes payable only on the request of the city council. In the latter case, were the Canadian government to decide to pay such taxes on departmental or Crown corporation property, city councils would no doubt tend to take advantage of that option, especially in cases where such holdings make up most of the landed property in the municipality.

There are two other very significant factors for not paying business occupancy taxes on Canadian Crown buildings. First the disparity of amounts that would be distributed across Canada, and second, the cost to the federal treasury in these days of budgetary restraint. Firstly, Mr. Speaker, were grants in lieu of business occupancy taxes to be paid, widely unequal amounts would be distributed across Canada since 80 per cent of the Canadian federal property holdings come under less than 5 per cent of the taxing authorities receiving grants. This being the case, it seemed preferable to extend the scope of the grant program by increasing the categories of buildings, entitled, and therefore the amount of grants paid to a number of municipalities that until now were receiving minimal or no grants.

• (1650)

Further, if grants in lieu of business occupancy taxes were to be paid on all federal Crown property, huge amounts of money would be involved. The over-all cost would be extremely difficult to accurately assess, but it might very well total $100 million, that is $85 million for departmental buildings and $15 for Crown corporation buildings listed in Schedule III. In summary, Mr. Speaker, and I conclude on this, it is simply impossible to incur such expenditures.

• (1650)

[English]

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): I would like to second the remarks made by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) and the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) who argued the points raised in this motion extremely well. This is very important to all members who have federal land holdings in their constituency.

I would like to refer specifically to one type of federal property often found in municipalities. That is, land reserved for the Indians. There are two types of land reserved for Indians. One is Indian reserves under the Indian Act. In my constituency there are a number of cases in which the reserves are actually located within municipalities. There is need for improvement of the financial arrangements between the Government of Canada, presumably acting on behalf of the people who live on the reserve, and the municipality called upon to provide services for that reserve. The greatest problem lies in those areas of land designated as land reserved for Indians but not for Indian reserves. This may sound peculiar but that is the wording of the legislation. I know a couple of municipalities which have several acres of designated land reserved for Indians but not for Indian reserves. The Government of Canada pays grants in lieu of taxes to the municipality. However, since those areas of land have not been legally subdivided, although those areas have been built upon and people live there, the government will only pay grants in lieu of taxes as if the land were completely undeveloped. The result is very small revenue accruing to the local municipal governments. For that reason, they have taken the attitude that they are not responsible for the provision of full services to those areas because there is no revenue coming into the municipality.

I think this matter should be looked into by the government. It should be rectified in some way.

Having brought this matter to the attention of the House, I am prepared to let the hon. member from the New Democratic Party speak before we vote on this important motion.

[Translation]

Mr. René Gingras (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in this debate, although I have only five minutes to speak on such a detailed matter that would require half an hour. I believe that if all government agencies and Crown corporations were to pay grants equal to the amount of taxes paid by private agencies in the various areas of Canada, it would mean these agencies and corporations not only would still have to pay the full amount of grants for their lands and buildings as they now have to, but also grants in lieu of business occupancy taxes. The previous speaker dealt with the business occupancy tax, and indicated the very valid reasons why that tax should not apply. I now intend to show why it is appropriate to exclude from their grant programs building units owned by them, in the same way those units are excluded from departmental grants applicable to property holdings.

The only class of facilities which might be included without giving rise to considerable pressure for the inclusion of other classes in the grant program would be machinery and equipment. However, the arguments raised against grants for facilities are equally valid for machinery and equipment, including the very erratic way in which the latter are taxed or not taxed in the various areas of Canada when they are owned by the business community of the private sector.

Now, machinery raises administrative problems due to the fact that certain types of equipment are part of buildings. According to the general principle applied, even if a piece of machinery may be within a building and fixed to it, it is not considered to be part of that building, except if it is used in some way in its operation like, for instance, elevators, escalators, boilers, plumbing systems, air conditioning units, sprinklers, etc., which are all considered to be part of the building and are liable for grants in the case of buildings owned by Crown corporations or government departments.

Notwithstanding the different ways in which these matters are dealt with by individual provinces, the various types of buildings are not all taxed when they belong to the private sector. In this context and in view of the difficulties which might stem from the payment of grants on some buildings in some provinces and the non-payment of grants on similar facilities in other provinces, something which might jeopardize the universal nature of the grants program, it was felt that all Crown constructions had to be excluded.

This firm position concerning facilities is based on several other reasons. First of all, if one type of property were included in the grant scheme, there would be strong pressures, for other types to be subjected to the scheme, for it does not seem logical to include some while excluding others. Also, if all facilities were to give rise to grants, Crown corporations would have to agree, for this is provided for under Section 8(1)(f) of the 1980 legislation. This decision would prove very costly to a number of Crown corporations to the point where they could no longer meet their obligations.

On the other hand, and this has nothing to do strictly speaking with facilities, few people are aware that under the grants program administered by the federal government, grants are paid in respect of some classes of buildings which would not be taxed were they to belong to other organizations. I should mention, by way of conclusion, schools, hospitals, penitentiaries, fire halls, etc.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5.02 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF POLISH REFUGEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That the government recognize the great contribution made to the growth and development of this country by earlier Polish immigrants, by introducing forthwith measures that would allow for the further immigration of Poles in such numbers so as to make an impact upon the large number of applications received from Polish people seeking entry to Canada through Vienna.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF RUSSIAN INVASION OF HUNGARY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, this coming Friday will mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of one of the most tragic attacks on freedom ever witnessed, the invasion of Hungary by the U.S.S.R. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis):

That this House re-express both its condemnation of the U.S.S.R. for that invasion and its deep and abiding commitment to the return of a free democracy in Hungary and in all other nation states similarly suppressed, by interrupting its proceedings on Friday, October 23, at noon for one minute of silence in memory of those who gave their lives in the fight for freedom and against totalitarianism.

Madam Speaker: Presentation of this motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

GRANTS FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, whereas the all-party fiscal task force unanimously agreed that any cuts to post-secondary education would seriously injure the institutions and block accessibility by less affluent students, especially women and rural students, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That the Prime Minister today withdraw the policy of cutting $1.5 billion from post-secondary education, particularly in view of the government's new revenue source of over $50 billion over the next five years.

ELECTION OF MR. PAPANDREOU AS PRIME MINISTER OF GREECE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, pursuant to Standing Order 43. Recognizing yesterday's decisive victory in the Greek elections for the socialist party led by Andreas Papandreou, and recognizing that Canada was Mr. Papandreou's home for five years from 1969 to 1974 while he was exiled by the Greek military junta of the time, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House extends its best wishes to Mr. Papandreou and the people of Greece, and that this House celebrates the flourishing of democracy in the home of democracy and looks forward to continued friendship and co-operation between our two nations.

EMPLOYMENT

CALL FOR PROGRAMS TO PROVIDE JOBS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, recent information, including two parliamentary task force reports, confirms that skilled labour shortages will affect Canada's trade, industrial, energy and economic future. At the same time Canadian young people fear dismal job opportunities. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That the minister responsible for employment immediately initiate measures to assess the needs and implement programs designed to meet labour needs, retraining opportunities, and to provide jobs for young Canadian men and women.

SUPPORT FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the recommendation of the parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements against any reduction in general federal support for post-secondary education, and in view of the concern expressed by many students in Ottawa today that post-secondary education not be relegated to a purely economic concern, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong):

That this House instructs the government to forget whatever notions of cutbacks in this sector it may have, and that this House affirms its appreciation of the value of a liberal arts education and critical thinking in general as the best guarantee of sound and democratic social and economic policy.

THE LATE MOSHE DAYAN

TRIBUTE TO ISRAEL LEADER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of great importance to every member of the House. On Friday, October 16, the world suffered the loss of another peacemaker in the Middle East. Moshe Dayan, a military man who spent many years fighting for a cause, and who, in the last few years of his life worked so tirelessly to establish peace in the Middle East, will be greatly missed by all of us who wish to see an end to hostilities in that region of the world. I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That this House convey through Madam Speaker its deepest sympathies to Mrs. Dayan and her family, as well as to the government and people of Israel.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SUGGESTED MORATORIUM ON HOUSING MORTGAGE RENEWALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That this House direct the Minister of Finance to take such steps as are necessary to ensure that there is a complete and effective moratorium on mortgage renewals until the relief that householders are being led to expect from the budget is made public on budget night, now only a fortnight off, so that both parties to mortgage renewals will have a more accurate notion of the tax climate in which the terms of those renewals will have to be made.

DENIAL OF EXPOS' BASEBALL GAMES TO VIEWERS IN NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent importance. Whereas the residents of northern Saskatchewan have been avid followers of the Montreal Expos television broadcasts all summer; and whereas these viewers have now been deprived of Expos' games in the National League playoffs this fall because of a change in the viewing rights from the CBC to the CTV network; I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House instruct the Minister of Communications to do everything in his power with the CBC, CTV, the CRTC and other principals to ensure that the citizens of northern Saskatchewan receive the upcoming World Series games. These northerners, like all members of this House, would have liked to join all Canada in wishing the Montreal Expos well in their game today.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, the senior citizens and handicapped of this country rely almost totally on the mail to communicate with their friends and loved ones. A 30-cent postal rate will become an unacceptable hardship, on their fixed incomes. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That the government direct Canada Post to strike a special stamp for the senior citizens and handicapped of this country, at 50 per cent of the first class rate.

HOUSING

FIGURES QUOTED IN CMHC REPORT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and in the absence of the Minister of Finance, I will direct my question to the Minister of Public Works who is responsible for housing. He will know that there have been reports based upon a document attributed to CMHC, which indicate just how serious the housing and rental crisis is becoming in this country.

● (1415)

I wonder if the minister can confirm that he has received advice from his officials which indicates that current interest rates will create what his own department calls "unmanageable burdens" for more than 100,000 Canadians in the next two years. If, in fact, his department is anticipating unmanageable burdens which will force these people out of their homes in the next two years, will he now give us a guarantee that there will be action in the budget in November which will help these specific individuals?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is referring to the newspaper reports of the weekend which headlined some of the figures about which he is talking, I would like to indicate at the outset, number one, that I have not read such a report.

Some hon. Members: You wouldn't.

Mr. Cosgrove: I understand that there is such a report. It is a communication within the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. At the outset I would indicate that the 100,000 figure is incorrect, and that it is as wildly erroneous as the figure given by the Leader of the New Democratic Party when he said that there were 85,000 families who would be out of their homes by Christmas. It is as wildly speculative as that figure.

I would remind the Leader of the Opposition that just last week he quoted from the Speech from the Throne, which stated that this government intended to assist people who needed help the most, and that we would move to assist these people. The Prime Minister indicated that in September, as did the Minister of Finance. I am saying that. However, I would caution the Leader of the Opposition, and advise him to read a bit further in the Speech from the Throne. As a matter of fact he should read the next sentence, following the words which he quoted, stating that this government does not believe that we would have to expend large amounts of funds in order to do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMPACT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES ON HOME OWNERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Frankly, Madam Speaker, neither I, nor the people in Canada who face the prospect of being thrown out of their homes by this government, care what the minister has or has not read. What we care about is what the minister is going to do. He says that the figures which have been quoted here in the House, and quoted as a result of documents from his department, are false. He tells us that he has not read those documents which are false. However, would he confirm to the House of Commons that he has information as to the impact of high interest rates upon individual Canadians? Will he tell us if the figure of 100,000 is wrong?

How many will be thrown out of their homes? Will there be 99,000 or 98,000? Will he give us the figures that he has, and will he tell this House of Commons whether or not he is going to insist that in the budget which is to be brought down in November there will be direct and immediate action to protect those Canadians who are being forced out of their homes by Liberal government policy?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, since the middle of August when interest rates reached a level above 18 per cent, I have been working not only with officials of Canada Mortgage and Housing but also with representatives of the industry across the country. As late as Friday I met with the representatives of HUDAC and UDI regarding the impact of high interest rates. This morning, in Metro Toronto, I met with representatives of CASIRS on the impact of high interest rates. I have received information and advice as to the impact which I have indicated in those documents which have been prepared for cabinet consideration. They will be released when the budget is released, and when those figures are made generally known to the public.

REQUEST THAT BUDGET AID HOME OWNERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Since the minister responsible for housing has refused to indicate whether there will be anything in the budget to help these individuals, I guess the question that I must put to him is whether or not he has met with the Minister of Finance, and whether the Minister of Finance will have anything in his budget which will help these Canadians who will be thrown out of their homes. He may claim that there are only 98,000; his figures say that there are 100,000 to 110,000. We want to know whether that is the case.

I want to ask the minister a further question, quoting from the report which he has not yet read, concerning the rental market. The report from his department indicates that:

> Rental investment will thus dry up in most markets and vacancy rates in most markets will approach zero by 1983.

This means that people will be thrown out of their homes and there will be no accommodation for them to rent, as a result of Liberal government policy.

Will the minister now tell this House of Commons, first, will there be action in the budget brought down on November 3 to help those Canadians being forced out of their homes; second, will there be action in that budget to reverse this trend of drying up rental accommodation in the country?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, unlike the government led by the Leader of the Opposition, this government has already acted to undo some of the harm inflicted by his last administration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: Number one, we moved to reintroduce MURBs, which have been responsible for 10,000 to 15,000 new starts in the last 18 months. We moved to increase the amount of social housing in this country, which the hon. member asked to have privatized and flubbed off onto the provinces, because his position while he was Prime Minister was to back away from housing.

● (1420)

ASSISTANCE SOUGHT FOR CONSTRUCTION OF RENTAL ACCOMMODATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, this minister seems to have difficulty hearing as well as difficulty acting. My question was simple. Will there be a provision in the budget to help those hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are being forced out of their homes by Liberal government policy? And will there be specific help in the budget, which will reverse a trend that is drying up the construction of rental accommodation across this country and leading us into a situation where not only will people be unable to live in their homes, but in most cities and communities in Canada they will not have anything to rent?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would remind the hon. Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Nielsen: Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Cosgrove: —of the Speech from the Throne, which he quoted in part in his first question when Parliament resumed. I would indicate to him that this government will indeed meet that commitment, namely, to assist those people who need help the most.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

PARLIAMENTARY TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my leader has been asking about one crisis in the country, namely, the housing crisis. I want to ask about another crisis, which is the impending crisis in health care and post-secondary education as a result of proposed cutbacks by the government.

I would have directed my question to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, the Secretary of State or the Minister of State for Social Development, all of whom are involved with this issue, and all of whom knew there was a student delegation in this city today and who took this opportunity, I have no doubt, to duck being here and meeting them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Shame!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Great duckers.

Miss MacDonald: Therefore I will direct my question to the acting Prime Minister, whomever that may be.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: At the time of the last budget the Minister of Finance proposed cutting $1.5 billion from the amount that otherwise would be paid to provincial governments for health care and post-secondary education. In the wake of this, an all-party parliamentary committee was set up to examine the whole field of federal-provincial fiscal relations. My question to the acting Prime Minister is very simple. I would like to know from him or her the following: is it the intention of the government to accept the main thrust of that all-party parliamentary task force that no such reductions to either post-secondary education or health care should take place?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am afraid that I will be unable to answer this question today.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Why don't you ask the CTC?

Mr. Pepin: It is obviously a question for the Prime Minister or for the Minister of Finance to deal with. The Prime Minister is in Montreal today, and he is not attending the baseball game. The Minister of Finance was scheduled to be here, but he was slightly indisposed this morning.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Laniel: He is renewing his loan.

Mr. Pepin: I am quite sure that the very serious question raised today by the hon. lady will be promptly answered in the coming days by either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance.

REPORTED CUTS IN FUNDING FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, it is slightly prescient that the minister who chose to answer this question about reductions in post-secondary education and health care is the man who knows so much about VIA Rail reductions. I hope that does not augur too badly for post-secondary education.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: In any event, I have another question to pose. The minister may be able to shed more light on this. In addition to the reductions that were indicated by the Minister of Finance, there are reports that his colleague, the Minister of State for Social Development, is now trying to impose much greater cuts upon post-secondary education, cuts that would do irreparable damage to our colleges and universities, amounting to some $7.5 billion over the next five years. Can the minister give us the assurance that at least that attempt by the Minister of State for Social Development has been beaten down, and that move, which would have the effect of crippling our colleges and universities, will not take place? If it does take place, it will in effect make our post-secondary institutions the privilege solely of the sons and daughters of the rich.

● (1425)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it should be obvious to everybody that there was a reduction also in the standard of the questions being raised by the hon. member. Her first question was much better than the second one. The first one at least referred to a report of the committee of this House; it had standard, it had class. The second one refers to rumours about divisions between the Minister of Justice in one of his capacities, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Obviously I am not going to comment and report on gossip. The answer to these questions will come at the proper time, as I indicated in answer to the first question.

HOUSING

QUERY RESPECTING CMHC REPORT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the minister allegedly responsible for housing. Another report did emerge on the weekend from CMHC, this one contending that 135 families a day between now and the fall of 1983 will lose their homes. The Toronto Star has a copy of the report, and I have a copy of the report. I find it astounding that the minister should get to his feet today and say, as he did just a minute ago, that he has not even looked at it or has not seen it. I would like to send him over a copy. He can have a look at it, and I hope, prepare himself for tomorrow's question period.

Since this has been an issue of profound concern in every community across Canada for the past few months, and since it has been raised in this House ever since it opened last week, why has the minister not taken the trouble to read the report, and why does he not report back to the House of Commons on its accuracy?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, in answer to a question by the Leader of the Opposition, I already indicated that this morning in Metropolitan Toronto I met with a group of representatives of Canadian home owners affected by high interest rates, who asked to make submissions to me; this was not a report from staff but actually people who are impacted by high interest rates. They asked to make a submission to me. I met with them. I then got on an airplane and came directly to this building.

I have not read this report, but I have indicated that, from the newspaper reports which say that by 1983 100,000 people will lose their homes, the report is wildly out of date. It is erroneous. It talks about starts in the first quarter as being 135,000 when we all know they are at 180,000, so it is over 30,000 out to begin with. If the hon. member, through his research staff, cannot do any better than that and cannot come up with something better than that, I think he should dig in a bit deeper.

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S POSITION ON RENT CONTROLS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, when the report was done it was done on the assumption that mortgage rates would be at 21 per cent. They have only dropped to 19.75 per cent. I say that even the minister should be able to calculate that if the data that went into his report was accurate—he has not yet taken the trouble to read this report prepared by his staff and he should have read it weeks ago and not have to wait until it is raised in the House—this slight drop in the level of mortgage rates will not mean "boo" all in terms of the number of families who will lose their homes by next fall.

Since the report indicates that rent levels are going to climb astronomically next year as well, and since the minister in a CTV interview last April said he was opposed to the continuation of rent controls, and made the same point in a speech somewhere else last year, I would like him to take the opportunity to clarify the government's position. Is the minister now in favour of his old position, which is to abolish rent controls, which will be disastrous, or will he admit he was mistaken?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the difficulty in dealing with a report produced on such notice is apparent. It has to be apparent when you consider that the Leader of the New Democratic Party indicates he read and studied the report and then asks a question, what about interest rates at 22 per cent? I would ask the Clerk to return the report to him so that he may reread the paper. I have, on two seconds reading, identified that they are talking about interest rates of 22 per cent.

● (1430)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member for Oshawa seek the floor on a further supplementary?

REPORTED FORECAST OF HOUSING STARTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The report that the minister has sent back, without taking the trouble to read, also notes that housing starts in the coming year would drop to 135,000. That will be the lowest number of housing starts in 16 years. Since almost 20 per cent of those in the lumber industry in British Columbia who would like to be employed are out of work and since the level of unemployed construction workers stands at 10 per cent, would the minister agree with businessmen who have commented on the tragedy of this sector by saying the overwhelming reason for this situation is high interest rates, and that the only way we are going to see a turn-around in terms of job creation is by a drastic drop in the level of interest rates?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I did not go beyond page two of the report produced by the Leader of the NDP.

An hon. Member: Wrong again.

Mr. Cosgrove: Based on the newspaper reports, which state that starts this year, 1981, not next year, will be at a rate of 135,000, I would bring to the hon. gentleman's attention that starts to the month of September were at a rate of 191,000, which means that the report is 30,000 out in its projections to begin with. I would ask him to consider that, with the strength of the report he has in front of him.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

GRANTS FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister who should be answering this question, I would direct it to the Minister of Communications who was the former Secretary of State. As you know, Madam Speaker, I, along with four members from across the way, served on the task force. We spent thousands of hours listening to evidence and considering the views of people across the country. We made a unanimous finding that any cuts would cut directly into the sinew of the post-secondary institutions in this country. Would the minister tell the House if it is the government's policy to continue with the cuts of $1.5 billion?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): As the hon. member knows, during my appearance in front of the committee, of which he was a member, I indicated quite clearly that as far as the federal government was concerned we were able to identify some ten to 12 objectives which we feel are national objectives which ought to be met by the post-secondary system, and which are not necessarily being met at the present time. If you ally that to the fact that the federal government is financing something close to 59 per cent of the operating costs of post-secondary education in Canada at the moment, with the students meeting about 17 per cent of the remainder, the provinces about 21 or 22 per cent in an area which is their exclusive responsibility, it is quite clear that some rearranging should be done in this field.

FUNDING FOR FEDERAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): It is clear that of $25 billion spent in this country on education, the federal government spends only $1.8 billion. The students at post-secondary levels will be getting a knife in the back again.

My supplementary question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He will know that the CAUT made a calculation of cutbacks affecting specific universities. The Secretary of State has four institutions that will lose something like $20 million. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration has two institutions which could lose $32.5 million. The Secretary of State for External Affairs himself has an institution which could lose $10 million. Are there any of you speaking up for post-secondary institutions in this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think the record of support of this government for educational institutions is well known.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: Well and favourably known. The hon. member's representation is quite unnecessary.

WESTERN DEVELOPMENT FUND

PROVISION OF MONEY IN EXPENDITURE ESTIMATES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance. I suspect I would have more success if I were to ask questions of senior cabinet ministers at "the Big O", because that is probably where they are this afternoon. Indeed, I think we all should be there.

In February of this year estimates were tabled indicating that $350 million was to be spent this year on the Western Development Fund. To this point there has been absolutely no indication of any moneys being allocated or spent in Western Canada under this particular fund. I would ask the Acting Prime Minister whether or not the fund has been forgotten, like all the other major Liberal campaign promises made to western Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Reference was made to the Western Development Fund in the last budget of the Minister of Finance. He said that it did exist, and personally I was always told that it did exist.

An hon. Member: You do not even know.

Mr. Pepin: I hope the hon. member will have a clear indication in the coming days of the existence of that fund and its use.

CONSULTATION WITH PREMIERS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, we have been waiting for the government to indicate where it is to be spent. It has been allocated for this year. Could the Acting Prime Minister state first, whether there has been any consultation with western provincial leaders, as promised by the Minister of Finance with respect to this fund? Second, will he confirm the fact that the fund has been reduced by half, to $2 billion from the $4 billion originally dedicated to western Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): I am not really in a position to indicate any more than I have. This will be shown in the estimates. I am just trying to cheer up the hon. member by telling him that when the Minister of Finance says something does exist, then it does exist.

GARRISON DIVERSION

POSITION TAKEN BY UNITED STATES ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Two weeks ago Manitobans were heartened when the American Ambassador to Canada told us that the Garrison Diversion Unit, as it is now planned, would be scrapped. He promised documentation from President Reagan confirming his statement. However, last Thursday in Fargo, North Dakota, Interior Secretary James Watt told North Dakota farmers that he and the President supported Garrison. Does the minister have any idea who speaks for the American administration in the Garrison deal, or is that administration in the habit of telling both sides what each wants to hear?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We will have to allow the United States government to speak for itself. They have not said anything like that in their discussions with us on the matter. I have been trying to track down the veracity of that statement. If that statement was made, as reported by the hon. member, we will certainly seek clarification of those words from the United States government.

REPORTED CHANGE IN UNITED STATES ATTITUDE

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Secretary of State that that statement was made in a speech to farmers in North Dakota, last Thursday.

Under the Carter administration, both the President and Interior Secretary Andrus were actively opposed to the Garrison project. The situation is clearly opposite with the present administration. In fact Secretary Watt did not even mention Canadian concerns in his Fargo speech. How will the minister's department deal with this change in attitude?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is assuming a change of attitude, which is far from clear. The money being spent so far on the whole project will not touch Canada in any aspect. The administration has made no official statement which contradicts its concern for Canadian interests. Apart from the new statement which the hon. member has brought to my attention, as indeed did the Minister of Manpower and Immigration earlier today, we have no evidence of any change in the administration's position. We are checking on that and will make the appropriate representations.

WOMEN

RIGHTS OF INDIAN WOMEN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines responsible for the Status of Women in Canada, whom I also wish to congratulate at this time. I wish to ask her what the government intends to do about restoring the rights of Mrs. Sandra Lovelace of the Tobique Indian Reserve and those of thousands of Indian women like her in Canada, following the decision made this summer by the United Nations Human Rights Commission. Does the government intend to ratify the appropriate instrument at the United Nations and change the Indian Act?

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. Yes, indeed, Canada is in contravention of an existing convention because of the Indian Act, and it is an embarrassment to me and to every woman of this country. Just recently the cabinet ratified a decision to sign the United Nations convention which will effectively eliminate all forms of discrimination against women as soon as possible. We did so on the basis of the charter of rights. The cabinet has instructed the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to consult with the Indian people of this country in order to develop a mechanism by which amendments can be made as quickly as possible.

I might add that the support of the members of this House, and the support of the women of Canada, will be with us in the swift passage of the charter of rights and the constitutional package.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SIGNING OF UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. I must say that I am pleased that this government has at long last adopted an attitude toward the question of the status of Indian women which was adopted some time ago by my government.

Mr. Chrétien: Vote for the charter, Joe.

Mr. Clark: I am being heckled by the Minister of Justice, who perhaps holds against me the fact that I have not been a liberal very long.

Perhaps I could direct a question respecting timing to the Minister of State responsible for women. She has indicated that there will be a signing and a respecting by Canada of the United Nations declaration. Will that be immediate? Will that occur before the consultation with the native people? Will that occur simultaneously with an amendment to the Indian Act? When exactly will that signature occur, and what exactly will be the time delay before that signature occurs and before that anomaly, which has resulted in the Lovelace case and a great embarrassment to Canada, will be removed?

Mr. Chrétien: Vote for the charter, Joe.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I am delighted that the right hon. member has indicated that he has at least some interest in becoming a Liberal. However, I would like to say the timing, as we see it, is thus: we will be signing the treaty as quickly as possible. At the moment we are awaiting the decisions of three provinces, British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec, which have yet to indicate to us that they will be along with us on the signing of the treaty. We will then institute proceedings to make the necessary amendments. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been instructed to do so. We have a maximum of three years in which to put the amendments into place. However, I hope those amendments will be passed long before that three-year period.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I would like to indicate that I resent the implication that there are not men as well as women who are concerned about the issue addressed by the minister.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR THE '80s

COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in the absence of a number of other ministers. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce should have in his possession the report of the special parliamentary task force on employment opportunities for the eighties. In that report the all-party committee indicates clearly that it is the opinion of the committee that one of the difficulties faced in Canada today is the shortage of trained manpower. I wonder if the minister could give us an indication of whether he agrees with that over-all assessment and with the general thrust of the committee's recommendations relevant to correcting the situation.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I think the task force has done an excellent job of exploring the problem, analysing it and presenting a vast range of recommendations. I personally agree with the conclusion of the report that one of our problems in this country is a shortage of skilled manpower. We in the government are actively reviewing the recommendations and actively working on other programs we were considering even before the report came out. I am sure the report will be a very useful input into the decisions we will be taking and announcing before too long.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Communications. In view of the answer from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I wonder how the Minister of Communications can justify his answer earlier today relevant to the need to cut back funding for educational purposes. If in fact we face a shortage of skilled manpower in this country, has the minister not read our report, is he quarrelling with our report, does he wish to rescind his earlier answer, or will he hold firm and indicate that the government still intends to cut back funds in the face of that training crisis?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, that was not the intent of my initial response. I think I have been reinforced by what the minister has just stated. It indicates quite clearly that there are national goals which must be pursued in the educational field in Canada and that any one province trying to set up professional training cannot take into account the over-all needs of the country. If the federal government indeed is going to continue to be funding 59 per cent of the operating costs of the university and post-secondary education system in general in the country, obviously some national goals ought to be met by that system.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

PRESS REPORTS OF RCMP ACCESS TO FILES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications, and it has to do with reports in the press that the government is intending to make some changes in its proposed freedom of information act, specifically changes which would allow the RCMP criminal investigation and security staffs access to data respecting citizens' social insurance files, income tax files, family allowance files, and old age pension files, as well as to information on finance, marital histories, social welfare benefits, and employment histories. Is the minister contemplating changes in that legislation to the extent which has been set forth in this report, or will the minister leave that legislation alone so that Parliament can get on with it and deal with it?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I believe my views on the subject are well known. I would very much like to see Parliament deal with the access to information legislation as soon as possible. My understanding is that the opposition parties are now willing to deal with the matter, with a maximum number of hearings amounting to approximately six hours' duration. I will be very pleased to see if the opposition will live up to that undertaking in the weeks to come.

On the specific question, my understanding is that the McDonald report is being considered by legal experts in the Department of Justice. I am not contemplating any of the changes referred to by the hon. member. I certainly am not contemplating them at this moment. I have not received any recommendations to that effect from the Minister of Justice.

NORTH-SOUTH RELATIONS

STATEMENT MADE BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE ON INTEREST RATES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Was the Minister of Agriculture speaking on behalf of the government when he stated in August, as reported by the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, about the interest rate policies of the government, "We're literally starving them to death by the millions" with reference to people in poor countries who cannot afford rising energy and interest costs? Second, the minister said, "It's crazy to try to control inflation with interest rates. You kill people with that."

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, why do we not ask the minister?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the interest rates in those countries are much higher than they are in Canada. Some of the people in those developing countries to which I was referring, if the hon. member wants to quote the whole text of the speech and listen to the tapes also—because it was all taped—are paying interest rates as high as 50 per cent. It is a form of usury.

The cost of fertilizer in those countries—and some of that comes from Saskatchewan—is three times as high as it is in Canada. Diesel fuel in those countries costs $5 a gallon and gasoline over $5 a gallon. Wages are $1 a day. Eggs cost $2.50 a dozen. What are we doing to them when they are being subjected to world costs like that? That was the context of that speech.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, the minister said, "It's crazy to try to control inflation with interest rates. You kill people with that." How can the minister continue to associate himself with a government the central policy of which is precisely that?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that the Prime Minister attended several world meetings this summer and fall. He will be attending another one this week which is concerned with those very things I am talking about. I refer to interest rates, energy costs, and how we are to help the rest of the world. This government is concerned about those things.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INTERPRETATION OF LEGISLATION—EFFECT ON HAMILTON WORKERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration which I assume his parliamentary secretary can answer for me. In Hamilton, 50 workers have been laid off since July 31 because they work for two companies which do business primarily with the Steel Company of Canada. They have been denied unemployment insurance benefits throughout that period under section 44(2)(a) because they happen to belong to the same international union, and in some obscure way some of their dues may well go toward supporting the strike fund. Does the Minister not think that kind of interpretation is too narrow, and that the section was never intended to be used to deprive people of what they were rightfully entitled to and for which they must make payment every week? Will he review it and have it corrected?

• (1450)

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the question asked by my hon. colleague is indeed very important, and there are a number of aspects to the strike which is now taking place in his riding. It is clear that the Stelco employees who called the strike and who are thus supporting the cost of picketing are not eligible for unemployment insurance benefits. The two subcontractors, the companies to which he has just referred, are faced with a serious problem, but we must understand that they are in the same situation as the strikers, that is, they made contributions to the parent company. That is why the employees of the two companies in question which have made a contribution to the company are not eligible. Of course, if we had more details we would be able to give this matter closer scrutiny, and what my hon. colleague suggests is a change in policy within the department. I am sure that the minister and the other members will look into this problem and see if anything can be done.

[English]

REQUEST FOR EARLY CLARIFICATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Surely the parliamentary secretary and the ministry understand that for workers to wait from July 31 until today, almost seven weeks, without money, while they wait for the bureaucracy to grind ever so slowly to a conclusion, is unconscionable. I ask the minister, through the parliamentary secretary, will they now move to clarify this ridiculous anomaly and create fairness within the system that we have, to protect people against unemployment and the hardships of unemployment?

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, of course we understand what is happening to these workers but, as I mentioned before, the department is fully aware of the situation and will examine this case to see if anything can be done. As I have already pointed out, these strikers have broken the law and have paid dues like the strikers who called the strike.

AGRICULTURE

RESPONSIBILITY OF FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS TO FARMERS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture and is with regard to enormous pressures on Canadian farmers caused, on one hand, by high interest rates and high input costs, and on the other by the lack of compensating higher incomes. The minister has been saying for months that Canadian lending institutions, specifically banks, have a responsibility to their farm customers. First, I should like to ask the minister what he regards this responsibility to be; second, how may we be assured this alleged responsibility by Canadian banks is being or will be discharged properly?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): In this country the responsibility with lending institutions is very great. When we investigated, we found that of the people who made representations to my ministry, 90 percent had been improperly lent money by the banks for term capital investment. The banks lent them huge amounts of money on demand notes and floating loans that should have been on 10 or 20-year mortgages. When interest rates increased they could not meet the payments. It is mostly in one sector of agriculture, and that is the red meat industry. The beef and pork production entities are in great difficulty. The horrible lending policies of most lending institutions is the problem. Under the present Bank Act we say there is room to lend the farmers the money on long-term financing and at reasonable rates of interest, giving them a moratorium on a 20-year mortgage of three years, and amortizing the first three years without capital or interest, until they organize themselves into a better marketing system. It is those farmers outside of a proper marketing system who are in financial difficulty today.

MINISTER'S PROPOSALS TO BANKS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): If the lending institutions, as the minister alleges, are at the worst ripping off their farm customers, or at the least not discharging their proper responsibility to those farm customers, can the minister tell us exactly what he wants the banks to do? Has that been communicated in exact terms to the banks? If not, when will it be, either by the minister directly or through his colleague, the Minister of Finance? What mechanism does the Minister of Agriculture propose to make sure that that, in fact, is what happens vis-à-vis the relationship between the banks and their farm customers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Under the present Bank Act, Madam Speaker, there is room for them to move. I have had meetings with the heads of the Canadian banking institutions as far back as May, when we became concerned with representations that farm organizations and farmers made to us about some of the things they foresaw happening. I have hundreds of letters where they made appeals to me about their financial situation. We have gone over this with the Canadian Bankers' Association. We met the president of the Canadian Bankers' Association less than two weeks ago. We discussed the very things I have mentioned to the hon. member. I also had the same kind of discussions with my colleagues, especially the Minister of Finance. We will have to be patient and wait until November 3.

FISHERIES

DANGER FACING SCALLOP FISHERY ON GEORGES BANK

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I direct my question to the Minister of State for External Affairs. At the present time the deep sea Canadian scallop fishing industry is in danger of being totally destroyed due to indiscriminate fishing by the American fleet on Georges Bank. I therefore ask the minister, in view of the economic importance of this industry to Nova Scotia and, in fact, to all of Atlantic Canada, whether he has held recent discussions with his American counterpart concerning this important issue and, if so, what response was received?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On the question of the boundary arbitration, I can say we are in the final stages of negotiation. But the hon. member raises the other problem of the conservation of the fisheries, which will continue to be a matter of concern however the boundary question is settled. In regard to that I have to say our discussions with American authorities have not been satisfactory. There seems to be considerable resistance on the part of the American fishermen in accepting the same kind of regulations that Canadian fishermen are prepared to accept. We have not been able to make any progress in regard to that. I have not recently discussed this matter with Secretary of State Haig. I undertake to do so.

QUERY RESPECTING CANADIAN GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I thank the minister for that answer. It now appears that the United States is doing its utmost to destroy the Geneva convention on the 200-mile economic zone. Since most of what we have obtained so far in maritime terms beyond the old 3-mile limit has been obtained only by unilateral declaration, in light of the economic impact this American action will have on Canadian fishermen, on processors, and on our offshore resources, on our claimed jurisdiction over the Arctic archipelago and unregulated competition in the production of nickel through seabed mining, I therefore ask the minister what action he is planning to take on behalf of the Canadian people over this important issue?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The actions our government can take are limited, to a large extent, by those on which we can reach agreement with the United States. At the present time we have not been able to reach that agreement. I hope the American government and the fishermen it represents will hear the plea of the hon. member and Canadian fishermen. The settlement of the boundary dispute, and a settlement as to who is able to fish where, will not contribute very much to anyone's welfare as far as fish are concerned if the fishery stock has been depleted. Indeed this is a serious concern, as the hon. member has said. We are very concerned about it, and so far we have not had the co-operation that we would wish to see from the American fishing industry.

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Friday, October 16, 1981, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BROADBENT—ALLEGED MISLEADING REFERENCE TO REPORT BY MINISTER

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, earlier in the question period in an exchange between myself and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), the minister indicated that I was misinforming the House when I talked about a report prepared in his department that made certain forecasts in the housing industry dependent upon a 21 per cent mortgage. In my question I said 21 per cent, and I repeat it. I have checked the document with care and I found one reference on page 2, two references on page 3 and two references on page 6 to the 21 per cent, which is the figure I used.

The one slight bit of information on the minister's side is that one of the references, and one only, indicates 21 per cent to 22 per cent. Everywhere else the basic assumption of the report, which was the point of my question, indicated that the forecasts were based on a 21 per cent mortgage. The minister rose and misinformed the House when he said that what was discussed in the report was 22 per cent.

May I conclude with one point. He quoted the report—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid the hon. member is simply debating a question. There is dispute as far as the facts are concerned. The hon. member knows that this does not constitute a prima facie case of privilege. Unless the hon. member has another point to make, I cannot allow him to continue because it certainly does not constitute a question of privilege.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the point I was coming to was that not only did he misinform the House, but there is a very serious point of order at stake because he quoted from the document. Section 327 of Beauchesne's fifth edition reads:

> A minister of the Crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a despatch or other state paper not before the House, unless he be prepared to lay it upon the Table.

Since the minister was quoting, I think at last in this whole debate where the minister has not had the courage to produce the document, he has put his foot in it. As I understand the rule, he has quoted from the document and, therefore, he should table it before the House.

Madam Speaker: My recollection is that the hon. minister referred to a figure in the document. I did not have the impression that he actually quoted from the document, but we could look at the "blues" to find out whether he really quoted from it. My recollection is that he just referred to a figure which was in the document. However, I will look at the "blues" and determine whether there is basis for the hon. member's point of order.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the hon. member opposite in his question of privilege indicated that I misled the House. I should like to indicate that I well understand the embarrassment of the hon. leader when he alleged earlier last week in the House that 85,000 Canadians would lose their homes before Christmas of this year. I understand the embarrassment from such wild statements, but his cheap theatrics this afternoon of referring to a report I have not read and then saying that I introduced it to the House is a pretty slim basis for a question of privilege.

Miss MacDonald: Why have you not read it?

Madam Speaker: It is quite obvious to the House that hon. members are debating, and that is not allowed at this time.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I would just express the hope that you will, as I know you will, follow the long-established practice and precedent in the House by hearing more than the brief submission of one member who raises a point of order before making your ruling. As I understand what the Chair has said today, the "blues" will be examined and the matter dealt with tomorrow. I hope before dealing with that matter that Madam Speaker will hear a further submission on a point which has not yet been addressed to the Chair and which I would like to raise tomorrow on the point raised by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Madam Speaker: What I have been doing in the House is following my own precedents. When I am certain that there is not a question of privilege invoked, I immediately rule on it. If I am given no arguments in the first four, five or six sentences that there might be a prima facie case of privilege, it is quite clear that I can say to the House that I feel there is no basis for a question of privilege.

As to the particular point raised by the hon. member, once hon. members have read the "blues" and if they feel they have some points to make, naturally I will listen to them tomorrow.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I was not referring to the question of privilege of the hon. member. I was referring to the point of order which in this instance has an equal importance. I should like to be heard on the matter tomorrow, since there is a point which has not yet been placed before the Chair, before the Chair makes its ruling.

PETITIONS

MR. CLARK—EFFECTS OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, as I have done on each day since we began our sittings again last week, I would ask leave of the House to lay upon the Table petitions signed by Canadians concerned about the impact upon their ability to keep their homes because of the deliberate high interest rate policy of the Liberal government. These petitions come from communities large and small across the country. One petition is signed by 23 residents of the communities of Godfrey, Munster, Kingston and Harrowsmith in the province of Ontario. Another is signed by some 144 residents of the city of Bowmanville in the province of Ontario. Another is signed by some 914 residents of the city of Metropolitan Toronto in the province of Ontario. The fourth petition is signed by 2,409 residents of the cities of Brampton, Mississauga, Rexdale, Fergus and Georgetown in the province of Ontario.

MR. BLAIKIE—CUTBACKS IN FEDERAL TRANSFERS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition protesting the government's intention to cut $1.5 billion from federal transfers to the provinces. This petition, signed by university students from across Canada, was assembled by the National Union of Students. This petition requests that the Government of Canada stop the cutbacks to education and social services, convene a public inquiry into post-secondary education, replace student loans with grants, ensure funds allocated to education are spent only on education, and make public the full, final report of the federal-provincial student aid task force.

MR. McCAIN—VIA RAIL—CUTBACKS IN PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting a petition signed by 2,248 citizens who are served by the rail passenger service passing through Juniper, New Brunswick. It is my hope that this petition may be found in order by Madam Speaker and may become a subject matter for discussion in the House.

For Madam Speaker's information, this petition was engineered and conducted by a lady in a small village of rural New Brunswick. In support of her community, Mrs. Heather Pelletier of Juniper, New Brunswick, has collected 2,248 signatures.

MR. NICKERSON—OWNERSHIP OF OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I should like to present to the House of Commons a petition against the passage of Bill C-48, which would entrench the control and ownership by the federal government of oil and gas in the Northwest Territories. This petition contains the signatures of some 1,070 people from the Western Arctic constituency and objects in the strongest possible way to Bill C-48 in that it would prejudice the settlement of native land claims, block the evolution of responsible government in the north, and disable northerners from developing their own economy. The petitioners want to share the resources of the north with other Canadians, but at the same time demand that the interests of northerners be protected.

LOCAL COMMUNITY SERVICE CENTRES

Question No. 2,403—Mr. Herbert:

Does the Department of National Health and Welfare suggest guidelines for or determine the limits of family planning services in local community service centres that receive financial support from the department?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Department of National Health and Welfare does not suggest guidelines or determine the limits of family planning services in any local community service centre that receives financial support from it.

FAMILY PLANNING SERVICES

Question No. 2,440—Mr. Gamble:

1. Did the Department of National Health and Welfare approve on April 21, 1981 a $90,000 grant to the Quebec department of social affairs for the development of family planning services in the local community service centres?

2. Were grants for similar purposes approved for the 1981 fiscal year for the provinces of (a) Newfoundland (b) Prince Edward Island (c) Nova Scotia (d) New Brunswick (e) Ontario (f) Manitoba (g) Saskatchewan (h) Alberta (i) British Columbia and, if so, for what amount in each case?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. On February 25, 1981, (fiscal year 1980-1981), the Department of National Health and Welfare approved a $90,000 grant to the Quebec department of social affairs for the development of family planning services in the "centres locaux de services communautaires".

2. In the fiscal year 1980-1981, the following amounts to the provinces and territories, who have requested it were approved for similar purposes:

Newfoundland	No request
Prince Edward Island	Yes	18,000	Education Co-Ordinator
Nova Scotia	Yes	40,000	Demonstration in training professionals
New Brunswick	Yes	13,000	Resource library, audio-visual and teaching aids purchase
Ontario	No request
Manitoba	No request
Saskatchewan	Yes	40,000	Health promotion and counselling for high risk youth
Alberta	No request
British Columbia	Yes	30,000	Health education consultant
Northwest Territories	Yes	50,000	Family planning project for the Northwest Territories
Yukon	Yes	31,527	Family planning and family life education

GOVERNMENT'S ELECTRICITY BILL

Question No. 2,679—Mr. Beatty:

What was the government's annual bill for electricity for the fiscal year (a) 1977-78 (b) 1978-79 (c) 1979-80 (d) 1980-81?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): The following expenditures were made from Public Works Canada appropriations in:

	$000's
(a) 1977-78	$28,073
(b) 1978-79	$31,507
(c) 1979-80	$34,567
(d) 1980-81	$39,018

It should be noted that electricity may be included in some leases and, as separate figures are not kept for the cost of electricity, these are not included above.

ELECTRONIC PAYMENT SYSTEMS

Question No. 2,726—Mr. Beatty:

Do individual or bodies within the government currently have responsibility for making recommendations to the government relating to electronic payment systems and, if so (a) what is the name of the individual or member of the body involved and for which department or agency does he/she work (b) to whom are reports made (c) on what date was the responsibility for the systems first given to that individual or body (d) on what date does the mandate of the individual or body expire (e) since June 16, 1976, what reports or recommendations were made and on what date (f) what action was taken by the government as a result of any recommendations and on what date?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): In so far as the Department of Finance is concerned: In April 1978, the government published a green paper entitled "Computer Communications Policy, a Statement by the Government of Canada." That paper contained a number of statements indicating the government's "current perception" on various computer/communications issues. Statement 16 of this paper said in part: "Recognizing the critical and pervasive role of financial institutions in the functioning of the economy, it is very important that, in the rapid evolution of computer/communications involving the payments system of the nation and other financial services, a competitive environment should be maintained and that developments be consistent with the general policies outlined herein. An interdepartmental working group was given the task of preparing recommendations to ensure the continuing development of an efficient and equitable payments system. It was chaired by the director, capital markets division, Department of Finance and included representatives from the Receiver General for Canada, the Bank of Canada, the Departments of Communications; Industry, Trade and Commerce; Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The working group's recommendations were presented to cabinet jointly by the Ministers of Finance and Communications. Subsequent to their evaluation by cabinet, the government, in January, 1975, published a position paper entitled, "Towards an Electronic Payments System—A Statement of Government Policy concerning Computer/Communications and the Payments System." In this paper, the government announced its support for a common user communications network for the payments system and the creation of four committees with responsibility to make recommendations relating to an electronic payments system: 1. Interdepartmental Steering Committee on the Electronic Payments System. This committee, chaired by the director, capital markets division, Department of Finance, is responsible for the over-all co-ordination of government policy on the electronic payments system, including the maintenance of liaison with committees 2, 3 and 4 as described below. (a) In addition to the chairman from the Department of Finance, this committee includes representatives from the Bank of Canada and the Departments of Communications, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Supply and Services, and Justice. (b) The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Communications. In addition, each departmental representative reports to his or her Minister. (c) January 1975. (d) No expiry date. (e) No report to date. (f) Not applicable.

2. A private sector committee, the Canadian Payments System Standards Group (CPSSG), was given the mandate to develop standards and performance criteria that would be used in a common-user communications network for the payments system. (a) The CPSSG was made up of representatives from deposit-taking institutions, common carriers and computer equipment manufacturers and others, as required, including retailers. It was chaired by Mr. Roger Charbonneau of l'École des Hautes Études, Montreal, whose services were provided through the auspices of the Bank of Canada. (b) The CPSSG reported to the interdepartmental steering committee on the electronic payments system. (c) January 1975. However, the chairman was not appointed until September 25, 1975, and the group's first meeting was not held until April 27, 1976. (d) The CPSSG expired with the submission of its final report. (e) Interim report was issued in February, 1977, and final report in July, 1978. (f) The report is currently under study.

3. Justice Study on Legal and Consumer Issues. This study was conducted under the leadership of the Department of Justice. It was charged with the responsibility to ensure that the legal framework for the payments system evolves in line with new payments methods and that the legal and consumer aspects are considered. This study was conducted in consultation with interested parties, including the Departments of Finance, Communications, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Supply and Services, the Bank of Canada, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. (a) See above. (b) The Minister of Justice. (c) January, 1975. (d) The justice study committee expired with the release of its final report. (e) Final report was issued in October, 1980. (f) The report is currently under study by the interdepartmental steering committee. Discussions are also being held with provincial governments and other interested parties.

4. Committee on Credit/Payment Cards. This committee, chaired by an officer of the capital markets division, Department of Finance, was established to examine the financial markets structure and competition policy aspects of generalized credit card systems and payment cards. (a) This committee, in addition to the chairman, includes representatives from the Bank of Canada, and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and the Department of Justice. (b) The Minister of Finance. (c) January, 1975. (d) No expiry date. (e) No report to date.

MR. TIM PORTEOUS

Question No. 2,761—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was Mr. Tim Porteous at any time employed in the Prime Minister's office and, if so (a) in what capacity (b) did he have any responsibility for the appointment of his brother-in-law, Mr. Don Marriott, as director of restaurants and catering of the National Arts Centre?

2. Is Mr. Porteous at present the director of the arts division of the Canada Council?

3. What is the complete record of Mr. Porteous in the public service?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canada Council as follows:

1. Yes.

(a) Head of public statements division. Executive Assistant.

(b) No.

2. Mr. Porteous is the associate director of the Canada Council.

3. Mr. Porteous has never been a member of the public service.

ONTARIO HEALTH INSURANCE PREMIUMS

Question No. 2,789—Mr. Herbert:

1. Do public servants, resident in provinces other than Ontario, receive any payment from the government of a sum of money equivalent to the amount of the benefit received by residents of the province of Ontario who are federal public servants, as a contribution towards the cost of Ontario Health Insurance premiums?

2. Is any amount so received a taxable benefit?

3. To the knowledge of the government, is such payment taxed by the applicable provincial authority?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): 1. The government, as employer, makes a contribution to the costs to employees of their provincial health care programs in all provinces (including Ontario) and the territories. In the premium-levying provinces of British Columbia and Alberta, and the Yukon territory, the government's contributions are paid directly to the provincial health authorities as a portion of the total premiums levied. In the provinces which do not levy premiums, and the Northwest Territories, the government's contributions are made annually in the form of cash payments to employees. The amounts of these contributions are calculated without reference either to the amount of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan premiums or the government's contributions thereto.

2. Both the amounts of contributions toward premiums, and the cash payments, are taxable benefits.

3. Those contributions and payments are subject to provincial taxation in the same manner as any other taxable income from employment.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed, from Friday, October 16, consideration of Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and Motions Nos. 4 (Mr. Fulton), 34 (Mr. Ittinuar), 51 (Mr. Fulton), 52 (Mr. Ittinuar), 53 (Mr. Ittinuar), 55 (Mr. Lalonde), 56 (Mr. Fulton) and 57 (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, certain amendments to Bill C-48 have been proposed and presented to the House for determination. These amendments include a definition of a "spill"; the inclusion of an "authorized spill" in the provisions of the bill as equal in implication to that of "accidental spill"; the requirement of reporting a spill and informing those people likely to be affected; the liability for economic loss or damage resulting from a spill; the composition and use of a compensation fund; and the reduction in the absolute discretionary powers of the minister to make determinations affecting environmental considerations and the people who populate Canada lands.

In advancing and discussing these amendments and their ramifications, the intent is to strengthen and enhance this part of the bill which reflects acknowledgement of the larger and larger proportion that environmental protection assumes in the responsibilities of governments, industry and individuals.

Last week's distribution of the report of the subcommittee on acid rain gives emphasis and impetus to the environmental character of everything we undertake. It is entitled "Still Waters—The Chilling Reality of Acid Rain". It is a demand for more than lip service notation of this specific environmental disaster. The intent of the debate today and last week is that the same demand for adequate attention be put to the government.

In the report "Still Waters", the subcommittee recommends that the following elements be included in environmental protection legislation to effectively reduce pollution in general and particularly acid rain air pollution. First, the imposition of penalties high enough to ensure that there is no benefit from saved cost of compliance in case of non-compliance; second, the creation of a tribunal which would have exclusive jurisdiction over environmental law prosecution; and, further, the provision of a funding mechanism for class actions which would otherwise not be instituted due to inadequate financial resources on the part of the initiators.

Pending consideration and implementation of the reforms advocated in the previous recommendations, the subcommittee recommended that effective steps be taken to apply existing environmental protection legislation.

Last spring the Special Committee on Alternative Energy and Oil Substitution released a report entitled "Energy Alternatives". There, too, environmental anxieties were expressed in the section entitled "Environmental Concerns" on page 59, as follows:

> The exploitation of energy cannot be accomplished without having some effect upon the environment, but different energy options affect the environment in differing ways and degrees . . . It would not make sense to formulate an energy policy which would solve energy problems but create serious environmental ones.

That refers to energy alternatives.

In light of some of the provisions of Bill C-48 we must ask how the concerns of these special committees will be serviced with any degree of confidence and certainty. How will the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) possibly fulfil these recommendations which are within his mandate when, in fact, he can only act and react with the sanction of his superior minister? Where does this bill demand that environmental impact studies be a mandatory part of exploration and development? It does not, Mr. Speaker. It allows that the minister—not the minister responsible for environmental matters but the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde)—may require certain things. This, of course, will only be after considering his primary function and his ministerial responsibilities.

How is this discretionary power implanted in one person, one office—I think I should say two, in deference to the other minister who is present—translated into positive action for protection of this narrow envelope which encircles the globe we live on? One man, and one man only, will decide.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to this important piece of legislation which bears such implications for the future of Canada. Our society, like every modern society, moves, manufactures, builds, farms, communicates, warms, cools, lives, on the basis of its energy supply and distribution. It may be trite to comment on the happy circumstance in which we Canadians find ourselves, with a variety and volume of energy sources unmatched in the world. It is also trite and increasingly unnecessary to remind ourselves and Canadians generally that the only impediment to a parallel, unmatched prosperity in Canada is that imposed by the policies of the government. It is a government which has had nearly a quarter of a century of opportunity to enact its will upon the nation but there is unimpeachable evidence of a careless disregard for that trust. There is absolutely no valid excuse that can be advanced by hon. members opposite to explain and rationalize a situation in which Canadians sitting on absolute energy wealth are, nevertheless, petroleum supply dependent.

Just as it is Liberal government policy which has produced interest rates which are 4 per cent to 5 per cent higher than those in the United States, together with all the attendant social and economic woes which these irresponsibly invoked interest rates have imposed, so it is Liberal government "easy-way-out" energy policy and putting party interests before national interests that have produced the present unpleasant reality that Canada faces today regarding energy.

In this circumstance it ill-behooves the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) to frame her speech to this House last Wednesday with statements that contained, first and last, unworthy and uncouth criticism of members on this side of the House. No amount of such prima donna preening will lead Canadians to misinterpret the record of this government.

Before we discuss the proposed amendments to Bill C-48, Mr. Speaker, I think we should look at some of the remarks and accusations made by the Minister of State for Mines. Two questions were posed in the statement of that minister. The first was: How much has Conservative obstruction cost this country in terms of our stated goal of reaching energy self-sufficiency? The answer is not one day; not one dollar. The Canadian people know who has been the culprit in delay and in cost. The Canadian people understand the difference between the Conservative's 18 cents and the Liberal government's shameful betrayal in the form of 50-cent or 60-cent gasoline price increases.

The second question is: How many Canadian oil and gas companies have been denied an opportunity to participate in promising Canada lands exploration due to this opposition? Again, the answer to the minister's question is not one. The question should be turned around, rephrased and directed at the hon. minister and her government: How many dedicated, talented, hard-working Canadians, and how many drilling and servicing rigs have been forced out of Canada to the United States and to Australia by the policies of this administration? In the words of the minister, how much has this cost the country in terms of our stated goal of reaching energy self-sufficiency?

Perhaps forcing drilling and development activity out of Canada is this government's ultimate weapon in protecting the Canadian environment. Let me say that only when this government puts forward legislation which is above criticism and above improvement, and when the government starts listening to the people and allows elected members to participate meaningfully in the formulation and improvement of legislation, just that soon can it be expected that we will react in the manner that the hon. member for Nickel Belt seemed to suggest, namely, that this House should pass legislation quickly. Passage of bills will develop as we have confidence and as we can study and make suggestions. However, just so long as the attitude remains that the views of hon. members are a nuisance, relegated to the dark confines of committee from whence they can be ignored into oblivion, can it be expected that this House will be the forum for expression and opposition to imperial, impaired judgment.

The interpretation of "Trudeaumocracy" in this House does not impress us in the least, and it does not impress Canadians whose intelligence is continually misjudged and insulted. The constituents I am honoured to represent would most certainly support tough environmental conditions in this bill. They understand the pressures put upon an area's ecological balance by the influx of people and the influx of industrial and development activity. I believe that the people for whom I speak resent the degree of ministerial and bureaucratic judgment which can so often yield to an element of expediency, whether it be political or economic expediency.

The area which I represent has one of the most fragile ecological environments contained within our Canadian borders, with only 10 inches of annual precipitation, with a consequence that our lakes and our land receive little of the flushing, laving action which rains and snow provide. With the compaction of increasing numbers of citizens within its limited but favoured bounds, we can understand environmental concerns. We can understand and appreciate the necessity for those parts of this legislation concerned with protection of other environmentally vulnerable areas of Canada. I might say that we are impressed that recognition is given to the fact that adequate funding is one of the keys to protection of the environment. We will be making our case for similar financial recognition of the costs involved in protection of the Okanagan valley chain of lakes, affecting, as it does, the quality of lives for hundreds of thousands of citizens and tourists, and costs that exceed the resources which municipal and regional governments can muster.

Let me invite hon. members of this House to visit Okanagan-Similkameen so they can develop an appreciation of why residents there are alert to protecting the ecology anywhere in Canada, including Canada lands. Come with me to view Vaseaux Lake, where more than 100 acres of lake surface is matted and destroyed for use by Eurasian milfoil. Come with me to Osoyoos; talk to Mayor Frost and his council, and talk to the chamber of commerce. Let them describe one community's uphill battle to preserve the integrity of their lake, with its attraction for tourists whose patronage is so essential to the economics of that area. Come with me to discuss environmental concerns with those who are alarmed by the possible uranium mining development.

Yes, the citizens of Okanagan-Similkameen are alert to the dangers which development brings to our area. We can understand and appreciate the reason for the environmental protection sections of this bill. We relate to the alarm stated by groups and individuals from lands covered by Bill C-48. That is why I must note that there are aspects of the environmental provisions of this bill which require—I emphasize require—criticism and require change.

If the notation has been made by hon. members who have spoken previously, the implication must be that the error is so glaring and so gross, and the remedies are so apparent, the government is so obtuse, and the consequences are so grave, that the point must be made and made again. We challenge hon. members opposite to do something to remedy the flaws that provoke our attention. That is what we suggest.

The guts of our complaint about the environmental inclusions in Bill C-48 is simply that there seems to be a determination to ensure that in the future environmental concerns will be addressed with the same effectiveness that the Liberal government's National Energy Program has addressed the whole area of energy self-sufficiency and pricing. Why else would Bill C-48 relegate the Minister of the Environment to such a subservient role in the only area of his competency and mandate, allowing him to act only upon the blessing of other ministers whose primary responsibilities deny a detached objectivity in this secondary role?

We have the emperor Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and now we will be provided with the czar of energy, spreading his jurisdiction into environmental areas of concern in which he will have a paramount vested interest. Surely such conflict simply ensures the mediocracy of environmental protection efforts. To this aspect we take umbrage. It was the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who, in presenting Bill C-48 to this House, acknowledged the importance of environmental protection in oil and gas exploration and said on December 11, in the first phase of this debate, that the bill contains:

> —a whole series of provisions so that the government can be sure that exploration in the north and offshore is ecologically sound and that exploration work and the actual projects are respectful of the environment which, as everyone knows, is extremely fragile in these regions.

So said the minister—words, the intent of which is not totally borne out in the text of the bill.

On October 15, 1981, the same minister made this statement in the House:

> —the minister will hold what I would call blank cheques from oil and gas operators which can be drawn to compensate claimants without proof of fault or negligence. This means that claimants will have two avenues open to them, one, the judicial process, the other a direct claim to the minister—

● (1530)

They will have the option of filing claims either before the courts or directly with the minister. That is wonderful, but it is noteworthy that the minister holds the power to respond. By his own admission he will merely allow the Minister of the Environment a corroborative role. That is the fallacy of the bill. The basic flaw is too much ministerial discretion. Where is the advocate for the environment? Where do the people who are most affected, the residents and the present occupiers of these Crown lands, have a voice and an effective instrument acting on their behalf? We now have a ministerial explanation of the purpose of the fund which is to be developed. Unfortunately, the bill does not explicitly state that purpose.

Canadians have learned only too well the degree to which they can rely on the word or the promise of this government and of those who speak on behalf of this government. As the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) noted on Friday, even if the present minister evoked great and general confidence, this act remains long after the present minister departs.

A recently leaked bulletin indicates the concern this government has regarding its loss of credibility with respect to energy pricing in light of its election promises to keep the price of gasoline low.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I must advise him that his allotted time has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. King: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for their indulgence. Recognizing that the credibility of this government is at an all-time low, as revealed by the recent Gallup poll, this must surely induce the government to take note of the suggestions made by members of this House and by groups such as the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee, and most specifically amendments coming from that committee.

In the submission made to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee made some telling points. Let me quote from the section entitled "Control of the fund is in the wrong hands", which in part reads:

> However, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, by the nature of his position, must weigh environmental protection against the need for development. EMR has an obvious first responsibility towards energy supply. That ambiguity can lead to conflict. Therefore, the Minister of the Environment should be the one in charge of the fund.

I must add that the possibility of this conflict occurring is intensified by the growing intimacy and relationship between the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and Petro-Canada, an intimacy evidenced by the appointment of Michael Phelps to the minister's staff while he benefits financially from a purported position within PetroCan. This is yet another unhealthy ignoring of convention.

Let me say in conclusion that I support the stated intent of this bill. We support the development of an adequate fund for its broad general purpose of ecological safety. We take issue not with the principle but with the substance and the detail. We ask specifically that the mandate of the Minister of the Environment be recognized, honoured and activated in fact and in act. I say remove the subordinate corroborative role in which the minister finds himself in the relationship established by the provisions of this act. We simply ask that in the area of environmental concern this bill not be emasculated but instead given a chance to work.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak to the motions which have been grouped together for this debate. Each of them deals with some aspect of oil and gas spills and the consequent threat of environmental damage.

Needless to say, the government is extremely sensitive to this danger and will continue to do everything within its power to prevent any such accidents. At the same time we are realists, and while we demand every care and caution, we must also be prepared for the worst should it ever happen. Appropriate measures have been designed to cope with any emergency that might arise.

As members are aware, the motions we are now debating are just eight of 57 on the Order Paper dealing with Bill C-48. That may sound like a lot, but I think it is a very healthy sign indeed. It reflects an awareness and real appreciation of the importance of legislation designed to bring long-term benefits to the country as a whole, and which has special significance for northern Canadians.

Each proposed amendment deserves our careful attention certainly. But in dealing with specific clauses and provisions we may run the risk of losing sight of the over-all thrust and objectives of the bill itself. For that reason, I would like to take this opportunity to give a somewhat broader focus to our deliberations and to correct certain persistent misconceptions.

As minister responsible for northern affairs, I am responsible for the political, economic and social development north of 60, for the over-all administration of northern resources and the co-ordination of federal activities in the two territories. Let me say categorically that nothing in Bill C-48 alters that responsibility in any way. It does, however, provide new opportunities for achieving northern objectives.

The bill will be administered jointly by my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and myself, but according to our respective jurisdictions. We have worked together closely in the preparation of this legislation; our two departments are pooling their talents and resources with the creation of the Canada oil and gas lands administration to achieve a shared national objective.

I think it would be worth while to expand on some of the provisions of Bill C-48 to ensure that there is no confusion in anyone's mind as to the responsibilities of my colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and myself.

Because of the misconception that continues to be reiterated I will refer to the bill. The interpretation of "minister" under the two acts covered by Bill C-48 identifies the separate jurisdiction of the minister of northern development relevant to Canada lands in the territories and in the offshore of Canada's Arctic coast. Let us make no mistake that the ultimate political accountability in terms of Parliament for this bill for north of 60 falls on the shoulders of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Siddon: Why don't you come to committee more often?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): My colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I have agreed that the oil and gas management functions of our two departments will be pooled into the Canada oil and gas lands administration to be headed by an administrator who will be the designated official of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the minister of northern affairs, again relevant to each minister's respective jurisdiction as required by the bill.

The administrator will report to the deputy minister of energy, mines and resources and to the deputy minister of northern affairs, and at their direction will relate on policy matters to the assistant deputy minister of energy regarding energy policy and to the assistant deputy minister of northern affairs concerning northern policy. Northern policy includes energy policy north of 60.

A policy review committee including both assistant deputy ministers will provide policy guidelines and review all policy decisions of COGLA or the administrative body to ensure they are consistent with the requirements of energy policy and northern policy. The committee will be the instrument by which activities of the administrative body are integrated and harmonized with activities retained by both departments.

● (1540)

If I may reiterate, as Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development I am directly accountable for the following: first, environmental management and protection including responsibility for the environmental studies fund north of the line of administrative convenience defined in Schedule VI of the Canada oil and gas regulations; second, socioeconomic benefits for the people resident in the territories; third, negotiating strategies and agreement with territorial governments; and fourth, co-ordination of policy and over-all planning in relation to major resource development north of 60.

The management, then, of oil and gas rights in the Northwest Territories, the Yukon and adjacent continental margins is but one element of my over-all responsibility in the north, and when I say "my" I am referring to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and any succeeding ministers.

I have also been assigned responsibility for safeguarding the northern environment, for social and constitutional development, and of course native land claims.

I do not know how political accountability to this Parliament for all those policies north of 60 could be more clear, as well as those of my colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources south of 60, and the bill quite clearly states that.

In carrying out these responsibilities I want to emphasize that we must strive to achieve balance in development; balance between renewable and non-renewable resource development, balance between the conventional wage employment activities and those that support the traditional native economy, balance between externally generated development and that from within, balance between using the land and resources and conserving them, and, last, balance between protecting the environment and developing the natural resources available to us.

Many members may be aware, particularly some members I see in this House—and perhaps they are very familiar with this—of a very recent and dramatic example of the kind of balance we have striven for and achieved as reflected in the government's decision respecting the Norman Wells oil field expansion and pipeline project this past summer. Of course, that was subject to a two-year delay in major construction. I say this decision is symbolic of the very thing I am talking about, the very mandate of this department as it was before C-48 and as it is to remain after C-48.

This decision was not arrived at lightly. In weighing the elements of the Norman Wells project the government asked the Federal Environmental Review Assessment Office, commonly referred to as FERAO, to consider not just the environmental factors but also the socioeconomic aspects of that project. The National Energy Board also studied the project, and both agencies held public hearings both north and south of 60 and reported positively, subject to specific terms and conditions.

I personally sought the views of northerners on this project through a series of public meetings held in Yellowknife and in the communities of the Mackenzie Valley last spring for this purpose, to achieve a governmental decision that could have balance between the local concerns and the industry's proposals, and reconciling those with the national interests. The decision on Norman Wells meets the criteria that I believe a northern resource project should meet.

Especially in view of the two-year delay, the pipeline project will be managed in a socially and environmentally acceptable manner, and at the same time it will provide enhanced job opportunities and economic benefits for northerners. I remind members as well that the decision to proceed with this project is subject to a delay in construction work toward meeting the concerns of the Dene and Metis regarding adequate time for negotiation of their land claim.

With respect to that project, by reconciling the interests of fulfilling that mandate the decision met with the approval, publicly declared at the time of the decision, of not only the territorial government and the Dene and Metis but, as to the resources, of the companies involved. This can be symbolic of what can be done to achieve a consensus on what on the surface would be conflicting interests, which have always been troublesome north of 60.

In this project and others, my department and I continue to meet our particular responsibilities to ensure that northerners benefit economically and socially from resource development in the north. With the co-operation of the territorial governments and the private sector, certain requirements have been laid down as a precondition for industry to undertake before commencing oil and gas activities. These conditions cover such areas as employment of northerners and protection of the environment.

To cite one notable example where this policy has produced very beneficial results indeed, I might refer to one development in the Beaufort Sea area. One company there has provided employment for 300 northerners and local economic benefits in the order of $30 million. This has been accomplished by suasion and the co-operation of the industry; but also the enactment of this particular bill will enable a melding of resource management objectives with the other vital northern policy objectives such as employment and local business development.

Considerable progress has also been recorded through measures aimed at protecting the environment in areas of oil and gas operations. Exploratory drilling, whether on land or offshore, for instance, must conform with specific preconditions set by my department. Environmental impact studies have been required before many such activities have been approved.

Under legislation currently before the House, a revolving fund of $15 million will be set up by assessment on industry to cover the cost of such studies, to be conducted under the direction of my department. Complementary to the requirements of the Arctic Water Pollution Prevention Act, evidence of financial responsibility as well as the assumption of unlimited liability for damages will be required from industry for its offshore operations.

I cannot list here all the programs and initiatives related to oil and gas activities which have been undertaken in recent years. They deal with other considerations such as supplies to northerners of locally produced petroleum products, licensing policies, exploration agreements, technical developments and so on. But I think it should be clear to all members that even without Bill C-48 the government has had the interest and welfare of northerners clearly in mind in developing resource policies over the past two decades. That is a priority which will definitely, in my view, be strengthened by this proposed legislation.

In determining our strategies and directions we have counted heavily on the input of the northerners themselves. The extent of their participation is sometimes overlooked. It has ranged from frequent consultation on land use permits and socioeconomic plans to major discussions involved in the environmental impact assessment processes, and regional planning projects such as the Lancaster Sound study.

Nowhere is the contribution of northerners more evident nor, indeed, more appreciated than in the eight amendments to the bill accepted by the government in response to proposals introduced by the Inuit committee on national issues.

Briefly I should like to touch on at least some of these amendments which have so notably improved the bill itself. It was through the efforts of the Inuit committee that a key passage on aboriginal rights, Sections 5 to 7, was amended to read, and I quote:

> Nothing in this act abrogates or derogates from any aboriginal title, right or claim that pertained to the aboriginal peoples of Canada prior to the coming into force of this act.

● (1550)

This was the clause that satisfied so many of the Inuit who had previously expressed concern about the implications of the bill.

Another Inuit amendment provided that an exploration agreement "may require equity participation by government and Canadians," including any aboriginal peoples who may be affected. That also was a significant improvement in terms of opening up the potential for joint ventures in the resource field.

Again, the Inuit committee suggested that an exploration agreement "may require training and employment opportunities" for disadvantaged individuals or groups. I hardly think there would be any opposition to that particular amendment. I regard the development of the north as fundamental to the future of the north. I regard, then, the development of human resources in the north as fundamental to the future of the north.

A great many northerners have also voiced their concerns during meetings with me personally and in countless letters. I submit that the government has moved ahead with this legislation fully aware of northern rights. Personally, I would like to express my appreciation to the many people who have devoted so much time and effort in producing what I am convinced will be an effective piece of legislation.

For the skeptics who still see something sinister in this legislation, I would like to deal briefly with a few of the more persistent allegations. First, Bill C-48 does not prejudice decisions respecting native land claims. The notion that it seeks to remove oil and gas rights from the claim settlement process is simply incorrect. I reiterate, Section 5(7) affirms that nothing in this bill interferes with existing aboriginal rights. I stress that Clause 61, respecting the replacement of oil and gas licences and rights, refers only to mineral rights held under former legislation and will not prejudice native claims.

If there are those who still doubt the government's good faith with respect to land claim negotiations, let them cast an eye on the recent decisions not only on Norman Wells but the Petro-Canada exploration agreement. Construction of the pipeline extension and exploration activities were delayed for two years in those instances to allow for issues related to land claims to be resolved through negotiation.

An hon. Member: A slow death.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The issue of resource revenue sharing which we have heard so much about in this debate and ownership of resources in the continental offshore and elsewhere in the northern territories are simply not addressed in this bill. Those questions can be addressed subsequently in other policies of the government and in other legislation.

An hon. Member: Change the working of the bill then.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): As I have indicated, the bill does not change my responsibility for the protection of the northern environment. Indeed, it specifically assigns to me the duty to balance the need for resource development with the need to protect our northern environment while facilitating broadly-based economic development in the north.

It can be said, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-48 will provide further means to achieve the objectives of the National Energy Program in the north and elsewhere. It was almost exactly a year ago that that program was introduced. At that time one of its goals was described as follows:

> The people of the North should have more say in the decisions affecting resource development. They should enjoy more of the benefits, and bear fewer of the costs of northern resource activity. They must be assured that their interests will be protected, and that they have the opportunity to play a meaningful role in these activities.

Again, I would only remind hon. members of what happened with respect to the decision on Norman Wells to show that that can and will be achieved. That was how the government saw the situation a year ago. That is how we continue to see it today.

As I indicated earlier, we have a commitment to serve Canada's national interests and, in so doing, to make it possible for northern Canadians to contribute more meaningfully to that end.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think all of us in this House have regarded the north as extremely important to Canada's future. We see it in resource development. We see it in emerging technology; we see it in the growing self-confidence of the resource developers and, most important, of the northern people themselves. We see it in a new awareness of what the north means to Canada.

Now is the time for decision and action. To realize these opportunities we should act, I agree prudently, but promptly. Bill C-48, in my view, is an important step in the right direction. I urge its support by all members in this House.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Before the minister resumes his seat perhaps he would permit a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): This could be done with unanimous consent. The hon. minister has taken exactly his allotted time. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister referred to some very worth-while objectives, including northerners having more say in the development of their resources. I assume he would extend those remarks to the protection of their environment as well.

The Yukon Legislative Assembly, 16 elected members, without dissent recommended to the minister that a certain person be appointed chairman of the water board. The minister disregarded that recommendation and appointed someone else who then resigned. Is it now the minister's intention, in keeping with his very laudable, expressed intention to allow northerners more say in the protection of their resources and environment, to accept the recommendations of the 16 elected members of the Yukon Legislative Assembly made to him without a dissenting voice by all three political parties?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Without agreeing precisely, I would point out that there is a law in place. In that context, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) will recall that I agreed, on assumption of this portfolio, with the devolution of political responsibility, if you like, of the Yukon government which my predecessor, with the hon. member's acquiescence and encouragement no doubt, set out in a letter to the Commissioner at that time. I take it we see eye to eye on that. In that context, we are fully aware of what the law is with respect to the particular board the hon. member is talking about. There were three members to be recommended by the Assembly, there were three members to be appointed from the technical people—the department—and three were to be appointed by the federal government.

Mr. Nielsen: What about the chairman?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): We had the responsibility for the chairmanship. It was clearly set out in the legislation. We followed that law. If the hon. member has some objection to that law I have not heard of it up to now. He can legitimately recommend that it be changed. In the meantime, I advised well in advance the Leader of the Government at that time that as minister I would choose to follow the law and make recommendations as to the three. He was made well aware of it well in advance. He should not have been taken by surprise that the government of the day would follow the law and make the recommendations it is accountable for. The legislation makes us accountable. We are accountable for our appointees.

• (1600)

What happened in this particular case was that the territorial government of Yukon made its appointments. It chose to exercise its desire, and also its right, to appoint our appointments, for which we are responsible. In so doing it recommended the hon. member's campaign manager, as I recall. I wondered whether that particular person might be responsive to the government in terms of interpreting what we clearly perceive is our responsibility under the legislation. We exercise our true responsibility by making our own appointments, as indeed we should, until such time as the law is changed.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I trust that my question to the minister will receive as lengthy but perhaps a more pointed response. On June 1 I asked a question of the minister regarding a section to which he has referred, Section 5(7), regarding aboriginal rights, particularly north of 60, and I asked for a legal opinion. On that date he said, "Yes, I can give a legal opinion". However, on September 2 the minister wrote to me and said, and I quote:

> This is in reply to your letter of June 3, following the June 1 meeting of the National Resources and Public Works Committee.
> Further to my commitment to endeavour to obtain a legal opinion for the committee concerning the impact of Bill C-48 on land claims and aboriginal rights, I regret that I will be unable to meet your request—

I wonder if the minister could inform all hon. members, because I think it is one of the crucial questions not only north of 60 but also on the west coast and in the maritimes, what the impact of Bill C-48 will be on aboriginal rights and on native claims. Certainly we have heard a wide variety of opinions, and I wonder if the minister could tell this House why he was unable, after promising the committee—with native people present—to get a legal opinion on that.

Second—a very small point—could the minister tell us whether he supports the seven environmental amendments presently being debated in the House?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether we are arguing about semantics or technicalities. When I mentioned a legal opinion and when I made that statement, I meant that I would obtain a view in writing based on a legal opinion I would receive as to what the situation was. I got that letter out, for which I personally accept the responsibility. I take it the hon. member would accept the fact that I would seek a legal opinion before giving my view as expressed in a letter which, indeed, I delivered. I made that quite clear in meetings that I had with territorial officials and the Dene people who were in my office. I am not sure whether members of the New Democratic Party were at that particular meeting, but I made that quite clear at that time. The views I expressed then with respect to this would not prejudice land claims—nor would my remarks in the House today—and are quite clearly founded on legal views I have obtained. I take the responsibility for giving them in this House. I have expressed my own view in letters and in my speech today.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise in the House after a summer recess to address an environmental issue—I think that is the issue before us—not as an issue which represents the entirety of Bill C-48 but simply one subset in a set of six or seven amendments which have been proposed.

The environment is a topic about which I think it is generally quite difficult to get Canadians excited. Most Canadians in the present economic climate—and I think justifiably so—should be concerned about their capacity to hold on to their houses in the face of high interest rates or to their jobs in the face of increasing unemployment, which is a consequence of bad economic policies. Those issues are here and now issues because they represent our capacity to stay warm and cosy in the winter months and to have the sort of food which gives us and our families the kind of health we have come to expect in this country. However, environmental issues over the longer term are the sleeper issues. It is the destruction of the environment which will cause difficulty for all of us over the longer term.

As we approach something like Bill C-48 and the development of some of our energy resources in parts of Canada which are remote from our major cities, it behooves everyone in this chamber to do what he or she can to raise a degree of public consciousness about the importance for all of us of environmental issues over time. Perhaps in that context we should be a little more alert today than might be necessary in the future or might have been necessary in the past because it is my conviction that one of the tragedies of the present situation in Canada is that we have a government which has remained reasonably consistent since 1968, with one nine-month exception. Therefore, we have a track record which we can look at, identify and project into the future.

There are many characteristics of the track record of the present government, but the one which I think must concern us in relation to environmental issues is this government's demonstrated record of caring not so much about what is good for Canadians but more about what is politically saleable at the moment, and the consequences for the future of this nation of that political saleability be darned.

If we look back to 1968 and track the decisions which have been made, we will find that characteristic. We find it as a consequence of some rather consistent attitudes. Whether we deal with social policy, in the way I have in the last 16 or 17 months as the employment critic for our party, or with other portfolios, such as the one I now hold respecting health and welfare, we find a rather consistent attitude on the part of the government in total, and some ministers more specifically than others, which ignores local advice.

If we look at this legislation and its clauses which deal with the environment, where do we find clauses which require a minister of the Crown, who resides a good part of each day and each week in the city of Ottawa, in the province of Ontario, at least to be the recipient of local input? Where do we find in this proposed legislation any clause or phrase which provides for a substantial degree of local control? We are dealing with a piece of Canadian geography which is large, which is different from one part of it to another and which is not well understood by those of us born and raised in the southern part of this country, and I think that includes most of us.

During the brief exchange between the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), a member on our side of the House, and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), I heard the words "clear water," and that reminded me of an experience I had 13 or 14 years ago when I drove from Window Rock, Arizona some considerable distance to a place called Toyee. I arrived on the scene at Toyee, Arizona to discover what looked like a small-sized town. This town contained a school which was a bureau of Indian affairs school. As I drove into the town I saw many houses, dormitory buildings and classrooms. The outstanding characteristic of Toyee which first occurred to me when I arrived was the fact that about two-thirds of the houses, dormitories and classrooms were boarded up.

You ask yourself why. They look relatively new. They are not old-fashioned buildings that have been around a long time and lost their usefulness. They looked recently constructed, yet they are boarded up. As you encounter the local people, the people who live in Toyee, and ask them why these buildings are boarded up, they tell you the English translation of the Navajo word "Toyee', is "place of no water". The local people understood their environment. They understood that fresh water in Toyee, Arizona, was in short supply.

In Washington, D.C., in the United States of America, the bureaucrats, the minister responsible, in their wisdom built a community designed to handle about 1,500 people. The environment, the clean water, despite modern technology, could support but 500 people. Therefore, we have accommodation and classrooms for 1,000 people boarded up because the minister and the bureaucrats were not required and did not have the wisdom to consult with the local people before they built the school.

That is the aspect of Bill C-48 which clearly disturbs me as I attempt to read it and comprehend its implications. Before joining the House of Commons, I worked in a university. I have tremendous respect for the skills and knowledge of many of my colleagues in that setting. But regardless of their discipline, they too are captives of their background and experience. However broad and however deep those experiences are for us, they are always limited.

I suggest to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that he is the captive of his experiences. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is also the captive of his experiences. The issue of northern development will affect the lives of all Canadians and most clearly the lives of those who live in that region of our great country. In proposing legislation that governs that region of our country, or any region of our country, with respect to those clauses and phrases which concern a minister or those who follow him, one should always consult with the local people if dealing with a sparsely populated region of this country where few of us have any direct experience or any direct personal, long-term investment.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development stood in this House a few moments ago and said that the control of the environmental impact study responsibility and the funds allocated would reside in the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources south of 60 and in the Minister of Indian and Northern Development north of 60. There was a certain sense of pride as the minister implied he would take those responsibilities seriously.

I have a thought which comes out of my personal knowledge: fresh water flows back and forth across that parallel; air travels back and forth across that parallel. I have sat in the House long enough to know there are conflicts among ministers. All is not sweetness and light on every occasion. I wonder what there is about that region of our country as we approach the 60th parallel that leads us to believe, when it comes to an environmental issue, that it makes a modicum of sense to appoint one minister responsible for air and clean water north of 60 and a different minister responsible for air and clean water south of 60. Would any rational human being reach the conclusion that that kind of structure is the proper kind of structure? I hear my colleague say that we are not talking about rational human beings. If we look at the behaviour of these human beings, I guess it is an easy conclusion to reach. Their behaviour in putting the bill before us indicates they have not acted in a rational manner; therefore, one may conclude they are not rational.

We shall go one step further. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his successor will be faced with dilemmas. There will be pressures on the part of Canadian people, in any kind of energy crunch, to move forward and produce the oil or the energy we need. If the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources proceeds in that fashion, and if in fact we are in any kind of crisis, then the pressure will be tremendous.

In those circumstances, in view of the political heat which can be generated in this House and the pressure which can be brought to bear on ministers by grass roots organizations, will that minister have, as his or her number one priority, the intention to protect our environment, or will he or she be more likely to proceed and to say "To heck with the environment; we are going to produce the oil". I suggest that nine times out of ten the minister will say "Produce the oil and to heck with the environment."

That is why I think the amendment which would make the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) responsible for environmental issues, whether they occur north of 60 or south of 60, is one which members of this House must support. If we reach beyond this House to people who may be watching the proceedings this afternoon, may we say to them that they have a responsibility to get in touch with a minister of the Crown, or with the Prime Minister, and express their concerns about a piece of legislation which has environmental provisions in it that will clearly be forgotten, subverted, or ignored? This piece of legislation is the responsibility of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Their greater responsibility to the people of Canada lies in the direction of production and development. They are not the watchdogs of our environment. They do not have the background and they will not have the primary mandate which would allow them to do the kind of job Canadians have a right to expect from their government.

• (1620)

As I said in the beginning, environmental issues are generally not the most compelling issues for Canadians on a day-to-day basis. If we pollute our fresh water supplies and continue to pollute our air, the long-term consequences for all of us are horrible to contemplate. In an age such as the one we are now in, with the complexity of our industrial growth and development, surely we in the House of Commons can fund and mandate a ministry with the sole major preoccupation of protecting the environment. When we create an environmental ministry to protect us over the longer term, surely we should look at every piece of legislation which involves the environment and has provisions related to the environment. We should say absolutely that the responsibility for enforcement and for allocating the necessary dollars to conduct the studies to protect us should reside in that one department of government with a total mandate and advocacy stance within cabinet and the House dedicated to the long-term protection of the health of Canadians through environmental protection.

It is inconceivable to me that party discipline and party loyalty could ever be called upon in the House to back a provision in a bill which has such long-range potentially negative consequences for the health and well-being of Canadians. There are times, places and issues which should take us beyond the hurly-burly of daily politics, beyond the rigidity of party power. In that category of events is the issue of the environment. In its simplest terms, it is clean air and clean water and their protection over time.

There are other problems. There is a general lack of clarity from time to time. I see my time has run out, but in conclusion I say that all of us in the chamber have a responsibility, in terms of this piece of legislation, to back the proposed amendments which would protect us in the future.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I speak on this particular piece of legislation and the environmental resolutions before us. It is important to recognize that this is not a good piece of legislation. People have said that it is immoral in terms of its orientation toward the rip-off of resources. People have said that it allows too much discretion on the part of the minister and that it sets up conflicts of interest between development for Indian people and environmental issues. By and large, all of this is true. There has been a reluctance to place in the legislation guidelines under which we would like to see oil and gas developed. The entire bill is extremely vague. It does not provide any security for Canadians as a whole, particularly native people. Indeed it will create some very questionable situations in terms of the environment.

I am pleased to see a former minister of Indian affairs in the House. I should like to address some of the specific predicaments this legislation will create for the native people and communities in an area defined by the government as Canada lands, the area off the coast of British Columbia.

It just so happens that a very determined and active band council from the community of Waglisla on the coast of British Columbia about 300 miles north of Vancouver is in Ottawa for today and next week. They are very concerned about Bill C-48. I hope some of the recommendations in my speech which have also been put forward by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) will be adopted by the government and acted upon.

I am sorry that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) is not able to be here. I listened with a great deal of attention to his presentation. I was under the impression he was to be in Toronto today and not in the House. The band which is here presently has been trying repeatedly to meet with the minister. Hopefully in the next day or two that meeting will be forthcoming. It is very difficult for people in the north or in the far west of this country to plan adequately and to follow up on commitments if they cannot meet with ministers and officials to discuss their plans and obtain basic information on how such legislation will affect them. We are asking those communities to bear all the risks. They will take all the risks while the oil companies of the urbanized areas of central Canada will move in, rip-off the resource and leave.

I should like to run through some of the areas which will be affected by this bill. There is the community of Bella Bella and the band council which is in Ottawa today. Also there is Bella Coola, which is an interesting place. It is where Alexander Mackenzie, the first Canadian to cross the country, landed. As a matter of fact, the ancestors of the present band were there to meet him. The attention of the government has not really developed beyond the attention which was given to it by Alexander Mackenzie. The only level of development in that community is the struggle of those people in planning.

Another native community in my riding is at Gold River, the Mowachaht band. They have a small settlement at Friendly Cove and another one at Tahsis. One of the individuals there, an Ambrose Maquinna, happens to be a direct descendant of the Maquinna who met Captain Cook at Friendly Cove several hundred years ago. He is also a hereditary chief of the group. That was the beginning of the bad times, and it has become worse under the Liberals. Let us cook the Liberals.

There is Klemtu, a community in which the government allowed the shutting down of a cannery. It meant instant unemployment for the whole native community. For two decades the community has been struggling to get rolling again. Government bureaucrats travel in and out of that community on chartered aircraft; there is no problem. But the people who live in Klemtu and want to go to the hospital must pay $233 for a charter flight to go 35 miles in order to connect with a flight to Vancouver. Their children were unable to come home from school one particular Christmas because the British Columbia government refused to put in a ferry. That is the responsibility of the federal government. It contributed $9 million to improve coastal transportation and told British Columbia to go it alone. We are not imposing any criteria, and the people of Klemtu suffer. They pay anywhere from three times to ten times the price we pay for food in stores, if they can get it and if it is in a fit condition to eat. Percy Star, the chief of Klemtu, has been struggling for years. They were supplied with electricity a little while ago. They have been working on that project since 1923.

The Kitasoo band has been struggling against a government that does not really care and does not really know where they live.

Oweekano is another beautiful example. In the community of Oweekano the electrical plant broke down and it was without electricity for eight months. I should like to see what would happen if the city of Ottawa was without electricity for eight months. Perhaps the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) could make the government move faster to fulfil its responsibilities. At the present time the generators in Oweekano are ready to break down again and still there is no help from the government. The community wrote to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development but did not receive any acknowledgement of its correspondence. The government has cancelled a memorandum of agreement and its financial contract with this community.

The Tsulquate is another major example of government neglect. One could ask members in every row of the government benches and not find one person who knows where Tsulquate is or the conditions in which the people there live. Yet the councils and the people of these communities are dedicated and are pushing ahead, but without resources.

The Fort Rupert is an advanced band which lives in an ideal location. The band is making progress but certainly not as much as it would like to and could. If the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the government would assist it instead of handicapping it, it would make tremendous progress.

In Queen's Cove and Nuchatlitz, which is the home of the Ehattesaht band, the same thing is happening. When the last round of oil drilling occurred on the west coast of Vancouver Island, there was virtually a blowout off Tofino. If we should get a blowout there, it is not the people of Ottawa or of central Canada or Vancouver who will suffer the consequences, it is the Ehattesaht band, the communities of Nuchatlitz and Queen's Cove that will be covered in oil.

This group of people is experiencing tremendous problems with development. Unemployment ranges from 70 per cent in good times to 100 per cent in off seasons. Most of the communities have enormous unemployment. The government does not even know that they exist. The organization set up by the government confounds development, thwarts planning, withholds resources and unnecessarily complicates their lives. They have never had a land claim settlement. That is their hereditary land. Cook and Mackenzie came along and brought the civilization of the white man which only made things worse. By and large, through this legislation I think we have to begin to orient our thinking to the plight of the native communities.

Today their representatives come here for information. They would like to know what is going on and how they might be invited to participate. They have questions about how their land claims will be dealt with. This is an extremely important question because the people who will benefit from the development will be those in the oil companies and the urbanized areas of Canada. If we should get a blowout off the Queen Charlotte Sound like the Ixtoc blowout, Owikeno Lake would fill with oil and on the whole coast of British Columbia—the marine culture and fishing industry would be destroyed. The total burden of the risk would fall heavily on these communities.

In terms of environmental enhancement, social enhancement and the benefits of economic participation, I suggest the government should insist that oil companies working in the area and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources begin a dialogue with the people and give them information about what will happen. They should also make funds available so that the people can hire the necessary consultants and experts and then plan for and participate in whatever opportunities become available.

I would also urge that the government move forward with the land claim issue so that the people can participate in this matter and share in the resources. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and other ministers have told us what a great bill of goods this bill is and I am sure they would want the Indian people from the west coast of British Columbia and, indeed, all Indian people to share in those resources and not be ripped off and forgotten.

There are other communities on northern Vancouver Island that are affected, such as Port Hardy, Port Alice on the west coast, Port McNeill, Alert Bay and Sointula. These communities have been isolated for years. They are basically single industry towns where the men work in the community but young people have nothing to do. For years they have been deprived of the social amenities available in large urban areas. Many people say that if they do not like it they should go back there. But, Mr. Speaker, these communities supply the raw materials which give other people in this country jobs in manufacturing industries and provide the social amenities they enjoy. Yet these are the people who are forgotten, although it would not take much effort to go to them and see what faces them.

All of a sudden, there are indications of interest. You can see the sharks moving in the pool already. They know that there will be action so the speculators and promoters are trying to take up options and nail down the opportunity to make money. They are interested in land development and are slightly ahead of the local planning efforts in the communities. As a result, the cream is skimmed off and hauled away. The same thing has happened in Norway, Scotland and to some degree in Newfoundland where governments have been late with the basic planning.

If this legislation is to pass, I urge the government to inform the communities about what will happen to them, and to provide funding so that the communities can hire consultants and expert planners to assist them. This is necessary so that communities are not ripped off and high-graded by the professional speculators in this country and in the United States who derive enormous wealth from taking advantage of the small communities that do not have access to funding and expert planning.

By the time they become aware of what will happen in their area, there is not much they can do. The plans have been made and the local people left out, although it is they who will ultimately bear the expense of development. Perhaps the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources could send people into the communities to tell the local councils, the regional boards and the band councils what is going on. They could indicate whether they would be able to participate in the planning.

In my area there are 15 municipalities, five regional boards and 17 native communities that do not know whether they will even be given information or whether they can participate. The federal government should make money available to those communities so that they can begin taking part in planning now. There seems to be about a two-year lead time. That is a godsend because it gives time for adequate planning. If the communities are aware of the effect this legislation may have on them, then they will have time to make plans and prevent the bad experiences which have occurred in other areas from occurring here.

I urge the government to make that information available to the people involved. Funds should also be made available. Compared to the tremendous royalties that the government will rake in, the funds required for planning would be but a drop in the bucket and would be of tremendous help to the communities.

In talking about development on the west coast of British Columbia, I should like to take up my favourite topic, the coastguard. I see a colleague opposite from the committee grinning. I suppose he is wondering what the coastguard has to do with exploration for oil and gas in British Columbia. I would ask him to cast his mind back to the Ixtoc incident when it took nine months to cap the oil leak into the Gulf of Mexico. That area does not have the handicaps of the west coast such as terrible weather, reefs, islands, fog and, generally, difficult marine and air navigation. The coastguard would be a tremendous help in that area. I have checked with the coastguard and apparently there is nothing in their five-year plan which deals with offshore drilling on the central coast of British Columbia. There is no vessel traffic management system for the central coast so that ships will not pile into each other or run aground as they did in Alert Bay and other places. Numerous vessels have gone down but no search and rescue unit is available.

● (1640)

Referring to the communications system, let me just use this little example. There is a little native community on the west coast called Kyuquot. I forgot about that in my rundown. All the fishermen are exposed to the areas which could blow out. There is a weather system there. The fishermen leave at four in the morning to go fishing; they listen to the weather forecast the night before, if that is all they can get over the transcribed broadcasts, which states that the winds are light and variable and that all is well. They sail out at about 4.30 in the morning; and when they are out about 20 or 30 miles, all of a sudden it is blowing 70, out in the open Pacific. The next stop from Kyoquot is Japan. It is a really interesting time.

A couple of towing companies just recently lost barges there. They were getting their weather forecasts from the night before, which were the only forecasts available on the transcribed broadcasts. They got out there, the winds were blowing very strongly and they lost their barges which were full of goods. I wonder that the insurance companies do not sue the Government of Canada for failing to provide adequate weather forecasts. The Government of Canada cancelled the weather ships. We need good forecasting there. However, at least as far as I can understand, the coastguard is asleep at the switch. We need vessel traffic management and search and rescue facilities there. We need environmental protection against an oil spill close to the Port Hardy area or the central coast area so that if drilling goes badly and if, in fact, a decision is made to accept those risks, at least we can move quickly, capitalizing on the experience of others, to protect that very delicate and very difficult area.

Navigation in that area is always a hazard, especially in winter. I hate to travel in that part of the country. I literally fear for my life in the wintertime, and experience shows that that is probably a legitimate fear. Yet these people want to go and drill for oil and gas in an earthquake zone. The last time we had a severe accident out there, it took ten days to find six people who went down in a Beaver. That falls pretty well squarely on the government. The government would have found them in one and one half hours if there had been a functioning ELT on the aircraft, and that strikes very close to home.

We need that coastguard attention to that area. We need development in that area for the protection of the people who live there. This government has an obligation to provide some protection against the tremendous risks that it is asking the residents of that area to bear. It has an obligation to tell them what is happening. It has an obligation to put forward funds. The province of British Columbia and the Government of Canada should be putting up funds so that those communities can develop effective community plans so that they are not ripped off by the class of speculators who are already in those communities, buying up land and promoting opportunities which will enhance themselves rather than the community. I think it is vitally important that some very serious attention be paid to that matter.

I see that the Speaker is giving me the eye.

An hon. Member: The evil eye.

Mr. Skelly: The evil eye. I appreciate his tolerance. Certainly, these are vitally important aspects for the people who live on the central coast and the northern Vancouver Island area of British Columbia. That assistance is vitally important. I call the attention of the government to that and hope that it will respond in a positive and effective fashion. I hope its ministers will be able to meet with people from that area to discuss the problems they face, and perhaps some solutions toward making it a better place to live, which would resolve so many of the problems.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski)—VIA Rail—Request that Minister reconsider decision on future of passenger services; the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm)—VIA Rail—Cancellation of passenger services; and the hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell)—Fisheries—State of industry in southern Nova Scotia.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and Motions Nos. 4 (Mr. Fulton), 34 (Mr. Ittinuar), 51 (Mr. Fulton), 52 (Mr. Ittinuar), 53 (Mr. Ittinuar), 55 (Mr. Lalonde), 56 (Mr. Fulton) and 57 (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking today about Bill C-48, which is an incredibly complex bill. There are virtually hundreds of sections and subsections, when they are all added together, which will affect huge areas of land on the west coast, in the north and in the east. The bill has gone through first and second reading. It went into committee, where virtually dozens of witnesses appeared. Hon. members on all sides of the House spent a great deal of time considering the various powers and authorities, and conflicts of interest which arose, and have now proposed a number of amendments. Right now we are debating some seven amendments dealing with the environment.

I think the important thing to recognize is that none of the amendments to this bill and motions for amendment which are now before the House is spurious or anything like that, whether put forward by the official opposition or the NDP. These are amendments about which people have talked for many hours, and regarding which we have heard the evidence. We have heard from the experts who came from all across the country and from all of the various interest groups, and they have proposed a series of amendments which are now before the House.

My first point is that it is a major disappointment to me that the government does not accept more of these amendments which, as I say, are reasonable in every respect. I would urge the government to accept them and I do not know why it would not. It is a bit similar to the constitutional committee, where virtually dozens of amendments put forth were perfectly good amendments and would have improved that bill for the people of Canada; yet the government accepted only its own amendments from its own members. A couple of amendments from our side and maybe one or two from the NDP were accepted, more by way of tokenism than as a real acceptance of amendments which would have improved the bill.

I do not believe these amendments to Bill C-48 will hurt Liberals in their personal capacity or as a government, and they certainly will not hurt Canadians; indeed, it would add to the strength of the bill. We are dealing with spills in the environment, in a very unique part of Canada which receives very little rainfall or moisture in any sense, a large part of which is perpetually frozen year round. If there is a spill which puts oil under that ice cap, nobody knows what will happen. Pollution is pollution. It is bad enough here, but it is ten times worse when it is in a northern, very fragile ecological chain.

People are just now beginning to realize the complexity and interconnection of our biological unit in relation to the life of this planet. Any of us who have seen photographs from space and have heard from scientists who have examined them realize how small is this envelope of atmosphere, or troposhere as we call it, around this world. We realize how incredibly sensitive and interconnected it is. Thor Heyerdahl could come across the ocean and find that the bulk of it is covered with oil slicks which are interfering with plankton, plankton being incredibly valuable to the production of oxygen; indeed, the CO_2 level in our atmosphere has measurably increased over the last 50 years, creating a hothouse effect. The world could become hotter and hotter, ending up like Venus, and we could all be destroyed. So it is a very complex and fragile chain, and if there is a failure, it will be too late. When we get beyond the position of recall, there is no turning back. Mankind, with all of its pseudosophistication and so-called scientific understanding, will find itself going the way of the dinosaurs if we get mother nature going down the wrong trail.

There is no doubt that Bill C-48 will funnel hundreds of billions of dollars into the hands of the government over the next few years, and that very little of that money will be returned or set aside for environmental matters. Surely that should be a matter of concern to all of us. For the life of me, I do not see why the government would not accept the amendment which deals particularly with the environmental compensation fund. When the fish are belly up in the rivers, it will be too late. When the polar bears are gone we will have lost a resource which is just incredibly valuable to us, both in terms of the balance of nature as it affects seals in the northern part or the fishing environment, and also the aesthetics of our world, when we will only be able to see polar bears in a zoo. We know that a pollution test totally killed a polar bear. Therefore, we cannot afford to have a situation where we make a mistake and then try to correct it, because the bears will be gone.

However, I have heard several speeches in the House alluding to the fact that pollution is not a function of multinational corporations which happen to be owned by individuals who hold shares. Pollution is every bit as much a function of corporations which are owned by the state; therefore, Petro-Canada will be no better in the north than any other corporation when it comes to pollution.

• (1650)

A prime example of that was the Pemex Corporation in Mexico. It took over from the multinationals. It does all of the drilling in Mexico as well as in the Gulf of Mexico. A blowout occurred in the Gulf of Mexico which I understand was the worst blowout experienced by the oil industry throughout the world. The entire Gulf faced extinction. There were those who asked why there were no regulations. But why would there be regulations, because the state-owned oil company, the only body authorized to drill, was drilling? Why would a state company have to be controlled by another arm of the state? Why would a state-owned company breach regulations? After all, Pemex is responsible to the citizens of Mexico. That is what happened, and I fear may come to pass here with the proposal before us, particularly in view of the increasing power and position of Petro-Canada.

We know already from Petro-Canada that its officials helped draft the budget last year, which gave it all sorts of preferential treatment compared to other corporations in which Canadian citizens own shares. We know officials of Petro-Canada are in the employ of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). They are put in an impossible situation, and a conflict of interest arises that becomes irreconcilable. We are not saying this to be unkind to people. We say that human beings learn as a result of the common experience that a conflict of interest is impossible to deal with, whether with Liberals in government, Conservatives in government or the New Democratic Party in government. It goes beyond party politics. But surely we can learn from the common experience of having been through it before.

Pemex is a prime example of how state ownership will not help us one bit in this business. Our safety record with respect to people working in the oil industry in western Canada is pretty good. However, even at that, about 20 to 30 people die each year in accidents. We know too that in countries where there is state ownership and state safety regulations, the death rate is much higher. Russia, I suppose, is a classic example of state ownership. I have seen their statistics. Even in Britain where many industries have been nationalized, the death rate from accidents is much higher there than here. It comes back to the same thing, that government cannot be a participant and at the same time a regulator. Some of us believe that government should be restricted to regulating and that regulations should be as stiff as they have to be in terms of safety, hours of work, control on investment, on the environment and so on. Immediately a government is a participant we head for trouble.

Bill C-48 as a whole clearly has another major defect. This defect can only be understood by those who come from the far west, the north or the east. Bill C-48 puts control into the hands of a group of people, the bureaucracy, in the centre of this country. Those people will be making decisions affecting the west coast, which is 4,000 kilometres away from where the decisions are being made.

The same situation exists as far as decisions affecting those in the north are concerned and those living on the east coast. It smacks of retaining colonial status, which I believe is unacceptable to the west. Fortunately, in Alberta we have control over our resources but it took a huge battle to win that control. A provincial Liberal government fought from 1905 to 1921 for the resources but failed. It took the United Farmers Association who fought from 1921 to 1930 to secure resource control. So for 25 years the people of Alberta, while residents of a province, did not have control over their resources. Those resources were controlled by Ottawa. It was only when that control got into the hands of the provincial politicians, who were closer to the people, that decisions on development were made protecting not only the investment climate but the environment as well.

I believe that is exactly the case with the north. People making the decisions concerning the environment, the rate of development and where lines should go, should not be a distant group of people in Ottawa, however well intentioned they may be. There is no doubt that our civil servants are highly trained and skilled, but by virtue of being in this fairyland, on the hill in Ottawa, they have no idea how people actually live and work out in the field. I believe people out in the field can make far better decisions. We will still have oil development, there is no doubt about that because they want it. But when the native and Inuit communities come up with a package giving a rate of development that will be in their best interests as well as everyone else's, surely the focus of that decision should be with them and not on a distant Ottawa.

One thing westerners have learned over 75 years is that decisions to be made will be made on a political basis. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) said that he and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources can work together, that they will work together and that they have created a committee, presumably of experts, who will make decisions. However, if there is a dispute between the two departments, who will solve that dispute? In other words, which ministry will make the decision? Depending upon which department makes the decision, what will the basis of that decision be? From where I stand, coming from the west, there is no doubt that the politics of the situation will rule. In other words, the people of southern Canada, who elect more members into this House, will make a decision in their best interests rather than in the interests of the three or four members of Parliament who represent the north.

Why would the courts not be authorized to make that decision? Better yet, why would the government not have an independent ombudsman who could make those decisions? Decisions would then be made out in the open after a hearing rather than being made behind the closed doors of the government in power, whichever government that may be.

I was amazed when I looked at the bill to see that there was no statutory authority at all for the creation of a committee to make these types of decisions. What is the authority for this committee that has been set up? It will clearly add a bureaucracy which will in turn add enormous cost and create an enormous time delay.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It would be by convention.

Mr. Thacker: My colleague said it would be by convention. I am not all that impressed with the government's upholding of convention.

A major point of conflict will be between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who, under this bill, has far too much responsibility, and the environment minister. At the very least I would encourage the government to make it crystal clear that the final decision should be made by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). In his day-to-day contacts with people across this country, he will be meeting citizens who care for the troposphere and the continuation of mankind beyond the next 25 years, certainly beyond the next election.

I would like to go through some of the sections that have been amended. Motion No. 4 is a good proposal. This motion would define spills. Surely to goodness when a government brings a bill before the people of the country setting up all sorts of serious offences, particularly if individuals are involved, a clear definition of its terms should be spelled out so that people and corporations can decide what is or is not a breach. We have no definition of what is a spill in this bill. One of the motions is to call that definition. Surely that is a motion that could be accepted. If there is no definition, the courts will ultimately decide and that involves an enormous time delay and enormous cost. As different types of spills occur, reference will have to be made to the courts again and again.

Motion No. 51 would remove any distinction between an unauthorized and an authorized spill. Surely that is an area of incredible silliness on the part of the government. It is putting clauses in the bill which sort of say that if you authorize a spill, that is fine, and it does not matter how big it is. But if it is unauthorized, however small it might be, you are subject to penalty. That puts a power, again not in the hands of politicians particularly, but in the hands of the bureaucracy. Our common experience with the exercise of bureaucratic discretion is that it invariably becomes arbitrary and unilateral, however well intentioned the individual might be.

● (1700)

Motion No. 53 substantially clarifies the liability of anyone who has violated the environment under the terms of the bill. It does so by specifying that compensation must be paid when pollution impairs, for example, one source of income through loss not only of personal property but also of natural environment. This clearly would be of great interest to the natives in the north and should be accepted instantly by the minister, and for the life of me I do not understand why he does not stand up and do so immediately.

I was disappointed, as were other members, that the Chair disallowed Motion No. 54 proposed by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) on the grounds that it would entail the expenditure of public funds. That amendment was designed to establish a multimillion dollar compensation fund based on letters of credit from the parties involved in exploration. In the face of damage, compensation to the individual would be awarded through the letter of credit. Surely that would be a worthy motion to be accepted by the government. Again, I have not heard a rational, realistic answer from any of the speakers in the House as to why that amendment was not accepted. There would not be any loss of face for individual Liberal members or the Liberal government. These are proposals designed to make the bill more satisfactory, and so that this nation can continue to go on for many, many years.

In summary, sir, it is most important I believe, first of all, that the conflict of interest between the two ministers be firmly resolved. There should be no doubt about that. Second, there should be this compensation fund that is adequate; and, third, we should have a much more clear definition of how the people in the north are going to be able to ultimately take over responsibility for their resources, just as the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan ultimately took over theirs. What will happen once this bill is firmly entrenched is that it will be virtually impossible for the native community to ever get full provincial status with control of their resources. They simply would not have the numbers of people to do it. It is important for that to be done now and I believe this bill should, indeed, be put off until that occurs.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, there are a good number of issues I would like to address today, one of them being ownership as it relates to my province of Nova Scotia. Unfortunately I will leave that one because I want to take this opportunity to express my views regarding Bill C-48, and to clarify the important role which the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has played and intends to play in the future in the matter of this legislation before the House. This also provides me with the opportunity to show that there is absolutely no foundation for the criticism made by the members of the opposition to the effect that environmental matters are not adequately dealt with under this particular piece of legislation.

I have no quarrel with members opposite who have referred to the great economic importance of the fishing industry to this country and the need to protect and preserve the fishery resource and the environment generally. I can only conclude that their criticisms are based on a misconception of the provisions written into the bill. My intention now, therefore, is to go into some detail to explain to hon. members opposite that the proposed legislation includes various provisions which are sufficient to dispel the fears of those, including myself, who are concerned about the protection of Canada's fisheries and oceans.

For the benefit of this House, I might perhaps point out that under the Department of Fisheries and Oceans Act the duties, powers and functions extended to the minister include the following:

(i) sea coast and inland fisheries,

(ii) fishing and recreational harbours,

(iii) hydrography and marine sciences, and

(iv) the co-ordination of the policies and programs of the Government of Canada regarding oceans.

In accordance with these duties, powers and functions, the minister is responsible for the administration of the Fisheries Act, the legislation which governs the management of Canada's fisheries and which dates back to confederation. Neither I nor the minister have to be reminded by members of the opposition that the protection and preservation of the marine environment, including fish and fish habitat, is fundamentally the responsibility of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc).

I also wish to point out to members opposite and to remind this House that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is not only entrusted with the protection and management of fisheries, but also has a vital operational and advisory role in terms of the oceanographic and hydrographic aspects of ocean resource development as a whole.

That being so, I am fully aware that exploration for and the eventual production of offshore oil and gas may pose potential hazards to fish resources, to fishing activities and to the marine environment in general. As well, I as a member of Parliament from Atlantic Canada am aware that the offshore oil and gas activities are likely to have a significant impact on the socioeconomic welfare of Canada's coastal and fishing communities.

Both oil and gas, on the one hand, and fisheries, on the other, are resources which are invaluable in terms of Canada's economic future. However, it would be a step backward if the oil and gas resources were allowed to be developed at the cost or to the detriment of the fishing industry. It should be remembered that the life of an oil well is limited to a relatively short economic productive period. The fishery, on the other hand, is a long-term resource that will continue to provide livelihood and food, as it has done for centuries. It is my belief, and one which is shared I am sure by all members of this House, that the oil and gas industry must not unduly interfere with the fishing industry or, indeed, damage it in any way.

In saying that I do not wish to create the impression to my colleagues or to the public at large that I am opposed to offshore oil and gas development. Clearly the oil and gas sector is a major component of the Canadian economy. Oil and gas development must go ahead in a responsible manner; that is to say, in a way which deals adequately with fishing and environmental concerns.

I have said before and I state again that I firmly believe these two industries can coexist in harmony, and I am confident that my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, (Mr. Lalonde), shares this view, as does the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans has made a diligent attempt, in my view with successful effort, to ensure the inclusion in this bill of provisions which will adequately serve to protect and safeguard those very concerns which have been expressed by hon. members in this House and by those who appeared before the committee.

I believe the need for co-operation and liaison between the departments in this matter is mutually recognized by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In this spirit the two departments have in my view collaborated closely and have united their efforts over the last months to accommodate the matters dealing with fisheries interests raised in representations before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. It is my view and belief that those matters have been duly taken into consideration by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in the latest revision of that particular piece of legislation.

Before I address myself to the specific aspects of this bill, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is also responsible for national programs in oceanography and hydrography. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans is carrying out studies and surveys in these two scientific disciplines in the principal area of hydrocarbon exploration and planned production. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans is actively involved with the regulatory agencies and with the industry as well as in matters related to the physical hazards to offshore drilling operations of such things as ice and icebergs, ocean currents and waves. The principal objective of this activity by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is to assist in the design and development of safe and efficient offshore structures, and the safe conduct of related shipping operations. In this manner, not only is the Department of Fisheries and Oceans contributing to the economic development of offshore oil and gas, but—and I would emphasize this—it is contributing directly with measures that will help ensure the protection of the marine environment and its living resources. Simply stated, the likelihood or risk of environmental damage is considerably reduced by making sure that every possible safety procedure is built into the offshore operations.

● (1710)

In my view, any scheme devised for the protection and preservation of Canada's fisheries and oceans and the socio-economic welfare of fishermen and coastal communities must necessarily provide for preventive as well as remedial measures. It is true that all environmental damage cannot be compensated. It is precisely for that reason that preventive measures must be established to minimize the possibility of events which could lead to an environmental disaster. As is often said, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. Preventive measures include the entire range of scientific research, risk analysis and contingency planning and so on, while remedial measures include devising fast and effective clean-up methods and providing adequate compensation for any damages that might result.

One provision in the bill deals with the establishment of an environmental studies revolving fund, a proposal which has received the full support of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans from the earliest stages. The proposed fund will then ensure studies required for the assessment of new areas or studies not carried out by proponents or government through established responsibilities will be undertaken. It has been agreed that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans will play a vital role in the administration of this fund and in the designation of study areas and requirements.

I should also emphasize that the consultative arrangements between the Departments of Energy, Mines and Resources and Indian Affairs and Northern Development concerning oil and gas development have been in place for a number of years. It is not just yesterday or the day before that they came into place. By means of two senior level committees, the resources management environmental committee and the interdepartmental environment review committee respectively, expert advice is provided on all matters relating to the regulation of oil and gas development. This includes matters such as draft regulations, oil spill contingency plans, approval of leased areas and specific environmental conditions. In addition, scientific information on the marine environment is provided directly on an ongoing basis both to the government agencies concerned and to the fishing industry as a whole.

The bill also proposes the establishment of a new Canada oil and gas lands administration which would bear over-all responsibility for regulation of oil and gas activities on all Canada lands. I have been assured that similar consultative mechanisms to those already in existence will be maintained. In fact, because of the extent of anticipated development in offshore areas, I have been assured by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources before committee and, indeed, in this House, that my concerns respecting fisheries and marine environment will receive particular attention.

An hon. Member: Don't bet on it!

Mr. Dingwall: It has also been agreed that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans will be fully consulted in the drafting and developing of new regulations relevant to its mandate and responsibilities.

An hon. Member: They made 100 recommendations and not one was accepted. Let's make that clear.

Mr. Dingwall: In order that the advice provided through these mechanisms properly reflects the concerns of fishermen and the fishing industry, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has already established direct consultation with the fishing industry in the form of regional committees. In fact, the first of these committees, in the Scotia-Fundy region, held its first meeting recently in Halifax.

I would like to state, therefore, that in my view there is due recognition of the needs and requirements of the fisheries, the fishing industry and the marine environment and that these needs are accommodated and properly recognized in Bill C-48 and the administrative procedures now being established to meet the needs of that particular piece of legislation.

I turn now to the liability and compensation provisions in Clause 80 of the bill which constitute, in my opinion, a significant component of the remedial aspects to which I referred earlier. One of the important features of the liability and compensation scheme of Bill C-48 is the absolute liability regime whereby no proof of fault or negligence is required to establish liability.

An hon. Member: To the maximum of $30 million. That is absolute.

Mr. Dingwall: This goes beyond the strict liability regime found in similar legislation which allows the alleged offender to escape liability if the damage in question results from circumstances beyond their control.

There have been allegations voiced in this House that the definition of "spill" in the bill excludes "authorized spills". Closer examination of the relevant provisions, however, will reveal that liability under the bill applies regardless of whether a spill is authorized or unauthorized.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: I might add that this modification appeared in the latest draft as a result of consistent representations made, I believe, by all members of Parliament, particularly members on the government side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: Furthermore, the liability provisions include not only damages resulting from spills but also compensation for damages resulting from debris on the ocean floor. The provision is undoubtedly far-reaching in terms of relief for the fishermen, the backbone of the fishing industry, and others who may have their gear damaged by discarded equipment from the oil industry. In this context, Mr. Speaker, I might add that the wide definition of debris which has been incorporated in the bill also came about as a result of an insistence on the part of fishermen, MPs and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

Another significant feature of the liability and compensation scheme is the inclusion of loss of income, including future income in the definition of actual loss or damage. I must emphasize that this provision goes beyond the basis for the award of damages under common law and in my view it is unprecedented in any similar type of legislation. Again, this major improvement was brought about in large part by the efforts of members of Parliament as well as by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

Another feature that is important from my own perspective is the extended limitation period for claims now incorporated in the bill. On the basis of scientific advice from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans it was agreed that the proposed limitation periods should be extended. I am now satisfied that the revised limitations in the new version of the bill are much more realistic in terms of assessing damage or potential damage to the living resources. Furthermore, the compensation scheme under the bill provides for financial responsibility in the form of a letter of credit, a guarantee or indemnity bond. This provision will enable potential claimants such as fishermen to gain access to funds immediately without being subjected to inherent difficulties often associated with going through the courts. That is a major benefit under this legislation.

I wish to point out that over the years there has been a steady and fruitful exchange of views between the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. This consultation process has been reflected in the participation of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in various advisory groups, as I have already pointed out.

• (1720)

However, in the context of this bill co-operation has been further strengthened by the mutual consultations which the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources have had with respect to the many modifications which, I believe, are now found in the bill. My colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has given me as well as other members of Parliament the full assurance that his consultative process will be carried on in the future with respect to the enactment of regulations governing a wide range of subject matters relevant to the mutual interests of both the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

I might also add that in some areas there are consultations which involve not only the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources but also the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Department of the Environment. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans will also be providing expert advice through the proposed Canada oil and gas lands administration.

I think I have quite clearly demonstrated the absence of any foundation for the allegations raised in this House that the environmental provisions of Bill C-48 are inadequate. I wish to reiterate the fact that consultations between the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources are and will continue on an ongoing basis with respect to all matters under Bill C-48. Indeed, the latest version of the bill, in particular the provisions relating to liability and compensation, in my view reflect the considerable efforts expended by all members of Parliament. I wish to emphasize that hon. members on this side of the House as well as hon. members opposite played a role in bringing that to the attention of both the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In that regard I think we can all pat ourselves on the back.

I wish to conclude my remarks on this particular aspect of Bill C-48. I hope to have a chance in the near future either within this House, on the hustings or, indeed, in my own province of Nova Scotia, to address that question and that issue which is so often attacked by hon. members opposite, that of ownership. I do not really believe that is the issue at all in Nova Scotia. The issue really is the benefits which accrue from oil and gas activities.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when one rises to speak about Bill C-48, one feels somewhat like the Arab felt when he entered his harem. He knew what he was there for; he just did not know quite where to begin.

There are many aspects of this bill about which one would want to speak. I will restrict myself to a quick word about what the previous speaker referred to, the role of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc), and address the main part of my remarks in reply to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), who told me I did not have very much patience in listening to his speech. At least I was here to listen to his speech, and I want to reply to it.

With respect to the previous speaker, I suggest to him that he might want to look at the reports of the department to which he referred and specifically the report of Mr. Grinnell, who wrote a report on the implications of offshore petroleum development for Atlantic fisheries, a socioeconomic overview. This was released by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in August, 1981. At page 29 of that report the author says, and I quote:

> The U.K. experience tells us that a rapid escalation of petroleum activities can offset routine gains in employment and business activities by losses in environmental values and social conditions, as well as sharp increases in cost of living for those on fixed incomes or in work areas not associated with the petroleum industry—without a commensurate increase in income. In addition, industries competing for labour and space with the new industry, and marketing products in competion with those from industries in low cost situations, may have economic problems. Fishing, if conducted inefficiently, can be particularly vulnerable.

He went on to say why. I just quote that to say that I would not want to see the impression left with fishermen that they will not be vulnerable in many ways to the rapid escalation of oil and gas development about which this bill talks.

I want to refer to some of the remarks made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources because he gave the impression that everything is hunky-dory, that this bill is fine, that it can proceed and so forth.

With reference to north of 60 the minister has succeeded in doing a strange thing. For the first time in my memory and in the memory of many people he has united the Northwest Territorial government, the Dene and the Indian people in the Northwest Territories, the Metis and the non-status Indians in the Northwest Territories, the Yukon Territorial government, the Indian brotherhood in the Yukon, the non-status people in the Yukon, the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada and all the Eskimo organizations, business in the north, labour in the north and environmental people in the north. As a matter of fact, everybody in the north opposes this bill, including even the municipalities in the north. He has succeeded in bringing unity to the north in the fact that all oppose this bill. All are united against it.

The question is why. Perhaps it is somewhat of a breakdown in communications or in understanding. This bill sets out a strong regime, in many ways, compared with previous regimes. I see in the gallery today a representative from the department, specifically Dr. Crosby, who did a very good job in his department working to try to get a hard-hitting regime together to deal with the oil industry and other aspects for the first time in a long time. The previous regime was disastrous. However, what has happened with this bill is that in the process the minister, who likes to ram things through, has forgotten to consult in a real way with the northern people. That is very important because they are the ones who have to live with this development.

What the bill does is speed up the development, so the minister should not be surprised when we stand up on behalf of northern native people and other northerners and on behalf of environmental groups and say, "Wait a minute; be careful; fix this bill up, if you can, and see what is happening as a result of this development." It will speed up the pace of development. What else is the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources there for? Its job is to push development. We would not expect these good doctors in the department to do anything else. That is their job. However, we in Parliament, as politicians and as people representing the entire country, must make sure that in putting a bill like this through we protect the interests of certain groups which will be affected by the bill.

This bill has generally been ignored by the press. Look at the press contingent here today. Everybody is interested in the Constitution or in the economy, perhaps, as people should be, but this bill is a real sleeper because it causes some very dramatic effects in the north and offshore. Environmentally speaking, this bill would set a pattern for an environmental regime and for other matters.

When he spoke, the minister gave the impression that the bill would go through easily. Of course it will; it is a question of power. The centre in Canada has the power at the expense of the periphery. That is what the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) meant when he was talking about development overriding the interests of the native people and environmental concerns. Granted, hon. members opposite can do it, but I say to the government that they pay a price. I suggest that the government be prepared to accept motions we present, motions the opposition Conservatives present and, of course, some of its own motions. Even at this stage the government should add amendments to the bill.

In dealing with the bill we in the New Democratic Party have had four main criticisms. The first is that the bill emphasizes Canadianization. We say it is a giveaway because 93 cents of every exploration dollar basically goes toward replacing the big American boys with big Canadian boys. Is that a change? We say no. It will make the Dome Petroleums and the NOVA corporations rich. The Dome Petroleums and the NOVA corporations will rush to drill in the Beaufort Sea and in the north at the expense of the environment.

Second, we have criticized the bill because it overrides the concerns of native people. Liberal members opposite do not have to care, but I put it to them that the Anglican church has informed the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that it favours complete withdrawal of the bill. This surely must have some influence. The Roman Catholic bishop Paul Reding read a statement from the Archbishop of Edmonton, Joseph N. MacNeil as follows:

I believe this legislation could, in effect, seriously prejudice the settlement of native land claims and further relegate the people of the North to a colonial status within Canada. This issue will have a dramatic influence upon the lives of thousands of our fellow Canadians.

● (1730)

In fact, the minister says this bill is neutral with respect to land claims. You cannot be neutral with respect to land claims. If you are going to develop the north, you have taken all that property off the table in the negotiations. Once again, the native people in the north will become like the native people in southern Canada. They will be the people standing by the road when the trucks roll by; they will be in skid row in Regina or Vancouver instead of taking their proper place in the development of the country. You have to do that by settling land claims first. That is why the matter is there. This bill, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, may be unconstitutional.

I remind the members that section 34(1) of the Constitution Act says this:

The aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

That principle was accepted in the Constitution. That principle was right. It is a very progressive and ultimately radical principle. The government is to be congratulated on this because it recognizes that the country is made up of the founding peoples, the native peoples, the original peoples, the two other groups, the French and English, and then the multicultural group, the group that came afterwards—that is the genius of the Constitution. It is a wise document. You cannot then come along with Bill C-48 and completely ignore that principle.

Let me now deal with a third criticism of the bill: the environmental aspect. The minister looking over at me said in his speech, "What are you worried about? Dome Petroleum have been drilling. They have drilled hundreds of wells and there has been no spill yet." But, Mr. Speaker, this bill means there is going to be an immense speed up in development. We do not know how to handle offshore spills.

A report in the Ottawa Citizen of May 9, 1981, stated this about a meeting in Resolute Bay, Northwest Territories:

A spokesman for Dome Petroleum Ltd. of Calgary admitted Friday when questioned by concerned Inuit that his company does not have the ability to clean up a major oil spill in the Northwest Passage.

But Ed Pessah told a public hearing that his company, which is proposing a fleet of icebreaking tankers to ship Arctic oil to southern markets, is studying methods to clean up major oil spills and hopes to be able to do that by 1986.

Ed Pessah said:

We probably could not clean up that oil spill today but we are hopeful that we could by 1986. We could not give that guarantee today.

We are here today discussing a bill with inadequate environmental protection, when Dome Petroleum admits, contrary to what the minister told the House, they cannot control an oil spill in the Arctic. What kind of leadership is this? "Have patience," says the minister. The minister should have listened to the remarks made to the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) and the member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) when they talked about specific proposals we made. Why did the minister not say, "We will accept those proposals. They make sense." For example, we wanted to define an oil spill. I will not go into this in detail, Look at Hansard on page 11796, and you see that the hon. member for Skeena refers to the reasons for defining an oil spill. He talks about cumulative leaks being just as bad as a big spill. That is why you must have a definition of what an oil spill is. He cites the experience in Wales in these words:

Let us look at the experience elsewhere. In Wales, the harbour authority has defined a spill as anything over a few barrels. What this has done is to give a mandate to the local authorities to watch the chronic oil pollution problem closely, but it has also meant that the companies involved have taken the time to train their employees properly and have recognized the importance of controlling these kinds of spills. Incidentally, when a quantified level was set, the spill rate in Wales dropped to one spill in 100 from previous levels.

We advocated that when we brought forward Motion No. 52. In an excellent speech to the House the other night, the hon. member from Nunatsiaq really dealt with the matter in detail. If you look at what he said, Mr. Speaker, at page 11831 of Hansard, you will find he defined why we want Motion No. 52 of the bill. He dealt with the method of compensating people for spills.

He also dealt with another matter. This is a grave matter. It is dealt with in Motion No. 53. You heard the hon. member from Mississauga also make the point. Bill C-48 would only allow you to go to court over a spill, to sue, or to go to the minister if your property were directly affected. In the north they have walruses and other groups of animals. Those groups are not privately owned; they are owned collectively. If the minister knew anything about the north, he would know that. They are viewed as being owned collectively. We heard a northern native and a southern lawyer say this. If you were to read their speeches together—and I suggest the government might want to do this—they might want to adopt Motion No. 53. I believe they make sense. They were saying you have to give the people in the north a way to sue for their general loss. You have to give people of the north a way to identify the general loss. We have an amendment for this. We asked the companies to report spills and incidents. We asked there be a time delay because you might not be able to find the loss for a little while. These motions make sense to me.

We have also included Motion No. 34 in this group. I suggest it is worth looking at. It was partly outlined in the remarks made by the member for Nunatsiaq. Motion No. 34 deals with persons or groups directly affected by oil and gas activities being funded so they are enabled to participate effectively in the studies and in the hearings. Surely the interest holders and the oil and gas producers should bear the cost of funding the environmental studies in a revolving fund and should refund, at least, in part, those persons or groups affected by the activities. There should be an advisory committee comprised of representatives from the oil and gas industry, public interest groups, aboriginal people and other groups. At page 11832 of Hansard, the hon. member for Nunatsiaq outlines this in some detail. I ask the government to take a look at this particular amendment. I will not go into it in any more detail. However, they should look at it because I believe it is worth while.

The government has made a big mistake with regard to this bill. This is a centralized bill. It is brought down by this government against the wishes and without really consulting the members of the people of the north.

I heard the minister say that in the committee say, "We heard from all kinds of people. We sat for so long. We heard from the government bureaucrats and from the industry. That is who we heard from." We had only one day with the northern people, and the committee refused to go up north. What kind of way is that to run a country like ours? This is a big country. The north is our last frontier. We should at least hear from northerners.

I will conclude the substantial part of my speech, Mr. Speaker, by suggesting to the members opposite that they take a look at the amendments we proposed in good faith. It will not cure their bill, but it will help it a bit.

The other point I will make in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, is that when I was a younger lawyer, I went to a hearing in Inuvik as counsel to the Berger inquiry on the Mackenzie Valley pipeline. I did not understand, at first, things about the north. I thought like a southerner and did not understand then the point I just made about collective ownership of animals. I remember the night when Sam Raddi appeared before the inquiry in Inuvik and gave a very quiet speech. Mr. Raddi is blind. He speaks very quietly. He spoke about the time when he was a boy and his father told him that if the animals ever left the Beaufort Sea, the people would go; if the animals go, the people go. It is not just a question of killing polar bears and seals because we in the south may happen to like polar bears and seals. It goes further for northern people. It will kill them if they lose those animals. It will kill their culture. The minister should know better. He should stop this bill. He should go up and consult the people of the north about it. Before third reading, he should try again to talk to the northern people.

• (1740)

We want to keep our northern environment. All parties in the House share this view. We are a northern people. If one reads Canadian literature, one finds over and over again illustrations of how we are northerners. Although we live in southern Canada, we think of ourselves as northern people. There is not a member in the House who does not want to preserve the northern environment. I have been through three or four years of hearings on this matter, and I find that the only way we can preserve the northern environment is by tempering the development of the north, which the minister wants to bring in through Bill C-48 full flight.

It must be tempered with some balances. It must be tempered with a settlement of native land claims and by including all northern people in this bill. In that way we can have both the northern frontier and the northern homeland intact for the people. That is the point we in this corner of the House are making.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, indeed it is a pleasure to join in a debate which is not on procedural matters. This departure is somewhat unique for me as in the last little while I have been concentrating on procedure and points of order when speaking in the House of Commons.

I do not intend to come before the House today to talk about this bill in any great depth. However, I have been present in the House during the last year while this bill and the National Energy Program have been before us, and I am somewhat surprised that we are still debating this measure in the month of October, a full year after the National Energy Program was brought forward.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) lamented the fact that there is only one reporter from the Canadian Press in the gallery today. Perhaps that answers his question. We know the excellent objectivity of the Canadian Press in general and its good judgment because it is so attuned to political life in the country. Since more reporters are not present, perhaps it means that there is no great fuss out in the country and perhaps this is, then, a good bill. Perhaps the fact that there is only one reporter from the Canadian Press tells us that there is no great uproar about this bill, and that we should pass it.

Mr. Deans: What is your definition of "objectivity"? You started a libel suit against them last week.

Mr. Collenette: I hear the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) heckling me. With all his years of experience, I would have thought he could detect when someone was talking tongue-in-cheek and when someone was talking in a straight sense.

Mr. Deans: Will the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Fulton: Talk about the environment.

Mr. Collenette: The hon. member is trying to seek the floor. I do not know whether we should allow him to interrupt the debate. I did not want to cause any fuss; I have been in the middle of enough fuss in the last year. It was very innocent of me to think that at 5.45 p.m. I could rise to talk about Bill C-48.

This bill has been before us for a long time. The minister mentioned that 30 speakers had been heard on Motion No. 3. We are now on the third day of debate dealing with the environmental motions. Hon. members should realize that when report stage was conceived in the 1969 rule changes—and I stand to be corrected—it was meant to be a helpful device so that after deliberation in committee the government, in particular, could come forward with amendments to the floor of the House which had not previously occurred to the government and were the result of committee deliberations.

Earlier in the session we saw that report stage on Bill C-57 was regarded by the opposition as another attempt to delay the normal passage of bills. If we consider rule changes in the new year and we come forward with some work for the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, I hope we will reflect on how report stage is continually being abused. If we continue with this bill at the same speed, we will still be on it well into the new year.

There is one theme running through the discussion on Bill C-48, both on this side and the other side of the House, that is, the need for some orderly rules governing the development of exploration for resources on the Canada lands. I think everyone would agree that we need this. The fact that we are debating this bill ad nauseam has an unsettling effect on the country. We are not establishing a regime for orderly development. Hon. members of the NDP, those self-righteous gentlemen and gentle ladies from the nether regions of the political spectre, fail—

Miss Jewett: Is that how you talk about the west? No wonder you did not get any votes there.

Mr. Collenette: —fail to appreciate that the things they are supposedly fighting for are being hampered by their continual delay to face up to the issues with respect to the development of the Canada lands. We saw this on Motion No. 3. Actually, it was not the NDP who prolonged the debate; it was the official opposition.

Mr. Deans: Make up your mind.

Mr. Collenette: They prolonged the debate after the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) stated, as reported in Hansard of December 7, 1980, that we need quick passage of the bill. I am not sure whether the fact that he made this statement a year ago and the bill is still before us is the reason he is no longer the energy critic of his party. The point is that the official opposition has delayed the bill, yet originally it called for its speedy passage. The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre talked about unilateral action. I will relate this to the motions at hand and the need for orderly development, but as reported on page 5675 of Hansard, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre said:

> Bill C-48 confirms the Government of Canada's unilateral approach in yet another area of policy, and that is in the area of offshore jurisdiction over resources.

The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre castigated the government for so-called unilateral action. It is not unilateral action. What is being done in this bill, especially in Motion No. 3, is simply to confirm the status quo. I might say in passing that the official opposition should be castigated because the prolonging of debate on Motion No. 3 severely prejudiced the very sensitive negotiations now under way between the government of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada respecting the sharing of wealth from the offshore. The opposition has prolonged and continued these debates. Before I talk in depth on the other motions, I should say that the official opposition seems to be the only institution or force in the country which is out of step with public opinion on the Canadianization policy and on the National Energy Program.

The premier of Ontario embraced so-called free enterprise in Queen's Park. He embraced the tenets of the National Energy Program by having his government acquire a stake in one of the large multinational oil companies. Obviously there is widespread support for the NEP and its Canadianization provision. As on so many issues facing the country, whether it is the Constitution, the charter of rights, citizenship in the 1940s or the flag, it is the official opposition, the National Progressive Conservative Party, which is bringing up the rear, failing to come to terms with the modern reality of modern Canada.

What about these particular environmental motions? If one read them individually, one would think that the NDP is claiming some exclusive right on behalf of all Canadians to protect the environment. This is not true. I resent somewhat the implication in the House that it is only our friends in the New Democratic Party who have environmental interests at heart, that it is only the NDP who have the native people at heart. I resent that, Mr. Speaker. This motion of moral prudity and exclusivity is somewhat offensive.

• (1750)

The minister pointed out that environmental concerns have been addressed in this bill. This government set up the Berger Commission. I understand that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was involved with that commission and its report was embraced by the Liberal side of the House. After the government has proved, over the years, its serious concern for the environmental effects of development in the north, his party comes in with a group of motions.

That party talks about oil spills, Mr. Speaker, but the minister pointed out that there has not been an oil spill of any great significance. That does not mean that there will not be and that we should not be concerned that there might be in the future. But to date there have not been any great oil spills because, so far, the rules under which exploration has occurred have been controlled and monitored by the government. I submit that conditions are being enhanced in the bill that is before us.

My colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, talked about native opposition and about Section 34 of the Constitution Act. But he defeats his own argument, Mr. Speaker. In the constitutional resolution the government is enhancing and protecting native rights. In no way will the provisions of this bill run counter to the charter of rights when it is implemented.

I think the hon. member's argument is somewhat rhetorical when he claims that we have not thought this matter through. If he reads the bill closely, he will see that every attempt has been made to be sensitive to native and environmental concerns.

The minister spoke of the attempt of members of the New Democratic Party to diffuse responsibility for environmental protection through the use of these motions. I should like to know where the Tories stand on this question. That is the party that claims to stand for efficiency in government and which talks about giving leadership. What is their stand on the amendment in question in which the NDP proposes a more diffused responsibility over environmental concerns? We have not heard from them on this point. I think it is essential that one department and one minister have overriding responsibility for the environmental provisions of the bill.

The minister also spoke about the assistance the bill affords individual citizens to protect themselves against environmental damage. The judicial process is upheld and individuals who may be adversely affected will have the right to make a judicial appeal. The minister spoke about blank cheques from the industry so that citizens would receive compensation. I am not sure of the details of those so-called blank cheques but it is evident that the bill will require the industry to be responsible for cleaning up any spills or environmental hazards that occur as the result of resource development. The opposition argues that point but the trouble with them is that they look at every little nuance—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) on a point of order.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the member would quote the clause he is referring to. We have heard an awful lot of hot air and misquotes from the hon. member. We have a number of motions before the House—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette).

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I offended my friend from Skeena. Perhaps we should look at the speech made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the speech made last Thursday night by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) who outlined the weaknesses of the NDP amendments. I do not propose to hold up the House at this point. I understand that the hon. member for Skeena wishes to speak. Let him get to his feet and say his piece.

An hon. Member: He has already spoken.

Mr. Collenette: He has already spoken yet he would try to deny me, a humble member of this House, the right to make some small impact on the debate.

An hon. Member: Speak to the motion.

Mr. Collenette: In summary, Mr. Speaker, these amendments must be rejected for the reasons I have outlined.

Mr. Andre: The Globe and Mail was right.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the government would take its responsibility and see that this legislation becomes law as soon as possible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Collenette: In British parliamentary democracy there is a theory that if a government is elected, then obviously it has a responsibility to put policies forward. It has a responsibility also to have those policies debated, but at some point it has to move on. It is not closure; it is adequately airing debate. The hon. member opposite said that I was spewing forth a lot of hot air. I would remind him that 30 members of this House spoke on Motion No. 3. If one must talk about hot air, then perhaps one should look at one's own party.

I think we must get on with passing these clauses and I hope the debate can be wound up tonight so that we may clear this very important piece of legislation off the agenda of the House of Commons. Then we could move on to the macroeconomic debate that the Tories want. All summer they have called for a macroeconomic debate to deal with the so-called poor economy of the country, yet they permit their members to stand up, one after the other, to filibuster this bill.

I did not mean to get so passionate in making these comments Mr. Speaker; I was just trying to be helpful to hon. members opposite. Before I sit down, however, I must say that I think it is high time that members of the public who watch us on television or read the debates, and even the lone reporter from the Canadian Press—wherever the lady might be—

Mr. Taylor: She could not stand you.

Mr. Collenette: —take note that this bill should be passed into law, and soon.

Mr. Taylor: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I cannot recognize the hon. member if he is not in his proper seat.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) on a point of order.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the words of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) are pretty hollow when you realize that three Liberals spoke. Three Liberals held us up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on Motion No. 4 in the name of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar).

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I wonder if you are in a position to inform us on the ruling of the Chair with regard to a question I raised on Friday last. I asked that the votes on Motions No. 51 and 4 be split for the purpose of determining if Motion No. 4 dealt strictly with definitions while Motion No. 51 was an operative section. I wonder if I could have a ruling on that before you put the question on Motion No. 4.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. If the House wishes to dispose of the motions separately, the Chair is quite agreeable to that.

The question is on Motion No. 4 of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar).

All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on this motion stands deferred.

• (1800)

The question now is on Motion No. 51. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 34. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) on a point of order.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, perhaps Your Honour could clear this up for me. There was a motion that we include another section which Mr. Speaker had ruled out, and I just wonder if you could tell us before we proceed whether there has been a ruling on that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): To which motion precisely is the hon. member referring to?

Mr. Waddell: Number 54, I think.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The Speaker will rule later on No. 54.

The question is on Motion No. 52. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 53. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last I raised the question with regard to the appropriateness of Motion No. 54 which, in order of sequence, would come next for voting purposes. I put before Madam Speaker an argument in favour of the motion as it stands, contrary to the decision made by Mr. Speaker in a ruling tabled on July 13, 1981. I wonder if I might have a ruling on Section 54 before we proceed with the vote on the subsequent sections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Again I am informed by the Clerk that Madam Speaker has said that she will make a ruling on Wednesday on this specific motion, Motion No. 54.

The question is on Motion No. 55. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the yeas have it.

Motion No. 55 (Mr. Lalonde) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on Motion No. 56. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 57. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

It being past six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At 6.08 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I understand several motions were disposed of before the dinner hour this evening. Accordingly, the House may wish to consider Motion No. 5 standing in the name of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde).

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (for Mr. Lalonde) moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 5 by adding immediately after line 39 at page 5 the following:

"(7) The members of any advisory body appointed under subsection (6) may be paid for their services such remuneration and expenses as are fixed by the governor in council."

and by renumbering Subclause 5(7) as Subclause 5(8).

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, we in this party do not have any profound objections to this clause which provides that the minister may appoint an advisory body to advise him with respect to matters relating to the administration of this act and that the governor in council be empowered to pay for their services. In theory, that provision is reasonable. But as we know from experience with the operation of this government in the last few months and years, we know that what is sometimes a reasonable procedure turns out often to be not so reasonable. I do not know that we could find the appropriate language, and indeed it is regrettable that it is even necessary for members of this House to express the hope that this provision be not inserted for the purpose of allowing the minister to reward and remunerate his friends and associates.

It would be nice if we could have some provision in here to ensure that the sleazy behaviour regarding Messrs. Maurice Strong, David Beattie and Joel Bell with respect to the CDC will not be repeated here. It would be nice if we could find the appropriate language to ensure that this particular provision will not be used for some under the table sleazy payments to assistants of the minister. It would be nice if we could find some way to ensure that this provision will not end up as a way for the minister to reward campaign workers, defeated candidates and other loyal Liberals, a habit that has developed with respect to these types of appointments.

Prior to six o'clock today we heard the speech of the former parliamentary secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). He talked about the coming parliamentary reform, perhaps in the new year. One parliamentary reform, which the record of this government indicates is vitally necessary if we are to restore some public respect for this body and for the government, is a reform wherein appointments such as this be made subject to review, so that the remuneration of people who are appointed to advisory boards, boards of directors and various government appointments be made subject to public disclosure and public review. As well perhaps we should assign an advise and consent role to this House, similar to that in the United States. Obviously with a government whose only moral code is the Criminal Code, this kind of unconventional, immoral behaviour is bound to continue. I do not think it does justice to the taxpayers of Canada who ultimately have to pay these salaries.

With the caveat, Mr. Speaker, that some of us in this Parliament at least do find that kind of behaviour by the government sleazy at best, I say on behalf of my party that we have no objection to Amendment No. 5

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments on this particular amendment moved by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). I must say that the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre)—

An hon. Member: The sleazy member from Calgary.

Mr. Waddell: I did not call him that, but he has a peculiar way of supporting that proviso. On behalf of our party, I also support the amendment. However, I might point out that this is a provision for appointing advisory bodies. There are no specifics as to what the advisory bodies are or who will be on the advisory body. It is a provision to pay the people who are appointed to these advisory bodies. I wish I could be more encouraged by the level of appointments.

For instance, let us take Petro-Canada. I think hon. members opposite, the governing Liberal party and our party share some views on Petro-Canada. We want to see Petro-Canada work as the national oil company for all Canadians. I am quite proud of my Petro-Canada credit card, except when I have to pay the charges incurred by using it. Members opposite from eastern Canada will be getting Petro-Canada credit cards when Petro-Canada converts all the Fina gas stations in the east. People will respond to Petro-Canada. You will see it happen. We saw it happen out west. People will come to those gas stations. The people of this country are proud of Petro-Canada.

Some appointments were made to the board of Petro-Canada recently. I am still trying to figure out what Mr. Jerry Grafstein of Toronto knows about the oil industry and what his particular expertise is entitling him to sit on its board.

Mr. Nielsen: There are others.

Mr. Waddell: I know there are others, as the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has said. Maybe I will get to those in a moment. There is also someone from the Yukon. At least she can say she lived in the north. I do not know if Mr. Grafstein has been north of Bloor Street. Actually I knew Mr. Grafstein years ago. He is a very competent man, but why is he on the board of Petro-Canada? Why do we not have a native or an Inuit on that board, or why do we not have some environmental people or some small business people? What about some of those people who are retail gasoline dealers representing their point of view? What does Mr. Grafstein have to contribute to Petro-Canada? What is his raison d'être for being on the board?

• (2010)

An hon. Member: He is a big "L" liberal.

Mr. Waddell: That is right, he is a big "L" liberal and this is a patronage appointment. Are we about to be voting here for patronage appointments? I hope and trust that is not the case as this has never happened in the past except for Petro-Canada and in respect of numerous other boards. I hope these will not be patronage appointments.

An hon. Member: It is a good program for exchanging people.

Mr. Waddell: It is a good program to exchange people from being Liberal fund raisers to becoming members of the board of Petro-Canada. That is a strange exchange.

An hon. Member: Between private enterprise and government.

Mr. Waddell: I just returned from the election campaign in Nova Scotia, and when driving around during the campaign I saw some steam coming up from the road and I could not figure it out. Finally the person who was driving me told me that was just steam coming from the new pavement. I told him the road looked fine, but he said that they had paved the road because of the election campaign. They pave the roads there during election campaigns, and one could see the steam coming up because it was so fresh.

What I am saying is simply this. Let us not make such gross political appointments. My predecessor, as the member for Vancouver-Kingsway, Mrs. Holt, lost the election and found herself on the National Parole Board. Mr. Grafstein has done organizing, fund raising and media work for the Liberal party, and so he finds himself on the Petro-Canada board.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that Roman Emperor Caligula, appointed his horse to the counsel once. I do not think the Liberal party would ever have done that if they had been in power in Rome. I am sure they have the horses, but the problem is they could not vote or could not contribute at election time. The only point I want to make about these boards—

An hon. Member: They have had horses vote before.

Mr. Waddell: I do not know if the hon. member is listening, but the point I simply make is, let us try to have some real, genuine northerners appointed on these boards, or people who are concerned with this particular matter. Let us not make this a place for political hacks. I would like to see this specified. How can we really trust this government in many ways? I see the Secretary of State for External Affairs sitting there. He is my old professor from law school at the University of Toronto.

An hon. Member: He is not that old.

Mr. Waddell: Another professor who has been around for some time says he is not that old. He is not that old, but I would draw the attention of the House to a speech by Mr. Peter M. Towe, ambassador of Canada, made to the American Gas Association in New York City on October 13. I have the notes for his speech. He said, and I quote from page 7 where he spoke of the National Energy Program:

> What the Canadian government does intend is to mobilize predominantly private Canadian investment from existing companies, pension plans, insurance funds and individuals and to encourage their investment in the oil and gas industry.

I am glad the ambassador was straightforward because that is what I have been saying in the House. Canadianization is basically the exchange of a large foreign company with foreign private capital for Canadian private capital. Let us not mistake this as taking under public ownership the Canadian oil industry.

Mr. Towe then went on to say this:

> Some critics are concerned that the NEP's Canadian participation provisions might be the first step toward similar policies for other economic sectors. I can assure you that this is not so.

What we are getting here is in fact the government backing off from an industrial strategy. I am sure we will be referring to this later, but the point I am raising now—especially since the Secretary of State for External Affairs may speak on the motion, and I want to give him a chance to reply—is that here is a Canadian ambassador announcing policy. I did not know that was the role of an ambassador, but clearly that must be the government's policy. It is going to back away from the industrial strategy it promised.

What I say with regard to this motion is that we should really nail down, if we are going to have an advisory board, who is going to be on the board, how it is to be representative, what it is to do, and so on. If we do not do so, we are going to get this type of person I spoke of appointed. I do not call them sleazy because there are some very sincere, experienced and dedicated politicians on that side of the House.

An hon. Member: Too experienced.

Mr. Waddell: My friend says "too experienced". Be that as it may, what I am worried about is that if this is not nailed down, we will see the kind of appointments that are almost worse than that of Caligula, the appointment of political hacks and bagmen, with the worst of the old system of political patronage in which this party and this government have been known to indulge. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a very brief interjection at this point because, to those of us who have served at one time or other on the Standing Committee of the House on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, it is self-evident, when you look back at the last 12 or 13 years of history when this government has been in charge of this country, that there has been a consistent long-term tendency to appoint members to boards and commissions and to retain that power of appointment within the government. It is the case, in terms of this recommendation, to further retain the power to set the compensation that shall go to those members of boards and commissions. My good friend to my left has identified the issue of Jerry Grafstein's appointment to the Board of Petro-Canada. I simply want to say to the Canadian people that more and more of their lives are being governed today by appointed bodies which are not subject to parliamentary scrutiny. Each time this happens, in all these little bits and pieces, whether we are talking about the Post Office, the Canada Lands Surveys Act, as we now are, or Petro-Canada, we are turning over a bit of freedom in the sense that the people no longer have the clear opportunity to examine the wisdom of what is being proposed.

I cannot help but reflect on how much happier I would be with a proposed amendment that, instead of using the words "Governor in Council", we used the words "The Parliament of Canada". Then the amendment would say that whatever advisory boards might be appointed by the Parliament of Canada, compensation should be decided on some kind of regular basis by the Parliament of Canada. In that way the people of Canada who pay the taxes in this country would have some right to a clear-cut, careful examination of the qualifications of the people who are to serve in this capacity and the remuneration which should accrue to them.

I could not let this kind of a motion pass without rising, at least briefly, to say that we are putting one more nail in the coffin of Canadians in the sense of turning away from the Parliament of Canada and the power of the electorate of this country toward government by groups appointed in secret and remunerated in secret because of this lack of public examination of their qualifications and compensation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

● (2020)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): I will not be long, Mr. Speaker, but I have to respond to what the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) just said. He said the appointments were to be made in secret and the remuneration would be determined in secret. Nothing can be further from the truth. The minister and governor in council will make the appointments. They are public appointments. The remunerations are public and the hon. member can find out about them either by asking the minister in the House or by asking him in committee or by seeing them published in The Canada Gazette. What is secret about that? The hon. member is standing here and dragging a red herring down the centre of the chamber.

An hon. Member: We want to know if their houses are going to be mortgaged.

Mr. Evans: I think we should get on with this debate and quit listening to that kind of nonsense.

An hon. Member: If it was such a great idea, why didn't Joe do it?

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I suppose than anybody would have to accept the amendment before us as recognition that at some time advisory boards will be used. I wish to point out some of the major concerns of our party and of members of other parties in committee about the role of advisory boards. The legislation should provide for the establishment of specific advisory boards and set out the roles they should play.

I would like to run through what we felt were some of the major shortcomings in this legislation and why advisory boards might be one mechanism which would meet our concerns. The bill leaves tremendous power in the hands of the minister and, as a result, the decisions that affect the lives of Canadians on the west coast, in the north, not the east coast, will be centralized in the hands of the minister.

It is unfortunate that this bill allows for something that we heard complaints about just a few minutes ago, that is, secret dealings. There is a great deal of fear that proper explanations and information will not be available and that opportunity for input will not occur because of the powerful discretionary role of the minister.

Advisory boards would be of utmost value in overcoming this situation. Such boards should have very specific guidelines dictating their role. The amendment we are considering does not go far enough. There is only provision in the legislation for the appointment of advisory boards. There are no guidelines in the bill and we will only see advisory boards appointed if the minister deems it necessary. He is authorized to pay them but, in my opinion, this legislation should contain guidelines. Advisory boards should be appointed for a specific purpose and guidelines provided. None of this is set out in the legislation before us.

Our party tried to have this included in the legislation, as did the Conservative Party, and some Liberal members tried to get the matter reconsidered. It is unfortunate that the minister and the government did not see the benefit of including it in the legislation.

Bill C-48 is largely an effort to rule by regulation. Other concerned members have expressed the view that the Government of Canada is governing by regulation, by cabinet decision not involving the decisions of the selected representatives and not involving the participation of the people.

By governing by centralized power and by a very centralized bureaucracy, I hope the government will realize it is losing touch with the people, that it no longer has relevance. It is very concerned about its image and about federal input into projects. It is a big concern for them, and we see that by the advertising budgets they use in trying to get at that problem.

The real dilemma is that the government has left the people. It sits here in Ottawa and makes decisions about over-all budgets, but in the rural areas of Canada the federal government is an obstacle to the way of life. There rural Canadians can no longer relate to their government. During the past week there was a small group of people here trying to see a cabinet minister, trying to talk to someone who affects their lives. They had a difficult time even getting an appointment. Some ministers are open and make a tremendous effort to see these people but others keep their doors locked, both here and in regional and district offices. The right to make decisions in the community has been removed totally. The right to provide meaningful input into the decision-making process has been virtually denied. The whole concept of centralizing the bureaucracy and governing by regulation has created great havoc in this country. Advisory boards which would represent major interests would go a long way to making Bill C-48 more palatable and more meaningful to people at the local level.

I question the goals contained in this bill. It has been said here that this legislation will not, in the final analysis, meet the needs of Canadians. We will be pouring enormous amounts of money into megaprojects that will just create enormous profits for the oil companies. There is great fear that those megaprojects will draw money out of Canada.

We have been assured by the minister that his intentions are honourable. His goals may not be clear, but certainly they are there to benefit Canadians. But he will not put those guidelines in the bill, he will not include anything that Canadians can hook onto. We fought tooth and nail to get an advisory board on industrial benefits that would bring together industry, labour and government into a forum that would meet regularly to exchange information. Many people in industry wanted to get involved but had no idea what was going on. Labour, a major component of the Canadian economy, consulted individually, but there was a real need for a solid advisory board to ensure that industrial benefits came into Canada. The minister refused to accept the concept.

The measure before us goes a small distance toward allowing that advisory boards could be appointed, but we need those guidelines spelled out. We should set up advisory boards to provide meaningful input into government so that the decisions they make are relevant to people who live in Newfoundland, B.C., or Nunatsiaq. These advisory boards are absolutely critical. They would involve local people in decision making and give them a sense of participation in government.

Unfortunately, members of the government have been pushed east of the Red River. If things keep going as they are, we will see them pushed right out the other end. People do not see the reason for the decisions which have been made by the bureaucracy, nor do they find them helpful. I know this is not the intention of hon. members opposite. I have talked to them about these problems. They are aware of them and are sympathetic but somehow there is slippage and when these decisions are made, people do not identify with them. The people do not identify with the goals that are set, nor with the decisions that are made. They really resent the removal of decision making from their communities.

There is still a chance that we can deal with significant amendments and include the question of advisory boards. I think it would serve the government well in terms of its long-term interest. It would certainly be of great benefit to the people in Canada living in small communities which stand to be affected by this legislation.

I would like to say a few words about patronage, too, because it is a very interesting subject. I suppose the intended goal of patronage is to reward people who have served an organization for a long time or who have been influential and helpful and to have a political ally on those boards. Governments often do not have to worry about defection or anything else. One tries somehow to balance the question of qualification and patronage. However, there is a reaction in the community. I point to Spadina as one of the things we all look on as a colossal blunder in terms of patronage. What was the justification for removing the elected representative? I suppose in the final analysis it was a victory for democracy, which I have heard some hon. members suggest.

• (2030)

Mr. Peterson: Order. Relevance.

Mr. Skelly: This is relevant in the sense of patronage on advisory boards. I hate to test the patience of the hon. member opposite, but the question we have to ask is whether, when those advisory boards are struck, they are really doing themselves or anyone else a great favour through the patronage appointment. I refer to the blatant appointment of someone on the basis of his political attachments rather than his qualifications and commitment to good decision making in the community. I urge hon. members opposite to do whatever they can through the normal channels of this government to make sure that what happened in Spadina does not happen to the advisory boards because they would be totally ignored, laughed at and scoffed at by the people in the community as being irrelevant and not representing their interests. There would be further alienation, and that is not healthy for anyone. It would break this country into a group of regional bickering individuals rather than making it a united country. It goes back to advisory boards and the question of input.

Patronage is extremely important. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) has had some experience with patronage in the conducting of the census, and that blew up all over the block.

Mr. Blais: It worked very well.

Mr. Skelly: The minister should check in some of the communities to see how the next census goes, unless he makes some modifications. He will find out how well it went. However, I doubt whether the minister will be here for the next census. At least we can hope.

Mr. Blais: The turnover over there is a lot more rapid than it is over here.

Mr. Skelly: There is not much left west of the Red, and there is not likely to be much left east of it either. Remember Spadina.

We should be looking at specific advisory boards. The legislation should mention advisory boards on the environment. It is vitally important that organizations committed to protecting the environment have a forum in which they can meet regularly with government and with industry and talk about the problems facing it. As time goes by, those advisory boards on the environment would be extremely important and would provide a tremendous service in terms of input on prevention and specific knowledge of the areas involved. Specific knowledge of areas involved is critical. The bureaucrats in Ottawa do a good job. They work hard and are committed, but they do not know what it is like down in the small communities in the mud and the blood. They do not know what it is like trying to get by.

I want to use a small example of how an advisory board or how even decent consultation in the town of Comox would have helped. One day a bureaucrat in Ottawa was drawing a map of the town of Comox to show what the zoning was around the air base in order to protect the airways. That was a very intelligent move. It is too bad it was not done 20 years ago before build-up occurred on the flight paths. The bureaucrat forgot to use a topographical map which showed Comox was on a hill. Consequently, his flight path protection area was about 60 feet below the level of the ground, nobody could obtain building permits and they could not register anything in the land registry office. Had there been consultation or advisory boards, or had some local decision making been requested, that would not have happened. The key to that is a specialized knowledge of local areas, and good, solid consultation is absolutely vital. Eventually the government managed to straighten out the Comox problem before an enormous hardship was caused, but there are several other major problems there because federal government planning is done in Ottawa.

The federal government rides roughshod over local communities. If there was an advisory board and a consultation mechanism in place, that would not happen. There would be good, solid decision making which would affect the lives of people in communities in a positive way instead of an edict coming down the wrong way which is misunderstood or misapplied. Communities see the federal government as an opponent rather than as a facilitator which assists people in making better use of their lives.

An advisory committee on the environment just makes damned good sense, and it is unfortunate it is not provided for in the bill with good guidelines set down. It would protect everyone.

Miss Jewett: But they don't really want it.

Mr. Skelly: I think they do want it. I see them as just being on the wrong track. They have good intentions, but they are on the wrong track which does not lead to the goal. Perhaps I am too naive. There is the odd one over there who is good, I have to admit that, but good for what?

In view of the consultation process with respect to native people, we have seen over the years that an advisory committee is vital. The technique of the government is to divide and conquer. I realize the federal government has been harried. It is not an easy job to balance resources against need.

Mr. Ittinuar: They want to prove they are more powerful than nature. They want to spill oil on us and kill us.

Mr. Skelly: It will be interesting to see what happens when one of those seabed pumping stations under the ice in the Arctic lets go. We are all concerned that that does not happen. We on this side, on that side and everywhere are concerned. It is the route to the goal that is vital. Hon. members opposite have definitely chosen the wrong route. Many of the people of Canada feel that way; witness the present popularity of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

The question of native people is vital and a matter of great concern to me. Many of the people in my riding will be affected by the policies set forth in this bill. If we were to set up an advisory committee of native people, that committee would give us a good, sound basis from which to work with respect to this bill. Such a committee would give us a basis for decisions that would be relevant for their communities and, in the long haul, relevant for all Canadians. But no way; we go back to the old standard game of divide and conquer. As a result, nobody gets anywhere. We do not get together as a group to re-establish a greater sense of community. We are back to the old adversarial system of the government against the people. Frankly, it would be a tragic mistake to continue this. An advisory committee would be a mechanism by which we could move away from it. There is nothing to fear; the input from people and the dialogue which would be established would be extremely positive.

The situation is the same with respect to northern people. In the north there is a very delicate social and economic environment. There is a great fear that we are watching the gold rush all over again. The industry roars into the Arctic and strips it of its resources, but somehow the benefits do not stay with the northern people. An advisory committee on the north is a good idea and would provide enormous benefits.

The last thing is the industrial benefits approach. This matter has worried me a great deal. There were enormous battles in the committee and, to the credit of the government, it moved. It feared desperately that its GATT partners would do it some dirty deed if it attempted to write into the legislation mechanisms to ensure that Canadians share in the benefits and that employment opportunities are launched in Canada. The government did run into difficulty but it did come forward as the bill progressed and made a suggestion, to its credit, with respect to constructing the equivalent of the British offshore supply office. Certainly the resources allocated are limited, but the one thing that is vitally important is an industrial benefits advisory committee. Even if it does not appear in the legislation, such a committee should be struck.

The labour movement must be a part of the decision making. It is a major player in the Canadian economy. The federal government, through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the provincial governments must attempt and struggle to get the regions of this country working toward economic benefit.

The whole process of communication is vitally important. The government and the industry must exchange information. The government must be advised correctly with regard to positive benefits and with regard to the ways the Canadian industry can develop to meet the needs and to ensure that the benefits stay here, not as happened in the case of Britain, Norway and some of the others which started late and with inefficient mechanisms and which provided the benefits to the United States.

● (2040)

In spite of the fact that the amendment is weak, that the bill is very weak in this area, there is still an opportunity for the government to go forward and set up advisory committees. I certainly urge them to do so. It would provide better contact between the people affected by this legislation and the government which is attempting to implement it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 5 (Mr. Lalonde) agreed to.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin) moved:

Motion No. 6

July 10, 1981—That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 5 by adding immediately after line 44 at page 5 the following:

"(8) No land or oil or gas interests relating thereto shall be withdrawn or withheld from negotiation in the settlement of any claim, right, title or interest for any reason other than the creation of a national park in which all natural resource development is prohibited."

Hon. J.-J. Blais (for Mr. Lalonde) moved:

Motion No. 20

July 10, 1981—That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 24 by adding immediately after line 12 at page 15 the following:

"(4) Where the minister is satisfied that a commercial discovery does not extend to any Canada lands subject to a production licence he may, by order subject to Section 56, exclude those Canada lands from the area subject to the production licence."

Mr. Schellenberger: I have difficulty knowing why we would debate the two motions together. I do not see the relevance between the two motions. I will now speak to my motion.

What I am proposing in this amendment to Bill C-48 is to make it clear in the law that frontier lands, Canada lands on which oil and gas discoveries are made, are not exempt from native land claims. Many have said that under certain amendments contained in the bill this is done. Given the non-definition of aboriginal claims, I suggest it is not distinctly clear that Bill C-48 would cover any lands subject to claim by native people, given that certain discoveries are made on those lands. Native people have reason to question the government's good faith with respect to land claims. They question this because of the government's record. The claims in the north have proceeded very slowly. I can look at the Dene land claims and the COPE agreement as an example of this. They have been working on these agreements for a number of years. They are really no further advanced as far as the settlement is concerned.

Then we look at the first modern land claim agreement, the James Bay and Northern Quebec agreement. As was pointed out in the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development this year, which resulted in an inquiry being conducted by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), that agreement has not been adhered to in good faith. According to the law read by several legal people, perhaps it has been adhered to; but as far as an agreement made in good faith is concerned, it has not been. It has affected the health of the native people in the north. Many of the benefits that should have been accrued from moneys that were put aside in that agreement have not come forward.

The natives are justifiably concerned about the future of their aboriginal rights, especially after the constitutional resolution that was proposed. For the first time, aboriginal rights are being defined by the federal government, the provincial government and certain native people who shall be appointed by the federal government. It is understandable that a great deal of concern exists among northern natives about their future, about their unresolved land claims and about the benefits they should receive from the exploration of oil and gas in the north. This is open to question. Bill C-48, if passed, may result in further exploration in those areas.

The aboriginal people of the north are at present gearing up to settle their land claims. At this time, Mr. Speaker, aboriginal title has not been relinquished. The government has, nonetheless, decided to put forward Bill C-48. It is a wide-ranging piece of legislation. Many amendments have already been discussed and some are still in need of discussion. The bill covers virtually every aspect of the oil industry in the north and offshore. In doing so, it will have an enormous impact on the native people of the north.

The other day I was looking at a map of the lands around Great Bear Lake given to Petro-Canada. Those lands are of enormous size. Much of that area is at present open to claim.

Many northern native groups are concerned, justifiably so, that their land claims are in jeopardy owing to Bill C-48. These groups include the Dene, the Inuit, the Council for Yukon Indians and the Métis. They have organized a responsible opposition. Their responsible opposition to the bill was put forward to the standing committee. I was a member of that standing committee. We agreed one day to send members to the northern regions. Most members of this House do not understand the implications of this kind of legislation. The very next day the government rejected travel to the north. Had the members of the committee travelled to the north and allowed themselves even a few days in the north to hear the justifiable reasons for concern from northerners, it would have benefited this House and this country a great deal.

Because the provisions of this bill are to be enacted before the claims in that region are settled, the native people are very concerned that lands subject to claim will be withdrawn from them because of exploration and development. This is a very important concern. That concern has often been brought to me and to other members of this House by way of telegram, by way of hearings before the committee, by telephone and in person. The people in the north seek a voice in developing the lands dealt with in Bill C-48, lands that are under claim by the northern people. They benefit from the resources that exist there. They look forward to this development. They realize that, to a large extent, their economic future depends on the development of the land. They look forward to the jobs that may be created and to the wealth that will adhere to these people, should oil and gas be discovered in that region. There is also concern about what might happen to their cultural well-being if, as a result of this bill, they lose any rights to the land.

I should like to repeat to the House a statement made by a witness who appeared before the standing committee. I am sorry I do not have the exact quote from the committee's proceedings. He said:

● (2050)

To us, an aboriginal rights settlement represents the means by which we intend to regain control over our own destiny while remaining an integral part of Canadian Confederation. This must mean the ability to influence the pace and direction of development in our region so that our institutions and values are not overridden by rapid resource exploitation. It means equally some measure of access to the revenues which will accrue from developments which take place on our lands. It means also the right to determine the kind of developments which take place on our lands and to prevent adverse impacts on the peoples and the environment of the North from oil and gas developments.

I suppose that statement says it all. First, it indicates a concern about the pace of development and how it affects claims. Second, it indicates a desire to participate in some of the wealth, a matter which is not addressed in the bill. No trust funds have been set up to allow native peoples to move forward politically and economically and thus benefit from any oil and gas which may be taken from this region. Surely that should be a concern of government and of members of Parliament. The only basis for development which the north has at the present time is the resources which may be taken from those lands. This was said before the committee by the witness. Third, he indicated that northerners want to determine the pace of development to some extent, which is one of the reasons why members have brought up the need for advisory boards. Because there is a complete lack of assurance in this legislation that these people will have any influence over the resource development of the lands of the north, and because they fear this will not be negotiable once development is begun, native groups are understandably deeply concerned by the implications of Bill C-48.

I recall that the COPE negotiations were going on, oil and gas exploration in the Beaufort Sea was allowed, and immediately these lands were withdrawn from negotiation by government negotiators. Perhaps there was no legitimate claim, but at the same time it was an example of the reason for the great concern about this legislation in the north.

There is also a feeling among native groups that Bill C-48 makes a mockery of so-called aboriginal rights contained in the proposed Charter of Rights. By virtually ignoring aboriginal title, the bill would seem to deny its existence despite the support given it in the charter, even though the definition clause is open to a great deal of question by native peoples.

The conflict is obvious and is clearly a cause for concern. It is because of the concerns of native peoples that I have put forth Motion No. 6. While it is true that nothing in the bill indicates that the drilling of oil or gas wells means that the land is ineligible for claims or settlements, problems may well arise. I have given some reason for that in referring to the COPE agreement and its development. The concern is there. This is why I believe we should put something positive in the bill so that native people need not fear the removal of certain lands due to the striking or finding of oil or natural gas. The activity occurring afterward will necessarily involve interests competing with those of native peoples, so a claim will be much more difficult to settle. Such land might be deemed ineligible for the negotiation process. Harry Daniels of the Native Council of Canada before the committee said:

Once the drill rigs are up and production centres on the drawing boards and approved by government, there will be no turning back. Do you really think that under these circumstances the government would withdraw these lands?

The amendment I propose is a simple one. It reads:

No land or oil or gas interests relating thereto shall be withdrawn or withheld from negotiation in the settlement of any claim, right, title or interest for any reason other than the creation of a national park in which all natural resource development is prohibited.

I believe this type of protection is essential. It means more than any other amendment which has been proposed so far by the government for the protection of native peoples and their claims in the next few years. It is essential to entrench in this bill the right of natives to negotiate in respect of any land to which they believe they have a claim, regardless of its resource potential. This amendment is put forward in good faith, to protect legitimate land claims. Certainly I hope the government will consider that it has some merit and add it to the bill as it now stands.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the motion of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), I think there has been some confusion because the motion appears to be designed to ensure that no land or oil or gas interest relating to that land may be withdrawn or withheld from land claim settlements in northern areas. There has been a misunderstanding because the purpose of clauses Nos. 5(2) and 5(3) is to allow the withdrawal of lands from the Canada Oil and Gas Act. As the hon. member mentioned, these lands would be withdrawn from the purview of the act to establish a national park or in the event of a claim settlement with a native or aboriginal group, for example.

The purpose of the clauses to which the hon. member's motion refers is in no way to allow the government to withdraw lands from negotiations with regard to land settlement with the native community. In fact it is the opposite. For example, if there is such a settlement or the intent to establish a national park, these clauses allow the government to withdraw the land from the purview of the Canada Oil and Gas Act to facilitate precisely the negotiated settlement or the creation of the national park. I think there has been a misunderstanding. This is why the government will oppose this particular motion.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some interest to the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). I want to say on behalf of my party that we will support his motion. I welcome the motion; I think it is a very well-intentioned one. But I might say it is somewhat innocent and a bit vague. I am not trying to be a rigid ideologue, as I was called a few minutes ago, or someone who professes to have all the answers, because we do not have all the answers. The minister said that this bill is not neutral with respect to land claims. That is absolute nonsense. To parade that statement around the country is ridiculous and misleading. The minister should know better.

The motion and the speech of the hon. member touched briefly upon the problem with this bill. How can we have development of the north, go ahead with physical development, and be neutral toward a claim over the physical environment, the pace of development, the social impact, and all these kinds of things? The Conservative party attacked this bill by indicating that it gives the minister too much discretion. If the hon. member looks at it, he will see that the minister's discretion is very rigid. We looked at this as we tried in committee to make the bill more neutral to native claims.

First I should like to indicate why we wanted to make it neutral toward native claims. On this side of the House we are convinced that settling the native land claims is the only way that we can begin to give native people their rightful place in this country so that they may become real partners in this development. They should not be left out of this bill.

● (2100)

You will recall that when I spoke this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned a native person standing at the side of the road and a truck going by. That is the image or the symbol of past development in this country, and I know that the hon. member opposite wants things to be different.

I should like to elaborate on what I mean about the discretion being rigid. There is provision in the bill that the minister can deal with the Crown's share. He can give it to a government organization like Petro-Canada but he cannot give it to a native development corporation, an aboriginal corporation or a local corporation in the north. There is no such provision in the bill.

I have said before that the bill is not neutral and I want to say something more about that. There will be physical development but that is not neutral. As development is speeded up, it will have an effect on the environment and that is not neutral. It changes things; it has an effect. There will be social impact as development advances and that is not neutral; it has an effect. To say that the bill is neutral is just absurd on that physical level. For example, there is no mention in the bill of giving the native people any part of the royalties, nor is there any mention of giving them equity in the development. There is no mention of giving native people or the northern territorial governments any rights of revenue sharing. If the territories are to become provinces and we would like to see that, and if they are going to take their place in Canadian confederation—

Mr. Nielsen: When?

Mr. Waddell: With respect to the Yukon, I would like to see it take place as soon as possible.

If all that is to come about, then there has to be a basis for it, but there is nothing in the bill to give native people a role. There is no provision for them to sit on an authoritative decision-making body—not just a token advisory body but one that would decide what the environmental clean-up would consist of or a body that would decree that there would not be development around a certain town because it was countrary to the needs of the native people. That is real power, but instead the power will all be in Ottawa with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. If the government were really serious, however, that is the kind of power it would give to the native people.

What does the government propose to give to the native people? It proposes short-term employment for about 10 per cent of the population, and when the development is all over, they will again be standing at the side of the road as the trucks go by.

We in this party support the motion, Mr. Speaker. I hope that members of the Conservative party will challenge the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) on third reading and demolish his weak argument that this is a neutral bill with respect to native land claims and native rights. It is not; it is a contradiction of Clause 34 of the Constitution Act and sooner or later—it may take a long time but I hope the day will come—the government will realize that.

Those are some comments from this side of the House regarding Motion No. 6, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us tonight is a very important one. It sets out the regulatory aspects, guidelines or game plan for the oil and gas exploration and development in the north. Certainly what happens in the north will have a significant impact on the future of our country.

I am concerned about the bill in its present form because I really believe it lacks several serious and important elements, one of which is consideration of the impact it will have upon the environment. I spoke on that matter briefly the other night and it has been debated to a certain extent today.

I am also concerned that the bill fails to adequately consider the impact that oil and gas activity will have on people who live on the Canada lands, because it fails to consider the rights of the native peoples who have lived on those lands for generations. As it stands, the bill does not make provision for the aboriginal rights of the native people to dwell on those Canada lands north of the 60th parallel. There is no reference in the bill to claims that might be negotiated after it is enacted, and I think that could be a very dangerous omission. The land claims that exist today are far from being settled; in fact, for some native people the process has just begun. The government did not see fit, however, to include a provision in the bill to protect the claims of the native people. We may wonder why those provisions were not made and we may doubt whether the government has any real concern for the native people who live on the Canada lands.

As the bill reads at present, only claims settled prior to the enactment of this legislation would be protected, but obviously, Mr. Speaker, that is not good enough. We must have some form of written guarantee that lands under development would not be left out of any future negotiations. Although there is nothing in the bill that exempts developing lands from land claim negotiations, it is unlikely that the federal government would be willing to negotiate when the drilling rigs are actually in operation and when matters have proceeded from the drawing board to the oil patch.

The government has not demonstrated, so far, that it is willing to consider negotiations on the land claims. I think that gives us reason to believe that once the activity has begun in the north, it is unlikely that the government would be willing to listen. We can see that it has very little concern for native problems and it will be less likely to listen when activity has come to a head than it is now.

Motion No. 6 which has been placed before us by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) is very specific and important. It begins to deal directly with the problems created by the bill before us. I should like to read the motion into the record again because it is important and deals with the problems that we may face. The relevant part of the motion reads as follows:

No land or oil or gas interests relating thereto shall be withdrawn or withheld from negotiation in the settlement of any claim, right, title or interest for any reason other than the creation of a national park in which all natural resource development is prohibited.

This means that the concerns of the native people will not be pushed aside and forgotten once exploration has begun. Lands that are under development will not be exempt from any negotiations for aboriginal rights.

I firmly believe that this amendment must be included in the bill, Mr. Speaker. The guarantee for the protection of native rights must be provided and there must be a guarantee that the natives will have an opportunity to pursue a fair and just settlement of their aboriginal rights. Without this amendment and the guarantee, I really believe that native claims will be prejudiced. This is particularly important now when we are at such a crucial point in the negotiation of land claims.

● (2110)

Up to date, negotiations with the government have proceeded very slowly; in fact, negotiations are, to a large part, not yet under way. For example, if we look at the Mackenzie Valley, we find that the federal government has not yet even named a negotiator to continue negotiations in that area. It is clear that they would rather see the possibility of further negotiations, just tossed out the window. Last year, the government finally began to look at settlements on part of the land, the lands that we are discussing tonight; but, again, we see a bit of a dirty pool game going on there, because as negotiations were beginning, so were the hearings on the application to build the Norman Wells pipeline. Does that sound like fair play? Does it sound like an earnest attempt to settle outstanding land claims?

It is no wonder that natives fear for their future and for the future of their children, because this bill does not give an indication that the government remembers them or that it considers their rights. It just seems to clearly demonstrate the lack of concern of the government for our native people. That lack of concern of the government is not new. In fact, back in 1969, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said:

I think that all of us feel a sense of guilt, not so much toward the Indian as toward the fact that we have not addressed our minds to this problem.

That was 12 years ago; and in 12 years, the government has not seriously or genuinely addressed these concerns. Is it not now time to address it? If the Prime Minister was really feeling that guilt 12 years ago, then why are we not seeing some action taken now, if not in the past 12 years? I do not think we can afford to ignore these concerns any longer, because native concerns are not like some problems; they will not simply disappear. They will not disappear until native rights on Canada lands have been settled. That problem will not go away. We should not let the government just push them out of the way and push them out of our areas of concern.

Through history, there have really been very few assurances that the government is concerned about these problems. These people have always been pushed around. They have always felt as though their rights have been ignored. Then, suddenly, a little while ago, along came the Constitution and the Charter of Rights including, in particular, the entrenchment of native rights. Suddenly it seemed as though there were some kind of a positive step, because the government was finally willing to notice these concerns and it was finally willing to stop ignoring our natives.

Then along came Bill C-48. All of a sudden we had a mockery of that whole Charter of Rights. We see that the intentions there were, in fact, very hollow. The principles of Bill C-48 run exactly contrary to the principles which were outlined in that charter. In fact, the bill goes even further than that, and contradicts the principles which were laid out in the National Energy Program. The National Energy Program indicated concern with the impact of resource development on native peoples and northern Canadians. I would just like to refer to one particular part of that program. It reads:

There will have to be assurances that the interests of the residents of this region are protected, and that they have the opportunity to play the role they desire in these activities. The native residents of the region seek—legitimately—more say in the decision affecting energy development, and claim—rightfully—that they should enjoy more of the benefits, and fewer of the costs, from northern resource activity.

It sounds good, but there are an awful lot of hollow words and empty promises, because not very long after the introduction of the National Energy Program, along came Bill C-48 which clearly contradicts the generous and positive sounding claims that we saw in the National Energy Program.

So, where are we? What are we to believe? Are we to believe that the government is truly interested in people, such as those we are dealing with here, and their rights, as was apparently demonstrated in the NEP and the Constitution? Or should we, in fact, be paying much more attention to the actions of the government, and a whole lot less attention to its words? I think that Bill C-48 clearly shows us what the government is up to. It clearly shows us that its interest is really in disposing of rights and concerns. It has demonstrated very little interest in aboriginal rights. I doubt whether it has ever had any real interest or whether it will ever have any real interest in the end. A Toronto columnist, Mr. J. B. McGeachy, had this to say about the matter:

> We sing about the north, but we live as far south as possible.

Coming from a part of Canada which is in the north, that is a familiar tune to me, and it is one that I can clearly identify with. This government does sing about the north. It sings about the resource potential, and it sings about development which is possible in these vast lands; but, as this columnist has pointed out, it somehow wants to stay in the southern part of Canada. It only wants to reap the benefits. It does not ever want to set foot on these northern lands.

When we were dealing with this bill in committee, it was proposed that we visit the north; in other words, that we go into this area to discuss with the native and aboriginal people their concerns on their own home base. The government was not interested in that and, as a result, we ended up not going north.

The reversal of that decision really exposes the raw bone of blatant disregard for native concerns that we have seen from this government. It has demonstrated no concern for the people, no concern for their culture, and no concern for the political development of the north. The only interest which seems to be demonstrated is to take as much as possible without giving anything in return. I wonder if it is any wonder that the natives do have a fear for their future. I wonder if it is any wonder that they do mistrust the government, a government which seems to rule from an armchair, thousands of miles away from the problems and from the reality of the situation.

The native people have a real and just cause for fearing exploitation because they have been exploited and they have been given the raw end of the deal. I think that all of us have tasted the bitterness of exploitation. We have all known, to some extent, the feelings arising from rights being taken away when we were too helpless to fight back. These particular people have tasted that bitterness of generations. For generations, they have known the government as an agency which is far away, an agency which knows little about the real problems, and an agency which does not care and which cannot be trusted.

I think that all of us would like to believe that we live in some sort of an enlightened nation, one which operates under democratic principles, where people are equal, and where all people are given the same basic chance. However, when we look at this bill, we find that it is nothing more than an illusion. We really begin to see the true intentions of the government because it continues to exploit these people, it continues to ignore their concerns, and it continues to infringe upon their rights.

People of the north have been subjugated to the status of a colony for a long time. By enacting this particular piece of legislation, we only confirm that status. The irony of that whole process is that we are now hearing lots of talk about bringing home our Constitution from Britain to erase any hint of colonialism from our relationship with the United Kingdom or with Britain. The irony is that while we are erasing the colonialism from the past, we are confirming it in the present and entrenching it in our future.

Mr. Nielsen: Good point.

Mr. Cooper: As this bill stands, unamended, it will only confirm the permanent status of the north as a colony.

Mr. Nielsen: Good point.

Mr. Cooper: It will be an area which will continue to be exploited. We must introduce provisions to allow people to rise eventually above that status of a colony. We must allow them to participate in the development of their lands, and we must allow them to benefit from the natural resources which will be extracted from those lands.

Mr. Nielsen: Right on!

Mr. Cooper: In short, we must allow them to enjoy the freedoms and benefits enjoyed by us; freedoms and benefits taken for granted by Canadians living in the southern parts of our country.

Mr. Nielsen: Even Halifax.

Mr. Cooper: Native people must be given a chance to negotiate with the federal government because these people have never really pushed for their rights on Canada lands. Traditionally, this land has belonged to them and at present it belongs to them. They dwell there, and they have made their homes there for generations upon generations. If the government is truly interested in negotiations, it has to show that interest. It cannot jeopardize in any way this negotiation process. The government must show its interest in coming to some sort of a solution before oil and gas activity begins out there and before it is too late for natives to have any say in the development of those resources.

I believe that if this bill is passed as it stands, those rights will be prejudiced. Effectively, the rights of natives will have been swept under the rug. We will see nothing more than what we saw in committee, which was a power play by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). I believe that it is dangerous to designate lands to oil and gas activity before provisions have been made for further negotiations and before a meaningful solution to this problem is reached, because going ahead like this does not bring native rights any closer to any kind of settlement. This kind of action contradicts the Charter of Rights which the government brings forward so proudly. It makes a mockery of everything that we as Canadians like to believe we stand for. If the bill is passed without the provision, the natives will lose forever their right to regain control over their own destinies. They will lose the chance to gain the revenue from developments that will occur on their own lands. I believe this proposed amendment must be included otherwise our native Canadians will never enjoy the full benefit of Canadian citizenship.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate by commenting on this area of concern. I have read the provision which the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) has carefully put forward. Very clearly, the principle put forward is completely acceptable. It is a questionable practice to allow the exploitation of resources to go ahead before dealing with the fundamental issue of who owns the land. Maybe the problem is with the drafting. As the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) has said, there is a problem in drafting the legislation. But whatever it is, the key point is the principle. That principle was hammered home time and time again in committee. The government felt that it had protected the future or the existing interests as more information became available through detailed study. But clearly, nobody except government members accepted that position. Again, it was a discretionary matter. We were told by government members that a clause was included in the bill to ensure that after exploration, after the production facilities have been put in place and after we see what the social and environmental impacts there are, and perhaps even after the resource has been exploited and exhausted, it will still be possible to come back and make a claim. That is rubbish. I cannot find anyone who would accept that concept other than the government. I think the government is fooling itself, but it is not fooling anyone else.

This is very difficult, and there is definitely a misunderstanding, as the parliamentary secretary suggests. But I think the understanding is on the part of the government. There is a desperate need for some action on this particular land claim provision in the bill. We cannot allow alienation before some firm commitments are made. As my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), has said, this bill is not neutral. It does not adequately protect the interests of the native people of Canada in sharing or participating in the development. The establishment of the land claim is extremely difficult.

We talk about the north. There is a lot of activity in the north now. The northern people are trying to work out claims. They are negotiating positions, and so on. But we must also take into account the west coast where things are very different.

The native people who live on the west coast are at various stages of development. Some very sophisticated bands have worked out land claims. They have attempted to define their interest in the lands on the west coast and have presented it to the government. The process is moving very slowly, whereas the development of oil and gas offshore on the west coast is moving much faster. The technology is in place. Procedures will evolve much more quickly than the native people can deal with it, unless the government specifies in the legislation exactly what it is going to do to protect their interests.

The west coast is unique. The native people who live there have an interest in the land and the sea from which they try to make a living. Most people there are committed to living on government welfare. They do not like it. They have been alienated from their land already. I would have a hard time expressing it better than the previous speaker who suggested that for 200 years we have inflicted a totally colonial regime on the native people, and that this particular bill and its intent confirms it for the present and entrenches it for the future. It could not be said better.

On the other hand, I think the opposition members in this House, together with the native people, particularly those in the north and on the west coast, are determined to break that colonial status. They want to share adequately by defining their interest in that area and by having the government acknowledge it and provide action in good faith. The land is of interest and so are the forest and mining resources. But we must not forget the sea. The native people of western Canada have a long tradition with the sea in the area immediately adjacent to the west coast. Defining that will be a complex problem. The resources in the sea are seriously affected by all this activity. We need a provision in this legislation which stops the alienation process before the land claim is developed.

I would urge members to travel through the native communities located on the west coast. The inhabitants like to talk about the place where they live. They like to talk about themselves and their history. Native people are very close to their parents and their grandparents. Tradition is handed down through generations. For instance, the way the land and the sea is used is locked into an oral history that has been transmitted down through families in great detail and with great consistency. You can travel down a fjord in a boat with the west coast natives of British Columbia, you can pass a point and they will tell you that their ancestors used to live there. They will tell you what they did, but it always relates to the sea. Marine resources are the base of that civilization. The history and mythology of the natives which have been transmitted through the generations really develops a land claim. People, both old and young alike, who live and work out there can tell you all about these people and what they did. History is the base upon which these claims will develop, but it will take a lot of time. There is a great deal of archeological evidence which confirms the oral history, the interest in the land and the marine environment.

Some bands have a very high level of development. They have established land claims and they are working diligently toward defining them. But this is very difficult to do. Some bands do not have even basic means of day-to-day survival. All of their resources are committed to that survival and they are certainly inadequate. They do not have resources to begin to work out a land claim or to begin to negotiate with the government. But two years from now holes will be punched in the sea bed. There is even talk about exploring river beds. Obviously they are hoping to find oil and gas. What the government legislation proposes is to allow that development to proceed quickly. This would have an impact environmentally, socially and economically without giving adequate protection to the native people who need time to define their claims, to develop their resources and so begin to negotiate with the government. That is a big mistake. We have heard from the native people, from opposition members, from church groups. In fact, a whole range of people in the Canadian society have brought the concerns of the native people forward. But the government has said, "Enough, discretion is all right". The government says to us, "Trust us, it is in the mail." But that is simply not good enough. This is a very complex area in respect of which the assurance of the government is needed. We need an assurance that the government will recognize the principle put forward in the previous member's motion. If the government had come forward and opened up in a forthright manner, a lot of the delay this bill has seen could have been avoided. That delay could have been avoided by a statement of principle and a clear expression of the government's intent.

● (2130)

Let me give you an example. We who worked in that media unfortunately had to resort to a filibuster and to delaying tactics. This was extremely hard on everyone, including government members who had to sit there and listen. But our goals were very specific. The investor benefit section was vital. We needed some definition. The government had a program all along. We asked them to hold a closed meeting if they were afraid the information would get out, but to let us know in that way how the government intended to provide protection. We wanted the government to show us some developments or mechanisms such as the British offshore supply office. We wanted the government to put this into the legislation and to do something specific rather than just to ask us to trust it. First, we cannot trust the government, and history would indicate it is often going in another direction.

After weeks of battling, by gosh, the government said, "Okay, you win. We will have an in camera session". It was good. However, the government just would not express the principles to be used or demonstrate the mechanisms so that one could have some confidence that Canadian interest would be protected.

We face the same thing here with this motion. The drafting of the amendment may not be the best. There are certain aspects that I would question, but on the other side of the coin there is the vital principle that the government must do more because this whole question of trust is lost. There is nothing in this on which the native people can hang their hats. We want a definition because too much has been lost in 200 years.

I would guess, casting my mind back a bit in history, that the west coast in British Columbia was run by three Indian chiefs; Tatoosh who lived at Cape Flattery, Wichininesh who lived in the old Nanaimo-Alberni riding at Long Beach, now the federal park, Pacific Rim, and another chief, Maquinug, who lived at Friendly Cove. They ran the west coast of Vancouver Island. The descendants of the Hilson people were here today trying to talk to ministers of the Crown. Reputedly, their ancestors travelled from Hawaii and Polynesia. They lived in a community called Waglisla. The sea is the resource that supported all those people. There is a tremendous history of the native people in western Canada. There is a long relationship with the land and sea, and there is a belief that if we give the native people an opportunity, they can define, substantiate, share and participate, as the rest of us hope to share and participate, in the benefits of those resources.

The colonial system that was imposed on them from the time of Cooke and Alexander Mackenzie and the others who came was very clear. These native people lost their access to the forests to the major forestry companies; MacMillan Bloedel, Dorman, Rayonier and IT & T. All of them now own the forests of British Columbia and the Indian people have been dispossessed. The Indian people used to have a large number of fishing vessels, but Jack Davis and subsequent ministers have taken away those vessels, and now most of them are on the beach. The wealthy white men from other walks of life, the moonlighters and interlopers, have now taken the fishing industry away from them, and the native people are now on the beach. They have lost their resource base; they have lost access to the sea. The Indian people have lost access to the forest. The provincial government has cut them off from their traditional resource base. Their actual reserve lands on which they live have been cut down.

An hon. Member: Jack Austin will get it back for them.

Mr. Skelly: He has still yet to prove himself, and I am hoping that the uranium cartel will not impede his opportunity to contribute to the native people. I say that seriously.

The key in all of this is recognition by the government that the native people have a claim to those resources. The problem is that the exploitation, development, the infrastructure, the commitment of the resource and the exhaustion of the resource, will have taken place before the bands are even able to define their claims. I defy the parliamentary secretary to get up and tell me how, once this is all in place, they are going to participate. He suggests the situation is incredible, but quite honestly these people do not believe the government any longer.

The hour is growing late, but the issue is certainly no less serious. Perhaps the point has been made. Clearly the motion is worth while and worthy of support in view of the fact that there is nothing from the government in this bare bones legislation which provides a guarantee against dry holes, oil spills, with moneys and benefits going elsewhere, with the native people left with open mine pits, clear-cut forests or possibly a destroyed marine environment on which their entire livelihood is based.

In terms of the delays the government has experienced with regard to this bill, it would be interesting to have one government member, perhaps the Parliament Secretary to the Minister of Finance, who I know is vitally concerned about this issue, stand up and acknowledge the principle. Perhaps these amendments are not drafted in the way the government would exactly like them, but certainly the underlying principles are vital. The provisions in the legislation are clearly not adequate. We have the old story that there is too much government regulation, too much centralization and too much discretionary control, and without these provisions the oil companies with the louder voices will eventually shape policy at the expense of other people.

I see that my time has just about expired, Mr. Speaker, but I would certainly invite the parliamentary secretary or anyone else over there who might have some consideration for the native people to make some comment. Thank you.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to support strongly the motion of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), and I hope to prove to hon. members on the government side why they too should support this motion, particularly if they are sincere with regard to that which is already in the bill.

Let me refer to the motion which would add, "nothing in this act abrogates", and that means repeals or cancels, or "derogates", which means detracts or takes away, from any aboriginal title, right or claim that pertained to the aboriginal peoples of Canada prior to the coming into force of this act. When I read the second paragraph I see that it says the governor in council may by order—not in this House but by order—for any purpose or any condition set out in the order, withdraw from the application of this act such Canada lands as are specified in the order. It is all-embracive. The amendment simply states that any claim or interests the aboriginal people have will not be withdrawn; that is, the lands will not be withdrawn. How can the government refuse to support that amendment if it believes in that which already exists in the bill? If Section 2 is to become all-embracive and have power over the other sections because it comes before, then there is a very serious and severe contradiction in the legislation.

• (2140)

That is not the only thing which disturbs me about this bill. I do not really know what the policy of the government is with regard to our aboriginal people. May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that prior to January, 1981, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was asked to include aboriginal rights in the Charter of Rights by a member on this side of the House. The Prime Minister said that he would in no way include aboriginal rights in the charter unless he knew what aboriginal rights meant, unless aboriginal rights were defined. That is the gist of what the Prime Minister said. In January, 1981, a provision on the rights of the aboriginal people was placed in Section 34(1). It reads:

> The aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

I reiterate, "recognized and affirmed". Now I would like to know if the Prime Minister has a definition of aboriginal rights. I think it is important that he have such a definition because when I started looking into government policy I was astounded to find an order in council which set out government policy in regard to aboriginal claims, that is an order in council dated August 8, 1973, which has not yet been either discharged or denounced by the Liberal government. It is still in force. If it is in force, then Subclause (7) of this bill is meaningless. I will read what the order in council says:

> —the government will negotiate claims and settle claims according to the policy in the Annual Report of the Department of Indian Affairs.

It simply says the government will negotiate a settlement with the Indian and Inuit people who have not entered into treaty relationships with the Crown. These settlements will be based upon the loss of their traditional use and occupancy of lands in those parts of Canada where native rights, based on traditional use and occupancy, have not been extinguished by treaty or superseded by law.

In other words, the government has set out three caveats in that order in council, which is still on the books, with respect to the claims of Indian and Inuit people. The first one is that the government will only negotiate and settle claims based on land and occupancy of land. In other words, the whole culture of the Indian and Inuit people will be ignored unless they live on the land, unless they have already placed a claim on that particular land and occupy it. There is no consideration for negotiation whatsoever. That is set out in law. Consequently, the amendment to this bill will mean nothing. The government will simply point to the order in council of August 8, 1973, which still stands.

What do we mean by aboriginal rights? Aboriginal rights go beyond land occupied. Most Inuit and Indian people, or at least many of them, make their living by hunting and fishing. They do not live on those lands, they hunt and fish on them. They do not occupy them by building a house on them, in that sense of occupation. The rights they had when the white man first came to this land, such as their language, their dances and their political social and economic cultures, all of these are part and parcel of aboriginal rights. They are being ignored in this section. It deals only with land, and even then there is a caveat placed on the land—that they must occupy it. They must have already had a claim to it. I think the Inuit and Indian people should take careful note and find out about this policy mentioned in the charter of rights and find out if it has not already been lost before the charter of rights is passed.

The next caveat set out in the order in council says that the government will only negotiate and settle claims which have not been extinguished by treaty. When the government, for example, negotiates with the Inuit or Indian people for a number of years, it insists that the Indian and Inuit people give up all rights; those held in the past, those they have currently, those they might have in the future, all rights not specifically extinguished by agreement. Well, that is going too far. I suggest that is a caveat the Indian and Inuit people would want discarded before the section in the charter means very much.

There is a third caveat: the government will only negotiate and settle claims which have not been superseded by law. If any government, provincial or federal, since the beginning of this country, has passed any act or bill or order in council taking away a right from the Inuit or Indian people, then the government will not negotiate. They will not even talk about it. Again, I suggest to our Indian and Inuit Canadians that they take a very careful look at all the enactments since the beginning of confederation to find out whether they will have any right to make a claim or even if they can negotiate. What does that piece in the charter say? It says:

The aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

What does the order in council say? It says that the government will not negotiate unless the Indian and Inuit people make a claim and occupy the land. They will not negotiate unless the traditional use and occupancy have not been extinguished by treaty. They will not negotiate if any part of that has been superseded by any law or enactment or order in council.

Where does that leave our Indian and Inuit Canadians? Does this section in our Charter of Rights pull the wool over the eyes of our Indian and Inuit people, in the hope of pushing it through before they find out all these things? I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if this government is sincere in giving aboriginal rights to our Indian and Inuit people, our native peoples, they would define aboriginal rights and denounce and discharge the order in council which was passed on August 8, 1973. If their policy means anything, let the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) or the Prime Minister, or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) stand up and say that the order in council has been annulled and discharged. They should stand up and say that they will annul and discharge that order in council and they should even pass another order in council that it is no longer the policy of the government. Then the Indian and Inuit people might have some hope of getting a fair and equal settlement. Ever since white men came to this country, the Indian and Inuit people have been exploited. We have not given them an opportunity to develop their skills. Even now our education system does not go far enough. The withdrawal of Outreach funds by the government will have a detrimental effect on the Outreach programs on at least one reserve of which I know in my constituency and I do not know on how many others across the country. The Outreach program of the University of Calgary on the Stoney reserve has done a tremendous job, with the result that young people there have been able to get the necessary basic training to go to university. Some have graduated with degrees and today are playing their part in developing this country. However, cutting back funds will affect that Outreach program. We have exploited them; let us not continue to try to pull the wool over their eyes.

● (2150)

I ask this government to denounce this order in council program it has been following and to be above board. Let us put the record straight, let us say we will leave all that in the past and we will now define aboriginal rights with the help of the Indian and Inuit people, in a way which is fair to everyone.

That is all our Indian and Inuit people are asking for. If the government will not do that, I for one will be very apprehensive about anything it says about aboriginal rights.

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I too should like to address myself to the rights of the native peoples of Canada. Only a little while ago the constitutional resolution proclaimed the aboriginal rights of the native peoples of this country which the present Bill C-48 denies. I therefore support not only the amendment before us but, indeed, other amendments my party has brought forward.

I am delighted to see the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Joyal), now a minister of state, here in the House tonight because it was he, as co-chairman of the joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on the constitutional resolution—

Mr. Skelly: Who was the other co-chairman?

Miss Jewett: I have forgotten.

Mr. Skelly: How soon we forget.

Miss Jewett: It was he, as I understand it—I may be misled—who gave encouragement to the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) and other members of this party to press for the introduction into the constitutional resolution of Section 34(1), already referred to this evening, in which the aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

When the government acceded to the amendment this party proposed, one part of which included the strengthening of the aboriginal and treaty rights of the native peoples of Canada, it was my understanding that at least this co-chairman, and perhaps both co-chairmen, of the constitutional committee were enthusiastic and anxious to see this clause entrenched. That is not to say that the clause is perfect, but most of us thought then, and still think, that the courts are likely to give this clause paramountcy; that the fears of many of the native peoples of Canada that their rights will still be denied them are, we hope, not genuine fears; that they are not real; that they need not fear; and that we feel that the clause will be respected and given paramountcy by the courts.

But what happens to an hon. member when he joins the cabinet? I congratulate the minister on his appointment, but what happens? Either he has not studied the bill before us and the amendments before us or, if he has studied them, he has not realized that the bill itself absolutely denies the very aboriginal rights that he and all of us, at least in this party, spent so much time affirming. It seems to me that this is giving with one hand only to take away with the other. The very same thing could have happened, and the minister responsible for the status of women today assured us it would not happen, as far as native women are concerned. If I heard correctly today in the House, she said we would not wait for the three-year moratorium period, assuming the constitutional resolution is passed, before we ensure that the inequities now in Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act are removed. Yet at the very moment one minister of the Crown is saying we will not continue with these inequities, the government, in a related field, namely, all matters relating to land claims, fishing and hunting rights and so forth, is saying we will perpetuate injustice, unfairness and inequities.

I urge the Minister of State, the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, before it is too late to bring his voice to bear in cabinet and elsewhere to ensure that the amendments which have been proposed and are still to be proposed will in fact be looked at much more seriously by the government. It will be too late, as far as the native people of Canada are concerned, when exploration and development has surged into the area of the Canada lands with no serious regard for the needs of the native peoples of this country or for their wishes or their genuine concerns, which we all say we share. If the government does not act now, it will be much too late, so I urge the minister, just as his colleague today said she would urge the government, to take steps immediately to rectify the inequities caused by Section 12(1)(b). I urge him to take the same steps with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and, indeed, with the whole government.

Similarly, I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), who was here a moment ago, will also involve himself in this question of native rights. Hon. members might think this is not a matter which would ordinarily concern the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I agree that he has a great many other concerns, but I know that the last thing he would want or, indeed, any of us want, would be another reference to the United Nations Human Rights Commission comparable to the Sandra Lovelace case. This case, however, concerns deprivation of the rights of the native peoples of Canada and particularly the right to have land claims and other claims negotiated. I cannot say for sure that could come before the United Nations commission, but it might come before it.

Mr. Evans: Speak to the motion.

Miss Jewett: I am speaking passionately to the motion. I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be concerned, just as I hope the Minister of State, who was a co-chairman of the constitutional committee, would be concerned because he too spent a good deal of time on the constitutional resolution, and I am sure he too was grateful that Section 34 was introduced, strengthened beyond its original form. He too, therefore, must want to see the amendments we are proposing and the amendment I am at present addressing accepted by the government in order to ensure that injustice and inequities as far as the northern peoples of Canada are concerned will not prevail.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I should like to remind members there has been difficulty recently with regard to the amount of time members speak. Seven minutes is allotted for the question and three minutes is allotted for the reply. The Chair is obliged to keep to the time limit.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RECONSIDER DECISION ON FUTURE OF PASSENGER SERVICES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): On October 14 I posed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), arising out of his announced statement of July 27 cutting back VIA Rail services by 19 per cent, and affecting some 1.2 million passengers and, particularly, some 1,600 railway workers, plus countless other jobs which will be indirectly affected as a result of the cutbacks.

I asked the minister to reconsider seriously this illogical and shortsighted arbitrary decision, given the fact that we are in serious difficulty with the economy. Unemployment is running at a high rate. The cutbacks will affect the areas of Canada that experience the highest level of unemployment.

The reply the minister gave confirms to my colleagues and myself that little thought had gone into the social and economic impact of such a decision on the workers and their families, particularly in the eastern and western regions of Canada. They will feel a tremendous impact from the cutback of the transportation services which are needed and used.

The minister said he would be prepared to come before the committee to explain his decision; but he did not say he would be prepared to defer the decision. That is simply not good enough, Mr. Speaker.

He also suggested we could have dealt with this matter under our broad terms of reference that was issued by the House with regard to the study of transportation matters in Quebec and Ontario, which the Standing Committee on Transportation undertook this summer. The minister knows very well the mandate was limited. It dealt only with transportation matters in the province of Quebec and Ontario. The cutbacks we are dealing with affect all of Canada, not only the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. We had limited time. This being a national issue, it requires a lot more study and a lot more time than the minister is prepared to give it.

In the response of the minister we are simply being given a whitewash. He will come before the committee, wax eloquent and try to explain his position, without hearing the other side of the story. This is simply not good enough. Lay-off notices, Mr. Speaker, have already been issued. CN in Montreal announced for the first of September that some 560 positions will be affected by the cutbacks of VIA Rail; two fifths of the positions in Montreal, two fifths in Winnipeg, and the balance in Moncton. VIA Rail has issued lay-off notices; 133 in Quebec and Atlantic Canada, 166 in western Canada, some in Ontario and a few others in administrative and accounting positions. This works out to 313 people.

The cutbacks, Mr. Speaker, occur in areas of high unemployment; mainly the province of Quebec, the Atlantic region and in western Canada, particularly in the city of Winnipeg where the bulk of the lay-offs will take place. There are other matters, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the minister, his officials and his cabinet colleagues did not consider the tremendous impact this will have on the future economic development opportunities both in the west and in the maritimes with regard to tourism.

• (2205)

Japanese tourists rely very heavily upon the use of rail service. They are big spenders. They are major contributors to Canada's balance of payments, particularly with the large amount of money they spend. The Canadian government tourist office suggests that the Japanese spend an average of $2,000 per capita when they come to visit the country. This is in addition to the payment for their travel and their hotels. Altogether, some 25,000 Japanese visitors travel through western Canada by train. We are looking at a potential loss of some $50 million if those opportunities are gone.

The minister also suggested that he will save some $100 million. We challenge that figure just as we challenge the statement that he could revitalize rail passenger services by abandonment. In short, he will not achieve that saving. The $30 million will be paid out immediately for adjustments, relocations and training programs for the people who will be laid off.

The actions of the minister constitute a very dangerous precedent. If he is absolutely sure his decision is correct, I challenge him to take his decision to the public and let the court of the Canadian public judge it. If he did, he may be apprised of the tremendous hardships and sufferings his decision will inflict upon hundreds of thousands of Canadians across the country.

The minister's act constitutes a very dangerous precedent, in my view. I hate to say this, but by virtue of the fact that the minister refuses to go through the normal and traditional process of public hearings, either through the Canadian Transport Commission or through a parliamentary committee, what he is doing constitutes a cowardly act. I hope he will reconsider the action he has taken and will allow the committee to study this matter. In order for it to be studied properly and fully, he must defer the decision. I plead and urge the minister to do so.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and the cabinet made a decision to implement a reduction of rail passenger services in Canada which would create operating economies in order that these savings might be used for the purpose of acquiring new passenger trains and equipment for both the Atlantic and the western provinces. By reducing the operating deficits of VIA, the capital budget would correspondingly experience an increase.

I have with me notes for an address by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) to the Canadian Transportation Research Forum on June 11, 1980, in which he said:

> On the passenger side of rail transportation, the ever-increasing debt incurred by the federal government in subsidies is a major problem which will have to be dealt with. This fiscal year alone, $424 million will go toward subsidizing rail passenger service. This is especially urgent when considering the impact on rail's competition, the bus mode.

The hon. member for Vegreville understated the problem because in 1980, seven million VIA Rail passenger tickets were sold and the subsidies amounted to $490 million.

We have in Canada two transcontinental services. The intention is to reduce them to one line to avoid a duplication of services. The transcontinental services account for more than half the operating deficit. The second transcontinental service will be replaced by daytime intercity services. Alternatives are therefore being put forward by the government. The cabinet has considered this matter three or four times. It was a difficult decision to reach, and the cabinet has no intention of reversing it.

VIA RAIL—CANCELLATION OF PASSENGER SERVICES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, the president of the Toronto-Havelock Line Passenger Association said in his organization's submission to the Progressive Conservative task force on VIA Rail and the all-party committee on transport:

> It is absurd to believe that VIA Rail will actually revitalize Canada's rail-passenger service by discontinuing service, especially the most promising one. By careful study, subsidies to the retained routes are found to be as much as 13 times greater than the stated subsidy to the Toronto-Peterborough-Havelock service.
> It can be proved beyond a reasonable doubt that VIA Rail's revenues have been understated. It is further suspected that deficits have been purposely inflated by a disproportionate allocation of costs to passenger trains—costs that should rightly be charged to freight operations.

With that in mind—and I would add, incidentally, that the association's opinion has been endorsed by an actuary who reviewed the route's fiscal situation—it was particularly distressing to me last Thursday, October 15, when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) refused my request in the House that the figures he uses to justify the termination of VIA Rail service—19 per cent of the service in Canada—be audited.

As he had tentatively agreed, at least, to appear in person before the Standing Committee on Transport to justify cutting Canada's rail-passenger network by 19 per cent, I was hopeful that he would, in addition, agree to allowing the costing procedures he used to justify the Toronto-Havelock route to be audited. Very serious questions have been raised with regard to these figures and out of a total yearly sum of approximately $350,000 which is involved on that line, some $100,000 or thereabouts is in question.

On Thursday, the minister sidestepped the specific question with regard to the cost justification on the Toronto-Havelock route by claiming that he viewed the route, and others in Ontario, as essentially of a "commuter" nature. This is despite a clear understanding which the minister shared with Mr. Snow, the minister of transportation and communications for Ontario. Mr. Snow was good enough to forward to me a letter of his where he said that the Minister of Transport "—concurred that the Toronto-Havelock service is intercity in nature and is being dropped because of the losses it is incurring".

Now we have two elements in the dispute over this particular route. First, is it essentially a commuter-route or an intercity service? Second, are the losses which the route is allegedly incurring enough to shut it down? The minister has since said that this route is "—dominated by commuter traffic and cannot be justified as intercity service if the commuter element is removed". That is to say, the route as it stands now is an inter-city type service because quite clearly the "commuter-element" can hardly be practically removed and constitutes merely a semantic sleight-of-hand which the minister's officials are so obviously reduced to. How on earth can the "commuter-element" possibly be removed? This is quite absurd. There is obviously a "commuter-element" on virtually every passenger train in the country.

The minister also refers in his letter to the published CTC decision contained in Order R-32317, where it found that the Rail Transport Committee "—intends to review this case with the purpose of deciding whether or not the Toronto-Havelock Service should continue to be designated as a passenger-train service".

I do not see why this justifies the minister's precipitous action. It is the function and purpose of the CTC Rail Transport Committee and not that of Transport Canada or the minister's office to decide whether or not it is indeed a passenger-train service. If the minister wants to discuss the CTC order, let him discuss the order's final recommendation which reads as follows:

● (2215)

Accordingly, it is the decision of the committee that . . . the Toronto-Havelock service shall not be discontinued.

They reached this decision despite having weighed the same evidence as has the minister, presumably.

However, the minister finally admits in his letter to me that:

It is the type of traffic rather than the losses they are incurring which led the government to terminate (the line).

In that case, I suppose we need not squabble about that odd $100,000 which the minister so airily dismisses, and concentrate on the route's "traffic". The minister's definition here deserves close scrutiny, preferably by the rail transport committee of the CTC, or at least by Parliament's Standing Committee on Transport, for as the rail passenger association's brief describes:

1) Less than 50 per cent of passengers and less than 20 per cent of revenues can be attributed to commuters travelling within the Metropolitan Toronto region.

2) The average number of passengers carried per train on this particular service equals or exceeds the average number per train on the Quebec City-Windsor corridor services.

This House needs a full explanation from the Minister of Transport as to why he refuses to have his figures audited or questioned by the CTC, and why he has resorted to an order in council to terminate 19 per cent of our passenger rail service in Canada without a public hearing and against the wishes of the CTC and an all-party standing committee on transportation.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in its decision of May 29, 1981, the CTC had strong reason to believe that the Toronto-Havelock service might be essentially commuter in nature and therefore not entitled to subsidies because the Railway Act does not provide for the subsidization of commuter services.

Havelock is 101 miles from Toronto. Havelock service is, however, commuter traffic dominated. VIA Rail conducted a survey of the Toronto-Havelock service earlier this year. On a typical work day, ten people boarded the train in Havelock and 239 disembarked at the Union Station in Toronto from the westbound train; the reverse was true on the eastbound train. VIA found that 55 per cent of the passengers board at the last two stops closest to Toronto; namely, Agincourt and Leaside. Only 25 per cent of the passengers using this train service go beyond Burketon, which is 47 miles from Toronto.

It is the type of traffic which led the government to its decision to terminate subsidy payments on the line in question. It was recognized that these trains perform an important function for commuters. The date of termination was set one year in advance to give the government of Ontario ample notice that it might integrate these services into its own commuter network.

FISHERIES—STATE OF INDUSTRY IN SOUTHERN NOVA SCOTIA

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question was asked on June 2, 1981, of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc). I do not want to repeat the question, but it related to the state of the industry in the southern end of Nova Scotia. I am sure that many people consider this to be one of the best fishing areas in eastern Canada.

The history, goes back prior to my question. It was on April 6, 1981, that I first asked the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans if he would set up an independent study group of fishermen and processors, big and small, as well as one economist, to study the distressing situation in the process of one month that was developing. Of course, no study was done, and I think what happened in June and July was a result of that.

The fishermen did come and meet with the Fisheries Prices Support Board, and I must say that we were well received; so well received that one has to look at what we got out of it. We got a $14 million fisheries prices stabilization program for haddock, announced on July 24, 1981, approximately four months from the time I first spoke in the House concerning the crisis. This price support was on future inventory, not on past inventory. Therefore, the cost to the processors of storing the inventory under this program was of no consequence at all because it was kept back so that prices would increase in the marketplace.

• (2220)

This was not well received by either the fishermen or the industry. Nor has it been acted upon. In addition, 1981 was a very poor year. It all started back between January and May, 1981, with the haddock catches. At that time of the year only the offshore fleets on the east coast are fishing and many plants are in operation. I am sure the hon. parliamentary secretary knows of plants operating last year during a period when they normally do not operate.

In the maritimes from January to May, 1980, the catch increased from 14,000 pounds to upwards of 19,500 pounds. In Newfoundland, the catch increased from 1,500 pounds to 5,200 pounds. No wonder the plants were working when they normally would not have been, no wonder there was no fish on the east coast later in the year, and no wonder that in southern Nova Scotia, even if there was fish, there was no market for it because there was a glut in haddock. Prices to fishermen went down at that time from 25 cents, which was the lowest last year, to 17 cents in May and June of this year. Prices have not gone up that much even though no haddock was being caught in that area except for the months of August and September.

We can blame marketing conditions on the province, on industry and on the federal government. I would say that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans should be hitting very hard on the marketing end at the federal level. But then he turned to quality. I have something to say about that. It is not, in my view, a global statement as indicated in his press release from Marystown, which reads that all fish should be bled and gutted and that the minister wished that the five provincial ministers of fishery would implement this regulation.

At the beginning of September the federal government funded a $14 million stabilization program, virtually saying that the offshore fleet does not have any fish to supply to the plants. "Therefore," they said, "We will let them open up early and we will give them additional quotas because the scientists have found that this year there are more fish for the big offshore fleet to catch." If they have so much additional pollock or cod quotas they will also have a by-catch of haddock of 10 per cent. But when will that take place? It will take place in September and October, which is the last period of the year when our fishermen have the best of the season to fish. But prices are depressed, both the price of haddock to the fishermen and prices to the small processors. Because the catches are not high, the plant workers will have insufficient unemployment insurance stamps as a result of this terrible glut which started at the beginning of the year and ended with the department bringing in a $14 million stabilization program. Then another branch of the department, under the fisheries management plan, amended the plan halfway through the year allowing the offshore fleets to return to the inshore waters to capture additional quotas which they felt was their due and just reward. They could not wait until October 15. They had to go then.

This is a prime example of government departments not finding out what one is doing on the one hand and what the other is doing on the other hand.

• (2225)

I would like to state now that quality will not enhance marketing conditions as far as fishermen in the southern end of the province are concerned unless the department, instead of just issuing quality improvement directives, indicates what we need and what will bring the prices up. You cannot go to a group of fishermen who are icing and whose fish has commanded the best of price right across the land and say they have to do something different when they are out for two days at the most with good icing facilities on their boats and when the local plants are receiving the highest prices, and when the only reason quality is perhaps not so good is that the big multinationals do not have the same quality standards as some of the smaller businesses.

The fact that I have to stand here tonight compounds the fact that the issue has been before this House since last April. I feel very strongly that the department should have a handle on this issue. It does not have a handle on the situation over the entire season. We are now coming up to the time of new quotas with a new season starting in January with depressed markets, and the department has done nothing, in my view, to cure the situation by its policies over the summer, particularly those of price stabilization from the Fisheries Prices Support Board. This could have been good except that the inventory being bought was future inventory and there was not that much to buy at the time. The department then allowed the offshore fleet to come in in September, depressing prices that should have been going up at that time. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, first I want to tell the member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) that I appreciate her concern and very earnest representation on behalf of her constituents. Indeed, it has been a difficult year everywhere in fisheries in eastern Canada, and I know that in Newfoundland in many cases the bottom fell out of the cod market.

The hon. member mentioned quality several times during her comments. I became aware of an interesting fact some time ago which I think illustrates the need for quality in the fisheries in Atlantic Canada and, indeed, on the west coast of Canada as well. The total world production of fish and seafood is 74 million tonnes. Canada produces just one million tonnes. We are not in a position to assume we have some kind of monopoly in respect of fish and seafood. Indeed, we do have to prepare a quality product if we want to get to world markets.

The state of the fishing industry in southern Nova Scotia has been characterized by a glut of haddock products on the U.S. market which is causing low prices to both Canadian and U.S. fishermen. Canadian haddock landings have risen from 19,000 tonnes in 1976 to 51,000 tonnes in 1980, with landed value ranging from $8 million to $25 million during the same period. U.S. landings have increased almost four times from 1976 to 1980. During the January-July period, 1981, Canadian haddock landings were 30 per cent higher than in the similar period of last year. Prices for haddock to the southwest Nova Scotia fishermen were as high as 35 cents per pound, round, earlier this year, but have dropped to approximately 17 cents in May and June and increased to 19 cents per pound last September.

An additional factor in the oversupplied U.S. market is increased haddock block shipments from Norway and Iceland, haddock that is marketed in competition with our products. Here is where quality once again comes into question. Southern Nova Scotia fishermen as well are affected by the recent decline of cod prices received. The U.S. cod market has been dull in recent months and has affected all of eastern Canada.

I should like to say in closing that, at the request of the industry, the Fisheries Prices Support Board reviewed the situation in June and was authorized, effective July 25, 1981, to implement a price stabilization program for haddock. The board continues to monitor the situation with respect to haddock and, I assure you, with respect to other species as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.28 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF POLISH REFUGEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I trust that those on the other side of the House will give consideration once more to this motion and concern themselves with the dire and immediate necessity for relief in the Austrian refugee camps. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That the government take immediate action to implement a program that will assist a larger number of Polish immigrants in coming to Canada in order to relieve the overcrowding in Austrian camps and, in addition, to provide adequate food, clothing and medical supplies for those remaining in the refugee camps.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF RUSSIAN INVASION OF HUNGARY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, this coming Friday marks the 25th anniversary of the invasion of Hungary by the U.S.S.R., a date that should be important to all those who cherish freedom. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour):

That this House condemn the U.S.S.R. for the events which began on October 23, 1956, and express its deep and abiding commitment to the return of a free democracy in Hungary and in all other nations similarly suppressed, and urge that the House leaders consider interrupting our proceedings on Friday, October 23, at noon so that we may observe one minute of silence in memory of those thousands who gave their lives in the fight for freedom and against totalitarianism.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

RAILWAYS

INCREASED BENEFITS SOUGHT FOR COMPANY PENSIONERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. On behalf of the thousands of railway pensioners in Canada who have seen their pension income decimated by inflation, and who must have improved pensions if they are to have the quality of retirement which they deserve, and on behalf of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who, I am sure, would be moving such a motion were he able to be with us this afternoon, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House convey to the Canadian National Railways and to the Canadian Pacific Railway its wish that these two railway companies abandon their callous indifference about the well-being of former employees, immediately provide a significant cost of living increase to Canada's railway pensioners, and be willing to consider structured and regular protection of such pensioners as a way of avoiding for good the injustice which railway pensioners now suffer.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

REMISSION ORDER AFFECTING NORTHERN BENEFITS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I wish to introduce the following motion. Whereas officials in the Department of Finance are recommending that the remission order on the taxation of northern benefits be discontinued, and whereas the ensuing unfairness and strife would likely result in large-scale strikes involving at least 10,000 Steelworkers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That this House calls upon the Minister of National Revenue to keep his word to the electors of Labrador in his own constituency, as well as to other northern Canadians, and calls upon the Minister of Finance not to remove the remission order, thereby unfairly penalizing northern taxpayers.

TRANSPORT

CALL FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, in view of the overwhelming public support for the retention of the Atlantic Limited, the crucial service that it provides to Atlantic Canada, the fact that the minister's own officials have stated that it can be retained and improved without adverse financial results, and in view of the minister's madness to continue with his berserk obsession of destroying the rail passenger transportation system in Atlantic Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass):

That the House demand his resignation and recommend his committal to an institution other than this one, which will do him some good.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

BANKRUPTCIES

NEED FOR MORE OFFICERS AND RECEIVERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I wish to move a motion under the provisions of S.O. 43. The government's high interest rate policy has resulted in a new boom industry in Canada. Indeed, it seems Canada is short of competent people acting as bankruptcy officers and receivers as scores of businesses of every nature, farms, and individuals, go broke. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration immediately set up a crash training program to train more bankruptcy officers and receivers to satisfy the burgeoning demand for such people caused by the government's economic policy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

LOCATION OF VOLKSWAGEN PLANT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Merci beaucoup, madame l'Orateur. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

That this House deplores the pressure that the federal cabinet used, including financial offers, to entice Volkswagen Canada Limited to change the proposed location of its new plant from Barrie to Montreal. The Government of Canada should be using its influence to get industry into Canada, not favouring one province over another.

PROPOSED STOL PASSENGER SERVICE BETWEEN TORONTO AND MONTREAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the recent decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to permit the operation of the STOL passenger service between Toronto and Montreal, and the financing and feasibility of such a service continue to be seriously questioned, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller):

That this House refers to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications the recent decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to grant a licence to City Service Airways to operate a STOL passenger service between Toronto and Montreal, and that the committee be authorized to investigate all facets of this proposed venture, particularly the financial implications for Canadian taxpayers.

HOUSING

CALL FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In question period yesterday, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) revealed his incompetence and inattention to duty by failing to be aware of a Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation document predicting that 100,000 families will lose their homes by 1983 due to the government's policy of high interest rates. He also suggested that mortgages were readily available at 19.75 per cent. However, on checking with Ottawa area banks this morning I found the average mortgage rate to be, in fact, 21 per cent. Therefore the report predicated on a 21 per cent figure is completely valid and, in fact, these 100,000 Canadians may lose their homes. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That due to the inaction and incompetence shown by the minister irresponsible for housing, he resign his position, effective immediately.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

DISCLOSURE OF MEDICAL INFORMATION BY DOCTORS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the majority decision today by the Supreme Court of Canada, allowing members of the RCMP to refuse to disclose to the Krever Royal Commission of Ontario the names of those doctors who violated their oaths and broke the law, in releasing confidential medical information regarding their patients; and in view of the grave ramifications of this decision, a sweeping extension of police powers in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House call upon the Solicitor General to waive immediately the new privilege in the 368 cases of illegal disclosure of patient information by doctors, and disclose the names of those doctors, and call upon the government to forthwith amend the Canada Evidence Act to end this threatening extension of privilege in Canada.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the forced march to metric is on again in the retail food stores of Canada. No one wants it; no one can afford it; and no one can understand it. It will cost Canadians over $1 billion in extra food bills in 1982. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

S.O. 43

That this Parliament condemns the government for forcing metric on the citizens of Canada against the will of the grocers, the consumers, the producers, and just about everyone except the foreign scale manufacturers of Japan and the United States, who love it.

That the government urge the Secretary General of the UN to redouble his efforts to have the Government of Iran desist in its attacks on the Baha'i community and grant them religious freedom.

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF BEER PRICE INCREASES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, in British Columbia we see evidence of growing concentration in the brewing industry. This past summer the three major brewing companies announced simultaneous price increases. Now Labatt's are planning to close their Victoria breweries, throwing 80 more people out of work. Therefore I move, seconded by the honourable and teetotalling member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett):

That this House urge the government of British Columbia to impose a 90-day moratorium on the closure of the Labatt's brewery in Victoria; further, that we direct the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission to launch an immediate investigation into the Canadian brewing industry, and that the government establish a fair prices commission to roll back this unjustified price increase so that B.C. people can once again enjoy their beer at a reasonable price.

HOUSING

MINISTER'S POSITION ON RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING RENT CONTROLS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is to the minister responsible for housing who, I trust, has had an opportunity to read the CMHC report that was referred to yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition and by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. On page 4 the report reads in part:

> It is important that provincial rent control bodies allow landlords to pass on the cost increases associated with mortgage renewals. The rent adjustments required to service the mortgage after renewal at current rent will exceed the maximum rent increases allowed under control regulations in certain provinces.

The recommendation is that landlords pass on these increases to tenants, which will result in extreme difficulty for a great many people. Has the minister accepted this recommendation put forward by CMHC? What plans does the minister have to provide some relief to what will be hard hit tenants?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, I have not accepted the report. Indeed, the report has not been accepted by officials of Canada Mortgage and Housing. It was a document prepared by a person employed in the information section of the corporation.

In so far as the rental aspects are concerned, which the hon. member addresses, it was because of our concern for that market that this government reintroduced the capital cost allowance provisions discontinued by the government of which the hon. member was a part. We have reintroduced this in order to assist the supply side of the rental market so that people with low and moderate incomes can have alternate accommodation.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, the minister has yet to tell us whether he has bothered to take the time to read the report which shows the housing industry in this country is in such a devastating crisis. I hope he will be able to assure us tomorrow that he has done so.

RESIDENTIAL CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, leaving the report aside, I want to come to another aspect of the housing industry. Even at the current level of housing starts, a level that would have been considered disastrous a couple of years ago, the residential housing industry is collapsing. The minister could have read that in the paper this morning. Supply companies, for example lumber companies, are also experiencing difficulty, which in turn is causing a tremendous loss of jobs, often in communities where a lumber mill may be the major source of employment. There is a major spin-off effect when residential construction is in a slump. What does the minister plan to do?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: What is your question?

Miss MacDonald: I will be glad to put the question if the howling mob on the Liberal side of the House will just allow me some time to do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: What is the minister going to do to prevent even further job losses in this very important sector of the economy?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the report to which the hon. member has referred was an interpretation of background information that I had requested from Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation earlier this summer. It was an interpretation of documentation that I have already seen. Therefore, in reading the report I was looking at another person's interpretation of the facts which, by and large, I think the member has indicated are generally known to the industry, to the public, and certainly to people in the House who interest themselves in the subject.

Mr. Clark: Do you?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, I have looked at the report. In that sense it does not offer anything startlingly new except for misinterpretations.

• (1420)

As regards the strength of the industry itself, I would draw members' attention to a report in The Globe and Mail this morning which quotes one of the experts that is generally accepted as leading in so far as its reputation is concerned on analysis of the industry, Clayton Research. The figures of that company on starts are not as pessimistic as the figures the member would give us. For example, the article points out that in September starts were in the range of 190,000. It is the projection over the next 24 months with the assumption that interest rates will remain where they are that does pose problems. I would repeat that our concern for the industry and housing supply was the reason why this government supported the industry with the reintroduction of the capital cost allowance which was terminated by the previous government of which the hon. lady was a member.

RENTAL ACCOMMODATION SITUATION IN TORONTO

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the minister now says he has had a chance to read the CMHC report and that there is nothing new in it. I presume therefore that he verifies the figures contained in that report—100,000 families going to lose their homes. The minister may not have the honesty to admit it, but the fact is that right now there are many people in this country who cannot afford a home, or who have lost their homes and cannot find any place to rent because of the tight rental market.

My question concerns the situation in large metropolitan areas where the vacancy for rental apartments is nil, approaching zero. Hostels, which provide temporary relief, are overflowing. Mr. Minister, 22 people were reported sleeping in Toronto's city hall garage in this morning's paper, and these people cannot wait for a budget before trying to find better accommodation.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's questions are really extremely lengthy. The hon. member knows that questions should be brief.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, my question is: what is the minister going to do about this pathetic situation in his own city, because in a country like this a situation of that nature is a disgrace?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I believe I should take the opportunity, in answering the hon. member's question and in addressing her introduction, to say that I indicated I have read the report and I disagree with the report and the analysis that says that those people who pay over 30 per cent of their income toward shelter costs will lose their homes. I disagree with that, and I would like to take the opportunity of saying that to the hon. lady, lest she misinterpret me or not understand what I am saying to her.

With regard to people in the lower income levels and their need for shelter, I indicated to the leader of the NDP earlier this week that the federal government is not alone in its responsibility for serving people in their housing needs. The provinces, for example, administer the Emergency Housing Shelter Program, for example in metropolitan Toronto, and they, as well as municipalities, must assume some responsibility. I am happy to say that on Saturday of this weekend I attended a sod-turning ceremony, the start of construction of co-op housing in metropolitan Toronto under the auspices of the Metropolitan Toronto Labour Council which, by the way, says it appreciates Section 56(1) and is happy that the federal government is approaching and assisting people with moderate and low incomes.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO HELP FARM INDUSTRY

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The minister is aware, as we all are, that high interest rates have brought about a slowdown in the construction industry and have indeed been detrimental to this industry. Recently the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has also expressed its concern regarding high interest rates, and that is why, with the support of the Minister of Agriculture, it has submitted a brief to the Canadian government asking that new funds be injected into the Farm Credit Corporation, at the same rate of 14 per cent. Can the minister provide some reassurance for farmers who are just as concerned as home owners and tenants?

● (1425)

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, a few days ago the new rate for Farm Credit Corporation loans was established in accordance with a formula which has been in existence. Even though these rates have been increased, they are substantially lower than rates which might be available to home owners and other persons seeking funds in the market. In those circumstances it seemed to me in the interest of equity it would be necessary to maintain some balance among the rates available to hard-pressed citizens. I did say also, however, that the Minister of Agriculture and I are considering what further steps can be taken in order to assist the farmers of our country.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: The minister has given us some bad news; that is, the Minister of Agriculture who had made a commitment to safeguard the 14 per cent rate has failed to get a satisfactory reply from the Minister of Finance, since the rate has increased by nearly 3 per cent. Can the Minister of Finance—

An hon. Member: Two and three quarters.

Mr. La Salle: —two and three quarters. As I was saying, nearly 3 per cent. Can the Minister of Finance tell the House whether he is willing to increase funds set aside for the Farm Credit Corporation in view of the increase in interest rates, and would he urge farmers to borrow more, and in this connection I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he is aware of the fact that in the province of Quebec alone the number of farm bankruptcies has already doubled since January 1.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I am not so sure that a general infusion of funds into the Farm Credit Corporation is the answer to the special difficulties of certain groups of farmers in the country. Certainly in various parts of Ontario—and now the hon. member adds parts of Quebec—there are special problems. It is to these special problems that I am addressing my attention as I prepare for the budget.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette has the floor for a brief supplementary question.

Mr. La Salle: A very brief question, Madam Speaker. The minister is not sure whether such action would help farmers, but the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, backed by farm organizations in Quebec, firmly endorses this report, which recommends an injection of capital into the Farm Credit Corporation Fund, and their representatives know, Madam Speaker, and I am saying this to the minister, that such money is needed. However, the fact remains that excessively high interest rates caused the problem in the first place. Can the minister assure the House that he will introduce measures in his budget or tomorrow morning, aimed at helping the agricultural industry, in order to avoid the same situation now prevailing in the construction industry?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I do not know how long the question would be if the hon. member had said it was to be a long one. He assured me his question would be very brief.

I want to assure the hon. member that all the concerns he has raised in his several questions are under consideration at the present time. It is my determination, as I prepare for the budget, to take into account the special problems that are being presented by members of the House of Commons so they can be dealt with in an appropriate way.

THE BUDGET

ASSISTANCE SOUGHT FOR HOME OWNERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It is also related to housing. It is reported today that the federal housing minister, the Minister of Public Works, has made a firm promise that there will be assistance in the federal budget for home owners who are threatened by mortgage renewals. I would ask the Minister of Finance, first, if it is true that there will in fact be assistance provided in the budget for home owners? Second, will that assistance take into account the very high interest rates that a large number of Canadian families have been forced to assume over the course of the last four or five months, and therefore be retroactive in order to assist them in their plight as they try to hold on to their homes?

● (1430)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, all those points will be kept in mind. It was stated in the Speech from the Throne which opened this Parliament and this session that the Government of Canada took a special responsibility and interest in the home owners of this country, and it certainly will be my intention to attempt, in every way available to me in the present circumstances, to discharge the commitment which was made in the Speech from the Throne to home owners of this country. How I do it and with what measures, if any, is a matter the hon. member knows I cannot reveal before the budget. It is easy enough to ask whether "A" will be in the budget and whether "B" will be in the budget and, by a process of daily questioning, presumably, the budget would be produced by instalments, and then hon. members would be saying, "Well, why have you broken budget secrecy?"

REQUEST THAT ASSISTANCE BE MADE RETROACTIVE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I want to set the minister's mind at ease. If he would like to tell us what is in the budget, we would not accuse him of breaking the secrecy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: The problem is that there are large numbers of people in Canada—and the minister well knows it—who have been promised time and again by the minister responsible for housing that there would be assistance forthcoming, and during the course of the last two or three months and, in fact, in the next week or two many of those people have been and will be required to sign mortgages, probably and almost definitely at levels in excess of what they can reasonably afford. The minister responsible for housing has once again made a commitment that there will be assistance, and I am asking simply, whatever form the assistance takes, whether that assistance will be retroactive in order to ease the burden on people who have already been caught by the financial squeeze brought on by this minister, the Minister of Finance, and the Bank of Canada.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I assure the hon. member that I will give consideration to his representations as to what ought to be in the budget.

HOUSING

POSITION ADOPTED BY MINISTER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, if I may, I will put one final supplementary question to the minister responsible for housing. The minister is reported to have indicated that one flaw in the report we have been talking about for the last couple of days is that it concludes that anyone spending more than a set amount, 30 per cent of his income on shelter, is in danger of losing his home. The minister is quoted as having said:

> I've been spending more than 30 per cent of my income on shelter for five years—

Frankly, I doubt that, but does the minister think that 30 per cent of his income is in any way comparable to 30 per cent of the incomes of Canadians earning $22,000 and $23,000 a year who cannot possibly meet the 19 per cent and 20 per cent interest rates that are being charged? Is he making his representations based on his own personal circumstance, or is he making representations to the Minister of Finance based on the circumstances of Canadians who are of average means?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would like to assure the hon. member that I was making my observations based on all of the representations I have received since the middle of August and since interest rates approached and exceeded 20 per cent. In other words, I made that analysis based on studies, individual interviews and reports prepared for me. About 40 people made representations to me on September 15. People made representations to me yesterday morning. As I look at the figures and try to understand them, it is my conclusion that the figure of 30 per cent the hon. member has used does not relate to what he has described as a person of average means or average difficulty faced with that situation.

INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON PRODUCTIVITY AND INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, from whom a strange silence has emanated only in the last few weeks. Upon taking office the minister indicated certain thrusts with which he hoped to redirect the Canadian economy. In recent times we have found that he has been besieged by a certain senator. Then only this month the Minister of Supply and Services has set out his own industrial policy which he says should include the supplying of "incentive to further investment in Canada from outside". He also said, "We must find ways to attract multinational dollars" to Canada.

Did the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce commission, as a new service to be supplied by the Department of Supply and Services, the making of this speech on his behalf? Second, is this in fact government policy concerning the important subject of productivity and industrial strategy in this country?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I have not had the pleasure of reading my colleague's speech, but since my hon. friend is so impressed with it I will obtain a copy as soon as possible.

I would like to thank the hon. member for confirming that an industrial strategy is a very important priority of this government, and I hope he will be very pleased with the decisions we will be announcing before too long.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, the speech was given only last October 5, so we can see that it is more than the mails which are slow on the government side.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

QUERY RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, as the minister appears to be virtually becalmed in a sea of indecision over there, I will take him back to a statement he made in this House on July 14, 1980. It was not last July but a year ago last July when the minister stated, and I quote:

> It is my intention to introduce to Parliament on behalf of the government, after Parliament resumes in the fall, a package of measures designed to strengthen Canadian participation in the economy and improve the performance of the foreign controlled firms in that economy. These measures are—

The first measure was to deal with FIRA. Then the minister spelled out three particular things he wanted to change with respect to FIRA.

Will the minister at least try to introduce such a measure this fall, or will he once again postpone it still further? In short, what has gone wrong? Can the minister not make up his mind on anything or, if he can, can he not in truth sell to his colleagues?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I was simply referring to what was in the Speech from the Throne. I am glad to note my hon. friend's conversion to the cause of having Canadians play a greater role in the Canadian economy.

STATEMENT MADE BY UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR TO CANADA

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the same minister, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Last year the minister said that he was going to propose new powers to provide performance reviews of how foreign-owned companies operate in Canada for the benefit of Canadians. He said he was going to amend the act so that public notice of foreign takeovers would have to be given in advance, and he would give assistance to Canadian companies wishing to submit competitive bids.

The United States ambassador to Canada, Mr. Robinson, has said he has it from the highest authorities "that FIRA will be in my terms 'contained'," and "that FIRA is going to be reined in". The minister is reported as denying that.

Is the minister proceeding with these three specific proposals in the form of legislation to this House, or has the minister been reined in or rained upon by his cabinet colleagues, or contained, or rained out, and is he not going forward? Is the United States ambassador properly informed, or is the minister going ahead?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend was referring to what was in the Speech from the Throne. I repeat what I said when asked about the comments of the distinguished ambassador, that we had made no decisions along the lines the ambassador has allegedly suggested in the press report.

Speaking of reined in, there is no comparing anything on this side of the House with what the hon. member's leader did to him in shuffling him into another position.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: You were shuffled right out.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, about the worst advice I could give the minister is to be himself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The minister has been shuffled away from FIRA; we can see that.

STATEMENT MADE BY CANADIAN AMBASSADOR TO UNITED STATES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, the Canadian ambassador to the United States, in a speech down in the United States on October 13, said this to the American Gas Association:

> Canada's National Energy Program ... will not be followed by similar initiatives in other economic sectors.

He said:

> Energy is a special case ... there is no other shoe to be dropped.

● (1440)

The minister might be dropped, but there is no other shoe to be dropped. Will the minister advise whether the Canadian Ambassador to the United States has properly informed Americans of government policy, and is there in fact a new industrial strategy similar to the new energy strategy, with the same kind of biased discrimination against foreign investors? Has that been dropped? Is the Canadian ambassador correct or not? If he is correct, is the minister going to resign, as he promised to do if his interest rate policy was not successful?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend must have been busy studying his file of bad jokes. He did not notice that in the National Energy Program document the government stated exactly what the Canadian ambassador to the United States stated some months later, that the NEP approach with regard to Canadian ownership was not intended to be extended to other sectors. The Minister of Finance said the very same thing several months ago in August. I can only suggest to my hon. friend that he himself seek an invitation to speak to that American Gas Association. He is most fitting for that kind of forum.

EXTERNAL AID

OFFER OF FISHING BOATS TO NICARAGUA

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Many British Columbians right at this very moment are donating fishing gear and are totally prepared to assist in the transfer of the 26 fishing boats, bought back by the federal government, to the Nicaraguan Fisheries Institute. In view of the great interest of the Nicaraguan government in being able to have these fishing boats and their great need for them, can the minister tell the House how soon this much hoped for transfer will be effected?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am not in a position to give the House that information today.

PARLIAMENTARY SUBCOMMITTEE REPORT

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the minister if his answer means that policies in relation to the transfer of the fishing boats and, indeed, broader policies in relation to Central America in general, particularly the latter, are awaiting the report of the subcommittee of the House of Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on the subject of Canada's relationship with the Caribbean and Latin America. In other words, is he looking forward anxiously to this report before making the kind of decisions I have asked him about today?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we are indeed looking forward with anticipation to the report of that subcommittee, but that is not connected with the question the hon. member asks today. Indeed, the evolution of a general policy for Central America is not, in the first instance, dependent upon the report of that subcommittee, although of course it will subsequently be influenced in its development by that subcommittee's report.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT—ACQUISITION BY AUSTRALIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. The minister is no doubt aware of a rumour that an important decision was taken by the Australian government with regard to the type of defence aircraft they will use in their country. Can the minister give any truth to this rumour? Also, does he have any details of the agreement and/or decision, and can he present us with details of the impact it will have on the Canadian fighter aircraft program?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased that the hon. member has asked me that question. I congratulate him on his continued interest in defence matters. I am pleased to advise the House that the Australian government has selected the F-18 as its defence aircraft. As I understand it, they will be purchasing 75 of these aircraft. Undoubtedly their decision was influenced both by the quality of the aircraft and, of course, the wisdom of the Canadian government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF POLISH REFUGEES

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As he knows, some 30,000 Polish refugees face a bleak winter in the camps in Austria. Last week the minister announced that he would not increase the quota of refugees from eastern Europe. Then, under some pressure over the last few days, he announced he would have meetings this past weekend with the Polish Congress and others interested in the refugee situation. Will the minister now share with the House and interested Canadians the results of those meetings?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would like to provide one small correction to the hon. member. I did not say we would not increase the level of Polish refugees. I said that we had already substantially increased the level of refugees coming from eastern Europe. In fact we have doubled the number this year over last year. We sent a special team to eastern Europe, to Vienna, to interview applicants under a special consignment, and we have now accepted close to 1,500 additional places for refugees from eastern Europe coming to Canada under the special designated class. That is not a levelling of the quota; that is a substantial increase.

I also said we would want to look into the issue of Polish visitors who are in Canada and who are making application for landed status. I had meetings on Saturday and Monday with a wide variety of members of the Polish community. I will continue those meetings and discussions with my colleague from External Affairs. When we are ready to make an announcement, we will make it to members of this House and the hon. member will be one of the first to know.

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN QUOTA

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, will the minister give serious consideration to increasing the quota from the refugee camps in Austria immediately, and announce it this week?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would point out to the hon. member, because I know he will have an ongoing interest in immigration, that it is the practice and requirement about this time each year to table an immigration levels document in Parliament. It is my intention to table that document in the first week of November. Within that document we will be outlining and indicating the new levels of refugee acceptance for the following year. At that time the hon. member will see what our commitment and direction are for the following year, in relation to the problem, not only of Polish refugees but refugees whom we take from around the world, because we have a world-wide immigration policy, not a policy for just one area.

EMPLOYMENT

LIST OF JOBS REQUIRING SPECIALIZED SKILLS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, many men and women across Canada are discovering that their job skills are becoming obsolete as the job market becomes more sophisticated. At the same time there are thousands of new jobs requiring more specialized skills becoming available. Can the Minister of Employment and Immigration tell me if he and his department have an accurate list of those jobs and when that will be made available to us?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member likely knows, in the last three or four months we have had a major report by a parliamentary committee, outlining the areas where the shortages exist. We also had a very major research document which was prepared by my department, outlining where action could be taken. We have now conducted very extensive consultation with the unions, private business, and the provincial governments. We have held meetings with the provincial governments to arrive at some new directions in those areas. I would say to the hon. member that we recognize that issue very much. We consider it to be one of the most significant priorities of this government in responding to the economic prospects of the future. We will be developing a number of new policies and agreements over the forthcoming weeks and months.

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I understand that to mean there is no list. The minister's response brings me to another question. Thousands of men and women would be happy to fill these new jobs. The problem is that, on the meagre allowance the government offers, they do not have the opportunity to enter retraining programs and at the same time look after their families. Will the minister consider the report that came from this task force to which he referred, the employment opportunities for the eighties, and in particular the recommendation to increase immediately the allowance for retraining opportunities so that people will not have to make the choice between looking after their families and retraining or upgrading their skills?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is our intention to consider all the recommendations of that committee. We treat them all with a great deal of seriousness. We are examining the entire range of proposals that we received from the parliamentary group. The hon. member talked about the need to provide further incentives. The program we introduced last year to provide particular incentives to women in non-traditional work has been a substantial success. This year, compared to the same time last year, an additional 2,000 women are now training in non-traditional work. This shows the government is taking significant action to meet that problem.

WILDLIFE

EXPORT OF FALCONS TO MIDDLE EAST

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My question is for the Prime Minister. Almost a year ago the Prime Minister gave a gyrfalcon to King Khalid of Saudi Arabia. Since that time, and for the first time ever, 50 harvest and export permits were issued for gyrfalcons in the Arctic. Has the Prime Minister at any time asked his staff to arrange for the export of either peregrines or gyrfalcons to the Middle East?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker. I am unaware of such a large number of export permits having been issued. I do know of the case I was involved in; but I know of no others. I will inquire.

ACQUISITION OF EXPORT PERMITS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): The Prime Minister is perhaps aware that Jim MacDonald, recently of his personal staff, has been arranging a major gyrfalcon export for some months. In fact Mr. MacDonald has ended up possessing all 50 permits which were originally given to the Inuit in the Arctic. In light of the Prime Minister's comments, will he investigate the involvement of his office in this wildlife scandal, and also the presence of Kuwaiti nationals in the hunt?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It seems to me the hon. member is making at least two mistakes. First, Jim MacDonald is not in my office. Second, as far as it being a major scandal in the wildlife area is concerned, I do not know that. I am not sure the hon. member does.

It is certain there are falcons which are bred in captivity. We have plans to ensure that the species does not disappear. There are some that are surplus to our needs.

If the hon. member is talking about wild birds, I realize it is another problem. The hon. member is not unaware that there is a certain amount of poaching of wild birds, since there is a great premium for them. I will inquire whether the alleged action the hon. member talks about is meant to control that poaching in some way.

THE CONSTITUTION

POSSIBLE POSTPONEMENT OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): My question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It is about the news received this morning that for the seventh time now, the provinces want to postpone the federal-provincial meeting on the Constitution. I wonder whether the Canadian people are supposed to take this series of postponements seriously, and whether the Prime Minister could tell us what his position is on this important meeting of provincial first ministers with the federal government.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has asked me whether this request for further postponement is to be taken seriously. I must say that I am not privy to the intentions of the provincial first ministers. Obviously, much of their strategy during the past year has been to play for time, for instance, when they launched appeals before the supreme courts of three provinces at intervals of several weeks. I am certainly very surprised that they have been unable to find the time to arrange a meeting with us on any of the six days I have suggested since the Supreme Court handed down its decision.

The hon. member has asked me how I intend to reply. I have not yet dictated my answer, Madam Speaker, but I hope to do so before the end of the day and to send it by telegram to Premier Bennett, who is the spokesman for the provinces, and I may send a copy to the hon. member to support him in his desire to settle this matter once and for all.

THE MINISTRY

EMPLOYMENT OF EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT TO MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): My question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Many Canadians are concerned about the recent news report that the minister's executive assistant received part of his salary and interest-free mortgages for his personal home from Petro-Canada. Would the minister please confirm this report and place all the relevant information concerning Mr. Phelps' employment before the House?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Phelps is an employee of Petro-Canada. His salary is paid by Petro-Canada. He is entitled to the same benefits in his level of employment as are other employees. Mr. Phelps is on loan to me as my executive assistant. Upon termination of his employment with me, he will return to Petro-Canada.

REMUNERATION OF EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Does the minister believe this practice is morally right? If the executive assistant is employed by the minister, why could his remuneration package not be made above board, instead of sneaking behind a Crown corporation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The remuneration received by Mr. Phelps has never been made a secret. As a matter of fact, members of the industry and members of the press were aware for many months of the remuneration he is receiving. The practice that has been followed is identical to the practice followed under the Public Service Exchange Program, as with the private sector. We follow the exact same rules. However, Mr. Phelps does not come under the Public Service Exchange Program because he is not a public servant as such. The rules followed are exactly the same as those followed under that program.

METRIC CONVERSION

EMPLOYMENT OF TELEVISION PERSONALITIES BY METRIC COMMISSION

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, today I received a plain brown envelope which contained a notice from the Chairman of the Metric Commission of an announcement to be made next Wednesday, October 28, saying:

> Two well-known TV personalities, Bruno Gerussi and Madam Benoit, have been employed by the Metric Commission to appear on coast to coast television to promote the metric conversion of the food stores in Canada.

My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Mr. Gerussi and Madam Benoit will be given $110,000 for a six-week contract. Does the Minister for Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is responsible for the Metric Commission, think the Canadian people want to turn on their television sets and see Bruno Gerussi and Madam Benoit cook up metric souffles at a cost of $110,000?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I believe the answer is yes.

ROLE OF MINISTER RESPONSIBLE FOR SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Since the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism answered my question, I will direct my supplementary question to him. Do all small businesses in Canada, which are trying to recover from the massive losses they incurred during the summer mail strike, know it is their minister, the minister responsible for small businesses, who is responsible for this atrocious spending of public money?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I fail to see what is so terrible about setting up information programs to help Canadians use the metric system in the kitchen.

AGRICULTURE

CREDIT DIFFICULTIES EXPERIENCED BY FARMERS

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Would he agree with the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture when he said that "farmers are suffering in their credit needs because of the necessity of making loans through the traditional banking institutions that are in a roll-over position and of a short-term nature"?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): I agree with the Minister of Agriculture when he said that certain groups of farmers are having difficulties, as are other citizens of the country who have to go to the market and borrow funds at high interest rates.

FUNDING FOR FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): If the minister agrees with that, because of the need to go to other banking institutions rather than going to the Farm Credit Corporation, and the reason they have not gone to the Farm Credit Corporation is the lack of funds given to that corporation by the government, will the minister fund the Farm Credit Corporation so that it will be able to meet the needs of the farmers who wish to use it as a lending institution?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I already answered a question along the same lines in greater detail earlier in the question period.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORT OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Monday, October 19, 1981, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FULTON—ALLEGED OBLIGATION OF MINISTER TO TABLE LEGAL OPINION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege arises from the speech given in the House yesterday by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) and also concerns the meeting of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works on June 1. At that committee meeting, while native people were present, I asked that a legal opinion be tabled regarding the implications of Bill C-48 in relation to the title of native people, particularly those north of 60, and as it relates to the whole of Canada lands as defined in the bill. At that time the minister said, and I quote, "Yes, I can give a legal opinion".

On August 31 the minister provided me with a letter in which he said this:

> Further to my commitment to endeavour to obtain a legal opinion for the committee concerning the impact of Bill C-48 on land claims and aboriginal rights, I regret that I will be unable to meet your request—

Yesterday, following a speech given by the minister, with the unanimous agreement of the House I put a question to him asking for his views on the tabling of the legal opinion. It is crucial that every member of the House be aware of this opinion in order that we may vote in full knowledge of its implications for Bill C-48. At that time the minister had the following to say, and this is the fact upon which I base my prima facie case. I quote now from yesterday's Hansard at page 11922:

> I meant that I would obtain a view in writing . . . The views I expressed then with respect to this . . . are quite clearly founded on legal views I have obtained.

Madam Speaker, at the June meeting when native people were present, the minister promised to provide members of the committee with that legal opinion. In a letter to me he said that he was unable to provide it. Yesterday in this House during debate on Bill C-48, he said that he had received that legal opinion in writing, had looked at it but would not provide it to members of the House who have a crucial vote ahead of them.

I believe that a prima facie case of breach of privilege has been established. I agree with the ruling in Beauchesne that it is a question partly of law and partly of fact. Contempt of Parliament is a matter for this House to determine. This is the most serious contempt of this House that is possible. It strikes at the very root of the British common law, and the right of the aboriginal people to title to land.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Of course the hon. member knows that ministers are not obligated to table legal opinions. They might seek them, and if I understand the argument, the minister said that what he was saying in the House flowed from the legal opinion that he had obtained. It is not a rule of the House that ministers are obligated to table legal opinions; it is a guideline which the government has set for itself. Any documents of this nature which eventually are tabled are always tabled because the government has decided that it feels that the particular document may be tabled, but the minister is not obligated to table the document.

The question raised by the hon. member does not constitute the basis for a question of privilege. If the hon. member wants to take some action in order to force the minister to table the document, he may move a motion for the tabling of documents. That is the way in which he can proceed to get satisfaction.

An hon. Member: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: No, I have just ruled on this question so there can be no further comment upon it.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE OF MR. BROADBENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I was going to ask your indulgence to comment on a question of privilege raised yesterday by the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), but because of an exchange which took place today between the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), I would request leave to defer that argument and ask that you defer your ruling until tomorrow. In making this decision, may I refer the Chair to page 11904 of Hansard for yesterday where the minister clearly said, "I have not read such a report."

At page 11906 of the same issue of Hansard, in the right hand column, in response to a question put by the hon. member for Oshawa, the minister again said, "I have not read this report". I thought I heard him say today that he had indeed read the report. I also thought I heard him say today that he had quoted a statistic from the report.

That would change the whole nature of the submission which I had intended to make to you today, Madam Speaker. On that basis I would suggest that your ruling be deferred and that I make my submissions tomorrow, to prevent a separate submission having to be made based on only today's proceedings.

If the Chair is in agreement with that, I have a question for the government House leader on House business.

Madam Speaker: There is certainly no urgency for me to rule on this particular point of order. At the request of the hon. member I will delay my ruling until tomorrow and hear his submission.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, further to the submission made by the opposition House leader, I should like to put his mind at rest and yours as well. It was last evening, after I made those statements, that I read the report. I would say further that there is nothing in the report that was not in the newspapers yesterday.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have been sitting on the edge of my chair day by day since last Thursday, waiting to hear from the government House leader. Indeed, I was rather hoping that we might have some House leaders' meetings so that we could have some idea of in what order the government intends to put the business of the House. As it is, after the expiration of today's business we are pretty well in the dark as to what will happen for the rest of the week.

We all have caucus tomorrow. It would be a relief, and perhaps even a resurrection of some faith in the ability of the government to manage, if the government House leader could inform us what is going to happen on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday and as far into next week as he can take us. I understand that this is a common practice, at least in Westminster. In that way we could have some time to plan ahead and inject some order into the business of the House, thereby assisting the government to achieve a level of efficiency which, I am sure, they would be glad to achieve with our assistance.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, actually, I could refer my hon. colleague to the reply I gave last Thursday, but out of politeness I shall repeat what I told him last week, which is public knowledge. We are considering Bill C-48, and until we have some indication as to when debate at the report and third reading stages of this very important bill, which contains a number of amendments as my hon. colleague is aware, will be completed it is useless for me to speculate on what the business of the House will be during the next few days. However, if the member for Yukon should tell me that we are about to dispose of Bill C-48, I shall immediately call a meeting and examine the Order Paper with him in order to determine what measures can be considered within the very short term. The answer I gave last Thursday, which I have just repeated at this point, is that with the exception of today, which is an opposition day, Bill C-48 is on the agenda and we shall be dealing with this bill tomorrow and Thursday. However, as I told the hon. member last week, we shall probably be holding a meeting of the House leaders on Thursday, when we usually meet to plan the business for the following week. I suggest that the hon. member follow established practice and wait until Thursday when we can discuss the business of the following week. In addition—I am sorry I did not hear what the former Solicitor General for nine months was saying.

• (1510)

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: Nobody pays any attention to convention.

Mr. Pinard: The hon. member says that no one pays any attention to convention. That is right. When I read the opposition motion today, it stated:

—notwithstanding any Standing Order, practice or precedent, the House does not regard the passage of this motion as a vote of non-confidence in the government.

[Translation]

To answer the question put by my colleague for Yukon, first of all I wish to thank him for his offer of co-operation, and I can assure him that I will take his offer very seriously. I was planning to hold a meeting Thursday, but if he should tell me that we will dispose of Bill C-48 tomorrow, I am quite willing to hold this meeting before Thursday. However, if he cannot give me that assurance, I see no urgent reason for having a meeting before Thursday. Right after Question Period on Thursday afternoon, I shall be happy to answer the usual question on House business or to rise on a point of order to provide further information on House business for the following week.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I thank the government House leader for that confirmation as to the business for the remainder of this week. I might say, in response to his reply to the intervention by my friend, the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland, that that last paragraph was placed in the motion precisely to assist the hon. member for Gloucester and the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi, and other hon. members who might like to vote for the very reasonable opposition motion which has been put today, the subject matter for debate today.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I would like to reassure the House leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and tell him that my colleagues on this side of the House understand the rules quite well, and that despite the indications of the opposition party, they are bound by our Standing Orders; and while some of them might favour more railway lines in Canada, they do not necessarily also favour elections at this time.

Those of my colleagues to whom the hon. member has just referred are quite aware that we are dealing with a harmless parliamentary tactical plan, but I believe that these are important matters which would have required a more serious approach. I remember that last June or July, when my hon. friend was not House leader for his party, the Progressive Conservative Party tried to make a mockery of the debate on capital punishment by binding the opinions of the hon. members to a non-confidence vote. The same little parliamentary tactical plan is now being used, and in my opinion, it is unfortunate to try to degrade a serious debate by forcing the hon. members to support a motion and take a stand on whether or not they want elections to be held at this time.

All this is therefore very clear. Government members are not fooled by such tactics. We understand the parliamentary procedure for the business of supply, and Standing Order 58(9), which deals very clearly with the motion of the Progressive Conservative Party, states that this rule applies and that this is therefore a non-confidence vote. The members on this side have therefore no choice, and whatever our opinions are about the substance of the motion, they can definitely not support the motion according to our procedure. Moreover, Madam Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to page XXXI of today's Order Paper, where it is very clearly indicated in the title of the motion moved by the Progressive Conservative Party:

First non-confidence motion for the supply period ending December 10, 1981.

It could not be any clearer. If this motion is put to a vote this evening and if the majority of members support it, Standing Order 58(9) states very clearly that such a motion is a non-confidence motion in the government, whatever the wishes are of the Progressive Conservative Party to go against conventions and precedents.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I do not want to interfere with this little family quarrel, but I listened with interest to the government House leader's reply to the House leader for the official opposition, and as I recall he indicated that if the House leader for the official opposition desired, he would be prepared to meet with him. Far be it for me to interfere with this relationship that they have going, but if they decide to meet, I would like to be there.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we have always had a dean in our meetings, and I surely would not miss the opportunity to have my colleague attend this meeting.

PETITIONS

MR. CLARK—EFFECTS OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, as I have done each day this session, I would like to beg leave of the House of Commons to lay upon the Table petitions from Canadians and communities, large and small, across the nation which are seeking relief from the deliberately high interest rate policy of the Government of Canada which is forcing these Canadians out of their homes. Today I wish to lay upon the Table a petition signed by some 65 residents of the communities of Westhill, Ajax, and other communities in Ontario; a petition signed by 116 residents of the city of St. Catharines in the province of Ontario; and a petition signed by some 467 residents of the city of Picton in the province of Ontario.

MR. STEWART—VIA RAIL—CUTBACKS IN PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, I would like to lay upon the Table a petition from the constituents of Simcoe South comprising some 51 signatures and another 1,500 in the hands of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and his office. It states that we require the retention and improvement of the VIA Rail service from Barrie to Toronto, that the existence of such a commuter rail service is an essential aspect in the economic wellbeing of the city of Barrie and—

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not allowed to read the petition. He may just say a few words about where the petition comes from and how many people have signed it, but that is all.

MR. WENMAN—REQUEST FOR CHANGE OF PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE REGARDING PETITIONS

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), who would like to voice his concern over the present parliamentary procedure regarding petitions. Therefore, on his behalf, I submit this petition requesting certain changes to said procedure.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,643, 2,678, 2,689, 2,785 and 2,792.

[Text]

DIPLOMATIC IMMUNITY

Question No. 2,643—Mr. Beatty:

1. Was diplomatic immunity invoked by countries to avoid prosecution for alleged violations of Canadian law in 1980 and, if so, on how many occasions for each country?

2. What was the nature of each offence and in which municipality did the alleged infraction occur?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes. Immunity of jurisdiction was invoked on ten occasions during 1980 by ten different diplomatic missions in respect to ten alleged violations of Canadian law. Diplomatic missions invoking immunity of jurisdiction in relation to alleged violations are not identified as naming them could reasonably be expected to injure Canada's relations with the countries concerned. The above figures do not take into account instances where immunity of jurisdiction was invoked in relation to alleged traffic violations as there is no systematic reporting of such incidents to the Department of External Affairs.

2. The nature of the ten alleged offences and the municipalities where they are reported to have occured are as follows:

Alleged Offence	Municipality Where Offence is Alleged to have occured
1. Shoplifting	Ottawa
2. Theft	Ottawa
3. Rental dispute	Ottawa
4. Impaired driving	Ottawa
5. Debt claim	Ottawa
6. Assault	Ottawa
7. Rental damages claim	Ottawa
8. Harassment	Toronto
9. Impaired driving	Ottawa
10. Shoplifting	Nepean

COST OF BRIEFCASES FOR GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,678—Mr. Beatty:

Since March, 1980, what amount was spent by the government to supply briefcases to employees?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The information on these items is available on a trimestrial basis only. For the period of April 1, 1980 to June 30, 1981, the stocked item supply system supplied government employees, throughout Canada, with briefcases valued at $674,972.

WENDESIGNS, OTTAWA

Question No. 2,689—Mr. Stewart:

Did the Department of Communications contract with Wendesigns, Ottawa for $29,000 for the provision of telecommunications consulting services and, if so (a) what services were provided and over what period of time (b) what are the names of the principals of the company?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The Department of Supply and Services awarded a contract, on behalf of the Department of Communications, to Wendesigns, Ottawa. The value of the contract was $29,000.

(a) The contract was for the provision of design, writing and editing services in support of the Telidon Videotex system to provide government information to the Canadian public. The period of the contract was May 6, 1981 to March 31, 1982.

(b) The principal officer of the firm is: Mrs. Wendy Kramer, president.

OFFICESMITHS INC.

Question No. 2,690—Mr. Stewart:

Did the Department of Communications contract with Officesmiths Inc., Ottawa for $10,000 for professional services and, if so (a) what services were provided and over what period of time (b) what are the names of the principals of the company?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The Department of Supply and Services awarded a contract, on behalf of the Department of Communications, to Officesmiths Inc. The value of the contract was $10,000.

(a) The contract was for the provision of a report of Software Strategies of the Microhardware Industry for office automation. The period of the contract was May 1, 1981 to May 31, 1981.

(b) The principal officer of the firm is: Mr. Glenn McInnes, president.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS

Question No. 2,785—Mr. Cossitt:

Does the government intend to take over the printing of Hansard, the Order Paper and Notices, Votes and Proceedings and Committee Evidence and Proceedings, from the House of Commons and, if so, what are all the details in this regard?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The Canadian Government Printing Office, a sector of the commercial supply service of the Department of Supply and Services has always had the responsibility for printing parliamentary papers, which includes Hansard, Order Paper and Notices, Votes and Proceedings and Committee Evidence and Proceedings.

OPERATION OF PAY OFFICES

Question No. 2,792—Mr. Anguish:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 1,950 which mentioned a report submitted in March, 1975, what reasons were cited in the report for choosing the upgraded regional pay system over the central pay system?

2. Does the new pay system generally not permit supplementary cheques to be issued until receipt of a computer message authorizing same and, if so, how did the report justify the system-generated delay, in view of the purported goal of a quicker, more efficient pay system?

3. Was it ever the practice to pay some Privy Council staff their supplementary payments by typed cheques and were the cheques later registered in the regional pay system?

4. How many pay accounts are currently paid by the (a) capital regional pay office (b) central pay division?

5. How many pay clerks and auditors are employed in the (a) capital regional pay office (b) central pay division and what is the total number of staff in each case?

6. To the knowledge of the government, what reaction did the regional pay system meet among serviced departments and are the departments' comments available?

7. Has the Post Office Department refused to participate in the new pay system and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The major reason for choosing the upgraded regional pay system over the central pay system was due to the better and more timely service that may be provided from regionalized pay offices located close to the place of work of the employee. A number of other factors considered also were development time and cost, capability for progressive modular enhancements, and the capacity to expand to meet the future needs of pay administration in the federal public service.

2. Supplementary cheque processing may be scheduled in the pay system at any time. A common cause of these payments results from retroactive entitlements granted to an employee. A computer message during a regular run alerts the pay office staff that such a condition exists.

3. The only time supplementary cheques are typed is when we are not able to meet a scheduled commitment. This should normally occur infrequently and we are not aware of any previous practice of paying Privy Council staff by typed cheques. However, when typed cheques are produced the procedures require that they be registered in the regional pay system.

4. As of June 30, 1981, there were 135,321 pay accounts administered by national capital region pay offices. These were distributed as follows:

(a) CRPO 1, 49,567 pay accounts

CRPO 2, 37,764 pay accounts

(b) Central pay, 47,990 pay accounts

5. The number of pay clerks, auditors and total staff employed by pay office in the National Capital Region was:

	Pay Office	Pay Clerks	Auditors	Total Staff
(a)	CRPO 1	96	8	180
	CRPO 2	77	7	137
(b)	Central pay	60	4	110

6. Services Canada maintains ongoing liaison visits to departments at each level of management. In addition, visits were routinely made to each departmental office during the conversion period of the pay accounts from central pay to the regional pay system. From reports received from these visits the reaction was generally favourable to the improved services provided such as the expanded cheque stub data. However, a number of specific problems were reported and each one was analysed and resolved at the time.

7. The post office has not refused to participate in the pay system. The regional pay system does pay the post office term hourly paid employees now. However, the majority will remain with the central pay system at least during the transition period to the Crown corporation. We are presently discussing with management of the post office their requirements for an enhanced pay system.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—VIA RAIL—CUTBACKS IN PASSENGER SERVICE

On the order: Government Orders:

Consideration of an Opposition Motion—That this House expresses its deep concern over the abandonment of 19 per cent of the VIA Rail passenger network, which will take place when Order in Council P.C. 1981-2171 is implemented on November 15, 1981;

that the House recommends that the government delay the implementation date for Order in Council P.C. 1981-2171 to at least September 27, 1982, the date commuter rail service in Quebec and Ontario is presently scheduled to terminate under the same order;

that this House refers the subject-matter of Order in Council P.C. 1981-2171 to the Standing Committee on Transport to enable the committee to evaluate the economic, social, statistical and legal basis for the decision to diminish rail service, and instructs the committee to report its conclusions and recommendations to the House by June 30, 1982; and that, to facilitate the support of this motion by all hon. members, and notwithstanding any Standing Order, practice or precedent, the House does not regard the passage of this motion as a vote of non-confidence in the government.—Mr. Mazankowski.

Madam Speaker: Today the House is confronted with a motion under the terms of Standing Order 58(9), which calls for a vote this evening and which, according to the Standing Order, therefore amounts to a vote of non-confidence in the government. The last paragraph of that motion, however, suggests that the passage of this motion should not be considered as a vote of non-confidence in the government.

There is nothing in the Standing Orders to guide the Speaker in the interpretation of what constitutes a vote of non-confidence. In the past my predecessors have made certain comments on this problem, but have chosen not to interfere with the right of an hon. member of the opposition to move a motion under Standing Order 58(9).

The motion will be moved, debated and voted upon as provided for in the Standing Orders.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Very briefly concerning the matter upon which Your Honour has just commented, in the context of the acceptability of the motion, I am sure that all of us in the House recognize that the House is itself in control of its own rules. If the House, by a vote in approval of the resolution which is standing in the name of my colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), agrees that in these circumstances it will not be considered a vote of non-confidence in the government, then the House is simply exercising, once again, its undoubted jurisdiction and control over its own rules. It is very clearly indicating to every member of the House, including, with customary respect, yourself, Madam Speaker, that in these circumstances a motion would not be considered a vote of non-confidence.

• (1520)

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I would like to be able to rely on the opinion of my learned colleague, but I must unfortunately point out with all due respect that I cannot do so because he had the choice of moving his business of supply motion under two paragraphs of Standing Order 58, that is either paragraph (9) or paragraph (11). If he reads both paragraphs closely, he will realize that if he wants a vote by roll call, despite what he would like to do, he must proceed under paragraph (9) of Standing Order 58, which calls for a non-confidence vote.

In other words, what he is trying to do is to amend unilaterally the Standing Orders of the House because what he is asking us amounts to saying: Let us have a vote under paragraph (9) of Standing Order 58, but let us not disregard paragraph (9) under consideration because we do not want it to be a non-confidence vote. To do what he asks, we would need the unanimous consent of the House and we would have to follow the usual procedure to amend the implementation of our Standing Orders. However, this has not been done and I do not believe that he intends to do so. In this case, he has chosen paragraph (9) of Standing Order 58 which calls for a vote of non-confidence, and we are bound by the Standing Orders. We have no choice. He should have simply requested an allotted day under paragraph (11) of Standing Order 58. He would then have had no problem. He would have had his debate and the House would not have had to vote on a non-confidence motion against the government.

In conclusion, what I want to say is this: it is not up to the Leader of the Opposition to determine the value of paragraph (9) of Standing Order 58. The rules are there and we are bound by the Standing Orders, which tell us that when a motion calls for a vote under Standing Order 58(9), it is automatically a vote of non-confidence, and this is confirmed by the terms used in paragraph (11) of the same Standing Order 58. Obviously, in view also of the notice printed in the Order Paper, we have no choice but to vote against this motion if we want to avoid a vote of non-confidence against the government.

Madam Speaker: I simply want to point out to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that this is precisely what I stated in the last paragraph, namely that this motion will be moved, debated and voted on as provided in our Standing Orders. That is all. This motion will be decided by the House. However, it was my duty to point out to members of this House that the motion before them had been moved under the provisions of Standing Order 58(9) and that one of the paragraphs of this motion seemed contradictory to the provisions of Standing Order 58(9). It was my duty to point this out to the House. However, as I have said, I shall not become involved in the debate on the interpretation of what constitutes a non-confidence motion against the government. I believe that the House can settle this issue in the usual way.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—VIA RAIL—CUTBACKS IN PASSENGER SERVICE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville) moved:

That this House expresses its deep concern over the abandonment of 19 per cent of the VIA Rail passenger network, which will take place when Order in Council P.C. 1981-2171 is implemented on November 15, 1981;

that the House recommends that the government delay the implementation date for Order in Council P.C. 1981-2171 to at least September 27, 1982, the date commuter rail service in Quebec and Ontario is presently scheduled to terminate under the same order;

that this House refers the subject-matter of Order in Council P.C. 1981-2171 to the Standing Committee on Transport to enable the committee to evaluate the economic, social, statistical and legal basis for the decision to diminish rail service, and instructs the committee to report its conclusions and recommendations to the House by June 30, 1982; and that, to facilitate the support of this motion by all honourable members, and notwithstanding any Standing Order, practice or precedent, the House does not regard the passage of this motion as a vote of non-confidence in the government.

He said: Madam Speaker, at the outset I must say it is quite obvious that hon. members on the other side are scrambling and a bit nervous over this motion. But contrary to what the government House leader has said, the motion is not put forth in the context of being a tactic. It is a very reasonable motion. It is a responsible and realistic motion. It is not meant or intended to offend or embarrass anyone. I want to say very clearly and unequivocally that the motion is put forward in a sincere and constructive manner.

I believe, notwithstanding what the government House leader has said, that it does deserve the consideration and support of all hon. members who support the principle of fairness. The motion also deserves the consideration and support of all of those who believe that we need an adequate rail passenger system in this country. It is also important for members on all sides of the House to recognize that rail passenger service, rather than being considered a mode of the past, is indeed a mode of the future. This motion gives all hon. members an opportunity to recognize that with higher energy prices now is not the time to be cutting back rail passenger services or public forms of transportation. We should be engaged in efforts to expand these kinds of services rather than reducing them.

Lastly, this motion gives all hon. members an opportunity to associate themselves with the very severe hardships that will be imposed upon hundreds of thousands of Canadians who will be deprived of service when that service is withdrawn, and who will have no other alternative. There will be hundreds, if not thousands of people who will be losing their jobs. This will have an impact upon their families. There will be uprooting of families. People will have to move to other localities. There will be many others who will be affected indirectly as well as a result of these cuts. There may be others who will be facing very serious decisions and urgent consequences. In particular I am thinking of the small-business men who rely very heavily upon rail passenger service, especially in areas where tourism is an important fact of life. In short, we believe that the impact of these cuts will deliver irreparable social and economic damage to various regions throughout the country.

Furthermore, we have reason to believe that there are a number of members on the other side of the House who are not in support of this decision. This motion clearly gives them an opportunity to stand and vote and to make their position known.

We believe that the cutback decision should be deferred. It should be deferred on the basis that there are a number of factors that were not taken into consideration when this decision was made. As we recall, this decision to cut back services was taken by the minister and his cabinet colleagues in a unilateral, arbitrary manner. We believe that decision is short-sighted, illogical and very damaging. The decision was announced when the House was not in session. Instead the minister made this major policy announcement by way of a press conference and press release. The decision was conveniently deferred until the House of Commons had adjourned, and I might add the House was forced to adjourn as a result of closure.

There are a number of reasons why we take exception to both the decision and the process. First, we believe that the minister and his colleagues have not accurately assessed the very severe social and economic damages that this decision will inflict upon countless hundreds of thousands of Canadians.

We contend, and this has been proved beyond a shadow of a doubt, that the massive bulk of the train services that are being discontinued are used very heavily. They are needed. There is also no alternative means of transportation offered to those people who will be forced to survive without rail passenger service.

● (1530)

Let me look at the Toronto to Barrie run. I quoted these figures the other day and I think they are worthy of quoting again. For example, the Toronto to Barrie run has seven to eight coaches carrying 425 to 500 passengers in each direction daily. The Toronto to Stouffville run carries 300 to 350 passengers in each direction daily. The Toronto to Havelock run carries 200 to 275 passengers in each direction daily. The Winnipeg to Jasper and Vancouver Supercontinental carries an average of 350 passengers, and that figure obviously goes down in the winter and goes up in the summer. The Montreal to Mont-Laurier weekend service carries 1,200 to 1,600 people. That is the number of people who use this single service.

Let us go to the Atlantic service which has been described as the most successful train service of the whole VIA Rail system. That was stated by a senior official of VIA Rail. In the winter months this train averages between 200 and 250 passengers, and in the summer months the Atlantic averages between 400 to 600 passengers. It is very clear that these services are used and are needed.

It is also important to recognize that during the 1977-78 period there were some very extensive hearings conducted by the Canadian Transport Commission during which they reviewed the needs of Canadians relative to rail passenger services. They brought forth a structure which they described as an irreducible minimum. What this decision is doing is essentially flying in the face of that decision which was arrived at through consultation and extensive public hearings.

I would also deal with the other impact, which is the direct loss of jobs. The minister has indicated that 1,600 jobs will be directly affected. However, there will be countless hundreds of other jobs that will be dislocated as a result of these cutbacks. We have already had an announcement by CN that 560 positions in CN's three main shops will be affected with one fifth of the positions being affected in Moncton, two fifths in Montreal and two fifths in Winnipeg.

We also have further evidence. The Winnipeg Labour Council estimates the job loss in the greater area of Winnipeg will be no less than 500. VIA Rail has also issued some 313 lay-off notices, 166 occurring in western Canada and 133 in the Atlantic region and the province of Quebec.

The impact on small business, particularly the tourist industry, is another aspect of concern. We have one community which will be hit extremely hard, the community of Jasper. It is basically a one-industry town, its major industry being tourism. There has been well documented evidence that between $6 million and $10 million worth of tourist revenue will be lost as a result of the withdrawal of this service. We all know as well, and I put this on the record yesterday, that some 25,000 Japanese tourists who come to this country use the train when visiting us and they are big spenders, spending an average of $2,000 per person in addition to their transportation and accommodation. That tourist potential is threatened by these cutbacks.

I could go on and on but my other colleagues will be elaborating further on the specific impacts that will result in the various regions of Canada.

The second reason we have serious doubts about this decision is based on the matter of the rationale used by the minister in bringing this decision forward. First of all I have to say it is really very difficult to understand how the minister can revitalize the system by abandoning it. I really do not understand that and I hope he will attempt to enlighten us. We know that this is largely a political decision.

On the question of data, the data have been challenged in every corner of the country. There is inaccurate information. Costs are inflated and revenues are understated. There are a lot of questions arising from the fact that many of these statistics are outdated. In many cases we have estimates of load factors and occupancy rates that are outdated. In a very global way there is a shortage of data and, furthermore, there are serious questions and suspicions about the accuracy and relevancy of that data. As a result, this creates a large gap in terms of public confidence when the minister and his officials try to rationalize the reasons behind these cutbacks.

The minister says there is to be a saving of $100 million as a result of these cutbacks. Some $30 million of that will have to be paid toward labour people giving them assistance in job retraining and job relocation, so we really get down to $70 million. One really has to question whether, by reducing the services and taking away that revenue potential which is generated as a result without appreciably reducing those fixed costs, that savings of $100 million can really be realized.

The third reason we have serious reservations about this decision is that we do not believe VIA Rail has been given a fair chance. Quite frankly it is hardly a legitimate offspring. The problem of VIA Rail can probably be described best by one word, and that is "neglect". As a matter of fact, if we look at the 1980 report we will see that 1980 was the first year in which VIA Rail had control over all rail passenger services in this country. That really becomes a benchmark for its future. It is really strange that while it has had one full year of operation in control of all rail passenger services in 1981, it is going to be emasculated to the point that one fifth of the rail passenger service in this country will be lost. Notwithstanding the fact that it has had the cards stacked against it, it has increased its ridership by 41 per cent since 1976 or 1977. The occupancy rate is well over 50 per cent. It has not been given sufficient resources. The equipment being used is archaically out of date. As a matter of fact, when we look at the statistics of the equipment inventory we find that 67 per cent of the equipment used by VIA Rail is between 26 and 30 years of age; 23 per cent of its equipment is over 30 years of age. As a matter of fact, VIA is still using, I believe, 102 units which are air-conditioned through ice-activated mechanisms, so they are hopelessly out of date in terms of upgrading the equipment to realistic modern technology.

It is true that VIA has not been given sufficient rersources to re-equip. It is true that VIA has not had the necessary autonomy or a clearly defined mandate described by government and/or Parliament. It has not had a realistic costing order, which accounts for about 63 per cent of its total expenditures. It has not had proper contractual arrangements in its dealings with the railroads. It still has done reasonably well notwithstanding the fact that it has old equipment and paid some $70 million to both railways for equipment that would probably have been scrapped had VIA not been created.

There are some very major questions regarding those aspects, but the biggest question revolves around the costing order. The costing order really strikes at the heart and the core of the issues we are debating. The operating agreement signed between VIA and the railways locked VIA into a payment system which has contributed greatly to its present state of crisis. It is hard to believe, but charges have escalated beyond control. In his testimony before the Commons committee the president made this point very emphatically. He said that charges for transportation and maintenance represent well over 60 per cent of VIA's entire expense budget. The CTC costing order serves as a basis for these charges and it was agreed to by all parties including VIA, the railways and the government. I am told the corresponding level of costs for Amtrak, its neighbour to the south, is something in the order of 25 per cent.

This order was developed in 1969 as a means of prorating railway costs to passenger services performed and were then the basis of subsidy payments to the railways in compensation for these losses under the National Transportation Act of 1968. In those days the railways dealt only with the Canadian Transport Commission which audited and verified the costs claimed under the costing order and authorized corresponding subsidy payments.

The railways had originally helped to establish the basic rules of allocation under R-6313. They naturally had a vested interest in seeing that the allowances were generous, and also that the rules were changed and interpreted to make them even more generous. Costing order R-6313 has now apparently evolved into a system designed to allocate long-term variable rather than short-term avoidable costs to the passenger services and the difference is profound. The new levels may be as much as twice as high as the former levels. Moreover, the costing order works as a sort of honour system whereby the railways make the allocations and the government, or VIA, pays.

Post auditing by the CTC runs behind and is limited to a review of methodology and bases of charges and not to the actual levels of services. That is where you have this matter of the thirteenth billing that Mr. Roberts keeps complaining about. I might say that in 1980 I believe the payments to both railways amounted to somewhere in the order of $356 million. That is essentially the core of the problem.

It is interesting to note that what we are really dealing with here is that the railways are submitting bills to VIA Rail which VIA Rail has no way of challenging, bills which are basically openended, which are cost-plus. It is similar to what the railways in the United States wanted when Amtrak was set up. They chose a different route.

I am quoting now from a report to the Congress of the United States by the U.S. comptroller general. He referred to VIA and said:

> The railroads charged Amtrak $305 million in fiscal year 1980, accounting for over one fourth of Amtrak's operating expenses—

It goes on to point out that in negotiating the original agreements, the railways wanted Amtrak reimbursed for all their direct costs, the passenger services and facilities, plus an array of other payments for indirect costs, management fees, return on investment and profit. Since Amtrak was taking over substantial passenger losses from the railroads, it believed Congress intended for it to pay no more than the direct operating costs of the trains the railroads would be running and not pay the railroads a profit. Accordingly, Amtrak negotiated contracts requiring payment only for railroad expenses incurred solely for the benefit of passenger services, plus payments for certain costs common to freight and passenger service determined to be avoidable for the railroads if passenger services had not been provided. That is a very fundamental difference.

Mr. Pepin: It is the same thing.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister says it is the same thing. I hope he can prove that to us today in the course of the debate. It is a fundamental difference.

In the case of VIA, the charges are not fair. The minister must be in total and fundamental disagreement with the chairman and president of VIA Rail because that gentleman says the situation is unfair. VIA Rail wants to go to fixed base contracts. Why has the minister not done something about this? Why has the minister not rescinded R-6313 rather than—

Mr. Pepin: Why didn't you?

Mr. Mazankowski: We were considering it.

Mr. Pepin: Oh, yes.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is for sure.

Mr. Pepin: You were studying it. I am studying it too.

Mr. Mazankowski: The charges are not fair. The minister knows that. It is really a bookkeeping item. Rather than a major dismantling as the minister is proposing, a new costing order should be arranged. The minister knows that. He could use Section 64 to rescind costing order R-6313. He could do that very easily. He is so anxious to use R-6313 to take away passenger services from Canadians. Why does he not do something to get his own house in order?

Mr. Pepin: I will.

Mr. Mazankowski: We seriously question the legal and moral right of the minister arbitrarily to slash rail services in this country by 20 per cent without following the traditional practice. We believe the minister's actions constitute a violation of the spirit of the National Transportation Act and, indeed, the intent of Section 64. Quite frankly, we believe that it denies Canadians the opportunity to apply the rules of natural justice. I could go on for some time on this theme.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is dangerous. It establishes a dangerous precedent. It undermines the integrity of the CTC. Will the CTC be abolished with the same stroke of the pen that the minister has used to abolish one fifth of VIA Rail services in this country? He may as well because it was so crassly circumvented, Mr. Speaker. As a minimum he should now take steps to ensure that the role of the CTC is clarified.

What does all this mean? If the minister is allowed to get away with this, does it mean he can now unilaterally and arbitrarily abandon any branch line in western Canada as he sees fit? The basic network is guaranteed to the year 2000. The minister, if he is allowed to get away with this, with one stroke of the pen could dismantle the basic network.

Mr. Pepin: Hypothetically, yes.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister agrees with me. That is very dangerous.

Mr. Pepin: Hypothetically.

Mr. Mazankowski: What about ferry services? The federal government provides some $200 million in support of ferry services. If he decides unilaterally and arbitrarily to discontinue that support, could he do it? I suspect he could. If he gets away with this, I suspect he could do that.

What about the statutory freight rates? They are enshrined in the same law as Sections 260, 261, 262 which guarantee some semblance of rail passenger services in this country. If the minister is allowed to get away with this with just a stroke of the pen, he could undo the statutory freight rates.

Mr. Clark: That's right. And he would.

Mr. Mazankowski: We know that CN and CP have never been relieved of their responsibility to provide rail passenger services. That was never done when VIA Rail was established. What does that mean? If VIA withdraws, are CN and CP responsible for providing those passenger services? These things must be clarified.

Consider air services. The minister could unilaterally dismantle air services to any community in Canada if he is allowed to get away with this. He says it is in the public interest. He says he knows what is best. He does away with 20 per cent of VIA services this year. He could repeat that again next year and he probably will. The minister should not get away with this, Mr. Speaker. The implications are too far-reaching. He thinks he is on the right course and he is proceeding with a great deal of assurance and confidence. Yet he chooses to ignore the traditional process which is part of the Canadian way, the right to hold public hearings, to be heard and have an opportunity to express concern about the criteria of public convenience and necessity. This has all really gone down the drain. If the minister is so sure he is right, why does he refuse to take his case to the people, to the court of the CTC, or the court of the transportation committee?

Another thing which is very disturbing, Mr. Speaker, is that there was not one word mentioned about the dismantling of rail passenger service by the Liberal party in the last election. Not one word. There was not a word mentioned about the changes to the constitution, for that matter. Nor did we hear anything about the doubling of energy prices. So I suppose in that regard they were at least consistent.

An hon. Member: They talked about double track.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, we did hear a lot about double tracking. We can only conclude that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) dropped his double track and all we have in its place, rather than "double-track Trudeau", is "no-train Pepin".

An hon. Member: We got double-crossed.

● (1550)

Mr. Mazankowski: The fifth point, and perhaps the most important, is that there are alternatives to the cuts the Minister of Transport is proposing. I have mentioned that there are changes which can be made to the costing order. There should be improvements in the contractual arrangements between the railways and VIA Rail. We should give VIA Rail the necessary autonomy, power and clout to negotiate with the railways in a business like manner. The VIA Rail mandate should be clarified and enshrined in legislative form. Surely there are improvements which can be made in terms of productivity and the trimming of frills and supervisory and administrative fat. I think there is a clear indication that those who are using rail passenger services are prepared to pay a little more for them provided they are retained and improved. I think it is fair to say that schedules can be improved. Market improvements are certainly something which can be looked at. We have seen some very new approaches to tourist development.

The CTC has made a number of proposals, but there are four specific alternatives which have come up since the announcement of the minister to disband 20 per cent of the rail passenger service. One of them is contained in a leaked document which ended up in the hands of the Toronto Star, which points out that there is a proposal in which the Atlantic and the Supercontinental could be salvaged. The alternate proposal is estimated to be $2.4 million per year cheaper to operate than the government's proposal, based upon existing operations and costing methods. That clearly is one proposal which should be considered.

The second proposal is one which has been advanced by Transport 2000 which sets out to re-equip the Transcontinentals. Transport 2000 points out that an investment in new bilevel equipment would decrease operating costs by 31 per cent and that a combination of increased passenger revenues and the reduction of operating costs would reduce losses by some 52 per cent. Transport 2000 goes on further to point out that that capital which is invested in the re-equipment of the rolling stock could be paid for in seven and half years.

A third alternative was advanced by the government of Alberta. It is a very constructive, positive and responsible approach. It too involves the re-equipping of the western Transcontinental. It points out that costs could be reduced by somewhere between one half and two thirds of existing expenditures. The equipment and infrastructure would cost some $100 million. The total capital cost could be recovered through operating economies within a two year period. It also made another recommendation relative to payments to the railways based upon avoidable costs rather than the full associated costs with penalties and with bonuses included.

Then we have a fourth alternative proposal which comes from VIA Rail itself. It is very strange that after the study by Transport 2000 and the study by the government of Alberta were released we have a study appearing from VIA Rail itself wherein it too proposes the re-equipping of one train from Halifax to Vancouver for a cost of $200 million, and I understand it would cost $100 million to re-equip the other one. Was this information given to the minister before his decision was made? Does he know? Is he aware? Why was it not given to the Standing Committee on Transport? Why was it not given to members of the House of Commons so that this matter could be looked into and we would have all the facts? What is the minister hiding? What is he afraid of? Why is he hiding these things?

There are clear alternatives to the decision which has been made by the Minister of Transport. Is it asking too much to have the legislators of this country examine those alternatives or the people of this country look at those alternatives? Surely not.

This is a serious issue. It is a national issue. It is an issue which strikes at the very fundamental core of Canadian confederation, and I want to say in conclusion that I believe the government has grossly underestimated the deep feeling which exists in the hearts and minds of Canadians about the fact that rail passenger service is a link which binds this country together and keeps it united. To many it is more important than the Constitution. It is a fundamental part of confederation. We would not have been a country had it not been for the guarantees inherent in the provision of rail services.

For this reason and for the other reasons I have cited, I commend this motion to all hon. members. I hope it will be given their earnest attention and that they will see fit to support it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I had not at all underestimated the public reaction to my announcement of July 27. As a matter of fact, I did not expect any applause and telegrams of congratulations but the government and I thought at the time and continue to think that this is the best thing we could do under the circumstances.

But people do not like it when services to which they are accustomed are suddenly being reduced, even when, collectively, they are using them less and less, and when, individually, they are not using them at all. There are some 24 million people in Canada; well, last year, VIA Rail sold 7 million tickets to the travelling public. When we realize that these include the tickets bought by commuters who travelled by train much more than once that year, we can assume that there are probably 20, 21, or maybe 22 million Canadians who never saw the inside of a train compartment that year. And yet, when we raise the possibility of cutting down on the number of rail routes, everybody or nearly everybody feels compelled to object. There are even some people who wrote to me to inquire whether I was really aware that I was attacking an extremely important Canadian symbol, a symbol which I indeed respect and which has enormously contributed to the development of our country, adding that I was thus attacking the monarchy, which I find somewhat strange personally. I suggest that it is the current nostalgia for the rail era which is going against the government's decision.

[English]

There is one word in the motion which obviously is of paramount importance, and that word is "delay". The purpose of the motion is to delay. That is quite normal. When confronted with change—change that they have called for repeatedly—most people hesitate and procrastinate. I also do it occasionally! I am sure others are in the same position.

However, I was surprised that the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) should attach his name to this motion. I have great respect for him, as he knows. I think we can call ourselves friends. I listened to what he said, very carefully, not too long ago, on June 11, 1980. Speaking to the Transportation Research Forum in what was meant to be a program speech about what, unfortunately for him, he was not able to do because of his too short term in office as minister of transport, he said a number of things, and I will quote a couple of them. He said, for example, at page 9 of his speech:

> Steps will have to be taken to reduce unnecessary operation costs . . . Current high levels of service will not be able to be maintained indefinitely—
>
> On the passenger side of rail transportation, the ever increasing debt incurred by the federal government in subsidies is a major problem which will have to be dealt with.

Mr. McDermid: Not unilaterally, though.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know the minister to be a very fair man, and it would certainly help in putting this speech in context if he included in his quotation the fact that at page 9 I was talking about the air administration when I said, and I quote:

> Steps will have to be taken to increase the efficiency and utilization of current facilities, reduce unnecessary operation costs and, generally, to make better use of what now exists.

What I was talking about was the waste of this government with respect to Mirabel, with respect to Pickering and with respect to all the Taj Mahals his predecessor put up.

● (1600)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. That is a matter of debate.

Mr. Pepin: There is nothing which indicates—

Mr. Clark: Tell the truth.

Mr. Pepin: You can read it. I am sure you haven't.

Mr. Clark: I have read it.

Mr. Pepin: Let's forget what I am quoting and deal with page 10.

Mr. McKnight: Don't be a coward.

Mr. Pepin: I don't think I have to take any advice from you on the subject.

Mr. Clark: Nor respect Parliament.

Mr. Pepin: Let us deal with what the hon. member said in June 1980 with regard to VIA. That is good enough.

Mr. Clark: Read it all.

Mr. Pepin: I will read the whole thing:

> On the passenger side of rail transportation, the ever increasing debt incurred by the federal government in subsidies is a major problem which will have to be dealt with. This fiscal year alone, $424 million—

He knows now it is $450 million.

> —will go toward subsidizing rail passenger service. This is especially urgent when considering the impact on rail's competition, the bus mode. If the principle of equal treatment among modes is applied—

Presumably he meant not applied.

> —such operating subsidies could perpetuate into exorbitant amounts and result in a general reduction in the level of efficiency of the system.

Mr. Clark: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If the minister is going to be quoting speeches of other members of the House, would he mind quoting the speeches as they are written and not edit them so that they make a case exactly contrary to that actually being made?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The Chair heard no mention of quoting. If the minister did say he was quoting, there may be a point, but I did not hear him say he was quoting.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, when there is an obvious typing error in a text one is entitled to say "sic" after the word.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, there was absolutely nothing revolutionary in the decision we took on July 27 since it was basically aimed at stabilizing VIA Rail's operational budget to the benefit of its capital budget. It had been recommended in a number of previous studies and reports. Mr. Lang had reached that decision in 1976, or nearly so, but he was not in a position to implement it for the reasons we all know.

I would even suggest that had the hon. member for Vegreville had more time he would have done so himself. Short of drastically increasing his budget, the president of VIA Rail fully agrees, and I quote the statement he made recently:

> I think we now have a solid foundation from which we can go ahead—

Those are the words of the president, Mr. Roberts. And if the decision had not been taken it would have become inevitable to act, if you want, in a piecemeal fashion, haphazardly and especially without the dramatic and rapid increases in the VIA Rail capital budget which will enable the company to put more LRCs in service. I am referring to the light, rapid and comfortable units produced by Bombardier which will be rolling in western Canada and in the maritimes in the next two or three years.

I said recently—

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Pepin: In the next two or three years—

[English]

Mr. McKnight: When?

Mr. Pepin: In the next two or three years. I do not think you would have had them, had the July decision not been made.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I said recently that a number of people who are blasting me today and who are blasting the government for doing what we did will praise us in two or three years, while riding in their light, rapid and comfortable trains.

[English]

In this debate I have to prove, and I will do so repeatedly—and I might say I am willing to go to the transportation committee if that is the wish of hon. members—that the decision is a responsible one from a budgetary point of view and from a transportation point of view. It is also consistent with trends in Canada and elsewhere in the world. If my friends want to look they will see that what I have recommended here is being done in any country they can name. I will show them that the same general policy is being followed.

I am not being original. I am being banal. I am not being eccentric. The matter of non-recourse to the Canadian Transport Commission for public hearings is not only legal, but is wise and justified. It is the only way to go. I will try to demonstrate that more extensively in a moment.

Also, the decision is consistent with our energy-saving preoccupations and policies. There is nothing more spendthrift than a locomotive pulling 15 cars that are three quarters empty, as is so often the case.

The decision respects the interests of railway workers by allocating $30 million to assist them in adjusting to this decision. The amount of money is extraordinarily high. I want to say also that it is not unfriendly to VIA. I have already indicated that the VIA leadership is in agreement with it.

[Translation]

I said that our decision was consistent, necessary and responsible as far as the budget is concerned. No doubt I will be accused of being obsessed by profits and losses, it is entirely untrue. I know quite well that VIA will never pay for its own way, there has never been such a railway in the world. My criterion is not at all profits, it is not even breaking even, but there are, Mr. Chairman, some limits to what the government can earmark for unpopular services, especially in the present period of budgetary restraint.

Mr. Chairman, you are well aware of the figures which I will quickly quote. The government contribution to VIA in 1980-81 was $450 million and it will reach $490 million in 1981-82. Well, from that amount, $332 million were set aside for the operational deficit which on an average regularly increases by 20 per cent per year while $117 million were allotted to investment deficit financing this year.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, that is almost, in fact it is more than, twice the amount allotted VIA by the government in 1977-78, namely $209 million. Subsidies therefore went from $209 to $450 million; they now amount to $490 and will soon reach $565 million. So, we see the rate is on the increase. That is not without importance. It may be worth it to point out in passing that government assistance to VIA, and the people of Canada indirectly, represents one quarter of the total Department of Transport budget. So, one fourth of the $2 billion of the Ministry of Transport will in fact be used to move passengers by train.

I have already mentioned that last year VIA Rail had seven million passengers. So, if you divide the $490 million in subsidies paid VIA Rail in that year by seven million passengers, you see that every time a person buys a ticket, the Ministry of Transports pays out $70. In the case of the Transcontinental, the figure amounts to about $160. Taking specific figures, for instance the trip from Vancouver to Montreal, the ticket will cost $191 and the Government of Canada will add another $443. If you go from Montreal to Chicoutimi, it will cost you $21 and the government $180.

I could give you all the figures, which would not fail to impress certain persons. As for the capacity rate, the average is 46 per cent for the whole network, but many lines average 5, 10, 15 per cent and no more than that. The same applies to the cost-revenue ratio: the average amounts to 30 per cent, which means that VIA recovers, on an average, only 30 per cent of its costs. But in fact there are lines where the cost-revenue ratio is only 2, 3, 10 or 15 per cent. I say this—I beg your pardon?

Mr. Clark: Those are your figures!

Mr. Pepin: Obviously we have not counted all the individuals who passed through the doors. That is a very hard thing to do, one would have to increase twofold the number of VIA employees to arrive at a precise figure. Nevertheless, and I am speaking here to the Leader of the Opposition, if we look at this data generally, what we are presenting here is an undeniable fact. In any event, it is not only in Canada, that the number of rail passengers has dropped, this has occurred all over the world, in Japan, in Great Britain, even in France. We are not making this up. The situation which exists in Canada today can also be found in the United States and in other large countries. Therefore, although the figures may not be accurate to the very last digit, there is obviously a definite trend here, even if it cannot be proven with figures that are accurate to the last decimal. It is interesting to see people's reaction when you give them these figures. I have done that several times recently. For example, Geoff Johnson of the Ottawa Citizen wrote a very interesting article in May 1980, and I quote:

VIA Rail

● (1610)

[English]

For every passenger that travels by train the Canadian taxpayer loses 19.4 cents per mile. Theoretically, he says the government could send every rail passenger by air, pick up the entire tab and still save millions of dollars.

An hon. Member: That is false.

Mr. Pepin: No, that is true. This is the same newspaperman who some weeks ago said that I was the worst thing to happen to the railways since Jesse James. Obviously, he is a bit ambivalent but never misses the chance of making a good joke and that was a good one.

Similarly, you can read some reactions of members of the press. A columnist for the Edmonton Journal—I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would appreciate my source—was on the same track when he said:

We cannot say on the one hand that the government spends too much and on the other call for retention of a service used by so few.

There are a great many people in Canada who believe there should be limitations. The government does not have the responsibility to maintain trains if a sufficient number of people do not wish to use them.

The Vancouver Province on August 5, 1981 said this:

In general, the reduction in service is to be applauded because it has checked mounting losses and given VIA some hope of being able to improve those services it retains. This is sensible.

I have quoted from the west particularly because I expected some of my hon. friends from the west to be present in the House today.

[Translation]

So what are we to do under the circumstances? In 1976, Mr. Lang proposed a substantial cutback in subsidies. The decision announced on July 27 does not even include that. In fact, we will be increasing the total subsidies, as I indicated, from $450 million to $490 million in 1981-82, to $506 million in 1982-83 and to $537 million in 1983-84, at least to account for inflation. So there is no cutback in government aid to VIA, far from it, we will be increasing it. What we are doing is setting a ceiling, a maximum on the operating deficit, we are saying that it will remain at $365 million for 1981-82, $367 million in 1982-83 and $355 million in 1983-84. So that is what we are doing, we are putting a freeze on VIA's level of operating costs. We are converting this money to capital expenditures for VIA Rail, and those capital expenditures will go from $90 million to $117 million, to $125 million in 1981-82, to $129 million in 1982-83, and to $182 million in 1983-84. You can readily see how very fast the capital budget of VIA Rail is growing. It amounts to $446 million in three years. Why exactly are we doing this? It is because the problem comes in fact from the vicious circle in which VIA Rail is now operating in having to attract customers and provide good service, which increases its operating costs, and of not having the capital required to make the needed basic investments.

That is the reasoning, and what we are doing now is extraordinarily simple. We are saying to VIA Rail: Listen, you have outmoded equipment which is 25 or 30 years old. Renew your stock right away and provide good service to the population, and if you do so, the number of users will increase. To do so, operating costs and deficits must be kept down to $350 or $365 million, and to do so, there must be cutbacks. That is the only way to do it.

The other option, which the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) seemed to support, would have been to negotiate an additional amount of $100 million or $200 million to VIA Rail and to prolong the current agony of VIA Rail, because this money would have gone for operating costs rather than capital expenditures. This is a very simple reasoning which is certainly not original, as I have said repeatedly.

[English]

The decision also is responsible from the point of view of transportation policy. It helps to define the role of railway passenger transportation in Canada. This is visible in the choice of criteria that we have used. There are essentially five. First, the primary role of VIA is to serve the major intercity markets where there is a relatively high population density, by daylight services; over distances of 800 kilometres, which is 500 miles, or less. This is not original at all. This is what is happening everywhere else in the world. If VIA increases its ridership in recent years, it is mostly in these corridors—again banal to the utmost.

Secondly, we discontinue service or reduce frequency of service on routes where the ridership, the load factor, and the revenue-cost ratio are extremely low and have no justification. In some cases, you would be embarrassed if I were to indicate what some of the realities are.

Thirdly, there is one route that few people use. It costs the Canadian government $8.75 per passenger mile. There must be some limitation to the eccentricity of government spending!

An hon. Member: What route is that?

Mr. Pepin: Winnipeg-Armstrong.

Another point deals with the two Continentals. We have decided to maintain one, and not to eliminate the second one, contrary to what some press people have said, but to convert the second Continental in part into an intercity daylight system. We have decided to do this because of social, psychological, historical, economical and political factors. On balance, we think it is a good idea.

We eliminated one of the Continentals because it is the most costly part of VIA's operation. Half of the deficits of VIA are due to the transcontinental; about $160 million. I am not obsessed by money, because I am a Liberal!—I am not ashamed of that either.

The most important reason is that the northern transcontinental in Ontario and the west is used by people as an intercity system; it is not used as a transcontinental system. For the people who wish to use the transcontinental system, they will have the southern one; and for the people who wish to travel city to city, which is the fact in most cases, we have decided to establish a number of intercity trains.

Mr. Friesen: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister inferring that the train between Vancouver and Edmonton is considered—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. If the member wishes to ask a question, there has to be unanimous consent of the House.

• (1620)

Mr. Pepin: These are again not original thoughts, Mr. Speaker. You will find them in the CTC final plan for western transcontinental passenger train service of October, 1977. If hon. members would care to read the latest report on trains in Canada, the Scrivener report in Ontario, they would find exactly what I am saying now. It says that northern Ontario people use these trains as intercity and recommends that the Governement of Canada change them from a transcontinental mission to an intercity mission.

An hon. Member: Who's that?

Mr. Pepin: That is the Scrivener report, in Ontario. I am sure you have read it.

The fourth principle or criteria has to do with the servicing of remote communities which have no adequate alternative mode of transportation.

Mr. Clark: Like Armstrong.

Mr. Pepin: That covers Senneterre, Cochrane, Hearst, Thompson, Churchill and others. Armstrong is covered by Winnipeg-Capreol.

The fifth principle is simply that commuter-like lines can play an important role in transportation but they are the responsibility of the provincial and municipal governments.

My predecessor the hon. member for Vegreville agreed with that when he was minister of transport and said, "VIA is an intercity, not a commuter, railway". So I am in very good company with the former minister of transport, a Conservative, on this question.

The provinces have begun that process. Toronto and the Ontario government are in the GO system. Quebec is moving in a similar metropolitan system, taking into account commuter trains. I am quite sure that Mr. Snow and Mr. Clair in due course will take over responsibility for the trains that we have identified, that is Havelock, Stouffville, Barrie, Sherbrooke-Montreal. I am quite sure they will do it. It is much too early in the game to start complaining about the disappearance of these trains.

I wish I had more time to show that these changes had to come.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pepin: Yes, indeed, everywhere in the world. The world has gone through three revolutions, if not four. There has been the revolution of the private automobile, the revolution of the bus and the revolution of the airplane. Come and join the twentieth century! These changes have been taking place everywhere in the world.

Mr. Malone: Except France, Japan and Germany.

Mr. Pepin: I could give you chapter and verse which indicate that the same adjustments are being made everywhere in the world.

An hon. Member: There will be a revolution of the people.

Mr. Pepin: It is not a revolution at all. There is a beautiful quote from the MacPherson report which reads as follows, although I think it is too rude:

> The railways are accused of deserting communities by withdrawing passenger train service when a more objective view would be that the communities have deserted passenger train service.

It is not the passenger train service that has deserted people. People have deserted trains. Of people travelling in Canada intercity for more than 50 miles in 1977-78, only 1.2 or 1.3 took trains. I have all the figures here and they show that all the others used other modes of transportation.

Mr. Malone: According to Professor Fred Flintstone!

Mr. Pepin: Even in Japan, the famous Bullet train which peaked at 157 million passengers in 1975 had declined to 124 million by 1979.

Mr. Lawrence: But ours is going up.

Mr. Pepin: I should like to spend my last five minutes talking about why we did not go to the CTC. First of all, I do not have to take any advice about respect for the CTC; I am as respectful of the CTC as was my predecessor. Let me explain this to the House in four points. The first is this.

[Translation]

It was within the law. The Leader of the Opposition realized that not long ago. At first he protested, saying that was not allowed under the act, pursuant to Section 64 of the National Transportation Act 1967. But why does the act permit the use of an order in council in that case? I shall tell you why. It is because there are circumstances where it is necessary to take a comprehensive approach instead of having recourse to the CTC, which relies on ad hoc procedure. There is no way we could establish a general plan by asking the CTC to make individual studies of each route. The only solution would be to issue the CTC, the Canadian Transport Commission, with guidelines that would include decisional criteria, which would amount to telling the CTC: Listen, first of all you will have a ceiling, like the Minister of Transport; your ceiling will be $500 million. Second, VIA Rail's essential role is interurban transportation; we think this is vital. Third, I think we need a transcontinental train. Fourth, make sure isolated communities are protected. Fifth, listen, commuter trains are a municipal and provincial rather than a federal concern. Well, this is exactly what it says in the decision of July 27. In other words, to make the changes I would have had to tell the CTC: here are the criteria, here is a directive from the federal government, there is no other way we can carry out the changes we want. And obviously, if I had done that, as my friend Mr. Lang found out in 1976, everyone would have said: He is twisting the CTC's arm—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. minister but his time is up. The hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate and to say at the outset that we are in agreement with and will support the motion proposed on behalf of the official opposition by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I shall move an amendment that I believe will also receive the support of hon. members on all sides of the House, or if not the support, at least the sympathy.

The motion proposed by the hon. member for Vegreville is very moderate. It only asks for a one-year delay, when I suspect that his view, the view of his colleagues and certainly my view and that of my colleagues, is that the order in council of the cabinet should be totally rescinded. To be reasonable, however, to be moderate, and in an effort to persuade the government to change its mind and at least restore some of the routes which are viable, we have opted for this mild, reasonable request.

John Kenneth Galbraith said that in the nineteenth century people distinguished between railway barons; there were those who robbed their customers and those who robbed both their customers and their shareholders. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) deserves the dubious distinction of robbing both VIA Rail customers and the taxpayers of Canada. The Jesse James and the "Lang gang" ride again!

Had this cabinet been in power in 1881, Mr. Speaker, it would have scrapped the idea of building a transcontinental railway. The simple minded idea of Reaganomics practised by this government is completely at odds with the geography, climate and the location of the people of Canada. In simple economic terms, if you follow the logic of the Minister of Transport to its conclusion, it would be much cheaper to close the St. Lawrence Seaway. There is a great deficit there. It would be much cheaper to shut down the railroads. There would be no need then for branch line subsidies, the At and East rates or bridge subsidies. If we follow the minister's logic, it would be cheaper to shut down the airlines. He moans and groans about the deficit incurred by VIA Rail. It has always been the case since this country was settled, and it has always been the case in every other country in the world, that not a single mode of transport ever paid its own way.

• (1630)

What does the minister want to do about the marine transport subsidies of $320 million last year? Under Section 64 of the National Transportation Act, he could shut down all shipping, if he goes to the exaggerated extreme that he has gone to in the order in council he passed regarding VIA Rail.

In 1979, air user charges were covered 38 per cent. What a cost to run our airports! There was a $476 million subsidy to airlines. The minister, if he wants to follow his transportation logic to its conclusion, should be shutting down airports and cancelling airline routes instead of acting like a fifteenth century Pope, dividing the world up between the Portuguese and the Spanish, by dividing up Canada among a bunch of airlines.

In addition to that $476 million deficit, the government wrote off $600 million worth of debt for Mirabel. One does not hear the minister moaning and groaning about that. On our roads and highways, our licence fees, fuel taxes, fines and revenues the municipalities, provinces and the federal government can recover only 55 per cent of the cost of operating, building and maintaining our highways. That amounts to a $3 billion a year subsidy for highway users.

Why is the minister picking on VIA Rail? I think it is because the Treasury Board and the cabinet told him to spend $100 million less and to pick out the easiest victim. He picked out VIA Rail and gave them two choices: it is either compulsory, or they have to! The president of VIA Rail was phoned up and given his orders to reduce services to save a supposed $100 million.

Mr. Pepin: Talk about the number of people using these trains.

Mr. Benjamin: The minister wants me to talk about the number of users. The number of people riding has been increasing at a record rate, far beyond what even CP and CN were able to do in their last three years. But it cannot increase any more with current policy. I am surprised that it has increased as much as it has while the minister, through government policy, has a mandate for VIA Rail to operate railway passenger trains on the basis that if one runs it old enough, late enough, slow enough and dirty enough so that no one will get on it, then one can cancel it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: That has been the practice. The minister and the government have victimized VIA Rail. They created the child and are now in the process of making an orphan out of it. VIA Rail got stuck for over $77 million worth of outmoded equipment which it should have gotten for $1.

The minister talks about $100 million in savings. There are built-in costs to that debt which VIA should never have had in the first place. The government started VIA Rail out in the same way it started the CNR in 1920 and 1921, with a debt which it can never live long enough to pay off. It is designed and set up to fail.

While every other industrialized nation in this world, even undeveloped countries, are making massive investments in new, modern, fast intercity and commuter passenger services, this country, which used to lead the world, is running 25 to 30 years behind. We should be making an investment, not in ten new LRC sets, but in thirty.

Mr. Pepin: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: The minister says he agrees. Well, how come the orders have not been placed? One needs three years of lead time just to get deliveries.

Mr. Pepin: We will, in the fall.

Mr. Benjamin: The minister says he is going to save $100 million. He has already said that he is going to spend $30 million to help out those workers. He can make a decision which callously does away with 1,600 people, and he is going to spend $30 million to make it easy for them. That leaves $70 million in the first year.

Mr. Pepin: Different accounts.

Mr. Benjamin: Forty-eight per cent of the costs of operation are direct costs: wages, fuel—

Mr. Pepin: They are not.

Mr. Benjamin: Direct costs. There goes $48 million he will save. Where is the other $52 million? The other $52 million is going to get transferred to the remaining VIA Rail routes.

Past experience has shown that savings are not realized by abandonment. The minister has not taken account of the revenue lost from the routes to be abandoned.

By the way, I remind the minister, as he talks about the CTC and all the great respect he has for it, that the CTC held hearings on 15 of those 21 routes since 1976, and ordered that all 15 be retained. When the CTC spoke about the transcontinental routes, it said that they were at the irreducible minimum. So much for the minister's great respect for the Canadian Transport Commission.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Benjamin: I have asked his department to give me a breakdown in savings, by each route. For some reason or another, I cannot get it. I wrote to the Minister of Transport on September 16. I first wrote to him on July 31, and he sent me a non-answer, signed by his parliamentary secretary. I wrote to him again on September 16. He still has not even acknowledged my letter—let alone answered it—concerning turning this subject over to the House of Commons committee on transport.

The $100 million that the minister throws around is apparently the $61 million in operating costs for the abandoned services, plus the estimated savings using LRC routes not being abandoned. That is stretching the point, to claim this to be a benefit of abandonment. Past experience shows that savings are not realized by abandonment. Forty-eight per cent is saved by direct charges: wages, fuel, maintenance. The balance of the overhead costs will be shifted to the remaining passenger services, so that more routes will show a loss, increasing their apparent losses, or costs will be transferred to freight services, which I do not see the CPR or the CNR readily doing.

The minister talks about Winnipeg-Armstrong. Is the minister unaware that the Winnipeg-Armstrong service is a mixed train? It pulls mostly freight cars and a couple of passenger cars, all of which is charged to passenger service. So much for his inexcusable excuse for a service from Winnipeg to Armstrong. He does not know anything about railroading. Anyone who would treat places such as Edmonton, Saskatoon, and our national capital, Ottawa, like backwoods villages is not deserving of the name "transportation minister".

Both the transcontinental routes, the Supercontinental and the Canadian, are used to capacity in the summer and in the peak periods of the wintertime, and the Atlantic Limited hauled 256,000 people last year; yet the minister wants to abandon them. That is not railroading; that is throwing up one's hands and giving up. One will not entice more people out of their automobiles and out of short-haul aircraft flights, which is the most inefficient way to move people, by having no trains. If one is not going to provide the equipment, the service and the schedules, why should people get on the trains which are left? I have a copy of the transcontinental passenger train schedule for 1892. Across Canada it made an average speed of 47 miles per hour. Does your Honour know what it is today? It is 39 miles per hour. So much for this modern revitalization by the minister of VIA Rail. On some of the routes which he now proposes he will have an average speed of 20, 22 or 29 miles per hour; and the minister wonders why no one will get on the train! What a back-asswards way to encourage people to take the train! What a way to set up a national rail passenger corporation! It is designed to lose.

Mr. Deans: You should try riding the train.

Mr. Benjamin: We are not talking out of some sentiment for the days of the steam engine and the wail of the locomotive whistle across the prairies. We are talking about the most sensible, economic transportation reasons for enlarging and revitalizing our national rail passenger transportation system. We should look at countries with geography and climate similar to ours, such as the Soviet Union and the Scandinavian countries, which have electrified over 100,000 kilometres of track. Trains are run at speeds of up to 100 miles per hour north of the Arctic circle. Australia has rebuilt its transcontinental railway system from Perth to Sydney. We should also look at what the Japanese, the French, the British and the West Germans are doing in rail transportation. They are making the investment, and the return on that investment is more than compensated for by the savings they make in other expenditures in other parts of their economies, whether in the construction of superhighways, fuel costs, environment or safety—you name it.

• (1640)

I do not understand the continual insistence on clinging to the 1890s concepts of rail transportation. The minister spoke about getting into the 1980s and 1990s, but he is still riding in the 1950s and 1960s when the CNR and CPR were trying to get out of the passenger business, and that is what he is trying to do as well.

There is no policy commitment by this government to make sure that VIA succeeds. This government wants to save $100 million by cutting back all these routes. But on the other hand, the government will turn around and spend, I predict, $100 million to establish a short takeoff and landing service for Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal, something we need like a hole in the head. Can you imagine anything so ridiculous, Mr. Speaker?

The Government of Canada has authorized VIA Rail to get ten LRC trains. They will cost over $100 million. They are to run along the Quebec-Windsor corridor. Now the government is going to establish a STOL service between Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto. But what is that for? The government will have two government agencies cutting each other's throats to get the same passengers.

Mr. Pepin: But a different clientele.

Mr. Benjamin: If the policy of the government is to get people out of automobiles and off short-haul scheduled airline routes by establishing LRC trains and competing STOL aircraft service in the Quebec-Windsor corridor, the minister has another think coming.

Instead, the minister is spending $100 million in each place for two government agencies to cut each other's throats. How ridiculous can you get? The minister does not know anything about transportation. He never has. He does not know one end of a boxcar from another.

Mr. Fulton: He does not know one end of a horse from another.

Mr. Benjamin: I want to move an amendment to the motion. If the minister will not leave this matter in the hands of the CTC, perhaps he will agree for the House of Commons Standing Committee on Transport to hold hearings. The government may want to make it a joint committee, I do not care. But by holding hearings, the people of Canada, officials of his department, the minister himself, representatives of VIA Rail and the railroads can appear. In this way the matter can be fully aired. We can give the committee until the end of June next year to complete its hearings.

There is another committee in this House besides the transport committee of which the minister is fully aware. This committee is questioning and casting some doubts on his and his cabinet's decision concerning the cutbacks. No hearings have been held concerning this matter. There have been no opportunities to rebut the reasons of the minister or of the executive, which has proceeded by fiat. The order has not been used to overrule a recent decision of the CTC, but there has been a series of decisions extending back over a considerable period of time, decisions which have been acted upon and upon which the public had placed reliance. The public placed reliance on the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission on 15 of those 21 routes. I submit this is a breach of tradition in the country, even if it is a skilful use of the wording of a statutory provision, which it is probably fair to say is not designed for such a purpose.

If the governor in council can change the decisions of a commission, how far back can they range? They have ranged all the way back to 1976 CTC decisions concerning transcontinental passenger trains. Hearings were held before which members of this House from all sides appeared, along with members of the Senate. These hearings were held across the nation. The minister and the cabinet go back five years to rescind a decision of the Canadian Transport Commission. Yet the minister tells me about all the respect he has for the CTC.

This kind of massive abuse and misuse of Section 64 of the National Transportation Act means that the minister and the cabinet by order in council can cancel the rest of the VIA Rail passenger rail service. The government can abandon all branch lines. It can cancel all airline routes. It can wipe out the St. Lawrence Seaway. It can wipe out shipping. It can wipe out any damn thing the government wants to wipe out without any recourse to Parliament or any agency of government.

Mr. Deans: This is a shameful abuse of power.

Mr. Benjamin: When the minister professes to me his respect for the CTC, respect for public input and respect for people who know something about running railroads, as far as I am concerned, he is a loser. I do not mind his losing so much, but I do mind when he causes the whole nation to lose in light of our energy crisis. Every other industrialized nation of the world, even underdeveloped countries, are buying our trains, our equipment, our technology and our expertise. But are we using it here? No, we are not.

It passes all understanding how the minister can get up and try to justify this kind of thing. We are not trying to justify the retention of all 21 routes, but I submit that at least half of them are viable. You cannot ignore places such as the national capital, the capital of Alberta, the second largest city in Saskatchewan, Jasper, Melville, Watrous, Raymore and Biggar. You cannot ignore the Jasper to Vancouver route. It is outrageous to ignore these places.

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That the motion be amended by deleting the third paragraph and substituting the following therefor:

"That this House refers the subject matter of order in council PC 1981-2171 to the Standing Committee on Transport to enable the committee to evaluate the economic, social, statistical and legal basis for the decision to diminish rail service, with authorization to hold public hearings and to travel from place to place in Canada, and instructs the committee to report its conclusions and recommendations to the House by June 30, 1982;"

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset that the amendment just moved by the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is one that we find acceptable. We would recommend it to all members of the House of Commons who are interested in ensuring that the Parliament of Canada function effectively and that the rights of Canadians to a public hearing and to appear before a parliamentary committee on a matter that strikes at the heart not only of our local communities but also at the heart of the unity of this nation are respected.

We are dealing with a matter that goes to the root of what Parliament is all about. We have a situation here where the rights of individual Canadians have been ignored by a government which has run round a procedure established under the law to ensure that citizens would be heard. The government avoided that right. The Parliament of Canada now is seeking the opportunity to give citizens who are affected by an arbitrary government action the right at the very least to be heard.

I point out to the House that this is the first day in this session of Parliament in which the topic of debate can be established by this party. We have used this first day to have this item discussed, it is of such paramount importance to us, not only in its substance, but also as a symbol that the people and Parliament of Canada will not sit idly by when a government acts in a unilateral and arbitrary way to wipe out their rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I want to say one thing in quick passage, Mr. Speaker. Early on in the day the government House leader said that he would regard this motion as a vote of non-confidence. He knows that is false. He knows that the House of Commons has the right, and has had since this institution was established, to establish its own rules. What this motion provides is that the House of Commons would temporarily, in this instance only, amend the rules of the House, to make it clear that to vote for this motion would not be a vote of lack of confidence in the government. That is very important because it frees Liberal members of Parliament to vote in favour of their constituents, even though it means voting against their minister. That, I suggest, is a matter of fundamental importance to the functioning of this process.

Let me just say that we have often heard from the government, when we have raised questions, that if we really wanted to pursue those questions and really wanted to have them resolved, then we could have them raised on one of the allocated days, one of the days given to the opposition when we have the right to raise a question.

• (1650)

Now there is a new wrinkle being added by the government. It says we can raise those questions but we cannot have the government act upon them; we cannot have Parliament act upon them. It attempts to impose yet another muzzle on the rights of this Parliament to effect even our own agenda and our own freedom to act. It attempts in one more way to put one more shackle on the beleaguered backbench members of the Liberal party so they will not vote for their consciences and their constituents against the arbitrary decisions of the government.

I have had to use in recent days the phrase "legal trickery". I used that phrase in another context. If this government tries to evade the opportunity to vote for the right of Parliament to look into this question, tries to evade it on the argument put forward by the government House leader, that will be another instance of legal trickery, and it will be another indication that this government is more interested in finding ways around the rights of the public than it is in serving the rights of the public.

The minister made reference to what is the most important phrase in this motion, and that is that the matter be delayed to allow the people of Canada to have facts that are more current and more accurate than the facts the minister is using, to bring their evidence forward and not have their rail lines torn away without the opportunity to be heard. It provides also for a general review, given the amendment of the NDP, with public hearings and the right to travel, so that interested Canadians, including Canadians with more expertise than we believe exists in some parts of the Department of Transport, can come forward, put their expertise forward and defend and advance their interests in seeking to ensure a far more effective rail passenger service in the country.

I am not going to deal at much length with the minister's remarks, which I must say I thought damaged his reputation in this House—and I refer to his attempt to misquote the speech by my colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). If he is going to quote people in the House of Commons, I suggest two rules to him: One, he should not repeat his attempt to change the text of the matters he is quoting; and, second, that he quote the whole speech and not select at random items of it that give a false impression of the point that was made in the over-all speech. He quoted one phrase. He said it is important that the problem be dealt with.

Miss Bégin: This is incredible!

Mr. Clark: The minister says it was an incredible performance by her colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). I agree, it was incroyable for the Minister of Transport to act in that way. The language that was used was that it was important that the problem be dealt with. That certainly is the case, it is important. The Liberals would deal with the problem by eliminating passenger rail service. The Progressive Conservative government was dealing with the problem by giving VIA Rail a chance to prove itself, and that is what we believe this Parliament and this government should do.

There are two basic issues here. One is a question of substance, the attempt by the Government of Canada, acting unilaterally, without consultation and without public hearings, to end by the stroke of a pen 19 per cent of the rail passenger service in the country, and to do that on information that is out of date and that is false.

I was amazed to hear the minister quoting the MacPherson report. The MacPherson report was written in the 1940s.

Mr. Pepin: In 1961.

Mr. Clark: All right, it was written in the 1950s and published in 1961; it is only 20 years out of date. What I would suggest to the Minister of Transport is that if we are going to make decisions that affect the future of this country, we should be using current statistics and not statistics that are 20 years out of date.

Mr. Pepin: I was trying to say that all the reports said the same thing.

Mr. Clark: The Minister of Transport again trotted out figures which he knows are two to three years out of date—figures on passenger usage that he knows relate to the situation before the energy crisis forced more and more Canadians to use the trains. If he had held public hearings, as we did, if he had done what the CTC required him to do, he would have had the opportunity to hear first hand the evidence of people who have far more up to date statistics, statistics which take account of the impact upon the behaviour of the rail-using public of changes in the cost of energy, statistics which indicate that there is in fact more use being made of passenger rail service in this country than the government wants to admit.

The danger is not that the public is moving away from rail passenger service. The danger instead is that the government is taking away rail passenger service when there is no cause at all to do that on many of the lines that were doomed by his directive of July 27.

I should say that the other grave danger in substance is that we live in a time and in a country when there is an increasing fear that people, particularly in distant parts of the country, have interests and put forward positions that are ignored by the government at the centre. What better proof could they have if they live in western Canada and are served by the train through Jasper, or live in eastern Canada and are served by the Atlantic, or live in northern Quebec or northern Ontario, of the indifference of the central government to their interests than to have their rail service taken away absolutely arbitrarily, without any right to public hearing? This comes from a minister who served as a co-chairman on a commission on national unity. I cannot think of an act which could be better calculated to create disunity in this country than to take away the lifeblood of communities by an arbitrary act, without holding public hearings, thus breaking the CTC requirements and denying the public the right to be heard.

That is one of the issues here; that is the issue of substance. The other issue is the issue of process, the process of the denial of a public hearing. I heard the minister say that public hearings are difficult, and to have followed that route would have caused him all kinds of trouble. It would have required studies which would have taken some time.

An hon. Member: Four years.

Mr. Clark: Four years of studies to find the truth. I suggest it would have been better to have had four years of study that found the truth than to act in ignorance, in a way that disrupts the people and disrupts the services of this country, and does so for all time. In fact, he told us that Otto Lang had done it that way. He said Otto Lang had followed the law. Otto Lang followed the CTC route and found he could not do what he wanted because too many people came up with other evidence. There is not much good that many of us on this side of the House would say about Otto Lang, but at least he had a better respect for democracy than the present Minister of Transport.

The other danger, of course, is that this proposal creates a precedent that is immensely dangerous for the country and for anyone anywhere in the country who relies upon transportation facilities under federal jurisdiction; that is to say, dangerous for anybody anywhere in Canada. The government has acted here in a way that wipes out public hearings. If it can do it with rail passenger service, it can certainly do it with any other kind of service.

The minister has used Section 64(1) of the National Transportation Act to take away 19 per cent of rail passenger service. What is going to be next? Will it be airports? He can with the stroke of a pen or the snap of his fingers do away with any airport under federal jurisdiction anywhere in this country. Will he do this next in respect of branch lines on the prairies? With the stroke of a pen he can wipe out branch lines on the prairies, no matter who has approved them or how valuable they are. Will it be done to the rest of the passenger service in the country, the other 81 per cent? It may be as doomed as the 19 per cent he has wiped out because he has the power. Will this involve ferry services on the coasts of Canada? The minister has the power to do this.

When the point was being made by my colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville, I heard the minister admit from his seat, and I think I quote him exactly, that hypothetically the law is there. Perhaps it is hypothetical today in the case of airports, but it was hypothetical in June in the case of 19 per cent of passenger rail service. Hypothesis becomes reality with this government, and once it gets away with using that kind of instrument to wipe out 19 per cent of passenger rail service, it will turn next to the target of airports it does not like, other passenger services it does not like, branch lines it does not like and ferries it does not like, all of this done without any public hearings, any respect for democracy or any concern for the current facts, rather than facts 20 years old, such as the MacPherson report.

Mr. Cousineau: It is legal.

Mr. Clark: The minister is trying to make the point that it is legal.

Mr. Pepin: No, no. I am saying you are trying to prove that the law is illegal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: We have heard—

[Translation]

—I was glad to hear what the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau) had to say, because his riding is affected by the cuts proposed by the minister, but on the other hand, he did not stand up against his minister on that account and he did not defend his constituents. This is highly irresponsible. But, what I was saying—

• (1700)

[English]

What I was saying, Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member for Gatineau uttered his first words in the House of Commons, was to indicate to the minister—

[Translation]

Mr. Cousineau: The right hon. member, the Leader of the Official Opposition, said some words to the effect that this was the first time I had spoken in the House, and I would not like to have to infer from that that he was deliberately lying.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The correction is well taken.

Mr. Clark: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I did not fully appreciate the words of the hon. member the last time he addressed the House.

[English]

What I wanted to advise the minister was that he might think it is legal but there are many people in this country who believe it is not. A legal action is being undertaken in the courts to test the legality of what he is doing. We know it is wrong. It may also turn out to be illegal. We will then have him on both counts, not only on the Constitution but also on VIA Rail. On the question of the Constitution we now have them on the count of it being wrong and divisive to the country if they try to proceed by legal trickery.

I wish to read for a moment from a report secured by the Toronto Star quoting a senior official of the Department of Transport. That official wrote:

> Instead of using the section as its drafters intended—to vary the odd CTC order it did not agree with—the government is using it to restructure the whole VIA system. This is being done without CTC public hearings and without parliamentary scrutiny. Announcement of the changes was deliberately held up until members of Parliament had left for the summer recess.

That is not a member of the opposition speaking. That was an official of the Department of Transport speaking, indicating just how profoundly unpopular and wrong the minister's position is felt to be in his own department.

The government has bypassed the CTC in its hasty decision to dismember a vital national service. The CTC's role as protector of the public interest in transportation matters in Canada has been tarnished and diminished, if not actually destroyed. The minister will know that even in the United States, where attempts have been made to reduce the scope of Amtrak operations, those attempts have been extremely limited by the moderating influence of Congress which as a legislative body must approve budget cuts proposed by the administration.

Since there are no safeguards in Canada, the role of the CTC is all the more vital. It has been cast aside callously by this government because they are afraid of the results.

It is interesting to ask why the Minister of Transport is reluctant to place the future of VIA Rail's transcontinental services in the hands of the CTC. The answer is clear. The CTC would have held hearings. It would have gone out and talked to people, as our task force has done. It would have gone out and listened to current data on current passenger usage instead of relying on three and four-year-old figures based on a period prior to the impact of higher energy costs upon passenger service in this country.

It is almost certain, Mr. Speaker, that if the CTC had been allowed to carry out its mandate that this Parliament gave it, it would have demonstrated that many of the figures used as a basis for decision are false figures.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Consequently, it would have changed the decision quite appreciably.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We had a task force conducted under the chairmanship of my colleague from Vegreville which gave us the opportunity to speak to a number of Canadians across the country. We are looking forward to publishing the report and recommendations based on those hearings. Every region of Canada has been affected but there is one region in particular about which I should like to speak.

[Translation]

The province of Quebec in particular will be severely affected by this unilateral and undemocratic decision. At least 225 railway employees stand to lose their jobs in the province of Quebec. Northern communities will become even more isolated. Communities located between St. Hyacinthe and Megantic will lose their rail passenger service. There will no longer be any service between Ste. Foy and Chambord. The train from Hull to Lachute will cease to exist. There will be no more "petit train du Nord". These cutbacks will have an impact on tourism, individual communities and the economy of the province.

However, Mr. Speaker, Quebec's loss may be greater than that of the other provinces. We have seen that the federal government, through this decision, has denied Canadians the right to a public hearing. This evening we shall see whether the voices of Quebecers are to be doubly stifled, not only through the absence of public hearings but especially if Liberal members from Quebec should refuse to defend the interests of Quebecers who are affected by this decision. We shall see whether the Liberal members from Quebec, in voting on this motion, will show that they are prepared to defend the interests of their constituents. If the motion is passed, the government will not fall, but the people of Quebec will see that the federal Parliament of Canada is not powerless to defend their interests.

In communities which are to lose rail passenger services, many individuals will be severely affected. But that is not all. Behind this unilateral decision looms the ominous precedent the government has thus created. If the government succeeds in eliminating 18 per cent of rail passenger services by unilateral declaration, without consultation and without public hearings, it will have created a precedent that it will most certainly use again.

Today rail passenger services, tomorrow what next? Airports? These also come under federal jurisdiction. Freight services? Ferry services? The remaining rail passenger services in Quebec? The government is wielding formidable powers and creating a dangerous precedent. The Progressive Conservative Party has been holding public hearings because the government has refused to do so.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the right hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The right hon. member may continue if he has unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Pepin: I wasn't allowed to continue.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has pointed out to me that the opposition did not have the courtesy to allow him to continue his speech. And I believe I heard him deny the same courtesy to the opposition.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I heard no point of order. Now there is a point of order raised and I think it is well taken. I asked if there was unanimous consent and I indicated there was not. I see no reason to pursue the matter any further.

The Hon. Leader of the Opposition on a point of order.

Mr. Clark: The Minister of Transport will admit that he did not request that courtesy. I do request that courtesy and I would accept it naturally very gratefully.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Unanimous consent is sought by the Leader of the Opposition. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pepin: Half a minute!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: I shall be as brief as possible, because this is a very important matter. The Liberal members from Quebec have often mentioned the need for a strong federal presence in Quebec. They now have an opportunity to make their wish come true. The situation is clear. If the members from Quebec want the federal Parliament to be respected, today they will have an opportunity to earn that respect. They can show that the Parliament of Canada will defend the interests of Quebecers even if the government does not. Too often, when the legitimate interests of Quebecers are at stake, 74 Liberal members sit silently, afraid to speak out and afraid to act.

On the Constitution, the Quebec Liberal Party had the courage to defend the principle of federalism, but the federal Liberal members remained silent. When the Liberal government questioned the province's rights with respect to the sales tax, Liberal members failed to speak out. They remained silent about Mirabel, Nordair and the future of the footwear industry in Quebec. Will they also remain silent on VIA Rail, or will they support this motion and help the Government of Canada gain the respect of the people of Quebec?

● (1710)

[English]

That is a very important question, not just in Quebec but across the rest of the country, because this Parliament has the opportunity to speak up for and to defend Canadians whose interests have been severely injured. I ask any federalist in this House who wants to respect the rights of Canadians, who wants to be sure that decisions are based upon current information and who wants to ensure that we make decisions regarding rail passenger service now which serve the future instead of injuring the future, to vote in favour of this modest proposal to let the people be heard, to have a delay of a year of this unilateral abandonment of rail passenger service and to respect the right of Canadians to be consulted and to be heard on decisions which go to the heart of their personal and community existence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it is with great reluctance that I also rise this afternoon to address a few words to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). However, in answer to what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has just said to the effect that the silence of Liberal members is such that nothing is being done in Quebec, I must tell him that he is very badly informed since I wrote the following letter to the minister on August 24, and I quote:

> I find unacceptable the decision made, without consultation, by our department and VIA Rail to abandon rail service on the north shore of the Ottawa river on the Montreal-Lachute-Hull-Ottawa line. It seems to me that the Railway Act provides for public hearings when services are to be abandoned. Consequently, in a democratic system such as ours, I deplore the fact that this decision was made without consulting the population concerned.

On behalf of my fellow citizens, I therefore urge that this means of transport be maintained, or at least that public hearings be held so that we may know the pros and cons of this unfortunate decision.

And I, of course, signed this letter. I wanted to put it on record, Mr. Speaker, simply to show the Leader of the Opposition that he cannot take credit for all the work done in Quebec by Liberal members.

Mr. La Salle: This should be said!

Mr. Gourd: This is what I have just done, for the information of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, on September 25, I sent a series of questions to the deputy minister, and my letter has not even been acknowledged. In this letter, I put the following questions to the deputy minister:

1. Is there a cabinet decision concerning federal plans to revitalize and rearrange passenger rail services in Canada? Would it be possible to have a copy of this decision?

2. If there is no cabinet decision, is there a document which confirms the will of the government and (or) the Department of Transport to outline this plan? Would it be possible to have a copy of it?

3. As concerns the termination of passenger rail services on certain lines in the fall of 1981, do instructions outlining specific procedures for the abandonment of these lines exist within the government, the Department of Transport, the Transport Commission, VIA Rail Canada, Inc., the CN or the CP? If so, what are they and may I have copies?

4. Do section 252 and subsequent ones in the Railway Act apply when the Minister of Transport decides to abandon certain lines used for passenger services? If not, why and under what authority are the minister and (or) the department exempted from these provisions?

5. The line abandonment procedures will be initiated by whom, how, when and where?

6. Can the Transport Commission hold public hearings for line abandonments and, if so, what procedure should be followed to get a public hearing?

7. As concerns the Montreal-Lachute-Ottawa line, would you please tell me when the government intends to abandon this line? Which service and who is the official responsible for this matter in the Department of Transport?

8. Under what authority can the government and (or) the Department of Transport proceed with line abandonments without consulting the population and without holding public hearings before the Transport Commission? Under what acts and sections of these acts do you have such authority?

9. Are there mechanisms to appeal this type of decision and what are they?

10. Are the plans outlined by the Minister of Transport in his press release subject to review? By whom and how?

In view of the urgency of the situation, I trust, sir, that you will be able to provide replies to these questions as soon as possible.

I am still waiting for a simple acknowledgement from a secretary in the deputy minister's office. And that is not all. Since we are talking about the VIA Rail file, I will not say anything to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) about Mirabel where I am also waiting for the transfer of flights from Dorval. I would refer the minister to a document published in a newspaper, not a large newspaper for sure, just a small weekly in my riding, La Petite Nation, but still the research work was done. According to a press release issued by the minister, two criteria must be met before abandoning a service. I will summarize what we were able to find about those two criteria. Judging from information release No. 13081 dated July 27, 1981 and issued by the minister's office, it would seem that the decision to do away with Montreal-Hull VIA Rail passenger services stems from two criteria: the cost-revenue ratio and the occupancy coefficient. The cost-revenue ratio on the Montreal-Hull line would be 0.15. By definition, that is the revenue quotient, or the ticket sales figures over the costs of annual services offered. Now then, with somewhat lower ratios for five trips, the minister does not urge complete abandonment but rather a reduction to three weekly trips. Here is the gist of his arguments: service is maintained because certain remote communities are involved. Therefore, the cost-revenue ratio is not a rigid index which automatically calls for abandonment. By virtue of the same principle, it then becomes possible to insist that the Montreal-Hull service not be suppressed. The localities of Petite-Nation and Lachute are far from the large urban centres of Montreal and Hull, which is the centre of attraction of our rural valley.

Let us refer now to the second coefficient, occupancy. On the Montreal-Hull line, that coefficient is estimated to be 20 per cent. We would have a 100 per cent coefficient if 1,000 passengers filled the 1,000 seats available. Here is how the minister justifies his recommendation that the service be dropped: abandonment due to poor performance, a good highway network, a daily bus service between Ottawa, Lachute and Montreal, and direct Montreal-Ottawa rail passenger service.

● (1720)

Well, Mr. Speaker, none of those reasons will stand close scrutiny. It is a matter of intervention. Consequently, there is no justification to discontinue the Montreal-Hull run in the eyes of the residents of Petite-Nation and Montebello where the economic summit was held and which was the focus of worldwide attention. Mr. Speaker, we have heard the promises of the PQ government; we were promised an expressway, but now it is still on the drawing board and may turn out to be nothing more than a skidoo trail. That is what they call good highway links. There is no public transit system in the Petite-Nation valley which is home to 17,000 permanent residents and swells to 30,000 people during summer. Unless you drive your own car, there is no way you can reach the tourist centres of Petite-Nation or Lac Simon, at Duhamel, whose economic fallout is essential for our region. We have a bus service for an aging population of which 9.4 per cent are over age 65, whereas elsewhere in Quebec the rate is hardly higher than 6 per cent, including 29 per cent higher than Quebec as a whole. Petite-Nation badly needs a link between the medical and hospital service centres of Hull and Montreal, since it has no other functional transport services.

The daily bus service is not functional. It is altogether impossible to have a morning appointment because the bus picks up passengers at Papineauville, Thurso or Montebello around 11.45 a.m. and arrives in Montreal at 2.30 p.m. after long detours. It takes another half hour to jump into a cab and rush to a hospital or a government office. It is 3 p.m. before you can sit down in a waiting room, you have to pay for an overnight stay in Montreal and then grab the morning bus at 10 a.m. and get back to Papineauville around 1 p.m. That is a 26-hour trip for a 30-minute appointment. Only the train which returns at 5.50 p.m. cuts short that long journey.

Mr. Speaker, it is appalling to even consider eliminating rail passenger services on the north shore. In addition, Mr. Speaker, I want to mention the provocative action of VIA Rail against my constituents last summer during a demonstration in Montebello. VIA Rail sent a freshly painted and newly upholstered train when we usually have an old car without any commodities. I feel it is a provocative action against my constituents. I will not mention the work carried out all summer long while the tracks were being relaid.

Mr. Speaker, I am in a difficult position toward the Department of Transport. It is not the first time I have spoken out. The minister told me to be patient. But there is a limit to my patience. Reference has been made to Mirabel and we are still waiting. You told me: I am looking into the matter. I feel it is time to act instead of conducting studies. Mirabel is losing millions of dollars, while other airports are thriving. I put questions to you in the House and they were answered. I believed in the good faith of your department, but I have had enough.

Mr. Speaker, I had to say those few words. Unfortunately, I do not believe in the guile of the party opposite that would not consider this vote as a vote of non-confidence. I do not think that it is the best way to show the people that we are coping with our problems. I do not believe more particularly the Leader of the Opposition who says that Liberal members are silent or remain mum, because I am convinced that if the government side had more time available—and I see over there the member for Champlain (Mr. Veillette) who is also in the same situation—we would speak even more often.

Mr. Minister, I could mention other hon. members who are faced with the same problem and who are quite concerned about your department's decision. I urge you, therefore, to reconsider a little longer your department's decision to eliminate rail passenger services across Canada. If you could spend so much time reconsidering the transfer of flights from Dorval to Mirabel, I do not think that a further study would hurt the Canadian public. In conclusion, Mr. Minister, I urge you to reconsider this decision on behalf of some of my constituents whose signatures I have here and among which I happen to notice the names of Hélène Pepin, from Montebello—I hope she is not a relative of yours—and Antoine Bédard, from Lac Simon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member should always address his remarks to the Chair and never to the minister or an hon. member in particular.

Mr. Gourd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. But as you can see, I am so deeply disturbed by this decision which could affect my constituency so much that sometimes I find it very difficult to address the minister directly. So, I will direct my remarks to the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, and with your consent, I should like to table this complete file. You can read the names for yourself. They are not names I have made up; they represent people, nearly 500 of them, who are begging the minister to please reconsider his decision to discontinue a rail passenger service which is very useful to the public and which, for that matter, is the only means of transportation in Quebec on the north shore of the Ottawa river between Montreal and Hull.

Mr. Minister, it has been said that the provincial government is bent on dividing Canada. I am afraid such a decision would help our opponents in Quebec. The best way to divide it is to deprive it of a service which is essential indeed, Mr. Speaker, for it is the only means of transportation. When our bus drivers went on strike, it was indeed the only means of transportation available to my constituents to travel either to Hull, Ottawa or Montreal. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in the figures which were provided to the House and I am convinced that VIA Rail could make a better marketing effort or consult the people to find out about more convenient schedules instead of simply setting up others which are indeed inconvenient I already know of 60 people from Lachute who work in Montreal and who, because of the high costs of energy, would be delighted to commute by a rapid transit system. But if the Department of Transport has really made up its mind to get rid of this train, I know I will have a hard time explaining to my constituents that it is hopeless, that the train is gone, in spite of the millions of dollars which the corporation spent all summer long to rebuild the tracks. And why rebuild the tracks? Simply for the use of freight trains. Then, let the department increase the freight rates, so that my Argenteuil-Papineau constituents may keep their train!

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been consultations among all parties who have agreed that after the dinner break we will limit speeches to ten minutes each, in the following order. We will start on this side with the Conservative party, a Liberal will follow, then an NDP, then a Conservative, Liberal, NDP, Conservative, Liberal, Conservative and Liberal. I think this is agreed.

Mr. Pinard: That is agreed, Mr. Speaker. It is in accordance with what we have discussed. We hope the debate will resume very shortly after eight, in order to allow all hon. members mentioned by the hon. member for Yukon to participate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is so ordered.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, I rise with mixed emotions to speak on this important subject today. Frankly, there are few things that will be brought before this House of a financial nature in the current session more important than the subject we are debating today. I believe, in many ways, Mr. Speaker, we are witnessing a complete misunderstanding, an unfortunate mistake that need not occur if those responsible on the government side were to come to their senses and realize the total effect of what they are proposing. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, we should be unduly critical of the minister with respect to his decision. It is an easy mistake to make. When we were in government, we were faced with similar options which the minister undoubtedly faced when he took over.

• (1730)

On the question of rail transportation, I can recall that the bureaucracy of the day made a proposal for a cutback in VIA Rail of $100 million the first year. The bureaucracy went much further than that however. They said that the first year they would like to pare VIA Rail by $100 million; the second year they saw cuts in store amounting to $330 million; the year after that they proposed cutting VIA by $300 million; and the year after that by $270 million.

Mr. Pepin: It has never been presented to me.

Mr. Stevens: The minister says, "It has never been presented to me". If that has not been presented to the minister by his bureaucracy, then it is time he asked to see the true facts on the subject that is now before the House.

What was proposed by the bureaucracy in the Department of Transport was not just a $100 million reduction in the initial year, but the complete elimination of the VIA Rail budget as far as federal spending is concerned. They estimated the elimination of 4,000 jobs. Most important, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest this is simply further evidence of the unfortunate orientation of the Department of Transport in favour of air transport at the expense of the rail passenger service in this country. It is not by accident that the minister's department is being referred to not as the ministry of transport but as the air ministry.

In answer to a question a few days ago in the House, the minister stated that, according to his calculations, about 7 million tickets were sold for VIA Rail and the subsidy to VIA was $490 million. He has never attempted to show where the $490 million came from. The figures in the estimates show less than $490 million.

The minister says, Mr. Speaker, that 7 million is the total number of tickets sold to VIA passengers and the subsidy amounts to $490 million and that, to use his arithmetic, there is a loss of $70 to the taxpayers on each passenger. I challenge that, Mr. Speaker. I say that in spending that kind of money, I think we are providing a useful service for thousands of Canadians.

On the question of subsidization, where does the minister draw the line? Why does he treat his aristocratic friends, those who fly private jets, so handsomely? Why does he treat them to landing rights, to storage rights, and to other accommodation at our airports? That is in truth the height of subsidization. When we listen to speeches in the House and listen to the minister attempting to justify the withdrawal of services used by the lower income people of this country, let us remember that that same minister is endorsing landing fees for Lear jets at Toronto International Airport of $10 a crack. This is what it costs a person to land a Lear jet at the Toronto airport, an aircraft which carries, on average, six to ten passengers.

Why do we in this House get riled up, Mr. Speaker? Why are there two standards? If you have the money to own one of those 75 to 80 jets that are stored and flown into and out of Toronto International Airport, then apparently subsidization is just fine. It is okay to pay $10 to land. Think of the money it costs to run airports in this country. When the interest on some of the writeoffs is included, we know our airports in Canada are running at a loss of $400 million a year.

If there is to be wholesale subsidization of a group that is well above the poverty level—and everyone will agree with this—subsidization of those who fly corporate jets and other types of private aircraft, surely we should hesitate to cut costs by zeroing in on those who use VIA Rail and the rail passenger service in the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: It is a question of priorities. The Department of Transport has approximately $1.7 billion to spend in the present year. To my way of thinking, it is not a question of increasing the expenditure but rather a question of trying to make sure there is an equitable disposition of the funds for the greatest good and the largest number of Canadians.

Mr. Pepin: Right on.

Mr. Stevens: The minister X says, "Right on". At least we are in agreement on that point.

When we were the government, we reviewed exactly what we were debating in the House. We chose not to shortchange VIA Rail passengers at the expense of others, mainly the relatively poorer people who have to travel in this country. We chose to have a more equitable distribution of the transport funds so that VIA Rail could not only carry on their activities but so that their activities could, in fact, be expanded.

Mr. Pepin: I would like to see that decision by the Ministry of Transport.

Mr. Stevens: The minister is saying that he would like to see the decision. I would like the minister to stand up in the House and read into Hansard the spending estimates for VIA Rail for the fiscal year 1980 and what the spending estimates were for the fiscal year 1981.

You will find, Mr. Speaker, there was a significant increase in favour of VIA Rail from one year to the next. I would suggest that if the minister were to look into the records, he would find that the increases were made deliberately. I would suggest to the minister he cannot back up with facts the so-called savings of some $100 million that he thinks he can make. It will not happen.

Mr. Pepin: It is not a saving. It is a move from operation to investment.

Mr. Stevens: Here again the minister makes his case even worse. What he is saying is that it is not so much a question of restraint or of saving; that is not what he has in mind. What he wants to do is to gyp the people in Havelock of their service, gyp the people in Stouffville, gyp the people in Aurora, in Newmarket and in Barrie of their service, gyp the people in Edmonton and Saskatoon and in various areas of Quebec of their service so that he can concentrate on putting another service into another area of Canada. Better still, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the minister—I was not in the House but I watched television—that if he had been able to watch himself on television, he would have stopped sooner than he did!

• (1740)

The point I am making is that this is not a question of savings, although the minister disagrees with that. What he is trying to do is to realign or cut certain areas in Canada off from rail passenger service and reroute that money to some other place.

This party believes that rather than cutting back on VIA Rail in order to supply new services or for whatever reason the minister may feel desirable, the government should increase funding for VIA Rail to make it a better service on existing lines. It should not cut back service on any VIA Rail lines at the present time. I say that, bearing in mind that there are many areas in the minister's department where he could save sufficient money to help offset whatever he feels is an undue cost with respect to VIA Rail passenger service.

Let me give the minister a few examples. He told us that it cost $70 every time someone uses VIA Rail. I would ask if he has ever checked what it cost when a person gets on a plane or off a plane at Mirabel airport.

Mr. Pepin: Ten dollars on average, Canada-wide, for a year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Did you notice, Mr. Speaker, that the minister put in the words, "on average, Canada-wide". He glossed over the fact that on the one master-minded airport, which is now known even by the department as "White Elephant Mirabel", it costs $47 million per year to keep the doors open and to operate that airport. The last figures available are for 1979 when 1,230,000 people used that airport. That means that for every passenger who got on or off a plane at Mirabel, it cost the federal treasury $44. That is only part of the story, however. The government forgave some $600 million of the actual construction of Mirabel that was written off the books, but that is not included in the $44 figure.

Mr. Pepin: As for other airports in Canada.

Mr. Stevens: If we simply calculate the interest that the government still has to pay on that account, notwithstanding the fact that it has written it off the internal books, we see that another $75 million per year could be added to the cost of Mirabel. That means that for every person using Mirabel, the subsidy is $100.

Surely we must ask ourselves why the minister has this obsession with cutting out VIA Rail passenger service to so many important areas of Canada while he is apparently willing to live with that kind of subsidization for Mirabel. The minister said that on a national average basis the subsidy for every passenger at an airport is $10. I could tell him what the subsidy is at every individual airport, Mr. Speaker. For instance, the subsidy at Gander is $42.

When we ask if the government is doing a good job in operating the 25 largest airports in Canada, perhaps we should contrast what the government, through the minister's department, is doing with what is the case in the United States.

We are told that new airports are needed and that extensions to old ones are needed. How many people realize that the 25 largest airports in Canada handle about 43.5 million passengers annually? By coincidence, that is about the same number of passengers as are handled at O'Hare International Airport in Chicago in a year. In short, our total passenger traffic, by air, is roughly-equal to that handled at O'Hare Airport in Chicago in the United States. Yet the total subsidy that our government pays for operating those 25 airports in Canada is over $400 million, while O'Hare Airport operates at a profit.

It might be argued that with 43 million people using one airport, anyone could make a profit. But the fact is that none of the large airports in the United States lose money. I submit that if airport services were properly charged for in Canada and if the Lear jets were charged more than $10 in landing fees, our airports could be operated at a profit or could at least break even, just like those in the United States.

I draw attention to this because if the minister feels justified in spending $400 million to subsidize 25 large airports in Canada which are used by less than 20 per cent of the Canadian public, then something is wrong when he says that VIA Rail is entitled to a much lesser subsidy and, if his bureaucracy should get its way, there would be no subsidy whatsoever in the future.

Mr. Pepin: You are making it up. That is all in your mind.

Mr. Stevens: I am not frightened about what is in my mind, Mr. Speaker; it is what is in the minister's mind that frightens me.

I should like to deal specifically with the situation in my own area, in Ontario generally, but most specifically with the three lines that service the Toronto area and are still being run by the federal government. I am referring, of course, to the Havelock-Toronto line, the Stouffville-Toronto line and the Barrie-Toronto line.

The minister indicated in the House that he believes Mr. Snow, the transportation minister in Ontario, is willing to accept those lines as far as the Ontario government is concerned. If the minister believes that, then I would like him, through his parliamentary secretary or any way that he sees fit, to produce evidence that Mr. Snow has committed himself to taking over even one of those lines, let alone all three.

Mr. Pepin: That is what I said—"I believe".

Mr. Stevens: I hope you heard that, Mr. Speaker. The minister said, "That is why I said 'I believe' ".

Mr. Pepin: That is my opinion.

Mr. Stevens: I am a believer too, Mr. Speaker, but having dealt with this government for almost nine years, I have found that there are many things you might want to believe but you would be a fool if you continued to believe that it would do what it says.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: If the minister believes that the Ontario government may take over one or more of those lines, let me put this to him—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have the opportunity to address the government's policies of upgrading passenger rail services in Canada in order to meet the requirements of the next decade.

First, I would like to congratulate the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) for the courage he has shown in proposing a program to improve the efficiency of VIA Rail's services in Canada. Indeed, at the risk of being unpopular, the hon. minister is seeking a way to reduce substantially VIA Rail's deficit to help it upgrade its long-haul passenger services.

Over 30 years ago, the bishop of Gaspé, Mgr. Ross, said, and I quote:

—the lack of communications is the main reason why the Gaspé has lagged and is still lagging behind economically.

For the people of the Gaspé, the lack of communications and transportation remains a major concern.

Mr. Speaker, with the development of expressways in Canada in the last two decades, which was made possible through federal funding, and federal-provincial shared cost programs, Canada has become a country with one of the highest ratio of expressway kilometres per capita in the world.

VIA Rail

With the implementation of ARDA, the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Program, FRED, the Fund for Rural Economic Development, DREE and its agreements with the provinces, the Canadian government has helped the development of secondary road systems and service roads to natural resources sites, such as forests or mines. It is not surprising that with the development of such a good road system, some short-haul train services should lose some of their historic importance to the benefit of bus transportation. It is therefore normal under the circumstances that the Canadian government, through VIA Rail, should decide to reappropriate funds toward long-haul rail services.

Mr. Speaker, in the last few years, I have taken a very active part in the public hearings into rail transportation in the Gaspé area. The general criteria for improving the efficiency of rail services seem to be the following: relative cost-efficiency, distances between communities and important urban centres, elimination of duplication of subsidized services and the logical requirement of integrating short-haul urban transportation into the road transportation system. VIA Rail serves over 100,000 people in the Gaspé area from Matapédia to Grande-Vallée. For many, the train is the only available means of transportation. An economic study conducted by VIA Rail showed that in this area the train is the second most popular means of transportation for people.

Mr. Speaker, the Gaspé is one of those regions in Canada where an adequate rail service is warranted because of distances to large cities. Also, service would become more popular if VIA Rail could improve its quality by investing in the appropriate rolling stock. I would like, by way of example, to relate an event I experienced early in January 1981.

It took, at that time, over 58 hours to travel from Gaspé to Montréal, at an average speed of about 10 miles per hour. The Canadian Transport Commission report of inquiry into the reasons for this delay confirmed that it was a result of the poor condition of the rolling stock. A study conducted by the CTC on transportation in eastern Quebec and New Brunswick, following the delays that occurred during the Christmas holidays of 1980-81, found that in 43.5 per cent of cases, delays were due to the deterioration of the rolling stock. In 1979, after some hearings in the Gaspé, the CTC decided to reintroduce autorails from Matapédia to Gaspé, and the commissioners cited the same reasons.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the long-term savings achieved by the Department of Transport will enable it to improve transport infrastructures in the underprivileged areas in that regard, such as the Gaspé peninsula.

Generally, it can be said that the presence of an airport makes a wider area accessible to industrial and commercial activity through direct contacts with eventual clients; it also increases the volume of business. In addition, air travel encourages greater personnel efficiency by adding to the effective time on the job of management and technical staff.

Among other things, air transportation enhances marketing possibilities for perishable products, in that they can be shipped more quickly to consumer markets. The products of the sea and others would all benefit from being shipped by air rather than by ground transportation.

The activities of the fishing and tourist industries in the Lower St. Lawrence and the Gaspé peninsula are gradually being oriented toward more intensive and especially more rational development. Of the various facilities planned for those industries, the construction of industrial airports at Pabos and Sainte-Anne-des-Monts should be considered in the very near future. That is to say, Mr. Speaker, that the minister has become aware of the need for air transportation very recently as far as the Gaspé Peninsula is concerned.

The Ministry of Transport and that of Regional Economic Expansion must also plan on improving the infrastructure of port facilities in the Gaspé region and more particularly in Gaspé-Nord which, it will be remembered, lacks both railways and highways.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that the rationalization program of rail passenger services will allow VIA Rail to improve the quality of its services, thus enabling it to recapture its rightful share of the passenger transportation market in Canada.

The capital expenditure budget increase announced by the Minister of Transport on July 27, 1981 will further be used to modernize diesel cars and purchase new stock. The people in the Gaspé peninsula I represent in this House believe and hope that the cutback of less viable services across Canada will allow VIA Rail to improve services on other lines such as those in the peninsula and better compete with other modes. Moreover, the Ministry of Transport will now be in a position to invest more in marine infrastructures and the development of industrial and commercial airports in areas as remote as the peninsula. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I will vote against the motion put forward by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), since the policies announced by this government have and will promote the development of other services in the peninsula.

[English]

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I will have but a few moments before calling it six o'clock; but I would like to indicate that in the period immediately after the House resumes, I want to deal in particular with a number of the very important energy aspects of the cutbacks announced by the minister of July 27, and to point out, in fact, that perhaps innocently—may I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 5.59 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In accordance with the House order adopted before six o'clock as I understand it, speeches will be limited to ten minutes. The hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon).

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, in a sense I regret having a limit of ten minutes in which to make my remarks this evening in view of the fact that so many people across Canada will be adversely affected by the decisions taken by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) on July 27. These decisions will have a massive social impact on whole communities, businesses and individuals in Canada. In view of the fact that many members want to speak about these problems, I will restrict my comments to some of the quantitative implications of these decisions, and perhaps challenge the Minister of Transport on the question of energy, load factors, performance and cost.

I believe that the Minister of Transport has falsely, albeit innocently, informed Canadians on the question of energy and energy use as it pertains to our national rail transportation system. At the time of the press release at the end of July when the minister announced these cutbacks, he said, in part:

> Railways are one of the least energy-efficient, energy economic methods, if not the least. Why? Simply because it is not energy economic to drag an empty car, and that is the situation now.

That statement is totally misleading. Before I came to this House of Commons I worked as a mechanical engineer and scientist. I can say with some authority that railway trains are the most energy efficient methods of all transportation modes. That fact can be substantiated quantitatively and firmly without any further controversy. In fact, a conventional diesel powered railway train operating with a high load factor will consume only about 700 energy units, referred to in the old jargon as British thermal units per seat mile, and an electric train will consume only about 150 energy units per seat mile, as compared with 2,000 to 7,500 energy units per seat mile for conventional automobiles, depending on the number of passengers, and 2,700 to 5,000 Btu's per seat mile for passenger aircraft. In other words, if we were to assume that all these various types of vehicles were filled virtually to capacity, the railway train would be at least four times as efficient and in many cases seven and ten times as energy efficient as our aircraft and passenger automobiles. In fact, the railway train is potentially more energy efficient than highway buses.

To illustrate: if one were to imagine a string of highway intercity buses with their rubber tires removed and attached together running on a railway track, those units would consume in total considerably less energy than if those buses were running individually on the highway, for two reasons. The first reason is that the drag that air produces would be much lower if you had a string of buses or a string of railway cars than if you had a number of individual units. The second is that the rolling friction on a relatively straight track is much lower for a rail borne transportation device than for a highway bus. In fact, the Minister of Transport is totally incorrect when he suggests that trains are one of the least energy efficient modes of transport. In terms of miles we can travel by train per gallon consumed, a modern efficient railway train will travel 400 to 500 passenger miles as compared to 20, 40 or 60 passenger miles for an automobile. An intercity bus, if it is operating at peak efficiency with full load, will obtain about 300 passenger miles per gallon. A Boeing 727 aircraft will obtain only about 35 pasenger miles per gallon. Therefore, one can go a great deal farther with a gallon of fuel by train than by any other mode of transport.

If we look at Transport Canada's own data as well as data from other sources, we will see that Canadian airlines are operating at an efficiency rate of something like 28 passenger miles per gallon. Compare that with the mileage you obtain with your automobile. Canadian automobiles obtain about 20 to 60 passenger-miles per gallon, but trains obtain 100 to 250 passenger miles per gallon. Even the old and antiquated trains operating today in Canada are able to achieve this.

Data from Transport Canada and from the bus industry indicates that buses operating on our highways are getting only 140 passenger miles per gallon. Therefore, we have the potential for saving vast amounts of energy if we encourage a gradual transition to increased rail use. This means that it is essential for people like the Minister of Transport to start talking trains and increased load factor, rather than dismantling the system, but he must encourage the ever-increasing efficiency of our rail transportation system in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: As Canadians shift from highway and air travel back to passenger trains, the energy savings to Canada will be massive. Passenger rail services spend less than 5 per cent of their operating budgets on fuel compared to much higher fuel budgets for the airlines and the highway bus industry.

We might also consider that while trains used only about ten million gallons of fuel last year, buses used 20 million, domestic airlines over 700 million, and take note of this, Mr. Speaker, the conventional automobile consumed over 8,000 million gallons of fuel last year, or 8 billion gallons.

The more people are encouraged to change their modes of transport to the use of trains, the more we will decrease our dependence on that very precious and costly commodity, namely oil, particularly imported oil. Indeed, government policies which will reduce the availability of rail passenger services to Canadians will only serve to increase our per capita consumption of precious petroleum fuels, with a commensurate increase in the subsidy costs to all Canadian taxpayers.

In the last remaining minute or so that I have I would like to comment on a recent report released by Amtrak. It is dated May 20, 1981. This report reveals everything about Amtrak's operations to the American people, which is in total contradiction to the position which this minister has taken. Amtrak has released performance figures. Amtrak has told the American people just how well it has performed over the last two or three years. Amtrak has also instituted something called a route profitability system in which the cost effectiveness of all of the various routes served by Amtrak are monitored and regularly reported.

A most important conclusion in this report is that by converting to head end power in the United States, they have realized tremendous increases in efficiency as measured by the number of passenger miles per train mile. A most essential point is that passenger miles per train mile in the United States have been increasing remarkably on long distance trips. On the other hand, the passenger miles performed per train mile on the northeast corridor service, which is the New York-Washington-Boston sector, has actually been decreasing, and it is operating at a much lower rate of efficiency than the long distance services.

• (2010)

The point the Minister of Transport should be listening to, and I wish he would, is that long distance train service, rather than jerky, start-stop intercity service is, in the final analysis, much more efficient, and also more efficient than the modern type corridor system operated between Washington and New York through to Boston. Therefore, his suggestion that he is taking away from the regions their very essential rail service in order to benefit the corridor service between Windsor and Quebec City is, indeed, based on totally false economy. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to keep my remarks within the ten minute limit so as many people as possible on both sides of this House can participate in the debate.

First I want to express my regret that the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), the former Minister of Transport, has seen fit to introduce this motion under Standing Order 58(9), which calls quite clearly for a vote of non-confidence in the government. The hon. member knows that, in spite of the rhetoric in the motion that says that, notwithstanding any Standing Order, practice or precedent, the House does not regard the passage of this motion as a vote of non-confidence, one cannot change the rules of the House by rhetoric. The rules are the rules. This is unfortunate because I suspect that had he chosen another route, he would have had some support from those of us on the government side because we are concerned about these cutbacks, as are members of the Conservative and New Democratic parties. The fact that these other routes, which are available according to the rules of the House, were not taken would indicate that the Tories, as usual, are playing politics with this issue, that they are not really interested, despite their words, in the effect cutbacks will have on jobs and on consumers.

Having said that, I should like to spend a few moments dealing with a particular cutback which affects the people of New Brunswick, and that is the cutback of the Moncton to Edmundston rail liner service. In a letter to the regional vice-president of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway,

Transport and General Workers, the Minister of Transport said this:

> The Moncton-Edmundston service is to be discontinued because of poor performance. However, alternate modes of transportation such as bus service through Fredericton and highway access to intermediate points on the train route are presently available.

I believe the minister has been very badly briefed on that subject. The facts would indicate otherwise. This rail liner service is an essential service to the northwest and central sections of New Brunswick. Without rail service, these portions of New Brunswick will be virtually segregated from the rest of the province and, consequently, the rest of Canada. With the cancellation of this train, citizens on the route will find it virtually impossible to go to Moncton and return on the same day to take advantage of the specialized medical treatment available in the city. It will also be very difficult for university students to get to the University of Moncton and back to their homes in northwestern New Brunswick.

At present, a resident of the Edmundston area can leave Edmundston at 7.30 in the morning by rail liner, arrive at 12.15 p.m. in Moncton, and have until 5.55 p.m. to conduct whatever business is necessary. He can then board the rail liner and return home by 10.40 p.m. at a return cost of $26 for an adult.

To travel the 586 road miles return by car would take at least 6 hours each way and would cost approximately $42. If you use normal business mileage rates of 25 cents per mile, the cost would be $146.50.

The only other alternative is to take the bus, leaving Edmundston at seven in the morning, have a two and a half hour wait in Fredericton, transfer buses again at Sussex and arrive in Moncton at four o'clock in the afternoon, leaving little or no time to seek medical or dental assistance. One would have to arrange accommodation for the night because the only time you can return by bus is the next afternoon at 2.15 p.m., arriving back in Edmundston later that night at a return cost of $62.50 per adult.

From an economic standpoint, the return cost by rail liner is $26, by car, using a conservative figure for the cost of gas, it is $42, and by bus the cost is $62.50, plus at least one night's accommodation.

I hope I have made it clear that the alternatives are simply unwieldy, expensive and not viable. I would plead with the minister, whom I know to be a compassionate and caring man, to reconsider his July 27 announcement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCauley: Members of the NDP are clapping. Let us remember that members of the NDP suggested this afternoon that there were some routes which could be cut. It is true that there are, but there are some that should be maintained. On behalf of all New Brunswickers I plead with the minister to reconsider the cancellation of the Moncton to Edmundston rail liner service. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): I am also pleased, Mr. Speaker, to have the opportunity to speak on behalf of the New Democratic Party regarding the cutbacks in VIA Rail imposed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). I believe the minister has been ill advised. He has bypassed the Canadian Transport Commission, a commission which is vital to the good understanding of railway transportation in Canada. The railway workers and the people of Canada generally have sent their representatives to hearings of the commission to present their cases. I think it is doing an injustice to the people of Canada to break and violate this vital and important link in our stream of communications. I say shame to the Minister of Transport!

After saying that, I want to say that the people of VIA Rail, not satisfied with taking over and promising improved transportation, have cut back from the 23 CPR Transcontinental cars which operated in the summer months to an average of 12 to 13 cars a day. As if that were not bad enough, the minister has now come forward and suggested eliminating completely the run from Edmonton to Vancouver. I want to comment briefly on that suggestion.

I have a letter that was sent to the Minister of Transport from the Municipality of Revelstoke signed by the mayor. I will not read the whole letter, but it says, in part:

> —the City Council applied for 8 bedrooms to travel from Revelstoke to Vancouver on September 22nd, 1981 and return from Vancouver on September 25th, 1981. Although we applied a month in advance for reservations, we were informed that there was only one bedroom available on September 22nd, 1981 and none available on September 25th, 1981.

In addition, the minister is suggesting that we eliminate the northern portion of this very important route. We of the New Democratic Party toured part of central British Columbia and visited some of these areas. We received petition after petition, some from people in Prince George and Prince Rupert, many from chambers of commerce and municipalities, all urging us to insist that people from these areas be given the opportunity at least to be heard and to present their views.

When VIA Rail took over, there was a commitment to live up to past agreements with the railway workers. Let me refer very briefly to pensioners, the many workers on our railways who have worked long and tedious hours building up pensions which are, incidentally, very mediocre, and also building up pass rights on the transcontinental trains. When they apply to travel on these trains, they are told there are no vacancies. Shame on the Minister of Transport. Shame on the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), who was also a railway worker, sitting on that side of the House supporting that kind of drastic action which has been taken by the Minister of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Parker: Passengers are being left standing on the platform in Banff, a major tourist area. When a train of 13 fully booked cars heads out into the western region during the summer, it is not hard to understand that people who live in these mountainous regions, especially the poor and the elderly, have no opportunity to travel on these trains. Not only would they like to travel in them, they have no other alternative because there are no airports in this mountainous region.

The stretch of highway from Field to Golden, the Trans-Canada highway, is a disgrace.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parker: Something should be done about it. I have asked the minister time after time, when will this section of highway be improved? In the Cranbrook region there is an area of some 230 miles with a population of about 30,000 people. Not even the Greyhound bus line connects that city and the small communities in between with the trans-continental train.

An hon. Member: It is called free enterprise.

Mr. Parker: I suppose these people are expected to drive that distance only to be told by a CP Rail official that he has to phone Winnipeg to find out what time the train will arrive. There is not even a postal box in the station. When people are travelling across Canada, they often wish to mail a postcard. They cannot even get off the train to send a postcard. These are the kinds of services that have been cut back and changed. After some consideration, they did allow the phone company to instal pay phones in stations to enable people who arrive in remote areas at least to phone a taxi to collect them.

The minister does not even have the decency to travel across Canada to meet the people and to discuss these issues.

An hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Parker: CP Rail is not exactly innocent in this, either. It has sold 30-year-old equipment and, when it breaks down, not only do they charge for its repair but they charge for another diesel to help bring it up the hill. Then they have to take a yard engine, because it has a steam generator, and they bring it over and put it on a passenger train. They use any kind of patch-up work to get the train across Canada. When is the Ministry of Transport going to come forward with a transportation policy and a program to show the Canadian people we are entitled to an up-to-date railway system to give adequate service to the Canadian people?

We should not have to worry about whether the airlines will lose passengers. Many people cannot travel by air, they do not wish to travel by air.

An hon. Member: The CPR and the Liberals are the same folk.

Mr. Parker: These are some of the concerns people would like to present to the committee. I would urge that the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) be given serious consideration. I would urge the Government of Canada to implement this recommendation long before making decisions of the nature the minister is proposing.

VIA Rail

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, the government appears certain to carry out its directive to cancel 16 passenger rail lines nationally. These cancellations will severely hamper efficient passenger travel.

Two of the lines to be terminated operate in New Brunswick. One is the Atlantic Limited which carries somewhere in the vicinity of 240,000 passengers annually, despite the minister's protestations to the contrary. The second line is the Moncton to Edmunston line which was designed to operate as an intercity commuter service. It carries approximately 20,000 passengers annually. This line also serves such communities as Chipman and Minto. Both communities do not have any other mode of intercity linkage, contrary to the information the minister might try to pass on to this House in justification of his measures.

The Atlantic Limited is the most economical and direct link from Montreal to southern New Brunswick and the other maritime provinces. Saint John, New Brunswick is 473 miles from Montreal, and the trip takes 13 hours. If passengers are required to travel around the province and double back to southern New Brunswick on the Ocean Limited, as the minister proposes, the trip would be extended to 739 miles or 20 hours. The travel distance would be 76 per cent greater and the travel time 62 per cent longer.

An hon. Member: What are the energy savings there?

Mr. Corbett: This unnecessarily long delay will promote energy consumption rather than energy conservation in an energy-importing region. It will promote isolation in an area badly neglected by the federal government.

At this point I would like to draw attention, as an example of the isolation and neglect of the federal government of the Atlantic region, particularly New Brunswick, to the absence from this debate of the minister responsible for New Brunswick. Where is the person who should be standing up and speaking on behalf of New Brunswick as New Brunswick's representative in the Cabinet? He has been stonily silent, icily silent.

An hon. Member: Who is that?

Mr. Corbett: He is the gentleman—I happen to know because I occasionally see his face in the local papers—he is the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc). You would hardly know he is an individual who speaks for the rights of New Brunswickers in this House. Where is the other member from New Brunswick who should be in this House, the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin)? His region will be directly affected by the abolition of the line the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. McCauley) just talked about. That will directly affect the people in his constituency. He should be here as the voice of the people he represents just as we who are here are doing.

What hope do the people of New Brunswick or the people of Atlantic Canada have with this government? Obviously none.

This government refuses to listen. It refuses to care. During the last election campaign, why did the minister not come to Saint John, New Brunswick or Atlantic Canada and tell the people the government would take away their train if he was elected? Why did the government not tell the people of Atlantic Canada that if it came back to power it would force them out of their homes? Why did the Liberals not tell the people in Atlantic Canada that, if elected, they would reduce air services, increase the price of gasoline and home heating fuels? Why did they not do that?

The people are fed up. They are saying: What in God's name are we going to do? Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, their plight is desperate.

• (2030)

The minister rests his decision on the argument that new equipment is necessary and can only be provided if these costly passenger rail services are eliminated. A better method of raising the moneys for this equipment would be to arrange a fair billing procedure between VIA Rail, Canadian National and Canadian Pacific. At their own discretion, CN and CP bill VIA for the use of its rail lines at an exorbitant profit. Sixty-three per cent of all VIA Rail expenses are paid for rail line usage alone. The actual unit cost of using these lines is unknown to VIA. However, it is known to the minister, the CTC, CN and CP. VIA president, Frank Roberts, maintained before the Standing Committee on Transport that if VIA is to operate efficiently, it must have some sort of fixed contract with CN and CP rather than be subject to the greed of these two megacorporations. In effect, Canada's passenger rail service is subsidizing freight transportation. Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is subsidizing freight transportation. Let the minister effectively deny that.

If CN and CP would deal fairly with VIA, the needed moneys could remain in VIA's coffers for the purchase of new equipment, without sacrificing 16 passenger rail lines. CN and CP are milking Canadians for a passenger rail service by the very mechanism they received in exchange for providing this service. CPR entered into an agreement with the federal government stating:

> —in consideration of the completion and perpetual and efficient operation of the railway by the said Company, as stipulated in the said contract, the Government may grant to the Company a subsidy of $25 million in money and 25 million acres of land to be paid and conveyed to the Company . . . land for the right of way, stations and other purposes, and such other privileges as are provided for in the said contract.

These vast holdings have given the railways a moral and constitutional obligation to the citizens of this nation. The railroads should expect to bear a substantial proportion of the deficit. CN and CP should share the cost of this deficit.

When the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) was in Saint John earlier this month, he advised New Brunswickers that he was cancelling the Atlantic Limited for their own good. He told us we should be grateful that the federal government is taking the Atlantic Limited away from us. If he is sincere, if he believes we will be thankful that the transportation system hundreds of thousands of people in Atlantic Canada rely on will be rendered useless and if he sincerely believes we will be happy, then he and his government are mad, or certainly deranged.

I recently presented a petition of some 11,400 signatures to the House of Commons. These signatures were collected in the Saint John area. The petition protests the cutbacks. Since that time, another 1,000 names have been added. I can tell the minister it is not a desired measure. Saint John is New Brunswick's largest city. Let the minister name one other province in mainland Canada which has its largest city not serviced by a major passenger rail service. There are none. Saint John has been cut off. Southern central New Brunswick has been cut off. Atlantic Canada has been cut off. The minister shows his indifference by getting up and walking out. From the point of view of this minister, the citizens of our region are nothing more than pimply pests on the posterior of time. The government will find out in due course just how pesky we can be.

I will leave a message for the minister, his government, the supporters of his government and those people who will stand this evening and vote against the motion put forward by the official opposition and the amendment put forward by the New Democratic Party. The message is from all people. Listen well, Mr. Minister, listen well to me; for if you don't, the last whistle that blows will surely blow for thee.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I support the minister's decision, and I am rising now to defend it. The minister has made a decision to invest in Canada's future. He has made a tough one because, as we have heard here tonight, there are many voices asking us to invest in small decisions which support inefficiencies and drain away the money and the capital we need for our rail system in the next ten to 15 years.

Mr. Taylor: Tell that to the people who have to walk.

Mr. Fisher: I hear hon. members opposite from western Canada talking, and I ask them especially to remember that their region in this country is going to need $12 billion to $16 billion in new investment in railroads over the next decade. We want that money to be there, and we cannot afford to waste that money on empty trains which use up needed investment.

Mr. Siddon: Just leave us alone. Let us make our own decisions.

Mr. Fisher: Last Friday the minister told us that every time a passenger gets on a train in this country, we pay $70 in subsidy. Three of us were in a taxicab after the minister made that comment. I asked the driver how far he would take the three of us for $210, and the driver told us he would give us a ride to Montreal, buy us tickets to the Expos game, wait around and bring us back to Ottawa afterwards. That is the kind of expense we are undertaking with these kinds of trains.

The minister has taken a fundamental decision which stresses three important points. He has said, first and foremost, that we must put a cap on the subsidies we give to the passenger rail service in Canada. Five hundred million dollars is enough in subsidy. The minister has made the decision that there will be no blank cheque for the passenger rail service because we need the money for other rail services which are more productive. The minister has said that if VIA Rail needs more money, then VIA Rail will have to earn that money. Third, the minister has given VIA Rail the tools to go about earning that money. Despite the emotional claims we have heard tonight, he has not abandoned VIA Rail. He is supporting VIA Rail. He is giving that service the capital it needs to buy new rolling stock in order to attract new passengers and get more revenues so that the subsidies can go down.

We can hear the uproar, but we also know the facts. The uproar will die, and we hope the subsidy will die with it. The uproar we have heard here today is typical of the distortions which are happening in this debate. Let us make it clear that the very motion today, which our friends in the New Democratic Party call reasonable, says we are abandoning VIA Rail. We are not abandoning VIA Rail.

We have heard other distortions, such as that we are losing our passenger train service. We are not. We are reducing 19 per cent of the route miles that passenger service offers. That effects 1.2 million passenger trips every year, 600,000 of which are in my area, that is, Toronto. They are commuter trips. Those commuter services should be left alone by the federal government. We have no business offering them. There are three routes in the metro Toronto area on which currently we are doing a big favour to the Government of Ontario. We are paying $70 a head for 600,000 passengers in the metropolitan Toronto area every year. That is a cost which should quite rightly be transferred to the people of Ontario and not paid by the Government of Canada. We had acknowledgement of that fact from the government of Ontario. In its task force report, recommendation No. 4.7 on page six of the final report describes the geographic area covered by this commuter service. It is the exact same area that we are transferring to Mr. Snow and his colleagues in the government of Ontario.

● (2040)

I ask all members to pay close attention to that good Tory and good Liberal, a friend of mine, a man who knows his way around railroads, Paul Hellyer, who stated in a recent newspaper column:

> At long last the government has decided to face the music. Inevitably, however, the reaction has been shrill and abusive—
>
> It isn't surprising to hear the politicians yell blue murder because that's what the game of politics is like. But when the press climbs aboard, responsible politicians must wonder if there is any hope. Last week, for example, The Globe and Mail attacked government spending as the cause of inflation. Now it condemns the first serious effort the Liberals have made in a long time to cut expenditures. Cynicism is a two-way street.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member who just resumed his seat might entertain a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) accept a question?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I only have ten minutes, which does not permit time to accept questions. Perhaps if there is any time left at the end of my speech, I can accept the question.

All of the critics who have risen to attack this action have forgotten one simple fact. We have to come back constantly to that fact. VIA Rail cannot have, does not have, and does not want a blank cheque from the Canadian people. VIA Rail this year is costing the Canadian people $450 million in subsidies. We want that subsidy to be spent in the most effective and desirable way. We are prepared to spend that money in a fashion that will keep full trains running. We will also get new equipment, which is an investment in that railway's future. That is a fact that has been acknowledged and applauded by the president of the railroad, Frank Roberts, who says:

> —now we've got a good basic system we can build on—

Roberts insists it will mean millions of dollars for badly needed new equipment. To be precise, it means $450 million over the next three years for new equipment. That equipment will not only be used, as has been said here, in the Quebec City to Windsor corridor, but will be used in Atlantic Canada and western Canada.

It will not simply be a shuffling of dollars from one railroad to another because we have written a costing order. It will be a genuine saving and a genuine investment. It will free up money that otherwise would not be available for the major investment and resource projects, in double-tracking, in the new Rogers Pass project and for the other projects that bring so much hope and are so necessary for the development of resources in western Canada and all across Canada.

No longer do we need to maintain worn out old patterns just because they are comfortable patterns. This country needs to look at its rail transport system. We need to invest in the effective, productive places.

We need to look at each of these subsidies and ask about their value. We should ask whether they are draining off resources that would otherwise be used for a stronger economic future. The minister has done that with VIA Rail. We have a lot more similar tough decisions to make along that line in the next ten years.

When we hear about this kind of local petty boosterism of encouraging people to go down to the railroad station and clap when the train comes in and then get in their car and drive home, to clap simply because the train was there, we must ask ourselves whether that is a productive way to build our future. Is that a genuine option? I do not think so.

The real option is one where we build a rail system that will endure into the next century because it is built to fill an economic need and to perform economically.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher), we hope, has gone a long way this evening toward realizing his ambition to be chairman of the transport committee. The minister may look kindly upon his efforts tonight, although one can only look with horror upon the prospect of such a chairmanship, having listened to the hon. member tonight.

Many of the arguments for keeping the lines which have been abandoned by the government in this latest dictatorial move were made well and often this afternoon in terms of energy, jobs, national unity and tourism. I do not intend to try to go over them in the short ten minutes allotted to me. I want to emphasize a few of the points and, perhaps, bring in a few new ones.

Something we have not talked about with regard to the reduction of service in northern Ontario is the fact that many people have cottages between Winnipeg and Farlane in Ontario. As a result of this most recent announcement by the government, people will have no opportunity to go to their cottages on weekends from September through to June. That is a small problem on a national scale, but those people have made a big investment. They are among the people served by that line on which service has been reduced. I wanted to bring that to the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) as well.

The hon. member for Kootenay-East Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) mentioned the problem of passholders in general. The minister does not realize what he is doing to Canadian National passholders. The arrangement that VIA has with Canadian National Railways is that CN passholders can only travel on what were formerly or are at present CN lines. This proposal effectively disenfranchises almost all CN passholders. CN passholders in Winnipeg can only travel to Capreol. They cannot get to Toronto, Montreal or west. They can go north.

The pass privileges these people have received over the years as part of what was negotiated at the bargaining table has been taken away by the minister in one fell swoop. This falls particularly hard on pensioners who rely on their pass and tend to use it more than young people, particularly those who do not drive. Unless there is a change in the relationship between VIA and CN as far as pass privileges are concerned, there are many people, who now are unaware of it, who will be badly affected by this decision of the transport minister.

Part of the problem with VIA Rail is that they treat passholders as though they had some kind of disease instead of as people who have earned the right over a number of years by working for the railroad. The minister is here tonight. He has not looked up since I have started to speak.

Mr. Pepin: I can do both.

Mr. Blaikie: He does not know what he is dealing with here. I come from a railway family. My grandmother lives in Biggar, Saskatchewan. She has a CN pass. My grandfather worked for the railroad as a car knocker in Biggar from 1912 to 1958. My grandmother will not be able to visit her children and grandchildren in Winnipeg as a result of the decision made by the transport minister to reduce service between Saskatoon and Winnipeg.

Those in Melville, Watrous, Rivers, a line I used to work as a pantry man, have been completely erased from the railway transportation system. I can tell the minister they will not forget it.

The last thing I want to say is that this is a test for the Liberal backbenchers to show whether they have any integrity. We want to know. We will be watching tonight to see where are the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae), the hon. member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), the hon. member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chénier), and the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mrs. Erola), members whose ridings are on the lines that are affected by these reductions. If they are here and have the nerve to vote against this particular motion, that is something that will be carried to each doorstep in their riding. I am sure each opposition party will promise them this.

● (2050)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: The pathetic state of what it means to be a Liberal backbencher in this government will be illustrated tonight in a way that could never be illustrated before. People will be standing up one by one like seals voting against the interests of their own constituents. I can hardly wait to see this. In my heart of hearts, it will make me sick to watch this. We will probably see it happen. I have said enough, on this, Mr. Speaker. It is absolutely beyond the pale of this government to reverse the decision which it has made in such a dictatorial fashion. Yet it does not have the nerve to look people in the eye and try to justify this regrettable and stupid decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): I welcome the opportunity to speak in this debate. I found it strange that one of the speakers from our side found it necessary to mention that Otto Lang was more democratic than the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). The members of the Liberal party who know Otto Lang will find it difficult to believe he would be more democratic than the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Deniger: I spent many years under that direction.

Mr. McKnight: I hear the hon. member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger) saying, "I spent many years under that direction." He would understand, therefore, the analogy that has been drawn.

This is a timely debate, Mr. Speaker, because the Parliament of Canada has been denied until today the ability to speak and discuss the abandonment of almost 20 per cent of the rail passenger service. Our party found it necessary to travel across the country this summer to let the public of Canada express its concerns and to state facts and information as to why the passenger service should be retained as it is at present. I believe there is reason for the people in the province of Saskatchewan to present petitions and to make interventions and representations. For instance, the town of Unity, ably represented by Mrs. Leeson, said:

> The federal government and VIA Rail's decision to discontinue through rail service is beginning to leave a bitter taste in our mouths. We feel annoyed, exasperated and, to say the least, very angry. Exasperated, because Mr. Pepin seems to be hiding from the general public in not allowing any public meetings to express our objections and concerns.

I should like to point out that the then Minister of Transport, during the time of the Western Economic Opportunities Conference, now Senator Marchand, said:

> I am sure that it is also clear to the provinces that we will need to involve municipalities and that consultation at a local level is of essence.

This government denied the process: it did not allow the municipalities to make statements; it did not allow the public to become involved in its decision. The manner in which the present minister made the decision, without consultation, without public hearings, without parliamentary debate, has been criticized across the country.

I should like to refer to Mr. Homer Hallberg, local chairman of Lodge 1230 of the United Transportation Union at Biggar. He told the task force of the severe hardships and economic consequences if this cut of the northern transcontinental goes throught. He said:

> It should be pointed out that the transcontinental service which VIA Rail is offering, will create hardship and inconvenience to anyone travelling from Saskatoon to Vancouver. Such people will have to change trains at Edmonton and go to Calgary to entrain for Vancouver, an extra 200 miles or more. And travelling east of Biggar, for example, passengers will have to stop overnight in Saskatoon or travel that far by some means other than train. There are many elderly people who, for medical reasons, cannot utilize other means of transportation, such as planes, and who do not have motor vehicles accessible to them. And what of young families who choose to travel "the way of the worry free"?

This was a representation made on behalf of the citizens of Biggar.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael), is not in the House. There are about 1,600 railway workers who will be laid off because of the arbitrary decision. Approximately 225 workers will be laid off in the city of Winnipeg. If the hon. member wishes to protect the Minister of Transport rather than his own constituents, that is his choice. I believe he will pay dearly for that in the next general election because 225 jobs in the city of Winnipeg is an important matter.

Mr. Pepin: That is not right.

Mr. McKnight: The Minister of Transport is saying, "That is not right". So far he has not disputed the 1,600 jobs. He cannot dispute the 225 lay-offs. He will tell us, Mr. Speaker, $30 million is available for retraining. So far we do not know who will receive the money or how the money will be administered, and we do not know when these people will become eligible for it.

I should like to point out again what Mrs. Leeson said. She said:

> What is the logic in running (the train) between Winnipeg and Calgary, when the ridership has been heavier over the CN route between Winnipeg and Edmonton and where it better serves Saskatchewan and Alberta, as CN runs through the more central part of the provinces?

I would like to give to the minister a little lesson on the geography of the province of Saskatchewan. The province runs about 750 miles in depth from north to south. The CP line he has protected runs within 100 miles of the United States border. I would like the minister to explain to the people who live 600 and 700 miles from that train service how they can take advantage of the transcontinental. I know he does not care. It would be nice for the people who live 600 and 700 miles away, to have some idea how they could avail themselves of this new equipment, this new capital that the member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) spoke so eloquently about.

The minister today, by his own admission, stated that capital will be needed and that we, in western Canada, we, in Atlantic Canada, and we, in Quebec and northern Ontario will benefit from the investment in capital. He said, "Two to three years for LRCs". But we will not do it in that time. It takes three years to have LRCs put on track. We have not placed the order. This is something we have to look at. The people of Atlantic Canada, the people of western Canada, the people in northern Ontario, the people in Quebec are paying for the additional service that the member for Mississauga North was so proud of. I can see why he is happy. He receives our tax dollars to guarantee a train service in Mississauga, and he receives our tax dollars to support the huge subsidy at Malton airport, which is right beside his constituency. He is happy. However, the majority of the people of Canada are being denied by the government something that is rightfully theirs and something they will long remember was denied them by the Minister of Transport.

I would like to point out to the minister the difference between his administration and past transport administrations. This is the first time in modern history, to my knowledge, and I stand to be corrected—the minister is a little older, maybe he can tell me—that Section 64 of the Railway Act has been used to cancel a train service, to cancel a passenger line, or to cancel a service. I look back to the Progressive Conservative government. During that administration, the then minister of transport, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), used the act to put service in place. It was used to guarantee service that was scheduled to be moved out.

At one time, Section 64 was used by the hon. member for Vegreville to implement and maintain service for the line in northern Ontario. The service was increased, under the previous government, from three times to six times a week. The Atlantic was confirmed for retention following the CTC's recommendation under Section 64. For the information of the minister, the hon. member for Vegreville used the section to add to the permanent network additional branch lines, which are badly needed for the movement of grain in western Canada.

I would like the people in my constituency and the people throughout the east and west to know that if the minister removes passenger service by a sweep of the pen, he can also move their branch lines away from them and deny them access for their grain.

We have seen a commitment over the past number of years on behalf of several provincial governments and on behalf of municipalities to implement a transportation service. However, this minister is denying the majority of people in western Canada a transportation service. I find that totally incredible, Mr. Speaker. I do not understand a government that is raising the price of gasoline to well over $4 per gallon—which will cause great hardship and at the same time will remove the cheapest mode of transportation that is available to the people of Canada, namely, rail service.

• (2100)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few minutes to discuss the impact of the decision made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), and to explain to my constituents why I am against this motion. First of all, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of those who may be interested, in 1975 I was involved in submitting a petition to the Canadian Transport Commission, when the minister was proposing to abandon the line from Montreal to Mont-Laurier, more commonly called the "petit train du Nord". Because of the importance of this mode of transport for the people living in the lower and upper Laurentians, I felt that the Canadian Transport Commission should hear all arguments in favour of retaining and preserving the service. That is why my colleague from Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre) and I organized a series of representations to the Canadian Transport Commission to defend and support user interests. Unfortunately, and this was a great disappointment, Mr. Speaker, I received no letters or telephone calls supporting the action I took in 1975 in order to save this means of transportation. Some municipalities in my riding told me they did not write to say they were supporting my action for the simple reason that they did not feel the travelling public wished to go on using this kind of transportation.

In my presentations, Mr. Speaker, I said that if the travelling public had abandoned this means of transportation, it was for the simple reason that no attempt had ever been made to update the system. Equipment was obsolete. Anyone travelling in this part of the province of Quebec will notice that the trains are at least 25 years old and that service is poor, to say the least, while people who use public transportation expect to be able to travel and get to their destination at a given time and not to spend three hours on a trip that should normally take about an hour or an hour and a half.

Well, for all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, in 1975 I had to represent the interests of the travelling public, people who go to the lower Laurentians in the winter for downhill or cross-country skiing and in the summer to the lakes and other scenic areas in my riding. However, in view of the lack of interest among the population and the travelling public in 1975, and despite efforts by groups such as the chamber of commerce in my riding and that of my colleague from Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle, it is clear that people are not really interested in using this means of transportation for travelling, and this is partly due to obsolete equipment, the system's unreliability and also the lack of regular services. For all these reasons, the people in the area and the travelling public from Montreal did not, in 1975, and still do not show very much interest in this means of transportation.

On the other hand, I would not like to see this system or mode of transportation phased out permanently. I would like to urge the minister—I see that he has left the House, temporarily I hope—I would like to ask him if in view of the test runs to be carried out in the Windsor-Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal-Quebec City corridor, it would not be worth while to equip the Montreal-Mont-Laurier line with modern equipment manufactured by the Bombardier company, for instance, which is making quite a name for itself internationally in this type of transportation equipment, which would provide the travelling public with a cheap, reliable and rapid transit system in any kind of weather. Perhaps the equipment could be tested in the same Windsor-Toronto-Montreal-Quebec City corridor, and then a case could be made for using the trains to facilitate access to the Laurentians and make it possible for people travelling to ski resorts and cottages in my riding to use this rapid transit system, which could easily compete with the conventional highway system.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I have decided to vote against the motion, because I believe that it does not represent the kind of action I would like to support since the inconvenience being caused to the public is being used to annoy and embarrass the government. I feel the present government is making a concerted effort to provide good administration by trying to cut unnecessary costs, and this includes the VIA Rail cutbacks, if we look at the number of people among the travelling public who use this type of transportation. So for all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote against the motion. However, I would ask the minister to ensure that results of the test runs to be made in the Windsor-Montreal-Quebec City corridor will be used to provide this area with a satisfactory, modern and rapid transit sytem in the years to come.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this motion. I know of no other issue that has so inflamed the hearts of Canadians, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, than the announcement in July by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) that the government will cancel 13 railway passenger routes and reduce six others, thus cutting from four to two our transcontinental runs, effective next month.

This 19 per cent cut in rail passenger service across Canada has been hailed by the minister as a vital step in the restructuring and reshaping of VIA Rail. I can tell the minister, quite frankly, that it is looked upon as a major disaster and a slap in the face not only for Nova Scotians but for all citizens of Atlantic Canada. This decision is illogical, it is discriminatory and it is counterproductive. It is the first time in the history of this nation that a federal government has decided arbitrarily to eliminate railway passenger service on such a massive scale without the benefit of public hearings, the opportunity for parliamentary debate or examination by the Canadian Transport Commission, a body set up to protect Canadians from this type of dictatorial action.

The government's attitude toward the people it was elected to serve is quite obvious as set out in a letter signed by the Minister of Transport on August 31 and directed to the executive secretary of the Canadian Railway Labour Association. In view of the limited time available to me, I shall not quote all the letter but on page 2, in paragraph 2, the minister stated:

> The recent cabinet decision was one of policy and within that policy little discretion would have been left for the CTC in its application—as funding limits and train role priorities were declared.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, this is not just a decision by the federal Minister of Transport; this is a decision that has the approval of the entire cabinet. The government is saying, in effect, "We will take no notice whatsoever of the regulatory body called the Canadian Transport Commission, except when it suits our purpose. Again, we will take no notice of Parliament and on this issue we will not even bother to consult with members of Parliament, the people's elected representatives, because such consultation at this time would not suit our purpose. We will, rather, bulldoze this through cabinet against all opposition and in defiance of our constitutional rights and obligations which include a commitment to provide this nation with adequate transportation facilities." That is what the government is saying. By a simple cabinet directive, the government is implementing a cutback which would affect 1,200,000 passengers and some 1,600 railway employees.

A century ago our government leaders, some of whom were Liberals, developed and encouraged our present railway system in order to enable Canada to become the country that it is today. At that time, there was no alternative but to knit together such a far-flung region into one country, and it is no less true for us today. Fifteen railway lines are to be discontinued, leaving many communities without rail or air transportation. This cannot help but encourage a feeling of isolation and the growth of regionalism which many Canadians are now supporting. If Canadians have ever before doubted that this Liberal government was out of touch with the country it governs and its people and unconcerned about their problems, they now have ample evidence of it with this cutback in rail service.

I cannot help but wonder as a Nova Scotian how much more Canadians will have to endure before they stand up and demand accountability from those they put in office to look after their affairs. Certainly, they cannot accept the present state of affairs which has brought about low productivity, unimaginable delays, and wrangling over vitally important energy development projects, uncontrolled inflation, crippling interest rates, a monstrous public debt, a substantially discounted dollar, and constant confrontation between business and government.

Is it any wonder that foreigners who see this country as being rich beyond description in resources question our inability to achieve economic wellbeing because we accept and condone stupid, non-starter policies such as this cutback in rail service? That is the kindest description I can give it. This change must be made, says the hon. minister, in order to save the taxpayers money. However, in what has been termed by some Canadians as the next golden age of trains, this may well be a move which is penny-wise and pound-foolish.

In the maritimes, and in my area in particular, the announcement of the cancellation of the passenger train service between Moncton and Edmundston, New Brunswick, and the major train, "the Atlantic", which links Halifax, Moncton, Saint John and Montreal, has raised fear that the railways may also abandon more freight lines. More important, they may seek to abandon, by a stroke of the pen, some of our ferry services which are so vital to us in Nova Scotia and in Atlantic Canada. This would deprive Canada, and Atlantic Canadians in particular, of an essential tool in getting our goods to markets in central Canada and the United States.

I say to Your Honour that the question must be asked: are the savings of VIA not offset by increased costs to other branches of government required to deal with increased unemployment? The answer, of course, is yes. There was no indication in the government's announcement that this side of the problem was even considered in any manner whatsoever.

In my constituency, the government's attitude toward the provision of adequate passenger and freight service through the railroad has been of some major concern for some time. It started with a press notice on November 5, 1980, which closed out 11 express agencies, seven of which were on the south shore. There were strong objections raised to this move at that time, all to no avail. Later, there were strong objections raised to the government's plans to abandon freight service between Liverpool in Queen's County and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. The minister also paid no attention to any of these pleas, all of which I, as the member of Parliament for the area, supported in committee and with speeches in the House.

I ask Your Honour, how much has the minister saved by that action? According to the records, in the last five years, the line between Liverpool and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, lost only $3.5 million; and although this government could not find the money to provide a service for five years on the south shore of Nova Scotia, it could, at the same time, write off $600 million of a debt owed by Mirabel, the biggest white elephant in this country's history.

An hon. Member: Tinkerbell.

VIA Rail

Mr. Crouse: Only this week I received a further letter from the mayor and town council of Liverpool concerning the proposal to abandon CNR services west of Liverpool. They have specifically asked that no action be taken to remove the rail lines within the town as they will be of benefit to the future development of the town. At present they service Steel and Engine Products Limited, which is a large industry within the town.

I say to this House that Canadians, who are already faced with a dramatic increase in bankruptcies this year, should not be forced into this type of confrontation with the government over railway policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: According to the government's own figures, 625 businesses a month went bankrupt in the first eight months of this year, at a cost of $633.5 million. In the same period last year, 540 firms a month went bottoms-up, at a loss of $475.6 million. How many businesses must go to the wall, along with the shattered dreams of their owners and lost productivity to this nation, before this government which sits on Your Honour's right wakes up and realizes that its policies are not working and that its programs are leading this nation in the wrong direction, as is the present railroad policy?

I say that if this government wants to save money, I will not only be critical but I will give a concrete suggestion which will save many millions of dollars. This can be done by simply discontinuing the government's policy of providing free ice-breaking services to users of the St. Lawrence River. In my view, these services should not be free to commercial shippers using Montreal, any more than railway services or ocean terminal services are free to international shipping lines which are using Halifax, Nova Scotia. I also think the time has come for this federal government to examine the state of Canada's containership industry, especially with regard to its operations on the east coast. I urge this federal government to abide by the terms of the National Transportation Act and to equalize the situation between eastern Canadian ports to that we can compete on a fair and equal basis.

We do not seek charity in Atlantic Canada; but I tell the government, through Your Honour, that we do seek justice.

Finally, I must put the following questions to this government: do we want trains made in Canada, using made in Canada electricity, running on made in Canada rails, providing Canadians with comfortable, low-cost, convenient service; or do we want jets made in the United States, using extravagant quantities of imported oil and heavily subsidized airport facilities? Trains are the most energy efficient means of land transport known to man. We as Canadians are sadly in need of new routes and upgraded tracks in order to become competitive and more productive. I suggest that we get the unemployed off the unemployment roles and put them to work building railroads, for so doing, we will really be rebuilding Canada and providing a much needed service to all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Deniger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware of the impact of the initiative taken by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) as I rise tonight in the House to analyse with all the people of Canada the real purpose of the decisions of the Minister of Transport. Those who know me well are aware that my interest in means of transportation goes back to the days when, as a young lawyer, I was practising transport law here in Ottawa with the Canadian Transport Commission, more particularly with the railway committee.

An hon. Member: You are still a young lawyer!

Mr. Deniger: In those days I had the opportunity to travel everywhere in Canada and to realize just how important the Canadian railways are to the people. I saw with my own eyes the importance of Canadian railways in the villages of Saskatchewan, I saw it with my own eyes as well in the maritime provinces because indeed, Mr. Speaker, the railways played a big part in the building of this country. As a politician it is not easy nowadays to hold the transport portfolio, and I must admit that I have every respect for any transport minister when he has to act as such during a period of budgetary restraints because, as it happens, it is precisely during periods of budgetary restraints that the most difficult decisions must be taken, that a choice must be made. And that choice, Mr. Speaker, was simple. It was obvious and it required a decision which could not be put off. The choice was as follows: are we going to maintain the existing VIA Rail routes, with equipment which all members agree is outmoded, through a company whose deficits are altogether unreasonable, or are we going to strengthen the tree by pruning a few branches so as to make sure it will regain its energy and vigour?

Mr. Speaker, I must admit that, faced with a decision which, politically and in the short term, will have serious consequences, but which will have beneficial economic consequences in the long term, as a government member, I must support wholeheartedly the views of the Minister of Transport because, in the short term, Mr. Speaker, no one wants to lose his train service and, of course, the members of the opposition are doing what I would perhaps do myself if a train service were to disappear in my constituency, as there is indeed a commuter service which will be abandoned. If a passenger service in my constituency were to be abandoned for good, I would do what they are doing and I would criticize the decision of the Minister of Transport because this is what they must do in the opposition in the short term.

However, this is not what you should do, Mr. Speaker, when you form the government and have long-term economic responsibilities in a period of budget restraints as is the case now. New equipment is the new blood which is going to rejuvenate the Canadian railway network for a better service. What will a better service give us? More users and more revenue! Therefore, we have no choice but to accept in the short term that some routes be abandoned. But what does this mean exactly? People are under the impression that those will be gone forever. But if we believe in the railway passenger service and in people in authority like Frank Roberts, whose ability and integrity cannot be questioned by anyone in this House, we must realize that this decision, which is necessary, is in the best interests of all those who want a railway passenger service in this country. This seems obvious to me. And what shall we do with the money that this will save, Mr. Speaker? It will be redistributed in all the areas of the country affected by these abandonments. It will be used to reduce the deficit, to acquire better equipment and to provide a better railway service. Still, this decision is criticized. I can understand this. I accept the reasons for this in the short term.

I was listening to the former Minister of Transport, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), when he said at the very beginning of his speech this afternoon that he wanted an adequate railway service for Canada. I underline the word "adequate", Mr. Speaker, because what I want myself is not an adequate railway service, but an excellent railway passenger service. If we want an adequate service, we only have to keep what we have now, that is old equipment, more or less reliable routes and a mediocre schedule, but if we want an excellent service, if we really want to provide the service that the population should expect, we need new equipment, and this takes money. This money must come from savings and these savings will come from cutting back on the lines which are operated at a deficit.

Let no one suggest that this decision is illegal because I know quite well that all the ministers of Transport in the past, including the hon. member for Vegreville, have used Section 64(1) to make sure that their actions were legal. There is therefore nothing illegal in this decision, Mr. Speaker; it is perfectly legal. I am certain that if the Progressive Conservatives make good on their threat, that is, to ask for an injunction against the Canadian government, their request would be denied. The decision is legal, it is economically sound, it is the right decision in a period of budget restraints. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I must say to this House and to the Canadian people that although this decision will have serious political consequences in the short term, in the long run it is the right political and economic decision to make for a responsible government.

[English]

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, this great binge of economy that we have heard discussed today might be put in its proper light if we said the debt that was forgiven at Mirabel is now being financed by the issuance of Canada Savings Bonds at 19.5 per cent. The government could have saved $97.5 million this year, if it were an estimated $47 million operating deficit. Therefore, had the government had a little of the saving discretionary powers, more would have been saved if Mirabel had never been built and operated than will be saved by implementing the plans before us at present. There is one spot alone that benefits, and that is in the golden triangle. What we have heard today, ranging through the golden circle from Mississauga North through La Prairie, through the constituency with Mirabel in it, is a defence of this program which deprives the rest of Canada in one degree or another.

I want to say to the hon. member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) that if he had travelled through the country as I did with the committee and if he had listened to the social needs expressed by Canadians from coast to coast, he would not have had the audacity to stand up representing the central part of Toronto, the hinge of the golden triangle, and say "Yes, cut those services, saving only the golden triangle".

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. McCain: Rarely have I had the displeasure of witnessing a move which was considered as divisive from the east to the west coast of Canada, saving only the golden triangle.

We have heard from the hon. member from Moncton (Mr. McCauley). Those who were with us on the visits to Moncton have heard representatives of the chamber of commerce and of the unions who were united in their presentations. Hon. members have heard professors from the university. Just this week we had the president of the student council from the University of Moncton telling us that he did not know how to get from Grand Falls to Moncton because the train service is being discontinued, and he could not afford to go by other means.

Is it not rather significant that the people who are being deprived of lines on the government side of the House have had nothing to say? What about the hon. member for Victoria-Madawaska (Mr. Corbin)? I remember, when serving on the transport committee, warning the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) and the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria that there was no way they would both get passenger service if the Liberal government stayed in power. And they are not getting it. The riding of Madawaska-Victoria is now deprived. Again, there is the student population, those who were going for special medical services and those who were going to visit and shop in the city of Moncton. They are all affected because of the area's socioeconomic links with the city of Edmundston. Therefore, they are deprived. Their service has gone. That service should be kept. But I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that if you want to maintain the social and ethnic elements in that part of Canada, not only should that train go from Moncton to Edmundston but it should be continued to the city of Quebec.

I did not hear anyone speak from New Brunswick except for the hon. member for Moncton. In all the presentation, there was no one who supported the government's position. However, I want to mention one more thing in connection with the hon. member for Moncton. Inherent in this motion is the willingness and the offer of the Conservative party to extend to this House of Commons unanimous consent with the clear understanding that this is not intended in any way, shape or form as a motion of non-confidence.

An hon. Member: It is a free vote.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCain: If you want to know something about the rules, Mr. Speaker, why do you not advise the hon. gentleman that when the House is determined to give unanimous consent on any subject matter, the rule may be overridden and ignored. Unanimous consent is yours, if you have a conscience and want to vote for Canadians.

Mr. Taylor: Trudeau says no, so the Liberals say no.

Mr. McCain: Overlooking the convention of unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCain: Do not show your ignorance to your constituents who may be watching you on television.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: They have to do what Mr. Trudeau tells them.

Mr. McCain: This is supposed to be a saving.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. McCain: On somebody else's time, please, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, the usual mood prevails after dinner. But I want to say that the hon. member has mentioned Restigouche. I would like to remind him that the Ocean Limited and VIA will continue through my part of New Brunswick, northern New Brunswick, with no cutback in the service.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Corbett: Patronage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member does not have a point of order.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to report to New Brunswick how little one New Brunswick member cares for the rest of New Brunswick.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Or the rest of Canada.

Mr. McCain: The saving is purely artificial because what the railroads do not get out of VIA, they will collect in freight rates. Do not forget that.

• (2130)

The other thing that you should remember is that VIA was saddled by this government when it was initially established with a cost structure differing from that of the railroads, which made it impossible for VIA to become viable. VIA was never intended to be viable. It was never intended to operate as do the systems in Japan, as does Amtrack or as do the systems in Britain or France. It was intended to fail and it was doomed to obvious failure when it was saddled with paying 64 per cent of all its expenditures to CN and CP. Every nickel that is taken out of their coffers is taken out of taxpayers' pockets through increments in freight rates. That is a false saving.

This says nothing about the fact that perhaps $40 million will be lost in Japanese tourism on the west coast, nothing about strangulation of tour plans by VIA and those in the Annapolis Valley, and nothing of tourists who came in from the Atlantic and go to Prince Edward Island and on to Newfoundland. The government is saving money on the backs of every Canadian who is in the tourist business, every one of them. The government is saving money at the expense of senior citizens who prefer to ride on the trains. The government is saving money at the expense of students who travel—and we talked with them from coast to coast in Canada—by the cheapest means of transportation they can find in Canada; the government is saving money on their backs including the backs of people in Moncton. The government is saving money at the cost of inconvenience of the disabled, who made several presentations to point out that for the sake of economy, convenience and comfort, not otherwise available, they travel VIA Rail in practically every instance. The government is saving money at the expense of those who for health reasons cannot fly, and it is saving money at the expense of those who cannot drive. The government is saving money at the expense of the servicemen of this country who are posted far from home with inadequate incomes to travel by any except the cheapest means at their disposal, and saving money at the expense of the small businessman who cannot afford to travel by air, and there is a multitude of them definitely using VIA Rail. Those are the people on whose backs the government is saving money. It will have to transfer this to freight rates when the railroads have to collect the difference. The government is saving money at the expense of several thousand people. Some 1,600 will be dismissed, and what is the multiplier factor? If it is 7, we are looking at something like 10,000 jobs which will disappear directly or indirectly as a result of cutbacks in rail transportation. That is how the minister is saving money. I suggest he vote for this on behalf of New Brunswick because the government will suffer the political consequence otherwise.

Mr. Bruce Lonsdale (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this opportunity to speak about the future of rail transportation in Canada, and especially the service to northern Ontario. Throughout our history there has been an assumption that transportation, especially cheap transportation, was too important to allow economic considerations to interfere with service. National unity, economic development and frontier settlement were far too critical to apply a real dollar value to them. But today, anyone who speaks about passenger train transportation in Canada has to refer to the economic realities of cost ratios per passenger; that is, the cost to the taxpayer for every passenger who boards a train.

The fact is that every time a passenger steps on a train in Canada, the taxpayers pick up two thirds of the fare. Even with the $500 million in subsidies VIA Rail receives, the chances of a full recovery of our passenger systems are very slim. The Canadian people pay $410 million to VIA just to cover their operating losses, even if they do not travel by train. Passenger service on the scale we now have is simply too expensive.

We had hoped, with the introduction of the VIA system in 1977, that profits could begin to lower the deficit of our passenger system. This was the motive of the transportation acts introduced in 1977. At that time the Crown corporations involved in passenger transport were directed to strive toward making a profit.

An hon. Member: Slow down.

Mr. Lonsdale: I have only got 10 minutes. Canadians have always had an emotional attachment to trains. But, the simple fact of the matter is that today people are not using trains to travel. The trains can only be profitable if enough people use them.

An hon. Member: Slow down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Lonsdale) has the floor.

Mr. Lonsdale: Mr. Speaker, I will set my pace to a speed at which hon. members can understand me.

Opponents of rationalization say that trains have to be considered a public service and they have to operate in the public interest. But the public interest also includes fiscal responsibility, reducing the federal deficit and, hopefully, inflation.

A good example of the cost ratio for a route in northern Ontario is the route from Senneterre, Quebec, to Cochrane. For every passenger on this route, the taxpayer has to pay 77 cents for every dollar of cost. With only a 25 per cent occupancy rate, this train is not efficient enough to continue service once a day. This service has thus been cut to three times a week. This major link between Cochrane and Montreal is not fully utilized, and economic considerations have to outweigh the desirability of continuing this route on a once a day basis.

The line from Capreol to Hornepayne is very similar, with a .05 per cent cost ratio and an 11 per cent load factor. There are other services that are even less efficient. I refer to the route between Sudbury and White River.

However, pure economic rationalizations do not take into consideration the very special needs of northern Ontario. There are many communities in the north which are rail dependent. Some of these have other links to the rest of the province only on a seasonal basis. If pure economic considerations are applied to these rail links, the fragile social and economic environment of these isolated communities could be disrupted forever. As a member of Parliament from northern Ontario, I am attempting to convince the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) that these rail lines have to be protected.

I am not, however, advocating that the minister return these lines to the service levels they had before the announced cuts. What I am saying is that the Canadian Transport Commission and the provincial and federal governments have to explore the possibly alternatives to the types of service provided before.

You may note that the Minister of Transport this afternoon talked about the Scrivener report under the Ontario government. I have here a motion from the Northeastern Ontario Municipal Association, an area in which the Conservatives failed to hold a hearing. This is the only place in which they turned down the opportunity to hold a hearing. In any event, the association moved a motion which I should like to quote. It states:

> NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED: That the Government of Canada be requested to initiate a study jointly with the Government of Ontario, using the Scrivener Task Force brief as a guide, and with input from the public, on the present and future needs of rail passenger service in Northern Ontario.

What we do not need is more costly public hearings. Hearings on northern transportation systems have resulted in the same conclusions since the first royal commission on transportation in the 1920s. There have been, as you will recall, hearings within the last four years as well, and the answers and conclusions of those commissions were obvious to all of us. The conclusions were that these services are considered to be vital communications links which have to be maintained in the public interest.

We all know that the service is not economically efficient yet. We also know that it is vital to many of our neighbouring communities. No one could possibly disagree that we have to fight to maintain local service.

No one could possibly disagree that we need daily passenger service. But, with a more rational look—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lonsdale: This is where you guys stop and all the criticism begins. We must take a more rational look at the special needs of northern Ontario and other more remote areas of this country. Only then can the solutions offered us by modern transportation technology be applied, both efficiently and economically. The facts prove that fewer people are using these lines every year. One of the reasons for this is the tremendous amount of money we spend on roads in northern Ontario.

I have the northern Ontario road construction program for 1981-82. It shows that some $60 million are to be spent on road construction in northern Ontario, while at the same time the minister of northern affairs is criticizing the federal government for not sustaining a $16 million subsidy to the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission.

I want to look at road construction in one riding in northern Ontario and how this relates to the entire operating subsidy and cost of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission. The operating costs of that commission are $19 million, and revenues are $3 million, leaving a subsidy of $16 million.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lonsdale: Do you want to know what the capital road construction program is in the riding of Kenora, which is also the riding of the minister of northern affairs for Ontario? In 1981 the projection is for $5.5 million for 17 kilometres. There are to be further improvements on Highway 17 and a Kenora bypass. They are going to bypass Kenora. Imagine what would happen if it had been decided that the train service should bypass Kenora. They are going to extend that bypass with a multimillion dollar project, and no quotation is provided. The Ontario minister is going to build a road into Minaki Lodge at a cost of $4.5 million, and there is another 22 kilometres project without any mention of the expenditure. In all of northern Ontario some $60 million is to be spent for road construction, but the same Ontario minister has the nerve to criticize the federal government for not spending enough on rail transportation in northern Ontario.

• (2140)

All the surveys done on rail transportation in northern Ontario show that two thirds of all trips are short hauls to and from neighbouring communities. People have to get to major centres to obtain medical services or commodities which are unavailable in the north. We need, in Northern Ontario, convenient, affordable, reliable and familiar links between our communities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lonsdale: These services cannot be provided as an afterthought by a supercontinental. Local links with smaller, more efficient trains and other carriers have to be considered on another basis. That is the recommendation of the Scrivener task force report on rail transportation in Ontario.

Never before has the potential for advancement in passenger rail transportation been more promising. The technological improvements in self-propelled passenger cars is the hope for the future. It is, Mr. Speaker, the final hope for rail passenger service in Northern Ontario and in Canada.

The rail diesel car, better known as the Budd RDC, and other self-propelled trains, could provide the kinds of service that northern Ontario needs today. The Budd RDCs do not require the expensive types of infrastructures that older diesel engines need, such as roundabouts and major track improvements. This makes them more economical for passenger transportation today.

An hon. Member: You need a self-propelled minister!

Mr. Lonsdale: With present-day technology, with the inclusion of kitchens and other convenient items, these trains would attract the number of people necessary to return these lines to a profit-making position. I quote, for example, the use of the Budd RDC in the rail line between Capreol and Nakima which could have a projected profit of $1 million a year. These improvements in technology could save the routes which until now have cost the taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars a year. These moneys could be used to save the whole national rail system by providing the funds necessary for upgrading. With some rationalization of types of systems, the entire railway network in Canada could be saved.

You might argue that this is a long-range perspective. But I truly believe that if we all take a rational look at rail transportation in Canada today, we will agree that this is the only possible answer to save the whole system.

We have to fight to protect our industries and our jobs. We have to fight rationally and, more important, we have to offer practical alternatives. If we demand the continuation of uneconomical transportation lines, we will lose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have only two minutes, so I will speak very quickly.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Riis: The omen and irony is when the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Lonsdale), speaking for the Liberals, castigates the Tories for failing to hold a hearing in one part of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: I am pleased to spend at least a few minutes on this side of the House talking about this particular issue. I want to remind those opposite clearly that here is a cabinet and a minister who ignores the Canadian Transport Commission totally, ignores the transport committee of the House of Commons, ignores the Parliament of Canada, therefore the people of Canada, on an issue which has extreme ramifications in all regions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: When we hear there are 1,200,000 passengers who will be affected, surely we cannot ignore that figure. When we hear there are 1,600 railroad employees who will be adversely affected by this decision, as indicated earlier by a Conservative speaker, we are not talking about 1,600 people, we are talking about thousands of people who will be affected as a result of the spin-off effect of this decision.

In my riding of Kamloops-Shuswap I received 3,000 virtually unsolicited petitions from people indicating their outrage at this insensitive, callous decision.

What is it going to do to the thousands of small businesses across this country which are already under incredible pressure from the high interest policy of this government? What will it mean to the tourist industry of western, eastern and central Canada? What does it mean when the Liberal government says ten sets of LRC's will be spent on the corridor between Windsor and Quebec City, totally ignoring their earlier promise to spend a portion of those in the rest of Canada. Let us hope this—

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 58(9).

[English]

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Benjamin) which was negatived on the following division:

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF POLISH REFUGEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas all Canadians are aware of the situation in Poland, and whereas all Canadians are aware of the plight of the Polish refugees in the camps in Austria, and whereas Canada has always come to the aid of those in need, notwithstanding established immigration quotas, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That the Canadian government move, without further delay, to admit those Polish refugees from the Austrian camps who wish to come to Canada, and to send food and clothing and medical supplies without delay to the camps where these Polish refugees are located.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REMEMBRANCE OF RUSSIAN INVASION OF HUNGARY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis):

That this House, in memory of the events that began 25 years ago on October 23 in Hungary, express its abiding opposition to the continuing totalitarian suppression of real freedom in Hungary and in all other countries so controlled, its sincere gratitude to those thousands of Hungarians whose reason for coming to Canada was so tragic and whose contribution to Canada has been so great, and its deepest sympathy to all those who lost family and friends in the valiant fight for freedom and against totalitarianism, whose sacrifice free people must never forget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SMALL BUSINESS

NEED FOR WORKING CAPITAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on an urgent matter brought to our attention via the eighth International Symposium on Small Business. Canada's extremely high interest rates have made it virtually impossible for a growing number of small businesses to maintain sufficient flows of operating capital, yet present federal financial programs provide virtually no assistance in this area. The survival of Canada's small business sector is being threatened by the present shortage of working capital. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That the government open up the Small Businesses Loans Act and the small business development bond to allow entrepreneurs access to working capital and thereby stop the demise of our vital small business community.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

POSTPONEMENT OF PRESENTATION DATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Prime Minister has again broken his promise to have a budget in October and delayed the budget presentation to November 10 according to his telexed message to the provinces.

Clearly the budget contains dramatic cuts in EPF and equalization transfer payments to the provinces, and clearly the Prime Minister is afraid that if the provinces were aware of this reduction they would fail to support his constitutional package. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That this House of Commons call upon the government to produce a budget on October 27, 1981, to remove the clear suspicion that fiscal measures in the budget will not be directed against the provinces, and to come clean with the people of Canada and their provincial governments and give Canadians generally a new sense of economic direction.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EFFECT ON REMEMBRANCE DAY SERVICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the Prime Minister's statement indicating that because of constitutional discussions the budget cannot be presented on November 3 in view of the Minister of Finance's commitment that a budget would be introduced before the end of October, and because the date of November 10 for the budget introduction, as indicated by the Prime Minister, illustrates again the Prime Minister's total disregard for our armed forces and for our veterans because of the impossibility of members of Parliament being able to return to their constituencies to pay their respects at Remembrance Day services, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That this House condemns the insensitivity of the government for its total disregard for our veterans and armed forces, and that this House further moves that the Minister of Finance introduce his budget on October 27, 1981.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CALL FOR HOLDING OF GENERAL ELECTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne McCuish (Prince George-Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Since the government took office in 1980 it has given us high interest rates, loss of our homes, a 43-cent dollar, an unnecessary postal strike, regional tensions destroying national unity, a shattered rail system, and government by closure and order in council. It is destroying Parliament. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That, due to the Prime Minister's lack of leadership and total lack of compassion and understanding of important issues, this House asks him to allow democracy to take its course and instructs him to resign his administration and to call an election, thus allowing Canadians to replace his uncaring government with a government ready to respond to the challenge facing this nation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SOCIAL SECURITY

AID SOUGHT FOR PENSIONERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43. The government is ignoring old age pensioners. One of my constituents writes:

I don't get to visit and used to enjoy Christmas and birthday cards. Now they are cut to a minimum. I gave up smoking. I do my own hair and make clothes last, and am still fighting a losing battle. I went through the depression and worry that history is repeating itself.

I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That this House urge the Minister of Finance to cease flogging the dead horse of the $35 increase in the Guaranteed Income Supplement, and do something meaningful to alleviate the plight of people, such as my constituent, by repudiating his high interest rate policy, thereby ceasing to practise monetary policy at the expense of the poor and aged.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRADE

SUGGESTED BOYCOTT OF NAMIBIAN URANIUM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of recent CBC reports that a federal Crown corporation, Eldorado Nuclear Ltd., is profiting from the importation of uranium from Namibia, and in view of Canada's alleged commitment to the independence of Namibia, and the distaste of most Canadians for profits derived from oppression and exploitation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish):

That this House instruct the Government of Canada to require the Atomic Energy Control Board to withdraw any licences which permit the importation of uranium originating in Namibia.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POST OFFICE

PROPOSED INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of some urgency. The former postmaster general announced that, at the beginning of the new year, the cost to consumers of stamps and postal services will rise significantly, the basic letter rate increasing to 30 cents. In light of the fact that postal rate increases and costly modernization have never noticeably improved basic service, and the fact that the proposed new increases will be of considerable hardship to thousands of Canadians, particularly senior citizens who rely on the daily mail for everyday business and personal use, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the government be soundly condemned for planning such an excessive increase in postal rates as a means of improving the postal service and structure, and that the postmaster general take immediate steps to ensure the increase is reduced to a more modest and appropriate level.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

CALL FOR MEASURES TO ASSIST CATTLE PRODUCERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the government's economic policy is killing the beef industry in Canada by refusing to recognize the dire straits of cattle producers who are being forced daily into bankruptcy through a combination of high interest rates and high feed costs I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the government establish immediate measures to assist cattle producers so that the vital beef industry in this country does not go down the drain.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

HUMAN RIGHTS

PLEA FOR RELEASE OF IMPRISONED URUGUAYAN POLITICIAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Appeals have recently been made to a number of members of this House by Amnesty International on behalf of Mr. Alberto Altesor Gonzales, a former member of the Uruguayan Congress who has been unjustly imprisoned and frequently tortured for the last 6 years. In view of these appeals and the fact that Mr. Altesor is suffering from a serious heart ailment, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong):

That this House, with the support of many parliamentarians around the world, ask the government to seek the release of Mr. Altesor and grant him entry into Canada so that he may receive medical treatment, without which he may soon lose his life.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

RAILWAYS

COMMEMORATION OF HISTORIC ANNIVERSARY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, today is the 101st anniversary of the signing of the contract for the first transcontinental railway. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That this House arrange a birthday party to celebrate the event and invite the Minister of Transport to attend in his Henry VIII costume, along with his caucus colleagues, to chop the cake which will be supplied by thousands of delighted train passengers who will also heap piles on the minister and his friends who, together, marked the occasion early last night by voting to disembowel 20 per cent of existing rail passenger service in this country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

QUERY RESPECTING DATE OF PRESENTATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Last week both he and the Prime Minister indicated that the budget would be ready for presentation in late October, but that it would be delayed because the government gave priority to the Constitution. Now that the constitutional conference has been moved into November, will the Minister of Finance introduce his budget to this House of Commons next week rather than forcing Canadians to wait, while the government delays again the consideration of economic policy?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it was in response to a question from the Leader of the Opposition that I indicated I would be prepared to bring in a budget on November 3. That was the first time, as I recollect, that a member of the House asked for a specific date. That specific date was given after taking into account the rather careful and elaborate preparations necessary for a budget presentation, including the question of budget secrecy. At this point it would not be possible for me to advance the date—

Miss MacDonald: Why not?

Mr. MacEachen: —earlier than November 3. It may still be possible, depending upon the reply from the premiers, to have the budget on November 3. If that window opens I will be prepared to present the budget on that date.

REASONS FOR DELAY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance surely recalls that the Prime Minister, presumably after taking account of the elaborate preparations necessary for the budget, told this House last week that the budget would be brought in before the end of October.

Miss MacDonald: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Obviously the budget is ready to be brought in. Will the Minister of Finance tell us now why Canadians in Newfoundland who are out of work, nearly one fifth of the labour force in that province, with fish plants closed down there, and why 100,000 Canadians who stand to lose their homes because of the government's high interest rate policy, should be forced to wait another two weeks to have the budget brought down, when the Prime Minister of Canada has indicated in this House that the budget was ready for presentation next week? Why can we not have it next week? Why should the people of Canada have to wait?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not think the Leader of the Opposition is quoting the Prime Minister correctly at all.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. MacEachen: He should check the exact words which were used on that occasion. I was prepared, and I am prepared to present the budget—

An hon. Member: Let us have it then.

Mr. MacEachen: —on November 3. If Premier Peckford were as solicitous about the people of Newfoundland as the right hon. gentleman is, he would not have joined with the other premiers to deliberately suggest a date that had no other effect than to delay the budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister said in answer to my question that the Minister of Finance, and I quote, "plans to bring down a budget before the end of this month." I repeat, "plans."

An hon. Member: What does that mean?

Mr. Clark: What that means is that the budget was ready for introduction on October 14 or by the end of October.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Minister of Finance now refuses, for some reason, to bring the budget down when the Prime Minister has said it is ready. Will the Minister of Finance tell us is there something in that budget that is so startling, so damaging to Canadians, so damaging to the provinces, that the government is afraid to bring it down before the constitutional conference? Is there something in that budget that causes the government to fear that introducing it on the date the Prime Minister said it was ready would jeopardize agreement on the Constitution?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition once again misquotes the words of the Prime Minister. After having read them correctly, he then repeats the words erroneously. At no point did the Prime Minister state that the Minister of Finance was ready to bring in the budget next week. At no point was that statement ever made.

I had always stated, both inside and outside the House, that it was my intention to bring down the budget during the month of October; there is no doubt about that. It was repeated frequently. When it was my obligation to determine specifically the budget date, I announced in the House of Commons specifically November 3. That was the reply given to the Leader of the Opposition at that point, and the Leader of the Opposition accepted that date with no objection. Once that date was given, plans were put into place to make the necessary preparations, to do the necessary printing and to undertake the necessary distribution of budget documents throughout the country. That is what happened, and it is not possible now to bring in the budget before November 3.

However, I want to tell the Leader of the Opposition—he asked a question—that I am not afraid to bring in the budget because I think it will be greeted with considerable approval by the people of this country, perhaps including the provinces.

IMPACT OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance will know after reading Hansard that not only did the Prime Minister give the undertaking I quoted a moment ago but also, later that day in response to my colleague, the hon. member for Joliette, he said, and I quote the English translation:

I shall point out to him—

He was referring to the hon. member for Joliette.

—as I pointed out to his leader that the budget should be tabled before the end of the month—

Mr. Chénier: Should.

Mr. Clark: That is right, "should", and there is no question that the Prime Minister is right—it should be tabled before the end of October. The minister is saying that a budget which was ready last week is not ready any more. Will the minister tell us what has changed so that he cannot come immediately to the aid of Canadians who need aid? Will the minister tell this House of Commons why the people of Canada should be forced to wait and why they should be forced to give second place to their economic priorities simply so the Prime Minister can carry on with his preoccupation with the Constitution?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that the Leader of the Opposition is focusing on the wrong situation. I got up in the House of Commons and stated that the budget would be tabled November 3. I was prepared to carry through. Then the premiers, knowing full well that the budget date had been set, said, "No, we want a federal-provincial conference on that date". If the Leader of the Opposition wants to ask a question, why does he not ask the premiers why they deliberately attempted to forestall a budget which was due on November 3?

Oral Questions

THE ECONOMY

OUTFLOW OF CAPITAL TO OTHER COUNTRIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, that is the most transparent answer we have received in this House. It is the most transparent attempt at deflection onto someone else. The buck stops right there, on the government benches. The minister should say when he will table his budget, and table it. We are ready for it next week.

My question relates to a very important matter which I hope the budget will address. In the 12 months ending last June there was a record outflow of capital from this country, four times the average level of outflow during the whole of the 1970s. This was not made up of major items. There was a number of items too small to identify, but in aggregate the outflow amounted to $8.4 billion. Because of the downward pressure this puts on the Canadian dollar, it obviously causes interest rates for hom owners, farmers and small-business men to increase. What steps is the minister proposing to take to reverse this outflow of capital so that we can help home owners who are so severely hurt by the interest rates this outflow causes?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member referred to a statistic relating to the end of June. Since that time, in order to remove pressure from the Canadian currency and to reduce pressure on interest rates, I made an appeal to the banks of this country which, by and large, has been carried out and met, to stop providing large loans for the purpose of takeovers. That has had a very important effect.

• (1425)

The second development since the end of June which should have a very positive effect is the energy agreement entered into between the Government of Canada and the government of Alberta. Both of these have been quoted recently by the Governor of the Bank of Canada as very positive steps in carrying out the objectives mentioned by the hon. gentleman.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the answer of the minister was directed to the large outflows of capital. What I am referring to is all the very small outflows of capital, individual decisions made by people in this country who have totally lost confidence in their government's ability to manage the economy of the country. That amounted to $8.4 billion, five times the level of the seventies. Since the minister has addressed the matter of the specific direction to the banks, what other steps is he proposing to take? Does he propose to extend that policy of specific direction to individual investors regarding an outflow of capital?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, once again drawing attention to the date mentioned by the questioner, namely, the end of June, since August, when there was very strong downward pressure on the Canadian currency, the currency has strengthened quite significantly. I believe that is attributable to the steps which I have taken. The hon. gentleman asks me about further steps. When the circumstances justify it, I will be making appropriate announcements to the House.

HOUSING

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for housing. Since the House opened the minister has been attempting to downgrade the seriousness of the housing crisis in Canada. Just yesterday he said, with reference to one of the documents that came out of his own department which related the serious situation of both home owners and renters to the high interest rates, that it was something with which he did not agree. Further, he said:

It was a document prepared by a person employed in the information section of the corporation.

Will the minister confirm to the House that he has circulated a document to his cabinet colleagues, with his own signature at the bottom, which lays out in great detail the seriousness of the housing crisis? If so, why did he say, as reported in today's Toronto Star, that there is no housing crisis in Canada?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I believe the answer to the question by the Leader of the New Democratic Party is in his question. Yes, I have been busy since October when interest rates started approaching 20 per cent. I have been concerned. I have been meeting with a lot of people. I have been taking a lot of advice. I have given advice to the government, pointing out my concerns about this problem. However, at no moment will I accept the wildly exaggerated figure used by the hon. member of 85,000 people going to be forced out of their homes before Christmas of this year. I think that is wildly irresponsible on the part of the leader of that party.

FORECAST OF DROP IN HOUSING STARTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister once again refuses to answer the question. Just two hours ago I was given a 27-page document, with the minister's signature at the bottom. It contains virtually all the information that has been presented in the House since its opening. Specifically it states in this document—the minister can check the writing, and I am sure no one has forged his signature on the bottom—and I quote:

—starts will drop to an annual rate of around 135,000 for the remainder of the year—

That will be the lowest level in 15 years, and it will probably be 135,000 next year, which will mean that the record low in starts will continue. Furthermore, over the minister's signature it states that the rental situation will get so bad that "a black market could develop". Does the minister stand by these views? Is the situation that serious? If it is, why is the government not doing something about it now instead of waiting for a budget a few weeks from now?

• (1430)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): If I were to examine the document that the hon. member is referring to, I would probably find that it is the document I referred to earlier in this House as being a document prepared for cabinet for consideration in preparation of the budget. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I will not comment on the specifics of the document. But I would indicate to the hon. member that anyone who can read English and read French and can read half a dozen other languages of the media of this country, and has done so over the last two months, would know there are serious difficulties faced by the housing industry, by the renters, and by people who are facing mortgage rollovers. That is why I gave advice to the government in preparation for the budget.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I say to the minister there is nothing in this document that should be kept for secrecy purposes in preparation of a budget. Every member of Parliament should have access to this information.

I should like to ask the Minister of Finance, since the minister reponsible for housing has just conceded we have a crisis for renters, a crisis for home owners—

Mr. Cosgrove: I did not say that.

Mr. Broadbent: It says in the document that we have a situation where starts next year are going to be at the lowest level in 16 years. Since he has refused to bring in a budget we all want, why does the minister not bring in legislation in the next few days to deal with this serious economic situation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): I am as eager as my hon. friend is to give priority to economic questions.

Mr. Clark: Show us.

Mr. MacEachen: I believe it would be unwise to bring in any type of piecemeal legislation until the country sees the over-all budgetary situation, so the citizens of the country can judge the validity of the measures that will be proposed. I should like to add that in present circumstances, when so many citizens are concerned about the economy, the economic questions should get an up-front debate and an up-front exposure in a specific period when people are not being distracted by outside events.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): We have made a suggestion to the Minister of Agriculture about how to provide financing for the agricultural community at reasonable interest rates. In the latter part of August the Minister of Agriculture made a commitment that he would provide money to farmers at 14 per cent through the Farm Credit Corporation. Did the Minister of Agriculture take our suggestion to cabinet? If farmers are to receive the benefit of money at 14 per cent through the Farm Credit Corporation, why, within four weeks of his promise, did he allow Farm Credit interest rates to go from 14 per cent to nearly 17 per cent?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I do not know what the hon. member is referring to, Madam Speaker. Any minister in charge of interest rate programs would like to see the interest rate as low as possible. The Farm Credit Corporation uses the past six months average cost of money for their formula. This worked out to 16¾ per cent. It was automatically triggered. We had discussions about freezing it at 14 per cent. I do not remember—and I will check all the tapes again—in my many speeches where I mentioned 14 per cent. I believe the furthest I would have gone was to say I would do my utmost to see it stayed at 14 per cent. However, I have no recollection of making a firm commitment that it would stay at 14 per cent.

REPORTED STATEMENT ON MINISTER'S POSSIBLE RESIGNATION

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): To help the minister's memory, the commitment was made in an interview after he spoke to the Canadian National Exhibition last August.

The minister has further stated publicly he will either get money for farmers at 14 per cent or he will resign. Could the minister give us the time frame in which we can expect one or the other? Or does he intend to cop out?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The hon. Member refers to an interview. I am sure the interview is on tape, Madam Speaker. I do not recall saying it the way he stated it. The last statement he made is as erroneous as the first statement he made.

FUNDING FOR CORPORATION

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): The Minister of Agriculture will be aware that the Minister of Finance told the House yesterday—and I quote:

> I am not so sure that a general infusion of funds into the Farm Credit Corporation is the answer to the special difficulties of certain groups of farmers in the country.

I should like the Minister of Agriculture to tell us what groups of farmers the Minister of Finance had in mind, and what groups of farmers the Farm Credit Corporation can help. At the same time, I would ask the minister to tell us how much money is left in the Farm Credit Corporation's budget for the fiscal year ending April, and how much of that money is available to farmers in Ontario.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The hon. member would like a whole book in a short answer. If you were to allow me to recite a whole book, it would take the rest of the question period or else I could send him a written report. If the hon. member has an efficient researcher, I am sure he has been informed about the money available to the Farm Credit Corporation, because this is made public. He knows how much money there is in it. There is not enough money to take care of the farmers' indebtedness at the present time. He also knows from the press release we issued in regard to the interest rates for the Farm Credit Corporation that we will be bringing in amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act along the lines of what we spoke about earlier. The Minister of Finance concurred with this. In the same press release we said when the budget is brought in we will be taking care of those people in dire need, along the same line the Prime Minister mentioned. We never intended to look after everyone's financial interest through the Farm Credit Corporation, never in the history of this country—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

RATIO OF FUNDS AVAILABLE FOR ONTARIO FARMERS

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): We would certainly support getting new legislation for the Farm Credit Corporation to help agriculture in this country. It is something that is lacking. The minister knows that.

Can the minister tell me how many Ontario farmers will benefit by the money left in the Ontario program part of farm credit? Or if he wants to take it in general terms, what proportion of the requests made in Ontario for farm credit can be met by the remaining amounts of money left in this province?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The Farm Credit Corporation could never take over all bank loans, demand notes and floating loans. We are hoping the banks accept their responsibility for the problems they created by the loaning programs they initiated. We are hoping they fulfil their obligation to the rural communities in rural Canada and make amends for their improper way of loaning money. It is only a small percentage, Madam Speaker. This year the Farm Credit Corporation will lend approximately $500 million in rural Canada. This only covers the need of approximately 30 per cent of the requests by farmers for long-term loans. The banks should never have given demand notes, should never have given floating loans. The loans should have been long-term mortgages with fixed rates of interest. The hon. member knows as well as I do, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST THAT NORTHERN MUNICIPALITIES BE ISSUED BROADCASTING LICENCES

Mr. Bruce Lonsdale (Timiskaming): My question is for the Minister of Communications. As the minister knows, this spring the CRTC ruled that the Canadian Satellite Communications Ltd. (CANCOM) would be allowed to distribute a package of Canadian radio and television signals to northern communities across the country. Subsequently many smaller northern and remote communities through their municipal councils applied to the CRTC to be terrestrial distributors. Now, however, the CRTC has ruled that municipal corporations may not be issued broadcasting licences because of chapter 377 of the Broadcasting Act which is an order directing the CRTC that municipal corporations are ineligible. Subsequent to that the CRTC wrote to these municipalities—

• (1440)

Some hon. Members: Order. Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member proceed to his question?

Mr. Lonsdale: The CRTC told the municipalities the only way they would become eligible is if they provided community associations or committees—

Some hon. Members: Order. Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I ask the hon. member to proceed immediately to his question, and I mean just that.

Mr. Lonsdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Would the minister advise the House if he is prepared to amend Section 3 of that direction and exempt municipal corporations, thereby allowing them to hold broadcasting licences and, if not, would the minister indicate what arm's length criteria would be acceptable, and what he considers to be effective control by municipal councils?

Mr. Crombie: Simply yes or no.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I believe there is no need to change either the Broadcasting Act or the regulations. A number of small communities in northern Ontario or in other parts of the country have indeed been licensed, not through the municipal governments but through the municipal governments helping local groups set up community associations or non-profit broadcast societies. This method of proceeding is one which the communities the hon. member represents could explore. Of course my department would be more than willing to help them explore that avenue.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

INQUIRY INTO PRICING PRACTICES OF OIL COMPANIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It concerns the current subject of the hearings involving the oil companies before the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission and the allegations that they forced Canadians to pay an extra $12 billion over a 15-year period in increased costs for gasoline and heating oil. Mr. Jake Howard who, like Mr. John Robinette, is one of the hordes of very competent and very expensive lawyers representing the oil companies, has said that he would delay the inquiry if the Bertrand report is put in as evidence. This practice has been going on for a long time. These are the same companies that have been blackmailing us on the megaprojects, these are the same companies that have led to overcharges—

Mr. Ouellet: Order, order!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I guess on Wednesdays questions are somewhat longer than usual after caucus. May I have a short question, please?

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I just wanted to make sure the minister knew what the subject was. Will the minister tolerate the delays about which Mr. Howard and the other lawyers for the oil companies are talking? If not, what does he intend to do?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I believe that this question would be better addressed to the chairman of the commission. It is up to him to accept the evidence laid before the commission. As to tolerance or no tolerance, that is for the chairman of the commission to decide and not for the minister, who has no authority over the work of the commission at this time.

[English]

REQUEST THAT COMMISSION ISSUE INTERIM REPORT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, the minister's own lawyer, Gordon Henderson, said the following to the inquiry:

—not only did oil industry practices lead to ... overcharging ... but the "predatory" and restrictive practices still are in operation.

My supplementary question is directed to the same minister. The minister could take action, if he is prepared to do two things. First, he could ask for an interim report of this commission so that we will get going on this thing and it will not go on and on. Second, is he prepared to change the industry by instructing Petro-Canada to increase its refining capacity and supply more oil for independent oil companies that can supply people without these kinds of rip-offs?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, in reply to the first question, I have already been assured by this commission and its chairman that they would act promptly with regard to this file. As for the second question asked by the hon. member, the evidence submitted to the commission will call for a report by the commission followed by a series of recommendations. I am sure that my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, myself, as well as the other Cabinet members will act on the basis of the recommendations included in the report of the commission.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE CARS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On June 4, 1981, the minister announced quite proudly that Japanese automakers had agreed to reduce voluntarily the number of their exports to Canada by 6 per cent. At that time the minister said that the growing number of automotive imports into Canada was contributing considerably toward the high unemployment level. In an answer to a question in the House at the same time the minister assured us that there would be a substantial increase in the Canadian content of offshore imports. Being the accommodating fellow I am, I should like to give the minister an opportunity to report on the progress he has made since then, with regard to both the voluntary Japanese restraint program and the additional Canadian content in offshore imports, as promised by the minister.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the arrangements the Japanese announced on June 4 cover the fiscal year from April 1, 1981, to April 1, 1982. They said they would restrain their exports to Canada in that period to some 174,000 units. At the time the arrangements were announced, exports for the period after April 1 to June were already under way, which was reflected in some increase in exports. I am happy to report that in August of this year there was a sharp drop in exports from Japan to some 11,000 units from the 19,000 level in the previous month. I look forward to this level being maintained for the balance of the fiscal year. If that is the case, the level the Japanese said they would maintain certainly would be achieved.

With respect to the achievement of greater Canadian content in imports, I want to confirm to the House that we have had a major achievement because of the agreement of the federal government to enter into a special duty remission program with Volkswagen Canada. They said that they would be establishing a plant which will hire some 500 people. They will be doubling the purchase of parts from independent Canadian manufacturers to some $150 million per year, with some 1,500 jobs. They will be maintaining a Canadian content level after 1983 of some 84 per cent, much higher than is the case required for existing Canadian manufacturers. I thank my friend for his constructive question.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL UNDERTAKING

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I cannot believe the minister tried to answer that question with a straight face. He knows full well that since April 1 the number of Japanese automotive imports has increased to 90,893 vehicles, an increase of over 70 per cent. Even though that increase dropped somewhat in August, if this trend continues for one or two months they will never keep that promise. It is like the minister's industrial strategy. It has evaporated. His promise on the automotive industry has not materialized, and he is still here despite the high interest rates which are plaguing the country.

My supplementary question is directed to the same minister. Is he now prepared to be honest with Canadians, admit his failures in the auto industry, and at the same time revise his expectations regarding Japanese imports as well as Canadian content in Japanese automobiles and vehicles, as the minister promised, so that the industry can plan accordingly? Can the minister give us that undertaking now?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, certainly I do not accept the premise of the hon. member's question. We made efforts which were reflected in our arrangements with Chrysler, Ford, and other companies, as well as independent parts manufacturers that are moving toward the achievement of the objective of a stronger Canadian industry. Also we have begun to move toward our objective of greater Canadian content with respect to exports to Canada of companies not established here. The hon. member's premise is quite wrong. There is a lot more room and ground to cover. We are working actively to pursue and fulfil those objectives. I do not think my hon. friend is on the right track at all. In fact, from his questions he is right off the road when it comes to knowing what he is talking about with regard to automobiles.

THE BUDGET

POSSIBILITY OF TABLING BUDGET BEFORE NOVEMBER 3

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance in view of the significance of his budget for Canadians, of which the minister is well aware. The minister has already told me that he would be able to table his budget before the end of October and he finally announced officially November 3 as the date of the budget. Can the minister tell the House today whether it would have been physically possible for him to table his budget before November 3 if it had not been for this conference?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I made it clear that once I had decided upon the date, or had indicated to the House the intention to proceed on November 3, preparations were put in place in the manner I described earlier in the question period. Therefore at this point it is not possible for me to advance that process, but at the same time, as I indicated earlier, if it turned out at the end of the week that the meeting on the Constitution is not to be held in Ottawa, as indicated in the Prime Minister's telex, I would proceed as normal on November 3.

THE ECONOMY

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT GIVES PRIORITY TO ECONOMIC QUESTIONS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, earlier the minister asked my leader to invite the premiers to set another date for the first ministers' conference, which would have allowed him to bring down his budget on November 3. Since the minister is aware of the problems confronting thousands of Canadians, including farmers, renters and home owners—this bears repeating and I believe that the minister is well aware of the problem in Quebec since he can hear from his 74 colleagues from that province—could the minister at least tell us whether, in his own mind, the government gives priority to the economy or rather to the constitutional reform? It seems to me that the Canadian people would like to hear about economic measures. As far as the minister himself is concerned, does the economy have priority over the constitutional reform?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, my priority is certainly the economy.

Miss MacDonald: Oh, really!

Mr. MacEachen: For that reason I was rather surprised that the premiers of the provinces, knowing full well that the date had been established for a budget, had suggested that very week for a federal-provincial conference.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: It seems to me that a lot of people in Canada, including myself, will be wondering what was the purpose of that obvious effort to downgrade the importance of the economy.

Miss MacDonald: So, the premiers are writing your budget, are they?

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER FOOTWEAR IMPORTATION QUOTAS RECOMMENDED BY ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL WILL BE MAINTAINED

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Beauce): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Keeping in mind the great many lay-offs in the footwear industry, particularly so in Quebec, and the ever growing share of the market cornered by imports, that is, already 58 per cent of the Canadian market, and this percentage having followed an upward trend especially since the devaluation of foreign currencies, can the minister tell the House whether he intends to maintain the import quotas as recommended in the report of the Anti-dumping Tribunal respecting the footwear industry?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, my colleague has accurately described the problem of the footwear industry. We in cabinet take this problem very seriously. That is why we are very actively discussing our policy for that industry. We are fully aware of the fact that our current quota system will end December 1, and I want to assure my colleague and the House that within the next few weeks we will be in a position to clarify our policy. I hope it will be possible to set the footwear industry and its labour force well at ease.

AGRICULTURE

ESTABLISHMENT OF WESTERN GRAINS RESEARCH FOUNDATION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I understand that the minister met yesterday with representatives of farm organizations from western Canada who have formed a western grains research foundation. They will base its research, they hope, on the $9 million presently in the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund, plus a voluntary levy of one tenth of one per cent on grain sales. I wonder if the minister can tell me whether he supports the foundation's presentation and, if so, what steps he is taking to implement it.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I did not meet the group to which the hon. member refers. If it was here yesterday, I was in Saskatoon.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Oh, God!

An hon. Member: Got a good welcome, too.

Mr. Whelan: I do not pretend to be God. The hon. member may think that I am.

Mr. Clark: You think you are.

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member used the terminology "Oh, God". I want to tell him that God was probably there and I was also there; however, so were many people from all across Canada, and when I finished my presentation in Saskatoon I received a standing ovation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: They met with my officials. I have been in a meeting since eight o'clock this morning, and I have not yet had time to see the report from the officials.

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): I would like to point out to the minister that the foundation is similar to a suggestion in my Bill C-245 to set up a research establishment. The minister is aware that the $9 million in the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund is not interest-bearing. At 15 per cent interest this means about $3,600 a day is lost to research. I wonder if the minister will give top priority to dealing with the foundation's presentation so that we can get along with the job of research in western agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member describes this fund in a manner which he knows does not operate like that at all. Any money which is held that way is held by the Receiver General. The hon. member is talking about interest rates which he knows do not exist; he makes a wide sweeping statement describing how much is lost, and he impresses a lot of people by that. However, he knows that he is as inaccurate as he could be. He knows that that money belongs to both the government and—

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Whelan: —was contributed to by the producers. He knows full well that if I could use that money, I would be using it tomorrow for research. I do not need to have anyone else tell me that research is important, and how they want to administer it. It will be used for research if and when we can take hold of the money and use it, as far as that goes. However, we look at the need for research in Canada and at the little contribution some are making. He knows that the producers in western Canada cannot decide among themselves how much of a contribution they should be making to research on a voluntary write-off, and this type of thing.

Mr. Andre: Could you repeat that?

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member knows fully well that he is making a mountain out of what is not even an ant hill.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

EXERCISE OF SPECIAL POWERS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General, the minister responsible for ensuring that the RCMP obey the law in Canada. The Solicitor General has said that in his view the rule of law justifies a number of illegal activities which the McDonald Commission strongly urged be validated by legislation. He further indicated that he is continuing to authorize the RCMP to engage in activities which McDonald stated clearly violate the law.

In view of the fact that the McDonald Commission stated that tolerating any breaches of the law is merely the thin edge of the wedge, how can the Solicitor General defend his dangerous statements allowing the RCMP to decide which laws it is reasonably necessary to break, statements which clearly say that there is one law for the RCMP and another law for all other Canadians?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): I could certainly never justify that policy in the manner the hon. member opposite has attributed to me. What I did say, and in which I am supported by the law officers of the Crown and by some outside law opinions, is that there are special powers which are available to the police which are not available to ordinary citizens in the course of law enforcement activities, when it is reasonably necessary for them to exercise those powers. I think Canadians are very pleased and satisfied with the level of effective law enforcement that we have in this country, and I do not propose to see that diminished.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: The RCMP is complying, in its activities, with the rule of law. Therefore, to characterize its activities as illegal is totally unjustified. In fact McDonald himself did not say that they were unlawful; he said that they were not authorized by law, which is not the same thing as saying that they are unlawful.

• (1500)

CONSEQUENCE OF SUPREME COURT DECISION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, with that kind of contemptuous attitude the minister himself should be charged with aiding and abetting violations of the Criminal Code.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): My supplementary question to that co-conspirator is this: as a result of yesterday's Supreme Court of Canada's decision allowing the RCMP to breach the privacy of Canadians' confidential medical records, will the Solicitor General assure this House that under no circumstances will he allow the RCMP to request such confidential medical information from health care personnel in violation of laws, regulations, and possibly medical ethics?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I gather that my friend opposite is now calling the decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada unlawful.

I directed that appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada when we had the decision of the court of appeal because I felt it was necessary for the RCMP and all of the other police forces in Canada as well to have a privilege in their relationship with informers. The Supreme Court of Canada has upheld that privilege. To suggest those activities are unlawful after the Supreme Court of Canada itself found that they were lawful is, to my way of thinking, a very grave and political distortion of what happened at the Supreme Court of Canada.

HEALTH

MEASURES TO IMPROVE SANITARY CONDITIONS AMONG JAMES BAY CREE

Mr. René Gingras (Abitibi): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Numerous representations were made last winter, and again this spring and summer, concerning health hazards in certain Cree villages at James Bay. I should like to know whether the minister has done anything to improve sanitary conditions on the James Bay coast?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I should like to say to the hon. member that, through its parliamentary committee, the House has been made aware that all summer long we did closely monitor the question of the health of the James Bay Cree Indians, in co-operation with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and following a joint meeting of our officials and the ministers involved, as well as the health conditions in each of the villages whose environmental conditions were critical, so as to ensure that the various parties involved were discharging their responsibilities. The fact remains that those parties have to be convened. In mid-May I wrote to the Quebec minister, Mr. Pierre-Marc Johnson, whose direct responsibility it is now, asking him to hold such a meeting. I wrote to him again because I still had not received a reply around mid-September and I wrote to him again on October 15, this time suggesting that we both have a meeting with the Cree, on the assumption of course that Quebec would accept that.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BROADBENT—OBLIGATION OF MINISTER TO TABLE DOCUMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I presume that today you are almost ready to rule on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) the day before yesterday. Before making my submissions to you, which are submissions in an area quite different from those made by the hon. member for Oshawa, may I point out that in Hansard at page 11912 for October 19, the issue now before the Chair is listed under the heading "Privilege". There is no mention made of a point of order. Similarly, in the index there is no mention made of a point of order. That oversight is carried forward into yesterday's Hansard.

I suggest for future reference, when one wishes to have access to these jewels of wisdom coming from hon. members and from the Chair, that in order to made it easier, it might be well to suggest to the Hansard office that they do list a point of order raised as such. There were the two questions, as the Chair will recall. There was a distinct question of privilege and a distinct question of order. It is to the latter that I wish to speak today.

The key citation mentioned by the hon. member for Oshawa comes from Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 327(2), which reads:

It has been admitted that a document which has been cited ought to be laid upon the Table of the House, if it can be done without injury to the public interest.

The hon. member for Oshawa rested his submission and argument on the interpretation of the word "cited" as meaning "quoted", or a document quoted from. I wish to carry the submission beyond that and refer the Chair to the same Citation 327, but to paragraph (5), where in effect Beauchesne sets forth the definition of the word "cite". It reads:

To be cited, a document must be quoted or specifically used to influence debate.

In my submission, citing a document means two different things. Either the document must be quoted from or it must be specifically used to influence debate. The admission that a document exists or the reading of the salutation or address of a letter does not constitute a citing.

My submissions to you, Madam Speaker, will be resting on the argument that the document itself has been used extensively for three days in a row now to support a certain position taken by the minister in debate and, on the other hand, to support a certain position taken by the hon. member for Oshawa.

This cannot be gainsaid. If one refers to page 11906 of Hansard, it will be seen that the minister did attempt "to influence debate", to use the words of Beauchesne. He did this by specifically using the document in an attempt to influence his side of the question, not only with the hon. member for Oshawa but with the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and others on this side of the House. That appears in the right-hand column of Hansard for October 19, 1981, at page 11906 and again at 11907, where the minister went so far as to use certain figures in the document and deny the validity of other figures. The minister carried on with that yesterday in his attempt to influence the debate as to the validity or invalidity of the document.

At page 11970 of Hansard for October 20, the minister responded to a submission I made to the Chair. In part, the minister said:

I would say further that there is nothing in the report that was not in the newspapers yesterday.

He had other references in the edition of Hansard for October 20 which clearly can bring one to no other conclusion but that the minister was using the document to influence the position he was taking in the debate on the subject matter of the document, namely housing.

The key points under debate at the time were, may it please the Chair, first, that the minister referred twice to figures in the document; that was up to today. Today the minister made further reference to those figures. In addition, he referred to the cut-off in disposable income earmarked for housing. Very clearly those references are recorded in Hansard.

Point of Order—Mr. Broadbent

● (1510)

The second point I wish to submit to you, Madam Speaker, is that the House is placed in a position where there is a dispute between four members now, namely, the minister, the hon. member for Oshawa, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). My submission to you is that the rest of the members of this place are placed in the position that they cannot participate in debate because the document is not before them. Certainly it is not before any members on this side, although the minister's generosity has apparently extended to at least one and probably more members on his own side of the House.

I would just draw your attention, Madam Speaker, to the fact that this situation places all other members in the position that we cannot participate in this debate to determine which side of the argument we may wish to come down on. We are prevented from doing it because the document is not before us. It is my submission that this is precisely the situation that the rule respecting the tabling of cited documents was intended to avoid. In saying "cited" I take the definition in paragraph (5) of Citation 327, namely, that the document was "specifically used to influence debate".

The minister has attacked the document to support his view of the housing crisis. The Leader of the Opposition and others on this side have put forward the document as supporting the point of view exactly to the contrary. Members cannot appreciate whether the minister's reflections are accurate unless they see the document and understand the context in which the figures were used and how much the argument was dependent upon them.

In summary, therefore, I submit to you there can be no doubt that the document exists. From the minister's own mouth it was prepared in his own department, he has read it now, and since having read it he has again used it to influence debate. If it is in the possession of the minister and some other members opposite, it is the focus of debate and the minister has cited parts of it in a bad light to make his own case to influence debate. Members cannot evaluate the document or intelligently participate in discussion of it unless it is tabled so as to give all members a look at it. That is the purpose of the rule, in my submission. The minister has used the document to influence debate. Therefore, that constitutes a citing of the document and I ask the Chair to find accordingly and require the tabling by the minister of the document which has been used these past three days.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, after listening to my hon. colleague, I have the impression I have heard the same thing many times before in this House, and in fact it is not the first time the opposition party has invoked Citation 327(5) to claim that even if a minister had not purposely quoted part of a document, he had used it to influence debate.

Point of Order—Mr. Broadbent

I may point out, Madam Speaker, that the entire line of reasoning used by the member for Yukon is based on replies given by the minister in question on October 19, 1981, on pages 11906 and following of Hansard, that is, during question period.

I should like to start by saying that question period has never been considered as a debate and does not constitute a debate, and consequently, it is impossible to claim during question period that a minister is trying to influence debate, because there is no debate. So, if there is no debate, my hon. colleague's line of reasoning cannot stand. The fact that reference was made to a document cannot, during the oral question period, constitute an attempt to influence debate, since we are not involved in a debate. In fact, according to parliamentary practice and rules, there is no debate during the oral question period.

We must also consider the context of the replies given, and we have here a subsidiary argument put forward by the minister. Allow me to read part of the first question which was asked by the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). Madam Speaker, what we should remember is that the document in question was invoked at the very beginning by a member of the opposition, by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, who said in his question on page 11906, and I quote:

> Another report did emerge on the weekend from CMHC, this one contending that 135 families a day—

The Toronto Star has a copy of the report, and I have a copy of the report, and then the leader of the New Democratic Party asked his question. So the document in question was first used by a member of the opposition. It would be grossly unfair to prevent a minister from referring in his reply to the question that was directed to him. With due respect, the minister in question had absolutely no choice but to refer to the documents invoked by a member of the opposition. But referring does not constitute quoting, and because the document was invoked by a member of the opposition, the document was not referred to in an attempt to influence debate, because debate had not been sought by the minister. The document was invoked by a member of the opposition and, I repeat, the oral question period does not constitute a debate. Finally, Madam Speaker, parliamentary practice and the authorities are quite definite about this, Beauchesne's Citation 327(3) on page 116 is quite clear in this respect, and I feel this should be the basis for any decision in this type of argument, and I quote:

> A public document referred to but not cited or quoted by a minister need not be tabled.

This is a general principle which certainly applies here. Further on in Citation 327(4), the same principle prevails:

> Only the document cited need be tabled by a minister.

Here again, unless a quote has been taken from the document, there can be no obligation to table the document. And finally, section (5), and I quote:

> To be cited, a document must be quoted—

—which is not the case—

> —or specifically used to influence debate.

For reasons I have already mentioned, and I do not intend to go over them again, there was no attempt during the oral question period to influence debate on a document invoked by a member of the opposition.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, I submit that the point raised by the member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has no basis at all, it has no basis in fact. We have a general principle that a minister is not obliged to table a document he has not quoted, and a minister cannot influence debate during the oral question period, because the oral question period is not a debate.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the hon. member has raised an additional point I did not touch on. In two sentences I will submit to you that whether or not the question period constitutes a debate has been decided by your predecessor and, I believe, by yourself as well. The decision is that it does, indeed, constitute a debate for the purpose of this citation.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I would join briefly in the discussion you have before you. The question you have before you as to whether or not the minister in any way made reference directly to the document I think is quite clear.

Mr. Nielsen: He does not have to.

Mr. Deans: I am not suggesting he has to. I am suggesting, however, he did. Citation 327 of Beauchesne reads:

> A Minister of the Crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a despatch or other state paper not before the House, unless he is prepared to lay it upon the Table.

I put to you that, as recorded at page 11906 of Hansard for October 19, 1981, in answer to a question from my leader, the minister said:

> I would ask the Clerk to return the report to him so thay he may reread the paper. I have, on two seconds reading, identified that they are talking about interest rates of 22 per cent.

● (1520)

The minister corrected, in his estimation, my leader's submission, pointing out that the document referred to a figure of 22 per cent.

I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that clearly was an effort by the minister to influence the course of the debate by quoting directly from a page in the document. On those grounds alone, without entering into any further argument, I suggest you could find only that the minister did in fact quote from the document.

I suppose the question before Your Honour now is, should the document be tabled. I submit that Beauchesne is clear, that where it has been reasonably decided that the minister did in fact quote from, or make direct reference to, a public document for the purpose of influencing a debate or, for that matter, influencing opinion in the House of Commons, the practice of tabling the document has generally been acquiesced. Rather than carry this on at great length, I would simply ask that the minister do what Beauchesne indicates most people in these circumstances have done in the past, and that is simply table the document.

Madam Speaker: The resolution of this question would flow out of the definition one would give to what "citing" or "quoting". I suggest that a common sense definition of that would be that the minister would have to read quite extensively from a document in order to call it a quote. If he is referring to a figure that is in a document, or to a sentence or word, especially when it is in answer to a question put to him by another member of the House and that document is subsequently sent over to the minister so he may glance at whatever is referred to, I would say it is very difficult for me to find that the minister was, at that time, quoting from the document.

The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), in quoting from Beauchesne, tried to pin his argument on the fact that Beauchesne does say that the document must be quoted in order to be tabled or specifically used to influence the debate.

I will not enter into the question whether question period is debate or not. Some Speakers have determined that sometimes it is debate. My interpretation is that it is not debate. I suggest that Beauchesne was not using the word "debate" in this particular sense when writing this paragraph.

I would also suggest that to be clear on what that paragraph means it should read that the document must be quoted "and" specifically used, rather than "or" specifically used to influence debate. The word "or" is a bit ambiguous. It means you could either quote from it or use it to further an argument, which I think did not happen in this particular case.

In support of my ruling, I would also refer hon. members to what actually happened. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has quoted the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), when he returned the document to the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), as having said that the member for Oshawa "may reread the paper". He did not say he had read it; he said the member for Oshawa may reread it, and I think we know that it was not read in the House.

The hon. member for Oshawa may have read it in his office but it was not quoted in the House. Then the member for Oshawa replied that the minister had not taken the trouble to read the document before returning it to him. So that was an admission made by the hon. member for Oshawa and it does support my position that nobody has quoted from or cited that document.

In this case the question which has to be resolved is whether the minister should be obligated to table that document. Since the rule applies to an obligation to table the document if a member has quoted from it, I must find that the minister may table the document if he so wishes; but I am in no position, according to our rules, to force him to do so.

PETITIONS

MR. WENMAN—REQUEST FOR CHANGE OF PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE REGARDING PETITIONS

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 67(8) and request that the petition of the member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) regarding parliamentary procedure on petitions be read by the Clerk of the House.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for that petition to be read by the Clerk of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: Since the hon. member does not have the unanimous consent of the House, I cannot ask the Clerk to read the petition.

Mr. Wright: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I rise under the same Standing Order and I quote from it as follows:

—or if it complain of some present personal grievance requiring an immediate remedy, the matter contained therein may be brought into immediate discussion.

I respectfully request that it be brought into discussion.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member needs unanimous consent for that also, or else an interpretation by me as to whether the matter dealt with in the petition would require an urgent debate.

I can deal with it immediately by asking if there is unanimous consent. I am in the hands of the House. I must tell the hon. member that this particular provision of the Standing Order from which he quoted cannot be used to require an urgent debate in the same way as the one provided for under Standing Order 26, under the guise of having a petition read and discussed immediately. However, I will put the question to the House. Does the House agree that the petition presented by the hon. member be immediately discussed? Is there unanimous consent?

An hon. Member: No.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, you will recall that last week the same request was made and we had the opportunity to explain why unanimous consent was refused. I find it strange that members should choose a day of government business to make such a request. Why did they not do that yesterday? Why did the Conservative House leader not pick yesterday for this procedural debate instead of today? In my opinion, these are only dilatory tactics—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Although the minister's complaint about this procedural point may be quite legitimate, the fact remains that a point of order has been raised. I repeat: is the House prepared to grant the hon. member's request? There must be unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member does not have the unanimous consent of this House.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, on a point of order, I am not questioning any ruling which you have made but I fear we may be getting on to an undesirable track. With great respect, it may be the advice you are receiving, but there is nothing that I can find in the applicable Standing Order that requires unanimous consent. In my submission, paragraph (8) of that Standing Order gives the Chair a discretion.

Further, that discretion is placed in the hands of the Chair in order to protect the rights of members. With great respect, asking for unanimous consent is not an adequate protection of those rights because it is delegating that responsibility to government members who are going to say "no" to everything. If we get into taking this direction as a permanent part of our procedure, no petition will ever be discussed, even if in your discretion you might believe it necessary, because you will have established the precedent of requiring unanimous consent.

I submit that that question should be looked at very carefully. If the Chair chooses to exercise its discretion in the negative, that is fine, that has to be accepted; but I respectfully submit that asking for unanimous consent is not the correct way to proceed.

Madam Speaker: I believe I pointed out to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright) that I could deal with it in two ways, either through my discretion or through asking for unanimous consent. It is not that the Standing Orders are specific on the matter of unanimous consent in the case of discussing a petition, but it is a device which is often used in the House because the House, of course, is master of its own destiny, and it is perhaps sometimes the better course to follow. However, prior to asking for unanimous consent I did tell the hon. member that if I were to use my discretion, I would feel that the matter is not urgent and does not require immediate debate.

I believe the petition calls for a change in the Standing Orders. The Standing Orders have existed for a long time. We have been ruled by them for a number of years. Therefore, if the hon. member would like to see some changes in the Standing Orders he is, of course, allowed to discuss and to ask for that. There are other ways of doing it, and certainly under petitions I could not allow a discussion of that matter on the basis of urgency. While I accept the point of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), it was perhaps redundant then to proceed to ask whether the House would give its unanimous consent. However, I think it is quite clear that we cannot discuss it at this time.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. WENMAN—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF PETITION TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I certainly agree that the Standing Order does not call for debate. Debate was not called for by the hon. member. He was not calling for debate but, rather, for discussion, as specifically defined and delineated in that particular Standing Order as being different from debate. However, at this point I would take Your Honour's advice.

Based on the precedent set by Mr. MacInnis and Mr. Speaker as recorded in Hansard for December 11 and December 18, 1970, and in order to address this grievance, I ask Your Honour if you would at this point refer the subject matter of this petition to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Madam Speaker: That part of the Standing Order would require unanimous consent, and it also requires notice. However, I can ask the House if it will give its unanimous consent to referring that particular petition to a committee. Does the House give its unanimous consent to the suggestion of the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Wenman: If Your Honour had referred to the point of reference I suggested Your Honour study, the MacInnis and Mr. Speaker precedent, Your Honour would have seen that in that instance neither notice nor unanimous consent was asked for or involved. It was a decision directly by the House through Mr. Speaker to make the reference, and in that instance Mr. Speaker made that reference very directly.

Because of the complication of this matter, as a minimum I ask Your Honour to reserve on it until Your Honour has studied fully the matter and its implications. I refer not just to the implications mentioned by the House leader of the Conservative party but, indeed, to the full implications involved with a limitation of the rights of private members. I refer not only to the rights of private members but also to the rights of private Canadian citizens. Their last direct recourse to the House of Commons is through petition. That is the closest we come to direct democracy in this House of Commons. We are removing that direct democracy more and more, and by setting the precedent Your Honour is setting today we are headed more and more in that direction, which I do not believe is desirable.

Speaking to that in more detail, if I may, I would also refer—

Madam Speaker: Order. I have just looked into the precedent to which the hon. member is referring, and in the case of that precedent the procedure was the same. Unanimous consent was not given in the House for the petition to be referred to a committee, but subsequently the House leaders met and agreed that it should be referred to a committee.

We have followed the procedure and I have ruled on it. We have followed the procedure as it should be; that is to say that the House has now refused its unanimous consent for that petition to be referred to a committee. If subsequently the House leaders want to get together and do something else about it, I am in the hands of the House, but for the time being I cannot allow the hon. member either to continue discussing the MacInnis case or the matter of having this petition referred to the committee because I have ruled on the question.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WENMAN—ALLEGED INFRINGEMENT OF RIGHTS

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Given the peculiar and unique nature of the petition referred to earlier, I ask that Your Honour now refer to Beauchesne 698(2), which states, and I quote:

> Petitions affecting the House will at once be taken into consideration in accordance with parliamentary usage in all cases of privilege.

The reason I have chosen this other passage is that I have tried all the other courses, and I now find that my rights as a private member are being inhibited. I am very concerned that the precedent Your Honour has just established infringes upon my rights as a private member and inhibits my capacity to act in a responsive and responsible manner on behalf of my constituency.

Madam Speaker: Order. Disagreeing or commenting on a ruling or some of the Standing Orders does not constitute a question of privilege, so the hon. member does not have a question of privilege. He refers to Citation 698 of Beauchesne. I have determined that this is not a case of urgency. It is quite clear we have followed the Standing Orders according to precedent and practice, and I would appreciate it if the hon. member would not continue to pursue this matter. The petition he has presented to the House may not be discussed or referred to a committee. We have decided on both those questions.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PENITENTIARIES

TABLING OF 1979-80 ANNUAL REPORT OF CORRECTIONAL INVESTIGATOR

Mr. David Smith (Parliamenary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I should like to table, in both official languages, the annual report of the correctional investigator which covers the period June 1, 1979 to May 31, 1980.

PETITIONS

MR. CLARK—EFFECTS OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, as I have done on each day since this session began, I beg leave of the House to lay upon the Table a petition signed by Canadians from communities large and small who are concerned about the prospect of being forced out of their homes by the high mortgage interest rate policy followed deliberately by the Liberal government.

Today I would like to lay upon the Table a petition signed by 16 residents of Wasaga Beach, Ontario; 44 residents of Port Colborne, Ontario; and 24 residents of the community of St. Thomas, Ontario.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,855, 1,856, 2,034, 2,564, 2,571, 2,613, 2,681 and 2,704.

[Text]

MR. ANDREW CHATWOOD

Question No. 1,855—Mr. Cossitt:

Was Mr. Andrew Chatwood, former Liberal Member of Parliament for the constituency of Grand Falls-Labrador appointed to the Canada Pension Commission and, if so (a) on what date (b) what are his qualifications for this post (c) what is his salary to the nearest dollar?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Yes.

(a) November 27, 1980.

(b) Mr. Chatwood is a native of Newfoundland. He served with the Royal Canadian Navy Reserve for two years and held a number of positions in the retail and administrative areas until his election to the House of Commons in 1966. Mr. Chatwood was a Member of Parliament representing the riding of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, from September, 1966, to June, 1968, during which time he served on a number of committees, including the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. Between 1968 and 1973 he served as executive assistant to the Hon. Donald Jamieson, while he was Minister of Supply and Services, Transport, and Regional Economic Expansion. In 1973 Mr. Chatwood was vice-president, government relations, for the Newfoundland Refining Co. Ltd. Since 1976, until his appointment to the Canadian Pension Commission, he worked as a real estate broker, and in 1980 served as a director of the Ottawa Real Estate Board.

(c) The salary of members of the Canadian Pension Commission is in the range $33,600 to $41,500.

MR. GUS MACFARLANE

Question No. 1,856—Mr. Cossitt:

Was Mr. Gus MacFarlane, former Liberal Member of Parliament for Hamilton Mountain appointed to the War Veterans Allowance Board and, if so (a) on what date (b) what are his qualifications for this post (c) what is his salary to the nearest dollar?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Yes.

(a) November 3, 1980.

(b) Mr. MacFarlane, a graduate of McGill University, was coach and athletic director at Mount Allison University in Sackville, New Brunswick, and dean of men at McMaster University, Hamilton. Mr. MacFarlane served as a wireless air gunner in the RCAF during the Second World War. Between 1974 and 1979 Mr. MacFarlane was a Member of Parliament representing the Hamilton Mountain riding and served as chief government whip and Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. He was a member of a number of committees, including the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

(c) The salary of members of the War Veterans Allowance Board is in the range $33,600 to $41,500.

ALLEGED STATEMENTS OF COLONEL SPENCER

Question No. 2,034—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a Colonel Spencer, a military attaché in the Canadian Embassy in Prague, Czechoslovakia and, if so (a) from what date to what date (b) has he returned to Canada and has he been appointed Commanding Officer of the Canadian Armed Forces Base in London, Ontario?

2. Did Colonel Spencer make a public statement since his return to Canada in which he said in part, that his cook in Prague was paid in cigarettes and whisky rather than money for use on the black market and, if so, was this the policy of the government or strictly the responsibility of Colonel Spencer and is this done in other places abroad?

3. Did Colonel Spencer take into account the possible effect of this disclosure on his former cook when his statement was read by officials of the Czechoslovakian government?

4. Is Colonel Spencer's former cook still employed at the Embassy in Prague and (a) if so, in what capacity (b) if not, is the government aware of his whereabouts and well-being?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of External Affairs and National Defence as follows:

1. Yes.

(a) August, 1978 to August, 1980.

(b) Yes.

2. In an interview on November 8, 1980, Colonel Spencer was quoted correctly as saying in Czechoslovakia "there are several currencies and the most popular currencies are Scotch whisky and western cigarettes". As an example he cited the fact that when he hired occasional domestic help they expressed their preference to be paid in whisky and cigarettes. It is not Canadian government policy to use this method of payment at this or any other post.

3. Yes. His view was that the practice was so widespread and well known in Czechoslovakia that it would have no adverse effect on any former cook or helper.

4. Colonel Spencer's former cook is not employed and indeed never was employed at the Embassy in Prague (see part 2).

(a) Not applicable.

(b) Yes.

RE-EXAMINATION OF TAX RETURNS

Question No. 2,564—Mr. Cossitt:

Since the government was returned to office following the general election of February 18, 1980, and for three years prior to the general election of May 22, 1979, did the government re-examine taxation returns of Members of Parliament or companies in which they had a controlling interest and, if so (a) what was the number by province (b) what was the breakdown by political party (c) in each case, was it or is it government policy to take such a step with regard to Progressive Conservative and New Democratic Party members on the basis of vindictiveness or political considerations (d) for Liberal party members, was it or is it government policy to take such action as retribution for those who were considered not to be 100 per cent in favour of all party policies?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): The Department of National Revenue has not conducted a program of examining the tax returns of Members of Parliament as such. From time to time the returns of an individual, including one who is a Member of Parliament, may be examined in the ordinary course of events because of questions which arise in assessing or audit. No statistics are available which would make possible an answer to the questions raised.

SOGENER

Question No. 2,571—Mr. Wilson:

1. Did the SOGENER company act as an agent in the acquisition by Petro-Canada of Petrofina Canada Limited and, if so (a) what is the head office address and what are the telephone numbers (b) what was the date of incorporation (c) what were the details of capitalization, including paid-in equity capital, retained earnings and debt (d) what was the gross revenue and what were the net earnings in the latest fiscal year of the company?

2. (a) What are the names and addresses of (i) directors and officers (ii) shareholders owning 5 per cent or more of common shares (b) what is the number of employees in the company?

3. What are the principal business activities of the company?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada reports as follows:

1. Société Générale pour l'Énergie was engaged by Petro-Canada to act as an intermediary in the Petrofina acquisition.

(a) Address, 16 Rue le Corbusier, 1208 Geneva, Switzerland.
Telephone number, 022 46 68 50

(b) – (d) Information proprietary to SOGENER.

2. (a) and (b) Information proprietary to SOGENER.

3. SOGENER is a "banque d'affaire" a merchant bank which specializes in investment and provision of financial and intermediary services primarily in energy resources or related fields.

CONDOR LITHO AND CARTON LTD.

Question No. 2,613—Mr. Stewart:

Did the Public Service Commission contract with Condor Litho & Carton Ltd., LaSalle, for games in the amount of $11,084 and, if so (a) what were the games (b) what number were printed (c) what was the cost per game (d) for what purpose will they be used (e) to whom will they be distributed?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Public Service Commission and the Department of Supply and Services as follows:

The Department of Supply and Services awarded a contract to Condor Litho & Carton Ltd., LaSalle, on behalf of the Public Service Commission, in the amount of $11,084.

(a) The title of the game is "La grande finale".

(b) 1,250.

(c) $8.87.

(d) The game "La grande finale" is a teaching tool designed for public servants on second language training.

INDIVIDUAL TAX RETURNS

Question No. 2,681—Mr. Beatty:

1. Under what circumstances may the Department of National Revenue make available to a third party personally-identifiable information relating to an individual's tax return without obtaining the prior consent of the individual in question?

2. Were any requests for personally-identifiable information concerning individual tax returns received in 1980 and 1981 and, if so (a) from which departments, agencies, individuals or organizations (b) in how many instances did the department accede to the request?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue):

Order Paper Questions

1. Section 241 of the Income Tax Act prohibits communication of any return and its content, including personally-identifiable information, other than for the purpose of administration of this act or in response to a subpoena from a criminal court. In addition, Subsection 241(4) allows the provision of returns of their contents, under conditions prescribed in regulation 3000, to the provincial governments for which there is a federal-provincial tax collection agreement, for the purpose of administration of an act that imposes a tax similar to those imposed under the Income Tax Act. Identifiable information derived from income tax returns is provided to other federal agencies where there is entitlement through one or more other federal statutes. Such is the case, for example, with the Statistics Act which authorizes the furnishing of identifiable data to Statistics Canada. While providing entitlement, these statutes also provide sanctions against secondary disclosures. In addition, information exchanges exist with governments of other countries under reciprocal income tax treaties.

2. Requests for personally identifiable information, as extracted from income tax returns, were received during 1980 and 1981 from Statistics Canada, Health and Welfare Canada, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Finance Canada, the Auditor General of Canada, and from all provinces and territories having tax collection agreements with the federal government. All requests were acceded to as legal entitlement was clear.

STANDISH BROS. LTD.

Question No. 2,704—Mr. McKinnon:

Was a contract let to Standish Brothers Limited at Cookshire, Quebec for $26,460, for chemical vegetation control spraying at CFB Chatham, New Brunswick and, if so, what is the chemical agent that will be used?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services):

A contract in the amount of $26,460 was awarded to Standish Brothers Limited, Cookshire, Quebec, on behalf of the Department of National Defence for chemical vegetation control spraying at the Canadian Forces Base in Chatham, New Brunswick.

The commercial mixture used, sold under the generic name of Killex, contains the following chemicals: Mecoprop acid; 2, 4-D acid (Amine formulation); and Dicamba acid. These chemicals are registered under No. 9811 of the Pest Control Products Act.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURES RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed, from Monday, October 19, 1981, consideration of Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and Motions Nos. 6 (Mr. Schellenberger) and 20 (Mr. Lalonde).

Madam Speaker: Before this debate commences, I would like to make a statement concerning all of the motions standing on the notice paper at the report stage in relation to the bill now before the House.

In order to expedite the business of the House in an orderly manner, it is my intention to include in today's statement my views which I gave to the House on July 13 last, as recorded at pages 11463 and 11464 of Hansard.

As hon. members are aware, I indicated last July that Motions Nos. 1 and 2 seek to import a preamble into a bill which was introduced in the House without a preamble. For the benefit of hon. members I had quoted Section (3) of Citation 779 from the fifth edition of Beauchesne and also referred to page 531 of Sir Erskine May's nineteenth edition. These sources indicate that the motions appear to be out of order; however, I am still prepared to hear arguments.

In relation to Motions Nos. 3 and 4, a recorded division has been deferred on each of these motions.

Motion No. 5 has been carried.

Motions Nos. 6 and 20 were grouped for debate and are now before the House. These motions will be voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15 and 16 will be grouped for debate, as I stated on July 13 last. However, since studying the remaining motions, it would be my intention to include with this grouping Motion No. 41 which deals essentially with the same matter. The motions will be voted as follows:

(a) The question on Motion No. 7 will be put to the House by itself.

(b) Motions Nos. 8, 9 and 10 seem to offer alternatives and will be put to the House as follows:

(i) The question will be put on Motion No. 8. An affirmative vote on this motion makes it unnecessary for the House to decide on Motions Nos. 9 and 10. However, a negative vote on the motion necessitates the question being put on Motion No. 9.

(ii) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 9 obviates the question having to be put on Motions Nos. 10, 11, 12 and 16. A negative vote on Motion No. 9 necessitates the question being put on Motion No. 10 and the vote on Motion No. 10 also disposes of Motions Nos. 11, 12 and 16.

(c) Separate questions will be put on motions Nos. 13, 15 and 41.

Motions Nos. 14, 17 and 18 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 19 and 24, standing in the name of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar), seem to go beyond the scope of the bill and therefore do not appear to be in order. The hon. member may wish to present arguments on this point later. For the benefit of the hon. member, I refer him to Beauchesne, fifth edition, Section (1) of Citation 773.

Motion No. 20 has been grouped with Motion No. 6. Motions Nos. 21 and 22 should be grouped for debate, with a vote on Motion No. 21 disposing of Motion No. 22. Motions Nos. 23, 25, 26, 27, 28 and 29 will be debated and voted on separately.

In my statement of July 13, I indicated that Motion No. 30 would be debated and voted on separately. However, it is my intention to group this motion for debate with Motions Nos. 31, 32 and 33 and to be voted on as follows:

(a) The question will be put to the House separately on Motions Nos. 30 and 31.

(b) The question will be put to the House separately on Motion No. 32, and an affirmative vote on this motion disposes of Motion No. 33. However, a negative vote necessitates the question being put on Motion No. 33.

A recorded division was deferred on Motion No. 34.

Motion No. 35 standing in the name of the hon. member of Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) is consequential on Motion No. 36. However, Motion No. 36 causes some misgivings to the Chair. I refer the hon. member to Section 4 of Citation 773 in Beauchesne's fifth edition, which reads in part:

(a) An amendment is inadmissible if it refers to, or is not intelligible without, subsequent amendments or schedules, or if it is otherwise incomplete.

However, the hon. member will be given an opportunity when these motions are called to present his views.

Motion No. 37 standing in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre appears to be inconsistent with Subclause

49(13) of the bill. In this respect, I refer the hon. member to Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 773(2), and I quote:

An amendment must not be inconsistent with, or contradictory to, the bill, nor must it be inconsistent with a decision which the committee has given upon a former amendment.

For this reason Motion No. 37 appears to be out of order; however, I would be prepared to hear argument later.

Motions Nos. 38, 39 and 40 will be grouped for debate and voted on separately. Motion No. 41 has been grouped for debate with Motions Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15 and 16. Motion No. 42 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 43 and 50 were ruled out of order in my statement of July 13.

Motion No. 44 standing in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre appears to increase the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board and seems to go beyond the scope of the clause it seeks to amend. However, unless I hear otherwise, I propose to resolve my doubt in favour of the member who proposed the motion. This being the case, Motion No. 44 could be grouped with Motions Nos. 45, 46 and 47 for purpose of debate with a separate vote on each motion.

Motions Nos. 48 and 49 will be debated separately and voted on separately.

Motion No. 50 was ruled out of order.

Recorded divisions have been deferred on motions Nos. 51, 52 and 53.

In my statement of July 13, I had indicated to the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) that Motion No. 54 sought to establish a compensation fund to be administered by a board and that this would entail the outlaying of public funds. To this end, I refer the hon. gentleman to Section (7) of Citation 773 in Beauchesne's fifth edition. On October 15, as recorded at pages 11825 to 11827 of Hansard, hon. members presented their arguments for and against this motion. As there is some doubt in the Chair's mind as to the procedural acceptability of the motion, it is my intention to resolve this doubt in favour of the mover of the motion and put the motion to the House for debate.

Motion No. 55 has been carried.

Recorded divisions on Motions Nos. 56 and 57 been deferred.

If hon. members wish to have a copy of this statement they may obtain a copy at the Table.

Mr. Waddell: I appreciate Your Honour's ruling. However, it is unclear in my mind as to when we will debate Motion No. 54.

Madam Speaker: When the time comes and other clauses have been debated. The debate will follow in the logical manner.

Mr. Waddell: The reason I ask is because we have just finished debating Motions Nos. 52 and 53, what I call environmental amendments. I take it we will not return to debate No. 54; we will wait until we get to No. 54 in sequence.

Madam Speaker: I think that is logical. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Waddell: What is the question? I am sorry, Madam Speaker, you asked if the House is ready for the question. I did not quite catch what the question was.

Madam Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, are you referring to Bill C-48? If so, the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) had the floor when we last finished.

Mr. Nielsen: If there are no further speakers on this particular aspect of the debate, we are ready for the calling of the question and the hearing of the yeas and nays. It is my understanding that the vote is deferred on everything else.

Mr. Ittinuar: Excuse me, Madam Speaker. I have been thinking in Eskimo and not listening to the debate in English so I did not catch what was going on! I would like to speak to Motion No. 6.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) has the floor.

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, I too would like to speak to the motion put forth by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) since it deals directly with an issue which is of critical importance to northerners, particularly my constituents.

I first wish to quote from an article by Douglas Fisher which appeared in The Toronto Sun on Monday, May 11, 1981 in which he quoted former United States President James Monroe:

The hunter or savage state requires a greater extent of territory to sustain it than is compatible with the progress and just claims of civilized life . . . and must yield to it.

Might I suggest that Bill C-48 can be called the "Canadian Monroe". This was written in 1817. Therefore, I believe that Bill C-48 is an anachronism that is appropriate to the government across the way. In a general sense, this motion by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin tries to ensure that Bill C-48 will not prejudice the outcome of land claims negotiations which are currently going on between the Government of Canada and various native organizations across the north. The minister has repeatedly assured members of the standing committee of this House that Bill C-48 is neutral with regard to land claims in the north. He also said that passage of this bill will have no effect whatsoever on the outcome of these delicate negotiations.

However much I would like to, I am unable to accept that view and would like to give an explanation as to why. For the minister to say to us that land claims negotiations will not be jeopardized or affected by this bill indicates only too clearly that he lacks a precise understanding of what land claims are all about. It is about time his understanding was improved, and I will be only too happy to assist.

● (1550)

First, let me talk about what land claims are not. Land claims are not a process whereby the aboriginal peoples of Canada give up all rights to their lands, especially those in the north, in exchange for some simple form of compensation which Bill C-48 does not even propose. This once-and-for-all type of approach worked for the government in the nineteenth century and, however much it would like to continue the practice today, the government must recognize the fact that it is no longer acceptable to the northern peoples.

There is a famous saying which says: "Those who do not learn from their mistakes are destined to repeat them". The people of the north are only too aware of the consequences of selling off their rights in the way that the government would prefer. They see how others in the south have been robbed of their own economic resource base, confined to reserves and left marginalized within their own home lands by accepting the government's approach to the making of treaties and the settling of claims.

The government is now inviting the native people to sit down and agree to the same types of settlements, in effect, to repeat the mistakes of the past; but all northern peoples say "no". They have a different vision of what land claims are all about. To them, comprehensive claims are the means by which their rights to the land and its resources will be recognized and entrenched. They are not approaching the government with the position that "everything must remain ours". On the contrary, they recognize that the resources that exist in their home lands are needed by their fellow Canadians and they are willing to share them.

But they do see land claims settlements as the vehicle which will ensure that the mistakes of the past will not be repeated. They seek to define, very clearly, their relationship with the larger society before development activities disrupt their communities irreparably—I emphasize that—and it is through land claims negotiations that they seek to accomplish this. They want to define, for instance, who owns the land, including surface and subsurface rights, and also how decisions will be made in the future regarding land use management, environmental protection and a variety of other crucial matters. In short, they want to define their economic and political rights for the future in such a way as to ensure that their needs continue to be met at least as much as those of southerners. They are not willing to become marginalized in their home lands, either economically or politically. They have made it very clear to the government that they are not simply out for a "quick buck", but want to reach settlements which will guarantee them a continual say over matters which so obviously affect them.

Over the last few years, organizations representing the peoples of the north have met with the government to discuss these matters on the assumption that they could be resolved through a process of negotiation. In fact, it was the government in its 1973 policy statement on native claims in Canada which recommended this process as the best way to achieve solutions. The native peoples have responded to this invitation in good faith and have produced, in a relatively short time, fairly sophisticated proposals which they feel would protect their interests and allow them to maintain their viability within the context of Canadian federalism.

I should like to note that in the next few months there will be a plebiscite in the Northwest Territories to determine the political evolution of the north, but this is opposed.

At the same time as it is pretending to negotiate a solution to these fundamental questions in the context of land claims, however, the government has brought forth Bill C-48. Bill C-48 stipulates that all revenues from oil and gas developments north of 60 are to go directly to the federal government, with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) having a remarkable degree of discretion to decide on the nature, pace and location of all resource developments in the area, something no other minister has ever had. Through Bill C-48 the federal government is serving notice to everyone involved that it sees these northern resources as its property to control and benefit from as it sees fit.

Coming as it does, when the government is also negotiating the ownership of northern lands and resources with the northern peoples, the bill forces us to conclude that the government is speaking out of both sides of its mouth. If we liken the present situation to that of the ownership of a house which is in dispute, we can perhaps see more clearly the injustice of the government's actions and the extent to which they will affect the outcome of claims negotiations by the Dene, COPE, the ITC and others in the north. Take, for example, a house, the ownership of which is in dispute. Two parties say they have a claim to the ownership of the house and its contents, some of which are extremely valuable. Each side acknowledges that the other has a claim, and instead of going through the courts to find a solution, the two sides agree that the whole matter can best be resolved through a process of negotiation.

While these agreed-upon negotiations are taking place, however, one party suddenly announces that it is taking over all the valuable contents of the house with the intention of selling them. Legally, this party's right to dispose of property on which there is an outstanding claim by a third party would appear dubious. And morally, such actions would be reprehensible at best, and would call into serious question the party's stated desire to achieve a negotiated settlement.

This is what the federal government is doing with Bill C-48. It is giving the northern peoples two different messages: one, it is saying: "We accept the fact that you have a legitimate claim to the areas of the north in question"; and second, it is also declaring that the resources on those lands and the right to decide how and when they will be developed belong solely to the federal government. By bringing forth Bill C-48 at this time, the government has, therefore, succeeded in making a mockery of the negotiation process which it initiated in 1973 through one of its own policies.

The government responds to these types of charges by saying that it needs to consolidate its powers over oil and gas development in the north in order to manage them more effectively for the interests of northerners; that it needs to control the revenue from developments for the national interest, but that sufficient funds would always be returned to the north to ensure that residents there receive benefits. In other words, welfare. By this, the government is simply saying: "We will control everything relating to development in the north, but don't you northerners worry, we will continue to look after you". It is time that northerners, Mr. Speaker, native and non-native alike—and I represent them all—were allowed to look after themselves. It is time they were free of the kind of paternalism that Bill C-48 represents: It is time that they be allowed to have a say in the decisions which will affect them clearly. Bill C-48 succeeds in denying them all of these.

In response to the charge that Bill C-48 will undermine or prejudice the outcome of current land claims negotiations, the minister says that nothing could be further from the truth. He has stated time and time again, and with great assurance, that the provisions of the bill will not affect the substance of an eventual settlement in any way. He assures us that changes can always be made to this legislation in the future in order to accommodate the terms of any settlements. In other words, he is saying that, in spite of the terms of the current bill, everything still remains negotiable in the context of future claims negotiations, including presumably the question of the ownership of surface and subsurface resources. "Trust us", he has said to us many times. He is saying to the native peoples: "We will be willing to negotiate anything you want in the future, despite what Bill C-48 says."

While they would no doubt like to trust in the government's good intentions on this issue, the northern peoples are understandably reluctant to do so and for good reasons. They stem from the fact that, in the context of negotiations that have occurred to date, the federal government has been decidedly unwilling to negotiate the question of ownership of subsurface resources. In the only agreement that has been reached to date, that signed between the government and the Committee for Original People's Entitlement in the fall of 1978, it was clearly stipulated that northern peoples would not be allowed to select lands on which there were known oil or gas deposits. When the agreement was announced, the then minister of Indian affairs and northern development was quick to announce to other native groups that they could not expect a better deal than that which was struck with COPE.

● (1600)

Therefore, throughout the history of the negotiations the government has placed very strong limits on what it considers to be negotiable. It has said that the ownership of subsurface mineral rights is non-negotiable to all intents and purposes, and on the matters relating to political rights, these too have been effectively excluded from the process of negotiation. Despite the desire of northern peoples to discuss such matters in the context of land claims, federal negotiators have consistently been denied the mandate to do so.

This means that the government is misleading us and the northern peoples when it assures us that everything will be open to negotiation in the future. While such promises may be technically correct, past policies reveal the extent to which the government will actually negotiate. In the past it has refused to negotiate seriously on those matters which affect the economic rights of native peoples and on those matters which relate to their political rights. This represents the government's approach to land claims negotiations in the past and it represents the government's policy today. Yet, the minister would have us believe that everything will be negotiable later on, if only we will agree to their taking control of the resources now. I am unable to agree with this.

The present motion is a very interesting one although it is somewhat naive. It challenges the government on the very point I am addressing. If the government is sincere when it says that everything will remain negotiable for the purposes of land claims even after Bill C-48 is passed, then it should have no trouble supporting this particular motion. After all, it would only be an affirmation of the impression the government is earnestly trying to convey.

However, if the government is unwilling to support this motion, we will have no other choice but to question its future intentions. If it does not support the motion, we will have every reason to believe that its promises and assurances are hollow. Thus it will be a warning sign to all those who are looking toward land claims to provide a fair and equitable basis for participating in Canadian society—a warning that the government is not to be trusted.

It is my hope that the government will respond to this particular motion in a way as to allay any such conclusions. As I said, the motion is somewhat naive in that it was written by someone who had very good intentions and a good heart, but in the context of the current negotiations we could not agree with some parts of it. Generally I support the motion. Hopefully the government will do so, as it is the only motion which recognizes any justification for claims in relation to Bill C-48.

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, I was listening very carefully to my colleague, the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar), especially since during the past year, as co-chairman of the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution, I was able to draw on his knowledge and experience of Canada's aboriginal peoples. His statements are always noted for their honesty and conviction, and the concerns he has expressed this afternoon cannot be dismissed lightly.

Monday evening I was listening while one of our hon. colleagues was asking a question—and I believe an answer is in order—in which he accused us, up to a point, of using Clause 34 of the constitutional resolution to confirm the rights of Canada's aboriginal peoples, and then turning around in Bill C-48 and ignoring completely any progressive measures we had taken previously in this respect.

I would like to read again Clause 34. I realize it represents the sum of concerted efforts by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq and several other members, especially my colleague, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) and also, it must be said, of my colleague, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), all of whom emphasized the objectives Canada should pursue in this respect during the discussions we had on the subject last winter. Clause 34 of the constitutional resoluton provides, and I quote:

The aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

I feel this is extremely important. This is the basis for any action Parliament must take with respect to Canada's aboriginal peoples.

After listening to the comments made Monday evening, I happened to glance through the proceedings of the committee, and I was pleased to see that at least eight amendments had been made at the committee stage, probably thanks to representations by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq, the result being in most cases to confirm existing rights, in other words, to recognize the rights of Canada's aboriginal peoples. In fact, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to point this out, a clause was added to the bill. I am referring to Clause 5(2) and (3) which in fact specifically acknowledges that nothing in the bill changes any provisions previously agreed upon with Canada's aboriginal peoples. I have here Subclause (7) of the same clause, and I quote:

Nothing in this act abrogates or derogates from any aboriginal title, right or claim that pertained to the aboriginal peoples of Canada prior to the coming into force of this act.

This means that all matters which are being negotiated, all claims already pending and any rights that could be used as the basis for future claims are not affected by this bill. That is basically what is meant by Clause 5(7), an amendment that, I wish to emphasize, was made at the committee stage.

What will happen to subsequent claims? I believe that is a special concern of my colleague for Nunatsiaq. What will happen to claims that may be submitted once the bill has been passed or the constitutional resolution has been adopted? The hon. member mentioned that we wanted to withdraw from claims negotiations any lands that might contain oil or gas resources at the production stage. I wish to point out—he quite rightly mentioned claims that were settled through an agreement with COPE and he did so in great detail—that eight blocks of land have been accepted through COPE, seven blocks of 600 square miles each and one block of 800 square miles. It is true that within these blocks there are no claims with respect to gas or oil resources at the production stage. However, my colleague should know that the Dene and the Métis have, in this connection, submitted claims with respect to a well which is about to enter the production stage and is known as Norman Wells, a name that is so well known I shall not bother to translate it into French. Therefore, it is incorrect to state that at this stage the government has refused to consider any possibility of negotiations that might concern wells or resources at the production stage or about to come into production.

When discussing the matter of claims to the lands in question, we must not forget the mechanism provided under Bill C-48 for future negotiations. Under the bill the governor in council may exclude from Crown lands any lands that may have been the subject of negotiations between the aboriginal peoples and the Canadian government. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) is given the power to exclude from Crown territorial lands any lands that may have been the object of a settlement between the aboriginal peoples and the Crown. Should wells be in operation in these lands compensation would be paid as in the case of any other resource recognized as being in production on such land. Nothing in the bill excludes from negotiations any wells that might be in production at the time of settlement. Moreover, the Constitutional resolution provides an extremely sound legal basis for negotiations and for compensation payments, in view of permits which may have been granted in the meantime or are granted once the bill is passed, until a fair system of compensation has been arrived at.

In my opinion, the amendments made at the committee stage—there are eight, I repeat—provide the mechanisms required to compensate each and every one of the native peoples of Canada who might have valid claims, judicially acknowledged by the courts, or again acknowledged in common agreement by the representatives of the federal Crown, and to ensure that the necessary financial or suitable compensations be the object of an agreement between the parties.

I believe that my colleague from Nunatsiaq rests his case on past experience to say, and rightfully so, that he has every reason to believe that they cannot rely on the good faith of the parties. He is right when he states that the best protection available to any minority is judicial protection, that is to say the protection of the rights enshrined in a law, whether it be that of the constitutional bill or Subclause 5(7) which may guarantee the fundamental rights of minority groups. In the context of native peoples in Canada, we can be glad that that will be the basis of all negotiations and all settlements with which we will have to come to grips in the near future.

In my opinion, that fundamentally changes the relationship which may have existed before between those peoples and the federal Crown. From the moment when the rights of the native peoples are directly enshrined in the constitutional statute, it can be seen that the federal negotiators will definitely not have the same room to manœuvre. On the contrary, those peoples will have at their disposal the entire judicial arsenal to convince the authorities that the claims they may file are based on aboriginal rights guaranteed as much by treaties, customs or conventions as by the wording of the act itself. And what is most fundamental, in my opinion, is that, and again I quote this part of Clause 34:

The aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

The rights confirmed by treaty are not the only ones to be mentioned. Mention is made of all the other rights stemming from customs, practices or else tacit acknowledgement. Therefore, nothing in this bill, especially under Subclause (7), restricts the claims which the aboriginal peoples of Canada have against the federal Crown with respect to those lands where, as of now, certain licences or certain permits may be issued. On the contrary, the bill gives to the minister responsible the discretion of forcing the companies and the business people that will henceforth develop those resources to take into account the cultural reality which is peculiar to those territories. The amendment related for instance to Subclause 10(2) and to Subclause 10(4) refers specifically to the participation of the aboriginal peoples, and I quote Subclause 10(2) (d), for it seems basic to me:

—equity participation by government and Canadians, including any aboriginal peoples of Canada who may be affected by the exploration agreement.

There was no mention in the previous legislation of the explicit participation of the aboriginal peoples of Canada in the equity of companies dealing with exploration of these resources. The bill now recognizes explicitly the absolute right of aboriginal peoples to equity in these companies. No provision of any previous legislation recognized this as explicitly. At the same time, Clause 10(4) deals with what are commonly known as affirmative action programs. Once again, nothing in any previous legislation provided for the possibility of including the aboriginal peoples for high technology and high responsibility employment. Once again, the minister responsible will be able to take action to ensure equitable participation, not only in equity, but also in the daily operation and management of these companies. It seems to me that enormous progress has been made.

Many groups have made representations to the minister, including the hon. member of the Christian hierarchy. As I pointed out earlier, these representations have resulted in specific amendments being made to the bill. I can assure the hon. member for Nunatsiaq that if I believed personally that this bill would jeopardize the explicit recognition of aboriginal rights to these lands and the resources they contain, if I had the least doubt that Subclause 7 of Clause 5 would reduce the rights of the native people to claim ownership of these resources, I would certainly not rise this afternoon to tell him that, as concerns what he and I are fighting for, that is to guarantee that the native peoples will from now on have an official share in Canadian resources. We are attempting today by a new initiative to reduce the possibility for them to have their claims settled by the courts since Clause 7 clearly shows that all our efforts since last fall are confirmed by this bill. It seems to me that the major progress accomplished in this bill is that from now on in any legislation which can affect the claims of aboriginal peoples, it will have to be recognized explicitly that no provision must affect or reduce in any way the rights of aboriginal peoples to claim their share of our resources. I repeat that Subclause 10(4) recognizes explicitly the full equity participation of aboriginal peoples.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, we shall be faced with difficult situations in the years to come. When the parties involved negotiate settlements based on historically discriminatory situations and when we deal with peoples who have been able to develop their resources and put them to good use without jeopardizing them, it is quite obvious that there has to be some resentment and that we have to leave the past behind. However, I believe that the best way to meet this objective is to act on the basis of clear and explicit recognition of the rights of the aboriginal peoples, and I still believe that the best way to solve this problem is to pass as soon as possible the constitutional resolution, and especially Clause 34, which confirms the absolute right of the aboriginal people of Canada to everything that has been traditionally recognized by treaties and native rights.

[English]

Mr. Schellenberger: Will the hon. minister accept a question?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Would the hon. Minister of State accept a question?

Mr. Joyal: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, the minister put great faith in the amendments to the Constitution as the basis upon which native people could feel satisfied that their rights to land and other rights would be affirmed; yet in that very Constitution, aboriginal rights are not defined. In fact, a specific section has been put in so that not only will the federal government and native people define aboriginal claims or rights, but also the provinces. We all know that provinces are very protective of such things as land resources. This is one of the reasons many of the aboriginal or native peoples of this country question whether, in fact, they have any protection as far as land and resources are concerned, and also why they question whether such an amendment as this should be placed in the bill in order to affirm that, in fact, they have some claim to land and resources in the north under this bill.

My question is whether the minister can confirm to this House that the definition will, in fact, include land and resources; and I know he cannot.

[Translation]

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question put by the hon. member, because it is ultimately at the root of the issue of native rights. It is fair to suggest that when we attempt to define native rights, we are faced with a major difficulty. This is why the wording of Section 34 is so vague. It is both vague and all encompassing.

Had we included in Clause 34 an enumeration of either a restrictive or indicative nature of the kind of rights that could be included or the kind of things those rights might have contained, we would have been faced with insuperable difficulties. Clearly, the provinces, as he rightly suggests, are most reluctant to enter into a discussion process where the contents of those rights would be specified. The hon. member for Provencher, who took part along with us in all those discussions, was the first to suggest that. Within the framework of the constitutional conference envisaged in Section 36, the hon. member realized this, and I quote Section 36(2):

—respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada.

Committee members unanimously recognized that had we gone into that process at this stage, we would never have seen the end of it, for the very good reason that those rights change. They take greater dimensions along the years. Current native land claims at this time are much more extensive than ten or 20 years ago. And it is better to have an over-all protection in principle stating the rights as a whole rather than to try, by way of an enumeration, even if it is indicative, to restrict the object of those rights. However, if I may answer more directly the question, native rights include both rights to the land and rights to the resources. When earlier settlements were reached with the COPE group, the hon. member for Nunatsiaq rightly suggested that the matter of resources already being explored were excluded.

But matters have changed since. I even mentioned to him that concerning the claims of the Dene and Métis, we were ready to consider, within the framework of over-all negotiations, the assessment and inclusion of resources already or close to being developed. Therefore, there is nothing in the matter of native claims that precludes claims on these lands or resources, whether surface or subsurface. The matter in my view must be examined in the over-all context of Section 34. In other words, what is involved here is the over-all rights, and those rights include social rights, property rights and other rights connected with the occupancy of the land.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the new minister. May I put a question at this point?

● (1620)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I allowed the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) to ask a question without the unanimous consent of the House because the minister's time had not expired, but it has now expired. Therefore, unanimous consent is required for the hon. member to ask his question. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, may I express my pleasure that the hon. member has now become a minister. He is very young and progressive.

[English]

When the Constitution was being debated, the original draft was like this bill. It said nothing would prejudice aboriginal rights, and so on. It was determined by the native people, and ultimately by the committee, that it was not the best protection. The minister said that we should write the best protection in the law. We did this in Section 34. Is not that what the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) was saying today? Would the minister agree that we are only at the first stage? We have only these rather innocuous clauses in the bill which say without prejudice, that later they can participate, and so on. But we have not gone to a second stage and put real protection in this bill.

Would the minister agree with my logic? Also, would the minister tell the House which way the government will vote on another rather innocuous motion, namely Motion No. 6? I take it the government will be voting for that.

[Translation]

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, although he is also quite young the hon. member knows how to be cutting. It is true that at the committee stage we altered Section 34 which had a rather negative approach to take a more affirmative approach, which is to say, there are some absolute rights and they must be respected and enforced. However, there is a basic difference between the constitutional resolution and an act of Parliament. And the hon. member knows quite well that when we want to exempt a previous statute from the application of legislation, the negative approach is taken.

In spite of all previous comments, this bill suggests, and the hon. member who is a lawyer is well aware of that exclusive clause, that Clause 57 does not exclude but recognizes the full application of the Constitution Act since it states that this legislation does not interfere with the titles, rights or claims of the native people of Canada, which they held before the coming into force of the legislation.

Consequently, what is stated under Clause 34 as being the absolute right of native people is not at all excluded from or denied in paragraph (7). Clause 7 says that if you thought that Bill C-48 encroached on the rights of the native people as recognized in previous legislation, that is Clause 34 of the Constitution Act, you are mistaken, because that legislation is fully enforced. This is the thrust of Clause 7 but in simple and everyday terms. Therefore, what the hon. member suggests is that Clause 7 of that legislation should recognize the full application of Clause 34 of the Constitution Act. It is in short what he would suggest as an amendment or as an assertion of natives' rights. But the hon. member is aware also that at this stage, at least the debate on this aspect of Section 34 has been delayed and that there is no way we could refer directly to Section 34. But I find his idea extremely interesting, because when the time comes for us to deal with various bills, once Section 34 of the new Constitution has been adopted, we will be able to refer to Section 34 of the Canadian Constitution. The hon. member is right. At this stage, however, we cannot yet refer to it, as Section 34 has not yet been passed. And I fully agree with his objective. That is essentially the approach we had taken last winter during the committee meetings on the Constitution.

[English]

Mr. Ittinuar: Mr. Speaker, would the minister accept another question if the House gives me unanimous consent?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ittinuar: Mr. Speaker, I must commend the new minister on his obvious knowledge, good intentions and concern for the welfare of my people. However, the minister said there was mention of equity participation for aboriginal peoples. When I approached the minister with that proposal, he readily agreed that there should be equity participation by aboriginal peoples on oil and gas development. As a result he agreed to a new clause. This is Clause 10(2)(d), which reads:

> Equity participation by government and Canadians, including any aboriginal peoples of Canada who may be affected by the exploration agreement.

However, the minister had refused to discuss with me any further expansion of that amendment to allow a mechanism for the participation of aboriginal peoples in equity, and just what kind of equity aboriginal peoples could take.

• (1630)

Therefore, I must conclude that this clause is hardly worth the paper it is written upon. The intentions behind it are good, but it has not been worded so as to grant real equity to the aboriginal peoples. Could the minister tell us just how he and his government propose to grant to the aboriginal peoples equity in these developments?

[Translation]

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member for Nunatsiaq asked this question which, in fact, is in two parts. The first one concerns naturally the equity issue: What reasonable, acceptable and responsible share in the ownership of these resources should the aboriginal people hold? And the second one, which is a corollary: How are we going to determine what is fair and what is not? That is essentially the object of his question.

I indicated a while ago that, once Clause 34 of the constitutional act has been adopted, we will have to start new negotiations based on the new legislation. Therefore, all the claims which the aboriginal people may have on federal Crown lands will have to be based essentially on ancestral rights or treaties, and no longer on wide discussions concerning their legal basis. When the time comes to determine what is fair, we will have to decide within the global context of the claims which every group will want to bring to the negotiation table, what the Inuit propose, what the Dene and the Métis propose, what obviously COPE has already started to negotiate and what the CYI has proposed or intends to propose for debate. The share of equity to be attributed to each of the aboriginal peoples, with regard to the lands concerned will be based essentially on the rights recognized in Clause 34. If the conclusion is reached, through arbitration or judicial process, that their share of equity is to exceed that of the majority, the matter will be settled essentially through arbitration or judicial process. There will no longer be any paternalistic stand to be taken saying: the symbolic participation of our aboriginals must be saved, they must have some equity. The claims of the native people then will be based exclusively on their rights. Why? Because for the first time those rights will be recognized in our statutes. Therein will lie the difference in future negotiations. I can tell my hon. colleague that the negotiations in which we took part in the past easily took on a paternalistic hue, but will no longer do so because the rights of Canadians will be enshrined as those of an adult people full master of its destiny and fully able to determine through arbitration, judicial process or free negotiation what the respective share of each will be in the equity and development of those resources. That, to my mind, is the essential difference; this should reassure the hon. member with regard to the meaning of the word "equity" or "participation" will be given in the administration, the management of those resources.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister might entertain one more short question. I think he has given us some fairly good insight into a problem we have been raising for some time. The dilemma we have been expressing over a period of time relates to the permission for oil and gas development to proceed under this legislation in which no specifics are written. This is largely a discretionary piece of legislation, with the power to make decisions affecting aboriginal people left in the hands of the minister. As my colleague, the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar), has said, the clause providing equity is not really worth very much. What we have to do is to expand and define some of these things.

We suspect that the oil and gas development in my area will proceed very rapidly. Some of the aboriginal people in those communities have not even reached the state of defining their claims. There is a group of them in Ottawa right now who have defined their claim and would like to have some response before the oil and gas development proceeds. Some claims have been made and others have not even been defined at this time, yet the oil and gas developments are proceeding.

Once this development proceeds, it will shape the communities. The infrastructure will already be in place and the patterns of production and exploration will be completed. What we have been trying to do is to get more definition in order to allow the pacing of development so the people in the region can participate meaningfully in the planning of activities and in the activities themselves. If this legislation goes ahead at the rate it is now proceeding, these people will be left out, and their land claims will not be recognized and they will have no benefit. I would like to hear some comment in that regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for affording me the opportunity to answer these questions because, as the hon. member mentioned, these are problems we will have to address in any future legislation dealing with or affecting the rights of native peoples, and I do not think it useless for my colleagues to become aware of the situation as are those hon. members who raised these issues.

The problem which my hon. colleague brings up is a very real one. What will happen with future claims which we cannot provide for just now or what happens with present claims which some native groups or peoples cannot make at this time. This is a very important issue since their rights are affected with regard to resource ownership and management as well as their very lives and environment as the hon. member mentioned. What must be recognized at this stage is that Clause 34 acknowledges and affirms their rights, and if it is shown in the settlement of claims over these lands that these people had strict ownership rights with regard to these resources, they are entitled to a generous compensation either of a financial nature, of which there are many examples, or through lands that could be made available to them in similar conditions. We cannot, at this point, provide for everything and some groups may indeed be in dire circumstances, but the important thing is that their rights are protected. They are protected because the ownership rights of these people over these resources are recognized.

When we say in Clause 34 that aboriginal rights are hereby confirmed, the basic right remains, regardless of whether these rights are confirmed now or will be in the future. There will be some form of compensation and it will be possible in the settlement of the claim to offer these people the same protection and access to the resources they would have had if they had made their claim in due time. Yet the hon. member must admit that it is impossible to provide for everything. Many of the native peoples who appeared before the committee could not define aboriginal rights. It is an evolutionary notion. Its contents increase rather than decrease. Its meaning and its implications increase in keeping with our knowledge of history, treaties and past practices. Therefore the implications of this recognition or rights will not lessen, they will extend, and will only place more responsibility on representatives of the Crown and on all corporations which may become involved in those areas. That is why I want to reassure the hon. member that this aspect and these implications are protected because the rights of those people will be upheld, and all claims that may be laid will be based on full and total ownership of these lands and resources.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Motions Nos. 6 and 20 were grouped for debate but are to be voted on separately. I will begin with Motion No. 6.

The question is on Motion No. 6 in the name of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 6 (Mr. Schellenberger) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on Motion No. 20 in the name of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare the motion carried.

Motion No. 20 (Mr. Lalonde) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Madam Speaker's ruling, which was read earlier today, Motions Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15 and 16 will be grouped for debate.

Motion No. 41 will be grouped with those I have just mentioned.

I will read the motions individually. I might alert hon. members to the fact that I will be looking for a mover and seconder in each case.

SCHEDULE A
Terms and Conditions
Manpower and Procurement

1. In respect to the use of Canadian labour

(a) the interest holder shall submit to the minister, on or before a date to be fixed by him, a detailed manpower plan designed to ensure

(i) the maximum possible use of Canadian labour, and

(ii) the maximum possible use of labour indigenous to the region in which the exploration or production is to be undertaken; and

(b) subject to any amendment approved by the minister, the manpower plan referred to in paragraph (a) when approved by the minister, constitutes the interest holder's manpower plan, and the interest holder shall comply therewith.

2. In respect to Canadian participation and content,

(a) the interest holder shall design a program for the procurement of all goods and services that ensures that

(i) Canadians have a fair and competitive opportunity to participate in the supply of goods and services,

(ii) the level of Canadian content is maximized so far as practicable, with respect to the origin of products, services, and their constituent components,

(iii) maximum advantage is taken of opportunities provided by exploration and development on Canada lands to establish and expand suppliers in Canada that can make a long-term contribution to the Canadian industrial base, and

(iv) maximum advantage is taken of opportunities provided by exploration and development on Canada lands to foster research, development and technological activities in Canada;

(b) the interest holder shall submit to the minister, in such detail as may be required by the minister and on or before a date to be fixed by him, a report setting out

(i) the program referred to in paragraph (a), and

(ii) the procedures that the interest holder proposes to follow in order to implement that program including such procedures as the minister may require respecting prior approval in respect of proposed contracts or Clauses of contracts specified by the minister and including procedures to ensure to the minister's satisfaction that proposed contracts for the supply of goods or services from outside Canada will not involve unfair trade practices;

(c) subject to any amendment approved by the minister, the report referred to in paragraph (b) when approved by the minister, constitutes the interest holder's procurement policy and procedures and the interest holder shall comply therewith; and

(d) prior to the submission and approval of the report referred to in paragraph (b), the interest holder shall make no major purchases without prior approval of the minister.

3. The company shall provide the minister, prior to the execution thereof, with copies of every proposed contract for the procurement of goods or services that require the prior approval under the procedures referred to in condition 2(b)(ii)."

Motion No. 10

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 10 by striking out line 37 at page 7 and lines 1 to 6 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

"factory to the minister. This work plan will outline the major activities to be undertaken and the procurement program for goods and services related to these activities. The work plan will ensure that

(i) Canadians have a fair and competituve opportunity to participate in the supply of goods and services to oil and gas exploration, development and production activities;

(ii) maximum advantage is taken of opportunities provided by gas and oil exploration and production to establish and expand industries in Canada which can make a long term contribution to the Canadian industrial base;

(iii) Canadian and local content is maximized so far as practicable with respect to the origin of products, services and their constituent components;

(iv) Canadians be given employment preference in cases where suitably qualified Canadian citizens or landed immigrants are available. Where labour requirements are such that Canadian citizens or landed immigrants are not suitably qualified in sufficient numbers and the labour requirement is ongoing for the length of the agreement, the agreement holder will undertake to provide on-the-job training for Canadian citizens and landed immigrants in order to maximize as far as possible and reasonable, Canadian labour participation."

Motion No. 11

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 10 by adding immediately after line 6 at page 8 the following:

"(3.1) In furtherance of the objectives described in 10(3) (amended) the holder of the exploration agreement shall

(i) open all contracts of a value of $50,000 or greater undertaken in carrying out the exploration agreement to public tender and submit, in reasonable numbers invitations to bid to Canadian suppliers;

(ii) provide to all bidders on contracts undertaken in carrying out the exploration agreement to same bid specifications and announce changes in bid specifications to all bidders at the same time;

(iii) evaluate the bids received in terms of the extent to which bidders use Canadian goods and services;

(iv) not establish specifications, time periods and delivery conditions for contracts which are designed to unnecessarily exclude Canadian companies."

Motion No. 12

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 10 by adding immediately after line 6 at page 8 the following:

"(3.2) The minister shall establish an advisory body which shall be called the Canadian Content Committee. This body shall be made up of representatives from Canadian labour, from the major industries which will provide sourcing for offshore and northern exploration and production activities and from the oil and gas industries. The committee shall

(a) participate in the establishment of the regulations under C-48 prior to the issuance of any exploration agreements;

(b) review on an ongoing basis the information provided by agreement holders concerning Canadian content as stated in the work plan and in documents submitted to the committee as provided for in Clause 50(3) and make recommendations to the minister concerning all aspects of Canadian and foreign purchases and contracting by the holders of agreements or licences;

(c) make recommendations to the minister concerning the pace of exploration and or production in Canada Lands in order that investment decisions, development work and facilities construction in Canadian industries participating in this exploration and production be given due consideration. The committee shall have the authority to recommend to the minister that approval of exploration agreements and production licences be delayed in order that benefits accrue to the Canadian economy;

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If I understand the will of the House, I will now recognize the hon. member for Calgary Centre.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is my first opportunity, in my new capacity as energy critic for my party, to participate in a substantial way to the second part of the report stage of Bill C-48. I will try to do my job as well as my predecessor did, although that will be a major challenge.

I cannot say that I welcome the opportunity to speak on this bill because, quite frankly, I hoped and believed that a responsible government would have withdrawn Bill C-48, given the developments of the past year. It is now a year since the National Energy Program was introduced. In my opinion, the NEP had more to do with a revenue grab, had more to do with a power grab in the sense that this government desired to have a more direct day to day interventionist role with regard to the oil and gas industry, and perhaps other industries as well. Energy, per se, was merely the tool through which the government pursued the goal of having more power and more money.

Let us assume for a moment that the government in fact does believe and support the notion of Canada becoming self-sufficient in oil and gas. Let us assume the government really does want to develop Canada lands, the area north of 60, the offshore area, that it wants to develop the oil and gas potential of those areas. If that were true, surely a responsible and reasonable government would recognize that Bill C-48 needs to be substantially amended in order to achieve those goals.

It is abundantly clear there is no way under Bill C-48, which is that part of the NEP which deals with Canada lands, that we will become self-sufficient by 1990. That is not an opinion held exclusively by me or by my party. That is an opinion held by every outside expert organization that has examined the question.

The National Energy Board, an independent organization whose members were all appointed by the Liberal government—if they have a bias it would be Liberal, not Progressive Conservative, though I do not think they have a bias—after months of public hearings and extensive analysis by their in-house experts, has concluded that there is no way we will be self-sufficient by 1990, perhaps not until well into the next century.

The Economic Council of Canada has reached the same conclusion. As I say, every outside organization has come to this conclusion. Clearly, industry is not responding to the National Energy Program in the way predicted by the minister a year ago. The regime they have put in place is not producing the kind of development and activity necessary to become self-sufficient. What does that mean?

I would like to quote from a statement made by the Vice President of Exploration for Petro-Canada, Mr. Robert Meneley, at the committee hearings on Bill C-48 held last February 12. Mr. Meneley said:

> Bill C-48 by itself will not cause exploration and development to take place as it is only a component of the over-all system. The level of exploration and development activity will be dictated by how the oil industry uses the following equation:
>
> Prospects for finding oil and gas reserves
> minus
>
> The cost of finding, developing and operating productive areas
> minus
>
> The economic rent which is collected in total in the form of royalties, taxes, Crown share and minimum requirements for Canadian participation.
> If the industry view of that equation is that positive economic benefits flow to them at the end, then activity will take place.

Petro-Canada was supposedly established to give the government a window on the industry. Well, the window shows that the industry has to believe that the equation works out properly before it will make any investments and before the government gets the development it wants.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that that is what the government wants in the first place. I believe what the government wants is money and power. But let us assume that the government also desires self-sufficiency; it should accept the advice of its "window on the industry" and examine what is happening. According to all public statements by people in the industry, that is, the people who have to put up the cash, we know that the development the government supposedly hoped for simply will not occur under the NEP and under the part of Bill C-48 dealing with Canada lands.

● (1650)

In addition to having had the benefit of a year's examination of this by the industry, on September, 2 as a result of the energy pricing agreement between Alberta and the federal government, there was a very substantial change to the fiscal arrangements dealing with Canada lands. I am not talking about provincial lands here. The energy pricing agreement called for the phasing out of depletion with respect to Canada lands in order to put them on the same basis as provincial lands.

I put forward the following simple circumstance. If Bill C-48 contained the proper fiscal regime prior to the September 2 energy pricing arrangement, then clearly it cannot contain the proper fiscal regime today because there has been a substantive change. Depletion has been phased out. If the government was telling this House and the country when it introduced Bill C-48 that, in its judgment, Bill C-48 was the right and proper fiscal regime, the government must be lying to us now in saying it is still proper because there has been a material change in its own rules through the elimination of depletion allowances.

We have now had the benefit of a year's experience with PIP, the Petroleum Incentives Program. That was supposed to be the replacement for depletion on provincial lands and super-depletion on Canada lands. When PIP was announced last fall, a number of oil companies, particularly junior oil companies, came to the government and said, "We would like to take advantage of this program. When can we expect to receive these grants?" They were told they would receive them by about May of 1981. Some of those companies then went out and borrowed money at 20 per cent and 25 per cent in order to engage in the exploration which the government said it wanted them to carry out. They are still waiting for that money. The latest promise is "maybe next summer". A number of those companies will not be in existence next summer. They will be out of business. PIP turned out to be something the government could not administer in terms of provincial lands. The government was incapable of administering it. Indeed, there was a bit of hilarity when all the officials from Ottawa showed up to open the grants office in Calgary. They were frantically running around town trying to hire some consultants to tell them how to figure out how to do it. As we know, as a result of the September 2 agreement that has now been transferred to the provinces—

Mr. Waddell: Alberta accepted.

Mr. Andre: The reality is that no banker today will accept as collateral the fact that a company might be getting a PIP grant in the future. The reality is that the banking community will not accept that as collateral because the banks have now had a year's experience with a government that does not deliver on its promises. The government promised the companies these PIP grants, but it has not delivered. Bankers now will not authorize loans to companies, even though those companies might qualify fully for those PIP grants, because they know from experience that those grants will not be provided.

The combination of all those factors has caused the industry collectively—the people Petro-Canada has acknowledged must be motivated if we are to have the development that is necessary—to say that we have to scrap it and start from scratch. Indeed, the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, representing 200 member companies which are, in the majority, Canadian owned, sent the following telegram on October 13:

> On behalf of more than 200 members of the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada we urgently request you demand referral of Bill C-48 to Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to permit study of economic impact not only on Canadian oil and gas industry but entire economy.

The telegram is from Robert Brawn, president of the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada. After a year's experience, the association is saying that the NEP and Bill C-48 do not work and need to be re-examined. The association says we should send the matter to a forum where another examination and another discussion can take place because, as things stand now, we will not achieve the goals the government says it wants to achieve. I repeat for the third time that I do not think the government was being honest about its real goals.

Besides the inadequacies of the fiscal regime Bill C-48 describes, the tremendous discretionary power granted to the minister and his officials is almost as serious a drawback. Clause 10, the proposed amendment of which we are now discussing, represents just two of 57 items which allow ministerial discretion. Under the best of circumstances, discretion represents a risk. In such circumstances, one might be dealing with an organization the credibility of which is beyond doubt, or with someone who has a history of keeping his word. Even in such circumstances, discretion represents a risk. Nobody likes to put forward great amounts of capital to make investments or to put at risk his company or his individual worth in a circumstance in which another person can exercise some discretionary power in such a way as to mitigate or undercut the value of that investment. This government has absolutely no credibility in the business or financial communities in this country because of its history of flip-flops, absolute falsehoods and distortions. The NEP itself was full of absolute and total falsehoods.

Mr. King: Deceit.

Mr. Andre: The proper word would be unparliamentary when dealing with that kind of government, a government the people know cannot be trusted to keep its word or its promises or even to honour its contracts. When the power of discretion is added to that, it represents a tremendous risk. Giving discretionary authority to that kind of government means taking a tremendous risk.

Clause 10 of Bill C-48 says that the minister may enter into an exploration agreement relating to Canada lands in the manner provided by this legislation. That is in Clause 10(1). This represents a different way of handling the allocation of Canada lands. It is different from the method used with respect to provincial lands and different from that used by other countries. As a result of many, many years of experience, the province of Alberta, for example, most of the states in the United States and most of the democratic countries of the world, have a system of land allocation which involves bidding. It is a closed bidding situation in which the government simply puts forward offers for bid purposes respecting certain lands. It may be a matter of access for exploration activities. Companies bid. The high bidder wins. It is a democratic and fair way of doing things, and it is open. Most of the time it is the most efficient way of doing things. However, this government says, "No, we will not do it that way. We will have a situation whereby we will have exploration agreements with individual companies". The government wants to make arrangements on a one to one basis with companies for exploration on particular lands. Instead of taking the democratic and time proven method of allocating lands, the government uses the bureaucratic, red tape, government interventionist method of handling things.

• (1700)

I should mention as an aside that while adopting this procedure, they still claim that they are implementing deregulation, that they are trying to cut red tape, and that they believe in the private sector and in competition. While making those claims, they bring in a law like this. They ask why we think they have no credibility. It is obvious.

One of the disturbing things about this method, as opposed to the traditional method of submitting closed bids with high bidder winning, is that in the agreements the minister works out with companies, there is no check on their behaviour. In fact, Clause 12 specifically states:

> The Minister may enter into an exploration agreement without a notice calling for the submission of proposals—

In other words, Clause 12 specifically states that if a particular oil company is a good company, because it may have given the minister's kids a job for the summer, or perhaps because his brother has many shares in it, or the president of the company happens to be the leader of the Liberal party in Alberta—who knows what the circumstances could be—the minister may favour that particular company under that clause or under Clause 10. Without any public notice, he can sit down and work out a cosy little exploration agreement with the company, thereby turning over what could be millions or hundreds of millions worth of dollars to that company, with no check.

I remind hon. members that this would be done by a minister who, as has been proved to us in just the last few weeks, is not above using under-the-table methods to get the kind of assistance he thinks he needs to accomplish his goals. We are dealing with a minister who has a proven track record of not being above board in the way he handles things, yet we are being asked to pass legislation that would permit this kind of action.

As I say, Clause 10 states that the minister may enter into an exploration agreement. In Subclause (2) it states:

An exploration agreement may require the completion of specified work programs within specified periods, leading to and including the drilling of one or two wells within the term of the agreement,—

In other words, these exploration agreements will require the drilling of one or more wells. One wonders where to begin. One wonders who wrote that.

Exploration involves geology, geophysics, and only then is the well drilled. It is quite possible that a company may acquire a land position, engage in an extensive geophysical program that is running a seismic, and decide on the basis of the seismic that it is not worth drilling a well.

Drilling a well in Canada lands can cost anywhere from a few million to a hundred million dollars. As a result of running the seismic, an exploration company may decide that a well is unnecessary. The legislation we are about to pass says that an exploration agreement must include the drilling of one or more wells. This is an absurd notion. The agreement also includes the terms and the payments, disposition, reporting and disclosure of information, equity participation by Canadians, as well as the surrender, cancellation and transfer of interests under the agreement.

Suppose that a company signs an exploration agreement with the government. It may then find it is unable to complete the drilling of the wells called for in the agreement for any one of a wide number of reasons that could not be considered prior to the signing of the agreement.

The clause says also that the question of surrender will be part of the agreement. In other words, you cannot automatically surrender. If you decide to walk away from the property, you cannot do it automatically. It is something that has to be negotiated.

A circumstance might arise where the minister obliges you to drill a hole in the Arctic at the cost of who knows how many millions of dollars, something that you do not want to do and cannot afford under the circumstances. If you do not obey the minister, if you say you are not going to do it, you become subject to the provisions of Clause 57 which deals with offences and prosecutions. If you contravene or fail to comply with any provisions of the act, you can end up, on summary conviction, with a fine not exceeding $100,000 or imprisonment for up to a year, or both, or, on conviction on indictment, you might receive a fine not exceeding $1 million or imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, or both.

What we are being asked to pass is language that says, "You will do what the minister tells you, and if you do not, you can go to jail for five years." That is literally what it says. You wonder what kind of Gestapo-minded person writes this stuff and asks us to pass it.

The other provisions in this bill deal with reporting and disclosure. You may be in violation of the securities commission regulations. You are in a dilemma if you are caught in that position.

What we are asking by way of Motion No. 7 is that the provisions of Clause 56 come into play. That clause simply says that when a minister makes a decision, he must give notice of that decision. The person affected by the decision may ask for a hearing before the minister. The minister may be asked to publish, indicating in writing his reasons for that decision. If there is argument, the matter may be taken to the Federal Court for adjudication.

That is all this motion asks for. It asks that we have the ability at least to prevent the kinds of potential abuse I talked about and to have an open decision-making process which will require the minister to state why he is making decisions, require him to listen to objections by way of a hearing, and allow the person affected to take the matter to the Federal Court, if he feels so inclined. That is hardly a terrible or unreasonable provision.

When this bill was in committee we received a large number of submissions from a wide variety of organizations. Almost every single group that appeared before us had comments and suggestions to make about Clause 10. I refer to Imperial Oil, Norcen, Aquitaine, Husky, Canadian COIA—I forget what that stands for—the Canadian Shipbuilders and Ship Repair Association, the Canadian Petroleum Association, the Norwegian government, Stat Oil of Norway, The Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Bar Association, Dome Oil, the Northwest Territories government, the Yukon government, the Inuit Association, the Independent Petroleum Association, and others. Every single group that appeared before us had criticisms, and had suggestions for improvement of Clause 10; some more severe than others. The government did not listen to any of them. The government made no change, even though it went to committee.

In Motion No. 7 before you today, we say that, in view of this widespread criticism it received from everyone who looked at it, and in view of the questions raised in the submissions from everyone who looked at it, a reasonable person would say this clause should come under the provisions of Clause 56. Clause 10 should come under the provisions of Clause 56 which would require the minister to state what are the reasons for his decision. It would require the minister to listen. It would require the minister to provide a hearing for those affected by his decision, and would allow them to take the matter to the Federal Court of Canada, if they felt so inclined.

I do not understand why this motion should not receive approval from the members opposite. Without the provision, you literally have a situation where the minister can say, "You shall drill this well; you shall complete this program." A company might find it impossible to do this because of certain circumstances. Perhaps the interest rates might go up again; perhaps the bankers might demand repayment of the loan; perhaps the company has a runaway well in some other area, which has caused a great drain on the capital; perhaps its vice-president has been assassinated. Any one of a million things could happen to cause a company to be unable to fulfil its obligations. In those circumstances, according to the bill before us, that company could be penalized enormously by the minister or, alternatively, sent to jail, according to the provisions of Clause 57. Perhaps a month ago one could have said, "Oh, well, maybe that is what the law says; but, in fact, by convention, by practice, by tradition, we never imposed those kinds of penalties".

We now know, Mr. Speaker, what the government thinks of convention, of practice, of tradition; the government thinks of it as absolutely nothing. It is the height of folly to put within the grasp of these Gestapo-minded people, the ability to, in fact, throw someone in jail for failing to obey an instruction. We now know the minister is not above using under-the-table methods if it suits his purposes. I will have more to say on other motions as they come up. Motion No. 7 cannot be viewed in any other way than as a reasonable motion, one that any fair-minded group of people would readily approve.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): I should like to speak in the debate in the fair and temperate manner of the hon. member preceding me.

Before I speak on the important amendment before us, I should like to cast my mind back to the committee hearings. Bill C-48 is interesting. As with previous budgets and other legislation the government tends to handle it in an interesting way. When Bill C-48 was brought in, it gave the Conservative Party apoplexy; it gave the oil industry apoplexy. It flashed a slight bit of hope for the Canadian people in that maybe there was going to be something in it on Canadianization. Maybe we were going to have a bit of compensation for the colossal rip-off that the oil companies have perpetrated on the Canadian people and the American people. Maybe now we will have a window on the industry and supervision of development that would capture the benefits of employment and opportunities for Canadians and for Canadian industries. It is a beautiful tactic. The bill looked all right on first reading, but it gave the Tories apoplexy; it gave the oil companies apoplexy; and it gave the United States government apoplexy.

We knew in time the Liberal government would deposit the bill in committee, and gut it. And gut it they did.

The Tories, with their apoplectic barnstorming in the House, giving themselves hernias, right, left and centre, screaming and tearing their hair out about this bill, arrived in committee with tears running from their eyes, with their noses running, hollering and yelling. But, by gosh, halfway into the bill, when the government's amendments appeared and the bill was gutted, they overrule the oil companies and say, "We can live with this." The Tories allowed it to slide out of committee, without fighting for key amendments, the ones that are in front of us now. After listening to the preceding member's speech, I find that the job of the energy critic of the Tory party is to be for the oil industry, and that is all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skelly: In the amendments before us again, the question is to capture industrial benefits for Canadians. We have bashed our heads on the wall to try to get this message through to the government. I believe they understand it, but they are reluctant to move. It is a question of capturing employment opportunities for people who live in the more remote areas of this country. Those people have acted as gofers to the banks under the Bank Act; those people have acted as gofers for the oil companies. It is an attitude that would make a dinosaur look progressive.

On the other hand, this particular organization has recognized the problems facing the Canadian people. And yet, because of the pressures that face them from the Americans and from other people, they are willing to put in broad, vague, discretionary provisions that will allow them, once again, to sell out the Canadian people. If you were to look at the history of economic development in his country, you would find that Canadians have been sold out. In essence, they are no better than this group here.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is the most important piece of legislation to come before parliament in a long time. In this last reflection of the act, it is important that we include a specification to make a commitment to future generations and to those people who have been left out of the mainstream of development, such as natives and other Canadians.

The issue in the bill is to capture industrial benefits, to create employment, and basically to provide opportunities in areas of the country and for the Canadian industry where they have not heretofore existed.

The bill asks for guidelines. Our amendments ask for guidelines that may be enforced. We want advisory committees so that the exchange of information can flow from the government and the oil companies on what they intend to do to businesses and to labour in this country, those who have been left out and who will continue to be left out of the mainstream. The money will go offshore to Norway, it will go offshore to Britain, and it will go offshore to the United States.

I shall repeat this one more time to see if it penetrates. In 1976, 60,000 jobs were created by the oil industry in Scotland, 100,000 jobs were created in Britain as a whole, and 200,000 jobs were created in the United States. The message is very clear. If we do not include guidelines and specify what we want to capture of the law and regulations, we will not have those benefits. The money will go across to Britain and Norway, both of which countries are far more advanced than we are. We are already giving away a lot to the Japanese people even before we get started.

The appeal is clearly to do something. It is the last chance, the beating of the head on the wall. We must try to convince them. We in this party and the Conservatives proposed amendments to capture these benefits. The government did nothing about it. We said, "Never mind the amendments. Show us a structure in place of the good faith you talk about." Because of the GATT arrangements and because of the sensitivity on the part of the United States, we cannot do anything about that. There they sit on their bums, minds in neutral, doing nothing for days on end. They forced us to filibuster, to try to delay and, they said, give it adequate consideration. Eventually they said, "Yes, we in fact have something in place. As a matter of fact, we would be prepared to give you a peek at what we have in an in camera session." They did. They trooped in the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), the forgotten old rebel of the hidebound party over there. They trooped in the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) with a bevy or a covey of bureaucrats. Essentially they trooped out a model similar to the British offshore supply office.

As far as megaprojects and their outward spin-off effects as well as the projects that will be affected by Bill C-48 are concerned, the Royal Bank estimates that they will cost over $1 trillion in two decades. This volume of expenditures staggers the imagination. Certainly it is beyond the very limited scope of comprehension of the hon. members opposite.

I should like to give an outline of what Britain did. Once Britain realized that it was very late and that it had lost an opportunity, it put in place an organization called the offshore supply office. Britain said that it wanted to sign a memorandum of understanding with the oil companies which would be of benefit to the British. It put in place a whole host of monitoring engineers. It forced the companies to report quarterly on acquisitions within Great Britain and where the other acquisitions had come from. A host of people analysed this information, reported back, updated their memoranda of agreement and generally began to acquire benefits. From there it developed liaison teams which would go out to British industry to explain where the oil companies were and what they needed. They would evaluate the industrial capability of British firms and try to bring the two together, so that British firms would be voting on the contracts and would get rolling. Also Britain put together a research and development component which studied the whole business. This component studied the academic community, the business community and oil and gas producers. They indicated the kinds of basic research they would have to undertake. Every year they would identify approximately 80 or 100 major projects which gave Britain—and indeed Norway in its model—a leading edge in the technology of oil and gas development.

Finally, let me point out that the pressure from Britain, Norway, United States, Japan, Taiwan, and other industrialized areas that want to participate in our oil and gas development, will be tremendous. They have the research and development. They have developed the technology. They will force it on us unless we do something. This was the role of the British offshore supply office. It was a major effort to capture a share of business opportunities and employment opportunities for the British people. They did. They reversed the trend years later, but at least they got it around to where they were in very good shape.

The minister trooped in this model. It looked good. He told us about an office of industrial and regional benefits. He said that they were making it out of an old organization already within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commere. When we dug around, we found that it was the original task force on Canadian participation struck by the Honourable Judd Buchanan. It consisted of four people who held 60 meetings with oil companies in a closet and never told anyone else in Canada. There was no direct input from Canadian business sources. There was no direct input from Canadian labour. No concrete information was received from sponsor companies on contract activities. There were 60 meetings in seven years, and absolutely nothing has resulted. There were four people on a part-time basis. This was the level of commitment of the Canadian government from 1975 to the present, roughly seven years.

Now the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce tells us that he is committed to capturing those benefits, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tells us that he also is committed, even though it is not in the legislation and there is no guarantee upon which Canadians can hang their hats. He showed us a structure similar to the British offshore supply office. We asked them to do this. He outlined how they will be responsible for evaluating exploration agreements conformity, and so on. There will be 12 people monitoring over $1 trillion in expenditures. They have put 12 people in place. This group is probably not capable in terms of resources. I am not talking about individuals. I am talking about a group with human and economic resources and the capability to evaluate the Canadian benefits, to develop agreements, to evaluate what is ongoing, such as research and development, marketing and the various functions of the British offshore supply office. They will not require quarterly reports. They will not require a group of monitoring engineers to determine whether they are complying with the act and whether Canadian businesses are given opportunities. They are not setting up a liaison with Canadian industries and labour in the regional areas to see what is happening. In fact, 12 people could not do it. That would be one person per province and two bureaucrats in Ottawa.

Basically this is the most colossal sellout of Canadians that I have ever seen in this place or in my experience as a person observing Canadian history. It is sad and disgusting. If there was one ounce of commitment over there, we would not be talking about 12 people monitoring an office of industrial and regional benefits. We would be talking about a major commitment, not a committee that reports to a director general lost somewhere down in the bowels of EMR. We would be talking about a committed organization with top level access and the ability to evaluate and move quickly. It is more than revolting.

Where are we today? Enormous expenditures are facing us in the oil and gas industry. There are tremendous numbers of people out there in Canada who do not have even basic information on how they will participate at a time when developments are coming on very quickly.

The previous speaker mentioned the oceans industry group. They came before the committee. They knew what they wanted and what they needed in terms of advisory committee status, input, and constructive relationships with the government and the oil industry in order to ensure that the people in the maritime industries in Canada can meaningfully take advantage of them. There is nothing here; 12 people could not even take an effective look at one of those industries. We have the Canadian shipbuilding and repair association. Granted, we have been forced into development in some areas, but we have not scratched the surface in terms of the benefits that organization envisioned. The hon. member responsible for that organization and for discussing its problems with Members of Parliament has beaten his head on the wall for years trying to talk to the government and to achieve some progress. We have talked about a merchant fleet for Canada, which is a long overdue idea. We have talked about the development of the Canadian shipbuilding industry and all allied trades. There will be hundreds of millions of dollars spent in that industry, but we have seen no commitment. There are no guidelines in the bill. There are no requirements in the bill to provide assistance. There is no ability within the office of industrial and regional benefits to capture that. We will rely on Dome and its Japanese partners to build the Canadian marine industry. It is tremendously unfortunate.

The Canadian Labour Congress came before the committee. It was very serious about the inadequacy of this legislation. In short, the only organizations which wound up happy with the gutting of the bill were the oil companies and the Conservative party.

Mr. Waddell: C'est la même chose.

Mr. Skelly: Yes, but unfortunately it is not acceptable to Canadians.

Mr. King: What about the government? Does it have any responses?

Mr. Skelly: Has the hon. member ever heard any given? I could go on and on with what I feel are colossal mistakes.

In the previous discussion with the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal) there was an attempt to establish a dialogue and an understanding of the problems faced by one group which definitely wanted to participate on an equal basis in the development and enhancement of the infrastructure. I think he grasps the problems and is willing, through discussion, to do something about it. I guess that is what we are asking the government to do. Here we have the last chance before us. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce should come to this House. I noticed that none of the ministers responsible are present today. This is probably one of the most significant sections of the bill, yet none of them are present in the House.

• (1730)

It is important that we get a commitment. Either we should adopt some amendments or we should defer them so that if the government has a better mechanism—we are not married to the amendments which are before us tonight—it could draft one which will capture the benefits and give us some specification on it. The minister should rise in his place and say that the office of industrial and regional benefits is not a joke and that right now his commitment is perhaps to supply some more resources to it. However, the government does not know. There is no commitment beyond that. What we are hoping is that we will see an organization structured such as the British offshore supply office. If that is the mechanism the government would choose, I would urge the minister to rise in the House and give us an indication of what he is going to do, rather than wait for President Ronald Reagan to put pressure on the government, and having it in return sell us out completely, as it has done so many times in the past. Mark my words: the sellout appears to have begun.

We heard from across the aisle the other day that they can ease up because the Canadianization of that industry is not a serious threat and that it probably will not go much further. We saw an indication that they were clearly backing off on a badly needed review and on the upgrading of the Foreign Investment Review Act. Basically, the pressure is there and there is nothing to compel them to capture those benefits in Canada. There is no structure in place to assist them with it. When the pressure comes from other members in GATT and from the Reagan administration, which is already looking at sanctions against Canada, believe me, that government will follow its historic pattern and sell out the Canadian people, as it has done so many times in the past.

What should we do? Members in our party will be discussing this particular set of amendments. As our critic for industrial development in Canada said, it applies vitally in that area. We want to hear the minister rise and respond. Even the Conservative amendment is better than the clause as it appears in the bill. If our amendments are not acceptable, let the minister rise and tell us so; give us an example of one which would meet the objectives and would be acceptable to the government. If that is not the route to take, then let him show us something similar to the British offshore supply office, not a token effort which will repeat the inadequacies or incompetence of the last organization which sat there for seven years and did absolutely nothing.

I have some brief summary remarks to make concerning another aspect. For years, Canada has talked about an industrial strategy. I know the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has been up front in suggesting that the government must come forward with some concrete planning in a very complex country. We have watched the oil companies and the banks clean up at the expense of Canadians, with the aid of government policy.

Basically, what we need is an industrial strategy, and believe me, this is the platform. This is the last opportunity that Canadians will have to launch easily a comprehensive industrial strategy which will not only improve the lot of our generation, but of generations to come. If we miss this opportunity, that is all we have. It will be very difficult to gain the kind of momentum that this particular activity, the offshore oil and gas development in Canadian lands, will give us. We will get into megaprojects eventually, but someone else will be building them for us. I guess it is highly unlikely, with the lack of initiative of this particular government, that we will ever seriously start harvesting the resources of the sea and the seabed; but, again, the opportunity to leap out from this piece of legislation by a proper handling of these amendments will be lost for all time if we do not move now.

For a long time the minister has advocated an industrial strategy. He said that he was going to resign if interest rates went higher. I wonder if he was indeed serious about it. Stacked against him on the other side of the cabinet appear to be people such as the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) and the Senator. It is unfortunate that in this House we cannot question the individual responsible for the economic development and the over-all planning authority of Canada.

Mr. Waddell: We try.

Mr. Skelly: It is extremely unfortunate, but we have him. We have the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and, indeed, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), committed to a policy which will not see intervention in the Canadian economy in order to undertake planning to develop our industrial strategy. I think the minister is lost; but if I am mistaken, I would certainly like to see him rise in his place and talk clearly to us about a set of amendments that will guarantee the capturing of those benefits, or at least a structure of more than 12 people which will give us some assurance that we are going to have those benefits. The cabinet is split down the middle, with all the power stacked against the Canadian people. Believe me, I do not think that we are going to see the benefits spin off to this or to future generations of Canadians.

The impediments are that there are no guidelines or requirements. We are asked to look at Liberal good faith. The hon. member who spoke previously had at least correctly analysed the value of Liberal good faith: "Trust me. It is in the mail." The government is unwilling to take political risks.

I cast my mind back. There are other components to the industrial strategy, and I think we are watching the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) sell out the competition policy in Canada. He has watched the banks rip us off, he has watched the newspaper industry rip us off, and he has now watched the development of a very strong piece of competition legislation, which would perhaps curtail the concentration of economic power in the hands of a few people in this country. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs goes out to meetings of chambers of commerce in Montreal and Alberta, gutting the competition policy of this country. The competition policy is as vital to an industrial strategy as the over-all plan or the specific set of plans which should be developed. Therefore, the government over there is unwilling to take political risks on behalf of the Canadian people. Frankly, it is disgusting.

Concerning bureaucrats, I suspect that half the problem with the government over there is that it is locked in. It has been there too long, it has become fossilized. The bureaucratic conservatists in the civil service provide it with advice. It has fought other battles before and it is not prepared to inject new blood and to give the new blood over there some power, those people who have their heads turned toward the coming end of the twentieth century. I think the hon. member, as evidenced by his outburst, is probably one of those who might be given a chance sometime. I have noticed some progressive ideas coming from him occasionally.

An hon. Member: Thanks Ray.

Mr. Skelly: Well, we will see. Again, there are token efforts. There is an unwillingness to take political risks. The Foreign Investment Review Act seems to be a way of injecting foreign investment in Canada. There was great hope that that organization would protect us from foreign industries and allow Canadians more ownership and more Canadian participation. In fact, it has just become a clearing house for foreign investment in Canada.

PetroCan was created, I guess, back in the old '72-74 government. The concept eventually developed, and then was allowed to spin its wheels for years and years. Now, when our backs are more than against the wall, PetroCan blossoms out, and the government is taking some serious industry and putting a window in the industry; and a big window it is. However, for years unwilling to take the political risks until the oil company had ripped us from stem to stern, the government is willing to move now when it is too late. We are past the eleventh hour.

There are some serious questions concerning Canadianization and accountability. If we are looking for an industrial strategy and if we are looking to capture industrial benefits from the modern day CPR, Dome Petroleum and some of the other Canadian ownerships, certainly it is a worthy goal; but undoubtedly, what must come beforehand is a clear expression of policy that we do not want those corporations taking employment and industrial benefits offshore. We want them committed to a policy of developing those benefits within Canada. That policy is not clear. It is absolutely imperative that the government come out with a clear statement that the industrial benefits are the responsibility of those Canadian companies.

● (1740)

A great many of my colleagues are vitally concerned about representing their constituents. Members of Parliament from British Columbia especially are watching the collapse of the forest and fishing industry and many of the other basic resources that are tied heavily to the 90 per cent figure in the United States market. They have serious concerns about the manufacturing industries and about the fact that the opportunity for continuous development and stability is not appearing.

Members will want to speak on that. They will want to hear the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce make a commitment that the offshore supply office will not be a sellout or a token effort. They will want to hear that amendments are possible to this legislation to improve its strength, even if it is at the eleventh hour.

I think I have made my point, and I hope before this drags on forever that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will come into this House and lay out a clearly planned structure. Alternatively, I hope that amendments will be made requiring the government to ensure this country captures the industrial benefits, and creating the employment that is possible. I hope that attention will be paid to regional development, and that participation in equity and benefits will be accorded to the aboriginal peoples.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I think I can say that I agree with the previous speaker from British Columbia that Bill C-48 is one of the most important economic bills that has been before this House for a long time because it deals with one of the trump cards in Canada's resources.

It is very easy to use the expression "Canada lands" liberally, but to the extent of what we are talking about, it is beyond the comprehension of most of us. It is not only oil and gas we are debating in this bill but the theory of how the people of Canada who own this resource economically preserve the maximum amount of return from that which belongs to them.

Almost 25 years ago, I made my estimate of the value of the oil and gas in that area. In these ensuing 25-odd years, I have not changed my judgment one bit. We will see out of these Canada lands a minimum of 100 billion barrels of oil but, even more important, probably about 600 trillion cubic feet of gas. Those figures are meaningless unless you put a dollar value on them. If my estimate is correct, the dollar value would be in the range, although I think it will be exceeded, of the $8,000 billion to $10,000 billion that we are seeking in this legislation. Forgetting all about politics and everything else, but in the interests of Canadians of the present and the future particularly, I agree with the previous speaker that it is our duty to ensure that this one great trump card, which has been in people's minds for 40 or 50 years, should not be wasted by poor drafting of the legislation dealing with it.

This particular amendment moved by the Conservatives is a simple one. Clause 10 gives a very dangerous precedent in that it allows negotiated agreements by the minister with any oil company that he chooses, but although a dangerous precedent, it is fine in principle. But the dangers in it are so real that the Conservative amendment simply says that when the decision is made, it be allowed to come up for review under another clause, Clause 56 in the bill. Regardless of the instructions the government whips have given to their members concerning this motion, surely just because the amendment was moved by the official opposition is not grounds for turning it down. We are not talking here about partisan politics. What we are talking about is a large chunk of the future of Canada, not only the finding of oil and gas, the development and the sale of it, or the great energy supply it gives us for the next 100 years, but all the industrial spin-offs that will continue long after the oil and gas is gone. I hope this moderate amendment will be accepted, stating that when this complete power of negotiation is given to a minister, the act would require the provision to be reviewed, as a means of preventing a mistake from being made.

The part I want to emphasize gives me no pleasure. I do not think I will be disbelieved when I say, with regard to this business of oil and gas economics and administration, that, going back into the 1930s and particularly since the war, I have worked with great interest and I tried during my day to bring in regulations that would protect the Canadian people and optimize the development of our various resources.

I had to undertake, in complete opposition to outside oil companies and Canadian companies, a series of regulations which were radical then but are now accepted by Norway, Venezuela and the United Kingdom as being legitimate and modern. But in these 1961 regulations we had these radical new provisions that worked on the basis of equity between the owner of the resource, the people, and the companies who were the partners. They had to get enough to pay their costs and give them a competitive return on money they invested. Because we accepted them as partners and accepted the minimum requirements of meeting that return on capital which they had to make, we were able to get agreement. Those regulations were put in abeyance on the change of government in 1963. It was not until 1976 when a minister in the Liberal party brought in the 1976 regulations which were based on the same philosophy as the 1961 regulations. We on this side were able to support that minister. Some hon. members will remember that it was Mr. Buchanan. I congratulated him after that long period of ten wasted years on bringing in the regulations that allowed the Canadian public to be protected and allowed the Canadianization program to proceed on an economic basis. It also protected the government and the companies from charges of improper actions.

This is where this bill has gone wrong. This bill has turned back the philosophy of oil regulations in the world some 50 years. We have gone back to the concept of grabbing as much as we can of the resource in the early stages. Because we are grabbing so much, we are putting the companies which are trying to develop the resource into a negative cash flow position in the early years of development. This means in practice that we put the whole oil and gas reserves of the future into the hands of the big international oil companies, because the smaller companies, which only have a few billion dollars worth of reserves, cannot cope with the tremendous money power of the big internationals.

● (1750)

Even though the government, members of the NDP and members of the Conservative party, are all in agreement with giving maximum opportunity to Canadians to participate in this great resource of ours, the realities are that if we do not set this up so that the small company can survive in the early days of the operation, we will have lost the Canadianization component and turned the wealth over to the big international companies.

I have seen this happen in Alberta, British Columbia and the province of Saskatchewan. There was a government in Saskatchewan which was dedicated, when it was first elected in 1948, to principles of socialism. It made tremendous efforts through this type of negotiated agreement, yet its efforts failed. As a result, the government, through its premier, Tommy Douglas, gave its words in the House in Regina that it would work in partnership with private enterprise and that there would be no expropriation of those companies. In effect, that government welcomed the big companies, which had to go along with the type of regulations that existed, and the Canadian industry in Saskatchewan was brought to its knees. That was a government which was sincere and intelligent and fought hard, but it faced up to this reality and accepted the fact that if you are operating on a type of regulation under which only the big guy can survive, you have to turn the property over to him.

This particular regulation which deals with the setting up of exploration agreements is fine in principle and we should give it all the backing we can, but in reality, it is based on trust, and that is wrong. Do these oil companies trust the government? Do these oil companies trust each other? There is no way that they do. These are the most experienced fellows in the world in dealing with governments in all countries of the world. They know exactly where the weak chink is in every armour of any party in any country in the world. They are not stupid. They find the way to out-compete their competitors by dealing with human beings who make up the team on behalf of the government. This is not just a question of bribing politicians, it is a matter of an insidious advance they make on the basis of mutual self interest to the civil servant and the politician.

Believe me, I have seen many nations in the world caught up in this same problem. I have seen Canadian companies in competition with companies in other countries around the world in the development of oil, particularly in some of these new countries, and being squeezed out, even though the local government wanted a Canadian company. The reason was that they could not compete as Canadians with that type of insidious approach taken by skilled oil companies which have many years of experience in dealing with governments of newly developing nations.

The reality is tough, and the least we can do here to protect our own reputations as Members of Parliament is not to oppose this type of clause, Clause 10 of the bill, but to try to make it better and to give it a half decent chance of working, and to do so by putting in a provision giving us the right to review the minister's reasons. That will force him to make certain he does not do things for any reason whatsoever, whether idealistic or any other reason that is bad.

I do not want to go into all this muck and dirt of how it operates. I supported this type of proposal when I was minister but could not get it accepted because the oil companies were opposed to it. Why are they opposed to this type of rule in Clause 10? They know that human beings run governments, and they do not trust each other. They would rather deal with a formula under which everybody gets the same chance. As I said earlier in my remarks, when you have to deal with so much value, there is no limit to what the human mind can do to find ways of beating out competitors by using proposals that look so much better, but underneath hold all the devices which result in a sellout.

I should think everyone of us here, when we come to vote on this amendment proposed by the Conservatives, should support it, adopting a principle which applies to one of the other clauses of the bill, namely that after the minister has taken all this power and used it, he must give his reasons, and these reasons, as in other clauses of the bill, are subject to review.

If you want to read the section, it is Section 56. I am not a lawyer, but I am sure that of all the convoluted ways of protecting the public some are surely there. This will require time, but if we leave all this power in the hands of one man without any form of review, we will be walking into a trap we will all be ashamed of, and, worse than that, we may hand over all this wealth amounting to several trillion dollars to those who know best how to deal with human beings in negotiating agreements.

I want to conclude by making an appeal to all hon. members of the House. I know how these things are decided. It has probably already been decided in the caucuses of the various parties how each party is supposed to vote. I would still like to believe that this is a parliament in which we talk and sometimes listen, and that my remarks and those of the member from Calgary and the member from British Columbia have made some impact. This amendment by the Conservative party should not be judged just on the basis that it comes from the Conservative party, but should be judged as to whether it would make this a better bill. In my estimation, Bill C-48 should be dropped entirely for the reason that we are simply turning all our wealth over to foreign international oil companies. That is how it will turn out, in spite of all the incentives we have planned. I know the arithmetic, I know the cash flow technique, I know the discounting backwards, and I know how closely the companies figure things out. Even though we cannot promise perfection, at least the right to review might enable us to stop some of these things from happening.

That is the sum total of my remarks, Mr. Speaker. I hope I have had a good hearing today and that members will give every consideration to the suggestion that this amendment can only improve the bill. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Shall I recognize the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) and then call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Prince George-Peace River will have the floor if he is here at the appropriate time tomorrow afternoon. It being six o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1), the House now stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF POLISH REFUGEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) told this House that he had increased the quota of eastern European refugees from 4,000 to 5,000, but of this total only 2,500 would come from refugee camps in Austria. Since Canada has taken 75,000 refugees in the past two years, since there soon will be 30,000 Polish refugees in camps in Austria, and winter is setting in, together with all the other hardships being encountered, and since the new quotas for 1982 will not help the present urgent situation, I move, under Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That this House direct the government to heed the urgent appeal for help from the Canadian Polish Congress and the foreign minister of Austria, Willibad Pahr, and immediately increase its quota of Polish refugees to Canada and send aid in the form of warm clothes, food and medical supplies to the refugee camps located in Austria.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: Smith said no.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order please. There is no need to identify those who say yes or no.

An hon. Member: Oh yes there is.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley).

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, I agree that there is no reason to identify the fact that David Smith said no.

REMEMBRANCE OF RUSSIAN INVASION OF HUNGARY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That this House, in memory of the events that began 25 years ago on October 23 in Hungary, express its abiding opposition to the continuing totalitarian suppression of real freedom in Hungary and in all other countries so controlled, its sincere gratitude to those thousands of Hungarians whose reason for coming to Canada was so tragic and whose contribution to Canada has been so great, and its deepest sympathy to all those who lost family and friends in the valiant fight for freedom and against totalitarianism, whose sacrifice free people must never forget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

PROTECTION FROM DISCRIMINATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I too stand under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the government has promised that the Canadian Human Rights Act would be amended to protect the rights of the handicapped, and the report of the special committee made a number of recommendations in this respect, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House instruct the Minister of Justice to bring before the House amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act that would protect disabled Canadians from discrimination, as was promised in the Speech from the Throne, and that these amendments be in conformity with recommendation number one of the report of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR TABLING OF DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, whereas the Department of Agriculture has prepared a number of reports for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), with regard to the economic crisis facing the agricultural community in Canada for the years 1981, 1982 and 1983, particularly as it relates to the cattle producer, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That this House require the Minister of Agriculture to table those reports in this House immediately, so that all Canadians may understand fully the serious impact of this government's economic policies on the agricultural industry.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE CARS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, yesterday in this House the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) stated that August figures indicated a sharp drop in Japanese automotive imports into Canada. Had the minister waited, with everyone else, to review the official figures that were released by Statistics Canada only today, he would have known that in fact in August there was an increase in Japanese automotive imports by over 2,000 units over the corresponding period last year. Despite the minister's 6 per cent voluntary reduction agreement with Japan, the level of such imports into Canada has increased by some 70 per cent in the last five months alone, contributing considerably to massive unemployment in this country. In view of these alarming statistics I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the minister be instructed to take immediate action in obtaining assurances from Japanese auto manufacturers that their commitment made to Canada to reduce auto imports will be honoured.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

IMPACT OF INTEREST RATE POLICIES ON FARMERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Madam Speaker, I rise on behalf of the hard-pressed farmers of Canada. My colleagues, the hon. member for Bruce-Gray (Mr. Gurbin) and the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), and I have been asked to transmit to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) 1,792 letters from farmers in our area protesting the high interest policy which has had, and continues to have, a terrible impact on even the strongest and oldest farming operations. Since both the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) have refused to meet with us to receive and discuss these letters, I am sending them by hand to the Minister of Finance. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bruce-Gray and the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe:

That this House deplores the disastrous effects the government's high interest rate policies are having upon Canadian farmers and calls upon the Minister of Finance to provide immediate relief before more farmers are forced into bankruptcy or distress sales.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

EMPLOYMENT PROSPECTS FOR MIGRANTS TO CITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, a report released earlier this year concludes that the great majority of Indians moving from reserves to cities do so in the hope of finding work, but are only successful in a few cases. Because the results of this situation are too often family breakdown, crime, alcoholism, and suicide, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration take seriously their responsibilities to Indian people and seek to address this alarming and urgent situation by studying the finding of this report, of the report of the Joint Working Committee on Native Women's Employment, and the Employment Task Force report so that new and successful ways can urgently be found to solve this problem.

FORESTRY

EXPORTS OF LUMBER TO UNITED STATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of vital concern to all involved in and around the Canadian forest industry.

In recent weeks there have been misguided but increasingly heavy pressures on the United States government by the United States northwest forest industry, state leaders and congressional politicians, to limit imports of Canadian lumber drastically, a course of action which, if followed, would cause grave consequences to Canada's most important exporting industry already hard hit by lay-offs and plant closures. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly):

That this House urge the government to launch an intensive lobby and information campaign directed at appropriate United States congressional, state and forest industry leaders, pointing out the gross inaccuracies in United States complaints of allegedly unfair Canadian competition, and stressing that the prime reason for the current disaster in the North American lumber and housing market is the self-destructive monetary and fiscal policy—especially usurious interest rates—of the Reagan administration and other jurisdictions which slavishly follow the U.S. lead.

TREASURY BOARD PAY OFFER TO GENERAL SERVICES GROUP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That in its negotiations with the General Services Group of the Public Service, the Treasury Board, which is offering only a 5 per cent increase while inflation is known to be running at over 13 per cent, be required by this House to re-examine its offer to that section of the Public Service which is generally recognized as lagging considerably behind employees in the outside market who perform similar duties, a view that is supported by a recent declaration emanating from the Human Rights Commission.

ENERGY

DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION OF OIL SUBSTITUTION PROGRAM IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, since the people of Canada were advised that the government was committed to the effective management of Canada's energy future through the Canada Oil Substitution Program introduced one year ago, and since the people of eastern Canada, including the people of Prince Edward Island who pay the highest energy costs in Canada, are still not able to obtain application forms, although the program was announced in the budget 12 months ago, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie):

That this House condemn the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for allowing this important subsidy program to be tied up in red tape while thousands of eastern Canadians, who have already spent their hard-earned money converting, suffer from the inaction and incompetence of his ministry. And I further move that this House instruct the minister to release those application forms immediately.

GRAIN

INCREASE SOUGHT IN CASH ADVANCE LIMIT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent importance.

Whereas the combination of high interest rates and low delivery quotas is creating a cash shortage on western grain farms, and whereas the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Program was enacted to assist farmers meet these cash shortages, and whereas the maximum cash advance of $15,000 for farm-stored grain was put in place long before these days of 20 per cent interest and 13 per cent inflation rates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That the government accept the advice of its own Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee, and raise its cash advance limit to $50,000 per individual farmer.

This raise was promised by a former minister responsible for the Wheat Board in the 1979 election campaign.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

FUNDS FOR EDUCATION AND HEALTH CARE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, whereas one of Canada's most worth-while achievements over the last 25 years was federal-provincial co-operation in funding post-secondary education, which has resulted in hundreds of thousands of young Canadians from modest income families being able to attend colleges and universities and achieve careers of great distinction, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the government immediately cancel the proposed unilateral cut of $1.5 billion for post-secondary education and health care and return to the worthwhile pursuit of co-operative federalism.

HOUSING

FORECAST OF INCREASES IN RENTAL PAYMENTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for housing. I have before me a document which the minister admitted yesterday had been submitted to the cabinet over his signature. It indicates, on page 21, that at today's interest rate levels rental payments will have to increase by 39 per cent annually over the next five years for landlords to get any kind of return on their investments. In addition to shortages of rental accommodation, tenants will be faced with catastrophic increases in their monthly payments.

Since the report points out that close to half a million low income renters already pay well over 30 per cent of their incomes for shelter, what plans does the minister have to meet this impending crisis? And it is indeed a crisis.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cosgrove: —the problem identified by the hon. lady was one of the ones foremost on my mind when, in the spring of this year, I met with my provincial counterparts and we discussed that problem. I indicated that the federal response at that time was, for example, to address supply coming onto the market in order to take some of the pressure off rent availability, thereby impacting prices renters have to pay. It was for that reason, for example, that last year, and again this year, as an alternative to assisting those people, the government increased its commitment to social housing through the rentals that people acquire by way of co-op and non-profit housing. That is why we increased those starts and why I was happy to say, the last time I answered the hon. lady's question, that, for example, as late as Saturday of last weekend I assisted in the start of another one of those projects to increase supply and to assist people at that income level.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, the minister of course knows, if he reads the document he presented to cabinet, that starts this year and next year in both rentals and in home dwellings will be down, and that will be a severe concern to both home owners and renters.

REVERSAL OF THIRTY-FIVE YEAR TREND

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I want to refer the minister to another part of this chilling document, and that is the statement in it that young families starting out are not going to be able to afford homes and face:

—tight rental markets . . . waiting lists and doubling up with family and friends. We will thus witness a substantial regression in housing conditions following 35 years of gradual improvement.

Is the minister content to go down in history, as this document says, as the man whose policies produced substantial regression in housing conditions following 35 years of gradual improvement? Is that his intention? Is that what he is doing to this country, and is he content to do so?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, indeed that would not be my intention. I direct the attention of the hon. lady to published Canadian housing statistics which show, for example, that since I have had the responsibility for reporting to Parliament for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the number of starts since March of last year through to this year has gradually increased month over month and quarter over quarter, to reach a three-year high of 242,000.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

LAY-OFFS IN CONSTRUCTION AND LUMBER INDUSTRIES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the minister knows, of course, that the document he presented to cabinet indicates that housing starts will drop off sharply this quarter and will be down tremendously next quarter. Because he has no clout with cabinet to put his proposals forward, I will turn to another minister, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, or maybe I should say of unemployment and immigration.

I brought to the attention of the minister responsible for housing on Tuesday the fact that at the present rate of housing starts, which is well below demand, there are widespread lay-offs across the country, particularly in the construction industry and in the lumber industry. The report which the minister presented to cabinet indicates that housing starts will be sharply lower next year. It indicates a loss of 30,000 more jobs in the housing and construction industry. In the face of this crisis, is the minister considering policies to put these 30,000 construction workers and those in related industries back to work? Is he considering policies to do that, because the report says they will be laid off, or is he, like the Minister of Finance, content to write these people off as an aberration or a sampling error? Is that what he is about to do?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member had been listening to the statements by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, she would know that that minister is not content with conditions in the economy and has indicated that he intends to take very significant and major measures in the budget to deal with those factors. At the same time I would like to point out to the hon. member that we have arranged, for the second round, a new direct employment program that will provide thousands of jobs for Canadians, a program that had been cancelled by her government when she was in power, and that we will continue in the high unemployment areas. When it comes down to who is concerned about unemployment, I think the record speaks for itself.

HOUSING

SALE OF HOUSES HELD BY CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my questions are for the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I remind the minister that the great applause he received from his side might be an indication that he is in real trouble. This minister has a great deal of housing stock under his authority, particularly in the city of Mississauga. He has a lot of housing that could be sold to individuals. He could sell that housing at realistic mortgage terms like the Ontario Mortgage Corporation does, taking back mortgages at 10 and 12 per cent instead of insisting that these people pay all cash. One of the things that really bothers me—

Madam Speaker: Order. I cannot have these long preambles. I have accepted one abuse, but I am not accepting another.

Mr. Blenkarn: Is the minister prepared to sell this housing to individuals, taking back mortgages at realistic terms, or is he going to continue to insist on asking the highest price possible and insist that individuals pay all cash? Is that the minister's policy, and is he going to continue it?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the hon. member puts his finger on a very difficult problem faced by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, one which was reflected during the time his party held office previous to this government, that is, the responsibility of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, not only in addressing social concerns and social needs, but carrying on its business in a way in which it shows a good return and use of the taxpayers' resources.

While the Conservative government was in power the then minister of Public Works was authorized to borrow $200 million because the corporation found it difficult to compete in a depressed market for the sale of some of that housing. The corporation is attempting to get a good return for the taxpayer on the sale of properties that come back into the mortgage insurance fund. Our objective is also to serve social needs and to return that housing to people at reasonable rates.

SALES TO INVESTORS AND SPECULATORS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): I am glad the minister is interested in social matters, Madam Speaker. This is the subject on which I want to address him. Is he aware that his corporation is offering housing to tenants who live in that housing at prices in the neighbourhood of $38,000 in Mississauga, but is prepared to discount that housing to speculators and investors at $31,000?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: And he is insisting on all cash from the home owner, but he is working out some other deal in terms of a share arrangement with the speculators? Is he really the minister for social housing, or is he the minister of MURBs and speculation?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I already indicated to the hon. member that, in fact, the corporation has to attempt to balance both; it has to attempt to balance sensibility and responsibility to people in need, with its responsibility to the taxpayers who provide the funding and wherewithal by which it operates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ASSISTANCE FOR HOME OWNERS RENEWING MORTGAGES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I direct my question to the minister responsible for housing. According to yesterday's press the minister said, "There is an unofficial deal that has been worked out with the financial institutions to ensure that there would be no family losing their home through foreclosure until the budget is brought down." Mr. Colhoun, president of the Trust Companies Association, says he knows of no such deal. The secretary-treasurer of the Bankers' Association said, and I quote, "I am not aware of any deal like this." I should like to ask the minister if there is a deal and, if so, why have the financial institutions not been told? Or is this another one of his secrets?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): The best way to respond to the question of the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is to offer him a document signed by the President of the Canadian Bankers' Association. It is a response to an individual person's request for help, and indicates that the association has set up senior executives who are charged to overview each individual branch operation to respond to people's individual needs in order to avoid the problem the hon. member refers to. I would be happy to provide the document to the hon. member.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL GUARANTEE AGAINST LOSS OF HOME OWNERSHIP

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I have listened with care to the minister's answer. He said a spokesperson for the Canadian Bankers' Association offered such a promise, even though the secretary of that association in yesterday's press said that no such deal existed. Considering there are families across Canada losing their homes every day and thousands more caught in this housing crisis, is the minister prepared to guarantee to those families that no family will lose their home before the budget is brought down?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I share the concern of the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party. After the meeting between the Minister of Finance and representatives of the financial institutions I requested they accept that responsibility, which I view to be, in large part, their responsibility toward their clients. We have seen the results of this, Madam Speaker, in the Royal Bank's press release yesterday. We saw a statement that said, "We want a situation where no Royal Bank's client risks losing his or her home because high interest payments temporarily make monthly payments too heavy to bear."

Our objective—and I am sure it is shared because of the question of the hon. leader—is to see that all mortgage holders adopt that as an objective until budget time, and until the government indicates what its response is in concert with the mortgage holders.

• (1430)

REQUEST FOR PRE-BUDGET ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, everyone will have noted that the minister did not offer the guarantee I requested so that people would not lose their homes. In all that verbiage no guarantee was offered. This crisis is of immense concern not only to the families who are losing their homes but to those who are having to change their family budgets, or having to put another person out to work to maintain their homes because of mortgage levels. Will the minister take concrete action before the budget comes down to help those families avoid this crisis? I ask that in the context that I have accumulated today more than 15,000 signatures of people who are concerned about the interest crisis, many of whom are from the minister's riding.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the answer to that question is yes. At a public meeting last evening in my riding I met with a number of my constituents. In response to that question, my office accepted a number of complaints and requests for help which were made. I will attempt to respond to those cases which are brought to my attention, those cases where there is genuine concern that homes would be in jeopardy before the other financial institutions respond to the Royal Bank initiative or the budget. I would be happy to receive any case from any individual Member of Parliament who is genuinely concerned there is a hazard that the home will be lost.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING ACTION BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The minister demanded in the past that the chartered banks take the first step in aiding home owners victimized by high interest rates. Also he demanded that the banks, "be fair, be compassionate and bleed a little". The minister will be aware of the five-point plan announced by the Royal Bank to which the minister responsible for housing referred. It will cost the Royal Bank about $2 million.

Now that the chartered banks have taken the initiative, is the minister prepared to bleed a little himself by introducing measures to aid hard-pressed home owners, or is he continuing to avoid the issue, which is the political equivalent of cutting his wrists?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, all I can say is to express my acknowledgement that the Royal Bank has taken a proper step in announcing an additional program of five points to assist home owners facing renewals. I believe it will be of assistance in certain cases. It will offer renewal at 16 per cent where conditions warrant, which will be quite helpful. I have stated to the financial institutions, in my several meetings with them, that I expected them to take some responsibility, and once they had demonstrated what the private sector could do it would be easier for the government to add, if necessary. I am moving in that sequence, and I am very pleased that the Royal Bank has moved in the correct direction.

TASK FORCE REPORT

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Finance who is clearly leaving the responsibility on the shoulders of the banks. I should like to point out how he moved 3,000 petitions complaining about high interest rates from his desk to that of the Prime Minister. I feel this indicates how he would like to divest himself of any responsibility for fiscal policy.

In dealing with the task force, which is what I believe the Minister of Finance referred to when he talked about meeting with institutions, he stated in the past that he established a task force which included representatives of trust companies, credit unions and the banks to study these problems. When can we expect a report from the task force? Will a report be publicly presented to us? Is the task force working directly with the banks to devise more plans to aid people hurt by high interest rates?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the setting up of the task force came out of the meeting I had with financial institutions. It has met a number of times. One of the tasks or one of the primary areas of discussion was how general could an interest deferral scheme become applicable, could it be applied across all financial institutions? Here we have the Royal Bank moving ahead. I know the caisses populaires have already done very commendable work in adjusting their collection schedules to the requirements of the clients.

Miss MacDonald: What is the government doing?

Mr. MacEachen: I believe in the sound operation of the private economy, the private sector in Canada, and I believe we ought to combine our efforts to solve the problems facing Canadian citizens. It would be possible at the proper stage to combine our efforts and relate what we may do to what has already been accomplished by the private sector. I believe further steps could be taken. I would be pleased to report at the appropriate time to the hon. member and to the House on the results of the monitoring of the task force which has been established.

VIA RAIL

ELIMINATION OF ATLANTIC LIMITED TRAIN SERVICE

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the impressive and extensive criticism of the decision to abandon rail passenger service, will the minister change his decision regarding Atlantic Limited or any of the trains, if facts raising a reasonable doubt about the correctness of his decision are presented to him?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have already expressed myself quite clearly on the subject. I am quite willing to account for the validity of what we have done. But the decision has been made, the cabinet has passed an order in council to that effect, and there is no way that I can come back on that.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET NEW BRUNSWICK REPRESENTATIVES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, the minister's answer speaks for itself in terms of fairness and regard for Parliament. Where the minister is not prepared to follow the democratic process through the CTC, will he agree to see, at once, representatives of the municipalities in New Brunswick that are directly affected by this cutback and believe they have solid evidence which justifies continuation of the train?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I just want to repeat what I have already said and what everyone knows. The law, section 64 of the National Transportation Act of 1967, allows the Government of Canada to do what has been done. There is a reason for that. It is simply that going to the CTC on such a number of routes would give piecemeal decisons on a single file, if one wants to put it that way. What is needed now—and my precedessors received the same recommendation from their advisers, VIA in particular—is a global approach to the rationalization of passenger railway transportation in Canada. The democratic process is being followed. The law allows the government to do that, and there is good reason for it.

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN SCRAPPING PASSENGER CARS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Minister of Transport who, like the minister responsible for housing, has been helping to stack the deck chairs on the Titanic. Legal action is being initiated today or tomorrow in the courts in Winnipeg, by the city of Melville, the town of Watrous, Saskatchewan, the Saskatoon Environmental Association, and the Saskatchewan section of Transport 2000, on the legality of the government's abandonment of certain train services, and since VIA Rail has announced the scrapping of 250 to 300 railway passenger cars, it would be physically impossible to restore those abandoned routes, should the minister's order be found illegal, because of the equipment which has been scrapped.

• (1440)

Pending a decision by the courts or, better, a decision by the House of Commons Transport Committee or the CTC, I should like to ask the minister if he will cancel or delay plans to scrap VIA equipment and cancel or delay the abandonment of certain passenger routes?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I think the legal aspect of this is quite clear. Should someone take legal action against a decision of the government, should there be an injunction to stop what is taking place now, I am quite sure the government will obey the law.

DETERMINATION OF FINANCIAL LOSSES INCURRED BY PASSENGER TRAINS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, the Minister would then obey the law when it is too late to restore the routes, because the equipment has been scrapped. The minister neglects to explain how he is going to replace 250 or 300 railway cars that have been scrapped, with 50 new ones.

I have received a report from the Canadian Transport Commission which states that the determining of financial losses for passenger trains is inadequate. It recommends a thorough review of railway accounting systems as applied to VIA. Since the minister's decision to abandon VIA service is obviously based on outdated and inadequate information, as is pointed out by the CTC, will he at least delay, if not rescind, the abandonment of those passenger routes and appoint a commission of inquiry into the financial relationship between VIA Rail and the railway, since obviously VIA is being overcharged for services by CP and CN?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am quite sure that if my old friend, who is keen to inform himself fully on these matters, consults further with his advisers he will probably learn—and I am sure of it myself—that there has been quite a substantial improvement in the auditing and disclosure of information concerning costing order R63-13 of the Transport Commission. I think the president of VIA will recognize that quite easily.

In regard to costing order R63-13, I have to tell the hon. member that we have a joint study between Transport Canada and the CTC which is examining it in depth. I am quite willing to go to the Transport committee to discuss it with members of that committee because I think that these are really the major problems which confront us now. This particular aspect was to be looked at, and I would be very keen to go to the committee to learn member's views on the matter because this is the most urgent subject that has to be debated.

ETHNIC GROUPS

CONTRIBUTION OF HUNGARIANS TO DEVELOPMENT OF CANADA

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. As we all know, tomorrow marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the beginning of the Hungarian uprising of 1956. In keeping with the spirit of the motion presented today by my colleague, the hon. member for Don Valley West, would the minister please express the sympathy of members of this House to all those who lost family and friends in that struggle for independence, and would he also acknowledge the great contribution that people of Hungarian origin have made to the development and cultural heritage of Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Yes, Madam Speaker, I am pleased to join in the spirit—I hear some objections from the other side of the House but I am sure that is not the feeling of all on that side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That really was not a question to elicit information.

INCOME TAX

TAXATION OF NORTHERN BENEFITS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Is he in a position to report on the findings of an interdepartmental committee appointed to look into the whole question of taxation of northern benefits and which resulted in a remission order with respect thereto? Since the deadline of the remission order is getting closer and the budget is getting closer, is the minister in a position to tell us today what he intends to do to help northerners cope with the incredibly compounded cost of living in the areas of housing, energy, and all that is associated with today's crises?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I certainly share the idea that northerners are suffering under high costs possibly more than other people in other parts of Canada. As the hon. member knows, the remission order is in place until the end of December. The government is reviewing the situation, and at such time as the policy is changed an announcement will be made in the House. I have no such announcement to make today.

POSSIBLE BUDGETARY PROVISIONS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the minister to address himself to the question of whether he is confident that there will be a reflection in the budget with respect to this very crucial problem. Could he tell us today whether the notion of using the Income Tax Act to allow northerners to claim greater deductions from their personal incomes in an effort to achieve more equality and fairness with others is acceptable, recognizing the need of northerners for greater incomes to allow them to cope with excessive costs? Is the minister confident that something will be reflected in the budget? Is he pursuing the notion of using the Income Tax Act to achieve greater equity and fairness with respect to raising taxes throughout the country?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that the budget is under the purview of the Minister of Finance. It would not be my place to discuss the budget before it comes down. The hon.

member's representation is on the record and I am sure it will be appreciated.

PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—QUERY RESPECTING COMPLETION OF PROJECT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He will recall giving the House iron-clad guarantees many months ago that construction of the Alaska gas pipeline would go ahead as planned, that is, for completion in 1983. Reports coming from the Congress of the United States now have it that the U.S. authorities are reluctant to proceed on account of perceived anti-American provisions within the national energy policy.

Could the minister please tell the House whether any changes are to take place in the national energy policy, or if he plans any other course of action to ensure the timely completion of the Alaska gas pipeline in its entirety, as he previously promised this House?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I do not know where my hon. friend is getting his information. On the contrary, the information we have is that the United States administration is very supportive of the project. The best evidence of this is that the administration has sent a waiver bill to Congress for adoption, which is going to remove a lot of the obstacles that remain in the way of completion of this project. We have received no indication at all from the United States administration that it would be considering even a delay in the construction of that particular pipeline. We hope that Congress is going to live by its commitment, that is, the unanimous resolution passed by Congress a year and a half ago in which both the House of Representatives and the Senate fully endorsed the project and said that steps should be taken to make sure it is realized.

Mr. Nickerson: Madam Speaker, according to the minister everything in the garden is rosy, but that does not seem to be the view taken by the hon. Mitchell Sharp, the pipeline commissioner. In a speech given in New York a few days ago he referred to what he called "a new element of uncertainty" that has been injected into the whole complex scheme.

An hon. Member: Are you against it?

Mr. Nickerson: With all due respect to the minister, Madam Speaker, I would suggest that his iron-cladding is getting a little rusty.

EXPORTS OF GAS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is this: if the American sections of the pipeline through Alaska are not proceeded with, and if the sections of the line through the Yukon and northern British Columbia are not proceeded with—and you have to admit that this now looks like a distinct possibility—is it still the intention of the government to be prepared to authorize exports of Canadian gas through the pre-build section, or is it likely that it will reconsider those export permits in light of the possibility that the pipeline as a whole will not be built?

● (1450)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member referred to a speech given by the hon. Mitchell Sharp. For the purpose of fairness and honesty in this House, the hon. member should have read the whole sentence. Mr. Sharp said:

> A new element of uncertainty was injected into this whole complex process with the election of a new administration under President Reagan last November.

That has nothing to do with the NEP. Since that speech the administration has removed that element of uncertainty by sending to Congress the waiver bill that I referred to, which indicates the administration wants to see this project proceed. As far as the possibility of cutting back on export permits that have already been granted is concerned, the government is not considering any such thing.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INCREASED COST OF F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT PROGRAM

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In March last, during the study of the estimates of the minister's department, we were all informed that the total program costs in budget year dollars for the new fighter aircraft would be just over $4 billion. In August Brigadier General Slaunwhite said that the program costs are now estimated to be $5.2 billion. Would the minister explain where the extra billion is going to be spent? Perhaps more important, could he explain where it is coming from?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I am very glad to be able to answer the hon. member. I may not be able to answer him in detail, but I can in a global way. I hope now there will be confidence in the F-18 aircraft because the Australians have just bought 75 of them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: The increase in cost was projected in the contract as part of the difference between the exchange on Canadian dollars, which, as hon. members know, goes up or down.

Mr. Epp: Down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lamontagne: In addition it is affected by the rate of inflation, which goes up and down also. We all hope it will go down.

If the inflation rate goes down and the exchange on the Canadian dollar goes up, the cost of the plane will be less. If it is the other way around, the cost of the plane will be higher.

Mr. Kempling: Hurrah! We have a new minister of finance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: Madam Speaker, it is a very simple question, and that is why I have expressed it like that.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I almost got motion sickness in the middle of that answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

COMMITMENT TO NATO ALLIES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, the minister has just admitted the effect inflation is having on the cost of the new fighter aircraft. Last spring he was boasting to our NATO allies that we would have a 3 per cent increase in our budget in real terms. In view of the fact that the inflation rate is considerably higher than he estimated, does he now intend to bring in a supplementary estimate or does he intend this to be just another broken promise to our allies and to the Canadian forces?

[Translation]

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, with regard to the question as to whether or not our allies are satisfied with the performance of Canada within NATO or our defence agreements, I must say that we have not yet been criticized by our allies in this regard. I have just come back from a meeting of NATO ministers in Edinburgh, and no one seemed to accuse us of not doing our share. On the contrary, our allies were very satisfied with the way in which Canada always supports NATO statements or achievements.

As to whether or not we shall be introducing supplementary estimates for the Defence budget, I believe that what I have said will be confirmed in due time, namely that Canada is aiming at a 3 per cent growth increase rate for real defence expenditures.

ENERGY

IMPORTATION OF URANIUM MINED IN NAMIBIA—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister is no doubt aware that Eldorado Nuclear Ltd., under licences from the Atomic Energy Control Board, for which the minister is responsible in this House, is importing uranium ore mined in Namibia and shipped to Canada via South Africa. He should also be aware that a senior official of the Atomic Energy Control Board indicated on television on September 15 that he was unaware this was happening, but that if it was, it would be against government policy, and indeed against the law. The next day the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that no such law and no such policy existed.

Given the contradictory positions between his agency, the Atomic Energy Control Board, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, can the minister tell the House what is the policy of his department, and what is the policy of the Government of Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Atomic Energy Control Board has reviewed this position. My hon. friend refers to a statement made by one official of that particular board at a particular time. That is not a statement by the board or the policy of the board. Since then I have been advised that the Atomic Energy Control Board has reviewed all the facts and has examined the situation. The board concluded that everything done was done according to the law, and that now law was breached in Canada by Eldorado Nuclear Ltd. That is a statement made by the Atomic Energy Control Board, and I have nothing to add to it. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has stated the policy of the government on this issue generally.

ISSUANCE OF IMPORT PERMITS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, the minister is saying no that no law or no government policy was breached. Can he assure the House that his agency will not be granting any further permits to Eldorado to import uranium that is mined in Namibia, which is in violation of 1970 and 1971 United Nations resolutions, resolutions which so far have been supported in spirit by the Government of Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Again, Madam Speaker, the Atomic Energy Control Board has reported that no law was breached. As far as the external affairs policy of the Government of Canada in terms of trade or other relationships is concerned, I suggest the hon. member should address his question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REVIEW OF "URBAN PUBLIC TRANSIT"

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I shall direct my question to his parliamentary secretary.

The External Information Programs Division of the Department of External Affairs recently put out a publication entitled "Urban Public Transport". The purpose of this publication is to inform other countries about the Canadian experience in public transport.

Unfortunately, when one looks through this publication, one finds that it does not reflect the Canadian reality, since it fails to give due recognition to developments in cities of the province of Quebec and does not contain the least reference to one of its most important firms, namely, Bombardier.

Can the parliamentary secretary tell the House what the department plans to do with this publication which, in my opinion, is incomplete?

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, this publication has been under review, and I consider that it does not faithfully reflect the transport situation in Canada. We have therefore ordered that it be withdrawn.

AGRICULTURE

IMPACT OF HIGH INTEREST RATE POLICY ON FARMERS

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Earlier this afternoon my colleagues from Bruce-Grey and Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe gave the minister more than 1,700 letters from farmers in our area who have been trying to make him realize the terrific impact the government's high interest rate policy has on farmers. In view of the critical financial condition of these farmers today, will the minister give this House the assurance that his budget will address this problem and bring relief to them? As well, will the minister move up the date of his budget so that measures can be put in place before farmers are forced to sell their land in a depressed market or have to declare bankruptcy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have received those letters which were addressed to the Prime Minister. They were signed by individuals, but they are exactly the same in most cases, having been mimeographed or printed. That does not in any way detract from their importance, however. I might add that I answered those questions yesterday and the day before.

With respect to the budget date, nothing has changed since yesterday.

Miss MacDonald: Wait until tomorrow. We will have a new date.

Mr. MacEachen: With respect to the hon. member's concern as to the impact of interest rates on the agricultural community, I have already indicated my concern and awareness of this problem and that I was addressing it in the context of budget preparations.

Mr. Cardiff: Madam Speaker, I would urge the minister to look at the notations on those letters. Many of them are important, and I would hate the minister to dismiss them lightly.

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Madam Speaker, what immediate remedies does the minister have to help farmers in these distressed situations until such time as he brings down his budget in this House? Some farmers are not in a position to last until then. What immediate measures does the minister have to offer?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I answered a similar question yesterday addressed to me by the hon. member for Oshawa.

● (1500)

Madam Speaker: Is the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) rising on business of the House?

Mr. Nielsen: I was, if the question period is over.

Madam Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Nielsen: I was going to rise to ask a supplementary question.

Madam Speaker: I think we will hear the hon. member for Yukon.

INCOME TAX

REMISSION ORDER RESPECTING TAXATION OF NORTHERN BENEFITS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to that which was asked by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River, and it is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Has he received any recommendation from any of the officials of his or any other government department that his remission order with respect to the taxation of northern benefits not be renewed beyond the existing taxation year?

Business of the House

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the answer was really contained in the question of the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River, in that he said there were officials from a number of departments working on this issue. I think it is fair to say that recommendations and a brief on the total issue have been given to myself, the Minister of Finance and other ministers of the government reviewing the situation, and at such time as there is a change in policy that will be announced in the usual way.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have the usual question on House business. I presume we will be carrying on for the remainder of this week with Bill C-48, and that in all probability we will be carrying on next week with Bill C-48 as well. That seems to be the intention of the government. I wonder whether the government House leader would confirm that.

Secondly, it would appear that November 10 will be the likely date of a budget. The first estimate was the end of October, then it was November 3 and now it is November 10. Assuming that is going to be the date of the budget, I have had several members approach me with respect to the time-honoured practice of this House to adjourn for the Remembrance Day weekend in time to permit members to attend Remembrance Day ceremonies in their ridings.

The government House leader will know that certainly those of us who live in the far west will not be able to get home at all for Remembrance Day ceremonies if the budget, indeed, is to be presented on November 10. Is there any arrangement the government is considering which might ensure a continuation of that practice so the veterans of this country will not be slighted by our being kept here for November 10?

The third question I have for the House leader has to do with the motion standing on today's Order Paper in the name of the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe:

That the Eighth Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, presented to the House on Tuesday, June 30, 1981, be concurred in.

I was informed by the hon. member after I came into the House for the question period that he has been requested by that committee to bring on that report for discussion this week. While I can understand the impossibility of that occurring this week, I have also been asked by the hon. member, who is co-chairman of that committee, to determine if it would be possible to accommodate a debate on that report next Monday. The House leader knows we had a brief discussion on this just prior to two o'clock, but it was not until after two o'clock that I learned for certain that the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe, who is co-chairman of the committee, had been specifically requested by his committee to bring that report on this week.

I wonder if the government House leader might cover those three points.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Regarding the first point, Madam Speaker, yes, we intend to continue considering Bill C-48, the Canada Oil and Gas Act, today, tomorrow and during most of next week, and we hope to conclude the debate before the end of next week. In any event, the order of business is always subject to change, prior notice being given, and in this respect, my hon. colleague should know that the schedule may be changed at any time, if necessary, to end the debate on the Constitution. Normally, unless there is a change in the order of business, which is the government's responsibility as my colleague is well aware, we should be dealing with Bill C-48 today, tomorrow, and during most of next week.

As far as Remembrance Day is concerned, the hon. member is aware that under the Standing Order 2(3), the House does not sit on Remembrance Day. This year, November 11 is a Wednesday. I am told that most ceremonies to honour our veterans take place on the preceding Sunday.

An hon. Member: Yes, but not for the veterans—

Mr. Pinard: Regarding the request for the committee report, request No. 8 by the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), I have explained several times that in view of the business on the Order Paper and the many measures this Parliament must consider, under Standing Order 18(2), the government intends to use its prerogative to select the subjects to be debated each day, except of course on the opposition days the government is required to allow. So if the hon. member wants to discuss the report, even if it is at the request of his committee, we shall have no alternative, as I have already explained to him and to the predecessor of the member for Yukon, but to introduce a motion either to adjourn the debate or to proceed with the orders of the day, so that the government can deal with its legislative program and priorities, as provided under the rules of the House.

Once more, I am surprised this matter is being raised again, since at this stage of the session we have no alternative but to pressure members to expedite the government measures listed on the Order Paper. Again, I would ask the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe to be patient and not to make members of all parties be here until five o'clock on Fridays and at two o'clock on Mondays, which would be the case if it were necessary to introduce a motion that could come to a vote, to enable the government to deal with government measures on the Order Paper. Well, we are having a frank and open debate on the floor of the House, and I am asking the hon. member to be patient, because as I have often said, and I say it again today, the reports prepared for us by the committee which is looking into the regulations in general have an impact on the committee system and also on future parliamentary reform, an impact which may be more or less direct depending on the circumstances, and I think it would be unwise and premature to discuss these reports before we negotiate certain changes in the Standing Orders of the House of Commons during the next few months. In the circumstances, my answer must be no, we are not prepared to consider the reports of this committee at this time, in view of the circumstances I have already mentioned which are very real, and as a result of which the government must consider as much of its business as possible to expedite the items on the Order Paper and start a new session as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the government House leader is labouring, as is probably the Minister of Finance, because he is not a veteran, and I mean no inference by that remark—

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Nielsen: Don't say "shame". The hon. member opposite with the backwards collar who is interrupting is not a veteran either, I do not believe. But veterans consider this day extremely important, almost sacred, to them. I can assure the government House leader that Remembrance Day is held on the eleventh, and unlike many other holidays which might be celebrated on a Monday or Friday simply because they fall in the middle of the week, Remembrance Day is a single exception to that rule. It has never been held on other than November 11.

● (1510)

Many of us who are veterans want to go home to attend Remembrance Day ceremonies but we cannot possibly do so if we are prevented from leaving here until ten o'clock Tuesday night. We have either to stay here and listen to the budget or leave to join our veterans.

I am sure the government would want to accommodate the veterans' organizations under whose jurisdiction these ceremonies fall. I am also sure that many members, both veterans and non-veterans, want to participate in these ceremonies.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, would the government House leader clarify his response with regard to the report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments? The minister made reference to parliamentary reform. Is he aware that the report my hon. friend from Yukon was alluding to had nothing to do with parliamentary reform but was, in fact, a report on VIA Rail recommending the government bring forward legislation to create VIA Rail in line with the recommendations which you, Madam Speaker, made earlier this year in this House with regard to legislative items and the appropriation votes. The report has nothing to do with parliamentary reform; it is a standard report from the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, regarding the last question, I would remind the hon. member that there are three reports under his name on the Order Paper, and if the report to which he is referring has no connection with parliamentary reform, at least one of the two remaining reports does have an impact on this matter and also appears on the Order Paper. In any case, if a report is connected with parliamentary reform, consideration of the report should be postponed until the matter of parliamentary reform is addressed, perhaps during the next few months, and as for the other committee reports, the government prefers, as is its prerogative, to deal with government measures first because of the time factor. So the same answer applies in both cases.

Regarding Remembrance Day, Madam Speaker, I do not know what the custom is in the riding of my colleague for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), but I can say that in my own constituency and in those of most of my colleagues here, that day is observed on the preceding Sunday. The laying of the wreath at the war memorial, a ceremony I make a point of attending, takes place on the preceding Sunday. In any case, if I understand correctly, the hon. member does not want the House of Commons to be in session on the 11th, the 10th, the 9th, the 8th and the 7th. In the circumstances, and since this year November 11 falls right in the middle of the week, on a Wednesday, we shall follow the Standing Orders of the House and the House will not sit on November 11.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, first I want to comment on the possibility of extending the House recess to accommodate Remembrance Day. I hope the fact that this discussion is taking place on the floor does not harden the position of the government House leader. Although there may be a number of Legions and other veterans' associations who hold their Remembrance Day services on the Sunday, there are still many who hold these services on Remembrance Day.

An hon. Member: The majority do.

An hon. Member: About 90 per cent.

Mr. Deans: An hon. member to my right tells me it is 90 per cent. I cannot quarrel with that, but I am prepared to admit that it is many.

Rather than get into a fixed position from which we cannot move, perhaps the government House leader would agree to take the matter under advisement for the moment and we could have further discussion to determine whether there may be some way to accommodate those members who must travel a considerable distance as well as the government's desire to proceed with House business in an orderly way.

I would also like to know the government House leader's position on bringing forward the amendment to the Canadian Human Rights Act which was promised in the throne speech. This amendment hopefully would end discrimination against the handicapped. This is a matter of considerable importance, especially during this International Year of the Disabled. We are getting close to the end of the year and I had hoped to see that amendment come forward. Although there is a great deal of business on the Order Paper, I do not think we should allow those things to interfere with a commitment made by the government in the Speech from the Throne.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, on those two matters—the Human Rights Act amendment and the decision on the Remembrance Day recess—I ask that the House leader defer a decision pending further discussion privately.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, regarding the last part of what the hon. member has just said, I will consider his suggestion and see what can be done. Regarding the first few words said by my hon. colleague, the flexibility and diplomacy he has demonstrated were doubtless inherited from his illustrious predecessor, and I am quite willing to postpone making a definite decision at this time to consider his request regarding Remembrance Day. I am told that although it is the custom in Quebec to celebrate this occasion on the preceding Sunday, the situation may be different in other parts of the country, and I think the members on the opposite side were ill-advised to take offence because I mentioned the practice followed in Quebec. Now I myself have not commented on the practice followed in other parts of the country. I am prepared to look into this.

Perhaps this debate is purely academic—the budget may be brought down on November 3. There is still a possibility that if the budget is not brought down on November 3 but on the 10th, we shall have to deal with the matter. I intend to look into this and see whether the House could extend its sitting hours at other times, or whether we should apply the Standing Orders, but I do not intend to make any firm commitment at this time that I shall accede to the wishes expressed by my colleague and by the member for Yukon and discuss the matter. I am quite willing, but I do not want to give the impression that the budget will not be brought down on November 10.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I also want to ask the government House leader about the legislative intentions of the government with respect to the Human Rights Act amendment. I have, in fact, spoken with the Minister of Justice and indicated to him my party's concern about this legislation and the amendment to the Canadian Human Rights Act promised in the Speech from the Throne.

I attempted to be recognized today to ask the Minister of Justice when this legislation would be forthcoming. I was unable to get recognition—I make no comment on that—but I think the government House leader, in planning House business, can rest assured that we in this party are interested in the expeditious passage of that amendment which would put disabled persons in Canada under the Canadian Human Rights Act under the jurisdiction of the Human Rights Commission.

The government House leader should take seriously, in this International Year of the Disabled, the recommendations of the all-party committee of this House to bring forward this amendment, to deal not only with discrimination practised against the physically handicapped with respect to goods, services, facilities and accommodation, but to expand that amendment to include those who are mentally handicapped. I am sure the hon. gentleman's parliamentary secretary could clearly advise him on the content of the report.

We in this party, as I am sure all members of this House, have an interest in the expeditious passage of these amendments, especially during this Year of the Disabled. I hope the House leader will make serious attempts to bring this matter forward at an early date.

Mr. Kempling: Madam Speaker, a very short intervention on the matter of November 11. The minister should be aware that every country which was involved on the allied side in World War II observes November 11 as a national holiday. He should be aware of that, and to suggest that we in this Parliament will not recognize it as a national holiday is a departure. Every year since I have been here—this is my tenth year—we have recognized Remembrance Day on November 11, and I urge the minister to reconsider that fact when he is reconsidering the intervention of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain.

• (1520)

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I would not like the people of this country to be misled by the hon. gentleman, who obviously was not in the House or, if he was in the House, was sleeping as usual.

Mr. Siddon: That is an insult.

Mr. Pinard: What I said was that on November 11 the House in any case will celebrate that very important day and that the House of Commons will not sit, as provided for by the Standing Orders. That is exactly what I said, and I deplore the fact that the hon. gentleman did not understand or did not want to understand what I said very clearly, which was that in any case on November 11 the House of Commons will not sit.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, dealing with House business, I wish to make a plea to the government House leader with respect to changing the budget date. There are other days in the month of November. Surely to goodness the minister can find some other date. I want to point out to the government House leader that services will be held at the cenotaphs of cities all across Canada on Wednesday, November 11 and that services are held by the Army and Navy and Legions on November 11. Members of Parliament are expected to be there. They are invited to be there. This is an insult and a slap in the face to every veteran and veterans' organization across Canada.

It is ironic that we just received a report from the Senate respecting problems within the Department of Veterans Affairs. The report is entitled "They Served, We Care". Perhaps the Liberals should change that to "They Served, the Liberals Don't Care".

Will the minister reconsider that date?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I think my hon. colleague must have been away too. He totally misunderstands the situation. He says it is an insult and a slap in the face, and he is all red. I wonder why he is so upset.

I want to be very clear, and I will speak his own language. What I said was that I was willing, even if the House of Commons in any case does not sit on November 11, to consider the possibility of accepting the request made by his colleagues and that we would look into additional hours for sitting on other days, if necessary, but that I was not in a position at this time to give a clear commitment on the part of the government.

Furthermore, I said that maybe this discussion is purely academic since the budget might well be on November 3. We do not know yet, it is too early.

I have shown some flexibility. I have shown some willingness to negotiate and discuss this situation. I merely stated what happens in Quebec because in Quebec there is a practice that we celebrate this on the previous Sunday. I recognize that that is not the case in my hon. colleague's province, but by saying what I said I did not slap anyone in the face, and that was not an insult to anyone. I was just talking about the facts.

All I am saying is that I want to be flexible and look into the situation. I do not think the hon. gentleman should be upset because of this. On the contrary, he should be much more courteous and accept that we on this side are willing to take into consideration all reasonable suggestions which are made by hon. members on the other side of the House.

Mr. Kempling: You get courtesy if you give courtesy.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to address a question to the government House leader. Perhaps it is time to ask a question about the charitable organizations bill which was tabled by the government early in this Parliament. I would like to know the mind of the government with respect to that legislation and what kind of plan the government has to bring that bill forward for discussion and debate.

Mr.Pinard: Madam Speaker, all the bills on the Order Paper are important to the government and the country, and I am willing to discuss a good timing for any one of them with the hon. member's House leader.

PIPELINES

CONSTRUCTION OF ALASKA GAS PROJECT

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. Minister for Energy, Mines and Resources on a point of order.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, earlier during the oral question period, I answered a question by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) and indicated that the American government had, since the speech made by the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, brought certain amendments before Congress.

[English]

I would not like to mislead my hon. friend. The speech—

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: Someone already has the floor. Does the hon. member wish to speak on a point of order or ask a question or something? The hon. member said "a question of privilege". I can hear a question of privilege later.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, a question of privilege is normally heard at once. It is normally heard as soon as it arises because of the abuse of the rules of the House going on on the other side. I rise on a question of privilege affecting the rights of all hon. members. When we on this side of the House have attempted to do what the minister is doing now, we have always been sat down, and I do not think this sort of conduct should be permitted by the Chair, nor should it be engaged in by ministers. If there are any explanations to be made with respect to the minister's answers today, they can be made on statements on motions or at whatever appropriate time tomorrow.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: I am listening to a number of points or order. I do not know ahead of time what they will be about, so I allow people to express their points of order. Anyone can raise a point of order at this time—

Mr. Nielsen: We know what they are about.

Madam Speaker: —just as anyone might raise a question of privilege arising from the deliberations. I think what the hon. member for Yukon was doing was raising a point of order on the point of order raised by the minister.

Mr. Nielsen: It was a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: Yes, but I think it was, rather, a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: No, it was not.

Madam Speaker: I have listened to the hon. member, who protests the fact that the minister is raising a point of order. However, the minister is allowed to raise a point of order, and I will recognize him.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I cannot understand why the hon. member for Yukon should make such a fuss because I have not even had time to state what my point of order is.

Mr. Nielsen: You are correcting an answer.

Mr. Rossi: Listen and learn, Nielsen.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I indicated in my answer that it was important to treat each other with fairness and honesty. I am afraid that in my answer I indeed may not have spelled out all the facts. I indicated that the Hon. Mr. Sharp had made a speech after the—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I thought the minister wanted to correct a figure or something he said in the course of question period. I might have allowed that, but I believe the minister is now trying to extend the answer which he gave during the question period. That is quite legitimate, but he cannot do it at this time. He might do it when he is asked another question on another occasion.

Mr. Nielsen: Stop abusing the rules.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order relating to House business. I have two questions. First, I will ask the President of the Privy Council, the government House leader, to indicate to the House the status at this time of a very important bill, Bill C-53, which would redefine rape as a violent assault rather than a crime of passion. This is a bill for which Canadian women have been waiting a long time. We on this side of the House have indicated our desire to see the bill go to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs quickly where a number of important amendments could be made. I cannot imagine that the Conservative party would wish to hold up such an important bill.

Mr. Paproski: Shame!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): We can hear from the justice critic of the Conservative party as to whether the members of his party are willing to co-operate on this bill. We can hear from him as soon as I sit down, but in the meantime I will ask the government House leader whether he is prepared to bring the bill forward at an early date in order to ensure that it gets to committee. I am sure the Conservative party will want to co-operate in seeing that the bill goes forward very quickly that day.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No question.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): My second point relates to the question of Remembrance Day. I for one appreciate the flexibility which has been shown by the government House leader in response to interventions made on this side of the House. I am a British Columbia member, and the government House leader should be aware of the fact that I must be back in British Columbia at eleven o'clock on Wednesday morning. In order to do that I have to go back the previous day. I am sure that is the case with a number of British Columbia members. I trust that the minister will take that into careful consideration when deciding how to approach the way in which we honour the veterans of past wars.

As to the matter of Bill C-53, a matter which, as I say, is of great importance to Canadian women, when can we expect that bill to be called?

• (1530)

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if we could reach an agreement with the two opposition House leaders, we could dispose of this by next Friday, provided there is one spokesman for each party and the bill is referred to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, which will require the co-operation of both opposition parties. This is one of the bills appearing on a list of bills being considered by the House leaders, bills which are assumed to be non-controversial and which could be disposed of on a Friday afternoon. So I am quite willing, as I have done before, to include the bill in the list of measures that could be disposed of on a Friday afternoon within the next few weeks.

[English]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I welcome the show of flexibility in the House leader. I hope that in the exercise of that flexibility he will recall that it was the Prime Minister who was first to suggest that budget day might be on the tenth and he should bear in mind at the same time that it demonstrated both a contempt for this House and a contempt for the veterans of this country by the Prime Minister who, of course, refused to serve in Canada's forces during the war.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Second, he should try to bear in mind that there is no need for the Minister of Finance to be at the meeting of first ministers. The first ministers can meet at the same time as the budget is being read in this House.

The third point has already been mentioned by the hon. member for Burnaby—

An hon. Member: That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): No, it is not a question of privilege, it is a point of order. Third, I hope that in the exercise of his flexibility he will take into account the flight schedules between here and the west coast. Many of us cannot leave on the morning of the eleventh and reach our homes in time for the ceremonies on the eleventh. Many of us cannot do so if we leave after seven o'clock the night before. It would be a sign of the same respect we have for the budget of this country and for this government if this side stayed away entirely from the budget speech, which we will read in the paper anyway.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I remind the hon. member that all of the excellent legislation that was passed during the last months and years for the benefit of veterans and their widows was strongly recommended and supported by the Prime Minister of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: In so far as the hon. member's concerns about flight schedules are concerned, in taking into consideration the request made to me today, I will be sure to look at all schedules to British Columbia. I remind him that most of my colleagues from the province of Quebec must drive to their constituencies much of the time. It takes them longer to get to their constituencies than it does for the hon. member to get to British Columbia.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I never cease to be amazed at what can cause political conflict. I hope that the House leader for the government will, as he said earlier, consider the matter and let us know what he decides. I hope he decides to do something about accommodating the needs of members. I do not want to conduct House business on the floor of the House, but with regard to Bill C-53 we would be quite happy to have one speaker on a Friday.

[Translation]

Mr. Laniel: Madam Speaker, I would just like to say a few words as the member for Beauharnois-Salaberry and as a veteran. First of all, I want to point out that the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine does not have to tell me anything about veterans, because I am just as motivated as he is. The comments he made just now were an insult to me and to all French Canadians, to all Quebecers and to all members on this side of the House. And the same goes for the hon. member for Edmonton— I think this remark should be withdrawn as far as I am concerned—

[English]

I care for veterans just as much as he does.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, if we ignore the initial aggressiveness of the comments made by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, toward the end I think he realized that we have open minds on this side of the House. I myself had a few words with my hon. minister just now and I tried to explain to him that although in Quebec the ceremony is on Sunday, elsewhere in Canada the custom is to celebrate this occasion on the same day, November 11. I have on occasion been obliged to stay here in Ottawa because November 11 was on a Thursday and there was no Standing Order authorizing members to take the next day off if the holiday happened to be on Tuesday or Thursday.

In any case, Madam Speaker, I hope the unpleasant aggressiveness displayed by the Progressive Conservative Party, but not by the New Democratic Party, will be allowed to disappear. We shall wait for the dialogue announced by the President of the Privy Council and I trust a solution will be found.

[English]

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, with regard to Bill C-53, I respect the comment by the hon. member for Burnaby, but he has already spoken. Many of us have received representations from our constituents. It is not fair ball suddenly to close off the debate, particularly when it is suggested by somebody who has already spoken. I agree we have to move ahead quickly, but let us not deny members the right to voice the views of those who sent us here.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Thank you, Madam Speaker, for raising your voice so that I could hear you. I should mention here that the third report will likely be submitted by the end of the year, at least I hope so.

HERD MAINTENANCE PROGRAM

Question No. 2,105—Mr. McKnight:

1. What was the number of applications (a) received (b) approved from the provinces of (i) Alberta (ii) Saskatchewan (iii) Manitoba under the herd maintenance program and, for each province, what was the total dollar amount approved?

2. What was the average period of time in terms of days between the time applications were received from each western province and the time when application approval and funding was sent out to each province?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows:

1.

	(a) Applications Received	(b) Applications Approved	(c) Total Amount Approved
(i) Alberta	2,537	530	$ 972,184
(ii) Saskatchewan	18,156	11,098	17,800,674
(iii) Manitoba	9,180	7,084	12,535,433

2. Applications from all provinces were processed centrally in Regina. Average time between receipt of application forms and mailing of assistance cheques was 44 days.

NATIONAL MUSEUMS OF CANADA

Question No. 2,402—Mr. Herbert:

In each of the past five years, what amount was transferred to the National Museums of Canada and, by province, what amount was granted to regional museums by the National Museums?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows:

1. Funds voted by Parliament to the National Museums of Canada in each of the past five years:

1976-77	1977-78	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81
		(in millions of dollars)
42.5	45.7	55.2	50.1	53.3

2. Amounts granted to regional museums by the National Museums of Canada:

	1976-77	1977-78	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	Total
B.C.	1,584,714	350,322	690,530	726,331	781,599	4,133,496

Nfld.	228,293	276,227	163,300	159,900	204,300	1,032,020
Total	5,274,935	2,860,783	4,429,053	3,881,551	4,375,851	20,822,173

The above figures are based upon the consideration of associate museums, those major museums and galleries in Canada which act in association with the National Museums of Canada to realize the goals of the 1972 national museums policy, as regional museums.

TELEVISION VIEWING TIME

Question No. 2,447—Mr. Flis:

What percentage of total television viewing time did children under 16 years of age spend watching foreign programs during each year 1975 to 1980 and what was the percentage for (a) English-speaking (b) French-speaking children?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission as follows:

The percentage of viewing time devoted to Canadian and foreign programs by children Aged 2 to 17*

Total Day (6 a.m. – 2 a.m.)

Program Origin	Children 2 – 17

FULL-TIME UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

Question No. 2,654—Mr. Herbert:

Does the government record full-time university student enrolment by province and by province of permanent residence and, if so, was there a significant change in the past five years in the percentage of out-of-province students?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada records annually full-time university enrolment by province and by province of residence. For the last five years for which data are available (1975-76 to 1979-80) there has been virtually no change in the proportion of out-of-province students in Canadian universities. In each of the five years, the proportion has been approximately 20 per cent. There are some differences, however, by level of study. While the proportion of undergraduate students from out-of-province remained stable (17 per cent) the proportion of graduate students from out-of-province declined from 45 per cent in 1975-76 to 38 per cent in 1979-80. For variations by province, see table below.

Percentage of out-of-province university students by province, 1975-76 and 1979-80

UNIVERSITY STUDENT FEES

Question No. 2,655—Mr. Herbert:

1. Does the government record the level of student fees at universities?

2. Does the Canada student loans program provide assistance to university students adversely affected by preferences in provincial funding programs?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): 1. Statistics Canada publishes an annual booklet entitled "Tuition and Living Accommodation Costs at Canadian Universities" (Catalogue No. 81-219) which sets out the level of student fees at universities.

2. The maximum loan limits under the Canada Student Loans Act apply to all Canadian students who can establish a need for financial assistance. While the level of provincial funding, and hence the amount of Canada student loan element in the aid package, varies, all provinces, with the exception of Québec which has opted out of the program since its inception, provide Canada student loan aid to the maximum permitted by the act where the need for such aid is established.

PURCHASE OF FEED PELLETS

Question No. 2,688—Mr. Stewart:

Did the Department of Regional Economic Expansion purchase feed pellets valued at $16,000 from Federated Co-operative Ltd., Brandon and, if so, for what purpose?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): A contract in the amount of $16,000, was awarded by the Department of Supply and Services, on behalf of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, to Federated Co-operative Ltd., Brandon, Manitoba for the supply of "bull feed" pellets to be used to feed cattle at the St. Lazare Bull Station, seven miles north of McAuley, Manitoba.

BABCOCK MOTOR BODIES LTD.

Question No. 2,705—Mr. McKinnon:

Was a contract let to Babcock Motor Bodies Limited, Toronto for $812,851, for "vehicular furniture and accessories" and, if so, what is the furniture and what are the accessories?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes, a contract was awarded by the Department of Supply and Services, on behalf of the Department of National Defence, to Babcock Motor Bodies Limited, Toronto, Ontario, for $812,-851, for the fitting of "vehicular furniture and accessories" which comprise of the following:

(a) Pintle hooks (accessories)

(b) Metal superstructures and tarpaulins (accessories)

(c) Aluminum caps (accessories)

(d) Removable fold-down bench seats (furniture)

(e) Winches (accessories)

(f) Undercoating (accessories)

A total of 353 DND vehicles are being fitted in various configurations with the above items.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Mr. McKinnon: As you know, Madam Speaker, I seldom rise at this time to question the abilities of the parliamentary secretary. However, I have asked a couple of questions on forces' aircraft being used for the transporting of cabinet ministers and others. One has been on the Order Paper since January 27 and the other since May 21. The question of January 27 asks the cost of the Prime Minister's trip when he got lost in Austria, and the second question is regarding the number of times the Falcon jets have been used.

I do not know what the policy of this government is about the costing of aircraft trips, but on the other question, I was surprised to see the answer to a question by the hon. member for Leeds which was tabled in this House on October 16. The answer to question No, 1,996 indicated:

● (1540)

The list of executive aircraft used by cabinet ministers, as approved by the Minister of National Defence, in accordance with the guidelines outlined in question No. 169, will be available on a monthly basis effective October, 1981 (on request).

It is now October 1981. My requests are in question No. 2,035 on January 27, and question No. 2,519 on May 21. When will I receive my answers?

Mr. Smith: I will take note of that representation and look into the matter.

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURES RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, October 21, consideration of Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and Motions Nos. 7, 8 and 9 (Mr. Andre for Mr. Wilson), Motions Nos. 10, 11 and 12 (Mr. Skelly), Motions Nos. 13 and 15 (Mr. Andre for Mr. Wilson), and Motions Nos. 16 and 41 (Mr. Skelly).

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, at this time, I should like to speak to the amendments before the House this afternoon. It is my intention to participate in the debate on the amendments, but since this is the first time I am speaking on the bill, I should like to give you a few impressions that I have gained from serving on the committee which led to the report stage in the House.

All hon. members on both sides of the House agree this is a very important bill. I happen to think some aspects of the bill are more important than the Constitution, Mr. Speaker. At this particular time we are debating this bill with indecent haste because, in the government's view, they have other priorities. We have to dispose of these mundane things in order that we may deal with the Constitution and with matters relating to the economy. People throughout the country are beginning to be very suspicious about the constitutional matters. With the Constitution being thrown in every time we are discussing something of importance, the people are beginning to get the feeling that they are engulfed in a smokescreen to disguise the real intentions of the government and some real, important issues.

Bill C-48, Mr. Speaker, will establish a pattern of government behaviour which will have far-reaching consequences and effects. I am not overly concerned or frightened when foreign countries make comments on what we do here, but it concerns me when our colleagues or counterparts in the United States, senators and congressmen, go to visit the President and demand that certain laws in the United States be enacted, laws which would have the effect of bringing reciprocal action to the kind of measures proposed in Bill C-48. In the history of western countries—at least not within the time we have participated in the association of western economies through OECD—there has never been a precedent where a government would go wantonly and deliberately and confiscate the assets of private corporations—and I am using the word "confiscate" advisedly—regardless whether these assets belong to companies of a domestic or Canadian origin or are of a foreign nature. That kind of approach to economic nationalism is one we cannot expect our trading partners and associates in the economic world, at least in the western economic world, to live with or put up with.

The United States has an act known as the 1948 Minerals Act. Under that act, upon the evidence that a foreign country is acting against United States companies operating in that foreign country, the administration is compelled to initiate immediate reciprocal action. We can only speculate what that reciprocal action might be eventually. I hope it is no secret to any hon. member of the House or to anyone listening outside that there are all kinds of Canadian companies operating in the United States and in other economic theatres throughout the world. Indeed, our national oil company operates in the North Sea. It is planning to go to Senegal. It is planning to go to the South China Sea. It is planning not only to be a window to the energy sector in Canada, but it is planning to be a window and a partner among multinational companies operating throughout the world. I would assume that if Petro-Canada had any intention to operate in the United States, we would expect some of their assets, which are the assets of Canadian taxpayers, might be confiscated there. Bill C-48 basically does this.

I served on the committee, Mr. Speaker, and at no time in my nine years of experience in the House have I been presented with a bill in committee that was so shoddily drafted in the first go around. Bill C-48 has 85 clauses in it. The government tabled 115 amendments to the 85 clauses in the bill.

An hon. Member: Flexibility.

Mr. Oberle: Flexibility, my hon. friend says. The government took no care at all. They were flying by the seat of their pants. They were testing the waters. They were flying some kites. Both opposition parties made a number of amendments.

We had every reason to believe and expect that the government would bring in measures to regulate the oil and gas industry. For the last ten years, the industry has been very anxious to learn what the measures would be. We have been questioning the government as to when they would bring in measures which would bring about stability to and confidence in the energy sector, confidence that was required by the oil companies. Serious decisions had to be made in order to maintain some kind of energy self-sufficiency in our country. After 1973, that had been lost and measures had to be taken to regain energy self-sufficiency. We are told by the government it will cost between $300 billion and $500 billion today to regain energy self-sufficiency in our country. Several multinational oil companies have to know what the government's intentions are with respect to land use policies in the north and with respect to regulations in the north that would affect their decisions.

The oil companies now know, if they are of foreign origin, that they are no longer operating in Canada under the same rules. If they are of foreign origin, irrespective of their contribution or the work they have done in our country before, irrespective of the pioneering spirit exhibited by the multinational oil companies, who came mostly from the United States, in developing our energy sector in the first place, they are now no longer wanted; and if they want to operate in Canada, they have to have at least 50 per cent Canadian ownership before the minister will consider giving them a licence to operate on federal lands.

There are some companies of a multinational nature operating in our country who are solely-owned subsidiaries of other companies based in the United States. They appeared before the committee. We questioned them about their intention to rebuild their corporate structure to accommodate the government's new nationalization policy. Some of them told us that they would have serious difficulty meeting deadlines or with their shareholders in light of some of the minister's comments before the committee. In fact one member of the New Democratic Party was known as "the hon. member for Norway", because he always talked about Norway. But Norway never confiscated any private assets. It did certain things which the minister and "the hon. member for Norway" liked. Incidentally "the hon. member for Norway" comes from British Columbia. He said that Norway insisted upon 85 per cent government ownership in its oil industry. The minister was asked when he would realize this and attune his policies to such a trend. The minister answered, "This is just the beginning; give us time".

If I were a member of the oil industry, this would indicate to me that he may confiscate 50 per cent of my assets; but if I continue developing new wells, it may be more later on. This is not the kind of climate in which I would make any investment if I were a foreign or domestic oil company because I would fear, particularly now it has been clearly established that Canadian ownership means government ownership, that as soon as the multinational companies were chased out of the country I would probably be the next target of the government.

This bill is not just another piece of legislation. It is a doctrinaire expression of the government's definition of economic nationalism. I do not understand why our friends in the NDP are so upset with the government. As a matter of fact, Bill C-48 and the general energy policy of the government are precisely what the NDP requested—nationalize the oil sector. If they do not have the courage to do what socialists and communists like to do, namely, to assume government ownership of the tools of production, the next best thing is for the government to obtain ownership and control of the fuel which drives the machines and the tools of production.

The NDP should be quite happy about what the government is doing. One member of that party rose during question period today and said that the bad Americans were considering reciprocal action. Imagine what it would do to the Bronfmans, the great multinational whisky dynasty, if they were told that they would require a 50 per cent partnership in their U.S. operations. That might not be the end of it. The Americans might decide not to be compassionate and co-operative with us in the future when it comes to marketing our lumber and wood chips. The hon. member rightly expressed some concern because this has been suggested to the President by some lumber manufacturers in the western states. What would happen if the Americans decided to impose a 10 per cent white wood tax on spruce lumber? This is what the Japanese are doing in order to protect their sawmill industry. The effect in Canada would be that our industry, which produces $24 billion in export earnings every year, would be bankrupt, and the one million Canadians who are directly or indirectly associated with the lumber industry would probably end up eating bark off the trees. This is what would happen if the Americans chose the wood converting industries as a target for reciprocal action for what Canada is doing in the energy sector. Hon. members opposite may laugh, but when one sleeps next to an elephant one does not throw sand in its eyes every morning because, if it rolls over some night, one might find it very uncomfortable.

This is the reality of the matter. Also we are selling the Americans 60 per cent of our total lumber and wood fibre production, and 75 per cent of our industrial manufacturing capacity is traded with other countries. We cannot forever dump on them. We must realize that we live in an economic community, that we must trade with other countries in order to keep working, to pay wages and to make demands on the industrial sector as the unions normally do respecting higher wages and better working conditions. This is a legitimate pursuit, but it must be backed up by an industrial base. Our industrial base rests upon our ability and our aggressive approach to international trade.

I do not know the number of submissions which were made before the committee, but every intervenor, whether it was a union, a corporation, an oil company, an independent petroleum association or anyone who felt affected in any way by this legislation, complained about Clause 10 of the bill, which gives incredible discretionary powers to the minister. If it is our intention to ensure that the legitimate Canadian interests are protected with respect to the environment and their aspirations in the area of developing new sources of energy, the minister must have some power and some discretion.

All we are saying in our amendment is that there should be some checks and balances and some accountability. We are not afraid of the minister. We take him on every once in a while and embarrass him in the House. We are more afraid of his bureaucrats and officials because they make decisions such as the recent one to phase out 25 per cent of the operations of VIA Rail. I suppose the officials and the bureaucrats received some direction. They were told to slice $100 million from their budget. The minister said, "I do not care how you do it; just tell me how and give me some arguments which will protect my hide when I am questioned in the House of Commons." They gave him some arguments which have not helped to save his hide. These are the types of things which can happen if a minister has excessive discretionary power.

We would like some accountability. We would like a built-in appeal procedure. Most intervenors would have liked to control the powers of the minister in other ways, but the minimum requirement would be that the government accepts some form of appeal procedure. For example, a company which is no longer in the favour of the minister or his bureaucrats would have some other forum in which to express its legitimate concerns, in which it would be listened to, and if the concerns are correct, they could be redressed.

We will have a lot to say. Of course we served notice on the government. I personally walked out of the committee, as did some of my friends in the NDP, on the day when we were about half way through consideration of the bill and the government laid its 115 amendments on the table. The government had accepted all those amendments which needed to be accepted by the time we were half way through the bill. It became painfully obvious that the government was in no way inclined to accept any opposition amendments. I asked some of my colleagues on the other side whether it was the intention of government members on the committee to give any consideration to any opposition amendments and, if not, whether we could be informed so that we would not have to sit any longer through the rather childish and juvenile exercise of simply saying yes or no to whatever the government told us. Without any precedents of which I am aware, the parliamentary secretary admitted that he had orders from the minister not to accept any amendments from the opposition or even consider them, but simply to deal with the amendments the government had proposed.

Of course, this points out how seriously the parliamentary and committee processes are in jeopardy. That is why I walked out of the committee and why my NDP colleagues walked out with me. The government is stuck with this bill in the House. The amendments will be debated as we go along, but if the government has any illusion about getting the bill through the House before the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) decides to sit down with the provincial premiers to discuss the Constitution, then it should think again.

• (1600)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I rise to participate in the debate on Bill C-48. Certainly I must agree with my colleague the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), who indicated on the last day we debated this motion that this is the most important economic legislation to be presented to this House in this session.

Before I develop the concerns the New Democratic Party has about this bill, I should like to respond to the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) who expressed alarm at the call for retaliatory action against the national energy policy voiced by some in the United States. I feel very strongly that the concerns expressed by the congressmen and state representatives in the United States about our national energy policy are misplaced. The reason that they are now questioning a number of the economic "flows" between Canada and the United States is because of the effects of their own monetary policies and the Reaganomics program.

Following closely on the heels of "Thatchereconomics", "Reaganomics" have attempted to jack up interest rates to levels which will curtail production in the United States as was the case in Britain. Unfortunately, it will appear that our own Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is following the same disastrous course. We in this party wonder how long it will take before they all realize the error of their ways.

It has become clear that things in Great Britain will get worse before they get better and it appears that the same thing will take place in the United States. We hope that the budget which is to come down on or about November 10 will reflect a new thinking, will depict a willingness on the part of this government to admit error and that it will introduce policies to stimulate our economy instead of driving it to its knees.

In the past few days I had the opportunity to participate as an observer in the Eighth International Symposium on Small Business which was hosted by the federal government. It was a first-class symposium, and I must toss an accolade to the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Lapointe) for the positive way in which it was organized. It resulted in some of the most progressive dialogue on small business that I have heard in a long time.

I listened with great interest to the Japanese and Korean delegations outline in considerable detail the relationships between big business and small and medium business in their countries. When we compare their achievements with our track record, it is obvious that we cannot begin to match what they are doing. Korea and Japan recognize that small business plays a very critical role in the economy.

When we look at the record of many northern and western European countries we see that for decades their policies have shown an understanding and appreciation of the role of small business in the regional, local and national economies. That is not the case in Canada. We now have, however, an opportunity to change this through Bill C-48. We have an opportunity to introduce a policy that would present a clear signal to the small business community of Canada that we appreciate the role it plays; that we are prepared to put legislation in place to encourage the development of the small business sector, to provide the initiative that it seeks from senior levels of government and to give a clear signal that it should forge ahead with the megaprojects that are associated with Bill C-48.

We are told that in the next decade energy investment is likely to exceed $210 billion. The Royal Bank of Canada reports that within the next 20 years in Canada expenditures of over $1 trillion will occur in the energy sector. It is interesting to note that the amount to be spent on equipment will total $67 billion, three times the amount spent over the last 20 years. This projection is for the next decade.

There is an excellent opportunity now for the federal government to bring in legislation through simple amendments to Bill C-48 that would assist small business in many ways. I must admit to feeling a great deal of disappointment as I read through the various clauses of Bill C-48 seeking a statement that would indicate a willingness on the part of the federal government to source goods and services from Canadian suppliers. After searching with a fine toothed comb, the best statement I could find was to the effect that an exploration agreement will be required which will require the holder, prior to commencing any work program, to submit a plan satisfactory to the minister for the employment of Canadians and the use of Canadian goods and services in carrying out that work program.

We must ask what the reference to a plan for Canadian content satisfactory to the minister means. Is that the strongest statement we can make to point out clearly to the small business community in Canada that we want to assist it, particularly in these difficult economic times? What is meant by Canadian content? The most common definition, which is that used by the oil industry in Canada, is that Canadian content means that the source of supply is located in Canada—simply "located" in Canada. That allows the product to be classified as Canadian when purchased in Canada through a Canadian supplier, even though the product is manufactured in another country. In other words, Canadian content is really another term for the Canadian market.

The EEC definition of Canadian content is that the last point of manufacture is a domestic Canadian operation. But that is also inappropriate.

The kind of definition that I prefer would provide that Canadian content is present when you deduct the cost of imported components from the total manufactured cost of goods produced in Canada and establish a minimum level of Canadian content in the end product. This would enable purchases of foreign content to be isolated and would also isolate the level of foreign components in Canadian products. In other words, it would then enable us to conduct research to identify clusters of imports, to develop technology through agreements with oil companies and to acquire the Canadian research and development necessary to displace those imports.

The oil sands projects, the frontier and offshore oil and renewable energy technologies offer opportunities for Canadians to become world leaders. As we develop the Canada lands over the next two decades, there will be an excellent opportunity for Canadian entrepreneurs to develop technologies, to carry out research and development through production and to become world leaders in this whole new energy technology. We ought to be maximizing Canadian participation from the very start in these new markets. We ought to be maximizing Canadian participation in every single project possible.

Over the next decade, 63 per cent of energy investment will be in energy areas for which Canadian industry has evolved a degree of expertise in supplying principally utilities in the conventional oil and gas industry, including land-based field explorations, development, refining and pipeline construction. Future manufacturing opportunities will consist of expanding production capacity to meet rapidly expanding equipment requirements and in isolating those currently imported that could be currently manufactured in Canada.

Why do we not build into Bill C-48 a serious "buy Canada" procurement policy? While we see the buy America program that exists in the United States and the requirements that Norway, the United Kingdom and many developing countries have made, we nevertheless maintain our tradition of being exporters of raw materials and importers of finished goods. Here is an opportunity to build into legislation a buy Canada program that means something. As I indicated earlier, that would be a clear signal to Canadian entrepreneurs that as members of the House of Commons we are interested in assisting and encouraging them in recognizing the role they play in our economy.

Let us look at a couple of areas of expansion of exploration in the Canada lands to see to what extent the materials could be sourced in Canada. If we were simply looking at land-based operations, drilling rigs and the like, I think it would be fair to say that 70 to 80 per cent could be sourced within Canada. Of course, when one looks at the importation of foreign rigs in total in terms of fabrication and associated equipment, it is certainly not doing very much for Canadian manufacturers and suppliers. I suspect that for the new fabrication industry in the province of Alberta, a level of 80 or 85 per cent is not unreasonable, given the new developments over the last two or three years. When it comes to the refining industry, equipment and materials for new construction normally account for 40 to 45 per cent of total expenditures, the rest being for labour and engineering services.

Canadian capacity to supply this expertise and equipment is estimated to be at least 90 per cent. This figure comes directly from the corporate planning department of Imperial Oil Limited. Presently, however, less than 30 per cent of this equipment is manufactured within a Canadian context. It seems to me that not only Canadian manufacturers of refining equipment but Canadian engineering firms could take a closer look at the role they could play on these megaprojects. Canadian engineering firms have not played a significant role, and only a few of Canada's largest engineering firms are capable of providing the over-all management for these projects. Perhaps Canadian engineering consortiums should be encouraged by the government to meet the Canadian content in design specifications.

Pipeline construction is another area where Canada is obviously developing technology in which other countries around the world are becoming more and more interested. We have a 30-year history linking regions over hundreds and thousands of miles in some instances. Investment over the next ten years for pipeline work is estimated to be in the neighbourhood of $17.4 billion. While pipeline construction, labour, engineering and management is 90 per cent Canadian content at the moment, 85 per cent of construction equipment is imported into Canada. Large vehicles, such as pipe layers, bulldozers, side boom tractors, are all imported from the United States and overseas.

We are suggesting in our amendment that we build some teeth into this particular bill, teeth that would provide opportunities for Canadian manufacturers and, especially during these difficult times, provide Canadian jobs. Our motion, No. 10, which I will put on the record calls for a work plan to ensure that:

(i) Canadians have a fair and competitive opportunity to participate in the supply of goods and services to oil and gas exploration, development and production activities;

(ii) maximum advantage is taken of opportunities provided by gas and oil exploration and production to establish and expand industries in Canada which can make a long-term contribution to the Canadian industrial base;

(iii) Canadian and local content is maximized so far as practicable with respect to the origin of products, services and their constituent components;

(iv) Canadians be given employment preference is cases where suitably qualified Canadian citizens or landed immigrants are available. Where labour requirements are such that Canadian citizens or landed immigrants are not suitably qualified in sufficient numbers and the labour requirement is ongoing for the length of the agreement, the agreement holder will undertake to provide on-the-job training for Canadian citizens and landed immigrants in order to maximize as far as possible and reasonable, Canadian labour participation."

The significant unemployment figures in Canada today represented by all sectors of our employment base, from the most sophisticated professional areas to the every day labourer, are a crime. Yet so many of our projects which are taking place on Canada lands require imported expertise. This is certainly a slap in the face for our government and its on-the-job training, apprenticeship, research and development programs and the like.

We are suggesting that the holder of an exploration agreement should open all contracts having a value of $50,000 or more to public tender and submit in reasonable numbers invitations to bid to individual Canadian suppliers. Those bids should be evaluated in terms of the extent to which bidders use Canadian goods and services. We suggest also that the minister establish an advisory body, to be made up of representatives from Canadian labour, from major industries and from the oil and gas companies, to provide sourcing for offshore and northern exploration and production activities. This body would then make recommendations to the appropriate minister concerning the pace of exploration and/or production in Canada lands so that investment decisions, development work and facilities construction in Canadian industries participating in this exploration and production be given their due consideration. We are suggesting that the committee should also have the authority to recommend to the minister that approval of exploration agreements and production licences be delayed in order that benefits accrue to the Canadian economy.

To us these do not seem to be revolutionary, outlandish recommendations. They seem to be recommendations that most other countries of the world already follow. Wherever possible and wherever feasible, why not give the benefit of the doubt to a Canadian company? Why not give the benefit of the doubt to a Canadian engineering firm as opposed to a firm from overseas or from south of the border?

We feel very strongly that Bill C-48 is a golden opportunity for Canada that we should take. We feel that it is now time like never before to send out a clear message to the Canadian small business sector through Bill C-48 that we would like to see them obtain the recognition and appreciation that they so dearly deserve.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a few words on the record concerning Bill C-48. I would like to talk in particular about the motions we have placed on the Order Paper to correct this piece of legislation.

● (1620)

I would just like to point out why we are presenting these amendments. In fact, they call upon the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to stand by this government's goal to Canadianize the energy field. The minister has been given a great deal of discretionary power, probably too much. Clause 10 of this bill does nothing to ensure that the minister will act responsibly toward his goal of Canadianization. We are very concerned about his discretionary powers when we see some of the devastating effects the National Energy Program has had on the Canadian oil industry and when we look at some of the statistics on what has happened in Canada as a result of this particular program and this government's involvement in energy.

In one case we have the development by Imperial Oil Limited of the $12 billion Cold Lake heavy oil extraction plant in Alberta remaining suspended. Just imagine what a blow to the economy the stoppage of this $12 billion project is, the result of this government's energy policies.

I would like to comment further on these discretionary powers. Let me quote from a submission made to the committee dealing with Bill C-48. This was a presentation from Chevron Standard Limited which made one of the better presentations regarding ministerial discretion. It points out:

The second feature of the bill which is rather all pervading is the broad discretionary powers granted the minister. Although there are some discretionary provisions which grant the right to appeal, many others do not. Even those granting the right to appeal provide that the initial appeal is to the minister whose decision is the subject of the appeal—he is asked to be the judge in his own case.

That could be disastrous with the present minister of energy, particularly with the record of this government in the energy field. The brief goes on to state:

It would seem to be asking too much to expect the minister to reverse himself on appeal so that such appeal would not appear to be of much value other than as a first step to a further appeal to the Federal Court. There is, of course, no review of the minister's actions by Parliament or by the Cabinet.

That is another danger. The brief goes on to state:

We would like to deal with a few specific areas where we feel the discretionary power could adversely affect Chevron.

Section 44(1) provides that the minister may designate a discovery of oil or gas a "significant discovery" and under Section 45 order the drilling of up to three wells at a time in relation to the "significant discovery". The definition of "significant discovery" is so broad that the minister could in fact declare any discovery no matter how small to be a "significant discovery". The definition makes no reference to economics, so the minister does not have to concern himself with whether or not a discovery is an economic one that would permit him to issue a drilling order. Such discretion could be used to force the drilling of uneconomic wells, or to place a company in a position that its only alternative is to surrender the pertinent Canada lands.

The Chevron brief goes on to state:

Section 49 provides for the establishment of two 15 million dollar environmental funds, one for each of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. These funds are to be funded by holders of Canada lands not necessarily equally nor in any ratio or proportion but only " . . . in the manner determined by the minister . . .". Under this section each minister has the right to determine the manner and amount of payment by each holder of Canada lands into the fund.

In addition, he has the right to determine which environmental studies he deems are necessary and the amount to be spent on each. As the funds are depleted below one-half, the minister assesses Canada lands holders for such amounts as he sees fit to raise the total to the original 15 million dollar limit. With such easy access to funds there will be nothing to inhibit indiscriminate use of these moneys to perform studies that could be highly questionable or which would otherwise be done routinely or of necessity by the government. Surely there should be some legislative restraint on the use of these funds for only legitimate studies required for the conduct of exploration or development of Canada lands. Surely also the holder contributing the funds should have some say in their expenditure.

Section 48(1) allows the minister to order an interest holder whom "in the minister's opinion" has the capability to commence production to "... commence producing oil or gas for use in a Canadian domestic market and deliver the oil or gas so produced at the times and places and in the quantities specified in the order, for sale to persons specified in the order, at prices specified in the order, ..." Once again there is no requirement that such production, delivery or sale would be economic or even technically feasible. Even though an appeal from this decision is allowed, one should not be put in a position of having to resort to the courts on these matters which are in effect the sum of the company's producing operations.

No wonder we are seeing oil companies' rigs leaving this country. In the latest edition of the "Energy" magazine we find an article under the heading "The sad, southward journey of Rig No. 8". This rig No. 8 belongs to the Blocker Drilling Company Canada Ltd. This rig consists of 1,150 tons of components and it will be placed aboard a fleet of 49 trucks for shipment south to Williston, North Dakota. Three cheers for Williston; I am sure it is going to be very pleased with the National Energy Program introduced in this country. North Dakota is not one of the wealthiest states, but we are certainly helping it out to a great degree by driving rig No. 8 down to Williston, North Dakota. The article points out that this is being done strictly because of the National Energy Program. It also states:

—only one of Blocker's 10 rigs will stay in Canada this year. Twelve members of rig No. 8's crew will move to Williston—

Mr. Blocker says he figures he is going to stay down in the United States also. This is why we are objecting to the giving of any more discretionary powers to this minister. He has been an absolute disaster to date with his energy program, and to give him more discretionary powers would be a great danger to Canada, especially in terms of Canada becoming self-sufficient.

The Chevron brief goes on to point out:

Without rules governing the exercise of such wide discretion there are no guidelines nor precedents to rely on and an uncertainty as to the possible exercise of discretion will exist. Day-to-day ad hoc decisions limit the ability of the company to plan its operations.

That is why rigs are leaving. There are further statistics about rigs leaving because of this minister's decision on energy, the National Energy Program and all the rest. In Alberta alone close to 150 drilling rigs have left the province and 30 per cent of the energy service sector is closing up shop with thousands of workers losing their jobs, just to name a few. That is why we are objecting to this minister having additional powers. The Chevron brief goes on to point out:

With two ministers given the power to make decisions on identical matters even greater uncertainty is surely to be the result.

We feel that the granting of such broad powers to a minister is unwise—

That is an understatement, Mr. Speaker. The brief continues as follows:

—but are even more concerned with the minister's power to delegate these powers under Section 5(5) to anyone he sees fit regardless of qualification. If the minister were to be required to make all of the decisions which will be required of him under this bill, there might be less desire to have all of this discretion.

The wide unrestricted discretionary power to be vested in the minister, without statutory right to appeal in at least some instances, opens the door to ministerial arbitrariness and consequent abuse.

● (1630)

Although we do not suggest that the minister or his delegate would act in bad faith, that possibility exists. The discretion might be exercised to give political or familial advantage. It might be exercised frivolously, unfairly, in bad faith, out of spite, or as disciplinary action.

When a minister of the Crown can do that, it puts the industry in a bad position. The submission goes on:

All these bad faith uses are to be feared and we expect that Parliament will be vigilant to limit such possible abuses—

We are doing our job on this side of the House by opposing these abuses.

—especially in this case since Parliament, the general public and the person affected will not know about the abuse because the minister exercises his discretion in private. We suggest that Parliament set out in the bill guidelines on the exercise of the discretion and require the minister to report to Parliament regularly on this matter.

We fully support that. It is almost a dictatorship for a minister to have these kinds of powers.

I want to point out that the minister professes to have Canada's interests in mind. He should put them down on paper. This is exactly what Motion No. 9 would do. It would ensure that Canadians would profit from the spin-off benefits from the energy sector. This is exactly the same schedule used by the government in the Northern Pipeline Act. It is hard to believe the government would be so hypocritical as to say it would protect Canadian interests in one case but not in the other. Maybe this is not so hard to believe when you consider its enormous flip-flops on energy pricing, interest rates and the rest.

I would like to offer a few more examples of our concern about these discretionary powers. It has been estimated that the whole National Energy Program will result in a loss of over $3.5 billion in investment by the industry in 1981. We cannot be working toward energy self-sufficiency with that loss of investment. Each dollar spent in Canada by the industry creates another $1.70 in further economic activity. This means the National Energy Program will reduce Canadian economic output by $9.5 billion. This equals 3 per cent of the gross national product at a time in which it is doubtful that the gross national product will grow by more than 1.5 per cent this year.

Recent studies show that each job created in the industry results in almost three more jobs being created in the economy. It is difficult to measure the jobs lost or not created because of the National Energy Program. It is clear a long-term downturn in industrial activity will have an impact on employment. This is already evident in the western provinces.

The Economic Council of Canada forecast a healthy and vigorous energy industry which would lead to 750,000 jobs in Canada during the 1980s. Loss of energy investment will result in almost 1 per cent higher unemployment and a 1 per cent loss per year in economic growth.

Earlier this year I read into the record a list of eastern Canadian firms which have been affected by the National Energy Program through loss of orders. I will go through the amounts in a moment. I also read the list of Alberta suppliers affected by the National Energy Program. How can the government possibly say this program is good for Canada? Rigs are leaving, money is leaving and there are cutbacks in investment. Dozens of firms are losing contracts. Eastern Canadian industries who are suppliers for most of the oil industry in Alberta are being devastated by cutbacks or cancellation of purchases. According to a survey in Alberta to which 41 companies responded, $1,470,000 in revenue was lost by eastern suppliers in the last quarter of 1980. The forecast cutbacks to eastern suppliers in 1981 will amount to approximately $20 million. In the same survey, loss of revenue to Alberta suppliers amounted to approximately $2,500,000 in 1980. In 1981, revenue losses are expected to be approximately $30 million. This is from a survey of only a small segment of the oil industry in Alberta. This is why we are so concerned about the energy minister having discretionary powers, or any power at all.

It is my hope the government will reconsider these discretionary powers. No minister of the Crown should have such dictatorial powers, especially the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with his record in the energy field. I hope the government will reconsider and support the motions placed on the Order Paper by the Conservative Party with regard to this legislation.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party I would like to wind up the debate on these particular motions which, as I have said before, is perhaps the third part of this bill. It is a lengthy bill, but if you divide it into four parts it is not that complicated. The first part concerns the effect of oil and gas development on the north and native northerners. A number of motions deal with that aspect.

The second part concerns the environment and there are a number of motions directed to that as well. We have dealt with both those areas.

Third, there is industrial strategy—or lack thereof—in the bill, the Canadian content provisions, industrial spin-offs, the area which my hon. friend from Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) thoroughly dealt with this afternoon. We are just winding up that part now.

Then we will turn to the fourth section of this bill which, in my classification, is the whole area of Canadianization, all the grants and the role of Petro-Canada in what I call the phony Canadianization. We will have a number of speakers addressing this part of the legislation to get our message to the country.

I call this bill a sleeper. I expect to hear some hecklers saying that I am putting them to sleep. The minister of energy is here and he is already asleep. The bill is a sleeper in the sense that the issues involved are the real issues in modern Canada today, issues such as native land claims, the environment in the south and the north, east and west coast exploration and development, industrial spin-offs, industrial strategy, relations with the Americans with respect to Canadianization and the role of Petro-Canada, public enterprise and private enterprise and the way we will develop the north, that vast storeland of materials of which Frank Scott, the poet, once said: "It is silently awaiting the struggle". He wrote that almost 30 years ago or perhaps earlier, and now the struggle has begun. That is why this bill is important.

• (1640)

Let me say something about an industrial strategy. In our motion we have chosen to set out what the industrial strategy should be. In other words, we have chosen to set out some specifics about getting some Canadian content. To use the words of the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), we have chosen to put some teeth into it so that Canadian business and in particular, as the hon. member said, small business—for which the hon. member is a real fighter in this House—can get some benefits.

The Conservatives have proposed some amendments. I will not go into the detail of those amendments. By and large they are vague and put in as a response to the thrust of our amendments in the committee.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on!

Mr. Waddell: That is true. We were the ones who presented amendments to the committee. We held the committee up. We filibustered in the committee and we make no apologies for that. We did that to try to obtain benefits for Canadian business. Where were the Conservatives? Nowhere. They even co-operated with the Liberals in order to end the committee debate. Just look at the committee record; it is all there.

The Liberals are showing signs of backing off with respect to the Canadian content provisions. If we look at the original draft of this bill and the amendments brought in by the minister in the committee, we see that the minister was a little afraid of American pressure and, in fact, changed the provisions of the bill and made them more vague and more behind the scenes rather than up front. I will come to the reasons for that in a moment, but I suggest this is a mistake.

Mr. McDermid: He has never been up front in his life.

Mr. Waddell: I want to deal with some of the amendments, first of all Motion No. 7. Motion No. 7 is a motion put down by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), formerly the Conservative energy critic but now the finance critic. We are opposed to that motion, mainly because of its reference to Clause 56 in the bill. Clause 56 refers to court challenges of decisions made by the minister. We think that is unnecessary. We think it is just a delay mechanism. We think it is just inserted in the bill on direct instructions from the big boys in the oil industry, the friends of the Conservative party, who want that in there so that they can stop an active minister of energy from properly implementing this bill.

We do not object to the minister's having discretion. If we look at many of the Conservative amendments—and we will come to them later on—we find that they deal with trying to stop the minister's discretion. They try to tie it up. We do not object to the minister's having discretion. What we object to is that discretion being exercised behind closed doors. We object to discretion being exercised with input only from a few civil servants in Ottawa. Those people might be distinguished civil servants, but they have not had experience in the field or, if they have, it was some time ago. They are not out there as industry, labour and local people are. That is why we have introduced Motion No. 12.

If we look at Motion No. 12, we see that we propose an advisory body so that when information goes to the minister and he exercises his discretion, there would be a committee on Canadian content made up of representatives from labour, industry, the people of the north and the people affected. The committee would participate in making the regulations.

The minister has said to us that we do not need to do this, that we do not need to specify all this Canadian content and all these requirements. He has said that we do not need to put teeth, as it were, into the bill because he can simply act by way of regulation or by way of a closed interdepartmental committee.

An hon. Member: We have seen that before.

Mr. Waddell: The problem is that we cannot trust that system. We are asked to trust. How are we to be sure that there is to be no back-off? This government is backing off from its energy policy bit by bit and piece by piece, and that will become obvious in the next few months.

Some people might want to read the speech of Peter M. Towe, the Canadian ambassador to the United States, given in New York on October 13, 1981. It was referred to by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) in a question the other day. It was a very important speech. I am going to quote from page 7 of that speech. The ambassador said this:

> One especially unfair reaction to the measures we shall be taking to increase Canadian participation is the charge that the Canadian oil and gas industry is being nationalized. "Hijacked" said the Wall Street Journal in one of its more recent flights of editorial fancy. That is certainly not the case. What the Canadian government does intend is to mobilize predominantly private Canadian investment, from existing companies, pension plans, insurance funds and individuals, and to encourage their investment in the oil and gas industry.

I underline "private".

> The government does intend to enlarge the presence of the national public sector in the oil and gas industry. Petro-Canada, for exemple, is playing and will continue to play a crucial catalytic role in high risk frontier development. But the public sector share of the industry will continue to be quite small, and the government is committed to vigorous competition in both the private and public sectors.

Then he went on in his speech at page 11 to say:

> Some critics are concerned that the NEP's Canadian participation provisions might be the first step toward similar policies for other economic sectors. I can assure you that this is not so.

That is the end of the Liberal industrial strategy, the end of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) and the end of the whole progressive thrust of the government, all in response to the Americans and all because of fear. We have to say to our American friends that we are a good neighbour but that if they were in our place they would not permit an industry to be so foreign controlled as is our industry. They have a "buy American" program. We should have a "buy Canadian" program. What else do the Americans expect? That is not unreasonable. We have to say to them, "What kind of nation is it that conducts foreign policy by getting its best neighbour, Canada, mad?" That does not make any sense.

I do not think the government should back down as a result of any American pressure. The government appears to be doing so. That is why we put in Motion No. 12. We put in Motion No. 12 so that it would be set out that there would be a committee of local people, labour people and business people to advise the minister. They could help in the setting up of regulations and so forth.

The government has had some experience in this. Last summer there was a task force on megaprojects chaired, I think, by Shirley Carr of the Canadian Labour Congress and Bob Blair of NOVA Corporation. It can be done. There is precedent for it and it should be put in the bill.

With respect to Motion No. 11, again we propose a very practical amendment. The amendment would simply open up the bidding process for Canadians. I will not go into the details of Motion No. 11, but it states in part the following:

> —open all contracts of a value of $50,000 or greater undertaken in carrying out the exploration agreement to public tender and submit, in reasonable numbers invitations to bid to Canadian suppliers;

Again as the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap said, let us put some teeth into it. But the minister will not accept these motions. It seems to me they are very reasonable and practical suggestions. The minister came into the House the other day and suggested that this bill took a long time in the committee and that there were many problems. I respectfully suggest to the minister that when he proceeds with his next bill, if he were more flexible and prepared to accept some practical amendments—he is not known for his flexibility—he would not have as many problems.

I can conclude my brief remarks by saying that what we want to do is put a "buy Canada" program into legislation, and this is the bill to do it. A previous speaker said that one of the banks placed a figure of $1 trillion on energy megaprojects, energy development on the east coast, on the west coast and in the north. This is very crucial legislation. We should not be asleep while this bill is going through.

• (1650)

Some member was referred to as a hewer of wood. What are we? Hewers of wood and drawers of water. Someone said passers of gas fourth class.

An hon. Member: Spillers of oil.

Mr. Waddell: Whatever we are, we are still a nation that is basically a colony. We were a French colony, became a British colony and now we are an American colony. We are not prepared to do for ourselves what we should have done a long time ago, and that is insist on a real industrial strategy. When talking about creating an industrial strategy, our ambassador to the United States said "I can assure you that this is not so". He said that we are not going to proceed to one. One can see that from Bill C-48.

I offer to the government, other parties and members very concrete, sensible, reasonable amendments which would allow us to have a "buy Canada" program in this bill. It will help small business and other Canadian business get some of the benefits in these great developments that are about to come in our country.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I find little pleasure in rising to participate in debate on a bill of this sort which, rather than spelling out Canadian development and planning for Canadian self-sufficiency, stagnates the opportunities which have presented themselves to Canada at this moment in our history. Stagnation of the future is not pleasant to discuss, not even for an opposition member let alone a government member.

There are some things being very seriously overlooked as this question is considered. We were called the friends of the oil industry by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). One becomes a reasonable friend of those who will develop our oil supplies and bring us Canadian self-sufficiency in our fuel requirements, and in turn make a major contribution to our own self-sufficiency in a fiscal, monetary way as well as in an energy way. This program before us, both the National Energy Program and this bill which invokes some very unacceptable parts of the program, is not a pleasant subject for anybody who is willing to go just a little further than the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has chosen to go.

We are looking at a program which has put a constraint upon employment. It has done this virtually coast to coast in Canada. As an over-all policy, it has been an inhibitor of our development and economic expansion rather than a developer of the same. The evidence is there for anyone who reads the Financial Post, Financial Times, The Globe and Mail or any one of dozens of publications which have been very careful to analyse the structure.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCain: I doubt whether the hon. member has read any or he would not have made the interjection.

We are talking about megaprojects. Megaprojects which might have taken place in the oil industry have been stymied by the greed of the federal government, not by any wish for the development of Canada, because had there been a wish for Canadian development and oil self-sufficiency, there would have been stimulation instead of stagnation. There would have been stimulants instead of sedatives. That has been the characteristic of this structure which the government has put before us.

We have the imposition of ministerial control over the oil industry under this bill to a degree that will be very seriously detrimental to the industry as a whole. Who is going to take the risk of expending moneys of their own or their stockholders in the development of further supplies of oil or gas when they know that if they get a lease from the government, they will not be their own managers? They will instead find that the government, the minister, the bureaucracy, will be the managers, the dictators of the use of the land which they have opportunity to explore. There can be no confidence by any thinking businessman if he enters into a contract under this situation.

I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway that this is an opportunity for the minister to go behind closed doors and reward any friend of the Liberal party with a contract. This is a situation in which huge portions of the industry will never dare utter a word of criticism. Contributors to political campaigns of members on your left, Mr. Speaker, once this is publicized, will be stained in the opinion of the present minister, and there will be very little hope of their getting any concessions in this structure. There will be a friendly allocation of lands as a reward for loyalty and support from those companies and their executives.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway mentioned the figure of a trillion dollars. With respect to hon. members, I think that is beyond the comprehension of anyone in this House. Is there any plan by this government whereby a trillion dollars can be raised for the development of the oil industry within Canada? Does the minister expect the taxpayers of this nation to be prepared to accept a trillion dollars in costs to develop this? Let us take a look at what has happened in some of the other countries mentioned by speakers both on my left and on your right, Mr. Speaker. They suggested that the United Kingdom had gone a different course. Unfortunately, I do not have the clippings in my hand that would be necessary to substantiate the statements, but three statements have come out of the United Kingdom in the last two years, not all from the present U.K. Prime Minister.

A move was taken by the Labour party to sell part of the stock of British Petroleum. The United Kingdom owned different blocks of that stock over a period of years—I believe it was as high as 60 per cent and as low as 49 per cent—until the socialist government of that country decided it would be advantageous to the United Kingdom to sell some of its stock in British Petroleum.

The most significant thing about that company and the government ownership of it was that the government did not interfere with management. British Petroleum was a corporation which could operate on its own designs and make its own plans for the future, even though voting stock control was held by the United Kingdom. Such has not been the case with Crown corporations in this nation, and we can never hope that such will be the case under a government like the one on your right, Mr. Speaker.

Let us go one step further. Not only did they sell shares in British Petroleum, but an announcement appeared in the press that they needed five million pounds for the proper ongoing development of the Crown corporation which was exploring, owning and trying to deliver oil to the United Kingdom from the North Sea. The Chancellor of the Exchequer of the United Kingdom decided in his wisdom that there was no way that the taxpayer, the credit of the United Kingdom or any other source of funds could finance that work under a Crown corporation.

The result was that a group of experts, accumulated over a period of years, was going to be disintegrated, fired, because the taxpayer could not finance that national corporation. I ask those on my left to take note of this. Because the taxpayer was not considered capable of financing it, the Crown corporation planned to discard the regulatory, exploratory, developmental capability of the staff that it had accumulated.

• (1700)

That is the history of the great U.K. success in the oil industry. Let us carry this one step further. The government of the United Kingdom—and this takes in both the Conservative and the Labour parties—is finding it might well be desirable to liquidate its ownership of the Crown corporation and allow the private enterprise structure to go forward, who might be able, without burden to the British economy, to finance proper development of North Sea oil. That is the success that the United Kingdom government had, even when they kept hands off management, which this government has never done.

May I now call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Public Service—Cost of living differentials applicable to airport firemen; the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski)—Railways—Request for introduction of VIA Rail legislation; the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap)—The Economy—Request that Governor of Bank of Canada be instructed to lower interest rates.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Notices of Motions Nos. 22, 5, and 35 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

ALICE ARM, B.C.—PERMIT FOR AMAX LIMITED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House before March 2, 1981, copies of all correspondence, telegrams or communications exchanged between Mr. John Aird and cabinet ministers and/or their past or present staff regarding the permit for Amax Limited at Alice Arm.

He said: As is usual, Mr. Speaker, today we are debating a motion for the tabling of papers that the government has failed to provide, information that should be generally available to the public, or at least to members of this House.

On January 21 of this year, I placed this motion on the Order Paper asking the government to respond by March 2, 1981. Three weeks after the deadline, the then Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council replied in the House. The parliamentary secretary's reply is on the record and, in my view, is not adequate. I therefore asked that the motion be transferred for debate here today.

Let us take a look at the reasons, Mr. Speaker. First, the parliamentary secretary replied that the Departments of the Environment, Fisheries and Oceans, and Indian Affairs and Northern Development did not have any correspondence, etc., with the elusive Mr. Aird. However, and this is clear to all members of this House, my motion asked for the release of correspondence between any cabinet minister and/or their past or present staff.

The parliamentary secretary has produced a limited reply that avoids all other federal departments, ministers and their staff, past or present. Why was that specifically done, Mr. Speaker? I would like to address myself to that matter today.

I think it is clear that the parliamentary secretary should go back to his office, call or correspond with all the other departments that he has skipped over and ask them whether they have in their possession any correspondence with Mr. Aird regarding the permit for Amax Limited at Alice Arm. Until the parliamentary secretary does that, there will be an even darker cloud over the government's handling of this entire issue.

But that is not all. Let us take a quick look at some of the other motions for the production of papers that this government has so far refused to deal with. Motion No. 45, a motion to have "any reports that have been prepared for or by any department and any reports that have been forwarded to the government by Amax" is being dealt with, it seems, in the most unprofessional way that I have seen this government act. The reports I have asked for appear to be trickling into the government—that is about the best way to describe it—so until the rest of the reports "appear", I assume the government will continue to leave this motion on the Table.

Motions Nos. 62, 63 and 64 ask for copies of government documents that were released to the so-called scientific review panel that was recently held to look into the Amax situation. It is interesting to note that these letters and correspondence were forwarded to the panel for their general use, but have not been released to the public, nor to the independent scientists who have grave concerns about the implications of the dumping of tailings at Alice Arm. Once again, I think all members of this House and the general public have a right to ask why.

As with the present motion we are debating and with the ones I have listed above, I am prepared to debate them for the full time allowed under the rules of this House until such time as the government is prepared to release them.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, we have yet to hear from the government whether they intend to comply with Motions Nos. 62, 63 and 64 which I placed on the Order Paper in June. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) could endeavour to bring that forward to the House in the near future.

I first raised the Amax issue here in this House on July 8, 1980, and have been questioning the government about the sleazy way the cabinet passed the only special order in council of its kind to allow Amax of Canada to dump toxic mine wastes into Alice Arm in British Columbia.

Since then more and more information has come out to condemn the government's actions. Four out of five government scientists, for example, on an internal government committee, were so concerned about the deleterious effects this project would have on the environment that they voted against it. However, the government decided to allow the project to go ahead, despite the legitimate scientific concerns of their own public servants.

Even the recent review of the project identifies three heavy metals that will negatively affect, and perhaps permanently affect, the marine environment and the foods that grow there.

Church groups, trade unionists, native groups, environment groups and members of Parliament from both parties on this side of the House, I might say, have all spoken out on this issue. However, the government, afraid of losing face, still refuses to release the crucial documents on this matter.

I remain convinced that this is one of the most important environmental issues to come before us in recent times, not only because of its significance, but because of the precedent the Liberal party has set in this matter. It is important because of the nature of the way the government allowed this development to take place.

Motion No. 43 is extremely important because of the involvement of the Liberal party, not just members of the Liberal cabinet but the party itself, in granting the dumping permit to Amax. Amax of Canada was handed the Alice Arm tailing deposit regulations on April 4, 1979. I think we all recall, Mr. Speaker, that it was almost dead centre in the middle of a federal election. There were no committees sitting; this House was not sitting; there was no opportunity for members of Parliament, the press, any member of the public or any special interest group to find out exactly what was going on and how it came to be.

This special permit, the only one of its kind in Canada in all of Canada's history, allows Amax to dump an average of 10,000 metric tons of slurry tailings per day for a period over 26 years into the environmentally sensitive Alice Arm inlet. In fact, the order in council was issued behind the closed doors of cabinet during the election just two years ago. Even the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) admitted that the notification to the people of the area could have been better.

What happens in the smoky back rooms of the Liberal party? This is a question I would like to address. And who participates in these gatherings is something I think all members on this side of the House would like to know more about.

The Parliamentary secretary's refusal to consult other departments, departments, I might say, that would be the most likely to have had correspondence with Mr. Aird, leads to some serious questions indeed. As you know, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Aird is the present Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario and has been a longtime Liberal and a member of the Amax board of directors. Wallace Clement, in his 1977 study "Continental Corporate Power", identifies Aird as part of "Canada's internationalized elite". His position as a Liberal senator and his participation on numerous corporations has led Clement to say that it "should be evident why Amax finds him a useful member of its board".

Amax is not a small, struggling corporation that needs Liberal, Tory or Socred handouts. The company has an international reputation as a plunderer of resources and an outfit that pays little or no attention to environmental concerns. That record is certainly clear to see for any member of the House who would care to go to the Parliamentary Library and look at the track record of Amax internationally on environmental matters.

Canada is not left untouched. On June 4, 1980, Mr. Aird was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. He was replaced on the Amax board by none other than the former president of the United States, Gerald Ford. Aird was also the chief national fund raiser, or perhaps as we in the House better know it these days, the bag person, for the Liberal party. He has held that position for some time for the national Liberal party. It might be interesting to note that Premier Davis is hiring more Liberals these days than he knows.

● (1710)

Peter Newman in Volume I of "The Canadian Establishment" quoted Mr. Aird's views on making deals, as follows:

For instance, if you're in a town where there's a Royal Bank and you go and tell the manager you are a director of the Bank of Nova Scotia, you're going to be looked after.

We know who has been looked after in the Amax deal. Mr. Aird was also a member of the Permanent Joint Defence Board. Molybdenum, an important mineral used in the industrial arms race, is produced by the Amax mine at Alice Arm.

The CBC program "The Fifth Estate" did a feature story on the Amax situation on April 15, 1981. Their research showed that Mr. Aird's law firm represented Amax in Ottawa. I should like to quote directly from the transcript of that program as follows:

Malling: Scandalous is a word that's frequently tossed around in this dispute, and so is the name of John Aird. The Lieutenent-Governor of Ontario had been one of the Liberal party's most important fund raisers. He was also a member of Amax's board of directors in the U.S. when the special dumping permit passed cabinet. Though his law firm represented Amax in Ottawa, Aird denies any personal involvement.

What does this information tell us? The Liberal party, desperate for votes in its 1979 losing cause, approved a special dumping permit for Amax, the only one of its kind in Canada and one which vastly exceeds existing fisheries and oceans legislation, the Fisheries Act, and the metal mining liquid effluent regulations. We all know how industry has the government in its hip pocket. It does not take long to learn how these deals have been made between the companies and Liberal cabinet ministers.

The Amax issue will continue to hound the government until all the facts are clear. Along with other groups I have called for a full public inquiry into the situation, but I have been continually turned down by most members of cabinet. The scientific review panel which was set up by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans dealt only with some of the so-called scientific aspects of the project. Many independent scientists have challenged the findings. However, the issue is more than just a scientific one. There are important social and moral questions involved which have not been addressed in any way by the Liberal party.

Perhaps the most important social question is the entire approval process that Amax underwent. Canada does not have a legislative environmental assessment procedure, so that projects like Amax, which was challenged by the majority of the government's informed scientists—and I think this is a crucial point—can be quietly approved without public input. With an open and public assessment process the public would be assured that projects are mounted with proper studies and proper input.

Should the government have allowed this project to proceed? I encourage Liberal members to read The Global 2000 report, which reads as follows:

Water Pollution

The effect of heavy metal concentrations on the development of marine organisms is only beginning to be understood. They are among the most environmentally persistent substances. They cannot be transmuted or destroyed and, in concert with certain bacteria, have the insidious attribute of combining with organic substances to form highly toxic metallo-organic compounds.

I think this is the most important issue other than the tabling of the documents for which I am looking. I am referring to the way the permit was given out and its actual impact not only on Alice Arm and on the biological organisms there, but its actual impact on man, the native people of Kincolith, the Nishga people in that area, and on the commercial fisheries and species which are taken out of that area and their ultimate genetic and biological impact upon man.

I mentioned earlier that the review panel set up by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans identified three heavy metals that must be abated or there will be serious damage to the marine environment. A brief entitled "Some Moral and Ethical Considerations Relating to the Condition, Management and Utilization of Fisheries of the Pacific Coast of Canada" was presented to the Commission on Pacific Fisheries Policy by the Anglican Diocese of Caledonia, the Anglican Diocese of Yukon, and the Anglican Church of Canada. In it they said the following:

Mining, hydroelectric and forestry operations are bound to have a deleterious effect on fish populations. Yet it is the native people who inhabit the coastal watersheds, who will firstly and most directly be affected by such changes. It is the Nishga people who are most vulnerable to the Amax mine operation at Alice Arm even though they were ignored in the decision-making process which led to the issuing of the permits.

It is a crucial issue which is rarely addressed any longer in the House. The moral implication of the act, in my view, has serious ethical questions surrounding it. Surely the government will come to its senses, realize the damage it has caused and order a full public inquiry. Amax can operate safely but the fact of the matter is that it does not.

Before the debate is over today the people of Canada would like at least a commitment from the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council that he will survey the other offices to see if they have had any correspondence, etc., with Mr. Aird on this matter. Until that is done I do not consider this matter closed. It will not go undebated. I am hopeful other speakers will rise in the House to address themselves to the very serious issues which are held within this motion and the reasons it is being debated today.

At the beginning of my speech I said I would continue to question the government's motives on this project until I received some answers. There are additional motions for the production of papers which I will also continue to pursue on the Amax issue. Amax at Alice Arm, British Columbia, has become a watershed in Canadian environmental issues. Future projects like it will be put under the same scrutiny which Amax has undergone. As soon as the Liberal government realizes this, the better off we will all be, certainly our children.

I trust that in bringing this matter in this way before the House the government side will demonstrate the strength of Parliament, the intent to pursue freedom of information in the real way and in the spirit of the Canadian way, and put before us the documents which in fact exist.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Ordinarily I would recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Tobin), but I understand he has allowed his place to stand in favour of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues on the other side of the House for ceding their place in my favour because of a prior commitment which I have at six o'clock.

I do not share the political biases expressed so vividly by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). At the same time I rise to support the request he made in this motion for the production of papers connected with the permit. Indeed, I would have preferred seeing this request broadened to include all papers related to the issuance of the permit.

There has been a controversy over the permit issued to Amax for a long time, at least two years to my knowledge. We know influence peddling when we see it. We saw it recently in the designation of certain executive assistants and the special privileges allotted to them, but there is more in this matter than just influence peddling. There is the entire matter of the environmental concerns surrounding this operation. It is time we had all the papers before us to settle once and for all the argument which has gone on altogether too long.

In a matter of this sort we should return to the fundamentals. Any human disturbance of the environment or the status quo in the physical world cannot fail to have consequences of one sort or another. Even the employment of horses to draw vehicles in public streets had environmental consequences which involved social and economic costs to repair. Our parents were prepared to pay those costs. The problem which must be solved, both in general and in particular, whenever a matter of environmental disturbance comes before us is whether the economic and social costs are too heavy to bear, taking into account the social, economic and, in this particular instance, the military consequences of failing to proceed with the development or to proceed with it in a more costly way. This is a difficult formula to work out but I submit it is one under which we will either have development or will not have development.

● (1720)

Let us consider the problem of acid rain. The cost of proceeding as we are now will be high. We may not even be able to calculate that cost at present. Just because that cost will fall upon the generation that is to follow is no reason that we should ignore it today. Certainly the cost of preventing acid rain will be high. We must ask ourselves whether we are prepared to bear that cost today and in the future so that we may leave to the generation that follows an environment of which we can be relatively proud. That consideration of whether we should defer costs to the next generation or face them today must enter into a formula of this kind. We would like to bequeath to our children both clean environmental standards—and this matter was raised by the hon. member for Skeena—and a morality that looks beyond our pocketbook.

I favour production of these papers because we cannot possibly work toward that formula until we have all the facts before us—not just the possibility of influence peddling but also the scientific facts and the social impacts that will be felt. One way to achieve that is through a public inquiry. The hon. member for Skeena pointed out that the permit was issued in the midst of an election. There was no public inquiry.

There is no question that costs are involved and Amax may be able to meet those costs. On the other hand, they may be so high that Amax may have to look for its molybdenum elsewhere.

I deplore any suggestion that Amax is being picked on just because it happens to have an operation in Namibia. Some of the attacks on Amax imply that. Amax has a permit and has been a responsible operator. In May of this year when there was a break in the tailings line, the company stopped operations. That indicates it has operated within the limits of its permit. If the permit was wrongfully issued or if there was no other way of removing the tailings, those matters should be examined.

There is a good deal of evidence on my file that it would be much more expensive and have much longer term consequences if those tailings were deposited on land and allowed to leach into Alice Arm than is the case at present when they are being taken down well below the surface and allowed to settle in an area which actually forms a pocket at the bottom of Alice Arm.

When considering the effect of depositing those tailings in the marine environment, I think we should also take into account the fact that many years ago there was an operation at the Kitsu mine and the tailings went into Alice Arm. It is true that at that time we did not have the same notion of the environment that we have today, so to that extent there has been progress. There was not full recognition of the environmental impacts before that permit was issued. I have evidence on my file from the Department of the Environment which indicates that the measures taken into account at the time of the issuance of that permit were all that needed to be taken into account—the toxicity, the amount of clouding or whatever the terminology is, of the tailings and the fineness of the grind were all up to the standards set by the Department of the Environment.

We also know of the objections raised by the Nishga council. I have been led to understand that they were offered employment opportunities at the mine—again, a demonstration of responsible corporate citizenship—but I understand that those offers were put aside, if not rejected. There seems to be some indication that another form of recompense was sought by the Nishga. These facts ought to come out so that we can judge whether the permit was properly issued in the first place.

The controversy that surrounded the Amax operation eventually resulted in the creation of a commission appointed by the government to examine the scientific evidence related to the deposit of the tailings in Alice Arm. Dr. McInerney of the University of British Columbia was appointed to chair the commission. I believe the report, with recommendations, has already been presented to the government.

I regret that when the appointment of the commission was announced, the Nishga refused to testify. They have legitimate concerns and I think they ought to have brought them before the inquiry. These concerns are now being conveyed to us by the local representative and this is legitimate, but still, I think it would have been better if they had appeared before the public inquiry to answer questions put by the commissioners, who could have determined to what extent the complaints were valid.

I endorse the action taken by the hon. member for Skeena in requesting these papers, although I would have liked to see the request cover more than just those aimed at the so-called, rightly or wrongly, influence peddling involved in obtaining the permit in the first place. In addition, I would like to have before us the environmental, social and economic factors that went into the decision to issue the permit to Amax in the first place.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the Government of Canada, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) and his department are always very much concerned that the environmental standards set by that department, the Department of the Environment and, indeed, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, are adhered to. We respect the wish of any group, any individual or any member of this House to raise questions in order to ensure all regulations are being followed from an environmental point of view. That is the crux of the issue today.

On the other hand, the question before us today is not one of environmental regulations being met or not being met or whether all safeguards have been imposed that should be; instead, we have heard the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) put forward a carefully orchestrated series of insinuations. I personally believe that hon. members should keep in mind that they enjoy the protection of this House and should not abuse it.

I want to point out that through his insinuations the hon. member for Skeena has called into question the integrity of the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. Standing Order 35 reads:

• (1730)

No member shall speak disrespectfully of Her Majesty, nor of any of the Royal Family, nor of His Excellency or the person administering the Government of Canada; nor use offensive words against either House, or against any member thereof. No member may reflect upon any vote of the House, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

The first sentence is the relevant point here. I notice that the Chair did not rule or call the member to order today, but I would like to reserve my right, to raise a question of privilege after examining the blues. I say to my colleague opposite who spoke on behalf of the Conservative party that I respect the intelligent and rational way he approached this issue. I reserve the right to raise a question of privilege later concerning the comments made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) in so far as they reflected upon the integrity of the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario.

My first reaction to the motion for debate presented by the hon. member for Skeena was one of astonishment that he would choose to waste the time of this House on an issue that has been already adequately answered, explained and, I thought, laid to rest some time ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am somewhat concerned because, in the first instance, I had some difficulties while the hon. member for Skeena was speaking and I have been taking some time to consider his remarks and to review the authorities on the subject. That ought not to be interpreted as leaning in either direction with regard to what the hon. parliamentary secretary has now referred to as a possible question of privilege.

Second, I am concerned that the hon. member for Skeena is not present at a time when the parliamentary secretary has indicated that there may be a question of privilege involved.

Finally, I am concerned that in the normal course of events, questions of privilege are usually raised as quickly as possible when the occasion arises.

I think the Chair has a duty to all members. There is some concern about the remarks, but again I underline the fact that I am not predisposing myself or any other occupant of the chair to make a judgment in that regard. It is sufficient, in my view, that the parliamentary secretary has noted the matter. He will realize, and he does realize I am sure, that if he is going to raise such a matter, he will want to proceed in the ordinary fashion and not at a later indefinite, date, and that after giving the matter some thought, he will proceed as he wishes. I think we should close the matter off, but that does not mean it is not open for debate. I will, however, take it as notice that a possible question of privilege has been raised, and the parliamentary secretary will proceed as he sees fit.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, as soon as I began to make my point regarding a possible question of privilege and what I believe to be the calling into question of the integrity of the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, I was somewhat disappointed to see the hon. member for Skeena scurrying behind the curtains and out through the door. That in itself is disappointing, but what is doubly disappointing—and I have to turn away from my text once again—is that as the hon. member spoke, I asked myself what is being accomplished here today. Are we hearing from the hon. member the honest heartfelt concern of a member for a certain group of people in the province of British Columbia, namely, the Nishgas?

Mr. Manly: Absolutely.

Mr. Tobin: Or are we having the convoluted kind of argument which led to a series of insinuations? I am afraid that my opinion of the gentleman who has left the Chamber as soon as I stood in my place to answer his questions now leans toward the latter argument, that indeed his remarks were nothing more than an attempt to score political points. I am sorry to have to disappoint him.

Let me then state categorically, and as clearly as I can, that the Amax decision was reached by means of the normal regulatory process and after a very careful review of the data which indicated that the method proposed for disposing of the tailings into the inlet would not jeopardize the fisheries resource. The suggestion that some political pressure was brought to bear to influence the decision is completely without foundation. The decision was reached purely and simply on the basis of the scientific facts which were on hand at that time.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has stated on more than one occasion that he was quite satisfied that a sound decision had been reached and that there was no valid reason to delay the start-up of production at the Amax mine, with its accompanying employment and economic benefits for British Columbia and Canada as a whole.

It would be useful, I believe, if I were to re-emphasize the factors which were taken into account in approving the Alice Arm tailings deposit regulations. This was not a decision that was taken flippantly or in great haste, but one that was made only after a detailed technical examination of data on various tailings disposal alternatives available to us carried out by staff of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of the Environment.

By way of an example of the thoroughness with which this task was carried out, I might mention that more than 40 technical reports on the biology and oceanography of Alice Arm were reviewed to assess the immediate and long-term risks associated with maintenance of a conventional on-land tailings impoundment, as compared with the existing underwater disposal system. Following this extensive study, the conclusion drawn was that a properly designed marine tailings disposal system would not adversely affect the fisheries resource and, on balance, would be preferable in this particular case to a containment pond on land.

The minister, in making his decision, based his approval of the tailings deposit regulations on the following factors. The first factor was the conclusion that Pacific salmon and other important fishery resources would not be adversely affected. The second was that tailings deposited from the mine would not extend outside of Alice Arm. The third was that the tailings would keep to the bottom of Alice Arm at a minimum depth of 100 metres. The fourth factor was that the alternative method of tailings storage, that is, on-land impoundment, would represent a threat in perpetuity to salmon resources entering Alice Arm. This conclusion was arrived at in view of the high rainfall and the steep topography of the area, which meant, in effect, that the permanent stability of an on-land storage basin could not be assured. I feel this is a very important point and one which has been frequently overlooked by those critical of the underwater disposal system. I note a point made by an hon. member from the Conservative Party who spoke a few moments ago.

Having satisfied himself as to the technical aspects of this disposal system, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) has freely admitted that there still remained a nagging thought that perhaps the experts might have miscalculated or slipped up somewhere along the line. It was for that reason that he was not unsympathetic, nor unresponsive, to the concerns expressed by the Nishga Tribal Council on behalf of the native people who live in the vicinity of Alice Arm that some damage might be caused to the fishery resource as a result of the mining operation.

Because of this, and to make doubly sure that we were doing the right thing, the minister asked for the establishment of a review panel of independent and highly respected scientists to go over all the data and reports on which the decision was based and to publicly report their findings. He opted for a scientific review panel, rather than a public inquiry which was advocated by the Nishga Indians, because the evidence on which the panel would have to base its findings was almost exclusively scientific or, at best, very technical. However, it was made very clear to the Nishgas, and to any other groups or individuals interested in the issue, that the panel would be prepared to meet with them and hear their views or evidence, and that all reports of the panel would be readily available to the public.

The minister, and most others involved in this matter, were disappointed that the Nishgas, for reasons best known to themselves, decided to boycott the review panel. In view of the concerns they had raised and their repeated demands for a public inquiry, it was somewhat difficult to understand their position. However, that was their decision, and a decision we can only choose to respect.

● (1740)

At the same time, it is somewhat ironic that the conclusions of the review panel are now being questioned by the Nishgas and others because of the lack of any Nishga participation in the public hearing although they themselves had every opportunity, and in fact were invited, to participate but chose not to do so.

In the recruitment of members of the review panel, considerable care was taken to ensure that competent and independent scientists were appointed. Its chairman was Dr. J. E. McInerney, who is chairman of the department of biology at the University of Victoria and a specialist in the physiology and behaviour of fish. The other two members were Dr. R. W. Burling, professor of oceanography at the department of oceanography, University of British Columbia, and Dr. W. K. Oldham, a member of the faculty of civil engineering at the University of B.C.

I should say, as I mention these three highly prestigious and respected scientists, all from the University of British Columbia, that I think the hon. member for Skeena almost called their competence into doubt today. I am somewhat surprised that a member from the great province of British Columbia would give any hint at all of doubt about the integrity and competence of these three distinguished British Columbians. It is worth while repeating what the panel's terms of reference were. They were as follows:

1. To examine and advise on the adequacy of the Alice Arm Tailings Deposit Regulations for protecting economically important fisheries resources and Indian food fisheries of Alice Arm and environs.

2. To examine and advise on whether planned tailings deposit practices are likely to meet the terms and conditions of the regulations.

3. To assess the planned monitoring program to determine whether it will be adequate to detect violations of the terms of the regulations or impacts upon fish and fish habitat, and to recommend necessary improvements.

4. To consult with interested agencies and parties knowledgeable about the issue.

5. To examine and recommend any alternative tailings disposal methods which could significantly reduce or preclude hazards to the fisheries resources.

6. To recommend further courses of action in the future which in the opinion of the panel, may be necessary to address the issue.

7. To prepare two reports: as soon as possible an interim report recommending any action deemed important for protecting the public interest, and a final report by July 1, 1981.

The scientific review panel went about its work with great dedication and diligence and, starting around the end of March, 1981, consulted with knowledgeable people in various parts of British Columbia, and held open public meetings at Prince Rupert and Vancouver. In between meetings, they studied an immense amount of correspondence and reports which had a bearing on this unquestionably important subject.

In the early part of May, the scientific review panel produced its interim report which commenced with the statement, which I will quote because it is most significant today. It reads:

It is the panel's considered opinion that, in the short-term, the public interest will not be jeopardized by the continued discharge of Amax mine tailings to Alice Arm. Accordingly, no major restrictive actions are deemed necessary at this time.

That was the interim report on this matter. The panel's final report was issued on July 24 and consisted of a document of some 154 pages, in itself a somewhat remarkable feat considering the fact that the three scientists involved started their task only four months previously.

The summary findings of the revew panel have already been given considerable publicity, but I feel it would be appropriate if I repeated them to the House at this time. These were the panel's conclusions, and I quote directly from the report which it presented:

(a) With the possible exceptions of cadmium, lead and zinc in the solid form, no deleterious effects are expected to result from the daily deposit of 12,000 metric tons of Amax/Kitsault tailings into Alice Arm, in accordance with the Alice Arm Tailings Deposit Regulations.

(b) The following substances, in both solid and dissolved forms, all occur in concentrations which are the same or less than local background conditions: arsenic, copper, iron, mercury, manganese, nickel, uranium-235 and its daughter products, radium-226, thorium-230 and lead-210. Moreover their dissolved concentrations in the tailings all meet or are less than Canadian surface and drinking water guidelines and objectives except manganese, which slightly exceeds an aesthetic drinking water guideline.

(c) In the dissolved form, cadmium, lead and zinc all occur at concentrations in the tailings equal to or less than local freshwater background conditions, and all three meet or are less than Canadian surface and drinking water guidelines and objectives.

I would emphasize the word "less", Mr. Speaker. The findings continue as follows:

(e) A "cloud" of fine tailings containing approximately 4 per cent of the total daily solids from the Amax/Kitsault discharge is not expected to result in increased loads of dissolved substances in the Alice Arm water column.

I could go on and on. I make the point that the speech we have heard today from the hon. member for Skeena is not relevant to the environmental question. What we have heard, if anything, is an attack on the integrity of the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario and, I submit, an attack on the integrity and the competence of the three noted scientists of the University of British Columbia who carried out the study and made this report.

An hon. Member: Read the papers.

Mr. Tobin: What papers? You make a charge and I say to any hon. member who makes a charge in this House, "Back it up," and I use this expression not in any emotional sense, "Put up, or shut up."

In response to the specific term of reference to examine and recommend any alternative tailings disposal methods which would significantly reduce or preclude hazards to the fishery resource, the panel concluded that the marine disposal method was environmentally preferable to any sort of land disposal scheme that is technically feasible. This confirmed the earlier conclusion arrived at by departmental experts with regard to the land storage alternative.

The panel recommended a number of actions and that further studies be undertaken, the most significant of which are as follows:

1. The tailings outfall pipe be extended to a depth of 100 metres to ensure regular compliance with the regulations.

2. Research on methods to reduce cadmium, lead and zinc in the tailings should be accelerated. Implementation of an abatement program for these substances is recommended as being highly desirable.

3. A variety of research projects are recommended to provide an improved understanding of oceanographic processes in Alice Arm and biological effects of mine tailings.

4. In future, approval of special regulations should be contingent upon the preparation of an adequate environmental impact statement, and an opportunity for public scrutiny and input should be provided.

I take great pleasure in telling you that on these specific recommendations the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has already held discussions in British Columbia and subsequently has been in touch by letter with the president at Alice Arm to ensure that the intent of these recommendations is being carried out.

In summary, I would simply say again that I have done my homework, not having been privy to an examination of the scientific data and facts concerning the environmental question at Alice Arm, but I was disappointed to hear an unsubstantiated series of insinuations designed more to score political points because I expect more of the hon. members. This was done on the backs of the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, of the scientists from the University of British Columbia and, saddest of all, obviously on the backs of the Nishga Indians.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise very briefly on a point of order. I took care not to interrupt the hon. member while he was speaking, but I noted that he made some mention of the fact that I was not in the House. I would just like to inform the House that I was called out for a few moments. I am back and I want to say, in view of the hon. member's remarks, that I had hoped he would take the time to read the motion we are debating. We are debating the tabling of papers, not the environmental question.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to read the motion into the record again, as follows:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House before March 2, 1981, copies of all correspondence, telegrams or communications exchanged between Mr. John Aird and Cabinet ministers and/or their past or present staff regarding the permit for Amax Limited at Alice Arm.

● (1750)

All that the government needs to do, Mr. Speaker, is to agree to that and release the papers. Then people can judge for themselves. Does the government agree to tabling this? Does the government agree to table all correspondence that has taken place? We would like to know that. The people would like to know that because serious questions have been raised.

Some hon. Members: No!

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Manly: The parliamentary secretary has said that the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) was involved in a carefully orchestrated series of insinuations. He questioned his motives. I would like to point out to the parliamentary secretary, and to all hon. members opposite, that if they wish to question the motives of the hon. member for Skeena, they will also be questioning the motives of the Nishga people, of all Indian people on the northwest coast, of church groups and unions, all of whom are vitally concerned in getting this basic information so that they may know what has happened in the past.

The parliamentary secretary said that the hon. member for Skeena reflected on the integrity of the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario. I do not wish to comment on that, but I simply want to reiterate the facts that up until September 12, 1980, the present Lieutenant Governor was on the board of Amax. On September 15, 1980, he became Lieutenant Governor of Ontario. I would like to ask why it was that he resigned.

I would like to read into the record some material from the Canadian Parliamentary Guide relating to the Hon. John Black Aird and the corporate directorships which he still holds.

An hon. Member: Is that criminal?

Mr. Manly: He is listed on page 783 of the Parliamentary Guide for 1980 as holding the following:

General Counsel and Director: Reed Shaw Osler Limited. Deputy Chairman of Board and Director; Algoma Central Railway. Vice-President and Director; Pacific Atlantic Canadian Investment Co. Ltd. Director; American Climax Incorporated. Bank of Nova Scotia, Canadian Tungsten Mining Corporation Ltd. Consolidated-Bathurst Ltd., Dominion Glass Co. Ltd., National Life Assurance Company of Canada, Rolland Paper Co. Ltd.

That is a fairly impressive list, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: What is the matter with that? What is your point?

Mr. Manly: The point is that up until September 12, 1980, John Aird was a member of the Board of Directors of Amax, and he thought it was necessary to divest himself of that directorship before he assumed the lieutenant governorship of Ontario.

An hon. Member: We all do.

Mr. Manly: I would like to stress the importance of having these papers released. I remind hon. members—

An hon. Member: What papers?

An hon. Member: What does that mean?

Mr. Manly: —of the papers that are mentioned in the order. I remind hon. members that this permit for dumping of effluent was given in the middle of the 1979 election. The Indian people were not aware of what was involved—

Some hon. Members: Come on!

Mr. Manly: Hon. members opposite can laugh, but we all remember that during the late 1960s and early 1970s people were very concerned about mercury pollution in the English and Wabagoon River system. People were not aware of what the effect of mercury pollution was until a decade ago. Now we are aware of some of the dangers of this kind of dumping, yet we are continuing to do it.

The people in the English and Wabagoon River area are having extreme difficulty getting some kind of compensation. At Alice Arm, the Nishga people do not want to be involved in long litigation to get compensation for past wrongs. They want to prevent damage to their environment right now.

An hon. Member: That is fair enough.

Mr. Manly: The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) feels that Amax has been a responsible corporate citizen. He suggests that it is wrong for us to mention their operation in Namibia, a country wrongfully held by the government of South Africa. The United Nations has condemned South Africa for this. I suggest to the hon. member that this is all part of a pattern of rip-offs by that company.

If members opposite believe there is no foundation to the suggestion of political pressure brought to bear in the issuance of permits, let them accede to this request and have any correspondence or telegrams between John Aird and cabinet ministers or their staffs released to the public so that everyone may know what has taken place. Why not release the background papers relating to the issuance of these permits? Let us clear up any doubt that exists, and let the people know.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I say to my good friend from Skeena (Mr. Fulton) that this is the old one-two punch from the Newfoundland end of the country.

I share the view of my hon. friend from Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) who is Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc). I cannot see what the issue is, frankly. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has given a full explanation in this House of the manner in which Amax was permitted to dispose of its tailings. There was a detailed examination of the environmental impact undertaken by the Department of the Environment and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. The House knows there was a special review of all the data on which the decision was based. This was done by an independent panel of competent scientists from outside the government. The result of that inquiry showed there would be no significant negative impact on the fishery in Alice Arm.

These are the facts and even the member for Skeena has not disputed them. They are on public record. I ask, as did my hon. friend from Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe; what papers does the hon. member want? He has the results of the independent panel, and there is all kinds of documentation on this issue. The message is always the same. If there had been something in the scientific findings that hinted at skullduggery or wrongdoing, I would be inclined to think he might be on to something. But he is just on a wild goose chase. What does the hon. member for Skeena want? He has the categorical statement of the minister that the Amax decision was reached through the normal regulatory process. Even a cursory glance at the record should tell him that the approval was straightforward, proper and not different from many other decisions made in this context.

I submit that the hon. member for Skeena does not particularly want to look at the record. He does not want to be baffled by the facts. He has got himself a lot of ink out of this one, you must remember. Like any politician, he is reluctant to let a good thing go.

An hon. Member: A headline hunter.

Mr. Simmons: What is most contemptible, Mr. Speaker, is that he is prepared to waste the time of the House on this issue, which he has done for many hours in this session and in the last session. He has unnecessarily raised the fears of the people who are most directly involved, despite all the facts to the contrary. Since he is the member for that region, he should be providing some sort of leadership in getting to the bottom of this issue. But what does he do? He shunts the record aside. He asks that the realities be ignored, and presses on to get a few more headlines. That might be very good short-term politics, but it is not terribly responsible.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has noted an editorial in the Vancouver Province which described the Amax situation as a storm in a teacup. After listening to the rhetoric of the hon. member for Skeena and then looking at the report of the review panel, the Province said, and I quote directly from the editorial: "We now learn that the Amax tailings are less poisonous than our tap water".

I move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): With great hope I ask the hon. member that he not move the adjournment of the debate. We are not at that stage. We are simply at six o'clock, and if the hon. member will allow the Chair not to consider that suggestion, we will adjourn until eight o'clock.

The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURES RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works and Motions Nos. 7, 8, 9 (Mr. Andre for Mr. Wilson) and Motions Nos. 10, 11, 12 (Mr. Skelly) and Motions Nos. 13, 15 (Mr. Andre for Mr. Wilson) and Motions Nos. 16 and 41 (Mr. Skelly).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the debate was interrupted at five o'clock this afternoon, the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) had the floor.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, earlier I mentioned the steps which had been taken by the government of the United Kingdom when it found itself facing rather large expenditures in the field of energy. Let me read a short excerpt from Keesing's "Contemporary Archives". It reads: "Together with unspecified fiscal adjustments to be made later, certain increases in direct taxation and the sale of part of the public holding in British Petroleum, but partly offset by additional expenditures to help employment and investment, these further measures are estimated to enable the public sector borrowing requirement to be cut by two billion pounds."

I read that because the public sector has a place in the United Kingdom, even under socialism. Second, the Canadian people should have an understanding of the amount of public money which will have to be collected, either from the sale of bonds, at whatever price the market will extend to this country, or from taxation.

I would like to see this country proceed with this bill and this policy with its eyes open and with an understanding of how that trillion dollars is going to be raised. Can the public treasury support that kind of expenditure? It will have to on the route we are taking.

This government has been guided more by jealousy than by practical economics. Its jealousy, coupled with philosophy, has led it to decide that those provinces which have it shall have it taken away; the control, the revenue, the whole ball of wax is going to be appropriated by the national energy policy and by this legislation. However, the taxpayer is going to have to pay.

The question that must be asked in this mixup, this maelstrom of policy, is why the minister, the government and the backbenchers support the idea of behind doors dealing. If there are assets in the Canada lands, why are they not going to be auctioned off instead of dealt out as favours?

This is no laughing matter, no sneering matter. There is not a nation in the world with assets which deals them out without a public auction. Even worse, when we go behind closed doors, there is no obligation on the minister to reveal to the public at large what has been given to whom and how it is being managed. There is no secrecy requirement in the auction of lands with potential in the energy field.

This is merely a way to set back development, coupled with the almighty power vested in the judgment of the minister or his designated civil servant. If you are not frightened by any other regulation or civil service dealing with the public, just stop and think. In the income tax field, the fishermen, farmers and foresters today are being charged and challenged to prove that they are innocent. Are we going to find ourselves in a comparable situation to this?

I fear for this country. It discourages an aggressive individualist approach to the development of all things which are the best for Canada. In all other jurisdictions, whether it be Australia, the United States, Indonesia or some country more socialist than that, there is encouragement for foreign capital to come in on a contractual basis, knowing precisely where they stand, what their future may be, what their reasons are, and what their tax burden will be.

We do not extend that to our Canadian exporters or to multinational exporters. We constrain them to the point where Canadian companies are the ones pouring their money into Indonesia, Australia, the United States or any other area which promises a firm and fixed structure, something we lack.

There have been three about faces since 1976. This government has made contracts, rules, regulations and laws which, directed by their jealousy and greed, they have now cancelled. Nobody knows from one year to the next where he will be. Nobody has any way of knowing where he will be tomorrow, let alone a week from now after this act is proclaimed, because it will be in the hands of a greedy, shortsighted minister with respect to the values that this great resource could give to this land.

There is another sphere of Canadian activity where fear is experienced. It would be ridiculous for an executive of an oil company to attack this government and then expect to get a contract from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), or the administrator of the Canada lands regulations and licensing. We have extended that part of our life in which fear is the dominant factor. It is a gag on the expression of public opinion by an individual involved in the efforts of this land.

We have carried it to the point where we have alienated our friends. We need friends. However, we have alienated them by regulations which have prevented our development of hydroelectric capabilities because we have not chosen to extend export permits for the short-term relief of the United States and the long-term economic gain of Canada. That has been denied because of jealousy and greed by this government. Provinces and corporations have been denied the right to export energy which might be generated from nuclear fuel. With what result? The economic energy group of Canada is virtually bankrupt. We will probably be writing off more of their bills sometime within the next two years. This would have been absolutely unnecessary, had we not been blinded by greed and jealousy. It would have done another thing for us; it would have done a great deal to improve our balance and to strengthen the weak Canadian dollar which is at present contributing to inflation. This has been done by blundering, jealous or greedy individuals.

• (2010)

What industrial strategy do we have? This bill cannot be considered, or any part of it, without a projection of how the people of Canada will generate a trillion dollars in 20 years. What is the government going to do to encourage the cash flow which would make it happen? Are we, in fact, going to strangle our own development? Should we be so greedy as not to accept foreign investment? Or, even worse, discourage Canadian investment in our own resources? These are tragic and suicidal approaches to the long term and best interests of Canada. I say to every member of the government, we need a long-term plan for a trillion dollars. If this energy package is going to generate that kind of money, then this is what we should have. But let us see it in black and white.

This government does not have a five-year energy policy because it has changed its tune several times in that five-year period. I am one who is concerned and interested in Canadian ownership of our energy structure, as is any hon. member. I believe I am more realistic than those in government who say that all we have to do is to tax the stuff and the Canadian people will pay for it, or that all we have to do is to borrow the money, from God knows where, in the quantities we require, or that all we have to do is to put together a package whereby the free enterprise system, coupled with the state—I am not saying that we should abandon it—has a chance to play its part, and Canada has a chance to enjoy its riches.

Are you going to be jealous of Newfoundland? Obviously, you are, because you have impaired development of Hibernia by changing the regulations or refusing to give in. Are you going to be jealous of Nova Scotia with its offshore oil and gas? Is that what you are jealous of? Are you jealous of Saskatchewan? Are you jealous of Alberta?

This is not the way to build a harmonious nation; it is a way to divide it. This is not the way to develop a nation; it is a way to divide it. Let us give this nation some hope, some incentive. Let us scrub the stupid regulation structure which is extended to the minister and to his bureaucrats.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The principal purpose of Bill C-48 is to ensure that Canadians have the right to decide their energy future. The vast oil and gas potential of the Canada lands, when coupled with provincial resources, will ensure that Canadians have the opportunity to achieve oil self-sufficiency by 1990. The legislation before the House helps to give Canadians the mechanism to achieve both a greater degree of participation and energy security.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLaren: Under the British North America Act, Mr. Speaker, the federal government was given jurisdiction over those immense areas now called the Canada lands, with their tremendous energy resources beneath. Those resources we intend should benefit all Canadians. That potential will, however, only be realized by recognizing that the government has the responsibility to accelerate exploration in the Canada lands. This will be done, as earlier speakers on this side of the House have said, with the greatest regard for the needs and requirements of the people of the regions and the fragile environment of the north and of the offshore. The Canadianization of the petroleum industry, a subject which has been touched upon a number of times during our discussion of the motions now before the House, ensures that the benefits derived from our abundant energy resources will stay here in Canada where they belong. The government of Alberta, in its recent agreement with the national government, and more recently the government of British Columbia, has endorsed Canadianization. In the case of the government of Alberta, it has undertaken itself to pay for the incentives to ensure that petroleum development goes forward, and at the same time, that Canadianization is promoted. Not to be excluded is the Ontario government, which we have seen recently take a one quarter share in Suncor.

Beyond the government's initiatives, there is now a whole panoply of private sector initiatives. It is difficult to open a newspaper without noting yet another development, developments which are promoted by the Canadianization incentives in the National Energy Program and, indeed, in Bill C-48 now before us.

The promotion of Canadian exploration, Mr. Speaker, will not only ensure that Canadians control their own energy destiny, but it will also allow Canadians to participate more directly in their own energy and economic future.

Some time ago, a prime minister of Canada stated, and I wish to quote him:

> —To an ever-increasing degree our resources have been in the control and under the ownership of a nation other than Canada. While we welcome foreign investment, at the same time we do ask that this investment be for the benefit of Canadians, with Canada's destiny constantly before those who control its industry . . . This vast, but exhaustible resource shall provide not only for the economic expansion in our country . . . but at the same time maintain for Canadians their sovereignty over their country because no nation worthy of the name can maintain its political sovereignty unless it has every regard for the maintenance of its economic sovereignty.

That Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, was John Diefenbaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: He would support the bill.

Mr. MacLaren: The legislation we have before us, partly by providing a Crown share on Canada lands and a minimum of 50 per cent Canadian ownership from any production on those lands, will ensure a higher degree of the use of Canadian goods and services. That emphasis in the bill, which has been touched on so often by my friends in the New Democratic Party, is, indeed, an area where we as a government have placed great importance; but that is not to say we look for the exclusion of foreign participation. We look for a judicious mixture.

Our objective of Canadianization is really very simple. It is to increase the share of the oil and gas industry owned and controlled by Canadians to 50 per cent a decade from now. Our emphasis is on making room for Canadian oil and gas companies in the industry in Canada; not on forcing out foreign companies. There is no question that we intend to give Canadian companies the opportunity to grow more quickly.

As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) noted recently, what we have not intended or done is to make the operations of large international oil firms unprofitable. For example, the net cost to U.S. firms exploring in Canada will remain lower than in the United States. In Canada we are dealing with an extraordinary situation. Throughout the 1950s and 1960s, non-residents owned nearly 80 per cent and controlled over 90 per cent of Canadian oil and gas assets, as the minister further noted. They also controlled nearly 100 per cent of the assets employed in refining and marketing operations. Canada did not have a single Canadian multinational oil company; not even a small one.

● (2020)

Those are circumstances which we on this side of the House do not wish to see continue. This is why we have put in place incentives for Canadians to play a greater role in their own petroleum industry. Not only does the legislation look toward the greater participation of investors, but also it promises thousands of new jobs, in the energy sector and in the supply of goods and services.

In that connection, I remind the House that when this bill first came before committee we recognized that, as originally drafted, the relevant provisions did not adequately reflect our intent that Canadian suppliers of goods and services should have a fair and competitive opportunity to share in procurement with respect to oil and gas exploration and development activity on the Canada lands, without at the same time discriminating against non-Canadian suppliers. Accordingly, during the course of the committee work, we modified the industrial benefit provisions in the bill so as to stipulate clearly that Canadian manufacturers, consultants, contractors and service companies have a full and fair opportunity to participate competitively in the supply of goods and services.

Not only did we do that in committee, we went further. With regard to the employment of Canadians, companies active in the petroleum industry will be required to submit a detailed manpower plan and to maintain close contact with the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission in the development and implementation of their plans. We shall expect such plans to include advance specifications of labour requirements and sourcing, recruiting procedures, training programs, company mobility plans and local hiring programs. The companies will need to indicate in detail the steps being taken to maximize the opportunities for Canadians to participate in the planning, construction and operation of the projects. In short, this legislation, while respecting all our international obligations, will give Canadians, whether in large businesses or small, new opportunities to participate on a competitive basis in the supply of goods and services.

Some reference has been made earlier today by an hon. member of the New Democratic Party to the laudable initiatives of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) to promote a more viable and active small business sector in our economy. Small business initiative can, for example, spread more into the petroleum industry through the creation and promotion of consortia.The Government of Canada will not be laggard in providing such incentives to small business.

At the other end of the scale, megaprojects will also receive the active promotion of the Canadian government. Reference was made to the major projects task force report tabled earlier this year. That report was a notable achievement in business and labour co-operation which looked toward more active involvement for Canadians in the great new projects, many in the hydrocarbons industry, which will benefit all Canada.

To that end, a major projects office was established in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce which will ensure every opportunity for Canadian companies to participate on a fair and competitive basis in the development of our own energy resources.

Some reference has been made to the need in Canada for an advisory committee, involving business and labour as well as government, to ensure the maximum participation of Canadian suppliers of all types in our petroleum development. One motion which is now before us looks toward such a commission, and indeed sets forth the terms of reference for it. Such a possibility is covered by a motion which we have already adopted. It provides the minister with the opportunity to establish an advisory committee wherever the need is identified. The motion is neither necessary nor desirable when we have already acted in that area.

Much has been made of ministerial discretion under this bill. It has been claimed by some hon. members opposite that the minister's discretionary powers are somewhat too great. However, in such a vast and underpopulated country as Canada, especially in the great territories of the Canada lands, considerable discretionary power must be invested in the minister. Circumstances differ widely from project area to project area. It is simply impossible to reduce the varying circumstances, whether they be offshore, in the Arctic or on the lands of the north, to some sort of simple formula which would define the circumstances in every case.

In fact, what we need in this country, in the vast areas of our north and offshore, is some degree of discretionary power. Yet the discretionary powers envisaged for the minister are little compared to those vested in the minister of energy of the province of Alberta, an area which is much more populated and developed than the Canada lands. Let me cite one or two instances of ministerial discretion in the province of Alberta under the Alberta mines and minerals act. The minister may:

—restrict the disposition of or withdraw from disposition any mineral (defined to include petroleum) in any specified area in any manner he may consider warranted.

That is ministerial discretion. If that were not enough, the minister of energy of the province of Alberta may also:

—acquire by expropriation any estate or interest in mines or minerals (defined to include petroleum) where the minister is of the opinion that any or any further exploration for or development of those mines and minerals is not in the public interest—

If that discretion were not enough, another section of the same act goes on to indicate that the minister of energy for the province of Alberta may:

—demand that "a lease shall be in such form as may be determined by the minister and may include . . . any other terms and conditions the minister prescribes".

I should like to quote one more example of ministerial discretion in Alberta in order to make the point. Under the Alberta petroleum and natural gas reservation regulations, there is the following stipulation:

The minister from time to time may make such orders as he may deem necessary for the effective administration of these regulations, and where any questions arise pertaining to the interpretation or application of these regulations, the minister shall be the sole judge and there shall be no appeal from his decision.

This is only a sampling of the range of discretionary powers given to the Alberta minister who has power over an area much smaller and much more developed than the Canada lands. If such discretionary power is needed in such circumstances, are we to believe that no discretionary rights are required in the more challenging area of the Canada lands, where the climate is harsh and environmental concerns are more sweeping?

● (2030)

I should also remind the House that in some 13 places in the act there is the right of appeal against ministerial discretion if it is considered that it has been implemented in an arbitrary fashion. In all such instances, the minister's discretion is subject to review.

I want to turn for a moment to Motion No. 7 as an example why we on this side of the House oppose the motions brought forward by the opposition.

Motion No. 7 would amend Subclause 10(1) to add the words "subject to Section 56"; that is, subject to appeal. The effect of such an amendment would be to make the entry into an exploration agreement subject to the appeal process, which is to provide for a review of certain important orders made by the minister under the act. This would provide an opportunity for those affected by an order to object to it and to make representations.

In our view, it would be inappropriate to make Subclause 10 subject to Section 56. Subclause 10(1) merely provides that the minister may enter into an exploration agreement in the manner provided. In most circumstances, the minister would call for proposals and from those submitted he would select one for the negotiation of an exploration agreement. Upon the successful conclusion of such negotiations, the minister would enter into the exploration agreement.

It is difficult, for me at least, to see who would have an interest in applying to the minister for a hearing at that juncture. Certainly it would not be the party negotiating the exploration agreement with the minister. We believe that provision has already been made to deal with the intent behind the motion, and therefore, in our view the motion becomes unnecessary.

I should like to give one more example of a motion which, in our view, is unnecessary; Motion No. 9. Again, it is not clear who would launch an appeal under Section 56 as would be foreseen in this motion. It provides that every exploration agreement would be subject to the terms set out in the proposed Schedule A, which deals with manpower and procurement. The proposed provisions are drawn from the Northern Pipeline Act. While such provisions may be suitable in respect of a bilaterally negotiated agreement with the United States, it is doubtful that such explicit provisions would be appropriate in the quite different circumstances of the Canada Oil and Gas Act.

There are a number of other specific motions before us which I could deal with, but I believe that my time is just about up, Mr. Speaker. I will conclude by saying that the basic purpose of the clauses concerning Canadian procurement and ministerial discretion, is to help promote the Canadianization of our petroleum industry, a policy which carries the broad support of the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), acting House leader for the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hope I turn out to be a good actor. It is a difficult job, as you can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, to fill in, even temporarily, for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Had he been here this evening, I think he would have wanted to add a few words to the debate that has taken place over the last few days, but since he was unable to be here, I might just take two or three moments to put some thoughts on the record with which I am sure he would concur.

I have listened to the debate off and on with considerable interest and sometimes I have wondered what we are talking about. You would swear that we were talking about a resource belonging to someone else from which we hoped to gain some advantage. And sometimes during the debate it would be difficult to realize that what we are talking about is a resource that belongs to every Canadian.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Not only are we talking about energy self-sufficiency for the future, but surely we are talking about maximizing the benefits to Canadians today and in the future of the exploitation of that resource.

In considering the fairly intricate legislation which is before us, the test that must be applied is the test of history. You have to begin with an understanding that, generally speaking, we have not been able to fully utilize the benefits that we ought to have received from resources that were Canadian in the first place. You need only look at the way we have wasted opportunity after opportunity in every single resource field to understand the perils that could lie ahead unless we are extremely careful about how we draft this legislation and what guarantee we put into it.

I am sure many members have travelled across northern Canada. I do not refer to the far north but to the area that might be called mid-northern Canada, that area that has been exploited over the last half century or more—Timmins, Chapleau, Sault Ste. Marie, Sudbury, northern Ontario, and the rest of the country. One only has to travel that country to see the way the resource was exploited for the benefit of the few to the detriment of the many. One only has to look at the devastation that was left, and then try to measure the cost against the benefit that we in Canada received.

An example is the mining industry. Did we receive any substantial mining machinery manufacturing as a result of having that magnificent mineral resource base in this country? Can we see in Canada a mining machinery manufacturing sector which is second to none in the world and which reflects the value of Canada's resource? No, Mr. Speaker, it cannot be found. For mining machinery we go to the United States, to Scandinavia, to Germany. We bring it in, we pay for it, we mine our ore, take it out and ship it away.

Then there is the forest industry, an industry second to none in the world, but do we have a substantial world-class leading edge forestry machinery manufacturing industry in this country? No, we do not.

Mr. Kelly: Yes.

Mr. Deans: Development could and should have taken place because this country was so fabulously rich in resources. At every turn we missed taking advantage of that for this generation and for future generations. Now we have been given another opportunity. Now we have again discovered that we are rich. We can be self-sufficient. But whose direction are we going to follow? Are we going to assure that in Canada there will be the development of the machinery that extracts from the ground and below the ocean? Are we going to make sure that a machinery manufacturing base is established in this country on a world scale? Are we going to take advantage of the tens of millions—of trillions—the Royal Bank says that it will be a trillion dollar expenditure—over the next 20 years? Does anyone have any idea of what a trillion dollars is? When you go to the bank to cash your cheque, can you imagine what a trillion dollars looks like, even spread over 20 years? I certainly cannot and most of my constituents cannot. But one thing I do know is that unless we take advantage of every opportunity to use that money to secure the economic well-being of this country for the next generation, we will once again have sold out our birthright.

● (2040)

That is what we are talking about in these amendments. That is exactly what these amendments speak to. We are talking about maximizing industrial benefit for Canadians. We are talking about maximizing employment opportunities, not only now but over the course of the development, by putting in place an industrial infrastructure, thus guaranteeing that we will be on the leading edge of technological change for the requirements of future generations. We are saying that as we tax Canadians, either through the tax structure or through the payment for the resource needed to heat their homes, to run their cars and to operate their businesses, by far the vast majority of those tax dollars should be used in Canada to provide Canadians with the kinds of opportunities that will secure the future of Canada.

That is what this is all about. That is why these amendments are here. We want to learn a lesson from the errors of the past. We want to learn, as my good friend from British Columbia has said to me many times, how to take advantage of mistakes made so as not to make them over and over again. We need not look back into our own history to see the errors. We need only look at the mistakes made in Scotland.

An hon. Member: They made a lot of mistakes like that.

Mr. Deans: That was not only when they let me leave. But when the North Sea oil was discovered, mistakes were made. The British had finally put their hands on energy self-sufficiency, but in the their haste to take advantage of it, they found themselves losing out in terms of the economic benefit they might have reasonably obtained from the significant investment that had to be made.

The Economic Council of Canada, in a study of the North Sea oil development, points out that 60,000 jobs were created in Scotland in 1976. One hundred thousand jobs were created in Britain over all, but 200,000 jobs were created in the United States as a result of the North Sea find and the economic development resulting from the British taxpayers' investment in the development of the project.

Mr. McDermid: In Canada, too.

Mr. Deans: Are we going to do the same thing? Are we going to learn? It took some time, but the British finally twigged. They realized that they were paying out millions and millions of pounds, but the significant benefits from the project were flowing to other parts of the world.

In other words, the long-term benefits of economic and industrial development and the job opportunities that follow were flowing out of Britain. Therefore, the British offshore supply office was set up. That particular structure may not be entirely applicable in Canada, and in that connection I want to propose another one.

Mr. McCauley: Why don't you get to the bill?

Mr. Deans: It is interesting that the hon. member should ask that. It is an indication of a lack of understanding of what is contained in the legislation or of its import. However, I do not expect anything more or less.

Let me say that when the British finally understood what it was all about, they finally took steps to correct it.

What do we propose?

An hon. Member: Heaven knows!

Mr. Deans: I think the Liberals are feeling a little nervous tonight. I do not blame them. It has been through successive Liberal administrations that the rip-off has taken place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: It is because of that very narrow view of the future of the country that the country is in the present mess. I can appreciate the Liberals' embarrassment, but they should not compound it with their interjections.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: There are people in this country who have devoted a great deal of time, effort and energy in trying to come up with solutions. To a great extent, we have incorporated much of what these people have recommended in the amendments we placed before the House.

I want to say to government members, those who are listening, those who are reading and those who are chatting, that it might serve them well, since it is not yet too late, to think a little bit about whether or not they are in fact maximizing their return on this huge investment that has to be made.

Mr. Kelly: Have you read it?

Mr. Deans: Have I read the bill? Yes, I have read it. I have reread it. I have carried it back and forth to Hamilton on my weekly visits. I have sat in my office in the middle of the night fretting over it. I want you to know that this bill has been committed to memory.

An hon. Member: That is your fault.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that in having committed the bill to memory, it has distressed me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You should be committed.

Mr. Deans: My colleague asks me whether I dream about it. I want to tell hon. members that I have nightmares.

An hon. Member: Tell us how wet your pillow is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: The kind of comment that flows at this point is a reflection of the lack of concern by Tories and Liberals for the future of the country.

Let me suggest to government and Conservative members who, noisy though they are, still have a grain of common sense left somewhere, I am sure, that they should take a moment or two to compare what we have recommended in our amendments with the recommendations contained in the major Canadian projects and major Canadian opportunities book produced by a joint effort of business and labour in Canada. I think this is probably a blueprint for the future of this country if it is read, understood, utilized and instituted. I will summarize an interesting article written by Deborah McGregor in the Financial Times of Canada, dated June 22, 1981, I hope she sends me a note thanking me. Part of the heading reads "Canadian content is crucial". Deborah McGregor writes:

> Essentially, the 96-page report is a resounding vote for the use of Canadian content in the $440-billion worth of major projects planned across industries from energy to defence over the next 20 years.

That is exactly consistent with what we are saying. This whole approach is what they are dealing with, and we have to give recognition to that. The article continues:

> It is an unabashedly nationalistic document—

We are all nationalists these days, even the most right wing Conservative is a nationalist in his or her own way.

Mr. Crouse: That is hard to believe.

Mr. McCauley: Not the Conservatives.

Mr. Deans: Let me put it again because I can hear hon. members muttering, and I want to be sure you all hear it. The article reads:

> It is an unabashedly nationalistic document, arguing that emphasizing Canadian content—whether it be in the form of manpower or supplies for the project—is crucial to the country's industrial well-being.

Please note the words "emphasizing Canadian content". The group goes on to explain in its report that there is absolutely nothing wrong with spending your money in your own best interests. They also point out that there is nothing to be ashamed of in taking Canadian tax dollars, which are to be spent in Canada, and using them to build an industrial base for Canadians.

● (2050)

The report goes on to make some recommendations. I see my time is running out but I want to run through these recommendations quickly with you because I can tell from the way you are listening, Mr. Speaker, how interested you are. This is the first recommendation, and I want hon. members to listen because I know they have not read this and I want them to hear it for the first time. The first recommendation is:

> That a special agency be set up, run by labour and business but funded by government, to monitor planning on major projects and to ensure that project sponsors comply with Canadian content guidelines. Chief among those guidelines would be that first preference be given to Canadian owned suppliers in the planning and purchasing for projects.

I would like to see any member stand up and tell me that he does not want to see Canadian industry assisted by Canadian tax dollars developed in Canada. Let him get up and tell me he does not want the benefits of the jobs, and he does not think we should give preference to Canadian companies in the development of the Canadian industrial sector as a result of megaprojects that are, we hope, about to create energy self-sufficiency.

An hon. Member: It's in the bill.

Mr. Deans: The bill does not contain it. The second recommendation is:

> That companies be willing to pay a premium of up to 3 per cent of the total project's cost for Canadian content.

The bill does not contain that. The third recommendation is:

> That Canadians should have full access to top managerial, technical and professional jobs on the projects.

The bill does not contain that. The next recommendation is:

> That where foreign capital is needed for projects, it should come in the form of debt instead of equity, so that Canadians have the fullest opportunity to share in the ownership of the projects.

The bill does not contain that. Finally it is recommended:

> That skill shortages among Canadian workers be improved by a variety of means—

The recommendation goes on to tell us what they are.

To conclude, what I am saying is simply this. We have seen how badly the natural resource base of the country was managed in the past. We can learn from the experience of other countries which have fairly recently come into the oil and energy business and have been able to monitor the losses they have incurred. We can look at this and we can learn. I suggest to this government, before it is too late, that it put into this legislation in explicit terms the guarantees that will make sure Canada benefits from the development of Canada's resources and that they be of lasting benefit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by dealing with the matter that is before us, unlike some other speakers in this debate we have just heard tonight. Let me just outline for the record that the matter before us is a matter of motions that basically amend Clause 10 of Bill C-48. That clause in turn deals with the matter of exploration agreements and the ministerial discretion involved in the issuance of these exploration agreements. I merely wanted to put that on the record to show that very little in legislation is ever new. Any person who has experience in legislative matters or has involved himself in legislation in the provinces of Canada or in the federal Parliament will know these are simply regurgitated provisions from other statutes. Anybody who has dealt with urban planning will recognize these provisions as what is known in that field as "contract planning".

What these provisions do is very simply this: after enacting very complicated statutory provisions with great restrictions and protections, the provisions allow you to simply set them aside, sit down with a person who may be a friend, or a person with whom you can deal at arm's length, and write whatever deal you want to write. That is what an exploration agreement can do. That is why we are concerned with this matter and that is why we want some amendments to make sure that any exploration agreement which is written will be fair and will have the protection of other provisions of the act which check ministerial discretion. That is why we are here tonight.

I could go on and talk about the specifics of the bill, but I am afraid earlier speakers have got me off that subject. I want to deal with the remarks by the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren), because I never heard such a massive distortion of the National Energy Program and the effect it is having and is going to have on Canada and Canadians.

I will dismiss my friend from the NDP to my left by simply saying this. It would be nice to think that all Canadians were willing to sit down and pool all the resources in one pot and divide them up by the number of people in Canada. That is not the way the system works, and it never will work that way. Those people had better start to realize that and they had better start dealing with the practicalities and realities of Canadian life.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosby: Let me tell you that this country was built on initiative and incentive. It was not built on giveaways, it was not built on sharing the wealth, and it will not last for another decade if that is the principle by which we are guided. We have to build incentives into our system, we have to encourage initiative, and we have to get Canadians working. We cannot give our resources away, and there is no reason for those who have worked and earned something to share with those who refuse to work and earn. I will stand on that principle and defend it anywhere in this country.

The hon. member for Etobicoke North, as I indicated, gave a dissertation on the National Energy Program, of which this Bill C-48, the Canada Oil and Gas Act, is an emanation. It prompted me to get the Canadian Parliamentary Guide to have a look at the background of that hon. member. I saw right away that he was once in the diplomatic service. I do not know if that accounts for his kind remarks about the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), but I can say that he certainly is a diplomat and put the best possible light on the effects of the National Energy Program and of Bill C-48 which arises from it.

He is wrong in practically everything he said about the National Energy Program. Let met make it very clear that I am no lobbyist for the oil industry. I am a simple lawyer from Halifax, Nova Scotia. I have spent my time on the legal aid program, I have spent my time on social services, but I have difficulty getting oil companies to deliver oil to my premises on a winter night, the same as do many other Canadians. But I want to say this. The private sector, whether you like it or not, is the sector which has developed the energy system in Canada, and unless that private sector is encouraged to go on with that development, it will certainly not happen. It is as clear as that. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is not going to man one oil rig anywhere. He is not going to bring in one barrel of oil and, in most cases, the people he has put in place to do that do not know any more about the industry than he does. If you do not believe that, go and ask anybody.

An hon. Member: That is absolute baloney.

Mr. Crosby: The hon. member says it is "absolute baloney". Unfortunately the member does not go out to the Alberta oil sands. He does not sit down with the members or representatives of Syncrude to talk to them and find out what their problems are. He does not go to Cold Lake to see what is happening there.

The National Energy Program and Bill C-48 deal with Canada lands. Canada lands, for those who do not realize it are the offshore lands on the east coast of Canada and on the Pacific coast, and the lands in the northern part of Canada in the high Arctic. The rules and regulations which relate to the development of those lands are quite different from the rules and regulations that govern the development of the land in more developed areas. When the parliamentary secretary comes before this House and reads provisions from the Alberta legislation and says that those same provisions are justifiable in relation to an oil rig that is miles off the coast of Canada and that the government should govern exploration in the high Arctic, he is simply not giving the facts, because that is not true. We are not talking about oil rigs in place a few miles from a city like Edmonton, as is the case with Leduc. We are talking about very dangerous and difficult conditions offshore and in the high Arctic.

The legislation which the government is bringing before this House has to stand on its own merits. It is not like any other legislation in Canada. It is not like legislation in Alberta, and the minister cannot justify it on those grounds.

Another aspect of the National Energy Program is Canadianization. As the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) pointed out, everyone is in favour of Canadianization. We would like every company in Canada to be owned by Canadians. We would like every project in Canada to be conducted by Canadians. But is it realistic to expect that at this point in time? Is legislation the way to achieve it? Is that how you encourage people to buy and own things—by passing a law? I do not believe so. You must motivate people to buy, you must encourage them to invest. You should make it clear that Canadianization is good for all Canadians. But you cannot make it happen by passing legislation in Parliament.

What is Canadianization? The government gives us the example of Dome Petroleum. It issued press releases saying that Dome Petroleum, a company exploring in the Arctic, allegedly building supertankers and LNG carriers, doing all sorts of things, is an example of Canadianization. It tells Nova Scotians it is going to build shipyards. It tells people in the Arctic it will bring out gas, develop oil resources, and so on.

The officers of Dome Petroleum said they would follow the National Energy Program and would Canadianize. They said they would set up a company called Dome (Canada) Limited and issue shares to Canadians. This Canadianized company will be developed under the National Energy Program. It says it is going to do things like that because this program can work.

I heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) say that Dome could supply Canada's energy needs if it brought in all the projects it had on the drawing board. We do not need to look any further. Dome Petroleum could solve Canada's energy problems and make Canada energy self-sufficient. The government set up Dome Canada, which marketed its shares to ordinary people across Canada. I am told that people in Alberta mortgaged their houses to buy shares in Dome Canada. Those shares cost $10 each. Today they are worth in the region of $5.50. Is that Canadianization?

You cannot make Canadianization happen by law. Instead, you must encourage it by setting up realistic programs which take into account the realities of Canadian business life. It must happen because people realize and recognize that it is a good thing and want to participate.

We know the value of Canadian ownership. We are Canadians too. We want Canada owned by Canadians, but we want it to come about in a logical manner, a manner consistent with the principles upon which this country was built. It is not simply a matter of legislative draftsmen and a couple of bureaucrats, who think they know something about energy and the oil industry, sitting down and developing a National Energy Program and drafting a legislative measure like Bill C-48.

Unfortunately, there are members in the NDP opposition who embrace the bill and say that it will work and that this is the way to bring about Canadianization.

Mr. Waddell: We have not said that.

Mr. Crosby: It will not work. What we are all trying to do is to achieve energy self-sufficiency for Canada so we will be in a position where we do not have to depend on foreign powers. We do not have to cross oceans to buy on the world markets. We will have all our own energy supplies. Is that not what the members of the New Democratic Party want? Is that not what the government wants? Is that not what every Canadian wants?

An hon. Member: We can have even more.

Mr. Crosby: The question is, how are we to achieve it? In Alberta they have a massive natural resource called the tar sands. They may have to get the tar sands out with equipment bought in West Germany or somewhere like that, but the resource is there. They are getting the oil out and are taking it out of the sands, and it is there now.

An hon. Member: That was the same reasoning which was used to destroy northern Ontario.

Mr. Crosby: They have tons of it. It is there to the tune of 100,000 barrels a day. But they cannot develop it because they cannot get the price for it. It is not economically feasible. The government says it is not going to negotiate. It is not going to give them that price. It is going to keep that development suppressed. There will be no development until the developers negotiate a price agreeable to the Government of Canada. We are talking about dollar bills. Developers want a certain amount of dollars to get that oil out of the ground and into Canadian vehicles and homes.

One can argue, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources argues, that you do not need that much money. I do not know how he knows that they do not need that much money. But if he cannot get the people who are developing the oil sands to carry out the project for that price, and if he still thinks it can be done for that price, why does he not get someone else to do it, if he is correct in his figures? There are businessmen across the world who are only interested in making dollars. But the answer, of course, is that he cannot get anybody, he will not get anybody, and he will not even try. So, if the developers will not accept the price, the project is finished and we will not get energy self-sufficiency from that one source.

That would be all right, Mr. Speaker, if we could utilize other sources, such as the east coast of Canada, the submarine lands off Newfoundland or off Nova Scotia. The submarine lands off the east coast contain massive deposits of hydrocarbons, so they say. I hope it is true. Developers say that in Hibernia the oil is there, it has been found. Yet they are not taking it out of the seabed. They are not taking it from the seabed because it is not worth their while. They are not getting enough money, they say. I do not know whether that is true or not. But neither does the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Speaker, if we are to achieve energy self-sufficiency, which is the whole purpose of any energy program, we have to deal in an honest and sensible way with these problems. The Alberta tar sands project has to go ahead, not for the benefit of the government of Albeta but for the benefit of the manufacturers of Ontario, in order to make it possible to develop the massive machinery that is needed in Canada. These projects simply have to go ahead.

Nova Scotians and people from Prince Edward Island should know that they are affected by these matters, that it is a contribution to the national wealth and the economy. We are all affected. The task of the government is not to railroad Bill C-48 through this House by the force of its majority. The task of the government is to achieve energy self-sufficiency for Canadians. We can do it by developing the Arctic, by developing the Alberta tar sands and by continuing the search and development of oil and gas off the east coast of Canada. It can be done. The question is, why is the government not taking the action which will ensure that these projects are carried out?

Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment briefly on a number of other matters which are affected by this bill. But first I would like to comment on something said by the hon. member for Etobicoke North. The hon. member referred to the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker and said he would have supported the National Energy Program. I can tell the hon. member that it is not so. If the right hon. gentleman were in this House, he would be out of his chair in a flash, and I will tell hon. members why. You will be surprised, Mr. Speaker, to know that I worked for an oil company in 1962 when the right hon. gentleman was prime minister.

● (2110)

Mr. Waddell: I am not surprised.

Mr. Crosby: I worked for legal aid too, a lot longer than you did, son.

Mr. Waddell: That is not true.

Mr. Crosby: The right hon. gentleman implemented a policy by which Canadian oil had to be used west of the Ottawa valley. That oil cost about $10 or $12 when the world price for oil was under $2. He did not quarrel about the price of oil. He developed the Canadian oil industry. The hon. member could not be more wrong. Mr. Diefenbaker developed the Canadian oil industry by providing a price which allowed the industry to bring the oil out of the ground and to develop a viable industry in Alberta, which today is probably saving the Canadian economy.

The hon. member needs a lesson in history. Mr. Diefenbaker was willing to bite those bullets. He was willing to ensure that the Canadian industry was developed, and he was not going to quibble about prices. He was not going to argue with people. It had to be done, and he did it. That is why we have an oil industry today, and the hon. member opposite and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources are doing just the opposite. They are trying to destroy the Canadian energy industry by not taking a realistic view of the price. They are trying to buy off consumers in Nova Scotia and elsewhere with unrealistic policies which relate to pricing, the result of which is that the energy projects which are so necessary to achieving self-sufficiency in energy in Canada are being delayed, discontinued or abandoned. Oil rigs are leaving Canada. There is ample evidence of that. Projects are being delayed. We are not getting on with the business of energy self-sufficiency.
