I believe this legislation is wrong. The minister must accept some leeway in terms of government judgment in the area of the 25 per cent provision. It should have a range or it should have some consideration in the regulations whereby it can vary that 25 per cent so that it would not hamstring all our Canadian private entrepreneurs by virtually forcing a civil servant to sit on the board of directors representing 25 per cent of the company and dictating terms to that company.

That is the critical part of the clause in terms of the Crown's share. It is that the government and the minister have created a fixed and ironclad clause. It says 25 per cent or nothing at all, that it shall always be 25 per cent. Why? Of course the government can vary that percentage. I hope that in certain parts of Canada the development of oil and gas by little companies, for example, in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon, will not be so expensive that only the multinationals can get into the process. I hope the government will provide the incentives for new Canadian companies to get involved in the oil and gas industry in the Northwest Territories and Yukon, and just the other side of the border in British Columbia and north of the province of Alberta.

● (1650)

This is what I rose to speak about today. I am not suggesting that the minister's flexibility should be limited, but if ever there was an area where the government should have some flexibility it is in this particular clause.

Why should it back in on 25 per cent in all cases? If there is 100 per cent Canadian ownership, should it even want to back in at all? It could get its money from royalties, as was done in Alberta. This is why I indicated earlier that the Progressive Conservative government in Alberta scrapped every lease by legislation, changed every lease, and upped the royalties from 16 and two thirds per cent to as high as 50 per cent. There is no question that the federal government could get all the money it wishes through royalty and taxation structures. It does not need money from Canadian companies through the ownership route. The only reason it would get into the ownership route with Canadian companies would be to control the operations and, indeed, the very corporate structure which was set up under Canadian laws to develop oil and gas on Canada lands. This is why I believe the minister should seriously consider a change in the clause respecting the Crown ownership share as well as the Crown back-in share. By the time the minister finalizes this bill, I hope he will have given serious consideration to the idea of some variation in the ownership clause, so that it is not fixed and set in concrete that it shall be 25 per cent, no more and no less. Indeed the minister should have some flexibility. In some cases he should take a zero ownership share, in some cases a 5 per cent ownership share, in some cases a 25 per cent share, and even higher with some of the multinational corporations which have been in our nation for some time and have major stakes in the oil and gas industry.

In conclusion, I should like to say something about multinational corporations. It is so nice and easy to come in after the fact and say, "Somebody owns too much of my industry in my country and, therefore, I want to Canadianize it." I remember working in the Leduc oilfields in 1947 and in 1948 when Atlantic No. 3 spouted and finally caught fire. Who were in the oilfields then? Canadian companies, the Canadian government and the Alberta government—my foot! It was foreign multinationals which brought in capital, technology and manpower to develop the industry. For many years they took out not a penny. They continued to develop the resource until we became self-sufficient in oil and gas in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

What happened then? Governments started to get involved because they wanted more money and a piece of the action. They wanted to get involved in ownership, in influence and control of the corporate structure of the oil and gas industry. What happened in the decade of the 1970s is that self-sufficiency in oil went down the drain. We started to act as a deterrent. We constantly held back development in the oil and gas industry.

When I started my remarks I said that I wanted to see a regime in place now so that the industry could make the nation self-sufficient in oil and gas. We have enormous reserves of hydrocarbons in the nation. There is not a nation in the world which does not look upon Canada with envy in relationship to our energy resources. There are a billion barrels of oil in our oil sands and heavy oil reserves in the west. Earlier I said that something like 70 or 80 billion equivalent barrels of oil are in our offshore; this is now proven by geologists. We have enormous capability yet we are not self-sufficient in oil. We import 350,000 to 400,000 barrels of oil per day, and this will rise. This is a tragedy. This is impossible to accept by any measuring stick in terms of the development of technology during the last century. The record in Canada is shameful. I have no difficulty with the creation of a public-private system. If they want to do it, then let us create a public-private system. But for goodness sake, let us put in place and stabilize rules in such a way that we can become self-sufficient in the shortest possible time.

The House must pass an energy bill fairly soon, but I hope the minister will seriously consider a few more changes to the bill to make it acceptable. Particularly I hope he will give serious consideration to not locking the government or Parliament into a 25 per cent take in both forward and retroactive legislation. I hope the government gives itself some leeway in terms of the ownership share claimed when in fact a find is made. If the government wants money, it can always change the royalty structure, which is not very excessive in the bill. It can always change its taxation system. There is no need to become a 25 per cent government owner of a Canadian company, particularly a small Canadian company.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before recognizing the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), I should like to deal with the late show for this evening.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis)—Air Safety—Request for tabling of reports on emergency locator transmitters; the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain)—VIA Rail—Cuts in service in New Brunswick; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan)—Regional Development—Elimination of Prince Edward Island public service positions, (b) Administration of federally funded programs.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interest in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and Motion No. 23 (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: I do not really know what the applause is for, because I will make a rather brief speech.

Some hon. Members: That is why!

Mr. Nickerson: I will not wave my arms around as I have done on occasion in the past. I will speak briefly to the fundamentals of Motion No. 23 which is before us. Then I would like to say a little about what I consider to be a rather frightening matter—the way Petro-Canada could influence and affect government in those areas of northern Canada within which it will be exploiting resources.

I should like to keep to the exact motion before us. I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) when he spoke on this matter the other day. He certainly did not draw himself back from going on at considerable length and waving his arms. But he pretended that he could not see the difference between this motion and the clause in the bill proposed by the Liberal government. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway is one of the few members of the New Democratic Party who is, at least, semi-literate. He can read for himself and find out exactly where the difference lies. In the case of the proposal put forward by the government, it would exempt from the 25 per cent Crown share only those prior leases upon which production has been established, whereas our motion would expand that provision to include those prior leases upon which significant discoveries had been made.

● (1700)

We must remember that in both circumstances we are dealing with a limited number of properties. If we were only to include those properties on which production had commenced, the only one that immediately springs to mind, with the exception of Kotaneelee, which I will get back to later, are the Norman Wells oil field and the Pointed Mountain gas field.

As we all know, the government already has a 30 per cent share in the Norman Wells oil field so it is not necessary to take an additional 25 per cent. That particular clause is redundant as it affects the Norman Wells field.

If we were to list the number of significant discoveries, we would find that the list is fairly limited. Those cases where it might be difficult to determine whether a significant discovery had been made could be dealt with in the normal course of dialogue between the companies and the people in the employ of the Government of Canada. It is not a matter of dealing with several hundred separate properties but, rather, only one or two.

The real reason we proposed this amendment is that, the way the bill stands now, people will be cheated. They have invested time, effort and money in the search for oil and gas in northern Canada and offshore Canada under a certain set of rules and regulations. They thought they could abide by the word of the government. We could get into an argument about whether the terms under which leases were granted were overgenerous, but I think that is largely beside the point now. Those were the rules as determined by the Government of Canada several years ago when it was necessary to give a good deal of encouragement to people to go into remote areas. If they found a barrel of oil, all they got for it was $1.75! People responded to the challenge put to them by the government and went in at considerable risk to themselves. In a few instances they were successful and I do not think they should be penalized for that.

I was pleased to hear what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. MacLaren) said with respect to the Kotaneelee gas field. I understand from him that amendments already put forward by the government have included the Kotaneelee gas field in the list of properties which would be exempt from the 25 per cent back-in. I am glad that happened because if the things I have said apply to any company, they certainly apply to Columbia Gas which developed that field. It is unfortunate that it is not producing today but, like many other fields in western Canada, it has been shut in. The market does not exist for gas from those particular wells.

When debating Motion No. 21 we said that we accept the idea of a Crown share but only in those cases where it is necessary. If there is a large percentage of Canadian ownership in a particular property already, then it is not necessary for the Crown to grab more.

It would appear that we will not be successful in persuading the government to see the error of its ways and the wisdom of ours, but I think for the sake of fairness, good faith and the future that when people take the government at its word they ought to be assured that the rules will not be changed retroactively. Taking all those things into consideration, I do not see any reason why this amendment should not be acceptable to Parliament.

Now I come to the question of the way in which Petro-Canada, the federal Crown oil company, will operate in the north. I want to examine the part it will play in the government structure.

First of all, if we accept the idea of a Crown share, then there are different ways it can be vested in certain organizations. If the Crown share were to be sold by public tender to Canadian oil companies, that would be one way of dealing with it; if it were to be disposed of in some way to local corporations formed within the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, perhaps under preferential terms, that would also be acceptable to most people. For instance, if it were to be vested in corporations established as a result of land claims settlements, that might be acceptable. If all that interest in all those properties were to be vested in Petro-Canada—and this is obviously the intention of the government—that would bode nothing but ill.

Petro-Canada, which is the chosen instrument of government policy, is, to my way of thinking, entirely suspect. It is important in the eyes of the Liberal government; because the government created it, it has a motherly attachment to it and in order to justify its policies it has, one way or other, to make sure that Petro-Canada, if it does not succeed, at least does not fall by the wayside.

I always question how the government can be both a regulator and an operator at the same time. Surely the government has a legitimate function in laying down the rules and regulations under which oil and gas companies shall operate in federal Crown lands, but when the government, through an instrument such as Petro-Canada, also becomes the operator, then it is very difficult for a distinction to be kept between the regulatory role of government and the exploitative role of government through its holdings in Petro-Canada or like Crown corporations.

So far, Mr. Speaker, all I have said has also been said by many other speakers. Now I come to the rather frightening part and that is the case when, because of the importance of one commercial operation which receives the backing of the Crown and is seen to be very important to the executive as a result of policies it has laid down, the company operates in a particular region and has the possibility of becoming, in effect, the government of that region.

To cite an example, we need only look at the old Hudson's Bay Company which received its royal charter, according to its advertisements, on May 2, 1670. For many years it was not only a commercial operation in Rupertsland in Canada, but also undertook the public government of what is now part of Canada.

I think it is very difficult to have a fair system where one organization is both concerned with commercial exploitation and with providing public government. We can take other examples where similar things have occurred, such as the Dutch East Indian Company in Indonesia which for a long time was virtually the government of the Dutch East Indies. Then there was the British East India Company which for many years governed the British dominions in India. It is generally accepted that government by a commercial organization was not good and was not beneficial to the people so governed. In fact, it is always cited as the worst possible type of colonial exploitation.

• (1710)

In Rupertsland, as time progressed, we no longer had the Hudson's Bay Company as governors. We have gone through a variety of systems to get to the one we have there now. We have what you might describe as an embryonic provincial government there, a government which, if it is allowed to proceed along the road it is going, will become the same as any other provincial government in Canada. It will be a government responsible to the people it governs.

With Petro-Canada there, and with all eyes being upon it, in effect public policy could be made to suit Petro-Canada and not necessarily the people who live there. If the chief executive officer of Petro-Canada comes down and talks to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and says, "We need a little change in regulations here", that change will be made, and whatever the few Canadian citizens in the area have to say through their instruments of government, or through the Members of Parliament they send to Ottawa, might very well be set aside and that which Petro-Canada wants will be put into effect. As bad as the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) might be, I would have a greater degree of confidence in him than I would in government by the chief executive officer of Petro-Canada.

These are some of the reasons northerners are very suspicious of Petro-Canada and treat it as something rather different from other oil companies. We do not have the same problems with Esso, Gulf, BP and all these other companies because they are subject to rule and regulation as laid down by government. People generally believe that when an issue is at stake they will carefully examine the different points of view and those things which are required both by the oil and gas companies, on the one hand, and the general population of the territories on the other. When it comes to Petro-Canada we strongly suspect we will not have a fair hearing.

We can cite as an example of this suspicion of Petro-Canada, the way in which it does operate and might operate in the future, what happened at Fort Good Hope just last summer where Petro-Canada virtually got run out of town.

As an example of how governments might bend the rules to suit one of its Crown agencies, I like to look at the Peace River dam in British Columbia. This is a provincial matter, not a federal one. I understand there were pretty tough rules and regulations laid down by the government of British Columbia concerning the way in which the timber had to be removed and utilized in areas which were to be flooded. The construction of the Peace River dam was behind schedule. It was to flood quite an area and this area had not been logged out. My understanding of what happened there is that B.C. Hydro was told to proceed with flooding that area without the completion of the logging operations. As a result you can go there today and see this half-drowned, decaying timber which should have been cleared. Presumably the people in charge of forest regulations were told not to do anything or say anything about this, just to let things go ahead because that was the provincial priority. I can see the same thing happening in the territories with Petro-Canada, where things will be done because of national priority, with the rules and regulations allowed to slide, not enforced, and the people who live there could suffer considerably.

I have some difficulty and fears also in trying to determine where the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is going to fit into the picture. Progressively over the last few years the Parliament of Canada, the House of Commons and the Senate, have been giving more and more power to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I do not wish to refer to the incumbent in that office at the present time. If you look at what happened in this respect with a particular Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce some 30 years ago, in the 1950s, the late C. D. Howe, you will see that although Mr. Howe was undoubtedly in many respects a great Canadian, with more and more power going to his department and to him as an individual, this was seen by Canadians as a whole as not to be desirable.

I think the same thing is happening with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He may be a great Canadian, but I do not think it is incumbent upon us to hand over any more power to any one individual, however competent he may or may not be.

I am at the stage of conclusion now, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: You had longer than you thought.

Mr. Nickerson: Yes, I have a little bit longer than I originally anticipated, but it is a good speech, you have to admit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: If we look at what I have cited as the worst example of colonial exploitation, the British East India Company operating in the eighteenth century, and at people like Warren Hastings who just went a bit too far even for that particular period and ended up being impeached by another Parliament, you will understand why I am concerned that our Canadian Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources might in future become the Warren Hastings of the north. I suggest that is something we have very carefully to consider. We have to make sure in our legislation that the present incumbent in that position, or any future Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, does not become the Warren Hastings of the north.

Thank you kindly for all your attention.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this debate has been fairly extensive, but how could you expect anything else? This bill produced about 150 government amendments at the committee stage. I have been looking through the reprinted form; and I think the even much bigger Bank Act bill, with which I had a very intimate connection over the past year, saw fewer amendments. This would indicate that perhaps the committee members were tough and the government had to bring in amendments. On the other hand, it may mean that it was such a sloppily prepared bill that the government quickly had to try to repair whatever holes it found. I think, like my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), that this is such a thoroughly bad bill—and we have seen many—that, quite frankly the drafters of it should go right back to the drawing board and start out from square one.

In addition to that, we are faced with some 50-odd private amendments. That too bespeaks a very contentious bill. Clause 28 is a very innocuous looking little clause, but it means ultimately, what I would put as a simile, that the Government of Canada is taking the Canada lands, that is the Northwest Territories and the Yukon and whatever offshore interests it can claim ultimately, and is wiring it up and piping it up as a dairy barn. There it proposes to take the petroleum resources of that vast area, by far the largest part of Canada, and through the pipes effectively take the production of three teats of the cow.

• (1720)

That is what this government has discovered, as did its predecessors; they think up programs and then look for money to support them. They have found themselves with a financial cupboard which is bare. The government is $16 billion in the red. Inflation is into double digits and is continuing to rise. This is not because of high interest rates; interest rates are but a reflection of inflation.

What was the inspiration for the National Energy Program, for the raid on Alberta's resources and, for that matter, on all three western provinces? It is just a straight out-and-out power grab by a money-short, spendthrift, bankrupt government here in Ottawa, simply because it has discovered that petroleum is another money producer for it.

What will be the result of the particular clause we are discussing which embodies the whole spirit of the bill? Here is one resource belonging to the people of Canada in the provinces and the territories. In passing, may I say God help the territories should they ever become provinces, because there will be nothing left for them. Alberta and Saskatchewan obtained absolute ownership of their natural resources in the 1930s, something which had been withheld from them since 1905.

We know that politically provincehood is coming for a good part of the territories, for the Yukon and certainly for the western Arctic. What will be the fate of their people? They, like all the other provinces, will have entitlement to their resources but they will be handed a sucked-out lemon.

I have heard hon. members on the other side of the House say that even if the Yukon and part of the territories were to become provinces, the Liberals would never give those new provinces their resources. The government wants to hang on to them to provide revenue for its spendthrift ways. It is not the north that will take all the money. Under Bill C-48 the north and offshore are destined to become the milch cow of the federal government. There certainly will be no benefit for the people. It is all intended to feed the insatiable appetite of an incompetent, money-spending, crazy government.

We talk about $60 million of estimates. And that is after netting; in fact, spending is much greater. So are the revenues much greater than what appear on the books. To that extent the people of this country and members of this Parliament on both sides of the House are hoodwinked. We will be hoodwinked until we can get better estimates and more information presented to this House.

In addition to the interest which the government may have as owner and from what it has managed to reserve unto itself by any Crown reserves or lease, Clause 27 gives the Crown another 25 per cent. That is outright confiscation and we have seen it before. We have seen it in the renegotiation by legislation of leases in Alberta where the Crown interest in oil and gas was bumped up by legislation. That has the same effect. They were into producing leases, and it was a means of giving the province of Alberta a greater share of the revenue. The Government of Canada was moving in with both hands and feet—and a few tank cars thrown in for good measure—to get as much as it could. But who was paying for all this? The people of Canada were paying for it. That is, of course, with the exception of the oil which was shipped to the United States on which the Government of Canada imposed an export tax.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Lambert: In the case of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, we saw the government moving in on a resource and confiscating the greater part of it. It is true that one was an owner and the other was not—it was just a contingent of an overriding tax.

As my colleague for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) pointed out, this clause indicates there is a deep and clear distinction between what is a producer and what is a discovery. There are no producers other than the Imperial Oil wells in the western Arctic and a small gas field in the western Arctic. There is nothing else. The Beaufort Sea, Hibernia and Sable Island—all these are discovery lands, and they have been discovered as the result of activities of private individuals who have invested hundreds of millions of dollars. One only has to go to Tuktoyaktuk and out into the Beaufort Sea to see what the oil companies have invested there. I have not had the opportunity to see what there is off the coast of Newfoundland, but in that case the Government of Canada says: "That is fine; you have discovered oil and you have discovered gas. We will take 25 per cent right off the top." That is with respect to lands on which there have been discoveries, not production, because that element in production is so small it can be ignored. The only thing I hope for is that somehow or other the Imperial Oil lands on the Mackenzie really show a great deal of production. That would be ironic because by the terms of Clause 27 all those lands would be excluded from this grab. But surely to goodness those people who have participated in the development of the Beaufort Sea, the Arctic high islands off the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador and, to the extent that the federal government may be able to prove some interest in offshore lands of Nova Scotia or British Columbia, a further 25 per cent will be confiscated because those lands are not yet in production. So, I fully support the amendment put forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson).

• (1730)

This bill establishes one thing, and the government must recognize the importance of what it is trying to do through this bill. The Government of Canada is taking unto itself that which belongs to the people of Canada, and that includes the people of those provinces who are not producers, and it takes far more from the potential of the western section of the Northwest Territories, namely, the western Arctic. Perhaps I should not write off the eastern Arctic. With advancing technologies and more searching it could be that oil and gas in marketable quantities will be discovered in the eastern Arctic. However, let us deal with Yukon and the western Arctic at the present time. One must not sell that region short. I went to Yellowknife in 1940. The difference between the Yellowknife of 1940 and the Yellowknife of today is remarkable. Add another 40 years of development in the western Arctic, and that region will be much further advanced than were Saskatchewan and Alberta at the time they achieved provincehood. As a matter of fact, I do not suppose the western Arctic has many fewer people than Alberta did in 1904 when the Government of Canada consented to the formation of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. If I remember correctly, my native city of Edmonton had a population in 1904 of between 2,000 and 3,000—including stray dogs!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There was a Liberal party even then.

Mr. Lambert: Yes, and it finagled the election in 1905. Be that as it may, it is not the lack of people that should hold back the western Arctic and the Yukon. I was in the western Arctic last summer, I was in Yellowknife and Tuktoyaktuk, and I could see that the people there want to have control of their affairs. We know what the administration is doing in the Yukon. The Yukon is not far from achieving provincehood. I say not far; it could be ten years, but during the course of history a ten-year period is relatively short. I would love still to be part of this operation here on the day we can say that the Yukon and the western Arctic shall be given provincial status. However, if we let Clause 27 and Clause 28 operate freely, the Government of Canada will try to pump that region dry so that it cannot turn over any inheritance. Those resources have been held in trust. They are undeveloped. They are held in trust by the Government of Canada until there shall be sufficient peoples to develop them for the people who will come to establish a province. The Government of Canada is behaving like a pair of rascal equity lawyers—or chancery lawyers; I have to be careful here—who are out to despoil the estate before it is turned over to the heirs. That has happened many a time it is said. It is the greatest shame that any assets should be left in any estate to turn over to the heirs!

The same philosophy applies in this Canada lands bill: it would be a shame to turn over any of the lands of the Territories and offshore to the provinces if there are any resources left in them.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with Motion No. 23 as it pertains to Clause 28, and as I did in the previous discussion on the prior motion, I would like to discuss some of the different philosophical concepts which are being presented in the House.

With the passage of Bill C-48, the proposed Canada Oil and Gas Act, in a few weeks the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) will acquire the largest mandate any federal minister has had since C. D. Howe wielded the powers of the War Measures Act and the Munitions and Supply Act during the last war. You do not create an empire without intending to stay around to rule it. What an empire is going to be built with this legislation! With a few minor exceptions, the energy department becomes the dominant government agency in all the Canada lands. From Ottawa, the department will set the pace of development, control the investment climate, regulate the environmental regime and determine the penalties and compensation for environmental damage.

● (1740)

It is quite a brew of conflicting interests, development versus the environment and native peoples, which is why it has all been handed over to the energy mandarins. It is easier to stifle conflict coming from one department rather than three or four. Already the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has co-opted environmental researchers from Environment Canada and Fisheries and Oceans.

These people will no doubt continue their research and make recommendations, but it is unlikely they will be taken seriously in their new offices. The whole thrust of the National Energy Program is to get that oil and gas to market as soon as possible.

This is why Bill C-48 stipulates that exploration permits will last only five years rather than the traditional 20 years. If a company does not move with its development, the government will find someone who will.

This is also why the government is allowing 93 cents of every dollar invested by Canadian companies to be written off. The large companies, the only ones which can afford exploration activities, will go along with the strict ownership regime, not only because they are being underwritten by the taxpayer, but also because they know the government's zeal for the National Energy Program will sustain then until they are making profits.

The government's commitment to such rapid development of the Canada lands may not even leave time for superficial environmental impact studies. The last ten years could have been used to conduct the necessary basic research on the Arctic environment. Standards might have been in place and policy options available to deal with resource development. Instead, the time was frittered away, and now the government is going in blind.

Compensation for spills will be determined by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, but because so little is known about the incremental effects of spills, there is no way of measuring the damage. The government will learn about Arctic oil pollution from experience rather than research, and the wildlife and the Inuit will have to shift for themselves.

The economic motives behind this desperate rush are understandable, but they are not justifiable. The Canada lands belong to the federal government. Therefore, the jurisdiction and revenues do not have to be shared with the provinces. If the returns match the investments and the estimates run into hundreds of billions of dollars, then the federal government's fiscal problems will be solved.

The investments will also have spin-off effects in terms of jobs in the south, new technologies and, through exports, an improved balance of payments. In political terms, a resurgent economy and a healthy treasury would put Ottawa back on top of the federal-provincial heap.

Perhaps all these possibilities explain the silence of the three ministers who ought to be concerned with the downside effects of Bill C-48. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) recommended over 100 changes, mostly environmental, to Bill C-48. None has been accepted, and the minister has not even participated in this debate. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) has quietly watched the emasculation of his department. Maybe he will show some concern for the Arctic environment after it is damaged. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) seems more interested in buying off the natives than in representing their interests in cabinet.

There is another major concern with Bill C-48. If Hibernia and the Beaufort Sea prove to be "elephant" fields, then the development of the Canada lands will surely snowball. Not only will that wreak havoc in the Arctic, it will also perpetuate our addiction to fossil fuels. While the rest of the world is conserving and developing more energy-efficient sources, Canada could be left behind. As an example, the excellent task force report on alternative energy is doing nothing but gathering dust, even though a lot of excellent work went into the development of it.

Apart from such foreseeable problems, the most worrisome aspect of Bill C-48 is the further concentration of unchecked, unaccountable bureaucratic power. Far too often we have seen in this chamber what power does as it relates to the Canadian people.

We have a number of other motions pertaining to the authority of the minister as it applies to this legislation to which we hope the House will give serious consideration. I look forward to participating directly when those motions are before the House.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act. In particular, I will refer to Clause 28 which allows the government to back in on oil companies on Canada lands.

As the provision stands under this bill, the government will be able to confiscate or take over 25 per cent of the interest of the oil companies. Basically it says the government will be able to take over 25 per cent interest on all discoveries prior to December 31, 1981. The amendment presented by the Conservatives suggest that no Crown share is reserved out of a former lease in which significant or commercial discoveries of oil or gas were made on or before October 28, 1980, or in respect of any interest that succeeds from that former lease.

It is obvious that in the north only two areas are protected by the government under this amendment, the Norman Wells area and the Pointed Mountain area. All other discoveries in the north will now be confiscated to the extent of 25 per cent. The government believes that this is justified under the incentive plans it has given to these companies over the years. However, if it is obvious it can do it with the oil and gas industry, it can also do it to other industries. The mining industry is looking at this very carefully. Will companies, whether Canadian or foreign, put money into the mining industry in the future if this type of confiscation can take place?

By taking a 25 per cent interest in all discoveries, the government is simply saying that it does not want to become involved in the exploration. All it wants is a 25 per cent interest in the discoveries. It only wants the successful wells. How many wells will the oil companies have to drill in order to find a successful one? The present ratio may be one in three or one in five. But the government is not interested in that. It is only interested in successful wells. It is prepared to confiscate 25 per cent under a carried interest, which means basically that the oil companies will carry the government for 25 per cent up until the time they have a discovery and are asking for a development permit. At that time, the government is prepared to go into a working interest and pay them two and a half times their portion of the exploration costs. As I mentioned a minute ago, Mr. Speaker, if the success ratio is one in three or one in five and the average cost of a well on Canada lands is $50 million each, what will be the ultimate end to this? Obviously, these companies cannot afford this meagre type of compensation. In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, and it may come as a surprise to many people, the government does not have to consider its working interest. It may take up the carrying interest or its portion of the development of the 25 per cent and sell it. It does not have to consider its interest. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, the government can do nothing. After all this time, it could decide it does not want to get involved in it if it cannot sell it. Moreover, if it sells it, it goes to public auction and someone could buy it for $1. That is some type of a partner for the oil industry, Mr. Speaker.

• (1750)

Let me briefly refer to the Canada lands. I shall first refer to the Arctic. The government says that they want to maintain Canadian content on Canadian lands. Let us look at that Canadian content right now.

In the Arctic, basically, we have the Arctic Island exploration group. It is 58 per cent Canadian owned. The second one, Panarctic Oils Ltd., is basically Canadian. It is controlled by the Canadian government. The third group, Dome Petroleum Limited and partners, is basically Canadian. Certainly they have foreign partners and the partners have brought in needed capital, but there is no capital going back home and no oil going out yet. The government says that they want to maintain or increase the Canadian content.

Let us look at the Labrador coast, Mr. Speaker. Is that foreign controlled? Is the development done by foreigners? No, it is done by Canadians. Unfortunately, in this case it is Petro-Canada. Let us look at the Davis Strait area. The lead partner in that area is also Petro-Canada. The lead partner in Hibernia is Mobil Oil Canada Ltd., a foreign-owned oil company which has been in Canada for many years. Ninety-nine per cent of the people who worked for Mobil Oil Canada Ltd. are not Americans but Canadians. Yet the government is threatening their jobs in this bill. Let us look at Sable Island. Once again Mobil Oil Canada Ltd. is the lead partner, but Petro-Canada has a 30 per cent interest in the company.

Of the five basic areas, foreign oil companies control only two areas. For the government to suggest they want to increase the Canadian content and to have more Canadian companies in the north is, I suggest, strictly a sham and a falsehood.

The reason the government brought forth this bill was to create self-sufficiency, so to speak. Where have we heard that before? In 1974 the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stood in the House and said, "We will have self-sufficiency by 1980". Where is it? Do we have more oil production? Of course not. We do not have self-sufficiency. Everyone knows that but the Prime Minister who is busy jetting around the world.

An hon. Member: Come on.

Mr. Wright: An hon. member disputes that. Perhaps he would like to rise and say that the Prime Minister is not doing that.

Canada at present consumes 1.8 million barrels of oil per day. We produce 1.4 million barrels of oil per day. At the present time we import 400,000 barrels of oil per day.

The government says we must have self-sufficiency by 1990. What does the National Energy Board say? The National Energy Board says that we will consume approximately 1.8 million barrels of oil a day by 1990.

Why will this not change? It will not change because of oil substitution and conservation. These are two big "ifs" in not consuming more oil.

Assuming the National Energy Board is correct, it says that we are consuming 1.8 million barrels of oil per day and will be producing approximately 700,000 barrels of oil a day by 1990, unless a major discovery occurs before that time. I will point out in a few minutes why no such discovery is forthcoming, nor can there be. If we are consuming 1.8 million barrels of oil a day and we are producing 700,000 barrels of oil a day, obviously we are importing 1.1 million barrels of oil per day.

In eight years we will increase our production by 1.1 million barrels of oil a day, and in 34 years to date we will have produced in Canada 1.7 million barrels of oil a day. Yet in eight years we will produce, in addition to what we now have, 1.1 million barrels of oil a day.

An economist with the Royal Bank of Canada recently said that Canadians will need $300 billion by 1990 to finance energy. This represents 20 per cent of all financing in Canada. If we need that amount of money, Mr. Speaker, obviously we will have to rely on our friends and neighbours and on many investors from foreign countries who may want to invest in Canada because of conditions that exist in their own countries. However, we are not doing anything to encourage them. In fact, we are discouraging them from coming to Canada. Instead of bringing their money to Canada, they are taking it out.

Over $8 billion net left this country last year. What benefit did we derive from that? The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) said, "Yes, we're going to buy the oil companies but we'll get a direct benefit". The direct benefit is $45 million in the dividends we get in one year.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1) I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned for dinner I was discussing the atrocious situation which the government created a year ago. I stated something to the effect that approximately $8 billion had left Canada because of the national energy policy.

Mr. Nielsen: It was $10 billion.

Mr. Wright: Actually the amount is a lot higher than $8 billion. It is closer to $17 billion. However, there has been an inflow of funds created by the high interest rates in Canada. This is the only reason there has not been more of a net outflow. It is unbelievable what Canadians received for the $8 billion or, as one of my colleagues just said, the $10 billion. What have they received? As I mentioned, they received approximately $42 million in the dividends from the shares of the companies they took over. It is a great benefit to Canada, but at the same time we lost $1.6 billion in interest which had to be paid to foreigners to finance the takeovers, and not one barrel of oil was found. This was all in the name of Canadianization but it was really nationalization.

As I stated before, we need 1.1 billion barrels of oil by 1990 to be self-sufficient. This means that we must find approximately 140,000 barrels per day each year until 1990. This works out to approximately 12 wells producing 10,000 barrels per day. A discovery of that amount would be no mean feat in Canada. Over the next eight years we must find, on the average, one discovery per month which yields at least 10,000 barrels per day. I do not know whether anyone can name one discovery in the last year from which we can get 10,000 barrels per day out of the ground or out of the ocean. I am not aware of any discovery into which we can pipe to obtain 10,000 barrels per day.

If we are to be self-sufficient, how will we get all this oil? We could look at conventional oil means on the lands in the provinces. At the present time we know that that production is declining at the rate of 100,000 barrels per day for each year. It has been doing this for a number of years, and it will continue to do so. Also we know that there have been significant finds in the Arctic. By "finds" they mean discoveries which may be commercial. How long will it take to get that oil out? We know that it took up to ten years in the North Sea and that we do not have a commercial find in the Arctic at the present time.

Let me turn to the east coast. We have seen discoveries there, but we do not have a commercial oil field; there is no such thing. The government tells us that there is good potential for oil off the east coast. I should like to give an illustration of the problem. If the people in the Press Gallery represented the ocean floor and this august body were beneath the ocean floor and an iceberg went through 300 feet above, there would be nothing left of this area because the iceberg would scour 20 to 50 feet below the ocean floor. We do not have the technology to retrieve oil from there, but the government is saying that it can do it. Hopefully some day we will but it will not be by 1990.

• (2010)

In 1947 Canadians controlled our oil industry; by 1970, 90 per cent of it was foreign owned and by 1979, 70 per cent was foreign owned. In effect, the people who came here to discover the oil, because we asked them to, are now being told to go home. Not only are they being told to go home but in many cases they are having to sell out at fire-sale prices. The government is telling them when to sell and what they can sell for. That is an atrocious approach. It was brought about, basically, because a socialist government is running this country, not a Liberal government as it calls itself. We must put that label on the government once and for all; it is a socialist government which is not interested in free enterprise or private industry. The Prime Minister has said that at one time or other in the future every business will have to come to the government for assistance. That would be a terrible situation. I do not think that we as parliamentarians can allow some of our basic rights to be uprooted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, this it the first time that I have had the opportunity to participate in the debate on this legislation. I have heard many members on this side of the House describe the serious effects that passage of this bill will have on the future development of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and upon the lives of those who make their permanent homes there. I have heard concern expressed with respect to the rights of our native people in northern Canada, an area which comprises 40 per cent of the country's territory. There are only three members from above the 60th parallel in this House, two of whom sit in this party, and one, the first Inuit to be elected to this chamber, who sits with the NDP.

In the north we have the conviction—and we always try to get the message across when we speak in debates such as this—that we, north of 60, do not matter very much as Canadians. We only occupy three seats in the House. I often wonder what would happen to legislation such as the bill now before us if all the members from the province of Quebec came from the northern areas of Canada. I do not think this bill would stand much of a chance of surviving if that were the case. Indeed, to coin a northern phrase, I do not think the bill would stand a snowball's chance above 60 of surviving.

Before I get too far into my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to put on record a copy of a letter which I received from the chamber of commerce in the Yukon which was addressed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) who is supposed to be the protector of the rights of northern Canadians. The letter is dated October 23, 1981.

Before reading the letter, I might mention that the native organizations of both northern territories, the mining organizations of both northern territories, the business organizations including the chambers of commerce of both northern territories, all appeared before the committee that examined the provisions of this bill and, without a single exception, no northerner had a kind word to say about it.

Because of its concern, on October 23 the chamber of commerce in Yukon wrote one last appeal to its so-called protector, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, which reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Munro:

Whitehorse Chamber of Commerce would like to reiterate its opposition to Bill C-48 in its present form.

The Chamber is concerned that the bill could have very negative effects on the economies of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and that it may very well hamper the growth of many northern businesses.

Furthermore, Bill C-48 has no provision for local control over development. Whitehorse Chamber of Commerce urges you to amend the legislation to give Yukoners involvement in decisions that affect the territory.

Whitehorse Chamber of Commerce once again requests that the legislation be amended to provide northerners with resource revenues produced in the north.

They can kiss that idea goodbye forever. The letter goes on:

The Chamber of Commerce strongly urges you to amend Bill C-48 before final approval of the legislation is granted.

Yours very truly,

President
Whitehorse Chamber of Commerce

That kind of submission has been made repeatedly, Mr. Speaker. A copy of the letter also went to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde).

I express these concerns as the member representing the Yukon, an area which covers 207,000 square miles of Canada of which the federal government has deigned to give some 368 square miles for disposition into private hands. So the government has frozen almost 200,000 square miles of land. You cannot buy a lot, you cannot buy an acreage for farming, you cannot buy a square inch of land as a Yukoner. This country was built on the idea of acquiring, owning and developing land by private individuals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: To coin another northern phrase, this bill will forever put that concept in the deep freeze. There are even more dangers of national concern with respect to this legislation, Mr. Speaker. The bill is to be viewed in the context of a segment, and only a segment, of the government's National Energy Program. The government has not yet seen fit to disclose the total ramifications of that program. Since much of its import remains shrouded in the bowels of the Langevin Building on Wellington Street, members are at a decided disadvantage when assessing and discussing the total impact of the legislation.

I have been here long enough, Mr. Speaker, to sense danger in what I see in this bill. The hon. member who just spoke mentioned icebergs. We do not know whether we are seeing the tip of the iceberg in this bill or the iceberg itself—or perhaps even an ice age in energy development in Canada. Certainly when we consider the flight of capital and business skills and acumen and equipment from this country as a result of measures of this nature, we know that we might as well be approaching an ice age in energy development.

This is a massive piece of legislation which contemplates nothing less than direct government intervention in oil and gas exploration, not merely in a regulatory sense but as a major player with a large pile of chips to be bought and paid for by the other players.

If that were all the bill did, it would be suspect on that ground alone but that is only one aspect of a program which remains to be disclosed in its entirety. When one considers that and senses the danger in that, it becomes more than merely disturbing.

● (2020)

Taking the bill as it now stands, as has been said on this side on more than one occasion, it represents in our Canadian history an unprecedented intervention in the area of free enterprise by the federal government. It is not going to stop there and that is obvious. If this bill is the thin edge of the wedge, one fears, not simply wonders, what the whole wedge will be like. Knowing this government's proclivities, led by the man it is led by, toward ever-increasing state control, ever-penetrating state intervention, ever-augmented meddling and tinkering, its grandiose schemes, illusory programs, gung-ho tilting at self-manufactured and constituted windmills, one can only view this massive takeover legislation with not simply a measure of uneasiness but with downright fear.

It is so viewed by those in the petroleum industry. There is ample evidence of that despite the repeated, consistent efforts of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources before the summer recess to pooh-pooh those facts disclosed to him by those of us on this side. It is so viewed by the people of the north, and you will have to accept my word for that. We regard this intervention as one being accomplished by a government shod in hobnailed boots which are trampling over all our future aspirations to become a meaningful part of this country. It is so viewed by Canada's native peoples, the northern Indian people and the Inuit. The Inuit Tapirisat made representations before the committee to that effect. They regard it as a sloughing off; nay, an outright betrayal of native rights, and in that they have the support of 100 per cent of those Canadians who live above the 60th parallel.

Figures released a week or ten days ago show the extent of this government's involvement in gas and oil at present. There is no doubt in my mind whatsoever, and there should not be in any other mind, that with this control bill, and that is what it is, to back them, the present involvement, considerable as it is, will pyramid in the usual grandiose way of all of this government's undertakings.

One only has to reflect on that pyramidal syndrome when one considers the deficit when they took office in 1968 and the deficit today. This kind of legislation has much to do with that, and I will get to that if I have time at my disposal.

Through Petro-Canada and the Canada Development Corporation this government now has holdings in Panarctic Oils of 45 per cent, Westcoast Transmission of 25.2 per cent, Syncrude of 17 per cent, Alsands Energy of 16 per cent, the Arctic Pilot Project of 37.5 per cent, Petrofina of 100 per cent, Canstar Oilsands of 50 per cent, and it is involved in the Polar Gas Project. They try to set us at ease over here, but they are not just in bed with but married without the benefit of clergy to those to my left who at least, Sir, are honest about their political philosophies, and that is more than I can say for that honourable tribe over there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Let us look at the Canada Development Corporation for a moment. It has holdings in CDC Oil and Gas and the Aquitaine Company of Canada Ltd., and this is in addition to that long list I have already disclosed. This activity, already considerable, will multiply—will burgeon—when this bill becomes law because the government automatically becomes owner of 25 per cent of all new fields. My colleagues to the left over here want that to be 50 per cent. This has been described as confiscatory by the Canadian oil industry, and that is putting it mildly. I like to describe those who support this legislation for what they really are—carpetbaggers. In what other area of national enterprise, I ask hon. members opposite, does the federal government take on itself to award itself 25 per cent ownership without compensating those who are licensed to develop and explore it?

It adds up to this: You boys, they say over there, do the work, take the chances, take the risks, spend the money, and we are going to grab the profit. The bill itself recognizes the injustice of this by providing incentives specifically in compensation for the 25 per cent grab. That provision, however, does not remove the heavy hand of government control from the exploration helm, and this obviously is the real purpose of the measure, to revert to the state an element of direct control and intervention in the day to day operations of this industry.

The worrying thing is that the measure of state control inherent here would do credit to a government in the iron curtain countries. And that may not be all; taken in conjunction with the other elements of the so-called National Energy Program, the whole of which remains to be exposed, the result may be disquieting indeed to believers in the free enterprise system itself and to those of us who place a value on individual initiative and entrepreneurship. In fact, as I have already pointed out, and many on this side have, the result will be the exact opposite of the government's declared intention. Rather than stimulating exploration and the development of these resources with which this industry is concerned, the catch-all legislation now being considered before us, this catch-all measure of state control, will dampen and deaden the industry by destroying initiative and by hampering free enterprise.

It does not stop there. This one small segment of the over-all scheme of the government will bring into being—and we have become very accustomed to this happening with everything this government has been doing in the last 12 years—hordes of additional public functionaries whose job will be to apply the vast incunabulum of regulations which will harass and beset those whose task it is to bring this nation into a state of energy self-sufficiency in the future. Believe me, no one in Canada more than we who live in the north is more familiar with that process. This vast apparatus of government intervention in a highly skilled uncertain area of national development will have the effect of slowing down the stride toward self-sufficiency which was actually begun during the very short time we were in office a little over a year ago.

● (2030)

The difference was that elaborating our policy, we worked with those in the field whose knowledge of operation was not based on theoretical economic considerations or government programming criteria but on hard knowledge of resource development.

I ask the rhetorical question, what consultation did they have with the industry before placing this measure before us? I can tell you there was not one scintilla of consultation or any advice sought from those in the industry and from those in the population generally above the 60th parallel. Its idea of consultation is to make the decision, inform those affected and ask, "Well, what do you think of this?" If these people say they do not like it, that it is not quite right, that is too bad. This is the way it is going to be. That is the government's idea of consultation. That is yet another reason why this measure must be viewed with suspicion as the opening wedge leading to total federal government control over the energy industry in this country.

Already this government's interference in the oil industry, as many members on this side have pointed out, has led to a disastrous flight of capital from the country in the first nine months of 1981. Month by month, week by week, almost daily the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was being bombarded with these statistics. He was brushing them aside. But in the first nine months of 1981, the removal of capital from Canada has reached, not $8 billion but $10 billion as a result of measures such as this. This massive outflow, much of it attributed to fear and uncertainty on the part of the oil industry, has threatened the Canadian dollar and has resulted in the postponement of important energy projects, indeed, from what we are told by members representing those areas, the abandonment of one or more of them such as the Cold Lake heavy oil project. These projects are indispensable to Canada's future energy plans. They are being deliberately sabotaged by measures such as this.

A second and equally important effect has been to put off all hope of energy self-sufficiency in the foreseeable future. That is massively evident to anyone who does not even know anything about the oil industry, despite the continued assurances of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and others over there. As a matter of fact, because of the ill-timed and blundering interference of the government, there is indeed no foreseeable future.

I believe I have another 15 minutes, Mr. Speaker, but I see you are gesturing toward your watch. I still have time, do I not?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time accorded to members for debate is 20 minutes. I am sure the House would want to grant unanimous consent to the hon. member if he wanted to take a minute to wrap up his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: I thank hon. members for their indulgence. I wanted to continue by saying that the ministers, as I have observed them throughout the discussion of their energy policy, talked glibly, even musically—and I love listening to the minister of energy when he speaks of the National Energy Program—about Canadianization. That is a crock of rhubarb, and you know it over there. What it really is—I would like to be free to speak as a Yukoner here but they expect more of me when I am here than to speak as bluntly as I do at home. What it is is nationalization, nationalization of the industry. That is an interesting word, in the bright lexicon of the Liberal Party, the party which calls itself the Liberal Party. I maintain it lost that status, philosophically, in 1968. However, what Canadianization means is state control. That is what this kind of legislation is aimed at. The government identifies Canadian ownership of resources with ownership by the federal government and management by the Liberal Party. That is how their thought process operates. Canadianization means state control through companies deliberately set up to achieve that objective. For example, there is PetroCan which is staffed by, I could say, Liberal Party hacks, but I do not want to arouse any resentment over there. Their major qualification for sitting on the board of directors of Petro-Canada is subservience to the wishes of the Liberal Party. I could name names, but again I do not want to lower the level of this debate.

An hon. Member: You just did.

Mr. Nielsen: This is clearly understood in the United States where the so-called Canadianization policy is seen for exactly what it is, a policy of government control and intervention worthy of a banana republic without the bananas. The evidence of that is to be seen every day now south of the border in the manner in which our actions are being viewed down there. On this basis, an appropriate campaign song, I would suggest, for the Liberal Party in the next election—the sooner the better—might be, "Yes, we have no bananas, we only have Pierre."

The economic climate in this country, which has declined visibly and dangerously in response to the centralization policies of this government, has proven discouraging to foreign capital and has aroused the anger of other countries, particularly our best trading neighbour. The government's failure to deal with inflation in a rational and sensible manner has perhaps been the most visible cause of the lack of confidence.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has one plan, one policy, one program; simply to ride out inflation on the backs of low-income Canadians. This kind of legislation has put that sort of policy, or lack thereof, into effect. It is measures such as this, and there are more to come, just as we have had already, that are the reason we have inflation and misery. It is the reason we have usurious interest rates. It is why young Canadians face a dismal future unless, of course, they are invited to share some of the palatial homes of the members of the Liberal cabinet and some of their aides who seem to have no trouble at all in getting mortgages at no interest and repayment terms that I have never seen in my 30 years of legal practice. That is why capital is leaving this country.

The irony, Mr. Speaker, is that much of it is Canadian capital. This legislation deserves utter and complete condemnation. It never should have seen the light of day. As a northerner on behalf of all northerners, I appeal to the government to have second thoughts about imposing this bill upon us. My concerns must be directed to the over-all national disaster that this kind of legislation, if passed, will visit on our future development generally and on one specific industry particularly.

I would like to thank hon. members for their indulgence, even though I did not get through all my notes. I hope to have the pleasure of participating again before the debate on the bill is completed.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to congratulate my colleague from the Yukon and House leader for his contribution to this debate. It is much appreciated and very wise in terms of the advice and observations offered. I hope some hon. members on the other side were paying attention to what was being said.

● (2040)

As the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and other members of this party have indicated in their speeches, we are unalterably, totally, unequivocally, absolutely and 100 per cent opposed to confiscation by the Crown of privately owned assets. We consider that to be immoral, improper, unjustifiable and the kind of thing that is worthy only of the basest of tyrannies and dictatorships and of the kinds of banana republics described by the hon. member for the Yukon. There is no precedent for this anywhere in the democratic world, albeit there is only a small handful of democratic nations on this earth. Fewer than 20 per cent of the nations belonging to the United Nations are in fact democratic, but we are supposedly democratic, and there is no example in any democratic country of the kind of confiscation described in Bill C-48 and partially in Clause 28 which we are trying to address in Motion No. 23 currently before the House which seeks to amend Clause 28 of this bill. This bill provides for the immoral stealing of privately owned assets by the Crown. Twenty-five per cent of those lands held by industry or individuals in the so-called Canada lands are to be vested in the Crown, and the Crown may transfer them to Petro-Canada.

If this bill goes through unamended—and I fervently hope that will not be the case—and Petro-Canada is given all the lands called for by this legislation, the 25 per cent of existing Canada lands plus what Petro-Canada already has, the Crown corporation will have exploration lands under its control for exploration for the oil and gas thereunder, hopefully, amounting to some 135 million acres.

Let me put that in perspective. Exxon Corporation, the largest oil company in the world on a global basis around the entire earth, has a total of about 130 million acres. Our Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, will have under its control more acreage than Exxon Corporation, the largest oil company in the world, which is many, many times larger than Petro-Canada. Whether we hate it or like it, we have to admit that Exxon is a pretty successful oil company. If Petro-Canada were to have the same number of geologists, geophysicists and engineers per acre to explore this area properly as Exxon has—that is, if Petro-Canada is to do as effective a job of exploring this land as Exxon does of its global lands—then, in downtown Calgary, for the new headquarters Petro-Canada is building on a square block, a building of 853 storeys would have to be built to accommodate these people. That is what would be required in terms of staff and office space in order to accommodate the number of people necessary to undertake an adequate exploration of the land we are stealing from the private sector to give to Petro-Canada via Bill C-48. I do not hesitate to say that my ten-year-old daughter would say, "Gee, Dad, I don't think that makes a whole lot of sense." There are enough backbenchers opposite whose collective experience and wisdom is at least equal to that of my ten-year-old daughter: I would like to think that, but I hesitate to do so.

The motion we have before us, Motion No. 23, would amend Clause 28. Clause 28 says that the federal government will only steal, or confiscate, 25 per cent of those lands upon which there was no oil or gas production prior to December 31, 1980. Originally the bill said 1976, but it was amended to read 1980. Motion No. 23 in the name of my colleague, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), merely amends Clause 28 to say that the state—Big Brother, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and Petro-Canada, all those wonderful people who are confiscating those lands—will only take 25 per cent of lands upon which there has been no discovery of oil and gas prior to December 31, 1980.

The difference is very simple. The state insists on confiscating. As I indicated, there is no precedent in the democratic world for that kind of theft, but we are setting precedents with this government, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of which claims he believes in private enterprise, even while stealing private property from the private sector he supposedly admires.

However, if this government insists on stealing, or confiscating that land, we suggest that at least there should be some question of equity. The situation is that, with respect to Canada lands, provincial lands or anywhere else, an oil company, an individual, a group of oil companies, or what have you, wishes to undertake an exploration program in an area because its geologists say that perhaps there is some oil and gas thereunder. If provincial lands are involved, the company bids for the land. If federal lands are involved, various regimes have to be gone through, but whatever the regime, whether it is bidding or approaching the ministry, rights to certain pieces of land are acquired for exploration and drilling for oil and gas. At that point in time the company has not put out a great deal of money. Perhaps it had to bid for the land in the first instance, but probably it has not put out a great deal of money. If the government were then to say, "I am coming in as a 25 per cent partner," we in this party would say the government was making a mistake, but if it were coming in at that stage of the game, at least it would be participating in the future with the company when the high risk activity is undertaken. However, this government is saying, "No, we don't want to get in at that point. We want you to go out and explore first. If you find some oil and gas," which suddenly means that this land is very valuable, "then we are going to be your 25 per cent partner. We will take 25 per cent at that point in time". That is rather like saying, "We want you to go out and buy a lottery ticket and wait for the draw, and if your ticket is drawn, we are your 25 per cent partner". This motion says that if the government is going to be a 25 per cent partner, it should get in there before the draw and take the risks with the company involved. The government should not come in after the jackpot has been won, steal 25 per cent from the company and claim it is doing so for the sake of Canadianization. It is not for the sake of Canadianization; it is for the sake of nationalization; it is for the sake of state control.

● (2050)

As I outlined in a speech in the House the other day, the rest of the world thinks we are thieves. It groups us in with countries like Algeria, Ecuador, the Dominican Republic, and other countries like that, as a country in which the risk of expropriation is very high.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Andre: I hear the hon. member. I will send him the consultant's report from Frost and Sullivan, an international consultant in the business of assessing political risk. It is their judgment, not mine, that Canada is in the banana republic category because we will, as demonstrated by this bill, confiscate private assets.

It is not just foreign multinational assets that are being confiscated. The other day I read into the record a letter from the president of Paramount Resources Limited, a Canadian-owned junior oil company. It described their experience. That company spent a great deal of money in Canada lands. They had some dry holes and money was lost. They found some gas in the Cameron Hills area. As a result of this policy, 25 per cent of their assets have been confiscated. That is a small Canadian company, one of the small businesses this government claims it cares about and is interested in. It claims it is interested in Canadianization. I guess that means the sheep across the way will vote against our motion and vote for the bill which will confiscate 25 per cent of small Canadian business assets in Canada lands. It is confiscating, in fact stealing, the assets of that Canadian, all under the notion of Canadianization.

That Canadian does not understand it. He does not understand how having 25 per cent of his assets stolen by the government contributes to Canadianization. I do not know how any thinking Canadian can understand or accept that kind of behaviour.

I would like to think there are some members opposite who take their responsibility as Members of Parliament seriously, that they are interested in Canadians and concerned about the picture we show to the rest of the world. I would like to think they are concerned about the private sector, individual Canadians like Mr. Riddell of Paramount Resources. I would like to think they are interested in assuring these Canadian entrepreneurs, those taking the risks, that the government does not view them as a threat or as menacing. Rather, these people should be encouraged and protected. The government should want to see these people searching for oil and gas. I hope members opposite will give serious consideration to what they are doing to Mr. Riddell of Paramount Resources, to the reputation of Canada and Canadians as honest people, people who believe in fairness, justice, the value of private property and private initiative.

Rather than examine what the Prime Minister has done, members opposite should look at his speech of last Thursday. At that time the Prime Minister said he believes in the private sector. He thinks the motivating power for growth of this economy will come from there. If they are going to support their Prime Minister, they have to support that and oppose what has been brought forward by the energy minister and his henchman "Red-end Clark" and others. They should stand up, earn their salaries and seats in the House of Commons and not docilely acquiesce to whatever the minister says. They should recognize that by voting against the motion we have put forward and voting for the legislation, they are voting for confiscation. They are voting for theft and a kind of behaviour that has never before been considered by a Parliament of Canada. In fact, it has never before been acted upon by any democratic country in this world.

Frankly, I would have difficulty calling myself a Canadian and what that represents if I supported this kind of legislation calling for confiscation. I do not see how anyone could look in the mirror and say "I am a Canadian, I believe in what this country stands for, I am here as a Member of Parliament, here to defend, fight for and encourage that kind of behaviour. However, I will vote for this kind of legislation". Anyone who could do that is not worthy of occupying a seat in this House of Commons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Pursuant to an order made earlier by Madam Speaker, the House will consider now Motion No. 25 standing in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Harvie Andre (for Mr. Wilson) moved:

Motion No. 25

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 31 by striking out lines 44 and 45 at page 18 and lines 1 to 10 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"31.(1) The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, prior to the commencement of the terms of an exploration agreement for relevant Canada lands, may direct that the Crown share be transferred to a designated Crown corporation and, where the Minister so directs, he shall forthwith give notice to the relevant interest holders.

(2) Where the Crown share has been transferred to a designated Crown corporation, the Crown share shall be deemed to have been converted to a working share and the designated Crown corporation shall negotiate the terms of a working agreement with the interest holder.

(3) Where the Crown corporation is unable to settle terms of a working agreement, the matter of a working agreement shall be submitted for arbitration in the manner prescribed or, in the absence of applicable regulations, the matter shall be submitted for arbitration in the manner provided for by order of the minister, and the arbitration shall take into account the economic and financial viability of the working agreement on all parties to such agreement and, subject to section 56, the arbitration decision is final and binding."

He said: Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 25, which you dispensed from reading to the House, seeks to amend Clause 31 of the bill. The purpose, intent and impact of Motion No. 25 is fundamentally to change the Crown share from a carried interest to a working interest. What that means is very simple. As the act currently lays it out, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and his co-conspirators can seize 25 per cent of the assets held by private Canadian corporations. That 25 per cent Crown share which the minister can steal can be turned over to Petro-Canada or another Crown corporation. I already talked about the immorality of that theft.

The bill goes on to compound the theft because the Crown now has a 25 per cent share which it has stolen from the private sector. Its share is different from the shares that other people have. Its share is a carried interest. What that means is that the Crown, Petro-Canada or some other Crown corporation, owns 25 per cent of a particular exploration program. It can vote. It has 25 per cent of the votes when you are deciding where to drill the well, whether to run a seismic, what sort of testing to conduct, or whether to develop or put in production platforms, and so on. It is their vote. It is a carrying partner and therefore does not put up a nickel, it does not put up any money. The corporation's cash is not on the line, but it sits there as a full voting partner.

● (2100)

I would ask my hon. friends opposite to think about whether they would go into a business deal in which they decide how the assets of this syndicate, or whatever they are involved in, should be spent. I would ask hon. members if they would appreciate or voluntarily accept a partnership arrangement with full voting privileges and not have one nickel resting on the outcome of the decision. I would ask the hon. members opposite to use common sense and to think about that for a moment. Think about how conducive that is to good decision-making on the part of the consortium. Think about the prospects of having a partner sitting at the table with full voting rights who has no money at stake. Especially in this circumstance, Mr. Speaker—it is hypothetical but not extreme and not unlikely—where there is a piece of land involving some private companies and Petro-Canada, and they have to make a decision as to where to drill the well. Anyone who knows anything about the oil and gas industry at all, Mr. Speaker—and you do not have to be an expert—knows you have to make a decision as to where to drill the well. Your geologists and geophysicists come back to you with their guesstimates—that is all it is, a guesstimate—of what are the geological features, which is the most likely place where oil and gas will be found, and where is the most reasonable spot to drill your first well.

One never knows what is under one well so you know you will drill more than one well. You start off and make various asessments, such as the cost of drilling here versus there, geology here versus there, the likelihood of discovering gas, oil, salt water or what have you. There are many factors that go into the decision-making. Let us assume you are sitting down with your partners trying to make a decision and one of your partners is Petro-Canada, which happens to own or have rights to a piece of property right next door. Mr. Speaker, the executives of Petro-Canada, if they are interested in their corporation, and I assume they are, will obviously want you to drill that well in an area that is likely to contribute to the information or knowledge about their land next door. That is obviously what they want done. Yet, they will be sitting there as a full partner making a decision, voting on a decision as to how the exploration should be handled on this land.

There is a conflict of interest there that makes the situation hopeless, Mr. Speaker. Any reasonable, fair-minded and intelligent person, any person concerned at all about what happens to Canada lands and the success, or lack of it, of our exploration programs under those lands, has to say, "Gee, that may be not good, and not only not good for the private sector but probably not good for Petro-Canada and certainly not good for Canada".

If Members of Parliament are concerned about the welfare of Canada, and we are supposed to be concerned, then surely we must take a critical look at this and say that maybe, and quite likely, if PetroCan is to sit at the table and make these decisions, it should be there as a full paying partner. It should be there with as much at stake as a corporation, as the other person sitting at the table.

I could mention all of the things that were said to this House by ministers of the Crown in this government about the fact that Petro-Canada would be a corporation like others and would be expected to compete and to act like other oil and gas companies, and expected to be responsible. I could bring to mind all of those solemn commitments made by members opposite to remind them of the things they said and the commitments they made. Perhaps I should. Their short memory in regard to promises and commitments is well known to the House and to this country. I should not have to mention this because they are supposedly intelligent, honest and sincere, honourable members. If they are, Mr. Speaker, then they should recognize that Clause 31 in the bill is improper. They should recognize this if they want to live up to the commitments they made, and they should have PetroCan act in the way they indicated. If they require PetroCan to undertake the obligations this House was told it would undertake, then they should insist that PetroCan, once it has the land, should operate under the same rules as everyone else. They should be working partners at the table with their corporation's cash up front. They are sitting as working partners, contributing cash, so when they contribute to a decision, their cash is there. When they make a decision, they should have as much at risk as do other partners to that decision. That is the only way you will get the proper kind of decision-making, Mr. Speaker.

Although the time is short, perhaps I should speak about the question of responsible government, about commitments made by presidents of the Treasury Board, prime ministers and ministers of finance, about the impropriety of government activities and government spending that are disguised from this House and from the people of Canada. That is the real impact of what is happening.

Petro-Canada is given a freebie of 25 per cent. The private assets are stolen and given to Petro-Canada. That will not show up in the estimates of this House, nor will it show up in the blue book, nor in the public accounts of Canada. The transfer of wealth from the private sector to the Crown never shows up, unlike our tax money that shows up in the public accounts and unlike government spending of a normal nature that shows up in the blue book and is examined by the House. The House never has a chance to examine it. The public never knows about it. There is no possibility of an overview and no possibility of an examination and no possibility for any member of the House, elected by the people of Canada, to hold those executives of Petro-Canada accountable for spending our money. There is no way we can examine them. There is no way democracy can work in this circumstance, Mr. Speaker. These private funds will be transferred over to a bunch of appointed people who are accountable to nobody.

● (2110)

Even the meanest socialist who also claims to be a social democrat recognizes that if he is to believe in democracy, public spending must be accessible to a publicly-elected body. The people elected by the voters of Canada must have the ability to somehow determine how much is being spent, by whom and for what purposes. They must have the ability to hold those people to account, at least by way of public exposure, for the activities they are undertaking. In this bill there is no way of doing it. Hundreds of millions and hundreds of billions of dollars are being taken from the private sector and put into the hands of government appointees. They will be spent without any democratic overview. Even a socialist, if he is not also a communist, must agree that that is not correct.

This is why I fervently hope that there are enough hon. members in the House who are willing to say that they take their responsibilities sincerely enough as individual members to examine the real intent of the motion and the real intent of Bill C-48. Hopefully they will vote in accordance with what Canadians expect and with what this great country deserves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) referred to the meanest type of socialist, I suppose he was looking at me. I should like to say a few words in reply.

This is a very historic night. I understand that a special cabinet meeting is taking place; perhaps it is discussing a proposal to settle the constitutional dispute. We are discussing an important matter tonight as well. There is a feeling or some hope around the building—and I say this in order to put it on the record of Hansard—that we can make a major breakthrough on the constitutional matter. I am sure all people in the country and all hon. members of the House would applaud it. I do not want to be out of order. I want to talk to Bill C-48.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre said rhetorically that we should speak about the real intention of this motion. All right, let us do so. The real intention of the Conservative motion is that they do not like the transfer of shares to Petro-Canada. They will block it any way they can. They have tried to deny it in a motion. They have tried to change it in a motion. Now they are trying to really interfere with it and to fetter it.

That is why I do not have any problem in opposing this particular motion on behalf of my party. It is not a question of holding Petro-Canada executives accountable and saying that one is in favour of holding them accountable. The hon. member should check Hansard and the record of the meetings of the committee on freedom of information at which I suggested that freedom of information laws should be expanded to Crown corporations including Petro-Canada. I hope he will support that. I have cross-examined the president of Petro-Canada in committee. I had some hard questions to ask him. I have never cross-examined the president of Exxon. I would like to but I will never have the chance to do so.

Mr. Taylor: Take a chance.

Mr. Thacker: Buy a share.

Mr. Waddell: I hear the seals slapping. They are suggesting that I should buy a share of Exxon and attend meetings in Houston or New York in order to cross-examine the president. Nevertheless, I have no objection to the principle that those who are directing and running Petro-Canada should be held accountable. I do not think anyone in the House opposes that principle. If the hon. member needs the support of a mean type of socialist, then I agree with it. But he should not smear us with red-baiting nonsense.

The real intent of this motion is to fetter Petro-Canada. I suggest to hon. members on my right that they should take a look at Motion No. 24 in the name of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar). It was ruled out of order because a part at the end referred to the transfer of money. The hon. member for Nunatsiaq said that we should talk about Petro-Canada or a Crown corporation holding some of that 25-per cent back-in for the benefit of native people who will come along and ultimately have land claims. Also we hope that ultimately there will be a settlement of land claims. Why was the government not prepared to do that? Why was the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) not prepared to support that? Where were Conservative members when I tried to hold up the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works on this bill, on the basis of trying to win some rights for the native people of the north? They were supporting the Liberals in committee. Let us not have hypocrisy here; let us talk about the real thing.

Hon. members might have a look at the motion of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq. He indicated what really could be done with that 25 per cent interest. I suggest to hon. members across the way, such as the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), that they take a look at some of the later amendments to the bill from Mr. Ittinuar which in fact would help native people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I remind the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) that he must refer to hon. members by using the names of the constituencies, not their names.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, of course you are correct. I was referring to their names as printed on the motions appearing on the Order Paper. They are followed by their constituency names.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): As long as they are members of the House I maintain that they should be referred to by their constituency names, not by the name written on the Order Paper.

Mr. Waddell: I am just a new member of the House. I have to learn these rules.

An hon. Member: You are also a slow member of the House.

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps the hon. member for Calgary Centre would find more enjoyment in the British Columbia legislature. Perhaps he should look also at Motion No. 25. It contains a reference to arbitration in Clause 31(3). This is a further delaying tactic, a further fetter on the Crown's share. There is a further reference to Section 56 which is an appeal system to the federal court. This is the Conservatives standing up for their friends, the most profitable industry in Canada, the oil industry. Basically they are standing up for a foreign-controlled industry, the most heavily subsidized industry. They are trying to put a fetter on Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada is popular in the country. They should have learned this in the last election. They are fighting the last war, they are fighting a rearguard battle.

I think my comments summarize the reasons we on this side of the House do not feel we should support this hypocritical motion.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing Motion No. 25 tonight. It is basically an amendment to Clause 31, a clause which directs the government to transfer the 25 per cent confiscation to a designated Crown corporation. Basically, that is all it says, that the government may transfer its 25 per cent ownership in a discovery to a Crown corporation. All that must happen is that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) give notice to the oil company that he is converting the government's free ride on a successful well into a working interest. In other words, during all the exploration on the Canada lands and every time an oil company makes a discovery, the government notifies it that the free ride is over and that it must be prepared to pay its way.

● (2120)

Motion No. 25 which would amend Clause 31 of the bill, suggests that when the government transfers its share to a designated Crown corporation—and we must emphasize here that many people believe that automatically means Petro-Canada but that is not the case; any number of Crown corporations can be designated and we do not know how many will be—it automatically becomes a working interest at whatever stage it is done. Not only that, but the terms of that working interest should be negotiated because when a company becomes a working partner a decision has to be made on who will operate the well. Will it be the government or the other partner? No allocation of duties in this regard is set down.

Moreover, this amendment suggests that if the two or three partners, or however many there are, and the government, cannot agree on working terms, then they should go to independent arbitration. All we are asking for is fairness to the other partners in the case of the confiscation of their discovery.

I should like to discuss this free ride which the government will now get, this 25 per cent confiscation of energy discoveries on Canada lands. Just who will be affected? The government will take 25 per cent of all oil discoveries. Will that affect the multinationals? That is what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would like us to believe, but nothing is further from the truth. It will not affect the multinationals, and hon. members opposite should understand that. The multinationals have to spread their assets and their business all over the world; that is why they are multinationals. They do not want to be established in only one country or put all their eggs in one basket. When conditions in one country are not favourable, they simply move their funds to another country. That does not mean to say they move out of that particular country, but they do not do any more exploration than they have to. That is what is happening now in Canada. The multinationals are moving to Australia, for example, and are doing more work in the United States than they used to.

The companies being hurt by this 25 per cent confiscation are the independents. Many of these small Canadian companies started out ten years ago. If hon. members opposite would look at the history of the independents, they would see that most of them were privately owned then. Some had difficulty raising capital so they merged with others and became public companies. Between 1972 and 1979 there was a tremendous expansion in the number of independent companies and these are the ones that are being hurt by this policy—not the multinationals. The multinationals can out-wait governments. They do not need to put their money in Canada. It does not matter to a multinational if it puts $100 million, more or less, into Canada; that would not alter its cash flow to any great degree, but the independents, which for the most part are one tenth or less the size of most multinationals, will be badly hurt by this bill. In the last ten years they have tended to band together to go into the Canada lands. They used to go in as minority shareholders, sometimes with the major oil companies like Dome or Panarctic Oils, and other such companies. Now some of them are moving their technical staff and funds to the United States or Australia. We will continue to relate the real problem to hon. members opposite. The action in the next five years will be in Australia.

It does not give me any pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to tell the House that there is a small independent oil company in Calgary which will go broke this week. This sad story was related to me by an individual who told me that he will inform his staff next week that the company is going to fold. He said, "I have been a Liberal all my life. I have supported the Liberals and gone to all the fund-raising dinners, and what did I get out of it? Nothing". He has to lay off his staff and the money he will recover from the sale of properties will be moved out of the country. It is sad that this man has to uproot his family either to the United States or Australia.

The effects of this 25 per cent confiscation have been well recorded in the exodus of the rigs. Last summer when my wife and I drove through Coutts, Alberta, we stopped just 100 feet over the border. We could hardly believe all the trucks we saw sitting by the roadside. We had heard about the rigs going south but it is hard to visualize it from this distance. I counted 60 semi-trailers and I was told that they used to be backed up for two or three miles. Next day, in Calgary, I asked someone in the oil business why this was happening, and I was told that they were not allowed to go to the border in such numbers any more. They had to make all their arrangements in Calgary so that when they got to the border they would have, at most, a two-day stay. So the transfers were arranged in Calgary and when the trucks got to the border they would have only one or two nights to stay before they went across the border.

Earlier this year it was noted in this House that one year ago there were approximately 580 rigs in Canada, of which 450 were working. At the present time there are 430 rigs, of which 240 are working. It must be remembered that in that period of time 100 rigs were built.

Unfortunately, this government still believes that its decision to nationalize the oil industry was the correct one, even if that means the independent oil companies will suffer. This means Canadian oil companies, because not one American company will fail and not one European oil company will fail. Only Canadian companies will fail. What does it mean? It means lost jobs in western Canada.

• (2130)

I know a plumber who had 20 plumbers working for him but he now has only five. We have a government here which says it wants to help small business. It does not want to help small business, it wants to nationalize the oil industry. That is the design of this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and of this government. They want to nationalize the whole oil industry and they can only do it step by step.

There will be no such thing as oil self-sufficiency in Canada by 1990—we will not have it. The National Energy Board has told this government we will not have oil self-sufficiency by 1990. International economists have told the government there will be no oil self-sufficiency in Canada by 1990. This government refuses to believe them.

Twenty-five per cent interest held by the government of all exploration in Canada lands is nothing more than confiscation. This government is nothing but a group of thieves, stealing in the night, taking over things they cannot legally take over or do not have the money to buy. To say the least, this is terrible legislation and it is ridiculous that we are spending our time talking about the confiscation of an industry when we should be talking about interest rates and the economic turndown in this country.

We have high interest rates in this country due in great part to the energy policies of this government. Let us not forget for one moment that this is why we have high interest rates. Our interest rates are approximately 4 per cent higher than those in the United States right now. Why is that? We must support the dollar in order to bring money into the economy. This government is afraid to allow interest rates to drop because money would then flow out of the country, owing mainly to the bad economic climate created by this government.

How did this all come about? Did it come about as a result of the Prime Minister's visit to China in 1948 when he discussed communism with Mao Tse-Tung? Did it come about when he led the Canadian delegation of communists to the world communist movement in Russia in 1952? Is that how it came about?

An hon. Member: Get into the twentieth century.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You fell on your head when you were a kid.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wright: I refuse to comment on the natterings of those in the left wing. Facts are facts. The present Prime Minister has said he does not want free enterprise to work in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wright: He has said that in his writings, and all you have to do is read them. This country is heading toward economic ruin. Unless we are prepared to stand up and be counted, we will never see the country we believe in continue into the foreseeable future.

This is a band of socialists across the way. We must label them as socialists in the future because they no longer belong to a liberal party. They are nothing but socialists, and as we go into the next election that is the label we will give them. The NDP will disappear and we will have only one socialist party, and it will be right across there. How will those members reply to their constituents when they are asked about all these socialist policies. How will they justify them? How do those hon. members go home at night and tell their constituents about all their socialist policies? Do you know what the answer is? Behind the scenes they are saying that when Trudeau goes, they will change things. There is a secret directive out from the annual meeting in Winnipeg which says that when Trudeau goes, they will turn to the right. But it will be too late.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have no ambitions to emulate the amusing rhetoric of the preceding speaker. I would not want to take the House into such inanities.

I think in discussing the motion before us, if indeed that is the purpose of our meeting this evening, I would want to attempt to situate the 25 per cent Crown interest in its proper context. The provision in the bill for a Crown interest is one part of the broad, comprehensive, new oil and gas regime in the federal Canada lands, and as such it cannot be viewed, as some hon. members opposite insist, in isolation from the larger package.

Bill C-48 as a whole in effect represents a new system to replace the existing system. I would have thought if hon. members opposite had taken the trouble to read the bill and compare it with the present legislation, they would have concluded that the incentives for the private sector are greater under the new legislation than exist in the present legislation.

I refer to the fact that under the current legislation holders of exploration rights are required to return to the Crown at least one-half of their acreage, which could involve the surrender in certain cases of up to 30 per cent of their discoveries prior to obtaining production rights.

I simply do not understand the argument of those who say the provisions of the current regime for the return of acreage does not in fact pose a burden on explorers. If this were so, and it were a burden, why have explorers in several cases opted for special renewal permits, on their entire acreage, which they can do under existing legislation, thereby accepting a 25 per cent Petro-Canada back-in? They did not choose to do that. They did not choose to move directly to lease, yielding 50 per cent of the acreage but avoiding a Petro-Canada back-in. On the contrary.

Under the new legislation, holders of exploration rights will not face that dilemma. They will be allowed to retain production rights over the entire area of a gas or oil field. Yet hon. members opposite say that somehow the 25 per cent Crown share is a more onerous burden being placed on private sector companies than exists under the present legislation where they must surrender up to 50 per cent of their acreage prior to production. I do not follow that reasoning any more than I follow the reasoning that is reflected in the motion before the House.

I want to take a moment to discuss that motion because, although its language is somewhat technical, there is a difference of approach which is important; a difference of approach that does, indeed, call into question our ability to Canadianize our industry to ensure a greater degree of Canadian participation by the private sector as well as the public.

• (2140)

The motion before us would provide that the Crown share would cease to be a carried interest at the beginning of the exploration agreement. Therefore, it would become liable for all the expenses of exploration. The intent of the legislation is that the Crown share remain as a carried interest until the production stage, at which time it will be converted to a working interest and the Crown will be liable for its share of expenses.

As someone from the other side might say, that does not provide for compensation for the period of exploration prior to the conversion. Of course, the basic incentives under the petroleum industry incentives program will do just that. There will be incentives that will more than meet the costs involved.

An hon. Member: There will not be anybody drilling.

Mr. MacLaren: The result of subclause (2) of the amendment would be that the designated Crown corporation, whether it be Petro-Canada or another corporation, would have to negotiate special terms with the rest of the participants in an operating agreement. Of course, that is not the intent of the legislation. The intention is that the designated Crown corporation will participate in the operating agreement on a similar basis to that of the private members.

The negotiation of a severed agreement between the Crown corporation and those members, which is the aim of this motion, would defeat the purpose of the Crown share provision.

An hon. Member: That is exactly what it is intended to do.

Mr. MacLaren: That being the intention of the motion, Mr. Speaker, there is no question that it will be opposed by this side of the House as not being in tune with the legislation as a whole.

Subclause (3) of the motion provides for arbitration as to the terms of the entry of the Crown corporation into an operating agreement. Again, this would be inconsistent with the objectives of providing that the Crown corporation participate as an equal partner. The 25 per cent Crown share and the participation by a designated Crown corporation in an operating agreement is obviously known to all parties in advance. It should be unnecessary for the terms of the designated Crown corporation's entry to be a matter of arbitration.

With regard to a model operating agreement, contrary to what seems to be assumed in the motion, there is provision for arbitration in Clause 38 of the legislation. Once again, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the purpose of bringing forward such a motion at this time.

In more general terms, we have had some discussion in the last few days, under the previous motion and under this one, on Canadianization in the broadest terms. To us on this side of the House, Bill C-48 which provides for a degree of government involvement in the frontier lands, lands that belong to all Canadians, represents a pragmatic Canadian response to a particular set of circumstances. Clearly the private sector is, and obviously will remain, the driving force behind our total economic development. Indeed, I hardly understand why the time of the House is taken with debating that proposition, with one side of the House alleging that somehow it is being called into question by this legislation. It is a truism that hardly needs repeating.

One of the obvious motivations behind the National Energy Program and, indeed, behind this legislation before the House, is the rapid development of the Canada lands for the benefit of all Canadians. In those terms, I would draw the attention of the House to the exploration grants that are provided to all explorers. Those grants clearly will help private sector companies to expand and develop their activities in the most promising areas of oil development in our country and to participate even more actively, commensurate with their level of Canadian participation.

I said it was a truism that quite clearly the private sector will remain the driving force and is the driving force of our petroleum development and indeed of our economy in general. It is equally a truism that Canada is a unique country. It is not the United States, it is not any other country. Obviously we share some similarities with our good friends to the south, but in other respects we have our distinct differences.

I think it is idle to view the National Energy Program or indeed Bill C-48 in the context of any other situation but that in which we find ourselves in Canada. That situation is clearly that over the years the sheer size of our country and the small population have placed restrictions on the economic and social development of Canadians. This is also true of political development. It has demanded a greater role for the collectivity, if you wish, if those natural obstacles we face of a vast and hostile terrain were to be overcome.

Against that very simply sketched background, it is obvious why Canadian governments, whether they be Conservative or Liberal governments of the past, have looked toward Canadian government involvement in the form of Crown corporations and other entities to help knit together this country and develop a huge and sparsely populated land.

If such activity and involvement on behalf of all Canadian people acting through their government has been necessary in the past and has been so deemed by both Conservative and Liberal governments in areas of urban intensity and areas of industrialization, how much more evident is it that such involvement is necessary in the vast territories of the Canada lands, frontier lands, offshore and high Arctic, underpopulated, often harsh and difficult environment. Government involvement in oil and gas development in those areas is hardly to be regarded with surprise. Indeed, if Canadians are to gain control of their own future, if native claims and the environment in those areas are to be guarded and protected, then it would be negligent of this government or any Canadian government not to provide for that active involvement.

Geography is clearly only one of the elements, one of the determinants of the National Energy Program and of Bill C-48. An equally pressing reason for the type of legislation and thinking that underlies the legislation which we have before us this evening is the fact that our petroleum industry has been massively controlled by foreign companies and investors in the past years.

There has been, thanks to measures taken by previous governments, some improvement in that regard. Quite clearly, if Canadians are to have a fair and equal opportunity to participate in their own petroleum industry, then the legislation we have before us will, in part, present the occasion for them to do so. We have seen in Canada as much as 90 per cent of our petroleum industry controlled outside our own country, and it is only recently that Canadian governments have begun to take the initiative to ensure that that massive ownership be controlled and in some way reduced through higher incentives for Canadians to participate in their own industry.

• (2150)

It will be no surprise to anyone who is aware of the Canadian economic debate over the past years that there has been widespread concern about the level of foreign ownership within our country. I am not sure some of the hon. members opposite have yet focused on that concern, but a recent poll taken by the Canadian Petroleum Association, an association dominated by large multinational corporations, and other public opinion polls have indicated overwhelming support—80 per cent or 90 per cent support—for a greater degree of Canadianization of our petroleum industry. That is why in the bill before us there are major incentives for Canadians to take part in their industry in a way that they have not had occasion to do previously.

This bill is not in any way anti anyone. The bill is pro Canadian. It is an effort on the part of this government to open the way and to provide the opportunity to Canadians to take an interest, to participate and to play a part in their own vital energy sector.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the comments of the parliamentary secretary. I do not think anyone in this House who is reasonable would argue in favour of foreign ownership of any industry in Canada. That is not what any of the members of my party have been doing. We want Canadian ownership. Over the period of years that the Liberal Party has been in power ministers have worked toward Canadian ownership of the petroleum industry, and with some success, but the way they have been doing it has never been argued in this House because they have been doing it in the orthodox and accepted way. This bill would give the power to a government to do things we would not permit an individual to do.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is a lawyer, and he talked about this in terms of transferring a share. If shares were being transferred in the way the rank and file of the people of Canada transfer shares, there would be no argument in this House. If I want to transfer half my lot to somebody, I make a deal with him. We decide on the price. He deposits the money with the lawyer, the lawyer has the matter transferred in the land titles office, and when the lawyer gives the purchaser the title to that share of my land, the lawyer gives me the money given to him by the purchaser. That is transferring a share. However, this bill says:

> Where the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources directs the transfer of a Crown share under this section, the Minister shall forthwith give notice thereof to the relevant interest holders.

I emphasize the word "directs". This bill allows someone who has power to say, "This is going to such and such a person; it is no longer yours." A million dollars might be spent in the north finding a successful oil well—and I hope there will be many—and the minister can direct that part of that find will go to a Crown corporation. It makes the minister a partner in the oil found. It will not just be found by multinationals but also by small independent companies because a large portion of our petroleum industry is made up of small companies. However, the minister will direct that 25 per cent of that will no longer belong to the company involved. The company will have spent its money, but the minister will be able to say that the oil no longer totally belongs to the company. A share will be transferred forthwith. That is not transferring. That is why our motion talks about negotiations. That is why financial costs and economics are referred to. Our motion talks about a deal if a transfer is required, but we should be fair about it. I am very concerned that we are doing things at the direction of a government. That is confiscation. Some hon. members have called it theft. We are authorizing theft by law, and I object to authorizing that type of thing. We are saying to the young people of Canada that it is all right for a minister of the Crown to direct the transfer of somebody else's property without compensation and without the Crown's sharing in the cost incurred in finding the resource. Do hon. members opposite call that fair? That has never been done by a Liberal government or any other government in this country. How can that be called fair? What do we call it when a young person's father directs him to steal a roast of beef from the butcher shop?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Just transferring it.

Mr. Taylor: Is that just transferring it? He was directed by his father, but that does not make it right, and putting this into legislation does not make it right. This is morally wrong, and I plead with hon. members on the government side that we not have to tell the young people of this country that it is all right to steal and not pay, that it is all right to confiscate and that it is all right to transfer someone else's property without compensation. That is not the Canadian way. Those we will honour on Remembrance Day did not fight for that kind of country. We want fair dealings and honest dealings, and when we start authorizing the direction of one person's property into the hands of someone else without proper arbitration and without making a proper deal—without negotiations and without entering into an agreement—that is not transferring shares at all. It is expropriation. It is confiscation. In ordinary language, it is theft. We should not condone the theft of property.

Let me give a simple illustration. We are talking about millions of acres in the north, but let us say I spent a lot of money on my little lot. Let us say I had a lovely lawn and a lovely flower garden. Then the mayor of the city says, "I am going to give part of that to your neighbour who spent no money and let weeds grow on his land." The mayor is going to transfer a share of my land to someone else without my having anything to say about it. Is that right? There is not an hon.

member opposite or on this side of the House who would stand for that if it were done with his own land. Just because we do it to multinationals does not make it any more honourable. It is not right. It is morally wrong. It is contrary to the Canadian way of life. I plead with hon. members not to leave this kind of example with the young people of this nation. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) has enough trouble without having people think it is all right to steal from certain people. One day I heard a chap say that it is all right to steal from the government because the government has lots of money and is wasting it anyhow. However, that does not make it right. It does not make stealing right. It does not make confiscation or expropriation right. These things are contrary to our way of life.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIR SAFETY—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORTS ON EMERGENCY LOCATOR TRANSMITTERS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I am rising this evening on the late show to deal with a question I put on the Order Paper slightly over a year ago, but the fact that it was over a year ago really has no bearing. In fact, I have been asking questions on this subject now for some eight years. I have put my question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) in this case because over those years I have had no answers from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). Since the Minister of National Defence seemed to have a great deal of interest in this question, that is who I went to. I am sorry the Minister of National Defence is leaving the House this evening. I expect I will be answered by his parliamentary secretary or the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bockstael), the department from which I got no answers for eight years. Maybe tonight I will be surprised.

• (2200)

I want first to go to the question that I asked on October 21, 1980. At that time I asked if the Minister of National Defence would have his colleague, the Minister of Transport, table some of the reports in existence having to do with ELTs. The Minister of National Defence said he would indeed have his colleague look into it. I should perhaps put on the record that ELTs are electronic locator transmitters. I am sure the parliamentary secretary is familiar with the terminology, but perhaps it should be on the record.

The Minister of National Defence said on that day that he was collaborating very closely with the Minister of Transport to see if they could devise a new ELT with a proper battery. The parliamentary secretary will recall that we had quite a session on electronic transmitters. The Department of Transport had arbitrarily said that all aircraft owners in a certain category in Canada had to instal ELTs. The ones they were to put in were those with lithium batteries. The lithium batteries slowly disintegrated. Not only did they not function properly, but they in fact caused accidents. Sometime after, realizing their mistake, the Department of Transport withdrew the lithium battery-powered ELTs. At that time aircraft owners were at liberty to choose whether or not they wished to carry the ELTs.

When the Dubin inquiry was taking place, Mr. McLeish the director of air transport in Canada admitted that they knew there were problems with ELTs. It bothers me that the director would know that and still allow those instruments to be placed in aircraft rather than take steps to have the problem straightened out.

We know that ELTs can save lives. As part of the answer to the question I asked on October 21, the minister said it would save a great deal of money. He did not know how much. At the Dubin inquiry, the figure of $8 million per year was used. That is the amount that could be saved by the Department of National Defence in its search and rescue units if we had electronic locator transmitters on all light aircraft. In order to have this work done properly, there should be some research.

At that time I asked the Minister of National Defence if he would join in some proper research that would give Canada an ELT that would work in our climate and do the job. Obviously that has not been done.

Again referring to the Dubin inquiry, I read that the defence department recommended that an alkaline or mercury battery, while not meeting the specifications, could be used because "they would be better than nothing." That may be, but not if we are to spend the kind of money that is going to be asked of aircraft owners like myself to spend. According to a press release from the department in September of this year, it appears that $3.5 million will now have to be spent by owners to put in ELTs for which there are no specific details or specifications. The best we can do is to buy one built in the United States. No Canadian types are available that will do the job. We are as badly off as we have been for the past eight years. The Department of Transport is just as guilty. Has the research been done? We do not know yet whether the ELTs will work on the satellite system that is planned. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, we do not know whether the estimate of the $3.5 million that it is anticipated will be spent will be any better than the last one which anticipated that about $8 million or $9 million will be spent to put in ELTs.

• (2205)

We are sick and tired of the cavalier attitude of the Department of Transport with regard to this particular matter. I am on my feet again after eight years and I look forward to the answers from the parliamentary secretary. I strongly suspect, Mr. Speaker, that I will be on my feet again in the near future with the same problem.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The minister has been most concerned about the need for effective emergency locator devices to be carried on board Canadian aircraft. However, his desire to achieve this objective as quickly as possible has been tempered by past experience. As you may know, the department made the carriage of ELTs mandatory in the early 1970s but was obliged to review its decision in the light of technical difficulties experienced with early versions of this equipment.

It has not been mandatory to carry emergency locator transmitters in certain Canadian aircraft since September, 1977, when an airworthiness directive was issued ordering the removal of lithium batteries in the equipment. The batteries became a safety hazard in that they produced sulphurous acid corrosion of internal parts causing false ELT activations and explosions.

A number of months ago a program was instituted to re-establish the requirement for all aircraft to carry ELTs. This program has now been completed and an air navigation order making the carriage of ELTs mandatory was published in The Canada Gazette on October 28, 1981. It will require that emergency locator transmitters be carried on board of approximately 20,000 Canadian-registered aircraft after April 1, 1982.

The Department has also revised ELT technical standards to call for less stringent cold-weather performance. Revisions call for 50 hours of continuous ELT transmission at minus 20 degrees Celsius instead of the previous 100 man-hour transmission at minus 40 degrees Celsius.

ELTs will not be required for any aircraft operated within 25 nautical miles of an airport or multi-engine turbo-jets of more than 5,700 kilograms operated over land under instrument flight rules in controlled air space south of latitude 66°,30′ north.

It was the original intention of the department to establish a compliance date of January 1, 1982. Aircraft owners, however, must be allowed sufficient time to repair or replace their existing ELTs, and the effective date selected of April 1, 1982, will allow a more realistic time period for these corrective actions to take place. This will preclude aircraft operators from being put in a position of being unable to comply with the legislation, through no fault of their own.

A significant number of owners already have properly functioning ELTs on their aircraft. The department estimates that about half of the ELTs required by Canadian aircraft will have to be replaced at a cost of $350 to $400 per unit, a minimal cost, Mr. Speaker, compared to the cost of a research and rescue mission, or the possibility of loss of life.

VIA RAIL—CUTS IN SERVICE IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): On Monday, October 26 I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to explain with rationality and proper philosophy how he plans to put the passengers from two overloaded trains into one when he cancels the Atlantic as it passes through New Brunswick. I asked what accommodation the minister planned to extend to the travelling population of Canada on emergencies or on holiday excursions, if he now proceeds to destroy the equipment that gives us some kind of service. I asked whether New Brunswick Liberals objected to the cancellation of the Atlantic Limited and the Moncton-Edmundston VIA service. To date I have received no statement from the minister which was either rational or philosophical or logical or explanatory. He continues to affront the House with rhetoric and supposition. I urge him to reconsider his drastic move to eliminate the Atlantic Limited and the Moncton-Edmundston service until he has had time to hear from the multitude of people who depend upon that train service.

● (2210)

We in the official opposition at least took the time at our own expense to hear from groups and individuals, not only in the maritimes but across the country, in order to better understand the hardship this cutback would produce. We spent many long hours listening to testimony on how the cutbacks will isolate towns, destroy businesses, shatter livelihoods, and break apart the very fabric upon which this great country was originally founded. It is a divisive force.

What advice or lack of it has perpetuated the minister's irrational decision? When we were in government we faced the same list of alternatives but, much to the credit of the former minister of transport, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), the decision was not to implement the cutbacks as the minister has announced but to increase the VIA budget. One thing is certain: government members from New Brunswick ignored local advice and voted to support the cutbacks. I hope they are planning holidays somewhere else other than in their own constituencies, if they expect to enjoy "peace on earth." They are certainly not expressing "Good will to all men" in their support of VIA Rail cutbacks.

Time does not permit me to go into a detailed report of all the submissions which the task force received, but I urge the minister and hon. members to read thoroughly the task force report. I particularly suggest that maritime members take a look at pages Nos. 41 to 45 of the report wherein all responsible people who made representations on behalf of the continuance of the service are listed. Let me list but a few. There were representations from four different unions, boards of trade, the mayor of Dartmouth, the government of Nova Scotia, the city council of Halifax, the mayor of Saint John, the mayor of Fredericton, city councillors of Moncton, the mayor of Sussex, the mayor of St. Andrews, Fredericton Junction, Mr. Lamey, the director of the Capital Development Commission, and the list goes on. I suggest that hon. members from Atlantic Canada should read the list of influential, significant and important people who made these representations. May I say that my folder would not hold the representations prepared on short notice which we got in the city of Saint John alone, that my briefcase would not close when I put in it the representations, which were placed in haste but with sincere earnestness, by the time we had visited Halifax, Moncton and Saint John. This is the kind of hard work those people were prepared to put into their objections to try to enlighten us and the Government of Canada.

It is obvious that the cutbacks in rail service will affect tens of thousands of Canadians as well as thousands of tourists. The ramifications will be felt by virtually every Canadian, whether they use trains for transportation or depend upon them for bringing customers to them for business. Earlier the minister spoke about isolated communities. Canada will never know what it is like to have isolated communities until rail passenger service is withdrawn to the extent proposed at present. Why is the minister so adamant on the subject of rail passenger service when his director of air transport went to Quebec City and said that the proposed domestic aviation policy was not cast in iron and that there was room to accommodate changes?

● (2215)

This comes from Mr. Hans Lovink, the director of domestic policy for air transportation. An article in The Globe and Mail of November 3, 1981 reports an interview with him as follows:

He said, however, that Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin is prepared to listen to arguments for changes and the purpose of the proposal was to generate discussion.

Why should there not be discussion on the cancellation of VIA Rail? Why should there be nothing but an adamant, obstinate pursuit of this abandonment? At a time when other countries see fit to expand and renew their rail passenger services, our government reduces it in this country. In spite of the fact that other countries have had to restore the service at great cost, this government proposes to remove from passenger transportation the one service which takes only 5 per cent of its costs in energy, when automobile and air transportation take approximately 30 per cent of their cost of operation in fuel energy consumption.

I would remind the minister that it was only about two years ago, after a lengthy and productive public hearing, that the CTC recommended that the Atlantic Limited be put in place.

The minister of transport for Nova Scotia has said that for the federal government to overturn by order in council the hard work of the CTC after less than two years is a disappointment to those who participated in the public hearing process and who felt that consultation had produced a beneficial solution. He went on to say that the plan to kill the Atlantic Limited is premature and completely incomprehensible.

May I have an answer to my question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, last night I answered a very similar question on the reasons for discontinuing the Atlantic Limited. The main point I tried to make was that extremely high costs had forced the government to eliminate one of the two transcontinental services between Halifax and Montreal. On both the Atlantic Limited and the Ocean, the taxpayer pays an average of 70 cents for every 30 cents of ticket revenue. The services cost the taxpayer a total of $45 million in 1980 for the Atlantic region.

The government regrets the inconvenience caused to residents of southwestern New Brunswick who must backtrack to Moncton to connect with the remaining transcontinental to Montreal. However, even the member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) acknowledged last night that the rail liner service being extended from Saint John to Fredericton was "a progressive move."

The other service being discontinued in New Brunswick is the dayliner between Moncton and Edmunston. This line is being terminated because of very poor performance. The revenue-cost ratio is 13.6 per cent. In other terms, a $22 ticket is subsidized to the extent of $140 to make up the true cost of transporting that one passenger, which is $162. The occupancy rate on the train is about 28 per cent, but it should be noted that almost one in four passengers on this train travels on passes and therefore generates no revenue. The service lost over $2 million in 1980, and carried a total of 32,500 passengers, or less than 100 per day in each direction.

Although some communities will be somewhat isolated when this service is terminated, there is every hope that alternate transportation services, such as buses, will be developed and improved in the near future.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—ELIMINATION OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND PUBLIC SERVICE POSITIONS (B) ADMINISTRATION OF FEDERALLY FUNDED PROGRAMS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, in the House of Commons, I posed two important questions about the recent elimination of 161 provincial public service positions on Prince Edward Island following the signing of the third and final phase of the P.E.I. Comprehensive Development Plan.

My first question, directed to the President of the Treasury Board, (Mr. Johnston) noted that the federal government clearly intends to take over some programs from the island previously cost-shared by the two levels of government but administered by the province of Prince Edward Island. I asked the President of Treasury Board whether he knew that this new approach by the federal government is, in large part, the reason why the province has been forced to lay off some 138 provincial public employees.

My second question was directed to the Acting Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I wanted to know whether the federal government had yet identified which programs it intends to take over from the province of Prince Edward Island now that the third phase of the Comprehensive Development Plan is in place. If the government had identified those programs, I wanted to know what they were.

• (2220)

In response to both questions, ministers of the Crown were content merely to say to me and to the House, and through the House to the people of Prince Edward Island, that the government of P.E.I. was laying off more public employees than could be attributed to the signing of the third phase of the P.E.I. Comprehensive Development Plan. I wish to set the record straight in the few moments I have at my disposal.

First, much of the problem stems from the fact that the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan has not been wildly successful. The 15-year program was inaugurated in 1969 with great fanfare by the provincial government of the day. It was touted as the blueprint for a complete revitalization of the economy of Prince Edward Island. Hope was held out that at the end of the 15-year multimillion dollar program our island province would be so self-sufficient that it alone, without continued infusions of federal government money, could sustain the hundreds of public employees recruited under the plan. But the opposite has happened. Although the plan did produce some successes, P.E.I. is now just as dependent on the federal government as when the plan was inaugurated 12 years ago. With the development plan currently coming to an end, the day of reckoning is near. Since the federal government is backing away from shared-cost programs, not just in Prince Edward Island but right across the country, in favour of services delivered directly by the federal government rather than through the provinces, my question is, will provincial public employees be a thing of the past in Prince Edward Island in three years' time when the program comes to an end? Certainly, the current trend suggests that such an outcome is indeed possible.

In the area of agriculture, for example, the relevant provincial department expected to receive more than $8 million in each of the three remaining years of the development plan, for a total of about $25 million. As it turned out, the federal government decided to spend $7.6 million of the total amount in the province on a direct delivery basis rather than through the provincial Department of Agriculture. Thus the P.E.I. government, in that one department alone—and I mention it as an example only—will be receiving $17.6 million instead of $25 million. Consequently, in the Department of Agriculture the staff has had to be slashed by 60 employees, roughly half of the total number. Other departments, covering a broad range of programs and services, have similarly been affected by the federal government's decision to direct deliver services, rather than to participate with the province on a shared-cost basis, with P.E.I. handling the delivery.

Indeed, of the $90 million which the federal government will contribute over a three-year period in the third and final phase of the P.E.I. Comprehensive Development Plan, almost $40 million—I think it is $39 million plus—will be spent on programs that effectively exclude the provincial government as far as administration and delivery are concerned. Is it any wonder then that the province has been forced to lay off the public employees who have been laid off?

I urge the federal government, in the strongest terms possible, to rethink the way in which it plans to administer federal expenditures on Prince Edward Island and in other areas of the country. At the very least, in P.E.I., every possible step should be taken by the federal government to recruit any provincial public employee laid off because of the recently signed third phase of the development plan. Presumably, if the federal government persists in controlling programs formerly administered by the provincial government, more federal government employees will have to be hired on Prince Edward Island. Surely, when hiring, the federal government should give priority to those people whose competence has already been demonstrated by years of service at the provincial level.

In conclusion, may I note that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) is here, and no doubt he will want to respond to my observations. I invite him and urge him to join me and other islanders in putting pressure on the federal government to bring wisdom to bear on this issue.

• (2225)

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I find this question slightly unusual in that it is being debated in the House of Commons because it is probably the first occasion on which the federal government has been asked to determine the staffing patterns for a provincial government in this country. Of course, the reason is given that, as a result of changes in the funding and delivery of development programs in the province of Prince Edward Island, 161 employees have been directly affected.

I think it is fair to say that there is no question that the decision by the Government of Canada to direct deliver a number of programs has had an impact upon provincial government jobs. It has had an impact to the extent of 40 to 50 jobs. It is also clearly understood, not only by the government of which I was a member but also by the present government, that funding and cost-shares for salaries would gradually diminish over a period of time. In fact, during my period as minister of finance, we did absorb a sizeable number of the 350 employees whose salaries were no longer cost-sharable under the federal plan.

The interesting part about the situation which we presently face is that many of the employees whose positions have been abolished as a result of the decision made a week ago Friday, are positions which were never cost-shared under the development plan. We never cost-shared, for example, the artificial inseminators in agriculture. We never cost-shared the plumbing inspectors in the department of municipal affairs. These were clearly employees whose functions and salaries were paid for totally out of the budget of the provincial government.

As a result of the impact on roughly 50 jobs, the decision to direct deliver programs will lead into opportunities for approximately 30 positions. I am certainly very sympathetic toward these employees and I am sure the opportunities are there. I certainly encourage all employees, as the hon. member across the way has done, to take advantage of those competitions when they come up.

Adjournment Debate

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 4, 1981

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

VIA RAIL

INVITATION FOR MINISTER TO ATTEND BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, given the unanimous request of the Senate Committee on Transport asking the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to rescind his July 27 decision to terminate 19 per cent of VIA Rail passenger services, and whereas the Senate transport committee has invited the Minister of Transport to appear before it to explain his actions, a request which the minister has so far ignored, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm):

That this House directs the Minister of Transport to accept immediately the invitation from the Senate transport committee asking that he appear promptly before the said committee to give evidence and answer questions regarding his regrettable decision to terminate VIA Rail passenger service.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

UNITED NATIONS

TRIBUTE TO CONTRIBUTIONS MADE BY CANADIANS SERVING IN PEACEKEEPING FORCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, 25 years ago today, on November 4, 1956, the General Assembly of the United Nations in special session adopted a resolution to resolve the Suez Canal crisis by the creation of a United Nations peacekeeping force under the command of a great Canadian, General Burns. This resolution, sponsored by the then secretary of state for external affairs, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, in the name of Canada, marked the beginning of United Nations peacekeeping forces and won for its author the Nobel Peace Prize.

Pursuant to Standing Order 43 I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett):

That this House recognizes the contribution made by those Canadians who have served and continue to serve in these United Nations peacekeeping forces, and particularly those who lost their lives, and that this House renews its commitment to the United Nations effort to promote world peace.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

MINISTER'S POSITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, the attitude of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) toward changing the Foreign Investment Review Agency is resulting in keeping vital foreign investment out of Canada which, in my constituency alone, accounts for approximately 80 per cent of present industrial jobs created by American and British capital. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce clarify immediately whether or not he intends to proceed with serious curtailment of foreign investment in Canada, particularly American, and in relation to border areas such as Leeds-Grenville that the minister confirm immediately a government policy of discontinuing the practice of halting legitimate American investment at the New York State-Ontario border which has made him known as the minister of industry for northern New York State.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

WELFARE

CARE OF NATIVE CHILDREN IN MANITOBA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter that is definitely of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas native children in Canada are the victims of a hodge-podge of disgraceful approaches to child welfare, whereas in Manitoba alone 60 per cent of all children in care are native, and whereas an agreement for a native child welfare program was reached last spring between the Four Nations Confederacy and the governments of Manitoba and Canada but is yet to be implemented, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House directs the Minister of State for Social Development and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to act so that this program be given immediate cabinet approval and funding in order that native children in Manitoba receive the high quality care to which they are entitled.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

VIA RAIL

EFFECT OF CUTBACKS ON ACROPHOBIACS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, in its reckless VIA Rail cutbacks the government has forgotten to consider 500,000 acrophobiacs in Canada, those people who have a fear of heights and who have to rely mainly on trains for travel. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House instructs the government to rescind its July 27 order in council which mindlessly cancelled the lifeline of transportation for these 500,000 Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1410)

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING—CREATION OF AGENCY TO AID INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Last week, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced the creation of a Canadian agency to aid the textile and clothing industry, which will be responsible for co-ordinating up to $250 million in grants to the industry, and have its head office in Montreal. Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois):

That this House congratulate the Government of Canada on the action thus taken to aid the industry, its Canadian workers and their communities.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[English]

EFFECT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the government's interest rate policy where Canadian interest rates today are 4 to 5 per cent above American rates is preventing the purchase of new capital machinery to make our industry more productive. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who was so persuasive in this House when he was finance critic for the Liberal party about the devastating effect of high interest rates on business, today on motions explain to this House how his high interest policy is now enabling business to be more productive.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

TRADE

REPRESENTATION CONCERNING TAX POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas the balance of trade in manufactured goods between Canada and the United States continues to deteriorate under Liberal incompetence in economic affairs, especially relating to trade and commerce, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That in the forthcoming budget, if it ever arrives, tax policies not be pursued which would put Canadian industries in an even less competitive position compared with their American counterparts than presently unfortunately exists.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

TREATMENT OF LUMBER WITH CHLOROPHENOLS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas a number of scientific studies available to the ministries of Agriculture and Health and Welfare indicate the health and environmental danger posed by the substances known as chlorophenols, and whereas a recent study commissioned by Local 1-85 of the International Woodworkers of America in Port Alberni, B.C. reports that workers exposed to these substances show a significant increase in the incidence of symptoms of ill health, believed to result from their proximity to these substances in their workplace, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That the Ministry of Agriculture, in co-operation with the Ministry of National Health and Welfare, be instructed to exercise its mandate under the Pest Control Products Act and ban the use of these substances for the treatment of all lumber so that Canadian woodworkers are no longer exposed to these poisons.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MURDER OF POLICEMAN IN LONGUEUIL, P.Q.—EXPRESSION OF CONDOLENCES TO BEREAVED FAMILY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Madam Speaker, whereas yesterday in Longueuil a young policeman of twenty-six, Michel Vincent, lost his life while protecting the interests and the rights of his fellow citizens against any kind of transgression, and another officer was seriously wounded, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Dupont):

That this House send a message of condolence to the family of Michel Vincent who died yesterday in tragic circumstances while protecting our rights.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

TRADE

EFFECT OF GATT ON BEEF IMPORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, since the Canadian negotiators at the Tokyo Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade accepted agreements that are now causing Canadian cattlemen to operate below the cost of production throughout all of 1980-81 by agreeing to a formula allowing beef imports relative to human population growth, and a guaranteed minimum level of importation based on figures collected when our cattle populations were at an all-time high, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the Government of Canada refer this issue to a special standing committee so that the government might in turn accept the responsibility for the damage caused by the actions of their negotiators.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

● (1415)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INDUSTRY

SUGGESTED REDEPLOYMENT OF HUMAN RESOURCES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray). I have in my hand a document entitled "A Top Secret Cabinet Document" that was sponsored by the Minister of State for Economic Development who happens to be in the other House. My question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce centres on this document which sets out as a top priority the redeployment of Canada's human resources from one area of Canada to another. Would the minister indicate if he, as the minister in the other House suggested, agreed to this proposition, and if this is, in fact, part of the industrial strategy that he has told us is on the way and will be introduced shortly?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we want to increase job opportunities for Canadians, particularly in the areas where they live. I appreciate that my hon. friend is in effect trying to build up interest for our forthcoming announcements in the area of industrial strategy. I hope my hon. friend will be patient and hear the announcements and I hope that he will have the same level of interest but with a higher degree of support.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MOBILITY OF LABOUR

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who apparently is confirming that his senior minister has, in fact, revisited Walter Gordon's 1957 proposition of depopulating various areas of Canada to the general disadvantage of the nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, again if I may direct my question to the minister about the suggestion that the cabinet should actively seek ways to reduce the impediments to mobility and adjustment caused by unions, professional associations and provincial practices. Would the minister indicate, first, if that is one of the reasons that his government is so adamant in having a mobility clause put in the government's Charter of Rights proposition? Second, how does the minister propose to denude or depopulate the various areas of Canada? Third, what has the minister in mind when he says that he wants to counter the unions, the professional associations and the provincial practices that restrain the type of movement that he has in mind?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I do not accept or confirm the premise with regard to my hon. friend's question that what he has is a document that represents a decision or policy of the Government of Canada as such. In any event, I think Canadians generally feel that we should strengthen the common market in this country, which means maintaining and strengthening opportunities for Canadians to have job opportunities in every part of the country. I think this is a healthy idea, even though, as far as I am concerned, the focus has to be on strengthening opportunities for work in the regions where Canadians make their homes.

* * *

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): My question is again directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the minister is undoubtedly aware, the document submitted by his senior minister to cabinet makes virtually no reference to FIRA whatsoever. Would the minister indicate where this puts his proposition with respect to FIRA? Is it no longer a priority? Has he been overruled? In short, is it true that he has absolutely no clout in cabinet whatsoever? Is it absolutely true?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I do not believe it would be wise for my hon. friend to put forth the premise in his question that whatever he has in his hands involves a document reflecting a decision of the Government of Canada as a whole. The position that we stated with respect to FIRA was that stated in the Throne Speech. As I have said before, and I shall repeat here, we are presently discussing the timing and the manner of dealing with what we said in the throne speech in this regard. I only remind the House of the very strong comments with regard to this matter that were made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs yesterday. They are comments worth repeating and worth remembering.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENTS MADE BY MINISTER

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question also directed to the same minister. The minister's policy and statements with regard to government intervention and foreign ownership are clearly contrary to the philosophy in this cabinet document on economic development, at page 19, if he wishes to refer to it. They are clearly identified as one of the key reasons why there are high interest rates in the country today. Is the minister's contribution to the very high level of interest rates the main reason why his approach to industrial strategy has been shunted aside by his cabinet colleagues?

• (1420)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, if I am not mistaken, interest rates have come down some three percentage points since their record high level in August. I am sure all of us, while continuing to be concerned about the issue, look forward to and hope for continued movement in that area. I am not accepting the premise of the hon. member's question that what he has in his hand reflects in any way the decision of the government as a whole.

Mr. Clark: Perhaps they did not tell you.

Mr. Gray: What he is talking about as my policies are the policies put forward by this party during the election and confirmed in the throne speech. They are policies with which I am pleased to be associated because they are policies the majority of Canadians indicated they support.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, it is quite clear from this document that the statements and the philosophies which the minister has been following, not just since he has been in the office he holds now but for the last ten years, have led to the present high level of interest rates in the country. In my presence about a year and a half ago the minister said that if interest rates went above the prevailing level, at that time of some 13 to 13.5 per cent, he would resign.

He has also said that this document does not necessarily represent government thinking at this stage. If in fact it represents government thinking and is accepted by his colleagues in government, will the minister resign both for that reason and for the reason he stated 18 months ago, that if interest rates went above the then prevailing rate he would resign?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Resign, Herb!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I do not think that the policies I support are in favour of or have in any way contributed to high interest rates. The hon. member's question is essentially hypothetical, but I think I will say now, as I said before, that in any event whatever happens in terms of government announcements it is incumbent upon people such as myself to stay here and fight to ensure that the group on the other side do not get in office again and have another chance to damage the economy as they already started to do before they were thrown out by the Canadian people.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

WAGE EQUALITY FOR WOMEN EMPLOYEES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The Human Rights Commission found in May, 1980, that the federal government was guilty of shortchanging some 3,000 public servants, mostly women, by approximately $9.5 million. Since the report of the conciliation board brought down yesterday argues that this point is correct and indicates that equality should be provided, why has the minister waited 18 months to provide the equality due Canadian women? Why does he not pay them the money they deserve?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, this question has been asked a number of times in the House.

Mr. Broadbent: Well answer it this time.

Mr. Johnston: I have given very satisfactory answers. We have moved in every possible way that we could up to this point to eliminate what has been called a discriminatory practice. This so-called discrimination against women is actually against female dominated groups in the general services group. Let me cite an example. In the laundry services group there are 36 women and 35 men. We recognize that the contract to which that group is subject in 22 different pay zones and seven subgroups across the country is a basis of claim for discrimination.

Miss MacDonald: How about deputy ministers?

Mr. Johnston: The conciliation board report which was handed down yesterday was referred by the Public Service Alliance to its membership for ratification, which it has to do in accordance with the terms of its constitution. In the meantime we have indicated our support for the minority report which would have the effect of eliminating discrimination and in fact of providing a common pay plan, a 17 per cent increase in 1981, and a 10 per cent increase in the next year. In fact it is a 26-month contract. I do not see how the hon. member for Oshawa can say that we have not done everything possible to revolve this difficult situation.

• (1425)

I might also add that with respect to the retroactive period which terminated at the end of the prior contract, namely, in December, 1980, a human rights tribunal was constituted and that issue will be determined by the tribunal, namely, what is the proper interpretation of Section 11 of the Human Rights Act.

REQUEST THAT CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT BE ACTED UPON IMMEDIATELY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister is clearly the biggest sexist in the country. Listen to that answer! He knows that I wrote to him in June, 1980, after the ruling of the Human Rights Commissioner, and he wrote back saying that he would resolve the issue as "expeditiously" as possible. That was 18 months ago. Canadian women working for the Canadian government are still waiting for his action.

I ask the minister again why he is waiting to act until further meetings take place? Why does he not accept the majority recommendation of the report that came down, and why does he not provide some equality now?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Oshawa and his party are notoriously generous with taxpayers' money. The interpretation to be given to Section 11 of the Human Rights Act is something that a tribunal must determine. We have made offers of settlement. We made a proposal to the Human Rights Commission that would have cost the taxpayers $13.8 million. The Human Rights Commission suggested that a human rights tribunal be established. No counter proposal was made.

Mr. Broadbent: You should take action.

Mr. Johnston: The conciliation board has made a specific proposal which has very far-reaching implications, with respect to the application of that act. Is the hon. member saying to us—

Mr. Broadbent: Get equality.

Mr. Johnston: Bear in mind, Madam Speaker, the point I made at the outset. We are talking about female dominated groups; we are not talking about women. I resent very much any accusation that I am a sexist. I would point out to the hon. member for Oshawa that I happen to be the father of four daughters and have a vested interest in—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, that was most touching. I happen to be the daughter of one—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Only a minister who seemed proud of the fact that he had four daughters could laugh at an obvious slip.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Your "slip" is showing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I should like to say—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I hate to break up the good spirit of the House but we must have question period.

Mr. Broadbent: The point is clear, Madam Speaker, that the government believes in equality for women only if it does not cost the government a cent. That is the point. The minister made that clear in his answer. I would like him either to confirm or deny that. As I understood him, he said that it would cost money to provide equality. Is he saying to the women of Canada that they cannot expect equality from Liberals if it means the government must pay for it?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I was not laughing at the hon. member's "slip".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: I simply want to point out that the hon. member does not understand the issues at all. With respect to the proposals which we made, we have attempted to increase salaries in the female dominated groups in amounts averaging 13.8 per cent and 35 per cent in the first half of the agreement.

• (1430)

I think that was a very generous offer, Madam Speaker. It has nothing to do with the marketplace, I might add. It has to do with trying to resolve the difficulty of having subgroups and 22 pay zones with 13 levels of pay spread right across this country of which some are female dominated, namely three, with four being male dominated. It has nothing to do with the equality of women, because in each of these groups there is a very substantial male representation. In the largest group it is one third male who will benefit also from this increase; in another group it is 50 per cent male, and in the other group, as I mentioned, it is 35 male and 36 female. I can hardly see how the hon. member for Oshawa can make any accusation with respect to discrimination against women in the proposals we have made.

* * *

INDUSTRY

RECOMMENDED REDEPLOYMENT OF UNEMPLOYED

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to have ladies go before gentlemen in the question period.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who has been "Olsonated". At page 37 of the Olson memorandum to the cabinet the major recommendation is this:

> —the redeployment of Canada's human resources from areas or industries with low rates of productivity or returns into resource or resource-based and high productivity and high technology industries or areas.

That is the main recommendation; in other words, to shift people from areas with high unemployment to other areas. Is this the government's final solution to the unemployment problem in provinces such as Newfoundland, regionally deprived provinces with as high as 17.8 per cent unemployment? Is it the government's policy to move the people from there, whether they wish it or not?

Does this new policy explain the fact that DREE assistance has been cut back 50 per cent in Newfoundland? Is this the explanation for the cutback in transportation assistance? Is this why the minister would not give a grant to the St. John's dockyard when he gave $40 million to Vancouver, grants to Halifax and Saint John, New Brunswick? Is this the minister's final solution to the problem of regional deprivation?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, first of all in the premise of my hon. friend's question he in effect admits that what he is quoting from is not a statement of government policy. He talked about somebody's alleged proposal to cabinet.

Second of all, Madam Speaker, in my hon. friend's own question he gives the answer to what he is trying to assert, that it is not correct that this government is working in a way that is adverse to the interests of the Atlantic provinces in general, and Newfoundland in particular, because he himself in his question put forward a range of announcements we made to enhance the economic development of the Atlantic area.

We are also taking steps to enhance and expand the economic base of the province of Newfoundland through a number of measures, one in particular being what we are doing to bring about the development of the offshore resource area. On August 27 I announced the federal government's program to ensure to Canadian workers and companies in Canada a full and fair opportunity to take part in those projects, and this will mean a whole host of opportunities for workers in Newfoundland, something my hon. friend did not bother to think about in the fortunately brief period he was in office.

GOVERNMENT FUNDING FOR PULP AND PAPER INDUSTRY

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whose answer to the hon. member for St. John's West indicates why he is the weak sister in cabinet.

Recently Cal Knudsen, the chairman of MacMillan Bloedel Ltd., reported that three B.C. newsprint producers are spending about half a billion dollars of private capital to build three newsprint machines. Mr. Knudsen, whose company has just laid off 1,400 workers, reported that these new machines will start up at low operating capacities caused in part by government funded expansion elsewhere in Canada. Since the cabinet document referred to by hon. members specifically underlines the need for a "good climate" for private capital investment, why does the government continue to rain on the private sector's parade by funding competitive projects? Why should taxpayers pay for projects which may put themselves out of work?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the hon. lady's question demonstrates why it is said that when Conservatives are asked to form a firing squad they take their guns and form up in a circle. My hon. friend from Newfoundland has just complained that this government is allegedly not doing enough to enhance the economic development of eastern Canada. His colleague is saying in effect that we are doing too much.

I do not think there is in any way anything wrong with working co-operatively with the industry and the provinces to help bring about the modernization of the pulp and paper industry in this country generally, and in eastern Canada particularly, because we have said that we are also willing to discuss a similar program with the western provinces and industry. For her to say what she is saying, reflecting on the very great and sound achievements for the pulp and paper modernization program in its present form, it shows why, instead of making the contribution the Conservatives should to national unity, they are doing just the opposite.

DOCTRINE ESPOUSED BY FORMER LIBERAL MINISTER

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Some years ago a prominent Liberal by the name of Walter Gordon, who is widely known as the philosophical mentor of the minister, propagated the odious doctrine that the federal government should move people out of Atlantic Canada to the industrial centres of the country, rather than help create opportunities for jobs in their own region. This top secret cabinet document on federal economic priorities for the 1980s, which I have in my hand and which the minister has not repudiated, calls for "a large-scale shift of people from areas with low rates of productivity to high-productivity areas of the country." Will the minister rise to his feet now and assure the House, and through the House the people of Atlantic Canada, that he will personally fight against the federal government's declared goal of resurrecting the odious Walter Gordon doctrine?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, it is not the declared role of this government. In fact the evidence demonstrates that we have been working to increase job opportunities in every part of the country, and we have certainly been doing this with respect to Atlantic Canada. This is demonstrated by the fact that the most recent figures show that the population of Atlantic Canada has gone up, the first time this has happened in many years, and it has gone up because of the work we have been doing through federal government policies to support private sector activity and to create the jobs and the environment which has brought people back to Atlantic Canada, something they would not have thought of under Conservative policy.

* * *

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

LOCATION OF VOLKSWAGEN PLANT IN ONTARIO

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the same minister. Volkswagen decided to locate in Barrie, Ontario, at no federal cost other than duty remission which would have been granted anywhere else in Canada. The minister, by his interference, and in conjunction with his Quebec cabinet colleagues, pressured Volkswagen to locate in Quebec, thus the company nearly went to the United States. Only a $9.2 million Ontario grant saved that plant. Does the minister realize he has no cabinet clout left, that he has created unnecessary tensions between Ontario and Quebec, and that by his actions the Volkswagen incident has not gone unnoticed but has damaged future foreign investment in this country?

Will the minister now admit to this House that he has no real industrial strategy and, again as my colleagues have said before, will he resign, taking his government interference with him?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): As I said in the House on July 6, Madam Speaker, the duty remission program sought by Volkswagen meant a contribution from taxpayers all over Ontario and all over Canada in the millions of dollars. In fact, now that we have announced the actual program, it is clear that the additional contribution from taxpayers amounts to some $10 million a year on top of the existing duty remission from the existing program, of $15 million. I say that under those circumstances it is the duty of the government to make sure that all suitable sites were looked at before a final decision was made to grant this duty remission program, certainly in terms of suitable sites in areas suffering high unemployment and slow growth. If we had not been willing to do that then we would not have carried out our responsibility to the taxpayers and to all the people of Canada.

• (1440)

It so happens that without the decision we made for this duty remission program, that plant would not have been located anywhere in Canada and all of Canada would have lost its substantial economic benefit. It is our efforts that brought this to Canada, not the dithering of my hon. friend.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

DIOXIN POLLUTION OF LAKE ONTARIO

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of the Environment. Last week the minister confirmed that higher levels of dioxin had been found in Lake Ontario. The minister must recognize by now that dioxin presents a serious health hazard when it is consumed. The minister also indicated that he would be meeting with his counterparts from the government of Ontario to discuss joint strategy in an attempt to solve this problem. Has the minister done that, and when can Canadians expect to receive some concrete action from the minister?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question would elicit a complicated answer. There has already been a considerable degree of action. The dioxin problem is certainly not a new one. We have acted in co-operation with a variety of groups, particularly in relation to possible legal settlements in relation to the Hooker chemical plant, a site which we believe may be the cause of the entry of dioxin into the Niagara River system. We have supported those groups both with information, with expertise with witnesses, and in some ways with financial assistance. It is not by any means a new concern. It is a concern on which we have already acted.

It is not entirely clear whether dioxin levels are increasing. The sophistication of our detection techniques has increased to the extent that we are now able to detect traces of chemicals and poisons that we would not have been able to trace in the past. The evidence we have so far is that dioxin levels are diminishing.

As a result of new information we have, we feel there is a new situation which requires the co-operation of the province of Ontario with the Government of Canada in making representations to the United States and also in setting new levels and new standards in relation to the Niagara River. We have already begun that process by meeting with private and public action groups, those who are most concerned, and in a few days we will be meeting with officials of the government of Ontario.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF ALL-PARTY COMMITTEE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of the Environment. I would be the first one to agree that it is a serious problem, but the minister does not seem to be taking the problem as seriously as most people are. In light of that, would the minister agree to setting up an all-party committee of this House to investigate the dioxin problem, which can report back to the House so that we can deal with the matter effectively?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I really cannot comprehend the misinformation in the hon. member's mind when he says that we have not been taking this very seriously.

Mr. Young: That is in Hansard. You made the statement last week.

Mr. Roberts: If the hon. member would look back at the record, he will discover that over the past 18 months we have been in the lead in undertaking research in the Great Lakes waters in relation to this matter. It was a result of the actions of the Department of the Environment that the dioxin levels, which had escaped detection in the past were detected. It was a result of our scientific work that this problem was first brought to the public's attention. And it is a result of the efforts we have taken over the past 18 months that we have been able to bring together the various groups and governments in a concerted approach to the American government. The hon. member is simply talking through his hat when he says we have not been active in relation to this problem.

Mr. Young: You are the one. You do not know.

Mr. Roberts: The hon. member should know the facts better than that.

[Translation]

COMMUNICATIONS

QUERY RESPECTING PASSAGE OF FREEDOM OF INFORMATION LEGISLATION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. A number of my constituents are following very closely the progress of the freedom of information legislation which deals with the access to documents or files concerning the persons named therein and which are now unavailable to them. Could the minister tell us whether the bill now before a committee of this House will be passed at third reading by Christmas?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his question. Obviously, a bill on access to information is a very important matter. As the hon. member pointed out, the bill is now before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of the House. I expect the committee will finish its consideration of the bill as soon as possible, and I share the hon. member's hope that the bill will be enacted before the Christmas recess.

* * *

[English]

TRADE

EFFECT OF GATT ON CATTLE PRODUCERS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, quite by coincidence I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since beef producers across Canada are losing on the average more than $100 per calf compared to prices one year ago, and because the most important factor leading to that decrease has been as a result of mistakes in information and judgment by the Canadian negotiators responsible to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce at the last round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade at Tokyo, how does the minister intend to compensate for his errors and reflect proper justice to Canadian cattle producers?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, in any negotiations there are aspects one can look upon very favourably, and there are other aspects that are open to question. I do not accept my hon. friend's premise. Even though I was not the responsible minister at the time, I think that on balance the results of the GATT negotiations were a good deal for Canada generally.

If I am not mistaken, the confirmation of the results of the GATT negotiations was in the hands of the hon. member for St. John's West when he was minister of finance. I suggest that the hon. member for Crowfoot direct his question in caucus to the hon. member for St. John's West.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

SITUATION IN WINDSOR, ONT.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for industry, trade and high interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: They will let you speak next year, Cousineau.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member should address the minister by his proper title.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, the commissioner of finance for the city of Windsor, Ontario, Mr. E. A. Agnew, today confirmed that the city of Windsor, with an unemployment rate of 11 per cent, can no longer afford further capital expenditures as a result of the government's high interest rate policies and the dismal performance of the automotive industry, for which the minister himself is responsible.

Because the policies of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce have caused unprecedented unemployment in Windsor and across Canada, unprecedented bankruptcies across Canada and in Windsor, and unprecedented hardship in Windsor and across Canada, as the Member of Parliament from the Windsor area how can he, in view of these facts—and they are facts confirmed by the commissioner of finance for Windsor—justify continuing to represent the government as a cabinet minister and to represent Windsor as a member of Parliament—I repeat in view of his dismal failures in his responsibilities?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I want to remind my hon. friend, as I said in an answer a few moments ago—he should have got the copy when they were passing around the questions before question period—that interest rates have gone down some 3 points since the highs of August. We all hope and anticipate that there will be further progress.

Mr. Crosbie: There weren't any high interest rates before you came.

Mr. Gray: The chief problem at the present time facing the Canadian automobile industry is the weakness of the American market for automobiles caused by economic policies which my hon. friends would love to put into effect if they had the chance. As I have said, and I will say it again, one reason that I am very active in defence of my constituents and the Canadian people is that I do not want to let them have the chance to put those Reaganite economic policies in place.

Finally, I know the people of Windsor remember, although my hon. friends do not, the work that I did on behalf of the government to maintain the thousands of jobs at Chrysler plants in Windsor and at Chrysler affiliates across Canada through our arrangements there, and the designation of Windsor and other communities under the Industry and Labour Adjustments Program. I am very happy, whenever the time comes, to put my efforts and those of the government to the test in Windsor.

• (1450)

An hon. Member: Resign!

Mr. Gray: I know that the results will be the same as in past—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

INDUSTRY

QUERY RESPECTING RELOCATION OF WORKERS

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, for the less favoured areas of Canada, such as the province of New Brunswick, it has been confirmed now that the policies of this government are transparently favouritism toward areas of Canada other than those less favoured areas.

An hon. Member: What do you mean?

Mr. McCain: I would have to say, Madam Speaker, what this means is that the thought process of—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. McCain:—the thought process of the Liberal inventors fossilized around 1957 under the Hon. Walter Gordon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: Does that mean there will be less equalization money, less money for cost-shared programs to New Brunswick, and is that the vehicle by which it will compel people to move, and subsidize their movement? My question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend, in his premise to the question, is completely out to lunch. The approach which we take to the development of New Brunswick is exemplified by projects such as the Mitel plant brought about through the efforts of this government, meaning close to a thousand jobs in a high technology area, and efforts like the project I announced earlier this week to bring about the expansion and modernization of the Saint John Shipbuilding and Drydock Company which will bring hundreds of jobs directly and a lot more indirectly to the New Brunswick area to an industry that has great promise in terms of offshore development.

This is the approach we are taking, exemplified by action which will mean more jobs, high skilled and high technology jobs in the province of New Brunswick. It is something I am sure my hon. friend and his party would not have been able to do in the unlikely event that they had continued in office.

METRIC CONVERSION

SUGGESTED PENALTIES FOR FOOD STORE OWNERS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, a 20-page document leaked to me today confirms that the government intends to jail food store owners who refuse to sell or advertise their products in metric units.

My question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. This document also confirms that store owners face heavy fines and confiscation of weighing equipment. Will the minister, who is directly responsible for the Metric Commission, stand in this House today and say that he is permitting this to occur, or will he intercede on behalf of the business community in Canada and rescind the order in council that makes this possible?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I do not share the pessimistic view taken by the hon. member. We know perfectly well on this side of the House that the Canadian business community is a responsible one, and that when we were developing our metrication policy we received the co-operation of the private sector which assisted us in setting up the schedule for its implementation. We are convinced that retail grocers, like all other representatives of the various sectors of the economy, will be able to follow the guidelines we have established in that regard.

* * *

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS BY BLACK AND DECKER CANADA INC. IN LEEDS-GRENVILLE CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and it arises from a few words in a statement just issued by R. H. Campbell, President of Black and Decker Canada Inc., located in Leeds-Grenville, announcing the lay-off of 150 people. Those words were:

> Orders have fallen due to weakening consumer demand, declining housing starts and retailer-wholesaler reluctance to invest in inventory—the direct result of the current soft economy in general, and high interest rates in particular.

Will the minister comment on this statement by Mr. Campbell of Black and Decker Canada Inc. and indicate when the government will stop sitting still while thousands of people lose their jobs and inflation gallops on and interest rates remain disastrous? When will the government implement measures to deal with these serious lay-off problems, rather than have us sit here and listen to him boasting about his accomplishments, which are very much in doubt?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I would like to thank my hon. friend and his colleagues for giving me an opportunity to put the facts forward about my accomplishments and those of my colleagues on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: We are still waiting for your resignation.

Mr. Gray: If I am not mistaken, Black and Decker is one of a number of foreign-controlled companies in this country which has followed an example which I think should be multiplied, that is, to operate on a world product mandate basis for specific product lines. I think the problem my hon. friend has outlined in his question is not solely related to the Canadian economy but to the American and world economy.

We certainly have to improve the situation, and this is what we are doing. The Minister of Finance has talked about efforts he is making which we look forward to being reflected in his budget.

Certainly the Black and Decker situation is linked not solely to the Canadian situation but to that of the United States economy and world economy. The situation in the United States economy is linked with the policy my hon. friend and his colleagues on that side of the House would desire to put into place if the Canadian people ever gave them the chance, which I do not think they will.

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER MEASURES WILL BE TAKEN TO INCREASE FOOTWEAR PRODUCTION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As he seems to have "warmed up", we must take advantage of it.

Not too long ago the Canadian footwear industry made representations to the minister with a view to establishing a policy that would protect and ensure the survival of the industry in Canada and also provide opportunities for increasing production. In view of the prevailing economic situation, could the hon. minister tell us today in the House whether he intends to give a positive reply to the Canadian footwear industry and whether the desired increase in production could be realized next year?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we are in the process of completing our discussions in cabinet on our policy for the footwear industry. I am sure we shall be able to issue a statement in the very near future.

[English]

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN PREPARATIONS FOR SPECIAL SESSION ON DISARMAMENT

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the general fear of a nuclear war and the fear of a new arms race between the super powers, and the fact that the world armament market into the Third World is at its height, and the fact that Canadians and millions of people around the world are protesting against this, and lastly the fact that members of all parties in both Houses have a very deep concern about the question of disarmament, would the minister tell this House how the government is preparing for the special session on disarmament to be held at the United Nations next June?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Government of Canada has always been one of the leaders in the search for world disarmament. We intend to continue in our devotion to that cause.

As the hon. gentleman correctly pointed out, there is a special session on disarmament which will be held under United Nations aegis next May and June.

We have begun our preparation for that session and we will be consulting widely with the Canadian public. We hope to receive advice also from the standing committee in Parliament. We will certainly continue our traditional policies, including the policy which the Prime Minister enunciated several years ago, of suffocation.

FUNDS TO ESTABLISH PEACE INSTITUTE

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): I am happy to hear that the minister has some positive suggestions to put forward. I am sure he will be open to other suggestions which will come from various parts of this House, including the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. Would the minister be able to instruct the government, as a symbolic step, not to buy the 138th fighter airplane, but use the funds for that last fighter to set up a peace institute in Canada and fund university chairs and foundations which would study the causes of war and underdevelopment, and how we can maintain peace?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we on this side of the House certainly share our hon. friend's devotion to the cause of disarmament. We will do everything we can to advance it on a mutually acceptable basis and to encourage peace as well as peace institutes.

• (1500)

Our policy, however, is not a single track policy. It is not one of disarmament alone because, as the hon. gentleman well knows, to be effective disarmament has to be a two-way street. Therefore, until such time as disarmament is mutually agreed to by the great powers, it is necessary for us to maintain our support for our NATO alliance, and part of that obligation is to equip ourselves adequately with aircraft. It is that obligation which we are fulfilling. One cannot be simple-minded about the search for peace. Peace is not attained only by protestations of peace; it is also attained by being strong.

* * *

TRADE

IMPORTATION OF PLEASURE BOATS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In a response to an Order Paper question I see that in 1978 Canada imported $31 million worth of pleasure boats, and in 1980 $46 million worth. Canadians can build boats. Why has the minister allowed this to happen?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is asking a remarkable question for a member of a party which is supposed to be in favour of the private sector moving untrammelled by government intervention. The hon. member's question is quite contradictory to the thrust of his leaders on the front bench.

One has to look at this issue in terms not only of imports but also of exports. We have some very strong Canadian domestic and export markets, and one has to look at that in the light of those export figures. I will be happy to go into the question further and get back to my hon. friend, if he wants to give me specific details of the situation concerning him.

* * *

AVIATION INDUSTRY

McDONNELL DOUGLAS PLANT LAY-OFFS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He has been telling us today about all the jobs he has created. I would like to ask him why, after every meeting he has had with the United Auto Workers of McDonnell Douglas, another 500 are laid off. Has he taken their suggestions and examined them—I refer to such suggestions as work sharing—and is he prepared to take any action on those very worth-while suggestions?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we are in fact examining the suggestions of the UAW with respect to the McDonnell Douglas situation, and specifically with respect to work sharing. I am working and discussing the situation with the Minister of Employment and Immigration to see if we have a federal program which can provide a basis for that approach.

Mr. McDermid: He is more surprised than anyone in the House. Look at him. He will never talk to you about it.

Mr. Gray: I want also to say that some of the other work we have done with McDonnell Douglas in relation to the CF-18 has prevented the number of lay-offs from being even greater, even though they are caused by an almost total decline in sales in world markets of the McDonnell Douglas civilian aircraft for which the plant is making wing components. We are very concerned about this. We are working with the company to try to find other types of work to be done in the plant. We are attempting not just to stabilize employment there but also to bring people back to work.

* * *

ENERGY

RESULTS OF DOME PETROLEUM EXPLORATIONS IN BEAUFORT SEA

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday evening Dome Petroleum reported on its Beaufort Sea exploration results which the company states are, and I quote, "positive confirmation of major oil potential". Could the minister comment on these exploration results and on what implications they might have on Canada's goal of oil self-sufficiency by 1990?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, Dome Petroleum released figures yesterday which are indeed very encouraging. They are public. Such forecasts seem to indicate the possibility of large oil reserves which would be available on a commercial basis in the years to come. I want to mention that in our forecast of oil self-sufficiency by 1990 we have not provided for any particular reserve in the Beaufort Sea or offshore, so any announcement like the one made yesterday—and others will come in the future—indeed ensures that we will have self-sufficiency in this country by 1990.

* * *

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Tuesday, November 3, 1981, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—RIGHT OF COMMITTEE CHAIRMEN TO ANSWER QUESTIONS IN HOUSE—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I would like to rule today on a matter raised as a question of privilege by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). On October 28 last the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) raised a point of order, and subsequently the hon. member for Yukon raised a question related to that as a question of privilege, and I intend to deal with both at the same time.

For the benefit of hon. members, I think I should review the circumstances as recorded in Hansard for Wednesday, October 28 at pages 12267 to 12269. In the first instance hon. members will recall that the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) asked the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne), in his capacity as chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport, the following question, and I quote:

—can the chairman inform this House on the status of earlier discussions to convene the committee? Does the hon. member not think it would be a positive step to widen the terms of reference of the committee to include the Atlantic coast and British Columbia, rather than having only Ontario and Quebec?

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) rose and gave an answer to the question. Following that the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants was given the floor for a supplementary question which he directed either to the President of the Privy Council or the chairman of the standing committee, and a reply was given by the President of the Privy Council.

Shortly thereafter the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) asked the following question:

Will the chairman of that committee tell us whether he has asked for a reference of the VIA Rail question to the standing committee—

That question was a bit different from the question I quoted a moment ago, and I think hon. members will want to note that. As noted in Hansard, both the chairman of the committee and the President of the Privy Council rose, and the latter replied.

On a supplementary question the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition repeated his question, at which time the President of the Privy Council, followed by the chairman of the committee, responded.

Upon reviewing the circumstances I feel that there are several points of procedure which must be clarified. There can be no doubt, as numerous precedents indicate, that questions to chairmen of committees are in order when such questions relate to procedural matters. Hon. members will appreciate, however, that the scope of questions permitted is quite narrow; for example, dealing with whether a meeting is to be held, a committee will be convened, the time of meetings and other questions of a similar nature. I refer hon. members to Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 366, and to Hansard for January 15, 1971, page 2442; March 16, 1973, page 2293; and May 20, 1970, page 7126. Those precedents are quite similar to the matter we are discussing today.

It therefore follows that if chairmen of committees may be asked questions, then they have the right to answer questions—as well as the discretion; that goes without saying.

On this point Erskine May, in his nineteenth edition at page 327, states:

—a member may not seek by means of a question to the chairman to interfere in the proceedings of a select committee by suggesting a particular subject for inquiry (although such subject fell within its order of reference).

If we were to apply this reference to the situation last week, it appears that the questions were asked in such a manner that they could have been construed as dealing with House business in general and, as I indicated on that day, if the President of the Privy Council wants to interpret the question as being related to the business of the House, it is not for the Chair—that was confirmed by some hon. members—to say that it is not related to the business of the House. As it happened, however, two members stood to reply, and I indicated last Wednesday that I did not choose between them, but in each case one member seemed to defer to the other. At any rate, both hon. members responded which, from what we can read into the questions asked, seemed to be the desire.

Therefore, I must rule that the proceedings of last week's question period relating to the questioning of a committee chairman on the business of the committee he chairs did not infringe upon our accepted parliamentary practice and, consequently, I find there is neither a point of order nor a question of privilege but a reason to clarify the status of that particular question.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, there is an ancillary point which you might wish to consider with respect to that whole situation. The practice has been for the Chair to recognize members on this side of the House by their ridings when they rise. Indeed, the backbenchers on the government side of the House are recognized in the same fashion by the Chair. However, my recollection is that when ministers rise, the Chair does not specifically recognize the minister by name.

● (1510)

I submit there may be a dangerous practice arise where instead of the Chair recognizing the minister by his office, the operators of the sound system are invading—and I say that with no derogation intended—the prerogative of the Chair. When a minister rises, the operators of the sound system are going to activate the microphone. Because a minister is standing in the House, the operators of the sound system are going to activate that microphone before activating the microphone of a private member.

I strongly suggest to the Chair that consideration be given to adopting the practice of recognizing ministers by their office. If that practice would have been followed, the choice would have had to be made by the Chair in recognizing the question directed toward the chairman.

I also have a brief point of order to direct to the President of the Privy Council, who last Thursday—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Could I reply to that before the hon. member raises the point of order. I will recognize him immediately after.

I am very reluctant to follow the suggestion which the hon. member is now making. The only kind of intervention the Chair could make in the circumstances would be to say to a minister or chairman of a committee: "You may not answer that question." That is the only kind of intervention I could make. The microphone operators would of course follow if I interfered and indicated that such a person in the House may not be authorized to answer a question, but rather another one.

I think bringing in the microphones at this point is not terribly helpful. I would certainly think twice before changing the long-standing custom of this House of ministers rising to answer if a question is addressed to them. However, they do not always rise when a question is addressed to them. Another minister may rise because he feels it is his responsibility. I think that breaking that custom should only be done after very serious reflection.

I do not think the microphones are terribly relevant to what happened the other day. If I had felt I could intervene because I could interpret the question, and the problem was that the question had a double interpretation, it was not up to the Chair to interpret the meaning of that question. Therefore, I had to leave it to the relevant persons to determine if they wanted to reply or not.

In this case both replied. In a sense, everyone was satisfied because the House got a reply from the President of the Privy Council, who felt he was answering with his responsibility for government business. The chairman of the standing committee answered because he felt that the question, the one posed by the Leader of the Opposition, was more specific and he could answer it, and he did. Everyone was satisfied. I think we should wait until another incident occurs to see whether there is a problem with the microphones. At this point I am reluctant to change the custom.

I will now recognize the hon. member on his point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the whole point is that the selection was not made by the Chair but by the operators.

Madam Speaker: In answer to the hon. member for Yukon, I feel the selection was not made by the operators of the microphones but was made by two people on the floor of the House. They decided to answer the question. I do not feel that the microphone operators had a major role in this particular incident.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I do not want to prolong the matter of the microphones nor would I raise any question on a matter on which you have already decided. I have been seeking to review the record of Hansard in light of your statement after your decision that both members on the government side of the House, the chairman of the committee to whom the question was directed and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), had the right to speak. The House will recall that a private member, the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne), was allowed to speak only after permission to speak was given to him by the President of the Privy Council. It was at that point the President of the Privy Council took his seat.

Madam Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition is really discussing the ruling. That point was considered in my ruling. I apologize, but I cannot hear the right hon. member on that.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I just want to say that after reading your remarks in Hansard I want to serve notice now that I may raise a further question of privilege dealing with this whole question of the electronic selection of who is going to be heard and who is not.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, last Thursday the President of the Privy Council indicated the business for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, but was reluctant to indicate the business for Thursday and Friday. If Bill C-48, the Canada Oil and Gas Act, continues today we are in a position of not knowing what the business of the House will be for tomorrow. I wonder if the President of the Privy Council would at least tell us today one more day's House business so that we can do some preparation for tomorrow.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Unless otherwise notified, Madam Speaker, tomorrow we will continue to deal with Bill C-48.

* * *

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. COSSITT—INFORMATION PROVIDED IN WRITTEN ANSWER ALLEGED FALSE

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege arises from material referring to myself and appearing in the third report of the commission of inquiry concerning activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, commonly known as the McDonald commission.

I realize a member is required to bring a question of privilege to the attention of the Chair immediately on becoming aware of it. A while ago, Madam Speaker, I advised you in my written notice that although this report was issued some time ago, only late yesterday did I have the opportunity to read as far as page 341 of the third report and discover what I believe is a clear question of privilege appearing therein. I can only hope, Madam Speaker, that you will take my word as an hon. member of this House that, had I known about this sooner, I would most definitely have raised it before now.

The section of the McDonald commission report to which I refer deals with Question No. 2,332 placed by myself on the Order Paper of this House in 1975. It concerned allegations by Igor Gouzenko that he received no government pension from the time of his defection in 1946 until such pension was instituted by the government of the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker in 1962. The first part of my question as quoted by the McDonald commission was as follows:

> What are all the reasons that a government pension was not given to Igor Gouzenko from 1946 up to the time the government of the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker took such action in 1962?

The commission report then proceeds to quote from the answer given by the solicitor general of the time, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). It states in part "from 1946 to 1962 Mr. Gouzenko was looked after entirely by the Canadian government." Further on page 341 of the McDonald commission's third report the following very significant words appear:

● (1520)

> We have reviewed the history of the matter carefully, as it is disclosed by RCMP files. The story, in almost every aspect, is a crystal clear one. It is not true that from 1946 to 1962 Mr. Gouzenko was looked after "entirely" by the Canadian government.

Clearly, Madam Speaker, falsified information was given to me as a member of this House. I realize, Madam Speaker, that I also must establish that a question of privilege can extend back to a previous session of a previous Parliament. I believe this is made clear both by rulings made by yourself and by your predecessor Speaker, Mr. Jerome. I also quote from the nineteenth edition of Erskine May, page 161, wherein it is > —a contempt committed against one Parliament may be punished by another—

I refer to certain references contained in Erskine May and, particularly, a ruling given by Mr. Speaker Jerome that clearly indicates, I believe, that I have a prima facie case of privilege. These references pertain to the giving of false information to this House, in this particular case by a cabinet minister.

It is clear from precedent and previous rulings that even though the false information may have been given to the House by the former solicitor general, without his knowing that it was false at the time, nevertheless a minister must assume responsibility for what he presents in the House which indeed may often have actually been drafted by others. In this regard I refer to page 966 of Hansard of November 9, 1978, where Speaker Jerome states as follows:

> Nevertheless, it has been quite a generally accepted extension of that doctrine of ministerial responsibility that when serious dereliction of duty by an official of a minister takes place, the minister is expected either to assume responsibility for that in the House or, alternatively, to advise the House of the appropriate disciplinary measure which has been taken.

To sum up, Madam Speaker, I am alleging that a deliberate attempt was made to obstruct me in the performance of my duties to the extent that the minister's answer to question No. 2,332 was not drafted on precise statements of fact. The law of privilege in this regard is stated in Erskine May, page 136, nineteenth edition. This was quoted by Speaker Jerome in a favourable ruling on a question of privilege of a somewhat similar nature raised by the member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) on November 9, 1978, as appearing on page 965 of Hansard:

> It may be stated generally that any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results may be treated as a contempt—

Shortly thereafter, Madam Speaker, in Speaker Jerome's ruling the Chair again quoted from Erskine May as follows:

> It is a breach of privilege to present or cause to be presented to either House or to committees of either House, forged, falsified or fabricated documents with intent to deceive such House or committees—

On December 6, 1978, Speaker Jerome ruled further in regard to the matter raised by the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland, and I quote this sentence:

> Even beyond the precedents and the complex law of privilege, I cannot conceive that there is any one of us who would accept the argument that this House of Commons has no recourse in the face of such an attempt to obstruct by offering admittedly misleading information.
>
> I, therefore, find a prima facie case of contempt against the House of Commons.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I contend that my privileges have been breached by falsified information presented to this House. Further examination of page 341 of the third report of the McDonald commission will note that not only was this the case but, also, the additional point that the answer as prepared by the officer in charge of the RCMP counterespionage branch was further falsified by others, publicly unknown at this time, before it was presented to the House of Commons by the minister.

I respectfully request, Madam Speaker, that you investigate this matter that I have just raised, including the precedents outlined in Erskine May and previous rulings by Mr. Speaker Jerome. If it is found that I have a prima facie case of privilege, I would reserve my right to move a motion that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Madam Speaker: I will take this matter under advisement. I gather from the statement which the hon. member made to me that I need to look into it at more length. In the light of what the hon. member stated in the House, I will examine the question and rule on it much later. Perhaps other hon. members would like to speak to the matter later, but I will take it under advisement.

Point of Order—Mr. Wenman

MR. YOUNG—ANSWER OF MINISTER RESPECTING DIOXIN LEVELS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege arises from the response of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) to my question today in which he stated that dioxin levels in Lake Ontario had declined. On October 30, 1981, as reported at page 12347 of Hansard, the minister, in response to a question from the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang), said:

—there are, indeed, recent indications of detection of higher levels of dioxin in the Great Lakes.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member does not have a question of privilege. He is obviously debating the question. There are differences of view as to the facts, but that is part of debate. I cannot hear his comments under a question of privilege.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. WENMAN—REQUEST THAT PETITION BE READ BY CLERK

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, the practice and procedure of the House of Commons provide that we have question period, and immediately after question period we go to the Speaker's report. The Speaker reports and we deal with points of order that relate to the Speaker's report and then we move immediately to privilege. That was the procedure followed today.

I am suggesting that my point of order in fact relates to the Speaker's report and, therefore, I wanted to place the question at that time. I will, therefore, proceed at this time, but I would hope that in the future this is the course that will be followed.

At this point I would ask Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The order in which deliberations are related in Hansard is the order in which they are heard. I am now hearing the hon. member and his comments will appear in Hansard at this point.

Mr. Wenman: Madam Speaker, my point of order is that I would now ask the indulgence of Madam Speaker to allow the Clerk of the House to read the private member's public petition that has now been ruled in order and which is standing in my name as of yesterday.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member requires unanimous consent for the Clerk of the House to read the petition. Does the House give unanimous consent?

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I respectfully submit to you that unanimous consent of the House is not required in order to have a petition read. I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that the Chair has a discretion to grant that permission in order to have a discussion of the matter to which the hon. member is speaking.

Mr. Wenman: Madam Speaker, it is 67(8).

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, if I might—would you activate my microphone? I want to say something.

I have proven my point then.

Madam Speaker: There is a quotation from Beauchesne that has guided the Chair:

Petitions are not read at length in the House, unless by special consent.

It has been the custom of this House that only through unanimous consent has the Chair allowed the Clerk at the Table to read a petition. The hon. member referred to my discretion. I shall read to the hon. member Standing Order 67(8):

No debate shall be permitted on the report but a petition referred to therein may be read by the Clerk of the House at the Table, if required; or if it complain of some present personal grievance requiring an immediate remedy, the matter contained therein may be brought into immediate discussion.

If I recall, the matter referred to in the petition concerned a matter which, if I am to use my discretion, I would say need not be dealt with in such an urgent fashion as to take precedence over the normal business of the House. As I said to the hon. member when he raised the question of privilege previously, under Standing Order 67(8) we could, on several occasions, have urgent debate as is permitted under Standing Order 26.

● (1530)

In order to differentiate between the meaning and intent of the two Standing Orders, it must be quite clear to the Chair that the matter is so urgent as to take precedence over the normal business of the House. As several petitions were presented to the House dealing with the matter dealt with in the petition presented by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West, I do not feel I could determine that the matter is so urgent that we must hear it and have discussion on it now.

Mr. Wenman: Madam Speaker quoted two precedents. The issue at hand is whether or not the petition shall be read at this point. The precedents you quoted indicated that petitions are not read "at length". In other words, petitions may be read, possibly not by unanimous consent. If one wants to read them at length and expand upon them, it is not allowed because that would be "at length". Otherwise, either a simple majority or the discretion of the Speaker would in fact apply.

The second precedent to which Madam Speaker referred related to Standing Order 26. There is a very important difference between Standing Order 26 and a private member's public petition. I am speaking now of an order and of a vehicle which is open to private members. It is extremely important to protect the rights of private members in the House. This instrument of petition is the only almost direct, representative way an individual Canadian has of being heard in the House of Commons. This is the difference between it and Standing Order 26. This is why it is so important that this particular vehicle be protected and be understood in our procedure.

Therefore, I ask Madam Speaker to consider the representation, perhaps over a period of time, as it relates to "at length" and the question of unanimity, as well as to recognize the valuable instrument which in fact a petition represents in the long tradition of democracy.

Madam Speaker: Yes, I recognize that that is the function of petitions. It is to allow individuals some access to the House. I am basing my decision today mainly on practice because the wording of the Standing Order in fact, I am told by the experts with whom I have studied this question, refers back to the time when the courts were not equipped to deal with matters individual citizens would like to bring before the courts and, therefore, petitions were heard in the House of Commons in lieu of being heard by the courts. Somehow the wording of the Standing Order has continued to be what it was, referring to circumstances which are not prevalent today. Therefore, the custom of the House has been to allow petitions to be presented to the House with brief statements on the part of hon. members presenting the petitions. But only through the use of unanimous consent have we allowed petitions to be read by the Clerk.

Even more important, the matter of discussing petitions, I do not know of any precedents when petitions were discussed; they might have existed. But I insist that we cannot use the vehicle of petitions, which is a legitimate one, to present the views of citizens before the House of Commons, to supersede the normal business of the House and to go into urgent debate such as would be allowed under Standing Order 26.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—RECOGNITION OF MEMBERS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise at the earliest opportunity on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deans: I am seeking the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: I am on a question of privilege; it supersedes a point of order.

I rise at the earliest opportunity to ensure that an incident is recorded in the official debates of the House which Madam Speaker did not notice because your head was bowed and you were looking at your Standing Orders and obtaining advice from your Table adviser. While you were doing that, I heard you make an inquiry of your Table adviser; you were asking for a section of the Standing Orders. I had it and I wished to assist by rising and informing the Chair of the section number of the Standing Orders. I asked that my microphone be activated. I know that the operator heard me ask because he shook his head and made a gesture of helplessness because it had to be your decision that the microphone be turned on. I know I was heard by the Hansard reporter because I am too close not to be heard, even without the microphone. I hope those words will appear in today's official record of the debates in the chamber because it proved precisely the point I gave notice of a few moments ago and will now be raising tomorrow.

* * *

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. DEANS—PROCEDURE RESPECTING READING OF PETITIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point or order. I ask you to consider something with regard to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). The question, as I understand it today and as I understood it perhaps a week or a week and a half ago, was whether or not unanimous consent is required for a petition to be read. I am sure Madam Speaker will recall that at that time I intervened in the discussion in an effort to understand more clearly the ramifications of one section of the Standing Orders and the references in Beauchesne at page 213. I wonder whether Madam Speaker would be kind enough to take into account when you are considering this matter further, as no doubt you will be, the references on page 820 of Erskine May's nineteenth edition, wherein there is a very succinct reference to what might be considered for immediate discussion in terms of a petition.

The question which has arisen here over the last two weeks is not whether there should be immediate discussion, but whether or not the petition might be read. But unfortunately as things seem always to occur, a confusion reigns between discussion stage, which may ultimately be allowed, and the request for the reading of the petition.

I have come to the conclusion from reading Beauchesne that Madam Speaker's ruling, although I must confess I am not entirely happy, is within the bounds of Beauchesne inasmuch as it indicates that a petition, having been presented, which is the case, and having been in order as to form, may with unanimous consent be read by the Clerk. However, I suggest that Standing Order 67(8) creates an ambiguity or confusion. I ask respectfully whether at some point in the near future Madam Speaker might give consideration to providing us with some guidance as to how these matters are to be interpreted by the House.

Madam Speaker: This is why I am allowing a discussion on this matter. I will take that suggestion and try to clarify the meaning of that Standing Order.

Point of Order—Mr. Wenman

MR. WENMAN—APPLICATION OF RULE OF URGENCY IN READING OF PETITIONS

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I appreciate and await your decision on that with great pleasure. I will now move to the second part, not to the reading of a petition but in fact to the possibility of discussion. I should like to refer to Beauchesne, Section 698(1), which reads:

In case of urgency, a petition may be immediately considered but the grievances must be such as to require speedy and urgent remedy.

Based upon this ruling and upon your ruling in Hansard of October 21, 1981, I respectfully ask that you now rule on this matter in the only way possible because of the fact that thousands of middle class working people, working to pay our expenditures in the House of Commons, are threatened with losing their homes. Surely this should, in my opinion and in the opinions of many hon. members, constitute an urgent grievance requiring a speedy remedy.

● (1540)

I therefore submit that this housing crisis is a case where the Speaker can and must use her prerogative as an impartial arbiter, and her wisdom in determining the urgency of acting on behalf of the many private members who have presented similar petitions to this House for the people of Canada in order to bring this matter either into immediate discussion or have it referred to a committee, so that the true interests of democracy in Canada can be served.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that you use your discretion on the urgency rule.

Madam Speaker: The first point I want to make is that the petition has not been read; therefore, the House does not know what it contains and it is very hard for the House to discuss the petition if it does not know what it is all about. The hon. member did not receive unanimous consent to have his petition read. I will quote to him from Bourinot at page 239:

Petitions may be at once read and received by common consent, chiefly in order to refer them to a committee; if a member objects it cannot be done . . . but the grievance—

That is the point we have discussed.

—must be such as to require speedy and urgent remedy.

I think I have said that I am using my discretion to determine that the matter raised in the petition did not justify an urgent remedy. That is my decision, if the hon. member is asking me to use my discretion.

At any rate, the petition has not been read and therefore the House does not know what it contains. I cannot see how we can go to the second phase and have it discussed. I therefore cannot receive the suggestion of the hon. member and ask for the consent of the House that the petition be discussed, as it has not been read.

Mr. Wenman: I agree with your decision completely, Madam Speaker. The reason the petition has not been read in this House is because you must use your discretion. The petition was received yesterday in this House; it was received by you and found—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have said that I used my discretion and felt the matter did not justify an urgent remedy. That is really a ruling and it is the decision I have now informed the member of several times. I would ask him not to comment any further on it.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

MR. CLARK—EFFECTS OF HIGH MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise to lay upon the Table of the House of Commons certain petitions from individuals across the country who are deeply concerned about the impact of high interest rates upon their ability to keep the homes they have spent their lives acquiring.

I should say in relation to at least one of the couples who signed, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Harte of Chippawa, Ontario that it is my understanding that they have faced in the last two days, or will face shortly, the immediate prospect of the loss of their house. That speaks to the question of urgency. There is no doubt in anyone's mind that the prospect of losing a house for which they have laboured long is a matter of the utmost urgency to Canadians. It is not a matter which allows for judicial recourse; the only recourse they have is to this House of Commons. They, along with some 525 other citizens of the region of Niagara Falls and the Niagara Peninsula, have asked that I lay upon the Table one petition in their name.

In addition to that obviously urgent case of Mr. and Mrs. Harte of Chippawa, Ontario there are undoubtedly other signatories of that petition who are facing similar personal urgency in their lives.

I want to lay upon the Table a petition signed by 31 residents of the community of London in the province of Ontario; a petition signed by 13 residents of the city of Kitchener-Waterloo in the province of Ontario; 41 signatures attached to a petition from residents of the city of Stoney Creek in the province of Ontario and 235 signatures on a petition, all residents of the city of St. Catharines in the province of Ontario, many of whom, as in the case of Mr. and Mrs. Harte, are facing a situation of the utmost urgency brought upon them by the imminent prospect of losing a home for which they have laboured all their lives with an eye to maintaining that home.

Unquestionably this is a matter of great urgency to them for which no judicial remedy exists.

MR. CORBETT—VIA RAIL—CUTBACKS IN PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise to lay upon the Table a petition signed by some 600 residents of the province of New Brunswick and from across Canada who are adding their names to the over 13,600 names on whose behalf I have laid a petition before this House to decry the cuts in VIA Rail services. They join the thousands of citizens of this nation who nightly fall down on their knees and pray to God that justice in this country will be done and that this government will be stopped from preventing them from joining and being able to visit their relatives and families across this nation by virtue of a decision arbitrarily taken by the government.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,775, 2,724, 2,994 and 3,025.

[Text]

CMHC EXPENDITURES FOR ADVERTISING

Question No. 1,775—Mr. Stevens:

For the current fiscal year, what are the estimated expenditures of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation for (a) advertising (b) free or subsidized publications (c) other information conveyed to the public?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am advised by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation that as of the date this question was asked, the estimated expenditures for the calendar year 1980 are as follows: (a) $750,400, (b) $695,200, (c) $475,500.

COST OF METRIC CONVERSION

Question No. 2,724—Mr. Beatty:

What has been the cost of metric conversion to the (a) retailers (b) Canadian taxpayer?

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): In so far as Metric Commission Canada is concerned, the following response is applicable: (a) The Retail Merchants Association of Canada and the Retail Council of Canada have advised Metric Commission Canada that the cost of metric conversion to retailers to date has been minimal except for retailers involved in the three retail food scale pilot area programs. Otherwise, it has been only necessary to purchase items such as tape measures and/or metre sticks. Some additional minor expenses have been incurred by retailers for staff training, the development of supplementary promotional materials and for extra advertising space to accommodate dual measurement units. Such costs are usually too low to justify a separate accounting system.

With respect to scale conversion in the three pilot cities, the cost of converting retail food scales was generally the most significant cost. The average cost of converting scales varied with the type of scale. Modern electronic digital scales have a built-in conversion capability and were usually converted at no charge. For mechanical scales in good condition, the cost varied from $100 to $400 per scale depending on the make, model and the type of conversion chosen. Automatic labelling and prepackaging scales are only used in large supermarkets. This type of scale was converted at a cost of $800 to $900. Individual retailers have not made detailed cost information available to Metric Commission Canada, but informal estimates based on scale population and the expenses stated above would place the cost, when spread over the population of the pilot areas, at less than $1 per capita.

The issue concerning the cost of scale conversion in the three pilot cities is complicated by the fact that many retailers chose to purchase modern electronic scales to modernize equipment and increase productivity rather than to convert inefficient and/or obsolete mechanical scales. Many scales of this type could no longer compute prices due to the changes in food costs which had increased the price per pound of food products beyond the limits contained on most scale charts. Some retailers may consider the cost of upgrading their scales as a conversion cost because it happened coincidentally. However, such additional cost would have been incurred in any case at some future date to replace obsolescent weighing equipment. It should also be noted that special federal tax and import duty concessions are in effect to lighten the cost of metric conversion of retail scales for retailers.

Offsetting the cost of new scales for those retailers who have chosen to purchase them have been the many benefits accruing to them due to scales which are significantly more productive, more accurate and result in less down time for repairs. No studies have been carried out to determine the offsetting value of these benefits but some retailers say the costs of modern electronic scales are recovered in less than a year.

(b) The cost to the Canadian taxpayer of operating Metric Commission Canada from 1971 to March 31, 1981, was $37,084,990. In addition, contributions under the workers' metric tools assistance program for the same period were $5,858,597.

With respect to the costs incurred by business and industry, the Canadian government's policy is that the cost of conversion is borne by those converting in the majority of economic sectors. Each company and organization which has implemented metric conversion has been guided by their appreciation of their own short and long-term interests. Each sector and unit of the economy has been invited to identify the opportunities for change and to bear its own costs, just as it has or will reap the benefits arising from the change. The costs of conversion are one time costs whereas the resulting benefits continue with long term savings to manufacturers, distributors, retailers and consumers/taxpayers.

SURVEY OF GEOLOGICAL FORMATION

Question No. 2,994—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources spend public funds on a contract connected with "paleomagnetism of an ordovician ophiolite sequence and the intrusive dike suite" and, if so (a) what are the details, including the name of the person or firm awarded the contract (b) was the amount of the contract $21,742 and, if not, what was it?

2. What is an explanation of (a) paleomagnetism (b) ordovician (c) ophiolite sequence (d) intrusive dike suite?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. (a) The contract entitled "Paleomagnetism of an Ordovician Ophiolite Sequence and the Intrusive Dike Suite, New Brunswick" was awarded to Morris Magnetics of Lucan, Ontario. The work consists of the collection of rock samples and measurement of the residual ancient magnetism recorded in these rock types in order to study an aspect relating to the geological formation of the Appalachian mountain chain. It is expected that this investigation would shed light on how the Appalachians were formed and, in turn, the types of mineral and hydrocarbon deposits that could be found in these mountains.

(b) Contract value $21,742.40.

2. (a) Paleomagnetism—a study of ancient magnetization as recorded in the rocks.

(b) Ordovician—a geological period with age boundaries of 500 to 440 million years before present.

(c) Ophiolite sequence—a type of rock structure of the ordovician age (a critical period when the Appalachians were formed) that has good magnetic signals.

(d) Intrusive dike suite—a type of rock structure of a younger geological age than the ophiolite and characterized by its wall like appearance across the earth's strata.

IMPACT OF 1981 CUPW STRIKE

Question No. 3,025—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the government prepare studies of the impact on the economy of the 1981 strike by the Canadian Union of Postal Workers and, if so, what were the results of the studies?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): I am unaware of any studies prepared by the government yielding precise quantitative estimates of the impact of the 1981 postal strike on the economy. This, however, does not means that the government was not aware of the various possible impacts of the postal strike on the one hand, and the cost of a speedy settlement under CUPW's initial bargaining position on the other.

The strike did generate losses for some sectors of the economy. However, a speedy settlement on CUPW's terms could have had a serious inflationary impact on the economy. The government sought an appropriate balance in this difficult situation. The process of negotiations between the government and the CUPW culminated in a successful resolution of the dispute which was fair to all parties concerned.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. COSSITT—REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF ORDER PAPER QUESTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to request clarification from the Chair. Approximately two years ago—and I could obtain the reference from Hansard as I have it in my office—Mr. Speaker Jerome ruled in regard to a question of mine that it be put back on the Order Paper as a result of the fact that the government had acted as Speaker of the House of Commons rather than as the government and quoted from Beauchesne in support of why it would not answer the question.

This happened again yesterday in connection with question No. 3,236 on the Order Paper which the government answered. Again the government stated that, in its opinion, Beauchesne prohibited my question. I contend it is not the government's prerogative to do that; it would be the prerogative of the Chair to rule my question out of order. I think the question should go back on the Order Paper until the Chair does rule it out of order.

The government went further, however, and said that even if the officers of the Table ignore these rules and allow the question, it will not answer it. I contend, Madam Speaker, that in effect the Table is the Speaker and that we are now in a position where we have the government criticizing the Speaker of the House of Commons. This is not permitted under our rules. The government has said, in effect, that even if the Speaker of the House of Commons and her officers are derelict in their duty, it does not care and will do what it wants anyway.

I think this is highly out of order. I would request in accordance with Speaker Jerome's ruling, if Your Honour agrees with it, that question No. 3,236 be put back on the Order Paper. It is the privilege of the government not to answer if it does not wish to, and I know that; but it is not its privilege to present a ruling from Beauchesne, as it has done a number of times in this session. It is certainly not the government's privilege to criticize the Table and the Speaker of the House. That is out of order under the rules of the House.

I therefore ask that the question be put back on the Order Paper and that the government be held in contempt and forced to withdraw its criticism of the Chair.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, there has been no criticism of the Chair nor has there been any criticism of the Table officers. It was pointed out to the hon. member that he should read Citation 363 of Beauchesne, which reads as follows:

A Minister may decline to answer a question without stating the reason for his refusal, and insistence on an answer is out of order, with no debate being allowed.

That in no way shows lack of respect for the Chair or lack of respect for the Table.

Mr. Cossitt: Read what comes after that.

Mr. Smith: It simply refers the member to that section in Beauchesne.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I do not wish to prolong this point. The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) is absolutely correct. I do not recall the date of Mr. Speaker Jerome's ruling either, but it was that the question being resubmitted should, indeed must, be accepted and replaced on the Order Paper.

• (1550)

If you intend to rule in favour of the hon. member for Leeds, I will not make the request that you put the matter over until tomorrow when I could then have an opportunity of referring the Chair to that precedent. If you intend to rule against the hon. member for Leeds, I would ask that you put the question over. Because unlike the parliamentary secretary's interpretation of the manner in which that question was answered by the minister, I too believe the answer directly reflects on the authority of the Chair and on the integrity of the Table officers. It does not lie within the responsibility of any minister of the Crown, directly or indirectly, to deign to tell the Table what they can or cannot do, and in effect make a ruling that only you have the authority to make.

That was precisely what happened in the case that was before Mr. Speaker Jerome, and precisely what the answer in this particular instance was in respect of the question raised by the hon. member for Leeds. If you have any doubt, or if you are not going to view the submission of the hon. member for Leeds in a favourable light, I would ask that you put it over until tomorrow so I can refer Your Honour to that rather lengthy ruling of Mr. Speaker Jerome.

Madam Speaker: I certainly would want to look at the ruling because I am not conversant with the facts that justified that ruling. I would want to look at the ruling before saying anything about the question that was raised. It does seem to me that, the question having been printed in the Order Paper and having received an answer, an answer is an answer; but certainly I would not want to say that the answer is adequate or inadequate. However, I will look at the total situation, including the precedent to which the hon. member has referred.

Canada Oil and Gas Act

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 56 is acceptable to the government.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that notice of motion No. 56 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

COPY OF LATEST SIGNED AGREEMENT WITH ONTARIO UNDER CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Motion No. 56— Mr. Herbert:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the latest signed agreement between the government and the province of Ontario under the Canada Assistance Plan.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the other notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I suggest that it would be helpful to this House if, when the parliamentary secretary rises and says that notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. so and so are acceptable or not acceptable, he would allow time before asking whether they stand for hon. members to consult to see whether it is one of their own motions. In that way, especially if the government says it will not produce the papers, a member would have time to see if it is his motion and then ask that it be transferred for debate. I think it would be more convenient if in the future he would say: Notice of Motion standing in the name of the hon. member for such and such a riding or constituency, rather than blasting through it so quickly that nobody knows what is going on.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will take notice of the hon. member's suggestion.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed from Tuesday, November 3, consideration of Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and Motion No. 25 (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, we were discussing Motion No. 25 last night at adjournment time and I want to continue that discussion now.

There are major differences between a totalitarian government and a democratic government. One of the most conspicuous differences is that a democratic government has respect for private property and the ownership of that property, while a totalitarian government does not respect private property or private ownership of that property.

A very definite example of that is the communist march into the Ukraine when thousands of Ukrainian people, who loved their lands, farmed them and produced, lost that property. The communist regime took—took, extracted and expropriated—not leaving them enough even to live. That is characteristic of a totalitarian government.

A democratic government respects private property, and I want to deal with that particular point now. While in the charter of rights the present government did not include the right to own property as one of our rights, I am sure the vast majority of the people of Canada would want that right recognized, not necessarily in a charter, but as a basic principle of this country. We do have the right to own property.

With the right to own property comes the right to make decisions in regard to that property. This is the point that bothers me with this particular piece of legislation. By this legislation the government is showing no respect for the ownership of private property, and that is a serious charge. When the government can seize 25 per cent of the assets or discovery of a company and then hand them over to a Crown corporation, that does not show respect for private property.

An hon. Member: It is stealing.

Mr. Taylor: Yes, it is stealing, as my hon. friend says. It is similar to what the communists did to the people in the Ukraine when they expropriated their lands, taking more than a just or fair share. Those people were not even left enough to live on.

There are better ways of doing this and I want to suggest a better way. It is easy to criticize and I want to suggest a different method. I would hope that this government, in a democratic country, a country that has been built through basic free enterprise principles, would now endeavour to administer the country under democratic principles. This method of seizing 25 per cent simply by taking it and handing it over to a Crown corporation is not democratic, in my view. I dealt with that last night and I want now to go to another point.

We know the Crown requires money and I agree that the Crown requires a share of the development of our resources. But this share does not have to be expropriated, confiscated or stolen from the people. That is not at all necessary. The government could do in the Northwest Territories with those millions of acres something similar to what was done in the province of Alberta, and probably elsewhere in Canada, under the free enterprise principle. I hear members periodically making derogatory remarks about the Heritage Fund of the province of Alberta. I want to tell them that the Heritage Fund was built through free enterprise principles. That fund was built through the sweat of the work of thousands of people. That is why the people of Alberta value it so highly. It was built up through their own sweat and blood. How did they do this? They allowed foreign money to come in, but the foreign companies bringing in the money had to work according to the rules of the government of Alberta and the Government of Canada. Those companies did that and were able to make a dollar as well. They applied for a lease of land. If they got a lease three miles by three miles in some part of Alberta, the southeast corner, nine square miles, and the company struck oil, the government would not come along and say, "We will take that away from you."

• (1600)

What happened was that the company went to the site carried out seismic and engineering work to find out how much oil was there. The company would dig a well or two, whatever minimum number was required and production would commence in the event of an oil find. If a company wanted to keep the balance of the nine square miles, it had to pay money into the coffers of Alberta for the privilege of keeping it. However, if a company wanted to let five or seven square miles go, it could. That land would be put up for auction. Other people or companies could bid on the land. This produced millions of dollars for Alberta's coffers and it was produced by private enterprise, not by taxpayers' money. People could drill wells and if they struck oil, they knew they would have ownership of it.

What about the people's share? The companies paid royalties and these royalties went into the coffers of the Alberta government. That money belonged to all of the people of the province. This method brought the province from a have-not province to a have province. In addition, federal income taxes were paid on any taxable property or any taxable income.

That method is the orthodox method. This government could do the same thing by including in this bill a lease option of, say, nine square miles, or even 16 square miles. Drilling could take place and the federal Crown would get its share from royalties and income taxes. Parts of the nine or 16 square miles not used could be put up for auction. Why does the Government of Canada not investigate how the Heritage Fund was built up? The Heritage Fund did not suddenly come out of the sky. It came as a result of hard work and careful planning, giving everyone a chance to make a dollar and get a square deal.

Instead of doing that here, we are favouring one particular Crown corporation. Favouritism does not pay off. There will be no credibility if one continues to favour one branch of the oil industry over another. I have nothing against Petro-Canada, but why does it not stand on its own feet and make its own money instead of trying to seize through the back door 25 per cent of the holdings of a company which used its own money?

Mr. Waddell: Its own money?

Mr. Taylor: Then the government simply expropriates or grabs its share and hands it over to Petro-Canada as a gift. Petro-Canada spent no money. All companies should pay taxes and they should be paid on total taxable income. The government decides the deductions. That is done in every other industry. No company should have special favour. All companies should pay their share of running this country, but Petro-Canada is given special consideration. It does not put up any money; it gets all its money from the taxpayers. In addition, Petro-Canada gets an asset on which a company may have spent $1 million.

What does the record say about Petro-Canada? In the public accounts of Canada we find $440 million under the heading "capital stock". The figure shown as the total amount invested is $1.444 billion. But how much of that was given back to the people of Canada? If hon. members look up the answer in the book, they will find that nothing was given back, not one penny. The system is take, take and take.

The socialists can say that the people of Canada have an investment of $1.444 billion, but let the people try to get one penny of it. The way this is being done now is wrong. There is a better way, the democratic way of doing things.

I urge the government not to carry out this totalitarian way of doing things. If it continues to do that, this government will lose whatever credibility there is left. We are a democratic government. Why do we not get our Crown money through democratic principles, accepted principles, instead of through stealth?

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with the specifics of Motion No. 25, I cannot resist the temptation to refer again to certain remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), my very good friend to the left who has participated hard and long in the continuing debate on Bill C-48, mainly as the self-appointed spokesman for the native people of Canada.

Mr. Waddell: Someone has to.

Mr. Nickerson: That is right. The hon. member suggested that maybe in conjunction with Motion No. 25 we examine certain NDP amendments put forward in the name of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar). I think that is a very good idea. As I understand it from the press, we will not be in a position to read NDP amendments put forward by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq in time to come. As I understand it, very shortly the Liberal Party's loss will be the New Democratic Party's gain. What the member is waiting for is an offer to join the cabinet. Judging by the quality of the people already serving in the cabinet, that move would not make that much difference.

My intention at the present time is to keep my remarks to the specifics, the rather limited scope of Motion No. 25, which addresses itself to the time at which the election should be made whether or not to transfer Crown interest into a Crown corporation. Clause 31 of Bill C-48 says that this transfer should take place prior to the authorization of the system for producing oil or gas from any Canada lands, etc. Our amendment would change that to read that "the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, prior to the commencement of the terms of an exploration agreement for relevant Canada lands, may direct that the Crown share be transferred to a designated Crown corporation."

I submit that there is a vast difference between those two views, or those times at which the election should occur.

In speaking to this, I would like to refer to the practice in the province of Saskatchewan. This province has a philosophy not dissimilar to that of my friends opposite and to that of my friends to the left. They, however, seem to address the problem in a more responsible manner. When dispositions of mineral rights are made within the province of Saskatchewan, the Crown, in right of that province, can elect to take a share in those particular mineral rights. They do it at the time of the initial exploration. They do not wait until a uranium deposit or some other deposit of minerals has been proven and then come in and take it over. They do it in a gentlemanly manner, as far as possible, for the government of Saskatchewan, and in the businesslike way of getting in on the ground floor.

• (1610)

If you are going to be fair with people and honest with business in the exploration field, surely that is the time when the election must be made. I do not believe it is fair to wait until the work has been done, the gamble made and paid off and then jump in. When a prospect is first granted under the terms of an exploration agreement, the Crown and the geologists within Petro-Canada should make an assessment at that time of whether or not they want to participate. If they do, that is a good time to get in on the ground floor, when the initial expenditures are minimal. If they do not wish to participate, then not much has been lost by the Crown.

I submit that participation at this early stage would have good effects because it would prevent Petro-Canada from acquiring the exploration rights to so great an area that it would not know what to do with it. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) spoke to this last evening. He cited the number of acres which would come under the control of Petro-Canada. It would be a phenomenal amount of ground. Petro-Canada's resources would be spread too thin to be able to work that area properly and put sufficient exploration money into it. If it had to be selective at the beginning of the venture and if it had the proper expertise on staff to select the most favourable areas, it should be able to work in partnership with the private partners in that particular exploration agreement to the benefit of all concerned.

I hope that hon. members on the other side would think a little and take note of what happens in the province of Saskatchewan; then maybe they will accept the amendment we have put forward.

I can think of many circumstances where our suggestion would be to the advantage of Petro-Canada. For instance, if they were to participate in the early stages at a location adjacent to other land holdings they have, the information which could be obtained through seismic work and other exploration methods would be invaluable to them. As I have stated, the Crown would not really lose anything by making that election at an early time.

Under Clause 32 of the bill, the Crown share, although not transferred to the Crown corporation, would remain intact until Clause 32 came into play. That comes into play when the authorization for a system of producing oil and gas from Canada lands has been granted. It is not until that time that it is mandatory that the Crown share be transferred to another owner. If it is not transferred to Petro-Canada or another designated Crown corporation by that time, it has to be disposed of under the terms of Clause 32(2).

This is the case commonly envisaged under this legislation. It is to be put up at public tender and disposed of only to those corporations which, under Clause 23 of the bill, meet the required standards of Canadian ownership. Therefore, the Crown share is not being lost to Canadians. It will have to be transferred to a corporation with a very significant degree of Canadian ownership.

Rather than Petro-Canada having all these interests over the so-called Canada lands, it would be better served to make selective acquisitions and have the remainder disposed of to Canadians by a process of public tender. I believe that is a process which is used in other jurisdictions.

The second subclause of our amendment refers to the necessity of having a proper working agreement between the Crown corporation—Petro-Canada in most cases—and its partners in any particular area under which the oil and gas rights have been granted under Bill C-48. A working agreement such as this is imperative. It should be concerned with the manner of distribution of costs. Petro-Canada should undertake, as should every other partner, to put up its fair share of the costs under an agreement which is enforceable by law.

I envisage many difficulties if Petro-Canada were to enter into an agreement and then refuse to put up their fair share of the exploration costs. There is nothing the other partners can do. They may write a letter to the president of Petro-Canada but he may well say that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) will not give them any money, but maybe it will pay the partners when the government raises taxes again. The partners will be required to finance Petro-Canada's share of the exploration program, as well as their own.

This agreement should also decide, as is common practice in the industry, who is to be the operator of the program and how another one should be appointed if the partners are dissatisfied with that operator. I note that in the legislation the minister retains the overriding authority to designate, if he wants to, Petro-Canada to be the operator. In my submission, a working agreement should be established so that the operator of the program can be determined in the normal manner of the industry.

I think it is essential that Petro-Canada should be subject, as much as possible, to the normal practices which oil companies have developed over many years to facilitate joint operation.

The third subclause deals with the matter of arbitration. I am rather surprised at the leniency of my colleague who proposed this motion but I think the reason he did this is that he wanted to be so reasonable that there would be no possible way hon. members opposite could ever vote against this amendment. This subclause says that if by mutual consent Petro-Canada and the other partners are unable to come to an agreement, then this matter be decided by arbitration. It goes so far as to leave with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources the responsibility for drafting rules under which this arbitration might take place.

● (1620)

I think that is extending to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a great deal of discretion. That is something he likes very much and something which in this one particular instance we, in order that hon. gentlemen opposite will not turn down our ideas, are prepared to extend to the minister. However, I would like to make it known that within the areas in which Petro-Canada will be operating on the so-called Canada lands, which I usually refer to as offshore provincial and territorial lands, there are already arbitration acts or, in the case of the territories, ordinances which decide how matters of arbitration should be brought to bear where matters cannot be decided by the parties through an agreement, or where within such agreements some arbitration proceeding has not been laid out, decided upon and consented to already.

It would be my opinion that when it comes to arbitration in a commercial manner such as we envisage here between several oil and gas companies and another oil and gas company which happens to be Petro-Canada, the provincial or territorial arbitration acts or ordinances should apply. However, here we are giving the minister the leeway and the discretion to decide otherwise, should he so wish.

In my opinion, the amendments we have put forward in Motion No. 25 are reasonable and sensible and would be in the best interests of the Crown, Petro-Canada and the private oil and gas industry. I very much hope that they can be accepted by the government.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I want to make just a few brief comments, if for no other reason than to echo those of my colleague, the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), who is probably in a better position than any of us in the House to make a critical assessment of the clauses of Bill C-48 we are presently debating.

He knows probably better than any of us—certainly most members of the House—what it is like in a colonial atmosphere, and I make no apologies for using the term "colonial" when I refer to our northern territories and certain territories in the northern parts of our provinces. The hon. member knows what it is like when a company, a government agency or an agency of any kind operates with special privilege or under special licence and not in competition with other companies in an area, and not as a competitor but as a regulator. He knows what it is like when a company like that becomes not only an economic entity but also assumes the role normally played by certain minor governments, such as municipal or regional governments.

What the hon. member said is not farfetched. I experience the same thing in my constituency. I could name a few single industry towns in which there are literally two classes of citizens. There are those who work for some department or agency of the government or those who work for a Crown corporation, and then there are the ordinary people who just simply happen to live there and find work in a small service industry, in trapping, in farming and so forth. They live in the same area but do not enjoy the same privileges enjoyed by people who operate with special licences in such areas.

I recall when the British Columbia government decided to build a dam on the Peace River. Engineers came. All or most regulatory provisions were waived because this project had to go ahead. Environmental conditions especially were waived, and we barged ahead. Engineers were flown in from Vancouver and all over the world to settle there and begin this project. One of the managers of the project became the municipal leader. He told the government what he required for the work force in terms of schools, paved streets and water and sewer, and there was never any problem. I happened to be the mayor of a town just 40 miles away from there, and my town was competing for many of the things which are the basic essentials required to make a town or city liveable. Incidentally, these are things that people in central Canada have been taking for granted for the last 100 years. We in the producing and new frontier areas of the west still have a lot of catching up to do. I am talking about essential municipal services. I travelled to Victoria to compete for some of the dollars that were available to put these services in place but, of course, I did not stand a chance. The people from B.C. Hydro had their connections through their minister and through the premier, and the roads were paved and water and sewer facilities were installed.

One fellow came up with a rather unique idea of building a new school. It was a brand-new concept for educating young children. It was a type of open air concept. The school was built like a tent. It is still there for anyone who wants to go and see it. What a brilliant idea! I think it was the manager's wife who had the idea and sold it to the premier. The school was built—at great cost to the taxpayer—and, of course, it did not work. The problem was that when the dam was finished and all the engineers, social planners and all those fellows with all the weird ideas left the community, the people who had settled there and lived there for the previous 50 or 60 years were stuck with paying the bill for all these schemes of extravagance.

I was taken with the comments made by my colleague, the hon. member for Western Arctic, because he knows and can tell of similar experiences. However, this probably takes us away from the motion, which really has to do with the Crown share and when such a Crown share should become active. It must first be pointed out that it is one thing for the agent of the minister to go north, to back into economic schemes, be they foreign or Canadian, and confiscate a 25 per cent share. We have heard enough about that. We are being criticized by our trading partners all over the world. Companies appeared before the committee and told us how seriously they consider this Draconian measure of simply confiscating private assets, whether they be of a fiscal nature or intellectual capital accumulated with respect to a lease in the north. However, it is quite another thing to keep that asset sitting without actually making it active.

In other words, for the moment we are nothing but a silent partner. We go in, we look at the books and see what is going on, we tell them to keep their exploration efforts going and to spend millions of dollars to do all the things which will ready us eventually for drilling and oil production. As we all know, in most cases that point is never reached. Exploration efforts result in dry holes. In many areas it is discovered that there is no potential for oil and gas.

Until the point of production the agent of the minister remains a silent partner, but it is then the desire of the minister to accelerate the production of the oil and gas because, after all, we have a deadline of 1990 to meet. The agent of the minister will have looked at the books and charts and seismic results, and then he will decide, "Here is an area we really want to get at". He then serves notice on the company that he wants to start producing, and he tells the company how many wells to drill. He sets out a time frame within which the drilling has to proceed, regardless of the company's financial position and regardless of the constraints which are usually placed on a company with respect to the market. Money has to be raised somewhere, but the minister simply says, "You will now go ahead and drill." He will not be required to ask any questions related to the liabilities of the business. Once the production certificate is ordered and issued, according to this bill the minister will then become an active partner. All the front end work will have been done, and we will know that all that is necessary is that a hole be punched in the ground. Oil will come out, and then we will become active partners.

• (1630)

You would have to put yourself into the shoes of a businessman. It is not necessary to go up north to do that. Suppose a person wants to start any kind of a business anywhere in Canada. The government may come in and say, "You can start this business, build your little store on the corner, but I will be your silent partner without contributing anything to the cost of the building or the preparation of business. You do all the work. If you make a profit, I will become your partner. If not, you can have the business".

That is what this bill says. It is required under the back-in provision that you become a partner right away. As soon as you back in and begin your exploration work, the partners contribute equally to the cost, and share in the benefits of the work. That is what our motion proposes. It is only fair.

Unless this change is made, it will be very difficult to entice anyone to undertake exploration. They will not operate under this cloud of uncertainty that as soon as oil is found, the minister might come in and tell you to start drilling now, regardless of whether you have the resources. Only then does he come in and take his 25 per cent share.

I have spoken about this with regard to the last clause. I am very much concerned about the contingent liability the government is accumulating as a result of this back-in feature and as a result of our policy to achieve energy self-sufficiency by 1990. If you want to achieve energy self-sufficiency, you have to do exactly what the minister says he intends to do under this bill, namely, insist on and order the production of oil wherever it is found in a most expeditious way. When the government becomes an active partner after the production certificate has been issued, the government will then have to pay its 25 per cent of the cost of production. I have questioned the minister. He has not answered this question satisfactorily in committee or anywhere else.

What is the contingent liability if we are to assume that we are going to achieve energy self-sufficiency by 1990? I presume that to mean we will probably have to find a million barrels of oil a day. At present we consume roughly 1.8 million barrels of oil a day, of which we import 400,000. We know that the million barrels a day now being produced from the conventional sources in Alberta will be depleted by 1990. That means we will have to find some new areas for oil. It may be in the conventional area through tertiary recovery, which is very costly. Someone will have to pay for that production.

The minister and the government will be a 25 per cent partner. Some people have estimated the cost of regaining energy self-sufficiency in Canada to be between $300 billion and $500 billion. Twenty-five per cent of $400 billion is $100 billion, or $100,000 million. The minister has not been able to tell me to my satisfaction where he intends to get the money that is required to go into these production agreements, the liability that is associated with the order of going into production in some of these areas if the potential is there for the production of oil and gas. Is he going to go to the open market? If so, he increases pressure on the market which is already causing high interest rates and a high demand for money.

One reason for high interest rates in this country is that the government is competing on a daily basis in the money markets for funds to pay the interest on its deficit. It is prepared to pay very high interest which makes it difficult for the private sector to compete.

Is it the intention of the minister or PetroCan to go out in the private market? Is it the intention to raise $100 billion in taxes to pay the government's share for the production of this new oil? What is the intention of the government? Certainly it will not make $100 billion in profit from the service stations inherited from Petrofina. I know enough about that business to give that minister advice.

There is not that kind of money in the service station business, nor does the government have any role to play in it. It would have been much wiser for the minister to look at what the oil companies have traditionally done in the way of marketing petroleum products. They understood very well the value of free enterprise in connection with many aspects of their operation.

I know of no multinational oil company that would own its own seismic rigs. It usually hires them from private entrepreneurs. There are people who service the drilling rigs. They are entrepreneurs. Small businesses, which operate in Canada by the hundreds of thousands, rely totally on the oil sector. They have trucks, very sophisticated equipment and the know-how to service these rigs and do the seismic work. Only when the oil is produced does the multinational oil company take it into its refineries and produce all kinds of interesting products.

The oil companies have traditionally insisted on a high component of private enterprise in the distribution of petroleum products. Traditionally in Canada only a very few service stations were operated by oil company employees. They were the Esso and Chevron dealers who stood behind the bench at the junior TV hockey club. The private entrepreneur who leased the facility from the oil company made his contribution to the small community. The oil company made sure he had sufficient incentive to work a few extra hours every day and make a few extra dollars. In so doing, they were very efficient in the marketing of petroleum products.

It was only after the government, particularly this government, decided there was something wrong with franchise agreements that the oil companies reacted. They always react to government policy. They very seldom fight because they have very little to fight with. The companies said it is now the will of the government that we have company-owned service stations and self-serve stations. They created a market demand in response to a stupid government regulation.

The oil companies produced television ads. I recall the one where a fellow drives up to the pump and says to his wife, "Did you hear the pump talking to me?" That sounded very exciting. That was the end of the private service station operator. The stations now belong to the multinational oil companies, all because the government wanted that to be so. The companies were simply reacting to government regulation.

There are a lot of unanswered questions. There are a lot of things Canadians should be aware of as we pass the clauses of this incredible bill, which has earned us antagonism and an incredible reaction from our trading partners in the western world. There is a lot the government should look at. The government should look at the amendment we have proposed in connection with Motion No. 25, because it is reasonable and the only thing that is fair, particularly if it is the intention of the government to be a competitor in the field rather than to deregulate it.

• (1640)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed, will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House may now wish to consider Motion 26.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved:

Motion No. 26

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 34 by striking out lines 23 to 28 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"relevant interest, provided that the Crown corporation may only vote its proportionate share."

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 26 is similar in intent to Motion No. 25 in that it addresses Clause 34 of the bill as amended in committee. Clause 34 of the bill as amended states that:

The designated Crown corporation to which a Crown share is transferred—

—in other words, Petro-Canada—

—is entitled to participate and vote, in proportion to that Crown share—

—and that is fine. Then it goes on to say:

—whether or not that Crown corporation has converted the Crown share under subsection 36(1),—

Amended Clause 34 says that Petro-Canada can, in fact, sit at the table as a full voting partner in an enterprise, in an exploration play, even though it has never converted that Crown share to a working share. It has never taken the step called for under Section 36(1). Common sense would dictate, Mr. Speaker, that that is a stupid situation to have in place. It is most common in the oil and gas industry for any exploration play, any well being drilled, any piece of property being explored, for that property to be handled by a consortium of companies. There is almost inevitably a group of companies participating together in the drilling of any particular well that is undertaken or any exploratory program.

The reason for this is very simple; it is an attempt to reduce risk. It is less risky for a company, for example, to have 20 per cent of five different exploratory plays than to have 100 per cent of just one play. If that well turns up dry, the money is gone; it has disappeared. On the other hand, if it has 20 per cent of five different plays, their chance of at least one of them being successful has improved. That is the common practice in the industry. It is a practice that has built up over the years and has worked very well in terms of the interest of the industry and of the economy and society in general.

Therefore, to handle these kinds of situations where you have several partners participating in an exploratory program or participating in a play, a procedure for handling these things has built up over time. Clearly someone has to be in charge of the drilling program. That company is usually called the operator. One company is the operator of that well or of a group of wells, the operator of the exploratory program. The partners sit down and assess what kind of program should be undertaken, for example, where the wells should be drilled, whether they should run a seismic first, how deep the wells should go, what kind of testing should be undertaken. All of these decisions involve the expenditure of a lot of money and, therefore, are carefully considered. Each company has its geologist, geophysicist and engineers examining the available data so that it may come up with the best recommendation. They sit down and discuss that. There are sometimes differences of opinion, in which case a vote is taken among the partners.

There are procedures in these contracts whereby if the operator is not performing to the satisfaction of the other partners they may remove the operator, or change the operator and have another company come in and take over the operation of the well. These are the procedures that are used. These procedures are time proven, well tested, appropriate and proper methods for handling these kinds of situations.

According to this bill we now have some new invention from the gurus, or the academics in the Department Energy, Mines and Resources, people who have sterling academic qualifications but no practical experience in this situation. They say that the Crown should not only steal 25 per cent of the action, as was referred to in the debate on other motions, but, as PetroCan, it should have the right to vote. Yet it will not be a partner with all of the obligations that are called for in the terms of the other partners. The members will be sitting at the table making decisions on where the wells will be drilled, how deep they will go, and so on. But as a corporation it will have nothing at stake. It will be able to influence these decisions with nothing at stake.

Common sense dictates that if you were to enter into a deal with somebody whose vote counts as much as yours, you would want to make sure he has as much at stake as you do. Only a fool would go into a consortium arrangement with people who have the same voting power as he has but under which he would have to put up the money and they would not or under which we would have to put up the property and they would not. Such a situation is absurd.

I humbly suggest to members of the government, members of the Liberal Party, that if they are committed to going this way, to having the state run everything, and to having the Crown corporation being the godfather of the north, the kind of modern day East India company looking after northern Canada, for goodness sakes, let them at least try to put in place some law, rules and regulations that will encourage good decision-making by this new East India Company that will be the godfather of all northern Canada and offshore areas. At least let them give some consideration to rules and regulations that will encourage and provide an incentive for intelligent decision-making by those delegates of Ottawa, those Crown corporation employees who will be sitting at the table making these decisions. If their corporation does not have anything at stake, they do not have anything at stake. Their decisions will not be as good as decisions made by people who have something at stake. it seems to me self-evident, Mr. Speaker. I do not know how to add to the argument. I cannot conceive of anybody coming up with an argument against the simple proposition that you get better decisions from people who have something personally at stake than you do from people who are, in essence, spending other people's money.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I strongly commend to the House Motion No. 26, which brings no profound change to the bill. It merely removes that language from Clause 34 which allows the Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, to vote, whether or not that Crown corporation has taken up its share. I hope that members of this House will consider that motion and will pass it so that if Petro-Canada is installed as a duchy, as the new East India company looking after all of northern Canada, it will at least be in a position to make intelligent decisions on behalf of Canada.

• (1650)

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a few brief remarks to those made by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) in relation to Motion No. 26, and to repeat his point as an introductory comment. It does not seem fair that Petro-Canada should act as a full voting partner in all subsequent development and production of a drilling lease or production license in the Canada lands unless it is acting as a full working partner in the undertaking.

To put this in context, I should like to deal quickly with three or four motions which we have been debating for the last few days, and with Motion No. 28, which is tied in with Motion No. 26, if we look at Clause 34, the relevant clause that we are attempting to amend this afternoon.

In Motion No. 21 my party put forward the notion that there should be no specific designation of the percentage of the Crown share of the total 50 per cent Canadian content requirement set out in Bill C-48. If we could encourage more Canadians to participate through private investment in privately-owned Canadian oil and gas companies, we would not have to allow the Crown to back in and take a full 25 per cent share. Perhaps it could get by with something less. Perhaps there would be other cases on particular leases where the Crown share might have to exceed 25 per cent in order to ensure a full 50 per cent Canadian ownership in the relevant interest.

Motion No. 23 indicated that essentially there should be no retroactive right on the part of the Crown to back itself into discoveries prior to the introduction of the National Energy Program in the late 1980s. In other words, although the government has now put forward a means of marginal compensation for the privilege of backing in prior to January 1, 1981, it is the view of my party that exploration ventures, financed and initiated by private partnerships and consortia, should not be subject to this form of legalized theft or retroactive stealing to which many of my colleagues have referred.

Motion No. 25 was discussed prior to the presentation of Motion No. 26 this afternoon. It indicated that in the eyes of this party the Crown share, whatever its level, should be represented as a working interest, not merely a carried interest granted arbitrarily by the powers granted the minister under the bill.

Then we come to Motion No. 26 which fits with other prior motions as well as with Motion No. 28. It indicates that Petro-Canada or any other relevant Crown corporation should not have full voting status when sitting in on questions pertaining to financing, timing and management decisions pertaining to the development of a particular project beyond the point of exploration and through the production stages. We in this party do not feel that it is right or proper for the Crown operator to have 25 per cent of the say in decisions in all oil and gas exploration and production initiatives on the Canada lands, unless it pays at least a reasonable share of the cost.

Clause No. 34 which we are proposing to amend reads as follows:

> The designated Crown corporation to which a Crown share is transferred . . . is entitled to participate and vote, in proportion to that Crown share, . . . whether or not that Crown corporation has converted the Crown share under subsection 36(1), and any applicable operating agreement or other similar arrangement stands varied or amended to the extent necessary to give effect to this section.

We are proposing that the Crown operator not be given an open-ended right to a vote whether or not it has converted its Crown share to a working interest. But through a prior amendment, Motion No. 25, we have already required that every Crown share must be in the form of a working interest. I should like to look at what this clause would grant in its present form. It refers to Clause 36(1) which reads as follows:

> A designated Crown corporation may convert the Crown share transferred to it to a share in the relevant interest with all the attributes and, subject to subsections (2) and (3), all the obligations of a share in the relevant interest at any time before, but not later than 30 days after, the minister gives the designated Crown corporation a notice of his intention to authorize a system for producing oil or gas from the relevant Canada lands.

A Crown operator, whether it be Petro-Canada or whatever other Crown corporation, can sit back casually knowing that it has a 25 per cent carried interest but not having to convert it to an active interest until it finds out whether or not oil or gas is discovered. Of course it has 30 days retroactively after the registration of a significant discovery. After the minister has given notice of intention to authorize a system for production, it can come along and indicate that it now wants to convert it to a working interest.

Turning to Clause 36(3), it reads:

Neither Her Majesty in right of Canada nor any designated Crown corporation to which the Crown share may be transferred under this act is liable for any expense incurred in respect of the relevant interest prior to a conversion under subsection (1)—

For all intents and purposes, this means prior to a discovery of a significant amount of oil or gas. It continues:

—whether that expense was incurred in relation to the exploration for oil or gas on any relevant Canada lands or the development of those Canada lands in order to produce oil or gas or otherwise, and any applicable operating agreement or other similar arrangement stands varied or amended to the extent necessary to give effect to this subsection.

The clause refers to "other similar arrangement" with the prior operator. What we are debating in Motion No. 25 cannot be considered in isolation from its linkage with Clause 36 of the bill and its present wording referring to Clause 34, which essentially indicates that Crown partners can sit on the board of directors, among the partners, to vote without having to take an active interest until 30 days after the minister declares a discovery adequate and agrees that it shall be licensed for production purposes. The Crown operator can vote on all decisions without meeting any relevant share of the cost. This is what it comes down to—how is the government operator or the Crown corporation to pay for its share?

I should like to turn to Motion No. 28, although perhaps it is not quite legitimate in that it will be debated later on. But we in this party feel that the Crown operator should be given some advantage if there must be a designated Crown share. But we have already said that that share should not be rigidly fixed to the 25 per cent figure. We would prefer to have more private operators, more private investment capital in the venture. If there is to be a Crown share under Motion No. 28, the Crown operator, Petro-Canada or whatever Crown Corporation it may be, would have an obligation to undertake to purchase a working interest in that share, and the price of the purchase would be at least a portion of the relevant exploration costs to be set at 50 per cent of those costs as prorated to their proportion of the total partnership equity. In other words, if Petro-Canada had a 25 per cent interest, although under our amendments it could be 18 per cent or 32 per cent, it would be required to pay 50 per cent of one quarter of the total relevant costs incurred in bringing the particular lease to the point of significant discovery, licensing and production.

● (1700)

The point is that it is neither proper nor honest for the government to demand—in addition to all the forms of taxation it is going to assess against these operations at the consumer and production level in progressive royalties and income tax—a piece of the action without paying its share of the cost of participation.

The government would have the people of Canada believe that all this will come about for nothing and that somehow it can take away one quarter of a private production operation and convey it to the people of Canada without being required to pay a price for it. We would prefer that the government pay for this directly, Mr. Speaker. If the Crown operator, Petro-Canada or whoever, did pay directly to the extent of 50 per cent of the relevant share of the cost, it would have to borrow from the charter banks. In turn, the banks would probably go to New York or Bonn to borrow foreign money. That is one way in which the government can create the illusion of Canadian ownership, through the back door. In reality, however, it is offering a guaranteed rate of interest to foreign lenders and at the same time creating the illusion that it is protecting the resources for the Canadian people.

Bill C-48 does not provide authority for the government to borrow money or raise money through private contributions from Canadians. It does not invite the participation of Canadians to buy shares in the Crown corporation. Instead, it proposes to steal that 25 per cent interest. It pretends that the Canadian people will not have to pay for that interest but in fact, Mr. Speaker, the people will have to pay. They will pay through buying Canada Savings Bonds. The interest rate on bonds has been set at 19.5 per cent. This will have the effect of soaking the capital that some senior citizens have put away over the years. If you have $10,000 in the bank, a 19.5 per cent return is pretty attractive, so instead of investing in Canadian oil and gas people will be induced to buy Canada Savings Bonds which are widely advertised by the government and the banks. The government is desperate for capital and that is why the interest rate is so high.

But because the interest rates are so high, Canadians cannot afford to borrow money to invest in private sector ventures, which would have to pay 19.5 per cent or 21 per cent or 22 per cent interest in order to be attractive. I submit that is a hidden tax, Mr. Speaker; it is an inflation tax.

The government pretends that we are taking control of our own natural resources and our industry. It is trying to delude the Canadian people by calling what is really an excess tax, a high interest rate. The government is creating inflation by overspending; its expenditures are 25 per cent higher than its income. The new windfall tax levied on the production of conventional oil and gas is really a tax on all Canadians. All that people get in return are some fancy service stations which are taking business away from small independent oil and gas outlets in some parts of the country. In some small communities the corporation is also getting into the shopping centre business and the convenience food store business, thus making things extremely difficult for the existing service stations. Sometimes the Petro-Canada stations set the price at two cents per litre below that of the private operator, stays open all night and operates on a self-serve basis, taking business away from existing gas stations that have served the community and provided employment for years and years.

Petro-Canada puts up fancy signs and creates the grand illusion that we control our natural resources. This is nothing more than a charade, Mr. Speaker, because we owned them all along. The Canadian people are now being charged for the privilege of having that sign displayed. The high interest rates we are being charged pay indirectly for the government's privilege of stealing a 25 per cent interest in the ownership of relevant ventures on the Canada lands.

I think it is important that the essence of our amendments be quickly reviewed, Mr. Speaker. If the Crown is to have a relevant interest, we think it should pay for it. Motion No. 28 suggests that it should pay at the rate of 50 per cent of the relevant exploration cost, prorated to its share of the venture, and that there should be no guaranteed entitlement to a total of 25 per cent participation in oil and gas initiatives on the Canada lands.

It would be preferable if the government were to encourage individual Canadians to invest in these initiatives. In that way they could share in the risks and the profits and could help hasten our quest for energy self-sufficiency.

Motion No. 26 which amends Clause 34 removes from Petro-Canada the right to have a vote or a say in the exploration and production initiatives in the Canada lands unless it is a full working partner paying its share of the cost; it offers it a special break by allowing it to get away with something less than the full cost paid by other operators.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when I sit here and listen to members of the Conservative Party belittle and attack Petro-Canada and try to destroy it, and when I examine statistics which show how Canadians have responded to the Petro-Canada signs on gas stations, I am reminded of a turkey looking for an early Christmas. I do not think it is politically popular to do that in this country and I think the Conservative Party does so at some risk.

Mr. Siddon: Let us worry about that.

Mr. Waddell: You can worry about it, my friend. In this party we have a song about creating a new Jerusalem. It seems to me that the Conservative Party wants to create the old Jerusalem problem and the old Petro-Canada problem. If they want to do that, then they risk their own turkey necks in the process.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) said that Petro-Canada had nothing at stake in these wells and oil plays. I think that is completely wrong; they have a great deal at stake, Mr. Speaker. As the appropriate government agency, it has responsibility for helping to ensure the energy security of this country. It has a lot at stake and we have a lot at stake, but it is responsible to us. I cannot follow his logic at all. I cannot see that a corporate executive of Exxon in New York can have more at stake than does Petro-Canada in Canada; that a corporate executive for Texaco in Houston can have more at stake than Petro-Canada, or that a corporate executive for Gulf in Philadelphia can have more at stake in Canada than does Petro-Canada. How can the hon. member for Calgary Centre say that Petro-Canada has nothing at stake? It has a great deal at stake on the outcome of that exploration. It has gas stations at stake and it has production at stake.

If the hon. member would open his eyes and ears he would see and hear Canadians responding to those gas stations. They have responded in western Canada, and they will do so in eastern Canada.

Mr. Siddon: They are putting others out of business.

Mr. Waddell: They will not put anyone out of business. My hon. friend believes in competition. There is enough competition in that business to allow Petro-Canada stations to exist with other gas stations.

• (1710)

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) suggested that, and I think he used the words "they were spending our money" on this Petro-Canada back-in, and so on. I wonder if we have not forgotten in this debate that the money which has been spent by the Government of Canada, by the ordinary taxpayers—the cleaners and the bus drivers and the people to whom the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) referred so eloquently to in his speech the other night—is the money of those people who have contributed in taxes in order to give to the oil companies, which are now yelping about these mild government measures.

I refer the hon. member for Bow River, and I see him here, to the Government of Canada's tax expenditure account of 1980. I know he likes to deal with figures and has a healthy respect for them. I suggest he look at that account because he will find that the fast tax write-offs for exploration and development expenses and the earned depletion allowances alone have meant a loss of tax revenues to the federal government of $3.870 billion, almost $4 billion, for the period 1976 to 1980. Whose money is being spent up there? Whose money is that $4 billion that would have come to the Government of Canada, money that in fact has been given through these great tax write-offs to the oil companies? Where were my friends to the right when the government across the way was bringing in all these great giveaways in terms of tax write-offs, depletion allowances, super depletion allowances, earned depletion allowances, development expenses, and I think seven others? Where were they? They were not standing up saying: Don't give these kinds of allowances, that would not be capitalism." It is funny—you are anti-capitalistic if you take something from the oil companies, but if the government gives something to them, that richest industry in Canada which has drained Canadian taxpayers with all these write-offs in the past, then you are okay.

I have been listening very carefully to the many remarks directed my way and to the comments about socialism, and I have been trying to learn what capitalism is all about from hon. members to my right. I must say that I am getting conflicting messages because they tell me it is okay to give the companies lots of money but it is not very good to take anything away from them in terms of increasing taxes or taking 25 per cent. We are giving them 93 cents on every dollar up there and we want 25 per cent for Petro-Canada. Is that really so excessive? I do not think it is. We have suggested it should be much more. I have suggested in past speeches during this debate that other countries—to be specific, Norway, the United Kingdom and Australia—have much tougher regimes than this particular regime. I would like also to suggest to my friends on the right that I am getting conflicting messages from the oil industry as well. I understand this new regime is terrible on the oil industry, and so on, yet in The Financial Post of October 17, 1981, Don Jackson, president of Sienna Resources Ltd., a Calgary-based exploration company, is quoted as saying:

> Under the new regime if you can find oil, it is unbeatable. We'll drill as fast as we can get the money.

Then I look over to the continuation of that article and I find another quotation from Mr. Lorne Inglis of Westfield Securities who said:

> By the end of the agreement period, the industry will be crying from shut-in oil,—

Is the industry suffering or is it not suffering?

There are a number of quotations from a number of other small Canadian companies. I suggest members to my right are not listening to small Canadian companies but are taking their instructions, indeed their orders, directly from the American government and from the large multinational oil companies. They are almost traitors to this country. That is where they are getting instructions, and that is what they are showing in this debate.

An hon. Member: Are you sure you graduated from law school?

Mr. Waddell: That's right, unlike the Leader of the Conservative Party (Mr. Clark).

In response to the hon. member for Calgary Centre, again going back to this notion that Petro-Canada does not have anything at stake, I suggest it has at stake its own responsibility. I also suggest it has at stake something bigger that my friends to the right simply do not understand, and that is that oil is now a strategic commodity, and it is the responsibility of modern government, especially in Canada, to ensure that we have an adequate supply of that commodity. That is the role of the government.

Let me quote what Bill Hopper, chairman of Petro-Canada, said in Calgary recently. He said:

> "Simply put, oil is now a strategic commodity", he said. "Anyone who thinks that government intervention in the oil economy is going to decrease probably also believes in unicorns."

I take it then that the hon. member for Calgary Centre, among other things, is a believer in unicorns, because the fact is that in modern government, intervention is not going to decrease. We cannot go back to the old Jerusalem, my friend.

Furthermore, this is against the principles of the Conservative Party. I listened carefully to speaker after speaker, especially Conservative members from western Canada, and I would have thought they know better than to give the idea that the Conservative Party is exclusively the exponent of free enterprise; that there is nothing else. One hon. member said that this is a free enterprise country. That is a myth; it is against the very traditions of the Conservative Party. There is Suncor in Ontario, and what about Sir John A. Macdonald's aid to the CPR? What was CPR given? It was given half of Vancouver by the Conservative Party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: I wish my friends would just relax a bit. I have listened to them for a long time. Just relax and listen for a minute. No doubt my friends to my right will get up and respond ultimately to this, but I am suggesting it is in the traditions of their own party that there has been a mix in this country between free enterprise and government aid in many ways. There was aid to the CPR through their own party, aid in building the transcontinental railway, the establishment of CBC by the Conservative Party, the nationalization or takeover of PWA by Peter Lougheed, that great free enterpriser, and the Alberta government telephone system.

One can go on and on.

The point I am making is that in modern days it is clearly a mixed economy in Canada, so to get up and berate the fact that Petro-Canada is going to be involved through a 25 per cent interest in the oil plays up in the north and in the offshore seems to me to be very shortsighted and very out of date. I do not have to belabour that point. I think it is clearly there. It is the Canadian way. This is a large country. It was not built on any ideology, although I think Canadians are basically a socialistic people.

● (1720)

Mr. Kelly: Your first statement was correct.

Mr. Waddell: I think is was there for very practical reasons. Canada is a large country with a small population and a harsh environment. That is why we have to co-operate. That is why we have a different view of government than the Americans do in the United States. Sometimes our American friends do not understand that we have a different view. It so happens the party opposite believes some of the things I am saying, but it is a reluctant bride and it is not prepared to deal with government enterprise in a proper way. The party opposite is already making mistakes with respect to Petro-Canada. I have criticized Petro-Canada in the past. I have criticized the president when he was before the committee. When I think the government is doing a good thing, I will say so, and when I do not think so, I will say so too. I think the party opposite is starting to put hacks on the board of directors—

Mr. Andre: Which is inevitable.

Mr. Waddell: —and starting to treat Petro-Canada in a way that it should not be treated. I say to my Conservative friends that in a modern state, with a strategic commodity like oil, our history and the nature of our country, Mr. Hopper is absolutely right when he says that anyone who thinks that government intervention in the oil economy is going to decrease probably also believes in unicorns.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I want to correct some of the statements made by our hon. friend, the previous speaker. Certainly one is supposed to refer to members as hon. friends, but because of some of the aggravating remarks which emanated from the vacuum which he calls a mind, I do not think one can really refer to him as a friend after all.

At this moment in time I do not stand for any policy which would accommodate the disposition by the state of Petro-Canada. Let us get that clear. When the last speaker said that this government has already appointed political hacks to its board of directors, that was true. It is from that point of view that I cannot, in clear conscience and in the service of my taxpayers, refer to any individual serving a multinational company, because I do not have the privilege of being familiar with a president, a director or a knowledgeable individual. Those whom I have met I have only met on occasion, by coincidence and not by design, and anything I have to say in no way reflects these individuals' philosophies or objectives, politically or economically. I happen to believe that if there is to be a free opportunity for people to develop and to have an opportunity in this land, we cannot put in that environment a Crown corporation to which advantages are given that are denied to its competitors. In that aspect, this bill is wrong, this socialist philosophy is wrong and this country cannot thrive under that kind of structure. My instructions shall not come from New York but from my heart and with the guidance of my constituents and the taxpayers who I represent.

An hon. Member: And Bay Street.

Mr. McCain: There are some, even those who have been known to be ministers of agriculture, who believe that we should be socialist in our structure. Whether it be agriculture or oil, I do not believe that it is efficient or that it provides our consumers or the Canadian people as a whole with the best opportunity to make a living. There must be some consideration by government for agriculture. There always has had to be and there always will be.

Mr. Whelan: All you ask for is that the government intervene. You ask for more government aid. Every time you get up and make a speech, that is what you ask for.

An hon. Member: He has got you, babe.

Mr. McCain: Let us tell the whole story. I have asked the Government of Canada and the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to fulfil his historic responsibilities. Those historic responsibilities of the Government of Canada, Liberal or Conservative, have been, until his advent on the scene, a policy which assured farmers of any crop that there would be a price stabilization payment available which would be a stop loss payment for the cycle in which that crop was in danger and in economic jeopardy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: Stay out of their business and let them get a proper price, and they won't want any of your government money.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCain: Simmer down. Since there has been agriculture and since there has been business, there have been cyclical tendencies. It has served agriculture and the consumer well to have those price stabilization payments and to have money put into the financial structures that assist the farmer. You do not turn your back on them when they are in trouble, as this government has chosen to do.

Where is the former minister who kept Farm Credit Corporation rates down to the level that farmers could afford? Where is the historic performance of that minister of agriculture who has put bridge and emergency financing in place in times of cyclical difficulties for agriculture? Where is that minister? That minister has gone. We used to think he was a gentleman by the name of the hon. Mr. Gardiner who made things tough for farmers, but they did not know what tough was until we got that city-oriented individual from Windsor as the Minister of Agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCain: His government's position is indefensible, incomprehensible and unforgivable. The government has abandoned agriculture absolutely in its time of need, and it will reflect on the consumer in the cost of living in a serious way.

Do you have any other interjections? If you have, I would be happy to entertain them.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I have something I can table if I can have unanimous consent. It is a letter from a person in Alberta, and it says "Don't quit."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Signed "Your loving cousin."

An hon. Member: The only Liberal there.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, it would not be difficult to get about 2,000 signatures on a petition from the maritime provinces asking "Please get out of the way and let some progressive individual replace you who would act in an historic fashion as the minister of agriculture."

The problem is that the criticisms heaped upon the Liberal Party are bothering its members a little. Anything the minister can do to deflect any further discussion on Bill C-48, this insidious NDP-oriented instrument, he will do. The minister is doing his job today, even if he does not do it in agriculture tomorrow.

Mr. Whelan: We are watching.

Mr. McCain: I have discussed agriculture in a rather extraneous fashion. Let us come back to the oil industry. I want to come back to a phrase which was introduced to this House by the late David Lewis. He referred to corporate welfare.

Mr. Miller: Bums.

Mr. McCain: What we are getting in this bill is an extention of corporate welfare which the New Democratic Party en masse ridiculed completely.

Mr. Waddell: I agree with that.

Mr. McCain: We are back into corporate welfare at the expense of the taxpayer. The taxpayer pays every single cent of that corporate welfare. While we are in that structure, we are depriving the taxing authority of the Government of Canada of an opportunity to receive revenue which otherwise might have accrued to it. We have put constraints upon that corporate structure of Canada, both Canadian and foreign, which is not going to give it the opportunity to be a tax base for this nation. Every move that has been made will cost the taxpayer money. The government has no money other than the money which comes from the taxpayer.

• (1730)

When these rights and privileges are given to Petro-Canada, or some other Crown corporation, it is imposing upon the consumers of Canada, who are the taxpayers, an additional price because the billions of dollars that have been spent in the off shore and distant lands of Canada—

Mr. Waddell: I thought they were stealing it.

Mr. McCain: They are stealing it from some and taxing others to pay for it. That is precisely what they are doing. Those corporations which have that money, whether it be Dome which comes under the proper characteristics for the Canadian government, or any other company, will have to charge Canadian consumers more to recover those billions of dollars which have been spent than they would otherwise have had to charge. We are giving—the word stealing is quite appropriate—

Mr. Whelan: It is not.

Mr. McCain: If it were yours, you would accuse the governement of stealing. You would not tolerate the idea of expropriation without compensation, and that is precisely what is in this bill. Let us take a quarter of your farm, then. You will not miss it. You cannot have a quarter of my house without a fight. I want compensation when that happens. It is all I have.

This is the only place in the world you can have expropriation without compensation, and the taxpayers will pay.

If Petro-Canada were given the opportunity to function in real competition with other Canadian companies, all the complaints would stop on this side of the House. But when you are going to put—

Mr. Whelan: That sounds slippery.

Mr. McCain: I am not as slippery as the Minister of Agriculture with respect to his responsibilities in his own portfolio.

However, let us get off the socialist slide. The results of socialism are evident when we look at Sweden which has absolutely unmanageable financial problems with respect to both foreign exchange and fiscal and monetary loans which are required from outside that land to keep it going. England had a socialist regime, and only this week we heard the government say that British Leyland will never open its doors again except under certain conditions. The taxpayer cannot maintain the burden to keep it operating. Let us not get ourselves into that mess.

Mr. Waddell: What about West Germany?

Mr. McCain: Yes. It is giving assistance to business. It is not standing in its way. It is allowing consortiums to produce and operate in a free enterprise structure which gives them business anywhere in the world. In this country we have a government and a splinter opposition which have defied the facts of success in every viable economy in this world and have blinded themselves utterly to the failures and difficulties occurring in socialist governments.

The government should provide for free trade, free competition, comparable tax policy, comparable opportunity for exploration and opportunity for development and consortium opportunity, but it should let Petro-Canada make its own money without the backing of the taxpayers. Let it buy its own land, lease its own lands and explore its own lands. Let it form a consortium with other companies, but let the government not put the burden on the taxpayer by giving Petro-Canada a gift of 25 per cent of somebody else's property. That will only let them compete in an unfair way. Let us not have a company managed by political hacks.

If Petro-Canada, with its funds supplied by the taxpayer, were turned loose in the free enterprise market of Canada without that support from the Crown and taxpayer, how long would it last? Under those circumstances it would not last, and therefore its existence is not justified. It should be put out on its own.

Mr. Waddell: The CPR.

Mr. McCain: All right, the CPR. So they own half of the centre of Edmonton. When the CPR was built, the city of Edmonton might have had a half dozen wigwams in it. Because it is now in the centre of the city of Edmonton, is not the fault of our ancestors who gave it to them. The city of Vancouver had a few scows, and the railroad gave that city the opportunity to build. Otherwise, it would never have been the trading centre it is today.

Let us not philosophize and indoctrinate the people of Canada with false statements such as, "We gave them half of downtown Vancouver." What an insidious statement that is. Anyone who would just apply a little logic and who had some knowledge of the development of this land would never make such a statement again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I want to correct an error I made earlier. It is a minor procedural one. I referred to the mover of the motion as being the Hon. Michael Wilson. It should, of course, have been:

MR. HARVIE ANDRE (FOR MR. WILSON) moved:

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Accordingly, pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House may wish now to consider Motion No. 27.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): By unanimous consent.

Mr. Harvie Andre (for Mr. Wilson) moved:

Motion No. 27

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 35 by striking out lines 29 to 34 at page 20.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 27 also deals with Petro-Canada and the role that it will play. It gives me an opportunity to address some of the erroneous remarks made by my hon. friend, the member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who, incredibly, has been the energy spokesman for his party. Apparently he has learned absolutely nothing.

He accuses our party of not being consistent in principle, which I think may be the way of describing it. He says that we are operating in the dark ages if we think that the private sector is worth anything or has any future. I suggest that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway might learn something of value if he would speak to the former energy critic for the New Democratic Party during the period from 1974 to 1979, the Hon. Tommy Douglas who now is a director of Husky Oil, which is a large Canadian oil company. I suggest the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway might learn something and be less inclined to make the asinine statements he has been making in the House.

He asked the rhetorical question why we Conservatives are not concerned about small business, and he has somehow related that to Petro-Canada.

I would remind him of two anecdotal situations with regard to Petro-Canada. I am sure he must have received a letter recently from a Mr. Barry Peacock, President of Peacock Oil of Barrie, Ontario. Mr. Peacock, an independent petroleum marketer, has a small business. He supplies oil and gas to independent service stations under the Peacock banner in the area of Orillia, Ontario. The vice-president of Petro-Canada phoned him and said that Petro-Canada had just taken over his station at a certain location. The vice-president said that Petro-Canada has a contract with the owner of that station and that it would be supplying the gas from now on. Mr. Peacock said, "Gee, I thought I had a contract with that individual; I am sure I did". He telephoned and went to see the individual whose station supposedly had been taken over by Petro-Canada from amongst his stations. The individual said, "Well, frankly they made me an offer I could not refuse". They came in, said they were going to spend $20,000 improving the service station. They were going to put in new tanks, new pumps and new signs and give him some money for advertising locally and so forth and said they would look after any contractual obligations he had with Peacock Oil. That was the case of this great Canadian oil company that is doing things for Canadians by knocking out a piece of the business of a small Canadian independent petroleum marketer, Peacock Oil. That is a true story. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway can telephone Barrie, Ontario and ask Mr. Peacock. Perhaps he does not remember receiving the letter. He probably threw it in the garbage right away because it did not fit his philosophical leanings.

● (1740)

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway also talked about the justification for seizing 25 per cent of the privately owned assets of companies operating in the north. He said it was justifiable on the basis of tax expenditures. I remind the hon. member—I am sure he has heard it before, but he chooses to forget—that if that is a justification, then the government is perfectly justified in seizing his Registered Retirement Savings Plan, if he has one. If he has used a Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan to save for a down payment for a house, based on the rationale supplied by the hon. member the government is justified in seizing a portion of the house because if he has ever had a tax deduction by virtue of children, wife, Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan or Registered Retirement Savings Plan or taken any tax deferral scheme such as that, according to the New Democratic Party that provides the moral justification for the federal government to come in and seize part of the assets acquired by taking advantage of the tax incentives provided by this government.

That is a Colonel Gadaffi kind of morality. That is a Third World, banana republic dictatorship kind of morality. It really is disgusting and shocking to hear Canadians who supposedly believe in democracy justifying that kind of behaviour.

In a sense, I suppose, politically, the members of the New Democratic Party have it made. On the one hand they say Crown corporations and government intervention are good. They say Petro-Canada is good. Then, on the other hand they say that because the government fills Crown corporations, including Petro-Canada, full of political hacks, it is therefore bad. They criticize political hacks, but they like Crown corporations. They have it made. They spend half their time demanding more government intervention and the other half criticizing the blazes out of the government for doing what it is doing with the authority it has as a result of that intervention. They cannot be separated; they come together.

If we are to have a government creating Crown corporations, agencies and bodies and making appointments, we are going to have political hacks. They cannot be separated; that is exactly what happens. How can we morally or intellectually justify creating more opportunities for political hacks while, on the other hand, become disturbed about putting political hacks into positions?

Probably the most stupid aspect of the argument made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was the question of Petro-Canada's being responsible. The hon. member said, "Of course it is responsible; it is responsible for ensuring our energy security." How can it be held responsible? What magic occurs? What magical qualities does Bill Hopper, the president of Petro-Canada, have that are denied to Bob Blair, the president of Nova and Husky, or Bill Richards, the president of Dome, or Riddell, the president of Paramount Oil and Gas? What magical qualities does a person acquire when he becomes a president of a Crown corporation which are somehow not attributable to others? Why are Canadians who are running oil companies owned by Canadian individuals as shareholders inferior intellectually, morally or in any other way to Canadians who work for the government or for Crown corporations? I wonder if the hon. member at some time could explain to me why it is that Canadians who work for private companies are morally and intellectually inferior.

Mr. Waddell: They aren't.

Mr. Andre: Could he explain to me why it is that employees of companies other than Crown corporations are dishonest. The hon. member said that corporations are terrible and disgusting and that their directors are disgusting.

Mr. Waddell: No. Show me in Hansard.

Mr. Andre: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway said that Petro-Canada is necessary if we are to become self-sufficient, which means that the rest of the industry will not work and cannot be trusted.

Then the hon. member talked about government intervention. I wish he would talk to Tommy Douglas and find out something about the oil industry, because if he spent a little time with Tommy Douglas, he would recognize that a company or an individual involved in the oil industry cannot acquire land, cannot run seismic tests, cannot drill a well, cannot put in a pumping facility, cannot put in a pipeline, cannot put in a refinery, cannot put in a service station and cannot in fact undertake anything at all in the oil industry without getting the permission of the government or a licence from the government. If that is not intervention, what is it? The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has an absurd notion.

I am sure he is not advocating getting rid of all the provisions of this bill. He is saying he wants all those provisions, but he wants these government regulators to regulate the government because he cannot trust the private sector, even though the private sector cannot do anything without getting the permission of the government first. Intellectually, that is absurd.

With respect to small private companies the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway admonished us and asked why we are not concerned about small companies. I ask him to read my remarks of last week when I read into the record a letter from Paramount Oil and Gas, a small Canadian oil and gas company headquartered in Calgary. Its president is Mr. Riddell. The company undertook some drilling activities in northern Canada. It spent $10 million, which was a lot of money for that small Canadian company. Its biggest well which cost $5 million turned out to be a duster. The company did get a couple of small gas producers in the Cameron Hills area far from any pipeline, so they are capped. For its investment of $10 million, this company has some capped resources up there which have some value. The value is reduced now that we have the National Energy Program. However, it has some value but, if passed, this bill will confiscate 25 per cent of what Paramount Oil and Gas has up there. We will be taking 25 per cent of this Canadian company's assets.

In the mind of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway this is entirely justifiable, but every day he tells us he is concerned about small Canadian businesses. If he is concerned about small Canadian businesses, he would not so easily say, "To heck with you, Mr. Riddell and to heck with you, Paramount Oil and Gas; the Crown is taking 25 per cent because the Crown deserves it".

Motion No. 27 seeks to amend Clause 25 of the bill. Clause 25 of the bill as amended in committee and reported to the House says that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), by order, may designate the Crown corporation to be the operator with respect to the relevant interest. In other words, the minister here in Ottawa may designate Petro-Canada to be the operator. Here are the circumstances: we want our oil and gas resources to be developed. We want companies to go into the frontier areas far away from the market. We want them to spend tens and hundreds of millions of dollars on exploration, seismology and drilling wells. And then Petro-Canada will come along and take a 25 per cent partnership, carried interest, and will pay nothing but will be able to vote. If there is a discovery, under Clause 35 the minister may direct that PetroCan become the operator. The minister may direct that PetroCan take over and henceforth control all the wells and production facilities. In other words, it can spend all the money necessary without being accountable to anyone.

● (1750)

These companies which have taken all the risk will suddenly find themselves holding a tiger by the tail. They have to keep paying out their share of the money, but PetroCan is the operator. The company which put up none of the money will then spend the way Crown corporations spend.

The industry has a long history of dealing with the situation where an operator does not work out or the partners want to change. There is a standard contract used universally to deal with this situation. Why does the government not make use of this global experience and employ the same procedure? What kind of perverse, idiotic mentality would lead them to say that the government cannot depend on the worldwide procedure for changing operators and put in language which says the minister can direct the Crown corporation to take over as the operator?

There will be no new development in Canada's Arctic area with this kind of rule. No small businessman or multinational with any common sense would put money into a situation which carries PetroCan as a voting partner even though it puts up none of the cash. Second, this company which you have been carrying and has put up no cash can take over as the operator. It can decide if and when you are going to develop, where you are going to sell and at what price. Who in their right mind would make that kind of investment? No one.

The only people who will carry on in Canada lands are those who are there and are stuck, those who spent millions of dollars over the past few years in good faith, thinking that a democratic country like Canada would never come forward with this type of legislation. How wrong they were. They are paying the price now, but they will not make that mistake again.

We will not have the development which this country needs. The government claims it wants development. I do not believe that. It is a sad commentary on where we have come to in this country. It is very disappointing that our system works so poorly that a handful of people in the minister's office can produce such an incredibly badly thought out piece of legislation and program. It counts on the blind, deaf and dumb support of government members in this House to shove it through.

This is a sad commentary on our system. Nevertheless, we in this party keep trying by repetition, talking and going over the matter, hoping that in some magic way enough people will take their responsibility to Canada seriously and will reconsider what they have been doing thus far and vote in favour of motions such as No. 27 which negates clause 35(1) which is so detrimental to the future of this country.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on Motion No. 27 of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) which concerns Clause 35 of the bill. He went into great contortions to describe his concern about their being no exploration or development with such a clause in the bill, yet this clause, or one very similar to it, was in the original bill that came out last year.

The clause was put in for a very clear reason. The government has a great deal at stake in the development of any well because of the petroleum incentive program grants of a minimum 25 per cent, or higher. There have been instances in the past where the operator was a foreign-owned multinational. It would have been much more in the country's interest to see exploration or a delineation of wells carried out to prove their geological structure. Perhaps because of these circumstances that particular operator's global activities, whether it is Mobil or any other multinational corporation, would take place in some other part of the world, activities involving exploration and development. Because of our climatic conditions, often exploration can only go forward during the summer months. Canada must sit and wait while the foreign-owned multinational carries out its exploration and focuses its activities in another part of the world.

From the point of view of the individual companies, that is fine. In some cases private enterprise feels no responsibility to Canada. Therefore, this is a good safeguard. We have the capital investment through the petroleum incentive program. Perhaps in some cases the grants are even higher. Sometimes strategic well drilling in one area may go on to other structures in the area. If we lose one or even two years, it is not in the long-term interest of the country.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre stated that with this clause in the bill, no exploration can take place. When we were dealing with this bill in the standing committee, impressive figures were placed before us forecasting petroleum exploration expenditures on major Canada lands. During 1979, before the bill was introduced, the projected figure was $550 million. The projections by the department for 1980 and 1981 show those figures rising dramatically. In 1980, the first year before this bill was introduced, the expenditures were $345 million. In 1981 they rose to $630 million, in 1982 to $830 million, in 1983 to $1,035 million and in 1984 to $1,140 million.

If we look behind the hon. member's arguments, we find that the projections of expenditures and the number of wells that will be drilled in the next few years under the National Energy Program rise dramatically, doubling the 1979 figure by 1984 and almost quadrupling the 1980 figure by 1984. I do not think we should take the hon. member's argument too seriously in this regard. It is a most worth-while safeguard for the national interest to have this clause in the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is not clear as to whether the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) has completed his remarks. He indicates he has. Perhaps it is appropriate at this time to inquire whether hon. members wish the motion to be put.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. I had heard some hon. member indicate that possibly the time has come to put the question. It is clear the time has not come. It is six o'clock. Accordingly, it being six o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1) the House now stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6.01 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 5, 1981

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM TO FARM EQUIPMENT DEALERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, high interest rates are forcing many farm equipment dealers to reduce their inventory of spare parts, which often results in frustrating delays for farmers working against the weather to take a crop off when a machinery breakdown occurs. Realizing the urgency of this situation, as we have just taken a crop off, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce recommend to the Minister of Finance ways of assisting this service sector such as by expansion of the Small Business Development Bond.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CONDITIONS AT TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE, HULL, P.Q.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, whereas there is compelling evidence of environmental problems at the Terrasses de la Chaudière in spite of a cloud of government secrecy, and as public servants are entitled not only to a reasonable work environment but to know the true state of affairs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the government table all unabridged reports concerning the environmental, health and structural problems of the Terrasses de la Chaudière, and that all pregnant women currently working in the building should be offered transfers to other facilities until such time as there is conclusive evidence that all problems have been solved.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION FUNDING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43. Recently the Progressive Conservative Party has had much to say in opposition to rumoured and/or proposed cutbacks in federal support for post-secondary education. In view of this, and in view of the fact that they are the same ones who have done the most to create the mistaken perception of the deficit as the greatest single evil facing our country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That this House, in the name of political integrity, instruct the Progressive Conservative caucus to own up to its part in creating the cutback mentality and apologize to students across the country, and also that they renounce the rhetoric of the hon. member for York-Peel who, had he remained in office, would surely have become "king of the cutbacks".

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

VIA RAIL

SUGGESTED RETENTION OF ATLANTIC LIMITED TRAIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has determined low ridership as a major criteria for the abandonment of 16 passenger rail lines across Canada. In view of the fact that the Atlantic Limited operates at 80 per cent occupancy and is often completely filled, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That the Atlantic Limited does not fall within the questionable guidelines established for abandonment and as such should not be cancelled rendering the southern portion of New Brunswick isolated, crippled, and certainly alienated.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

S.O. 43

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE HONOURABLE J. ANGUS MacLEAN

TRIBUTE TO RETIRING PREMIER OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, this coming weekend marks the end of the long and distinguished political career of the Honourable J. Angus MacLean, Premier of Prince Edward Island. He served in this House for a quarter century and now makes way for his successor at a leadership convention in Charlottetown on Saturday. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. Campbell), himself a former Premier of Prince Edward Island:

That this House acknowledges the contribution of the Hon. J. Angus MacLean to his province and country over many years, and expresses its best wishes to him for a happy retirement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

UPGRADING OF PRINCE GEORGE-PRINCE RUPERT LINE—COSTS CHARGED TO RAILWAY CROSSING LESSEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne McCuish (Prince George-Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, the CNR north line between Prince George and Prince Rupert is to be upgraded to accommodate grain and coal unit trains bound for Prince Rupert. The mining and agricultural industries, and the provincial and federal governments will prosper from the increased traffic on this line. Although rural residents will be subjected to an extraordinary increase in noise and air pollutants, the CNR is charging all residents with railways crossing leases upwards of $2,200 to subsidize the upgrading costs. I therefore move, under Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman):

That the Minister of Transport instruct the CNR to charge this portion of the upgrading to the benefiting industries or to absorb it themselves, but in any event to get off the backs of the suffering low-income lessees.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1410)

EDUCATION

FUNDING FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, there are thousands of Canadian students who are neglecting their studies and imperilling Canada's future because they have been worried about the Minister of Finance's (Mr. MacEachen) intentions vis-à-vis the federal government's contribution to post-secondary education. On behalf of those students, and seconded by the hon. for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), I move:

That, when we finally see the federal budget, if there is, for any reason, a need to reduce post-secondary education or health care then this House will demand the immediate resignation of the Minister of Finance.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF FEDERAL SALES TAX ON NORTH AMERICAN BUILT CARS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, Canadian sales of North American built cars suffered a record drop of 34.6 per cent last month, while at the same time Japanese imports increased by a whopping 70 per cent.

In view of the fact that the actions of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) in this regard have contributed dramatically to increased employment in Japan while adversely affecting the economy in Canada, resulting in 95 per cent of Canada's North American automotive dealers today being in dire straits, if not indeed on the verge of bankruptcy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to include in his forthcoming budget a reduction in the 9 per cent federal sales tax on North American built cars, thus giving the industry time to recuperate from the minister's high interest rate policies.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DEMONSTRATE INITIATIVE WITH RESPECT TO CONSERVATION MEASURES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise on this historic day under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

We know from the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) speech in Nairobi last summer that our government is prepared to back conservation, solar and other alternatives for Africans. Yet in Canada in three years only $13 million of the $125 million five-year Solar Heating Program, called PUSH, has been spent. This year the National Research Council diverted $750,000 from solar research.

Last May 15 a brilliant Parliamentary Task Force Report called "Energy Alternatives" was tabled, with 65 conservation and alternative energy recommendations. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That since six months have now elapsed without any government reaction to the report, this House urge the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to abandon his almost total preoccupation with the supply side of the petroleum question and show some initiative in reducing demand by conservation measures and greater support for alternative energy options.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MURDER OF POLICEMAN IN LONGUEUIL, P.Q.—EXPRESSION OF CONDOLENCES TO BEREAVED FAMILY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of this House to introduce a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the day before yesterday in Longueuil, a young policeman of twenty-six, Constable Michel Vincent, was savagely murdered, that he lost his life while protecting the interests and the rights of citizens against any type of aggression, and that another policeman was seriously wounded at the same time, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That this House transmit a message of sympathy to the family of Michel Vincent who died tragically on Thursday, November 3, 1981, while protecting our rights and freedoms.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the text of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RUSSIAN NUCLEAR SUBMARINE'S VIOLATION OF SWEDEN'S TERRITORIAL WATERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent necessity. After noting the concern expressed by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) in question period on Monday over the visit of Allied American Naval ships to Vancouver Harbour, and in view of the Prime Minister of Sweden's revelation that the offending Soviet submarine was armed with nuclear warheads, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe-North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House express to the Soviet ambassador its grave concern and dismay over the violation of a neutral nation's territorial waters.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING EXPENDITURES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services who, on May 5, 1981, in a speech to the Association of Canadian Advertisers in Toronto, conceded that the federal government this year would be spending over $50 million on federal government advertising. In view of the fact that the minister made the statement before a number of publicly-financed, self-serving advertising campaigns were launched by the government, what is his current estimate of how much money in total will be spent by the federal government on advertising this year?

● (1415)

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I would have to look at the present estimates. I do not have the figures available at this particular time, but the figures I was quoting at that time are relatively accurate.

DETAILS OF MINISTER'S SPEECH

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, will the minister concede that that figure has increased dramatically since that time? Also I bring the minister's attention to the statement he made in his speech that the federal government would be treating advertising in much the same way as a multiproduct national corporation treats the promotion of its product, on the grounds that "government is too complex nowadays to rely on 'policy by press release'; programs must be explained and not by reporters, but rather by the people who created them." Could the minister tell the House how he justifies the expenditure of massive amounts of public funds to promote a partisan point of view and in an attempt as well to prevent the Press Gallery from exercising its function?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the key words the hon. member used is the question of the expression of a partisan point of view. In no place in the speech could he identify any place where I have indicated that the advertising was to be for partisan purposes. I gave examples in that speech and I will cite one—the amnesty program that I introduced when I was solicitor general, in which I achieved a substantial registration of additional firearms, which had not been contemplated at the time the bill was introduced, as a result of a very progressive advertising campaign. That is the sort of advertising campaign that I feel was described within that particular speech.

AUDIT OF CANADIAN MEDIA CORPORATION EXPENSES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, if the minister needs an example he need only look at his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who spent massive amounts on advertising. You will note, Madam Speaker, that the minister has not answered the other question on whether or not the $50 million figure still stands.

The minister will be aware of the fact that he awarded an untendered contract, the largest of its kind in Canada, to Canadian Media Corporation, a company which was created to receive the contract from the federal government; it did not exist before. Due to the fact that Section 6, Item 4, of the contract between the government and Canadian Media Corporation provided that the minister, six months after the contract began, shall do an effectiveness audit, an efficiency audit, of the expenses incurred by the Canadian Media Corporation, with a view to determining whether or not the fee which is paid to that corporation should be adjusted, may I ask him whether that audit has taken place? If so, will he release the results of that audit to the House of Commons?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, yes indeed the audit has taken place. After the initial six months there was a review of the figures submitted by the Canadian Media Corporation. In effect we are satisfied that the costs submitted were accurate and justified the amounts that had been paid. I would be pleased to discuss the matter further with the hon. member and to review the figures to see whether or not I can in effect deposit them in the House.

In terms of the hon. member's indication pointing to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his advertising campaign, I might point out that any advertising expended by that minister was conformant to the policies of the government, namely, that it will advertise, identify and provide information to the Canadian public relating to policies which have been adopted by the Government and by the Parliament of Canada.

* * *

CANADIAN UNITY

APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR GENERAL OF INFORMATION OFFICE

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question today for whichever minister is capable of answering questions on the Canadian Unity Information Office. I had intended to ask it of the Secretary of State, who is chairman of the cabinet communications committee, but unfortunately he is not here.

• (1420)

Could we have a confirmation from the ministry that the recently appointed director general is one Patrick McDouggall, formerly of Vickers and Benson, the agency which between April, 1980, and this date received $10 million worth of government advertising business through the interchange, and that Mr. McDouggall was appointed through the Interchange program which means in fact that at the end of his term he will be going back to Vickers and Benson?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will gladly look into that but, as a general proposition, I think hon. members should be careful not to impute sins to people who come from other sectors of society to join the civil service. I had a case recently with an article which appeared in Maclean's magazine that does that with one of my officials. I think this is unfair, is a reflection on the honesty of people, and is totally undeserved.

APPLICATION OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, it is precisely to protect Mr. McDouggall's reputation that we wish answers to these questions.

I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. In so far as he will be checking the appointment, which we understand to be through the Interchange program, would he confirm to the House that he is willing to check whether the conflict of interest guidelines have been followed in this matter so that we will not have a repeat in Mr.

McDouggall's case of the circumstances that surrounded the case of Mr. Phelps?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that, according to our information, Mr. Patrick McDouggall has never been an employee or an executive of Vickers and Benson, and therefore his question is ill-founded if that is the situation.

* * *

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

APPROVAL OF NATO PLANS

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. For the first time since World War II, the government of the United States has indicated that it would be prepared to initiate a nuclear attack.

In view of the statement made yesterday by the U.S. Secretary of State that the U.S. and its allies have plans which include using nuclear armaments against any conventional attack from the Soviets, can the minister indicate whether the Government of Canada, as a member of NATO, has approved of such plans?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, it is true that this country is part of NATO. All I can do is tell the hon. member what was decided at the last meeting of NATO ministers at Gleneagles two weeks ago. I have before me a copy of the communiqué relevant to the whole discussion, and it has been made public. It was reaffirmed then that the strategy of deterrence is the strategy of NATO—deterrence to prevent war. At the same time we recognized that the Soviet nuclear power had worsened, so in light of this the emphasis was on the need to move ahead with the implementation of both facets of the NATO decision. That means modernization of the credible deterrence of NATO at the same time that we are trying our best to control arms and prevent the proliferation of arms.

CANADIAN POSITION ON USE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I find it amazing that a government that speaks of suffocating nuclear weapons from the face of the earth would join in a policy that calls for a first strike with nuclear weapons.

Will the minister, on behalf of the Government of Canada, tell the United States government that Canada is against initiating the use of nuclear weapons in any so-called conventional military conflict since even a nuclear weapon used for supposedly demonstrative purposes will lead to a nuclear holocaust throughout the world?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I should like to tell the hon. member that one has to be very realistic when talking about such subjects. I think every member of the House in whatever party is against nuclear war and, indeed, against any kind of war. It is very easy to say that we should have no war, but the most important thing is to try to find a way to prevent war. That is exactly what NATO is doing. I think that for the last 35 years NATO has been the most efficient peace movement in existence. We have not had any nuclear war for the last 35 years, and I hope we will never have one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sargeant: Madam Speaker, I would point out to the minister that the realism in this case is that all of us will fry if there is a nuclear war.

• (1425)

DEMONSTRATIONS OPPOSING UNITED STATES POLICY

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my further supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister aware that next Wednesday, on Remembrance Day, over 100 American universities are planning demonstrations to join the hundreds of thousands of Europeans who have already taken to the streets to protest the madness of this new American policy, and does the minister not think that Canada, which has done so well as a peace seeker in the past, should also join in protesting this very real threat to world peace?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I understood the hon. gentleman to say that this was a demonstration of citizens, not of governments. I wonder why he thinks our government should be involved with groups of citizens in other countries. I remind him that his party's rejection of NATO is not shared by other members of this house nor by the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

VIA RAIL

REGISTRATION OF ORDER IN COUNCIL CANCELLING PASSENGER SERVICES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It arises out of the question related to the order in council which proposes to reduce rail passenger service in this country by 20 per cent. Last week, on October 28, the Minister of Transport stated in the House that the order in council did not need to be registered and that, if there was any doubt about it, he would pass a new one. Just this past Tuesday the minister undertook to register Order in Council P.C. 1981-2171, 88 days after it was issued. This would seem to violate Section 9 of the Statutory Instruments Act, which calls for registration to come within seven days of the order being issued.

What caused the minister to change his mind, and why did he choose to register the old one rather than issue a new one?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I still maintain that it was not necessary—I underline "necessary"—to register the order in council referred to. Some of my reasons for believing that are based on precedents which even the hon. gentleman who asked the question established. However, I said that if there was a shadow of a doubt—I underline "shadow of a doubt"—that registration would be useful, if not necessary, I would proceed to register the said order in council. This is what was done to remove that shadow of a doubt, and I still maintain—and my lawyers maintain—that the procedure of registration at this time will not affect the legal status of the order in council, nor the substance of it, nor the date of its implementation, nor the effect that it has on notices given to railway employees.

LEGALITY OF REGISTRATION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, perhaps in attempting to clarify the issue the minister has simply clouded it further, because legal counsel to the Joint Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, Mr. J. C. Eglington, has offered an opinion on the actions of the minister in terms of this registration as of last Tuesday. He states in a written opinion, and I quote:

—registration of the existing order in council as at today's date should be an unattractive proposition for the Department of Transport. It would raise too many nice legal questions, not only on Section 5 of the act but also on Sections 3, 7, 8 and 11—

What does the minister propose in response to that legal opinion by a very distinguished servant of the committee, and can he ensure that, as far as he is concerned, the late registration will fulfil all the necessary requirements in terms of proper notification to the workers who will be laid off?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the opinion expressed by my hon. friend may be right. I tried to be accommodating, as I usually do, and to show respect for the Statutory Instruments Act in this particular instance. The debate referred to is one which has been going on, I understand, for a long period of time between Mr. Eglington and lawyers from the Department of Justice. I cannot solve this debate on my own. I thought I would make a friendly contribution in acting the way I did.

Mr. Lawrence: You made it worse.

Mr. Pepin: Be that as it may, the federal tribunal will have an occasion on, I think, Monday of next week, to throw some light on the subject. We will wait and see what it does.

REQUEST THAT IMPLEMENTATION OF ORDER IN COUNCIL BE DEFERRED

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, in light of the legal confusion which surrounds this whole matter, in light of the fact that now the government of Saskatchewan has joined the action of the cities of Melville and Watrous and Transport 2000, in light of the fact that Saint John, New Brunswick will be launching a legal action, and the city of Edmonton, the province of Alberta and perhaps a group in Ontario will launch similar actions seeking an injunction on the proposal to discontinue 20 per cent of the rail passenger service in this country—plus there is the potential of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the State of Maine taking action—why will the minister not now defer the date of implementation and refer the matter to the appropriate courts so that the whole issue can be clarified and settled once and for all?

● (1430)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have apparently no reason to do that. I have made the case repeatedly—

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Pepin: —that the use of Section 64 for the purpose of issuing an order in council to amend some orders of the Canadian Transport Commission is entirely legal.

An hon. Member: It is unilateral.

Mr. Pepin: The Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments has not denied that at all. Therefore there is no reason for us to change our minds about the way this was done. Presumably Monday next we will know more about the subject after the Federal Court has heard the case.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF HON. LUCIEN LAMOUREUX

Madam Speaker: I cannot resist the temptation of drawing the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery of one of my illustrious predecessors, the Hon. Lucien Lamoureux.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[English]

INDUSTRY

PROPOSAL TO RATIONALIZE PRODUCTION OF RUBBER TIRES

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. More than a year ago, in fact, on July 3, 1980, I asked the minister if he would soon reply to a proposal made by certain manufacturers of rubber tires that supply the automobile industry, the construction and farm machinery industry, which would allow them to rationalize their production. The minister said at that time that he would advise the manufacturers very soon. Fifteen months have now passed since that question was asked. Would the minister give us some idea when he will respond to this proposal?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, in working on this proposal I thought it advisable to make sure that I had the views of the workers in the industry as well as the views of the individual firms. On consulting with them, I found there were strong differences of opinion about the advisability of this particular proposal in terms of its suiting the best interests of the workers and the industry in general. We are doing further work in the area to see if we can come up with a proposal that will respond to the concerns raised. I hope it will be possible to make some announcements on the matter before too long, although I think it will be some period of time yet before I can announce any decision.

PROPOSAL MADE BY FIRESTONE CORPORATION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has received a proposal from Firestone Canada Inc. that would allow Firestone to rationalize its production and permit duty remission on certain product lines. Firestone has negotiated a labour agreement with its employees to allow changes in work schedules. In fact Firestone has hired and trained several hundred new people anticipating the minister's action. When will the minister be likely to have a reply for Firestone? Several employees have petitioned members of the House of Commons about the matter a and some have commented that they hope Firestone will not be another Admiral Corporation which had its employees out on the street looking for jobs. The Firestone employees see this rationalization as a solution, and they would like an answer from the minister as soon as possible.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the Firestone Company presented a proposal pertaining to its own operations and the rationalization it had in mind. Essentially it is urging that we proceed on a proposal for the Firestone company, quite apart from anything from the industry. I think this raises some significant questions for the industry as well as for Firestone that we simply have to address properly.

I have had some strong representations on the matter from my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, from other Hamilton members, as well as from Firestone employees. I am taking the interests of the workers in that company very seriously, and I hope to have an answer on the matter before too long.

Oral Questions

THE ECONOMY

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S VIEWS AND PLANS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It was mentioned that Canadian Admiral is laying off literally thousands of workers and that its assets have been seized by the banks. In light of the fact that domestic car sales for the month of October are down 35 per cent year over year and there have been lay-offs in every single industry right across the country, is the minister now prepared to admit that the Canadian economy is in a recession? Is the minister now prepared to admit that unemployment is at least as serious a problem as inflation for Canadian workers, and what is the minister going to do about it?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I think the statistics speak for themselves. There is no doubt that there are difficulties with the economy, even though there are indications that over the past year there have been some positive developments—

An hon. Member: Where?

Mr. Gray: —such as the very strong rate of job creation. The situation that my hon. friend mentioned is not confined to Canada. The U.S. economy is very weak, which has been confirmed by the American administration. This is a very important reason for difficulties in some of our industrial sectors, particularly the automotive one, because we export to the United States some 80 per cent of our production of vehicles and individual automotive parts. Therefore, we have been looking into the situation with a great deal of urgency.

I think my hon. friend should look forward to the budget in a few days. Obviously I cannot say what may or may not be in it, but I think it will give an indication of the way we have been addressing the very serious concerns that we all share on current developments.

ECONOMIC STRATEGY

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I noted the minister did not answer either part of my question. First, I asked whether the minister would admit that the economy is in a recession. Certainly he is in a position to know. Second, I asked whether or not he feels that unemployment is as serious a problem as inflation. I would like an answer to both of those questions. The Minister of Finance has been saying that inflation is the focus of the government's economic strategy and that unemployment is not regarded by the government as a serious problem. Does the minister think the country is in a recession now, and does he think that unemployment now is as serious a problem as inflation?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, definitions of recession and like matters are matters of debate among economists. However, as

I have said, I do not think we are debating this. Current economic indicators show a serious situation about which we have to be prepared to take appropriate action. Certainly we are very concerned about unemployment. There are definite links between unemployment and inflation. To respond properly to the needs of the country I think the government has to deal with both unemployment and inflation, and this is what we are prepared to do.

* * *

ENERGY

INCREASED PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since the minister accepted his responsibility for the national energy policy, in many areas, the price of gasoline to the Canadian consumer has increased by almost 100 per cent. In my home town the price of gasoline on December 1, 1979, was $1 a gallon. Today it is $1.84 a gallon.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Gustafson: On December 1, 1979, diesel fuel was 72 cents a gallon. Today it is $1.31 a gallon. That is a 59 cent increase.

An hon. Member: That is a disgrace.

Mr. Gustafson: On December 1, 1979, purple gasoline for farmers was 82 cents a gallon—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question, I can allow it.

Mr. Gustafson: Excuse me, Madam Speaker, I probably get carried away on this very serious subject. These increases are unequalled. What does the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources plan to do for the people of Canada who have been ripped off and who have had to accept taxation of $52 billion?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has a very short memory in two respects. First, he has been making speeches in this House and attacking me over the past year in order to get higher prices for gasoline, not the lower prices.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are a good target.

Mr. Lalonde: Second, my hon. friend does not seem to remember the infamous budget of the hon. member for St. John's West which would have led to even higher prices than the ones we have at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Withdraw.

PRICE OF FUEL USED IN PRODUCTION OF FOOD

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I would ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to rethink what he has just said in this House. As I mentioned earlier, farmers in the constituency of Assiniboia are faced with prices for diesel fuel that have increased almost 100 per cent. Will the minister consider some action in relation to the production of food, action which is so essential to the farmers of this country who are in dire straits?

● (1440)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the plight of the farmers and the farming community is very much in the heart of this government, and we have a Minister of Agriculture who has been doing an outstanding job for many years, ever since he has been in that portfolio. Our concern for the farmers takes the form of many programs that this government, and particularly the Minister of Agriculture, have been leading through Parliament. The issue of fuel prices is only one element of the total cost to farmers, and we are trying to address the total income position of the farmers to make sure the farmers of Canada will continue to improve their lot over the years, continue to be a thriving and dynamic community, and continue their dynamic contribution to the welfare of the country.

* * *

[Translation]

VIA RAIL

INQUIRY WHETHER SERVICE BETWEEN EDMUNDSTON AND MONCTON WILL BE MAINTAINED

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Madam Speaker, a few weeks ago, the Minister of Transport received a request asking that at least a reduced weekly service on the Edmundston-Moncton VIA Rail route be maintained until other means of public transport are in place. This is a matter with which the minister is very familiar. I would like to ask the minister today whether he has made a decision. If so, what is it? If not, will his door remain firmly closed to any constructive suggestions in this regard?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I recognize that I had promised to make the greatest effort to achieve this objective of bringing about an improvement in the other means of transport between Edmundston and Moncton. I shall have the opportunity in the very near future to report to the hon. member on the results that I have achieved.

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PROCESSING OF APPLICATIONS FOR DISABILITY PENSIONS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. A recent War Veterans Allowance Board decision has expanded the terms of eligibility for veterans' pensions to include those veterans who, during the last war, served in non-combat areas such as Newfoundland and Jamaica on the same basis as those veterans receiving pensions who served in a theatre of war. Will the minister inform the House whether his department has begun processing these new applications and, if so, will they be dealt with as soon as possible?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I want first of all to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. The answer is yes, they will be processed immediately.

TERMS OF ELIGIBILITY

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in light of this decision by the board will the minister give further consideration to broadening the terms of eligibility for pension benefits to include those veterans who, through no fault of their own, were stationed in Canada during the war and not given the opportunity to serve overseas but up to now have not been eligible for pensions?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, the war veterans allowance when it was first initiated, as the hon. member probably knows, was restricted to individuals who were actually involved in front line service. As time went on that question boiled down to equating it to front line service. At the moment there are basically four criteria; having served in an active theatre of war; being a veteran who served in both wars; service in dangerous waters; or a disability pensioner. I am sure the War Veterans Allowance Board, just as it did in this particular instance in opening up the war veterans allowance benefits to those who served in Jamaica and Newfoundland, will continue to look at ways and means of further extending those benefits to other veterans.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

INFORMATION ON RELEASED PRISONERS GIVEN TO ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Is it the policy of his department or prison officials to provide the RCMP with the record of criminal activities engaged in by a prisoner while in prison, passing that information on to the RCMP after release of that prisoner?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the practice is to do that, so the answer is yes.

NATURE OF INFORMATION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I wonder if it is the practice of the Solicitor General or his department and the parole officers to provide the RCMP with information other than the computer print-out list when a prisoner is released.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, it depends on the circumstances. When an inmate is released who might, although he has served his time and paid his debt to society, constitute a danger or a risk to the community to which he is going, the prison officials and the parole board will make information available to the police authorities and others in the community which it might be in their interest to know in order to provide protection for that community. If the hon. member has some specific problem in mind I would be glad to hear more about it and provide additional information for him.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

LEGISLATION TO INCREASE FUNDING FOR FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It is a well-known fact that the Farm Credit Corporation requires funding of $200 million right now on an urgent basis in order to help those farm operations that are in great financial need. I want to ask the Minister of Agriculture how soon legislation will be ready dealing with the Farm Credit Corporation amendments which would allow that corporation to borrow money from the private sector, or from private capital markets, and would the minister, through the President of the Privy Council, seek agrrement from all House leaders for quick passage of that legislation through this House?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the draft legislation is prepared. How quickly it will reach that stage in which it is in a form to be presented to the House I do not know. I hope this will follow the lines the hon. member has stated. We realize the urgency of having emergency credit for farmers. The Farm Credit Corporation has been the federal lending institution, and at one time in this nation loaned nearly 70 per cent of all long-term money for farmers. That is now down to about 20 per cent of long-term money. The need for an organization which understands rural Canada still exists, perhaps to an even greater extent today than before.

Oral Questions

TRADE

IMPORT QUOTAS ON FOOTWEAR

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, will the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce advise the House when the government expects to announce that import quotas on footwear, which are due to expire on December 1 next, will be continued into the future as these quotas are very much needed to enable Canadian producers of footwear to obtain a reasonable share of the market so that many thousands of Canadian footwear workers will have jobs?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the cabinet is very close to completing its work on the appropriate elements of a new policy for the Canadian footwear industry for the future. We are very much aware that the present system of quotas will expire on December 1, and we know the need of our industry, including its workers, to be able to plan for the future. We are very aware of the importance of the industry to many parts of the country, and I look forward to making an announcement really quite soon.

ENTRY OF PRODUCTS FROM THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to hear the minister state that he expects to make an announcement in the very near future. I hope it will be the kind of announcement I have been urging him to make for many weeks.

As a supplementary question I would like to ask whether the delay in making this announcement has been due to an expressed wish by the Prime Minister that markets such as Canada should be opened up to producers of the Third World, where labour costs are so low those producers can greatly undersell Canadian producers, the result of which would be to put many thousands of Canadian footwear workers out of work.

● (1450)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the time factors are related primarily to our earlier effort to put in place an appropriate policy for the textile and clothing sectors. We received the report of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal only on March 6. Once we had completed our work with respect to a new program for the textile and clothing sectors, we moved on to work on a policy for the footwear sector and, as I have said, I look forward to an announcement very soon, one that responds to the concerns and interests of all those involved.

The points my hon. friend has been making to me are very much the kind raised by many members on this side of the House. I look forward to be able to make an announcement, and I hope it will be one that will receive wide assent in the country and in this House.

IMMIGRATION

STATUS OF SHIP JUMPERS IN VANCOUVER AREA

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I want to refer the minister to the statement which he made last week which was good news for some visitors from Poland who will be helped in their bid to stay in Canada, and also for the self exiles in eastern European camps. There is no mention about the 200 ship jumpers in the Vancouver area claiming refugee status and who are having to wait up to two years before they can determine whether they are eligible for refugee status.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that not only did we increase the level of intake of refugees from eastern Europe but we also announced in the previous week relaxed criteria that applied to those here in Canada who are being sponsored by families or, if they are in Canada, that they would be granted work permits to allow them to gain employment for a year until the situation is clarified.

It is my belief that the people who are already landed in the Vancouver area would be eligible under those requirements. I will ask my immigration officials to take that into account.

ADMISSION OF REFUGEES FROM EL SALVADOR

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the minister's generous relaxation of immigration regulations, which has just been referred to, for Polish people who are unwilling to return home, as he puts it, and in view of the more than 100,000 Salvadorans who fled their country because of the massacre of 20,000 there, many of whom wish to enter Canada but are prevented from doing so because of lack of access to Canadian immigration officers, will the minister do as he did when he sent the special team to Austria on behalf of the Polish people, and send a special team to Latin America for the purpose of interviewing El Salvadoran refugees who wish to come to Canada?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. member was not in the House at the time, but I will tell him that during last spring and summer we announced similar relaxed criteria for those from Salvador as we applied to the Polish refugees. Furthermore, we sent a special team down to South America to examine the situation and report back. We have, in fact, applied the same conditions.

I would point out to the hon. member that it is the position taken by the United Nations High Commission on Refugees that they do not want to encourage any large-scale movement from Central America because their priority for that region is for resettlement within El Salvador, or within the region itself. Because so much of our refugee policy is done in consultation with the United Nations, we do not want to contradict their very strong advice and guidance to us.

REQUEST THAT ADVISORY COMMITTEE TRAVEL TO CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that many thousands of those refugees are not being relocated and integrated by the United Nations Commission—there are 6,000 in the United States, many of whom have sought to enter Canada and have been turned back by Canadian officials and refused consideration for refugee status—will the minister direct the Canadian immigration staff in the United States and elsewhere to assist El Salvadoran refugees to enter Canada quickly so they can be reviewed by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee? Alternatively, will the hon. gentleman direct the Refugee Status Advisory Committee to go to areas with no Canadian representation—many countries in Central America have no Canadian representatives—and review the status of those people who seek to be refugees in Canada?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I would suggest it would be wise to check the facts of the hon. member's statements. Again, in the statement we made last spring in relation to El Salvador, we indicated that we were prepared to take El Salvadoran refugees from the United States who are not being granted status there. We were prepared to accept them here and we have a number of those cases in process at our embassy in Mexico which are being looked after by our immigration officers.

If the hon. member knows of cases that are being rejected, I would be pleased to look into them. Those are the rules and guidelines established and, as far as we know, those rules and guidelines are being honoured.

* * *

INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES COURT RULING ON TIRE INDUSTRY IN NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I have a brief question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He was questioned earlier by my colleague about the Canadian tire industry. He will know that there has been a recent court ruling in the United States which had the effect of varying or diluting the countervailing duties placed on Michelin tires. Since the tire industry is a very important one in Nova Scotia, which is in the foreground of technology, is the minister taking any steps or making any plans to take any steps in view of the recent court ruling, to further vary or change this dangerous and seldom used precedent that still has the effect of being a hindrance to the Canadian tire industry in Nova Scotia?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, in our work for an appropriate policy for the Canadian tire industry we are taking into account all the relevant elements and all its aspects, including Michelin in Nova Scotia.

* * *

GARRISON DIVERSION

SUGGESTED DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As the minister knows, the United States has approved $4 million for the Garrison Diversion Project in North Dakota under wording which instructs the United States Department of the Interior to resume work on the project in spite of the recent court ruling by Justice Ritchie. That particular instruction is in the form of a budget bill. It goes to the House of Representatives next week.

Since the House of Commons has unanimously signalled its concern over this project, is the government now contemplating sending an all-party committee made up of members from the House of Commons and possibly some representatives from the province of Manitoba, to Washington so they may be there next week to sit down and talk on a personal basis with the members of the House of Representatives who will be discussing this issue?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the language which has been adopted by the Senate is identical to the language which I referred to in the House the other day and includes a direction that none of the money which is being appropriated may be used for construction which in any way affects Canada's interests. So there is within the bill itself that guarantee to us, in addition to the assurances we have received from the United States administration.

Nevertheless, I would be less than frank with the hon. member if I did not say to him, and I think he well knows, we are concerned about any expansion of this project because at some future time that might provide ground for pressures to extend it in a way which might harm us. I will certainly give consideration to his suggestion. I will consult the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Employment and Immigration and other hon. members, as well as our sources in Washington, to see if it would be of assistance for us to have such a delegation there next week or in the future.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONSIDER FURTHER REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, a brief supplementary—

And Mr. Trudeau having entered the chamber:

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murta: My supplementary question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. One of the real problems that Manitobans have over the wording of this issue is that it may open the door at some future time for Congressional supporters of the project to push through approval and, of course, if it passes the House of Representatives next week Canadian concerns may not be adequately represented, certainly at the diplomatic level. This is why it is so important that we in this House of Commons—

● (1500)

And Mr. Clark having entered the chamber:

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Has the hon. member for Lisgar finished his question?

Mr. Murta: Madam Speaker, I am sure this has been the longest question in the history of House of Commons with the fewest number of words. Will the minister take this into consideration and get back to the members of the House of Commons as soon as possible on this issue?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have the feeling that my hon. friend and I are standing in the way of history, so I will answer the question by merely saying yes.

* * *

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, following the historic agreement concluded a few moments ago, I can confirm that there have been consultations among the spokesmen for all parties and that we have agreed to allow the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada to make a statement about that historic agreement at the earliest opportunity, that is in a few minutes, and that the rest of the orders be postponed accordingly, keeping in mind the fact that the Prime Minister of Canada will receive tonight a significant award, the Family of Man Award, presented by the Council of Churches of the City of New York. He must leave us at 4.55 p.m. at the latest to receive that distinctive award. The agreement is that, according to Standing Order 15(3), all questions be interrupted and completed at 4.55 p.m. at the latest this afternoon. I thank the spokesmen for the opposition parties for their courtesy on this occasion.

Madam Speaker: Does the House confirm this agreement?

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, we have agreed to the statement being made. The President of the Privy Council said nothing about the conventional right of reply of the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). I assume that will be part of the agreement.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, we have also agreed on the understanding that the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party will be given an opportunity to reply.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

TABLING OF ACCORD SIGNED BY GOVERNMENT OF CANADA AND NINE PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would like to table copies, in both official languages, French and English, of the signed accord agreed to this morning between the federal government and nine of the provincial Premiers. If I can do that at this stage, later in the proceedings we might find other copies. This is the only one I have with me; I am sure copies will be distributed. The substance of the accord is probably known by now to members of this House.

I will not explain it in any detail except to say that we have by consensus constitutionalized an endeavour begun in this House more than a year ago to bring Canada's Constitution to Canada, to have in it an amending formula and to have in it a charter of rights binding all levels of government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I would first like to thank most members of my caucus, particularly the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) and the ministers of this government who have stood steady in the endeavour to achieve these three objectives. The applause that we have just heard is a just expression of our happiness with this outcome, having after 54 years of failure succeeded in gaining the consensus to give Canada its Constitution with an amending formula, and into the bargain to put in a charter of rights, particularly in the area of language rights. Therefore, I want to thank the members of my caucus.

I want to thank the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and the members of his caucus who have supported this effort. It was to that degree a joint effort. There were a great many discussions engaged in between members of my caucus and his.

I would also like to thank the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) who at the beginning of this operation, in May 1980 if I recall, offered a motion to this House, which was supported unanimously, to the effect that we should patriate with an amending formula regardless of all the difficulties.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The task is not yet done. We have in this House to look either at amendments to the resolution before both Houses of Parliament, a joint resolution, or, alternatively, to a new resolution which would incorporate the patriation and all the elements of the charter with a couple of non obstante clauses and an amending formula in lieu of the one that was in there.

I hope that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party will agree to consult with me in the course of tomorrow to see in what ways this joint resolution can be presented in a fashion and a form which hopefully will permit a speedy passage through this House in a spirit of harmony as a result of these strivings, and incorporating, as I say, these three objectives; and hopefully in a form too which will facilitate its passage in the United Kingdom Parliament. One last time our Constitution will be amended there, and that will be the last time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I have already talked to the government House leader in the other place because there is a change which affects them in this accord and a change which was put forward in the compromise amending formula. I know the reason for their veto up to now was that they felt it their duty to protect the provinces. However, after consultation with the House leader in the other place, I feel we can be hopeful, now that the provinces themselves have consented to this, that they will accept this amendment too.

● (1510)

[Translation]

Finally, I wish to express, as I already did this morning at the closing session, my regret that the only signature lacking in this Canadian harmony is that of the Premier of Quebec. We, on the government side, remembered the resolution passed by the Quebec National Assembly urging us to continue negotiations, to avoid proceeding unilaterally and to seek compromise solutions that would not take away from Quebec those jurisdictions which the Quebec government has under the Constitution. We remembered this resolution, and we do believe that we have acted in accordance with the intent of the unanimous resolution passed by the Quebec National Assembly, since we did reopen negotiations, we did continue the consultation process and we are, in fact, no longer acting unilaterally, since nine provinces have agreed with us on the procedure we have adopted.

Madam Speaker, I believe it is essential at this stage to clarify two or three points. Clearly, there is no disagreement on the patriation issue. As for the amending formula, it is, with one exception, exactly the same as the formula negotiated and accepted by the province of Quebec and the Group of Eight and made public on April 16 of this year. In other words, I want my fellow citizens in Quebec to understand that Quebec has retained the same veto right and the same opting-out right they were offered in the April 16 agreement, an agreement which received the approval of Premier Lévesque. So it cannot be said that we are taking away Quebec's traditional veto right. He has exactly the same veto right he asked for in the so-called Group of Eight Accord formula, and exactly the same opting-out right. What has been removed, Madam Speaker, is a constitutional provision that would have obliged the national government to compensate, in financial or fiscal terms, a province that would exercise its opting-out right, and conversely, would probably have obliged the provinces to compensate the federal government for parting with any of its jurisdictions.

We deleted this measure, with the agreement of the nine provinces, for a very simple reason. We want to avoid a situation in which the national government would be prevented from having its constitutional amendment approved by a province that would say: I am opting out and you are going to pay me for doing just that. And this, I can assure the House, does not apply only to Quebec. I am thinking, for instance, of a constitutional amendment pursuant to which the Canadian government would want to amend the Constitution so as to allow the national government to legislate on pensions and make them portable for the elderly from province to province.

If one of the wealthy provinces such as Alberta or Ontario—and this obviously applies to Quebec as well—were to say that it was opting out of the agreement and that we would be obliged to pay compensation, this would make it impossible, Madam Speaker, or at least very difficult, both fiscally and financially, to adopt such a measure. And it is for this very simple reason that the passage was removed—it is an important one, I realize that—from the April accord. It was done with the consent of the nine provinces, and this morning I explained at length the spirit in which it was done to the Premier of Quebec. Naturally, the political right, the constitutional right, to negotiate compensation remains, but it is a right to negotiate and not a pre-established obligation. So as far as the amending formula is concerned, Madam Speaker, I believe we have acted in accordance with the wishes of Quebecers and those of the Quebec government, with the exception of this point.

As far as the charter is concerned, the Premier of Quebec told us this morning that he agreed with the charter and would be able to sign it except for two points. However, it is important to understand that on the whole the charter received the approval of the Quebec government and that consequently nothing has been taken away from Quebec against the will of its government.

The two exceptions are mobility rights, the right of Canadians, irrespective of where they live, to seek work and to settle anywhere in Canada. We had to change the wording of these mobility rights to dispel the legitimate fears of Newfoundland, and we offered the same possibility to Quebec. Before the resolution is passed, if Quebec can let us know how an amendment acceptable to the others and acceptable to us could be introduced, I am sure we would be able to find a compromise solution, as we did for Newfoundland. Finally, the only other point on which there was disagreement was the obligation for each province to undertake freely to protect its official language minorities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I think the applause is an indication how strongly we feel we have won a major victory in the long struggle of francophone minorities to obtain education rights for their children. This was achieved in all nine anglophone provinces by their agreement this morning. Quebec did not give its agreement, I might say it has not yet given its agreement. I explained that if it was a matter of changing the wording, we would also be willing to do that, provided the intent, which surely reflects the intent of all Canadians who believe in justice, is preserved, that is, to ensure that francophone and anglophone minorities are treated fairly. I am convinced that between people of goodwill acting in good faith, a way can still be found to express this. If we do not succeed today or tomorrow, I am convinced we could and should find a solution within a matter of weeks or months, so that the Quebec government will be able freely to undertake what all free men and women of goodwill would certainly expect it to do, that is, the constitutional protection of its minorities. I have said before that historically speaking, Quebec certainly does not need to be told what to do in that respect. We have always treated our language minorities fairly with regard to education—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —and like Mr. Lévesque this morning, I now wish to ask the legislators of the province of Quebec, the members sitting in the National Assembly, to consider the importance of the agreement that was signed today. Under this agreement, in terms of official languages at the federal level and in New Brunswick, and in terms of official languages in education in all provinces, francophone minorities have seen history being made. I only hope that our fellow citizens in Quebec will see this historical gesture repeated, as far as Quebec's jurisdiction is concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my colleagues and I are naturally happy to have this matter back in the House of Commons and in Parliament. If I may, at the beginning I want to express our appreciation to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —for reporting so quickly to the House of Commons. May I say that I hope it will be a practice which will be followed regularly by all ministers on important matters. But I certainly appreciate the Prime Minister coming directly from the conference to the House which has been so occupied with this matter for such a long time.

• (1520)

It was evident from watching the televised responses of first ministers at the conference that many participants in the conference just concluded feel a very real sense of satisfaction and accomplishment at the prospect of a constitutional resolution which is likely to be dramatically different from the constitutional resolution proposed to the House of Commons more than a year ago by the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Certainly there is a real sense of satisfaction among many of us in the House and, if I may say so, particularly among many of us in this party. The first ministers met today because the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada allowed them to meet. The Supreme Court of Canada had the opportunity to judge this question because this party won that right for the court during a long and difficult fight on the floor of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: On behalf of the people of Canada we fought for the principle that our Constitution should be decided in our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: For nearly a year, the Progressive Conservative Party has fought in Parliament against a resolution which it felt was dividing the country, thereby making it possible for the Supreme Court to consider the resolution and bring in its decision.

[English]

I have spoken of satisfaction, but the dark shadow across any satisfaction we might feel today is the fact that the province of Quebec was not able to support the agreement at the conference. The prospect exists, therefore, that Quebec will be isolated and alone on a constitutional question. The consequences of that isolation must concern every Canadian who wants our nation to remain united.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: We have just received a copy of the press release. We have not yet examined the text of the new resolution to be submitted to Parliament. During this conference, however, we have heard the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of Quebec discuss some of the issues which have resulted in Quebec's isolation.

[English]

One issue, as the Prime Minister indicated, concerns compensation for provinces that do not take part in certain programs. If I heard the Prime Minister of Canada correctly, he said he believed that this was a matter which could be resolved outside the context of the Constitution. If the question can be resolved on its merits, and if including in the constitutional accord a formula for resolving it, may make the package more acceptable to the province of Quebec, surely we should seek to resolve within the Constitution an agreement which the Prime Minister said can be resolved outside the Constitution.

Again if I heard the Prime Minister correctly, he believes that further discussion may lead to some agreement on the question of language rights. He reiterated that today when, in speaking about the acceptance by the province of Quebec, he said that there had not been acceptance by that province pas encore, not yet, indicating that he thinks there may well be some acceptance. If that is so, the new resolution proposed to be presented to Parliament should be refined to seek the unanimity which would be preferred by all of us who want to keep the country intact.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: There is some heckling across the way which I regret on this occasion, particularly since it comes from the minister of fisheries; but perhaps that is to be expected.

There will be more to add in the House when we have seen the exact language of the new resolution the government will want to introduce. The Prime Minister has asked the opportunity to consult with me and to consult with the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). Naturally we would be prepared to meet with him to discuss the general question of timing. We would be prepared to do that at his earliest convenience.

What is important is that the events today have indicated that much more agreement is possible in Canada than many Canadians had previously believed to be possible. As the Prime Minister reminded us often, and again today, this process began some 54 years ago. The first ministers have just emerged from four days of intensive discussions and some real agreement. Soon the matter will be back in the House of Commons and naturally we will want to consider all the implications of a resolution which is dramatically different from that which we considered before. It may be that, just as Parliament improved the last resolution, Parliament may find solutions to some of the matters not resolved by the first ministers. Certainly all Canadians who value the unity of our country would want us to accept our full duty to find even broader agreement than was reported today.

We have found that honouring the federal-provincial process has resulted in significant progress on the Constitution. This Parliament, whose vigilance and determination allowed the Supreme Court of Canada to decide and allowed the first ministers to meet again, welcomes the progress which has been made so far, and this Parliament looks forward to contributing to even further progress and even further agreement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, at the outset I should like to offer my deepest congratulations not only to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) but to the Premiers of the provinces, reflecting highly divergent personal views, highly divergent regional interests and highly divergent partisan concerns, for producing for us today in a desirable process a broad Canadian consensus.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to say also at this point that when this process began in the House, as the Prime Minister reminded us a few minutes ago, just over a year ago we in the New Democratic Party had three objectives. We wanted an independent Canadian Constitution, we wanted a workable amending formula, and we wanted a charter of rights for all Canadians. We were determined from the outset, reflecting upon the deep traditions of our own party and movement, as well as the traditions of other parties, to ensure that at the end of the process which began a year ago we would end up with a document that achieved those three objectives.

● (1530)

In the process, Madam Speaker, we well know that there were some important Supreme Court decisions, first at the provincial Supreme Court level. Finally the Supreme Court of Canada made a ruling that caused all of us, I might say in passing to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), to say at the time that the decisions of the superior court in Canada could not be ignored because they are an integral part of our political system. They had to be respected. Members of all parties, going right back to the decision made by the Supreme Court of the province of Newfoundland and ending in the decision made by the Supreme Court of Canada, said that the judicial process, as part of our political system, had to be respected. That has been done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Most specifically, in light of the recent decision that said, on the one hand, to those of us in federal politics that what we were doing was legal—on a certain resolution that we had before us—and, on the other hand, that a broader consensus had to be achieved, there was one course of action that was singularly appropriate, and that was to have a new conference. My party called for that conference right after the Supreme Court decision.

I am pleased to say—and I do not think one should be grudging about this because it seems to me a spirit of generosity and magnanimity flowed through all parties in the building not far from here today, and therefore it behooves us to demonstrate the same concern—that all parties in the House responded to the implications of that Supreme Court decision which came down a few weeks ago.

What we have seen today is a reflection of the best Canadian tradition of compromise. Conservatives, Liberals and New Democrats, Newfoundlanders, Albertans, people from Ontario and British Columbia, have come together to achieve a document that in terms of the process, I emphasize, was incomparable in its spirit of magnanimity and give and take.

I want to say that it is the deeply felt view of my colleagues and myself that the charter of rights that we fought for, the independent Constitution that we fought for, the amending formula that we fought for and that we had built into the old document, when we see them in their new form, in the present document that has been agreed upon, will contain acceptable and desirable alternatives. I strongly hope that is the case.

[Translation]

In conclusion, I must say I am personally very sad that the Quebec government has not deemed it possible to sign the agreement. Because it represents a very special region and a unique nation in Canada, its decision is of paramount importance. I hope that future amendments will make it possible for the Quebec government to change its mind.

[English]

The Prime Minister has indicated that certain efforts will be made to achieve that very desirable goal.

I think it is a fundamental commitment of members on all sides of the House that when it comes to the people of the province of Quebec, we must do everything we can to make Quebecers feel that they can be at the same time Quebecois and good Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I will conclude, Madam Speaker, by again congratulating the Prime Minister and the Premiers involved in this very difficult process on what they have achieved today. I want to indicate that I will be only too willing to sit down with the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Official Opposition tomorrow to work out the specific details of how we can bring this important process to a final and productive conclusion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, may I direct the usual Thursday question to the President of the Privy Council and ask him what the business of the House is going to be for the remainder of this week and as far into next week as he can tell. There is, of course, Remembrance Day next Wednesday and there is, of course, the budget on November 12. I wonder if the minister could fill in the gaps so that we may know where we are going next week.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as I told my hon. colleague before question period, we will have a House leaders' meeting at five o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Clark: Just for precision, can we assume that the budget will be brought in on November 12?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, it is up to the Minister of Finance to give the proper notice of this so I will not do his job. He is able to do it himself, and very well.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, while it has been the suspicion of some of us for some time that when the Minister of Finance was here he was, in effect, the government House leader, and while it is not proper for me to direct a question to him at this point, I wonder if the government House leader might lean forward in his seat and whisper in the ear of his senior adviser. Since it is very important to the country to know that, now that we have made some progress on constitutional matters, the very real urgency and priority of dealing with the economy will not be shunted backwards again, and since we all have plans to make, I wonder if we could have an assurance either from the Minister of Finance or from the government House leader that the solemn undertaking given in this House that a budget will be brought down on November 12 will be honoured.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, there will be a meeting of the House Leaders at five o'clock. I will then provide his own House Leader with further information, to be passed on to him.

* * *

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, with your permission I should like to salute in our gallery some ministers who have worked almost all night to achieve agreement: Mr. Johnston from Alberta, Mr. Romanow from Saskatchewan, Mr. Wells from Ontario, Mr. Mercier, the Attorney-General of Manitoba, and Mr. McMurtry, the Attorney-General of Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Wednesday, November 4, 1981, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. LEWIS—NOTICE OF INTENTION TO RAISE QUESTION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order but reserve the right to raise the matter tomorrow. During an answer from the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) to a question put by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), it was my impression that the minister cited a government document. After I have had an opportunity to read Hansard I will be in a position to bring that point of order forward.

• (1540)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,147, 2,465, 2,659, 2,697, 3,032 and 3,033.

[Text]

CANADIAN FOREIGN AID

Question No. 2,147—Mr. Gilchrist:

How many recipients of Canadian foreign aid have outstanding claims against them by Canadian companies and, in each case, what is the name of the recipient and the amount of the claim?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Canadian government does not maintain a registry of Canadian companies which have claims against foreign companies. Therefore it is not possible to answer this question.

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION

Question No. 2,465—Mr. McGrath:

1. What criteria are used by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials to accept a thermal insulation material as acceptable under CHIP?

2. (a) At what temperature does urea formaldehyde foam insulation ignite and does the ignition point change with the age of the foam (b) what is the physical equation for the combustion of UFFI and what are the names of the chemicals (c) at what level in parts per million would the chemicals be considered hazardous to health over the (i) short term (ii) long term?

3. (a) How many single and semi-detached homes currently standing were built prior to January 1, 1961 and how many single and semi-detached homes were added to housing stock since 1961 (b) how many homes installed with UFFI (i) received (ii) did not receive assistance under CHIP?

4. (a) For each year 1977 to 1980, how many fires in single or semi-detached homes occurred that required assistance from fire departments to extinguish flames and how many of the homes were destroyed (b) what is the probability of the UFFI ignition point being reached in a household fire and what is the composition of gases released from UFFI if the ignition point is reached?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, National Research Council and Public Works Canada as follows:

1. To be eligible for use on NHA financed construction, CMHC requires that thermal insulation products must demonstrate the ability to meet the requirements of the appropriate standard. For thermal insulation material, the standards are prepared by technical committees of either the Canadian Standards Association or the Canadian General Standards Board. To be eligible for use under CHIP, it is necessary that products carry a valid CMHC acceptance number, although the final authority for eligibility lies with CHIP.

2. (a) The ignition temperature of the various brands and formulation of urea formaldehyde foam insulation varies a great deal depending on the additives. The addition of glycols to foam can reduce the ignition temperature. Thermal decomposition of some UFFI material will proceed at temperatures above 200°C. The ignition point of foam can change with age since the surfaces of the foam often break down much more quickly than that at the centre. Since the breakdown mechanisms appear to vary considerably from foam to foam it is difficult to predict for which formulation the point would be increased and for which it would be decreased.

(b) While it is possible to give some idealized equations for combustion of completely reacted UFFI foam it is not possible to give equations for combustion of the unreacted or partially reacted resin or for the various additives to the resin and foaming agent.

Some of the chemicals produced during combustion would be carbon monoxide, carbon dioxide, hydrogen cyanide, oxides of nitrogen, compounds containing phosphorous, compounds containing sulphur, and, for some foams, compounds containing chlorine.

(c) The concentrations at which the gases in 2(b) become hazardous vary considerably. Some concentrations of gases would produce effects that were additive while others might produce even greater effects.

The combustion products from some of the older formulations of UFFI foam have been tested to find the toxicity to rats. The tests were made by laboratories specializing in that field. The laboratories found the products to be less toxic than combustion products of wood. The concentration and composition of the combustion products in air will depend a great deal on fire conditions, i.e. temperature and amount of excess air.

3. (a) The pre-1961 housing stock eligible for CHIP totalled 4,027,200 units. This includes but is not limited to single and semi-detached units. The total housing stock built between 1961 and 1977 when CHIP began is 2,999,000 units. Again, this includes but is not limited to single and semi-detached units.

(b) The computer system is programmed to identify three categories of insulation used by clients; batts or rolls, loose fill and rigid. Since the introduction of CHIP, CMHC issued

50,770 grants to applicants who installed rigid insulation, which includes UFFI.

4. (a) The information data base for the indicated period precludes statistics unique to single or semi-detached residences, and does not show if a dwelling was destroyed; therefore, the figures shown also include properties such as apartments, boarding houses, hotels, motels, dormitories, mobile homes and camp trailers:

Year	No. of fires
1977	36,513
1978	37,133
1979	40,620
1980	29,908

(b) The temperatures in a household fire are well above the 200°C level required to decompose the UFFI. The composition of the released gases at temperatures well above 200°C has been discussed in question 2(c). At room temperature and temperatures below 200°C the gas will contain formaldehyde, other aldehydes, other related gases such as phenol, vapours from chemicals such as methyl compounds and, with some formulations, ammonia.

There are no well defined toxicity limits to mixtures of gases such as those given off by UFFI but it is likely they are lower than the limits for any single gas such as formaldehyde or acetaldehyde.

EXPORT FINANCE CORPORATION OF CANADA

Question No. 2,659—Mr. Flis:

1. What was the date of incorporation of the Export Development Finance Corporation of Canada Inc. and what was its purpose?

2. Did the corporation meet its obligations and goals and what is its present status?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. There is no federal corporation bearing the name Export Development Finance Corporation of Canada Inc. There is, however, a company bearing the name Export Finance Corporation of Canada, Ltd., which was federally incorporated on June 4, 1959, under a special act of Parliament assented to on that date.

The objects of the corporation are to finance and facilitate exports and imports and the exchange of goods and services between Canada and any nation of the Commonwealth of Nations or other nations, and between agencies or residents of Canada and such nations, or agencies or residents thereof.

2. In so far as the above act is concerned, the company has met its legal obligations by having filed with the director of corporations its financial statement and annual summary for the year ending March 31, 1981. The department is not in a position to comment on the performance of the company with regard to its goals or objects. Present status: active.

VIETNAMESE REFUGEE PROGRAM

Question No. 2,697—Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore):

To date, what was the total cost of the South East Asian (Vietnamese boat people) refugee program?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): As of March 31, 1981, a total of $141,636,000 has been expended on the Vietnamese refugee program.

THE TOM CHERINGTON SHOW

Question No. 3,032—Mr. Gamble:

Did the Canadian International Development Agency or Marcel Massé recently refuse a free opportunity extended by The Tom Cherington Show on CHCH-TV in Hamilton, Ontario to participate in a discussion and debate on foreign aid and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): An invitation to appear on The Tom Cherington Show in October was declined because of the president's intended presence at the Commonwealth heads of government conference in Australia and the North-South summit in Cancun, Mexico. It was agreed with the producer that an attempt would be made to include The Tom Cherington Show in the schedule of Mr. Massé's activities when his travels will take him to the Hamilton area.

THIRD WORLD VILLAGE AT CNE

Question No. 3,033—Mr. Gamble:

1. Did the Canadian International Development Agency sponsor a Third World Village at the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto from August 19 to September 7, 1981 and, if so, what was the (a) total budgeted cost (b) actual cost of the exhibit?

2. What was the cost, if any, for (a) demonstrations (b) artisans (c) films and slide presentations (d) all other expenses?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes. (a) the total budgeted cost was $60,000, (b) the actual cost of the exhibit was $57,391.07.

2. (a) nil, (b) the cost of artisans was $27,445.44, (c) nil, (d) all other expenses cost $29,945.63.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—RECOGNITION OF MEMBERS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I cannot speak unless my desk light goes on, and it is concerning that that I rise today. I have been studying the problem which I presented to the Chair yesterday, and I would not want the Chair to think that by my not pursuing the matter today I was not doing so at the earliest opportunity. In fact, my research has led me to the belief that the matter must be thoroughly prepared before it is presented to you, and I will probably be doing that either tomorrow or Monday.

Madam Speaker: I take note of that.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, November 4, consideration of Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and Motion No. 27 (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I would like to deal with one or two items in connection with Motion No. 27. First I want to mention a statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) when he said that there is enough competition in the industry to allow Petro-Canada stations to compete with other gas stations. We do not object to competition; we like competition. Competition is the life blood of free enterprise. What we object to is favouritism. We object when one group is given a head start. So the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway is wrong when he criticizes members of this party and leads people to believe that we are opposed to Petro-Canada's competing with other stations. He is absolutely wrong. We believe in competition, but we want that competition to be fair and honest. I thought I should at least put the record straight in that regard.

I would also like to deal with one or two points raised by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) when he was speaking about this motion yesterday. He said that there have been instances in the past in which the operators of foreign-owned multinationals could not carry out work in the north. Well, whether it is a multinational company, a Canadian company, a small company or a big company, certain work cannot be carried out in the north during part of the year. If the work is building accesses, probably the best time of the year to build on muskeg is in the wintertime; but if the work is drilling, there are difficulties which have to be overcome.

The hon. member for Algoma justified Clause 35, which we want to delete, by saying that the minister had to have this particular power as a safeguard because some companies—he said multinationals, but he could have said other companies, Canadian companies, independent companies and so forth—might not want to do the work and might want to delay it. I think that is a ridiculous argument. In the first place, those companies which are in the Northwest Territories, the Yukon or on the ocean to the north have every incentive to stay there. They are the ones which have put in their hard earned cash to be up there, and they are not going to pull out and head for Saudi Arabia simply because we have cold winters in the north. This clause is not a safeguard at all. It is ridiculous to say that the minister is given this power in Clause 35(1) to safeguard the interests of Canadians. That is not correct.

Let me just deal with one or two cases. The hon. member for Algoma, who is a Liberal, said that in some cases private enterprise feels no responsibility to Canada and that therefore this ia a good safeguard. I do not go along with that at all. Small, independent Canadian companies such as the one mentioned yesterday by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) have spent a lot of money up there and, after spending all that money, they found some gas and capped the wells while waiting for the day when there will be a pipeline. To say that such a company has no interest in Canada and has no responsibility to Canada is completely ridiculous. We do not need a clause like Clause 35(1) to encourage such enterprise. It does not encourage, it discourages. Let me read what it says:

> The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources may, by order subject to section 56, direct that any designated Crown corporation that holds a Crown share transfered to it under section 31 shall be the operator with respect to the relevant interest.

In other words, the minister can designate Petro-Canada to go in and reap all the rewards of the work done by a small, independent company. That is not my idea of fair competition.

Let us look at something else in relation to this same item. Hon. members talk about the advantages and disadvantages of Petro-Canada. I emphasize that we want Petro-Canada to have a fair chance. We want its stations to have a fair chance, but we do not want favouritism given to them. Let us look at how these stations came into being in the first place. Petrofina was purchased with 1.4 billion of Canadians' dollars, far in excess of the proper price. Canadians were stung in the first instance by Petro-Canada's making a bad deal in purchasing this company. Petro-Canada paid twice as much for it as it should have.

• (1550)

When we look at the profits of Petrofina over the last few years, if my memory is correct, Petrofina made $24 million in 1979. In 1980 the profit figure rose to about $80 million. In 1981 it appears the profit will be less than the $24 million the company made in 1979. If PetroCan had been businesslike, it could have taken the $1.46 billion, which it did not have and that it is now taking out of people's pockets through the gasoline price at the pumps, and invested it at the very lowest interest offered by the banks today. This would have secured more than $20 million for the people of Canada.

If Petro-Canada is interested in helping the people of Canada, why did that company pay off the Belgian debt with Canadian money? That is just about what has happened. The company was not showing interest in the welfare of Canadians by buying Petrofina. We object to this type of thing very strongly. We object when people start saying that everything is so wonderful about Petro-Canada. We want Petro-Canada to have a fair deal, but we want that company to be fair with the people too. Why did not Petro-Canada buy Petrofina in the ordinary way? Why did not Petro-Canada get the money and then buy Petrofina through its profits? Petro-Canada decided to do it the other way, and now the Canadian people pay an extra 3.6 cents on every gallon of gasoline purchased. The $1.46 billion paid to take over Petrofina will be raised by the 3.6 cents paid on every gallon of gasoline. No matter where people buy gasoline, whether from an Esso station, a Gulf station, a Phillips station, a PetroCan station, or any other station in Canada, we will all be paying this Crown corporation so that PetroCan can own Petrofina stations.

People should remember when they buy their gas at the pump that they are paying an extra 3.6 cents on every gallon for the purchase of Petrofina. For example, if a person purchases 500 gallons or 1,000 gallons of gasoline a year they are also paying 500 or 1,000 times 3.6 cents extra a year. People should not have to pay this extra amount, but the Canadian government permitted PetroCan to buy Petrofina and allowed PetroCan to pay for it by charging every Canadian at the gas pump. This did not bring one additional gallon of gas into our objective of oil self-sufficiency by 1990 or any other year. Simply a line of gasoline stations was purchased. The government is charging every Canadian for this purchase, and it is a taxation which is completely unfair.

Contrary to what the hon. minister has said in this House, Canadians are not happy with this purchase at all. One out of every 100 Canadians will tell you that he is not happy about paying an additional 3.6 cents on every gallon of gasoline so that PetroCan can own Petrofina. If Petro-Canada wanted to buy Petrofina, Petro-Canada should have done it the regular way. Petro-Canada should not have used dollars in the pockets of ordinary people, many of whom cannot afford it.

Some hon. Members: Ah!

Mr. Taylor: Do hon. members realize when they say "ah" there are many Canadians today who use their cars to get to work, perhaps to take their wife to work and their youngsters to school? On every gallon of gasoline they purchase, they are paying an extra 3.6 cents so that we can have more Petro-Canada service stations. It will be more than that before this whole thing is over. Liberal members try to justify this to the people of Canada.

I just want to deal with one aspect. This clause gives us the opportunity to show exactly what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is doing. When we give him power like this, he can simply direct a Canadian corporation to do a job, and it does not matter how much money a small Canadian company on the spot has spent in finding oil or gas. The minister can designate Petro-Canada to skim off all the cream and all of the profits. This is not right, nor is it a safeguard for Canadians. It is simply another totalitarian act by a minister who is telling one company that it will be favoured. This has already happened. That company has already been given 136 million acres.

We talk about competition. There is all kinds of room for competition in the north, but there is no competition under this act. Everything favours one particular company. That favouritism will be to the detriment of Canada. It will discourage investment. It will discourage investment by many people when they get that kind of a deal in the north.

We are talking about the price of gas in Canada today. This is very relevant. When the Liberals were returned to power in 1980 they promised that gas prices would not rise, that they would stay lower than 18 cents. Look at what has happened. Since the Liberals were returned to power in February, 1980, gas prices have risen about 8 cents a litre, or 36 cents a gallon. Liberals campaigned, particularly around Ontario and Quebec, by telling people how bad it would be for Canadians to pay an extra 18 cents a gallon. The PC government was being honest with the people. The country needed the money. We wanted to start paying our way.

That is not the story the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and others told in Ontario. They said things such as: "We will not charge you as much as those terrible Tories." That is the story the Liberals told.

But the record tells the real story. Let us take a look at it. On August 1, 1980, oil prices rose by $2 a barrel, causing consumer prices to rise by 7.2 cents a gallon on October 1, 1980. On November 1, 1980, petroleum product prices increased by about six tenths of a cent a litre, or 2.7 cents a gallon, because of an oil import compensation tax of 80 cents on each barrel of oil. The import tax was announced on October 28 as a means of getting consumers to start covering the cost of subsidizing eastern Canadian refiners for the difference between the domestic and foreign price of oil. This was an additional 2.7 cents a gallon.

I was amazed this afternoon when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in answer to a question from this side, said that the Tories were asking for higher prices for Canadians. We were asking for a fair price for Canadians comparable to what we were paying foreign importers. That is all we have ever asked.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: It was not right at all. I defy anyone to say that it was right. I defy anyone to honestly say that it was right for Canada to be paying $45 and $50 a barrel for Mexican and Iranian oil and only $18 a barrel for oil produced in our own country. There is no logic in that. Canadians right across Canada paid because the federal government took so long to come to its senses and enter into an agreement with the province of Alberta.

On January 1, 1981, the import compensation tax increased by $2.50 a barrel, adding another 9 cents a gallon to prices. On March 1, 1981, prices increased by 3.6 cents a gallon as a result of a $1 increase in the wellhead price of oil on January 1 imposed by the federal government. On March 2, 1981, prices again increased 2.25 cents a gallon because of a special federal tax on consumption to pay for imported oil needed to replace cuts in Alberta production of 60,000 barrels a day. Again, the person buying gas at the pump is paying right through the nose. Prices increased again by 3.6 cents a gallon to help finance the $1.46 billion takeover of Petrofina by Petro-Canada. Another 3.6 cents was added to the cost of our gas.

I do not know how the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Prime Minister can still stand up and say to the people of Canada that they kept their promises. Just look at the record, it tells the story.

• (1600)

On June 3 federal tax increases totalled 1.6 cents a litre, or 7.2 cents a gallon, imposed to cover oil import costs. In addition there was a second cut in Alberta production of 60,000 barrels a day. Federal officials said that those increases, combined with federal and provincial sales taxes, resulted in a retail price jump of about 2 cents a litre, or 9 cents a gallon, on gasoline and diesel fuel. This is an increase in cost even to the farmer about whom the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) had so much to say the other day when some of our members were speaking about helping the agriculture industry. He said it all while sitting down. He did not say how much farmers are being charged for their diesel oil and for fertilizers, thereby increasing the cost of production while reducing the amount of food that can be produced in this country. There was a further increase of $1 in the wellhead price of oil on July 1.

Canadians have been lied to, promised to, and otherwise misled by the Right Hon. Prime Minister and the energy minister, the Hon. Marc Lalonde, in a cynical way. Our gasoline is still cheap compared to European prices, yes, but what is the future to bring? We are no closer to a coherent energy policy in 1981 than we were ten years ago in 1971. As a matter of fact, we are further away. While prices may still be affordable, that could change overnight with Ottawa's continuing fight with the provinces; and while they continue to tell us they want to give us a better and lower price, they continually increase it.

This clause of the bill—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Taylor: This clause should be thrown out.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure why under a motion which pertains to one aspect of Bill C-48 which will govern future exploration and development in Canada lands we need to listen to the sort of groundless allegations we have just heard. I was wondering in particular about the language of the member opposite when he alleged that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) lie. I do not know that that is parliamentary language. I am surprised that with his legislative experience he engages in such statements.

However, in order to set the record straight, since the member appears to want to embark upon this sort of discussion under this item, the fact is that during the last election campaign the Liberal party undertook four commitments with regard to oil pricing in Canada. The Liberal party undertook that there would be no 18-cent excise tax on a gallon of gasoline. Secondly, a commitment was made that the increase in the wellhead price of oil would be under $4 in 1980. It undertook further that over a four-year period the cost to consumers would be less than it would have been under the Conservative budget. The fourth commitment was that there would be a made-in-Canada blended price schedule which would include conventional oil, import charges and frontier oil, with no direct link to actual world prices.

On all four of those commitments the Liberal government has delivered. We have not imposed an 18-cent excise tax on gasoline. Under the agreement with Alberta the wellhead price of crude oil will be $41.75 a barrel in 1984. Under the Conservative budget it would have been $53.70 in 1984.

The comparative prices of heating oil are 46 cents under the agreement with Alberta and 58 cents a litre in 1984. The comparative prices of gasoline are 59 cents and 68 cents a litre. The comparative prices of natural gas are $7.87 and $11 per thousand cubic feet in 1984.

Accordingly, over a four-year period the average family expenditure for oil products will be approximately $550 less under the Alberta-Federal agreement than it would have been under the Conservative budget, even allowing for the proposed Conservative income-tested consumer energy tax credit.

I would want to underline for the benefit of the hon. member opposite that under the Canada-Alberta energy agreement reached at the end of August the refinery cost of crude oil at Toronto by 1984 will be $52.14 per barrel. The Conservative budget would have resulted in a price of $58.11, under even a moderate international price increase projection.

The gasoline price in Toronto in 1984 would be in the range of 62 cents to 66 cents a litre, with this range taking into account possible international price trend variations. The Conservative budget price would have been in the range of 73 cents to 86 cents, or an average of 25 per cent higher.

Heating oil prices in Toronto in 1984 are projected in the range of 43 cents to 46 cents a litre. The Conservative budget would have resulted in prices of 48 cents to 58 cents, or an average of 19 per cent higher.

Finally, natural gas prices in 1984 will be in the range of $7.87 to $8.41 per thousand cubic feet. Under the Conservative budget they would have been $11 to $13.66, or an average of 51 per cent higher. Natural gas prices, I might add, will be about 65 per cent of Canadian oil prices, whereas under the Conservative budget the ratio would have been 85 per cent and there would have been a direct link with international prices. I am surprised that members opposite have not understood their own budget projections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 27 in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House may now wish to consider Motion No. 28.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved:

Motion No. 28

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 36 by striking out lines 35 to 45 at page 21 and substituting the following therefor:

"36.(1) Her Majesty in right of Canada or any Crown corporation to which the Crown share may be transferred, is liable to a maximum of the product of fifty percent of expenses incurred by an exploration agreement holder prior to a declaration of commercial discovery on any relevant Canada lands multiplied by the percentage of the Crown share as determined in Section 27."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

● (1610)

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 29

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada Lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 40 by striking out line 38 at page 23 and substituting the following therefor:

"Canada, a basic royalty of twenty per cent of the".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this motion. What this motion does is to change the royalty structure, raising it from 10 per cent to 20 per cent. It, in effect, doubles the royalties.

This motion should be read along with Motion No. 30, which strikes out a clause that allows the companies to deduct the basic royalty plus the petroleum gas revenue tax, the PGRT, which is now 12 per cent. This motion should also be read along with Motion No. 31 which would take out the three-year holiday tax exemption.

I will be making some detailed points on this motion because it is a very complicated area. It will be necessary to give statistics and facts because these are necessary to back up the argument. My main point is that this royalty is low compared to those in other foreign jurisdictions.

First, I will talk about the progressive incremental royalty, the PIR. The way the royatly regime works in this bill is that there is a 10 per cent royalty, and when a certain income is brought in by the producing wells, the PIR comes into effect. My basic point is that the PIR is ineffective, and since it is ineffective, the basic royalty of 10 per cent, which is a low royalty compared to other jurisdictions both in Canada's provinces and abroad, is too low. That is the gist of my argument and I think it can be effectively proven.

The first part of my argument is that the royalty is low compared with other foreign jurisdictions. When we sat through the long hearings of the energy committee of the House of Commons, we heard testimony from officials of Petro-Canada, as well as officials of Statoil in Norway and other officials, about the regime in the United Kingdom and other places.

Mr. Robert Meneley, vice-president of Petro-Canada, told the committee that the land tenure and rent collection regimes proposed by Bill C-48 are less onerous than those applied elsewhere. The statement which I made that they are less onerous is not just my particular isolated opinion. This was also stated before the committee by the vice-president of Petro-Canada, Mr. Meneley, who I am told has a great deal of experience in this area. He said that Petro-Canada developed a model of the economics of developing a field similar to the recent Hibernia discovery at a wellhead price of $41 a barrel. That is the current price received in Norway and the United Kingdom and will be approximately the price which Hibernia will come in at when it reaches the production stage in a few years. As a matter of fact, that would be the low end price. It could be higher.

Mr. Meneley of Petro-Canada developed a scheme whereby they compared profits on Canada lands under this bill to those in the United Kingdom and Norway. In a company that had a 75 per cent to 100 per cent Canadian ownership rate, he estimated that the profit over a certain period would be in the realm of $1,973 million which, of course, is almost $2 billion. Under their regime, that profit picture in the United Kingdom would only be $422 million. In Norway it would be $3.6 million.

The after tax rate of return, using these particular figures, would be 31.3 per cent in Canada lands under this bill. In the United Kingdom it would be 21.9 per cent and in Norway it would be 20 per cent. The total tax allocation from the $41 price in Canada lands was $17.88. In the United Kingdom it was $21.72 and in Norway it was $22.55. With respect to company cash flow, for Canada lands it is $4.83. In the United Kingdom it is $1.04 and for Norway it is 10 cents. The capital operating cost in Canada lands would be $18.29. In the United Kingdom it would be $18.24 and in Norway $18.35.

Here is what Mr. McNicholas, who is the manager of economic and public policy for Petro-Canada, said to the committee in a letter dated March 21, 1981. In that letter to the committee chairman, the hon. member for Châteauguay (Mr. Watson), Mr. McNicholas said:

> It is clear from the above analysis that the development of a field like Hibernia yields higher present value returns and comparably higher rates of return on capital invested in Canada under NEP rules than in the U.K. or in Norway.

The point which our party made in the committee hearings and in the House is that if ther multinational oil companies will accept a tougher tax regime elsewhere, they should be prepared to accept at least the same in Canada. I put that argument to the friends of the multinational oil companies, the Conservative Party. I asked them to tell me why the multinational oil companies can operate in the United Kingdom and Norway under a much tougher regime and why they are squealing, through their friends in the Conservative Party, about the royalty and taxation rates in this particular regime. The Liberal Party are still being overly generous, in our view, in bringing in this regime. That is why I am moving these particular amendments on royalties.

I have said that the royalties were different in other jurisdictions and other countries. I would like to give some evidence of that. Under the old regime in Canada, before this bill, the royalties were 5 per cent to 10 per cent, depending on the location and licence. Under Bill C-48 there is a 10 per cent basic royalty. In Alberta, under old oil, pre-1974, the maximum royalty was 50 per cent. Under new oil, the maximum was 36 per cent. In British Columbia the royalty under old oil, pre-1975, was a maximum of 40 per cent. Under new oil it was a maximum of 30 per cent. In Saskatchewan, under old oil, pre-1974, the royalty was 61 per cent, and under new oil it was 43 per cent. Even in the producing provinces of Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, the royalties are higher than they are in this bill.

Sometimes I like to try to make arguments on both sides of an issue. Therefore, I will back off a little bit and make the argument for the government. It will say that I was not quite right because there is the basic 10 per cent royalty. But there is a thing called the PIR, progressive incremental royalty, on top of it, and if I combine the basic royalty with the PIR, I have a regime that is as tough as they are in some of these other countries. That is fine but there is a flaw in that. The flaw is that the PIR is ineffective. If it is ineffective, it leaves the basic royalty too low.

I would like to explain to the House and the hordes in the gallery who are following my every word on the subject of PIR what PIR means. If I am going slow on this subject, you will know I have had to learn it all myself.

• (1620)

Mr. Cullen: Have you learned it well?

Mr. Waddell: I think I have. This is why the government wants a progressive incremental royalty. They are free to tell me where I have gone wrong. The government wants to avoid the heavy front end load costs with the traditional system, imposed by a straight percentage take of wellhead prices; in other words, the cost at the beginning. It wants the royalty to come later.

The government wants to reduce what is called in the industry gold plating. That does not mean putting gold on plates. We must understand that the oil and gas industry has a different vocabulary. For example, you do not measure an oil tanker in metres or yards, but by football fields. The large tankers that will be going through the Northwest Passage in a few years, if the Arctic system comes about, are said to be three football fields. Whether that is American or Canadian football fields depends on where you are.

Mr. Siddon: What does that have to do with gold plating?

Mr. Waddell: It has to do with the fact that the industry uses different words and measurements. If the hon. member listens, he will understand what gold plating is. It is an attempt by the industry to overspend in its capital expenditures in order to reduce its tax payable. It is plating with extra gold or money at the capital expenditure stage so that it will not have to pay any taxes. If the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) had been at the committee meeting, he would have understood what gold plating is and not have to ask the question. I suggest he looks at committee Minutes No. 24, pages 8 and 9, where he will learn all he wants to know about gold plating.

The progressive incremental royalty will reduce gold plating. It is a progressive levy applied to profits after the government has collected the 10 per cent basic royalty, the 12 per cent petroleum gas revenue tax and income tax. That is really what a PIR is. There is the basic royalty of 10 per cent, 12 per cent PGRT and income tax. The progressive incremental royalty is supposed to recoup surplus profits. The PIR rate is nominally 40 per cent but in reality is less than 5 per cent of a very much reduced taxable level of profit.

In theory the PIR is good. It is a kind of surplus profit tax which comes on after the other royalties and taxes have been applied. The problem is that in practice it does not work. The progressive incremental royalty only comes into effect when the profit ratio, that is the ratio of annual profits to cumulative depreciated development investment, is 25 per cent or higher. Profits are defined for this purpose as revenues less operating expenses, capital allowance—that is, the write-off of capital investment in six years—federal royalties, federal income tax abatement and 25 per cent of total eligible investment. In other words, the PIR only comes into effect when the profit ratio is 25 per cent or higher. An accountant working in this field would calculate it by calculating 25 per cent of the depreciated investment and then imposing the progressive incremental royalty on the excess. The problem is that if you work out the calculation, you find that the likelihood of the progressive incremental royalty ever reaching 40 per cent as stated in the bill is almost nil.

Let me give an example. You need a profit ratio of 65 to get a PIR rate of 25. You need a tremendous profit ratio to get up to a PIR level of 40. I do not think that will happen.

I wish to refer to the petroleum monitoring agency. I have been listening very closely to what my friends on my right have said over the past four or five days as they ranted and raved. They in turn accused us of ranting and raving and shouting out opinions unsubstantiated. Therefore, I am being very careful in making my point. I see the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) following with the closest of attention. He is a good boy scout, the top boy scout in Alberta. I see him following these figures like a boy scout.

I am not just shooting these figures from the hip. I am referring to the government's own monitoring survey of 1980 which shows that in the total petroleum industry in 1979, the net cash percentage rate of return on capital employed was 19.4 per cent. I have to explain what net cash is. Net cash is defined as cash flow, less depreciation, amortization and depletion; or, alternatively, after-tax income plus exploration and development investment expense and deferred income tax. That is a mouthful. The point to remember is that cash flow or the net cash percentage rate was just less than 20 per cent. That means a very much reduced progressive incremental royalty.

My point is that the progressive incremental royalty only kicks in at a 26 per cent rate of return. I do not think we are likely to see that kind of rate of return. Therefore, the progressive incremental royalty is ineffective. If that is the case, the basic royalty of 10 per cent is too low. It was put too low in the first place because money was to be made up later by the application of the progressive incremental royalty. That is why it was only 10 per cent and not higher in Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Norway, Britain, Australia and other places. It is in fact low. My submission is that it is too low. That is why my motion states that it should go from 10 to 20 per cent.

No doubt after that explanation members on all sides of this House will rush to support my amendment.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: At least one member will support it.

The bill also provides for a three-year royalty holiday. That may be amended; I notice there is a government motion to change that. It could even be extended. My friends in the Conservative Party have an amendment to extend it, and I think the minister has one as well. If those amendments are in and there is a three-year royalty holiday under the progressive incremental royalty, if oil is discovered prior to December 31, 1982, the company can choose the three years. It can choose when its profit is projected to be the highest.

A lot of my constituents, old people, working people, bus drivers, janitors, the ordinary working people of Canada which the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) so eloquently referred to the other day, would like a three-year tax holiday. We seem to reserve these three-year tax holidays for the biggest and the richest companies in the world. That is what we are doing right here. We give them again a three-year tax holiday and we are back into the same old system of sucking up to the oil companies in order, we hope, to find oil in an area. It is as if it were some great gamble. I would like to go to Las Vegas or Reno and gamble and have the government pay over 100 per cent of the money I put down. I do not call that a gamble. There is no gamble up there either, not with these kinds of tax royalties and subsidies we are giving these companies.

● (1630)

Under the old tax system the government's share of the profits was in excess of 65 per cent. If you look at the Minutes, Mr. Speaker, No. 24 and No. 24(a) of the resources committee, the energy committee of the House of Commons, at page 19, that is set out.

Under the new system the total government take, to my calculation, is normally only 45 to 50 per cent: this includes the royalty, the income tax, the new 12 per cent PGR tax and the PIR, the progressive incremental royalty. This is not as harsh a system as one would think. In fact, in many ways this is an easier tax system than the old system which speakers for the government party have said time and time again was an inadequate system, and that is why they were introducing a bill to change it. So, what have they done? With respect to the taxation part of the bill they have taken an inadequate system and made it even more inadequate.

One billion barrels—we have to speak of barrels now; we do not speak of gallons or litres in the oil business—from an Arctic oil field would pay 13 to 16 per cent of the net operating income in PIR and 12 per cent in PGRT. Under the old system of corridor taxation which the PIR replaces, the companies would pay 20 to 25 per cent. Where there are cost overruns the PIR is nil. Again it seems to me, if you were to look at it from that point of view, the taxation system is even more inadequate than the older system.

In testimony before the committee, Mr. Speaker, the highest example of a PIR take of wellhead income was 20 per cent, according to calculations provided by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources officials on possible oil production scenarios. One has to remember, Mr. Speaker, that the profit level at which the PIR is calculated is reduced by a series of deductions that I mentioned earlier. The producer recovers, in most cases, about 150 to 175 per cent of his development cost before the PIR is payable.

It seems to me then, Mr. Speaker, that it can be shown that the progressive incremental royalty, the PIR, is not a significant generator of revenue for the federal treasury when you compare it with a basic royalty and income tax. Therefore, if that is not true, the government should not put its faith in collecting revenue on the PIR. It would be much better to increase the basic rate of royalty. Hence, we propose an increase of 10 to 20 per cent on the basic royalty.

Examples have been provided by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources officials. I might say I have heard a lot of attacks on those officials, and I will say publicly in the House, Mr. Speaker, that I think they have done a consistently good job in being as fair and straightforward as possible with the committee. Because the Conservatives do not like the oil deal with Alberta, they should not attack Ed Clark. If they do not like the national energy policy, do not wave around Ed Clark's Ph.D. thesis on Tanzania, as an hon. member from the Conservative party did the other day. Surely that is a new low. If they want to argue, let us argue and have statistics and logic in the arguments. Let us not wave around someone's Ph.D. thesis. I hate to think what the Ph.D. thesis was of the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan). I would not want to wave that around anywhere!

An hon. Member: Law and morality!

Mr. Waddell: Law and morality. I know the hon. member from Saskatoon behind me would like to comment on that! However, this is a debate on progressive incremental royalty, not on foreign affairs.

In examples provided by the officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to the committee, under the new tax regime in Bill C-48 the net cash to companies range from a low of 35 per cent to a high of 56 per cent, while the government's take ranges from 44 per cent to 65 per cent, with the norm averaging about 50 per cent.

One might say to me, Mr. Speaker, why not just scrap the progressive incremental royalty. I say no, we should keep it. Even though it is ineffectual in terms of raising revenue for the government, we could leave it in place to prevent gold plating and to recoup some excessive profits in very highly profitable wells. We would keep it for that purpose but not rely upon it for revenue; instead we propose to double the fixed or basic royalty, as I have said, from 10 to 20 per cent of the oil and gas produced.

I want to set out some arguments for doubling that basic royalty. The first one is that the progressive incremental royalty is not a 40 per cent royalty but a tax normally of 2 to 5 per cent of net profit. As I have said, net profits are the total income less basic royalty, operating expenses, federal income tax, 25 per cent of investment costs, investment costs being the exploration and development costs.

The rate of tax and the base on which the tax is applied is extremely low. For example, if you were to take an Arctic oil well of one billion barrels, say at $30 a barrel, that would mean $106 million PIR and $357 million basic royalty. If you look at the committee Minutes No. 25, page A-11, you will see that set out. These are basically pretty low royalties compared to the fantastic return for a field of a billion barrels. One can imagine the revenue from the wells.

Raising the royalty, as we in the NDP have suggested in this motion to 20 per cent is still competitive with other jurisdictions. In the United States, that big tax haven of Reaganomics, even in the Big Bermuda, there is a 16 2/3 per cent basic royalty in U.S. offshore. That is 6 2/3 per cent higher than the royalty proposed in this bill.

In Norway there is a 16 per cent royalty. In Alaska there is a 20 per cent royalty. In Alberta there is a 31 to 36 per cent royalty. The tax breaks and grants introduced in Bill C-48 propose, for example, a minimum of 25 per cent and a maximum of 80 per cent of exploration costs that you may receive as a grant, and you can receive a maximum of 20 per cent for development cost on Canada lands.

These kinds of corporate giveaways are not available in other jurisdictions, even though the other jurisdictions have royalty rates at 16, 17, 20 and 30 per cent. We have a royalty rate of 10 per cent—this is my point—and we are still giving grants and tax concessions.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the oil companies are operating in the North Sea under tax regimes that are more onerous than those proposed in Bill C-48. Norway's oil tax ranges as high as 86 per cent; Britain's is 60 per cent with government take as high as 90 per cent. I am not just talking about some sort of crazy socialist regime that no one can live with, which is what my friends on my right would say. I am talking about a regime that makes a lot of sense, especially since there are more onerous regimes in Norway and in Britain in the North Sea. Prices in Canada are going to be basically world prices.

● (1640)

The argument of the oil companies and of hon. members to my right as spokesmen for the oil companies before committee was that the jurisdictions cannot be compared because there was no set price regime. We have a price regime; we will have world prices. It seems to me that it is very important to compare Norway and United Kingdom exploration in the North Sea with the regime in Canada. Our 20 per cent royalty would restore the take of the government to its traditional level under the old taxation regime. Under the new regime, the lower progressive incremental royalty replaces the corridor tax of 20 to 25 per cent of gross income.

I have made this point before. The new regime is less onerous than the older one in terms of taxes. It is more onerous in terms of getting on with wells, the Petro-Canada back-in, the length of leases, the speed up of development and so on, but it is less onerous in the sense that it could mean a lower take by the government. I make this point again because it was lost on my Conservative friends in their speeches the other day.

Canadians have paid dearly in tax concessions to the oil companies in the past, ranging as high as $1.23 on every dollar spent by companies in the Canada lands and approximately 63 cents on every dollar spent in exploration on provincial lands.

I heard the arguments in favour of capitalism the other day. I listened to the arguments but I do not see any capitalism.

Mr. Siddon: Why not cut the grants off? You guys started them in the first place.

Mr. Waddell: I would not cut the grants off. If we are to pay 93 cents on every dollar, I would add another seven cents and have Petro-Canada do it for the Canadian people. This seems to make sense.

Mr. Andre: That is because you live in Vancouver where it is warm in the winter. If you lived in a cold area you would not say that.

Mr. Waddell: If the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) wishes to give a speech, perhaps he could seek the floor and make it like every other member and show a little respect for the House. Since becoming energy critic he has managed to take the Conservative Party right back to the old days of opposing Petro-Canada. This is something the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), the previous energy critic, tried to steer that party away from and into a more middle course. Now we are back to the dinosaur days of the old Conservative Party.

Be that as it may, tax concessions and write-offs have brought the phenomenal federal income tax rate down from 36 per cent to an effective rate of only 10 per cent since 1974. I referred to page 12 of the National Energy Program for those particular statistics. It is time that taxpayers receive a fair share for their investment in the resource potential of federal lands, especially since under the new NEP grant system they will be funding up to 80 per cent of the cost through grants and up to 93 cents on every company dollar spent on exploration investment. This is set out on page 93 of the NEP. This was admitted by the parliamentary secretary and by the minister in this debate. The basic royalty does not permit itself to reduce by tax deductions or write-offs as does the PIR.

Finally, corporate profits after tax increased by 54 per cent in 1979 to $4.7 billion. They were up another 54 per cent for the first six months of 1980. This is set out in the government's petroleum monitoring survey published in 1980. The tax regime of Bill C-48, even coupled with the budget's new 12 per cent petroleum and gas revenue tax which is loathed by the industry, would lower the government's take from over 60 per cent to 45 per cent of oil and gas revenues on Canada lands. Given those immense profits, the industry can afford to pay a 25 per cent royalty.

In conclusion, I should like to indicate once again why this corner is opposed to Bill C-48. The first reason is that there are enormous tax giveaways in the bill. I have outlined in detail—and I am sure it was in more detail than any member of the House really wanted to hear—that the royalty was very low and that there were tremendous giveaways in terms of grants and tax write-offs. I felt it was necessary to do that, because we must remember that it is the ordinary people of Canada who are giving away these grants and revenue, it is coming out of their pockets.

Second, we oppose the bill because the Canadianization in it is very phony. It simply replaces the big boys, the Rockefellers and the Mellons of the United States oil industry, with the Blairs and the Blacks of the Canadian industry. I am surprised my Conservative friends have not picked up this fact. There is a little conspiracy going on in the finest sense of the term between the Nova Corporation and Dome Petroleum. They will really benefit from the National Energy Program and from Canadianization; it will not be ordinary people. Perhaps some of their shareholders will benefit, but it will be a very small percentage of people compared with Canadians as a whole. The American companies are losing, I admit that. They are feeling a tax bite now, but if they wait a few years they will be okay because oil prices will shoot up by 1983. A few large Canadian companies are really benefiting from this phony Canadianization. My friends to the right may criticize us, myself in particular, but I think our position is quite clear. We are not hiding behind phony Canadianization. We want a greater degree of public ownership in the industry. That is how we would make do with Canadianization.

Since the NEP came in, the government and private companies have spent something like $6.8 billion to take over foreign-owned companies. This has changed the rate of Canadian ownership in the industry from 30 to 35 per cent. With this kind of rate we will need another $15 billion or so to attain the 50 per cent level. There is an easier way to do it. We could simply pass an act in the House to take over Imperial Oil at a price ranging anywhere from $5 billion to $7 billion. This would be a fair market price for the company and we would have 50 per cent the next week. I see the minister sitting opposite. I have suggested this to him, but the government will not do it because it has a nice little deal with Dome and Nova. That is the way it wants to go. It thinks it has those companies in its pockets. The minister may be surprised; perhaps those companies have the minister in their pockets. This is another reason we oppose Bill C-48.

I am not sure how much time I have remaining.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Waddell: I thank the House, I am sure hon. members have been listening closely to my discussion on progressive incremental royalties. In conclusion, I say that I object to the Canadianization provision, to the poor environmental protections in the bill, and to the sell-out of native people which appears to have happened in the Constitution as well today.

Finally, I invite hon. members to rise with facts and figures. They should not call me names. If they want to rise, it is fine with me. They should stand up and give me some facts and figures to prove why my facts and figures are wrong, and why my point is not correct. That point is that the progressive incremental royalty system is ineffective and therefore the basic royalty is too low. In this motion we have proposed to change the basic royalty from 10 per cent to 20 per cent and we believe that it should be adopted.

• (1650)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on Motion No. 29 (Mr. Waddell). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Cullen: On division.

Motion negatived on division.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 30

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 41 by striking out lines 17 to 21 at page 27.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I know everybody wants me to repeat that long speech!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Motions No. 30 and No. 31 are grouped for debate but will be voted upon separately. The question is therefore also on Motion No. 31.

Mr. Andre: And Motions Nos. 32 and 33, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Motion No. 32 is grouped for debate also, as is Motion No. 33.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 31

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 41 by striking out lines 6 to 17 at page 33.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved:

Motion No. 32

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 41 by striking out lines 8 to 12 at page 33 and substituting the following therefor:

"licence is made on or before December 31, 1982, the interest owner of the".

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

Motion No. 33

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 41 by striking out lines 9 to 12 at page 33 and substituting the following therefor:

"drilling was commenced before February 2, 1981 and that qualified to be declared a significant discovery before January 1, 1983, the interest owner of the".

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if you could clarify something for me. I understood Motions Nos. 30, 31, 32 and 33 were grouped for debate but would be voted upon separately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): That is quite correct. They are grouped for debate and will be voted on separately.

Mr. Waddell: I wonder if you could indicate which ones you have called so far.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Motions Nos. 31, 32 and 33.

Mr. Waddell: Which one are you calling at the moment?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The four are grouped for debate now.

The question is on Motion No. 30 (Mr. Waddell). Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In accordance with Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is now on Motion No. 31 (Mr. Waddell). All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 32 (Mr. Wilson). All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion negatived on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on Motion No. 33 (Mr. Lalonde). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved:

Motion No. 35

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 49 by adding immediately after the heading "Environmental Studies Revolving Fund" at page 39 the following:

"49. For the purposes of this section, "Minister" means the Ministre of the Environment."

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that we spend a short time dealing with Motion No. 35, put forward by this party in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). It is important to realize the basic purpose of the proposed motion, which is to ensure that the very important uses to which the environmental studies revolving fund is put are placed under the prime jurisdiction of a minister who is responsible for environmental matters in this Parliament, that being the incumbent Minister of the Environment.

There are a number of ancillary aspects to this question which arose out of the many briefs presented to the standing committee over several months of hearings in the early part of this year. These relate to the question of the conflict of interest which the incumbent ministers of energy, mines and resources and Indian affairs and northern development might be placed in if acting as the agent who is granted the discretion to issue licences to the proponent companies seeking to pursue exploration and production initiatives on the Canada lands, at the same time as being charged with the responsibility of deciding what environmental studies ought to be initiated under the provisions of, and with the benefit of the funding provided in, Clause 49.

In addition, as will become clear when we deal with Motions Nos. 36, 37, 38 and 39, it is very important that a ceiling be established on the environmental studies revolving fund. It should not merely be allowed to operate at or around the $10 million or $15 million point; a limit should be put on the amount of money that can be spent on environmental studies in a given year. There should also be a requirement that when environmental studies are bought and paid for by the industries that contribute to the fund, the resulting reports will be presented publicly to all interested parties and that financial disbursements from the fund as well as actual studies that are initiated using the resources of the fund be reported to Parliament and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry for debate.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

• (1700)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being five o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Administration of justice—Review of mandatory supervision policy. (b) Operation of system; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Human rights—Reported plan to establish civilian internment camps. (b) Terms of Standing Order published in The Canada Gazette; the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—Health—Marketing of baby food by Dumex Company. (b) Query respecting federal-provincial action.

[English]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions, (papers), private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Items Nos. 22, 35, 1, 48, 28, 43 and 5 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO PROHIBIT RIGHT TO STRIKE

Mr. John Gamble (York North) moved that Bill C-251, to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act (prohibiting right to strike), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this day may not go down in the annals of this House as the day when Bill C-251 was introduced for second reading and committee reference.

Mr. MacLaren: A very reasonable assumption.

Mr. Gamble: However, despite the catcalls from one of our colleages on the other side of the House, permit me, at a time when a significant development has occurred in the country, to depart from the matter before us for just a moment to congratulate the first ministers of Canada who have today, apparently, with but one exception, come to an accord with respect to the Constitution of Canada reserving, of course, unto myself the right, after an examination of the proposed changes in the resolution now currently before this House, to determine whether those amendments indeed deserve the approval of all hon. members, including myself.

While this day, as I have indicated, may not be very significant to hon. members in measuring days of glory, I think it goes without saying that this bill does, however, touch many of the citizens of Canada with respect to an issue in connection with which they have expressed their views on numerous occasions, both to us individually and to the government generally, without appropriate response.

The bill itself in an uncomplicated fashion would add to Section 79(1) of the Public Service Staff Relations Act the words "convenience, mobility or economic wellbeing of the public", which would require, as a consequence of those additional words, the potential designation as designated employees who cannot strike in the public service, pursuant to the provisions of Section 101(1) of the act, employees who render services which, if withdrawn, would affect the convenience, mobility or economic wellbeing of Canadians. Those additional words follow the words "safety, security," which now alone may be relied upon to categorize a group of employees as being among a designated group of public servants which does not enjoy the right to strike.

As the House will know, this bill was drafted at a time when one of the major groups of employees covered by the act sought to be amended included employees of the Post Office, now the Canada Post Corporation. The Canada Post Corporation Act, by Royal Assent on April 23, 1981, and by proclamation on October 16, 1981, transferred out of the category of public servants covered under the Public Service Staff Relations Act some 43,000 public servants rendering service to the public in the postal field.

I might say that the majority of the concerns which have been expressed to me, motivating in large measure my action in this regard, arose as a consequence of the disruption of service in the Post Office. I might say that with respect to that matter, in a speech which I delivered in this House on April 9, 1981, which is to be found in the Hansard for that day, I specifically made reference to the omission in the Canada Post Corporation bill then before the House of a referencce to a prohibition against the right to strike, recognizing that in deleting this group of public servants from the provisions of the act that I sought to amend and the act I hope to amend today there would be a detrimental effect on the over-all objectives of the bill.

How did I come to deal with this matter in this fashion? It was as a consequence of recognizing an obligation which, I believe, all members have and all members, if they reflect upon it, should discharge for the benefit of their constituents. My obligation as a Member of Parliament is to reflect here the views of those who sent me here, and those views are very clear. They are unequivocal.

I had occasion when first elected to dispatch to my constituents a form of questionnaire covering a number of topics of concern which had been expressed to me at the time of the 1979 election campaign, and I accordingly responded to those concerns by canvassing my constituents. Among the questions I asked was the following: "Should federal civil servants in essential services be allowed to strike?" The response I received was overwhelmingly in favour of the prohibition of strikes in essential services.

The riding of York North consists of a number of communities located within three towns, and without exception, although I analysed the results that I obtained from each one of these communities, there was a preponderance of opinion in favour of prohibiting strikes, to the following extent: from the community of Gormley, 94.59 per cent; from Kleinburg, 94.12 per cent; from Maple, 83.33 per cent; from the town of Markham, 86.29 per cent; from Oak Ridges, 78.26 per cent; from Richmond Hill, 85.23 per cent; from Thornhill, 90.84 per cent; from Unionville, 91.23 per cent; from Woodbridge, 89.47 per cent; and from general areas which were not designated on the returns, 87.4 per cent in favour of the proposition of prohibiting strikes.

Those results were accumulated from 2,676 individual returns which were submitted to me, being householder returns, representing the views of households and, presumably, the views within each of those households of at least two of my constituents. The average response, then, in favour of the proposition before the House was 88.25 per cent.

However, these results are not unique. They are in fact small in terms of the preponderance of view which has been determined by other bodies undertaking similar surveys. For instance, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business conducted a similar survey in 1978 asking the question: "Are you for or against the right to strike in the public sector?" Ninety-five per cent were against the right to strike, 4 per cent were for the right to strike. Bearing in mind that this particular questionnaire was submitted to independent businessmen in Canada, one can well regard their position as being indicative of the business community view.

● (1710)

Hon. members will also note that the question they asked was not as limited as the question I asked. Their question was for the prohibition of the right to strike in all of the public service, not the right to strike in essential services or those services specifically referred to in the bill as those services which, if removed, would create inconvenience, immobility or the lack of economic wellbeing to Canadians, a category which, in my submission, covers a wide enough scope to cover prohibition in essential services in the public service.

The interesting comparison between the results of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the results that I obtained can best be explained by the fact that my questionnaire was submitted to all of my constituents. The questionnaire submitted by the federation went to business exclusively but there is not much difference. Certainly when we are dealing with percentages of 95 per cent or 88 per cent, one can appreciate the fact that the general public, including members of public service unions, from whom I have received correspondence recognize that it is improper to withdraw essential services from the public. That withdrawal occurs by the withdrawal of essential services required by all Canadians. There is a general feeling from the correspondence I have received to indicate that even public servants recognize this responsibility and are prepared to accept the proposition, quite frankly for their own benefit in many cases, that it would be appropriate if the right to strike were removed.

On one occasion during the recent strike of CBC technicians I had one gentleman tell me that he was in fact one such employee who no longer had gainful employment. He urged me to do what I could to see that the same thing that happened to him on this occasion did not recur. He found that he was locked out because the CBC would not negotiate in a fashion acceptable to his union. His preference was to work but he no longer could.

My files are replete with correspondence that I have received, some of which I would like to read into the record. I have a letter from a Mr. J. R. Haggerty, a copy of which was directed to me. The letter is addressed to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston). Without reciting it all, I will quote some of the pertinent phrases in his letter which is dated September 8, 1981. It reads:

> It is my understanding that you are proposing to initiate actions with a view to eliminating the right to strike by members of the public service, or at least those sectors designated as essential services.

He then goes on to say:

> I find it appalling that government employees can go on strike and cause inconvenience and even danger to innocent people, and I suggest that legislation be passed which would remove the right to strike, and make this fact known as a condition of employment.

Mr. Haggerty underlines the fact that he would prefer that this apply to all sectors of the public service, but in the event it would not, he indicates a number of categories of employees who should be covered by such prohibition. On the second page of his letter he concludes by saying:

> To my mind, the recent postal strike is a national embarrassment and Mr. Ouellet's comments about the unwise dependency of commercial businesses on the mail service make me sick. I believe he also said that there was no point in making strikes illegal because employees would only disobey the law. My God, whatever happened to respect for the law, and enforcement of the law?

If I may, I shall deal with a specific reference he made in his letter. It is well recognized that federal public servants have security of tenure. I recently had occasion at a committee hearing to question the Commissioner of the Public Service Commission who indicated to me that even in the case where there was recognized incompetence and misbehaviour of federal employees it took a full 18 months before they could be dismissed.

There is a security of tenure in the public sector which does not exist in the private sector in Canada. That security of tenure, coupled with indexed pension plans, should be recognized as having a value to offset whatever risk is to be borne by the removal of the right to strike. In many cases, from the standpoint of individual employees, as I have already indicated, this withdrawal of the right to strike can in fact constitute a benefit. The proposed amendment, therefore, is not anti-labour. It may be anti-labour bosses, but it is definitely pro-employee. What is more, it is pro-Canadian and pro-public.

When we are faced with a decision in this House as to whom we serve, there should be no doubt: we serve the public. We do not serve the public servants. The public servants serve the public. I submit that it is our duty to see that that service is rendered, that it persists, that it is there and available for Canadians when they desire it and when, as a consequence of paying taxes, they have the right to demand it.

The second letter from which I will quote is from a Mr. G. R. Turney of Unionville, Ontario. His letter opens with the question "Who is minding the shop?" I shall quote part of his letter. In talking about the postal clerks, he says:

It's not the fact that the clerks are on strike that is the problem to me and the company I work for, but that all those other civil servants have chosen to honour the clerks' picket lines. There's the Post Office, Air Traffic controllers, Airport fire and emergency staff, Canada Customs—to name a few.

Mr. Turney goes on to say:

You think I'm frustrated? You bet I am! It's difficult trying to conduct our regular business profitably these days without these extra costly disruptions, none of which I have any control over. But you people in Ottawa have control. At least that's where the authority is. This country has enough problems in today's marketplace and the world, without creating more of our own.

Mr. Turney concludes by saying:

All these civil servants aren't civil and they don't serve. They just sit back with their guaranteed indexed pensions (which I'm paying for as a taxpayer dammit) and hold the country up for ransom.

Let's get this country moving and moving forward. I don't know how, that's supposedly your job.

This letter was written to me and I read those paragraphs for the benefit of my colleagues in the House. We have an obligation to discharge our duty today. It is an obligation that I urge upon each member. I refer to an answer given in the House by the then postmaster general on July 2, 1981. When I raised the issue of the Canada Post Corporation having a provision prohibiting the right to strike, the minister replied:

Just to take away the right to strike of employees does not necessarily avoid strikes. Those who believe very strongly in certain points will not hesitate to use the means at their disposal to register their point, and that could probably be by illegal strikes.

In my submission, that induces disrespect for the law. That comment is irresponsible. Canadians are a law-abiding group of citizens who are prepared to accept the law as we pass it here. To suggest that we dare not pass laws because we fear that some will disobey them is irresponsible.

What about jurisdictions that have imposed legislation of this kind? We know Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland have legislation prohibiting municipal police forces from striking. They do not strike.

Mr. Orlikow: What about Halifax?

Mr. Gamble: Exactly. In Halifax, Nova Scotia, there is no such legislation covering municipal police forces. In 1981 we had the delightful spectacle of a police force strike in the city of Halifax. The issue of the RCMP is well covered by the legislation as it currently stands. But the matter before the House is that, while certainly it may not extend today to the post office, or what was at one time the post office, it does extend to those other federal services which are being withdrawn by way of sympathy strikes to which reference has been made in the correspondence I have read into the record. The passage of this bill would stop that kind of sympathetic strike.

● (1720)

I believe, and all members of this House should believe, that Canadians are law-abiding and will accept the law passed by Parliament. That is the basis upon which we exist. I urge the House to consider this matter seriously. I urge the House to discharge the responsibility imposed upon every individual member to speak for the constituent, the people of Canada.

Right to Strike

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): I am pleased to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, basically because it is appropriate that we should be discussing this important subject matter. I should like to start by indicating to the House the purpose of Bill C-251, which is to broaden the class of employees who could be designated so as to include all who perform essential services. That poses a difficult problem for many people, and I will address that issue in my remarks.

Let me respond first to the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble). I am not a lawyer and I know he is. I think he knows there are no laws controlling illegal strikes in Nova Scotia. The common law of Canada, Britain and the United States did not grant the right to strike to public servants, but the legislative authorities, parliaments and provincial legislatures, could pass special laws granting this right, and that is in fact what happened federally in 1967 when the House adopted the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The common law, of course, does not grant the privilege of striking, but legislative measures can be put into effect which give employees the right to withdraw their services.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, just what is a designated employee? Pursuant to Section 79 of the act—I will not read it because those who are interested are aware of this provision—he or she is an employee who acknowledges that a designated employee as defined in that section does not have the right to stop providing or withdraw his or her services. Designated employees have indeed been the subject of numerous studies, and I recall sitting on the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service whose report dates back to 1976. Our report was a follow-up on the special report of Mr. Jacob Finkelman, former Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board. I should like to quote from page 47:13 of that report concerning designated employees. I quote:

Both Mr. Finkelman, in his report, and the Treasury Board, in its representations to the committee, proposed that the definition of designated services should be extended.

That is indeed what the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble) is advocating.

I continue the quotation:

In some of the representations from organizations outside the public service, suggestions were made which would have broadened the definition to include "essential services". Your committee feels that the phrase "essential services" is too difficult to define and would lead to the inclusion of most public servants. In other words the right to strike would be granted to public servants only to be denied by another process. In balance, we conclude that some extension of designated services beyond safety or security is necessary, to ensure that "health" be included, and to add a new dimension that of protection of public property.

Mr. Speaker, there is no question at all of extending the definition to cover the convenience, the mobility or the economic wellbeing of the public. I am familiar with the arguments put forward by the hon. member, and like him, I often receive comments from people in my riding who would certainly agree with his argument that in order to solve this problem we should take away the right to strike. I do not think this type of simplistic approach could be justified today, and I should like to put forward some arguments, or at least take a few minutes to recall the historical background of this issue, and then proceed with some more specific comments on the question of withdrawing the right to strike.

Mr. Speaker, in 1967, as I said earlier, the Public Service Staff Relations Act was passed, providing a statutory framework for collective bargaining in the Public Service. In 1973, the government asked the chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, Mr. Jacob Finkelman, to make a study of the situation on the basis of six years' experience, and to make any appropriate recommendations for improving implementation of the legislation. Mr. Finkelman tabled his report in March, 1974. An order of reference from the House and the Senate was tabled and carried, establishing the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, on which I was privileged to sit with several members of this House, in fact, the member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) who sits here in the House was also a member of this committee.

Mr. Speaker, with several colleagues we carefully considered a number of questions, and one of the hardest issues to resolve was that of the right to strike in essential services. The committee met 40 times, dozens of briefs were received and carefully read and considered. All interested parties representing both management and labour testified: the public sector, the private sector, the business community, experts on personnel relations in colleges and universities, experts on labour relations, and university professors. Almost all those appearing before the committee touched on the burning issue of the right to strike in the public service. By tabling his bill, the member for York North has given us another opportunity to discuss this controversial subject.

I disagree with the member for York North that we should take away the right to strike from public servants. The arguments he has put forward are very familiar, but I feel that the solution he is proposing is not only ineffective and unwise but it also fails to resolve the basic issue, that is, how to reconcile the interests of the employee with the employer's efficiency objectives while improving the employee's working conditions. That is the problem and that is what collective bargaining is all about.

In both the private and public sectors it is important to ensure that paid services are not interrupted, especially in the case of services that are paid for by the taxpayer. We all worry about the increasing number of work stoppages which have on occasion become a threat to the public interest, which explains why naturally many people are becoming very concerned about the right to strike in the public service. According to the hon. member, it is intolerable that public services should be interrupted, and he feels that the government is wrong to allow such interruptions by continuing to grant public servants the right to strike, whatever the circumstances may be.

The question once again is how to reconcile the interests of the employee who wants his working conditions to meet with the objectives of the employer, who has to provide effective and reliable service to the public. The right to strike is an issue which does not concern the Public Service of Canada alone. In various degrees and notwithstanding a few important exceptions, the great majority of public employees at the federal, provincial and municipal levels—and I could include the education system in which I spent 11 years and where I certainly witnessed some strikes—have the right to strike. Yet, all their services can be considered essential to the public. It is therefore fair to say that a great many workers representing a high proportion of the Canadian manpower provide services which are in the public interest and that these workers want to keep their right to interrupt their work to make a point about a contentious matter with their employer. This, Mr. Speaker, is the purpose of a strike, to inform the public that there is some disagreement between the management and the employees. I once questioned an expert in this field, and he told me: "In principle, this was supposed to last two or three days in the past, but strikes have become longer, and I understand that there are even strikes which last so long that they seriously affect several economic sectors in a country".

On the other hand, certain proponents of the withdrawal of the right to strike in the Public Service of Canada tend to forget the accomplishments of the parties involved since the act was passed in 1967. Except for a few union leaders who have somewhat tarnished the reputation of the other, more serious and constructive leaders, the great majority of public service unions recognized as negotiators deserve in my opinion the gratitude of the public and of the legislators. They have worked seriously and honestly. Mr. Speaker, our public service unions have solved many organizational and administrative problems. In general, they show great respect for our democratic traditions and have developed a serious and respectable administration. Most of the union leaders have obeyed the law and have tried to contain the elements which favoured non-compliance. For my part, I like to believe that we also have to consider who sits on the other side of the bargaining table, a group of men and women representing the employer who deserve our respect and our support. They have had to adjust and to change with the times, often to bear with bitter criticism from all sides and always to keep in mind that their responsibility was to protect the public interest.

And if we look at the figures compiled by Treasury Board, this objective has been met. Indeed, during the period between the introduction of the act in 1967 and August of 1981, 667 collective agreements were signed. Of these agreements, 420 were signed at the bargaining table, which means that 63 per cent of negotiations were settled amiably without disruption of services. Of these 667 agreements, 164 or 25 per cent were reached by arbitration, once again, without work stoppage; and 56 or 8 per cent were reached by conciliation, once more without work stoppage. The most surprising figure is the following, Mr. Speaker: 27 collective agreements, or a low proportion of 4 per cent, were reached following a strike. It therefore cannot be suggested or asserted that federal public servants abuse of their democratic right to strike. On the contrary, only an insignificant proportion of agreements were reached in that way.

Therefore the problem does not stem from the right to strike, but rather from the number of illegal strikes, wildcat strikes, and so on. Indeed, there have been 171 such strikes since 1967, including those by postal workers, air traffic controllers, radio operators, labourers, nurses and so on. To withdraw the right to strike would mean only one thing, Mr. Speaker, an increase in the number of illegal strikes. This is the real problem, and this is what we must deal with if we really want to prevent work stoppage. Legislative provisions exist for that. The House is aware of them, namely Section 27 of the Public Service Employment Act. Mr. Speaker, might I recall that in 1978, during the illegal strike of the postal workers, the deputy head threatened to invoke Section 27, which reads, and I quote:

An employee who is absent from duty for a period of one week or more, otherwise than for reasons over which, in the opinion of the deputy head, the employee has no control or otherwise than as authorized or provided for by or under the authority of an act of Parliament, may by an appropriate instrument in writing to the commission be declared by the deputy head to have abandoned the position he occupied, and thereupon the employee ceases to be an employee.

In 1978, recourse to that section was threatened. The Public Service Commission never received, as stipulated in Section 27, a notice to that effect. Which means that in fact it gave results, in that the workers went back to work. The act, as the hon. member said, is there to be observed and we must comply with it. I fully agree with him. All we need is that its provisions be implemented more strictly than is being done at present. That should go a long way towards solving the problem without for all that depriving civil servants of the democratic right they have and do not abuse. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point our that barely 4 per cent are illegal strikes, and if I add the 27 conventions settled as a result of work stoppages to the 171 illegal strikes, that gives a total of 198 illegal strikes. So, denying them the right to strike would not solve the problem, at least not to my mind, and will change absolutely nothing and only aggravate the situation.

● (1730)

[English]

The problems of public sector employer-employee relations are complex, Mr. Speaker, and I agree that no simple all-purpose panacea has been found. The Conservative Party during the last election proposed some form of dispute settlement, a whole series of what I think were probably quite reasonable measures to solve this type of withdrawal from work. But would it have been very effective? I doubt it.

However, Mr. Speaker, I do know the direction in which we should go. It is one which maintains the right to strike and the right to lockouts, which we do not have in the public service, as a tool for both union and management in the process of negotiations. The real dilemma for us is to find the means to safeguard the interests of third parties, such as the public, during this process. And this problem is not peculiar just to public service strikes. Withdrawal of service by airline pilots, refinery workers and so on can inflict as much damage as do strikes by air traffic controllers or postal employees. It becomes a problem of ensuring that responsibility for their actions be exercised by those wielding power. Unfortunately, we shall have to continue to provide punitive measures for those cases where responsibility has not been shown.

Perhaps we need to broaden these to include not only the traditional punishments of fines and prison but also the possibility for legal action by injured third parties against one or both of the parties involved in collective bargaining.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude my remarks by calling the attention of this House to the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations. My only regret is that, to my knowledge, its 72 or 73 recommendations have never been implemented. The government did not act on them, except on the first ones where the D'Avignon commission was asked to look into one of our recommendations, to study the Employment Act and the implementation of the merit principle. Mr. Speaker, that document includes a host of ideas, honest solutions that were considered in depth by members of this House and senators. In my view, they could restore a degree of confidence in the collective bargaining process. I agree with the hon. member that the law of the land should prevail. This was also the committee's opinion. I would like to conclude on the following quotation, Mr. Speaker:

—your committee has no doubt that where the welfare of the community as a whole is concerned, the right to strike is not sacred and its suspension is the responsibility of the government and Parliament or the appropriate legislature.

The continued protection of the national economic or social interest can be provided by statute at the cost of a total denial of some rights now available to persons providing services to the public; or it can be protected by granting a statutory right to strike and imposing on government and Parliament the responsibility of determining when a strike has so affected the public interest that the right must be suspended.

Your committee recognizes that the public interest can be adequately protected by government and Parliament determining when and where the public interest is adversely affected. When Parliament is dissolved, the governor-in-council should be similarly empowered.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would ask the government to perhaps take seriously the matter of the right to strike and to use that as a vehicle to bring back the whole question of employer-employee relations before this House, in order that we may discuss further those very important matters, and I thank the hon. member for bringing this forward today.

● (1740)

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the hon. member for York-North (Mr. Gamble)

explain what he is attempting to do with this proposal. The longer he spoke, the more I realized how little he knows about the real world of work and the relationship between workers and management. There are strikes and there are strikes. There are strikes by workers which bother the hon. member for York North a great deal. There are strikes by corporations which he with his background ignores completely.

We have laws in this country having to do with taxation and how certain corporations, and I refer to the oil corporations, shall be taxed. The scope of those laws has now been extended by agreement between the Liberal Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) and the Conservative Premier of Alberta. The so-called law-abiding citizens who run the oil companies in this country have said they do not like that law or agreement, they are not going to abide by it and are now moving their oil rigs from this country to the United States. I did not hear the hon. member for York North criticize them for ignoring those laws and policies reached between the Government of Canada and Alberta.

My friend the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) wants to say a few words. I will leave him a few minutes. Therefore, I will not put on record as I had intended the profit figures to show how well the oil companies have done and how lightly they have been taxed.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Orlikow: No. I like the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. I know that this question is important to him and I want to allow him a few minutes. I will find another occasion to put those figures on the record.

I want to deal with some of the points raised by the hon. member for York North. He wants to restrict the right of certain groups of public servants to strike. He calls them essential workers. Nobody likes a strike, not those who are adversely affected because a service they are used to has been withdrawn, and particularly not those who go on strike. All workers who go on strike lose the pay they would have received had they continued to work. Very few unions have the financial resources to give much in the way of strike benefits while workers are on strike. Workers do not go on strike lightly.

The hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) put on record the small percentage of workers who go on strike as compared to the overwhelming majority who voluntarily settle their differences with their employers. I will not repeat what he said. When workers go on strike, it is usually with good reason. Often the reason has to do with pay. The hon. member for York North should not be surprised that, at a time when the cost of living is increasing by 12 per cent or more a year and workers are offered 3, 4, 5 or 6 per cent increases which would cut their standard of living, workers will not accept that. Sometimes they go on strike because living conditions are bad or their job security is threatened.

The hon. member said that public servants are not laid off. Many will be laid off because of automation and mechanization. The Post Office is a good example of that threat. Automation of the Post Office may have been necessary. However, the Post Office Department and senior officials were very reluctant to give the kinds of guarantees the workers were entitled to so that they would not be displaced from their work. The hon. member shakes his head. If he would look at some of the studies done by judges in recent years, he would see that in every case a great deal of the responsibility for the dissatisfaction of the postal workers was put on management. The hon. member ignores that.

The hon. member wants legislation prohibiting strikes by essential workers. He did not tell us who they are. Are they the postal workers, hospital workers, librarians, those who pick up the garbage? Unless we know who he means, it is difficult to reach a sensible conclusion as to what we should do.

I point out to the hon. member that for many years a number of countries have had the kind of legislation which he proposes. For years Australia and New Zealand were held up as glowing examples of good labour-management relations. They had very complicated and sophisticated laws and regulations.

When times were good, the economies were booming and workers were receiving what they felt was a fair share of the increased productivity, there were very few strikes. In recent years, however, despite the legislation, they have had strikes. As the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier said, when workers do not have the right to strike legally, they strike illegally.

Let us look at our neighbours to the south. Over the years we have been accustomed to blue collar workers going on strike, the workers in the automobile plants, the mines and the lumber mills. That still happens. However, if you look at what has been happening in the United States in recent years, what do you see? It is the white collar workers, the professional people, those who, if it had been suggested ten years ago that they belonged to a union, would have been horrified and offended, who are going on strike.

Look at the record in the United States. In many cities there the teachers are now on strike although state laws prohibit it. Policemen and firefighters have been on strike. I am not saying I approve of those strikes. I say we should look at the reasons why any group of workers would go on strike, and try to deal with their problems, complaints and demands in a reasonable and sympathetic way. We could then cut down strikes, but not in the way suggested by the hon. member for York North.

The hon. member for York North made another point in passing with which I want to take issue. He suggested that in many instances, the workers do not want to go on strike but they are somehow forced to or coerced by the union or labour bosses. Nothing could be further from the truth than that, Mr. Speaker. There is a strike in my province against International Nickel Corporation in Thompson. That strike has continued for several months. The union negotiating committee several days ago, after meeting with management and with representatives of the labour department, has reached a tentative settlement. I have not heard today or yesterday what has happened. The news media reported that the workers were not satisfied with that agreement and were likely to reject it, despite the fact that their so-called labour bosses had recommended the strike.

• (1750)

The same situation occurred at Inco in Sudbury and it went on for many months. The same situation occurred at Stelco in Hamilton, Mr. Speaker.

I am not passing judgment, nor is any other Member of Parliament passing judgment with regard to these strikes. The point is, Mr. Speaker, that workers go on strike when they feel they are not treated fairly.

An hon. Member: The Tories do not understand democracy.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young) says that Tories do not understand democracy. I believe that is a fair characterization of the member for York North. Part of the democratic system we live in is that workers have the right to belong to unions, and if workers are members of unions, they have the right to negotiate with their employers. They have the right to decide that they have not been able to reach an agreement that is fair and, therefore, that they will proceed to arbitration, voluntary or binding, or they will proceed to strike. The employer has the right to lock workers out. This is part of the democratic system in which this country and most democratic countries operate. I wish the hon. member for York North would understand that.

I shall deal with one more point, Mr. Speaker. Does everything I have said today mean that I do not believe there can be or should be any restrictions on the right of workers to strike? No, it does not mean that, Mr. Speaker. What I suggest to the hon. member for York North is that the best way to maintain harmonious relations between workers and employers, whether they be public or private, is to grant them the right to strike.

Does that mean that a group of workers who are part of an essential service should be permitted to go on strike and stay off indefinitely, regardless of the harm it may cause to the community? No, it does not mean that, Mr. Speaker. We have many illustrations before us where the governments, be they Conservative, Liberal or NDP at the federal or provincial levels, have said with regard to a particular strike that is adversely affecting the community that enough is enough. As I have said, governments, be they Conservative, Liberal or NDP, on occasion, when a strike has continued for too long and was really hurting the whole community, have passed legislation requiring those particular workers to return to work.

This is not a simple solution, Mr. Speaker. The agreement does not satisfy all those people who wrote to the hon. member for York North and some people who wrote to me. However, Mr. Speaker, it is a system that works best and impinges the least on the rights of workers, as it impinges the least on anyone else.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the wonderful advantage about private members' hour is that it allows Members of Parliament to advance any proposition they desire. It allows members on either side of the House, from time to time, to disagree with a proposition that is being advanced.

Right to Strike

At the outset, I have to say, so that it is quite clear, that the proposition put forth in the hon. member's bill, although it is couched in interesting words, "convenience, mobility and economic wellbeing of the public," amounts to a bill, if it were passed by this House, to prohibit the right to strike in the public service. Perhaps other hon. members will speak with regard to this matter.

I shall make my position very clear: I oppose the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: This does not say there are not some problems with respect to the public service that have to be addressed by the government and perhaps some day by this Parliament. We did address the matter in the Finkelman report, and nothing happened, as the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) said. We have some problems. In the few moments that I have, I think it would be a good idea if I asked hon. members to recall what Mr. Finkelman said. At page 124 of the first volume of the Finkelman report he said:

> To my mind, to outlaw strikes by public servants at this juncture would be counterproductive.

I agree with that. He went on:

> We should go to great lengths to make the bargaining process work better. "The best way of resolving impasses is to prevent them from arising." Then, if an impasse is reached, every possible step should be taken to encourage resort to arbitration, a technique whose time appears to have come. To compel public servants at this stage to rely solely on arbitration would tend to mobilize opposition to its use and would make of it in their eyes an evil to be avoided rather than a measure that might be looked upon as enabling employees to gain an equitable recognition of their needs without resort to disruptive action.

What Mr. Finkelman was advocating was a bit of good sense and an approach that would require the government and Parliament to examine a number of things.

We as a party have suggested, as the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier said, the establishment of a kind of public interest dispute commission. There is some doubt about the validity of that, but that was the suggestion put forward.

We have also suggested that this House should address issues that are negotiable but not arbitrable, to drive as many people as possible to see the efficacy of a reasonable settlement of disputes. As the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier said, "The record is not bad. There are violent exceptions but it is not bad".

Public servants, Mr. Speaker, are not sitting at home dying to get on the picket line. Public servants want their mail delivered, hospitals to operate, and teachers to teach. They are no different than anyone else. They are as inconvenienced a group as is any other group in society. What they want, I think, is for the government and Parliament to address the issues rationally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: This is what we tried to accomplish in the joint committee. Perhaps that is what we will have to do again.

In closing, let me make a suggestion to the House. We have had excellent results with parliamentary task forces and select committees. Perhaps this is the kind of issue that should be addressed there. We must hear all sides of the issue and of the question.

I could go on for some considerable time, Mr. Speaker. I think we have a responsibility to the public service, no matter where we sit in the House of Commons, whether in opposition or in government. I think the government from time to time, and I say this with respect, has neglected its responsibility to the public service. Perhaps that is one way in which we could get to the truth. Sometimes it is a very enlightening experience.

May I call it six o'clock.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and Motion No. 35 (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I understand when the House adjourned at six o'clock, Motion No. 35 had been under debate. I am quoting from the remarks of Madam Speaker at report stage of the bill when she stated:

> Motion No. 35 standing in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) is consequential on Motion No. 36. However, Motion No. 36 causes some misgivings to the Chair. I refer the hon. member to Section 4 of Citation 773 in Beauchesne's fifth edition, which reads in part:
>
> "(a) An amendment is inadmissible if it refers to, or is not intelligible without, subsequent amendments or schedules, or if it is otherwise incomplete".
>
> Then Madam Speaker went on to say:
>
> However, the hon. member will be given an opportunity when these motions are called to present his views.

In light of this comment, I propose to the House that Motions Nos. 35 and 36 be considered together. I invite hon. members to comment on the point which was raised by Madam Speaker.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved:

Motion No. 36

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 49

(1) by striking out lines 15 to 39 at page 39 and substituting the following therefor:

"49.(1) There shall be established in the accounts of Canada a revolving fund under the administrative responsibility of the Minister of the Environment, to be known as the Environmental Studies Revolving Fund.

"(s) In this section, "fund" means the Environmental Studies Revolving Fund.";

(2) at page 28 by substituting the word "fund" for the words "relevant fund" wherever the latter words occur; and".

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment on the point you raised. While we think we could perhaps present arguments which might have some influence, we are also impressed by the arguments on the other side of that particular question and, therefore, will not press the point.

While I have the floor I should like to raise a point of order dealing with the business of the House. We had an opportunity as a caucus to consider developments today. We recognize that within the next few days and weeks the business of the House will consist of a budget and the necessary debate and perhaps, sooner than later, discussions of matters constitutional. While we believe that Bill C-48 is not good legislation—we think it is very bad—and we hope that the government will change it, it is obvious at this stage of the proceedings, after days and indeed weeks of discussion, that we are unable or not likely to be able to convince hon. members opposite to change their minds. Therefore, perhaps government members and members of the NDP are willing—certainly I have that authority on behalf of my party—to give unanimous consent to a procedure which would allow us to consider all remaining motions on report stage of Bill C-48 and conduct all necessary votes this evening to dispense with this stage of the proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity of speaking with the government House leader, who is still engaged in his caucus, and have explained to him what has just been explained to the House by our energy critic. He will be in the House shortly. He seems to be agreeable. Between himself, myself and the House leader for the New Democratic Party, I think it is possible to work out a system whereby we could put these votes in such a manner as to occupy the least amount of time this evening.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I do not have any objection at all to voting; I am always prepared to vote at any time. In fact, we have been prepared to vote for some time. I listened to the hon. member who proposed that we could proceed to a vote. He said that there was a system which he was prepared to follow that might allow the vote to take place. Subject only to knowing what the system is, I would be happy to give my agreement to proceeding with the vote tonight, right now, or whenever.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, apropos of what our acting House leader has said, there is a problem in that this would mean approximately 20 votes. We have no objection but it seems to me that 20 votes could take up about four hours.

Mr. Siddon: That is fine.

Mr. Waddell: I hear my friend saying that that is fine, but rationally speaking it may be helpful to have some sort of agreement as to—

Mr. Siddon: Let's vote!

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I cannot—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has the floor.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it might be helpful if there were some consultation before going into four or five hours of voting. It seems to me it might be smarter to agree on which motions could be dealt with by voice vote and which ones require a division.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is probably not aware that we had those consultations between five and six o'clock tonight. There were three alternatives, any one of which could shorten the voting procedure tonight. But in the meantime, while we are awaiting the return of the government House leader, I would suggest that Mr. Speaker request now the unanimous consent of the House to commence the voting, and when the government House leader arrives, he and I and the New Democratic Party House leader could get together to work out a system which I am sure we can do to shorten the voting procedure.

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, before you ask for unanimous consent, I would prefer that my leader be in the House at this time. Judging by what I can see all around me, if Mr. Speaker asks for unanimous consent, we will not give it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kempling: You are holding up your own bill!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, if I may, that you announce the business as it is now before the House and proceed with it in the normal fashion. When the House leaders for the official opposition and for the government meet together with me, we could report back on how the voting should take place according to whatever arrangement we have made, and at that point perhaps we could proceed to the voting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At this stage it appears to the Chair that a helpful suggestion has been made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I wonder whether it would be the pleasure of the House that we continue the debate for a few minutes and when the government House leader arrives, I am sure the matter could be resolved. There appears to be a disposition to do so as far as the Chair can read the mood of the House.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to you and to the House for arriving a few moments following the resumption of the discussion at eight o'clock.

• (2010)

I take it that the House leader for the official opposition is trying to be helpful in making suggestions about how the business of the House might be expedited and how we might be able to bring to a conclusion a debate on this motion and bring together the various amendments which have been made and vote on them all this evening. If I understand him correctly, that is what he is suggesting. I am not sure whether he has discussed this possibility with the House leader on the government side.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the minister and assure him that I have done just that. The government House leader is at his own caucus meeting at the moment. However, I informed him and he said that he would be in the House as soon as he could. In the interim, I have suggested that we should give unanimous consent to commencing the voting in anticipation that we will be able to devise a means to shorten what could amount to 37 votes. I suggest that what we do now is to sound the bells.

Now that there is a representative of the government to give a response to that, I would suggest that, in the interests of expediting the business of the House, he should agree and we should sound the bells. That would bring his House leader back. I can assure him that we can work out an arrangement and get the voting over tonight and completely dispose of report stage of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has made a suggestion but the Chair is concerned from the point of view of procedure at this time. There is a motion before the House and it appears to the Chair that we have to dispose of that motion in an orderly way. I am sure there can be agreement to go through the motions quickly or to call them and then commence the votes.

It would appear to be procedurally irregular to simply discontinue discussion on a motion that is before the House and other motions which are at report stage without giving them some consideration by the House. If the House is of a mind, the Chair would simply at this time call the vote on the motions seriatim. I think it could be done quickly, and at the end of the procedure we could go to a vote.

Mr. Roberts: It is not that I am anxious to have the debate prolonged but I am concerned because I have not been completely privy to the conversations which have taken place between our House leader and the House leader of the official opposition. As far as I am able to understand it, there has not been, or at least there is not available to members of the New Democratic Party present in the House, any knowledge, understanding or agreement about the course of action which has now been suggested.

Mr. Kempling: Sure there is.

Mr. Roberts: The hon. member says there is, but as far as I can understand from representatives of the NDP who are here, there is not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. At this time the Chair is going to call the question on the motion before us, but before doing so the Chair—

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. MacLaren).

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion has been made this evening, as I understand it, that we should dispose of the motions in the normal way and then proceed to voting in accordance with a procedure which was under discussion among the three House leaders. I believe the whips were involved as well as the House leaders.

The fact is that I have understood from the House leader between the hours of six and seven this evening that it was his expectation, as the result of discussions which were held earlier today about the business of the House, that debate on Bill C-48 would continue this evening and we would revert to other matters tomorrow. Another bill would be before the House tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has listened to the hon. parliamentary secretary. The House appears to be ready for a ruling in regard to Motions Nos. 35, 36 and 37. The Chair is prepared to so rule unless there is objection to that.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would assume, if I am not mistaken, that the vote is taken when there are no other members who wish to speak on the motions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. At this stage, may I recall to the House that the Chair has indicated procedural concerns relating to Motions Nos. 35 and 36 and has invited debate relating to these motions.

Not hearing debate related to those motions nor any comment, the Chair is now prepared to make a ruling with regard to them.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, with my comment a moment ago I thought I was contributing to the orderly procedures in the House, but evidently that was not the case.

We have before us this evening Motion No. 35 which stands in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). Under that motion we would have a situation where the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) would be solely responsible for the environmental studies revolving fund which is provided for—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the parliamentary secretary, the Chair has grave reservations about the admissibility of these two motions, and is prepared to rule.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have just one sentence to contribute. For heaven's sake, I have never in my life seen a government so reluctant to pass its own legislation!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. For the reasons that have been indicated by the Chair and in accordance with the citations from Beauchesne, it appears that Motions Nos. 35 and 36 are inadmissible and will be ruled out of order at this stage.

The Chair will now proceed to Motion No. 37 which stands in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), which reads:

Motion No. 37

July 10, 1981—That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 49 by striking out lines 47 and 48 at page 40 and substituting the following therefor:

"ties under this act or any other act of Parliament and such payments shall not exceed sixty million dollars in any two succeeding fiscal years."—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It appears to be inconsistent with Clause 49(13) of the bill. I will read from the earlier ruling of Madam Speaker with respect to this motion when she said:

Motion numbered 37 standing in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre appears to be inconsistent with Subclause 49(13) of the bill. In this respect, I refer the hon. member to Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 773(2) and I quote:

For the reasons indicated by Madam Speaker, Motion No. 37 also appears to be out of order and is ruled inadmissible.

Three motions, Nos. 38, 39 and 40 are grouped for debate with the same mover and seconder for each.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved:

Motion No. 38

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 49 by adding immediately after line 40 at page 41 the following:

"(15) Any reports or other results of environmental studies paid in whole or in part by the fund under subsection (9) shall be made available, within a reasonable time after completion, to every person who is an interest holder and, at a cost no greater than the direct cost of copying, shall be provided to any person who so requests in writing."

Motion No. 39

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 49 by adding immediately after line 40 at page 41 the following:

"(16) The accounts and financial transactions relating to the fund shall be audited annually by the Auditor General and a report thereon shall be made to the minister.

(17) The minister shall, on or before the 31st day of December next following the end of each fiscal year, prepare a report, relating to the operations of the fund for that fiscal year, including, but not limited to, all environmental studies undertaken or completed and paid in whole or in part by the fund under subsection (6).

(18) The minister shall forthwith cause the reports mentioned in Subsections (13) and (14) to be laid before Parliament or, if Parliament is not then sitting on any of the first 15 days thereafter that either House of Parliament is sitting, and such reports shall stand permanently referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry of the House of Commons"—

Motion No. 40

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 49 by adding immediately after line 40 at page 41 the following:

"(19) For the purpose of assisting the minister with the administration of the fund, and payments therefrom, the Governor in Council shall establish and set the terms of reference of one or more advisory councils each consisting of not more than ten members serving without remuneration to be selected from outside the public service of Canada, and appointed by the Governor in Council to hold office for such term as the Governor in Council may determine with members representative of interest holders, provincial or territorial governments and native and public interests.

(20) Except for meetings dealing with clauses of information exempted from public disclosure by regulations, or with proprietory information of an interest holder, every portion of every meeting of an advisory council established under Subsection (15) shall be open to public observation."

Mr. Nielsen: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and subsequently I will recognize a government spokesman.

● (2020)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There seems to be some confusion and disarray over there, which certainly was not intended. I did telephone the government House leader and informed him of the intention of this party to assist in passing this legislation this evening, in view of the circumstances explained by our energy critic. So, rather than having any further confusion—I am convinced that we can come to agreement in 10 or 15 minutes with respect to the method of dealing with the votes tonight so that we can have the entire report stage disposed of—I suggest that you might put to hon. members the suggestion that, with unanimous consent, we rise for 10 or 15 minutes, have a House leaders' meeting and work the method out, then come back here and vote on the entire report stage.

The government House leader is now here. He will recall that I called him. I just finished suggesting that Mr. Speaker might, with the consent of all members of the House, suspend our sitting for 10 or 15 minutes so that the three House leaders can work out an arrangement—which I am sure can be achieved in 10 or 15 minutes—and so that we can come back and vote on all motions to dispose completely of the report stage of this bill by 9.45 or ten o'clock tonight.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The President of the Privy Council has the floor.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for my absence, but it is true that around eight o'clock I had a telephone conversation with the House leader of the Progressive Conservative Party. The bells had just stopped ringing when I reached him. I spoke with the House leader at 8.02 or 8.03 p.m. Maybe he came to my office before that, but I was in caucus.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Seven forty-five.

Mr. Pinard: Seven forty-five? Well, I spoke to my hon. colleague at eight o'clock when the bell was ringing, not before that. It was not 7.45.

Mr. Cousineau: Seven forty-five; no way. You have the wrong clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is a proposal that the House adjourn for 10 minutes so that the House leaders can confer. This would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I will come to that, if you please, but I just want to rectify what was perhaps an error made by the hon. gentleman. He did not speak to me before eight o'clock. That having been said, when we spoke together—I was in a caucus—he told me that he intended to allow all amendments and the report stage to be voted on tonight. I agreed to that, and I still agree to that. Now he suggests that we meet together and try to orchestrate or organize the vote so that it does not take too long. I am willing to do that. We are willing to do that, and when we come back in 15 minutes, hopefully there will not have been disagreement. Then the bells will ring to call the members and, when we are ready, we will vote.

Mr. Nielsen: That is acceptable, Mr. Speaker, and I want to clarify a misconception. It was immediately preceding eight o'clock that I spoke with the government House leader; however, I did speak with his office personally at 7.45. I understand it would have taken some time to reach him and for him to call me back. We had the same problem this afternoon when he was calling with respect to other matters.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, I have absolutely no objection to voting. I just ask, Sir, that rather than adjourn the House, which would necessitate our coming back then to deal with the outstanding motions, which will have to come before the House in any event, while the three House leaders are meeting Your Honour might simply go through the outstanding motions which are yet to be discussed or dealt with and. When we return, since there does not appear to be any necessity for great debate, as we will have completed all the business that should be before the House the bells could start ringing. We could then proceed with the votes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is in the hands of the House.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I want it to be clear that when we vote, it will be on all the amendments and the report stage tonight. I want that to be clear, and I want it to be clear also that the bells will ring for the time necessary to call in all the members and that the time of the ringing of the bells will be unlimited. I do not mind if the bells ring now and we work out the agreement while they are ringing, but if hon. members opposite prefer that we adjourn for 15 minutes, I do not mind that either.

Mr. Nielsen: I suggest we ring the bells now and get down to working out the details of the voting arrangements. I hope it will be possible for the government to have its members here so that we do not have bells ringing for one, two or three hours. We would all like to see this matter disposed of as quickly as possible, perhaps by 9.45, ten o'clock or whatever. I certainly hope the ringing of the bells is not extended.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I put it to you that to ring the bells at this precise moment would require us, after the bells had rung and the votes had been taken, to return to the votes which have not yet been dealt with at report stage. I ask simply that we complete the votes which are still outstanding at report stage before the bells ring.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has a proposal to make to the House. If someone would care to move all the outstanding motions in one motion, they could be voted on as one motion.

Mr. Nielsen: With consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This would require the unanimous consent of the House. It would then be possible to vote seriatim the items which have been stood up to this point, which would meet the point of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). Is someone prepared to move all the remaining outstanding motions at once with the unanimous consent of the House?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I will so move and prepare that motion in writing, if I can have your patience for a moment or two.

Mr. Lonsdale: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of clarification. Could you perhaps advise the House how many motions are outstanding at this time and under whose names they are put?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In answer to the question, I have put the question on Motions Nos. 38, 39 and 40. One subsequent motion is Motion No. 42. Motions Nos. 43 and 50 were ruled out of order. Motion No. 44 is out of order. Motions Nos. 45, 46, 47, 48 and 49 should be voted. Motion No. 50 was ruled out of order. Motions Nos. 51, 52 and 53 have been completed, with recorded divisions. Motion No. 54 would have to be put, and that would be all.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved:

That all outstanding motions be called as one—now—and the yeas and nays recorded.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to accept this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

● (2200)

Following the ringing of the division bells:

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with the government House leader, with the House leader for the NDP and with the Clerk and other Table officers as a result of which there has been a general consensus that we can expedite the voting this evening and disposition of the report stage of this resolution if I seek the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw the motion which caused the division bells to ring, which have just stopped, and at the same time stipulate the understanding that unanimous consent would also be sought, if the first suggestion is adopted, to the suggestion that all the remaining outstanding motions be disposed of without debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the hon. member be permitted to withdraw his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed. Is there unanimous consent, that the remaining items should be voted on without debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed.

The first question is on Motion No. 38 in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson).

Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is now on Motion No. 39 in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson).

Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

• (2205)

The question is on Motion No. 40 standing in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 42 standing in the name of the hon. member of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde).

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

Motion No. 42

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 55 by striking out lines 18 and 19 at page 47 and substituting the following therefor:

"and where an interest is cancelled the Canada lands thereunder become Crown reserve".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think your gaze was deflected for a moment. No one on this side stood.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Under the circumstances I declare the motion carried.

Motion (Mr. Lalonde) carried.

The question is on Motion No. 44 standing in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson).

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved:

Motion No. 44

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 56

(a) by striking out lines 18 and 19 at page 48 and substituting the following therefor:

"and place for a hearing before the National Energy Board and, on receipt of such request the Board shall appoint a time and place for a hearing."

(b) by striking out lines 24 and 25 at page 48 and substituting the following therefor:

"of which a hearing has been held, the National Energy Board shall consider the representation made".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion No. 44 appears to increase the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board and goes beyond the scope of the clause it seeks to amend. For that reason Motion No. 44 is ruled out of order.

The question is on Motion No. 45 standing in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson).

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved:

Motion No. 45

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 56 by striking out lines 27 to 29 at page 48 and substituting the following therefor:

"and shall on request by any person who has requested notice in writing, whether such request relates to one particular decision, declaration, determination or order or to all such actions of the Minister, specifying the decision, declaration,".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 46 standing in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke-Centre (Mr. Wilson).

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved:

Motion No. 46

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 56 by adding immediately after line 29 at page 48 the following:

"(4) Except for meetings dealing with classes of information exempted from public disclosure by regulations, or with proprietory information of an interest holder, every portion of every meeting of a hearing conducted pursuant to this section shall be open to public observation."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion 47 standing in the name of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar).

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq) moved:

Motion No. 47

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 56 by adding immediately after line 2 at page 49 the following:

"(6) Notwithstanding anything in this act, where the Minister proposes to make an order in respect to:

(a) the granting of exploration agreements, leases, permits, special renewal permits, and production licences;

(b) declarations of significant discovery;

(c) drilling of wells;

(d) declarations of commercial discovery; and

(e) the matters described in Section 48,

the aboriginal peoples affected by such an order shall be given reasonable notice by the minister through their authorized representatives."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion 48 standing in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 48

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 71 by striking out lines 3 to 9 at page 55.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 49 standing in the name of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar).

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq) moved:

Motion No. 49

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 76 by adding immediately after line 4 at page 59 the following:

"(iv) requirements for the carrying out of environmental and social programs, studies or procedures as determined by the Minister of the Environment or by regulation of the Governor in Council."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

● (2210)

The question is on Motion No. 54 standing in the name of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved:

Motion No. 54

That Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be amended in Clause 80 by striking out lines 25 to 44 at page 64, lines 1 to 43 at page 65 and lines 1 to 12 at page 66 and substituting the following therefor:

"19.2(1)(a) A Compensation Fund will be established by the Minister of the Environment to provide for damages.

(b) the Compensation Fund shall be funded by all persons who obtained an authorization under paragraph 3.2(1)(b) by letters of credit totalling at least $500 million.

(c)(i) the Compensation Fund shall be administered by a board appointed by the Minister and will be called the "Compensation Fund Board."

(ii) in addition the federal officials the board referred to in (i) above shall consist of representatives from onshore and offshore fishing organizations, native groups, territorial and provincial governments, and industry.

(d) any person(s) claiming for damages may apply directly to the Compensation Fund for the recovery of funds due to a spill or related damage.

(e) the Board shall review the case and make payment to the person filing the claim.

(f) the letter of credit referred to in Subsection 2(b) shall be received, and where an individual operator has been found at fault the Compensation Fund shall recover the award from the letter of credit.

(g) where the damage costs exceed the individual letter of credit supplied by the proponent, the compensation shall be made from the letters of credit as a whole.

(h) The Minister shall report annually to Parliament on the operations of the fund and the board.

(i) the Governor in Council may make regulations for the administration of the fund and the board."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Last July Madam Speaker indicated that Motions Nos. 1 and 2 seek to include a preamble in the bill which was introduced into the House without a preamble. For the benefit of hon. members, Madam Speaker quoted Section (3) of Citation 779 from the fifth edition of Beauchesne's and also referred to page 531 of Erskine May's nineteenth edition. These sources indicate the motions appear to be out of order, and I so rule.

The House will now proceed to taking the deferred divisions on Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act. Shall we dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The first question is on Motion No. 3.

The House divided on Motion No. 3 (Mr. McGrath), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 90)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Anguish
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Deans
de Jong
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hovdebo
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Nystrom
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Rae
Reid (St. Catharines)
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Roche
Rose
Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Waddell
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Young—103.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hudecki
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Munro (Hamilton East)
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis—121.

● (2215)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. McGrath) negatived.

● (2220)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 52.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If you now proceed to Motion No. 38, followed by Motions Nos. 39, 40, 45 and 46 seriatim and request unanimous consent to apply the recorded vote just taken on Motion No. 3 to each of those motions individually, you will probably receive consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the recorded vote on Motion No. 3 will apply to Motion No. 38 (Mr. Wilson)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on Motion No. 38 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 91)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Anguish
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Deans
de Jong
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hovdebo
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Nystrom
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Rae
Reid (St. Catharines)
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Roche
Rose
Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Waddell
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Young—103.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hudecki
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Munro (Hamilton East)
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan

Messrs.

Roberts	Savard	Tousignant
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)	Simmons	Turner
Rompkey	Smith	Veillette
Rossi	Tardif	Watson
Roy	Tessier	Weatherhead
	Tobin	Yanakis—121.

Motion No. 38 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the recorded vote will apply to Motion No. 39 (Mr. Wilson)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on Motion No. 39 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 92)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre	Gustafson	Murta
Anguish	Halliday	Nielsen
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)	Hargrave	Nowlan
Beatty	Hawkes	Nystrom
Benjamin	Heap	Oberle
Blackburn	Hees	Ogle
Blaikie	Hovdebo	Orlikow
Blenkarn	Howie	Paproski
Bosley	Jarvis	Parker
Bradley	Jelinek	Patterson
Broadbent	Jewett (Miss)	Rae
Clark (Yellowhead)	Keeper	Reid (St. Catharines)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)	Kempling	Riis
Cook	Kilgour	Robinson (Burnaby)
Cooper	Kushner	Roche
Corbett	Lambert	Rose
Crosby (Halifax West)	Lawrence	Sargeant
Darling	Lewis	Schellenberger
Deans	Lewycky	Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
de Jong	MacDonald (Miss)	Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Domm	MacKay	Shields
Ellis	Malone	Siddon
Elzinga	Manly	Stevens
Epp	Mayer	Stewart
Fennell	Mazankowski	Taylor
Fraser	McCain	Thacker
Fretz	McCuish	Towers
Friesen	McGrath	Vankoughnet
Fulton	McKenzie	Waddell
Gamble	McKinnon	Wenman
Gass	McKnight	Wilson
Gilchrist	McMillan	Wise
Greenaway	Miller	Wright
Gurbin	Mitchell (Mrs.)	Young—103.
	Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand	Breau	Corriveau
Appolloni (Mrs.)	Bujold	Côté (Mrs.)
Axworthy	Burghardt	Cousineau
Bachand	Bussières	Cullen
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)	Caccia	Cyr
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)	Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)	Daudlin
Bégin (Miss)	Campbell (LaSalle)	De Bané
Berger	Chénier	de Corneille
Blais	Chrétien	Deniger
Blaker	Collenette	Desmarais
Bloomfield	Comtois	Dingwall
Bossy	Corbin	Dion
		Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)	Kelly	Ostiguy
Dubois	Killens (Mrs.)	Ouellet
Dupont	Lachance	Parent
Erola (Mrs.)	Lajoie	Pelletier
Ethier	Lalonde	Penner
Evans	Lamontagne	Pepin
Ferguson	Landers	Peterson
Fisher	Lang	Pinard
Flis	Laniel	Portelance
Foster	Lapierre	Prud'homme
Fox	Lapointe (Charlevoix)	Regan
Frith	Lapointe (Beauce)	Roberts
Garant	LeBlanc	Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Gauthier	Lefebvre	Rompkey
Gendron	Lonsdale	Rossi
Gimaïel	MacBain	Roy
Gourde (Lévis)	MacEachen	Savard
Gray	MacGuigan	Simmons
Guilbault	Mackasey	Smith
Harquail	MacLaren	Tardif
Henderson	Malépart	Tessier
Herbert	Maltais	Tobin
Hopkins	Marceau	Tousignant
Hudecki	Massé	Turner
Isabelle	McCauley	Veillette
Johnston	McRae	Watson
Joyal	Munro (Hamilton East)	Weatherhead
Kaplan	Olivier	Yanakis—121.

Motion No. 39 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the recorded vote will apply to Motion No. 40 (Mr. Wilson)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on Motion No. 40 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 93)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre	Gamble	McGrath
Anguish	Gass	McKenzie
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)	Gilchrist	McKinnon
Beatty	Greenaway	McKnight
Benjamin	Gurbin	McMillan
Blackburn	Gustafson	Miller
Blaikie	Halliday	Mitchell (Mrs.)
Blenkarn	Hargrave	Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Bosley	Hawkes	Murta
Bradley	Heap	Nielsen
Broadbent	Hees	Nowlan
Clark (Yellowhead)	Hovdebo	Nystrom
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)	Howie	Oberle
Cook	Jarvis	Ogle
Cooper	Jelinek	Orlikow
Corbett	Jewett (Miss)	Paproski
Crosby (Halifax West)	Keeper	Parker
Darling	Kempling	Patterson
Deans	Kilgour	Rae
de Jong	Kushner	Reid (St. Catharines)
Domm	Lambert	Riis
Ellis	Lawrence	Robinson (Burnaby)
Elzinga	Lewis	Roche
Epp	Lewycky	Rose
Fennell	MacDonald (Miss)	Sargeant
Fraser	MacKay	Schellenberger
Fretz	Malone	Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Friesen	Manly
Fulton	Mayer
	Mazankowski
	McCain
	McCuish

Messrs.

Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Waddell
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Young—103.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hudecki
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Munro (Hamilton East)
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis—121.

Motion No. 40 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the recorded vote will apply to Motion No. 45 (Mr. Wilson)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on Motion No. 45 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 94)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Anguish
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Deans
de Jong
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hovdebo
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Nystrom
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Rae
Reid (St. Catharines)
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Roche
Rose
Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Waddell
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Young—103.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hudecki
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Munro (Hamilton East)
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis—121.

Motion No. 45 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the recorded vote will apply to Motion No. 46 (Mr. Wilson)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on Motion No. 46 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 95)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Anguish
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Deans
de Jong
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hovdebo
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Nystrom
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Rae
Reid (St. Catharines)
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Roche
Rose
Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Waddell
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Young—103.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hudecki
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Munro (Hamilton East)
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis—121.

Motion No. 46 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 52 (Mr. Ittinuar). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The House divided on Motion No. 52 (Mr. Ittinuar) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 96)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Anguish
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Deans
de Jong
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hovdebo
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Nystrom
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Rae
Reid (St. Catharines)
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Roche
Rose
Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Waddell
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Young—103.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hudecki
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Munro (Hamilton East)
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis—121.

● (2225)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 52 (Mr. Ittinuar) negatived.

Mr. Nielsen: If the Chair will now call Motion No. 57 and ask for unanimous consent to apply the vote taken on Motion No. 52 it will probably be forthcoming.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the same vote to apply to Motion No. 57 as applied to Motion No. 52?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on Motion No. 57 (Mr. Fulton) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 97)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Anguish
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Deans
de Jong
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hovdebo
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Nystrom
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Rae
Reid (St. Catharines)
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Roche
Rose
Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Waddell
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Young—103.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hudecki
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Munro (Hamilton East)
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis—121.

Motion No. 57 (Mr. Fulton) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 7 (Mr. Wilson).

The House divided on Motion No. 7 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 98)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Hees
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright—76.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Anguish
Appolloni (M^me^)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (M^me^)
Bégin (M^me^)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Broadbent
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (M^lle^) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Deans
De Bané
de Corneille
de Jong
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Fulton
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Heap
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Keeper
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewycky
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Manly Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Riis
Roberts
Robinson (Burnaby)
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Sargeant
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Waddell
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis
Young—147.

● (2230)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 7 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

● (2235)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, if the Chair were to call Motions Nos. 8, 9, 13, 21, 23, 25, 26, 27, 28 seriatim individually and ask for unanimous consent to have the vote just taken on Motion No. 7 applied thereto, it would be surprising if Your Honour were to discover any dissent.

The House divided on Motion No. 8 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 99)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Hees
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright—76.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Anguish
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Broadbent
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Deans
De Bané
de Corneille
de Jong
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)

Messrs.

Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Fulton
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Heap
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Keeper
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewycky
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Manly Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Riis
Roberts
Robinson (Burnaby)
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Sargeant
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Waddell
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis
Young—147.

Motion No. 8 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 9 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 100)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Hees
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright—76.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Anguish
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Broadbent
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Deans
De Bané
de Corneille
de Jong
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Fulton
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Heap
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Keeper
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewycky
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Manly Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Riis
Roberts
Robinson (Burnaby)
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Sargeant
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Waddell
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis
Young—147.

Motion No. 9 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 13 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 101)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Hees
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan

Messrs.

Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright—76.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Anguish
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Broadbent
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Deans
De Bané
de Corneille
de Jong
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Fulton
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Heap
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Keeper
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewycky
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Manly Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Riis
Roberts
Robinson (Burnaby)
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Sargeant
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Waddell
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis
Young—147.

Motion No. 13 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 21 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 102)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Hees
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright—76.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Anguish
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Broadbent
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Deans
De Bané
de Corneille
de Jong
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Fulton
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Heap
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Keeper
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewycky
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Manly Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Riis
Roberts
Robinson (Burnaby)
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Sargeant
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Waddell
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis
Young—147.

Canada Oil and Gas Act

Motion No. 21 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 23 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 103)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Hees
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright—76.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Anguish
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Broadbent
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Deans
De Bané
de Corneille
de Jong
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Fulton
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Heap
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Keeper
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewycky
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Manly Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Riis
Roberts
Robinson (Burnaby)
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Sargeant
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Waddell
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis
Young—147.

Motion No. 23 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 25 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 104)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Hees
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright—76.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Anguish
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Broadbent
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Deans
De Bané
de Corneille
de Jong

Messrs.

Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Fulton
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Heap
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Keeper
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewycky
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Manly Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Riis
Roberts
Robinson (Burnaby)
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Sargeant
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Waddell
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis
Young—147.

Motion No. 25 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 26 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 105)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Hees
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright—76.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Anguish
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Broadbent
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Deans
De Bané
de Corneille
de Jong
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Fulton
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Heap
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Keeper
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewycky
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Manly Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Riis
Roberts
Robinson (Burnaby)
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Sargeant
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Waddell
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis
Young—147.

Motion No. 26 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 27 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 106)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Hees
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain

Messrs.

McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Munro
(Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid
(St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott
(Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott
(Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright—76.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Anguish
Appolloni
(Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet
(Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Broadbent
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell
(Miss)
(South West Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Deans
De Bané
de Corneille
de Jong
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Fulton
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde
(Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Heap
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Keeper
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe
(Charlevoix)
Lapointe
(Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewycky
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Manly Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell
(Mrs.)
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Riis
Roberts
Robinson
(Burnaby)
Robinson
(Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Sargeant
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Waddell
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis
Young—147.

Motion No. 27 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 28 (Mr. Wilson) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 107)

YEAS

Messrs.

Andre
Baker
(Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby
(Halifax West)
Darling
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Hawkes
Hees
Howie
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Kilgour
Kushner
Lambert
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald
(Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Munro
(Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Patterson
Reid
(St. Catharines)
Roche
Schellenberger
Scott
(Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott
(Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright—76.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Anguish
Appolloni
(Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet
(Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Broadbent
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell
(Miss)
(South West Nova Campbell
(LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Deans
De Bané
de Corneille
de Jong
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne
(Chicoutimi)
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Dupont
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Frith
Fulton
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gourde
(Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Heap
Henderson
Herbert
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jewett (Miss)
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Keeper
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe
(Charlevoix)
Lapointe
(Beauce)
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewycky
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
Malépart
Maltais
Manly Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Miller
Mitchell
(Mrs.)
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Parker
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Regan
Riis
Roberts
Robinson
(Burnaby)
Robinson
(Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rose
Rossi
Roy
Sargeant
Savard
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Waddell
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis
Young—147.

Motion No. 28 (Mr. Wilson) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 4.

The House divided on Motion No. 4 (Mr. Fulton), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 108)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish	Jewett (Miss)	Parker
Benjamin	Keeper	Rae
Blackburn	Lewycky	Riis
Blaikie	Manly	Robinson (Burnaby)
Broadbent	Miller	Rose
Deans	Mitchell (Mrs.)	Sargeant
de Jong	Nystrom	Waddell
Fulton	Ogle	Young—27.
Heap	Orlikow
Hovdebo

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre	Corriveau	Gendron
Appolloni (Mrs.)	Côté (Mrs.)	Gilchrist
Axworthy	Cousineau	Gimaïel
Bachand	Crosby (Halifax West)	Gourde (Lévis)
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)	Cullen	Gray
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)	Cyr	Greenaway
Beatty	Darling	Guilbault
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)	Daudlin	Gurbin
Bégin (Miss)	De Bané	Gustafson
Berger	de Corneille	Halliday
Blais	Deniger	Hargrave
Blaker	Desmarais	Harquail
Blenkarn	Dingwall	Hawkes
Bloomfield	Dion	Hees
Bosley	Dionne (Chicoutimi)	Henderson
Bossy	Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)	Herbert
Bradley	Domm	Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Breau	Dubois	Hopkins
Bujold	Dupont	Howie
Burghardt	Ellis	Hudecki
Bussières	Elzinga	Isabelle
Caccia	Epp	Jarvis
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)	Erola (Mrs.)	Jelinek
Campbell (LaSalle)	Ethier	Johnston
Chénier	Evans	Joyal
Chrétien	Fennell	Kaplan
Clark (Yellowhead)	Ferguson	Kelly
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)	Fisher	Kempling
Collenette	Flis	Kilgour
Comtois	Foster	Killens (Mrs.)
Cook	Fox	Kushner
Cooper	Fraser	Lachance
Corbett	Fretz	Lajoie
Corbin	Friesen	Lalonde
	Frith	Lambert
	Gamble	Lamontagne
	Garant	Landers
	Gass	Lang
	Gauthier	Laniel
		Lapierre
		Lapointe (Charlevoix)
		Lapointe (Beauce)
		Lawrence
		LeBlanc
		Lefebvre
		Lewis
		Lonsdale
		MacBain
		MacDonald (Miss)
		MacEachen
		MacGuigan
		Mackasey
		MacKay
		MacLaren
		Malépart
		Malone
		Maltais
		Marceau
		Massé
		Mayer
		Mazankowski
		McCain
		McCauley
		McCuish
		McGrath
		McKenzie
		McKinnon
		McKnight
		McMillan
		McRae
		Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
		Munro (Hamilton East)
		Murta
		Nielsen
		Nowlan
		Oberle
		Ostiguy
		Ouellet
		Paproski
		Parent
		Patterson
		Pelletier
		Penner
		Pepin
		Peterson
		Pinard
		Portelance
		Prud'homme
		Regan
		Reid (St. Catharines)
		Roberts
		Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
		Roche
		Rompkey
		Rossi
		Roy
		Savard
		Schellenberger
		Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
		Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
		Shields
		Siddon
		Simmons
		Smith
		Stevens
		Stewart
		Tardif
		Taylor
		Tessier
		Thacker
		Tobin
		Tousignant
		Towers
		Turner
		Vankoughnet
		Veillette
		Watson
		Weatherhead
		Wenman
		Wilson
		Wise
		Wright
		Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Fulton) negatived.

● (2245)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, if the government is fortunate enough to avoid having its members continue to resist the legislation which they attempted to do prior to the bell, and if there are no maverick actions on that side, I suggest you call Motions Nos. 17, 22, 30, 31, 34, 41, 47, 48, 49, 51, 53, 54 and 56.

We might be fortunate enough to achieve unanimous consent that the vote which has just been taken on Motion No. 4 apply to each of those, if called seriatim.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we agree, of course. However, for the record, I shall enumerate again the motions mentioned by the hon. member. I believe he inadvertently omitted one, so I shall repeat the list: Nos. 10, 17, 22, 30, 31, 34, 41, 47, 48, 49, 51, 53, 54 and 56.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Yukon in accord with the list?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to draw to your attention that the hon. member for Yukon had missed vote No. 10.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 10 in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly). Is there unanimous consent that the vote which applied to motion No. 4 shall also apply to Motion No. 10?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on Motion No. 10 (Mr. Skelly) which was negatived on the following division:

Canada Oil and Gas Act

(Division No. 109)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Deans
de Jong
Fulton
Heap
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Waddell
Young—27.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bosley
Bossy
Bradley
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crosby (Halifax West)
Cullen
Cyr
Darling
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Dupont
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Garant
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gilchrist
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Howie
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 10 (Mr. Skelly) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 17 (Mr. Waddell) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 110)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Deans
de Jong
Fulton
Heap
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Waddell
Young—27.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bosley
Bossy
Bradley
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crosby (Halifax West)
Cullen
Cyr
Darling
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Dupont
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Garant
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gilchrist
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Howie
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain

Messrs.

McCauley
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 17 (Mr. Waddell) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 22 (Mr. Waddell) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 111)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Deans
de Jong
Fulton
Heap
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Waddell
Young—27.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bosley
Bossy
Bradley
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crosby (Halifax West)
Cullen
Cyr
Darling
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Dupont
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Garant
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gilchrist
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Howie
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 22 (Mr. Waddell) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 30 (Mr. Waddell) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 112)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Deans
de Jong
Fulton
Heap
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Waddell
Young—27.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bosley
Bossy
Bradley
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crosby (Halifax West)
Cullen
Cyr
Darling
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)

Messrs.

Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Dupont
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Garant
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gilchrist
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Howie
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 30 (Mr. Waddell) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 31 (Mr. Waddell) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 113)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Deans
de Jong
Fulton
Heap
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Waddell
Young—27.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bosley
Bossy
Bradley
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crosby (Halifax West)
Cullen
Cyr
Darling
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Dupont
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Garant
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gilchrist
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Howie
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 31 (Mr. Waddell) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 34 (Mr. Ittinuar) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 114)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish, Benjamin, Blackburn, Blaikie, Broadbent, Deans, de Jong, Fulton, Heap, Hovdebo, Jewett (Miss), Keeper, Lewycky, Manly, Miller, Mitchell (Mrs.), Nystrom, Ogle, Orlikow, Parker, Rae, Riis, Robinson (Burnaby), Rose, Sargeant, Waddell, Young—27.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre, Appolloni (Mrs.), Axworthy, Bachand, Baker (Gander-Twillingate), Baker (Nepean-Carleton), Beatty, Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.), Bégin (Miss), Berger, Blais, Blaker, Blenkarn, Bloomfield, Bosley, Bossy, Bradley, Breau, Bujold, Burghardt, Bussières, Caccia, Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova), Campbell (LaSalle), Chénier, Chrétien, Clark (Yellowhead), Clarke (Vancouver Quadra), Collenette, Comtois, Cook, Cooper, Corbett, Corbin, Corriveau, Côté (Mrs.), Cousineau, Crosby (Halifax West), Cullen, Cyr, Darling, Daudlin, De Bané, de Corneille, Deniger, Desmarais, Dingwall, Dion, Dionne (Chicoutimi), Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi), Domm, Dubois, Dupont, Ellis, Elzinga, Epp, Erola (Mrs.), Ethier, Evans, Fennell, Ferguson, Fisher, Flis, Foster, Fox, Fraser, Fretz, Friesen, Frith, Gamble, Garant, Gass, Gauthier, Gendron, Gilchrist, Gimaïel, Gourde (Lévis), Gray, Greenaway, Guilbault, Gurbin, Gustafson, Halliday, Hargrave, Harquail, Hawkes, Hees, Henderson, Herbert, Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.), Hopkins, Howie, Hudecki, Isabelle, Jarvis, Jelinek, Johnston, Joyal, Kaplan, Kelly, Kempling, Kilgour, Killens (Mrs.), Kushner, Lachance, Lajoie, Lalonde, Lambert, Lamontagne, Landers, Lang, Laniel, Lapierre, Lapointe (Charlevoix), Lapointe (Beauce), Lawrence, LeBlanc, Lefebvre, Lewis, Lonsdale, MacBain, MacDonald (Miss), MacEachen, MacGuigan, Mackasey, MacKay, MacLaren, Malépart, Malone, Maltais, Marceau, Massé, Mayer, Mazankowski, McCain, McCauley, McCuish, McGrath, McKenzie, McKinnon, McKnight, McMillan, McRae, Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich), Munro (Hamilton East), Murta, Nielsen, Nowlan, Oberle, Ostiguy, Ouellet, Paproski, Parent, Patterson, Pelletier, Penner, Pepin, Peterson, Pinard, Portelance, Prud'homme, Regan, Reid (St. Catharines), Roberts, Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore), Roche, Rompkey, Rossi, Roy, Savard, Schellenberger, Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth), Scott (Victoria-Haliburton), Shields, Siddon, Simmons, Smith, Stevens, Stewart, Tardif, Taylor, Tessier, Thacker, Tobin, Tousignant, Towers, Turner, Vankoughnet, Veillette, Watson, Weatherhead, Wenman, Wilson, Wise, Wright, Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 34 (Mr. Ittinuar) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 41 (Mr. Skelly) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 115)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish, Benjamin, Blackburn, Blaikie, Broadbent, Deans, de Jong, Fulton, Heap, Hovdebo, Jewett (Miss), Keeper, Lewycky, Manly, Miller, Mitchell (Mrs.), Nystrom, Ogle, Orlikow, Parker, Rae, Riis, Robinson (Burnaby), Rose, Sargeant, Waddell, Young—27.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre, Appolloni (Mrs.), Axworthy, Bachand, Baker (Gander-Twillingate), Baker (Nepean-Carleton), Beatty, Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.), Bégin (Miss), Berger, Blais, Blaker, Blenkarn, Bloomfield, Bosley, Bossy, Bradley, Breau, Bujold, Burghardt, Bussières, Caccia, Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova), Campbell (LaSalle), Chénier, Chrétien, Clark (Yellowhead), Clarke (Vancouver Quadra), Collenette, Comtois, Cook, Cooper, Corbett, Corbin, Corriveau, Côté (Mrs.), Cousineau, Crosby (Halifax West), Cullen, Cyr, Darling, Daudlin, De Bané, de Corneille, Deniger, Desmarais, Dingwall, Dion, Dionne (Chicoutimi), Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi), Domm, Dubois, Dupont, Ellis, Elzinga, Epp, Erola (Mrs.), Ethier, Evans, Fennell, Ferguson, Fisher, Flis, Foster, Fox, Fraser, Fretz, Friesen, Frith, Gamble, Garant, Gass, Gauthier, Gendron, Gilchrist, Gimaïel, Gourde (Lévis), Gray, Greenaway, Guilbault, Gurbin, Gustafson, Halliday, Hargrave, Harquail, Hawkes, Hees, Henderson, Herbert, Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.), Hopkins, Howie, Hudecki, Isabelle, Jarvis, Jelinek, Johnston, Joyal, Kaplan, Kelly, Kempling, Kilgour, Killens (Mrs.), Kushner, Lachance, Lajoie, Lalonde, Lambert, Lamontagne, Landers, Lang, Laniel, Lapierre, Lapointe (Charlevoix), Lapointe (Beauce), Lawrence, LeBlanc, Lefebvre, Lewis, Lonsdale, MacBain, MacDonald (Miss), MacEachen, MacGuigan, Mackasey, MacKay, MacLaren, Malépart, Malone, Maltais, Marceau, Massé, Mayer, Mazankowski, McCain, McCauley, McCuish, McGrath, McKenzie, McKinnon, McKnight, McMillan, McRae, Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)

Messrs.

Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 41 (Mr. Skelly) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 47 (Mr. Ittinuar) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 116)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Deans
de Jong
Fulton
Heap
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Waddell
Young—27.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bosley
Bossy
Bradley
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crosby (Halifax West)
Cullen
Cyr
Darling
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Dupont
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Garant
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gilchrist
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Howie
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 47 (Mr. Ittinuar) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 48 (Mr. Waddell) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 117)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Deans
de Jong
Fulton
Heap
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Waddell
Young—27.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bosley
Bossy
Bradley
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crosby (Halifax West)
Cullen
Cyr
Darling
Daudlin
De Bané

Messrs.

de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne
(Chicoutimi)
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Dupont
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Garant
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gilchrist
Gimaïel
Gourde
(Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette
(Mrs.)
Hopkins
Howie
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe
(Charlevoix)
Lapointe
(Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacDonald
(Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Munro
(Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid
(St. Catharines)
Roberts
Robinson
(Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Scott
(Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott
(Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 48 (Mr. Waddell) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 49 (Mr. Ittinuar) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 118)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Deans
de Jong
Fulton
Heap
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell
(Mrs.)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Riis
Robinson
(Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Waddell
Young—27.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre Appolloni
(Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Baker
(Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet
(Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bosley
Bossy
Bradley
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell
(Miss)
(South West Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crosby
(Halifax West)
Cullen
Cyr
Darling
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne
(Chicoutimi)
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Dupont
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Garant
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gilchrist
Gimaïel
Gourde
(Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette
(Mrs.)
Hopkins
Howie
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe
(Charlevoix)
Lapointe
(Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacDonald
(Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Munro
(Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid
(St. Catharines)
Roberts
Robinson
(Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Scott
(Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott
(Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 49 (Mr. Ittinuar) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 51 (Mr. Fulton) which was negatived on the following division:

Canada Oil and Gas Act

(Division No. 119)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Deans
de Jong
Fulton
Heap
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Waddell
Young—27.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bosley
Bossy
Bradley
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crosby (Halifax West)
Cullen
Cyr
Darling
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Dupont
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Garant
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gilchrist
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Howie
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 51 (Mr. Fulton) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 53 (Mr. Ittinuar) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 120)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Deans
de Jong
Fulton
Heap
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Waddell
Young—27.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bosley
Bossy
Bradley
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crosby (Halifax West)
Cullen
Cyr
Darling
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Dupont
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Garant
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gilchrist
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Howie
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé

Messrs.

Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 53 (Mr. Ittinuar) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 54 (Mr. Fulton) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 121)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Deans
de Jong
Fulton
Heap
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Waddell
Young—27.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bosley
Bossy
Bradley
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crosby (Halifax West)
Cullen
Cyr
Darling
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Dupont
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Garant
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gilchrist
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Howie
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 54 (Mr. Fulton) negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 56 (Mr. Fulton) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 122)

YEAS

Messrs.

Anguish
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Deans
de Jong
Fulton
Heap
Hovdebo
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Nystrom
Ogle
Orlikow
Parker
Rae
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Waddell
Young—27.

NAYS

Messrs.

Andre
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Blenkarn
Bloomfield
Bosley
Bossy
Bradley
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette
Comtois

Messrs.

Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crosby (Halifax West)
Cullen
Cyr
Darling
Daudlin
De Bané
de Corneille
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Domm
Dubois
Dupont
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Flis
Foster
Fox
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Garant
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gilchrist
Gimaïel
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hargrave
Harquail
Hawkes
Hees
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Howie
Hudecki
Isabelle
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
Kushner
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Lonsdale
MacBain
MacDonald (Miss)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCauley
McCuish
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
McRae
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Roche
Rompkey
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Stevens
Stewart
Tardif
Taylor
Tessier
Thacker
Tobin
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Yanakis—196.

Motion No. 56 (Mr. Fulton) negatived.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to have voted for Motions Nos. 43 and 53 but did not wish to vote for Motion No. 4. Consequently I abstained on Motion No. 4. I did not refuse unanimous consent on those two motions because, considering the vote on Motion No. 4, I thought it was a waste of time.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, for the sake of order, to complete this evening's record, I want to state for the record that I believe there is agreement that the votes taken this evening by unanimous consent will be treated in Hansard and in the other records of the House as though they had been standing votes.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. That will increase substantially the batting average of those members who are present this evening.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Because of the hour, the adjournment debate usually scheduled will not take place.

It being 10.53 p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 10.53 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 6, 1981

The House met at 11 a.m.

• (1105)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

DOWNTURN IN SALES OF NORTH AMERICAN CARS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian auto industry has been hit hard by high interest rates and low priced imports. One third of Ontario auto dealers could be out of business in three months if action is not taken to halt the downturn in the sales of North American cars. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens):

That this House require the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to reassess current import levels and with his colleague, the Minister of Finance, take positive measures to reduce the crippling high interest rates that are now destroying the automobile industry, the dealers, and the jobs that go with them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG NATIVE PEOPLES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, the native people of the country are in desperate trouble. Most of them are out of jobs. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the government move immediately to increase the economic development budget of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development so that this desperate unemployment among Canada's native peoples may be attacked.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member have leave to present the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAYS

ABANDONMENT OF KIRKPATRICK-CARBON RAIL LINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, whereas the western division of the Canadian Transport Commission ordered the abandonment of the Kirkpatrick-Carbon rail line of the CPR which carried more than half a million bushels of grain last year and served three elevators and scores of farmers and businesses, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That this House urges the Minister of Transport to use the authority in Section 64(1) of the National Transportation Act and order this rail line to continue, thus avoiding the extra costs of production placed on farmers and the unemployment created through the abandonment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to present the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EDUCATION

FUNDING FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, whereas Statistics Canada data for October shows that once again young Canadians were the group hardest hit by job losses, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes):

That the members of the House individually wish a curse on the cabinet for its cold and callous treatment of young Canadians, and that the cabinet at least announce today that it will not cut any support for post-secondary education.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to present the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I ask the support of hon. members on all sides of the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that all parties gave unanimous support last January for the inclusion of a clause in the Constitution recognizing and affirming aboriginal and treaty rights of the Indian, Inuit and Métis people, and in view of the fact that no aboriginal group in Canada has opposed Clause 34 or asked for its withdrawal, and further, that the only mention of aboriginal and treaty rights during this week's first ministers' conference was in support of those rights by the government of Saskatchewan, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

• (1110)

That this House affirm its continued support for the unanimous decision of January 30 to entrench the recognition and affirmation of aboriginal and treaty rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member have the unanimous consent of the House to present the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Smith said no.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is moved by Mr. Manly and seconded by Mr. Fulton—shall I dispense?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In view of the fact all parties gave unanimous support last January for the inclusion of a clause in the Constitution recognizing and affirming aboriginal and treaty rights of the Indian, Inuit and Native people, and in view of the fact that no aboriginal group in Canada has opposed Clause 34 or asked for its withdrawal, and further, that the only mention of aboriginal and treaty rights during this week's first ministers' conference was in support of these rights by the government of Saskatchewan, it is moved by the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), and seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House affirm its continued support for the unanimous decision of January 30 to entrench the recognition and affirmation of aboriginal and treaty rights.

Does the House give unanimous consent to adopt this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the Chair that I said no to that motion when it was called.

[Translation]

APPEAL TO OPPOSITION MEMBERS TO GIVE SUPPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas it was clearly demontrated in yesterday's historical agreement that the great Liberal principles of our government and the prophetic vision of our Prime Minister, for which he has always fought, met the wishes and expectations of all Canadians; whereas it was also clear that the Premier of Quebec attended this conference with the sole purpose of scuttling it by committing what I would call political hijacking to serve separatist ends, and since our government's perceptiveness was once more clearly established, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi):

That those few right-minded members opposite who would have liked to voice very strongly their approval for our draft resolution now cross the floor of the House and join us in the continuation and implementation of fair and equitable policies for all Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

FINANCE

TAX INCENTIVE FOR FILM INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That this House urge the Minister of Finance not to abandon the existing incentive for investment in Canadian feature films, an action the minister is widely reported to be contemplating and which, if implemented, would only add the film industry to the list of those industries already destroyed by this government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to present this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROTECTION OF HABITAT OF ENDANGERED SPECIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that a number of extremely plentiful species of wildlife have become extinct in Canada, and since, in fact, the planet is losing life forms at a rate of one species per day now which will accelerate to one species per hour by 1989 if mankind does not deal seriously with pollution and habitat protection, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan), and I believe with the support of the government:

That this House urges the Minister of the Environment to move expeditiously with a wildlife policy for Canada which would include a mandate to protect the habitat of endangered species and, in co-operation with the provinces and territories, set aside world community ecological reserves and wildlife parks to preserve our precious global heritage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to present the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1115)

OFFICIAL PUBLICATIONS

DELAY IN DELIVERY

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to draw to the attention of the House that due to the late proceedings last night and the rather extensive report of Hansard and Votes and Proceedings, these publications have been delayed and are not yet available.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the minister I hope is aware, this morning Statistics Canada established the jobless rate at 8.3 per cent of the work force. That is 989,000 Canadians on the street and looking for work. In any language that is a staggering figure, and should be unacceptable to the government. Clearly it is the goverment's incompetence and lack of initiative which are responsible for this situation. When is the minister going to accept his responsibility for creating employment in this country and put those people back to work?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have been working actively to deal with the situation. I remind my hon. friend of major initiatives such as the 50 per cent increase in the funding for the Defence Industry Productivity Program, a major support program for the aerospace and electronics industry. I remind my hon. friend of initiatives under the special electronics program, individual projects such as support for de Havilland, in Toronto, and Pratt & Whitney in Montreal. There have been major announcements and major commitments and initiatives under my jurisdiction and that of other ministers. We have been working actively to create jobs and to stem the effects of economic situations in our major export markets. We will be continuing these initiatives. We are very much aware of the situation and of our responsibilities.

DROP IN JOB CREATION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there may be major announcements, but they are certainly not major realities. The minister must be aware that the amount of unemployment has not only gone up but job creation has gone down. Last month employment creation by this government went down by 68,000 jobs. Statistics this morning show that job creation is down again for the second straight month—in manufacturing 22,000 jobs lost, in primary industries 16,000 jobs lost in one month alone. Surely the government is not proud of that record. This country is in a recession. Ordinary people are being hurt. They want to know in practical terms what the government is going to do about it.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there has been a very strong and positive record of job creation for most of the period since this government took office, except for the most recent months. We are working—

Mr. Clark: No one else is.

Mr. Gray: —to continue these efforts of job creation. My hon. friend has completely overlooked the fact of the very great degree of weakness and the high unemployment in our major export markets. The European community and the United States, for example, are areas that are bound to have an impact on job creation and industrial activity in our country. We are working to strengthen our export efforts and to strengthen job creation and industrial development in our own country. However, we cannot totally escape the impact of policies of other countries in their own markets and therefore on our industries. We are certainly conscious of these concerns and responsibilities, and are working to put in place other initiatives to help deal further with the impact of these matters on our workers.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister is aware that the statistics I have used this morning take us only to October 17. In the past three weeks we have had plant closings and lay-offs, putting thousands more people out of work. I can cite Du Pont, Alcan, Admiral and many small manufacturing companies across the country. Those people are no longer interested in the minister's announcements or in blaming other people. They want to know what the minister and the government are waiting for. When are they going to do something of a practical nature that will help them out?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have certainly not been waiting. We have been taking concrete and positive action that has had a very beneficial effect on job creation and strengthening the industrial base of the country.

● (1120)

Mr. Epp: Where?

Mr. Gray: We intend to take further initiatives. I think that my hon. friends should respond with a very positive note to the budget of the Minister of Finance, which is only a few days away.

Mr. Stevens: What is in it?

Mr. Gray: I look forward to announcements connected with the budget that will help add to the thrust of job creation and industrial development which has been very much a part of this government's action and responsibility over the past 18 months.

* * *

INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, this is the minister in this House of Commons who will say anything but will do nothing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: Is it the minister's view that his high interest rate policy is the best policy to combat inflation? Is the minister aware that the high interest rate policy is resulting in the fact that workers at Canadian Admiral will no longer make stoves, refrigerators, washers and dryers, and that Canadians are better out on the streets to fight inflation? Is that his view?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the bank rate declined by more than half a point yesterday. At present, the bank rate is at the lowest level it has been for the past six months.

Mr. Clark: Since you promised to resign.

Mr. Gray: My hon. friend did not mention that in his question, nor did the other spokesman for the official opposition. Therefore there is a very positive movement in the area of interest rates, and I look forward to further progress in this area as well.

Mr. Clark: When are you going to resign?

Mr. Gray: My hon. friend conveniently forgot to mention these initiatives and activities.

CANADIAN ADMIRAL CORPORATION IN RECEIVERSHIP

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that the receiver at Canadian Admiral is presently operating a mass quick rapid disposal of the assets of the company? Therefore, unless something is done almost immediately there will be no appliance industry run by Admiral or by any other person who might be able to take over that company. What action does the minister propose to take right now to make sure that the receiver operating on behalf of the bank does not totally disperse the assets of the company and cause a permanent loss of jobs?

Mr. MacKay: Resign, Herb.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have been in touch with various companies that are developing proposals which could well lead to the resumption of operations at Canadian Admiral. We intend to continue those efforts.

IMPORTATION OF FOREIGN MANUFACTURED APPLIANCES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware also that one of the problems at Canadian Admiral and at other appliance dealers is the fact that the Japanese and others are allowed to dump things such as microwave ovens on the Canadian market? What action does the minister propose to take to stop that dumping? Does the minister intend to have the microwave business and the other appliance businesses completely taken over by foreigners in the same way that he allowed the television industry to be taken over by foreigners? Is that his policy? Is that the way he wants to promote trade?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have laws in this country to deal with dumping. If there is a formal accusation, my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, will respond very quickly and very effectively.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in light of the previous questions I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. We have noticed over the last few weeks that there are 88,000 fewer jobs available in Canada. Today we see again that over the last month we have had an increase in the unemployment figures. When this session first began the Minister of Finance said that this high unemployment figure was an aberration, that perhaps it was a statistical error. Does the Prime Minister recognize that his government's policy of maintaining high interest rates to stem spending in Canada is the major cause for these high unemployment figures?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is confusing certain issues. By focusing only on the recent increase in unemployment rates he forgets to mention the fact that between October 1980 and October 1981, 170,000 jobs were created in Canada. He also forgets that high interest rates are directly linked to the high rate of inflation we are experiencing, and that it is not the government's task to concentrate on a single issue and on short-term requirements. Its task is to consider all economic indicators and to work towards improving the general state of the economy.

* * *

[English]

EMPLOYMENT

SOCIAL COSTS OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, let us recognize that when the government talks about the jobs that have been created many of these jobs are recycled ones advertised through Manpower. They are not really new jobs being added to the economy.

• (1125)

My next question is aimed toward the minister responsible for unemployment—excuse me, employment. It seems to me that the government's policy of job creation as recently announced is the shifting of the unemployed from certain parts of Canada toward the megaprojects. Surely this will result in the uprooting and breakdown of families, resulting indirectly in family violence, wife battering, child abuse, drug and alcohol abuse, and the like.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member should put his question on a supplementary.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, is the minister prepared to agree that this high unemployment results directly in these incredible social costs that will be with us for many decades?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the problem of unemployment is never a pleasant one and this government is very concerned about the measures we can introduce to try to alleviate it and help those who face this situation.

I would like to point out to the House that in the past year, just through the initiatives of our department alone, we have added something like 80,000 jobs which are concentrated particularly in those regions of the country that experience chronic unemployment.

As far as the movement of Canadians is concerned, that is something that has been part and parcel of the history of this country. Every year some one half million Canadians move to take jobs in other areas. That is really part of the labour market. What we are trying to do is develop, through recommendations of the parliamentary task force and our own task forces, a whole new set of labour and training programs that will respond to the new labour demands of the 1980s. It is the real commitment of this government to address the issue of human resources and the labour market so we can address the kind of problems the hon. member points out as being a consequence of unemployment, and I believe that between the budget and the kinds of programs we are initiating we will be able to provide this country with a very relevant, very useful, and effective labour market strategy in the years to come.

* * *

FORESTRY

LAY-OFFS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA FOREST INDUSTRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my final question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Recognizing that he has taken initiatives on a number of occasions in an effort to assist certain sectors of the country and the economy, will he outline what he plans to do to provide assistance to the ailing British Columbia forest industry that is now experiencing lay-offs on a daily basis, with an unemployment rate for woodworkers in excess of 20 per cent?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have a major program in place to assist the British Columbia forest industry, to develop additional markets in the world aside from the United States. This has had a major, positive impact. As I said in the House the other day, over the past few years it has brought about an increase in exports to other parts of the world from $200 million to close to $1 billion. We are continuing these efforts to assist the industry and to expand its export sales and help all its needs in terms of maintenance of employment in the British Columbia industry.

We are also working with the Department of Employment and Immigration on programs in terms of assisting laid off workers, and we look forward to further efforts to strengthen the base of that industry, despite the decline in major export markets, particularly in the United States, something that unfortunately is not within our direct control.

* * *

VIA RAIL

EFFECT OF CUTBACKS ON TOURIST INDUSTRY

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for real employment, that is not unemployment, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

The cutbacks in VIA Rail service will cost the Canadian tourist industry at least $100 million in lost business, leading to many bankruptcies and unemployment for thousands of people, including the loss of more than 3,000 tourism-related jobs in western Canada alone because the government is turning away some 30,000 tourists from Japan and other countries.

When his seatmate, the Minister of Transport, decided to dismantle VIA Rail, was the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce requested to provide a remedy for the devastating impact this decision would have on the tourist industry and, if so, what remedy does he have? What consolation does he have to offer today to these thousands of newly unemployed Canadians?

● (1130)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is relatively easy to answer that question. Let us take Jasper as an illustration of the situation described by my hon. friend. Last year there were two million visitors to Jasper. The highest estimate of the number of people who came to Jasper by train is provided by his own PC report which says that 100,000 people came by train. That is 5 per cent of the total.

Now, travellers coming from Edmonton will continue to come to Jasper by train. That is a good percentage of the total. People travelling from Vancouver have a possibility now, and I will give an illustration of that, of coming by a combination of trains and buses. For example, from Vancouver—

Mr. Clark: They will take the bus over from Tokyo.

Mr. Pepin: —they can come through the B.C. Railway in Via Tours. A number of them will be coming in that way.

The proof in the pudding is that at the moment VIA informs me that they have a hard time finding the necessary accommodation in Jasper for the number of tourists who will be coming to the area next summer. If that is not a true illustration of the exaggeration put in the question, I do not know what can be.

IMPACT ON ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to the question of my colleague. Will the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce devote some of his work to persuade the cabinet that the cancellation of the VIA services in the maritime provinces will not only create direct unemployment but will create a negative impact upon the tourist industry and upon all tourist-related industries? Will he try to persuade the cabinet and the minister to avoid criticism of his government for a further decline in business in the maritime provinces?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise and preamble to my hon. friend's question. We are putting major projects in place which are directly aimed at job creation in the Atlantic provinces. For example, there is our recent announcement of support for the Saint John Shipbuilding and Drydock Company and the recent Mitel project. Both of these are in New Brunswick. There is also the Ocean Industries program in Nova Scotia. All of these efforts are intended to and will create hundreds, in fact thousands of jobs in the Atlantic provinces.

I think this is a very positive way to build on the strength of that area. This is something we are doing and we intend very much to continue to do.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

PROVISION RESPECTING WOMEN'S RIGHTS

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister responsible for the status of women my question is for the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister knows, Clause 28 of the constitutional resolution is a paramountcy clause outside the charter. I remind him that Clause 28 is the one saying > Notwithstanding anything in this Charter, the rights and freedoms referred to in it are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

What I would like to ask the Prime Minister is if he can tell the House whether Clause 28 will continue to have paramountcy. That is, will it override any attempts made to deny equality to women?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only answer that my impression is that the clause would continue. I have not been involved in the drafting which went on between provincial and federal officials yesterday afternoon and, I believe, during the night as well.

I cannot answer firmly but I want to tell the hon. member—and this applies also to the Standing Order 43 motion put by the member for Malahat-Cowichan-The Islands—is that we took the draft presented to us by the seven premiers. They had made a lot of deletions from our original draft which is before the House. One of those deletions was precisely the clause concerning aboriginal rights. They are the ones who deleted it. If there was any deletion of the clause that concerns the hon. member—

An hon. Member: You agreed to it.

Mr. Trudeau: I understand. I agreed to a lot of things that were not my first choice, yesterday. That must be understood. I was looking for a consensus, and I got a consensus.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: When the member is finished shaking his fist he can realize that I sought a consensus on the basis of a series of deletions to our charter, the best charter in the world which I believe some of the members over there supported. I accepted a consensus put to me by seven premiers. There were some deletions, and aboriginal rights was one of them. Maybe the other clause was another. I am not sure. I will have to check that, and that is why I say I will see what was done on the drafting overnight.

I cannot conceive how the member from Malahat-Cowichan-The Islands could come out with an untruth as enormous as the one he did when he said that Saskatchewan was supporting aboriginal rights and somehow we were not. It is Saskatchewan and the other six that put to us a draft without aboriginal rights. It is in the discussion that ensued that I said I found that difficult to accept, but if they were facing me with this draft could we at least have a federal-provincial conference agreed where we would try to see what the native people agreed to among themselves, assuming they can agree among themselves, and that is far from certain, but I said let us at least give them a chance to meet with us. That is how it happened.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER QUEBEC PRESENTED ALTERNATIVE FORMULA CONCERNING MOBILITY OF LABOUR

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Considering the agreement on mobility rights signed yesterday by nine first ministers, I should like to know, with respect to the agreement the government of Quebec refused to sign, whether, when the Prime Minister of Canada asked the Premier of Quebec if he had another formula to suggest, the latter produced a formula and made a counterproposal to the other first ministers and to the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is also important to answer this question, because there are a number of myths being created about yesterday's meeting. The answer to the hon. member's question is very straightforward. The Premier of Quebec objected to the mobility clause. I told him, "Well, I understand your having some reservations, since Newfoundland had some as well. Newfoundland negotiated some additions to the clause, which we accepted. Do you have anything you would like to add to the clause, Mr. Premier?" He did not and just grumbled about the clause. I asked him to let us know in a matter of hours or days about any other wording that would be satisfactory to him and that we could consider and discuss with the other provinces, if necessary. We have not heard from the Quebec Premier about this matter or about the language question or the other issues on which he is in disagreement, Mr. Speaker. That is the situation for the time being.

[English]

INDUSTRY

MASSEY FERGUSON VOLUME DISCOUNTS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. With the help of the Canadian taxpayers the government advanced hundreds of millions of dollars to Massey-Ferguson to maintain that company's operations and the jobs involved. That company turned around and gave dealers volume discounts to sell products. They have done that. The company is now withholding volume discounts. Is the minister willing to allow Massey-Ferguson to continue operations and yet allow our dealers in our small communities to go under this winter?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, first of all the government did not advance millions of dollars to Massey Ferguson. It guaranteed the final portion of the equity refinancing carried out by the private sector. This was done pursuant to specific terms and conditions in agreement between ourselves, Massey-Ferguson, and the Ontario government.

I will be very happy to look into what my hon. friend has said and see whether or not it conflicts with the terms of the agreement. I should point out to him that, without our efforts to enable Massey-Ferguson to continue in a new and restructured and more viable manner, there would be no basis for those dealers or for the thousands of workers for Massey-Ferguson, and the thousands more in supplier plants across the country. Let us not forget that the initiative of the federal government has enabled that company—

Mr. Epp: What are you going to do about the dealers?

Mr. Gray: —to continue to operate, to continue the opportunities for the dealers. I intend to look into the situation and see if it conflicts in any way with the agreement we have entered into with the company.

* * *

FISHERIES

ACCESS FOR CANADIAN GROUNDFISH TO EUROPEAN MARKET

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The minister will know that Statistics Canada today reported 2,000 jobs disappeared in Newfoundland last month, and 15,000 jobs since last May.

• (1140)

Fifteen fish plants closed down in Newfoundland last summer resulting in a loss of 3,600 jobs. All but three of these plants remain closed. All the minister does is identify the problem. We know what the problem is. The problem is a softening of the United States market and an overprocessing capacity.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has a clear and direct responsibility here. What is he doing to try to gain access for Canadian groundfish to the European market? Without that market the minister knows the situation will remain disastrous.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, who knows these things very well, knows that the unemployment figures he talks about in the fisheries area result from two problems. One is that the inshore fishery, for reasons which have nothing to do with markets but have to do with water temperatures and biology, was not successful last summer. It is a cyclical problem and many small plants did not have sufficient supplies to keep operating their normal season.

The second problem, which is a problem of increased inventories, especially on the part of large companies which have large offshore vessels, is one which is somewhat related to interest rates and somewhat related to the slowness of the United States market. To the suggestion the hon. member makes I will ask him a question in return.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. LeBlanc: When the time comes for us to ratify an agreement with the European Common Market, which agreement means that some fish may be caught in the Canadian zone in exchange for markets, will he support me?

* * *

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO HALT LAY-OFFS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, in the riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka there have been a great many lay-offs, as there have been in many others, and my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

In my home village of Burks Falls in my riding one third of the employees of Thompson-Heyland, a lumber firm, have been laid off because of poor lumber sales which are, of course, directly attributable to high interest rates. In light of this and numerous other industry cutbacks and closures which have thrown hundreds of thousands of Canadians out onto the streets I wonder if the minister, who is supposed to be the super salesman for Canada, could tell this House what he plans to do to stem this dangerous tide of unemployment and get industry and the economy rolling again. Let us hope he will tell me this will be dealt with in the budget, and let him make damned sure it is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will agree that the significant drop in the Bank of Canada rate yesterday, a decline of 59 basis points to 17.62 per cent, is a step in the right direction, especially since this Bank of Canada rate is now at its lowest level in some six months.

Mr. Andre: Hurrah!

Mr. Epp: What a laugh.

Mr. Gray: The decline in the economy of our major market for lumber, the United States, is obviously having an impact and, as I said the other day, I hope my hon. friend will not continue pressing for United States and United Kingdom type economic policies to be fully applied in this country. I am glad he confirms that we are looking forward to a budget with a very positive impact on the economy in a few days.

* * *

STATISTICS CANADA

LACK OF UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES FOR INDIAN PEOPLE

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister who replies for Statistics Canada, the Minister of Supply and Services. Today, as unemployment statistics are released, the government cannot tell this House how many Indian people are unemployed. Can the minister state why he has not asked Statistics Canada to bring forward this statistic? Is it because it might be so horrendous that it would be embarrassing?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that the figures that are tabulated by Statistics Canada do not include populations on Indian reserves. That has been justified in the past because of statistical principles which are employed in the compilation of the statistics that are published today.

Mr. Nielsen: Are they any the less people?

Mr. Blais: The Labour Force Survey cannot take into account the special conditions which affect Indians. As a result of that I have asked my officials to review the information that is available from Indian reserves and the Indian population in order to be able to provide supplementary information which would be of assistance to the government in its policy decisions.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

ENVIRONMENT CANADA PUBLICATION DEALING WITH MARGINAL LANDS

Mr. Bruce Lonsdale (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. The minister will be aware that the lands directorate of his department has recently published a document entitled "The Agricultural Use of Marginal Lands: A Review and Bibliography—Working Paper No. 13". Reports in the media concerning this document have caused a great deal of consternation in the agricultural community in my riding of Timiskaming and, indeed, in northern Ontario.

Could the minister inform the House as to the purpose and nature of this document and whether it is meant to be a statement of government intentions toward the marginal lands, or meant only to assist in preparing policies and programs to expand the agricultural development of these regions?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. The document to which he refers is not a policy document. It is a review of available material, and a bibliography document.

The Government of Canada issued, in November, 1980, its land use policy. I will be happy to send a copy of it to my hon. friend. The document to which he refers is simply meant to inform the public further, and more studies will be done by the government to help elaborate a future policy document.

* * *

FORESTRY

MARITIME FORESTRY RESEARCH COMPLEX AT UNIVERSITY OF NEW BRUNSWICK

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. With the alarming increase in unemployment in the Atlantic provinces, the highest in the nation, and the near collapse of the lumber industry which provides a large number of jobs, when will the minister announce the decision of his government to participate in the maritime forestry complex at the University of New Brunswick and thus provide a vital window on badly needed research for the whole forest industry?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is aware, and I hope other members of the House are aware, that the federal government recently issued its discussion paper on forest policy, giving in very clear terms the direction we believe the industry should take. I hope fairly soon to be able to make some further announcements about how we will achieve the objective we have there described.

The specific question to which the hon. member refers relating to the maritime forestry centre is one which we have under very active consideration. Discussions have been held with the provincial government and also with the Members of Parliament who represent New Brunswick in the House of Commons, and I expect within a fairly short time—I cannot give a specific date—to be able to make some announcement about whether the federal government will be participating and, if we do, to what degree we will be participating.

GRAIN

PROVISION OF HOPPER CARS IN 1982

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister confirm the public statement made by his colleague in the other place, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, on September 28, that he remains confident that the cabinet will be approving an order in the next few days for 1,000 to 1,500 more hopper cars for delivery next year? Could the minister also tell us whether the elusive newly oil-rich western development fund will be the source of the money for these purchases?

Hon Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in western transportation there are now three problems the government must address. The first one is branch line rehabilitation, and I have already addressed it in a way my hon. friend is familiar with by adding $45 million in the next three years to what was already being done for branch line rehabilitation.

The next problem we have to tackle is the necessity for hopper cars. The third one is the general capacity of the main line. There is no doubt we will address the latter two, the question being only whether we should address them together or separately.

The need for hopper cars is recognized. I have received the views of the transport co-ordinator, Mr. Radke, on this subject. A decision will be made soon. It is just a matter of deciding in what context, either singling the one matter out or putting it together with our consideration of the main line strategy.

* * *

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

DENIAL OF GRANT FOR OIL SEED CRUSHING PLANT AT MELFORT, SASK.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister who answers for DREE. Cargill Grain made an application to the minister's department for a grant for the construction of an oil seed crushing plant at Melfort. He apparently denied Cargill Grain this grant; this in a province where the population has dropped under our socialist government to the point where we have less population today than we had in the thirties. Could the minister indicate why Cargill Grain was denied this grant, which would have provided employment on a permanent basis, particularly now when there are people in the wood industry who are unemployed?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, obviously I will check immediately—

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I received—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1150)

Mr. De Bané: Concerning the application by Cargill regarding a grant, the department has done a thorough assessment of all the factors. Furthermore, I have listened to all the arguments that have been put to me in support of giving a grant. I would be very happy to send my hon. friend a letter expressing all the arguments about why we have come to the conclusion that public assistance for this investment is not absolutely essential.

* * *

SHIPBUILDING

PLACEMENT OF ORDERS WITH OVERSEAS YARDS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, $700 million worth of Canadian shipbuilding contracts were let to shipyards overseas, to the detriment of Canadian shipyards and jobs in Canada. Will the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce clarify his confusing answers of earlier this week with respect to a policy to be generated through consultation with the shipbuilding industry, or will the minister continue his current policy resulting in job losses to Canadians?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think I gave quite a straightforward answer the other day when I said that we were developing a new policy for the shipbuilding industry and that we were doing it on the basis of consultation with the shipbuilding industry, the workers in the industry, and the users and potential users of Canadian ships and equipment built in our shipyards. This consultation by a senior interdepartmental working group is almost completed. We anticipate being in a position to have discussions in cabinet before too long based on the results of this consultation.

In the meantime, we have been moving ahead with programs to strengthen our industry. At a ceremony in British Columbia the other day I announced major support for a new drydock for Burrard Yarrows Corporation which would involve some 400 jobs. A few days later in Saint John, New Brunswick, I announced the expansion of a drydock at Saint John Shipbuilding, with support by the federal government of some $12 million. This will also create there some four to five hundred jobs.

These are two initiatives we are taking in this area to strengthen this important industry, along with the putting in place of our program for assuring Canadian workers and Canadian companies of a full, fair and competitive basis with regard to the opportunities in the megaprojects offshore and in the high Arctic. This in itself is a major stimulus, a major source of job creation in the shipbuilding industry and in every industry across Canada. My hon. friends asked about what efforts we are making to create jobs in this country. This program alone is the source and will be the source of thousands of jobs for Canadian workers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: What a contrast with the inaction and failure of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT STATISTICS INCLUDE UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG INDIANS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, there exists a desperate situation for the native people in Canada in high unemployment, with record unemployment reaching, in some cases in bands in my area, such as Bigstone, 90 per cent unemployment, the Cold Lake band 85 per cent unemployment, Fort Mackay band 95 per cent unemployment, and Fort Chip band 80 per cent unemployment. My question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will the minister demand from his colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services, that Indian people be included in unemployment statistics, and will the minister make special efforts to see that this problem is addressed?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly be pleased to speak with my colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services. I think the hon. member may well be aware that we have had additional new funds in millions of dollars directed across Canada, a good portion of which has gone into Alberta. Money has been spent on an impact study during the course of this summer, with additional allocations to meet economic development, and moneys to create jobs for the Indian people, with particular emphasis in northern Alberta. All of this has been done in the last couple of months. It is certainly a constructive move in the right direction.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

MINISTER'S VIEWS ON INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On October 30, 1979, when interest rates were some 13 per cent the minister told the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs the following—and I want you to listen to this, Sir, because you said it—and I quote:

I want to point out—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Nielsen: Why did you allow that then?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: The minister said, and I quote:

> I want to point out . . . that . . . high interest rate policy would slow down the economy: it will mean the loss of thousands of jobs; it will mean increases in the cost of living . . . it will put housing beyond the reach of most middle and lower-income Canadians. It will hurt small business . . . it will hurt farmers . . .

And it will add, therefore, to the cost of food.

Now that interest rates are some 7 per cent higher than at that time, can the minister tell this House whether or not his views today are the same as they were in 1979? Do not give us this boloney that interest rates now went temporarily down by half a percentage point.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think we are all concerned about high interest rates. I shall repeat to my hon. friend and to this House that we have had a very positive movement of interest rates over the past several weeks. They are now lower than they have been at any time in the past six months. I think we all look forward to this progress continuing.

My hon. friend has not mentioned anything about the impact of interest rates in the U.S. market, the major source of our Canadian exports, especially the auto industry. The hon. member professes to be interested in the auto industry and yet he supports the kind of policies in the United Kingdom and in the United States that have created a weakness in our economy, corresponding to the weakness in the industries that we are trying to strengthen in this country. My hon. friend should change his policies instead of asking me about mine.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

RAILWAYS

EMPLOYEES' HOURS OF WORK

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It relates to the high capacity of tonnage the minister has allowed the trains to carry, and he has not done anything about reducing the hours of work of employees. The operating employees have to work as much as 11 hours under this heavy strain. When will the Minister of Transport bring forward legislation that will reduce the hours of work for these employees?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if I were to do that you and others would find me doing something that is not of my competence, of my jurisdiction. The relationship between employees and employers is not my responsibility; it is the responsibility of employees and employers. If I were to do that, I am quite sure everybody else in the House, possibly including the hon. member, would condemn me for it.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The Statistics Canada figures last night confirmed that Prince Edward Island still suffers virtually the worst unemployment problem in the country, including recent mass layoffs of provincial public employees. Is the Department of Regional Economic Expansion working on a program to replace the 15-year P.E.I. comprehensive development plan which terminates soon—it is now in its third and final phase—so as to avoid a complete economic disaster in the province when the plan does terminate?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to say to my hon. friend that I think exactly as he does. It is precisely because we are in the last phase of this 15-year comprehensive plan that we have come to the conclusion in cabinet that it would be totally unacceptable that, in three years' time, because the plan would end, there would be a reduction in our commitment to P.E.I. This is why we have taken the decision in cabinet to start immediately, and not in three years' time, to strengthen the federal government's capacity to deliver programs tailored to the needs and potential of this province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

HEALTH CONSEQUENCES OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, as you will know, it is a scientific fact that as unemployment rates go up, heart attacks go up, alcoholism rates go up, and admissions to mental hospitals go up. I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Laugh about it you idiots. Listen! Listen and learn.

Mr. Hawkes: These are the consequences of the policy promoted by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On behalf of the Canadian people I should like to know if the minister can assure the House that there will be an increase in hospital funding to take care of the health victims of his economic policy?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1200)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be better for the hon. member to ask for an increase in funding to help the people who are harmed by the nonsense implied in the hon. member's question.

Mr. Clark: Nonsense! You know nothing about what you are doing, Herb.

* * *

BANKS AND BANKING

RATES CHARGED TO SMALL BUSINESSES

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. A small but typical of thousands of examples of unemployment in small businesses is the closing of two restaurants in my riding causing 75 lost jobs, only because the operators simply cannot borrow at current rates to carry them through the marginal winter period. Despite what the minister said about the lowered rate yesterday, this morning in Stratford small borrowers could not benefit from any lowering of interest rates. Does the minister agree with the Minister of Finance who said that the banks are not discharging their responsibilities to small borrowers? If he agrees, what steps is he taking to discharge his responsibility to prevent small business lay-offs?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, certainly in this connection if the banks are not reflecting the lowering of the bank rate in the way they are dealing with smaller business, I would certainly associate myself, as I have in the past, with the remarks of the Minister of Finance about the failure of banks to discharge their responsibilities. I will certainly be working with the Minister of Finance on this particular issue.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ELECTRONIC VOTING SYSTEM

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, we have become so accustomed to seeing you in the chair that we have actually referred to you as Madam Speaker. I believe this is the first occasion on which you have handled question period. On behalf of all of us I can say that you have done a first-class job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: My question is directed to the President of the Privy Council and government House leader. Last night, thanks to the good will among House leaders, we were spared the necessity of voting 40 or 50 times. The 225 Members of Parliament who were here thank them for that. The fact of the matter is that it is a mind-stultifying procedure. Would the President of the Privy Council consider referring to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, or setting up a special committee, to study it, the possibility of an electronic voting system in the House?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his question. I feel it is particularly worthy of consideration, coming from a member who is regularly in the House and is dedicated to improving the parliamentary system and procedures. I can assure him that I will give his question very serious thought and that sometime in the weeks or months to come, we shall look into this important matter with a view to making this Parliament more modern and more efficient.

* * *

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DEANS—PROCEDURE RESPECTING S.O. 43 MOTIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat reluctant to raise a point of order today for the very reason that this is your first occasion in the chair during question period. However, when something is out of order, it is out of order. Unfortunately, today something was indeed out of order, in my judgment.

Today during motions, the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) rose and placed before you a motion under Standing Order 43. As you are aware, the first question put to the House asks for unanimous consent to waive the notice provision. That question was quite properly put to the House. The only obligation on the Chair at that point was to determine whether the Chair heard any dissenting voices. The Chair, in the wisdom of the Chair, did not hear any dissenting voices; therefore the motion was then read to the House. After the motion was read to the House, the Chair asked for unanimous consent to proceed with the motion. I put to you, Sir, that it is quite out of the ordinary and in fact unnecessary to obtain unanimous consent of the House at that point. All that is required at that point is for the Chair to put the motion, and then the motion is debated in the way of all other motions.

The fact that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) rose and claimed that he had refused unanimous consent is irrelevant and therefore cannot be taken into consideration by the Chair once the Chair has decided that it heard no dissenting voices.

I ask the Chair to review this procedure over the course of the weekend to determine whether or not the facts as I have presented them to the Chair—and in fact as they will appear in the "blues", since I have read them—are accurate; whether it is true that there is no need for unanimous consent for the motion to be considered by the House after the request for waiving of notice has been given; and whether in fact there ought not to have been then an opportunity given to any member of the House to debate the motion.

I realize that one cannot go back into history and have the debate now; I am not asking for that. However, I am asking that the matter be clarified, that it be recognized—and I put it without malice—that in fact there was an error, and that the procedure be clarified for future consideration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's point is well taken. The Chair was concerned when the motion was put—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I speak to the point of order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief before you make your ruling. The facts related by the hon. member who raised the point of order are almost accurate. But I am constrained to say that when unanimous consent was sought by the Chair, there indeed was a "no"; I heard it myself.

Mr. Deans: That is not the point.

Mr. Nielsen: Indeed I should be recorded in Hansard as having heckled across the aisle, "Smith said no"; he heard me. Forgive me for using his name. Indeed there were other noes which I heard over there; there were no noes on this side.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker did not hear any.

Mr. Nielsen: But at that point, the hon. member is quite right, there were only two courses to follow—either a debate must arise or the question must be put. Neither course was followed. Perhaps that was an instant oversight on the part of the Chair, but in any event the debate could only have lasted about two and a half minutes because that was all the time left on the clock.

Mr. Deans: That is irrelevant. Mr. Speaker, may I rise to comment further on the point?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have already heard the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain. When the motion was called the Chair at that moment did not hear a "no", but the Chair clearly heard some dissents prior to reading the motion. This creates a problem, and we will certainly review the record. But before the motion was read to the House there were dissents, and it appeared to the Chair at that point that there was not unanimous consent. However, the point of the hon. member is well taken. He put his point courteously. The Chair will review the record. He asked for clarification of procedure which appears to be reasonable; the Chair will defer on the matter.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on another point of order?

Mr. Deans: I am rising on another point of order which I would like the Chair to consider.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member speaking to the same point of order or to another point of order?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a similar but different point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I should like the Chair to consider whether in any circumstance, having once determined that there is no dissenting voice and having read the motion to the House of Commons, the Chair is then given the option of rehearing what took place previously.

• (1210)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is precisely the same point the hon. member made before. The Chair is quite prepared to review the record and consider the matter.

I repeat, the Chair at first did not hear dissenting voices but did hear dissenting voices prior to the motion being read. Possibly the procedure that was adopted, as the hon. member very correctly points out, should be re-examined and there should be a clarification.

At this point I should like to let the matter rest for the moment.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

MR. CLARKE—VIA RAIL—CUTBACKS IN PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I rise to lay upon the Table a petition signed by many residents of the lower mainland of British Columbia. The nature of this petition is a protest over the announced government policy on rail cuts. The petitioners join the thousands of Canadians who have already registered their objections to the reduction in rail service announced on July 27 by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin).

Their purpose is to inform the government of their objections to these policies. These petitioners claim that the cuts are unwarranted, that they undermine national unity, and further, that they are contrary to the fuel conservation measures advocated by this Liberal government.

The petitioners hope the government will listen to and act upon their wishes.

Order Paper Questions

MR. WENMAN—PROPOSED INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and responsibility to present a petition on behalf of constituents. The nature of this petition is to protest the proposed increase in postal rates. The purpose of the petition is to either cancel the increase or have the government ensure that the quality of service is correspondingly increased.

These petitioners hope that some action will be taken to alleviate this deplorable situation that is beginning to create hardship, especially for senior citizens and others on fixed incomes who suffer the most from the burden of high interest rates and high inflation.

* * *

[Translation]

THE BUDGET

ORDER OF THE DAY FOR PRESENTING BUDGET

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 60(2) to request that an order of the day be designated for Thursday, November 12, 1981, at 8 p.m., for the purpose of enabling the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to make a budget presentation in the House.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,344, 2,229, 2,625, 3,010 and 3,147.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

TRAVEL PERMITS FOR SOVIET DIPLOMATS

Question No. 1,344—Mr. Jelinek:

1. How many Soviet diplomats, restricted to the confines of the National Capital Region, have asked for special permits to travel in other parts of Canada in the past (a) six months (b) year (c) two years (d) three years (e) five years and what are their names and their position?

2. How many times did each apply and how many applications were (a) approved (b) rejected?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1 and 2. (a) The information requested has been submitted in reply to question No. 1550 tabled June 25, 1981.

2. (b) When the Soviet government imposed restrictions on the movement of Canadian personnel in the U.S.S.R., the Canadian government, on a reciprocal basis, imposed similar travel restrictions on Soviet personnel in Canada. Staff of the Soviet embassy must give the Department of External Affairs 48 hours' written notice of the intent to travel (24 hours for travel to Mirabel airport and to Montreal). Each such notice is carefully examined by the Canadian authorities. There have been instances of members of the Soviet embassy staff making oral requests which would have been refused on grounds that prescribed procedures had not been followed. There have also been occasions when, because of unsubstantiated Soviet travel refusals for staff of the Canadian embassy in Moscow, the department has, on a reciprocal basis, not permitted Soviet representatives to travel in Canada. It would be contrary to normal diplomatic practice to make a public disclosure of such instances where travel was not allowed.

PAYMENT TO GRAIN PRODUCERS

Question No. 2,229—Mr. Gustafson:

Will a payment relating to the Russian embargo on grain be made to the grain producers and, if so (a) on what date (b) in what amount?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): On the date this question was asked, a complete significant answer was not available. Compensation to producers as a result of the partial grain embargo with the U.S.S.R. was announced by the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board on June 18, 1981, for a total of $81 million. Payments commenced on September, 1981, and the bulk of the moneys have been mailed to producers.

LETTER CONCERNING IMMIGRATION PROCEDURES

Question No. 2,625—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Minister of Employment and Immigration receive a letter dated September 19, 1980, from Mr. D.R. Taylor, then an immigration officer, concerning a three-month relief tour of duty that Mr. Taylor had completed in India and, if so, on what date?

2. Did Mr. Taylor attach to his letter a report on his temporary duty in India in which he made a number of serious allegations with regard to Canadian immigration activities in India and the people being dealt with there and, if so, what were the allegations?

3. Did Mr. Taylor receive a reply to his letter and (a) if so, on what date and what was the reply (b) if not, does the minister intend to give Mr. Taylor a reply to the allegations?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. No, but a letter dated September 10, 1980 was received on September 15, 1980.

2. A report was attached to Mr. Taylor's letter reflecting his personal views of certain provisions of the Immigration Act and regulations. He also commented on certain practices, procedures and difficulties that are encountered by our officers in India when processing applicants wishing to come to Canada.

3. No, (a) N/A. (b) No. The minister regularly receives letters from employees expressing their views on various policies, practices and procedures. These letters are noted by the minister and referred to the appropriate officials for review and necessary action. This procedure was followed with Mr. Taylor's submission.

GUARANTORS FOR PASSPORTS

Question No. 3,010—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Will the government give immediate consideration to permitting licensed pharmacists to act as guarantors for passport application purposes?

2. Did the government receive such a request from the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association and, if so (a) on what date (b) what was the nature of the government's reply (c) does the government intend to grant the request and (i) if so, on what date (ii) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The eligible passport guarantor list is regularly reviewed and the present list is considered sufficient to meet the needs of the Canadian public.

2. (a) The Department of External Affairs received requests from the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association dated December 5, 1980 and May 15, 1981. (b) & (c) The department's reply of December 24, 1980, stated that it was the experience of the Passport Office that the present list of guarantors meets the needs of the travelling public. The association was also provided with a copy of the paper on "Passport Guarantor Policy" which was distributed to all Members of Parliament on December 9, 1980. This paper explains in detail the guarantor system and the reasons underlying the policy. In reply to the association's second request, it was again stated that the current guarantor list adequately meets both the needs of the travelling public and the Passport Office.

CONTRACT FOR PRINTING PAMPHLETS

Question No. 3,147—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 2,791 which stated in part that Hesson and White Printers Ltd. of Kingston received the sum of $3,264.55 to print 20,000 pamphlets for the St. Lawrence Islands National Park (a) what are all reasons that this firm received the contract (b) were any other firms allowed to bid on the printing and, if not, for what reason (c) for what reason was the printing not awarded to a printing firm in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville where most of the park is located?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): (a) Hewson and White Printing (Kingston) Ltd.* submitted the lowest bid for the project.

(b) Yes.

(c) The lowest bid for the project was not received from a firm within the constituency of Leeds-Grenville.

*The name of the firm was incorrectly given as Hesson and White Printers Ltd. in the answer to part 4 (a) of question No. 2,791.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if I might draw to the attention of the parliamentary secretary the fact that question No. 2,042 has been on the Order Paper since January 29 and has not been answered. As it deals with the total cost of the Prime Minister's December-January world tour and the percentage of those costs that was paid for by the taxpayers of Canada, I think it is an affront to this Parliament that for ten months we have been denied that knowledge.

Labour Adjustment Benefits

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the representations made by the hon. member.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a similar point of order. A couple of weeks ago I drew to the attention of the parliamentary secretary that question No. 2,035 dated January 27 has not yet been answered, and that question No. 2,519 dated May 21 has not been answered. Both of these questions concern the cost of air flights using DND aircraft. One of them concerned the Prime Minister and the other concerned DND jet aircraft.

We have heard assurances before from the parliamentary secretary that he will look into this but nothing ever happens. This is exacerbated by an answer by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mrs. Appolloni) to a written question about two weeks ago from the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) which said that answers to these questions and requests for information would be provided in October, 1981. Mr. Speaker, October has gone by and they are still not answered. Will this game go on for years or will the government bring in some kind of Draconian system instead of carrying out this charade every second Friday?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I will make further inquiries with regard to these matters.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour) moved: That Bill C-78, an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be read for the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the second reading of Bill C-78 designed to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code. The bill reflects Labour Canada's participation in the $350 million Industry and Labour Adjustment Program announced in January 1981 by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané), the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and my predecessor, the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan). As most hon. members are already aware, the various aspects of the program being proposed in this bill are aimed at facilitating labour adjustment by increasing the responsibility of employers and government with respect to displaced employees. They also provide for increased participation of employees in the process of deciding on provisions for adjustment in case of lay-off.

[English]

The major features of this bill—authority to provide early retirement pensions to employees who are unable to obtain alternative employment; an innovative process for dealing fairly with mass terminations; and improvement in severance pay provisions—flow from measures already existing and from recent extensive consultations with business and unions, as well as from the unanimous report of a tripartite commission of inquiry headed by Professor Carrothers. The report was handed down in late 1979.

The early retirement program has been in operation for several years in the clothing industry, the textile industry and the footwear industry, based upon the authority of a previous Appropriation Act. This bill will permit the immediate extension of early retirement benefits to qualified persons in the communities of Windsor, Tracy-Sorel, Port Cartier, Sept Isles, Schefferville and Sydney, N.S., and to industries which have been, or are to be, designated under the industrial and labour adjustments program.

● (1220)

As the House is aware, some 500 persons are being assisted by the current program. While it is very regrettable when a firm in a vulnerable industry closes its doors or is forced to reduce its operations and persons are left without employment, the array of measures available under government programs—job creation, job finding, mobility, training and so forth—coupled with early retirement as a last resort, go a long way toward helping the affected worker. There are several communities where textile and clothing firms have folded under international trading pressures or economic circumstances and employees have found themselves jobless.

In most cases other government programs have been able to provide alternative employment in short order, but for those who cannot move, cannot find something else or cannot be retrained, at least at that point in time, the early retirement benefit is a measure which maintains income in a manner consistent with human dignity. At the same time, the government does not simply leave the person there unaided. Efforts continue to help the worker find other permanent employment or to create the necessary jobs.

Consider the case of a recent lay-off involving 52 people in a large textile plant in Drummondville. All the people laid off were over 54 years of age and, therefore, eligible for assistance under the former federal adjustment program. It helped people bridge the gap until such time as they found other employment or were eligible for pensions.

Now, an older worker who finds himself without a job through no fault of his own after working ten years in, say, an auto firm, who has exhausted his unemployment insurance benefits and yet is not eligible for pensions, will be able to call upon the labour adjustment benefits program for assistance.

The innovative process for dealing fairly with mass terminations stems from the provisions already in the Canada Labour Code requiring adequate notice to be given; but notice is not enough. As members will be aware, there have been several cases in the last couple of years where firms closed, leaving employees high and dry without termination benefits—severance pay, pension rights and buy-out of equity in their jobs. The result has been that employees engaged in strike action sometimes had virtually to occupy the plant in order to force justice out of their erstwhile employers.

This bill will require employers in the federal jurisdiction to negotiate a fair termination settlement package with their displaced employees or union. May I remind hon. members that the federal jurisdiction encompasses railways, trucking, shipping, banking, grain handling and other national infrastructure industries. It will provide that, in the absence of agreement, a third party will make a final and binding decision that will eliminate the necessity for employees to engage in desperate measures of "industrial action" in order to uphold their rights.

The measure we are proposing today is something unique in Canada and probably in North America at this point. I believe it will bring justice to persons caught up in mass terminations caused by economic and technological change. Enlightened and socially responsible employers are already pursuing this kind of process when forced to curtail operations.

I believe this bill is sound, desirable and in the interest of Canadian workers, and I urge members on all sides of this House to support it.

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, first let me say that I am very pleased to be able to speak to this bill. In particular, because of its being introduced by an old friend and colleague, I would like to congratulate the new minister on his first bill in this House.

When the matter goes to committee, we on this side of the House will be asking some questions and proposing some changes of a technical nature, particularly relating to appointments and some other matters. Also in committee we will be raising the question of coverage. I am sure it is no surprise to the minister that this bill will not have a very good effect with respect to classes of workers that he has in mind who are women. By the very nature of their jobs and employment record over the last 20 years, women will not find the same kind of coverage as male workers.

Let me state clearly it is not a responsibility of the minister in that regard, but it is something to which he may want to give further consideration. There is a clause of the bill which allows for greater flexibility by the board in certain cases. The minister may want to give some consideration to expansion of that clause so that it clearly states the board will be able to deal more equitably with regard to women workers in the work force.

My comments today are going to deal primarily with the problem that the bill is intended to deal with, not in the past but in the future. With great respect to my colleague the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), this bill looks at what the problem has been and is right now. It does very little to deal with what is increasingly a very fast growing scene with respect to employment, unemployment and job creation in this country.

It is interesting that the bill should be dealt with today when the unemployment and job-creation statistics came from Statistics Canada. It is worth referring to the unemployment problem and the job problem in this country. This bill is a fairly puny attempt at trying to deal with what the minister is pleased to call an assault on technological change in this country.

The unemployment rate in this country is now at 8.3 per cent. That means that on a seasonally adjusted basis we now have, as recorded up to October 17, 989,000 Canadians out of work. If I just left it there, it would be an awesome enough figure for members on all sides to consider when looking at the specific individual misery that causes. However, if I look at it a little more closely, I see that it affects particular groups even more so. Unfortunately, these groups are not covered in any significant way by the bill. The hardest hit group are young people between the ages of 15 and 24. This month alone there are 32,000 people in this age group who are unemployed and have lost their jobs in one month's time. There are 99,000 fewer jobs than in June 1981 for this group, and 44 per cent, almost half, of the 989,000 unemployed are between the ages of 15 and 24.

It is indeed a terrible thing at an advanced age to find yourself unemployed because it speaks to how you feel about yourself and your family, how they feel about you, your standing in the community and your sense of worth. It is a different experience but just as miserable for a person who is just starting out to find that one of every two who looks for a job will not find one.

● (1230)

That is the situation the government has us in today. Putting aside those people between the ages of 15 and 24 looking at geographic reasons, the province of Quebec lost 9,000 jobs last month alone. Unemployment in the province of Quebec is now at 11.5 per cent. That is the highest unemployment rate for that province in modern times. Of those entering the labour force over the past year, 44 per cent were unable to find a job. One further statistic shows that 132,000 fewer people are working today compared to this times last year.

In spite of comments being made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), about job creation, the reality is in fact the reverse. Unemployment has risen and job creation has fallen. Those are the facts. All the words from ministers of the Crown will not change that reality for the Canadians who are suffering.

We agree that this bill should have been brought forward some time ago. But for those people who are in their fifties who will be laid off as a consequence of a depressed industry, and looking at the total situation with respect to employment opportunities in this country, this bill is indeed far, far too late. It is neither very strong nor very effective for the great majority of the people who will be affected.

The minister also spoke of technological change. I wish he had not said that because he at least shows that his department has some nodding acquaintance that we have been in a technological revolution for some time. It is that technological revolution which the minister is not taking into account in this bill.

Mr. Pepin: Transportation.

Mr. Crombie: The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) yells "transportation". We have been trying to tell the minister for some weeks now that a revolution has been going on, and the revolution is about him and his policies with respect to VIA Rail.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: The only revolution that might help is if he were put in another job so we could have someone else who would begin listening to Canadians who are concerned with the revolution that has been taking place in transportation.

Mr. Pepin: You are wrong.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer some thoughts today to the minister and his department with respect to this bill. Both he and the Minister of Employment and Immigration have certainly demonstrated no action with respect to placing this country in a position of competitiveness in the face of technological change and they have spent precious little time on it. For the past 20 years the minister's colleagues have been putting their heads in the sand about what is going on in this world concerning technological change. That is the reason the minister brought this bill forward.

We are in the midst of a revolution of scientific, economic and technological dimensions which will change forever the work place in Canada. Our productivity and competitiveness as a nation and our relations with one another as human beings will be changed. Let me use one example of that change which is already about us. I think of robots because that is perhaps the most dramatic and obvious example, particularly if one thinks of their utilization in factories. Already in the world there are robots that can paint cars, command milling machines, weld auto parts, hoist turbine blades, pack candies, wash windows, and in Australia robots shear sheep.

We must remember that robots never go on strike, they never call in sick, they work double shifts without complaint, they never file insurance claims or go on vacations and they work well in hostile environments. There are approximately 15,000 robots in Japan, approximately 4,000 in the United States and approximately 5,000 in Germany. There are precious few in Canada. But more importantly, when those changes come, and come they will, the best the government can do with respect to technological change is to deal only with those people who are in industries that are being depressed by government policies and only those people who are in their mid-fifties. That help is needed but it shows that the government is totally ill equipped to deal with the technological change that is coming upon this country.

The growth and development of the Canadian economy in the 1980s, the 1990s and into the twenty-first century will require a fundamental change in our educational opportunities, our scientific research, our technology and technological education and in our human resources development. Specifically as a nation we will need to develop policies that will take us in those directions.

Education, for example, is a provincial responsibility. It is also a national concern. It was announced by the Minister of Finance and then I think denounced by another minister the other day that this government would cut $1.5 billion out of the established programs financing in federal aid to education. That act alone shows that the government has no understanding of the role educational institutions have to play in relation to technological change so that we will not have the unemployed people the Minister of Labour is trying to protect. Educational institutions depend fundamentally on federal aid. Forty-five per cent of the operating costs of universities in this country is provided by the federal government. If the Minister of Finance has his way, educational institutions will find themselves in very great difficulty. That difficulty will further expand the already terrible situation for young people who are between the ages of 15 and 24 years, among whom already almost one out of every two are without jobs.

We should begin to provide leadership, and I hope that the federal government will offer leadership in this regard, although I do not see anything that tells me that the federal government will do so, in co-operation with the provinces, regarding the equalization of educational opportunity in this country. We need to ensure the existence of world class institutions of advanced education in particular fields. We need support for world class programs in research, both basic and applied. We have to ensure high-level technology training to develop people with world class skills and abilities. We have to provide support for unique and fundamentally important resources, such as archives, museums, rare books and scholarship programs.

When I hear the minister talk about attempting to deal with technological change, and when I hear his colleagues talk about their concerns with respect to policies of cutting back on aid to education, it shows me again that the government will not take us into the future but back to 1960. This country has to equip itself for the 1980s, the 1990s and the twenty-first century. The policies which the government is proposing will not bring us the excellence we need. Indeed, these policies will maintain the mediocrity which the government has imposed when it comes to research and development in Canada.

The bill itself, as I indicated earlier, is one which we will deal with in committee in terms of its specifics. I indicated that one of the specifics was that of the problems women face in the work force. The difficulty is that the regulations imposed by the legislation are such that most women, given the fact that many are regarded as playing an important role in raising children within the household, together with the kinds of jobs they have been forced into over the last number of years, will not have work opportunities. This is a problem in respect of which I hope the minister will take us into his confidence in committee so that we can see whether he is willing to expand that section which deals with the discretion the board will have.

● (1240)

The matter I dealt with a moment ago with respect to technological change is one with which I am hoping the Minister of Labour will be able to deal. The Minister of Employment and Immigration so far has failed to do anything of a significant nature for us. Clearly the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce likes to talk only about announcing programs without putting them into effect. The Minister of Labour has a unique opportunity because, as a new minister, he can carve out new opportunities and grounds in relation to his own responsibility. This is clearly a situation where responsibility is going from one minister to another, and for very good reason. I think the new minister may be able to do something the former minister could not.

When the new minister is dealing with his colleagues he may want to look again at policy with respect to the established programs financing. I dwell on this because the established programs financing, which was established in 1977, as the minister may recall, was to allow flexibility in programs for provincial administration while at the same time putting a cap on committed federal government expenditures. That was the result of a request, interestingly enough, made by the federal government.

Up until 1977 federal aid to education, hospital insurance and medical care was handled on a cost-share basis. That was not acceptable to the federal government because it wished to have some control over its expenditures, and it was becoming increasingly unacceptable to the provinces because they found themselves having to live within criteria they did not want as established by the federal government. Both sides decided in 1977 that it was of mutual benefit to make a change in the way in which moneys flowed from the federal government to the provinces.

That change came about in 1977 under what was called established programs financing. What it established was that under those programs in education, hospital insurance and medical care the provinces would get a lump sum of money or a block fund, an amount to be determined by the relationship of the province to the increase in the gross national product.

I emphasize this because the government in the past two years, certainly in the last year and a half, rather than dealing with our real problems has sought to blame the provinces for not carrying out what this government was pleased to call the provinces' responsibilities with respect to education and medical care.

The fact of the matter is that it was the federal government that asked for the change. Any reading of the words of the then minister responsible, who is now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), and indeed, a reading of a speech of the Prime Minister of the time, will show they extolled the virtues of the established programs financing because it gave the very flexibility for which they now condemn the provincial governments.

I am one who is interested in having the provinces of this country contribute more in the field of education. We need not less money from the federal government for education, research and development, but more. There are a number of sins this government has committed over the past ten years in respect of education for which it will have to fess up. One of the things it will have to make sure it discontinues is blaming the provinces without putting up the money and the leadership.

Every educational institution, every corporation interested in on-the-job training, every province that is interested in apprenticeship training and every school that is interested in technical training is looking for leadership. This is not the kind of leadership that means the federal government collects the money, spends the money and therefore controls it centrally. The great difficulty we have had so far with this government is that every time it contributes money it thinks it ought to control the policies relating to it. That is not the way our federalism works. I have noted in the past few days that a number of people have begun to understand how the federal system actually does work, and that is why so many of us were pleased the other night. One of the things this government ought to remember is that although the parochialists may be bad, the centralizers are just as bad.

When it comes to providing money for employment, research and development and education, this is done best at a local level. Small and medium-size business in this country create more than half the jobs, and the important relationship between small and medium-size businesses is their relationship to the municipalities, the regions and the provinces in which they exist. If the federal government thinks that by the power of the purse it is going to create educational programs for this country, it is wrong. That is not the kind of leadership the country needs. The leadership must come as a result of a co-operative endeavour between the provinces and the federal government. The existing council of ministers of education needs to be expanded. I might say that two parliamentary committees have already reported and have attempted to make sure that the federal government, first of all, does not cut out the $1.5 billion federal aid to education, and second, that the federal government understands that in its endeavours its leadership is required to make sure local areas are getting the funds. It must provide the leadership to make sure that the provinces, regions, municipalities and local areas are able to work with small and medium-size businesses in their own areas.

I continue to emphasize leadership because we have had so little from the federal government in this field for so long. That is why many other countries which we previously regarded as being behind us in the technological field, in education, in productivity, in competitiveness and in standard of living, are now ahead of us. They are ahead of us because we constantly see bills from this government dealing with real problems that could have been solved earlier.

An hon. Member: Why not solved by the provinces?

Mr. Crombie: My hon. friend asks why not by the provinces. In the three years I have been here I have heard minister after minister on the government side, except for a nine-month period, constantly state that our problems are the fault of somebody else. I have heard them blame the provinces and world conditions. All other countries live in the same world, yet we have gone from second place in terms of competitiveness and standard of living to somewhere around fourteenth. The fact of the matter is that the federal government has allowed this country to forget that we established our standard of living in this twentieth century through a belief in the validity of science and the ability of human beings to acquire research and development techniques to exploit science for economic development. That is the kernel of what we are talking about.

• (1250)

When the minister talks about technological change, all he is talking about is what we were involved in many years ago. That is, the realization that the only way in which we progress in this world in economic development is through science, research and development and on-the-job training. All of that has been lost.

In 1951, the Massey commission advised the government of that time that its role in economic development, particularly related to technical and technological education, was not only important but crucial. That was 30 years ago. In 1951, the Massey commission said that the federal government must continue the same aid which it had provided in the 1940s during the war, and late in the 1940s for employment rehabilitation for people who came back from overseas.

In 1940, this country took its first step as a federal government in the field of technological education. It expanded and intensified it during the 1940s. In 1951 when Mr. Massey recommended it be expanded again, we did so for about three years.

Interestingly enough, I offer this as a non-partisan thought, which it is. It expanded again in 1958, 1959 and 1960, when federal aid was expanded to technical and technological institutions in this country. It closed down again in the mid-1960s and it has become worse throughout the 1970s, a whole decade. There has been no fresh program for a whole decade, indeed no fresh thought by the Liberal governments we have had, on how we move the country back into international competitiveness, with excellence rather than mediocrity in our research and development as our major criteria.

Mr. Caccia: Come on!

Mr. Crombie: The minister says "Come on", Mr. Speaker. I would have to say that he knows it to be true. In fact, the minister knows in another incarnation when he was involved in a training school of his own in Toronto how hard it was to get any support from the federal government.

Mr. Caccia: Provincial government.

Mr. Crombie: From the federal government. He used to tell me about how he might get some help. That is the truth of the matter, Mr. Speaker.

There are a number of matters which I could elaborate on with respect to the specifics of this bill. As I mentioned, I will be dealing with them in committee, as will other members. At this point I shall simply let another colleague address this bill. I know there are a number of members in our party who are concerned that the bill simply shows that again the federal government is looking at problems it created ten years ago and not to the future.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, members of our party look upon any proposal to create a labour adjustment assistance program as one which will only have any real merit or relevance if it is part of a planned objective and policy which takes into account the needs of workers in a particular industry. It will only work when we have as our objective the establishment of the principle that every person in this country who wants to work is able to find a job.

It is interesting—coincidental, of course—that the minister brings forth this bill on the same day that Statistics Canada produces the grim report that approximately 989,000 Canadians are unemployed. That means 8.2 per cent of the work force across this country are out of work. The minister should remember that that figure of 989,000 is not the factual figure. The real figure is substantially higher, probably 1,300,000 who are unemployed. The reason the figure is higher—and this was mentioned during question period today—is that the figures calculated by Statistics Canada do not include the tens of thousands of native people living on reserves where the unemployment rate is anywhere from 60 per cent to 90 per cent for a good part of the year. It does not include the tens of thousands of people in slow growth areas such as Atlantic Canada, the Gaspé Peninsula and certain parts of Manitoba where jobs are so few that thousands of people who want work have simply given up looking. Of course, if they do not look for work, they are not counted among those unemployed.

Mr. Young: The disabled also.

Mr. Orlikow: My colleague from Beaches in Toronto mentions the disabled.

I was a member of the parliamentary task force on Employment for the '80s which looked at the prospects for employment for approximately the next ten years. The task force, which was made up of four members from the Liberal Party, two Conservative members and myself from the New Democratic Party, studied the question of employment and listened to people from one end of the country to the other, people at the grass roots level. We considered the problems of unemployment, why there was unemployment, and then gave consideration to the question of full employment.

I do not do this often, but I want to put on record a few sections of that report. I do this, Mr. Speaker, because it is not unusual for members of this House to hear members of our party, including myself, say that it is not only possible but imperative that we adopt policies that would permit every person in Canada who wants to work to be gainfully employed.

Here we have a report signed and supported, but for a couple of very small reservations, by the two Conservative members and approved by the four Liberal members which deals specifically with the whole question of full employment, without which I think what the minister is bringing forward today is really an exercise in futility. In saying that I am being very charitable to the minister.

Let me now put on the record a few paragraphs from this report:

> Task force members did not accept that there was no solution to the present trade-offs between high unemployment on the one hand and high inflation on the other. They felt that human ingenuity and political will should provide better solutions.

The Liberal members agreed to that. It then goes on to quote from a white paper on employment and income issued in 1945 by a Liberal government. That report said:

> The Government has stated unequivocally its adoption of a high and stable level of employment and income, and thereby higher standards of living, as a major aim of Government policy. It has been made clear that, if it is to be achieved, the endeavour to achieve it must pervade all government economic policy. It must be wholeheartedly accepted by all economic groups and organizations as a great national objective, transcending in importance all sectional and group interests.

If there is one group that seems to have forgotten that important recommendation of the white paper, it is the Liberal government of 1981 which is ignoring the advice of the Liberal government of 1945.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, and pursuant to Standing Order 2(1), I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, just before we terminated the debate at one o'clock I put on the record the central principle of the white paper tabled just after World War II by that most eminent Liberal cabinet minister of the day, C. D. Howe, which was that that Liberal government committed itself to work toward full employment. When it was established, the Economic Council set its goal in its first annual report in 1964. With regard to employment the report said, and I quote:

—a calculation of the possible, . . . a target to be aimed at, . . . not the highest level of attainment under the best of all possible circumstances, but rather an indicator of productive capabilities under reasonable expectations of performance.

With this in mind the council projected that a 97 per cent rate of employment, or a 3 per cent rate of unemployment in the labour force, would be a realistic objective.

For a number of years between the mid-1960s and 1967 we actually had an unemployment rate of just 3.8 per cent. However, in the 1970s that 3 per cent target disappeared. Indeed, when the Liberal government passed amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act in 1971, it based its legislation on the principle that the average unemployment would be 4 per cent and that over the 4 per cent rate the government would pick up the deficits which would be created in payments of unemployment insurance benefits.

In recent years the government seems to have moved away from earlier ideas about full employment. The Governor of the Bank of Canada has suggested that there is full employment when we have 7 per cent or 8 per cent unemployment. In the budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) introduced in November of 1980 he projected—and accepted—an unemployment rate in excess of 8 per cent for the first five years of the 1980s. I point out that this is double the 4 per cent rate the government found acceptable in 1971.

Given these facts and the fact I pointed out when I began my speech, that the official rate of unemployment accepted by Statistics Canada—which, if anything, underestimates the amount of unemployment we have—is now 8.4 per cent, the task force which, as I pointed out, had a majority of members who were Liberals and was chaired by a former cabinet minister, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), said in connection with the question of full employment—I just want to put this last paragraph on the record:

Canada needs an industrial strategy that will put people to work, and a government determined to achieve this goal must set goals for lowering unemployment. This strategy should aim to achieve full employment, which the task force considers to be 4 per cent unemployment. Government policy should be designed to meet this goal as soon as possible.

One can see how far the policies adopted by the government are from the objective set out by that task force in which Liberal members were very heavily involved.

What we have in the bill proposed by the minister today is supposedly an adjustment assistance program, but it is a program which excludes nearly all the people who lose their jobs. I will not go into the details now. Some of my colleagues will follow in the debate a little later, but the program excludes people who have worked less than ten years and people who are not yet in their fifties. I am sure that if the bill were in effect now, virtually none of the 2,000 people who received their lay-off notices yesterday when the Admiral Corporation closed down would have been eligible for assistance.

• (1410)

We reject this very picayune approach of the government. We believe that an adjustment program, as I said earlier, must be part of a strategy designed to give employment to all those who want to work. If people are unemployed, then the adjustment program, along with the other programs we have such as unemployment insurance, must assure assistance to people laid off through no fault of their own, to a large extent because of the mistaken economic policies of the government and the high interest rate policies adopted by this government which have created situations where there are no sales for the companies for which they work.

With interest rates at 20 per cent for housing mortgages, it is not surprising that tens of thousands of workers in the forest industry are unemployed. And with housing sales plummeting to near zero, it is not surprising that Canadian citizens are not buying appliances. That is the reason the Admiral Corporation had no customers for its product. It is not surprising, Mr. Speaker, that the automobile industry is in such dire straits.

Given that situation, what does the minister propose in the bill? First to qualify you must be a Canadian citizen or a permanent resident, have been laid off as a result of non-cyclical factors, the total lay-off must equal 10 per cent of employees or 50 employees. You must also have been employed for 10 years out of the past 15 years in the industry, be 54 to 65 years of age, exhausted you unemployment insurance benefits and have no prospects for employment or are able to find only a low paying job.

What the government's objective was when it drafted this bill, Mr. Speaker, was to find ways to exclude as many people as it could, rather than design a bill that would include as many people as possible who need protection because they have been laid off.

It is not surprising, Mr. Speaker, that various groups of people, groups like the Canadian Labour Congress, individual unions and people in academic positions, people concerned about the welfare of their fellow Canadians, not only think this bill is totally inadequate but have drafted or have started to draft real alternatives that would help such people.

For more than a year, Mr. Speaker, I have worked on a private member's bill that would deal with the question of plant closures or cutbacks and with the plight of people who are laid off. This bill, Mr. Speaker, is almost ready. As far as I am concerned, it is ready but it has to be approved by the legal experts of the House of Commons. As soon as it is, I intend to introduce it.

My bill, unlike this bill, Mr. Speaker, will go a long way to mitigate the serious consequences of lay-offs. My bill includes appropriate time frames for notices of termination, which this bill does not deal with. I start with the principle that it is not acceptable that an employer can decide in a day, week, or month's notice that the business shall close and that his employees who have worked for many years will be thrown on the breadline or will have to depend on unemployment insurance. I do not believe that one or two weeks' notice or even one day's notice is enough. This occurs too frequently. I believe such short notices give the employees little, if any, opportunity to prepare for and to obtain new employment.

I know the minister knows that what I am proposing in this bill is close to what the organizations, such as the Canadian Labour Congress, have proposed. I am suggesting that employers be required to give 26 weeks' notice to the employees when they are terminating their work, where there are less than 50 employees involved, and 52 weeks' notice where there are 50 or more employees who will be laid off.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: I am suggesting in all instances of temporary lay-offs that the employer be required to give one month's notice and continue to pay all benefits, such as health insurance, pension and so on, contracted by the employees with the employer for the duration of the lay-off. Too many employees find themselves in difficulty where they are laid off for one, two or three months and cannot make up the benefits they have lost during that period.

Where the duration of unemployment is lengthy, I am suggesting that the employee should receive at least one week's severance pay for each year of service, and that pensions should be made more portable than they have up until now. Thousands of employees in this country lose the benefits of those pensions they have contributed to because the companies they work for do not work for them and the employees have to seek other employment whereby their pensions are not portable. I propose that pension contributions be placed in a central pension agency until retirement of the affected employees, or until the employees become a member of another plan. The funds would then be transferred to a new plan.

Where the duration of employment with employees is the result of the introduction of new equipment, I am suggesting that a labour-management committee be set up, consisting of an equal number of members from labour and management, to monitor the production of the new equipment, procedures and problems associated with the same. I suggest to the minister that if that kind of board had been set up in the post office, we would have avoided the difficulties we had over the last ten years because the employees would have had assurances and guarantees that the automation installed in the post office would not displace them from the jobs they held.

Mass terminations obviously create the greatest social and economic hardship and dislocation. Therefore, a permanent job protection board should be established to investigate employment terminations involving 50 or more employees and all permanent business closures. The board should also be permitted to investigate terminations of employment involving less than 50 employees when it is warranted. The business involved would be compelled to provide market and financial information as required by the board and the board would have all the powers included in the Inquiries Act so as to ensure that the workers are not mistreated for reasons beyond their control. I suggest the board would make recommendations as to whether terminations are justified and what actions and remedies are required. These recommendations would be submitted to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) at least 90 days before the closing date set out in the termination notice.

The minister would then make orders, based on the board's recommendations, to reduce the impact of the employment terminations on the employees and communities. These orders would be made at least 60 days prior to the closing date set out in the termination notice.

I could continue, Mr. Speaker, but I think other members are interested in this subject because we are talking about the way of life of a large number of people, many of whom have worked for companies for 10, 15, 20 or 25 years and suddenly find themselves at the age of 40, 45, 50 or 55 where they have lost their jobs and are not able to find another job at all, or only find unskilled jobs or jobs that pay little more than the minimum wage.

If hon. members were to compare the kind of proposal that I am suggesting with the proposals contained in this bill, I think that those who look at it with a partial eye will see there is virtually nothing in the bill proposed by the government to give real protection to the workers.

• (1420)

As a matter of fact, it is interesting to note that the benefits which will be paid under the provisions of this bill to the few workers who might qualify will be even less than those paid to workers who have been laid off and are receiving compensation under the provisions of the bill we passed which gave some form of help to workers in the textile and clothing industry. Rather than the government improving and expanding the kind of legislation which began in the textile industry and the kind of legislation which at one time helped auto workers with transitional assistance benefits—and we need to improve them today given the fact that unemployment has risen so dramatically compared with what it was five or ten years ago—the government is cutting back on the meagre programs started a few years ago.

That being the situation, it is the intention of hon. members of the New Democratic Party to speak out and campaign as vigorously as we can against the half-baked, milquetoast proposal before us today and to vote against Bill C-78.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased at being able to take part in the debate on Bill C-78 now before the House, a bill announcing the implementation of the industrial and labour adjustment program. As Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), I wish to congratulate the minister for insisting on having this bill passed as soon as possible, particularly in view of the present economic situation. It is the minister's first bill in the House. It is a good bill which will considerably improve the quality of benefits already being granted by the government to workers affected by employment slowdowns in a given sector.

Mr. Speaker, last January at a press conference in Sorel, Quebec, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) announced to hundreds of shipyard workers who had been affected by a considerable work slowdown that the federal government would help them by setting up a special industrial and labour adjustment program with a $350 million budget. Four other regions also designated on this occasion were Port-Cartier, Sept-Îles, Sydney, N.S. and Windsor. Mr. Speaker, the announcement could not have been made at a more appropriate time, because in my constituency, which is just opposite Sorel on the North Shore of the St. Lawrence, several hundred people work in the shipyards and their job situation has been seriously affected by lay-offs. And, Mr. Speaker, in other municipalities in the riding of Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière which I represent, the formerly flourishing textile industry was seriously affected by the slump in this sector and by the fact that a number of companies, including Associated Textiles of Canada Limited in Louiseville, which had over 600 employees, many of whom with more than 35 years' service, had to close down. This was quite a shock to the people in the area. I am very pleased that the government followed one of my recommendations by reducing the pre-retirement age from 54 to 50 for workers with 30 years' service in the same industry.

The various sections of the program provided under Bill C-78 are aimed at reducing the negative impact of the adjustment on wages, by increasing the responsibility of employers and government in this respect. Mr. Speaker, I would like to see the section of the act which sets at 50 the age requirement for pre-retirement applied retroactively, so as to cover under this act all workers who have lost their jobs in situations similar to the one I have just described, workers with more than 30 years' service and who were unable to receive pre-retirement pension benefits because they were not 54 years old at the time.

The labour adjustment benefits act is designed to make effective programs and policies aimed at helping employees to adjust to structural change by increasing the responsibility of both employers and government regarding workers affected by the adjustment. The act consists of two main parts: The first part, the labour adjustment benefits program, will provide pre-retirement benefits to older workers with a number of years of experience in the activity sectors affected by structural change. The second part of the act consists of amendments to Part III of the Canada Labour Code and will increase the rights of workers affected by collective lay-offs in activity sectors under federal jurisdiction. Both parts come under the $350 million Industry and Labour Adjustment Program announced by the government on January 19, 1981. Under the program, once the bill is passed, pre-retirement benefits will be paid to workers in designated communities. According to this bill, adjustment benefits already paid to workers in some industries under existing programs of adjustment benefits will continue to be paid.

Mr. Speaker, the program of adjustment benefits is aimed at providing, as a last resort, some financial assistance to older workers who have been laid-off in designated industries and who do not meet the requirements of other programs for a greater use of manpower. The industries involved are those where imports could give rise to a strong competition or those which are encouraged by the government through its programs and policies to undertake an industrial restructuring. In case of economic pressures, the cabinet could also designate industries in some special geographic areas. Those adjustment benefits granted on the basis of areas come under a program of assistance for the adjustment of industry and manpower announced in January 1981. Moreover, the program provides for the establishment of a Labour Adjustment Review Board to confirm the eligibility of certified workers to benefits. Indidivual applications will be processed by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission. This program is a substitute for programs of adjustment benefits made available by the Department of Labour to workers in the textile, clothing and footwear industries.

To be eligible for benefits the employee will have to get the Labour Adjustment Review Board to confirm that he has been laid off; in other words, it must be certified that the lay-offs involve an establishment which belongs to a designated industry and affect 10 per cent of the manpower or 50 workers of the establishment, whichever is the lesser. The board must also be convinced that the lay-offs stem from a serious economic upheaval in the industry. To be entitled to labour adjustment benefits, Mr. Speaker, the applicant must be at least 54 but under 65 at the time of the lay-off, have exhausted all his unemployment insurance benefits, have at least ten years' employment in the industry in the 15 years immediately preceding the lay-off, be a Canadian citizen residing in Canada or a permanent resident, and have received from the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission a certificate attesting that the applicant has absolutely no employment opportunities or holds a job for which he is not paid as much as he was in his previous employment in the industry. Special attention might be paid to people aged 50 or over with 30 years of service in the industry at the time of the lay-off. Mr. Speaker, this is where I will ask that, if possible, this clause of the bill be made retroactive to the beginning of this program. The entitlement of workers to the labour adjustment benefits will be reviewed regularly by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission. The benefits are equal to 60 per cent of the average insurable earnings before the lay-off. For 1981, the maximum insurable earnings prescribed under the Unemployment Insurance Act stand at $315-week, therefore the maximum labour adjustment benefits is $189 a week. They are reduced by 60 cents for each $1 of income from employment while the worker is registered under the program, and $1 for each $1 of income from another government transfer payment or from employment preceding the benefit period. The benefits will be indexed once a year to the cost of living.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the labour adjustment benefits act is mostly to provide last resort financial assistance to older workers who have been definitely laid off in designated industries and who do not meet the requirements for more active labour use programs. These industries are those where imports can create strong competition or those for which the government has incentive programs. In cases of serious economic pressures, the Cabinet can also designate, as I noted earlier, industries in specific geographic areas. These regional adjustment benefits are part of the industry and labour adjustment program.

The act also provides for the creation of a labour adjustment review board to certify the entitlement to benefits of laid-off workers. Individual claims are processed by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission. Within a maximum limit provided by the act, a claimant can receive benefits equal to about 60 per cent of his average salary before his lay-off. The act currently covers adjustment benefit programs offered by the Department of Labour to the workers of the textile, clothing and footwear industries.

The proposed amendments to Part III of the Canada Labour Code aim at reducing the impact of termination of employment. The workers affected will be entitled to severance pay after one year of employment rather than five as is now the case. The employee will continue to receive two days wages for each completed year of employment. However, a minimum of five days wages will be provided and the maximum of 40 days wages now in effect will no longer apply. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, when the lay-off list includes 50 or more employees, the employer will have to give a 16 weeks notice and to establish a management-labour committee whose members will be responsible for developing a plan to minimize the impact of termination of employment. Under certain provisions, the minister will be able to appoint an arbitrator to settle disputes during the planning stage. If both parties are bound by a collective agreement which sets down the procedure to follow in the case of a mass lay-off, the employer will be exempted from having to establish the planning committee. Finally, the minister can waive the obligation of providing a notice or of having consultations when he is convinced that there already exists an orderly plan for termination of employment. Mr. Speaker, this legislation is of major interest to our workers and I hope that the House will give it the required support to ensure its speedy passage.

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this particular bill although it is not one to which I would normally turn my attention. In the past I have worked with the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and with what you might call more management oriented interests. Things have now reached the point where a properly trained labour supply has to become an integral part of management interests. It is an interest of government, of course.

Because of the developing nature of world industry we are faced with massive changes. For instance, in the petrochemical industry and other industries in this country we are dealing with world-scale plans. It is not only in that sector that one gets this massive type of installation but in the automobile industry, the farm machine industry, the textile, furniture and footwear industries. With the concentration of production in bigger and bigger operations, negative movements or events which force the closure of any particular plant will obviously mean massive lay-offs.

I think all of us will accept that the social impact of massive lay-offs in a community is not debatable. We all realize how difficult they are. One cannot say that a person who has taken employment with a particular firm in a particular industry has an inherent right to that job in the labour stream for life. There is no such thing as the acquired right to any particular job. There is movement in the labour force. After all, if the worker says that he or she has an acquired right to any particular job, then the employer in return may say there is also a required responsibility to furnish his or her labour in that particular industry. I am sure that not one person in this assembly would say that the worker should not be free, if he or she decides for one reason or another, capricious or otherwise, in a free country such as ours and indeed in a good part of the world, to withdraw their services and work elsewhere. There is a quid pro quo.

In the last five years in Canada, particularly in the furniture, textile and footwear industries in central Canada, this has become a problem although it may have been around a little longer than that. It is a particularly difficult situation in one industry towns as is the case in so much of rural Quebec and rural Ontario. A family business may have grown and been operated successfully, employing several hundred people. Then, for some reason or other, such as a change in technology or an obsolescent plant, the family-operated business is bought out by interests foreign to that community. This may just have meant a larger concern from elsewhere in Canada was buying up a branch in order to consolidate.

One of the reasons for the sale of family businesses in Quebec and Ontario was the almost predatory appetite of the provincial departments of finance to impose confiscatory death duties. There was no way that a family could face the death of the head of the family and the head of the business without having arranged the sale of the business beforehand in order to have the available cash to pay the death duties. The family could not possibly arrange the financing. It sold to the highest bidder simply to put the principal owner of the industry in a position to deal with that day when the government's succession duty or estate duty people descended upon the family fortune. Therefore, we got these lay-offs.

• (1440)

Today the problem is much greater. We have announcements by Massey-Ferguson and the various automobile companies that they are laying off this or that number of employees. In many instances it is a permanent lay-off, not just a temporary reduction while liquidating inventory. It involves the closing of a plant.

How do we protect the workers in that situation? First, there must be between the federal and provincial governments some kind of retraining scheme made available to younger workers. Second, there should be the possibility of a transfer of workers to other plants or concerns in that industry. Third, with repetitive type of work which mechanization in industry has produced, you get premature aging manifested in many ways and encouragement toward earlier retirement of an individual.

It may be asked who is going to pay the cost. Let us look at society itself. I will use the example of a person who has reached age 55 and cannot work. The alternative to putting that person on a reasonable pension and keeping him or her in the home, true enough on a somewhat lesser scale than prior to the closure, unfortunately is simply to let that person fend for himself or herself until they fall on public assistance. Then the cost becomes entirely that of the public. The cost, not only financially but socially, of that person having been prematurely tossed on the scrapheap is far greater than arranging earlier retirement.

It is the same in business. An executive at the age of 60 may not be up to full production. He can cause more damage in either arriving at a decision or making a bad decision or decisions than what it would cost for that individual to retire early. He could be told that it is time he stepped aside, that someone younger and more able should take on the responsibility of the job. The company could tell him what they are prepared to pay him and the individual would have to arrange things beyond that. He could do something that interests him or something more in keeping with his diminished capabilities. It is a fact of life one has to meet.

When this bill was drafted, it was in the light of information on economic conditions that have long passed from viability. We said earlier that we would give this bill quick and enthusiastic passage. That is not so. My colleague, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), indicated that conditions are such that during the past year this government has almost been mesmerized with patriation of the Constitution. There is no doubt that from October of last year until now this government has been preoccupied with non-economic conditions. The net result is that we have inflation running higher than ever, interest rates higher than ever before and 890,000 unemployed. This bill is a reflection of that limited thinking.

My colleagues and I want to see this bill receive close attention in committee. There are several members who wish to address remarks to it because they believe it is much more important than hitherto. Provincial governments will have to pay much greater attention to this problem. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) will have to get together with their provincial counterparts to better plan for and provide training.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert: I heard that mechanical bellow from the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). It is amazing how there is always a knee-jerk reaction from that area.

Mr. Benjamin: It's socialism.

Mr. Lambert: We see socialism. We have the whole of the British automobile industry in a socialized enterprise going on strike because the workers want everything. They are not interested in the continuation of the industry. The industry is inefficient. We see more and more industries being run by labour or socialized which should never be socialized. The record speaks for itself. It stinks. We will just lay that canard to rest right away.

I want to propose better training. A short time ago we had an industry and management task force study the work force that will be required with the fantastic expansion of the electronics industry, with all communications carried out by computers. It was the unanimous conclusion that the present work force and the young work force involved in these communications will have to be retrained. We will have to have a revolution in training methods leading up to employment.

• (1450)

We will have to do the same thing with much of our conventional industry that must acquire recruits. Why is it that we cannot get any skilled tradesmen and craftsmen in Alberta for love nor money? Money cannot buy them. The training programs are such that young people who have not been motivated the right way are not prepared to spend their time learning a trade. People are not prepared to transfer from other parts of Canada in the large numbers that are needed. People own homes where they are and, if they move, to whom can they sell them?

There is definite immobility, except in the absolute socialist heaven where worker number one is moved to place number 101 and the worker who is at place 102 is moved back to being worker number two. Everyone becomes a tool of the state. That is true socialism. One cannot expect a person just to pick up and move today because there has to be a job at the end of the line. That is not enough. There are many other factors. But the error has been with our provincial departments of education both at the secondary and the advanced level. The department of manpower has to share the blame. Then, of course, there is the cockeyed unwillingness to admit that persons who have trained abroad will be as well trained as persons here.

There is difficulty in getting equivalent certificates, even between provinces. For instance, the bricklayer from Britain has a great deal of difficulty getting accreditation here in Canada. The carpenter from Austria or Germany is not admitted as a certified craftsman. Then there are the plasterers, the tile setters and all of those tradespeople who know that these trades were not developed here.

Therefore, these are artificial barriers to the movement of the trained personnel we need. All of this is part and parcel of the philosophy of this bill. To simply say that we will set up some sort of bureaucracy or compensation board with officials, and all that the individual worker will have to do is to make application in a certified industry, is not good enough. The worker is not protected if the industry is not a certified or designated industry. Perhaps there would be a provision that there shall be 50 persons laid off or 10 per cent, whichever is the lesser, but certainly there has to be a floor; otherwise a person who loses his or her job for one reason or another could go running to this compensation board and say: "Here, I have been laid off; I want the state to support, compensate or retrain me, but at public expense".

That should not be part of it at all. I suggest that the problem highlighted by the objective of this particular bill is contributed to by a number of causes. First is the improper training of our young work force. Second is the non-existence of facilities for retraining workers. Can those people who maintain they have some connection with the work force tell me which provinces have adequate training facilities for adult workers to retrain sufficiently to meet standards set up in other provinces, enabling the worker, either male or female, to get a job in a field where their labour is required?

How many provinces are set up that way? How many trade unions have participated in that type of planning? How many trade unions would permit the retraining and introduction of workers without insisting they go through an extensive apprenticeship program, apprenticeship programs open only to 16 or 17-year-olds? An area in which there is great difficulty today is the retraining of workers and an acceptance of retrained workers in new industries, particularly if they are organized from institutions such as the Alberta Vocational Retraining School. Why cannot these people be accepted as fully trained and accredited workers without going through prehistoric and impossible apprenticeship plans? Those are the problems we face.

What about those provinces which have sort of down-home legislation which says local workers only need apply. Whether trained or otherwise matters not. If there are not trained workers, it still does not matter. It is a dog in a manger situation. There should be the ability to move from one end of Canada to the other if one so desires. But that is not possible.

How many new industries would have been able to get started in this country without help from outside? What about the people from Saskatchewan who went to work in the Alberta oil industry, the Americans who came to Alberta when Canada did not have any oil workers of its own? What about pipeline welders? There was a time when there was not a welder in any province who could touch a pipeline. We talk about building pipelines here and there across the country. Most of the provinces do not have standards even for pipeline welders. That is how far behind in history the provinces are. They are behind in their planning, engaging in restrictive thinking all the time. At the same time these self-same provinces are the ones that impose restrictions on the movement of workers from other provinces who are qualified to do a particular job.

This bill is a palliative. It is the ultimate solution for those people who cannot be accommodated through retraining. I would much rather see a worker retrained and replaced in a productive job than become the subject of benefits under this particular bill. This may not meet the views of certain members, but Mr. Speaker, I come from an area where employers are denied workers. They advertise nationally and through the Canada Manpower employment service. There is absolutely zilch in return, or the few occupants are either has-been's, incompetents, rub-a-dubs or what have you who cannot hold the job or perform. Then when we want to get some people from the Orient or Europe who are qualified, we are told no, and it takes a year to process a worker coming from abroad. Those people are highly trained, often far better trained than our people. They are motivated and make responsible citizens. Gracious me, my grandparents, and possibly the grandparents of half the people now in this chamber, came to this country under similar circumstances.

• (1500)

To let somebody come into this country today from abroad is nonsense, according to the Department of Employment and Immigration as well as to a lot of other sectors. We have many people who are institutionally unemployed. This is built in through unemployment insurance, welfare and inadequate training. There is no possibility of employing them in the skilled trades where they are required. First, there are no schools for them to attend if they wanted to be retrained and, second, many would not want to move.

What happens? The employer in the area where the workers are required faces inadequate production with a resulting loss, and everything becomes more costly, yet there are thousands upon thousands of people who want to work if given a chance and if there were adequate training facilities for them. If that were the case, I think we could see some possibility of reaching the day when the Canadian work force could respond to our needs. According to the figures, there is a work force surplus of 890,000. That figure is artificially stimulated by other factors. Many of those people are not genuinely out of work, and there are hundreds of thousands of jobs available in the country. These people either cannot get to those jobs or they could not perform them even if they wanted to. That is one of the hard facts of life. It is regrettable that we have so many people who would like to work but cannot because they are not trained to do the work that is available.

We will hear much more discussion about this bill, and certainly this party will want to see substantial improvements in it in committee before it receives the approval of the House.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take just a few moments, if I may, to address some comments on this bill. There are those who have spoken before me, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), and the hon. member who spoke immediately before me, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who would castigate this bill almost in its entirety. I have great difficulty in agreeing with them particularly as in my riding which is adjacent to the Windsor area which has enjoyed the designation spoken of, there are people who commute to Windsor to work there and who are currently enjoying the benefits of this particular measure. They come to see me and tell me that it is of definite benefit to them.

An hon. Member: Try that on in western Canada.

Mr. Daudlin: I suggest the hon. member should just listen a little longer. As beautiful as the rose may be, I suggest that it has a number of blemishes I would like to see removed.

The fact that geographic designation is permitted or required by this legislation and the ILAP legislation, in my view, builds in some structural difficulties that will have to be corrected. This is one of the reasons why I wanted to speak for a few minutes today.

I indicated that my riding is adjacent to the city of Windsor and its environs which enjoy designation. The fact is that by that designation some several millions of dollars can be made available to industries which want to relocate in the Windsor area, making work available for those persons who have been disrupted by reason of the automotive industry's downturn. The fact is that by geographic accident those communities which find themselves outside the designated areas and yet are providing work for people who have been laid off now find themselves competing for additional funding with which to attract new industry.

Let me give you an example. The town of Kingsville, located 35 kilometres outside the designated area of Windsor, has a number of parts industries located in it. They have suffered, as have many other small communities around the area, because of the loss of markets in the automotive industry, and many people have in fact been laid off. While the downturn was taking place, the mothers and fathers in the community, recognizing that something was coming in terms of the automotive industry, attempted to provide industrial parks. They brought people from abroad as well as from other parts of Canada attempting in this way to attract potential industry by communicating to them the benefits of locating in the town of Kingsville. They now find themselves competing with the industrial commission for Essex County and Windsor not on an even footing because an additional tool has been given to the designated community which they do not have. In my view that puts them at a disadvantage, and the minister will know I have attempted to make that point with him and his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), under whom ILAP comes.

Contrary to arguing, as those who have spoken before me have done, that the program is wrong and, because it does not do all things for all people, it should be thrown out, I would suggest that it needs modification to enlarge the designated areas or, at the very least, to include those persons working in a designated industry who find themselves dislocated, regardless of where they are located geographically.

We find that what results is a silly arrangement under which persons from the city of Toronto who, because they work in and choose to commute to Windsor, find themselves designated in the industry and entitled to the benefits. However, a person from my riding who attempts to find work next door in a related parts industry providing parts for the plant that has cut production in Windsor, and does not travel in order to cut back on his travelling costs, being only 35 kilometres from the downturned designated area, finds himself not designated and not entitled to these kinds of benefits.

• (1510)

I think the program is good but I think it is unfair when looked at in terms of those kinds of circumstances. What we have to do is to modify the program to take care of the circumstances I have talked of so that it follows more closely the spirit of this bill and removes some of the blemishes, as I described them, that I am able to perceive from having experienced them.

The principle is correct. Undoubtedly, we have many Canadians over the age of 55 who are working in a particular industry experiencing an economic downturn and who will never be able in practice to find other employment. I do not think there is any member in the House who would not want to assist those people. They are not the kind of people whom the hon. member for Edmonton West described as no-gooders, bums and what-have-you. These are people who have worked for 30 and 40 years only to find themselves caught in circumstances out of which they cannot extricate themselves. I would not expect the hon. member to suggest that people in those circumstances should not be given assistance. Indeed, I would hope that he would join me in saying that we should do as much as possible to assist them.

I believe that is what the minister is trying to do through this bill. All I am inviting the minister to do is to try to do a little more for those whom I have described to him, people who, because of the way the bill is drafted, are excluded from receiving any benefits under the provisions in this bill. If it can be done either here or at the committee, I will be overjoyed. If we cannot do it, I have used this opportunity to advise the minister that even if the rose is beautiful, there are some blemishes on it that we should try to clear up.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to engage in this debate today although it is rather ironic that the government should have chosen to bring forth this long overdue and much needed remedy to the problem now. It is a time when unemployment figures have reached a peak not exceeded since 1978. Again, almost a million Canadians are unemployed. Thirty-eight thousand more young people are unemployed in Canada this year than were a year ago. In light of the recent decisions by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), which are going to compound the problem of unemployment, some of the numbers we have seen reported by Statistics Canada perhaps include the 1,600 additional VIA Rail employees who are also going to be on the unemployment rolls in consequence of the minister's regrettable decision.

I want to talk about what it feels like to be living in one of the home towns in Canada where much heartbreak is being experienced—I am referring to home towns like McAdam Junction, Plaster Rock, Chipman, Lachute, Mont Laurier, Senneterre, Blue River, and Clearwater, perhaps places many of us have never heard of or visited, towns like Watrous, Melville, Unity, Wainwright, Havelock, Hornepayne and Drumheller which is my home town. Many people in those towns are heartbroken, and this feeling will come to a peak in about a week from now if the Minister of Transport succeeds in doing yet again what this government is so good at doing, which is destroying the employment opportunity in this country.

Mr. Pepin: How long is it since you used the train?

Mr. Siddon: Bill C-78 although needed, is inadequate, as pointed out this afternoon by other members. It is a reaction to a serious problem in Canada but it is not a solution. The problem has been made progressively worse during the past 18 months as we have waited patiently and persistently for the long-promised industrial policy of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray). He has been promising this to the people of Canada for far too many months now.

The government seems far too successful in compounding this serious problem rather than resolving it. Although I am pleased to see the Minister of Transport in the House today, I would prefer if he were out talking to some of the people whom I intend to quote this afternoon. Some of these people are VIA employees, some make their living from the tourism business in the various small communities, the home towns of Canada which are in a way dependent on the railway system and the rail passenger system in particular.

The Minister of Transport has broken a trust with these people. They are now faced with the spectre of upheaval, displacement, disappointment, anxiety, anger and lack of direction. When a person, particularly after the age of 50, having given many years of his life to the service of his country, or a 63-year-old widow to whom I will refer again in a few moments, sees his or her life suddenly disrupted because of the actions of the minister, it gives them cause to be depressed, anxious, angry and disappointed.

I would like to tell the Minister of Transport what we heard when we were in Kamloops from a Mrs. Jane Lamont, a widow for several years now who is 63 years of age and is partly incapacitated due to a medical problem. She has been operating a little store along the CNR tracks in Blue River, some 200 miles north of Kamloops.

Mr. Pepin: I heard her on the radio.

Mr. Siddon: She makes her livelihood from that small store, Mr. Speaker. She asked those of us on the VIA Rail task force to carry a special message back to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Pepin: I heard her on the radio. You do not have to.

Mr. Siddon: He may well have heard it. I hope he will hear it again.

Mrs. Lamont said very quietly, in an appeal to the compassion of the Minister of Transport, that she feels very humble—I am quoting Mrs. Lamont—in asking him to give her back something she needs. Mrs. Lamont takes in $200 or $300 a day from the passengers on the Supercontinental who get off the train in that small little station to buy candy or treats for their children, or perhaps a curio in her small store. One third of her business, which brings her only enough to make the difference between paying for the necessities of her life or not paying for them, is derived from the stops of that train. After next Sunday, Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Lamont will no longer have a business. All I can say to the Minister of Transport is, shame, shame.

Mr. St. Clair Hull spoke to our task force in Halifax. He is an employee of the railways and has worked hard for this country on both the Atlantic Limited and the Ocean.

[Translation]

Mr. Yanakis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. Parliamentary Secretary rises on a point of order.

Mr. Yanakis: Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression that, departing from the custom of the House, the hon. member is not dealing with Bill C-78 which is now before the House. He is using his time criticizing VIA Rail, which has absolutely nothing to do with Bill C-78.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): This is rather clear. The Chair was waiting to see whether the hon. member's remarks could in any way be connected with the bill under consideration; therefore I should invite the hon. member to limit his remarks to Bill C-78. The hon. member for Richmond-South Delta has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Siddon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to speak. I think if we refer to the bill before us, Bill C-78, we will find that it deals with the means of assistance for people beyond the age of 50 who have made their careers in various ways in this country.

Mr. Pepin: It is not VIA Rail.

Mr. Siddon: It does not deal specifically with certain problems that I would wish to address at this time. If we look at Clause 10 of the—

Mr. Pepin: It is not the VIA Rail program. Thirty million dollars worth of it—

Mr. Siddon: I wish the Minister of Transport would withhold his comments until his opportunity to speak arrives.

Mr. Pepin: I wish he would speak on the subject.

Mr. Siddon: Clause 10 of this bill provides for special assistance for employees beyond the age of 50, provided they happen to be part of what is called a designated industry within a designated area of Canada.

I intend to deal with one area of Canada which should be designated under the provisions of this bill. That area is Jasper, Alberta. The tourist industry in Jasper, Alberta has been virtually decimated by the decisions the minister has taken, which will cost that community over $6 million in lost revenue. It will eliminate the possibility for at least 20,000 tourists from Japan alone coming to Canada to visit Jasper and our Rocky Mountains.

• (1520)

There are many aspects of this bill which pertain to the regrettable decisions the Minister of Transport has taken. I am dealing at this point with the needs of people beyond the age of 50 whose livelihoods may have been affected because of a decision taken by the Government of Canada which, if we look at Clause 3(2)(a) of the bill, may well result in a general and significant economic readjustment occurring in a particular industry, that being the tourist and railway industry, by reason of industrial restructuring implemented pursuant to a policy or program of the Government of Canada. To encourage such restructuring, this bill provides for remission. One of the points I am trying to make this afternoon is that if the Minister of Transport and the Government of Canada feel committed to the provisions of this bill, they had better start considering the need to extend these provisions to the massive unemployment their policies are producing in many industries, including the railway industry.

Mr. Pepin: Where have you been?

Mr. Siddon: I would like to return to the point I was raising before I was so rudely interrupted.

Mr. Pepin: Total ignorance.

Mr. Siddon: The point dealt with long-serving employees of the Canadian Railways who, I presume, would be eligible for the assistance and compensation set out in this bill.

Mr. St. Clair Hull, who worked on the Atlantic and the Ocean, says that the Minister of Transport is taking his livelihood away. Mr. St. Clair Hull was talking from his heart about his job, his future and his life. He was in the food and beverage business for 25 years and opted as a career choice some three years ago to work with VIA Rail as one of the new VIA employees. He wanted our task force to learn how the cutback decisions affected him as an individual, and this is quite pertinent to the bill because we are dealing with people beyond the age of 50 who suddenly find one morning when they wake up that they do not have a job. This gentleman says that it now takes an extra effort to go to work each morning. The morale is gone among VIA Rail employees. It is hard for him to smile at a customer and to feel, if he does smile, that it is genuine and comes from his heart. This gentleman said that the attitude taken by the government and the minister seems to be: "Well, we are okay; you are not okay; but so what, what can we do?" At the same time, he cannot understand why the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) jets around the world and cabinet ministers jet to Winnipeg in three parallel flights while his job is being taken away by an action of the Minister of Transport.

This man said something else which reflects the serious sickness in our employment sector today and the reason why we have a lack of productivity in this country; that is, we think small in this country. We do not think big. He asked this rhetorical question: "How could we increase business in VIA Rail to make a net profit?" The answer was, by volume sales, by expanding business and by advertising and promoting, not by hiding it away from the people of Canada and trying to dismantle the system.

This gentleman, a VIA employee, also said that if the employees had the money VIA is paying the railways to grind their rails because of the excess wear and tear caused by unit trains, essentially a subsidy to the national railways and taking money out of the pockets of our people in tourism and working on the railways, that if the employees had some of that money the government is paying to the railways by paper passing—

[Translation]

Mr. Bujold: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for interrupting the debate a second time this afternoon, but I suggest my hon. colleague's remarks have nothing whatsoever to do with the bill which is before the House. I certainly do not see why he should waste the precious time of the House criticizing the VIA Rail scheme instead of dealing with this important piece of legislation. I submit, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that you should call the hon. member to order and restrict him to the point of the bill now before the House.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I am sure all hon. members understand that it is very difficult to follow the rules of relevancy unless we have the co-operation of all members of the House. A member might speak at quite some length and may not sound as if he were referring to the bill, and I think the most the Chair can do is to invite hon. members to observe the rules of relevancy. The rules I try to apply are hon. members' own rules. As I read it, the bill before us is to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code. I invite the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) to indicate to the Chair how his remarks relate to the bill. That is all the Chair can do.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I do not have the pertinent Beauchesne citation before me, but if Your Honour refers to Beauchesne, I think you will find that under our rules, at second reading of a bill a member is entitled to speak about the principle of the bill and not its details. That gives him some considerable latitude and gives the Chair considerable latitude in interpreting the rule of relevancy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The Chair did not stop the hon. member from speaking. I invited him to indicate to the Chair how his remarks relate to the bill. Even at second reading we do have to speak about the legislation before the House, so I invite the hon. member to do so.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to apologize for the extent to which I am explaining the problems which confront the people of Canada who are going to lose their careers and their livelihood as a consequence of regrettable decisions taken by the Government of Canada. I have detected a strong sense of concern and anxiety, and perhaps even regret, on the part of hon. members opposite that I should have to rise today and use the time of my intervention dealing with a very important labour problem in this country.

I intend to continue, and I trust that the time taken by the two hon. members opposite who have interrupted my speech will be deducted from the time of their speeches and not from mine.

What I said at the beginning of my speech was that the provisions in Bill C-78 are but a reaction to a problem, and if we do not begin to address the causes of the problems which confront young Canadians, older Canadians, women and widows in their sixties, then I do not know what we are here to do in this House.

In Halifax, Nova Scotia we learned from the director of the Annapolis Basin Tourist Council that the Government of Canada has spent thousands of dollars through DREE grants to promote tourism in the Annapolis Royal area of western Nova Scotia. The government spent thousands of dollars to promote new tourist initiatives, including a series of bed and breakfast operations and circle tours which VIA Rail sponsored, and all that money will be wasted because of the dastardly decision of the Minister of Transport which will eliminate those ten tours and eliminate business opportunities for hundreds of people in the Annapolis Valley area of Nova Scotia.

We also learned, both in Atlantic Canada and western Canada, that the trains which are to be cut—the Transcontinental train, the Atlantic and the Ocean—are filled to capacity. We learned about 52 passengers being left on the platform in Montreal because the trains were inadequate this year. We learned from the chief ticket agent in Saint John, New Brunswick, that in every month but one of the past 12-month period the revenues paid to VIA Rail and the number of passengers carried have increased from the corresponding months of a year ago.

We learned from train porters that there are people sleeping on the floors, congestion getting to dining cars, people sleeping in the bar cars and an oversubscription of space on sleeping cars virtually every day during the summer months. We learned that Canadians will not be able to get space next year on the only remaining western transcontinental train because the government intends to cut if from 20 cars per train to 13. We learned that there will only be 50 sleeping cars available because much of the older rolling stock is to be cut up and scrapped, and I have yet to hear the minister deny that in this House. The minister has the gall to tell us, as he did during Question Period today, that the poor people who want to travel to Jasper, Alberta to continue to support the important economy there should go on the British Columbia railway, which does not even have any comfortable rolling stock for passengers, and the railway line is in serious need of repair. Or, the minister said, these passengers could travel on the Canadian, bearing in mind there will only be 13 cars and no sleeping car accommodation and travelling through the congested area—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I understand very well the concern of the hon. member for the future of the employees concerned, but now he is dealing with passengers, and I do not think that relates to the bill. I invite the hon. member to address his remarks to the bill.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, the point I am making is that there will be further unemployment next year because the minister does indeed intend to make it so difficult to travel on VIA Rail in western Canada that people will not bother to come. That is a very important point. We learned in Vancouver from several Japanese tourist organizers, that Japanese tourists to the tune of some 50,000 a year visit western Canada and that next year at least 20,000 tourists will not come to Canada. This is very relevant to the employment issue, Mr. Speaker, because those 20,000 Japanese tourists spend upwards of $40 million in Canada. Statistics Canada figures show that every one of them spent on the average at least $2,000 in Canada during their seven to ten days stay here. The spending of $40 million, Mr. Speaker, is directly related to the jobs of four to five thousand people in various travel industry-related businesses in western Canada. The minister has offered no form of compensation and has given no consideration to the impact of this decision on those businesses.

● (1530)

Over 1.1 million jobs in Canada are associated with the tourism industry. As a result of the VIA Rail cutbacks, at least 6,000 of those jobs will be lost. We may only assume that some 2 to 3 per cent of the tourists who travel in this country travel by train, and indeed they do, Mr. Speaker. In travel associated businesses, 6,000 of those jobs will be lost. It is not merely a matter of some 1,600 direct employees of VIA Rail who will be affected, Mr. Speaker. There will be a loss of $6 million to Jasper, Alberta, and $40 million in Japanese tourism spending alone, and almost $100 million in total tourism spending in this country. At an average salary of $20,000, the loss amounts to 5,000 jobs. We cannot ignore that in this House because the statistics that will appear in the year-end returns a year from now will indicate that the government will have to provide for additional unemployed people. In fact, the minister already brags about his $30 million labour assistance program, Mr. Speaker. He will give back $30 million to take these 50 and 55-year-old trainmen and railway employees and put them out to pasture, when they would prefer to be working in the job they have known as a career for as long as many of them can remember.

What I have presented to the House today, Mr. Speaker, is relevant indeed. When we peruse the provisions of Bill C-78 and we learn that the minister, by order in council, will be able to declare certain areas as designated areas, certain industries as designated industries, then I find it regrettable that he has not chosen, in the expectation that this bill will pass, to meet and discuss with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the need to study this problem of an adverse impact on those people who make their livelihood in the tourism industry or to provide some means of remission, whether it be by the provisions of this bill or by some other means. I am talking about the four rental car operators in Jasper, Alberta, three of whom will not be in business next year. I am also referring to those who work in hotels and restaurants and promote ski package tours, and the people who operate fishing camps, people who operate the whole myriad of services to tourists in this country. They are totally ignored and disregarded.

I see the Minister of Transport has left. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bockstael) will listen because I challenge the minister to tell this House to what extent he will provide for people like Mrs. June Lamont, a 63-year-old widow, and hundreds of other heartbroken people living in the small towns across Canada who will wake up after next weekend to find themselves unemployed.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to speak in support of Bill C-78 because I think it is an innovative and sensitive bill. The bill focuses on a group of people who are forgotten in this particular era. The people affected are between the ages of 54 and 65. Having worked with these people and having been responsible for the care of many of the workmen in this particular age group, I have found them to be a very special and vulnerable group at work and in society. They are people who have committed themselves to long hours of work and who have done so with great expertise and dedication. But in that particular period of their lives, age creeps up quietly upon them. It does it in a way that is difficult to perceive. It is difficult to attribute a certain weakness of health that goes with advancing years to any illness. This is something that is inherited and that deteriorates and makes their bodies more vulnerable to the work they do. There are no set rules or any real understanding of that process. It is a process that is present in each and every one of us and that manifests itself very insidiously and in a way that is difficult to attribute to any particular factor. Often these same people do repetitive work. They perform work that appears not to be traumatic or that would ordinarily cause any defects or trauma to the body. But regardless of what work you perform, if you do it repetitively and continuously over a long period of time, evidence of some wear and tear and deterioration starts to appear. I am sure if we were to study the vocal chords of a good percentage of the hon. members, we would find very definite changes. If we were to study another part of their anatomy, we would find that prolonged sitting has an effect on the vascular system in that particular part of their bodies. This happens to every individual who does repetitive work.

These changes, that are so difficult to identify readily, lead to some deterioration in the physical fitness of that person, so that he is no longer able to compete in his work world with younger people. In time these people imperceptibly become disabled—although they are not ready to admit it—but they cannot submit claims to the Workmen's Compensation Board. As a result of their dedication over the years, they have reached the stage where they can no longer compete with the industrial world.

I feel this bill is focused on that particular group of people. It is one of the first pieces of legislation where attention has been directed to them and their plight understood.

I agree with the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who indicated that many of these people should not be considered as requiring benefits, but provision should be made to retrain them in other aspects of the work. Their expertise should be utilized in apprenticeship programs. They could be a model to young workmen. A concentrated effort to use their talents should be made.

The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) remarked on the use of robots. Again I see no real criticism of that. Time and again robots and machinery of that sort are used in areas that are unliveable, areas where people would have to work under conditions where there is a high concentration of chemicals and where repetitive activity adds to the rapid deterioration of certain tissues. I think robots fulfil the need in that particular field. It must be remembered that working with robots requires the acquisition of new skills for the new technology. The maintenance of these structures come into play. If they were utilized intelligently and prudently, they would add to the safety and comfort of the worker. But again a price must be paid, and that price is that some jobs will be lost in a particular way.

● (1540)

I want to conclude by referring to a statement which was once made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in which he indicated that the Liberal government does not worship either productivity or growth; it works for the people. I believe this bill is eminently consistent with that philosophy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to listen to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) remark that the Liberal Party works for the people. Having two years of experience in the House, I can certainly attest to the fact that the Liberal Party speaks about people and acts as if it cared about people, but when it comes down to the practical crunch of what it does for people, I have to conclude that it does more to harm people than it does to help them. Of that I am absolutely convinced.

I stood in the House earlier today during question period. I think my question was relevant to the bill before us. This piece of legislation proposed by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) is supposed to help Canadians who are laid off. Perhaps it behooves us to identify these Canadians. To a large extent they are men or women who have provided loyal, productive service to an employer for an extended period of time. I told the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), who is a supporter of the high interest policy which is producing these lay-offs, that scientific evidence indicates clearly and unequivocally that when unemployment rates increase, the number of people who will suffer ill health increases. He stood up and said that it was nonsense. That told me something about the state of knowledge and the state of caring in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and in the cabinet generally. They say one thing and do another.

When I asked the minister the question, I had in my hand a study by Professor Brenner from Sir Johns Hopkins University. The figures presented by Dr. Brenner suggest that when there is a 1.4 per cent increase in the unemployment rate, social and health consequences follow. Coincidentally, this 1.4 per cent is very close to the increase in the unemployment rate in the last 60 days. It does not include the lay-offs announced this week, last week and the week before; they were massive. We will be looking at a 9 per cent unemployment rate when the next set of figures comes out. It will amount to well over one million Canadians, and there will be consequences.

I should like to read some figures into the record. Suicide is predicted to rise 5.7 per cent with a one per cent increase in the unemployment rate. Instead of 100 people committing suicide this month in Canadian cities, it will be 106. There will be something like an 8 per cent increase in the homicide rate, an 8 per cent increase in the number of people who will be murdered because of the increase in unemployment in the last 60 days. Last November, almost a year ago, some figures were provided by the Canadian Council on Social Development to all members of the House, including the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. They indicated that somewhere between 9,000 and 10,000 people in the coming 12 months will die because of the increase in unemployment. When one has devoted a significant chunk of one's life to productive service to an employer for the production of goods and services which we all need and value, and suddenly society says, "You are laid off; you are no longer useful", it throws the individual and his family into a crisis. It is the kind of crisis people find very difficult to deal with. They bottle up their feelings, they do various things with them, but the consequence is scientifically demonstrated to be an increased need for things like health care funding. The budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) of a year ago indicated that he intended to cut out $1,500 million worth of social spending related to hospitals, medical care and retraining for people who are laid off. We have a policy which is throwing people out of work. Yet it is accompanied by a policy in which health care funding will not be increased but will be decreased. They will throw people out of work, they will give them heart attacks, but there will be no available hospital beds. This is the reality of Liberal policy. It is a translation of highfaluting statements about a just society and caring about people.

Mr. Caccia: Nonsense, sheer nonsense!

Mr. Hawkes: We must look at the consequences of the policies we pass in the House. I am being heckled by hon. members opposite who have stood for one year in the House and told us how wonderful the Constitution was. Two days ago it was turned over back to front to do exactly what we said it should do. Now they will stand up to tell us that black is white and it is still wonderful. We are supposed to find the heckling credible, we are supposed to find the support for legislation credible, but it is incredible that they stand and say that black is white. They stand up and vote when black turns into white or white turns into black and do not even blush about it. There are social consequences to every piece of legislation passed in the House. We should examine the reality of the consequences of this policy.

Earlier in the House today we had an argument about NDP philosophy, Liberal philosophy, Conservative philosophy and their impact on people. One fact that is related to the economy, to the issues of lay-offs and of productivity, is that if the current one million unemployed people could be employed in the production of goods and services, there would be adequate money for elected members to give to the people who really need it. Every member of the House should have received and should have read the article of last November by the Canadian Council on Social Development. Appendix I compared the amounts of social assistance available province by province. Out west there are two provinces side by side, Alberta and Saskatchewan. They have tremendous resources. Saskatchewan has oil, potash and farmland. The people of Saskatchewan are fortunate, but they have selected CCF and NDP governments over an extended period of time. The people of Alberta have selected governments that knew one simple truth, that if you do not create any wealth, then you cannot share anything. The easiest thing to divide is nothing; all of us can have a share of that!

• (1550)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: In the year 1979-80 a family of four on welfare or a family in trouble that needed help from society received $6,700 in the province of Saskatchewan. This was the product of NDP and CCF management over a period of time. In the province of Alberta, a family of four would have received $10,500, almost 50 per cent more because it has a long history of selected governments that understood that when you create wealth, you have something to share with the unfortunate people in society. You just do not talk about it a great deal; indeed, you do not have to talk about it because you can do it.

If any member of this House were faced with the prospect of a lay-off, or an extended period of drawing unemployment insurance—and most members of this House have never been in that position—he could ask himself what comfort glowing phrases and lovely words are when his kids are hungry or he cannot afford to let them go to the skating rink, when his wife is worried or when he seeks to escape his problems with a bottle. That is a consequence for the one million Canadians who are unemployed today. That is a potential consequence for the several thousand people who have been laid off in this country this week, last week and the week before that.

When I examine this piece of legislation, I cannot get rid of the image of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce standing in this House earlier today. When I asked him what he was going to do about the health victim that the government's economic policy is creating, he laughed. Many members of his party laughed as well. They seemed to say, "It is not a serious problem. We don't care about the health victim of economic policy. That is nonsense." "That is nonsense," the minister said. It is not nonsense, Mr. Speaker. It is a scientific fact. The scientific fact translates into real people, people who are having those heart attacks, those marital breakdowns, people who are going to jail because their way out of distress is to do something illegal. Those are the real consequences of the kind of economic policy that we have had for far too long in this country.

Do hon. members opposite not care? I find that hard to believe. I meet those hon. members in the halls and I know that many of them do care, but far too often they do what they are told instead of what is right. Far too often they are not encouraged to look at the words and the consequences of those words.

I skimmed through this bill earlier today, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps after two years I am becoming sensitive to certain themes. Those themes run through bill after bill that we consider in this House. I find them disturbing and not in the best interests of Canadians and Canadian society.

One theme which runs through almost every bill brought forward by cabinet to this House is that we will have some kind of board or commission. Two things are wrong with a board or commission, Mr. Speaker. The first is that the minister appoints the people who will serve on it, and the second is that the minister and the cabinet determine the amount of money the members should be paid. Just once I should like to see a piece of legislation come into this House which would provide for the appointment of a board or commission but would stipulate that the appropriate standing committee of this House would conduct a public inquiry into the background and competence of the people to be appointed, and that Parliament would control the amount of money to be paid for their services. If that were done then we, the elected representatives of the people sent to this chamber, could be helpful in screening appointments to make sure that the people selected to serve on a board or commission had the background, the value systems and the professional credentials adequate for the job.

That kind of principle has never been contained in a piece of legislation brought forward by the cabinet to this House in the two years that I have been here. Instead, the minister shall decide who shall serve and the minister shall decide how much they shall be paid.

We are often amazed when we see the names published in The Canada Gazette. Regardless of the board, or commission the members are frequently defeated Liberal candidates or Liberal campaign managers. It is as if performance in that one function, serving the Liberal Party of Canada, were the primary and only qualification required to make the kinds of decisions about people's lives that the board or commission provided for in Bill C-78 is going to be asked to make.

This commission will be asked to sit in judgment on individual Canadians. If you are laid off, then you will have to be in a designated industry or a designated region before you are eligible to apply for benefits. That designation comes, basically, from cabinet. If you live in a Liberal cabinet minister's riding, then you are more likely to be designated than if you do not. Everybody's tax dollars are involved but people are not treated equally from coast to coast. Whether you are deemed eligible will depend upon where you live. The cabinet minister's campaign manager will probably be head of the board, and you will have to provide that person with any piece of information requested. There will be no secrecy or no concern for your rights. The board can compel you to give information. Then that person may sit in judgment, and you will get your $100 or $150 per week or you will not. One person will and the other person will not.

Is that the kind of system that we as Members of Parliament believe to be in the best interest of Canadians?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, publics bills, notices of motions and private bills.

* * *

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) indicated earlier today in a conversation with me that at this hour he might be prepared to announce the House business for next week.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but before going into the details of the business for next week I want to say that I have consulted with my colleagues on the other side. It seems that there would be unanimous agreement to the following House order relating to Remembrance Day. We all know that under the Standing Orders, the House shall not sit on next Wednesday, November 11. However, we had discussions on the floor of the House, and meetings outside this House about what to do on the evening of Remembrance Day and the following day. We have come to the following agreement. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to seek unanimous consent for the adoption of the following House order:

● (1600)

That the House shall adjourn at 6 p.m. on November 9, 1981, and shall stand adjourned until November 12, 1981, at 8 p.m. at which time the only business to be taken up shall be Government Orders.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Hon. members have heard the request of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is an accurate description of the bare bones of the discussions. Although I will have to stay here, not being able to get home for Remembrance Day, we give our consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is so ordered.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I think the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) is going to go on to outline the business for next week.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I might just make a slight correction to which, I think, everyone will agree. By inadvertence I said the House would not sit on November 9. That should have been November 10. It was an obvious error. Otherwise my colleague would not have said he would not be able to go to his constituency. Therefore, I ask for unanimous consent that in that House order we replace the date of November 9 with November 10.

Mr. Nielsen: I was hoping he would not spot that, Mr. Speaker. I understood what he meant when he discussed that with me. He can be forgiven since I missed Motion No. 10 in the fourth category last night.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The correction will be entered.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert).

As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the House will adjourn on Tuesday the 10th at six o'clock until eight o'clock on Thursday the 12th. As concerns House business for Monday, we shall proceed to the third reading of Bill C-48 concerning oil and gas, which we hope to be able to conclude on Monday, and if this cannot be done, we shall try to get third reading on Tuesday afternoon before the House adjourns at six o'clock. Next Thursday evening, the budget will be brought down. We have not yet determined what the order of business will be on the following Friday, but I have indicated to my colleagues that early next week, before the House adjourns at six o'clock on Tuesday, I should be able to confirm whether we shall have the first two days of the budget debate on Friday the 13th and the following Monday. What I can say for the moment, is that the third reading of Bill C-48 is scheduled for Monday and also Tuesday, if required, and the budget speech for Thursday evening.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I believe the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) indicated that he would confirm the first and second days of the budget debate prior to the adjournment on Tuesday, November 10.

Mr. Pinard: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

Public bills Nos. 18 to 71 inclusive allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I will be brief because I do not want to delay the important matter to be debated by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). It is simply that the order of business follows the order for private members' hour as listed on the Order Paper. Prior to the bill which is to be debated this afternoon by the hon. member for Edmonton West, there are seven bills for which it says "Text received", and therefore not printed, not in the members' hands. Those bills, therefore, cannot be stood because they are not available for second reading. Therefore, I suggest they should eventually be removed from the Order Paper. You might like to take that under advisement, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): As the hon. member has requested, the point will be taken under advisement.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSIONERS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved that Bill C-273, An Act to amend the House of Commons Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, first may I say that this bill has been before the House on a number of occasions in the past. I have been the sponsor in its present form. Other motions have been made in past years concerning the Commissioners of Internal Economy. I have moved in a period of transition with this bill. If hon. members have any idea of the management, administration of the management and provision for members' services in this House, they will fully understand my motivation in putting forward this bill.

I want to make it patently clear that putting forward this bill, which ultimately has the Speaker delegate the Speaker's powers with regard to the administration of the Chamber, is absolutely no reflection upon the present or any previous incumbent of the Chair. It is a matter of principle. I have nurtured it ever since I was Speaker. In those years of many years ago, there was only one fifth or one sixth of the number of employees now on the strength of the House of Commons.

What I intend through this bill is that all matters of administration of this House be delegated to a committee of five commissioners. The number of commissioners would be expanded by one. The commissioners would come from the House generally and not be limited artificially, as they have been hitherto for some 114 years, to active members of the cabinet.

A few years ago, the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, as a result of a casting vote by one of your colleagues now in the chair, decided I was wrong in saying that commissioners could be members of the Privy Council wherever they sat in the House. All good authority was on my side, but the politics of the situation at that time was such that they could not agree with me. Be that as it may, what came out of those committee hearings was an advisory committee on management and members' services. That was only a small step forward. This House is governed by a system that is an anachronism in legislatures around the world as we know them.

It is my humble submission that the Speaker, in addition to being the official host on behalf of the House of Commons, has more than enough work for any super competent person. The role of the Speaker should be limited directly to this chamber and to that which is appurtenant to it, such as Hansard and the committees. In my view, we should not, as the present management committee has decided to do, hive off Hansard, the committees branch, and the clerks under the Administrator. I think that is a shocking decision. I have said so publicly, and I repeat it publicly.

● (1610)

As I said, my bill would amend the House of Commons Act by naming a fifth commissioner, a person who, like the others, need not be a member of the cabinet. He or she could be an active member of the cabinet. As a formula I would suggest that one of the ministers of state, perhaps a junior minister, could be named a commissioner and that person designated as the chairman of the Board of Internal Economy. The bill would provide, if the government and possibly the majority of the House saw fit, for a representative on the board who had a direct link with the cabinet. We are practical people. I think it is good in that way to have somebody who can act as liaison with the cabinet.

The position of the Speaker as a commissioner is not abolished by the bill. The Speaker by my bill delegates his or her powers to one of the other persons, who is to be chairman of the committee. It is a formula, but in principle it seems to me that we still have to have the Speaker as head of the House of Commons. Even though the Speaker is head, it does not mean that his or her powers cannot be delegated. This delegation of power takes place at Westminster.

It was a strange thing but until a few years ago the monarch, either the king or the queen, was actually the head of the palace of Westminster. The powers of management and so forth were exercised on behalf of the monarch through the Speaker. That power was turned over from the monarch to the Speaker, and now the Speaker in turn has delegated many of the Chair's powers, or obligations, to members of the management committee. The Speaker can still participate because the Speaker has not yielded his or her position as a commissioner.

With regard to the administration of this chamber, I would say that there are now about 3,200 or 3,300 employees who come under the direct umbrella of the jurisdiction of the Speaker. The organization is now much more complex. When I was Speaker 20-odd years ago—and one hates to refer to a time that long ago—there was one building under the Speaker's jurisdiction, with a second one coming on strength. The West Block came on strength shortly after I yielded office to my successor, Speaker MacNaughton. Now the West Block, the East Block, the Confederation building and the Wellington building are all under the aegis of the Speaker. There are many ancillary areas which, as one who served as a Speaker, I feel take up far too much time and energy of the Speaker today. I refer specifically to this sapping administration. Even with the best will in the world and with competent officials to assist the Chair in the discharge of those duties, too much time and energy is demanded of the Chair, to the detriment of the discharge of the actual duties of the Chair.

There is one point on which I will be critical. I do not think the Speaker occupies the chair enough. The position of presiding officer is, immediately after question period, turned over to a series of assistants or deputies. The Speaker returns to the chair only to preside over formal votes. I suppose the Speaker would have to come back into the chamber if there were an appeal from one of the assistant Speakers.

It is my view that the Speaker should be in the chair much more often. I think the four assistants who normally occupy the Chair are involved in a further anachronism. They preside at all second reading debates, all report stage debates and all third reading debates. When a bill comes to a vote, the Speaker is in the chair. However, these assistants or deputies after having exercised the role of a presiding officer immediately turn around to vote. In my opinion, that is totally wrong. The Speaker is precluded by the rules from voting except in the case of a tied vote. There is no question about the fairness of a member of this House occupying the position of the Chair, but the rules say that that person shall not be entitled to vote. Nothing is said about the deputy chairmen, deputy or assistant speakers. They may profess to be the most fair-minded people in the world, but why are they not treated the same as the Speaker and not allowed to vote? But then we would hear the cry that far too many people from the government side could not vote. But why not follow what the Mother of Parliaments does? Deputy speakers are chosen equally from either side of the House.

All the brains are not located on the government side of the House. The same goes for the presiding officers of the House. Therefore if we followed the practice of Westminster, we would have a better balance. With my bill, I am not only getting a better balance in the administration of the House by naming people to the commission who are closer to members because cabinet ministers who are commissioners are busy men. It is very difficult to get them into meetings. At the present time I understand they have meetings at least once in three weeks. I have known the situation to go four or five months before the Speaker could dragoon those cabinet ministers together at one time over lunch. Those commissioners who came to decisions received their advice and instruction from the Speaker.

I can assure you, as an original member of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, that that practice is most frustrating, and it is wrong in form. The chairman of that committee should be along as an adviser, but he is never invited to these meetings. I think he should be. The services and the management of this House are for the members. The four commissioners as provided for in the House of Commons Act is an anachronism from 1867. They were the only Members of Parliament who remained most of the time in Ottawa. At one time members sat in this House for very short periods. Today we have a year round operation and there is no reason in the world why a senior member of the New Democratic Party, senior members of the two major parties should not be commissioners. It should not necessarily be done on the basis of party strength. There are men with greater knowledge and ability who could be administering services here, negotiating with staffs and arranging for clearances of grievances and all that sort of thing, which should be in the hands of this committee of members, numbering either five or seven.

● (1620)

The ultimate purpose of my bill is that the administration of this House shall effectively be in the hands of the members of this House and not in the hands of absentee landlords such as the Commissioners of Internal Economy are, commissioners with whom ordinary members have no direct contact except by buttonholing them, and that is the wrong type of influence.

I invite hon. members to examine my proposal and I would hope to see the bill, or the subject matter if so desired, sent to the appropriate committee so that we can take a look to see if we can design a formula which I in my experience of over 25 years in this House feel would be far more preferable for members than is the present system, even though the function is being discharged by people of the greatest goodwill. The system and the format works against them. I would suggest that my bill be accepted, read the second time and sent to the committee at five o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I am happy this afternoon to have an opportunity to participate in this debate. First, I want to congratulate the hon. member for bringing forth this private member's bill. I certainly believe it to be a step in the right direction and I too hope it will go to the committee to be discussed in more detail, with hopefully some form of it being enacted by this Parliament.

We are elected to this House of Commons, just as any minister who sits in this place is elected, with the same rights and privileges, we are told, and with the same responsibilities to our constituencies. It is true that a minister may have a larger constituency than individual backbench members, as they are called, but I submit that we are also told we have a duty to the country. I do not think anybody would suggest other than that each elected member of this chamber has a duty to the country as a whole. If we are responsible enough to be elected by our constituents, just as are the ministers, then I see no reason that backbench members of this House should not sit on the Board of Commissioners of Internal Economy.

I am not even sure, however, that the hon. member is going far enough in his proposal to change the Board of Commissioners. I am not sure that that Board of Commissioners should not be abolished altogether and the role taken over by what is now called the Advisory Committee on Management and Members' Services.

If I may, staying within the principles of the bill, talk for a minute about committees, I would like to do so. It would do little good, I suspect, to abolish the Board of Commissioners and replace it by a committee structured as is the present Committee on Management and Members' Services, or almost any of the other standing committees of the House. The committees of this House are too big and unwieldy. They have no real power, as they should. They have the opportunity generally to react to something that is already government policy. They have no policy input, as they should. In order to accomplish that, it seems to me those committees must be made much smaller than they are today.

If we had a Management and Members' Services Committee consisting of seven members of this House, elected on a pro rata basis among the parties, without suggesting that any party should have to split a member in order to have exact representation, I think such a committee could function well, not only in the interests of the economy of the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada, but as well in the interests of the real needs of members representing their constituents and carrying out their legislative work here in the House of Commons.

The time has come when backbench Members of Parliament must not only have and take but must demand a much larger role in policy formulation. With the evolution of society and the complexity of modern social, economic and other problems, the administration of government has grown much faster than the House of Commons, much faster than the Parliament of Canada. I am not advocating that this House should grow much larger, but I am advocating that the members who sit in this place should have a great deal more to say than they now have about what happens here, and that means a very drastic change in the Standing Orders of this House.

This is one of the things for which I have been agitating since the end of my first year here. It is one of the things we are promised with every new session of Parliament, but it is one of the things that has never been accomplished. It is my hope, and I have some faith that it will be fulfilled, that in the next session of Parliament we will take a comprehensive look at the Standing Orders of this House. I suggest that when that is done we should also take a comprehensive look at how this place itself is managed.

One of the subclauses of this bill suggests that the Speaker have the power to delegate any or all of his or her administrative powers to the commissioners. I have some difficulty with that. I believe we must always retain the Speaker of this House as the guardian, the protector and the ensurer of the rights and privileges of the members. The Speaker of this House is not above the other members of this House; the Speaker of this House is the first among us, and in fact in this House no member should be above any other. However, the Speaker must be responsible, in the final analysis, for the administration of the Parliament of Canada and for the protection of the rights and privileges of its members. If the Speaker is to delegate all of his or her authority, I have some difficulty in determining how the Speaker is to fulfil that role. That is a role I do not want to see taken from the Speaker.

We have many problems in this House. We have a problem as a result of every member being treated as though he or she represented an urban riding. It is obvious that the needs of members representing rural ridings may be quite different from the needs of members representing urban ridings. When I talk about needs I am talking about the necessity for staff here and for staff for constituency offices. The manner of staffing those offices may be very different in rural areas and in urban areas. I have a riding, for instance, which covers some 5,500 square miles. It is about 150 miles in length. Obviously that is quite different from the riding of Spadina, for instance, or Edmonton West.

● (1630)

Mr. Wilson: What happened in Spadina?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The people made a choice in Spadina, and I have no argument with that. That is the basis of our democratic system.

I am afraid the basis of our democratic system is not always adhered to in this place. I think, for instance, of question period. It is virtually impossible for a backbench member on the government side of the House to get a question during question period. Members are not always equal in this place. I understand there are quotas, and I do not blame the Speaker for that. Those are conventions which have grown in this place over the years. They are conventions which I believe are dangerous to basic democracy.

As I said earlier in my remarks, each of us has the same responsibility toward those who elect us. I have a great deal of difficulty in trying to justify to my constituents that I have not the same right and the same opportunities in this place to ask a question as does the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), for example. He just happens to sit on the other side of the House. It seems a very serious disadvantage to me when compared to the other members in the House. I want to reiterate that I do not blame any individual, only the fact that over the years conventions seem to have become regulations or rules, and I do not think that is right.

The hon. member for Edmonton West said we are governed here by a system that is an anachronism. I agree with him. In fact, I am beginning to believe that this whole place is an anachronism. The rules, our Standing Orders, are an anachronism, and it is high time the rules of this place were brought into the twentieth century. It is high time we had a legislative calendar such as the legislative bodies in other democratic countries have. It is high time we stopped sitting during the kind of nonsensical hours we do. We should have a reasonable schedule so we can plan our work and have sufficient time in our offices to deal with our constituency problems.

Much of the debate that goes on in this House, Mr. Speaker, is quite useless. It accomplishes nothing.

If committees were restructured and reduced in size to a maximum of 11 members and if the membership on those committees were made nearly permanent so that members do not play musical chairs in committee, we would be able to do very meaningful work there.

The government of the day should be willing to refer to committees substantive matters in the form of proposals rather than policies so those people who are formulating a particular policy can be called before a committee to justify the choices they might put before a minister. This should not be done when these policies have been carved in stone and have become pieces of granite which are known around here as bills. It becomes virtually impossible to change a policy once it is written in a bill and presented to the House. Unfortunately, that is about the only time it is referred to a committee, after it has been presented to this House as something which is already untouchable.

The voting system in this House is another anachronism. My colleague, the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen), brought this up earlier today during question period. I heartily endorse what he said. It would be a little nostalgic but there is something to be said, of course, for members having to stand in their place and vote because each member is standing up and accounting himself to the people who elected him. However, Mr. Speaker, when we have a situation such as we had last night where even when the votes had been grouped we had very repetitive actions taking place in this House, it is of no value to our society or democracy. There is no longer any justification for Members of Parliament, who have finally reached the point where they are getting paid a reasonable salary for the work they do, spending their time jumping up and down in the House like jacks-in-the-box to record their vote. There is a better way, and it is not beyond the ingenuity of mankind to make that possible in this chamber. It is time it was done.

I would like to see a body of some kind, which is responsible to the members of this House, which would administer this place under the direction of the Speaker.

I have seen, in the short time I have been here, the evolution of the administration of this place to a point which I do not like very much. I do not wish anybody to confuse what I am about to say with personalities. I am talking about the structure and not about individuals. We have a position now, Mr. Speaker, in our House of Commons known as that of the Administrator. My recollection of the Senate and House of Commons Act is that it says that this place will be administered by the Speaker and that the Speaker can delegate authority to the Clerk and to the Sergeant-at-Arms. I have no recollection of this act ever being amended to include the position of Administrator. I am concerned at the growth of bureaucracy in this institution. I am concerned that the real authority, the real responsibility and the accountability for the administration of this place is going to fall into the hands, if it has not already done so, of non-elected people. That, in my opinion, is wrong.

I, for one, am going to insist that not only the government, but all members, continue to agitate, continue to insist that every member of this House, whether or not he is a Privy Councillor, is treated the same. All Members of Parliament should have access to government proposals, to government documents that are not already cast in stone, as I said earlier. I will insist, and I hope other members will, that the committee structure of this House be changed and that committees be made meaningful bodies of this House. They should have some authority, and if they do not, we are all wasting our time.

I am prepared, Mr. Speaker, to let the committee do its work for about one more year and if by that time nothing happens, if there are no changes, I will no longer attend it. I am not going to waste my time going through the farce that most standing committees are today.

I support the basic thrust of this bill and I hope it will go to committee so that it can study it and, hopefully, improve upon it and make some suggestions for reform of not only the administration of the House but of the structure of the organs of this House known as the standing committees so that the role of the Member of Parliament will have some meaning in this place.

● (1640)

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, one of the most disturbing aspects of the Canadian parliamentary system which is of course based on the British parliamentary system, is the extremely fuzzy line that separates the executive and legislative functions of the government. This is, of course, best illustrated by the fact that, strangely enough, both legislators and ministers sit in the House. I know that a long tradition has led to this anachronism, where in the House, for all practical purposes, the legislative and executive functions are mixed, and I am also aware that many of our constraints, such as the constraints of parties and the constraints of the government's collective responsibility are self-imposed, and that we are now in a situation where it is becoming increasingly difficult for members to show their independence. There are of course mechanisms outside the House through which members can express themselves, such as the caucus and similar opportunities for consultation.

However, since the early days of our parliamentary system, the situation has evolved to the point where members are, for all practical purposes, subject to extremely restrictive conventions. Do members realize, Mr. Speaker, that the administration of the House is under government control and that is exactly what it is, control. Only Cabinet members sit on the committee or council which administers this House at least as far as the budgetary function is concerned. This is quite extraordinary and totally unacceptable!

One of the first things that struck me when I came to this House, Mr. Speaker, was the realization that as members we had absolutely no control over our administration. None at all! This committee by which we are administered consists of ministers appointed by the head of the government. So we have here a legislative chamber that is actually administered by the government. Except for our tradition of democratic consultation and the rest, this procedure would certainly be applauded by regimes that go against everything we believe in. The sponsor of the bill under consideration referred to our world, and just now I was alluding to that other world to which I am sure no one here would very much like to go. The member is introducing Bill C-273, whose purpose is clearly to instil some common sense and, by broadening access to the administration committee, to give all members of the House an opportunity to sit on the committee and to make the division of powers meaningful. And I entirely agree on that. However, I find it unbelievable that at 4.45 p.m. we should be here dealing with a private bill so fundamental to our institution. I was glad to hear the hon. member for Miramichi refer to parliamentary reform. There are very many things to be done in that area, whether we concern ourselves with committees, votes, internal management or the conventional rules to which I referred a while ago and which virtually compel us on both sides of the House—and I am using a strong word, Mr. Speaker—to act as mere puppets as a result of standards imposed upon us. I think that the matter will require some consideration.

Have hon. members ever asked themselves, whenever a non-confidence motion as we call it is moved, generally by an opposition party, whether we are playing our role? We express confidence or non-confidence in the government but what about the other bills? What about the other bills where it is suggested that the question of confidence is also involved? Indeed when a minister's bill is rejected, the minister is assumed to have lost the confidence of the House as is the government and assuredly our colleagues opposite would be the first ones in such a case to rise and demand that the government resign and call an election. I have already said it. As parliamentarians we know how to impose unacceptable restraints. What is the true meaning of a non-confidence motion if everything we do here is related to non-confidence or confidence issues?

Now our entire concept and understanding of our own work as elected representatives to a legislative body are warped. We become locked into an impossible situation and it is no wonder, Mr. Speaker, that our constituents often cannot understand how we have managed to get ourselves into such a predicament. I am speaking of course in a general sense. It will surely take some time before we do agree to reconsider this way of thinking but perhaps it is time to start something. A parliamentary reform has been announced. You can be assured, Mr. Speaker, that the issue of confidence in the government will not be reconsidered. Perhaps it is too soon to do that as well. The hon. members on the parliamentary committee will debate the statistics or the figures and what their responsibilities ought to be. It will be suggested that the number of members be reduced. My colleague from Miramichi made an interesting statement: let us stop playing musical chairs.

You know, Mr. Speaker, never was I more embarrassed than I was two years ago, I think, when my party—I say that without false modesty—had taken a few members off the committee under the pretence that they were against a bill. I know that the system was so much different over there, and I do not necessarily advocate that system. One can imagine such a situation in the American Congress where the chairman would tell a member of the foreign affairs committee: "You know, you do not agree with me so you will have to be taken off the committee and replaced by someone else." But what are we, Mr. Speaker? Are we supposed to play our role as parliamentarians, as elected members, or simply sanction or legitimize, if you want—it is legitimate, be careful now, I am not saying that it is not legitimate, the government is elected of course and this House gives it its confidence and every four years it must undergo the electoral test, but in the day-to-day life, constantly legitimizing measures which are not necessarily in full accordance with what we think our role ought to be as elected members for a given region. And I am not saying that the government must fall, quite the contrary. I am simply saying that we should be able to play our role as elected members in a democratic way, and should the time come when the government feels that perhaps it does not have the full confidence of the House because it has been defeated on a clause or on some sort of amendment or even on a bill, then the House, either the government itself or the opposition, may ask the House if the government still has its confidence.

If it has, then it can go on governing according to the wishes of the House as a legislative body. Therein lies the difference between the executive and the legislative levels. Why did we have to go through all this? To go back to Bill C-273, let us say that considerable progress has been made. When I was first elected to the House, there was not even a committee on management and members' services. We had no official spokesmen to voice our aspirations and our rights as parliamentarians to management except through the Speaker. We found ourselves in the most awkward situation of having to go and beg the government for a few dollars to buy a typewriter for instance, or to obtain the kind of services we deemed important and essential to help us fulfil our duties and obligations to the electorate. Incredible! Do we or do we not have a sense of responsibility? In other legislatures or legislative assemblies, the system is different. For example, there is the quaestorial system. I know that my colleague opposite who sponsored this bill is aware of this system which is used in the French National Assembly. However, in France, members of the National Assembly elect their own administrators in proportion to the parties represented. Does this mean that these administrators throw open the coffers, spend wastefully and do not take their own responsibilities? Not at all. Just like the other members, they are accountable for their administration and if they do not perform properly, they are either rejected by their colleagues or denounced by the newspapers and the general public. If we are responsible enough to ask our voters to elect us, to sit in this House, to rise day after day, to vote on decisions which are very important for the future of our country—there were 30 votes yesterday—I believe that we are responsible enough to administer our own affairs.

I do not have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that, in my opinion, there was no need for the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) to take such an initiative this afternoon. It is incredible that we should even be discussing this. All the members should unanimously rise to take in hand their own destiny as legislators. However, I am not saying that the government is to blame. I am not saying that the government has not managed the House well; that has nothing to do with it. I simply say that we should show a minimum of respect for the difference between the legislative function, for which we are here, and the executive function, which has of course a purpose and which operates on a different level. Mr. Speaker, we should at least be the masters of our own destiny in this House. This is why I approve the initiative of the hon. member for Edmonton West and why I hope that we shall put an end once and for all in a few months, when we undertake parliamentary reform, to something which is anachronistic, and I am confident, or at least I hope, that the government will see to it that we can pursue this evolution which has brought us from a situation where we had no say in our administration to the present state of affairs, where we have an advisory committee which discusses matters of interest to the members of the House and which makes excellent recommendations which have indeed been approved by the Internal Economy Commission, so that we can take our destiny in hand as the final stage of this evolution. This would only be normal. As for the rest, as for my comments on parliamentary responsibility and government responsibility in the House, it is of course a much wider issue. I have used very strong words because I believe that it is time for us, as Members of Parliament, to reflect on this matter since, once again, we have put ourselves in this straitjacket in which we operate, and it is up to us to get out of it.

● (1650)

[English]

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I would like to thank the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for precipitating this discussion by bringing in this private member's bill. I know it is an issue that he is very familiar with and that he has spent many years working toward trying to improve the operation of the House with regard to matters of this nature. When we look at this issue, Mr. Speaker, I think it is necessary to look at how the Commissioners of Internal Economy came to have the jurisdiction that they have and where they came from.

The Commissioner of Internal Economy was established at the first session of Parliament. At that point, Mr. Speaker, Parliament met only a few weeks each year. Most of the employees employed by Parliament in those earlier days were mostly clerks and messengers who were employed on a temporary basis. They were employed for a few weeks or a couple of months at the most. Patronage was not unknown in those days; in fact, it was common and rather rampant. In 1867 and shortly thereafter it was desirable—and, as we all know that practice has long since died out and has become more or less extinct, at least at the federal level—that members from outside the Ottawa area, from more distant parts of Canada, should have jurisdiction over who was employed by Parliament on a temporary basis and who received these jobs. It was felt that to put this in the hands of members from the Ottawa area would be giving Jack the Ripper an Avon route. Perhaps it would result in some great injustices.

To protect Parliament in those days, the Board of Commissioners of Internal Economy was set up. The only members from outside the Ottawa area who were here all year round were cabinet ministers. In conducting research into the historical development of the existence of the Board of Commissioners of Internal Economy, I found that that seems to have been the rationale for the reason why they wound up doing the job they have been doing for so many years.

A few years ago, the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, recognizing the immensely more complex administrative requirements of the House in the late twentieth century, recommended the creation of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services so that members, other than the Speaker and ministers, could participate in the administrative decisions of the House. I think it is fair to say that probably most of the best improvements in the administration of the House have originated from this committee.

I think it could be argued that the situation does need review. This committee often meets in camera and rarely reports to the House. This does not mean to say that the members on the committee are unaware of its deliberations or its advice.

Furthermore, it is important to bear in mind that the committee does not have any executive authority in law. It remains with the Commissioners of Internal Economy. The committee can review the situation and hold what discussions they feel are appropriate and make whatever recommendations they feel are appropriate. In the final analysis, they do not have legal authority. This is something that has rested with the Commissioners of Internal Economy and continues to rest with them.

An example that we might look at is the Senate. These days some people tend to view the Senate as a bit of an anachronism in many ways. I suppose that is an issue that can be argued. Perhaps the example of the Senate is worth looking into. When you look at the Senate, you will find that almost all the administrative decisions that are taken there are not taken by the Speaker or in camera or by a body that does not report to the whole House, but by a standing committee that is accountable to the Senate.

What is the result of this? In recent months there have been many rumours and allegations, some of them perhaps based on fact, others on fiction. There have been counterclaims about the administration and the machinations that go on in the House. Of course, we have the nation's gossip columnists. Many of the political columnists have had a heyday talking about the debates and internal dissension that have, in fact, occurred.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 9, 1981

The House met at 2.00 p.m.

• (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

PRICE CHARGED DOMESTIC MARINE CARRIERS FOR FUEL
MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, one goal of the National Energy Program is to promote energy conservation. However, in its usual shortsighted way, the federal government is actually encouraging fuel inefficient modes of transport by forcing domestic marine carriers to pay world price for fuel while not imposing the same price on surface carriers. Marine transport is three times more fuel efficient than rail, and eight times more fuel efficient than road transport. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That this House urges the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to reassess the application of the National Energy Program so that users of road, rail or water transport can make a choice based not only on cost but also on fuel efficiency, thereby fulfilling one of the most important objectives of the NEP.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSING

CALL FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has so far refused to do anything for people who have had to leave their homes because of poisonous UFFI fumes, and because he has done nothing so far for people who have to leave their homes because they cannot afford sky-rocketing mortgage interest rates, and since representatives of a now crippled housing industry announced today that housing starts are down 52 per cent and we would need a 150 per cent increase in housing starts to meet the Liberal government's own projections, I move, seconded by the member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation tender his resignation immediately before he throws us all out into the street.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DELAY IN PROCESSING PENSION APPLICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) claims that Canada's treatment of its veteran population cannot be bettered anywhere in the world, but the United States can and does process its veterans' pension applications within 90 days, compared to Canada's disgraceful record of 46 months. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That this House demands that the Minister of Veterans Affairs act immediately to initiate changes in legislation which would reduce the pension application waiting period for Canadian veterans from the present unconscionable 46 months to not more than three months which is the limit in the United States.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

MEDICAL CARE

IMPOSITION OF USER FEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and national necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has assured Canadians that he will not allow federally funded medical care to be undermined by lack of equal accessibility; and whereas the government of Ontario, following the government of British Columbia, proposes to charge user fees for hospital care which, according to the Hall report and the Parliamentary Task Force on Established Programs Funding, will surely deter sick people with low incomes from using hospitals, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

S.O. 43

That this House direct the Prime Minister to notify the provincial governments that if they charge user fees federal funding will be withdrawn.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

SPEECH BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE AT LIBERAL PARTY MEETING IN ALBERTA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Frith (Sudbury): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the federal Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) received several standing ovations given by hundreds of Alberta Liberals during a speech on the new Constitution in Calgary on the weekend, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Mrs. Killens):

That this House unanimously grant leave of absence for the federal Minister of Justice to travel across the country spreading the joy concerning our new Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

HONG KONG VETERANS—CALL FOR STUDY OF PARASITIC DISEASE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, 950 Canadian Hong Kong veterans may be subject to a rare Asian parasite which, since 1967, has been treatable. To date efforts to persuade the Liberal government to take a serious look at the problem have been unsuccessful. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That this House instruct the Minister of Veterans Affairs to launch an immediate study into this new parasitic disease and develop treatment plans for the 950 potential Hong Kong veteran victims.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING FORTHCOMING BIRTH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That this House expresses its loyal congratulations to Her Royal Highness, the Princess of Wales, and her husband, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, on the announcement regarding the anticipated royal event this coming spring; and assures the royal couple of our loyal good wishes and continuing loyalty and interest.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1410)

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

CHU CHUA INDIAN BAND'S APPLICATION FOR FUNDING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the increasing state of unemployment, and especially the exceptionally high interest rates found on Canadian Indian reserves, and recognizing that many bands have been attempting to initiate long term, progressive and viable job-creation programs for their members, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

That this House urge the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to make the long awaited commitment to the North Thompson Chu Chua Indian Band regarding the ARDSA application to improve the unemployment situation through an innovative economic development proposal.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

RAILWAYS

ABANDONMENT OF ROSEDALE-EAST COULEE RAIL LINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, whereas the western division of CTC ordered the Rosedale-East Coulee CP-CN rail line abandoned on the date of the order in spite of the fact that, one, there are a million tons of potential coal to be mined and, two, Allied Chemicals of Canada are producing calcium chloride now on the route, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes):

That this House urges the Minister of Transport to place a stay on this order until all appeals have been heard.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PAYMENT OF BENEFITS TO WORKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, a recent appeal by employees of Heckett Engineering and Crosstown Mobile Wash was upheld by the UIC Board of Referees. However, the payment of benefits is now being withheld subject to a UIC decision on whether or not to appeal further. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration instruct the UIC not to appeal and to make immediate payment of all moneys these workers have been denied and to which they are entitled.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

EXPOSURE OF HONG KONG VETERANS TO PARASITIC DISEASE—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Veterans Affairs I would like to direct my question to the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs who, I understand, is the Minister of National Defence. Problems are mounting within the Department of Veterans Affairs. Veterans are having to wait up to five years to have their pension applications processed and, to date, no headway has been made in reducing the excessive delays. Now, to add insult to injury, the Liberal government refuses to investigate the potentially fatal Asian parasite disease which may be affecting 950 Hong Kong veterans. The government refuses to do this, despite the fact that the Hong Kong Veterans Association contacted the Pension Commission close to three years ago and has yet to receive a response, and also despite the fact that a cure has been available since 1967.

Will the acting minister launch an immediate inquiry into this potentially fatal problem, and will he report back to the House with his findings as soon as possible?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I will soon be able to relay the information I received from the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine concerning this subject of what he calls the Asian parasite disease. I am sure the Minister of Veterans Affairs will do his utmost to satisfy the Hong Kong veterans, as we have been doing for the last ten years. When I left the ministry I thought the delays in pension processing were being curtailed, and were decreasing very dramatically. With the new—

An hon. Member: Bull!

Mr. Lamontagne: —pension chairman coming in, with the help of the former one, and also with the nomination of Mr. McCracken we will investigate all the mechanisms of this pension problem so that the veterans would be satisfied with the direction we give.

Mr. McKenzie: I would like to point out to the acting minister that the standing committee was informed this year that matters will get worse within Veterans Affairs in dealing with the pension applications.

PRACTICE FOLLOWED BY MEDICAL EXAMINERS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): I have another supplementary question for the same acting minister in regard to the medical advisory board. I would like the minister to launch another investigation into the recent disclosure that medical examiners in the Canadian Pension Commission are breaking the law by offering opinions on veterans' cases instead of simply providing medical advice. The minister will know that the situation has become so bad that veterans have been forced to take the government to court in order to have this practice stopped.

• (1415)

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have noted the hon. member's remarks and I am sure that the Minister of Veterans Affairs will take note of them also. I think we will be able to correct the problem very quickly.

REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE INTRODUCED SIMILAR TO UNITED STATES SYSTEM

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, in Saskatoon on October 19, 1981, the Minister of Veterans Affairs made the following statement:

I haven't heard any critic say that Parliament should abandon the Canadian way for any other country's system.

That statement is not correct. We have asked for the American system to be introduced in Canada. This request was raised at a standing committee hearing earlier this year. I have raised the matter on numerous occasions in the House. Will the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs give a firm commitment to this House that he will raise this matter in cabinet and have legislation introduced in Canada similar to what is in force in the United States where pension applications can be processed in 90 days, and not five years?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not want to take up the responsibility of the present Minister of Veterans Affairs, who is most able to look after the problem.

I think the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine should be a little better informed about veterans and realize exactly how good this government has been to veterans. This is especially on the eve of November 11, which is the day on which we can demonstrate to our veterans that we took good care of them over the last 30 or 35 years.

When the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine tells me that we should introduce the American system into Canada in place of what we have, I think our veterans would have a lot to lose.

Mr. Clark: How would you know?

Mr. Lamontagne: The American system does not apply the same way at all, nor does the American system have the same principles by which to evaluate what pensions or benefits our veterans should have or not have. However, I can say that this government has done tremendously well. In the last session we passed legislation to help widows of veterans. Both in this session and the next we will still try to improve that legislation.

COMPENSATION LEVELS FOR DIEPPE PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I regret that the Minister of Veterans Affairs is not here, particularly at this time of the year to answer for himself and for his department. Therefore, may I direct my question to the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs? Reports and studies have shown that Dieppe prisoners of war have a higher incidence of premature aging, pensionable disabilities and mortality rates than any other prisoners of war or war grouping, except for the Hong Kong veterans.

The present minister has spoken of justice and fair play in the veterans benefit program. Is it just, to compensate those who were prisoners of war for two and one half years or more at the same rate, or at twice the rate payable to prisoners of war who were detained for only some three momths?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker the Minister of Veterans Affairs is not in the House because he is representing the Canadian government at Vimy, France, making sure Canada is well represented.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: I will take note of the hon. member's question, and I will endeavour to refer it to the present minister.

I would like to tell the hon. member for St. Catharines that I appreciated the fact that he accompanied me on behalf of veterans on the recent pilgrimage to the eastern European countries. I think the hon. member should know that the Canadian government has done tremendously well in providing veterans benefits.

DELAY IN PROCESSING PENSION APPLICATIONS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs. I will put my question very simply. What is the use of talking about a great and improved veterans affairs program if veterans who make applications for pensions are to be frustrated and delayed to the extent they are in the processing of their claims? The Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs is in a position to answer that question.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would like to elaborate on the question which the hon. member has asked. However, I much prefer to wait until the Minister of Veterans Affairs is here, who will be able to tell the hon. member what can be done and has been done in this matter. I think that would be a much better approach in view of the fact that the Minister of Veterans Affairs is now responsible for this matter.

* * *

● (1420)

HOUSING

DECLINE IN HOUSING STARTS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for CMHC who might better be called the minister of housing disaster. Recently the minister bragged that monthly housing starts have increased since he took over his portfolio. We now learn from the housing industry that housing starts are at their lowest monthly rate since 1960. October figures show a decrease of 52 per cent in housing starts compared to last year. Will the minister now tell the truth? Will he admit that the home building industry is in very deep trouble with high unemployment of building trades workers, and will he tell us what plans he has to encourage the construction of some 220,000 units of housing, which is the minimum required to keep Canadians housed?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member will be encouraged to know, notwithstanding the drop in starts which she has identified for the month of October, that in fact the starts for the year 1981 will be increased over those of 1980, so that the anticipated starts for this year are still somewhere in the range of 180,000, much above the low starts experienced in the industry last year.

BUDGETARY FUNDING FOR CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, it is my understanding that, according to the minister's own signed report from CMHC, the housing prospect for new homes is in a disaster situation. Obviously the minister still refuses to acknowledge his own responsibility to provide leadership and some government solution. Over the past five years Liberal governments have decimated the CMHC budget. It has been cut from $1.6 billion in 1976 to a mere $350 million last year. As a result of this, CMHC no longer is involved in the production of housing but is merely a mortgage insurer. Will the minister demand a return to 1976 budget levels for CMHC, and will he restore this organization to its former role of providing housing that Canadian families can afford?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am somewhat surprised by the question of the hon. member as she represents an area of Canada that obviously is in need of assistance in housing suitable to people of lower and middle-income levels. I am surprised that she would not say, for example, that this government, in responding to that very difficult situation, has targeted assistance to areas of the country that obviously need assistance more than others. I know, for example, that the increased social starts in co-op and non-profit housing have been directed specifically to the city that she represents, the greater Vancouver area, and I know that is doing great good in that greater Vancouver area and the province of British Columbia.

REPORTED INCREASES IN RENTS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I should like to assure the minister that the people on this side of the House are concerned about housing right across the country.

We understand today that rents in Quebec, as in other parts of Canada, are increasing. But particularly today there comes a sad story for Quebecers whose rents are going to be increased 20 per cent, largely due to high mortgage interest rates. In other parts of Canada rent increases in terms of percentage of income are even higher. What does the minister intend to do, other than MURB programs which do not provide affordable rental housing, in a positive way to develop rental housing through CMHC?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, once again I am surprised that the hon. member in all of her questions today, and in the last question particularly, ignored once again the social component of CMHC housing under Section 56(1), which, during the last two years, has shown an increase from 25,000 to 30,000 starts in housing directed toward people who need that kind of housing.

• (1425)

Why does she not recognize the good done by this government—25,000 to 30,000 starts out of what she says are starts down at a rate of 100,000? The hon. member should look at the percentage that this government is contributing toward the industry, specifically in her province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the Constitution. Since the media mentioned today that Mr. Ryan, Leader of the Opposition in Quebec, sent a telex to the Prime Minister of Canada which, it seems, contained substantial suggestions on breaking the constitutional deadlock between Quebec and Ottawa, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether he intends to follow up any of Mr. Ryan's suggestions, and could he also report to the House on the progress of negotiations which, I hope, are still continuing between the government of Quebec and the Government of Canada with a view to reaching an agreement that would be agreeable to all provinces, including Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, since Thursday when the conference was drawing to a close I have said on behalf of the Canadian government that we were prepared to seek accommodation on the three points with which the government of Quebec was in disagreement, and if solutions or compromise formulas could be found, we were prepared to look into these. To this day, and I checked earlier with the Minister of Justice, we have not had word from the government of Quebec. Actually, I think they wanted the conference to be a failure, and now they would not want it to succeed through the action of a compromise formula. Mr. Ryan has proposed such a formula which we will examine carefully I would first like to know what are the PQ government's views on the subject and, if it is a valid formula, we might look into it.

[English]

TELEX FROM LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION IN QUEBEC NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister in relation to the telex from Mr. Ryan, which I have not had an opportunity to see but which I understand has at least two elements. First, there are some specific suggestions regarding the three outstanding matters cited by the Prime Minister and Premier of Quebec to be at issue. Also, if I understand correctly, there is a request by Mr. Ryan, the leader of the Liberal opposition party in the Quebec National Assembly, that the Government of Canada be prepared to negotiate with the government of Quebec to enable the participation and involvement of Quebec in a full constitutional settlement.

Does the Prime Minister intend to respond positively to that request by Mr. Ryan and to do everything possible to involve the province of Quebec in a full constitutional solution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I honestly am not clear on what the Leader of the Opposition intends when he says insisting "on a full constitutional solution".

There are three areas on which the government of the province of Quebec indicated that it disagreed. I have indicated that we are prepared to look for some accommodation in those three areas providing they do not result in a position which would break up the accord reached with the nine provincial governments last week, and providing they ensured fairness for all Canadians.

I am really repeating my previous answer to the member from Saint-Jacques, but if the Leader of the Opposition has some further supplementary I would be happy to entertain it.

INCLUSION OF QUEBEC IN CONSTITUTIONAL AGREEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, naturally we would like to have the opportunity to see as soon as possible the resolution which the Government of Canada I understand is drafting as a result of the accord signed between the Prime Minister and nine of the premiers. What I am interested in is having an undertaking from the Prime Minister that he will vigorously and fully pursue an agreement with the province of Quebec and that he will not place any artificial obstacles in the—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —any artificial obstacles in the path of an agreement. Would the Prime Minister give his undertaking on that; and also an undertaking that he would be prepared to respect what I understand to be the spirit of the request of Mr. Ryan, that spirit being that all efforts be made to include the province of Quebec in a constitutional agreement signed by and supportable by the other premiers?

● (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe my previous answers and what I have been saying since Thursday noon should satisfy the Leader of the Opposition as to the spirit and the willingness we have had about including Quebec in a final solution. In so far as the first point about the federal government drafting an amendment to the resolution is concerned, I want the Leader of the Opposition to take note that it has been the joint work of the federal and provincial officials to try to put into legal texts the agreement that nine provinces and the federal government reached last Thursday and Friday.

As to his other point about not putting up artificial barriers, I do not know what the Leader of the Opposition would define as an artificial barrier. For instance, on education and linguistic rights for minorities what would he consider an artificial barrier—the federal government trying to ensure that English-speaking Canadians in Quebec have the same rights French-speaking Canadians in the other provinces now have? If we insisted on that, would that be an artificial barrier in the eyes of the Leader of the Opposition?

EQUALITY OF THE SEXES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I suppose that so long as we have an implicit undertaking from the Prime Minister that he will respect the spirit sought by Mr. Ryan of an honest attempt to include the province of Quebec in this accord, we will have to wait to see the resolution which comes forward.

However, let me ask a specific supplementary question of the Prime Minister in relation to the resolution that is being drafted. Would the Prime Minister confirm that in the original accord, signed by himself and the nine premiers on Thursday, the opt-out or override provisions do not apply to the guarantee of equality of male and female persons which, the Prime Minister will recall, was set down deliberately in a separate section, Section 28, of the original resolution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think this is the question asked by the hon. lady in the New Democratic Party the other day. I had a chance to look this up since then, as I said I would—

Mrs. Mitchell: Hon. lady?

Mr. Trudeau: If some can say "hon. gentleman", is it prohibited to say "hon. lady"?

Mrs. Mitchell: Hon. member.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, would you like me to call her something else?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: My understanding is that in the work done by the federal and provincial officials the "notwithstanding" clause would indeed apply to that particular section.

Mr. Rae: It shouldn't.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member says it would not.

Mr. Rae: I am saying it shouldn't.

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, well, we know that the Leader of the Opposition has always argued that we should have a charter made in Canada by Canadians. Now that we will have our own Constitution, now will be his chance to have a charter made in Canada by Canadians, and over the next years he will be able to fight to put back in the charter what we had in the original charter which his party combated tooth and nail for the past year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition asks me if we will make an honest attempt to seek some kind of compromise. We have been trying since Thursday. We have indicated to the Parti Québécois, the Quebec government, that we are willing to hear some words from them particularly on the mobility clause, as we got from Premier Peckford, which would answer the problem the Parti Québécois has with the charter as it is now presently conceived. We have not heard from them.

I just want to reiterate to the Leader of the Opposition that we have a duty to protect minorities, and we are trying to find a way to convince the government of Quebec that it should share in that duty of protecting minorities. I recall for the Leader of the Opposition that I believe it was less than a couple of months ago that he was speaking in Montreal and undertook to communicate with the Premier of Quebec to make sure that the government of Quebec would see its way clear in some way to protect the English-speaking minorities in Quebec. I wonder if he has since then communicated with the premier and if it would not be useful now for him to communicate with the Premier of Quebec to indicate his concern for these minorities, as he said he would a couple of months ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I find it rather strange that the Prime Minister should be putting questions to me, but I will not follow his practice; I will answer the question. The answer to the question is yes, I have.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DETAILS OF ACCORD

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Timmins-Chapleau is the only empty barrel with a mustache in the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chénier: We want to keep you as leader, Joe.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, there is a great deal of heckling from the Liberal side, perhaps to stop questions about the equality of male and female persons. However, let me come back to the specific communiqué of the accord tabled in the House of Commons by the Prime Minister which says that there was agreement on the entrenchment of the full charter of rights and freedoms now before Parliament, with the following changes:

(b) A "notwithstanding" clause covering sections dealing with Fundamental Freedoms, Legal Rights and Equality Rights.

The Prime Minister will recall that there was a deliberate effort made, when the original resolution was prepared, to put Section 28 in a separate section. That separate Section 28 is not referred to in the list of exceptions I have just quoted.

Is the Prime Minister telling us that the Government of Canada is now changing the accord which was signed by the Premiers? Are we going to have a resolution which has an opting-out or override clause applied to Section 28, when the accord did not have an opting-out or override clause applying to Section 28?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, I am not saying that. The Government of Canada did not want to take anything out of the resolution which was before the House; nothing. We wish the Leader of the Opposition had supported it when it was here the first time, but I did say that the officials of the federal and provincial governments did meet on Thursday and Friday, and my understanding of that meeting is that this particular section would be subject to the "notwithstanding" clause.

Mr. Clark: That changes the accord.

Mr. Trudeau: Let me make it clear that everything in the charter now we would want to keep. Anything taken out is taken out because of the accord.

Mr. Clark: No.

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition says "No". I wish he would get hold of the nine premiers and get them to interpret the accord.

I can show a piece of paper too.

Miss MacDonald: Shame on you.

Mr. Trudeau: The lady from Kingston says "Shame". She did not support the charter when it was here.

Some hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Trudeau: She did not support it when it gave absolute equality to the sexes. Hon. members opposite did not support it when it gave recognition to aboriginal rights.

As a result of the accord last week we have had to take certain things out, not because we wanted to take them out but because we were asked to take them out as the price of an agreement. I will not be saddled now with any weakness of the charter, which the party opposite refused to support and is now crying about because it does not appear in its entirety. They wanted a charter made in Canada. Let them sit down to work now and start making a charter in Canada. That means agreeing with the provinces that they should protect these people.

● (1440)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Section 91(24) makes it clear that the jurisdiction over aboriginal and treaty rights is an exclusive federal power. It is my understanding that the September ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada only limited the federal government's ability to affect provincial jurisdiction directly. We all recognize the importance of last Thursday's consensus. However, I would like the minister to confirm to this House that it is, first, within the powers of this House to re-entrench Section 34 fully, which this party will support and, second, that this action would not conflict with the September ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, we were very pleased to entrench these rights in the Constitution at the committee stage. As the Prime Minister indicated a few minutes ago, we agreed to a proposition that came from the provinces. It was a document presented to the conference by Premier Peckford. The aboriginal rights were not protected in that proposition. We asked whether it was a mistake that they were not there. The answer was no, they knew, that the provinces did not want to opt to entrench aboriginal rights both at the federal and provincial levels.

We remembered that the National Indian Brotherhood and the Metis had announced through the Indian association strong opposition to the way it was entrenched. Some of them were already campaigning in London trying to block our "demarches". What the Prime Minister did, when he realized it was being requested by the provinces not to be entrenched, was to reaffirm our commitment to entrench. He suggested to the provinces holding a constitutional conference on aboriginal rights so that the Indians, Inuit, Metis, provincial and federal governments could get together to find a solution that would be acceptable to everyone.

REQUEST THAT RIGHTS BE RESTORED IN CONSTITUTION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, the important point for the House and the Minister of Justice to get hold of is that none of the major groups in Canada oppose Section 34 as it stands. They want something more. They wanted a consent clause included. This party is clearly on record that we want Section 34 put back in, fully entrenched. It is my understanding that that is supported by all members of this House. Section 91(24) of the British North America Act makes it abundantly clear that it is a sole federal jurisdiction. It can be put back in. The Supreme Court of Canada agrees with that. Will the Minister of Justice rise in his place and tell the native people of Canada, 1.3 million Canadians, that Section 34 will be put back in fully, as all members of this House think it should be?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice): I said, Madam Speaker, that we want to ensure that these rights are entrenched in the Constitution at all levels. We will do whatever is necessary to find words with which everyone can agree. Everyone knows we took the initiative of putting that in the Constitution. We wanted it to be in the Constitution for all time. The Prime Minister asked the provinces to agree to a conference so that this would be entrenched in such a way that the native people, the provinces and the federal government, will be completely satisfied, and these people will be protected.

DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND REPRESENTATIVES OF NATIVE PEOPLE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. There have been reports that the Prime Minister would meet today with the Inuit and Indian leaders to discuss the constitutional accord of November 5 which dropped Section 34 entrenching aboriginal and treaty rights. Will the Prime Minister confirm whether such a meeting has already taken place? If so, what were the results? Has the Prime Minister agreed at least to entrench those aboriginal and treaty rights for all matters under federal jurisdiction?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I did meet with certain Inuit leaders in the presence and with the assistance of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. We examined these questions. I expressed the federal point of view much as the Minister of Justice just did in his last answer. We were anxious to find a formula which would not only involve a recognition by the federal government of the existence of aboriginal rights, but a process which would hopefully lead the provinces to recognize those aboriginal rights.

The aboriginal people themselves know that their life, except in the case of the Territories, is lived out within the provinces and that they have many rights and programs which should apply to them at the provincial level. Once again, as the minister just said, we would prefer a solution which would not have the federal government go it alone and then perhaps leave the problem on the back burner forever, but try to involve the provinces as well as the federal government and the native peoples themselves in a solution which all could accept, as the minister just indicated.

STATUS OF NON-NATIVE RESIDENTS OF YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has mentioned the people of the two Territories quite apart from the native peoples in those parts of Canada. In view of the existence of paragraph (5) of the accord where special arrangements have been made to hear the views and concerns of the aboriginal peoples of Canada, can the Prime Minister explain why all of those thousands of Canadian citizens who are non-native living in Yukon and Northwest Territories have been left out in the cold with respect of this accord?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, unless I understand the Constitution differently from the hon. member, those Territories are still part of Canada and still come under the jurisdiction of the federal government. In that sense the hon. member may be out in the cold with his party on this subject, but we do not think the native people or the northern people are.

* * *

HOUSING

DROP IN HOUSING STARTS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister responsible for housing. On October 30 last I referred to the Statistics Canada projections of seasonally adjusted housing starts of 135,000. The minister at that time said I could draw some consolation from the real seasonally adjusted rate of 180,000. We now know that the seasonally adjusted rate, according to the latest figures from his own Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, is down to a disastrously low 104,500. What does the minister have in place, or what advice does he have for the government to change this disastrous course?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, in answer to a similar question I indicated that the strength in housing starts earlier this year was, for example, in March somewhere in the neighbourhood of 246,000 on an annually adjusted rate. The strength of the earlier housing starts will mean that the annual performance this year will be around 170,000. The one month's decline has to be balanced against the very high strength earlier in the year.

I hasten to indicate that, although starts were down in the month of October, early figures indicate that applications for mortgage funding, draws on mortgage funding, were up during the month of October. I expect that the months of November and December will contribute to an increase in strength in the market and in the industry for the balance of the year.

REQUEST FOR ADVICE FROM MINISTER

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, according to the minister's own figures, in terms of actual starts last year we had a disastrously low 158,600. We need 220,000 to meet minimum requirements. Indeed, according to CMHC's own projections, we will need 261,000 on a seasonally adjusted rate. We now have 104,000. We are told by the industry in terms of the rental situation that, apart from whatever government assistance there is next year, there will be no new rental units built next year, which means that the zero vacancy rate is now upon us. This spells a disaster, Madam Speaker, in the total housing industry. Everyone recognizes that but the minister responsible for housing.

● (1450)

What advice does the minister have for the people of Canada who, for the first time since the end of the Second World War, are facing a housing crisis of unprecedented proportions?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the strength and the seriousness with which the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) puts forth his question is somewhat hollow when you take into account that one of the things this government had to do last year, when it came into office, was to undo some of the harm done by the government of which he was a member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: For example, we had to reintroduce the MURB provision, to increase by 20,000 starts the provision of supply of housing in the country, and to increase the social components of housing starts. A study ordered up by the previous government of which the hon. member was a member, recommended that the government withdraw from housing, withdraw from social housing, and withdraw from MURBs. We have had a little catchup since the last government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

PIPELINES

EXTENSION OF NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO EAST COAST

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources concerning the natural gas pipeline extension to the east of Canada. The minister knows that the gas pipeline extension was promised by the Prime Minister, that it was included in the National Energy Program and promised in this House by the minister. On August 11 the National Energy Board approved the pipeline extension. The government has been waiting for three months to answer this question that is so vital to the east coast.

Will the minister tell the House what the reason is for the delay, and when the government will approve this important economic project that will mean hundreds of jobs, and the expenditure of thousands of dollars for Canadian industry?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The project will mean the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars in the Canadian industry, not only thousands. The government has been very supportive of this project. It is committed to it. We are very happy that the National Energy Board has put forth a recommendation supporting the completion of a gas pipeline system right through to Cape Breton and Halifax. I expect to be in a position to announce a government decision on this recommendation from the National Energy Board very shortly.

Oral Questions

DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Madam Speaker, the National Energy Program indicated that we on the east coast would receive natural gas through the pipeline system by 1983. This has now been extended two years. Further delays will result in a failure to supply natural gas for even longer periods of time. I do not think the minister's answer is good enough in the context of his promises to the House, and the promises by the Prime Minister in the election campaign.

When will the gas line be constructed? When will we know about this thing? Why are there further delays over the three months the government has already had to consider the matter?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, again the government and myself have been the ones who have pushed for this particular program while the Conservatives were sitting on their hands.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: As a matter of fact, the hon. member well knows we had to prevail against the very strong reservations of the Conservative government of New Brunswick about this particular issue. I am very happy now that the government of New Brunswick has come around to support this project.

We have faced some problems with the particular route that has been proposed between Quebec and New Brunswick. We have also faced some objections from the government of Quebec. I have been working very hard in order to resolve those objections so that the project, once it is finally and formally approved, will proceed much faster than the way the hon. member suggested.

So far as the project is concerned, it is one of the top priorities of this government. I am not only confident, but I can tell the hon. member that the project will take place.

Mr. Crosby: When?

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—HOLDING OF DEMOCRATIC ELECTIONS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like to ask my question in the light of the discussion that has gone on today about human rights, and I particularly ask the question about the state of El Salvador. In my hand I have a letter that the minister received from the Canadian Council of Churches indicating and asking for a change in policy respecting Canada and El Salvador. I also have here a letter recently released by the Conference of Canadian Catholic Bishops that says "that the military and Christian Democratic ruling junta in El Salvador is responsible before its own nation and before the international community for extremely grave crimes. It is responsible for the crimes of extermination and genocide carried out against tens of thousands of El Salvadorans in a little over a year." That letter was signed by 33 bishops from Mexico, Central America, and Latin America, and by 210 priests. They praised the Canadian bishops for what they had done so far.

Does the Minister of External Affairs still believe that true representative democratic elections will be possible in El Salvador in March?

An hon. Member: No.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, our policy on El Salvador has continued to be one of seeking peace through political means and not by military means. We have expressed this policy for months. We believe that the election, which is planned by the present government of El Salvador, will allow the people of El Salvador a democratic choice, if it is conducted in the proper way. We have indicated to that government that we are prepared to support them in every possible way, by observers, through technical assistance, or any other way, to conduct that election campaign in a fully democratic manner. It seems to me, Madam Speaker, that to allow the people of El Salvador themselves to judge the government of El Salvador is really the genuinely democratic way to proceed with a problem of this kind.

RECOGNITION OF POLITICAL MOVEMENT

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, at the UPI meeting, an international meeting of parliamentarians in Havana. the Canadian delegation representing all three parties, and also the Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, voted as a group to support the French-Mexican position of accepting the fact that the FDR is a legitimate, political force that must be dealt with. Will the minister tell this House whether or not the government is ready to move in that same direction?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, that initiative is largely discredited at this point. Certainly it is not one which we propose to join. I would say to the hon. member, Madam Speaker, that we are concerned about the problems of El Salvador, whether they arise from the right or the left. We are not concerned about the problems that arise only from one direction. We believe that the best solution is to allow the people of El Salvador themselves to decide. I wonder what my hon. friend finds wrong with democracy.

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

PROPOSAL THAT REPRESENTATIVES OF MINORITIES ATTEND CONFERENCE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. On Friday, November 6 of this year, the Prime Minister told the House he had asked for a federal-provincial meeting to discuss entrenchment of aboriginal rights in the Constitution. The purpose of the meeting would be to enable native peoples to express their grievances regarding the present draft. As the rights of francophones outside Quebec might also be recognized in the new Constitution by acknowledging their right to have access to the legislature and the courts of their province in their own language, across Canada, I wish to ask the Prime Minister, first of all, if he is willing and if so, on what conditions, to have, as is planned with the native peoples, a federal-provincial meeting to enable francophone groups outside Quebec to air their grievances as well? Secondly, if such a meeting is held, would it not be appropriate to invite Quebec's anglophone minority to the conference in order to dispel once and for all the preconceived ideas and misconceptions held in Canada on the constitutional rights granted this anglophone minority and to demonstrate how they compare with the absence of constitutional rights—education being the exception—facing francophone minorities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, before giving a direct answer to the hon. member's question, I should like to remind him that the new Constitution, if and when it comes into being, does more for francophones outside Quebec than any other document ever considered or enacted in this country for 114 years. At the federal level, it recognizes official bilingualism and the equality of both language groups. It does this in all areas, at all levels executive, legislative and judicial. It does the same in the province of New Brunswick, for the Acadians of that province. It also acknowledges the right of all francophone language minorities in other provinces to be educated in their own language. I admit that there is a qualifying clause "when numbers are sufficient to justify", but I may remind the hon. member that Quebec itself insisted on this clause in the St. Andrews and Montreal accord in 1978. So I think that to start with, francophones outside Quebec should take time out to celebrate, but not too long, to recognize the fact that the rights for which they have been fighting for 114 years have been broadly recognized, entirely as far as education is concerned, and in any case at the federal level from "un Atlantique à l'autre" to quote Mr. Caouette, in all federal institutions. As far as the future is concerned, I have never objected and never will to meeting delegates from associations of francophones outside Quebec, in order to find out whether the conference suggested by the hon. member would be worth while, but I should like to point out to him that, at this stage, it is no longer a matter of obtaining something from the federal government, since we have officially recognized language equality at all levels of federal jurisdiction. At this stage, it will be necessary to convince provincial governments to go a little further along the lines of Section 133 and other administrative provisions, as New Brunswick has done. So, a conference as suggested by the hon. member could only be worth while if the provinces agree to participate. This is more or less the answer I gave the member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East, when I talked about a similar federal-provincial conference on native peoples. There is no need to convince the federal government—we have been fighting for this for the last 12 or 15 years—but to convince some of the provinces, and if the conference referred to by the hon. member could be instrumental in doing so, I shall certainly give it serious consideration.

* * *

• (1500)

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

MR. WENMAN—APPLICATION OF RULE OF URGENCY IN READING OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: A question relating to the process of how public petitions presented to the House and reported upon by the Clerk of Petitions may be thereafter dealt with was raised in the House, notably by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). Last Wednesday I said I would look into the question and rule on it. I am prepared to do that today.

I shall not read the Standing Order to hon. members because I am sure they are well aware of it; it is Standing Order 67(8).

An examination of the history respecting petitions shows that long before Canada was settled the petition in the United Kingdom Parliament was an early form of the legislative instrument that became a statute when passed. This is to say, it was a document embodying a number of requests as articles and which became a statute by the simple process of combining a petition with its response.

What is referred to as the modern form of petitions grew up in the United Kingdom in the seventeenth century when Parliament had come to be regarded as a political and legislative body rather than as the highest court of justice. Petitions would ask for an alteration of the general law and an individual could, by petition to Parliament, pray for a redress of wrongs and expect an alleviation of difficulties. But the increased jurisdiction of the courts has permitted persons to institute proceedings in the courts to remedy wrongs and therefore the petition has fallen into disuse.

As Erskine May points out, the modern practice in the United Kingdom of the proceedings relating to petitions arose as a result of the fact that the procedure in the House of Commons imposed little restriction on the raising of debate and the presentation of petitions; they served as a method of introducing subjects from outside the House and could be used for obstructing other kinds of business. Accordingly, in view of the great increase in the number of petitions, Standing Orders commenced in 1842 and subsequently amended made the presentation of petitions a formal proceeding incapable, except in rare cases, of giving rise to debate. They came in by the thousands. Debate is only permitted at the discretion of the Speaker when a petition relates to a present personal grievance requiring an immediate remedy.

Some idea of the infrequency of the Speaker's discretion being invoked to permit discussion is demonstrated by the fact that the last time the Speaker permitted debate was in 1844, when a petition claimed that letters were being secretly detained and opened by the Post Office. The precedent also provides us with some idea of what constitutes a present personal grievance for purposes of permitting debate.

While in the United Kingdom no formal report is presented to the House, it is not customary for members to submit petitions to the clerk of public petitions for scrutiny before presentation in the House. Following that, the present U.K. practice provides that a member, when presenting a petition, may read the prayer and make a statement as to the parties from whom it comes, the number of signatures and its material allegations. It may also be read by the Clerk. To proceed with it further, however, unless privilege is involved, the Speaker must find that the complaint relates to a present personal grievance.

This, however, is not quite the practice that has developed in this House. While in 1970 a member presenting a petition was denied the opportunity of explaining what the petition was about, the practice was subsequently developed for members to give a brief explanation of its content, from where it comes and the number of signatures. This is allowed today. While the substance of the petition may be set out by way of explanation when presented, the practice that developed once the report of the Clerk of Petitions had been reported is not to permit the petition to be read unless the House agrees by unanimous consent to do so.

Preliminary to seeking such consent, however, the Speaker must be satisfied that the content is a proper subject for a petition. Otherwise it will not be received, and for that matter the Speaker will have to be satisfied that it is receivable, whether or not there is a desire to have it read. In other words, the Clerk of Petitions certifies only as to the form of the petition; that is, that it is properly addressed and that it contains the formal prayer.

The Speaker having been satisfied that the petition is receivable, to permit the petition to be formally read would arise only where the member advises the House that the petition relates to a present personal grievance and he wishes to have it discussed, and the Speaker is satisfied that the prayer does relate to a present personal grievance requiring an immediate remedy. Otherwise, where there is no allegation that the petition relates to a present personal grievance, the unanimous consent of the House would be required to have it read by the Clerk.

With respect to the subject matter of the petition of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West which he suggests relates to a present personal grievance requiring an immediate remedy, the hon. member will appreciate that, while high interest rates are a very serious matter, and whatever their cause, the petitioners are affected by them in common with many other citizens.

It seems to me, however, that the type of present personal grievance that the Standing Order has in mind is something akin to what was alleged in the 1844 United Kingdom case where the complaint was that one's mail was secretly detained and opened. In other words, it was personal in the sense that it did not arise as the result of the general law or, for example, as a result of the vagaries of supply and demand or as a result of the forces in the marketplace.

Second, the grievance would be one which could be alleviated forthwith rather than one which would require legislation or some other action, which is the case where interest rates are asked to be altered. In other words, the complaint of high interest rates is the very subject matter of a petition envisaged by Bourinot when he wrote, in 1916, and I quote:

> The subjects embraced in these petitions are of a most varied nature. When the public mind is greatly interested in some question large numbers of petitions are presented in both Houses both for and against proposals which are being agitated in Parliament and in the press. This privilege is properly highly appreciated and in many instances assists Parliament in forming its opinion and in taking appropriate action.

● (1510)

But in order to discuss a petition in the House, both here and in the United Kingdom, in view of the great increase in the number of such petitions to either House, the rules mentioned earlier were laid down. Accordingly, while the subject of the petition the hon. member has presented is a very serious matter, one with which I may have the greatest sympathy, and while also it is certainly one of the very uses for which the practice of petitions arose, I am constrained by the long-standing practice both here and in the United Kingdom to say that it is not one where the Speaker has traditionally exercised discretion and permitted debate.

Mr. Wenman: Madam Speaker, I have a point of order on the Speaker's report. I would first like to thank the Speaker for her very thorough attention to this matter which is of grave concern to me in respect to the role of a private member in this House of Commons. In view of the detail and the time with which she has gone into this matter, I would want to reserve comment subject to studying the report. I would ask her—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wenman: The point of order is, what is the—

Madam Speaker: Order. I am having quite a hard time in getting the hon. member for Fraser Valley West to understand that, unfortunately, although I would enjoy the discussion once the Speaker has ruled, the Speaker may not entertain comments or even points of order on the ruling. Therefore, the hon. member, even if he is giving me notice, should know that I will not be able to hear him.

Mr. Wenman: What I would ask then is that the Speaker refer the subject matter of the Speaker's report to the committee on rules and procedures.

Mr. Pinard: Shame! Don't do that.

Madam Speaker: Again, that would require unanimous consent. The hon. member would have to make a motion, I suppose. If the hon. member will now put it in the form of a motion, I will put it to the House; or else he can give notice of a motion for another date.

Mr. Wenman: Thank you for your ruling, Madam Speaker. I shall take it under advisement and prepare a motion at another appropriate time.

* * *

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Friday, November 6, 1981, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—RECOGNITION OF MEMBERS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, this question concerns the matter I raised last week with respect to the microphone switching. While the matter arose out of a specific incident, before making my case to the Chair I want to emphasize that whatever I say with respect to those events, which will not be much, I do not want to be interpreted in any way as a reflection on the Chair's ruling in that particular case, because that would certainly not be my intention. Similarly, I do not want my following remarks to reflect in any way whatsoever, on the conduct of the ladies and gentlemen who operate the electronic console to my upper left.

Madam Speaker: Let me interrupt for a minute to tell the hon. member that yes, this is a question of privilege raised on the matter of the microphones, and that the hon. member knows the rules well enough to know that as long as he keeps away from the matters on which I have ruled—that is to say, who has the right to answer a question, who determines who is supposed to answer a question and how the Speaker has to be neutral as to the possible double interpretation of a question—he can speak about the question of the microphones quite freely, and I certainly welcome his comments.

Mr. Nielsen: That, indeed, is my intention, although in my submission there will be one brief reference to that particular incident. However, when I have been heard out, it will be readily discernible that my main submission will concern the equality of hon. members in this House, the dangers of what I perceive to be the overtaking of technological progress which has been introduced to our House machinery, the prerogatives of the Chair, and, hence, the rights of hon. members.

One of the most basic powers or discretions of the Chair, which was referred to at the time of the last incident, is the right to decide to recognize during debate, including the question period, those hon. members who wish to participate therein. This applies, may it please the Chair, to both the questioner and the respondent. The use of this discretion ensures order and gives all hon. members the confidence that they are being treated equally. This is the main theme of my presentation today.

In my submission, this discretion which resides solely with the Chair should operate without any reference at all to the sound amplification system in this place, and the sound system should have no effect as to who is recognized and who is not. I have ensured that inquiries have been made of the individual switching systems in order to be sure of my facts.

The switchers should follow the direction of the Speaker at all times. The Speaker alone is sensitive to all the procedural considerations involved in recognition. In my submission, the switchers should have no influence or discretion at all—and there can be no room for either—with respect to influencing the proceedings on the floor.

In my submission, the same principles of operation have applied or, at least, should have applied, regardless of the sound system. From 1954 to 1964 there was in this chamber a system of microphones which hung from the ceiling and which a switcher controlled by zones, which included whole areas where hon. members on both sides of the House were sitting. From 1964 until 1977 there were two different systems, both featuring only one microphone per desk. Since 1977 we have had the present system with two microphones on a desk or one microphone on each desk of the pair.

In theory, as far as most members were concerned, these mikes simply went on when the Speaker recognized an hon. member who rose, regardless of the hon. member's position or function in the House or government. If the Speaker did not actively, viva voce, recognize an hon. member, that hon. member had no sound.

In my submission, it is now clear that there has been an important change in the interaction between the Speaker and the microphones, one which was never discussed in the House and which might have been very closely examined if it had been heretofore suggested. Perhaps with the introduction of television, or with the transfer of the switching function which occurred on January 2, 1981, just this year, from electronic services to the broadcasting service, which they probably do not want, switchers exercise a discretion which they should not have, in my view, whether or not they want to acquire it.

Some of the old guidelines still seem to apply. All the other microphones go off if the Speaker rises. I can see no problems with that at all. Indeed, it is an electronic compulsion to be seated. There is nothing wrong with that.

Second, no questioner on this side has his microphone turned on unless actively vocally recognized by the Speaker. However, the Speaker at one time called upon a minister to reply to a question. You will recall that this aspect was discussed in connection with the previous incident. But this no longer happens. If two ministers want to rise, they have to sort themselves out. Indeed, this happened last Friday when two ministers rose simultaneously and stood for quite some time before the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané) finally was the chosen one by mental telepathy. This is not a great problem.

● (1520)

A problem does arise if a minister rises to answer a question put to a backbencher, whether that question be put to a backbencher on either side of the House—because there are backbenchers who act in a certain capacity where questions are perfectly proper to be put to them. It is evident that the switchers simply keep to the practice—and I emphasize that the switchers are now keeping to the practice—vis-à-vis cabinet ministers, of allowing the floor to the most senior person desiring to respond. In my submission, that is the exercising of a discretion by the switchers which should be exercised by the Chair. This practice might be appropriate within cabinet, but in my submission it is completely inappropriate between a cabinet minister and a committee chairman.

Therefore, because a backbencher is very unlikely to try to outlast a minister in asserting his right to the floor, particularly if the minister's microphone light goes on and his does not, we have a serious procedural decision being made by someone who is not trained in procedure, indeed by someone who is not even an officer of the House, let alone the individual occupying the Speaker's chair to whom that discretion is exclusively reserved at the special request of all hon. members of this House.

I emphasize that members have reposed their confidence in the occupant of the chair. They have not reposed their confidence, perfectly competent though they may be, in those who operate the electronic controls in this House. That responsibility belongs to the occupant of the Speaker's chair and to no one else.

The independence of committees as a result is threatened. But even more important, the equality of members is erased. A great discrepancy between the prerogatives of the government and those of the opposition is brought into being, and I want to highlight some examples.

If the Speaker does not personally make a choice but allows the situation to sort itself out with the microphone operator deferring, in cases of doubt, to seniority, does this mean that, first, any time a committee chairman rises he can be superseded by any occupant of the treasury benches, however much the question concerns the work of the committee rather than the work of the House?

Second, does it mean that a cabinet minister can seize the floor even if it is an opposition committee chairman who has been asked a question?

Third, does it mean that at any time a committee chairman is asked a question, any cabinet minister can take the floor if he is also concerned with the subject matter?

Logic would seem to compel an affirmative answer to all of those questions. If these advantages are to go to the government side through the growth of what I conceive to be an unwarranted growth of the microphone precedent—and perhaps we have not been alert enough in this House to have seen it happening because it has been happening by stages—are there to be any corresponding advantages accorded by the switchers to the opposition side? That is what it comes down to.

For instance, if I might parallel the previous hypotheses that I put to the Chair, will senior frontbenchers be able to rise and put questions cutting off backbenchers without the need to be recognized by the Chair, simply because they are closer?

Second, will the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) automatically be recognized for a question any time it is the Progressive Conservative Party's turn for a question and have his microphone turned on without the need for Madam Speaker to say anything?

Third, will the Leader of the Opposition, the Opposition House leader or a senior frontbencher be able to answer a question put to an opposition committee chairman if the question affects party policy or House strategy?

Logic would seem equally to compel a negative answer to all of these questions. Therefore, it is clear that the inequality between members and their right to recognition has been evolving slowly and I submit must be reversed by this House.

I believe this is a serious question for all members outside the cabinet, one which will lead to serious difficulties for members and for this House as a whole if it is not examined. I believe discrimination among members which has developed should be carefully examined by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. Therefore, if you find a prima facie case of privilege—and I would certainly suggest that the circumstances, never having been considered by members, or by the House, perhaps it might commend itself to a decision that there is such a prima facie case here—I would move that the matter of the guidelines provided to those persons switching on the microphones in the House of Commons allowing members to speak—and to be heard, I might add—and the question of whether all hon. members are treated equally when they seek the floor, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to enable that committee to investigate the adequacy and the appropriateness of those guidelines, and report thereon to the members of this House.

I should also also say that for some time I have been concerned about the operation of electronic Hansard by means of the television cameras and the still cameras behind the curtains, which I understand even after a limited three month intended experimental period are still with us. I am looking into the development of that aspect. I am concerned whether or not the guidelines that were set out in the resolution installing electronic Hansard by way of television cameras in the House are being followed. I will likely have a further question of privilege with respect thereto when I have completed my research. I merely flag the matter now so as to bring to your attention our concerns that there are very serious questions to be raised in this area of technological change and advance which may well have overcome, dangerously so, the procedures and practices in the House. I will raise these matters probably following the Remembrance Day recess. In view of that, you may wish to defer today's question and decide upon both at the same time, Madam Speaker.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have listened with interest to the remarks made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), and I do not find that he has a question of privilege at all.

Mr. Deans: It is not up to you.

Mr. Smith: The remarks which the hon. member made are to be found in Hansard for November 4, 1981 at page 12503. He said:

> I asked that my microphone be activated. I know that the operator heard me ask because he shook his head and made a gesture of helplessness because it had to be your decision that the microphone be turned on.

The only conclusion I can draw from these remarks is that somehow the hon. member for Yukon was under the delusion that somebody other than yourself could recognize him.

It is important to bear in mind Standing Order 12, which refers to the Speaker preserving order and decorum. It is also important to bear in mind Standing Order 28, which reads:

> Every member desiring to speak is to rise in his place, uncovered, and address himself to Mr. Speaker.

Citation 117 of Beauchesne states, with reference to the Speaker:

> He calls upon members to speak—

● (1530)

What could be clearer than that? It is certainly not the operator of the microphone system who calls upon a member to speak; it is the Speaker who does so.

If one looks at Erskine May's seventeenth edition at page 247, one will see that it states in reference to the Speaker "that he calls upon members to speak, a choice which is now never disputed." That is the phrase that is used in Erskine May to describe the duty of the Speaker in this situation. It sounds to me today as if somehow the hon. member for Yukon is in fact disputing that.

Also in Erskine May, at page 436, we find the following:

> In so large and active an assembly as the House of Commons, it is absolutely necessary that the Speaker should be invested with authority to repress disorder and to give effect, promptly and decisively, to the rules and orders of the House.

What sort of disorder would we have if we had a bunch of members calling up to the operator of the microphone system? I am not clear as to the point the hon. member is trying to make. Is he somehow attacking the probity of the employees? If so, I would state that that is highly irregular and most unfortunate because they are not in a position to defend themselves and the judgments which they make. I would submit, in fact, that they do not make any judgments. They simply seek your guidance as to who in fact is being recognized.

It would seem to me there is no question at all as to what the question is on any other issue than perhaps those issues which may arise during the question period. It would also seem to me that on that particular issue you have ruled, and you did so last week or it may have been the week before. The position you took was that it was up to members on the government side to ascertain among themselves who was in fact going to answer a question, regardless of to whom it may have been specifically addressed.

The criteria which may be used by members on the government side as to who will defer or not defer is something in which the Chair does not become involved. The criteria as to who is going to answer are ascertained and set by members of the government as between themselves.

I submit that with regard to anything other than question period, Beauchesne, Erskine May and the Standing Orders are all quite clear; the Speaker calls upon members to speak. The role and function of the operator of the microphone system is simply to carry out the instructions of the Speaker, and that presumably would be to activate the microphone of whichever member has been called upon to speak.

Having regard to whose microphone is to be turned on in question period in response to a question, that is something you have already ruled on and made quite clear. I am staggered that the hon. member for Yukon has indicated he may wish to pursue a further question of privilege, because I submit he does not have one here.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Briefly, Madam Speaker, I must confess that the argument by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) was fairly long, quite involved and a little difficult to follow in all of its content. The question, as I understand it, is with regard to what has occurred simply because of the introduction into the House of Commons of these new-fangled electronic devices and how one deals with them. I am sure that from time to time we will have to take a look at how procedure develops when we introduce newer methods of communicating. I am sure also that we have to be cognizant of the fact that, with the introduction of the microphone system, which has been here for some time, the method of catching the Speaker's eye and being recognized and the concurrent responsibility of those who operate the switches in another part of the chamber becomes even more complicated. I suggest, however, that we ought not to dwell unnecessarily long on this point.

The question that was raised last week, on which the Speaker has already ruled, is now a matter of history, and has established a precedent that we will follow for some time to come, I hope. It at least has clarified any question that might have arisen as a result of last week's misunderstandings. I do not really see how it would be possible, short of the Speaker's being put in the position of having to identify individually who is required to answer, for the system to work any differently from how it now works.

I want to suggest that, on balance, it works very well. The people who operate the switches that turn the microphones on and off do so with a great deal of care, and they maintain an alertness that is to be complimented. I am a little concerned that, in spite of the fact that it is stressed that this is not be considered a criticism, it cannot be seen as other than a criticism, which in my judgment is unwarranted and unjustified.

We would all like to be recognized from time to time, and there are times when we are not when we feel we ought to have been; but that is the prerogative of the Chair, and as long as those who operate the microphones turn on the one they are supposed to turn on at the time the Speaker identifies which microphone is to be activated, then we have no complaint about the way in which they do their job and they ought not to be drawn into debate on the floor of the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order because of some unwarranted remarks by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), who asserted just a moment ago that my remarks with respect to the conduct of the switchers cannot help but be seen as being critical. He has no right to question the word of an hon. member given in this House of Commons. When I preface my remarks by saying that I intend no criticism of the switchers, he must accept that, and I thought he would have had the good grace to do so.

In the meantime, I did send you a copy of a proposed motion should you decide that the whole question merits some consideration by a standing committee of the House representing the privileges of all members. It might commend itself, and I would not be at all averse to your Table advisers altering its wording, if that would make it more acceptable, to an examination in depth of this whole question which has never before been examined by a member's committee.

Madam Speaker: I will try to deal with this matter in as much detail as I can in answer to the problems that have been put forward by the hon. member. I happen to think that the introduction of the sound system in this House has not had a bad effect on the traditional equality of members in terms of their right to express themselves. As a matter of fact, I believe that the introduction of these electronic devices has been done quite well, and I might add has been done through the co-operation of all parties in this House and with the help of those members of the different parties who had been delegated to the special committee that studied the whole matter of introducing broadcasting in the House of Commons. They should be commended for the way they have allowed us to introduce broadcasting in this House, because the system in my view, and in the view of many people who have come to visit our country, is working quite well. We have succeeded in giving an electronic interpretation to the application of the Standing Orders and the manner in which the electronic devices are activated in order to reflect what our rules really mean. It still remains in this House that the only way for a member to be given the floor is to be recognized by the Speaker.

• (1540)

The microphones are only activated when the Speaker recognizes a member by the name of his constituency. That remains the only way to be recognized in the House. It has nothing to do with the matter of a microphone in front of a member being open or not.

The hon. member is arguing that because microphones in front of a member are sometimes activated he might be compelled to speak, and therefore being compelled to speak he would automatically have the right to speak. But unless the Speaker gives him the floor and gives him the right to speak, he does not have that right.

Another way in which the Speaker might give someone the right to speak is to act negatively. That is to say, during question period, where I do not normally recognize a minister to answer a specific question, if the Chair feels that a question does not relate to a minister's departmental business, the Speaker would intervene and not allow that minister to answer the question. A member should not feel that he automatically has the floor because the microphones are open in front of him. For instance, the other day an hon. member was seeking the floor and because I had not yet recognized him the microphone had not been activated. Therefore, he was not able to be heard in the House. In a case where a member would begin to speak solely because he had the microphone open in front of him, the Speaker would intervene in order to restore order in that situation.

The Speaker has perfect control of those switches, I might add. Perhaps this is a technical detail which some hon. members are not aware of, but I have two buttons on my chair. One button switches my microphone on. If I were trying to bring order to the House and could not be heard and for some reason or other the console operator could not activate my microphone, I have the possibility of putting my own microphone on. I have another button which completely controls the sound and shuts it off if an hon. member who was speaking in my view did not have the right to speak at that particular time. So despite the fact that the hon. member for Yukon is arguing that the operator of the console may have certain discretion in activating one microphone or another, I have the ultimate discretion. The control of who has the floor in the House has remained entirely in the hands of the Speaker, which I believe is a clever interpretation on the part of those members who studied the introduction of the broadcasting system in the House.

There was some confusion which arose the other day, but I have ruled on that particular circumstance. I repeat, the console operators make no decisions. They activate the microphones on my instructions, and I still control members who may or may not speak in this House. Should there be an error, I have the possibility of correcting that error by turning off the microphone.

Moreover, it is quite clear and I reiterate that a chairman of a committee may answer a question; but he may also not answer a question if he so chooses. The Speaker has no way of forcing or obligating a chairman of a committee to answer a question. A chairman of a committee remains free to express himself or not to express himself in the House. If he does not want to answer a question, even though the question is narrow enough that the Chair should allow it, a chairman of a committee is free not to answer the question.

If last Wednesday the chairman of a committee had been a member of the opposition, it is possible that a member of the opposition would not defer as readily to a member of the government. But that is not of the making of the Speaker. The other day we had a situation where the chairman of the committee deferred to a minister of the government. If it had been a chairman who sits on the opposition side, perhaps he would not have deferred so readily to a minister of the Crown. The reasons for that would appear obvious to anyone who sits in this House.

I am grateful to the hon. member for Yukon for raising these points because it is always good to question certain practices; but it seems to me that the system has been working very well and I cannot accept the points raised by the hon. member.

The hon. member for Yukon has raised a number of hypothetical questions, such as if it had been the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) or a chairman on the opposition side, etc. I have to remind the hon. member that the Chair cannot rule on hypothetical questions. However, it is beneficial to look at hypothetical questions because they might occur exactly in the way the hon. member has described them today. I would be happy to give them some thought in case I had to rule rapidly in the House on one of those questions.

I find I have to rule him out on privilege on the matter he has raised, but if he would like the question to be studied further, his motion is quite appropriate and he could move a notice of motion to be discussed in private members' hour. That would be the proper time to do it. But on the question of privilege, I must rule that I do not find a prima facie case.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I certainly do not want to follow the course of a private member's motion. Since it affects all hon. members, I consider the matter to be serious enough for me to ask that perhaps it be placed on the agenda of the next House leaders' meeting to see if we cannot get an all-party agreement after we return from the Remembrance Day ceremonies.

In the meantime, Madam Speaker, I was rather curious to learn that the decision to establish the sound system here as part of our House of Commons function was made some time before the setting up of the broadcast services, the TV and electronic taping, and it was kept separate under the switching function called, I believe, the switching branch under the jurisdiction of the Chair. On January 2, 1981, the whole function of the sound system of this place was transferred to the jurisdiction of the broadcasting service of this place. I have not been able to trace the history and authority for that. I assume it would have been under the authority of the Chair, but I was wondering whether this decision had gone before any standing committee or special committee of the House before it was made, or even if my predecessor, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), had been consulted. That is a point which concerned me as well.

Madam Speaker: I cannot answer that question. I would assume that the consultations were had because that broadcasting commission—no, I think it was dissolved a little before that date, so I do not know about the consultations. I still feel that the decision that the Speaker remain entirely in charge of the broadcasting system is the right one. I am sure the hon. member does not want to question that.

• (1550)

There is just one other detail I want to discuss with the hon. member. He mentioned that before we televised the proceedings in this House, the sound system operated by zones. We have the same thing today. When an hon. member rises, sometimes two microphones are switched on. When an hon. member stands in the aisle, the microphones on either side of him are open. That does not mean two members in that zone can speak at the same time, but in order to produce a more effective sound the console operators apparently create a zone when an hon. member rises. Another microphone is switched on. This is not always so; it depends on where an hon. member stands. If he stands in front of his seat, I notice that only one microphone is open, but if he stands in the aisle, sometimes microphones on either side will be open. Zones are created because that is a necessity if we want quality sound, and I suppose we have to leave that decision to the operators at the console because we do not know much about the quality of sound and they do.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITION

MR. JELINEK—PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I happen to be the first member to present a petition since your new ruling regarding petitions, and I hope I will be able to abide by the ruling.

I have before me the names of 4,012 constituents of my riding of Halton who are indeed concerned about the insensitive attitude of the government toward the plight of home owners and the very real threat of their losing their homes because of high mortgage rates. I would like to present these 4,012 names as a petition to this House of Commons, demanding that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) include in his forthcoming budget provisions that will alleviate the economic burdens that high interest rates have created for unsuspecting home owners and/or potential home owners.

* * *

PENSION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING APPEAL PROCESS FOR VETERANS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-641, to amend the Pension Act (administrative delay).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I wish to make just a few brief remarks respecting the bill I am introducing today. This bill would amend the Pension Act. It would impose a 90-day limit at the initial stage and a 45-day limit at each of the two levels in the appeal process. If a decision was not made within any of those periods, the applicant veteran would automatically be awarded the full amount claimed by him.

What this means is that the Department of Veterans Affairs would have to complete all three stages of a veteran's pension application within six months. If it can be done within 90 days in the United States, surely to goodness we in Canada can do it in six months. At the present time it takes an average of 46 months to process a pension application, and this is totally unacceptable to hon. members on this side of the House and particularly to members of the Conservative Party.

I am limited in what I can present in a piece of legislation, but the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) and the government are not limited in what they can present in a piece of legislation. I hope the McCracken study will be completed by next month and that the Minister of Veterans Affairs will introduce a piece of legislation similar to legislation in the United States, so that we can have a process in Canada whereby we can process pension applications within 90 days and not five years.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,316, 2,390, 2,664, 2,698 and 3,012.

[Text]

THE NATIONAL

Question No. 2,316—Mr. McKenzie:

Was a decision made to change the time of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's newscast "The National" from 11 p.m. to 10 p.m. and, if so (a) on what premise (b) what will be the cost and in what manner will it be paid?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: It was announced by the CBC in March, 1980 that "The National" would be telecast at 10 p.m. on week nights. This change is expected to take place early in 1982.

(a) The decision was made following a thorough study which concluded that 10 p.m. was the best time in the evening schedule for the CBC's national information program, in part because the total viewing audience at 10 p.m. is estimated at 7½ million, compared with 4.2 million at 11 p.m. The earlier time also makes it possible to mount a major daily current affairs program immediately following "The National". This program will run until 11 p.m. on week nights and, with "The National", will provide a full hour of comprehensive news and current affairs coverage at a convenient time for most viewers.

(b) The basic cost of "The National" will remain unchanged.

CBC EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,390—Mr. Herbert:

What percentage of the total expenditures of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was spent (a) in Quebec (b) outside Canada in the last year for which figures are available?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: In the fiscal year 1980/81: (a) 32.35 per cent; (b) 0.39 per cent.

NOTE: Re (a)—relates to expenditures in Quebec in respect of the following: French services division, Montreal English services, Ottawa area, northern service and head office, Radio Canada International, and engineering headquarters.

Re (b)—relates to CBC's foreign offices.

FATHERS OF CONFEDERATION MEMORIAL CITIZENS' FOUNDATION

Question No. 2,664—Mr. Herbert:

1. Did the government provide funds to the Fathers of Confederation Memorial Citizens' Foundation and, if so, in what amount, on what date and under what conditions?

2. Is there an arrangement for continuing the funding and, if so, what are the conditions?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows:

1. Yes, $2,800,000 between 1962 and 1964, on condition that the remaining 50 per cent of the estimated construction cost be forthcoming from the provincial governments and the private sector.

2. There is no arrangement for continued funding to the Fathers of Confederation Memorial Citizens' Foundation.

CANADA COUNCIL

Question No. 2,698—Mr. Young:

What was the total operating budget for the Canada Council in the fiscal year 1980-81 and what amount was allocated for (a) administrative costs (b) commissions of inquiry into the arts (c) disbursements of grants to artists?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canada Council as follows: The Canada Council's total expenditures amounted in 1980-81 to $52,645 million, not including a $654,000 item for the operation of the Canadian Commission for UNESCO. These were broken down as follows:

(a) Administration	8,903,000
(b) Commissioned studies	49,000
(c) Grants and services to artists and arts organizations	43,693,000

COMPENSATION FOR PROPERTY SEIZED IN CHINA

Question No. 3,012—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Secretary of State for External Affairs conclude an agreement with the People's Republic of China to compensate certain Canadians for properties seized from Canadian owners after the 1949 revolution and was the total amount of compensation $340,000?

2. Does the figure of $340,000 represent a full amount of all claims by Canadians and, if not, what was the full amount and for what reason did the government settle for less?

3. What is the total estimated value of all property and goods lost by Canadians as a result of seizure in China after the 1949 revolution?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes.

2. No. The figure of $340,000 represents a realistic assessment of compensation obtainable from China for Canadian claims in light of documentary and other evidence surrounding the claims.

3. It is impossible to determine with any exactitude what the total value of all property and goods lost is. The agreement deals only with provable claims of eligible Canadian citizens submitted to the Government of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

Hon. Pierre Bussières (for Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am particularly pleased to have this opportunity to speak during the third reading stage of Bill C-48. Indeed, this is something of an historic occasion in that it was a year ago that the National Energy Program was tabled in this House. The bill on which we are now embarking at third reading will put into place significant parts of that total program.

The importance of the bill now before us can hardly be overestimated. It is a key element in the total National Energy Program. The bill provides the essential framework for the careful management and successful development of the tremendous petroleum potential of the Canada lands, those federal lands in the north and offshore.

At the same time, the bill provides for the people of Canada an equitable share in the development of their own petroleum industry while helping to ensure that that development is carried out with the greatest regard for the safety and integrity of the people and environment of the frontier areas.

Debate on this bill both in committee and in this House has been thorough and fruitful. A number of members from both sides of the House have worked hard to bring forward useful suggestions which have been incorporated as amendments in the legislation now before us.

The NEP has come a long way in the past year. There have been disagreements about what we are attempting to do, and we have resolved many of them. As part of the National Energy Program we took a major step forward recently with the conclusion of agreements with the governments of Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan. Those agreements are of great importance because they allow Canadians to get on with the job of creating our energy security. However, they are important for another reason. They show that, despite differences of opinion, two levels of government in Canada can sit down and negotiate and find common ground to resolve such differences. This augurs well for the future of federal-provincial relations.

At the time we signed the agreement with Alberta there was much discussion in our media about who had won and who had lost.

Mr. Waddell: Consumers lost.

Mr. MacLaren: I believe, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) said, that both the Government of Canada and the Government of Alberta won but, more importantly, the people of Canada won.

One characteristic of our position throughout the discussions with the provinces was that we were always willing to moderate our approaches, but we held fast to three basic principles underlying the National Energy Program: security of supply, a greater opportunity for Canadians to play a role in their own oil and gas industry, and a fair system for the sharing of petroleum revenue. Those principles emerged from the negotiations even stronger because they now have the clear support of both levels of government, including the support of governments which had opposed them in the past.

• (1600)

During the long committee hearings on Bill C-48, it was suggested by some members that the legislation was somehow an attempt to shift the attention of the petroleum industry away from Alberta to the frontier areas. Some members asserted that the government was attempting to try and push through legislation for the frontier lands while leaving major questions with the government of Alberta unresolved. As the agreement with Alberta proved, there was no validity to that charge.

Because of our agreement with Alberta, the prices of gasoline and home heating oil will rise, gradually and predictably, under a made-in-Canada formula which will ensure that Canadian prices are kept well below the world levels and yet will provide the government and industry with those revenues necessary to achieve oil self-sufficiency by 1990.

We have met our commitments to the Canadian consumer. Compared to the Conservative budget of 1979, by 1984 wellhead oil prices will be lower, natural gas prices will be lower and prices at the pump will be lower. By 1984 the Conservative budget price for a barrel of conventional oil would be almost 30 per cent above our settlement price with Alberta. Similarly, natural gas prices will be more than $3 lower per thousand cubic feet than under the Conservative budget.

Further, we achieved protection for Canadians against sudden OPEC price increases by setting a ceiling of 75 per cent of the projected international price. That is indeed a good deal for Canada. As I said, we have come a long way. However, there is still some way to go. Having completed our discussions with the provinces of western Canada, we are currently engaged with Newfoundland and Nova Scotia in seeking solutions to some differences that have existed between us with regard to our offshore resources. We are confident that the spirit of finding common ground that came to characterize the negotiations with Alberta and the other two western provinces will also be characteristic of the negotiations with Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. Certainly we for our part will do everything reasonable to ensure that this is so.

The agreement reached with the western provinces on pricing is important to petroleum development in the Atlantic offshore in that it creates a special price for what is now commonly called new oil. This price recognizes that new development, particularly oil sands and frontier projects, faces high costs. An extra incentive is needed to encourage the operators of these massive projects to commit themselves to the sizeable and innovative production and distribution systems that they will necessitate.

If offshore oil was ready now, it would be worth an estimated $46 a barrel. However, offshore oil will not begin production until 1986 or thereabouts, at which time such oil will fetch a higher price. "New oil" prices are higher than those offered for older, conventional oil, reflecting the reality that potential producers of new oil must see the prospect of an attractive return on their investment if they are to put up the dollars needed to bring these new supplies on stream.

The government has faced its responsibility to ensure that oil self-sufficiency is achieved in such a way that the benefits exceed the costs of this enormous undertaking. I refer to the costs and benefits in the broadest economic and social terms. In measuring them, the government had to take into account a truly national interest which is different from the interests represented by the other participants in the petroleum field. By definition, our task is more onerous and complex than that faced by the petroleum industry or any other industry, or by the oil producing provinces or any other provinces.

I should like briefly to recall for the House the situation that confronted the government when the National Energy Program was developed. We knew that higher Canadian oil prices were inevitable, largely as a result of external developments over which Canadians had no control. We saw the benefits of those increases going to an oil industry more than 70 per cent foreign-owned, an industry which had become a net exporter of capital in recent years. It was also an industry which, in spite of the spectacular oil price and cash flow increases of the 1970s, had been unable to sustain Canada's domestic oil production.

Conventional oil reserves have declined by more than one third during the past ten years. Geological prospects for new conventional oil discoveries in western Canada do not suggest any major change in that trend. On the contrary, conventional oil production in western Canada has been projected to decline in the 1980s even if oil exploration continued at a feverish pitch.

One can see why the government began to question the merits of immediately raising conventional oil prices toward world levels. The benefits in terms of additional conventional oil supplies would be relatively small for basic geological reasons. Further, the cost would be borne by Canadian consumers while the benefits would not be fairly shared by Canadian investors because of the industry's ownership.

That was one part of the picture. We also knew that the bulk of Canada's future oil and gas would be coming from the oil sands and the frontier regions to which Bill C-48 applies. We knew that most of these oil and gas lands, the Canada lands, were leased to foreign-controlled companies. It was therefore likely that the progress made in recent years toward increased Canadian ownership of our own petroleum industry would be stalled or even reversed in the future as these new multibillion dollar supply projects were developed.

We faced then a jigsaw puzzle of problems, but with one common theme. They all related to the necessity for a dynamic energy program in Canada in the 1980s and beyond. For our part, we developed a program that embraced that necessity in the most careful and comprehensive way.

In pursuing our oil self-sufficiency target, we shall spend several billion dollars on oil substitution and conservation programs during the decade of the 1980s, an estimated $3 billion of that by 1983 alone. We aim to reduce oil consumption to 10 per cent of the total energy demand in the residential, commercial and industrial sectors by 1990. We are convinced that it can be done. Saskatchewan and Alberta have already achieved that target.

Even with the massive switch away from oil, there will be a need for huge new investments in additional sources of oil and in other forms of energy. The agreements with the provinces provide that there is a stable foundation for such investments. Our energy program affirms the principle that Canadians are entitled to share more fully in the growth of their own petroleum industry, but also seeks fairness for all Canadians in oil pricing and revenue sharing. These goals are entirely compatible with our achievement of oil security.

There is a much more basic question than compatibility. Opportunity and fairness are prerequisites for the achievement of our oil security. This is not only because the government has made a decision to that effect. Most Canadians would simply not tolerate the national economic, social and political costs of an energy policy that threw more money at the industry in the hope of increasing supply, while not doing anything to lessen demand or create increased opportunities for Canadians themselves in their own petroleum industry.

● (1610)

One way or another, Mr. Speaker, energy development will demand a large share of our wealth over the next years. The government is determined to create the environment in which the necessary growth can take place. In that respect some comments by the president of the Investment Dealers Association are especially pertinent. He stated recently that this country stands on the verge of the largest and most challenging two decades of new capital investment in its history. He estimated that Canada will need $1.5 trillion of new investment between 1981 and 1990, 36 per cent of which will be made in the energy field.

Those are staggering figures, Mr. Speaker. The figures might prompt some to wonder whether Canada can generate enough investment itself to meet those needs. The president of the Investment Dealers Association is optimistic that 94 per cent of the $1.5 trillion required can be generated here in Canada, with a mere 6 per cent imported. I should like to quote the president because he made a particularly telling point that all of us should keep in mind. The president noted:

All of us should be planning and preparing now for a world of opportunity and growth.

In the National Energy Program, we put a great deal of emphasis on opportunity. Canada has in place the most generous fiscal incentives for exploration of any jurisdiction we know of. It provides Canadians with encouragement to participate in the petroleum industry. We added to this base a sliding scale of direct grants into the new incentive system designed to give the greatest benefit to those who are most vigorous in exploration and who raise their Canadian ownership level to be eligible for the grants.

For the maximum incentive grants in 1981, the minimum standard is Canadian control and at least 65 per cent Canadian ownership. This standard will rise to 75 per cent by 1986. The maximum grants payable under our incentive program are 80 per cent of exploration costs in the frontier regions, a powerful encouragement for exploration of those promising prospects. These incentives are also available to individual investors.

Bill C-48 makes available to current lease and permit holders, as well as to new players in the industry, an entirely new regime which includes as one element a 25 per cent Crown share. The new regime, including the Crown share, is a vehicle formulated to provide that exploration and development of the vast resources in the frontier lands so that it moves forward quickly but carefully.

As I have noted in the past in this House, under the program there will be a 25 per cent federal cash incentive grant available to all explorers, foreign and Canadian alike, to offset the 25 per cent Crown share. This grant means that the government will be paying, and ultimately the Canadian taxpayer will be paying, its own way. The Crown share will not be a free ride.

Under the legislation, if the Crown corporation converts to a working interest during the exploration stage, the government in effect pays almost twice for its interest during the balance of that stage. The private interest holder will continue to receive the minimum 25 per cent exploration grant in respect of his 75 per cent interest, while the Crown corporation will pay 100 per cent of its 25 per cent interest.

Considering these two sources of funds combined, almost 44 per cent of exploration costs will be met by or on behalf of the government. Clearly, the government is being generous to all explorers.

Unlike the policies of other countries, Mr. Speaker, in seeking to redress similar ownership situations, this government has offered profitable inducements to Canadianize, not to expropriate. The operations of foreign-owned firms are very profitable in Canada. To the extent that they increase opportunities for Canadians to participate with them, they can be even more so under the terms of the National Energy Program.

Undeniably, some of the guidelines for companies in the industry have changed, but the changes are fair and equitable. The program gives foreign companies an incentive to seek Canadian shareholders and partners. To the degree that they do, they can benefit from the same higher exploration grants that companies which are Canadian controlled can enjoy. Many foreign-controlled companies have recognized the legitimate concern of Canadians with respect to their own petroleum future and have begun to rearrange their affairs to take advantage of the benefits of the program.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, Canadianization is working. Canadians overwhelmingly support it. Since the National Energy Program was announced one year ago, foreign ownership of the petroleum industry has declined about 6 percentage points and foreign control by approximately 10 percentage points. Canadianization of that sort has not only been endorsed by the governments of the producing provinces but by the vast majority of Canadians.

In a recent survey conducted by the Canadian Petroleum Association, 84 per cent of the Canadian public favoured the government's Canadianization policy. Moreover, that same survey showed that 70 per cent of the Canadian public believed, quite rightly, that Canadianization will increase the number of jobs available to Canadians. Clearly, Canadians judge the National Energy Program and its Canadianization aspects as important towards fulfilling the attainable goal of 50 per cent Canadian ownership of the oil and gas sector and energy self-sufficiency by the end of this decade.

Indeed, these objectives, reflecting upon the rate of Canadianization since the announcement of the National Energy Program, are within our grasp. The future of the Canadian oil and gas industry under the provisions of the National Energy Program and Bill C-48 are bright indeed.

Throughout the long course of the debate in both committee and the House of the legislation now before us, considerable discussion has centred on the application of the 25 per cent Crown share to petroleum rights already issued before passage of this new act. Both in committee and in the House we have illustrated that there is a related and significant difference between the current Canada lands regime and that in Bill C-48. Stated briefly, under the present system holders of exploration rights are required to return to the Crown at least one half of their acreage, which in certain cases involves up to 30 per cent of their discoveries prior to obtaining production rights.

I find it difficult to understand the argument of those who contend that the current regime's provision for return of acreage does not present burdens to those exploring, while they see a burden in the new legislation. In fact, Bill C-48 ensures that holders of exploration rights will not face the prospect of returning some part of the lands. The new legislation allows explorers to retain production rights to the entire area of an oil or gas field.

To ensure that all Canadians can participate, and to give our Canadianization program an early boost, the government decided to increase the size of Petro-Canada, the national oil company. This decision is reflected in Petro-Canada's agreement to purchase Petrofina. That transaction underlined our determination to proceed with our Canadianization goals, but it equally supports our promise that such acquisitions will be under market conditions and at fair prices.

● (1620)

Canada's national oil company, Petro-Canada, spent $130 million in the Atlantic offshore in 1979, and $255 million in 1980 in the search for new sources of oil and gas. Expenditures for 1981 are expected to reach $400 million.

Of course, as a federal Crown corporation Petro-Canada is committed to the concept of Canadianization, including the growth of our own industrial capacity to provide goods and services for petroleum development.

We are not the only ones who believe in the significance and success of Petro-Canada's role in the industry. A recent study of Petro-Canada by the U.S. General Accounting Office on Petro-Canada selected four principal functions of Petro-Canada as a national energy policy instrument—to act as a window on the industry; to produce oil and gas; to capture extrinsic social or economic benefits for Canadians; and to import oil. The General Accounting Office in Washington concluded, and I quote:

> —our study indicates that Petro-Canada has made an important contribution to improving Canada's energy situation, and is likely to play an increasing role in this regard under the Canadian government's new energy policy.

I should like to emphasize the importance of the Canadianization program as it applies to offshore development. As a result of this legislation, Canadian companies will now have a chance to participate, not only in actual offshore exploration, but also in a significant number of offshore supply industries.

The government is helping in several ways to encourage greater Canadian participation in the search for offshore oil and gas. I have already mentioned the petroleum incentives program which will provide direct incentive grants to companies engaged in offshore exploration and development. With this encouragement, private Canadian exploration firms are expected to increase greatly their involvement in drilling and to attain a sizeable share of Atlantic offshore activity.

The National Energy Program also assures that companies engaged in the search for reserves in the Atlantic offshore, as well as in the other areas of the Canada lands, will give a fair competitive opportunity to Canadian suppliers of goods and services. This Canadianization of onshore support facilities will help the Atlantic provinces gain jobs and increase levels of industrial development. As well, the use of Canadian goods and services will lead to the developoment of technologies that can be exported, thus having a positive effect on our balance of payments.

Small Atlantic firms can participate in offshore resource and onshore support activities both individually and through joint ventures. The federal government will strongly support Canadian firms based in the Atlantic provinces as they move to grasp opportunities and create additional jobs.

Through Petro-Canada, the petroleum incentives program and other Canadianization provisions of the National Energy Program, Canadians will be major partners in all offshore development.

The opportunity for Canadians to play a greater role in the development of our own petroleum industry is also an opportunity for foreign-owned firms to accelerate their own efforts through co-operative ventures.

As I have mentioned, multinational corporations are in good position to benefit from this activity as a result of the 25 per cent cash incentive grant available to all explorers and their strong land positions in the frontier. Farm-ins and other co-operative arrangements will further increase Canadian participation.

To achieve our 1990 goal of oil self-sufficiency and security and to maintain that position in the years ahead, an enormous and continuing capital investment in energy projects will be required. It is the intention of our energy program to involve Canadians fully in the petroleum game for the first time in our history. The bulk of the necessary investment in conventional oil and gas will be generated in Canada, as before, but with a better balance of ownership. Some megaprojects, such as those in the oil sands, will no doubt require additional investment from outside Canada. Canada will continue to welcome such investments. The returns will be generous.

Under our new energy program there will be ample growth and action for everyone during the next decade and well beyond. Investors are not oblivious to the kind of long term, fundamental strengths I have mentioned. When the chips are down, the industry's ability to replace and to expand its production over the longer haul is what really counts. That opportunity certainly exists in Canada.

These opportunities, however, will be undertaken with the greatest concern for the people who live in the Canada lands and the frontier environment. The National Energy Program and Bill C-48 have both illustrated through their provisions understanding and compassion for the rights of the native people of the Canada lands. Nothing in the act abrogates or derogates from any title, right or claim that the aboriginal people may have had prior to the coming into force of this act. The native peoples have the assurance of the government that this bill will not prejudice the fair resolution of land claims.

If there are those who would question the government's good faith with respect to land claim negotiations, let them consider the recent decision on the Norman Wells pipeline and the Petro-Canada agreement. Construction of the pipeline extension and exploration activities were delayed two years to allow for issues related to land claims to be resolved through negotiation. Native peoples should enjoy the benefit but bear fewer of the costs of northern resource development. Bill C-48 ensures this and more. It ensures that northerners' interests are protected and that people living in the north have the opportunity to play a more meaningful role in these activities, not only in terms of manpower but also in important social, economic, political and environmental consultative processes.

Bill C-48 is not an environmental bill, but it goes to great length to augment existing environmental legislation and to provide additional security for the fragile environment of the Canada lands. Although the emphasis of the new regime is on the early assessment of Canada's oil and gas potential on these lands, it will not be done at the expense of the environment of the north or, for example, offshore fisheries. There are provisions for the environmental revolving fund to cover the costs of regional studies relating to industrial activities. There are also a number of optional provisions that assist in the supervision and control of oil and gas activities and land management. These take the form of amendments to the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act of 1970. They deal with such matters as pollution prevention requirements, the reporting of oil spills, and oil spill liability requirements, including the requirement for absolute liability on the part of operators and compensation for damage caused by oil field debris jettisoned overboard or left near wells on the sea floor. They establish new authorities to prevent oil and gas spills, to implement remedial measures, to hold operators financially liable for actions that cause spills, to allow responsible authorities to intervene in the remote event of a spill and, at the operator's cost, to hold inquiries regarding spills, debris and accidents, and to allow for punishment for offences. Such provisions and others will influence the companies' operational behaviour. Moreover, they will induce further research by industry as well as government into preventive techniques and equipment and the development of improved oil spill countermeasures.

There are a number of other provisions in Bill C-48 governing environmental matters in Canada's northern and offshore areas. For example, there is a provision dealing with the early release of environmental information and another to permit remedial orders for environmental reasons. Clearly, the bill goes to great lengths to ensure the safety of our precious environment in the north and offshore.

As I said at the beginning, this is an historic occasion for this House. Throughout the past year we have listened carefully to what both supporters and critics of the National Energy Program have said about it. We made changes when there were compelling reasons for doing so. But when we knew we were right, we held firm to our position. In the weeks and months ahead there will no doubt be more listening, more discussions, more fine tuning of the program. But the basic program is in place; it is now working and the Government of Canada is getting on with the job of wisely managing Canada's energy resources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1630)

Mr. Waddell: I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. MacLaren) would permit one question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I think the rules are known, and this could be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. MacLaren), it is difficult to know whether to laugh or to cry. It is inconceivable that any responsible parliamentarian could be so far out of touch with what in fact is happening and the reality of what is going on. He paints a picture of a glorious Canadian oil and gas industry working to its limit, expanding the economic horizons of the nation, finding the oil and gas we will need, and Canadians in great abundance participating.

What in fact is the reality? I would like to quote from an address to the Ontario Petroleum Institute by William Riedl, chairman and chief executive officer of Alfred Bunting and Co., Limited, on October 20, 1981, so it is just three weeks old and is up to date information. He stated:

> The outlook for the Canadian Petroleum Industry at this moment is very bleak. Step by step the Canadian Federal Government has increased its control over an industry it neither understands nor trusts. Only recently Energy Minister Lalonde declared that IPAC (Independent Petroleum Association of Canada) lacks creditability. We are drifting further away from the three simple goals established by the federal government's National Energy Program initially outlined in October 1980. The first goal of security of supply is becoming unreachable with respect to oil as energy companies defer projects such as Alsands, Cold Lake and exploratory drilling due the inadequate expected returns on investment. The Canadian Petroleum Association has called the NEP and the recent Energy Agreement a disaster for the petroleum industry and concluded that Canadian oil self-sufficiency by 1990 is impossible. The second goal of an equitable energy price was recently negotiated by the two levels of government (Federal and Alberta) but with the exclusion of a very important third party—The Petroleum Industry. The result was two happy governments and a short-changed petroleum industry; not to mention the poor consumer. As one industry commentator said recently, both governments acted like 'pigs at the trough'. The third goal, Canadianization, is also seriously in trouble due to overstrained balance sheets. Enough of the overview, let us look at some statistical facts.

Then he goes on to outline statistical facts; not simple assertions by a parliamentary secretary who either has no respect for the truth or knows not of what he speaks, but facts which point out that every single observation made by the parliamentary secretary is in fact phony and untrue.

The parliamentary secretary said during the course of his remarks that Canada has the most generous fiscal arrangements for oil and gas exploration in the world. That statement could have been made by a candidate for the flat earth society, because if he believes that, he believes the world is flat. The people who spend the money, the people who are actually putting up their money and drilling for oil and gas, are leaving Canada in droves. Over half of the drilling capacity of this country has left. Canadians who the parliamentary secretary believes should be overjoyed at the good things the federal government has done for them have left Canada. They have given up on Canada. We have driven them out of our country.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Andre: To this the parliamentary secretary says, "How wonderful things are, and what a great opportunity Canadians have for participating in what is going on!"

The Fraser Institute estimates that next year Canadian companies will be drilling 10,000 oil and gas wells in the United States. By comparison, they will be drilling 5,000 in Canada. The Canadians who should be overjoyed at what the parliamentary secretary and his minister have done will be exploring twice as much in the United States as in Canada. In response to this, he replies, "How marvellously pleased they are at the National Energy Program." If the whole population of Alberta were to migrate to Montana, I doubt the people could stand the glee. I am sure they would collapse and die from the sheer joy which would overwhelm them. I imagine there would be a party lasting for months when that last oil and gas executive leaves Canada. When that last rig goes, the Liberal party will have a month-long celebration of the tremendous success of the National Energy Program!

As I say, it is hard to know whether to laugh or cry. The fact of the matter is that the National Energy Program is supposed to achieve energy self-sufficiency. The National Energy Board is an organization set up by the government, and all the appointees were made by this government. The board has a large staff of experts. They studied the question of self-sufficiency for months with public hearings across the country. They concluded that not only will we not be self-sufficient by 1990, but that we will probably not be self-sufficient until the next century. The reply of the government is: "No, we will be self-sufficient". Why? Because the minister said so, and how could we question that?

One will not believe a bunch of people at the National Energy Board who only spent months studying the subject. One will not believe the Economic Council. Certainly, one will not believe the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada. After all, they are in the industry and cannot be trusted. One will not believe the Canadian Petroleum Association. Those are big companies and cannot be trusted. No, what one will believe is the kind of pap—nonsense—put forward by the minister and his parliamentary secretary.

The reality is that the National Energy Program and Bill C-48, which is the fallout from it, are only peripherally related to Canada's energy security. The real motive was indicated, and I am sure inadvertently, by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) when he spoke in Sherbrooke, Quebec, on October 22 of this year, as reported by the Canadian Press. I quote from the Press report:

> Lalonde said a stronger threat to Canadian unity than Quebec nationalism could soon be posed by the growing wealth of Alberta. Canada, he said, could one day become a country with one rich province imposing its whims on the other nine if Alberta uses its billions to take control of foreign companies and the federal government does not maintain its role of enforcing the sharing of wealth between rich and poor provinces.

The other nine provinces would eventually be at the mercy of Alberta's every fancy, he said, and a wave of (Alberta) nationalism of unprecedented strength could rise up if the federal government held back now from showing its teeth.

'We don't pay enough attention to this threat,' Lalonde said, 'But it's a real one, it's there.'

That is downright scary in terms of what it says about the mentality of the minister of the Crown. It indicates that a national minister of the federal government feels that the bigger threat to unity in Canada than Quebec separatism—René Levesque's party and what René Levesque stands for—is wealth in Alberta. It is almost mind-boggling to think that there is that kind of person sitting around the cabinet table, but it goes a long way to explain the real intention and purpose behind the national energy policy which has nothing to do with energy but has everything to do with preventing any increase in wealth in Alberta.

Mr. Waddell: Alberta's poor, eh?

Mr. Andre: It has everything to do with that. I hear some giggles—

Mr. Waddell: Oh, come on, Harvey. Alberta is not poor.

Mr. Andre: —from the Liberal rump here. He says Alberta is not poor. I question any New Democrat, Liberal or any other person who calls himself Canadian who says that it is better for Canada to continue to rely on Mexico—

Mr. Waddell: I didn't say that.

Mr. Andre: —on Venezuela and on the Middle East than to pay domestic oil prices, to pay other Canadians, western Canadians, for their oil and gas development. Yet that is the essence of the National Energy Program. That in fact is what has happened. The reality is that this minister of energy, as evidenced by his statement in a speech in Sherbrooke, Quebec, considers it far more dangerous for Canada that there be wealth in Alberta than that we be energy self-sufficient or that we continue to increase or maintain our reliance on Middle East and OPEC nations. It is truly tragic. I hope for the sake of the country that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will remove that person from his portfolio. He is doing incredible disservice and damage to Canada.

● (1640)

The parliamentary secretary talked about the energy pricing agreement and winners and losers. As indicated by Mr. Riedl of Bunting and Co. Limited, the real loser was the consumer. I have to chuckle at the frequency with which the government talks about this made-in-Canada oil pricing scheme, the implication being that the price of crude oil in Canada is independent of what happens in the rest of the world. The price is blended, Mr. Speaker. The domestic price and the imported price are blended together to get a price at the refinery and therefore at the pump. If the world price goes up, the consumer pays more; it is as simple as that. To suggest that there is some separation because of this made-in-Canada thing is as accurate as the falsehood that we will be energy self-sufficient in 1990 as a result of this policy. That is total fabrication.

Canada lost money as a result of the year that elapsed between the announcement last year of the National Energy Program, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) was somehow tricked into reading the program of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the pricing arrangement that was arrived at on September 2 this year. In that year $10 billion left Canada. That $10 billion left Canada never to come back. Had that $10 billion stayed here and had it been invested in Canada, it could have generated untold jobs, economic prospects and so on. Instead, that money has been lost to Canada as a result of this one year's delay in achieving a pricing agreement.

What did the government get for its one year's delay? It did not get the crude oil pricing regime it wanted. In fact, one year later, on September 2, 1981, the federal government caved in and acquiesced to the same crude oil pricing arrangement that was offered to the government in July, 1980. The federal government got nothing in that regard. There was a complete loss, a tremendous cost to the country.

The parliamentary secretary said that people had falsely implied that somehow the National Energy Program was designed to direct activity away from provincial lands to Canada lands. He assured the House that was not the case and that the energy pricing arrangement showed that. But he neglected to mention that when the NEP was brought down originally it contained a provision to eliminate the depletion allowance provided for provincial lands but it was retained in the case of federal lands. If that is not a deliberate, barefaced prejudicial move against provincial lands as opposed to so-called Canada lands, I do not know what is. Finally, a year later, after the government realized it was unable to act unilaterally and that Canada is a federal country, the federal government was forced to reach an agreement with the provinces and that particular provision was dropped. It was not dropped voluntarily; the government was forced to drop it.

The real losers as a result of the NEP and of the stupidity last year are the ordinary Canadian citizens, especially those who have been renewing mortgages this year. It is ironic that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) has sat here daily for the last few weeks taking abuse for the high interest rates that people are paying on their mortgages. It is unfair really because it is not his fault. It is the fault of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his partner in crime, the Minister of Finance, who read out that absurd policy last year.

That is not an opinion held by me in isolation or by my party. It is the opinion of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Bouey. He indicated that the National Energy Program is responsible in large measure for the higher interest rates in Canada vis-à-vis the United States. No less a voice than the Governor of the Bank of Canada said that. Therefore, Canadians who are feeling the pinch of high interest rates, who have had difficulty in renewing their mortgages, can give grateful thanks to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and to his friend the Minister of Finance.

The other day we heard the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) trying to deny that he had ever threatened to resign if interest rates were not brought down below the then outrageous 14 per cent. He went on some crazy tirade that somehow high interest rates in this country were attributable to some people in this party who support the American program, or some other such convoluted reasoning. In any event, the minister was trying to put the blame for everything that was happening on the United States and partly on us because supposedly people in this party support some of the things that have happened in the United States.

If one reads today's edition of The Globe and Mail, it shows that interest rates in the United States rose 20 per cent last year whereas interest rates in Canada rose 50 per cent. Why did Canada's rates increase 50 per cent in the last year as opposed to an increase of 20 per cent in the United States? The answer is very simple. Canada has a National Energy Program which has caused that increase in interest rates. We owe it all to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

It is incredible to hear the parliamentary secretary say that the National Energy Program is such a great success. One has to wonder what planet the parliamentary secretary lives on or where Canada stops for him. It must stop at Etobicoke. He must not know any part of Canada west of there. If he were fulfilling his responsibilities as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, he would be aware of the number of drilling rigs and Canadian companies that have left this country, and he would not be making these absurd statements as to how wonderful this program is for Canadian companies.

What is this program doing for Canada? Over the weekend I had a look at the Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada for 1980, which produced an addendum following the introduction of the National Energy Program last year. The Economic Council examined the National Energy Program, put the material into its econometric model and concluded that as a result of that program inflation in Canada would be a couple of points higher that the council had originally predicted, that unemployment would be a couple of points lower, and that Canada would have higher interest rates. Generally speaking, the Economic Council predicted a pretty gloomy 1981 as a result of the National Energy Program.

The Economic Council was bang on in terms of all its dire predictions for 1981 resulting from the National Energy Program. Yet members opposite stand up without even blushing and say, "Isn't this a wonderful policy and isn't it working marvellously?" We hear that Canadians should be truly grateful they have such a marvellous government in charge, such a smart minister and such brilliant civil servants advising him. But if they were a little smarter, we could have interest rates as high as 30 per cent and perhaps unemployment at 15 per cent or 20 per cent. Who knows? We could even drive every last drilling rig right out of the country if these people were a little smarter. But what gets me is the fundamental dishonesty of this government, which is claiming that the National Energy Program, particularly Bill C-48, is designed to help Canadians participate in the oil and gas industry.

I shall read part of a submission made by Husky Oil Operations Ltd. to the committee studying Bill C-48. Husky Oil is a Canadian company. Most of us recognize the very prominent Canadian on its board of directors, Tommy Douglas, who is a former energy critic for the New Democratic Party. I am sure they get excellent advice from Mr. Douglas. What does Husky Oil, this Canadian company that is supposed to be such a tremendous beneficiary of this marvellous Bill C-48, according to the minister, have to say? Let me quote:

● (1650)

> Bill C-48 appears to have been written in anticipation of setting out rules and powers to control and manipulate a hostile reluctant industry. These financial tools and discretionary powers combined with the preferential treatment of Crown corporations in Bill C-48 and the stated objectives of the NEP on public ownership leave the private sector wondering whether its role in Canada lands is just an interim one. Any private sector company that takes C-48 as drafted and NEP documents as written is forced to add an element of risk resulting from possible government involvement.

That is a very mild way of saying: "What the blazes are you guys doing? All you have done is complicate things and made it that much less attractive for Husky Oil to consider going up there".

I would like to refer to perhaps not quite as temperate a remark from another Canadian company operating in the high Arctic. This is not a company as big as Husky Oil. It is just a small Canadian independent, 100 per cent Canadian owned and started by a Canadian, a good westerner. He is perhaps not as good a Canadian as an Etobicoke Canadian, but he is a good Canadian to some of us. According to a letter from the president of this company, Paramount Resources, if Paramount was a foreign corporation "we might be enraged; as a Canadian company we can find no words to describe the rape and plunder the Canadian government has perpetrated on our company." Rape and plunder is how this Canadian oil company describes what the Government of Canada has done to it.

What does the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources say? He says: "We are really proud of what we have done for the Canadian oil and gas industry; we are really happy." They are proud of the rape and plunder they have perpetrated on this company. They think it is marvellous and a tremendous success. One wonders what planet they live on, let alone what country they live in. We wonder what ordinary Canadians have to do to get through to the thick skulls of those people who keep making those kinds of statements, in view of the overwhelming factual evidence that this program is a disaster and is damaging Canada very, very severely.

Bill C-48 will not work. It is supposedly designed to bring about the efficient, effective and reasonable development of the oil and gas potential in the Canada lands. It will not work, and that I suppose is the saddest part of the whole thing.

Because it will not work we will not get the kind of development the country needs, and because of that we will not be self-sufficient, we will not have the kind of economic benefit that could come from that kind of development. We will in fact continue to be under-achievers compared to our potential and we will continue to do a little bit worse than we could do. We will continue to have the drag of an economy that is not working as well as it should, given our potential, because of the consequences of this bill.

The fiscal regime—that is, the sharing of revenues between the Crown corporation, the government directly and the industry—is probably not going to be satisfactory. I say "probably" in that it is very difficult to know what the fiscal regime ultimately will be. There is so much ministerial discretion in terms of price, who you can sell to, when you can sell, how fast you can produce, etc., that there is no economist alive who can tell you in fact what the fiscal regime is. But the best estimates that have so far been produced indicate it is probably not satisfactory, and there is probably not going to be enough left by way of a reward to make it worth while.

The 25 per cent confiscation by the federal government is something that will take a long time to live down. There is nowhere a precedent in the democratic world for a government confiscating privately owned assets without some form of payment, without some expropriation procedure which provides for an adequate and proper payment in return for the seizure of those assets.

The Canadian government has established a precedent for supposedly democratic countries, and it is a terrible precedent. It is going to colour our relationships with other countries for a long time. It will colour the attitude people have toward this country, and it is going to colour the attitude of investors.

The Royal Bank of Canada recently did a study which indicated that we as a country are going to need some $300 billion for energy developments over the next decade, and of that we will require some $60 million from offshore or foreign sources because we will not be able to produce that much capital within Canada. If we are going to get that $60 billion, with the kind of precedent established by this confiscation we are going to pay through the teeth for that money. The investment world now has proof that Canadians cannot be trusted to keep their word, that the Canadian government will in fact confiscate and expropriate without repayment.

An hon. Member: That is nonsense.

Mr. Andre: That is the tragedy. I hear the hon. member from Moncton over there saying it is nonsense. I refer him to a study by Frost and Sullivan, a New York based consulting firm in the business of assessing political risk. It is a well-known company which puts us in the same category as Algeria, Ecuador, Columbia and the Dominican Republic in terms of the risk of expropriation. That is the view of the experts who assess the risks of this sort of thing vis-à-vis other countries in the world. That is the category we are in now. Of course, he does not really care. If the people in the city will not be able to take VIA Rail any more, I guess he can swallow this too.

The ministerial discretion in this bill, involving some 57 areas, makes it absolutely impossible for anybody to plan. How can anybody sit down and assess whether an investment is justified? We are talking about hundreds of millions of dollars in any one of these plays, and nobody makes this kind of decision strictly on faith. They must have some justification or some sense of what the rules are going to be under which they operate, but how can they with 57 different areas of ministerial discretion, discretion exercised by a minister who has demonstrated that he will seize private assets? That is a severe detriment to investment. As Husky Oil has said, it "is forced to add an element of risk." That is certainly not going to increase investment; it will slow it down.

Finally, there is no recognition in this bill of the role of the Yukon and Northwest Territories governments. In some way the bill almost sets up a kind of a new East India Company. In the old colonial days the British set up the East India Company to look after commerce for their new colonies and to be a kind of government to the colony as well. Under this bill that is what Petro-Canada is; it is a kind of new government in the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

I come from a part of the country which for the 30 years of existence as a province was denied its natural resources. The prevailing view was that those country bumpkins, those clod-hoppers, farmers and ranchers really could not be trusted to have natural resources under their jurisdiction, that the federal government must keep them under a national umbrella.

● (1700)

That is exactly what the government is saying to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. It is saying that although it likes them well enough, it does not trust them enough to give them a say in how the land they live on will be developed. Big daddy in Ottawa will look after them. Big daddy is a lot smarter than they are and more capable. The government is saying: "Because it is dark all winter and you probably drink too much and eat too much caribou, it affects your brains. You cannot be trusted and we will look after you from Ottawa."

Perhaps worse than that is the fiscal regime which is giving so much of the potential rewards of economic rent, to use the latest jargon, to Petro-Canada. It has effectively put any future income that may come to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon beyond their reach. If these territories were to reach provincial status and try to gain for themselves what other provinces have, they would find it impossible because the economic rent which normally would accrue to their government has been taken up by Crown corporations and is no longer available to them.

That is one of the fundamental reasons why I think it is a serious mistake to give Petro-Canada this 25 per cent gift. I believe it is a way of denying the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories access to the economic rent which Petro-Canada is taking. The transference of 25 per cent of all the land to Petro-Canada or some other Crown corporation means that 135 million acres will be under its jurisdiction for exploration. That is the same amount of land which the Exxon Corporation has in the entire world. When you compare the Exxon Corporation to Petro-Canada—this is not to belittle Petro-Canada—the reality is that you are comparing a seven eleven corner store to the Hudson's Bay chain. Exxon is a huge company, and even if you do not like that corporation, it is quite efficient and knows how to find oil and gas. If Petro-Canada is to do the same kind of exploration on its land as Exxon does on their lands, I calculate that their building in Calgary would have to be 854 storeys high to house the geologists and geophysicists. In reality, there is no possible way Petro-Canada or any other company—and this is not a reflection on the individuals or their company—can justify having that much land.

If the Canadian government were truly interested in the development and exploration of Canada lands, it would try to ensure that the lands were spread out among as many different companies as possible. Through that multifaceted approach, with many companies, geologists and theories, the sparks of creative input would provide the kind of discovery and new development needed to produce the oil and gas we need.

The worst situation we could have is having a single oil company in charge of oil and gas exploration in Canada, which is a step in that direction under Bill C-48. That is the worst thing which could be done if the government is considering Canada's oil and gas future and is concerned about developing our oil and gas potential.

We have now reached the final stage of debate for Bill C-48, the first part of the National Energy Program. The bill has been changed a lot in committee and some of the worst parts were improved, but it has not changed enough to make it a viable piece of legislation. It has not changed enough to ensure that oil and gas development on Canada lands will occur.

Ironically, the ministerial discretion which I rightfully criticized may, in fact, contain our salvation. What is happening now is that the government, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said recently, will declare the National Energy Program a victory, a success, in spite of the fact that the evidence is to the contrary. I predict that the government will then proceed to make the necessary changes to accomplish what cannot be accomplished under the National Energy Program and Bill C-48 as it now exists. They will be able to utilize the discretionary authority provided for under Bill C-48 to in fact do things quite differently from what was contemplated in this bill originally and from what is outlined in the National Energy Program. Hopefully it will be in a way which will bring about the development this country needs.

As the Economic Council of Canada said in their 1980 Annual Review, not only does the energy circumstance in Canada offer some potential for economic development in the 1980s, but it may be the only thing Canada has going for it in the 1980s. The projections of the Economic Council of Canada indicate that without a buoyant, active energy program throughout the 1980s our inflation rates and our employment rates will be out of sight. Only through actively and aggressively pursuing energy self-sufficiency, not just by talking about it but by causing the development of our oil and gas potential, does the Economic Council see us surviving the 1980s with reasonable inflation rates, reasonable unemployment rates and a reasonable growth rate.

The Economic Council was precisely correct about what effects the National Energy Program would have over the course of this year. It would indeed be foolish to ignore their projections in terms of what will happen throughout the 1980s if we do not pursue self-sufficiency and pursue it vigorously.

I started off by criticizing the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for the absurd speech he made—and I have not changed my mind—but I ask plaintively and hopefully whether this is all part of some political game. Now that he has declared the National Energy Program a great success, as he did in his speech, will he kindly put that speech aside, get that nonsense out of his head and work with his minister to try to put in place the policies and programs that this country so desperately needs?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby)—Marine Transport—Minister's position respecting Cast shipping group. (b) Request for general inquiry into east coast shipping; the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm)—Metric Conversion—Suggested penalties for food store owners; the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand)—The Constitution—Charter proposals on language rights.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières (for Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) that Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, before I begin my speech I want to say to the member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) who spoke before me that I would rather take my advice from Mr. Tommy Douglas than from Imperial, Gulf, Shell, those large companies that the hon. member obviously takes his advice from. At least Mr. Douglas has always been a spokesman for the working men and women of this country rather than the corporate interests my friend so obviously speaks for in his speech.

An hon. Member: What about Husky?

An hon. Member: Shell never works.

Mr. Waddell: I will resume my speech when my friends to the right have settled down. I was going to say that this bill has been debated for a long time. I believe it should be debated for a long time because every new and challenging issue we face in Canada is contained in this bill. The future of Canada is wrapped up in this bill and it is worth while spending a lot of time on it.

• (1710)

I called the bill a sleeper, but by calling it a sleeper I did not mean that all the issues involved in the bill were putting us to sleep, although some of the speeches on the bill—my own included at certain points—probably did tend to put members to sleep. However, if we look at the bill we find that there are parts of it which touch on things about which we are really concerned, debate every day in this House and touch on every day in the question period.

This bill deals with the environment in northern Canada. I should not say it deals with it; it skirts around it and ignores it. But the issue of development as against protecting our environment is one with which we now have to struggle all the time. This bill opts for rapid oil and gas development in Canada lands, meaning the east and west coasts and the north of Canada, areas which have the most fragile environments in the world. We should be concerned and, judging by the letters and responses to our speeches on this bill I and some of my colleagues have received, Canadians are also concerned. This bill touches on the northern territories of this country. We are all northerners. Even though most of our people live along the border, this is a northern country and we think of ourselves as northerners. That is a good part of Canada; it is part of what makes us different from Americans and people in other parts of the world.

We hope that the northern territories will evolve into very distinctive and fascinating provinces. I do not think many Canadians have yet grasped the possibilities for an Inuit province in Canada. We have just begun to grasp that, but it cannot be a province unless it is given some resource revenue and some resource control. This is an issue in the bill, and it is to the great regret of, I think, all of us in this House that the fledgling northern territorial governments in the Yukon and Northest Territories which are just beginning to get on their feet were not really consulted respecting this bill. I spoke to government officials in Yellowknife and talked to people from Whitehorse, and I realized that they were not really consulted when this bill was drafted.

That brings me to another issue with which we struggle all the time. The hon. member for Calgary Centre mentioned this without perhaps really articulating it very well. I refer to the hinterland of Canada. Even those of us from Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia feel that we are in the hinterland. What do the people of the north and parts of Newfoundland feel about the power and the role of the hinterland in controlling the scope and pace of their development as against the power of Ottawa, the bureaucracy in Ottawa and the power of international industry and about how they control things? That is an issue in this bill.

With respect to offshore energy I spoke about whether the moratorium on drilling in British Columbia should be removed. I spoke about how fast we should speed up the development of Hibernia and who should control it, the province or the federal government. That is all in this bill and it is very important.

There is another issue we on this side of the House have tried to raise, apparently with not a great deal of success, although we are just beginning the fight and, I think, will eventually win it. The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) will talk about this after I have finished speaking. That issue concerns an industrial strategy and taking all the money for this development and making sure that Canadian business and industry, and especially small business, are given a role. We do not want them to be passed by. With respect to native people I am fond of using the analogy of a native person standing by a highway as a truck passes by. I have seen that personally on the Mackenzie Highway in the Northwest Territories. That is almost a symbol of development, passing native people by, and that is what happens in this country, but development has also passed by our Canadian small-business people. The important aspects of an industrial strategy, Canadian content and so forth are ignored by this bill.

The bill is also important for foreign relations. It deals with the whole question of sovereignty in the Arctic, how we control our north, how we raise the flag there and so forth. There are international implications. Foreign lobbying with respect to this bill reached the Conservative party in this House, which changed the bill and tried to stop its appearance in this House.

Finally, the bill is an outstanding example of the weaknesses in the National Energy Program. This bill is at the heart of that program. It is the guts of the program, and what it shows—and I will speak of this later in my speech—is a program which consists of giant giveaways and grants, without taking sufficient equity or control for the government. This bill would give grants to private companies and build up large Canadian private companies at the expense of consumers and small Canadian companies. This bill will continue a system we thought we would put behind us. The Canadianization in this bill is phony, and I will give examples later on of why Canadianization as we understand it is different from the Canadianization referred to by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. MacLaren).

I have learned a great deal from this bill and, before hon. members heckle me and say "It's about time" and so forth, let me say I have learned all this during the course of the year, in committee day after day, at all the stages of this bill in the House, in press interviews and statements outside the House and in discussions with my colleagues and with other members of the House. In watching this bill develop I have learned a great deal, and I will tell hon. members what I have learned: "Them that's got power gets." Those who do not have power, no matter how just their cause, lose. This is the problem with the Canadian political system, and it has shown up in this bill. Greed and privilege seem to triumph over justice and equity, and that is sad.

That can be seen now with respect to the Constitution. The provincial premiers have the power, so the native people lose out. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wanted the support of our party, he was prepared to accept an amendment to the Constitution relating to native peoples. Now that he has a deal with the provinces, he forgets about that.

Mr. Irwin: Who sent us to the provinces?

Mr. Waddell: That is what happens, and this bill shows it. Whenever the industry has cried out, it has received basically what it has wanted.

There have been eight changes to this bill, but they have not helped environmental groups. They did not win. They have not helped native groups nor northern groups. Those changes have helped the industry. That was the only flexibility this government showed, apart from a few token clauses without prejudice to native claims, which mean nothing, especially since native claims are not even in the Constitution now. These things in the bill mean nothing, but every change in the bill benefits the industry.

I can go through the changes chapter and verse. It is a little late to do that now, but one result of the debate last week is that the royalty holidays have been extended. There were modifications to the 25 per cent Petro-Canada back-in. In the future companies will be paid a little more for the back-in privilege. There were modifications respecting the date of pioneer production so that rich industry could escape more taxation. Every change made generally helped the industry. That is what the Liberals did for the industry, and they did not do much for northerners or native people. It was shocking that our Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works did not even go north to talk to the native people. It is disgusting. I asked for support from my Conservative friends. I tried to filibuster in the committee so that we could go north. What did the Conservatives do? They got together with the Liberals, ended the committee and brought the bill back here. It was shameful and shocking that northern members could agree to that.

The first clause in the bill deals with Canada lands. The native people are the majority on Canada lands. We did not even consult those who are the majority. What kind of democracy is that?

It was instructive to me to see the positions of the parties respecting this bill. The Conservative party fought tooth and nail and brought out every dinosaur in its caucus to fight for the oil companies, to stop the 25 per cent Petro-Canada back-in and to attack Petro-Canada. That was their strategy and their position on the bill.

● (1720)

When we pointed to Suncor in which Bill Davis of Ontario bought a percentage, the Conservatives said that was different.

Mr. Stewart: What's different about it?

Mr. Waddell: That is my point, what is different about it? My friend might read a column in The Toronto Sun by Claire Hoy. I do not know whether he is a supporter of this side of the House, but the article states:

> To the NDP, you should not only buy into companies, you should buy control, a position which makes sense if you accept the principle of government intervention.

That is the point we have been making in this debate. This bill, with its Petro-Canada back-ins and giveaways, does not do anything to give control of the energy industry, Canada's most important industry, to the Canadian people. It gives control to the multinational companies and a few large Canadian companies.

I want to deal with some of the Liberal policies reflected in this bill. I want to make three points. First, we should remember it was past Liberal policy that got us into this foreign ownership crisis. Now they are proposing only half measures to get us out of it.

By and large it was not people on this side that got an industry which is more foreign controlled than any other country, industrialized or non-industrialized, would permit. They got us into it and now propose half measures to get us out of it.

My second point is the 50 per cent Canadian ownership which the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources spoke about so glowingly. That does not necessarily mean Canadian control. Foreign domination will remain. My colleagues and I made that point consistently throughout our speeches. However, we have had no real reply from the other side of the House.

Third, the Liberal's Canadianization plan means privatization. What we are talking about is public ownership and control. Let that be clear. That is what the parliamentary secretary talked about when referring to Canadianization. These flaws are all reflected in this bill.

I want to talk a bit about the Liberal record. In 1974 the Prime Minister promised that we would have 50 to 60 per cent Canadian ownership in all new energy projects. He did not keep that promise. Now he is promising 50 per cent Canadian ownership, not control, by 1990.

The parliamentary secretary stated that we had made great progress. He mentioned that we had gone up to about 35 per cent Canadian ownership, a 5 per cent increase as a result of all the actions in the last year as a result of the National Energy Program. We have spent $6.8 billion to get an extra 5 per cent, up from 30 per cent to 35 per cent. We could have taken that amount of money to purchase Imperial Oil. Overnight we would have 50 per cent Canadian ownership. This government does not have the guts to do that. Instead, it wants to wrap itself in the flag of Canadianization. It is a sham, generally and specifically.

I have raised the fact time and again that even with this bill one will be able to get around Canadian ownership standards, which are not even defined in the bill. They will be defined in another bill. I pointed to the example where a group in an oil play in the Arctic could be 70 per cent owned by Imperial Oil and 30 per cent owned by Petro-Canada. Surprise, surprise! That is 51 per cent Canadian ownership.

I have said this three times in this House. I will not go into the statistics again. However, it was never denied. In the specifics of this bill, Canadian ownership is a farce. It does not mean Canadian control at all. We suggested specific amendments, but the government refused to accept them.

Why do we see foreign control as bad for us? Contrary to the free enterprise argument that my friends on the right were advancing, saying that Canada benefits from foreign capital, the multinational companies are net capital exporters. They take more out of the country than they put in.

In the period 1975 to 1980, the petroleum industry was a net capital exporter to the tune of $4.1 billion. Those figures come from the government's own petroleum monitoring agency report. The petroleum industry's assets have risen 359 per cent, from $14.6 billion in 1973 to $53.4 billion in 1980. That capital gain is controlled mainly by foreign shareholders at the expense of Canadian consumers and taxpayers.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) gives us a bad time for not supporting the oil companies and the industry. The Canadian people think the industry is very fat and rich. We know that some of the small companies are hurting. We can help some of the small Canadian companies. By and large the Canadian public sees this as a big, fat, rich industry. It is going to continue to get rich under the new deal between Alberta and Ottawa, cooked up at the expense of the consumers.

In 1980 the oil industry's profits represented almost 30 per cent of all profits earned by the non-financial sector of the economy. It is a rich industry getting richer and it is expanding into other segments of the economy. Its power and economic wealth is controlled by foreigners, but it can pressure Canadian policy makers. The evidence is here. Look at Cold Lake and Syncrude—blackmail tactics and capital strikes. They will not go ahead unless they receive more money and benefits, more of the cream. That is why we say we cannot let this happen.

What do the Liberals propose to do? At the very least they propose what I would call half measures. Here is what Marc Lalonde said in New York.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The hon. member must refer to ministers by the departments they represent and members by the constituencies they represent.

Mr. Waddell: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I am quoting from an article that names him. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) said in New York on November 18, 1980:

> Do you suppose that a party proposing to reduce foreign control to 50 per cent within ten years would be regarded as anything but cautious to a fault? I doubt that Americans would tolerate anything like 50 per cent foreign ownership in any major industry—let alone a vital, basic industry like oil and gas. And to tolerate it at a time when that industry is claiming an enormous and ever-rising share of the national wealth is simply unthinkable.

He is prepared to tolerate it to the extent of 50 per cent. That is a half measure. What the national energy policy does is replace the big foreign-owned companies, largely American, such as Exxon, the friend of the hon. member for Calgary Centre and the Conservative Party, with large Canadian companies such as Dome Petroleum and Nova Corporation. It is replacing the Rockefellers and the Mellons with the Conrad Blacks and the Bob Blairs. That is fine. They are Canadians. However, are they going to do anything different from the multinational oil companies?

What guarantees do we have that privately-owned Canadian oil companies, subsidized with our money to the tune of 93 cents for every dollar spent on exploration—and I will come back to that in a moment—will act any differently from foreign-owned companies? Does anyone believe that the $12 billion price rip-off of the consumers as set out in the Bertrand report would be any different if we replaced Dome or Norcen for Imperial or Gulf? I am not so sure. I would like to think it would be but I am not so sure. I will tell you why I am not so sure, Mr. Speaker. The goal of these privately-owned oil companies will be, first of all, to push for higher prices and, second, to push for more exports. You can see that now. Listen to the call for gas exports from Alberta. Third, they want more tax concessions. Look at their criticism of the National Energy Program and of this bill which gives them all kinds of tax incentives.

● (1730)

It seems to me that if you want to have true Canadianization, Mr. Speaker, you have to make Petro-Canada a leader in the industry and you have to make it number one. That is true Canadianization. I think the Canadian people would support that idea.

Under the National Energy Program, the taxpayers of Canada will fund a Canadian-owned company to the maximum of 93 cents on every dollar spent on exploration in Canada. That is what my friends call free enterprise: a ninety-three-cent subsidization. What does the government get back? The government gets back 25 per cent Petro-Canada back-in. The government gets back a 10 per cent royalty, which is one of the lowest in all the industrialized countries. The government will get a percentage in income tax, if that is not deferred forever.

What kind of free enterprise is that? It seems to me that this is a great rip-off of the Canadian taxpayer. That is exactly what this bill does. You do not have to believe me Mr. Speaker, because I will quote the words of the parliamentary secretary who said an hour ago in this House that "Canada has in place the most generous system of grants and incentives of any country." That is the kind of system that is being set up in this bill.

From 1977 to 1980 the federal Liberal party gave income tax breaks to the foreign-controlled resource sector worth a total of over $13 billion, without getting any equity or ownership in return. Over the same period, income tax collected from the petroleum industry was only $5 billion. What the NDP is saying and what we have said in our amendments to this bill, something that was ignored by the government which is not flexible at all, is that it is time the consumers and taxpayers of Canada who have funded the growth and profits of this industry get some ownership in return. If we are paying the piper, it is time we called the tune. We can only do that through majority public ownership.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I regret the fact that no one has spoken in French on Bill C-48. I thought all the provinces, including Quebec, had an interest in the energy issue. I have said that the Progressive Conservatives, the Tories in this House, were certainly speaking on behalf of the big oil companies in the course of the debate. Only the NDP spoke on behalf of the people. We support Petro-Canada. The Progressive Conservatives do not. We want Canadians to control the oil industry. That is definitely not the position of the Liberal Party.

[English]

Before I sit down, I should like to raise another point, and that is why I wanted to ask a question of the—

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding a statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). He said that none of the francophone members took the floor during the debate. I want to say that this bill has been before the House for over a year, that it was sent to the committee where Quebec members took part in the study of the bill in committee and that we were in the House—

Mr. Waddell: The hon. member may wish to take part in the debate after me. I should like to hear the position of a member from Quebec, because I have not heard the position—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I did not recognize the point of order and I do not think the hon. member should have responded to it.

Mr. Waddell: Obviously the hon. member will have the chance to speak after I have completed my remarks and to set out his position on this bill. The hon. member cannot have it both ways. Either the hon. member wants to speak on this and set out a position—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Again, I would invite the hon. member to address the Chair. I do not think the debate should be entertained across the floor.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the government and the parliamentary secretary specifically to respond to this matter of the effect of Bill C-48 on aboriginal land claims. I hope that the member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) will speak later on in this debate on this very point.

There are two points. First, the government says that this bill is neutral, to use the minister's words, toward aboriginal land rights. Our view is that the bill is not neutral. How can the bill be neutral if the government develops oil and gas resources quickly, as this bill proposes to do, and opens up a regime to do that? It is taking it off the bargaining table with the native people. That is a point on which the minister and I disagree. The minister suggests that he will bring in legislation after this bill is passed and we will have to look at it.

More specifically, I have in my hands a telegram from the Inuvialuit, the Inuit people near Inuvik. The telegram is from Sam Raddi, the President of COPE. In his telegram Mr. Raddi specifically challenges the government to include in a speech from one of the members of the Liberal party an undertaking that this bill will not affect a contract that was already entered into. I shall read a paragraph from Mr. Raddi's telegram. It reads:

> To put the issue simply, do you agree that the intent and language of the agreement in principle—

—and that is the agreement with the Inuit—

> —with respect to our 7 (1) (A) lands where there were encumbrances as of July 13, 1978 is that the Inuvialuit were to receive all of the Crown share, or to say it another way, we are to receive all of what the Crown would have received had they retained ownership in 7 (1) (A) lands. Yes or no. This is a fundamental and simple question that you should have no trouble in answering quickly. Should you agree with our statement with respect to the agreement in principle and if it is not your intention to alter that commitment in the agreement in principle you should have no difficulty in giving us your consent to the three commitments we requested on October 21, 1981.

The point is that this is a specific example of a bill actually affecting native rights which have already been negotiated. I challenge the government to answer the concerns of those people. If it cannot do that, it cannot say that this bill is neutral with regard to northern rights.

I want to conclude by saying that in this bill we, the NDP, have taken positions on environment, on industrial spin-offs, on Canadian content, and on protecting the rights of northerners. The government has not been responsive to these issues; but we have not lost the fight. That fight will continue. We will continue the fight in other ways and in other bills and in the areas that are affected.

I should like to say—I think this is where my friend, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) fell down—that what we have to do in this bill and in the energy policy is to nation build and to recapture for ourselves the ownership of our resources and their development. We must give our children and our children's children a better share in a world where an adequate supply of energy is fundamental. I think the Canadian people understand that. I think they know that energy is fundamental, and that what we do with energy and how we develop it will really determine the future of succeeding generations in Canada.

• (1740)

We will not settle for no loaf, like the Conservatives, or for half a loaf, as the Liberals propose in this bill with its glaring weaknesses. Mr. Speaker, we want the whole loaf; we want control of the energy industry by the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, as we go into the final stages of debate on Bill C-48, I should like to make a few comments. One of the major concerns that this party has about Bill C-48 is the powers that it gives to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde).

I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) for stating the position of the New Democratic Party. If anyone had any doubt about NDP philosophy, it would have been removed by the speeches we have heard on Bill C-48 over the last few days. That party is completely and totally opposed to the free enterprise system. If it could destroy more industries by nationalizing them and socializing them, it certainly would. I will point out what it would cost the Canadian people to go along with nationalizing industries. There would be a loss of investment money, a loss of jobs, and companies would move out of Canada.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway said that this party is the spokesman for the oil companies. Mr. Speaker, this party is the spokesman for every small Canadian business. I will speak up for Canadian business and do everything I possibly can to oppose this socialist legislation of the Liberal and NDP parties and its onslaught on Canadian business. The people most affected by Bill C-48 are the small Canadian businessmen, and the government is out to get them.

In his speech this afternoon, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. MacLaren) spoke of cheap gas and cheap oil, but there is no cheap gas or cheap oil, Mr. Speaker. In the 1980 federal election campaign the Liberal party promised Canadians that energy prices would stay low. It claimed that the price hike would be less than half of what this party had planned, and that it would negotiate an increase of less than 14 cents. Depending upon the location in Canada, in 1980 gasoline prices rose by between 22 cents and 29 cents per gallon, far in excees of the promised 14 cents. The Liberals were returned to power after campaigning against our energy price proposals, and since then gasoline prices have risen in some areas by as much as 65 cents per gallon.

Increases due solely to federal taxes amount to 36 cents per gallon, which is twice the 18 cents per gallon excise tax proposed in our budget. Since that election the price of home-heating oil has risen by 44 cents per gallon and more. This situation will be further strained in the next few years when the federal-Alberta agreement allows crude oil prices to rise at almost double the rate of our proposal.

These energy price increases have been imposed without benefit of the energy tax credits that would have provided $250 for a typical low or middle-income family this year as a hedge against the price increases. I will say no more, Mr. Speaker; the real facts are evident.

This is the sort of false information that the Liberals are sending out to their constituents, but what is new about that?

I have here a document sent by the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) to his constituents in Halifax in December 1980. It contains a graph headed "Gasoline Crosbie vs MacEachen" and shows that under the Crosbie pricing plan, in 1981 gasoline would have cost $1.56 per gallon or 34 cents per litre while under the Liberals the price would be $1.36 per gallon or 30 cents per litre. That is totally false, Mr. Speaker. In Halifax, and in parts of Nova Scotia, at the present time the price is around $1.74 per gallon. A colleague from Nova Scotia informs me that it is even higher than that, but this is what a minister of the Crown told his constituents in a document he sent to all of them. He claimed that gas would only cost $1.36 in 1981. We find out now that in Nova Scotia people are paying $1.74 or more.

In the last federal election the Liberals also told the Canadian people night after night on national television that they would lower interest rates. That was another lie. There was also all the nonsense about cheap gas.

Let me put on record what the Liberals have done for the Canadian people in the area of energy since they were returned to power, Mr. Speaker. On November 1, 1980, a tax of 80 cents per barrel was imposed. This translates into about six tenths of one cent per litre or 2.7 cents per gallon. This tax was imposed to help cover the cost of subsidizing refiners for the difference between domestic and world prices, which is about $20 per barrel.

On January 1, 1981, the same tax was increased by $2.50 per barrel, which amounts to 2 cents per litre or 9 cents per gallon. We did not hear anything about that from the Liberals in the last election campaign. The message was that we would get cheap gas.

On March 1, 1981, retail prices climbed about eight tenths of one per cent per litre or 3.6 cents per gallon to reflect an increase of $1 in the wellhead price of oil on January 1. By agreement, oil companies do not pass on a wellhead increase to consumers for 60 days.

On March 3 of this year a special tax of 75 cents per barrel or about six tenths of one cent per litre or 2.7 cents per gallon, was imposed because of the Alberta production cuts.

On May 1 of this year a special levy of $1.15 per barrel was imposed, which is almost one cent per litre or 4.5 cents per gallon. The purpose of this levy was to finance the bulk of Petro-Canada's $1.46 billion of Petrofina. This was not required, but $1.46 billion in Canadian funds went to Belgium.

I fail to see how that would help Canada or the Canadian consumers. The Liberal policy of paying world price for imported oil costs Canadians $500,000 per hour.

On June 3 of this year consumers were dealt a double whammy. The special tax implemented because of the Alberta cuts was increased by $1.10 per barrel to $1.85. At the same time the government increased by $1.25 per barrel the tax aimed at helping cover the cost of subsidizing refiners for all imports. As a result, prices rose immediately by 2 cents per litre or 9 cents per gallon. It is up, up, up, Mr. Speaker. So much for the government's phony statement in the last election that Canadians would get cheap gas.

On September 1 of this year retail prices increased by eight tenths of a cent per litre or 3.6 cents per gallon because of a July 1 increase of $1 per barrel in the wellhead price. The litany goes on and on and on, Mr. Speaker.

One of the groups I will speak up for at every opportunity is the Canadian Petroleum Association which is comprised of small Canadian firms. I am proud to speak up for that group which is being shafted by Liberal-NDP policies. The October 1981 bulletin of that association quotes from a speech of the chairman as follows:

In October 1980 our ability to meet the challenge of oil self-sufficiency was practically destroyed with the introduction of the NEP (National Energy Program) and the federal budget.

It is interesting to note that in a recently published report, the National Energy Board has supported industry's position that "Canadian oil self-sufficiency by 1990 is futile unless the energy industry receives higher returns than provided under the NEP.

● (1750)

Since last October the Canadian Petroleum Association, which is comprised of small Canadian businesses not multinationals, has been urging governments to return to the negotiating table to settle their revenue-sharing differences and to return a reasonable share of the revenue to the industry. The industry cannot continue to function if its cash flow is going to be cut off. Also, there is mention about the huge profits of the multinationals. I am not a spokesman for multinationals, but I want to point out that just about all of these major oil companies have been borrowing money every year to continue with their exploration, and all their large profits go into exploration.

There was also an excellent document put out by the Nisku Businessmen's Association in Nisku, Alberta, earlier this year explaining the impact of the National Energy Program and the tie-in with Bill C-48. It is entitled "The Impact of the Federal Budget and National Energy Policy on 41 Oil Service Companies in the Nisku Business Park." It goes into great detail as to how the companies will be laying people off and will be buying less goods and services in Ontario and Quebec. I fail to see how that is helping Canada or the Canadian consumer in any way at all. The report states:

Of the responding companies in our survey, 49 per cent indicated that they had some type of branch office located in Alberta or northern British Columbia. Some of the locations included Grande Prairie, Calgary, Lloydminster, Edmonton, Brooks, Fort St. John and Fort Nelson. Most of the branch offices were involved in either sales, manufacturing, repair, storage or supply.

Out of the existing branch offices, 40 per cent will be shut down as a result of the budget.

Liberal policies will not cause companies to shut down in the OPEC countries, Venezuela or Mexico, because the government is pouring out money every day, paying the world price for imported oil instead of reaching agreement with the producing provinces, which could continue with oil exploration if they received a half decent price from the Liberal government; and there is oil in every province in Canada. With its policies, the government closed down 1,400 wells in Saskatchewan and brought the oil exploration industry in Manitoba to a grinding halt.

In another paragraph, the document reads:

LOSS OF OPERATIONS IN CANADA

One of the implications of the budget was the movement of business across the border to the United States.

I have gone into that at great length. These policies have certainly benefited the United States: North Dakota, Montana, Colorado, Oklahoma and Texas.

The document states further:

Prior to the budget's announcement, none of the firms responding to our survey had operations located in the U.S. As a result of the government's actions, 34 per cent of the companies indicated they would be moving a portion of their business outside of Canada.

I fail to see how that is helping anyone in Canada. The document goes on to read:

This movement will involve from 10 to 50 per cent of the firms' total operations with an average of 30 per cent.

It should be noted that most of these figures result from company forecasts. This may change as the situation concerning the budget changes.

Concerning the effect on employment in relation to the Liberals' energy policies, the document reads:

As of October 1st, 1980, the companies surveyed employed 3138 in Alberta and 1456 in Nisku.

After the budget was introduced they employed 2965 in Alberta and 1201 in Nisku.

This resulted in a loss of 255 jobs at Nisku or in the Nisku offices of the firms surveyed plus an additional loss of 173 jobs in branch and field operations.

Considering the large amount of oil service and related firms in Alberta, these figures from only 41 firms could represent a great loss of jobs throughout the province.

The report goes into some detail on the effect on other industries. Of course, most of these industries are located in Ontario and there are a number in Quebec. The report states:

It is an economic principle that when one section of Canada's economy is affected by some event, other areas are also directly affected. This can be seen in the cutbacks in orders to suppliers from the oil and oil related firms in the Nisku Industrial Park. The federal budget and NEP have caused slowdowns and loss of sales in these firms, which in turn decreases their expenditures on supplies and inventories.

Through our survey we obtained a list of suppliers in Alberta and eastern Canada who have been affected by the decrease in spending.

The document goes on to list dozens of firms, and also names the general industries in Canada which have been affected by the National Energy Program and Bill C-48. It also points out the following:

As a result of cutbacks or cancellations of purchases by the 41 companies responding to our survey, $1,470,000 in revenues was lost by eastern suppliers in the last quarters of 1980. Forecasted cutbacks in purchases to eastern suppliers in 1981 will amount to approximately $20,000,000 from these 41 firms.

It is no wonder that we have lay-offs and high unemployment in eastern Canada. The document goes on and on about the effect of the NEP on the industry right across Canada. It is unfortunate that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did not read this document. Just about every day one can pick up another document and find out about another business which is moving out of Canada, another large portion of money moving down to the United States because of Liberal policies, and nothing is being done about it. The October issue of the Energy Month states:

But in spite of the security blanket provided by the U.S. market, all manufacturers realize that they are vulnerable without Canadian sales. Wally Kuchar, president of Tri-Service Machine Ltd., is very blunt about the situation. "If it wasn't for the U.S. and Reagan's policies, we'd have had to lay off half our people."

Is that not a great policy that we have here in Canada? The article states further:

Gus Carscadden echoes the same view; "If it wasn't for the U.S., we'd be in desperate straits." Other manufacturers concur.

I have another document called the Alberta report. Earlier this year it was called the casualty report number four. Of course, the casualties have certainly been rising. It points out that since the publication of the National Energy Program on October 28, 1980, the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors has published periodic reports on the exodus of rigs to the United States. It states that from October, 1980, to March, 1981, 114 drilling operations moved to the United States. Forty-nine service operations moved to the United States. Is this not wonderful? Is this not really helping us? These insane socialistic policies are just great. Also, from April 1, 1981, to August, 1981—

Mr. Waddell: That's only the Alberta report.

Mr. McKenzie: —seventy-five drilling operations were to move. In servicing operations, 58 rigs were out of service. These are the figures for the summer of 1981. There were 124 rigs out of service and 126 servicing operations. How on earth will we reach energy self-sufficiency?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please! It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon before the supper break I was commenting on the casualty reports with regard to drilling and servicing operations being forced out of the country because of the Liberal government's energy policy and Bill C-48. I want to conclude my comments on the casualty reports. It has been pointed out that half of Canada's 1980 rig capacity would be idle or in the United States by mid-1981 and that $850 million worth of Canadian rigs would be in the United States by mid-1981, and will not be back. The resulting job loss is 20,000. Yet we are told that this is good for us.

I commented earlier today with regard to information which the minister of state responsible for fitness and amateur sport was sending to his constituents. In this respect I congratulate my colleague, the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), for exposing the false information which this minister is distributing to his constituents concerning gas prices. I have extracted a page from the householder sent by the minister responsible for fitness and amateur sport to his constituents. In it he points out that gasoline in 1981 under the MacEachen formula will be $1.36 per gallon. We know perfectly well that gasoline is not $1.36 a gallon; it is $1.74 and more. How can we believe anything the Liberals tell us about anything when this kind of false information is being sent out to constituents? I suppose this type of thing is going out all across Canada. Therefore, I offer my congratulations once again to the hon. member for Halifax West for exposing this minister of the Crown, this great Liberal, who has been sending out this sort of information to his constituents.

We had a debate earlier today on the subject of why nationalization of industry is so great for Canada. I have not seen any evidence that it is great at all. I would like to quote some remarks made by another colleague of mine, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington). On October 29, 1981, as reported in Hansard at page 12322, the hon. member for Capilano said:

I wonder why that great NDP haven and example of the perfect life for the masses—I am speaking of Sweden—has backed away from increasing state ownership, to the point now where the state owns less than 5 per cent of the economy.

The Swedes have learned their lesson with regard to state ownership, infringement of the private sector, driving private enterprise out of the country, etc. and they have reduced state ownership to 5 per cent. I have not heard any of the NDP members reading that into the record.

It is amazing how many people across Canada have done research into the Liberal government's energy policies, its energy program and Bill C-48 and have exposed all the weaknesses. A recent article written in Calgary stated:

The probability Canada would be oil self-sufficient by 1990 was "close to zero," says a report by the Canadian Energy Research Institute.

The institute said it expected oil imports would peak in 1985 at 83,700 cubic meters or 526,000 barrels a day, an amount equalling 28 per cent of the domestic demand.

"The federal government's goal of self-sufficiency by 1990 will not likely be achieved unless there is a very substantial departure from anticipated crude oil supply and demand patterns. In fact, the expected value of oil imports by 1990 is 71,000 cubic metres a day (24 per cent of domestic demand)."

"While the probability of imports being less than one third of domestic demand in that year is .82, the probability of imports being eliminated by 1990 is close to zero,"—

Therefore, Canada will keep pouring money into OPEC, into Venezuela and into Mexico. We are told by the Liberals that this is good for us and that it is great for Canada. I fail to see how that is great for Canada. It is great for OPEC, it is great for Mexico and it is great for Venezuela, but it is not great for Canada. What Canada will experience is loss of jobs and more rigs and investment money leaving our shores.

Mr. Nielsen: They are not interested over there.

Mr. McKenzie: Statements have been made on behalf of the oil industry recently by small Canadian businessmen and by spokesmen for small Canadian oil companies to the effect that Canada's energy policies will cost at least 60,000 jobs across Canada. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) have band-aid programs to create unemployment. They are on a treadmill going backwards. There is no way they can cope with the damaging energy policy that will cost Canada 60,000 jobs. Canada is on a disaster course with this energy policy, Bill C-48 and all the rest of it.

There was an excellent editorial in the Peterborough Examiner recently. A thorough study was done in it of the Liberals energy policy. In part, this editorial reads:

> Canadians should open their windows and howl their rage till Ottawa hears it.
>
> Never, surely, have so many been taxed so much for so little. Never, surely, have political promises been broken so cynically.

This is just what we witnessed in the last federal election. The Liberals were going to lower interest rates and give us cheap gas. It is unbelievable what Liberals will say and what they tell the Canadian people.

Mr. Nielsen: They have given us a lot of gas.

Mr. McKenzie: Yes, as the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) said, the Liberals have given us a lot of gas. The editorial in the Peterborough Examiner continues with these words:

> It is quite useless to upbraid the Trudeau government for the despicable way it has reneged on its election promise to keep energy price increases below the 18 cents a gallon the Clark government was proposing as increase in the excise tax on fuel. The Liberals have no shame about such cynicism; they showed that in 1975 when Trudeau brought in wage and price controls, blatant reversal of a firm promise given in the 1974 election.

It goes on to state:

> Surely the sting of another four cents a gallon, hard on the heels of so many other increases in energy prices since the Liberals regained office, will prompt Canadians to demand an end to blatant Liberal dishonesty.
>
> We should shout in unison that we're mad as hell and we're not going to take it any more. Otherwise, we shall continue to get what we deserve for putting out trust in such a government.

● (2010)

The last opportunity the Canadian people had to give the message to the Liberal government was the recent byelections in Spadina and Joliette.

Of course, we have seen further evidence of their blatant lies and false information sent out to the Canadian people with the minister sending out false information on gas price increases, as the minister of state for fitness and amateur sport has done.

An hon. Member: Diamond-toothed Gerry.

Mr. McKenzie: We have now heard the hon. member for Halifax suggest that he is "diamond-toothed Gerry." That is probably a very good description.

There are a number of others in our party who wish to speak on this subject tonight. I hope they will emphasize the dishonesty of the Liberal Party in the false information it is sending out on energy prices, oil and gas prices, lowering interest rates and what have you. We have to keep up this attack relentlessly to get the message across to every Canadian citizen, the taxpayers, to show them what kind of government they have.

An hon. Member: They cannot be trusted.

Mr. McKenzie: They certainly cannot be trusted. They say they will lower interest rates. They will lower the interest rates, my foot! I better sit down before I blow up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, this House is now engaged in the final review of Bill C-48 which enacts the Canada oil and gas act. The detailed consideration given Bill C-48 on second reading, before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works and at report stage has questioned the value and effect of virtually every provision of this bill, yet we know that inevitably the government will utilize its majority in this chamber and in the other place to stamp a mark of approval on this legislation. Our task in this final review is to make one last attempt to prevail upon the government to change the more onerous and disruptive provisions of this new Canada oil and gas act. In the presence of a government majority, which in some particulars is aided and abetted by the New Democratic Party, this may be an impossible task, but the effort to expose the unfair and unconscionable provisions of Bill C-48 will at least bring the dangers of this legislation to public attention.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosby: Let me review the basis—I will deal with them later, Mr. Speaker, after I have concluded my remarks. And when I go off the cuff, in my usual fashion I will slay those members of the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosby: I might have to interrupt my comments now and start on them right away.

Let me review the basis for Bill C-48 in my attempt to expose to public light and condemnation the damaging aspects of this legislation.

The bill is intended to implement the National Energy Program which was unveiled in this House on October 28, 1980, as part of the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). That fact, the introduction of a National Energy Program as part of the government's financial and fiscal policy, is vital to an understanding of the purpose and effect of Bill C-48. One might ask why it is so. The reason is that the proposed Canada oil and gas act is not in a real sense an energy bill, it is a financial bill. Its true purpose is to gain federal control over some of the most important resources in this nation, the petroleum resources in northern Canada and in the coastal submarine lands. Indeed, that is the real purpose of the National Energy Program. It will result in federal control of energy resources.

Let me explain this point. For most of this century the emerging wealth of Canada has been based on the construction and manufacturing sectors of the economy;. the builders of ships and vessels, the manufacturers of automobiles and equipment, and on the process of natural resources like timber, metals and petroleum. Until recently the resources themselves were relatively cheap, particularly petroleum. Today depleting resources such as petroleum and base metals are more valuable. As a result of the combine formed by the oil producing nations that form OPEC, in one decade they raised the price of a barrel of oil from the $4 level to the high of $44 in Canadian funds. It is very easy to recognize that the federal government was anxious to switch its concern from the manufacturing sector and the excise tax revenue it brings to the natural resources sector and obtain direct ownership of the wealth produced by energy resources.

Let me provide an example. Cape Breton in Nova Scotia has vast supplies of coal adjoining its coast. For years; indeed, exactly one century following confederation, the federal government gave no attention or concern to these coal resources. The province of Nova Scotia administered the mining leases and licences that affected the coalmining industry and that resource. In 1967 the principal operator of the Cape Breton coal mine simply abandoned the operation, placing thousands out of work and causing economic havoc. Here is the point. The Government of Canada had to be dragged, kicking and screaming, to assist the province of Nova Scotia to salvage the operation of the Cape Breton coal mines. By agreement with the province of Nova Scotia, the federal government established the Cape Breton Development Corporation to take over the operations of the coal mines. I make no complaint about that action. It was justifiable on both economic and humanitarian grounds. Here is the unusual aspect of that arrangement.

The federal government asked the province of Nova Scotia to transfer and convey to this Crown corporation, Devco, the Cape Breton coalfields lying under coastal waters off the coast of Nova Scotia; that is the submarine lands. The obvious inference is that in respect of the submarine coal resources, the Government of Canada believed that ownership rested with the province of Nova Scotia.

Let us look at Bill C-48. First, it applies to the Canada lands and it contains a definition of those lands. It says that Canada lands include those submarine areas adjacent to the coast of Canada.

My point is, when the federal government was dealing with the coal resources that lie in the submarine lands off the coast of Nova Scotia, it made no claim to ownership. But when it was discovered that those same lands off the coast of Nova Scotia and, indeed, off the coast of Newfoundland and other coastal provinces, might contain petroleum resources, then the federal government took a real interest. As I said, its concern and objective is to gain control of these energy resources.

That is my point. For a century the federal government had no wish to involve itself in Nova Scotia submarine lands, either in relation to coal or petroleum. But, in the 1970s the global picture changed and the federal government has changed its attitude. Its motive and intent is to capture the resource industry, and the government has a number of techniques to accomplish this end. One of the techniques it will use to reach this goal is, in the case of the submarine lands, its claim of ownership. The same applies to northern lands. Again, the federal government is claiming ownership without regard to the Northwest Territories' and Yukon's authority. In the case of Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, the federal government is using its taxation and trading powers to gain control.

• (2020)

I have underlined the need to examine Bill C-48 in the context of the National Energy Program. I believe I have also demonstrated that the principal motive and intention in establishing the National Energy Program is to gain control of the revenue from energy resources, especially oil and gas. There is no doubt that the government, which controls the wealth of the nation, exercises the real power in this country. The federal government is unwilling to share that power, and this is the real problem in Canada today—the failure of the government of Canada to deal fairly and properly with the provincial governments.

Mr. Nielsen: They share it with the NDP.

Mr. Crosby: My colleague for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) says it wants to share it with the NDP. I say to the hon. member for Yukon that there is no doubt that many of them support the federal government in this action. They want the federal government to control the wealth of this nation. My friends in the NDP would certainly stand up to be counted on that issue. They want to help the federal government gain control over natural resources and to gain power in many other areas.

An hon. Member: Who do you want to control it, someone outside the country?

Mr. Crosby: I want the control in this country to vest in a proper balance between the federal government and provincial governments. That is the basis of our confederation. That is what happened in 1867. The provincial governments got together to form one Canada. Under that arrangement, they gave powers to the Government of Canada. Those powers are very clearly outlined in the British North America Act, as are the powers and authorities of the provincial governments.

Unfortunately, my friends to the left probably do not know what that distribution of power is. If they do know, they do not care because after 100 years of confederation they want to throw out all the rules and start over again. That would be fine, Mr. Speaker, if you had the consent and concurrence of the people of Canada, but that does not occur simply by presenting a bill to the House and having it enacted with the force of a pre-ordained majority, with the help of a rump opposition.

We have different principles in this party. We believe in fair play between the federal authority and the provincial authority. We believe that is the basis of confederation and that is the only way to accomplish such a change. We saw in Canada a demonstration of that this very month. We saw a demonstration of what happens when the governments across Canada sit down and bargain fairly. They can achieve an agreement. They achieved an agreement which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said time and time again in the House could not be achieved—the very agreement that the leader of the NDP said could not be achieved. It has been achieved. The government is not telling us the truth. They do not know the situation.

We can achieve an agreement just as easily on natural resources by sitting down at a conference table with the Prime Minister of Canada acting in a fair and proper manner with the provincial authorities. There is no need to be here fracturing a piece of legislation called the Canada oil and gas act. We can come to an agreement on provisions that are appropriate, proper and fair to all governments in Canada and to all Canadians. It is the Government of Canada led by the Prime Minister that does not want to achieve agreement. It is not the people of Canada and it is not the provinces which do not see the good sense of coming to an agreement on these things. They have proved that. The government said it could not be done, but it was done and let us put that to rest right here and now. Agreement can be reached if the approach at the bargaining table is fair and honest. If the NDP have learned nothing from the constitutional process, I hope they have at least learned that. Do not blindly back the Prime Minister and his government in their attempts to force their will on the Canadian people. Examine, in an honest way, what they are doing and stand up for the people of Canada who want to see an agreement achieved by the appropriate democratic and parliamentary process.

If my friends to the left need any more lectures, I will be glad to give them, but I am here to talk about the Canada oil and gas act as contained in Bill C-48.

The National Energy Program sets out certain goals, some of which have already been dealt with by some members but they bear repeating. The three goals set out in the National Energy Program under the signature and imprimatur, as we say, of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) are these: Canadians want to seize control of their own energy future through security of supply and ultimate independence from the world oil market.

Mr. Nielsen: Hear no evil, see no evil, speak no evil.

Mr. Crosby: That is right. They on the other side certainly do not see anything. I do not know what they hear.

The first goal of the National Energy Program as outlined in the document is the securing of energy supplies. I assume that the minister meant self-sufficiency in energy for Canada and Canadians. Who could quarrel with that goal?

The second goal outlined in the National Energy Program is that Canadians will be given the real opportunity to participate in the energy industry in general and the petroleum industry in particular. I will have a lot to say about Canadians participating in the energy industry in general and the petroleum industry in particular in accordance with the plan promulgated by the Government of Canada.

The third goal is that a petroleum pricing and revenue sharing regime that recognizes the requirement of fairness to all Canadians, no matter where they live, must be established. I can dispose of the third goal quickly. We all know that is the blended price, the made-in-Canada price that we talked about in the election campaign. The government is going to bring everything together and charge a price that is fair to all Canadians. Well, my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) has put that issue to rest for me. He indicated that the minister in charge of fitness and amateur sport, also dubbed Secretary of State (Mr. Regan), outlined for the public what the price was to be. Not only was he foolish enough to say it, he put it in a document which he then circulated to the people of Halifax. He said the price for gas in the city of Halifax in 1981 would be $1.36 a gallon. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is only November 9, and I defy you to go anywhere in the city of Halifax or in the province of Nova Scotia and buy a gallon of gas for under $1.80.

Mr. Paproski: Shame on Regan.

Mr. Crosby: I think that is the end of the third goal of the National Energy Program. They have already lost that one, and I think it is behind us. I do not think anyone believes there is anything about a fair petroleum pricing policy in this document. Revenue sharing is another matter and I will deal with that.

Those are the three goals of the National Energy Program. Perhaps we should review the energy situation in Canada and assess the goals of the National Energy Program in these other areas which are not yet abandoned, and deal with it on that basis.

As I understand it, Canadians consume about 1.8 million barrels of oil per day. This results in a shortfall of approximately 400,000 barrels a day. That means 400,000 barrels of oil have to be imported into Canada on a daily basis to supply the needs of Canadians. I am familiar with that statistic because I live on the east coast which does not have access to Canadian oil supplies, and we Canadians who live on the east coast are the consumers of the 400,000 barrels of oil per day. We are very thankful to all Canadians that they subsidize the purchase of that foreign oil at the rate of 400,000 barrels a day because that oil today costs about $44 Canadian per barrel, and that would be an absolutely disastrous burden on the residents of the maritime provinces and Newfoundland and that part of Quebec which does not have access to Canadian oil. At current rates we are talking about an expenditure of some $4 billion a year to pay for that supply of offshore imported oil. Of course, as we all know, the beneficiaries are foreign states and nations. Those funds leave Canada and never come back, so when we are talking about energy self-sufficiency and about goals for a national energy program, let us remember that this very day about $10 million is leaving Canada to purchase foreign oil.

● (2030)

I do not think anyone has to reflect on that problem for very long to realize that something has to be done about that right away. An obvious goal of any energy program for Canada, whether it is stated in the document or not, must be to create and develop projects which will eliminate the need for imported foreign oil. Those projects must take place in Canada and preferably be projects which benefit Canadian industry.

What are some of the projects? Offshore exploration is going on off the east coast of Canada. Particularly in the case of Newfoundland there is a high level of activity which has already indicated producing wells and has given indications of very substantial oil supplies for the future. However, it is expensive, and we must encourage people in the private sector who are willing to take on projects like offshore exploration, particularly in waters which are iceberg infested, deep and create a great many problems in the course of drilling and development.

The high Arctic is a second area of activity. I am sure my colleague, the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) is interested in those projects. Again the development is fraught with difficulties and high costs. Added to that is the fact that development is very uncertain. In many cases the companies are carrying out new techniques in attempting to develop Arctic oil and gas, and they are up against very difficult obstacles. We have to have a national energy program which will encourage that kind of development.

A third major project area in which I have a particular interest is the Alberta tar sands. I had occasion to visit Alberta and to examine some of those projects, particularly in Fort McMurray but also in Cold Lake, and I was very much impressed with the work being carried on there by the private sector. Millions of dollars are being invested. In some cases the projects have been brought to completion and are producing vast quantities of oil—100,000 barrels a day in one project—and even we on the east coast have a great interest in seeing those projects go forward successfully because they will, in combination with offshore exploration and Arctic exploration, develop the self-sufficiency which is required for all Canadians.

The purpose and the ultimate goal of a national energy program must be to produce energy self-sufficiency for Canada and for all Canadians, and we ought not to take into consideration regional concerns only because in this goal of energy self-sufficiency we must recognize that there is a national interest. Whether there is a need for a program of Canadianization as described in the National Energy program, whether there is a need to take over assets and take them away from the private sector—

Mr. Nielsen: Nationalization.

Mr. Crosby: —and whether there is a need to nationalize the petroleum industry and the energy industry is another question, and I will not hesitate to give the answer to that question. It is not necessary.

I want to review in greater detail the objectionable features of Bill C-48 from the particular perspective of Nova Scotia. Under Bill C-48, as I have indicated, Canada lands are defined as including the submarine lands off the east coast and off the west coast. Let me review very briefly the history of the claims to the submarine lands on both coasts. In the case of British Columbia it was decided some time ago by the Supreme Court of Canada—as I recall, in 1968—that the federal authority owned the lands off the coast of British Columbia. That Supreme Court decision was not entirely definitive, and I understand the government of British Columbia even today makes claims for some of the submarine lands off the coast of British Columbia, particularly the lands within its territorial waters, as they are called.

However, in the case of Nova Scotia, and I can include the province of Newfoundland as well, there has been no such court decision, so it is open to the province of Nova Scotia to make a claim to the submarine lands. That claim has been made and is based on historical fact and precedent. By a letter dated May 12, 1981, in relation to Bill C-48, the Premier of Nova Scotia informed the Prime Minister of Canada in no uncertain terms that the province did claim the submarine lands which would otherwise be included in the definition of Canada lands contained in Bill C-48. The premier said in his letter that the government of Nova Scotia claims management jurisdiction of all mineral resource wealth in the seabed in the area to which the Government of Canada in Bill C-48 is making claim. The claim is based, as I said, on historical fact and precedent, but the premier pointed out in his letter that Section 109 of the British North America Act is clear on the point. For the record, that section states:

> All lands, mines, minerals, and royalties belonging to the several provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick at the Union, and all sums then due or payable for such lands, mines, minerals or royalties, shall belong to the several provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in which the same are situated or arise—

The provisions of Section 109 of the British North America Act simply carried beyond the date of confederation in 1867 whatever claims the province of Nova Scotia had to territorial lands. I will not put on the record of this House again the historical basis of that claim, but I will review it briefly by saying that prior to confederation in 1867 Nova Scotia had jurisdiction and ownership of the offshore by virtue of the Royal Charter of King James which was granted to Sir William Alexander and which was dated September 10, 1621.

Subsequent events, not the least of which was the control, management and supervision of the Cape Breton coal mines which are contained in the submarine lands off the coast of Nova Scotia, all indicate continuance of that claim to the present time. Indeed, the province of Nova Scotia has enacted a petroleum resources act which is similar in some respects, although not in the most onerous and disruptive respects, to the provisions of Bill C-48. In short, the province of Nova Scotia claims to own the very lands to which Bill C-48 refers.

Now the conflict is created. I will not speak of Newfoundland. I will limit my statements to reference to the province of Nova Scotia. A conflict of ownership and control has been created, and what does that conflict do to the exploration of the resources in offshore areas? It creates grave doubts and uncertainty in the minds of the companies and operators who seek to explore and develop these resources. Time and time again representatives of the companies which are carrying out resource exploration off the coast have indicated that this uncertainty has delayed developments, has caused decisions to be made which have resulted in cutbacks on the amounts expended for exploration, and has given rise to other difficulties. The effect of the continuation of this conflict means a retardation of exploration activities on the east coast.

● (2040)

I asked in the House whether the Prime Minister was going to do anything to resolve this conflict. He immediately responded that the matter could go to court. There are several ways of resolving the conflict. The least appropriate of these is a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada or any other court.

Having seen the result of the reference of the constitutional proposal, I must say I have a little more faith in that process and procedure than I had before. More important, I have had less faith in the judgment of the law officers of the Crown who are advising the Prime Minister and his cabinet with respect to the federal claim to offshore resources.

We have seen in the last few years two constitutional cases which indicated that the law officers of the Crown were mistaken; in one case they were in grave error. We had before the House a bill to revise and change the structure and status of the Senate. As we all know, that bill was struck down by the Supreme Court of Canada as being beyond the powers of the Parliament of Canada. We now have several reasons to doubt the legal opinion upon which the government is acting. Maybe one should approach the courts, particularly the Supreme Court of Canada, with a little more faith in their ability to right these obvious wrongs.

I have already said to the members of the NDP, who are now clearing the Chamber, that the way to resolve disputes is fair and proper negotiation. I have already said that the offshore resource dispute can be easily resolved in this manner. Let us hope that the Prime Minister has learned from his experience in the last two weeks and that he will sit down with the provinces of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland to work out an agreement with respect to offshore resources so that those interested can go on with the business of exploring and developing the natural resources which lie off the coast.

This is a matter of grave concern to all residents of Nova Scotia, and I suspect of Newfoundland and the Atlantic area.

Mr. Nielsen: And the north.

Mr. Crosby: And the north as well. I will confine my comments to the province of Nova Scotia. Our hope for the future, for development, for equality among the provinces and regions of Canada lies in resources in our submarine lands. To lose those resources to a greedy Government of Canada without appropriate compensation will take from the people of Nova Scotia their opportunity for equality.

I already addressed some remarks to the matter of oil pricing and that goal of the National Energy Program. We have seen the effect of the oil pricing policy on the prices of consumer gasoline and home-heating oil. We know it is a disaster. It does not have any offsetting factors like an energy tax credit or anything of that nature. The Government of Canada has just thrown the effect of its pricing policy in the laps of consumers and home owners.

There is another aspect to the pricing policy. That involves revenue sharing. The unfortunate part of the very high retail prices is that at a time when consumers and home owners are paying tremendous prices for gas and home heating oil, the companies and operators who seek to explore and develop Canada's petroleum resources are not receiving a sufficient return to enable them to carry out the projects which I have already indicated we need.

What are those projects? In his very valuable pamphlet called "Energy and Industry" Barry Beale indicates that industrial procedures arising from petroleum development over the next decade should total $210 billion. He says this about these projects:

> Of the $210 billion anticipated to be invested in the various energy sectors, roughly 37 per cent will be spent on energy supply programs that are relatively new to the Canadian experience and, in many cases, new to the global experience. Oil sands, heavy oil, and frontier oil and gas exploration and development in hostile environments are cases in point in which Canadian enterprises are in the forefront of global activity. These areas require an advanced and evolving technology to overcome technical limitations to their exploitation. Manufacturing opportunities will be defined over the next decade by the extent and speed with which these technical limitations are overcome and by the resolve that energy proponents bring to exploiting the resource. This in turn relies on the economic and political environment within which these investments must take place.

That says it all. We have to rely on the economic and political environment in order to have these essential projects go forward. There are benefits for all aspects of Canadian industry in these projects. As I found out, this is not confined to Fort McMurray, Cold Lake, Alberta, the high Arctic or the coast off Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. All Canadians can share in these developments, particularly the manufacturing sector.

We all have a very great interest in a fair revenue-sharing policy as a result of which these projects will be carried out. The other side of the coin, that is, that these projects will not be carried out, will mean that for the next decade and even more we will be dependent on foreign nations for our energy supplies.

I want to speak very briefly about the involvement of Petro-Canada in the Canada Oil and Gas Act, in particular dealing with the provisions under which Petro-Canada can opt in to energy developments. I do not know the details of the arrangements among the oil operators. I know they are very complex and complicated. Those arrangements are the basis for the financing of their projects. It may well be you can enact a provision which will allow another party to come in at a late date and become involved in the project.

To say the least, this is a matter of real concern to energy operators. They do not know what effect this will have, whether it will destroy their ability to gain financing and so on. To say the least, the government has the responsibility of ensuring that the effect of these opting in provisions that benefit Petro-Canada will not have an adverse effect on Canadian energy development. So far we have heard far and wide that that is exactly what these provisions will provide. They will retard energy exploration and development in Canada.

Just a little aside on the matter of Petro-Canada. We do not always agree with the government side. If there is to be some real benefit to Canadians arising from the establishment and operation of Petro-Canada, all of us would be quite willing to make that admission. However, we have to wait and see.

Right this day Petro-Canada is engaged in spreading its operation across Canada. Just a few weeks ago in Halifax we had a great unveiling. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) was not there, but some of his Liberal colleagues were there for the great unveiling. Down came the curtain and up came the Petro-Canada sign.

That is not very amusing. What is amusing is that a few days later a certain service station operator registered the public complaint that he was forced by Petro-Canada to purchase its products. When he had been a dealer for Canadian Petrofina, he was allowed to have other tires and commodities on his premises. He had occasion to go before reporters and other media representatives to tell them that a terrible thing was happening. "Petro-Canada is making me purchase their products. They are saying that I cannot have any other products in my station." The interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, is that that complainer was my Liberal opponent in the last federal election.

• (2050)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: How do you like that? The great defender of Petro-Canada is now saying on stage and elsewhere, "What is this company doing to the small-business men?"

An hon. Member: He changed his mind.

Mr. Crosby: He changed his mind. That is right. There will be many more people changing their minds when Petro-Canada stretches across this nation and starts overcharging on credit cards and will not change your tires when you get a puncture in them. There will be a lot of flack about Petro-Canada. Do not worry about that. I hope it all comes home to sit on your doorstep, Mr. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc). I hope you get it all.

There are two important areas I should like to cover, but my time is running out. One is international relations. The Canadian National Energy Program and the Canada oil and gas act are hurting our relations with our great neighbour, the United States. The NDP might be interested in that. They might want to disrupt our neighbour. They might want to deal with El Salvador and Cuba and so on. But I would rather have a good relationship with the United States of America. I might be alone in wanting that, but that is my position. You can take Cuba, Poland and Hungary. They are all having their difficulties. I say, let us not disrupt our relationship with the United States.

The Canada oil and gas act protects the environment. It has a provision on the environment. We all know about environmental funds in Nova Scotia. We have a $60 million marine environmental fund which the government cut off. It said that $60 million was enough. I will tell the hon. members that $60 million will not take care of half of an oil spill.

I want to end on this note, Mr. Speaker. The Canada oil and gas act and the National Energy Program are like anything else. There has to be a balance based on common sense and good judgment. What government and the private sector have to achieve is a sensible balance. That is not occurring in the Canada oil and gas act and in the National Energy Program, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I must say that there has been so much wind blowing from my right that I have got myself a cold tonight. I ask my colleagues to bear with me.

I am very happy tonight to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-48, the Canada oil and gas act. I must say that I am not very happy at the fact that this is the last chance I will have to speak to the bill. Although we have already voted on the amendments to Bill C-48 that some progressive members had attempted—all of them have been voted down, I might say—there are a number of things that nevertheless must be said. I am certainly looking forward to talking about them in the next few minutes.

Before going into that, however, in recognition of my Tory friends I should like to comment on that devastating strike we saw in Canada a little while back that literally brought the economy of Canada to its knees. It is a strike the effect of which we will all feel for a considerable period into the future. Of course, I am talking about the strike of the oil companies, of capital, that pulled some very sophisticated techniques out of the hat, and their inability to force the federal government to backtrack on the national energy policy. We saw the orchestrated exit of oil rigs crossing the 49th parallel, and we saw the threats to Canada or the blackmail of Canada that the heavy oil projects would be closed down, that the tar sands operation would be shut down. We heard the threats that they will not move into the frontier lands and not continue with the offshore exploration because this government's policy is too heavyhanded.

With the voices to my right helping them in their orchestration and the assistance of their Tory colleagues from Alberta, and even of some American congressmen and senators, they were able to convince the federal government that they needed to back off.

One group that was not taken in by the rhetoric and the scare tactics of the multinational oil companies was this group of members in this corner of the House, namely, the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: The unfortunate thing about Bill C-48 is that it gives the impression that this is a major step toward Canadianization of our oil and gas industry.

Mr. Nielsen: Confiscation.

Mr. Riis: Of course, it is put together by some of the best myth makers in Canada, and I am referring here to the Liberal Party of Canada, who are able to convince and dupe the Canadian public into actually believing that this is a major step forward in bringing some rationale and sense to the oil and gas industry of Canada.

I think it is important, when we consider Bill C-48, that we recognize what resource we are actually speaking about. We have heard a great deal about the national energy policy. We have heard a great deal of rhetoric about the industrial strategy needed for Canada. We have heard a great deal about reforming the textile industry, making necessary changes to the automobile industry, looking into the forest industry and the necessary changes that are required there. We know about the various resources that need to be developed. We have talked about copper, lead and the uranium industry in Canada. We include in that same group the oil and gas industries as resources that need to be strategized, manipulated, nurtured and encouraged through the national energy policy.

I think it is important that we recognize that we are talking about a very strategic resource. It is not the copper, uranium, lead, or textile industry, it is not the auto industry or the forest industry; it is the most strategic resource in our western culture. Our western way of life is literally dependent upon this particular resource. Therefore, we in the NDP feel that it should receive very special attention, certainly more special attention than we have seen given to it in the NEP, as translated in Bill C-48.

Let us look at some of the fundamental issues we are dealing with, Mr. Speaker. We are dealing here with a certain frontier mentality that is nothing new to Canada. In many respects, it has built this country ever since the turn of the century, particularly in western Canada. We also recognize, when we see the frontier mentality at work, that we see a very cruel mentality, a mentality that is insensitive to people and to places. I need not remind any of the hon. members from the mining frontiers of British Columbia of what was done to the landscape there, of what the fur and timber frontiers did to the west coast and to the Indian people. We are again repeating the same kind of approach.

Mr. Waddell: Dome Petroleum.

Mr. Riis: We are moving into the north.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the hon. member permit me a question on a point of order?

Mr. Riis: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) indicated he would accept a question.

Mr. Riis: I will accept a question toward the end of my deliberations, Mr. Speaker. I will be glad to, especially from the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Nielsen: The frontier.

Mr. Riis: From the frontier. After decades of watching the frontiers of different elements move across our landscape and the inevitable devastation that followed them, surely we have learned enough not to repeat the same process north of 60.

I do not think there is any question that what Bill C-48 does is primarily to say to the oil industry, you have carte blanche to move into this area, despite their lack of sensitivity to the very strategic and sensitive ecology north of 60 and their total lack of any concern for native people and for northerners generally.

Mr. Nielsen: Have you been there?

Mr. Riis: Of course I have been there. I have been to the Arctic and to the north many times. I have seen what the exploration crews are doing to the Arctic communities and what the exploration crews are doing to the landscape in our Arctic, where they leave their mark not for ten years, not for a decade or two, but perhaps for generations—

Mr. Nielsen: How long were you there?

Mr. Riis: —where the same landscape was disrupted by explorers many decades ago. Those marks are left on that very sensitive landscape.

We felt in the NDP that if we were to introduce Bill C-48, which refers specifically to the areas north of 60 and offshore, we should consult with the government of the north and certainly consult with the native peoples of the north. We put that proposal forward in committee and asked our Tory colleagues to support us. Did they support us? No, they did not. Did our Liberal colleagues support us in committee? No, they did not. They refused to hold hearings in the part of the country that was obviously going to be adversely affected by the clauses in Bill C-48.

• (2100)

When we speak of exploring for oil and gas in the Arctic areas, the offshore and northern areas, another fundamental question is who should do it. Should it be the foreign controlled oil companies that by and large carry out this exploration, or should it be Canadian companies owned and controlled by the people of Canada? Certain elements in this House would suggest, as they have tonight, that foreign enterprise should carry out northern exploration. We in the NDP feel very strongly that Canadian enterprise should be the moving force in the north and that it should be publicly owned wherever feasible.

Another question is who will benefit from Bill C-48. Will the northern people benefit? We should ask the families attempting to raise young children in some of the exploration areas of the north about that and see how fascinated they are with this bill. Perhaps we should ask some of the ecologically conscious people who are concerned about what this bill will do to the environment of the north.

Who will this bill assist? With foreign enterprise involved as the major decision makers, once again it will be southerners who will take advantage of the frontier areas for those from even farther south, in the head offices of Houston, Dallas and New York.

As the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) made clear, the energy policy is made possible through giveaways by the federal government to the major oil companies. This is an absolute giveaway. I was surprised to hear member after member of the Progressive Conservative Party stand up in the House and rail about the necessity of free enterprise in the frontier areas without mentioning that out of every dollar spent on exploration in northern Canada, not ten cents, not 25, 50 75 or 90 cents but 93 cents, come from the people of Canada. How much do the oil companies put up? They manage to put up about seven cents on the dollar for exploration. Yet the Progressive Conservatives have the courage to speak about free enterprise. Where is the free enterprise in that particular equation?

We in the NDP are very concerned about the small business community in Canada because we hear its death knell being sounded today. Bill C-48 is one more nail in the coffin of small business in this country. When we talk about small business, we are talking about something in the neighbourhood of 940,000 firms which provide four out of every ten jobs in Canada outside of the public sector. We are talking about the only sector of our economy that is actually creating new jobs.

We know what big business is doing—it is merging, buying out, expanding its monopolies. Small business is where the job-creation programs occur. It is where research and development is carried through to production. It is where the new, innovative and creative ideas in manufacturing occur.

The government has missed a golden opportunity with Bill C-48 to provide a clear signal to the small businessmen of Canada that it recognizes their role, that it wants to encourage them, to support their efforts by building in to the program a very sophisticated, sound and strong "buy Canada" procurement policy. Why not "buy Canada" when it comes to the megaprojects planned for our country? Why not buy goods and services from Canadians rather than foreigners wherever possible?

I do not want to suggest for a moment that the purchasing agents of multinational oil companies are ogres or are insensitive. After all, these are usually people from Dallas and Houston who have come up to Calgary and Edmonton and farther north to Inuvik, Aklavik, and Tuktoyaktuk to do business. They need equipment, and their natural inclination is to contact their friends and colleagues in Houston and Chicago when they want to buy. It is the old boy system where you help out your friends.

When foreigners are making the decisions about procurement in Canada, it is not surprising that they look to their friends in the United States and to Germany and to Japan. We in the NDP ask why that should not be changed and a "buy Canada" policy made part of Bill C-48 to require that, whenever possible, goods and services be purchased from Canadian suppliers.

Incredible sums of money will be involved in servicing equipment in the north. In the next decade $210 billion will be spent on developing northern Canada.

Mr. Deans: Most of it outside the country.

Mr. Riis: Most of it outside the country, as my colleague says. The Royal Bank of Canada estimates that in the next 20 years in excess of $1 trillion will be spent developing megaprojects and exploring Canada lands. The unfortunate thing is that most of that $1 trillion will go to foreign suppliers. But that need not be the case, Mr. Speaker. We know that 85 per cent of the cost of exploration could come from Canadian sources. We also know that 90 per cent of all equipment for refineries could come from Canadian manufacturers, although at the moment only 30 per cent comes from Canadian manufacturers.

Canada is recognized as being quite sophisticated in the areas of training and education. We probably have one of the best educated populations in the world, yet most of the people in the engineering consortiums responsible for the engineering on the megaprojects come from San Francisco, Los Angeles, Detroit or Chicago. Surely the government has an obligation to provide the leadership necessary to pull together our own engineering expertise in order to develop our own resources?

Most of the labour used on our pipeline construction comes from Canada, but most of the equipment does not. About 60 per cent of the equipment used on Canadian pipelines is imported from the United States and other countries. Virtually all of this equipment could be manufactured and supplied in Canada, Mr. Speaker. Much of the skilled labour that will be required to develop Canada lands will have to be imported because the Liberal government did not plan to develop the expertise required for these projects.

The opposition parties put a lot of work into amendments to Bill C-48, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the government did accept eight changes. It changed the bill in eight ways, but then we must ask who benefited from those changes. You can bet it was not the native people of northern Canada, it was not the governments of northern Canada it was not the northern environment and it was not the small businesses in northern or southern Canada; predictably, the large corporations benefited. Changes were made for their back-in clauses, royalties were reduced and tax-escape clauses were introduced. All the changes were to help the large corporations, mainly foreign corporations operating in Canada's north. Of course, when one thinks about it, what could one expect from a government that refused even to go into the north and talk to those people who were to be directly affected by this legislation?

• (2110)

One of the myths which is perpetuated in this House almost every time someone from the Tory party stands up to speak is the extent to which we need this foreign investment, that it is absolutely mandatory for foreign companies to become involved in our oil industry. The surprising thing is that Canada is unique in the world. Canada is one of the only oil producing countries in the world that has not taken bold steps to control and own its petroleum industry. We are unique. We are a world leader. We have sold out more than any other country in the world. One can take a look around. Great Britain has taken a major step with its British National Oil Corporation. This corporation has first claim on 51 per cent of the share of the oil production off Great Britain's coast. Its purchase is negotiated at market prices. The BNOC may offer participation to joint venture partners, including foreign-owned firms, but it retains control of all projects. I think it is important, as my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, indicated, that it may change control, not only ownership, but certainly control must be the important thing.

Mr. Crosby: Sell it all.

Mr. Riis: Norway now has new gas finds off its north coast and substantial deposits off its western and southern coasts. In Norway, Statoil, the government oil company, can take up to a 70 per cent interest in any block of land that it does not already hold. Statoil takes this interest after a find but before development, and makes no payment at all for past exploration expenditures. Yet we hear a howling and a yowling from the Tories, particularly, saying that this particular Bill C-48 is an expropriation bill. It takes from the oil companies. Takes what from the oil companies? Does it take the natural gas and oil from the oil companies? I think it begs the question: who is it that owns that oil and gas now? Of course it is the people of Canada who own that oil and gas. We are simply saying that it is time that we developed these resources ourselves and that the benefits stayed in this country.

What about Australia? Certainly Australia is recognized as being one of the free enterprise countries of the world, but foreign companies are allowed to explore there. However, only Australian and naturalized foreign investors are allowed to produce energy from the resources, even in Australia. What about Mexico? We import oil from Mexico. Mexico took care of its situation there many, many years ago, back in 1939, and has nationalized its oil company.

Yes, we are a leader. We have sold out this strategic resource more than any other producing country in the world. We in the New Democratic Party are not very pleased at that prospect, and we feel it is time that major steps were taken to obtain control once again over that particular resource.

Let us go back to the myth that foreign oil companies are required to bring capital into this country. I think that we cannot overstate it. My colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, has mentioned many, many times that the oil industry policy in Canada results in a net export of capital out of Canada. Our oil industries are net capital exporters. They do not bring money into the country, in spite of all the glossy ads that we see taken out in our national newspapers, again to justify what no other country producing oil and natural gas has accepted. Net capital outflows between 1975 and 1979, the last years for which we have statistics, amounted to $2.1 billion. If one were to add the dividends and interest payments that also left the country during that same four-year period, we would find that a total of $3.7 billion flowed out of Canada, a net export of capital of $3.7 billion.

Surely that should put to rest some of the arguments that we cannot do it ourselves and that we depend upon foreign investor in this particular sector. I will be the first one to say that we ought to welcome foreign investors and expertise of any kind. But surely it is time that Canada took major steps to ensure that this strategic resource is understood and controlled by Canada.

It is a sad day when people ask us, "How much natural gas do we really have left? How much oil do we really have?" It is sad when we have to respond that we do not know because we do not control it. The oil companies know how much natural gas and oil they have under their leases, and they are not telling each other. They are certainly not telling the rest of Canada. I think it is a sad day when such a strategic resource is controlled in a fragmented way by foreign capital.

Another myth, of course, is that the national energy policy is resulting in a major Canadianization of our industry, a major step toward Canadianization. I think it is important that we continue to emphasize that 65 per cent of our industry remains foreign controlled. It is something that, again, we in this party simply will not accept, and we will keep fighting until that percentage point is considerably reduced.

Another myth we keep hearing about is that the PetroCan Company of Canada is becoming too powerful. Even with Petrofina acquisitions, PetroCan ranks as Canada's eighth largest oil producer and Canada's third largest natural gas producer. Up to this point, we were quite proud of that. Unlike our Tory friends, we feel proud, for example, when we drive into our PetroCan stations.

I must say that when I go into the various stations around my riding and ask the operators how they are doing, they are very pleased. Their business is up and growing. When one goes into a PetroCan station, one is investing in one's own company. It is not a foreign oil company that one is serving. It seems to me that this will be a challenge for Petro-Canada in the future. We must be different from the others. Petro-Canada must be accountable to the people of Canada. Petro-Canada must operate in a very businesslike manner. We must be very careful, as my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, has indicated, that it is not run by Liberal hacks, as we see all too often when it comes to Crown corporations, and that it does not start the corporate jetsetting about the country typical of so many of the private oil companies.

Here is an opportunity for Canada, endorsed by the people of Canada, to develop new techniques and new energy fields, to use Petro-Canada as an opportunity to move into the use of methane gas and hydrogen, and geothermal energy. It should be more than simply an oil and gas company, because I do not think there is anyone in this chamber who would say that oil and gas as a critical, strategic resource will be around much longer. The price will simply not be there. We have to move into other areas. We have to be innovative and take some real initiative to move into the development of new energy technologies. Surely, Petro-Canada provides us with that ready vehicle to move into wind energy, methane gas, hydrogen, geothermal energy, and on and on, and to take that initiative. We should see it as an energy company, not simply as an oil and gas company.

In closing, I would like to say that we in the New Democratic Party are disappointed that the progressive amendments which we put forward were not considered and given a fair hearing. We will continue to struggle to ensure that the next time a bill like Bill C-48 comes before us, it will mean something, and it will take into consideration the sensitivity of the northern and other environments, and that it will be sensitive to the people who will be directly influenced by the bill, such as the Inuit, Indians, Métis, and governments of northern Canada. It is time that the government became more sensitive along all these lines, but the fact that it is not is not surprising. Why should it become sensitive now? This government has shown an incredible insensitivity to westerners. Look at the recent decisions on VIA Rail. One could say it has an insensitivity to easterners, as well. It has an insensitivity when it comes to supporting economic infrastructure in western Canada. It is not surprising that once again through Bill C-48 the Liberal government has shown an insensitivity to the people and to the environment of northern Canada.

• (2120)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I had asked the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) if he would permit a question provided his allotted time had not expired. If it has, I would ask for the consent of the House. Would the hon. member permit that question now?

Mr. Riis: Yes.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member spoke of the frontier in his speech. He knows of the aspirations of Yukoners and those in the Northwest Territories who strive so mightily toward provincial status. Without the revenues derived from resource development, this is not achievable. I think even the hon. member will recognize that. Will the hon. member say whether his party, in view of the fact that we in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories were not consulted whatever with respect to the provisions of Bill C-48, agrees with us that Bill C-48 should not pass at all unless resource revenue sharing arrangements are made with the governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories with a view to the achievement of provincial status of those two territories at the earliest possible moment?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I will gladly respond to that very thoughtful question. First, I would remind the hon. member that in committee we were very anxious to consult the people of the Yukon.

Mr. Deans: Who stopped us?

Mr. Riis: We felt that it was absolutely necessary to consult not only with the territorial government in the Yukon but with the native people, as well as other people from the Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: They all came.

Mr. Riis: When we asked to have that supported in committee, the Tories did not give us that support, if I recall correctly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: That is absolutely true.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: I thought you asked a question. No one told you how to answer your question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I recognize that the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) may wish to engage in a debate or raise a point of order, but it would only be fair for me to allow the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) to continue his comments before I entertain a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If the hon. member is raising a point of order, I have no choice but to recognize him, and I will.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, a member is entitled to rise on a point of order at any time, of which I am sure you are aware, to correct a statement that has been made by an hon. member.

Mr. Deans: No, that is debate. He is not entitled to do that at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: What the hon. member said is not true.

Mr. Deans: Of course it is.

Mr. Nielsen: And he knows it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I would ask the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) to permit the Chair to speak.

Mr. Deans: I will be delighted to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The first issue I have to deal with is that if an hon. member rises on a point of order, I must and I will recognize him. The second issue is of a minor nature relating to microphones and lights on members' desks. I see that may be at issue, and I am prepared to deal with that if it is necessary. The third issue is that the hon. member for Yukon apparently has a disagreement with another hon. member. That is not a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: A correction is.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to mislead the House intentionally. At first the Tories endorsed the concept that it would be a useful idea to travel and to meet the people in the north, both in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon. However, when the government refused to do that, we wanted to continue the debate to force the government to move in that direction. But the Tories voted with the Liberals to close off that debate. It was at that point that I determined that perhaps the Tories had decided they were not prepared to travel in the north.

Second, I will respond to the question posed by the hon. member concerning the status of the Yukon government and the concern that we would have for frontier development. I am concerned about the insensitivity to people and to the land in the frontier areas. This insensitivity was demonstrated during the gold rushes in the Yukon. It has been demonstrated in any frontier movement anywhere in the world. That does not necessarily have to occur. There are exceptions to that rule. It is that sensitivity that we in this party call for. When it comes to territorial government, we are certainly supportive of it.

Mr. Nielsen: What about provincial status?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on third reading of Bill C-48. Some months ago we had second reading. As members of the opposition, we raised quite a number of points upon which we were opposed in principle. We identified these issues, such as the confiscation provisions, the ministerial discretion provisions and those types of provisions enabling a minister and a bureaucracy in Ottawa to direct where a well is to be drilled. They might be good people, but may not have the technical skills or the expertise and, because of some political consideration, may direct a company to drill in spot A rather than in spot B, whereas the well should be drilled based on seismic evidence.

We pointed out that the amount of land given to Petro-Canada under the principle of the bill would be grossly excessive, it being 135 million acres. We raised the issue of the treatment of the Yukoners as a people and the people in the Northwest Territories and their aspirations toward provincial status.

Those of us who live in the west, and particularly those of us who come from Alberta, know of the incredible battles that had to be fought before we achieved ownership of our resources. Indeed, it took us 25 years to achieve that end. Do hon. members opposite realize that it was 1930 when we finally achieved ownership? A Liberal provincial government fought from 1905 to 1921 for this right, but it was unsuccessful and it was turfed out of office by the people. The UFA party in 1924 actually debated a resolution to separate from Canada. That is how deeply westerners felt about the issue. The resolution was defeated, but Alberta was successful within six years after that and achieved ownership of resources. I believe that is why we in this party have a greater sensitivity toward the aspirations of the people in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories. That matter was raised at second reading as being one we should want to follow up at committee stage, at report stage and at third reading.

Our party has raised the question of self-sufficiency in oil. We dealt with that. As hon. members know, the bill went to committee as is the practice after second reading. I believe some 35 witnesses appeared before the committee. Many changes were proposed by expert witnesses, interested parties and the environmentalists who appeared before the committee. As a result, the government itself proposed over 100 amendments to the bill. That has to tell you something about the initial drafting of the bill, Mr. Speaker. It is somewhat like the constitutional resolution which one would have expected to have been well thought out and drafted. Instead, it required dozens and dozens of amendments by the government side to correct poor draftmanship, poorly thought out ideas and concepts. The same thing occurred with Bill C-48. I believe the government itself made over 100 changes. Our party, the official opposition and the New Democratic Party proposed many changes as well, the vast majority of which were not accepted by the government. We moved on to the report stage which we dealt with recently. We had 57 motions which were dealt with in over 30 votes. Those amendments were not amendments that were put forth for narrow partisan reasons. Many of the amendments were justifiable as a matter of logic and concern, whether it be for the sake of the environment or the definition of a spill or the type of notice we give to the native peoples of the north.

• (2130)

I am really disappointed that the government would not have some mechanism whereby those amendments could be genuinely considered and some of them accepted. The report stage is the time when ordinary Members of Parliament become involved with members on the government side in a process, whether it be in a special caucus on the government side or in full caucus, whereby amendments are genuinely considered by the ordinary members. What happens is that the minister and his bureaucracy become so committed to the bill they really lose their sense of judgment, of being able to recognize what is reasonable. I think ordinary backbenchers, if they have genuinely studied this issue and are informed, would then say: That is a reasonable amendment, why not accept it? If that were so, it would make the whole process of government at the federal level much more responsive to the genuine needs of this whole large country. I am sure we would all agree that no one person or bureaucracy can get a real grasp of this country and the intricate needs of small regions. I am disappointed the government has not done that, but I hope it will at some point in the future.

Why did the government reject these opposition amendments? Why was there no movement on confiscation, on ministerial discretion, on the amount of land that is covered and on the treatment of Yukoners? I do not know the answer. I believe the government members who come to the House should take more time and give genuine thought to the legislation the cabinet and the bureaucracy put forth. If that does not occur, then this House and our government, with a cabinet and a bureaucracy which are supposed to be responsible to the whole House and its members, are not fulfilling their function, and party loyalty is far too great a concern on the part of members.

Perhaps we should change our rules so that if a government is defeated on a motion to amend a bill, it will not reflect on the question of whether the government has to resign. This should clearly be a free vote and the government should be able to say, "Okay, members, you are not happy with that. We will take it back, work on it again, change it and carry on." It would then be only on major bills, the budget, the throne speech and some major pieces of legislation that a government would have to fall. On these ordinary bills that would not be the case. Hon. members who come from the Arctic and the Yukon really know what will work in the north, so their opinion should clearly be worth more and should be listened to.

We are now at third reading stage, and I want to make it clear that I certainly disagree with the bill and will have no hesitation at all in voting against it. I want to set forth once again the major reasons I am opposed to the Canada oil and gas act, Bill C-48.

First of all, we know the area of land we are dealing with is that vast territory off the west coast of B.C., all the northern territories and the area off the east coast to the extent the federal government has jurisdiction. It encompasses 135 million acres. That amount of land is greater than all the land in the world that Exxon is involved with.

An hon. Member: It is half of Canada.

Mr. Thacker: Is that not amazing? As the hon. member points out, it is half of Canada. That is more land than Exxon is involved with in the entire world. As the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) points out, if Petro-Canada were to bring on sufficient staff, geologists, engineers and physicists, in the same proportion as Exxon has done, in order to deal with that amount of land it would have to have a building in Calgary one square block and 854 storeys high.

An hon. Member: Don't tell them that, they will build it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: And they will populate it, too.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: And the taxpayer will pay for it.

Mr. Thacker: That shows how patently impossible this is. Therefore, we have to ask how they are going to develop that land. I suppose the answer is that the government is either going to buy out other multinational corporations, about which I will have a few words to say, or it will develop more Crown corporations from scratch to go in and develop that land. This is a great potential for Canadian companies but, unfortunately, as a result of the National Energy Program, the government has virtually forced many of the active and creative Canadian companies out of the country because there is a better deal for them elsewhere.

My second reason is the 25 per cent confiscation provision. That rule applies not only to non-Canadians but to Canadians as well. I suppose if it applied only to non-Canadians, we might say we should try it once and if we get away with it, that is fine. Very likely we would get away with it because the government has systematically built a case against the multinational oil companies, making them appear evil in the minds of the ordinary Canadian citizens. That is a misconception because multinational corporations are as much a part of this world and will be as we are ourselves. We have an incredible number of multinational corporations, including Petro-Canada.

The minister of energy wants Petro-Canada to be all over the world. It is involved in the Norwegian Sea, in the Far East and off Mexico. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wants it to be able to go to Tanzania, as he did, so he can say, "We will have our state oil company come in with $250 million." So PetroCan is a multinational corporation.

If we expect to expropriate or confiscate 25 per cent of non-Canadian companies, we should surely expect that same type of conduct to occur in other countries. What kind of example is that for the Canadian government to set for the rest of the world? When they start taking 25 per cent of Petro-Canada's assets in Tanzania, or 25 per cent of the assets in Norway, Switzerland, or wherever they might be, we will not be very happy. There is no way around it, the 25 per cent confiscation rule is just theft, pure and simple.

The rationale used is that the government gave tax deductions, super-depletion and, therefore, that it is justifiable. If that is so, then surely the government could take over all farms because they are very important and farmers have had tax deductions. All of us must surely be slaves because we have personal exemptions, marital exemptions and child exemptions. The rationale is wrong as a matter of principle. Surely we would want to take over children, because they are very important.

The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) seemed to indicate that because oil was so strategic, the government had to have state control of it. I suppose nothing is more important than farms, so we better take them over. We cannot entrust children to their ordinary mortal parents, so the NDP would surely want the government to take them over. What about clothing? We could never leave the manufacturing of clothing to ordinary Canadian companies. That is just too important. Man needs to have homes, clothing and food. We would then take over the food. We would have to take over clothing, and then, by God, we would be in dress uniforms, as they are in some countries, because the bureaucracy would find that a common uniform would tend to make us more unified. Then I could not come swinging in from the west in my western suit because that would be embarrassing for some chap here. We would all wear a common red outfit, I presume.

● (2140)

This confiscation is not the Canadian way. It is not something we want to start. It is not something with which we want to inculcate in our children, the idea that the government can take advantage of creative people coming in and investing their money by taking it away from them. It is not a concept we want to promote.

I will now turn to the third major reason why I am opposed to this bill. That reason is simply the incapacity of Crown corporations, such as Petro-Canada, to act as a creative, searching force in the oil and gas industry. The oil and gas industry is far too technical and complicated for a Crown corporation to be involved in. It is not a utility, such as a dam on a river from which you obtain hydro power. That is there all the time. The oil and gas industry needs enthusiastic searchers who have to do complicated exploration and seismic work. It needs specially skilled people to take part in the production of wells and to develop them. Oil is not just sitting there in a pool under the ground; it is locked into the sand and shale. We need people with incredible skills to lift it to the surface and maintain it so the wells are not watering out; people who can get a 60 per cent or 70 per cent return from a pool of oil rather than just 30 per cent.

I am thoroughly convinced that it is impossible for a Crown corporation to achieve that. I am not saying that the people within the Crown corporation are incompetent, but because of our democratic system of government, that system will grind them down. An example of that is the Post Office. There is nothing wrong with the individuals who work there but because of the system of responding to politics, they are incapable of performing their function. Recently we wrote off $800 million to the CNR, and this has occurred every few years in the past. The Atomic Energy of Canada corporation is another Crown corporation for which we just wrote off $600 million to make its books balance so it could be in the black. We wrote off $196 million for the CBC last year. The reason is that a Crown corporation cannot function in particular in the oil and gas industry. People like Masters and Grey who have a concept and an idea, are the real searchers. They would be stifled by the accounting process and responsibility which they would run into in a Crown corporation and they would not last long.

What would happen once a Crown corporation was unionized as this one will be? What would happen if we had a strike and an oil well were shut down? The shut down of an oil well could interfere with the pressures of oil flow versus water, gas or steam, and the well would simply be lost. It could be a total loss and that is exactly what would happen if there were a strike. I have seen it happen in my house where the electricity, which was controlled by a provincial Crown corporation, was shut off because of a strike. The pipes in my house froze, as well as in other people's houses, and when they thawed, they blew up. Apartments had to be vacated. That is what happens when a Crown corporation has too much power. The unionized employees in Petro-Canada stations across the country will have the right under law to go on strike, and they will.

Under our system today where different companies are in competition with each other, they can be played one against the other thus making them unable to force their will on the industry to fulfil its needs.

A classic example of a Crown corporation being unable to respond to the needs in the country was the recent change that took place in the service station industry. We have gone from full service stations to self-serve. That change caused enormous difficulties for individual operators who invested their money, found it uneconomic and then went bankrupt. If those stations were owned by a Crown corporation which reports back to a minister, it would be impossible to make that change in the industry, even though it was an absolutely essential change, because its employees would all be voters who lobby through a minister and the government's reputation would be on the line. We would have to spend millions of dollars to keep those stations operating even though they were uneconomic.

An hon. Member: Like Mirabel.

Mr. Thacker: I suppose Mirabel is the classic example where something like $20,000 a day—

An hon. Member: A million dollars a day.

Mr. Thacker: A member tells me a million dollars flows into Mirabel.

Mr. LeBlanc: Close the airports and privatize them too.

Mr. Thacker: Maybe it is a good idea.

The fourth reason, carrying on this debate—

Mr. LeBlanc: Privatize the highways while you are at it.

Mr. Thacker: The hon. member is starting to work in the right way. It shows that perhaps wisdom can be achieved with advancing years.

Another reason why the government should not be involved is that it is virtually impossible for a government to be both a participant in an industry and a regulator. It is impossible because it leads to a conflict of interest. As an example, when Petro-Canada bought Pacific Petroleum, it cost $1.5 billion. It did not have the money, so it went to a consortium of Canadian and U.S. banks and borrowed the $1.5 billion. They were able to give a special preference share because of the tax loophole. The deal went through on November 10. They took advantage of this tax share where the banks do not pay any tax on the interest they earned, and on November 17, seven days later, the government closed that loophole for any other Canadian company which might have wanted to take advantage of it.

When we examine that deal we find that a senior deputy minister is on the board of directors of the corporation. That is an automatic conflict of interest, and the Crown corporation took advantage of something which the other corporations could not do. Later we found that a vice president of Petro-Canada wrote the budget which gave Petro-Canada those incredible advantages over those other companies which were operating honestly and decently in the industry.

The final flowering of the practice, Mr. Speaker, has become evident recently when it was found that a minister's assistant is in the active employ of Petro-Canada even though he has never worked for the corporation, and that he is receiving mortgage benefits. It is clear that the conflict of interest becomes almost unbelievable.

I would rather see the government sit back and be the regulator. I do not care how stiff the rules are so long as they are fair for everyone. I have another example for the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters). The example is that of Pemex in Mexico, their national oil company. It does not have the facilities or skill to put out an oil fire. It always has to call in the multinationals because they have the skills and creativity. Red Adair goes all over the world to put out oil well fires. The national oil company of Mexico drills a well, it blows out and we have almost the entire Gulf of Mexico destroyed because of that blowout. It did not have the capacity to figure out how to stop the blowout. It did not have any regulations for it. Why would they have regulations in Mexico? The state oil company is carrying out the operation. The state oil company would not do anything against its national interest. Therefore, Mexico does not have regulations.

We find the same situation in Canada. The regulations which should operate in the industry should be strict and are strict for everyone except Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada receives preference in the the oil leases and, if that does not work, it receives a 25 per cent back-in. That does not work, so we now have the flowering of the policy which is an absolute 25 per cent confiscation. The government is going to make the company work even if it has to take every cent from every Canadian because the government's reputation is on the line. That is what happens when a Crown corporation is in an industry in which it should not be.

I will turn now to the National Energy Program because the Canada oil and gas act is really the flowering of that policy. It is a story that perhaps most members do not understand. It starts back in the 1930s and goes into the early 1970s. There was a conspiracy in the oil industry, and it was a conspiracy not to dupe Canadians or North Americans or Europeans; it was a conspiracy between our governments, the seven international oil sisters, against all of the producers, whether they were in Nigeria or Saudi Arabia. For 50 years we held them down so that oil came into Montreal at $2.35 a barrel. When the father of the Shah of Iran said, "That is not enough, pay us more," we cut him off at the knees. Our governments knew that and participated in it. That was wrong. We treated those people badly, and we are now going to pay for it because when they obtained economic power, they raised the price. But what had happened in the meantime was that we had designed all our infrastructure, whether it had to do with manufacturing or farming, for artificially cheap oil and petroleum. The adjustment becomes very difficult.

• (2150)

But did we face the adjustment? No. In 1973 and 1974 our great Liberal government said, "We are going to protect our Canadian citizens." Hon. members might say that is a good policy, but that sends a signal, and it is now spelling the doom of the automotive industry in North America. Those Canadian men and women who are out of work in Windsor and all along that corridor can relate their unemployment directly to the decision of the Liberal government in 1973 to hold down the price of oil.

Mr. Masters: Come on.

Mr. Thacker: The hon. member should just listen because that decision sent a signal to us as Canadian citizens that we could continue to buy big cars. It sent a signal to the car manufacturers that they could continue to produce big cars. Meanwhile, in Japan and Germany where they had to go to world prices because they had no oil, they turned their skilled people, their engineers, designers and architects, to the task of energy conservation in cars and buildings. As a result, eight years later they are cleaning our clocks in the automotive industry, and it is directly the result of that Liberal policy to keep down the price of oil.

Government can hurt us; there is no doubt about it. The Liberals are masters at promising one thing and doing another, and they have definitely hurt ordinary Canadians. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) claims to speak for ordinary Canadians. That was the message in his speech tonight. I think he honestly holds that view, but was he really speaking for Yukoners and the people in the Northwest Territories? I have not heard him speak in connection with this bill about their aspiration to provincehood and to control the wealth from their minerals.

Mr. Waddell: That is what I said in my speech, exactly that.

Mr. Thacker: I did not hear that. I will be delighted to read the hon. member's speech, but that surely was not in it. Was he speaking for Canadians' controlling the oil industry? No, he was speaking for government control.

Mr. Deans: Are they not Canadians?

Mr. Thacker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kinsgway and I have an honest disagreement. He honestly believes that a cabinet, a bureaucracy and a state oil company can make decisions in the best interests of ordinary Canadians whether they live in Tuktoyaktuk or St. John's.

Mr. Deans: While you think that the multinationals in Houston can make a better decision.

Mr. Thacker: Multinational corporations can control the oil industry no more than they can fly to the moon. The provinces decide where they drill. Who decides whether land is available to an oil company? The provinces decide that. Who decides where they drill? The provinces decide. Who decides at what rate oil is produced? The provinces decide. Who decides the price? The federal government decides that. Who decides whether any oil is exported? The federal government decides that. The oil industry is the most controlled industry in the whole nation. We then have to ask under those circumstances what ownership really means.

Mr. Deans: Why, then, are they so eager to hold onto it, pray tell?

Mr. Thacker: Ownership means absolutely nothing under those circumstances. They get a rate of return, and the rate of return has been such that 2 per cent to 3 per cent of the value of their assets leaves this country. That is the cost we pay for that capital. Under the NDP philosophy we would buy them out. It is true that we have spent $6.8 billion to buy an additional 3 per cent or 4 per cent of the oil industry. All that money has left the country. We have had to borrow the money, and the money is costing us 20 per cent. Instead of losing 2 per cent to 3 per cent on a dividend, we are losing 20 per cent on the debt equity. It is absolutely absurd. The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap admitted tonight that we are buying an industry which is at the end of its rope. Why are we spending billions of dollars to buy an oil industry which by the year 2010 will be gone?

Mr. Waddell: Will you support us if we take over the solar industry?

Mr. Thacker: Why do we not instead take that money and put it into new wave technology? What did Atlantic Richfield do with the money? What did Pacific Petroleums do with its $1.5 billion, and what did Petrofina do with its $1.5 billion? They are putting it into the new wave, so that when we come to get hydrogen power and solar power, from where will we buy the energy units? We will buy them from the successor of Petrofina, and we will be holding the tail. This makes no sense, as a matter of principle. If we took $1.5 billion and put it into hydrogen research, we could then have Canadian companies leading the next wave of energy. Those are the points I and other hon. members have made right from the beginning of proceedings on this bill. I plead with hon. members opposite to use some common sense, to try to get to the minister and to get these decisions through because there are some good ideas in what we on this side say, whether or not hon. members opposite like it.

I see my time is passing. I would like to say a few words about the monopoly power implicit in Bill C-48. It goes back to the discretionary power the minister has. We know how a minister is always controlled by his bureaucracy. Nobody can dispute that. We now see the government organizing an attack on multinational oil corporations and anything that is big and powerful. The government is organizing an attack on the newspaper industry. It is fascinating that the government should do that because the government itself is the largest monopoly and power in our whole society. The government spends five or six times more on advertising than the other major advertiser in Canada. I think Proctor and Gamble spends $24 million a year on advertising, and the Government of Canada spends about $125 million a year. Do we ever see the government trying to stop its own growth? If it did bring in genuine combines legislation, the government would be stopping itself. How will Petro-Canada handle 132 million acres of Canada? That would make Petro-Canada such a powerful corporation that it would be a world and law unto itself. Why does the government not look at itself and break itself down? Why does its competition law not apply to government rules as well?

This bill will have an effect on the business climate. Its 25 per cent confiscatory dimension has virtually destroyed our reputation in the international field, and there is no doubt that that has occurred and will affect us for many years. We as Canadians cannot afford that because we still have a small population of only 23 million people stretched out over the assets and resources of half a continent. In Canada there is more land per person than anywhere in the entire world. Because of our unique cultural and historic development, most of us are the decendants of immigrants. Most of our ancestors were poor and did not have capital. Canadians got into the habit of putting their money into banks. The banks then invest it by lending to corporations which did business. As a result, we do not have enough incentive or desire within ourselves to get out and take risks. The Americans have this. That is something we could be stimulating. It was occurring in the oil and gas industry until bill C-48 came along. Most of the companies taking over the gas industry, at least in Alberta, were Canadian-owned companies. They were often men and women who had worked for multinationals, saw the chance to get out, went out and incorporated their own companies, hired their own searchers and engineers and became Canadian corporations doing the drilling because again the multinationals do not—

An hon. Member: Call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Thacker: Sir, I had better call it ten o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I thank the hon. member for calling it ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

MARINE TRANSPORT—MINISTER'S POSITION RESPECTING CAST SHIPPING GROUP. B) REQUEST FOR GENERAL INQUIRY INTO EAST COAST SHIPPING

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, the question to which I want to address some remarks this evening was raised in this chamber on June 30, 1981. It involved an inquiry to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) concerning the relationship of the Canadian National Railways Company with the Cast shipping group. The relationship between CN and Cast and my concern about it goes back in time to January 1981 when I first raised the question with the Minister of Transport.

● (2200)

At that time I was concerned about a very substantial investment by CN in the Cast shipping group in the area of $50 million. It had come to public knowledge that these funds were being used to purchase or construct ships in foreign shipyards, particularly Korea and Yugoslavia. Other funds were being used to purchase equipment abroad. This is a major concern in relation to Canada's shipbuilding industry and Canadian manufacturing in general.

The minister indicated in January 1981 that he thought the CN investment in Cast was a very valuable one for that transportation company and for Canadians. It followed subsequently that the concern in relation to the Cast-CN arrangement became relevant to events in the port of Halifax. In particular, in February 1981 one of the major users of the Halterm container pier in the port of Halifax announced they were leaving the port to utilize the port of Montreal. That company was the Dart Container Line. Their departure from the port of Halifax became a matter of major and serious concern. Subsequently and more recently, in September 1981, another major user of the port of Halifax, Trans-Freight Line indicated it would discontinue its service to the port of Halifax. In part, the reasons for these business decisions was the declining activity in the North Atlantic container traffic. This is a fact of life faced by all international shipping companies.

Let me say at the outset that I firmly believe in the free enterprise system and I firmly believe that international shipping companies have the right in our system to make business decisions in accordance with their own best judgment. What is at stake here in moves like Dart and Trans-Freight Line is the application of government policies, in particular the government policy which permitted the Canadian National Railways Company, our national transportation company, to invest in the Cast shipping group. While it has a Canadian connection, it is basically a foreign-owned company.

We are very much concerned about the role of the Canadian National Railways Company in this activity. We are not about to have the president of the Canadian National Railways Company, Mr. Robert Bandeen, tell us how to handle our affairs. I refer particularly to an article that appeared in the Halifax Mail-Star in which Mr. Bandeen indicated that politicians should stop crying and start selling the port. Of course, Mr. Bandeen was protecting himself. In fact, the substantial investment that the Canadian National Railways Company made in Cast is proving to be a very inappropriate investment for our national transportation company. Not only does it have ramifications in relation to other shipping lines, the indications are that the investment will not be productive.

At present the Canadian National Railways Company has a book value investment of some $60 million which will yield a return of approximately 7.5 per cent in respect of some of the funds, and a return of not much more than 12 per cent in respect of other funds. This is at a point in our financial history when government savings bonds yield 19 per cent interest annually. The investment itself is of serious concern to the Canadian taxpayer. More important, Mr. Speaker, and the point I raised in June and previously in January, is that there is need for a general investigation into north Atlantic container traffic, particularly in the light of these involvements between land transport companies like the Canadian National and ocean transport companies like Cast. The relationship that has developed between the Dart shipping group and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has also given rise to concerns that are now being considered by the Canadian Transport Commission.

● (2205)

The important point I should like to raise now is the fact that the water transport committee of the Canadian Transport Commission has ordered the Canadian National Railways Company to appear before it and show cause why this investment in the Cast shipping group should be allowed. What has the CN done? Has it complied with the request of the CTC? No; it has started an appeal against this decision and asked for a delay so that we will not be able to find out the ramifications of this investment and of the relationship between Cast and CN. The real danger for all Canadians and for Canadian transport is that we will develop into a very limited service between organizations like Cast and the CN, leaving no room for independent operators.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question refers to legislation before the U.S. Congress which would restrict the movement of U.S. bound and U.S. originating containers through Canadian ports.

Behind the hon. member's question, of course, is his well known concern for the prosperity of the Port of Halifax. He attributes the recent loss of the Dart shipping group to unfair competition from a rival container line known as Cast. The reason he raises the U.S. legislation is that Cast's aggressive marketing practices were mentioned during the Congressional hearings.

As far as the legislation itself is concerned, the hon. member knows that Canada sent a note to the U.S. in June, 1980, objecting to the extraterritorial nature of the legislation. Both the state and justice departments in the U.S. were heard before the subcommittee studying the legislation and expressed concerns. Although the legislation narrowly passed the subcommittee, there is no reason to assume that it will become law in the near future.

The hon. member's real concern is evidently the role of Cast and the fact that Canadian National holds an interest, albeit a minor one, in Cast. The hon. member will remember that the gentleman who criticized Cast's practices during the congressional hearings himself represented a U.S. east coast port. Since his port was in direct competition with Canadian ports, his testimony must be seen in the light of the interests he represented.

The hon. member will also remember from answers given in the House by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), from evidence presented during an opposition day debate last March, and from a number of "late shows," that the Government of Canada has shown itself to be committed to the Port of Halifax. Neither the departure of Dart, nor the recent rumours regarding Zim containers, which appear to be unfounded in any case, can in any way be traced to government actions that are alleged to discriminate against Halifax. There is no need for a special investigation since the matter is currently in the hands of the CTC, which is continuing its investigation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate this commitment and share the optimism of many of the people in the Halifax port community regarding the future of their port.

METRIC CONVERSION—SUGGESTED PENALTIES FOR FOOD STORE OWNERS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): On Wednesday, November 4, I rose in the House and asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) if he would withdraw the order in council which specifically states that as of certain dates in 1982 it is the intention of the Consumer and Corporate Affairs people to confiscate imperial weigh scales, to issue fines as high as $5,000 on summary conviction to people who continue to use imperial weigh scales, and, if all this fails, to use its right through order in council to sentence to jail terms, in other words, to put retail merchants in Canada in prison.

● (2210)

The minister responded by saying that the government had received the co-operation of the private sector on the implementation of metric. That is not the case, Mr. Speaker. It is misrepresenting the facts as they pertain to the implementation of metric in the retail food sector. If the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) had been perfectly honest when he answered the question, he would have advised the House that the president of the Canadian Federation of Retail Grocers said that they did not wish to move to metric in the retail grocery stores of Canada prior to the United States moving to metric. We know that the United States Congress has decided not to go metric in the retail food sector for at least ten years and maybe never.

If he had been perfectly honest, the minister would also have advised the House that Loblaws Companies Limited, which represent over 15,000 retail outlets in Canada, including 307 corporate stores and 1,300 affiliate franchise supermarkets, has advised both the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) as follows:

> We feel strongly that cost justification must be shown prior to the implementation of the metric system in the retail food industry.

If the minister were perfectly honest with the people of Canada and this House of Commons, he would have responded that the Working Group on Scales in the food industry, a volunteer group of retail merchants and consumers, had the following to say:

> The retail food industry members of the Working Group wish to recommend strongly to the government that the scheduling of retail food scale conversion to metric units in Canada, which appeared in The Canada Gazette Part I of 28 February, 1981, be delayed so that conversion will take place at a time closer to when retail food scales will be converted in the United States.

If the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs were perfectly honest, they would have reported to the House that Pat Carson, the corporate manager for Loblaws, has stated that it will cost between $2.5 million and $3 million to convert scales in their stores alone. He added that it would be irresponsible not to say that the cost would have to be borne by the consumer, and for that reason they are opposed to metric in the retail food sector.

The minister has not told the whole story about consumers either. The Peterborough Examiner of May 11 reported on a survey by retail merchants in the grocery business which showed that if the government goes ahead with the legislation, it will be against the will of the public. Surveys have been taken by Dominion Stores in Peterborough and Sherbrooke where the pilot studies were conducted which indicate overwhelming opposition to metric at this time when the United States is not going metric.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that we are not getting the correct information from the minister in question period. On October 26 The Wall Street Journal reported that the United States metric board has been told by the Reagan administration that it is walking its last mile. The United States is going back to using miles on highway signs, to Fahrenheit on the national weather service, and will deal in inches and feet.

I have a letter from the minister responsible for consumer affairs in the British government which states that the British government has abandoned the compulsory element in metrication and is letting the pace of change be voluntary in the remaining sectors of trade and industry and up to the individual firms or industries directly concerned.

I should like to know why the minister continues to mislead this House and to bring in orders in council which will lead to fines, imprisonment and confiscation of equipment under a program which in the beginning was voluntary, at the choice of the sectors as they moved into metric.

Instead, the government has taken it upon itself to force metric on the retail food sector. None of the evidence supports metric for the retail food sector, and I challenge the minister or his representative in the House tonight to name one organization, one business group or one retail outlet that supports metric for fruit, vegetables, meat and fish. As you know, Mr. Speaker, 70 per cent of our trade is with our American partners to the south and they have no intention of going metric in the retail food sector.

Of all the countries that agreed to go metric in 1971, when this House also agreed, not one is left. Britain has abandoned its metric commission, Mr. Reagan has given his commission until March 1, 1982 to fire everyone connected with it. There is no longer to be a metric commission in the United States to implement the metric system by force.

Why do we, representing 7 per cent of the population of North America, march into metric against the will of consumers, against the will of retail grocers, against the will of consumer groups, and, I can assure you, if we were all to be honest, Mr. Speaker, against the will of the majority of members in the House?

• (2215)

Therefore, would the minister please give us some facts? He should not continue to mislead us by saying that 95 per cent of the world is going metric in retail food. That is a lot of nonsense. The fact is that some of the world has gone metric, but not by force, not by regulation, and not by order in council. It has gone forward because it has been to the advantage of some countries to go metric, whether in the automotive industry or whatever. They have not gone metric because some cabinet members behind closed doors have passed an order in council threatening them with jail terms, fines and imprisonment if they do not advertise and use only SI—Systems International—French metric, eliminating all forms of imperial measure here in Canada.

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) has made a number of statements and assertions, most of which are open to question. He has cast doubt on the answer that the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) made to his question in the House on November 4. I am not here to represent that minister who is quite capable of answering for himself; but I would like to respond, in particular, to the charges that the hon. member for Peterborough has made concerning Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

I must say that I am puzzled as to what document the hon. member is referring to when he suggests that it is the intention of this government to jail those who do not comply with the regulations governing metric conversion in the retail sale of individually measured foods. I can tell the hon. member that it will be the responsibility of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to enforce these regulations made under the Weights and Measures Act in exactly the same manner as all other such regulations are enforced.

The hon. member may be interested in knowing that our well established inspection practice involves first, informing non-complying retailers of their obligations under the law, in this case to advertise and sell individually measured foods as required by these regulations. Then, we encourage the retailers to take whatever action is necessary to comply with the regulations. Should a retailer not take action to comply with the regulations, he would be advised in writing that continued non-compliance would result in the initiation of prosecution action.

Should a retailer be prosecuted for non-compliance with these regulations, I might point out that the highest penalty that could be imposed for cases such as these would be a maximum fine of $1000, for each offence—not $5,000, if I understood the hon. member correctly. I might also point out that devices would only be seized in those instances where it would be required in the gathering of evidence for enforcement action.

I would also like to assure the hon. member that we do not anticipate that extensive enforcement action will be required to ensure compliance with these regulations. We have every confidence that retailers of individually measured foods will convert to metric as required commencing January 4, 1982. Surely, the hon. member realizes that Canadian retailers have been, are and will be good corporate citizens who will obey the law.

THE CONSTITUTION—CHARTER PROPOSALS ON LANGUAGE RIGHTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on October 23, of last month, the Ottawa Citizen and the Montreal Gazette stated on their front pages that the minority language provisions for education found in Section 23 of the constitutional proposals would be weakened to make them compatible with Bill 101 in Quebec. When I read those headlines in the newspapers that morning, I was shocked and upset. I came to the House at two o'clock in the afternoon and put a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). I asked him whether it was true that the government intended to weaken minority language provisions for education in order to get an agreement with Quebec on the Constitution. The Minister of Justice answered me by stating that he was committed to minority language education for French and English-speaking Canadians on an equal basis throughout the country. He was not clear in stating whether or not the government intended to change Section 23 or weaken it in some way to get an agreement with the other provinces.

• (2220)

Since that date, a lot of water has passed under the proverbial bridge. We now have an accord which was reached last week on November 5 between nine of the premiers and the federal government. While I congratulate them on that agreement, I am disappointed with a few provisions.

It is still not clear what language legislation will apply in Quebec with respect to education. While the nine premiers in the majority English-speaking provinces have agreed to the proposals in Section 23, and I must say that is quite an accomplishment, it is a first in Canadian history to have nine provinces agreeing to such a provision, on the other hand it is still not clear what will apply in Quebec. The government has said it will give some time to the government in Quebec to reconsider the provisions and perhaps negotiate some further settlement with Quebec.

First, I want to make it absolutely clear that in this controversial area I do not see how we can have one provision with respect to minority francophone rights applying in the nine majority anglophone provinces and something different applying in the province of Quebec. I do not think it would be acceptable to have two different provisions on language rights, one applying in Quebec and the other applying in the anglophone provinces.

Second, I do not see how we can retreat or weaken Section 23 to satisfy Quebec and therefore weaken it with respect to all of the other provinces as well when, as I say, for the first time all the anglophone provinces have agreed to such a provision. To backstep at this stage would be ridiculous and unacceptable in my view.

Premier Lévesque, who is my premier, returned from the constitutional conference last week. He has stated, and he stated again this evening in the Quebec National Assembly, that he was betrayed by the other provinces and the federal government. He said that they ganged up on him and that this is just another example of English Canada stepping all over French Canada.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and I will go over each point, how can it be said that English Canada is ganging up on French Canada when patriation has been agreed to? That was one of the items included in the accord. To the degree that the Constitution will be removed from Britain and made completely within the control of Canadians is that ganging up on Quebec?

Third, to accept an amending formula proposed by the government of Quebec with the seven other provinces, the so-called "Gang of Eight" even with the minor change, is that to be considered ganging up on Quebec? For the nine provinces and the federal government to agree to a charter with a provision whereby the provinces can override in many basic areas, can that be considered ganging up on Quebec?

Finally, when you have nine English-speaking provinces agreeing to what Mr. Lévesque had proposed himself a couple of years ago, namely, that the other nine provinces agree to French-speaking education for the French-speaking minorities, how can you describe that as ganging up on the province of Quebec when they agreed to French education in those English-speaking provinces? That is beyond me.

I again put it to the government and to the representative of the government who is here tonight that I can see no justification whatever for weakening Section 23, the section relating to minority language rights and education, or for applying something different in Quebec from what will apply in the other provinces. There is no justification for weakening that section or for applying something different in Quebec to what will apply in the other provinces. It was a great step forward for these other provinces to agree to what Mr. Lévesque had proposed. Therefore, if he cannot see that, I am sure the people of Quebec will see it and will readily, once they have examined the proposals of this constitutional accord or agreement, see there is no such thing as ganging up on Quebec, but in fact that it is doing things that Quebec has asked for historically over many years.

• (2225)

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the question raised by my hon. colleague. The federal government has always supported, and continues to support, the principle of granting minority language education rights equally throughout this country. This is not the time that we intend to back off from that principle.

We have achieved a historic accord with nine provinces and the federal government, having agreed to patriation, an amending formula and a charter of rights which contains Clause 23 granting minority language education rights across this country.

We were all very disappointed to hear this afternoon and early evening that Premier Lévesque has rejected our offer for further negotiations. He said he will not negotiate, he will intensify his lobby in London and he will henceforth boycott all federal-provincial conferences other than those which deal with Quebec's economy. This is most disappointing, particularly in light of the agreement he came to in terms of granting reciprocal language rights in St. Andrews in 1977.

As my hon. colleague asked in his question, how can it be said that we are ganging up on Quebec when we and the other provinces are prepared to grant reciprocal rights? How can it be said we are ganging up when the federal government announced that in order to try to reach some accommodation with the province of Quebec we would be prepared to enter into discussion on the three points which Mr. Lévesque feels are contentious?

Dealing with the last of those three points, language rights, Mr. Ryan has proposed one type of possible alternative. As you are aware, it has always been our position, and it is contained in the charter, that the federal government and the provinces would allow access to English-speaking schools in Quebec whether or not the parents received their schooling in Canada. Mr. Ryan has proposed an alternative which is called the "Canada Clause". The Canada Clause would allow access to English schools in Quebec to those children of Canadian citizens who received their primary school instruction in Canada. This is a slight change to what we have been proposing. It would have very limited application. We have indicated, as the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has indicated, we would be prepared to consider this if it were to be acceptable to the government of Quebec. We are attempting to achieve an accord with the province of Quebec so that all ten provinces can go with the federal government to London to get our Constitution back.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.29 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 10, 1981

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1405)

[English]

REMEMBRANCE DAY

SIGNIFICANCE OF COMMEMORATION

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is my privilege as Minister of Veterans Affairs to remind all members and all Canadians that tomorrow, November 11, is Remembrance Day.

Well over half of our present population was born after the end of the Second World War, and, as the echoes of that conflict become fainter, there is always a possibility that, for the younger generations, November 11 will have no special significance. I consider this would be a tragedy because there is an inspirational story rooted in our past.

The day before yesterday I was at Vimy Ridge, where Canadians won everlasting glory. On that occasion one could not help but be reminded of the words of General Byng, the commander of our forces at Vimy, who said:

> There they stood on Vimy Ridge on the ninth day of April, 1917, men from Quebec stood shoulder to shoulder with men from British Columbia and Alberta and there was forged a nation tempered by the fires of sacrifice and hammered on the anvil of high adventure.

Over 600,000 Canadians fought in the First World War. They were so splendid at the Battle of the Somme that British Prime Minister David Lloyd George later wrote:

> The Canadians played a part of such distinction that henceforward they were marked out as storm troops; for the remainder of the war they were brought along to head the assault in one great battle after another. Whenever the Germans found the Canadian corps coming into the line they prepared for the worst.

Next summer we will be commemorating the fortieth anniversary of Dieppe, where Canadians were also asked to serve as storm troops. Those men who landed on the Normandy beaches were in the finest traditions of the Canadian forces, as were our airmen in the Battle of Britain, and our seamen who crewed the perilous convoys of the North Atlantic.

This tradition of service and sacrifice was continued in the Korean war when Canadians volunteered to join the United Nations peace force.

Tomorrow, November 11, we will be remembering those men and women from all those wars who gave up their lives so others could be free, and at the same time we will be recognizing the achievements of former members of our forces.

For the millions of our young people who have known nothing but the privilege of peace, let us hope that Remembrance Day will always be something special. If we take the time to reflect on the example set by our forebears, Canadians can face the future with confidence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, they served; we care.

On behalf of the Conservative Party I wish to add our thoughts of remembrance at this time of reflection. So basic was the belief that everyone has a right to the freedoms we now cherish that over 100,000 Canadian men and women gave their very lives to ensure that end. Through the World Wars, the Korean war, and many other battles, hundreds of thousands of Canadians have fought to ensure that these cherished freedoms would never be forfeited. We gratefully remember their sacrifice.

November 11 will mark the passage of another year since the fighting ceased on the western front. Then, as now, mankind prayed that the last war had been waged. Whenever Canadians have been needed, they have served and served with distinction. Many returned maimed and disabled. We hope there will be amendments to the Human Rights Act to bring equality to the handicapped in this International Year of Disabled Persons.

I feel it is our responsibility, as the benefactors of their arduous labours, to remember both the 100,000 war dead and the 770,000 veterans who now live on. They deserve to be treated with respect and compassion. Currently many veterans die before they receive their due benefits from the country for which they have faithfully done battle.

• (1410)

It is an honour to remember our fallen comrades through eulogy, but we should also remember the actions of our living veterans by acting ourselves. The greatest tribute we could give them would be to eliminate by next Remembrance Day any causes of frustration they may now have and, in particular, the excessive time delays in processing pension applications. They served; we remember.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I lived in Great Britain during the Second World War. I remember the Second World War as a boy, the air raid sirens, the nights in the bomb shelters, the enemy aircraft overhead, the terror of the bombs, and I remember the devastation.

I remember when it ended, when men and women returned from the battle front; some walked and some could not, and we thought of those who had died protecting us, and we vowed that never again would this occur. With the faces of lost loved ones still fresh in our minds we determined that we would remember them.

S.O. 43

We owed a great deal to those whose lifetime would be one of suffering, and we owed a great deal to the widows and families of those who had lost their lives. We were prepared to make sacrifices then to ensure that they would never want. Have we kept the faith? Could we have done better? Have we truly remembered as we promised that we would?

On behalf of Stanley Knowles, whose battle for veterans has been and continues to be unended, and on behalf of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, I join in paying tribute and pledging that in the year ahead we will strive to meet our debt to those who served our country in World Wars I and II, in Korea, and in the other conflicts as part of our peacekeeping effort, conflicts in which we participated willingly. And I pray we will remain mindful of the need to develop throughout the world an economic order that will eliminate poverty and want for all people, and to that end eliminate the need for war.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DELAY IN PROCESSING PENSION APPLICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, it takes up to five years for the Department of Veterans Affairs to process applications for veterans pensions, a procedure which in the United States takes three months. On this, the eve of Remembrance Day, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That this House urge the Minister of Veterans Affairs to respond to the needs of veterans with as much speed and good will as those veterans responded to Canada's needs during times of conflict, by streamlining the cumbersome and time-consuming practices of his department.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

INFORMATION

CONFLICT CONCERNING "LE QUOTIDIEN" AND "LE PROGRÈS-DIMANCHE" IN LAC-SAINT-JEAN-SAGUENAY REGION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas an agreement signed by union and management representatives at Le Quotidien and Le Progrès-Dimanche will prevent these newspapers from closing, which would have been a disaster as far as information is concerned in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, and since this will meet the recommendations made by the Kent Royal Commission on Newspapers which encourage competition in this field, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet):

That the House congratulate those concerned on their efforts to reach a settlement.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1415)

[English]

CANADA LABOUR CODE

PROVISIONS RESPECTING OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Canadian Labour Congress properly pointed out to many members of this House that our country is currently losing more than 70 million working days a year because of work accidents and illnesses. That is fully six times the annual loss due to walk-outs and strikes. In the typical year about 20,000 Canadians are permanently disabled and more than a thousand are killed while on the job. I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie):

That this House calls on the government to amend Part IV of the Canada Labour Code as quickly as possible in order to deal more effectively with the prevention of workplace accidents and diseases, and to streamline existing procedures under which fully 15 separate federal departments and agencies currently have an involvement in occupational health and safety.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

SOLVENCY OF INSURANCE COMPANIES—CALL FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The federal Superintendent of Insurance recently took control of the assets of Pitts Insurance Company. This is the second insurance company which has run into financial difficulty this year, leaving policyholders uncertain about whether they can collect either their claims or, indeed, the money they paid out in premiums. Since protection from financial losses arising from theft, fire or property damage or automobile damage plays such an important part in Canadians' sense of financial security, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That this House refer the question of the solvency of insurance companies to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to allay fears of Canadian policyholders.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DELAY IN PROCESSING PENSION APPLICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I would like to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 which I feel confident will receive the support of the House. The delays encountered by the veterans of Canada in having their claims for benefit processed by the Department of Veterans Affairs are intolerable. There can be no justification accepted for veterans having to wait years while the bureaucracy, which is no doubt overworked, attempts to struggle with its heavy load.

On behalf of my absent colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), I move:

That the Minister of Veterans Affairs immediately take whatever steps are necessary to reduce the waiting period for veterans' claims and to review veterans legislation to ensure that it adequately responds to the needs of today's society in all its ramifications.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

CALL FOR PUBLICATION OF STUDY ON DEPOSIT INSURANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the $20,000 level of deposit insurance coverage provided by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation which was fixed in 1968 has been subject to the same inflationary erosion as the Canadian dollar elsewhere. Now its worth is less than 47 cents of the original value fixed. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the study on deposit insurance commissioned by the Minister of State (Finance) in January of this year be now made public and that the appropriate amending legislation be introduced, and introduced now, so that other Canadians do not suffer the same loss of their life savings as those depositors did in the Astra Trust Company.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

ASSESSMENT OF DAMAGE CAUSED BY UREA FORMALDEHYDE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas the results of the tests conducted by the federal government on urea formaldehyde foam insulation were to be announced some time this month, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That the federal government take up its responsibility in this matter and, as promised by the member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Joyal), start to assess the damage caused by this product.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion presented by the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43 this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

● (1420)

[English]

INDUSTRY

MANUFACTURE OF DOMESTIC APPLIANCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, over the past years the number of domestic appliance manufacturers in Canada has seriously decreased and the number and kinds of domestic appliances made in Canada and the Canadian market share have been seriously eroded. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce immediately report to the House on motions on efforts he is making to ensure that the appliance manufacturing industry in Canada remains viable, and exactly what efforts he has made to prevent the disappearance of Canadian Admiral as a company involved in the manufacture of appliances in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CALL FOR REMOVAL OF RESIDENCY REQUIREMENT FOR ENTITLEMENT TO PENSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In the words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), "We must keep at it to battle for substantial boosts in basic pension rates as well as for other improvements for our veterans and their families." In honour of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that veteran fighter for veterans' causes, as well as the many veterans and their spouses who served Canada or were our allies, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell):

That the federal government take immediate steps to provide full benefits without a residency requirement to all those veterans and prisoners of war who were our allies and now are Canadian citizens, to provide fairer coverage for Dieppe prisoners of war and, at long last, to recognize, with full benefits, the veterans of the Mackenzie-Papineau battalion who fought bravely for freedom in Spain.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

PUBLIC SUPPORT FOR INCLUSION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Irwin (Sault Ste. Marie): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Yesterday the Canadian Human Rights Commission, headed by Mr. Gordon Fairweather, a distinguished former member of this House, released a poll which indicates that 72 per cent of Canadians support the principle of including a Charter of Rights in the Constitution. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson):

That this House affirms its desire to pass as expeditiously as possible a constitutional resolution which includes a Charter of Rights.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ROYAL FAMILY

ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING FORTHCOMING BIRTH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That through you, Madam Speaker, this House expresses its loyal congratulations to Her Royal Highness, the Princess of Wales, and to her husband, His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, on the announcement regarding an anticipated royal event this coming spring, and at the same time assures the royal couple of our good wishes and continuing loyalty and interest.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR INCLUSION OF PROGRAMS OF ASSISTANCE IN BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, because of continued economic mismanagement on the part of the government Canadians are losing their jobs, their homes and, as a result, their faith in the future. To return to the people of this country the knowledge that their past and present efforts are not in vain and that, with proper planning, national and individual aims and aspirations can be achieved, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the Prime Minister instruct the Minister of Finance to include in the upcoming federal budget practical short-term and long-range programs designed both to provide immediate assistance to Canadians losing jobs and homes and to promote sound economic planning so that the mess in which we now find ourselves will not be continued and repeated.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—TRIAL OF ALEXANDER PARITSKY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Alexander Paritsky, a Soviet Jew, goes on trial tomorrow in Kharkov in the U.S.S.R., principally because he wished to emigrate from the U.S.S.R. to Israel, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney):

That this House urge the Government of Canada to bring the concerns of the House to the Government of the U.S.S.R. and to ensure that a Canadian observer request to be admitted to the trial.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

● (1425)

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INTEREST INCOME TAX EXEMPTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, whereas investors are allowed a $1,000 income tax exemption for interest income, while war veterans receive an interest exemption of only $100 annually before it affects their war veterans allowance, whereas today's high interest rates bring interest returns on even very small investments above the $100 exemption allowed war veterans, and whereas this national disgrace does not even allow the war veteran to save enough money to cover his own funeral expenses or to repay any debts, much less leave any savings to his spouse, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That the government remedy this injustice by immediately raising the $100 exemption on interest income for war veterans allowance purposes to at least $1,000.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

HOUSING

GUIDELINES USED BY OFFICIALS CONTACTING HOME OWNERS ON MORTGAGE RENEWALS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works responsible for housing. Members of Parliament have been referring specific cases of home owner hardship to the minister's office. Will the minister tell the House what guidelines his officials are using when they contact home owners who are facing mortgage renewals immediately prior to the budget?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I can report to the hon. member for Simcoe North that, since the offer was made in this House, officials from my office and I personally have responded by telephone to approximately 200 cases. We have on occasion been able to secure alternate financing from alternate lenders other than the lender with whom the person calling was dealing. We have been able to obtain deferrals of contracts and contract renewals until after Thursday or Friday of this week. In a lot of situations the people receiving the calls and surveying the increase have, with the persons calling, been able to direct them to take actions themselves, that is, for example, to speak to the ombudsmen that have been directed by some of the banks to deal with these questions on a customer-client basis, rather than continue the intervention of Canada Mortgage.

ADVICE GIVEN BY OFFICIALS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same minister. One of the individuals in the minister's office talked with an individual in Delta, B.C. whose mortgage matures today, November 10, who was told by the minister's official to hold off signing a mortgage renewal until Friday because there will be help in the budget on Thursday night.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: My question to the minister is this. Is that information or advice being given by the minister's officials on a selective basis?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the answer to that is an unequivocal no. I do not know what will be in the budget on Thursday night.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT ON MOTIONS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I would remind the minister that in his earlier answer he referred to suggestions as to what should be done Thursday or Friday. There is no way the minister can justify selective secrecy. Every Canadian who is renewing a mortgage is entitled to that advice. Now that the budget secrecy has broken down, will the minister make a statement on motions and clear the air for all Canadians renewing their mortgages?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have already indicated that, as the minister reporting to this House for Canada Mortgage and Housing, I do not know of the contents of the budget affecting housing. I have indicated, and I say unequivocally, that I have specifically instructed my officials to make no reference to the budget or to hold out promise that there will be assistance in that budget.

• (1430)

What I have said is that with the discussions in this House and in this country since interest rates went to 20 per cent, I have given advice to the government, and I have said that it would be prudent for anyone who is facing a very difficult situation to wait and see, indeed, if there is any assistance, or any reference or any discussion in the budget.

REPLIES FOR HOME OWNERS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, it boggles the mind how the minister of housing can refute what he said in his first answer. Would the minister of housing please give this House a straight answer concerning his request. The minister of housing asked me some ten days ago to supply him with a list of names. I brought them into the House of Commons, Madam Speaker, on November 2. I hand delivered them to the minister, and I tabled them in this House.

As of twelve noon today, the minister has not corresponded, nor phoned, nor has any official in his office communicated with any of the 32 people who are losing their homes. How do you get on the preferred list? Does the minister intend to leak out budget information secretly to a privileged few, and stand idly by while thousands of Canadians are losing their homes on the false promise of the minister of housing?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, as a matter of practice, each day when I come into this House I ask for an update from officials of my ministry, who have been responding to letters received from members of the House on all sides, to advise me of the letters that have been received and of the action taken. So far as I know, all letters that have been received by my ministry have been acted upon, and letters have gone forward as of twelve o'clock noon today.

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Obviously the minister of housing does not even know what he says in this House of Commons, let alone what his officials say. On the front page of the Peterborough Examiner, there is "Warsaw man faces a mortgage crisis—loses his home." Why has the minister not contacted that man in Warsaw, Ontario, who was one of the 32 names tabled in this House, Madam Speaker, on November 2? I should like to know if the minister will stand idly by while CMHC offers bombs like AHOP, and balloon payments on grants and subsidies that are compounded onto the end? Will the minister be as bad as the banks? Will the minister balloon those payments at 19½ per cent through CMHC while he sits by, does not return the calls and does not correspond with the people? This House deserves an answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): In responding to the hon. member's question, I would be repeating myself in saying that I have been advised by the officials who have handled these cases on an individual basis that all cases have been responded to, and that all members have been acknowledged, and that all people—

Mr. Nielsen: They have not.

Mr. Cosgrove: —who have made enquiries have been contacted by telephone by the people in CMHC who have been handling these calls. If the case to which the hon. member refers has not, then given the specifics I will look into that later this afternoon.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER COMMUNICATE BY LETTER WITH PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He knows that all parties in the House of Commons were committed to the entrenchment of aboriginal and treaty rights as expressed in Clause 34 of the original constitutional proposition. Since the Minister of Justice just yesterday reiterated the federal government's commitment to entrenchment, I should like to ask the Prime Minister the following question. As an expression of continuing non-partisan concern with this issue, and in view of the seriousness of it for the native people of Canada, would the Prime Minister agree that it would be an important step for a letter to be sent, signed by the Prime Minister and the leaders of the other opposition parties in the House of Commons, to each of the premiers in Canada requesting that they commit themselves to Clause 34?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member says that all parties in the House of Commons agree that that should be in. I am not quite certain that has been the case over the past year. I wonder why the hon. member would want me to write that letter only on behalf of the aboriginals and not on behalf of all other Canadians who do not have the equality clause and legality clause entrenched, that are subject to "notwithstanding." Yesterday we heard about women's rights, and I am sure we will hear about the disabled and so on.

I am trying to get the hon. member to understand that there was an accord last Thursday. It left some things out that we did not like left out. It put some things in that the provinces did not want put in. It was a compromise. I think it should be the task of this House, if it wants to act on that accord, not to try to renegotiate that accord after the fact. I do not mind going on record as saying that we would still stand by all the rights that were in the charter as they were when we first put them in.

Mr. Hawkes: They weren't in the first one.

Mr. Trudeau: Some bellyacher over there says it wasn't in. Madam Speaker, we thought we had put them in. The aboriginals must have thought they were in because they want to go back to what was in.

Mr. Clark: They were not in the first one; you know it.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. Leader of the Opposition wants to say something. Could you recognize him next, Madam Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I hope the Leader of the New Democratic Party will take from my answer not that I am unsympathetic to his request but that I find it perilous indeed to try to reopen the accord of last Thursday piecemeal and to try, each of us, to put something back in that was in in the first place and that was taken out as a result of an agreement hammered out with the difficulties he knows about.

POSITION ADOPTED BY PREMIERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would be prepared at this point not to question the motives of the Prime Minister in this issue if he would be prepared to agree that the comparison he tried to make between women's rights and other rights and aboriginal and treaty rights is a bad comparison, precisely because aboriginal and treaty rights have been dropped completely from the accord that was reached between the federal government and the provinces. That is not the case for other rights to which he alluded.

Since the governments of Ontario, New Brunswick and Saskatchewan are publicly on record in favour of the entrenchment as expressed in Clause 34, does the Prime Minister not think it would be useful, on this important question, simply to write the other premiers to get their views and, if they are opposed to the entrenchment, is it not important for the people of Canada to know which provincial premiers are opposed to that idea?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member says that he won't question my motives for the time being, Madam Speaker. Let me say that I won't question his for the time being.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I assume the hon. member would like a Canadian constitution with an entrenched charter, though not the best one in the world that we had when some of his members and mine wanted to see this thing proceeded with.

We never knew how many hon. members because I don't think they knew themselves how many, Madam Speaker. It seemed to be a changing date.

The hon. member says that aboriginal rights are in a different category from women's rights. I point out to him that it was his own member from, I believe, New Westminster, who asked the first question about that, and who was indignant because somehow women's rights have been somewhat diminished. I am telling him that if we want to reopen the accord for the natives, then why not reopen it for other things too, and isn't that the surest way of destroying the accord?

He quotes, I believe, three provinces that say they are in favour. Madam Speaker, I think it is on record that we were in favour as well. It is still in the resolution which is before the House, that clause, which if my memory is correct, the Indians were campaigning violently against even in London and throughout Europe. That clause was in there and now they want it back. It was in the government's resolution. If he wants to put another government on record he can put our name. But I do not think he should be asking me who was the author of that particular deletion.

• (1440)

If the hon. member is asking for individual provinces I can tell him that seven provinces, in the night from Wednesday to Thursday, put together a final compromise solution. They put it to us. We were already into the fourth day. We had already lost two premiers; a third was packing his bags.

We had to decide whether we would proceed unilaterally, as the saying goes, to the United Kingdom, with the Charter in all its purity, or whether we would make some compromise to get nine provinces on side. We made the compromise. I thought that it was also the desire of the Leader of the New Democratic Party because, in the days preceding that meeting, he was urging us to have a meeting and to seek a compromise. If he didn't want some changes, he should not have urged us to seek a compromise.

We negotiated the best compromise we could. Certainly it was considerably better than the compromise put forward on Tuesday where the only entrenched thing was democratic rights and linguistic equality at the federal level. Everything else, including native rights, equality rights, legal rights, mobility rights and linguistic rights, was to be sent off to a commission for two years; that was the proposal on Tuesday. On Thursday I think we got considerably better. But if the hon. member didn't want a compromise, he shouldn't have urged me to seek one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SEEK SUPPORT OF PREMIERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, regrettably we are back to the old polemic style in dealing with this issue. This party wanted some consensus; the Prime Minister is right. But we also recognize that there is a profound distinction to be made in that document between women's and other rights which are still in there in some form, and aboriginal and treaty rights which have been removed completely. There is a distinction I wish the Prime Minister would acknowledge.

What is to be lost in his writing the other premiers to ask them, because it was in a document that he said he received? I happen to know that some of the people who were supporters of that document would include entrenchment. What is to be lost by the Prime Minister writing those premiers a straightforward letter now, or soon, to ask if they would support the re-inclusion of Clause 34?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member said that there was a profound distinction between these rights and the others. I wish he had told me when I asked him before meeting with the premiers, when I said, "Look, Ed, what do you think we should give up; what do you think we should drop?"

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: That is what I asked him. Let him try to remember the answer he gave me. Don't look puzzled, my friend; don't look puzzled.

Mr. Hees: What was it, Pierre?

Mr. Trudeau: We were being urged to seek an agreement, by everybody, including the hon. members' party. We fought for four days to keep our charter as it was. The choice then was, and it is now, of forgetting about the accord of last Thursday and moving unilaterally. If I have the entire support of the hon. member's party, and of the province of Saskatchewan, and of a couple of other provinces, we will revert to that. We will destroy the accord of last Thursday and we will proceed with it, if I can have that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, oh! Now hon. members don't want me to protect women's rights or native rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN FORCES BASE CHATHAM, N.B.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. In light of the minister's remarks in Chatham, New Brunswick, last Saturday, and last night's distressing report on the CBC national news, including the negative and counter-productive statements of the crepe-hanging mayor of the town of Chatham that the base will close, will the minister state whether or not there are plans within his department vis-à-vis CFB Chatham about which we have not been informed?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, it is very unfortunate sometimes that newscasts do not reflect the whole reality. It is true that I was in Chatham to address its Chamber of Commerce. I told the people of Chatham and of the Miramichi region that they should plan for a change because we were phasing out our 416 squadron of Voodoos, of F-101 fighters.

We know the consequences this will have on the region. However, I told them as well that this was supposed to happen in 1982, and we gave them further leeway of two more years to do it. I think they understood very well. We told them too that we were establishing an interdepartmental committee so that we could see altogether what we could do to alleviate the consequences of these squadrons leaving the Chatham base. I think some people understood very well. I have information to the effect that the Premier of New Brunswick, Mr. Hatfield, called Mr. MacMillan of the Miramichi Region Development Corporation, to tell him that he would give him all the help possible. If Madam Speaker would allow me, I would like to read one sentence of the communication from Mr. Ernest MacMillan as follows:

Thank you for coming to Miramichi to place your department's position regarding CFB Chatham before the public.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Lamontagne: It is very important that everyone in the House understands the way the government is handling a case for which we have much concern.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: I thank Madam Speaker for her indulgence. It reads:

We at the Miramichi Region Development Corporation accept your challenge to plan for change . . . We are pleased that you do not plan to abandon CFB

Chatham and are to establish an interdepartmental committee to plan for the future role of CFB Chatham.

The government is concerned with the problems of the people of Chatham, and we will look after them.

* * *

FISHERIES

RECOMMENDATIONS IN INTERIM REPORT OF PEARSE ROYAL COMMISSION

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. As the House knows, Dr. Peter Pearse brought down his interim report on fisheries on the Pacific coast yesterday. The report is extensive and we all hope that it will be very useful. But yesterday Dr. Pearse said that he considered the whole policy framework, including that for administration, inadequate and that it must be changed. He said that the government must develop a policy to allow the fisheries department to carry out its job. It is now admitted that the lack of government policy has made it very difficult for the government to do its job.

Now that there are some interim recommendations, and in view of the fact that none of these interim recommendations or suggestions is easy, as Dr. Pearse pointed out, what can the minister tell us about giving people who will be affected by these recommendations the chance to discuss them, not only with the government but perhaps with an appropriate House standing committee, before the government makes a final decision on whether to implement these recommendations or to modify them in accordance with certain needs that may be expressed?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I welcome the hon. member to his new role. I assure him that my department is fully open to him and any questions he may have to ask.

I welcome the Pearse report. I asked Dr. Pearse to go the whole way in telling the story as he saw it. He did a very thorough job. He was working under considerable time constraints. His recommendations have come to me, as they have to hon. members, and I think they were widely distributed. I recommend the report to the attention of hon. members. I hope that it will be fully discussed.

I only have one difficulty. If we want to make some changes we must do it early enough so that fishermen can adjust for the 1982 fishing season. Certainly I am in favour of full discussion, either through the parliamentary committee system or through the advisory committee on the west coast with which I intend to meet after it has had time to look at the report and is ready to make some general comments.

● (1450)

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): I welcome the minister's desire to have this matter discussed not only with the government but also with the committee. I would ask the minister if he could advise us, perhaps no later than next week, what discussions he has had with the chairman of that committee so that the necessary steps can be made to have the committee consider these preliminary recommendations and possibly call witnesses because, as the minister knows, certainly the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union has already voiced its very grave concern about some aspects of the recommendations.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I hope that some members of the public, including some fishermen's organizations, do not arrive at hardened positions before they have read the full report and analysed all the recommendations, and frankly, have had a chance to sit down with Dr. Pearse and discuss how he sees certain issues that he has raised in his report. However, I very much favour full discussion and full information which should be foremost at such meetings.

* * *

VIA RAIL

ROLE OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORT

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Since the minister stonewalled the Senators this morning, just as he has stubbornly ignored hon. members of this House on the VIA Rail question, may I ask the minister, with the candour that he used to show when he really cared for this country, just what is the purpose of having a commons committee on transportation when it cannot meet to review or even discuss a unilateral, arbitrary cabinet order which affects so many Canadians from coast to coast?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not think it is stubbornness; it is the conviction in what one is doing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: I am willing to live up to the conviction we have that this is the best way to restructure the railway transportation system in Canada.

I was in the committee of the Senate this morning simply because I was invited to go there. I presented the case in the best possible way I could. I am willing to do that for the House of Commons committee on transportation. The reason hon. members have not consented to see me up until now is simply because—and this is their right to claim—they would like to have the right to report to the House of Commons on that subject, and, by so doing, to ask for a third day of debate on the subject. The House leader on my side and I have not been willing to accommodate that desire.

Oral Questions

REQUEST THAT MINISTER APPEAR BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, the minister well knows that on October 28 we had a little rhubarb in this House when the chairman of the standing committee had difficulty in standing in his place because of the presence of the government House leader in reference to the unanimous report of the steering committee which stated that this matter should be reviewed, at least before Nov. 15. There was never an attempt from the government side, with those who helped draw up the terms of reference, to provoke a debate in this House as long as we had a chance, in an abbreviated form before the standing committee, to hear this matter. Therefore, there has not been a chance for Members of Parliament, elected to carry on the people's business, to discuss something like a 20 per cent removal of the people's trains. How does the minister rationalize or reconcile that, especially if he thinks his facts are so good? What does he have to fear in coming before the transport committee, even on a shortened schedule?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have learned something that I did not know. If my hon. friend is right, I have just learned that that committee would be willing to listen to my explanation of the program announced on July 27 without making it the subject of a report which could be tabled in the House and would be debatable. That is something new. I have not been informed of that. I do not know if the House leader has been informed. He seems to say that he has not been, either.

The reason I went to the Senate this morning was so I could give all the explanations I have; therefore, it is not fear of explaining the program, obviously, because I have already done it this morning. I am willing to do it again before the committee of the House of Commons if what my hon. friend says is true; unfortunately, I doubt that it is.

MINISTER'S ACTIONS WITH RESPECT TO CUTBACKS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): I have a supplementary question. Last week in the House, Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport responded to a question posed by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria. The hon. member asked the minister if he would consider the maintenance of service between Edmundston and Moncton until such time as alternative service could be provided. The minister indicated that he would take that under advisement, and he implied that something would be done in a positive way.

As well, the hon. member for Timmins-Chapleau has written to the Minister of Transport, indicating that as a result of the cutbacks there will be some very serious problems with regard to mail service. In turn the minister has directed the CTC to issue a modification to the order in council so that those complaints will be looked after. Why is the minister so adamant about forging ahead with the cutbacks on November 15 while making selective exceptions for members of his own party?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the point I have been making all along is that these decisions have been made and they will be implemented on November 15 in most cases, and on September 1, 1982, in the case of commuter-like trains. What I have been saying all along is that the world will not stop breathing on November 15. There will be adjustment and accommodation to those situations. The example that I chose was the Edmunston to Moncton route. I cannot be totally candid on the subject because it is not completely finished. However, what we will see in the coming days is the development of alternative modes of transportation by way of road and air which will make up for the loss of the railway at a cost to the government which will be immensely lower than the government is now paying and would have been paying for years to come had the rail line continued to exist. It is as simple as that.

These changes have been going on in Canada for a number of years. Between 1970 and 1978, 28 per cent of the railway route system was eliminated, and adjustments were made.

My friend does his best, and is doing very well, trying to postpone, postpone, postpone what is with us and what is bound to happen, and to which we must adjust. I wish he would be more of a liberal, having a sense of adjustment which would be in keeping with what happened in the past.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question concerns the Atlantic provinces and is directed to the Minister of Finance. It is clear that the Liberal induced recession in the rest of the country is producing a Liberal induced depression in that part of the country, with bankruptcies up 85 per cent, with 10,000 fewer jobs in October than in September, and with unemployment in Newfoundland, for example, running at 17 per cent.

In light of these really astonishing figures, and the human reality which they portray, I would like to ask the minister whether he is now prepared to tell the House that he and the government regard the problem of unemployment and, in particular, the problem of unemployment in Atlantic Canada, as public enemy number one, along with inflation.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): I have no hesitation, Madam Speaker, in declaring that unemployment is, of course, a serious problem. The question my hon. friend will obviously go on to consider is: what is the best economic policy to follow in present circumstances, with very high inflation, to ensure a sustainable economic growth and permanent jobs down the road? I regard a good deal of the unemployment occurring in the country today to be the result of high inflation that we are experiencing in the economy.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, one of the causes of unemployment in Atlantic Canada, apart from high interest rates, which seems to escape the minister's attention is, of course, the closure of the air base at Chatham, New Brunswick, which will cause the loss, according to the town itself, of half the jobs in that town.

IMPLICATIONS OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): My supplementary question to the minister is this: in light of the Olson report, in light of the report of the unemployment task force, and in light of the admission of the Minister of Employment and Immigration that the job situation is worsening, I wonder if the minister cannot confirm for this House that the real implications of the government policy are that the 120,000 unemployed in Atlantic Canada will have to ride the rails in the 1980s just as their ancestors did in the 1930s.

Mr. Nielsen: No rails to ride!

Some hon. Members: What rails?

Mr. Nielsen: Have to ride the twin track!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will have to improve his rhetoric if he intends to get any support in the Atlantic provinces.

* * *

HOUSING

REASONS FOR ADVICE GIVEN TO HOME OWNERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for housing arising out of his contradictory answers to two earlier questions in the House. In answer to the first question he admitted that he or his officials had been in touch with at least 200 home owners across the country and had suggested any decisions people might make regarding their homes "be deferred until after Thursday or Friday", that is, be deferred until after the budget is brought down in the House of Commons. Then the minister got up and told us that he did not know why he was telling them to defer their decisions because he did not know if there was going to be any aid in the budget.

● (1500)

Having told people to defer their decisions, and having admitted in this House that he did not know why he was telling them to defer their decisions, is the minister being so irresponsible as to use the authority of his office to cause people to defer actions on their houses on the off chance that something will happen, or does he in fact know that there is going to be something in the budget? And if there is going to be something in the budget, will he tell the House now what that is?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Even Allan doesn't know that.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition had had the opportunity, as I did, together with the chairman of the Quebec caucus, on September 15 to listen for an hour to petitions and cases of hardship presented to us by people who are genuinely concerned about the prospects of maintaining their homes and concerning their ability to meet new mortgage payments at new interest rates, I am sure he would have shared with me the observation I made at that time, and that I have made in the weeks since, that any prudent person faced with the real prospect and the real trauma of the loss of his or her home would wait until this government presents its economic plan, its financial plan for next year and for the years to come on Thursday of this week through the Minister of Finance.

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT'S PLANS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, a few moments ago in this House of Commons the minister responsible for housing told us he did not know what was going to be in the budget or if anything was going to be in the budget. That is what he told us. On October 15 in answer to a question posed by the hon. member for Oshawa, in referring to the government he said:

> It has indicated that in the budget it will protect those people.

Will the minister tell the House of Commons what it was he knew on October 15 that he does not know now? What program was the government committed to on October 15 when the minister gave that solemn commitment to the House of Commons that the government is not committed to now?

Mr. Nielsen: Come clean, Paul.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, if my memory serves me correctly, I believe the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition probably asked the first question of me earlier in this resumed Parliament, a question quite similar to the question that he has just asked again this afternoon. My response then and my response today is that this government's approach to the problems facing Canadians was guided by the commitment of this government in the Speech from the Throne when it took office, specifically, that we would move to assist people who need help the most, and we would do that first.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT ON MOTIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I regret this wriggling by the minister responsible for housing. As reported in Hansard for October 15 at page 11809, referring to the government, the minister said very clearly:

It has indicated that in the budget it will protect those people.

Those are the people who would be losing their homes referred to by the hon. member for Oshawa. The minister said that very clearly. On October 15 he knew there was a program in the budget. Today he does not know if there is a program in the budget.

The minister has been phoning Canadians, some of them, selectively. Not all. Some he chooses and others apparently he does not phone. Some 200 Canadians have been phoned and have been told to wait. Canadians who are concerned about losing their homes—and thousands already have lost their homes as a result of the policies of this government—want to know whether they should be waiting for a program that will be in the budget or whether the minister is simply talking through his hat. The best way for the government to clear this up would be for the minister to stand in his place and make a statement on motions.

Will the minister extend to all of the people of this country that selective service he has extended to the 200 people whom either he or his officials telephoned, and will he stand up on motions today in the House of Commons and tell us what help is intended for Canadians who are in danger of losing their homes, or who may be forced to sell their homes at a loss? Will the minister make that statement today to Canadians who have a right to know where this government stands?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the discouraging thing to me as the minister reporting to this House for Canada Mortgage and Housing is the apparent politicking in which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is engaging today. Since this Parliament resumed in the middle of October, there was the course of action that flowed from my offer through my office to attempt to assist people who are generally fearful of losing their homes. I made that offer in this House, and in my view I followed up on it.

The weekend following that offer, after protestations of calls to the office of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, I had my office contact every office of every hon. member on the other side of the House asking for those cases of the thousands of people professed to be in fear of losing their homes. I think six people responded that day, six people were in their offices who showed concern. We followed that up by telephone calls to constituency offices. I think I may have contacted a further six people. Since that offer, and during the last few weeks, the support for the thousands of people whom the right hon. gentleman refers to has boiled down to some 200 cases. We have attempted to respond to them, and I think we deserve some credit for that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS FROM HOME OWNERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, perhaps this clarifies the matter. Do I understand the minister to be saying, the minister who has apparently ignored the petitions containing thousands of names laid upon the Table of this House by myself and other members and by other members of the Opposition, that he is reserving his help—and not just his advice, but his help—to the 200 people he has been in touch with, or is there a general program which will be outlined in the budget that will be of help to Canadians who are faced with the prospect of losing their homes or selling them at a loss? Will there be a program, as there was going to be a program on October 15. If there is, will the minister stand in his place on motions today and tell the whole country what that program is, and not limit that advice to selective telephone calls?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am sure the answer will bear out my statement. Regarding the claim just made by the Leader of the Opposition, the claim that I have ignored thousands of people who have petitioned hon. members in this House, I would like to advise the right hon. member that I have personally in the last two weeks signed over 10,000 letters in response to those petitioners.

Mr. Clark: Saying what?

Mr. Cosgrove: I invite the hon. member to get one of them and to read my answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

AIRPORTS

CONTRACT TO OPERATE DUTY FREE STORES AT TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Transport Canada has just awarded the contract to operate duty free stores at Toronto International Airport to a foreign company despite having received six bids from Canadian firms.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fisher: Can the minister tell us why the American firm was selected since his own tender specifications and the briefings of his officials firmly stated, as early as 1979, that no foreign company would be allowed to bid? Can the minister further tell us what plans he has to compensate those six Canadian companies, several of which are in my constituency? They followed our rules, they bid legitimately, and each one of them spent thousands of dollars in the course of losing in this bidding process.

● (1510)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I doubt very much if foreign companies were prevented from bidding in the first place, because a number of them did. What happened was that when this was found, and when one of the foreign bidders appeared to be the winner, a decision was made to get the case to FIRA.

FIRA and my department developed a regime for duty-free shops. The regime indicates, for example, that the shares should be owned more than 51 per cent by Canadians, that the directors, except one, should be Canadian, that employees should be Canadian, that preference should be given to Canadian goods, etc. A regime was developed which is met by the company which now has the contract. I would like to indicate also that there was a difference of $13 million between the offer of the company that won the bid and the second one in line. My department is not indifferent to that kind of language.

* * *

CANADA LABOUR CODE

FEDERAL STANDARDS TO PROTECT HEALTH AND SAFETY OF WORKERS

Mr. Bruce Lonsdale (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Yesterday representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress, when attending a convention discussing health and safety regulations, met with several Members of Parliament asking for more uniform and stronger legislation in the health and safety field. Will the minister advise the House if he is giving consideration to amending the Canada Labour Code to implement these recommendations, and, particularly, if he is considering the establishment of federal minimum standards to protect the health and safety of all Canadian workers?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, submissions have been made to the Government of Canada by interested individuals, by labour organizations, and by employer groups. Those recommendations have been looked into very carefully, and those recommendations that are constructive and positive will find their expression in a proposed measure that hopefully will be introduced in the House in the new year. This government introduced the labour code just a few years ago, and it will be this Liberal government that will continue on the road leading to better protection of the Canadian worker, hopefully with the support of all members in this House.

QUERY RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF HEALTH AND SAFETY COMMISSION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the same minister which is related to the one just asked.

Because there are at least 17 different departments and agencies at the federal level involved in health and safety, creating a bureaucratic nightmare, while workers are killed or are dying as a result of occupational disease, is the minister making provision for the establishment of a federal government health and safety commission to consolidate and control all occupational safety and health programs at the national level and, if so, how much longer must we and the workers under federal jurisdiction in Canada have to wait for this very important decision to be announced?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, without being in the position of giving a very precise answer, the government is fully aware of the present condition and it is most anxious to resolve it in the best possible manner as recommended by a number of groups and, in particular, by the Canadian Labour Congress. As to the ability of proceeding, we would already have been able to proceed had the opposition not taken up so much time with Bill C-48.

INFORMATION ON DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that these proposed changes have been in the works for a year and a half so this is not the fault of us on this side of the House.

In view of the fact that Canada is the only industrial nation in the world which does not have national health protection standards for the workplace, is the minister prepared, through legislation and regulation, to identify and control dangerous substances on a national basis, and make all information available to all workers, which is the case in the United States?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, this matter, as well, is of particular concern to the government, and I can give the member assurance that we are looking into it to find satisfactory answers.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENTATION OF BUDGET—EARLY ADMITTANCE OF PUBLIC TO GALLERIES

Madam Speaker: I would like to ask permission of the House to allow the public to come into the galleries to be seated on Thursday night when we resume to listen to the budget at eight o'clock so there will be no delay of the budget, since we will have to hear the prayers and then proceed with the budget. If the House agrees we will let the public in a few minutes before eight o'clock. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

PETITION

MR. JELINEK—PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the one hundred and sixteenth Report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon.

member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek) and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. McKNIGHT—HOUSEHOLDER PRODUCED BY NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY MEMBERS

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, having given you notice of a question of privilege I wish to bring to your attention and request your guidance on a matter which brings into disrepute the integrity of this House.

My question of privilege arises from a householder printed by the House of Commons on House of Commons stationery and paid for by the taxpayers of Canada. I refer to this householder in my hand which I have no way of identifying. I have no idea of the constituency involved or which member will be using this householder to communicate with his or her constituents. There were several thousands of these in a truck in the basement of the Confederation Building. The only thing I can go by is that on that truck there was the name of the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), a member of the NDP.

This booklet contains the biographies of members of the NDP from Saskatchewan only, plus a quote from J. S. Woodsworth. I am not sure what he has to do with the present NDP. He was the leader of the CCF.

The cover is headed "Our West". I would draw to your attention page 3, headed "By way of Introduction". In the second paragraph this appears:

—even though some of you don't live in constituencies represented by a New Democrat . . . You are welcome to contact any one of us at anytime—

I feel that this is a misuse of taxpayers' funds to publish something that could better be done by party headquarters, and in most parties it is done that way. This is a political handout.

I would just like to read from a page of Hansard where Your Honour made a ruling in reply to a question on which I had asked you to give some guidance. At page 5325 of Hansard for December 4, 1980, you are recorded as stating:

There are rules regulating the contents of the householder mailings, but members must take full responsibility for material mailed under their frank and written on official stationery.

Those rules which you referred to and which we in this House, I would hope, would all attempt to follow include the rule under the Allowances and Services Printing Guidelines. In Section 6-5(b) it states in part:

—a political, partisan or party nature—

Anything in that category is unacceptable. I think when you look at this purported householder you will find it is of a political and partisan nature. Also under Section 6-5 (b), referring to unacceptable printing requests, we find:

(iv) election campaign material—

I would suggest this would fall into that class. It includes:

(v) publications normally made available by party headquarters.

I would also like to draw to your attention a document sent to all members regarding household mailings received in my office on October 8, sent on October 7, 1981. On the back page it states in part:

—the purpose of the four householder mailings available at Parliamentary expense is to enable Members to convey information to their constituents—

● (1520)

It says, Madam Speaker, "convey information to their constituents".

When I look at this mailer, Madam Speaker, I do not find which constituency it would go to. I do not see anything different in it that we and all political parties would ordinarily send out from our political headquarters. I do not see anything in it that would make me think it is anything different from a political publication.

The people of Canada support all of us equally in this House in our efforts to communicate with our constituents. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That the matter of the New Democratic Party pamphlet entitled "Our West", printed as a quarterly household mailing by the House of Commons printing office but clearly designed as a party handout of the type normally printed and distributed by the headquarters of a political party, and the disrepute such misuse of publicly-funded facilities is liable to bring to the House of Commons and its members, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I wish to join in echoing the sentiments of my hon. friend from Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). After examining the so-called householder and looking at the rules clearly established by this House and through the Management and Members' Services Committee, it would seem to me on the surface that the document which my hon. colleague is bringing to the attention of the House is one that constitutes an abuse of the rules. I believe the action that is undertaken by the members of the New Democratic Party is highly improper and it is, indeed, misleading. Because if one looks at pages 18 and 19, one might be led to believe that Saskatchewan has only seven Members of Parliament. I am referring to the seven New Democratic Party Members of Parliament.

I believe that it does constitute a blatant abuse of the rules which have been established by this House and by the committee. This is a service which has been provided to all Members of the House of Commons, as pointed out by the member for Kindersley-Lloydminster, and it is essentially for the purpose of communicating our activities, as members, to our constituents as well as the activities of the House of Commons.

It is generally ruled that anything of a partisan nature is not allowable, and therefore distribution of a document is essentially for the purpose of information rather than for the dissemination of anything which could be construed as politically partisan.

It is rather strange that the New Democratic Party, which is usually the first one to cry wolf when the rules and procedures of the House are being stretched or encroached upon, is the first one to take advantage of the situation and wallow in the public trough. This comes from a group which is sanctimonious; but on the first examination of this document it would seem to me that the actions that are being taken by the members of the NDP clearly constitute something less than honesty and could very well be ruled as being deceitful.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Mazankowski: In my view, this clearly constitutes an abuse of the privileges of members of this House and it is clearly a case of using public funds for partisan and narrow party purposes.

When I had the privilege of serving as Minister of Transport in this House a couple of years ago, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) was the first one to draw attention to the fact that there was a suggestion that we were infringing upon the rules of the House as a government party in the appointment of members to conduct a study into grain transportation as well as the matter of prairie branch lines.

At that time the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) admonished the members in our party, notwithstanding the fact that the precedent had been clearly established by previous governments that it was allowable that members of one party could be assigned to conduct specific tasks. It was done, for example, in the case of the Hon. Charles M. Drury when he was selected as constitutional adviser for the development of the constitution for the Northwest Territories. The hon. member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) was assigned a special responsibility by the government for the purpose of assisting the minister in developing the proper framework for negotiations with respect to northern and native land claims.

Notwithstanding that precedent, and notwithstanding the fact that the Speaker at that time ruled that it was not illegal but may be on the verge of being improper, our party acknowledged the admonition of the Speaker and undertook to pay the expenses which were involved as a result of the publication of this document which was commissioned by myself and undertaken by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mazankowski: I should say as well, to illustrate the fact that the document was intended to do a job that was clearly necessary to carry out public transportation policies, that after the matter had been clarified and the invoice had been paid and settled by the Progressive Conservative Party, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) asked if we would release the report to him and he would refund any costs that were involved as a result of the printing. I agreed to that and that has been done. The report is now public.

I think it clearly shows that while there may well have been some question about the methodology, the action taken by our party was sincere and was taken in a manner which was deemed to be necessary—that a clear statement of government policy at that time be undertaken.

I believe when you examine this matter, Madam Speaker, you might want to reflect on the exchange which took place at that time. Now the shoe is on the other foot. You may want to remind the members of the New Democratic Party of some of the rhetoric they espoused in the House of Commons when they took exception to the manner in which our work was being carried out.

I should say that the then hon. member for Nickel Belt, who fortunately or unfortunately is not with us at present, had some very harsh things to say about the process undertaken by us when we were in government. At page 2142 of Hansard, for December 7, 1979, he is reported as saying:

> The Conservative Party does not need to eat at the public trough to have a study done with a partisan slant.

I think it is quite obvious that while he may have some opinions about who is eating at the public trough, the then Minister of Transport did not see this as a partisan document. Nevertheless, that is behind us. I simply point that out to you, Madam Speaker.

There is an obligation, indeed a responsibility, on all of us to ensure that fairness and justice not only be done but appear to be done. It is equally important for all of us to accept our responsibility in ensuring that we work toward overcoming the cynicism that does prevail and is associated with Members of Parliament, indeed, the institution.

• (1530)

I humbly submit that the actions of the New Democratic Members of Parliament are such that they are not enhancing the calibre and the credibility of this institution but, in fact, are eroding confidence and adding to cynicism. I suggest that they should do what we did when there was a question of doubt. Rather than the public and the House of Commons paying for this highly partisan document, it should be paid for out of New Democratic coffers.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have listened with interest and, I must confess, with some degree of shock to the statements made by both the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) and the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I find it interesting that when viewing something which was done by his own party the hon. member for Vegreville could find that it was done with sincerity, integrity and honesty, while attributing to another member from another party that what was done by that member was done without those same three ingredients.

To begin with, I want to suggest that the document which has been placed before Your Honour is not a document which was in any way considered to be a political document. It was considered by the hon. member to be within the jurisdiction of his responsibility to inform people in his province of the role being played by members they elected. It was never intended—neither is it intended now—to place a slant on any of the roles of any of the other members. Neither did it make reference to that.

I suggest to Your Honour that if you were to undertake a review of the documents sent out under the names of various and many members of this House of Commons under the guise of reports, which we undoubtedly will now begin to do, you would find that there are very few, if any, that do not contain some degree of partisan material. For a member to rise in his place in an attempt to leave the impression that to indicate a degree of partisanship in any of the reports is somehow a departure from the normal practice is, in my judgment, to be quite untruthful.

I want to put to Your Honour something of which I am sure Your Honour is quite aware, that is, that the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) is as honest a man as there is in this House, that his integrity is without question, and that for some Tory in a sleazy way to try to indicate that this hon. member has done something wrong is appalling.

If the hon. members who have risen honestly believe that there is a need for Your Honour to review the document, we have no objection. If in your judgment Your Honour was to find that there has been some minor deviation from accepted norms we will, of course, accept that judgment. But I am confident that Your Honour will see through what is undoubtedly a partisan attempt by certain Conservative members to discredit the hard work of the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre, and I ask Your Honour to disregard those submissions and to find that there has been no deviation from accepted practice.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, my intervention will be very brief, but it will touch upon a matter which was not raised by the hon. member who suggested that there is a question of privilege here to be considered—and I speak in support of that submission—nor was it touched upon by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) did not touch on anything.

Mr. Deans: I got to the root of it.

Mr. Nielsen: Once again I want to draw your attention, Madam Speaker, to what I suppose one would call a memo of explanation or a memo of clarification which was sent around by Mr. A. Silverman dated October 7, 1981, part of which has already been quoted by the hon. member who raised this matter. In support of my submission to Your Honour I wish to emphasize the use of the words on page 2 "is to enable members to convey information to their constituents," it is not for the purpose of conveying information to the constituents of other members. Householder mailings are for the purpose of conveying information to a particular member's constituents. That is the narrow stricture placed upon the use of householder mailings. If it were not to be so interpreted, there would be nothing to prevent any member of this House from using his householder privileges to address mailings to the constituents of any other member or members of the House of Commons. I am sure that that was not the intention when the service was originally set up, and I am certain it would not be the wish of members of this House to impose that kind of added cost to the expense of running this place which, in the final analysis, is paid by the taxpayer.

Having laid that groundwork, may I again refer Your Honour to the introductory page in the offensive pamphlet. In the third paragraph at the second line it says "even though some of you don't live in constituencies represented by a New Democrat". It does not say "even though some of you might not live in a constituency represented by a New Democrat"; it says specifically "even though some of you don't live in constituencies represented by a New Democrat." There is a clear implication there that this political pamphlet has been mailed throughout the province of Saskatchewan to people who do not live in constituencies represented by New Democratic Party members. There can be no doubt, therefore, I submit, that the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) has raised a very valid question of privilege.

The additional point I want to make in support of a reference to committee has to do with a matter on which you, Madam Speaker, and I have exchanged some correspondence, namely, the proper use of members' franking privileges. These pamphlets are not distributed—I do not think this particular one is—by New Democratic members and their workers in the province of Saskatchewan, but I could be wrong there.

An hon. Member: You don't know.

Mr. Nielsen: The clear implication is that they have been mailed from this House of Commons under members' franking privileges. That was never intended.

Mr. Deans: How do you know that?

Mr. Nielsen: I do not know that, but I am asking hon. members and you, Madam Speaker, to draw the very clear inference that that conclusion is inescapable in the absence of any explanation, and there has been none, that mailing privileges of members have been abused as well.

The whole matter could be cleared up, as suggested by the hon. member for Vegreville. Although he did not make the direct suggestion, I do. The whole matter could be cleared up if the House leader of the New Democratic Party as a representative of his party would rise in his place and give the assurance that he is prepared to discharge any costs incurred in the printing and distribution of this political pamphlet.

Mr. Kempling: Including the postage.

Mr. Nielsen: Including the postage. In any event, since I do not anticipate that will happen, it seems to me, and it certainly is my strong submission to Your Honour, that there has been a solid case made out that goes beyond the mere requirement that Your Honour reach a conclusion that a prima facie case exists and therefore merits the matter's being sent to committee. There seems to be an inescapable conclusion which leaves no doubt that there has been an abuse. There has been no explanation forthcoming, and therefore I submit that your finding should be that there is a prima facie case and that the matter should be referred to committee.

Madam Speaker: I think there is one part of this question I can clear up quite readily. Although the mailing of the householders of Members of Parliament is a privilege, I do not believe it falls under the definition of privilege as described in Standing Order 17. I do not feel that this is a question of privilege in the sense that was invoked by the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). However, it seems it does raise a new aspect of our printing guidelines, which have recently been clarified. Perhaps we will need to clarify them even more after this occurrence.

● (1540)

Since I have been in the chair, the management and members' services committee have asked me to modify somewhat the rules and guidelines concerning householders in the sense that they felt it should not be left in the hands of bureaucrats to evaluate or tell Members of Parliament what they may or may not say to their constituents. I may say I fully agreed with that; it was putting a responsibility on the bureaucrats that did not belong to them.

Obviously if our printing service printed this particular householder, they looked at what they were printing to see whether there was some flagrant misuse of the privilege. Because they printed this one, they obviously felt it did not contravene the guidelines. Since we have removed that responsibility from the bureaucrats, I will not give it back to them. I will look at this householder against the guidelines set by the committee to see whether they need to be further clarified.

Members should keep in mind that what is partisan to one member is sometimes not partisan to another. It would have to be more than an opinion about a certain issue that was expressed in order for me or anyone else in this House to decide that it was partisan. But perhaps we will have to clarify the guidelines.

I have not completely read the householder in question. As I look at it, I see nothing at first glance that would permit me to say that it is a flagrant abuse of the privileges of Members of Parliament. However, I think it would be wise for me to look at it more carefully against the arguments presented to me in the House today, and perhaps, if I find there is reason for doing so, send a request to the members' services committee in general terms so that they will look at the guidelines and see whether there is a possibility of clarifying them in order to avoid this kind of occurrence or misinterpretation of the guidelines.

It is not always easy to interpret the guidelines. That is why we have removed that from the bureaucrats. I certainly do not want to be in the position of having to read all householders and determine as Speaker whether they are in accordance with the guidelines. We feel very strongly, and I think every member will support me in this position, that members themselves should take responsibility for what they write in these householders against the guidelines which they have made for themselves.

Basically the responsibility is with the member. The member bears the onus of having bypassed or gone beyond the guidelines, and that is it. He stands or falls on the fact that he is interpreting the use of his own privileges in a way that is considered to be proper. I will look at this question and take it under advisement.

MR. LEWIS—ALLEGED BREACH BY MINISTER OF BUDGET SECRECY

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I gave you notice of a question of privilege which arises out of today's question period. Today the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), who is responsible for housing, admitted in this House that officials of his department had advised some home owners to wait until Thursday or Friday of this week to resolve their difficulties. I submit that this is a clear breach of the traditional secrecy which surrounds budgets. There is a very large difference between Thursday and Friday to every Canadian home owner.

We have posed questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in this House. He has quite rightly not answered any questions in the House directly affecting the budget. As a matter of fact, on October 20, 1981, as reported at page 11964 of Hansard, the minister stated:

> It is easy enough to ask whether "A" will be in the budget and whether "B" will be in the budget and, by a process of daily questioning, presumably, the budget would be produced by instalments, and then hon. members would be saying, "Well, why have you broken budget secrecy?"

I submit that today the minister responsible for housing admitted to either "A" or "B". If his officials are calling members of the Canadian public, and he has admitted they are, with specific knowledge from the Minister of Finance, that is a breach by the Minister of Finance of budget secrecy. There is a second breach. When the minister responsible for housing directs his officials to make certain comments during phone calls to certain Canadian home owners, that is a breach. The third breach is the actual giving of advice to a Canadian home owner by an official in the minister's office.

Budget leaks are often considered to be something which triggers a large capital gain in the stock market, or something which could be said to be depriving the government of revenue. We are not talking here about a big kill on the stock market. We are talking about the basic right of Canadians to the same knowledge as every other Canadian. It is just as vital to the Canadian who owns a home, has contacted his or her Member of Parliament, has then had their name forwarded to the minister's office and receives a phone call from the minister's official, as it is to every other Canadian home owner. We have here a discrimination against every Canadian home owner who renews a mortgage or buys or sells a home.

We have information which has made us aware of an individual in Delta, B.C. with a mortgage expiring November 10, 1981, this very day, bearing interest at 13¾ per cent. The credit union offered to renew the mortgage at 20¼ per cent. The individual contacted his Member of Parliament, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen). The member contacted the minister's office and an official in the minister's office then contacted that individual. When I talked to that individual last night, he told me that he was advised to stall his renewal until Friday because something would happen Thursday night which would help him.

Madam Speaker: Order. Can the hon. member tell us whose privilege he is discussing? Is it his own privilege or that of his constituent? Constituents do not enjoy privileges under our Standing Orders in the sense that members of the House do. If the hon. member wants to help the Chair with regard to a finding in the case, he has to restrict himself to what constitutes privilege. Up until now I have heard nothing in his intervention which leads me to believe there is a question of privilege in this case.

Mr. Lewis: My research on the question of budget secrecy did not spell it out as a matter of the privilege of any one individual member, although I submit in this case we may have that. It is rather a question of the privilege of the House and every member of this House to be entitled to the same information at the same time. First, I submit it is a breach of the privileges of every member of this House. Budget secrecy seems to be handled in a different section in the authorities. Second, it is a breach of the privileges of every member of this House, including the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), who talked about an individual in his constituency who did not receive a call. It is a breach of our privileges when the government does not release the same information at the same time.

● (1550)

Both sides of the House represent different ridings in this country. We all have Canadian home owners in trouble. If the minister were to play fair and square with this House and with the people of Canada, he should issue a press release as soon as he knows what is in the budget and direct all of the institutions, whether it be trust companies, banks or credit unions, not to renew mortgages until after the budget. He should then come into this House and make the same point to the Canadian nation and to everybody at the same time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: This is so that the hon. members of the House get the same information as the officials in the minister's office.

The leading authority on the question of budget secrecy, what is called the Dalton case in Britain, is where the chancellor of the Exchequer casually mentioned to a reporter that tobacco taxes would rise prior to the budget announcement that evening. The reporter was privy to information that the House did not receive. As a result of the uproar, the minister was given the opportunity to resign. I am referring to the notes from the Parliamentary Library that were prepared for the House of Commons by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. The document is entitled "Background Information on Government Secrecy, Financial Measures and Parliamentary Secretaries". I draw your attention, Madam Speaker, to page 2572, it looks like to me—I'll confirm that because I am not really sure what it is.

Budget secrecy, in fact, is considered so confidential that even cabinet colleagues to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) are not made aware of the budget proposals until shortly before its presentation in Parliament, and even then they are often provided with only a general outline.

I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that if the minister of housing directed his officials to make telephone calls telling people not to do anything until Friday morning, in effect he is releasing information which is contained in the budget. It is one thing to utter a bland statement in the House that "everybody in the House should wait and see if we address the concerns of Canadians in dire straits"; but it is another thing for an official in the minister's office to phone somebody, based on information he received from a Member of Parliament, and tell that individual to wait until Friday.

If you were to find a breach of the privileges of this House, Madam Speaker, I would propose the following motion:

That the matter of the possession of budget information by members of the ministerial staff of the Minister of Public Works, the communication of budget information by those staff members to individual members of the public with mortgages due, specifically in telling them that mortgage help would be contained in the November 12 budget, and the violation of the necessary constitutional and parliamentary tradition of budget secrecy, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I submit we have not heard anything today that raises a question of privilege. The hon. member used the phrase "that the minister should be fair and square." If we were to be "fair and square" in this House, I think it has to be pointed out that the hon. members of the Liberal Party for the last few weeks have been subjected to a daily barrage from hon. members of the official opposition, in particular where we have heard ministers invited and encouraged to reveal what is in the budget. Today the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) repeatedly asked if a minister would disclose what would be in the budget. Now we have an hon. member of the opposition complaining about something the minister said that could somehow be interpreted as breaking the rule against disclosing anything that might be in the budget. As a result of this, a question of privilege has arisen. The most blatant, double standard I can conceive of is for hon. members to say "disclose", but then if you were to say anything, they say "shame, shame; terrible, terrible".

I suggest that nothing that the minister has stated, or that his officials have done, that we have been advised of indicates that a breach has occurred. The only thing that seems to have taken place is that people have raised issues with which they are concerned. They have even said, "Well, you have to wait for the answer and see what is in the budget." If some tidbit has been tossed out, what is it? What is the information that has been provided to these people? We have not heard anything about that. We have simply been advised that they have been told to wait. Everyone has been told to wait.

I submit this is a totally spurious point of privilege, Madam Speaker, and just a waste of the time of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): I shall be brief, Madam Speaker. The point that is at issue here has to do with the nature of the representation that was given, with the declared authority of the minister responsible for housing, by one of his officials to at least two individuals of the selective 200 that were telephoned by representatives of the minister responsible for housing.

In one case, a citizen in Delta, British Columbia, was explicity told that he should hold off until Friday. Obviously, that information was conveyed with knowledge by the official to the citizen that the budget would come down on Thursday. The inference drawn was that if the citizen were to hold off until Friday, which was the information authorized by the minister of housing and conveyed by his official, there would be something brought down in the budget that would be available to him.

A citizen of Halton was explicitly promised by an official authorized to impart such information by the minister of housing that there would be, and I quote, "help in the budget for people like you." It was not a suggestion that one should wait. It was a clear commitment that there would be help in the budget for people like the person in Halton that had a problem with his house.

The minister responsible for housing admitted in this House earlier today that he authorized those telephone calls. There can be no doubt at all about that. He has said that and he has accepted responsibility for it. He lamented that he did not call more people. However, he made it clear that he authorized those telephone calls. The telephone call he authorized in at least one case told a Canadian citizen explicitly that there would be help in the budget.

An hon. Member: How do you know that?

Mr. Clark: That clearly indicated that there was the communication of the nature of a budgetary provision that was not known to the rest of the people of Canada and not known to the House of Commons, but which was conveyed by an official of the minister's office, with the minister's authority.

An hon. Member: Pure inference.

Mr. Clark: That clearly breaches all of the practices in relation to budget secrecy that we have known in this House.

What makes it even more of an affront to hon. members of this House is that, as the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith) has just indicated, we have been asking time after time in this House, in light of the grave circumstances that Canadians face in the prospect of losing their homes, that if there were to be provisions in the budget with regard to aid for home owners, the exception be clearly made, as a result of all party agreement, to make an early announcement of such. That request has been denied frequently on the floor of the House. What they have refused to do by agreement, they have now done in breach of all budgetary practices.

We have here two instances. One, we have the selective release of information to particular individuals, in the face of a refusal to make a general statement of the nature of that budgetary provision; and second, on the authority of the minister responsible for housing, we have an official telephoning an individual Canadian whom he knew to be interested—not someone chosen at random, but someone whom he knew would benefit from the information—and conveying to that individual the explicit information that there would be help in the budget for people like that individual. When the minister authorized that call to be made, he authorized a call to be made by an official to a person whom he knew would benefit and would have an interest. I believe that falls clearly within the boundary of what has been described in the past as a breach of the privileges of the House and a breach in relation to budget secrecy.

• (1600)

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I should like to respond very briefly to some of the comments of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) on this matter.

An hon. Member: Right honourable!

Mr. Peterson: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition; excuse my breach of decorum. I believe there are only two points which we have to make on this. First, for many months now it has been a declared policy of the government to help people who find themselves in dire straits. My second point is also very simple. Anyone who finds himself in dire straits should, if acting prudently, wait until the budget comes down. That is all I have to say on the point.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, sometimes when I intervene on a question of privilege my remarks are somewhat lengthy. I will make my comments very brief today. I had hoped to raise my own question of privilege tomorrow as a result of question period today.

In response to what has just been said, I think it was a rather critical, serious statement that people in dire straits should wait until budget time. The hon. member is disagreeing very definitely with the minister responsible for housing, who repeatedly told the House that there was no need to wait for the budget. He told people to contact their Members of Parliament who will bring their messages directly to the minister responsible, not after budget, not at budget time, but immediately. The exact date of the communication from the minister directly to every Conservative Member of Parliament was October 23.

I raise a question of privilege which relates directly to each Member of Parliament, particularly Conservative members because they were the ones who received the memo from the minister asking them to act. In all good faith a number of us had the opportunity to return to our ridings to interview people who were in dire straits. It was not because we wanted to leave the House to return to our constituencies, but because the minister responsible for housing asked us if we would in a memo to our offices on October 23. Being interested in the people in dire straits I, as many other Conservative members, returned to my riding; I spent two days there. If this is not a question of privilege I do not know what is.

I took down 32 specific case histories at the request of the minister. My privilege in serving my constituents is seriously affected by this very issue. After two days I brought the case histories back to the House with all the mortgage information I was requested to obtain. I presented them to Madam Speaker in the form of a petition. At the same time, as recorded in Hansard on November 2, I delivered them across the House to the minister responsible because he had specifically requested them.

What has happened since that date is the basis of my question of privilege. My constituents have never heard one word, not a peep, not a telephone call, not a letter, not a communiqué, not a wire, not an indirect message through a mortgage company back to them, as a result of what appears to be the minister wasting the time of Members of Parliament when they could be better serving their constituents.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If that is what constitutes a question of privilege in the hon. member's mind, I must interrupt him to say that the manner in which a minister responds to a petition or to a request of any kind from a Member of Parliament may constitute a grievance of great importance in the hon. member's mind—and I do not deny that—but certainly it is not a question of privilege.

If the hon. member has a new argument relating to this question I can hear it, but I cannot allow him at this point, because I have heard enough speakers, to debate the question of hon. members not being satisfied that the minister has properly answered petitions, letters or requests or that some have received answers and others have not. This is not a matter which the Chair can determine. It might be a grievance on the part of a member, but that is all it is; it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, It is my understanding that a valid question of privilege is a question as to whether the law of contempt of Parliament has been breached. Therefore, I should like to put to you whether you judge it proper that a motion be put to the House on the matter I should now like to describe.

The minister of the government responsible for CMHC is well documented in Hansard and elsewhere as desiring that his fellow members forward information to him. I hasten to add that I am raising this matter with Madam Speaker on behalf of all hon. members of the House who have constituents in this deplorable situation. I now find that the minister's parliamentary staff has informed certain home owners by telephone of information which by every right, rule and precedent of the House should be the exclusive prerogative of the House. I am referring to the information contained in the much-delayed budget which the House can hopefully expect to come down on Thursday.

The reasons for confidentiality of the budget before it is brought down are well known and require little elaboration. It seems to me to be an equally valid point that the effect of the budget must be exerted and felt in a completely uniform manner throughout all sectors of the economy and society. If budget information is being prematurely passed on to certain individuals by the minister, information which Parliament must necessarily be advised of in the first instance by means of the budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), then the law of contempt of Parliament should clearly be cited and my rights as an individual member are surely being circumvented.

In view of there appearing to be sufficient cause to establish a prima facie case of breach of privilege, and in so far as it appears that privilege is sufficiently involved that it should take precedence over House business, I should like to support the motion that this matter be referred for full investigation into whether certain constituents in Canada have been privileged to receive certain information. I know for a fact that not one of the 32 people in the Peterborough area have ever received a telephone call. They were not aware until today that there was to be something in the budget at 8 p.m. this Thursday.

An hon. Member: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think I heard a sufficient number of interventions on the particular point. It is quite puzzling to me that most of the facts brought forward in the question of privilege seem to be of a hypothetical nature. The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) said in his summation that if the minister in fact instructed his officials to say a certain thing to constituents then he would feel, etc. This is hypothetical; no one knows whether the minister did. Even if a minister said a certain thing to a constituent, I do not feel that that in itself represents a question of privilege. I might add that we do not know for a fact whether the constituents reported exactly how the conversation with the official occurred. That too is somewhat hypothetical in the way it is presented to the House. Thus it makes it very difficult for me to say there is anything other than grievances on the part of hon. members who are complaining about the conduct of the minister or of officials of the minister. There is no question of privilege.

• (1610)

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) said it is quite clear that the minister authorized the calls. I think the hon. minister has acknowledged in the House that he has authorized officials of his department to call a number of constituents concerning their difficulties with their mortgages. In this particular matter I do not see any question of privilege either.

At any rate, we do not know if the minister did dictate the answer which the officials gave to those constituents. Even if he had, I think the minister is free to deal with these complaints in the manner which he chooses. Certainly the Chair cannot determine how the minister will deal with them. Unfortunately again, it might constitute a grievance on the part of hon. members on the other side of the House, but it certainly is not a question of privilege.

The other question which is being argued is that there has been a leak of the budgetary measures to come. We do not really know because we do not know what those measures are; but certain sentences pronounced by the minister are interpreted as being a leak or as giving advance knowledge to certain selective persons of what is contained in the budget.

I will not pass judgment on whether it is or is not a leak, or whether the words chosen were wise or cautious. I just want to remind hon. members that the matter of budget secrecy is a convention and is not a matter for the Chair to enforce. It is a convention. It is true that in Great Britain a certain minister resigned because he had—

Mr. Andre: We know what conventions are.

Madam Speaker: —inadvertently given some information to a reporter. He did resign. He felt that he had breached a convention—

Mr. Nielsen: He followed the honourable course.

Madam Speaker: —an important convention, and he did resign. That is a case which has merit in itself, and it has to be studied in the light of the facts that surrounded that particular action. Certainly the Speaker in Great Britain did not ask that minister to resign. That was the conclusion he gave to his own behaviour in those particular circumstances.

Mr. Nielsen: He did the honourable thing.

Madam Speaker: Therefore, I do not feel that in this particular case I can make any kind of pronouncement or judgment on the fact that the secrecy of the budget may have been breached.

I think hon. members probably have many grievances. They have expressed them. I listened to them carefully because I wanted to see whether there was really a matter of privilege in their grievances; but I am afraid that I cannot find it.

As for the arguments about discrimination I have said that the conduct of a minister, the way a minister reacts to complaints, whether he reacts in one manner with one person and differently with another person, is entirely on his own making. It has nothing to do with the kind of discipline that the Chair is at all capable of enforcing.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, as you characteristically do, you have drawn attention to some of the difficulties in the matter which was raised today. I want to speak only on a question of process here.

I am reminded by the expert who is temporarily the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin)—

Miss Bégin: And you were made to apologize one day.

Mr. Clark: —that I am not to comment on the judgment of the Speaker, nor do I intend to, Madam Speaker, as you know.

Miss Bégin: Then sit down.

Mr. Clark: However, Madam Speaker, if I might have the attention of the House, and if the Minister of National Health and Welfare could restrain herself, I would like to refer to some of the points you made which indicate that we may well—

Some hon. Members: No, no!

An hon. Member: Learn the rules.

Mr. Clark: —that may well—

Mr. Nielsen: You learn the rules and take your seat.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, there is a great deal of noise on the other side. I will proceed, now that there is some silence. You had indicated, Madam Speaker, that when we—

An hon. Member: You are all wet!

Mr. Andre: How would you know? Have you looked in the mirror lately?

Mr. Clark: The emigré from the Newfoundland legislature is speaking.

Mr. Nielsen: That's okay, Sir. When you are hunting grizzly bears, you don't go after chipmunks.

Mr. Clark: I am simply celebrating the good fortune of the legislative assembly of Newfoundland.

Mr. Simmons: Cheer up, Joe, it's a lot easier after puberty.

Mr. Clark: Let me return very briefly to the point that is here. First, as Your Honour correctly indicated, we cannot know if in fact there has been a breach of the budget until the budget has been brought down. Consequently, one of the things I want to do in rising now is to indicate that after the budget is brought down and after we have had an opportunity to see whether or not there is in fact aid for people affected by the mortgage situation, we may well want to raise this question again.

Another very real difficulty that Your Honour—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member does not have to give me notice of that kind of thing. After the budget is brought down, if he feels he has another point that he wants to raise, he may do it. However, I must remind him that the charge has to be very well substantiated, and that is it. I will look at something that is well substantiated. What I did say today was that most of the arguments were of a hypothetical nature, and it is really quite impossible for me to find any foundation to the question of privilege which was raised. I did rule on that question, and unless the hon. member has another point to raise which does not relate to what I just ruled on, I will not be able to hear him.

Mr. Clark: I have two matters to raise which are different and which flow from Your Honour's very careful comments. The first relates to the underlining of the fact, with which certainly all of us in the House agree, that convention clearly establishes that if there has been a breach of budget secrecy, the practice, as established by Mr. Dalton in Great Britain, is that the minister who broke the budget secrecy should resign. That, I think, is worth having on the record.

The other matter I think Your Honour may have suggested inadvertently, and which I would not want to rest on the record of the House, was that despite the authorization of the minister to make calls, if in fact those calls were made, the nature of those calls and any breach of budgetary secrecy which may flow from those calls would be the responsibility of the public servant involved and not that of the minister.

I am sure that was not what Your Honour intended to suggest, but I think that your remarks, on rereading them, may be open to that interpretation. Certainly I wanted to rise at the earliest possible opportunity to again underline the view which has been long held by those of us in this party, that when an official acts on the instruction of a minister, then the minister is responsible, by our system, for the actions of that official, and that that responsibility cannot be passed off to the official.

Madam Speaker: That is obvious. The Chair has no way of knowing who is responsible for what or of determining that. Therefore, this is not a matter that the Chair can determine at all.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MRS. MITCHELL—USE OF EXPRESSION "HONOURABLE LADY"

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order resulting from yesterday's question period, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) once again referred to women members in the House as "honourable lady" and "lady", and made other disparaging remarks, while consistently referring to male members—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mitchell: —as "honourable members".

An hon. Member: You are not a lady, eh?

Mrs. Mitchell: I am sure I represent the concerns of other hon. members in the House. Some hon. members in the House find this attitude offensive and inequitable.

The Oxford Dictionary defines "lady" as "ruling woman; woman to whom man is chivalrously devoted; mistress; woman belonging to the upper class". While the first term, "ruling woman" may refer to Your Honour, I think that the others are probably inappropriate.

Therefore, in light of modern times, and in view of the outdated and sexist overtones of both the terms "honourable lady" or "honourable gentleman", I want to ask Your Honour if you will declare these terms to be obsolete or unparliamentary and require that all members, regardless of sex, be referred to with equal respect as "honourable members".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Let the record show that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) approves.

Madam Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) for raising this problem. However, I think that she is probably referring to a circumstance in the House when I did rise in order to ask an hon. member not to address, between brackets, a member of the feminine sex as the "lady member". That is quite different from the "honourable lady" or the "honourable gentleman".

In my view, I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) did use an acceptable expression when he said the "honourable lady". He did say, "If I can say the honourable gentleman, it follows that I may say the honourable lady".

● (1620)

What I did not accept in the House, and I think the hon. member will recall the circumstances, was a member referring to a member of feminine sex as the lady member. I think that would be offensive because there are no lady members and no men members; they are simply members of this House.

I may add that in other parliaments certain expressions are accepted. For instance, "my hon. friend". If a member is referring to a Member of Parliament who sits on the same side of the House, he is called an hon. friend. If the member sits on the other side of the House, he is called the hon. gentleman. The expression "hon. friend" is limited, I understand, to those who sit on the same side of the House. Those are other practices.

I think we can accept the practice in this House of referring to members of the feminine sex as hon. ladies. That is not offensive, any more than it is offensive to refer to members of the masculine sex as hon. gentlemen.

* * *

METRIC CONVERSION

SUGGESTED PENALTIES FOR FOOD STORE OWNERS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I have a point of order. I am rising at the earliest opportunity. Yesterday I reported to this House that the maximum fine for using imperial weigh scales is $5,000 or two years in jail. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. McCauley) then rose to advise this House incorrectly that the fine was only $1,000.

Is there any way the parliamentary secretary might correct his statement in Hansard to show that the fine in 1982 will be $5,000 or two years in jail for using imperial weigh scales?

Madam Speaker: The Speaker has no way of forcing a member to correct statements made in the House. It would be up to the hon. member himself to make the correction if he feels that he should.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

MR. CLARK—EFFECTS OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to rise and lay upon the Table of the House several petitions. The first one is signed by 227 citizens of the city of St. Catharines. The second is signed by another 83 citizens of the city of St. Catharines. The third is signed by 155 residents of the Niagara area. The nature of each petition is to ask relief from the deliberate high interest rate policy of the Liberal government which is causing people to risk losing their homes. The purpose of the petitions is to seek action by the only agency in the land which can provide general relief, namely the Government of Canada. I submit these petitions in the hope that action will be taken by the Government of Canada.

[Translation]

In the same vein, Madam Speaker, I wish to present to the House a petition on behalf of the people of Sainte-Julie and surrounding area in the Province of Quebec. The petitioners—there are 2,862—are asking the government to help home owners and prospective home owners by lowering interest rates and improving conditions for mortgage payments.

[English]

MR. NIELSEN—MORATORIUM ON TAXATION OF NORTHERN BENEFITS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present two petitions on behalf of my constituents. They are signed by a total of 180 Yukon workers. These petitions indicate to the government that the removal of the moratorium on the taxation of northern benefits would be devastating. The nature of the demand is the continuation of the current moratorium on the taxation of northern benefits to block the tax grab of the government, and for the government to adopt a permanent policy to exempt from taxation all special allowances paid to workers in northern and remote areas of Canada, including, but not limited to, transportation allowances, housing allowances, meal allowances, northern allowances, special vacation benefits and cash allowances; and for the government to meet with the Canadian national directors of the United Steel Workers of America for the purpose of hearing the said Canadian national directors of the United Steel Workers of America on behalf of the over 10,000 steel workers who live and work in isolated communities.

The petitioners hope that in your examination of their petitions you will find the petitions to be in order, sense the urgency and desperation of their plea and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion and referral to a committee at the earliest possible moment.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,480, 2,747, 3,141, 3,158 and 3,182.

[Text]

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Question No. 2,480—Mr. Herbert:

Is the latest signed agreement between the government and the province of Ontario under the Canada Assistance Plan available to the public and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, the latest signed agreement between the Government of Canada and the province of Ontario under the Canada Assistance Plan is available to the public.

HANDBOOK DETAILING INMATE RIGHTS

Question No. 2,747—Mr. Jelinek:

Were handbooks detailing inmate rights distributed throughout Canada's security institutions and, if so, what was the (a) total number printed (b) total number distributed and how many were distributed to (i) each province (ii) each institution (iii) institutions or offices other than correctional (c) cost to date and what amount was for (i) research (ii) design and preparation (iii) printing (iv) distribution?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned: yes, (a) 25,115, (b) 22,115.

(i) Copies were not sent to the provinces, however each of the five regions of the CSC and its national headquarters had the following number of copies for distribution:

Atlantic	2,100
Quebec	6,700
Ontario	4,000
Prairies	3,400
Pacific	2,800
National headquarters	3,115

(ii)

Atlantic
Springhill Institution	625
Dorchester Penitentiary	625
Shulie Lake Institution	30
Westmorland Institution	100
Quebec
Regional Reception Centre	1,000
Archambault Institution	450
Leclerc Institution	500
Cowansville Institution	500
Federal Training Centre	400
Correctional Development Centre	125
Laval Institution	525
Montée St-François	200
Ste. Anne des Plaines	150
La Macaza Institution	175
CCC Pie IX	50
CCC Martineau	35
CCC Benoit XV	30
Ogilvy Centre	15
Ontario
Prison for Women	150
Regional Reception Centre	285
Regional Psychiatric Centre	100
Collins Bay Institution	415
Frontenac Institution	90
Joyceville Institution	465
Pittsburg Institution	85
Warkworth Institution	455
Millhaven Institution	265
Special Handling Unit	30
Bath Institution	90
Beaver Creek Correctional Camp	80
Prairies
Saskatchewan Penitentiary	470
Saskatchewan Farm	60
Oskana Centre	12
R.P.C. (Prairies)	41
Stony Mountain Institution	415
Rockwood Institution	52
Osborne Centre	16
Drumheller Institution	340
Drumheller Trailer Annex	27
Edmonton Maximum Institution	155
Bowden Institution	150
Portal—Altadore Centre	33
Grierson Centre	52

Note: The prairies regional headquarters are presently distributing 1,500 additional copies to institutions for new admissions, etc.

Pacific
Regional Psychiatric Centre	143
Kent Institution	301
Mountain Prison	241
William Head Institution	227
Mission Institution	348
Matsqui Institution	439
CCC Sumas	10
Ferndale Forestry Camp	65
Elbow Lake Forestry Camp	54
CCC Pandora	5
CCC Robson	5
National Parole Board	10
Regional Headquarters (Communications)	10

(iii) As copies were handed out on request to interested parties by regional headquarters, institutions and national headquarters, it is not possible to reply to this part of the question.

(c)

(i)	Research	$ 9,600
(ii)	Design and preparation	30,065
(iii)	Printing	8,098
(iv)	Distribution	413
		$ 48,176

PUBLIC DEBT OF GOVERNMENT

Question No. 3,141—Mr. Cossitt:

Since the tabling of the answer to question No. 2,597 on July 3, 1981, were additional retroactive revisions made to the gross and net public debt and, if so, for each year since Confederation, what was the gross and net public debt of the government?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): The requested revisions are available in the reply to question No. 2,751 tabled this day.

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

Question No. 3,158—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does the government withhold the interest owing on Canada Savings Bonds until November 1 of any year if the bond is cashed in after August 31 and before October 31 and, if so, what are all the reasons justifying this action?

2. Is the government considering changing this regulation to allow the interest owing to be paid on the date the bonds are cashed in at any time and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. For all regular interest Canada Savings Bonds, and old style fully registered CSBs dated prior to November 1, 1977, which are redeemed between August 31 and October 31 each year, the redemption agent deducts from the face value of the bonds the unearned portion of interest when remitting the redemption proceeds to the investor. This reduction of unearned interest is made due to the fact that the investor on November 1 is paid the interest for the entire year on his bonds by cheque or a direct deposit to his savings account. Each year it is necessary to have a two-month closed book period (September and October) during which time the public debt registers are balanced and the necessary interest payments are prepared on several hundred thousand CSB accounts. Such a closed book period is an essential requirement for any instrument, such as CSBs, which is cashable on demand.

2. The government is not giving consideration to eliminating the closed book period in order to pay investors holding regular interest or fully registered CSBs the full earned interest on their bonds when they are redeemed during September and October. Consideration, however, is being given to ways in which the closed book period may be shortened. This feature of CSBs is described on the back of the bond certificates and in the information brochures which are made available to all purchasers at the time new issues are on sale.

IMPACT OF INTEREST RATE INCREASES ON BORROWING COST

Question No. 3,182—Mr. Cossitt:

What has been the impact of increases in interest rates on the borrowing cost of the government since the October 1980 budget?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): The impact of increases in 1980-81 of interest rates on the borrowing cost of the government since the October, 1980 budget is estimated at $358 million. The additional interest cost was partly offset by reductions in borrowing from the levels estimated at the time of the budget. As a result, public debt charges in 1980-81 were $10,687 million, or only $287 million above the October, 1980 budget estimate of $10,400 million.

* * *

[English]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 2,751 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 2,751 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Agreed and tabled forthwith.

[Text]

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS SINCE CONFEDERATION

Question No. 2,751—Mr. Cossitt:

For each year since Confederation, on a public accounts basis, what was the (a) spending (b) revenue (c) surplus or deficit of the government?

Return tabled.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed, from Monday, November 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have been looking forward to speaking on third reading for some time. We have spent much time on this bill. Some of that time was usefully employed, although major changes were not made and the bill has in many ways been tidied up.

Before I get into a discussion of the principles of this bill, principles that we still find objectionable, I would like to correct the record, so to speak. In the presentation made last night by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), he said that when the matter was before the committee the suggestion was made that the committee travel to those provinces and the northern territories most affected by the bill. He said that move had been objected to by members of this party.

That is not correct and he knows that full well. I believe he would appreciate the record being straightened out. The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap is not so badly imbued with the rhetoric of his party that he is beyond redemption, like some other members, for instance the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), and I am sure he will see the error of his ways.

I have a few words about the process we have been going through for nearly a year concerning this bill. We first might object to the fact that there was no real consultation in the drafting of this bill with the governments and the provinces affected or with the governments of the territories affected. If we look at the history of the development of northern oil and gas legislation, we will see that in past times, for instance when Bill C-20 was before this House some years ago, there was a good deal of consultation with industry, with other governments at other levels and with people who would be affected generally. This was not the case when Bill C-48 was introduced. The government decided unilaterally what it wanted to do and it did not want to be dissuaded from any of its erroneous ideas by getting advice of other affected persons at the beginning.

I cannot fault the government on the time it has allowed for debate on this bill. In fact, the government has been more generous than usual. I rather suspect that is because the government has nothing else it would like to put before Parliament at this time and is just using this bill as a filler until the government eventually brings in its budget, and the Constitution, if it ever gets around to that.

• (1630)

Although we cannot fault the government on the amount of time allowed, we certainly can fault it for the fact that it has not been able to see fit to change its ideas in the least. I have the impression that what we have been doing for many months now is just beating our heads against a brick wall, because it has not budged one little bit.

The principles contained in the bill are exactly the same ones in the bill one year ago. It would be my supposition that the spirit of Parliament has been violated. Usually when new legislation comes before this House there is a process of give and take and compromise, but in this instance with Bill C-48 that parliamentary spirit of compromise has just not worked.

Bill C-48 is one of the most radical proposals brought before this House for many years. It is radical in many ways, but the government, egged on by its colleagues in the NDP, has imposed a very socialist framework on probably what in years to come will be the most important segment of the Canadian oil and gas industry. The government has certainly made no bones about the fact that this is the direction in which it wishes to proceed, the direction of state control over oil and gas in northern Canada and in those offshore areas in the maritime provinces.

We look at the objectionable principles contained in the bill and see that in regard to every piece of land on which oil and gas exploration and production will take place it is the government's desire to have government participation. There is not only the question of having a federal Crown corporation acting in normal competition with the private sector; what the government wants is government involvement in every little parcel of land. It does not want anyone to be free of having the state as a partner.

We see contained in the bill the concept of retroactive expropriation. Governments at the municipal, provincial and federal levels must have the power of expropriation. There are times, unfortunately, when this power has to be used. The example that most often comes to mind is the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway. Lands owned by individuals along the route of the seaway, because of national overriding interests, had to be taken away from those owners. In that circumstance proper compensation was generally paid.

What will be done through this bill is expropriation of something that has already been granted and is not needed because of an overriding national concern. There is no great need for the government to rush in and take away 25 per cent of the land holdings of companies. If the government wanted, it could apply this principle of a Crown reserve to new dispositions of oil and gas rights. But to go in and retroactively expropriate that which has been previously given to someone, without even proper compensation, is surely something we in this House as Canadians should not accept. If expropriation is to take place, surely one of the principles that we should hold dear is that proper compensation be given. We supported this principle in various motions put before the House at report stage. That is not to be the case with Bill C-48.

The government or the state will take over 25 per cent of an undertaking and then repay part of the moneys previously spent on exploration and development out of future production. What kind of a deal is that, I ask, Mr. Speaker? I submit that if we proceed with legislation like this citizens and corporations which operate in Canada will never again be able to take the government of the day at its word.

Years ago there were generous provisions for the disposition of oil and gas rights because that was deemed by the government of the day to be necessary. The government had to give people a fairly easy deal to get them into the country to spend the money and the time. A few years later when exploration results are reasonably successful, in comes the same government and says: "We have changed the rules of the game now. Sure, we said that to suck you in and get you to spend your money, but now that you have been successful and have found something worth having, we are going to take that away from you." What could be more improper?

Another principle of this bill relates to the way in which dispositions are to be made—the company to government deals that will have to be made. Previously, and as far as I know this has occurred in most provincial jurisdictions to date, oil and gas rights were disposed of in one of two ways, either on a first come, first served basis, or by public tender.

In the old days in the Northwest Territories, if you wanted to acquire an oil and gas lease you went in and physically marked out the boundaries of the area you wanted by blazing trees and putting in corner posts, very much in the same way as you would stake out a mineral claim. If you were the first person to go into an area and do that, you acquired title to that particular lease.

A little later on it was deemed unnecessary to go in and physically mark out the area. The country was divided into a series of areas or units along lines of latitude and longitude. The first person or corporation applying for one of these areas, providing the necessary fee was paid and an undertaking was given to do the necessary work, would receive the rights to that piece of land, on a first come, first served basis.

Another way of disposing of oil and gas rights is by public tender. If the owner of the oil and gas rights, the government, decides to dispose of a particular parcel of land, it is put up for disposal and every party is able to tender, either in terms of an amount of cash payable to the government or on a work commitment—the amount of work the interested party will do on that piece of land—and the one who makes the best offer publicly is the one to whom the oil and gas rights are given.

In the bill before us those two fair and equitable systems have been thrown out. If someone wants oil and gas rights, they have to see the minister or someone who works for him. They have to work out their own deal and it does not go to the person who gets there first. It does not necessarily go to the person who offers the best deal, nor is it publicly determined. It goes to the one who is the smoothest talker, perhaps. It may go to the one for whom the minister wants to do a special favour. I suggest there are many dangers involved—patronage and all the other things we associate with the banana republics. That is what will occur with this type of legislation.

• (1640)

Mr. Cullen: Nonsense.

Mr. Nickerson: If we examine the nature of the dispositions to be made, we find that the time-honoured Canadian concept of the oil and gas lease is no longer there. The nature of ownership will be something much less than fee-simple ownership or lease-type ownership at the exploration stage. In the past a company had an exploration permit in the north. Under this legislation it will have to enter into some form of exploration agreement, as the government calls it. Such an agreement will not give any title at all to that oil and gas or to the land.

An agreement under this legislation will only allow a company to do a limited amount of work on a specified piece of land. The exclusivity and degree of title is no longer there.

Even if this argument were valid in the case of exploration, in my opinion this approach should not be adopted when it comes to production. Instead of the 21-year lease or the 10-year lease for the purpose of production, such as was given out in the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and other places, the highest form of tenure available under the measure before us will be the so-called production licence. This licence is something similar to a driver's licence or a licence to brew home made beer. It will not give title to the land or the oil and gas thereunder.

We have seen in Bill C-48 a concept of preventing people from having proper tenure to a holding. The intent of the bill is to have explorers and producers of oil and gas act as some form of contractor for the government. In a country such as ours where property rights have always been dear to us, I think this is a step in the wrong direction. However, it is a step we see taking place because of the action of members on the other side and to my left. We are seeing the erosion of property rights, whether it be the right to the lot on which we have our house or the right to own oil and gas somewhere in this country. That is why property rights were taken out of the proposed Constitution. We on this side of the House have stated that property rights must be incorporated in the Constitution and should be incorporated in legislation such as Bill C-48.

Another principle in the bill is the concept of strict control by the government over every aspect of the oil and gas industry. The ministerial discretion provided for under this bill allows the minister to tell a company where it can explore, how it can explore, with whom it can explore, and if the minister is not satisfied he can say that Petro-Canada will do the exploration on the company's behalf and take over the management of that piece of land. The company will still be obliged to pay Petro-Canada for what is done even though it may not necessarily be what the company wishes. Under the provisions of this bill the minister can tell a company where to drill, how deep, and the manner in which the well is to be drilled. It will dictate all the technical terms under which the drilling is to be carried out. I believe the government has a mandate to ensure that wells are drilled in a safe manner and that oil is produced in accordance with good conservation procedures. But the government should not go beyond that.

Where does private enterprise and initiative fit into this bill? I suggest this measure provides for state control through the back door. This legislation is pretence. We are pretending we still have a free and independent oil and gas industry in Canada, but if hon. members opposite get their way this will not be the case because the industry will be under the control of the government. That is what they are working toward.

The manner in which the government will control profits and cash flow is objectionable to me. Not only does Bill C-48 provide for this, but it is contained in the National Energy Program under the provisions of the petroleum incentives program. The government does not want to conduct the affairs of the Canadian oil and gas industry in the old way, in which people would invest money in oil exploration and if they were lucky enough to find oil and gas in areas accessible to markets they would make a profit. I believe the industry should still be conducted in that way. As profits mount the better it is, since it provides incentive for people to invest further. However, the government does not view it this way. It wants to impose a very high level of taxation on the production of oil and gas.

The so-called progressive incremental royalty system virtually guarantees that a company will not make a greater return on investment in oil and gas than it would on a controlled utility. It maximizes the rate of return on an investment to a minimum. Therefore, the profit incentive will not be there for the investor.

The government wants to take a huge revenue, channel some of it back again through the petroleum incentives program and then decide which company will be eligible for the grant. The government is discarding the traditional way in which we have always proceeded with our business affairs in this country and is replacing it with strict control of the industry. It controls it from the initial investment through to the ultimate profits. That is the basic plan behind Bill C-48.

I believe the real reason why these measures are being put into place was given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) in a speech he made recently in Sherbrooke. It is a speech which was reported to this House by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

● (1650)

There seems to be the idea that the hinterland of Canada, which is any place outside the Montreal or Toronto areas, exists for the benefit of that central area. I am not really talking about this in geographical terms, but I am trying to picture a big Liberal cesspool some place which is just sucking in moneys from all over the rest of Canada. The idea is that no place outside this central area gets too powerful or has any real say; control is to be exercised by the government here in Ottawa, and those other areas in the country have to be content with being told what to do, what investments are to be made in the areas and what little profits can remain there, and everything else comes back to Ottawa. There is a very centralized and bureaucratic control over certain parts of Canada from which the Liberal government does not draw many of its supporters.

Now I would like to make a few comments about the Canada lands. We have talked about this subject at some length, and there have been many objections from this side of the House about the use of the term "Canada lands." My colleague the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) has spoken on several occasions in this House about the rights of the Atlantic provinces. The hon. member has dwelt at great length on the historical and legal claims those provinces have to the areas off their shores. I think all of us know that this matter will eventually be decided in the courts, and it might be a little premature for the Government of Canada to assume what the results of those findings at law will be. I suspect that at least some of the views put forward by the Atlantic provinces will be upheld by the Canadian courts.

With respect to the Atlantic provinces, the government at least made an offer to share revenues. I suppose the reason it did this was so that the matter would not be pursued at law. The government at least made an offer to share revenues derived from the exploitation or possible exploitation of oil and gas in those areas with the provinces concerned.

However, the balance of the Canada lands is basically the territorial lands of the Yukon and Northwest Territories. As limited as the government was in its generosity to Atlantic Canada, it is prepared to extend absolutely nothing to the territories. This is an indecent grab from a defenceless people. If the Atlantic provinces did not have the law on their side, I am sure they would be treated in a manner similar to the disgusting manner in which the people of the two northern territories have been treated.

I listened with interest to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Kelly) when he spoke about Bill C-48. I am going to cut out his speech and use it during my next election campaign. He gave a very lucid explanation of the view of the Liberal party as to what should happen in the Canadian north. He was very proud of the fact that the policy of the people on his side of the House is to exploit and control the territories. In no way does he ever see responsible government in those territories. In no way does he ever see the attainment of provincial status and the ownership of resources, which is the one thing that binds every other Canadian province together. He was quite frank when he stated that the oil, gas and mineral resources of the north, the agricultural land and everything else should, in perpetuity, belong to the federal government. That is something I would never accept, and I do not think anyone else living in the northern territories of Canada could bring himself to accept it either.

In an earlier presentation to the House with respect to one of the motions we moved, I brought the attention of the House to the fact that if things go the way they possibly might, as bad as the colonial system of government in the north is right now, we might end up with an even worse system. In such a worse system the government of the north would not be conducted by bureaucracy and by government department as it is at present, but would be conducted by Petro-Canada, a commercial Crown corporation—

Mrs. Mitchell: Multinationals, maybe?

Mr. Nickerson: —and that, in my opinion, would be the most detrimental thing that could happen. I make the analogy of the government of Rupert's Land, which was conducted by the Hudson's Bay Company, or the government of what is now known as Indonesia, which was conducted by the Dutch East India Company. That is the type of thing into which we could get ourselves.

The hon. lady to my left asks about multinationals. I have dealt with that before. In the case of Petro-Canada the Crown is there as a regulator and as an operator at the same time and cannot properly undertake its regulatory function. However, in the case of a large multinational oil company the government can exercise its function of a regulator in a proper manner because such corporations are subject to laws of general application. In the case of Petro-Canada, we have already seen that the laws can be changed at will by the government. The government has justified this by saying that Petro-Canada does not have to obey the normal laws of the country because that is the government's chosen instrument; that it is acting in the best interests of the nation; and that therefore we can forget the rights of the people who live in the area concerned, and Petro-Canada can bulldoze right over them.

It is the view of hon. members in my party that the territories should develop economically and constitutionally. In the not too distant future we see the creation of provinces in the north. We see those provinces joining the Canadian confederation. I hope I am around to see that achievement. I hope I am around when the thousands of people who live in the north under the colonial jurisdiction of the Ministry of Indian Affairs and Northern Development eventually join Canada in confederation and are the same as any other citizens of this great country. If that is to happen, the governments of those new provinces must have access to proper revenues with which to conduct government. If the oil, gas and mineral resources are alienated in the way suggested by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board, there will never be a proper government in that area.

My colleagues on this side of the House have described how for many years the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan had to fight to get access to resources in order to provide all the conveniences and necessities of government in that area, and we look forward to the same thing for the territories. We do not look forward to being tied to federal purse strings but to having sufficient revenues to conduct the affairs of autonomous government. That is not to say that we would not be prepared to share with the rest of Canada. We suggest that the federal authorities there retain reasonable powers of taxation to derive from those areas revenues sufficient for their purposes, but we do not want the resources and revenues of the north used to fill the Liberal cesspool to which I referred earlier.

● (1700)

I referred on previous occasions to the trust nature of ownership of resources in the north. It is the considered opinion of myself and those on this side of the House that the land of the territories is held in trust for the eventual provinces to be established there and for the people who will reside in those areas.

I do not want to pursue the arguments over and over; we have made them on several occasions. However, I would like to quote from an editorial in the Yukon News of October 28, 1981 headlined "Yukoners blind to resource robbery". I do not think they are blind to what is going on. The Yukoners I talked to know full well the intentions of the Liberal government. I quote:

> This existing situation represents a trust . . . we have placed in the hands of the federal government the Yukon's dowry of the future.
>
> In olden times, a threat against a daughter's dowry was inexcusable, the dowry protected at all costs because it was the only way a daughter could make a "good" marriage.
>
> So should Yukoners be standing up to protect their dowry, their assurement of entry into the brotherhood of the provinces.

That is the gist of what we have said on many occasions. If these areas of Canada are to come into confederation and have their rightful role in the future of Canada, they cannot have stripped from them now by way of Bill C-48 those things which will enable them to become full provinces.

The other day the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) suggested that what the government was doing was grabbing everything it could right now, and then if at some future time it was forced into the position of having to grant provincial status, it would be handing out to the governments of the new provinces at that time a sucked out lemon. That is the way the hon. gentleman put it and I suggest to you the analogy is to be respected.

By way of Bill C-48 and other legislation and policies put forward by this government, I suggest that in the north they are sewing the seeds of bitterness. I hope that it will not be a tearful harvest. If they are not prepared at this time to at least vest within the territories some degree of ownership over their own resources, they should be prepared to enter into a revenue-sharing agreement of the nature proposed for the offshore provinces. There is absolutely no reason why that should not be done.

I suspect there is a propensity on the part of all Members of Parliament, with the possible exception of the cabinet, that something along these lines should be done. Revenue-sharing is quite reasonable and attainable. We can work out some form of compromise on a formula to be used.

Although the government is not prepared to write the provisions of a revenue-sharing agreement within Bill C-48, I urge that it use some other mechanism whereby this can be done and a certain amount of discretionary income can be granted to the northern territories so they do not have to come back time after time, hat in hand, to the federal treasury in Ottawa. When they do that and have their budget carried within the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, it puts them continuously under the thumb of that department. There is a situation whereby duly elected members are not able to carry out the wishes of the constituents but rather are obliged to follow financial and other dictates of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro).

I see you signalling to me, Mr. Speaker. According to my estimate, I have 20 minutes left. Is that correct?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It may be. If so, the Chair has been misinformed. When I took the chair, I was advised that the hon. member's remarks might be expected to expire at 5.07. I will verify that now. Is it correct that the hon. member began at 4.27?

Mr. Nickerson: Approximately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In that case I would make it 5.07 when his remarks would expire. I am sure the House would want to convenience the hon. member in order that he might finish his remarks by granting a couple of extra minutes. Otherwise, he would require unanimous consent to go beyond that time.

Mr. Nickerson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To properly conclude my presentation this afternoon would take quite a time. I know the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) has a lot of words of wisdom we should listen to. Therefore, I will not give members the benefits of the two or three pages of advice I have here. I do not know how much of that advice would prove useful to hon. members opposite. I am sure they would find it rather interesting. With Your Honour's indulgence, I will just sum up what will be the likely effects of this bill.

There are some minor good points in the bill. At least the industry will know where it stands. There is likely to be a bit more activity on the so-called Canada lands than at present. However, I do not think there will be anywhere near the amount of activity there would have been had the government laid down proper guidelines and legislation which would have encouraged development by investor-owned corporations and the initiative of people in the oil and gas industry. It has slowed down our goal of self-sufficiency. This slowing down process seems to be quite prevalent on the opposite side. You only have to look at the Norman Wells oil field expansion.

We have the utility concept of the oil and gas business in Canada. We have the idea that the oil and gas industry should have its rate of return controlled and that that industry will be controlled, or within that industry the major say will be had by the Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, in conjunction with certain other large organizations. The large, integrated oil companies that the NDP pretend to dislike so much will be the people running and principally engaged in the Canadian oil and gas business. The little guys will be out. Most are just about out now. They cannot put up with this situation.

Canadians in this business are largely having to look offshore. They are looking toward the United States. They have been driven out by actions of the Liberal government, supported by their friends, the NDP. They can get a much better deal in other jurisdictions.

In my opinion, with this bill we are sacrificing self-sufficiency or the rapid attainment thereof, Canadian enterprise, the energy future of Canada and the real future of the Canadian north. This is being done on the altar of left-wing idealism and bureaucratic aggrandizement.

• (1710)

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): I shall make my remarks as brief as I can, Mr. Speaker. In considering the serious consequences of the bill, I should like to start by making five points that I will deal with later in more detail concerning Bill C-48. This is the first time I have had the opportunity to speak on Bill C-48 so I shall try to include as many things as I can in as fast an order as possible.

The major concerns that are seen in Peterborough with regard to Bill C-48 are best described by a public interest research group emanating from Trent University and drawing from the community colleges, secondary schools, the private and public sector of Peterborough, a large municipal, federally-funded group of people, who try to keep themselves attuned to exactly what is going on, if at all possible, here in Ottawa.

I shall now outline their concerns regarding Bill C-48. They are trying to alert the people of Ontario in particular, since they are directly concerned with that area and they are known as the Ontario public interest research group, to the importance of defending native rights in the northern environment. They are gravely concerned that this bill will have a detrimental effect on those two items. They also maintain that this bill makes a mockery of land claim negotiations. I think some of those concerns have been expressed by my colleagues. They are really concerned that it gives the minister immense powers, to use their words, and it confirms the colonial status of the north. They go on further to say that it stops the progress of responsible government. I have no doubt about that at all. It contravenes the charter of rights, whatever that charter will be when it is returned to the House. They are still concerned that it does contravene many things in what was supposed to be our charter of rights. We will have to wait and see what is in it when it returns. With all due sincerity and respect, they have asked that this bill be withdrawn.

Fortunately at third reading, and as probably one of the last persons to speak on the bill, I am a little reticent to admit that it will be withdrawn, but I should like to point out some of the concerns from central Canada and specifically from the Peterborough area.

It is my sincere conviction that this Liberal government is attempting to put into place the means to create what I consider a socialist republic here in Canada. It intends to impose this plan of converting this nation into a socialist republic through its budget, in concert with its national energy policy and its Constitution. I know this is bothering some hon. members opposite. It is transferring exploration and recovery incentives to Canada lands. This includes offshore regions. It brings in more revenue from oil and gas that will accrue primarily to the federal government.

It is reducing, without any question at all—and they cannot refute this on the other side of the House—the share of the oil companies by 12 per cent, companies that are already leaving for the U.S. and other parts of the world, either by choice or by force. This is in the Liberal government's interest because it will increase their direct share of the oil industry in Canada. Indeed, through this program they are to decrease incentives and subsidies to those companies that have minority Canadian ownership interest, which will lower their market value and thus make a takeover bid by the federal government easier in the future through the Canadian ownership account. At the same time, the Liberal government seeks to increase the proportion of oil and gas revenue from the provinces.

As nationalization of the oil companies located in Alberta, for example, increases, the provincial revenues decrease because federal oil companies do not have to pay provincial royalties, no matter where they are located. Consequently, the federal Liberal government is determined, in concert with their partners to the left in the House, to nationalize the Canadian oil industry by 1990 and put it in public ownership. The estimated cost to purchase just one firm will be approximately $10.5 million. This cost will be borne directly by the people through the Canadian ownership account.

The government seeks to perpetuate an irrevocable shift in the relationship between the two levels of government in Canada. It seeks to take advantage of the westward economic and demographic trends in this country in two ways: first, by removing the initiatives and awards of such shifts from the western centres to the benefit of the central government; and by disowning the promise of a new federation made to the province of Quebec and to the rest of the country. That promise did not include the moulding of a socialist republic with a strong central government.

This is not the true destiny of Canada, despite the socialist conversion we have undergone under successive Liberal governments which have imposed socialist programs upon the people and have had the people pay for them without having the courage to call them such in an election campaign, namely, the 1980 election.

What is happening here, Mr. Speaker, is that the unholy Liberal triumverate in charge of finance, energy and the Constitution is attempting to snatch power, financial power and constitutional power, from its traditional seat in the provincial legislatures. It will seek to do this at the expense of the unity of our country.

For what, Mr. Speaker? For a grand design born in the precocious and presumptuous mind of one man, and one man only, aided by his loyal and partisan engineers. He is determined to alter the basic, fundamental and historic association of this country, of this constitutional federation, of this democratic union of co-operative levels of government.

If the government was sincere in its stated aims in its energy program, it would not proceed in such a suspect, meddlesome and interfering manner. For one thing, it would not tie itself to the anomalous position of seeking to acquire industrial oil interests in Canada, at the same time seeking to reduce our dependence on oil through conservation. It would not pass on to the consumer the burden of its massive and hypocritical subsidization program to lower the cost of imported oil through the petroleum compensation charge. It would not force the people of Canada to buy foreign-owned oil companies to the detriment of the national deficit and the alienation of foreign resource capital.

The government would have made self-sufficiency in energy a true and legitimate national goal and would have eased the means to that end, rather than using this laudable aim as a cover for power grabbing and a platform for this government to acquire the resource control it needs to blueprint its disastrous vision for a socialist future for Canada.

The government is charting a dangerous direction in its present course. The people of Canada must realize this is a punitive exercise, not only upon them through their tax dollars, but against their futures. We may be witnessing here, Mr. Speaker, not only the perpetration of irrevocable damage to our oil industry—for it is our oil industry one way or the other—but we may also become horrified observers as Canadians to the destruction of our dearly held and highly valued constitutional system, our economic freedom, and our liberty to pursue prosperity through personal determination and not through the high-handed interference of a godlike central government. Like Hansel and Gretel, the Canadian taxpayer has been led into the woods by this government, and they will find out that it is they who are to be cooked, not the "goose" of the oil companies and other corporate interests.

Let me address Bill C-48 before us tonight on third reading, a bill to regulate oil and gas interests on all federal Crown lands and all of the offshore regions, as a member who represents some 90,000 people in the urban-rural area of Peterborough, Ontario. What will Bill C-48 and the other ramifications of the Liberal National Energy Program mean to the people in Peterborough, as it might mean to other people across Canada?

In the first place, it will mean that everyone who uses gasoline, whether to drive to work, to keep machinery running, manufacturers who run generators, elderly citizens who drive to the shops, will be paying, come January, $1.90 for a gallon of gasoline and perhaps $38 to fill the gas tanks of their cars. In Janurary, 1983, just over a year from now, they will be paying $2.40 per gallon, or $48 to fill the gas tanks of their cars. By January 1985, they will be paying $3.10 per gallon of gasoline and they will have to shell out something over $60 to fill the gasoline tanks of their cars.

• (1720)

This is in contrast to a government campaign to hold the price of gasoline in Canada down lower than 18 cents. It is shameful. Is this what Ontarians thought would happen when the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) announced his plan a year ago, along with the dismal $14 billion national annual deficit? Is this what they thought would transpire when the former government was brought down on the 18-cent per gallon increase? I do not think so. As painful and difficult as these increases will be to bear—and I know of no constituent of mine who will easily absorb this amount of increase—it is by no means the only significant and deleterious aspect of this bill and other parts of the National Energy Program.

In the first place, a bill such as this which essentially controls the nature, extent and conditions of oil and gas exploration and development in the remaining tracts of undeveloped land in Canada, must be seen in relation to Canada's energy package as a whole. Petro-Canada is an essential and some would say crucial part of the plan. Now some would say that it is a good thing Canada through its federal government is now directly involved in the high stakes energy industry. Some would say that finally Canada is doing something about this foreign ownership about which every Canadian child learns in school. But at what cost?

John Kenneth Galbraith said that it is "the imperatives of technology" and not "the images of ideology" which govern the shape and direction of our larger economic society. However, in the case of Canada's energy sector this does not seem to be true. The primary imperative in Canada must surely be—and I see little evidence anywhere of disagreement on this—the development of our energy resources so as eventually to achieve self-sufficiency in 10 or 15 years. That is agreed by all members of the House—self-sufficiency within a reasonable length of time. Our treasury cannot stand for long the immense drain of our financial resources or, rather, the financial resources of our taxpayers which go to pay for steadily increasing amounts of foreign oil that we find it necessary to import. Foreign oil now costs close to $50 per barrel, and we need 100,000 barrels per day. It is like asking for $50 from every man, woman and child in my riding just to pay for the imported oil for one day.

It is clear that we must reduce our imported oil for both these good reasons—the political reason and the financial reason. But why should the people of my riding, which is as typical a riding as one could find anywhere in Ontario, believe that the government has come to the most viable solution to the energy problems of price and supply? For example, they know that the same government which is offering wholesale nationalization of the Canadian oil and gas industry is the very government which brought the country from a surplus production of 76 million barrels of oil per year in 1974 to a shortfall of 65 million barrels per year in 1978. This will result in compensation payments of $2 billion next year alone. No matter what happens in the way of new strikes of oil, the lead time required for development dictates that one third of our total oil requirement will have to be imported by 1985. This means that even more money will be lifted from the pockets of Peterborough constituents, not just at the gas pumps, even if the pumps display the rather jaunty Petro-Canada maple leaf, but also through their taxes. By 1990 we will be paying up to $9 billion per year for imported oil. This is an alarming figure. It makes up just about 15 per cent of our gross national product. It pretty well takes care of all equalization payments to all provinces on a yearly basis. It goes a long way to servicing our $100 billion national debt. It is four times our largest ever defence contract. In short, it is an unconscionable amount of money to spend on imported oil.

How will our national oil company step in to help the Ontario consumer and taxpayer? What plans does it have for reducing this immense burden? What discount will Canadians enjoy at the pumps for having financed Petro-Canada to the tune of $4 billion?

The first of Petro-Canada's measures to help the Canadian consumer came in 1976 when it took over Arcan for $342 million. The second attempted acquisition to take over Husky Oil was an unmitigated disaster. In 1979 PetroCan took over Philips Petroleum at a cost of $1.5 billion. At the time it was the most expensive takeover in Canadian history. This year Petro-Canada took over Petrofina for another $1.5 billion at a share price which everyone agreed was grossly overvalued. There were distinct indications last spring that many people who should not have made a lot of money out of the deal in fact did. I know it is a satisfying thing to Canadians to have not just any oil company but the largest oil company in Canada owned and operated by the Canadian government. But I wonder, does the Canadian public realize fully the true nature of the beast?

To put the company in some sort of perspective, the fact is that if PetroCan chooses to exercise all its options under the bill, it will end up with 130 million acres of Canadian land. That immense tract of land, as one oil company representative put it, "is going to be sterilized". He said that the government will need a government building 853 storeys high to house all the geologists and oil engineers to exploit fully the amount of land they will be given. Is this a pleasing image to those taxpayers who favour the government's energy program? It will be an oil company run by the government—not the taxpayers who are by right and in effect the proper shareholders of the outfit—from an immense, inefficient, wasteful, featherbedded government office building 853 figurative storeys high.

The people of Canada should remember that it is Exxon, Gulf, Shell and all the other so-called villains of the scenario which are on the verge of bringing the tar sands on line at a cost of $12 billion of their own money, not that of the taxpayers. The people of Ontario should remember that Cold Lake and Alsands are worth $3.2 billion to Ontario alone. The people of Quebec should remember that these two projects—and shortly there will be four—are worth almost $1 billion each to the Quebec economy. But can any member opposite guarantee that with Petro-Canada's increasing involvement in the tar sands these benefits will flow to the extent and at the speed they would through private development? Will they assure the people of Ontario and Quebec that no more of their tax dollars will be spent on their mad rush toward takeovers at the expense of genuine development? Will they promise that another year will not be lost when Ontario's aging manufacturing industries sit idle waiting for new orders which might or might not come from the west or from the north while the government is embroiled in some new cash flow problem or development agreement?

During 1982 prices for gasoline will rise by 50 cents per gallon. This is the fact I would like to keep before the House and before the people of Ontario while I address this bill, this document which is essential to the furtherance of the government's socialist plans for an oil-related energy industry. I believe I hear the flutter of faint hearts on the other side. Lately murmers of "too much, too soon" have been heard. A major securities firm adviser recently said in the national press the following:

> The fallout from the National Energy Program in both Canada and the U.S. appears to have frightened the government somewhat and resulted in a decision to slow down their nationalistic and interventionist thrusts in other areas of the economy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1730)

Mr. Domm: Members on the other side of the House do not believe any of these people.

The retiring chairman of the Ontario Economic Council said recently that Canada is butchering its relations with the United States, and the cost may turn out to be very high. A senior partner of a major Toronto-based legal firm said last week that not since the Second World War have international currency and investment markets been as negative toward economic policies in Canada as they are right now. Canada's mind-boggling policies in energy, he said, expand the already skyhigh level of foreign debt at a time when real borrowing costs are the highest in 50 years. Here we are borrowing at the highest interest rates in 50 years to acquire companies that were already functioning under a free enterprise society, giving further evidence to my claim that we are moving into a publicly owned socialist republic here in Canada. This same man said that these Liberal socialist policies jeopardize trading relationships with the United States, the market which accounts for 70 per cent of Canada's foreign exchange earnings.

How are the members of this government going to explain the marvellous plan to nationalize the oil industry and lock up the remaining exploration land when Ontario and Quebec manufacturing-based workers are thrown out of jobs because of the retaliatory cancellations of orders from the United States? There is already evidence in the daily papers that the United States is considering adopting a hard line in retaliation against the actions of this government.

One cannot have it both ways. One must either take the benefits of a mutually cordial trading relationship with one's largest trading partner at the expense of some foreign ownership of the country, or one does not. If one chooses the latter, then I hope that hon. members opposite will enjoy eating their ideology. I hope workers in their ridings enjoy taking home pay cheques that are stuffed with socialist descriptions of Canada's national oil industry rather than with dollar bills. I hope they can explain to the drivers of cars in their ridings that they may be paying $5 at the pumps for a gallon of PetroCan gas but that it is really their own gas that they are buying.

The fact is that neither the circumstances nor the necessity have prompted Canada's National Energy Program or this bill, which is a part of it. Circumstances and necessity obviously dictate that development, supply and price are the essentials of our needed energy development, and private development, of course, responds best to these essentials, not some glorified post office wrapped in a glossy wrapping and called an oil company. Canadians everywhere, but particularly those in Ontario and Quebec, will find this out eventually. I am just sorry that it has to be the hard way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak on third reading of Bill C-48. Along with other members of the New Democratic Party, I have worked to point out the shortcomings and failures of this bill which pretends to usher in a new era of Canadian ownership and Canadian self-sufficiency in our oil and gas industry. My colleagues have shown how the Canadianization provisions are a fraud, and how we are missing the boat by failing to insist upon Canadian content in the spin-off industries. Bill C-48 does not make good economic sense for the Canadian people, although it will make some people very rich. As my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said, it is a matter of privilege triumphing over justice and equity.

However, in addition to opposing the bill on narrow economic terms, New Democrats oppose the bill because it looks to massive petroleum development without proper protection for the environment, or without adequate recognition of the rights of native people. This was symbolized by the failure of the committee to go north and hear directly the first-hand views of those northern people, in spite of having made an earlier promise to do so.

We should always remember that these two factors of Canadian life belong together. We cannot talk about the rights of Indian, Inuit and Métis people without considering their close relationship to the environment, to the land and the water near which they live. Preservation of the environment has to be the bottom line in any genuine concern for the aboriginal peoples of Canada. For these peoples, culture is not a separate, air tight compartment of life that has no relationship to the economy; rather, the culture is completely linked with the economy, and both depend upon the environment. Destroy the environment and one destroys the economy; destroy the economy and one destroys the culture; destroy the culture and one destroys the people.

When we look at reports of the way in which this act will be administered, we understand very well why the aboriginal peoples feel threatened. Although the regulations have not yet been made available, a September 19 report in the Montreal Gazette points out that the administration of oil and gas development in Canada will be handled by the Canada Oil and Gas Lands Administration, or COGLA for short. In theory, COGLA will report both to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and also to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), but the five-member policy committee will have only one member from Indian Affairs and Northern Development and three from Energy, Mines and Resources. No one on that committee will be from the Department of the Environment. No one will be from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. It will be completely dominated by a department that is geared and oriented toward development.

Much of the work of COGLA in determining when, where and how exploration, drilling and production will be carried on will be independent of any other government departments. The set-up of COGLA confirms what my colleague the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) meant when he talked about the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as one of the silent partners of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The other silent partners are the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). In spite of the massive impact that proposed developments will have on the environment, and in spite of clear hazards to land and water, the Minister of the Environment has remained silent throughout this debate.

My colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) has pointed to the silence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. For the past ten years we have had a moratorium on offshore exploration and drilling off the coast of British Columbia. Bill C-48 would allow that moratorium to be lifted, with potentially disastrous effects on the west coast fisheries. I ask, where is the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans? Why has he not assured the people of British Columbia that their fisheries will be protected? Why has he not insisted on amendments which would guarantee that protection? The bill fails to provide for mandatory public inquiries into oil spills, and it does not spell out what constitutes an oil spill. All of this is left to the discretion of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He is the man who is in charge of the environment. His track record in regulating, for example, the nuclear industry does not give us any confidence that he will take very good care of the environment as far as petroleum exploration and development are concerned.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development did at least speak on the bill. One of the things he said was that there would be no effect on land claims negotiations. When he appeared before the committee last June, my colleague the hon. member for Skeena asked him the following:

> —would you table for this committee a legal opinion that there is no prejudice with the passage of C-48 in relation to aboriginal negotiations and claims, and second, in relation to going from the old regime to the new regime, that negotiations are not precluded by either existing leases or those leases that are to come in the future.

I ask hon. members to note that he very clearly asked the minister to table a legal opinion. The minister replied:

> ● (1740)
>
> Yes, I can give a legal opinion.

He went on to say:

> If you want a legal opinion that states the obvious, I am prepared to try to get that legal opinion for you—sure.

In October the minister was asked about this legal opinion and why he had not tabled it. He replied:

> I do not know whether we are arguing about semantics or technicalities. When I mentioned a legal opinion and when I made that statement, I meant that I would obtain a view in writing based on a legal opinion I would receive as to what the situation was.

Either the minister has changed his mind about tabling the legal opinion and is not willing to admit it, or he did not understand a basic, straightforward question. In either case, he is failing the Canadian people who expect a little more leadership than that.

We want to see that legal opinion. We believe this legislation does affect land rights. Perhaps what the minister means is that there will be no effect on the minister's prejudiced understanding of those rights and the government's very narrow understanding of what land claims are all about.

If one looks at the policy paper the minister submitted to cabinet last year, it is a very different understanding of what the land claims negotiation is all about than many of the native peoples' understanding when they entered into these negotiations. On page 7 of the document entitled "Discussion Paper: Native Claims Policy—Comprehensive Claims", the minister said:

—the factors which have influenced reaching agreement in particular claims are, among others, the following: first, pressures from the imminence or anticipation of major development in the claimed area—

On page 9 we find this statement:

In respect of priority, efforts should be concentrated on those groups where potential for settlement is most promising and/or urgently required, leaving other groups for the future.

In other words, development will take place, and where development is looked to that is where land claims will be negotiated; but the aboriginal people will have to negotiate with a gun to their head.

Some of the guidelines listed in the annex to that document make clear how poorly the government understands what is needed. First, we find the following:

There must be extinguishment of all land claims based on aboriginal title in exchange for conferral of specific rights and benefits.

The aboriginal people have not wanted extinguishment. What they have fought for and demanded is recognition of their rights. The government is taking the position that yes, it owes them something but the government will only begin to talk about paying that something if the people agree the government does not owe it. The government wants extinguishment. The aboriginal people want recognition.

One of the ways Bill C-48 impacts is clearly spelled out in a recommendation which the minister made about negotiations. He said:

Holders of subsurface rights must have access to native lands where necessary for exploration, development and production of resources, subject to fair compensation as determined through timely negotiation and/or an arbitration system.

In other words, the Indian people will be handed a situation which they have to accept. They have to conduct their land claims negotiations within those very narrow definitions. For the government to try to maintain that Bill C-48 does not affect land claims negotiations only makes sense in the context of the narrow definition of the government trying to impose what those negotiations should be. It does not make sense in terms of the wider understanding of land claims which the aboriginal people themselves have had. Therefore, it is essential that we should have that legal opinion so that members of this House and the Canadian people can determine what the effect of Bill C-48 will be on aboriginal claims.

Over a year ago members of the Nuu Chah Nulth people on the west coast of Vancouver Island and the Haida people on the Queen Charlotte Islands submitted aboriginal claims to the minister. To date no answer has been received even as to whether those claims have been accepted for negotiation. Maybe in light of the government's policy of giving priority to areas where there is massive development projected, the people should hope for some kind of offshore drilling. While it would destroy their environment, it would advance the claims process. The government takes a cynical view of waiting for development before pushing ahead with negotiations.

In the minister's speech to the House on October 19, he pointed to the process by which the Norman Wells pipeline was approved. He pointed to that as an example of a balanced approach to the way in which the claims of aboriginal peoples are weighed and looked at as well as the demands of industry. As reported in Hansard at page 11920, the minister said:

This decision was not arrived at lightly. In weighing the elements of the Norman Wells project the government asked the Federal Environmental Review Assessment Office, commonly referred to as FERAO, to consider not just the environmental factors but also the socioeconomic aspects of that project. The National Energy Board also studied the project, and both agencies held public hearings both north and south of 60 and reported positively, subject to specific terms and conditions.

It seems the minister is suggesting that there was an adequate process and the views of the aboriginal people were heard. In the National Energy Board Reasons for Decision, on page 172 we find the following:

As to regional socioeconomic desirability, the Board finds that the proposed pipeline project may not provide the region with a net positive benefit but rather that its modest potential benefits and modest potential liabilities would balance out, at least in the short term.

The National Energy Board is very pro-development. The most the National Energy Board could hope for was that there might be some kind of a trade-off.

The environmental assessment and review process held hearings and reading from page 23 of its report we find:

At most public meetings a representative of the Dene Nation stated the Dene policy position that there should be no development before a land settlement is obtained in the western NWT. In each community, the band chiefs and councillors reinforced this position.

In each community the local spokespeople emphasized that there should be no development without a settlement.

Mr. Nickerson: Some of them did.

Mr. Manly: On page 81 of that same report we find the following:

The panel concluded that any resource development proposal would face the same opposition, and therefore, declined to make a recommendation which linked land settlement to the Norman Wells project.

In other words, recommendations were made without any clear consideration of the way in which this would affect the land negotiation process.

Last spring the government and all of us rejoiced in the fact that there was an all-party agreement to include recognition and affirmation of aboriginal and treaty rights in the Constitution. On this side we felt this would give these people some protection against the kind of legislation we see in Bill C-48. The Liberals give and the Liberals take away.

• (1750)

The problem with that process is that the government thinks it is giving something by putting that clause in, but in reality what it is doing is recognizing a right. These rights are recognized and affirmed, they are not things that can be given and taken away at will. Those are rights that at that time we were able to recognize. Now we are somehow being blinded by some vision of consensus which prevents us from recognizing those rights. Those rights are still there and they should still be recognized. We should not allow this bill to ride roughshod over the peoples of that area.

In conclusion, I should like to point out that this bill fails in its stated objective of bringing Canadian ownership and Canadian control to the oil and gas industry. It fails to maximize Canadian jobs in the spin-off industries, and it fails to do what it intends to do. In the process, it poses a great threat to the Canadian environment, and especially to the rights of the aboriginal peoples. This is not a good bill for the Canadian people and I believe it should be sent back to the drawing board where we should make a few more changes so it will look after the rights of the aboriginal peoples and our environment, and will provide the maximum benefit to the Canadian people as a whole.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak tonight, but after listening to a few of the NDP members today I must admit I found it very strange that they would stand in this House day after day berating the government for what it is or is not doing, particularly in view of the fact that they vote with the Conservative Party against the government on most of the amendments presented to this House, both in relation to this bill and others. This is the same party that helped vote the Conservatives out of office in December, 1979.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wright: I would like to deal with one member of the NDP in particular. The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) stood in this House last night and said he was concerned, along with his party, about small business. Where was that party when we stood in the House during the past year telling the government how many oil rigs were leaving the country? The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap stated, as recorded at page 12669 of Hansard for November 9, that this exodus of oil rigs was orchestrated. How do they justify that to the hundreds of people out of work and families who are separated because one member has to move to another country in order to support the family? For a member to make such a statement is unbelievable. He stands in this House day after day and says he supports small business. Where was he during the mail strike when everybody in this House knew that the Liberal party had no intention of settling that mail strike until the end of the summer?

This bill has a greater effect on small businesses in the oil industry than any other. It does not affect the multinationals because they do not care. It does not hurt the multinationals one iota. If you look at the history of multinationals in various countries you will see that they can increase or decrease their exploration funds as they need. That is not true of the independents, those small oil companies which started up ten or 15 years ago. Yet members of the Liberal party, just as members of the NDP, say they support small business. That is hogwash. They really do not care about small business. Four jobs of every ten are provided by small business. It is laughable when those members opposite tell us they support small business.

Ten or 15 years ago many of these small oil companies just got started. They did not represent very much, but hon. members opposite who remember those days will know where those small businesses went when they wanted funds. Did they go to Toronto or to Montreal? I suggest they did not. Many of them had to go south to get partners. That has been the unfortunate history of this country, supported by the Liberal government. One only has to go back to 1965 when basically these small companies really got started to verify that fact.

Let me now speak directly to the bill. In 1974 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said on a number of occasions that we will have oil self-sufficiency by 1980. We do not have oil self-sufficiency today and there is no possibility we will have it by 1990. The oil companies individually and as a group under IPAC and CPA have told this government there will not be oil self-sufficiency by 1990. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) stands in his place and says: "That is hogwash; of course we will." Then we get a report from the National Energy Board which says we will not have oil self-sufficiency and there is nothing to prove that we will.

At the present time we are consuming approximately 1.8 million barrels a day and we are producing 1.4 million barrels a day. We know our production is decreasing at the rate of 100,000 barrels per day. By 1990 our production will be down to 700,000 barrels per day. The National Energy Board has also confirmed that in 1990 we will still be consuming the same amount of crude oil, namely 1.8 million barrels per day. By 1990 we will need an additional 1.1 million barrels of crude oil per day. Where are we going to find it? Will we find it off the east coast? There is no proven find there presently. We have the possible production of 40,000 or 50,000 barrels a day at the present time, but we have no way of getting the oil out. Are we going to find that additional oil in the Arctic where Dome has just indicated an interesting discovery? Will that account for that 1.1 million barrels deficit in oil? There is little likelihood we will have oil self-sufficiency by 1990. The oil companies have been telling the government this and we have been saying the same, but the government refuses to believe us.

May I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, pursuant to special order made earlier, this House stands adjourned until Thursday at eight o'clock in the evening.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 12, 1981

The House met at 8 p.m.

• (2000)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance) moved:

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

He said: Madam Speaker, each year budget speeches have become longer and more complex. I intend to reverse this trend. Tonight I wish to speak urgently and directly to Parliament and, through Parliament, to all Canadians. I shall be tabling a comprehensive set of budget documents which expand in substantial detail on all that I shall say this evening.

Over the past two months, energy agreements have been concluded with the three western producing provinces. Last week agreement was reached on the Constitution. Two enormously divisive issues have been resolved and Canadians have shown once again how they can work together. Output and employment grew more over the past year than I expected at the time of my last budget. But major challenges still remain on the economic front.

We are confronted by severe inflation and extremely high interest rates. Inflation and interest rates at their present levels are bringing economic growth to a standstill and creating grave inequities among Canadians. The impact of high interest rates on home owners, small businesses and farmers is visible and damaging. But high interest rates flow from high inflation and there can be no deep and lasting relief until inflation can be reduced. We cannot hope to insulate ourselves from interest rate policies in other countries unless our inflation rate is lower than theirs.

I have attended international meetings throughout the past year and have been struck by the growing conviction around the world that growth cannot be sustained if inflation is not sharply diminished. My concern over unemployment has been heightened by the events of recent months. But we will generate less employment, less growth and more unemployment if we attempt to live with inflation than if we resolve once and for all to see it steadily reduced.

This budget has three themes: restraint, equity and economic renewal.

The first is the need for restraint on the part of the government and restraint on the part of all Canadians. For our part, I believe we must reduce our deficit and our borrowing requirements substantially—even more than I proposed a year ago. This will take pressures off credit markets, ease interest rates and provide room for needy borrowers. The control of the money supply by the Bank of Canada is an essential element in our strategy to fight inflation, but it has to be supported by greater fiscal restraint.

While the increase in our energy revenues will make an important contribution to this objective, I have had to seek additional revenues from the personal and corporate tax, although there is tax relief or no tax increase in this budget for the vast majority of Canadians. Most fundamentally, we are committed to restraining the growth of our spending over the next few years to less than the growth of the economy as a whole while still exercising our responsibilities for leadership and for caring.

But we also call upon all Canadians to accept the challenge of restraint, so that inflation is reduced, interest rates are brought down and growth resumed as soon as possible. I recognize that prices are now slowing down in many markets, and that incomes have not exploded as they did in 1974 and 1975. Canadians give evidence of recognizing that increases in energy prices and other real cost increases must be absorbed and cannot be automatically offset. But successive reductions in money income demands will be required year by year if declining inflation is to be achieved.

It is dramatically clear from everyday experience that excessive income demands on the part of those employed push up costs, reduce our competitiveness, and thereby deny employment to others. Our economic projections also illustrate the fact that higher money incomes for those with jobs add little or nothing to their real incomes in the short run and that the cumulative effect of excessive demands does damage to everyone's longer-run prospects for a higher standard of living.

• (2010)

I believe Canadians understand this. The problem is to provide assurance that some will not gain unfairly by refusing to constrain their demands while others who do act in the collective interest fall behind. This is clearly the responsibility of government.

Thus the second theme of this budget is equity. I dedicate myself and this government in this and succeeding years to maintaining a fundamental sense of fairness in our society. As evidence of that dedication, I am proposing a major overhaul of the personal tax system. I am also announcing a package of relief measures for home owners, small businesses and farmers most threatened by high interest rates.

[Translation]

If the first two themes of this budget are restraint and equity, the third theme must be renewal. The whole purpose of my fiscal strategy is to lay the basis for sustained growth in the future by clearing away the obstacles of high inflation and unprecedented interest rates.

This decade offers exceptional opportunities for strengthening and diversifying growth in every region of Canada. Expanded world markets, massive resource projects and a new industrial revolution: these are the vast development opportunities before us.

The policies and programs of the national government are major instruments for managing and exploiting these development opportunities and ensuring that the benefits are shared fairly. Harnessing the resources of the economy is a national enterprise which includes but extends beyond the interests of particular regions or sectors.

[English]

I will be tabling this evening a major policy document on economic development for Canada in the 1980s. The government intends to consult with the provinces, business and labour concerning the five priority areas of economic development policy set out in the document—industrial development, resource development, transportation, export promotion and human resources. In this decade of development we must work together to renew the foundation for the fair sharing of wealth and opportunity that binds us together as Canadians.

You may recall, Madam Speaker, that last year in my budget I announced a generous and new measure to stimulate development in slow growth regions of the country. I am, of course, referring to the 50 per cent investment tax credit for those companies wishing to invest in specially designated areas, the poorest areas of Canada.

I want to report a bit of news I received just a few minutes ago from my colleague, the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané), who informed me that because of this 50 per cent tax credit, Brunswick Mining and Smelting has decided to construct the most modern zinc smelter in the world on the north shore of New Brunswick. This project will involve a total investment of over $300 million, will create 1,500 person-years of work during the construction period, and 400 permanent jobs. It is the single most important investment ever on New Brunswick's north shore, an area that has long suffered the consequences of economic disparity. That is what this government means when it talks about economic development.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EQUITY AND INCENTIVES IN THE TAX SYSTEM

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I turn now to my tax proposals.

Many Canadians find our tax system unfair, and I agree with them. They realize that taxes are necessary to pay for important government services, but they feel that rates of tax are too high. They sense that others, the well-advised or the wealthy, very often pay less than their fair share.

A study of selective tax preferences available to individual taxpayers, which I am tabling tonight, shows that the revenues lost through selective write-offs, exemptions and deferrals are massive. Over $47 billion of personal income escaped tax in 1979. If these preferences were reduced or eliminated, rates of tax could be halved without reducing federal revenues. Some higher-income individuals are able to reduce their tax rate to well below that paid by lower-income Canadians. Some can escape paying taxes entirely. This is unacceptable.

[Translation]

A cutback of tax preferences will permit a lowering of tax rates. Madam Speaker, the simple truth is that if only half of income is taxed the rates have to be twice as high to yield the same revenue. Lower tax rates will improve the incentives to work, save and invest. These incentives will be direct, easy to understand and available to all. Lower tax rates will also reduce the tendency for taxpayers to devote wasteful effort and money in finding artful ways of avoiding tax. For these reasons I propose to end a number of special tax preferences, to restrict others, and to lower tax rates.

• (2020)

[English]

Specifically, I am eliminating tax deferrals through income-averaging annuities and the capital gains reserves and also repealing general averaging. In their place I am introducing a new forward-averaging provision. I am ensuring that a number of employee fringe benefits such as low-interest loans and employer-provided automobiles are properly taxable. I am reducing the tax deferral for investment income that accrues but is not received for an extended period. In addition, I am ending the deduction for carrying charges in excess of the related investment income. The details of these and other changes, which mainly affect high-income individuals, are given in the budget documents.

The revenue gained by these measures allows me to reduce tax rates over a broad range of taxable incomes for 5.8 million Canadians. Tax rates will be reduced for all taxable incomes over $11,120. At the top income levels, the marginal rate of federal tax will be reduced to 34 per cent. This means, Madam Speaker, that the maximum tax on each additional dollar of income will be about 50 cents on average depending on the province, compared with about 64 cents at present. This will also effectively limit the top tax rate on capital gains to 25 per cent.

I am also proposing tax reductions which will benefit lower-income Canadians. I am doing this by modifying the federal tax credit. This special credit is currently 9 per cent of tax with a minimum cut of $200 and a maximum of $500. This credit will now be set at $200 for all individuals, but married taxpayers will be able to claim an additional $200 for their dependent spouse. This means that for more than 620,000 lower-income families, the entitlement to the federal tax credit will be doubled to $400.

I am extending for another year the special tax remission to employees working in the north and isolated posts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Indexation of the personal income tax system will be retained. As a result the personal exemptions for a family of four will rise from $7,230 to $8,110 next year. The child tax credit will be increased from $261 to $293 per child. In total, indexing will benefit all individuals and provide a tax reduction worth over $3 billion next year.

[Translation]

As a result of indexing and the measures I have announced, a typical family of four will be able to earn about $15,000 in 1982 without paying any federal tax. The net effect of the restrictions on tax preferences and lower tax rates will be to increase tax revenues. But this revenue increase will come from those most able to pay. It will be concentrated among those who took advantage of the provisions now terminated. The majority of other taxpayers will see their taxes reduced, many significantly.

[English]

The corporate sector must also contribute to the reduction of the federal deficit in the fight against inflation. Lower inflation and lower interest rates will produce a more favourable economic climate for business in Canada. The major changes affecting corporations are a reduction of the depreciation write-offs in the year the property is acquired and a two-year extension of the surtax on large corporations. However, the surtax will be halved to 2.5 per cent in 1983. Even with these changes the Canadian tax system will provide significant incentives for investment and will continue to compare favourably with those in other industrialized countries.

In addition to these changes, I am proposing a number of measures to address the particular problems of small business. As part of this package I am exempting them from the corporate surtax. I am also increasing the limit for the low tax rate for small business corporations to $200,000 per year, and I am making the special benefits for small manufacturing corporations more readily available.

It is also my intention to move the federal manufacturers' sales tax to the wholesale level and to reduce the general sales tax rate accordingly.

I would also like to announce reductions in unemployment insurance premium rates. The rate for employees will be reduced from $1.80 per $100 of insurable earnings to $1.65. The employer rate will be reduced to $2.31.

In summary, the changes I am introducing tonight will bring about a major improvement in our tax system. They will raise needed revenue to reduce the federal deficit, ensure that the burden is shared equitably by all Canadians and minimize the detrimental impact of high tax rates on the efficient operation of our economy. I believe that these are goals that all Canadians can support.

RELIEF FOR THOSE MOST AFFECTED BY INTEREST RATES

Beyond the restoration of equity and incentive to the tax system, Madam Speaker, and the tax reductions which flow to millions of Canadians from the changes I am proposing, I would like to direct further relief to those most affected by high interest rates.

Abnormally high interest rates have had particularly adverse impact on any small businesses. I am thus extending the small business bond for one more year for firms in financial difficulty. The benefits of the measure will be extended to farmers, fishermen, and other unincorporated businesses as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Farmers who cannot afford to keep operating at current interest rates will be able to obtain loans from the Farm Credit Corporation at five percentage points below the normal Farm Credit Corporation lending rate, which would now be a special rate of 11¾ per cent. I have set aside $50 million to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to make these additional loans and to pay for the cost of the interest rebate.

• (2030)

I am also greatly concerned over the distress of home owners having to renew their mortgages at higher interest rates, and over the shortage of rental accommodation. I have sought ways of honouring the government's commitment to protect those most in need. I announce tonight that the government has set aside a further $350 million to fund the following measures.

Those home owners who have a reasonable amount of equity in their home can obtain relief by deferring part of the higher interest. The government is prepared to guarantee the interest deferred, within limits, when mortgage payments exceed 30 per cent of gross income.

Those home owners whose mortgage debt would reach unduly high levels as a result of interest deferral need further assistance. In those cases, the government proposes to pay for all or part of the interest deferred, up to a maximum of $3,000 a year.

In order to encourage the construction of rental housing, the government will provide interest-free loans of up to $7,500 per unit for 15,000 units allocated to tight markets across Canada.

My colleague, the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, will provide very shortly the details of these programs. He will also submit a bill to Parliament to obtain legislative authority for these measures and to make other changes to the National Housing Act.

You may remember, Madam Speaker, that when this Parliament was opened, the government stated in the Speech from the Throne that it would act to assist those unable to bear the burden of renegotiating their home mortgages in the present abnormal situation so that the spectre of foreclosure will be avoided. That was the commitment made in the Speech from the Throne. It is being fully discharged tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I want financial institutions, especially banks, to do more. I particularly want them to ensure that ample funds will be available to smaller borrowers at the lowest possible margin of cost over the rates which they pay to their depositors.

OTHER SPENDING PRIORITIES

There are other areas where additional spending is needed, Madam Speaker. We are prepared to provide substantial amounts of money to meet high priority needs. In tabling our economic development strategy for the 1980s we are providing a definitive blueprint to guide the economic renewal upon which this budget is predicated. We intend, Madam Speaker, to see that the required resources are directed in support of these priorities and their realization. In the fiscal plan that is tabled tonight $60 billion will have been allocated in support of economic and energy development in Canada over the term of that plan.

I also recall to your memory, Madam Speaker, another statement in the Speech from the Throne in which the government declared its intention to ensure that Canada plays a vigorous part in the world beyond our borders. That expectation was brilliantly realized in the past year as the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), as the chairman of the Ottawa Summit and as co-chairman of the Cancun Summit, did so much to project Canada's image abroad.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: We intend to back that up by concrete measures in this budget.

Large increases in our Defence and Foreign Aid spending result from our international commitments. In my view, it would be imprudent and shortsighted to go back on these commitments in the interest of budgetary restraint. In the case of defence, we have a commitment to NATO to achieve 3 per cent real growth in our defence expenditure in order to strengthen the security of the Alliance. With rapid increases in costs, this means that our defence spending will grow by 17 per cent this year and over 18 per cent next year.

In the case of foreign aid, we have reaffirmed at recent Summit meetings our commitment to reach the target of 0.5 per cent of GNP by 1985. We must recognize not only the strong claims on humanitarian grounds to assist the poorest countries of the Third World, but also that foreign aid is in our own longer term self-interest in an increasingly interdependent world.

[Translation]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

In other areas, however, we have had to seek some savings in order to achieve our target of fiscal restraint. Some restraint must be applied to our transfers to the provinces so they grow no more rapidly than our expenditures generally. There has been great concern that I was about to threaten the survival of our post-secondary education institutions or to destroy medicare, which, as Minister of National Health and Welfare, I introduced and saw passed in this House. These fears are without foundation.

[English]

The proposals which I will be tabling tonight will enable us to achieve the desired savings without affecting federal contributions to the financing of provincial medical care, hospital care and post-secondary education programs.

I am proposing to eliminate compensation for the 1972 revenue guarantee which was included in the Established Programs Financing arrangements in 1977.

I am proposing a revised and improved equalization system to replace the system that will expire on March 31, 1982.

I would stress again that transfers to the provinces over the next five years are still projected to grow at least as fast as the rest of our expenditures.

Moreover, the tax changes I have proposed will automatically increase provincial revenues, and I trust provinces will agree with me that the proposals are desirable. Indeed, the increase in provincial revenues during the first two years of the new arrangements will virtually offset the reduction in transfers due to the elimination of compensation for the 1972 revenue guarantee.

I am very hopeful that the provinces and the interested communities will find my proposals equitable. In the pursuit of restraint, I am asking no more of the provinces than I have imposed on the Government of Canada.

OTHER AREAS WHERE SAVINGS CAN BE ACHIEVED

Under the new expenditure plan the envelopes are set in the expectation that most new programs will have to be financed by reducing the cost of existing programs. But I would like to mention specific areas where we are planning significant savings.

● (2040)

We have been able to reduce the amount allocated to the Energy envelope and we have deferred certain expenditures from the Western Development Fund. The larger part of the Western Development Fund remains within the Economic Development envelope, and will be dedicated to the improvement of the western transportation system. The remaining portion of the fund has been transferred to the Social Affairs envelope, for use in improving the housing conditions and economic opportunities of our native peoples.

On October 16, the Post Office became a Crown Corporation. The new corporation has been instructed to eliminate the postal deficit by 1985-86. The increase in postal rates which has already been announced will begin this process. Further increases are likely to be required, but the major contribution should come from better service and improved efficiency.

We are, of course, extremely conscious of the need to reduce the costs of government. One step in this direction is the development of better ways of managing the government's physical assets such as land and buildings. We are also asking the Treasury Board to identify a $100 million reduction in overhead costs. This will reinforce the ongoing search for greater efficiency which is reflected in the fact that the authorized size of the public service this year is less than it was in 1975-76.

Finally, I would note that we expect a very sharp reduction in the growth of our interest costs from 38 per cent this year to less than 5 per cent in 1985-86. This is one of the major benefits of our efforts to reduce the deficit.

I would now like to table the budget documents, all in the interest of freedom of information.

The Budget—Mr. MacEachen

Madam Speaker: Does the minister have consent to table the budget documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUMMARY OF THE FISCAL PLAN

Mr. MacEachen: The documents are, first, the Budget in more Detail; second, Budget Papers and Notices of Ways and Means Motions; third, the Current Economic Situation and Prospects for the Canadian Economy in the Short and Medium Term; fourth, Fiscal Arrangements in the Eighties—proposals of the Government of Canada; fifth, Analysis of Federal Tax Expenditures for Individuals, and, finally, Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s.

I will be proceeding in the usual way with the introduction of bills to amend the tax laws. I would ask the consent of the House to include in Hansard the standard table which provides the projections of the government's fiscal position.

Madam Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It is so ordered.

The Fiscal Plan
Government of Canada
Summary Statement of Transactions[1]

	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86
	(millions of dollars)
Budgetary transactions
Revenues	45,398	54,310	64,960	74,525	82,655	91,745
Expenditures	−58,066	−67,650	−75,450	−84,075	−92,635	−101,950
Surplus or deficit (−)	−12,668	−13,340	−10,490	−9,550	−9,980	−10,205
Non-budgetary transactions
Loans, investments and advances	−523	−650	−850	−1,075	−1,265	−1,350
Specified purpose accounts	2,781	3,720	3,550	3,910	4,705	5,420
Other transactions	293	495	1,205	1,170	560	−230
Net source or requirement (−)	2,551	3,565	3,905	4,005	4,000	3,840
Financial requirements (excluding foreign exchange transactions)	−10,117	−9,775	−6,585	−5,545	−5,980	−6,365
Total outlays[2]	58,589	68,300	76,300	85,150	93,900	103,300

[1] For comparability, budgetary revenues and expenditures for 1980-81 and 1981-82 are adjusted to treat Canada Post revenues and expenditures as if this agency were under Crown corporation status throughout the period. The budgetary deficit and financial requirements are unaffected as a result of these adjustments.

[2] Total outlays are composed of budgetary expenditures plus loans, investments and advances.

Mr. MacEachen: The new spending targets contained in this budget grow less rapidly than the economy as a whole. As a percentage of GNP they decline from 20.6 per cent in 1981-82 to 19.2 per cent in 1985-86. On a comparable basis, the new outlays targets represent a lower percentage of GNP in each year than those shown in the last budget. This is clear evidence of intensified restraint. There are some who will still argue that we are spending too much. But it is not good enough to call for greater restraint and at the same time resist reductions in specific programs.

The new energy taxes, which are included in the Notices of Ways and Means Motions I am tabling tonight, will yield $900 million more in 1982-83 and $1.5 billion more in 1983-84 than the energy revenues projected in last year's budget.

The income tax changes I have announced tonight will increase our revenues by $1.4 billion in 1982-83 and by about $2 billion in 1983-84.

A year ago, I anticipated that our deficit as measured by our financial requirements for 1980-81 would be $12.2 billion; in the event it was $10.1 billion, about $2 billion less. I now expect that the deficit this fiscal year 1981-82, will also be much lower—$9.8 billion compared with the $11 billion projected a year ago.

To a large extent we did better in those years because the economy was growing faster than I had expected, but we used those increased revenues to decrease the deficit. We did not use them for additional spending programs. Now I have set myself the task of cutting back the deficit in the next two fiscal years, and this will be more difficult because the economy is growing more slowly. Specifically, I propose to reduce our financial requirements to $6.6 billion in 1982-83 and $5.5 billion in 1983-84.

Hon. members will recall that when I brought in the borrowing authority a few months ago, I asked the House for authority to borrow $14 billion, $3 billion of which was contingency and $11 billion was for real. The next bill I will be bringing in will have reduced that $11 billion to $6.6 billion. That is very sharp in substance and in signalling to the community that we are serious about our dedication to reducing interest rates and bringing down inflation.

CONCLUSION

Madam Speaker, I believe that the economic strategy contained in the budget is the surest, fairest response to the economic problems which confront us. It will not provide a quick fix; such magic is not available. It is only with care, determination and persistence that our economic and social goals can be realized. But we can now reasonably expect that the rate of inflation will gradually come down from the peak levels reached this summer. Already we have seen some decline in interest rates over the past few weeks.

Today we had a significant decline in the bank rate, no doubt in expectation of the constructive character of this budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: We can look forward to continuing declines in interest rates as the rate of inflation slows. That is the fundamental solution to the problems faced by home owners and farmers and small business, though the specific measures of relief I have announced tonight will be helpful in the period of transition.

During this period, growth is likely to be slower and unemployment higher than we would like to see. But only a decline in the rate of inflation and the rate of interest can lay the basis for renewed and sustained growth in the future.

● (2050)

[Translation]

I recognize, of course, that we live in an uncertain world. We could do worse than I have projected, for reasons which lie totally outside our control or because the self-defeating battle for higher incomes becomes more intense. I am sure we would do worse if we lost our resolve to keep on fighting against inflation. Such a retreat would not only lead to more inflation and higher interest rates, it would damage our prospects for sustained economic growth in the future. I have been urged by some to worry less about inflation and minister to unemployment and growth. There are siren qualities to these entreaties that could well lead us onto the rocks.

[English]

We could also do a good deal better than I have projected. Inflation would come down more rapidly if international prices drop and if larger gains in productivity can be achieved. It certainly would if Canadians were prepared to take smaller increases in their money incomes, either in the expectation that prices will rise less rapidly or in order to keep their jobs. Excessive income demands can obviously make it more difficult for employers to maintain their operations when markets weaken. We are beginning to see cases where jobs are being preserved by the giving up of some contractual benefits. This seems to me a fairer way of sharing the burden. But everyone would be better off if more restraint had been shown in the first place.

I have been urged by some to resort to income and price controls to bring down inflation and to exchange controls to prevent depreciation of the dollar. But I am sure that Canadians do not want this much intervention by the government in their affairs except in an emergency. Exchange controls simply won't work. Many are bound to regard price and income controls as unfair, and therefore incompatible with my commitment to equity. The AIB controls helped resolve the emergency situation of 1975, but did not solve the underlying problems. This time we need a more lasting solution.

The key which can open the door to our future is a change in our attitudes and expectations. We will move much more quickly to non-inflationary growth if the conviction spreads that we are heading back towards stable prices and lower interest rates. The whole process will be much easier if everyone feels he is being treated fairly. That is why I have put so much emphasis on restraint with equity. I have also emphasized the promise of renewal. There are great opportunities for us to exploit. It is time to overcome our anxieties and regain our confidence in ourselves and in our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I have listened to the minister's speech. He calls this his third budget speech, but I think we should draw to the attention of the House that this is probably the first budget speech he has made. The first time he called it a budget speech, he took all the goodies out of another budget speech that had been presented to the House a few months before; the second was a budget speech that was prepared by his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). It is very interesting now to look at this budget and try to get some indication of what the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) thinks.

I would be very careful in reading this budget speech. I am sure that, as you listened to it, you thought some parts of it are good, that there are some nice sounding elements in it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: I caution hon. members opposite, the Liberal members who are applauding with such pleasure, that they still have to go back to their ridings; they still have to meet the people who elected them to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: I think hon. members will find, as they read between the lines and as they analyse these figures, that they have had another game played on them. The figures that are in the budget today are figures that the minister is using to play with the people of Canada. It is another shell game that the minister is playing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: I will outline some of these concerns. There have been a number of ministers over the past month or two who have been saying, "Wait until the Minister of Finance gives his budget speech". They did not want to respond to the problems at the time because the minister would come forward with the solutions.

I think that members opposite are looking at the Minister of Finance now and saying, "We have got the Vince Ferragamo of Canadian politics sitting there".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: The minister has thrown a few gimmicks on the table here this evening. He has not attacked the fundamental problems that are facing the country today. He talks about restraint. That is one of the three features of his budget of restraint, fairness and renewal.

Let us look at restraint. Again, I warn hon. members opposite to be very careful as to how they look at these figures. Government spending in this current year, by this government that is so devoted to restraint, will rise by 22 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Wilson: That is a 22 per cent increase. How many Canadians can increase their spending by 22 per cent? How many people will receive a 22 per cent increase from their employers next month? Twenty-two per cent is the increase in government spending this year.

The government has been totally mesmerized by the Constitution over the past year and a half. We have been asking for a budget that would attack these fundamental problems. Canadians have worked very hard over their lives. I talked with a man the other day who was telling me that he worked for ten to twenty years in this country and he had given everything he had. He said, "I don't know where this country is going; I can't believe the things that are happening in this country; things are going completely to hell". This is the way people are responding. The minister called on people tonight to express a little confidence in their country. How can they express confidence in their country when the minister calls upon them for restraint at the same time as he increases his spending by 22 per cent?

• (2100)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: I believe this budget continues the massive assault that the government's policy has wrought on the average Canadian over the past year and a half. We have seen energy taxes over the five-year period that we are in now rising, on average, $1,400 a year per family. On top of that, the minister can take more money out of the economy. The government is not able to manage its affairs sufficiently well. It has to increase taxes more after taking $55 billion out over the next five years.

There is no attack on interest rates in the budget. The minister talked about the importance of getting interest rates down. We all know that they should be down, but he has not learned about the problem of interest rates. He has not understood that interest rates have been forced to the levels at which they are today by the high borrowings of the government. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) acknowledged three times in his ridiculous speech to the "fat cat" Liberals about a week ago that the government deficit was an important cause of inflation in the country. The government deficit this year will be $13 billion higher than last year. How does the minister expect that interest rates will decline when he is increasing the size of his budget contrary to the advice he should have received from his seatmate a couple of weeks ago?

Small business, the backbone of the country that we know, has been attacked in the budget. The minister said that there are a couple of things in there to help small business, but let us analyse these. The small business development bond will be extended, but it will only be extended for those companies with financial problems. The small business community which enjoyed the small business development bond over about a two-year period now will have it taken away. There is another element in the budget which we must analyse very carefully. The minister increased the ceiling for the low tax rate for small businesses. But there is another bit of small print which indicates that the ceiling is not the same ceiling we had one day ago. The ceiling will be changed now so that the benefits of the increase in the ceiling will be taken away from the small business community. Small businesses have suffered greatly from the high interest rates in the country over the past year and a half. Small businessmen who are supporting their companies out of their own savings now must look ahead to another year of more difficult experiences than they have had over the past year.

Housing is a problem which is affecting people in the country from all sides. I do not think there is a man or woman in the House or a man or woman in the country who has not suffered directly or does not know someone who is suffering a very sharp increase in the size of his mortgage payments or his rental payments. What we have heard from the minister tonight is probably the most minimal program with which he could have possibly come forward and still maintained some sort of relation with the minister responsible for housing, who I see has even left the House now, he must be so disgusted by what he saw in the budget tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: There is also a very minor program for increasing the supply of rental housing. I do not know whether the minister realizes the problem we are facing in rental housing. Housing starts over the past five years have dropped every year, and we still do not have any action taken by the government to address this problem. The minister talked about a small subsidy program for 15,000 units. We need 220,000 units in the country because there are zero vacancy rates in Toronto and in Vancouver and almost zero vacancy rates in many other metropolitan areas. We have minimal help, which will not address the real problems that that part of our economy is facing.

The farm community has received a token amount of $50 million. I say, "a token amount" because in relation to the needs of this community, we believe—and the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) recommended it—that the funding to the Farm Credit Corporation should be increased by $500 million. That is the amount needed to face the problems which that part of the country is facing. I have to tell the minister that the extension of the small business development bond to include unincorporated businesses that includes farmers is something which we favour, and we support him for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: But we are still facing the major problem of interest rates. The average Canadian has suffered and will continue to suffer the most savage attack on his economic position than has been the case since the depression. There are 900,000 people unemployed, 8.3 per cent of the work force. Inflation still stands at 12.5 per cent and will be higher next year. While we applaud the fact that interest rates have come down as far as they have over the past couple of weeks, we still must acknowledge that interest rates at 16, 17 and 18 per cent, depending on who you are, are still far too high for the country to bear. They are far too high for home owners, small businessmen, and farmers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: I cannot get away from the fact that the government is calling on these Canadians, who have suffered so much over the past year and will continue to suffer over the next year, to restrain themselves. Canadians are restraining themselves. They are forced to restrain themselves when they themselves are facing $200, $300 and $400 per month increases in their mortgage payments, or know someone who is experiencing that. They are restraining themselves because they cannot do anything else. Canadians who face 50 per cent increases in the cost of gasoline, heating oil and natural gas are restraining themselves because they must. Yet the government has the effrontery and the arrogance to come forward and increase its tax take by $1.5 billion, on top of the 22 per cent increase in spending which it has put forward this year. It is an incredible thing to ask of Canadians at this time. There is no compassion on the part of the Minister of Finance, no understanding of the problem, and certainly no honesty in presenting such a budget to Canadians tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: I listened very carefully to the budget speech. I listened carefully to the attention that the minister was paying to the state of the economy today. I do not know where the minister has been for the past two months beause the state of the economy today is in as bad a shape as it has been since the depression. Whether it is in B.C. with the pulp and paper industry or in Newfoundland with the fisheries or manufacturing in Ontario, the retail store, the construction industry, the housing industry, the automobile industry—every part of the country is suffering from the state of the economy today. That is why we have 900,000 people unemployed.

• (2110)

I listened carefully for the discussion that the minister was going to put to the House on the plight of the unemployment in this country. I believe I am correct in saying that I think he used the word unemployed or unemployment twice during the course of his speech. Successive Liberal governments have ignored the problems of the economy. That is why we are in the state we are in today. I am afraid, Madam Speaker, that the Minister of Finance has again ignored the state of the economy.

Inflation at 12.5 per cent continues to face this country today, Madam Speaker. That is three or four percentage points higher than it is in the United States. The consumer has been hit very hard by the increase in the inflation rate. The mortgage renewal problem affects the spending of all Canadians, and everyone knows how it affects other people in the country. As an indication that there is no understanding of the problem there is the fact that the economic statistics in the budget are totally out of date; they are two months old. They do not reflect the fact we have unemployment of 8.3 per cent. The minister in his budget said that the rate of unemployment this year will be 7.2 per cent, but right now and for the period to this date, the rate is 7.5 per cent and the current figure is 8.3 per cent. I do not know where the Minister of Finance has been, Madam Speaker.

There is no attempt whatsoever in this budget to address the very serious problems of inflation and unemployment which exist in the country today.

I want now to return to the question of restraint, Madam Speaker. If we are to get anywhere with the battle against inflation, we must have leadership from government. That starts with the Government of Canada. For years individuals in the private sector have been saying, "I can do it but I would do it a lot better and I would feel much more commitment to it if the Government of Canada did it too." Instead, the government is sucking more money out of the economy by way of taxes and is increasing spending by 22 per cent.

I would remind the minister that it is possible to cut the rate of growth of spending. My colleague, the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) conducted a study which showed that spending could be decreased by $5 billion at a time when that represented about 10 per cent of government spending. That can be done, Madam Speaker.

What we have, however, is the waste demonstrated by three JetStars landing in Winnipeg within three hours of each other, or that advertisement, which I am told was placed in 100 newspapers across the country, extolling the great things that this government thinks it has done. That full page ad in The Globe and Mail took $105,000 worth of taxpayers money.

People in this country do not want that sort of thing, Madam Speaker. They want to see action. They want the government to use those funds, their tax dollars, in a more effective way rather than to blow their stack from the highest building. They want action, not a lot of talk such as we have had in these advertisements.

Let me refer to this very large amount of energy tax that the government will reap over the next five years. Where has the $55 billion worth of taxpayers' money gone when the government has to increase taxes over and above that amount? I hope hon. members opposite will answer these questions, Madam Speaker. Why do we need additional tax increases over and above the $1,400 per year that we will have to pay in energy taxes?

I must say that as I read the budget, I noticed some interesting elements. From time to time the Minister of Finance has said what a bad thing supply side economics is and that he would not have anything to do with it. I listened to him very carefully tonight when he said that it is important to reduce taxes because that will increase incentives and increase the desire of people to work harder and to create employment. I think we have finally got the minister converted to the benefits of supply side economics. Perhaps he should go down and speak to some people in the United States to learn a little more about it; but he is coming along well.

In this budget we observe that in a time of great economic hardship, a time when inflation is increasing at a rate of 12.5 per cent, there is nothing for pensioners. There is no energy tax credit to give some of that $55 billion back to those people who suffer so much from the high cost of energy. In the Year of the Handicapped, there is nothing for the handicapped person. There is nothing for single women between ages 60 and 65 who are suffering so much.

As I said in my opening remarks, Madam Speaker, there are some nice words but there is no attack on the fundamental problems of inflation and interest rates. There is no attack on the unemployment problem that is going to get far worse over the next few months as a result of the minister's budget.

This is the budget that was written two months ago and presented today when it is totally out of touch with reality. It is not a budget for today, it is a budget for last summer.

I should like to continue further with my remarks tomorrow, Madam Speaker, if I may call it ten o'clock.

I move now:

That the debate be now adjourned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): In the circumstances, Madam Speaker, I move:

That this House do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to.

Madam Speaker: This House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

On motion of Mr. Pinard, the House adjourned at 9.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 13, 1981

The House met at 11 a.m.

● (1105)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, since this Friday the thirteenth has brought Canadians yet another increase in the cost of living to 12.7 per cent, amounting to one of the longest spurts of double-digit inflation in Canada's history, and since the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) only last night forecast in his budget more double-digit inflation, and says that interest rates cannot come down as long as the cost of living is up, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That the Minister of Finance make an honest statement at the earliest opportunity on how this government will take the lead in fighting inflation instead of punishing Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

CONDEMNATION OF PROVISIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, whereas the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has presented a budget which calls for an increase of 22 per cent in government expenditures, and whereas this budgetary document provides for tax relief for the rich, those persons earning over $100,000, and provides increased expenditure on defence and other things, and whereas this fraudulent document the minister has the audacity to call a budget does absolutely nothing for the poor, the pensioners and those unfortunate retired people, mostly women, who are currently living below the poverty line, and all this in spite of the fact that the cost of living increases month by month, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House condemn the Minister of Finance and censure the Minister of National Health and Welfare for failing to provide adequate or, indeed, any assistance for our elderly, our poor or for our retired citizens.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

EFFECT OF BUDGET PROVISIONS ON ATLANTIC PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, under the new fiscal arrangements provided for in last night's budget, the four Atlantic provinces will receive $22 million less next year alone than they would have done under previous arrangements. By 1986 they will receive $86 million less.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. McMillan: Hardest hit will be P.E.I. and New Brunswick. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House condemn the Minister of Finance for completely undermining the economies of the have-not provinces of Canada with his budget at a time when they are already suffering severe hardship because of the federal government's mismanagement of the economy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

RECOGNITION OF ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that all parties gave unanimous support last January for the inclusion of a clause in the Canadian Constitution recognizing and affirming the aboriginal and treaty rights of Canada's aboriginal peoples, and in view of the fact that this clause was dropped at the first ministers' conference with no public discussion and with no consultation with the aboriginal people themselves, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That all members of this House join the Leader of the New Democratic Party in urging all of the provincial premiers and the Prime Minister to declare their support for section 34 guaranteeing aboriginal and treaty rights, and further, that all members of this House join me in signing a petition to that effect.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

REMOVAL OF DUTY ON PRODUCTS IMPORTED FOR USE BY THE DISABLED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Chénier (Timmins-Chapleau): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Last night's budget, so ably presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), included a measure to assist a large segment of Canada's population, and this measure has gone largely unnoticed. The minister announced last night measures to provide duty free entry into Canada of products designed for disabled persons.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Gingras):

That this House applaud the progressive—

I do not mean it in the way of the other side, but in the true Liberal manner.

—foresight of the minister in helping to make the lives of disabled Canadians somewhat less costly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, in last night's budget the Farm Credit Corporation was allocated $50 million, or $160 per farm, to cope with the disastrous financial situation the farming community finds itself in. Today, interest rates amount on the average to $7,000, and in many cases interest rates are the largest single farming expense exceeding fertilizer and fuel costs. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That this House condemns the Minister of Finance for his callous disregard of this essential part of the Canadian economy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSING

HOME OWNERS ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, a total of 12,500 home owners, out of a total of one million home owners faced with mortgage renewal within the budget time period as indicated last evening, will qualify for a once-only grant in the government's home owners assistance program. For the city of St. Catharines that means 15 families in a population of 125,000. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

● (1110)

That this House condemns the minister responsible for housing for holding out false hopes and expectations to the people of this country as they waited for the budget just presented, and that because of the little impact he has had on the formulation of the budget he do now resign.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

VIA RAIL

ABANDONMENT OF SERVICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter that is genuinely urgent and pressing. Perhaps it is fitting that Friday the thirteenth appears to be the last sitting day of the House of Commons before the date of the unparliamentary mischief planned by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) against passenger rail service in Canada, although I hope my motion will have more success than Friday the thirteenth might suggest.

On Monday not only will Canadians lose the Super Continental and the Atlantic Limited, two of the most popular trains in Canada, but coach passengers on the remaining transcontinental trains will also lose hot meal service and, of course, more railroaders will lose their jobs. Since it is now obvious that the minister's train plans, offering slower schedules, broken connections and cold sandwiches, are designed to discourage Canadians from using the remaining services so that more trains will be abandoned, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly):

That this House invites the minister to taste VIA's brown bag cold meal service, a sample of which is being laid on his desk—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is not allowed to exhibit any objects in the House of Commons. I would ask him, please, to get rid of that.

Mr. Blaikie: I will continue my motion, Madam Speaker.

—and, further, that this House urges the minister to rescind the order in council abandoning train services and, if he is too arrogant and stupid to do that, that at the very least he instruct the CNR not to go ahead with the planned scrapping of passenger equipment so that when his mistake becomes obvious, even to him, there will be coaches enough to run the trains again.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, last evening the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) delivered the most deceptive and deceitful speech this House has heard for a long time. He gutted the Small Business Development Bond program. He provided nothing but welfare to small business in trouble with high interest rates, if lenders will bail them out. Rather than help home owners he made sure that the big financial institutions will not bleed if they capitalize unpaid mortgage payments. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

That this House unanimously condemns the minister for his deception and deceit and directs the Prime Minister to demand his resignation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

WESTERN ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND

EFFECT OF BUDGET PROVISIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of great concern to all western Canadians. In view of the fact that, under the provisions of last night's budget, financial commitments to the western economic development fund over the next three years were decimated and that the fund, which was intended to support development projects across western Canada, has, for all intents and purposes, disappeared, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone):

That this House condemns the government for its obvious lack of understanding of western Canada and its total sell-out of its promises respecting western economic development as announced in the October 1980 budget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT BUDGETARY POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, once again the federal Department of Finance and the minister have overlooked the long-term benefits that accrue from government support of research and development. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie):

That the government be soundly condemned for not providing tax incentives which would clearly promote research and development and would have provided job security, new employment opportunities and subsequent economic recovery for Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

SUPPORT FROM "THE GLOBE AND MAIL"—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. This morning's lead editorial in The Globe and Mail indicated grudging support for the budget introduced last night in this House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Obviously this support comes as a shock to many hon. members on this side of the House but, in spite of the fact that this support has come from The Globe and Mail, I move:

That we welcome it and approve the budget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1115)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

INCREASE IN GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last night's budget leaves Canadians with a sense of helplessness and frustration in their fight against inflation, high interest rates, and the recession that we are clearly in today. There is nothing in that budget to give Canadians any hope or sense of direction toward a solution of these problems. How does the minister justify a 22 per cent increase in government spending while calling on Canadians, as a principal theme in the budget, to reduce their spending, because this deceit destroys all confidence that Canadians might have had in the budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member would use the words "helplessness and frustration" because they seem to describe more accurately his performance last night than the budget. The hon. member asked me to justify an increase of outlays of 22 per cent. I do not need to, because no such increase is taking place. If the hon. member did not rig an interpretation of statistics, he would not be using that fraudulent percentage increase.

JUSTIFICATION FOR INCREASE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to quote from page 73 of "The Budget in More Detail," the paper tabled by the minister last night. Expenditures are shown at the level of $62,711 million in 1980-81 and up almost $14 billion to a 1981-82 figure of $76,565 million. I could send a calculator over to the other side of the House, but that is 22.1 per cent. I did not give an accurate figure, I rounded it down to 22 per cent. I again ask the minister, how he can justify a 22 per cent increase in spending when he is calling on Canadians across this country to restrain themselves, Canadians who are being forced to restrain themselves because of the high interest rates, the 50 per cent increase in energy prices brought in by this government, and a level of unemployment which is forcing people out of work?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question shows very clearly his confusion about economic policy. All in the same breath he is complaining about an increase in the rate of growth of public expenditures when the moisture on his lips had not dried from calling for expanded expenditures last night, just half a billion dollars in one shot, in the interest of restraint. I wonder when he is going to put his two conflicting personalities under control. Is he for restraint or for greater spending?

I want to tell him that the figure of 22 per cent is not correct. He is using the National Accounts, which do not net the petroleum compensation charge and the unemployment insurance contributions. Once that is netted out, the rate of expenditure is reduced to 16.3 per cent. If he will analyse that further, he will find that, apart from public debt charges, the total dollar amount that will be spent in the year to which he refers is less than the dollar amount forecast in the budget. If he looks at his statistics even further, he will find that the rate of growth excluding public debt charges is just about on target with the budget of last October. I invite him, if he intends to participate in this debate, to stay with an honest figure and not a fraudulent 22 per cent National Accounts rigged rate of growth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1120)

REASONS FOR PROVISIONS IN BUDGET

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I am amazed that the Minister of Finance would use the word "honest" after his display last night.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: I do not know how this minister can talk about ignoring interest charges—let us look at our expenditures while ignoring interest charges. Every other Canadian in this country has to pay interest and has to pay interest which has gone up to 25 per cent because of the policies that have been followed by this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: This budget has perpetrated a fraud on many Canadians, whether they are home owners, renters, small businessmen, farmers, pensioners, people suffering from the problem of urea formaldehyde, all of whom were led to believe that the budget would provide some response to these problems in return for the average federal energy tax of $1,400 per family per year over the next five years. Why has the minister designed a budget which is restrictive, which increases taxes, and which will force Canada more deeply into recession and more than one million Canadians out of work this winter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member again has put together a grab bag of items so that it is rather impossible to deal with them in any organized way. He asks how I can justify the budget. Let me deal with one aspect to which he has referred, namely, the assistance that we have provided to home owners.

An hon. Member: What assistance?

Mr. MacEachen: I thought that he would support that, because in a recent speech in New York the leader of his party called for assistance to home owners and he laid down several criteria. He said, "The assistance must be selective, it must be temporary, and it must be directed solely to those in genuine need."

I believe I have gone even a bit further than the Leader of the Opposition by providing, not for the 12,000 mythical number of home owners that the hon. member talked about, but for every home owner in the country facing renewal problems who, on his own account, cannot handle the problems. That home owner will be helped by the program of the government which consists of a guarantee of interest deferral where that is appropriate, and consists, in other more difficult cases, of a subsidy of $250 a month, amounting to $3,000 a year, in the case of individual home owners.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. MacEachen: That program, Madam Speaker, will discharge fully the commitment made by this government that no home owner will be put out of his home because of abnormal interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

HOUSING

EFFECT OF BUDGET PROVISIONS ON HOME OWNERS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the minister responsible for housing. However, I should like to say to the Minister of Finance, as demonstrated by his budget last night and by his answers today, that he does not understand or appreciate what real need is all about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: That is our problem, Madam Speaker. I should like to ask the minister responsible for housing—and I should say the minister irresponsible for housing—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: —given the fact the seasonally adjusted housing starts are currently running at 135,000, can the minister tell the house how this so-called mortgage interest deferral scheme, which is nothing but the graduated mortgage interest program now put in effect by the banks—it is not a new program—all he has done is dress it up with a new name, in a shameful attempt to deceive the Canadian people—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: That is what he has done. I should like to ask the minister how that can possibly help harassed home owners, because in actual fact people who will qualify for benefits under this so-called scheme will be worse off five years down the road?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would admit that the $350 million that is set aside to fund this program, which the hon. member says is not a new program and offers no benefits—that money is slated to assist those people who need help the most. That program, indeed, is a real benefit to the many hundreds of people who have written me in the last few weeks who definitely and directly will be assisted by that program. I would say to the hon. member with respect to his earlier analysis of starts, the seasonally-adjusted rates, I think he had better go back to his researchers.

• (1125)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTENT OF GOVERNMENT'S PLANS TO MEET NEEDS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I would suggest that the minister would serve the country well if he went back to being mayor of Scarborough, or wherever it was.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: He is applying a band-aid to an industry which is bleeding to death. With respect to their so-called solution to the rental crisis in the country, they will subsidize 15,000 units. At the same time they are wiping away MURBs and they are reducing social and co-op housing by 5,000 units. CMHC estimates that we will need 100,000 extra units next year to meet the crisis in Canada. The 15,000 will not even address the problem in metropolitan Vancouver alone.

Is this their final answer to the crisis in the country which is causing people to suffer financially, which is causing people to have no hope with regard to shelter, which is causing a labour-intensive industry not to be operating in a year when unemployment is over 8 per cent? Is this the minister's final answer? If it is, I suggest that the minister should follow the example of the Hon. Paul Hellyer when the government failed to respond to him ten years ago, and resign from government.

Some hon. Members: Resign! Resign!

Mr. Epp: Goodbye, Paul.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I realize the hon. member is having difficulties when he stands to criticize the government for attempting to direct assistance to those communities across the country which need it most, for example, to direct assistance to those communities with low vacancy rates. Our objective in the new program announced last evening, the front-end support for rental construction, was to bring those new starts to communities which need them. Many members on the other side, sitting around the hon. member and in his own party, have on occasion, and repeatedly, said to the government that MURBs do not direct assistance to where it is needed. Hon. members of the New Democratic Party as well have said that MURBs are not effective to direct assistance to where it is required. I am afraid the hon. member will have to get together with his hon. colleagues on that side to decide what they really want us to do.

Mr. Nielsen: Scarborough needs you.

ATTEMPTS BY MINISTER TO ASSIST HOME OWNERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for housing. The good people of Scarborough have it hard enough; the last thing they want is him back as mayor.

Some hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Broadbent: About two weeks ago, in a document signed by the minister, he pointed out that next year thousands of home owners will be faced with an extremely difficult situation. As for renters, if anything, with rent increases rising by as much as 100 per cent, the situation would be worse. Will the minister confirm that, as a result of last night's budget, with mortgage payments rising from $200 to $400, with the majority of those people who have to pay the increases being excluded from any benefit, and with his decision to increase the supply of rental units by only a pittance of 15,000 units over the next couple of years, the government's approach is totally inadequate? In short, will he now admit to the House that what he promised would be coming in the budget was not there when we saw it last night, and that he has failed as the minister responsible for housing?

● (1130)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I indicated to members of the House earlier this week that, in response to petitions brought to this House by members on all sides on behalf of people affected, I had answered each of those people who sought help. That involved thousands, as a matter of fact over 10,000 responses. I have a copy of that response with me today and I will make it available to the hon. member.

In that letter I indicated that the government's approach to the people who were experiencing genuine difficulty would be to respond to them first. That is what we have done in the program announced last evening to assist people who need help the most. It is an effective program.

I admit it is not the $1.5 billion program that the NDP asked that we should put into the economy; it is a $350 million program. That is a major introduction, a major commitment of this government to the industry, and I predict it will result in a higher number of starts next year in this country than there were this year.

MORTGAGE FUNDS MADE AVAILABLE BY BANKS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, in terms of dealing with the housing crisis as related to mortgages, we have not said that the taxpaper should bear that burden. We have said that the banks and financial institutions ought to bear their share of the burden.

Given that bank profits were up almost 50 per cent in the first nine months of this year for a total of $1.4 billion, could the minister explain to the House why the government did not restore to the Bank Act what used to be there and was taken out by the Liberals, that is to say, the principle that mortgages have to be made available by the banks at levels an ordinary family could afford? Why did the government not put that back in the Bank Act? Why in God's name did it not have the decency to bring in an excess profit tax for banks in the budget and at least use that money for assistance to home owners?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I will defer and refer that question to the minister responsible for finance. I should like to indicate that the financial institutions had already taken steps to assist Canadians. We have asked for their co-operation. We have asked, for example, at a meeting with them on Monday morning, that they co-operate with the government in expanding the steps they have taken to assist individual home owners faced with difficult times on mortgage renewals.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I urge the minister to read the budget address given by the Minister of Finance. What that address does is ensure that the Government of Canada is going to provide a guaranteed profit program for banks. That is what it does. The banks are not taking any risks at all, and the minister should know that.

In the last paragraph of this infamous document, the Minister of Finance said that as a result of the housing crisis—and that has not been changed at all by last night's budget—it is difficult to quantify the social implications arising from the stress and apprehension affecting home owners and renters. Those are the minister's words. It is clear from the puny and insignificant measures brought forward last night that the situation, far from improving, is going to get worse.

The minister has now seen what the Minister of Finance brought forward. Will he, in good conscience, now admit that what he was promising was not produced, and will he therefore submit his resignation to the government?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I must admit that I do not share the confidence of the Leader of the New Democratic Party in describing a $350 million program to assist housing as a puny response. I think that is a significant response. More important, I can assure the hon. member, and members on all sides of the House who have written me asking for assistance with genuine hardship cases—and there are approximately 200 that hon. members thought would fall in that category—that those cases will be addressed by the mortgage renewal program introduced last evening. Further, hundreds and thousands of other—we calculate a range of somewhere in the category of 50,000 households—will benefit under that program.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GOVERNMENT PLANS TO ASSIST UNEMPLOYED FIND WORK

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, last week I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce what the government was going to do to help the thousands of people who have been thrown out of work as a consequence of lay-offs and plant closings across the country. The minister said at that time, and I quote:

> I think that my hon. friends should respond with a very positive note to the budget of the Minister of Finance, which is only a few days away.

We now have the government's budget, and we now know there is absolutely nothing in it of practical value for these people. More and more Canadians are being forced by the government's policies to look to a future without a job. I want to ask the minister once again what the government intends to do to get these people back to work.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I think we should reject completely the unsustainable and inaccurate premise of my hon. friend's question. The truth of what I am saying is demonstrated with just three points.

First of all, the budget has a number of important measures aimed at helping small and medium-sized business, which is a major source of job creation and economic growth in this country.

Second, the change in the basis for the imposition of the federal sales tax from the manufacturing to the wholesale level removes the serious bias against Canadian-made goods in favour of imported ones. This in itself will have a major positive effect on job creation over a period of time in this country.

Third, the economic and industrial development strategy tabled yesterday produces a framework for federal government leadership and activism.

Mr. Nowlan: A farce.

Mr. Gray: It supports innovative and productive activity by the private sector in every region of Canada with tremendous opportunities for jobs and activity in the industrial and economic field for all Canadians, now and for many years to come.

IMPACT OF UNEMPLOYMENT ON FAMILIES

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, as I am sure the minister knows, the facts of the matter are that 88,000 jobs were lost in September and October alone. We now have 989,000 Canadians walking the streets looking for work. In Brantford, Ontario, hundreds of people were laid off at Massey-Ferguson and White Farm Machinery, and this week hundreds more have been laid off from Pullman and from Koehring of Canada. The impact on these people, their families and their communities, is staggering. I want to know, and they want to know, why that is acceptable to this government?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we are very concerned about unemployment.

Mr. Crombie: Show it.

Mr. Gray: We take our responsibilities very seriously. If we had not taken them seriously, there would be no Massey-Ferguson operating at all in Brantford today. If we were not taking those responsibilities seriously there would be no White Farm Machinery operating in Canada today. There are people working there now who would have no jobs if it were not for our initiatives. We provided the basis for a strengthening and restructuring of these companies so that these workers will have jobs to come back to as the economy strengthens.

My hon. friend has not only missed this reality but it is typical of the way his party has missed the need for helping the economy, something which was recognized by the public in the last election.

Mr. Kempling: Run another one.

* * *

THE BUDGET

APPROACH TO SOCIAL BURDENS CREATED BY UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The reality of the situation is that there are one million Canadians unemployed as of the middle of October, and there are many more unemployed today. Before this winter is through there will probably be 1.5 million Canadians out of work. The budget totally ignores the plight of the jobless.

When the minister was drawing up his budget did he consider the social burdens that would be imposed by this unemployment crisis, for instance, the increase in marriage breakdown, the increase in crime and violence, the increase in alcoholism and suicide? Did he consider these things, or did he, in fact, totally disregard them in the way that he totally disregarded the unemployment crisis in Canada today?

• (1140)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker, I certainly did consider the question of unemployment and the impact it has on the most affected, and on the economy as a whole. That is why I laid out a strategy in my budget which offers the only possible basis upon which we can resume growth and increase jobs. The main obstacles to development, job creation and investment in this country are high interest rates and inflation. That is why the first theme of the budget is restraint, in order to get interest rates down and to get inflation down.

Let me tell the hon. member through Your Honour that there is no hope—

Some hon. Members: No hope!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: There is absolutely no hope—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is a no-hope budget!

Mr. MacEachen: —there is no hope to get jobs and decrease unemployment in this country if we cannot get interest rates and inflation down. That is the purpose of the budget. I hoped it would sink into hon. members of the opposition that there is a link between inflation and unemployment. One day they raise hell about inflation, and the next day they raise hell about unemployment, and they do not yet understand the connection between the two.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, there is no hope for over one million Canadians who are out of work today because of the action or the lack of action of this government. The Prime Minister smiles through it all because he really does not care.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: The minister says he is out to fight inflation; but even today the cost of living has gone up to 12.7 per cent. It has gone up, and that means that people who, for instance, are unemployed or are on fixed incomes will have to pay 40 per cent more this winter for their home heating fuel. That amounts to $300 more for the average family, and $200 of that is in federal taxes. The minister, who used to care about these things once upon a time, is now personally out to victimize the jobless. That is what he is doing.

Is the minister satisfied that he has now condemned over one million Canadians to a winter of hopelessness because he has failed to address job creation in his budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I know that the hon. member is reading from the prepared script. She has made absolutely no connection between the answer which I gave to her and the subsequent question.

Miss MacDonald: Because you didn't have an answer.

Mr. MacEachen: If she had contested my assertion that the only way to ensure job creation in this country—

Miss MacDonald: Your inflation rate has gone up today.

Mr. MacEachen: —is to get inflation down, then I would be able to deal with her in a reasonable way. However, she has repeated her question in a separate way.

As the hon. member well knows, we have in place a number of job-creation programs which will be in effect this winter. The rate of unemployment projected this winter will be less than that projected last winter, for which we provided through very substantial—

Miss MacDonald: A million and a half Canadians unemployed.

Mr. MacEachen: —funding, through the community employment program and through the industrial labour and adjustment program. As I recollect, this winter almost $500 million will be available in these two programs in the field of job creation, which I regard as absolutely indispensable in assisting, particularly in the areas of high unemployment. However, the hon. member knows that that is not the permanent solution. The permanent solution—

Miss MacDonald: Is job creation.

Mr. MacEachen: —to our economic situation is to clear away the obstacles of inflation and high interest rates so that we can benefit from the undoubted capacity in the economy to grow and to develop jobs.

I draw the hon. member's attention to the document—

Miss MacDonald: Your figures are out right now.

Mr. MacEachen: —on economic development which shows that projects in the amount of $440 billion are ready to be put in place before the end of the decade in this country, Canada. That is the growth dynamic.

Miss MacDonald: What about this winter?

Mr. MacEachen: That is what will create jobs in Canada. The only way we can realize that opportunity is to be firm and get inflation down and get interest rates down, and that is what I am trying to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Tell that to the unemployed.

TAXATION OF MIDDLE-INCOME GROUPS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Sheriff of Nottingham this morning. The budget speech contains a bald falsehood on page three. I would like to read it to the minister. It states:

Tax rates will be reduced for all taxable incomes over $11,120.

However, if we turn to page 32 of the document which is called "The Budget in More Detail", it shows that tax rates for those Canadians earning between $15,000 and $25,000 will remain exactly the same and have not been reduced at all. I would like to ask the minister why he presented the budget speech and a budget statement to this House which contained a falsehood of fact.

Mr. Nielsen: That's right, Allan.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is talking about falsehoods in the budget speech, and I hope that he will reflect and withdraw that comment. In the budget documents, without any effort to conceal, the progressive effect on the taxpayers of Canada is clearly established, first of all of the very major removal of tax benefits in the budget. I am very surprised that in all the questions, neither the Tory party nor the NDP party, the representatives of which formed a tag team on Canada AM, mentioned that this was a very forward step. However, that is all covered in the diagrams. Then we go on to show the impact of the tax rate reductions, and then we go on to show the impact of the continuation of indexation.

When one looks at all of these tables together, one will clearly see that the statement which I made in the budget speech is correct. If it is not correct, I will be very glad to withdraw it after I examine the figures.

TAX RATES APPLICABLE TO FAMILIES

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I have no intention of withdrawing the remark, because I think it is correct. I think the minister has misled the House, and I hope he will take the trouble to consider the matter. The statement says "tax rates". It does not refer to diagrams, and it does not refer to all the other foofaraw contained in the budget. It refers specifically to marginal tax rates. If the minister looks at it, he will see that the statement he made in the budget is not, in fact, true.

I would like to turn to another point, and my supplementary question concerns page four of the budget statement. The third paragraph states:

As a result of indexing and the measures I have announced, a typical family of four will be able to earn about $15,000 in 1982 without paying any federal tax.

I would like to ask the minister whether he regards a typical family of four as being a family where one of the spouses is not working. Does he not really think it is time that the budget reflected the reality of the twentieth century, that is, that men and women both have an equal right to work?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Yes, I think that we all recognize that reality. It does not require a budget to implant that in my mind. It may require a budget to get it into the hon. member's head.

Miss MacDonald: Except for the Prime Minister.

* * *

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SUCCESSFUL DEPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN DESIGNED ARM BY UNITED STATES SPACE SHUTTLE

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. This day marks an historic milestone in the continued co-operation of the United States and Canada in pooling their skills and technology in exploration of space. Today the remote manipulator system is being deployed on the United States space shuttle Columbia.

Could the minister tell us to what extent Canada's involvement in the design and construction of the remote manipulator system with the United States shuttle promotes Canadian space industry and Canada's economy?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I do not know why this question should cause some dismay opposite. I would have thought that all hon. members of the House would want to salute what has been an extraordianry day for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Okay, salute. Sit down; we salute.

Mr. Roberts: The latest information we have is that the Canada Arm has been deployed and is operating entirely successfully—

Mr. Nielsen: Send MacEachen up with it.

Mr. Roberts: —meeting all of the hopes that we had for it. We are very pleased, of course, with this development, not only because it marks the very significant co-operation between the United States and Canada in space, and we believe that that kind of international co-operation is a proper way of approaching space, but because of the tremendous economic advantages and technological spin-offs which will accrue to us as a result of the successful development of this arm, not only in the future sale—

Madam Speaker: Order.

● (1150)

[Translation]

THE BUDGET

HOUSING—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL AID FOR HOME OWNERS AND RENTERS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for housing, who said this morning he was very happy with the measures announced by the Minister of Finance yesterday. The minister has raised the hopes of many home owners and renters. This morning, however, some economists and a home builders' association pointed out that not more than 10 per cent of home owners faced with mortgage problems would be able to benefit from the measures announced. In the circumstances, is the minister prepared to remain committed to honesty, an approach which he has tried to put into practice in the past few weeks, and tell us whether an additional program will be submitted to help the 90 per cent who will not benefit from these measures? Could he also tell us what measures can assist renters faced with rent increases of at least 50 per cent in the coming year? I think that thousands of Canadians need to know this morning what the minister intends to do in addition to the totally inadequate measures presented yesterday evening.

[English]

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the budget documents tabled by the Minister of Finance last evening will indicate, number one, a new stimulus program, front-end assistance to spur 15,000 units of rental accommodation. That is in addition to the commitment of the government to continue with its Section 56(1) support of non-profit and co-operative housing projects which will be continued. The total of those used across the country in areas where there is an identified need of people who need that type of assistance will go a long way to satisfy the request we have annually fed into Canada Mortgage offices across the country and which we have responded to in those very difficult markets.

I assure the hon. member that when I meet with the minister for housing for the province of Quebec I will have the opportunity of learning from him where we can be most effective in targeting the assistance to which I have referred. This is an ongoing commitment of the Government of Canada toward assisting those people who first need help in what we appreciate is a downturn in the housing industry at this time.

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER MEASURES PRESENTED IN BUDGET WILL REVIVE HOUSING CONSTRUCTION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I wish to ask a supplementary question, Madam Speaker. It is clear that the minister already realizes the inadequacy of this measure. In any case, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is aware that large numbers of factories have had to shut down, and he is also aware of the need to revive housing construction. I wish to ask him whether he could tell the House today if the measures presented yesterday are likely to benefit the housing industry which employs 33 per cent of the work force, considering the fact that the minister is aware of factory shutdowns in his province as well as mine. The situation is becoming increasingly urgent. I trust he will not merely repeat the argument put forward by the Minister of Finance to the effect that we must fight inflation and rising interest rates before we can make valid proposals, because for the past two years the government has been telling us that it has failed in both respects. So today—

Madam Speaker: Order!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, yesterday in his budget speech the Minister of Finance announced a special program that is to create 15,000 low-rental units. The purpose of this program is to support the construction industry and, also, through our programs, to stimulate industrial and economic development projects such as the KHD project in Montreal, which my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, and myself announced a few weeks ago, a project that will create 1,300 jobs in the Montreal area. It will also create jobs for the construction industry which will be building the factories required. Here are two examples of concrete programs to help the construction industry which were created by this government.

* * *

[English]

THE BUDGET

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO COST-SHARED PROGRAMS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, the minister of no hope. The minister in his budget last night, and I refer to page 6, made another deceitful statement when he said this: "federal contributions to the financing of provincial medical care, hospital care and post-secondary education programs" would not be affected. When we look at the detailed budget papers we discover that in 1982-83, next year, federal contributions go down $500 million, and the year after $915 million, by eliminating the revenue guarantee and changing the EPF rules.

My question to the finance minister is this. Why has he attempted to deceive this House and the people of Canada by pretending that the contributions to those programs are not going down, when they are going down $1.5 billion over the next two years? Why is he doing that? Why is the minister cutting back spending on the sick, on the hospitalized, those in the dispossessed areas of Canada, and the students of Canada? Why is he doing that and then attempting to deceive the people of Canada by pretending he is not doing it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am glad the hon. member has raised the question because it gives me a further opportunity to state quite clearly that there is no intention in the budget to cut payments to hospital insurance, medicare or post-secondary education. The revenue guarantee is quite apart from that.

I can show the hon. member statements made by provincial ministers which show quite clearly that they have never regarded the revenue guarantee as part of the payments for these programs. Indeed, when the premiers met some time ago they released a statement showing their share and the federal share of these programs, and the revenue guarantee was not included.

The hon. member has an uphill battle if he is attempting to show that the elimination of the revenue guarantee affects these programs. I draw to his attention, for example, a table that appeared in the report of the task force of this Parliament which shows, and displays very clearly, the portion of federal contributions to the operating costs of universities, ex-revenue guarantee. They show the amount going to the provinces each year from the federal government without the revenue guarantee. That shows that, on the average, 60 per cent, and sometimes more, of the operating costs going to universities comes from the federal government. That is a pretty clear demonstration that the hon. member is off the mark.

QUERY RESPECTING FUTURE CONTRIBUTIONS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the minister who is a deceiver, and not a very gay one. Look at page 49 of this document which shows a $915 million reduction for post-secondary education, medicare and EPF programs in the second year from now, and $500 million next year.

Money is money, and if you reduce your contributions to the shared-cost programs by $1.5 billion, no matter how you do it they lose $1.5 billion, and the poorer provinces cannot make it up, the students cannot get it, the sick cannot get it, and the hospitalized cannot get it. The minister has gutted the mortgage holders of Canada, he has gutted Mr. Gray, he has gutted the unemployed, he has gutted the housing industry, he has abandoned the sick, he has abandoned the dispossessed, and he has abandoned those who want an education.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: Is he going to bring in another budget next week to try to—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: When will he tell the people the truth?

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member does not seem to be able to deal with the facts. He deals with rhetoric. Maybe if he had learned earlier to deal with facts he might not be where he is today.

• (1200)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: The plain fact—

Mr. Crosbie: You lie and deceive them. That is why you are there.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the hon. member, when confronted with reality, has to lapse into brutal rhetoric and personal inferences, which is not becoming to this House of Commons, and I want to tell him that if he expects his questions to be taken seriously in the House of Commons he had better learn to stop larding them up with unacceptable personal references, and not attempt to conceal his lack of analysis by a plethora of unjustified rhetoric.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Tuesday, November 10, 1981, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Point of Order—Mr. W. Baker

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

Ninth report of Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments—Mr. Robinson (Burnaby).

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[Translation]

BANKRUPTCIES

TABLING OF REPORT ON INDEMNIFICATION OF EMPLOYEES

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 41(2), I wish to table, in both official languages, the report of the Committee on Indemnification of Employees in Matters of Bankruptcy and Insolvency.

The committee was chaired by Dean Raymond Landry and also included Messrs. Ronald Lang, George Hitchman and Raymond Dufour. In tabling this report, I also wish to thank them for their excellent work.

* * *

[English]

FEDERAL BUILDINGS

HULL, QUE.—REQUEST REPORT ON LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE BE TABLED

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am asking for the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) with respect to my point of order.

There were some reports in the press that there is now available a report on the condition of the ventilation of Les Terrasses de la Chaudière which was to be available to the public, a full report not only with the conclusions but with respect to the findings of the people who made that report. I wonder if that is available. This is a report which has been referred to publicly and I wonder whether or not the minister is prepared to table that report in the House of Commons, if not today then perhaps at the beginning of next week.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am sure that is not a point of order. However, I will take note of the representations of the hon. member and I will speak to him later this afternoon.

PETITIONS

MR. DOMM—EFFECTS OF HIGH MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I am tabling in this House today a petition by 43 home owners, which was collected by the Peterborough local of the United Electrical Workers, who ask that the minister responsible for CMHC intercede to save their homes.

People cannot afford to face interest charges, having them deferred and compounded over a five-year period along with second mortgages and AHOP loans. They will eventually find themselves faced with first, second and third mortgages and owing more principal on their homes than they did when they bought them.

With respect, I table this petition and ask that you take it under advisement and respond. I am also providing a copy of this petition to the minister responsible for housing so he can immediately proceed to look into these 43 cases supplied by the United Electrical Workers Union on behalf of those people who are in danger of losing their homes.

MR. STEWART—EFFECTS OF HIGH MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents of Simcoe South. The purpose of this petition, which was signed by 1,201 citizens of the Tottenham area, is to indicate to the government that mortgage interest rates are forcing them out of their homes and leaving them in dire straits.

The intent of this petition is to demand that the government lower its interest rates and develop a plan of action which will enable families to retain their homes. These petitioners hope Your Honour will find their petition in order and sense the urgency and desperation of their plea, and that you might use the discretionary powers of your office to allow discussion and referral to committee at the earliest possible moment.

MR. JOHN REID—VIA RAIL—CUTBACKS IN PASSENGER SERVICE

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by approximately 200 residents of the Sioux Lookout district and surrounding area protesting the cutback by the federal government of the subsidies to VIA Rail.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. NICKERSON—OWNERSHIP OF OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, on October 19 I had the pleasure of filing a petition signed by over 1,000 people from my constituency which objected to the passage of Bill C-48 on the grounds that it would prejudice the settlement of land claims, block the evolution of responsible government and disable northerners in the development of their own economy.

Subsequently, an additional 109 people have signed that petition. They are from remote areas and their names were not available on October 19. Therefore, I would like to file with this House an addendum to that petition.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, after several consultations and especially after discussions with the representatives of the two opposition parties, it would seem that considering the agreement reached last week at the constitutional level, there is unanimous consent in the House for authorizing the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) to simply withdraw Motion No. 36 appearing under Government Orders, concerning the debate on the Constitution and on the Address to Her Majesty regarding the Constitution of Canada. Would you therefore please ask the House whether there is indeed unanimous consent for simple withdrawal of the motion?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, such discussions have occurred and the official opposition, in a spirit of co-operation, gives that unanimous consent which has been requested.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I can also verify that discussions have taken place and that we give unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent to the withdrawal of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Pinard: In the circumstances, since the resolution has been withdrawn and is no longer on the Order Paper, I should like to determine the business for the next few days which might be of some help to my colleagues on the opposite side. We shall have four consecutive days of debate on the budget, that is, today, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, so that if there are subamendments and amendments, votes will be held Monday night and Wednesday night. Furthermore, by the beginning of next week, I shall be able to determine the business for next Thursday and Friday. Finally, the government intends to give notice very shortly of a new resolution on the Constitution, in view of the agreement concluded last week.

* * *

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,500, 3,045, 3,176, 3,177, 3,178 and 3,179.

[Text]

GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Question No. 1,500—Mr. MacKay:

1. With reference to the government's restraint program for the fiscal year 1978-79 and 1979-80, by province and/or region and for Canada, what was the total reduction in expenditures for (a) terminations or deferrals of capital projects (i) Lethbridge Laboratory (Agriculture) (ii) Newfoundland Environmental Centre and Maritime Forest Research Centre (Environment) (iii) Vessel Capital Reduction (Fisheries) (iv) Defence Capital Projects (Defence) (v) Marine Program (Transport) (vi) Public Works Capital Projects (vii) Capital Projects (RCMP) (viii) Capital Projects (Penitentiary Services) (ix) Reduction in Capital Projects (National Harbour Board) (x) La Prade Mothballing (EMR) (xi) Salmonid Enhancement (Fisheries) (b) reductions in non-statutory contributions (i) Outreach (CEIC) (ii) Training Allowances (CEIC) (iii) Small Craft Harbours, reduction in assistance to recreational boating projects (Fisheries) (iv) New Horizons (National Health and Welfare) (v) Termination of Agricultural and Rural Development Act (DREE) (vi) Bilingualism Development (Secretary of State) (vii) Reduction in Financial Assistance to Local Airports (Transport) (viii) Canada Works—Economic Growth Component (Treasury Board Secretariat) (ix) Oil Import Compensation, Adjustment of Computation Method for Atlantic Tariff (EMR) (x) Reduction in Compensation for Waterfowl Damage (Agriculture) (xi) Contribution Toward Construction at Veterinary Universities Deferral (Agriculture) (xii) Grants to Universities for Water Resources Research, Termination (Environment) (xiii) Local Employment Assistance Program, Reduction (xiv) Young Canada Works (xv) Summer Job Corps (xvi) Industrial Training (xvii) Prairie Highway Upgrading (Transport) (xviii) Northern Highway Program in British Columbia and Alberta, Termination (DREE) (xix) Termination of Support for Land Registration and Information Services, Council of Maritime Provinces (DREE) (xx) Prairie Rail Branch Line Rehabilitation (xxi) Health Resources Fund—Deferment (xxii) Professional Training Program (c) reduction in levels of service (i) Management of the Radio Frequency Spectrum (Communication) (ii) Federal-Provincial Water Management Program (Environment) (iii) Regina Weather Office (Environment) (iv) Federal Facilities Clean-up Fund (Environment) (v) Forestry Research Station (Environment) (vi) Northern Road Construction-Reductions (Indian and Northern Affairs) (vii) Temporary Assistance Program (Fisheries) (viii) Offshore Surveillance (Fisheries) (ix) Ocean Aquatic Services (Fisheries) (x) Statistics Canada Survey (xi) Cape Breton Development Corporation (xii) Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (xiii) Urban Transport Assistance Program (Transport) (xiv) Canadian Transport Commission, Railroad Grade Crossing Fund (Transport) (xv) Space Lab-systems and Components, Reduction in Level of Activity (Communication) (xvi) National Museums, Reduction in Level of Funding (xvii) Canadian Film Development Board, Reduction in Level of Funding (xviii) National Film Board, Reduction in Level of Funding (xix) Hospital Transfers to Provinces (Veterans Affairs) (xx) Federal Loans to Provinces—Public Housing Loans (Urban Affairs) (xxi) Federal/Provincial Land Assembly Programs (xxii) Training Improvement Contributions (CEIC) (xxiii) Manpower Training Purchase Courses (xxiv) CHOICES (CEIC)?

Order Paper Questions

2. For the same years, by province and/or region, what (a) was the per capita reduction (b) were the reductions as a proportion of the national total?

3. For the same years, did the Atlantic provinces bear a disproportionate share of these reductions stemming from program changes and cuts?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Records are not maintained in such a manner as to provide an accurate answer to this question. The cost in manpower and time to undertake the very large amount of work which would be required to gather such detailed data as is obtainable for the period covered by the question, would be prohibitive.

DND PURCHASE OF NYLON CLOTH

Question No. 3,045—Mr. McKinnon:

Is the Department of National Defence purchasing taffeta nylon cloth from Consoltex Inc. for $467,536 and, if so, for what purpose?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The Department of Supply and Services, on behalf of the Department of National Defence awarded three contracts for a total value of $467,536 to Consoltex Inc. for taffeta nylon cloth. The fabric is utilized during the manufacture of DND operational garments.

COMMITTEES OF THE CABINET

Question No. 3,176—Mr. Cossitt:

Was the Minister of Employment and Immigration appointed to serve as a member of the security committee of the cabinet and, if so, what are all of his qualifications?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): See House of Commons Debates, appendix A, October 14, 1981. The qualifications required for membership in a committee are membership in the cabinet and designation by the Prime Minister.

Question No. 3,177—Mr. Cossitt:

Was the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources appointed to serve on the security committee of the cabinet and, if so, what are all of his qualifications?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): See answer to question No. 3,176 answered this day.

Question No. 3,178—Mr. Cossitt:

Is the President of the Privy Council chairman of the labour relations committee of the cabinet and, if so (a) did he replace the former minister of labour, the hon. member for Halifax (b) for what reason was the new Minister of Labour only appointed a member of the committee rather than appointed chairman?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): See answer to question No. 3,176 answered this day. The chairmanship of a cabinet committee is not usually determined by a specific portfolio since the subjects considered by cabinet committees go well beyond the responsibilities of any single department. Exceptions to this general policy are the Treasury Board, whose president is provided for by statute, and the cabinet committees on economic development and social development, which under the policy and expenditure management system are chaired by the respective ministers of state.

Question No. 3,179—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names of all committees and sub-committees of the cabinet and, in each case, which cabinet ministers sit as members and who is the chairman?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): See House of Commons Debates, appendix A, October 14, 1981.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand, Madam Speaker.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Honourable Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1210)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Thursday, November 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, today is Friday the thirteenth, and there are very few Canadians who are feeling lucky. Many Canadians were looking for relief in the budget last night. They were looking for relief from inflation, high interest rates, the high cost of rolling over their mortgages into 19 per cent, 20 per cent and 21 per cent mortgages, the high cost of energy, as well as relief from the economic stagnation of the recession and the high unemployment we are facing today. It did not come. The average Canadian must continue to face the fierce attack by this government and its policies on his standard of living and on his personal budget. Every Canadian must continue to feel the emotional strain that is caused by the present great disruption.

Let us cut through the chaff and the double talk of last night's budget. What has happened to the average Canadian since this time last year? Interest rates have risen from about 13 per cent to highs this past summer in excess of 20 per cent. Those who have faced mortgage renewals have found it necessary to find $200, $300 or $400 to meet higher monthly payments, and this has caused sharp disruptions in their personal budgets. Energy prices are up 40 per cent to 50 per cent, and much of this is to provide additional federal taxes amounting to about $1,400 per family per year over the next five years. The total revenue this government is receiving from Canadian individuals and businesses is now at its highest level as a percentage of the over-all economy since the Second World War.

This morning we were reminded again of the problems the country is facing with the announcement that we have an inflation rate of 12.7 per cent. In the budget Canadians were looking for some relief from inflation and high taxes, particularly the energy taxes which affect all Canadians, regardless of their income brackets. However, there was no relief whatsoever.

The government asks for restraint. Canadians are being forced to exercise restraint when the money is just not there in their personal pay cheques. The government is receiving new energy taxes as well as other revenues, but what is it doing with them? The government has increased its spending by 22.5 per cent this year and has raised taxes a further $1.4 billion.

Let me put that into some perspective because when we see such figures we sometimes lose track of what is happening. In the two fiscal years from 1980-81 to 1982-83, the government will increase its tax revenues by 43 per cent. That is the largest revenue increase in history. The government has said it would like restraint from Canadians. I ask Liberal members opposite, who in this country can get a 22 per cent raise? Who will be able to increase their spending by 22 per cent? What if the postal workers came to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) and asked for 22 per cent more income this year? Think of the reaction that would cause in the country today. Yet the government increases its spending by 22 per cent. The government has no regard for the impact of this on the rest of the country and no regard for how this affects other people's personal budgets.

What has the government given back to Canadians in the budget? We heard the minister responsible for housing bleating today about $350 million, but hold on; only $150 million of that $350 million has been committed. It has been committed over the period September 1 of this year to March 1983, about a year and a half, and $112 million of that will be going to 15,000 rental units when we need to increase rental housing by at least 100,000 units. The balance will be going to those who are hurt the most. It will provide for about 12,000 families, when the minister's own document says 30,000 to 40,000 families will be put into such a position that they will be paying 30 per cent of their incomes on mortgage payments.

Part of the program helps these people get further and further into debt by giving the banks the authority to increase these people's debts so that they can pay the banks the interest payments. That is a totally wrong way of facing this problem because it pushes Canadians who are hurt badly by high interest rates further and further into debt. That is why it is a wrong program.

The other aspect of the program is that it only affects home owners. There is a large number of Canadians today who are spending too much of their incomes on rental housing. That is because of the problems which have been created by a continually declining level of housing starts. That level has declined for five years in a row and has resulted in a zero vacancy rate, pushing rents up and putting Canadians into such a position that they are putting far too much of their money into rent as a percentage of their incomes. That problem was not addressed in the budget of last night.

We have heard much from the minister responsible for housing over the past two months. We have heard all about the great things done by the MURB program and how important it was that the government extend that program. Now the minister quietly drops it. What hypocrisy!

Canadian home owners and renters must feel very let down by this budget because for three months now the minister reponsible for housing has been saying that there would be help in the budget. But this budget has been a major disappointment. As my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), and as the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) have said, for that false promise the minister responsible for housing should resign. He should go back to Scarborough, but not as the mayor; I disagree with my colleague in that respect. I do not wish that on the people of Scarborough. I think the minister should go back and bury himself in Scarborough.

I would like to address some remarks to the members of the New Democratic Party because they have called for lower mortgage rates through a subsidization of mortgage rates by people who provide mortgage money. We cannot get away from the fact that the mortgage rate for one lender will be the same for all lenders, and much of the mortgage money in Canada today comes from pension funds, from credit unions and from insurance companies. Do members of the New Democratic Party want these people to subsidize mortgage rates which are high today because of ineffective government policy? Do they want pensioners to take cuts in their pensions because of bad government policy? Do they want widows who are benefiting from insurance proceeds to subsidize these interest rates?

What about members of credit unions who today are suffering from real financial difficulties, again because of the high interest rate policy of this government? Do members of the New Democratic Party want those credit union members to subsidize interest rates? There is only one answer to that question. The New Democratic Party is holding out a gimmick. It is playing with the emotions of Canadians who are very troubled and upset at the results of the interest rate policy of this government. They know it will not work. That policy is a fraud and it is dishonest.

● (1220)

The problem of high interest rates can only be dealt with by a real anti-inflation program that attacks the fundamental problems of inflation. That is what the broad majority of Canadians were looking for in the budget last night. Most Canadians knew there would not be something in the budget for them, such as people who have problems with high mortgage rollovers. However, they had hoped to see some help and direction leading them out of the problems they are in today. Unfortunately, that hope has been shattered.

Mr. Evans: Nonsense.

Mr. Wilson: I ask the minister's parliamentary secretary, what is in the budget that will lead to lower inflation? For the past three years the financial requirements of the government have been between $10 billion and $11 billion. They have been reduced somewhat; they are just marginally below $10 billion this year.

The minister holds out some possibility that in subsequent years they will decline further. However, it has been the same year in and year out: "Wait until next year. We are going to do it next year. We are going to reduce our requirements next year." They are sounding more and more like the Toronto Argonauts— "Wait until next year". Next year just never comes.

Let us look at what I mean by that statement. In 1968 the then minister of finance, Mr. Benson, said:

> We should not delude ourselves into thinking the choice is between policies of fiscal ease to counter unemployment or policies of fiscal restraint to fight inflation—

That was when the price index was at 4 per cent. A year later he said:

> I think the message of this budget should come through loud and clear . . . It is intended to show that we mean business in the fight against inflation.

Inflation then had increased to 4.6 per cent. In 1972 John Turner, the then minister of finance, said:

> I have had to resist a good many well-intentioned temptations lest I run the risk of firing inflation.

Inflation then was up to 4.8 per cent. A year later he said:

> This budget is aimed at reducing inflationary pressures in Canada and at offsetting the effects of past inflation.

Inflation that year was 7.5 per cent. A year later:

> Two digit inflation . . . is simply not acceptable to this government.

Inflation that year was 10.9 per cent. Just to draw my point out directly, that was the year John Turner said he was going to make a direct attack on government spending, and government spending went up that year 28 per cent, even higher than the 22 per cent it will go up this year. That was the year of the real attack on inflation in this country.

Mr. Malone: Wrestle inflation to the ground.

Mr. Wilson: As my colleague has reminded me, that is the year when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I believe in my riding, said; "We will wrestle inflation to the ground." Another former minister said that "the effort to bring the rate of inflation down will go on unceasingly". That was said by Donald Macdonald in 1976. It did come down; it was then at 7.5 per cent. He went on to say the next year:

> Our first objective must be to maintain the underlying trend to lower inflation.

It was back up to 8 per cent.

> We are being held back by serious unemployment and inflation and we must do all we can to deal with them.

That was said by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) in 1978. It was then up to 9 per cent. Last year at this time:

> The budget is designed to ensure a steady reduction in the rate of inflation.

At that time the rate of inflation was 10 per cent. As we all know from this morning's figures, it is up to 12.7 per cent. That is what I mean when I say we need to have a commitment to deal with the problem of inflation in a fundamental way, not deal with it in gimmicks that tend to buy votes in certain parts of the country so that people will not yell about it as much as they have. That is what we have to do. That is what is sadly missing in this budget.

To add insult to injury, in the face of the $55 billion increase in energy taxes in this country, we have seen the government increase taxes further in this budget by $1.4 billion. That is totally unacceptable, totally unnecessary and totally out of keeping with the times.

Since reading the budget, I have said that I believe it was written in September before we saw the impact of the high interest rate policies on the economy of this country, before we saw inflation bring in the highest level of unemployment we have seen for a number of years, a level of unemployment which will probably go higher, and an economy that is weak from coast to coast, from industry to industry. To bring in an increase in taxes faced with that reality means that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is totally out of touch with what is going on in this country.

More Canadians' earnings will, as a result of these vast tax increases, be spent by the government, not on job-producing expenditures like automobiles, clothes and household goods which we as individuals could make much more effectively, but on less productive items that will not create more jobs. The current recession, although it has already been severely hurtful as a result of high interest rates to date, will be prolonged, causing more job loss and human suffering.

It is incredible that this budget has ignored the economic weakness in the country today. There has been no attention paid to the plight of unemployed Canadians. There are no measures to turn the economy around. We have a restrictive budget when the reverse was called for. We have no vision for the future. There is no hope for Canadians facing the loss of a job. We have high interest rates, high energy prices and widespread weakness across this country.

The budget does have some minor programs for those already in real difficulty, but Canadians do not want handouts. They want opportunities. The greatest social security program of all is a job and peace of mind that inflation will not eat away at people's savings. This budget is lacking opportunity and hope for the future.

Two or three weeks ago the Prime Minister made an incredible two-faced speech to a group of Liberal supporters in Toronto. It was truly a disgusting attempt to deceive the Canadian people in the best Liberal tradition. Let us look at it.

The Prime Minister trotted out a series of statistics which showed that Canada placed fourth in a range of measures between 1973 and 1980. He drew the conclusion that that was a good performance. Well, it was a lousy performancce. We ranked fourth during that period when all of our competitors adjusted to not just one, but two price shocks. It was a period during which two finance ministers, John Turner and Donald Macdonald, poured money into the economy to undo some of the problems they themselves had created. That in itself ran away from those problems and created the groundwork for the high levels of inflation we are facing today. If that is performance, the Prime Minister should go in for a major overhaul. The Prime Minister either does not understand, as he is too old, too tired to learn and should quit, or he does understand and should be sacked for the odious deception he is perpetrating on the Canadian people. Canada should have been far and away number one in that study. We ran away from our problems and tried to shield ourselves from reality.

● (1230)

The statistics that Canadians are interested in are today's statistics. There are between 900,000 and one million people unemployed. Interest rates have ranged as high as 25 per cent this summer. It is the highest interest rate of any of the industrialized countries in the world. Canadian interest rates are currently two to three percentage points above those in the U.S. Canadian inflation rates are three to four percentage points above those in the U.S. Canada is the largest single borrower in the world, looking for handouts around the world, save one, the United States, which is ten times bigger than Canada. Our standard of living has dropped during the period 1968 to 1980 from number three to number thirteen. These are the statistics which mean something to Canadians.

The Prime Minister should get his head out of the sand and into the real world and should not mislead Canadians by using these other statistics. The Prime Minister noted three times in his speech that the government deficit caused inflation.

Let me remind the House of what the Minister of Finance and other ministers said in 1979. They criticized us because we were too preoccupied with the level of the government deficit.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), the then finance critic, talked about our doctrinaire Conservative fixation with the government's deficit. What a tragedy that this Minister of Finance did not have that same fixation, that same preoccupation with the deficit, when he came into office. If the minister had, we would not be dealing with the same high interest rates that we are facing today. Conservative members and editorial writers have been repeatedly stressing the dangers of increasing and persistent government deficits.

The Prime Minister said in his speech that the Cassandras, presumably the Conservative Party and the editorial writers, were wrong. He was right: we were wrong. We thought that interest rates might go as high as 12 to 15 per cent, not the 20 to 25 per cent range they have reached.

The Liberals have been playing with the money of Canadians as if it were monopoly money. The Prime Minister talks about the Liberal policies of compassion and caring. What double-talk! What is compassionate about policies that lead to interest rates of 20 to 25 per cent and 900,000 and possibly one million people unemployed?

The mortgage rollovers have resulted in a shock to people's personal budgets of $200, $300, $400 per month, and the minister increases taxes when they should be decreased because of the economy. The Prime Minister should listen to the Cassandras, the Conservatives and others, who warned them of these disasters. The Prime Minister should remember that Cassandra, although no one liked her, was always right.

The Liberals are learning after the fact what their policies have done. They have now been forced into illogical decisions. That is economic mismanagement. There is no other word for it. The policies of the 1970s and the inappropriate response of 1981 are leading Canada into a serious recession.

The Prime Minister ends his speech by saying that this Liberal government is true to the tradition of seeking the greatest good for the greatest number. This Liberal government has made an absolute mockery of the tradition of Edward Blake, Edmund Burke, John Stuart Mill and even Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The record of the past 15 years of Liberal government must make true Liberals sick. In fact, these governments have practised time-honoured but totally discredited traditions of socialism. Most thinking Liberals are now voting Tory.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: When will you speak to the budget?

Mr. Wilson: This did not all happen overnight. I am coming to the budget, Mr. Speaker. The truth hurts.

It is not just the policies of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, but the policies of the previous ministers of finance, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, when he was the minister of finance, John Turner and Donald Macdonald. It is a policy of a party which has gone rotten to the core, a party which has been buffeted from lamp post to lamp post like a drunk in a hurricane of economic disaster trying to steady himself, when the government does not have any economic base from which to start.

The lasting answer to inflation and recession is a commitment to productive economics, to establish once and for all the government's determination to devote sufficient resources to placing the Canadian economy on a firm, competitive and forward-looking footing.

There is a document in the budget called "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s." It sounds good, but let us relate that to the real world. What has economic development done in this budget? The economic development envelope in the 1980 budget for the period from 1980 to 1984 would amount to $30.023 billion. In the 1981 budget this has been reduced to $28 billion, a drop of $2 billion or 6.3 per cent. So much for the commitment to economic development.

The western development fund has been axed. Farmers will receive some benefit through the broadening of the Small Business Development Bond for which unincorporated businesses will be eligible, but only in a very cautious way, and only for those farmers who are in financial difficulty. There is $50 million to help the Farm Credit Corporation reduce the interest rate, again only for those farmers who are in financial distress. That $50 million is a small pittance when it is spread among all the farmers in this country.

The small business bond has been extended for a year, but it is not the same small business bond that we have known in this House. It is to be used only for those small businesses that are in financial difficulty. The small business community has lost on the trade. The small business community will also receive the benefit of an increase in the ceiling for the low tax rate for small businesses. But what the minister gives with one hand, he takes away with the other hand because he reduces the effectiveness of that increased ceiling. Again, I believe that the small business community is behind on that trade.

Another element that will hit the small business community hard is the change in the rules for the investment tax credit where only 50 per cent of the investment tax credit will be available to businesses in the year of the investment.

An hon. Member: Capital cost allowance.

Mr. Wilson: Capital cost allowance; thank you very much. I will tell the hon. member what I am talking about. It is incredible to me that, during a period when businesses are suffering as much as they are from reductions in cash flow because many businesses cannot get credit and must put cash up front, the Minister of Finance this year chooses to introduce a change in the tax laws that will reduce the cash flow of the small business community and other businesses. It just does not make sense.

We looked for a change in the approach that the government has taken with respect to research and development. We were looking for some fleshing out of the commitment that the government has made to increase the level of research and development spending in this country to 1.5 per cent of the national income. But there is nothing in the budget illustrating any increase in the commitment that has been sadly lacking in the actual measures that will allow the country to achieve that objective. We all know that research and industrial strategy are essential to an economic and employment policy, yet the budget has no provision for investment incentives to increase research and development. The government is only paying lip service to research, as it has done in the entire area of industrial and employment growth.

● (1240)

The incentives for small business companies to participate more effectively in research and development just are not there. If we are to fight the problem of long-term inflation, we must see more incentive and a more meaningful approach by the government to encourage companies to build new products and to lower their costs through developing and building the products themselves rather than buying them from companies outside Canada. This is one key to reduce the level of inflation in Canada. Instead, the environment in Canada discourages investment in the country. It increases borrowing outside the country and the level of costs faced by the industrial community.

Next I should like to deal with the established programs funding which ties in directly with research and development. The budget pointed out that the funding of the established programs fund will decrease by about $2 billion over the next five years. It is only partly offset by tax increases to the provinces. It will lead to a decline in the quality of post-secondary education and an increase in bitterness and confrontation between the federal government and provincial governments. We do not need a decline in post-secondary education. We need an increase in the quality of post-secondary education which will lead to an improvement in our capacity to meet the research and development objectives and to meet the challenge of the high technology industry which is growing so quickly.

Another element which bothers me is that the government appears to be proposing to replace the EPF funding with grants on a per capita basis. This will lead to arbitrary decision-making on the part of the federal government on the basis of what it calls our national economic needs. It is a nice way of saying that father knows best—we will tell you how to run your university; we will tell you how many graduates you should have in engineering and computer science; we will tell you what courses to teach; we do not want to listen to what you understand you should have at the grass roots level to respond to the industry people in your region who are telling you what their requirements will be. The universities in the country have a better understanding of what is going on than the people in the federal government. The federal government does not have the same grasp as the universities at the grass roots to respond to pressures from people with whom they are dealing on a day to day basis.

Let us look further at the economic development strategy set out in the budget papers. For some time now the Progressive Conservative Party has been pressing to take advantage of the vast opportunities which are available in the country in major projects. We have a huge potential. I think it was in my first speech after the 1980 election that I referred to this vast potential. I asked the question whether it was opportunity or burden. If we manage the opportunity correctly, the benefits to the country will be immense. If we do not, the burden will also be immense.

In the document the minister tabled last night there is a very rosy picture of the economic development potential of the country. I should like to contrast that with the reality of the Cold Lake and the Alsands projects, projects which are on the back burner today. There is no commitment by the federal government to moving those projects ahead. There was no reference in the minister's speech to the importance of getting these projects under way. In addition, there have been two energy proposals by the federal government that are pushing 40 per cent of the drilling rigs out of the country, rigs which will be needed to meet some of the available major project potential.

I also contrast the schizophrenia of the government toward the Foreign Investment Review Agency, toward the role the National Energy Program should play, as well as toward the fight with the United States over our approach to American companies in Canada. These policies are turning off foreign investment at the same time as the program is indicating that we need large amounts of foreign investment if we are to achieve our potential. The loss of confidence has forced equipment, capital and talented people to leave the country at a time when the minister is tabling a document which indicates that there are $440 billion worth of possible major projects between now and the year 2000. I do not know how we will handle these projects with men, equipment and capital leaving the country. It just does not make sense.

There is another element which points to the schizophrenia in the government. Recently the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce referred to world product mandate; he has finally caught on. I believe I made ten speeches on this subject when we were in government. World product mandate is the ability of a Canadian company, a subsidiary of a United States company or of another foreign company, to have the total responsibility for a product line. There is one problem in Canadian companies achieving world product mandate. If the top management of the parent company, which, after all, makes the decision as to whether or not to give the mandate to the Canadian company, sees a government which appears to be opposed to the interests of foreign companies, sees a country with inflation running at 3 to 4 percentage points higher than its own country, and sees a continuation of the policies which have led to those problems, why would it give the Canadian company a world product mandate? This is a problem in achieving the economic development which we know is available to us.

Let me also contrast the document the minister tabled last night to the need for skilled people. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has shown no concern for the technical oil and gas people who are leaving the country, the enormous brain drain of people leaving the country to contribute to the Canadianization of Texas, of the Williston Basin and of Australia. Those are the concerns we have today, based on the reality of today which is not reflected in the government policies. They are different from the objectives and the goals which are set out in those economic development documents.

● (1250)

In this area of economic development strategy, let me caution the government to steer away from too great an involvement in the decision-making process on these major projects. Because of their size, each of them is a quasi-public enterprise and in many cases needs a government decision to permit it to go ahead. The size of the projects can lead to crowding out in the sense of pulling scarce capital away from other elements in the country. It can also lead to centralizing decisions to too great an extent so that the response to normal market forces is ignored by the decision made between management and senior government officials.

Let me also point out to the minister the potential imbalance that can come about in favour of these major projects, an imbalance that can lead to inflation. Because of the power of these major projects, this inflation will have an adverse effect on other industries in the country but will not have the same effect on the project itself because of its size and the particular deal that government might be prepared to enter into. We must be very careful about the inflation rate induced by these major projects. I think we have seen the best possible example of this in the last two or three years in Alberta, where inflation rates are running ahead of the rest of the country and make things very difficult for other industries trying to compete in the same marketplace.

I come to my last point on the crowding out possibility of major projects. I am not making these comments in a critical way but in a positive way to try to draw out some of the problems we may face. The capital flows that will be attracted by these major projects may tend to push up the value of the Canadian dollar. This happened in the late 1950s and for other reasons in the middle 1970s. What happens is that the value of the Canadian dollar is held up, and this forces a deterioration in the competitive position of other manufacturing companies in a different set of circumstances. That is what I mean when I say that these major projects can represent an opportunity or a burden. If we manage them properly and if we are responsive to market conditions and do not deal with the major projects in isolation from the rest of the economy, the potential of this country is tremendous.

We must take advantage of these major projects because since the last war they have been a major force in the economic development of the country. We must take advantage of them because they can lead to great technological advancement. What that means is that potentially we are exporters of this technology. One of the best examples of this is the oil sands projects. We are ahead of many other countries in what we know about oil sands technology. The government does not seem to understand that we can lose that advantage. Countries like Venezuela are anxious to import our technology, but if we start to slip and these projects do not go ahead—and one is completely stalled right now—we will lose that tremendous advantage.

We can increase our capacity and expertise in project management and this can help us throughout the world. We can upgrade the skills of Canadians in this country to meet the opportunities of the future. We can improve our balance of payments. Today we have a real problem with our balance of payments, and I want to come back to that in a minute.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we can do great things for equalizing regional development in this country because many of these projects are located in the less advantaged areas of the country.

What we have to do when we compare the real world of today to that nice-sounding potential of the future is to question the competence of the government to implement and take advantage of the policies that will be necessary if we are to move ahead on economic development in the major project areas.

I made reference to the balance of payments deficit. This year the minister's papers show that the balance of payments deficit will be $9.1 billion. A year ago the current account balance of payments was about $1.6 billion. In the two or three years prior to that it had been running at a level of about $4 billion. That is a major problem the country is facing.

I should like to draw the attention of hon. members opposite to a statement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce when he was opposition finance critic. This is what he said:

> In his budget the minister mentioned only in passing a deficit which deserves as much and, in fact, more attention than the government's budgetary deficit, and that is the deficit in the balance of payments of our current account of international trade.

Apart from a reference in a table of figures, there is no mention that I could find in the vast number of papers set before us last night about the importance of this problem of a $9.1 billion balance of payments deficit. I should like to ask the Minister why that is so. I think I know why he has not proposed any action to face up to this problem. It is because the balance of payments is an enormous embarrassment to him.

In a question I put in the House I made reference to the huge outflow of private capital caused by the policies of this government, capital amounting to $8.4 billion, or five times the level of the average outflow during the 1970s. When you combine the capital outflow with the current account outflow, the figure reaches $17.5 billion, or nearly $1,000 for every man, woman and child in the country. That is a major problem for Canada and a problem for all of us, Mr. Speaker. It leads to an outflow of money from the country. The Bank of Canada has told us that if money flows out of the country the bank will either keep interest rates up in order to prevent that, or arrange to attract other money into the country.

We are all suffering from this problem because of the government's policy of maintaining high interest rates. That is why we should take this more seriously. That is why we have to be so concerned about the competitive position of this country which has deteriorated severely in the past year and a half.

Let me move to other proposals in this budget which I feel should have been there in order to encourage the productive capacity of this country, but before doing so, may I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1) I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, when I completed my comments before lunch, I was discussing those things which I felt were necessary to lead this country to a reduction in the rate of inflation that we have today, and also to generate increased economic activity. What I want to come to next is the importance of savings and investment in this whole process.

I think that all of us feel that savings are the means by which we prepare ourselves for certain expenditures down the road, whether savings for making major expenditures while we are working, or savings which will prepare us for retirement, allowing us to retire in dignity and free from concerns about where we will be getting the money to look after our requirements. However, savings are a very important element in the economic development of our country because they do provide the money for investment and also for increasing the degree of Canadian ownership in our country.

In looking at this budget, I was concerned that there are no new incentives for Canadians to save and to invest in this country. There is no increase, as an example, in the amount of money individuals can put into a retirement savings plan or a pension fund. These were last increased in 1976. Since that time, we have had some 60 per cent to 65 per cent inflation in this country. Therefore, it is not only discouraging, not allowing individuals to set funds aside for their retirement, but it is also robbing us of the savings we will need in the country to produce the plants and equipment which will create the jobs to get us out of the economic malaise that we have today.

In his remarks the minister made some slight recognition of the importance of incentive through the lowering of the marginal personal tax rates. I applaud the minister for this, and I applaud the remark that he made in his budget speech when he stated that lower tax rates will increase incentives to work, save and invest. I only wish that previous ministers of finance had had that same attitude and had not run up the level of the tax rates in this country.

However, his other actions of giving with one hand and taking away with the other will antagonize those very same people—the creative people in Canada, the entrepreneurs, the job producers—and undermine the efforts that he wants to take to encourage them to work harder and produce more jobs in this country. I fear that the gesture he has made toward the entrepreneurs and toward encouraging initiative is little more than a public relations gesture. In the battle against inflation and against this recession we are in today, we must be encouraging the entrepreneurs, the risk-takers and the creative people to the maximum extent possible because they are the people who will create the jobs which will move us out of the recession we are in today.

The key to what I have been referring to over the past few months is productive economics and the generating of incentives to get the productive side of our economy moving.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: We must improve the productive capabilities of our economy by helping people to improve themselves and to upgrade their skills through training programs. We must help businesses to become more competitive through encouraging them to expand their research and development activities. As I said a few minutes ago, there is not enough incentive in this budget, and there was not prior to it, to generate that research and development activity.

● (1410)

There are some broad statements in this budget as to the importance of trade, but again, as I mentioned before, we are facing a very serious crisis in this country with the size of the balance of payments deficit we have today, and apart from a general statement toward encouraging trade there is no acknowledgement in specific budget measures which will encourage trade through export promotion, and so on, in this country.

We must also do everything we can to improve and modernize our transportation systems, because with a country the size of Canada and with the distance that Canada is from our markets it is very important that manufacturers and others in the country bring those goods to markets as cheaply and as efficiently as possible. These are the programs that will help the country produce more goods and services in a more efficient and productive way. They help private individuals and companies create jobs and they help Canadians become more efficient and more skilled in their jobs. Productive economics will lead to an increase in productivity, lower costs, and therefore lower inflation, and through lower inflation, lower interest rates. A major drop in inflation and a major drop in interest rates is what this country needs the most.

Productive economics involves two other elements to be successful. It requires a commitment to encourage the private sector, and a positive attitude to see our business succeed. It also requires an understanding by government that too much government, either through excessive government spending, as we have this year with this 22 per cent increase in government spending, or an increase in regulation, which seems to be held out by this economic development plan presented with the budget papers, will inhibit productive economics from working.

The combination of this broad package of productive economics I discussed just now, plus the positive attitude toward private individuals, will give Canadians a sense of direction that has been missing in recent years. That combination will give Canadians the confidence to build their businesses and create jobs and opportunities for other Canadians. This may have some of the same ring as the minister's statements last night. They are both going in the same direction, but they do it in a different sort of way.

Apart from my comments on the lack of a visible commitment to achieve some positive result today when it is needed to fight the recession we have with us and to put some of those one million people who are out of work back to work, I want to draw the attention of the House to another distinction. Liberals today prefer to set the rules and intervene heavily in the decisions of entrepeneurs and risk-takers in this country. The minister clearly indicated that in the answer to some questions last night at a press conference I attended. The Conservative Party prefers to set the over-all environment, to establish the ground rules, and then encourage private individuals to get on with the job without a lot of government intervention and regulation. This is an important principle that we must establish here.

Whether the government uses grants or incentives, that method of participation is the key to whether or not we are going to succeed in the economic development of our country. Grants involve politicians and bureaucrats making decisions. They are arbitrary and they can tend to play favourites. They are slower because the whole government decision-making process by its nature is slow. It also results in more regulation at a time when the Economic Council of Canada has issued an extensive report calling for less regulation.

Let me also recall a story which was set out in a book recently about the Wall Street Journal. In 1976, sending out a questionnaire interviewing a number of key economic advisers to various presidents over the ten or 12 years prior to 1976, all of these key presidential advisers were asked what they would have done differently, in retrospect, to avoid the economic problems the United States suffered from in the two or three years leading up to 1976. There was absolutely no consistency in what the right solutions could have been, with one exception, and that one exception was that they allowed monetary policy to run wild during that period. Apart from that there was no consistency in the actions that should have been taken by the government of the United States.

The conclusion I draw from this is that if these experts did not know what should have been done to solve those problems after the fact, how can they tell us how to solve the problems before the fact? That is why I am so concerned that we not fall into the trap of having too much bureaucratic control over the economic development policies that companies should follow.

In its place I think we should encourage more incentives rather than grants; for example, having the government set the broad rules to let the businessman understand what the rules of the game are and then let the businessman go out and make his decision whether or not to take advantage of that incentive. It is a faster means of approaching problems and it provides for much freer choice. It also provides for the strengths that a series of decisions brings to the solving of problems as opposed to a concentration of decisions by politicians and bureaucrats.

Concentration of decision making, whether it is in the private sector or the public sector, or a combination, is bad, and I believe should be avoided in this country.

I do not want to dwell on this topic too long. It is an important principle and it provides a real distinction between the approach the Liberals or NDP would follow and the approach the Conservative Party would follow. But most important for us to understand here is that this is the key difference between the degree of success or lack of success that Canada will have in its industrial future.

Let me conclude my remarks today by returning to the themes from the budget, equity, restraint and renewal or growth. Having regard to equity, I ask Liberal members opposite what is equitable, what is fair, in a pensioner losing his savings to the ravages of inflation? I have heard the Minister of Finance say a number of times in response to why there was no tax credit in previous budgets—I am sure he would give the same answer now—that he provided an increase in the guaranteed income supplement and therefore has looked after that problem. It does not look after that problem, Mr. Speaker. It addresses the problem for about a million and a quarter Canadians, but there are another million and a quarter Canadians who have been forced to see their savings whittled away by inflation, and there is another million and a quarter Canadians living below the poverty line. That problem has not been addressed by the minister in this budget or in previous budgets.

● (1420)

I believe it is wrong for the Minister of Finance to take credit for introducing the increase in the guaranteed income supplement, as he did last year. The Minister of Finance should be apologizing to those pensioners who, because of the inflationary policies of this government, are having to seek assistance from the guaranteed income supplement and also for having to increase the amount which was introduced last year. That is the problem in this country. The government takes credit for giving when it should be seeking the forgiveness of the people it has placed in the position they are in.

Returning to the question of equity, what is equitable about a farmer who is forced to sell his cattle to meet the bank's requirements? What is equitable about a home owner who is in a position totally beyond his control as a result of having to find $200, $300 or $400 or more a month to meet the increase in his mortgage payments by reason of a government decision? What is equitable about a small-business man seeing his business disappear in front of his eyes because he has to pay 20 per cent or 25 per cent interest rates? There is nothing so vicious or unfair as inflation and we have had far too much of it in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: The next theme in the budget is restraint. I have dwelt on this theme at some length as it relates to the huge increase in spending by the government this year, a full 22 per cent. How is it equitable for the government to ask Canadians to restrain themselves when it has increased its own spending by 22 per cent? Canadians are forced to restrain themselves because of high interest rates, high energy costs and high inflation.

The final theme of the budget is growth. Where in the budget is the growth which will lead us out of the recession we are in today? Where is the growth that will reduce the level of unemployment from approximately one million and develop the potential of the vast resources of this country? The only growth I see in this budget is the growth in government, and we have learned from sad experience that this is the wrong path for this country to follow. Canadians are looking at the budget and asking themselves where is the hope and where is the path which will lead to a solution of the problems we face today. What is the direction the government will take? Canadians are losing pride in their country and losing faith in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is a budget which continues the assault on every Canadian. It increases income tax for Canadians and does not offer any solutions for reducing inflation and unemployment. Each year during the next five years, every Canadian family will have to pay an energy tax of $1,400. At the same time the government intends to increase its expenditures by 22 per cent this year but there is no relief for the average Canadian.

And for this reason—

[English]

I move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That all the words after the word "That" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"this House condemns and rejects a budget which fails utterly to address or comprehend the recession facing Canada or to put any of the one million unemployed Canadians back to work, which offers no help to renters and assistance to home owners so meagre as to compel the immediate resignation of the minister responsible for housing, which provides a completely insignificant stimulus to rental housing construction, which fails to provide any relief from high energy taxes and which, while calling on Canadian businesses and individuals to show restraint, pumps up federal government expenditures by 22 per cent."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has received the motion and after consultation the Table finds it to be in order.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, recently I was in the frozen food section at a supermarket and a senior citizen who was looking at a number of packages of frozen fish fillets turned to me and said: "I wonder whether the store will let me take some of the fish fillets out of the package and buy them one by one because I do not think I want to buy the whole package right now." Mr. Speaker, as we carry on this debate, removed as we are from what is really going on in this country, we have to regain a sense of what exactly it is that this economic crisis represents for the ordinary Canadian. It is not simply a question of high rates or a crisis in investment in abstract terms, or a question of a varied series of statistics sometimes deceptively presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). We are talking about a crisis in our economy which affects Canadians in their way of life, the way they respond to each other and their hopes and aspirations for the future.

When we debate this budget we are talking about our senior citizens, for example, hundreds of thousands of whom live on less than $6,000 a year. We are talking about families, many of them new to this country, some who have been here for generations and have worked and struggled hard. These people are not the ones who the members of the Conservative Party might call the "creative élite" of our society, but they are creative enough. They are just the ordinary working people who are paying their taxes. They are the people who have worked and struggled either on the farm or in factories, mines or mills to save their money to buy a home. They have been told this last year that they will not be able to stay in their homes. Those are the people we are talking about while we debate this budget. We are talking about the hundreds of thousands of young people who are out of work and the tens of thousands more who will be added every month as a result of this budget.

• (1430)

We all respond with anger and concern, but the point is that it is not simply a question of another group of people who are in some abstract way added to the ranks of those people who are are without jobs. It is a question of young people coming out of school, some of them coming out of community colleges and some of them even coming out of universities who were taught, among other things—and certainly taught by their public leaders—that this was a good country and that this was a country to which their parents, their grandparents or their great-grandparents came and worked hard. They were able to buy homes and provide. These young people were taught that they would have jobs here in Canada. When they came out of school, even those who may not be in that élite to which the Tory party refers—just ordinary people looking for the opportunity to work—they look for the challenge, the joy, the humour and the fellowship which comes from having a job. They are looking for the pride and the sense of security which comes from being able to work and at the end of the week, two weeks or a month have a pay cheque, to say with a sense of satisfaction: "I worked for that pay cheque. I can buy something with it. I can get married because I have the security of that cheque. I can buy a house eventually. I can save and do something with the money I am working for."

That is a noble aspiration which hundreds of thousands of our young people cannot have because we have a government which has introduced a budget which does not take into account the tragedy of unemployment. This government has made a categorical decision and said that unemployment is less important than inflation. There is a phrase in the budget, either in the additional budget papers or the shortened version the minister gave last night, which says we have to wait for a while before we can resume growth. That is almost like saying, "The disturbance you are seeing is temporary, do not adjust your sets." Two years is a long wait without a job and without training. That is a long time to look for some hope for the future based, as it is, on the phony statistics of this government.

All of us in this House have an obligation during this debate not simply to talk about all the figures as they balance out on the charts and the diagrams to which the minister referred today. He said that perhaps he will have to change his diagrams. The minister does not have to change his diagrams. The minister has to change his policies so that he can respond to what is the deepest sense in the public today. People are looking for leadership which responds to their deepest aspirations. Our people are looking for leadership which understands that beyond all the legalities of the provinces and the federal government there is a people out there, the Canadian people, looking for leadership. They are looking for jobs, and they are looking for a government in which they can take some pride.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: All of us in public life have an obligation to respond to that quest for a sense of public purpose. I will be going into the details of the budget in a moment, but the overwhelming impact of the budget is that it is an expression of defeat and bankruptcy. The budget, in affect, says; "There is nothing we can do. We do not have solutions to your problems. We cannot deal with the problem of recession." I do not think I am giving any secrets away when I say that when we were asking the officials about the budget last night, one of them said, "I am sorry, we cannot provide you with that answer because if we do this, that will inevitably happen, and therefore we cannot do it." There is an obvious answer. If the government opposite and the officials in the department who are responding for the government cannot give the answer and cannot deal with the problem, let them move aside and let somebody else drive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: That is a non sequitur.

Mr. Rae: The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has been in office for so long he just assumes that if he cannot do it, nobody else can. We have seen the consequences, and the railway workers and railway consumers of Canada have seen the consequences, of that kind of attitude.

Mr. Pepin: Another non sequitur.

Mr. Rae: Let me give an example of what is really happening on the streets, in homes and in the factories of this country today. The minister can read about it if he likes. If he cannot see it or finds that he cannot move around enough to feel it and touch it, he just has to read the report of the task force on job opportunities. That parliamentary task force did an excellent job. One of the astonishing facts the task force pointed out is that 4.5 million Canadians are functionally illiterate.

One would think that a government which received that kind of bombshell statement would bring in a budget which would set as a great priority seeing to it that all Canadians can read and write well and have a chance to compete in a job market which is becoming much more ruthless than the one their parents knew. Does the Minister of Finance say that there will be a full scale frontal assault on illiteracy? Does the minister commit his government to full employment? Is the minister prepared to admit that the greatest problem facing the Canadian people today is the insecurity which is brought about because workers see their fellow workers being laid off? Some workers have been in factories not for five years and not for ten years but for 15, 20 and 25 years, and they are being told, "Sorry, boys, the plant is closing". That is not simply a problem in the sense that unemployment means we will be producing less as a country or in the sense that we are falling behind in the competitive race with other countries—although it does mean that—but in the sense that it means tremendous personal unhappiness caused by that kind of insecurity.

I have talked about it, my leader has talked about it and it is worth emphasizing again and again: people have assumed—because they were Canadians, dammit all, and because they were proud of themselves, their jobs and their achievements—that they would be able to buy homes and that those homes would be theirs. They made reasonable plans on the basis of interest rates of 10 per cent and 12 per cent, and some even made plans based on interest rates of 14 per cent. They felt that if both mother and father and perhaps one of the kids were working at a part-time job, they could keep their homes together.

However, we now know that we are not talking about an economic system—the Liberal-Tory economic system—that gives people that sense of security. These are the parties which believe in private property. What more fundamental attack on private property can one imagine than rates of 22 per cent, 23 per cent and 24 per cent for first morgages? Those rates are not being compensated for in this budget. Those rates were the ones of last summer; people sacrificed everything in order to hang on to their homes at 24 per cent and they are getting absolutely nothing from the Minister of Finance.

The minister has a defence. He put it forward in his budget. His defence is inflation. He says he cannot do anything because of inflation. When I first came to this House three years ago, I directed my first question to the then minister of finance, who is now the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). That day interest rates had gone up from 9.5 per cent to 10.25 per cent, and at that time the rate of inflation was 8.9 per cent. He said there was nothing he could do, that the Americans were doing this, the dollar was doing that, it was impossible; the problem of inflation had to be combated and the only way to fight inflation was through high interest rates. We had an election. The Tories were very critical of that interest rate policy. They promised they would bring it to an end.

● (1440)

The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) became minister of finance and the rates went up and up and up. Four times they went up. The hon. member for Windsor West, now the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), criticized, moaned and groaned as the rates went up over 14 per cent. He appeared on a television program on which I had the misfortune to appear at the same time. He said: "If the rates go over 14 per cent, I will resign." It is a pity they did not ask him the additional question: "What if you do not keep the promises on FIRA, will you resign then?" He would have said yes. He is a man of principle during an election.

The interest on the average consumer loan today stands at 21 per cent, 22 per cent and some at 24 per cent, if it was negotiated as recently as three weeks ago. Mortgage rates hover between 19 per cent and 20 per cent. Where is inflation? Inflation is at 12.5 per cent. Inflation has gone up almost four points since I asked that first question three years ago, and interest rates have more than doubled. The policy is, quite simply, a nonsense. It is one which does not make any sense. Ask the workers in Baie Verte, Newfoundland, who have been laid off. The mines have been closed even though they were making a profit. Ask the workers in the fish plants on the south shore of Nova Scotia, the miners, paper workers and fishermen in New Brunswick, the farmers and the businessmen in Quebec, the workers at Admiral, Inco, Massey-Ferguson, Chrysler and Stelco, the beef farmers in Owen Sound, the wheat farmers in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, the cattle ranchers in Alberta and the sawmill workers in British Columbia, whether the effect of high interest rates is to bring down inflation. Since the minister used this expression in the House, I think I can use it: their answer would be "Like hell".

The only thing those interest rates have done is to squeeze jobs out of the economy. The interest rate juggernaut swept across not simply Canada but all the western economy, bringing small business people to their knees, forcing thousands of plants to close in this country, making our manufacturing sector completely and totally uncompetitive in some regards, raising the price of food and products. The minister says that the interest rate policy is an integral part of their fight against inflation. The interest rate policy has jacked up inflation. The evidence is there for the minister to see.

Reducing inflation will take patience, persistence and time. The government is not going to wrestle it to the ground. Those who have to somehow prove their manhood in their verbal assaults on the mind tell us that is what they want us to do. The policy of the government on inflation is that in order to get the inflation rate down half a point or a point, they have to reduce the real economy to a desert. No doubt they will call that desert "peace" and claim victory over inflation. However, what is the cost to people, the cost to the real economy and to Canadians' sense that their economy and lives are something that they want to take pride in? Energy costs are rising by nearly 40 per cent a year. Food costs are rising dramatically because of changes in world patterns of consumption and demand. Much of our economy has ceased to be genuinely competitive because of the nature of corporate and government power. Where is their ability to administer prices? It is nonsense to suggest that the way to deal with this kind of inflation is through an interest rate policy of 20 or 25 per cent.

Those who live in poverty are not helped by this policy, they are damaged by it. Those who live on fixed incomes are not helped by this policy. Those who live on the margins of our economy who sometimes find a job and sometimes not because they do not have the skills or the training, who may be the wrong age, in the wrong class or have a disability—those people are not helped by this policy. This policy helps only a few people. It helps the wealthy savers and the banks. It benefits the banks at the expense of consumers, farmers, small-business people, home owners, and even benefits, at the expense of the banks' own competitors, the credit unions and the caisses populaires.

There were three parts to the minister's budget. Like Gaul, it is divided into three parts. I wish the minister's gall was divided into three parts. Restraint: that is the cocktail party word for cutbacks, in case some are wondering what restraint means. It means cutbacks or hardships. Equity: the minister had nerve even referring to the concept of equity in this budget, but I will come to that in a moment. Renewal: renewal is the Liberal word for retreat. That is what this budget represents.

The minister talked about equity. Whose tax rates were reduced the most? Canadians earning over $100,000 a year. There are not many people in my riding earning that amount, but I am sure there are Canadians somewhere who earn that much money. They must be the ones who attend the dinners at which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asks for restraint. Their marginal rate is cut from 43 per cent to 34 per cent.

What about the single pensioners over 65, over half of whom in Canada are living in conditions of poverty and tremendous difficulty? What kind of tax reduction did they get? Zero. Not a cent, not a nickel, not a dime from the Minister of Finance. The minister talks about equity. Equity is a fancy lawyer's word for fairness. Where the hell is the fairness in that? Where is their fairness in giving nothing to pensioners? There is nothing at all in the budget for pensioners.

Then we have the claim of equity, where the minister says they are giving a tax break and the press even reported it as a tax credit. The minister has taken up the lingo. People are willing to believe the minister. They want to believe him. He is the Tinkerbell of Canadian politics. People want to believe Tinkerbell. If Tinkerbell says it is true, it is going to be true. If we all wish it were true, the lights will suddenly come on and all the people will go back to work.

An hon. Member: Tinkerbell is a ding-a-ling.

Mr. Rae: It is utterly fantastic to claim that the tax measures in this budget are in any sense an exercise in fairness. Today I read to the minister a section from his budget talking about a typical family of four being able to earn about $15,000 without paying any federal tax. The minister took some affront when I asked whether he thought it was time that the government recognized that there are women in the labour force who actually think they should be there.

Let me give an example. I see the minister of mines looking up. She is responsible for the status of women. I would like her to have a word with the minister. Let me use the example of a professional woman earning $20,000 or $25,000 a year, single, with dependent children. What is her tax break? Her tax break will be to pay an extra $146 to the government. The minister was saying that there were tax cuts for all these people earning over $11,000. What about that person? The thrust of it is that married taxpayers who have an unemployed spouse will receive some extra money; but those Canadian couples by the hundreds, thousands and millions who are married and who both work, both playing an equal role in the home, both playing an equal role in the marketplace, trying to get a job, hold together and pay these 20 per cent, 22 per cent and 24 per cent interest rates, what kind of tax breaks do they receive? Zero. Absolutely nothing. The minister said he would introduce an equitable budget. There is no equity.

• (1450)

Another example, Mr. Speaker, are the Canadians who have emigrated to this country or who have been here five, ten or fifteen years, who have a mother or father they are supporting in Greece, Portugal, Italy or Pakistan. But for all the hundreds of countries that have benefited by their contribution to the life of this country, what is the fair contribution of the Department of Finance to fairness? It says there has been a little fraud here. Instead of punishing those who have committed fraud, the department is going to eliminate the possibility of making that exemption entirely.

Let me say to the minister that there is a Greek restaurant worker in my riding whose wife works and sends $200 a month to his mother or father living in Greece. That was the purpose of their emigrating to Canada. What is the size of his tax break? He loses a $2,000 deduction. His taxes could increase by $300, $400, $500, depending on his marginal rate. That is the real effect. It is so important, Mr. Speaker, that we must come down from this sense of abstraction of deficits and balances and numbers coming from here and there. They are important; they are part of what the grim science of economics is all about. But it is time we got away and asked what is the real social effect of a budget which says to a Greek Canadian he is second-class, which says to a new Canadian he is not as good as somebody who has been here before, that they can claim an exemption for a dependant but he cannot. The reason is that there has been fraud.

If there has been fraud, then let those who are guilty be punished. Since when did we in this country ever go in for the notion of collective guilt? Since when was that an aspect of the Canadian culture we are proud of? It is a disgrace, Mr. Speaker. It is not a major money-making thing. It will not gain any terrific revenue for the government. But at a time of economic hardship I think of my constituents and the city of Toronto and of the kind of niggling attitude that is created on the streets. We are trying to create a multicultural, multiracial Canada, Mr. Speaker. There is no such thing as a second-class Canadian. We are all boat people. We are all immigrants. If there are those among us who have committed a crime, then let that person be punished. If the government wants to tighten up the regulations, then let those regulations be tightened up. But let us not abandon the very essence of the notion that if you have a dependant you are supporting, just because that dependant does not happen to live in Canada you should not be regarded as some kind of second-class Canadian.

The unfair and absurd attitude of the government's policy is what has led the NDP to move an amendment to the Conservative amendment today. It will provide some grounds for debate and add additional grounds for concerns that have not been entirely expressed in the Conservative motion. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

> That all the words after "high energy taxes" be deleted and the following added thereto:
>
> "and, further, this House condemns the government for failing to provide any tax relief or pension reform for senior citizens; any help for Canadians living in poverty, fair tax measures for working women; for abandoning completely its election promises on foreign ownership, FIRA, and industrial strategy; for failing to exercise control over our financial institutions to ensure mortgage and interest relief; and for failing to introduce an excess profit tax on the banks."

I should like to speak to that motion in my closing remarks.

We come to the third theme of the budget, renewal, the Liberal word for retreat. I remember it vividly because it was toward the dying days of an election. When one is inevitably worried and is looking at the poll results, one thinks about his future. The Prime Minister, although he was leader of the opposition for that brief, glorious period, went to Toronto and spoke to the advertisement club. The Toronto Star had a large headline—the Toronto Star is sometimes unfairly called the Trudeau star—but I am not one to describe it that way. When the Prime Minister came to town that day he talked about foreign ownership and about changes that the Liberal government would bring to industrial strategy. There were very specific promises and commitments made with respect to FIRA regarding where it would be strengthened and expanded. It would deal simply not with takeovers but would carry out a comprehensive review of the role of foreign ownership and demand that multinational companies be assessed on a continuing basis for their contribution to the Canadian economy.

In the Speech from the Throne the Liberals said that this is what they would do. It was ambiguous, to say the least. We knew the retreat was on its way. But to announce, only two seats away from the patron saint of FIRA, that FIRA was being abandoned totally, and to say that this is an exercise in renewal, means that we have a new definition of a Liberal. It is one who does not know the meaning of embarrassment or shame. I cannot believe what the minister had to say when he said that this represents a renewal of Liberal policy. Listen to this renewal: "The special measures being employed to achieve more Canadian ownership and control of the oil and gas industry are not, in the Government of Canada's view, appropriate for other sectors". Why not? There is no explanation.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Rae: They do not tell us why. I will come to why. Why is zinc and nickel shipped out of this country without being refined? I am thinking of one company in northern Ontario. Why are resources such as uranium or nickel sold? A pound of uranium or a pound of nickel sold is a pound of uranium or nickel gone forever, the same as oil. They are non-renewable resources. Inco did not plant nickel in the ground and reap it every year. It has been there for generations upon generations. I know the Tories do not like the NEP, but at least they can agree that what is true for oil should, for heaven's sake, be true for other non-renewable resources. Why not? There is no explanation. We are simply told that no legislative changes will be introduced to FIRA.

• (1500)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Suddenly it is good for us.

Mr. Rae: As the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) just said, suddenly foreign ownership is good for us. Walter Gordon must be rolling over in the Commerce Court Building. Canada has historically benefited to a substantial degree from the application of foreign capital to our economic life. There is no mention of Watkins, no mention of the Gray report, no mention of research and development and its impact upon secondary industry, no mention of the fact that we have become a colony in our own land with respect to many of our resources. All that has been completely and totally abandoned. That is called Liberal renewal. It is more than chutzpah. It is an unbelievable expression of disdain for the intelligence of the average Canadian person.

I suggested to the minister three weeks ago that the budget would have to do four things. It would have to provide for action on interest rates. There has been no action on interest rates of any significance whatsoever. I suggested that we had to have real tax reform and tax relief, that we had to have measures on pensions, and that we had to have meausres to guarantee a continued level of social service spending by the government. The only action on interest rates has been to provide relief, not to home owners, not to tenants, but to the banks. The banks are supposed to bleed a little, in the words of the minister. Well, the plot thickens. There is no action in this budget which does anything other than increase the financial power of the banks, increase the revenue going to the banks, increase their ability to exact and enforce contracts on individuals who are in a completely unequal bargaining situation. When George Brown walks into the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, he is not exactly looking at an oriental bazaar. He is faced with a contract. He cannot exactly haggle over the terms of the contract. It is written out and he signs on the dotted line.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Take it or leave it.

Mr. Rae: He takes it or leaves it. A mortgage is not a contract in the sense of a totally voluntary relationship between two people. It is something which is forced on people because of their economic situation. For the minister to talk the language of contracts, as if this were some kind of totally voluntary arrangement between two people who happen to meet in the street, is so absurd as to defy description.

The interest rate deferral scheme is a con. The interest rate deferral scheme is a fraud. It is a system of permanent debt which would be outlawed by any consumer protection legislation worthy of the name. If we had a minister of consumer and corporate affairs who was doing the job he is there to do, he would be calling in the heads of chartered banks and saying, "What is this? You expect somebody who has a $60,000 mortgage to pay $8,000, $9,000 or $10,000 per year in interest payments and at the end of the year owe $62,000! You expect us to subsidize that and guarantee that kind of scheme! "It is unbelievable that that is the government's definition of interest rate relief. The minister said, "Well, it was recommended to me by the banks". Surprise, surprise! If the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) was recommended a scheme of gun control legislation by the Mafia, would he be obliged to accept it? According to the minister, apparently yes.

Finally, our motion calls for action on an excess profits tax on the banks. This kind of well-meaning but hopeless volunteerism expressed in the budget speech of the minister is so pathetic as to defy description. Let us listen to what he said. One would think he was just some guy expressing an opinion, rather than the Minister of Finance of the Government of Canada. He said, "I want financial institutions, especially banks, to do more." Also he said, "I particularly want them to ensure that ample funds will be available to smaller borrowers at the lowest possible margin of cost over the rates which they pay to their depositors." Where has the minister been for the last 15, 20 or 25 years? What kind of well-meaning rotarian expression is this—"I want financial institutions, especially banks, to do more?"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: If the minister wants the banks to do more, he has the means to do it. He does not have to get down on his knees in the House of Commons and ask in supplication for the financial institutions to bleed a little. What a pathetic statement of defeat! I think Canadians were expecting something a little different and a little better from the minister. He is somebody who has a long history of contribution to the country. He is somebody who comes from an area for which I know he has a deep feeling. I can only say to the minister that I am disappointed—not surprised—that he, his government and all supporters of the Liberal party on the other side, have become captives of an abstract economic theory. This theory bears no relationship to people. It hurts the average Canadian. It punishes the average Canadian. It provides a statement which will only lead to even greater hardship in the months and years ahead.

I said the minister was Tinkerbell. I meant that semi-seriously, because if we look at the end of the budget speech we will see:

> The key which can open the door to our future is a change in our attitudes and expectations.

All I can say is that that is a Tinkerbell kind of statement—if we all get together and really believe that inflation will come down, that jobs will be created tomorrow, or that interest rates will come down, if we close our eyes and wish ever so fervently, then it will happen; if we all wish that the banks just charge a little lower interest rate and give a break to small-business men, then magically it will happen. That is what I call Tinkerbell economics and Tinkerbell politics. It is a rejection of the deepest, most serious and most joyful aspiration of Canadians for an economy which is working, fully employed and truly fair, which takes care of all its citizens, however badly off they are, whatever colour or race they are, from wherever they come in the world. That is the vision the New Democratic Party is proud to offer to Parliament and to Canadian people. Those are the practical policies and the policies which follow from them that we will be putting forward when we are the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair finds the subamendment of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) to be in order.

● (1510)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, my first words in this debate are to congratulate my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), on the measures which he has proposed in response to the economic circumstances in which the country finds itself today.

I wholeheartedly support his sensitive and sensible approach to the restoration of our national economic and financial well-being.

I particularly appreciate the minister's response to the problem which, as hon. members know, has recently absorbed so much of my time, energy and concern. I mean, of course, the assistance that will now be provided through the Canada mortgage renewal plan to those Canadians who are having the greatest difficulty in meeting their mortgage payments because of high interest rates which they must pay on renewal. These problems arise, not only because of the high rates but because the rates have risen so quickly, giving little opportunity for families to make the necessary adjustments in their household budgets. The mortgage renewal plan will give them the time they need to work out their own solutions.

I am most grateful, Mr. Speaker, to the many friends, in this House and outside it, who have expressed their concern about the unprecedented amount of public attention which has been directed toward me and my portfolio during recent months. As the minister reporting to Parliament for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, I have been, quite naturally, the focus of feelings of anger and frustration among people who were in fear of losing their homes. Throughout that time, I have repeatedly given assurances that the government would abide by the commitment made in the throne speech, that we would, in the words of the speech, "—act to assist those unable to bear the burden of renegotiating their home mortgages in the present abnormal situation so that the spectre of foreclosure will be avoided."

I would ask hon. members to witness that my confidence in the Minister of Finance and my cabinet colleagues has been justified. We have kept the faith; we have kept that promise.

We have done exactly what we said we would do, and we have done it exactly as we said we would, by directing assistance to those most urgently in need of it and, again in the words of the throne speech, "—without the government embarking upon a major subsidy program."

I have been asked many times in recent weeks, and so have my colleagues, who are the people most in need of help, how will they be defined? The answer is now quite clear. Householders in need of help are all those who have to renew their mortgage at a rate that will take up an excessive proportion of their gross incomes. We are saying that an "excessive proportion of income" will be more than 30 per cent, paid out in mortgage principal, interest, and property taxes, with some allowance for condominium fees, where they apply.

These are Canadians who, because of the present level of interest rates, and their recent rapid escalation, will be faced with the necessity of making significant adjustments in their personal financial arrangements during the next year.

There has been a great deal of speculation as to how many households would be included in this category over the next 12 months.

Much depends, of course, upon what will actually happen to the level of mortgage interest rates. These remain painfully high, but have dropped considerably during the last month. Our estimates indicate that if mortgage interest rates over the next months were in the 20 per cent range there would be something, as I indicated this morning, in the order of 50,000 householders between now and a year hence for whom mortgage payments and taxes after renewal would represent more than 30 per cent of gross income. The great majority of these householders will have some equity in their home.

People who have a substantial equity in their home can make use of that resource to help themselves through this period of high interest rates. Several mortgage lenders have offered to defer interest payments—to allow borrowers to postpone the payment of interest and to add it to the principal amount owing. That, of course, is not a permanent solution. As long as interest payments are being deferred, the debt is increasing and is, itself, bearing interest at a high rate. It is a way, however, that some people would choose in order to reduce their mortgage payments. But this alternative is not offered by all mortgage lenders to all of their clients. Some lenders are not prepared to accept what they consider an additional risk.

In order to reduce the risk entailed by the deferral of mortgage interest for borrowers who have equity, the government is offering a guarantee. Where the home owner has an equity of 5 per cent or more in the home but is paying out more than 30 per cent of household income in monthly payments, the government will assist to arrange the deferral of interest payments by underwriting the deferred interest.

This guarantee will make it easier for the lender to offer interest deferral, in cases where the borrower wants it, in order to reduce the amount of current mortgage payments.

The special guarantee, however, will not address an even more difficult problem for other Canadians. Some of the householders whose debt service ratio will be over 30 per cent as a result of renewal, will have insufficient equity in their home. Interest deferral does not answer the problem faced by these householders who need it most. To increase their mortgage debt beyond reasonable limits would, in all probability, simply add to their problems in the future. For these householders we intend therefore to make grants in order to keep their monthly payments within manageable limits.

That, in essence, is the Canada mortgage renewal plan—a system of interest-deferral guarantees and grants. It is available to people who would be paying more than 30 per cent of income in monthly payments after renewing their mortgage. For people who have substantial equity, there is help in making an interest-deferral arrangement. For people who have less than 5 per cent equity, there are grants to bring their mortgage payments to a manageable level. The plan will be in effect for one year until November 12, 1982. It will be retroactive, applying to mortgages that matured on or after September 1, 1981. There is a limit of $3,000 per household, over the next 12 months, on the amount of interest deferral subject to the special guarantee, or on the amount of grant.

I should perhaps say a special word here about a group of home owners in which the government has a special interest, those who bought homes under the Assisted Home Ownership Program.

There are two types of AHOP participants. The first are people who receive outright grants. For these people, in order to bring them parallel to the plan announced last evening by the minister, the AHOP grants will be increased to a maximum of $3,000.

The other people are AHOP borrowers who received interest-reduction loans rather than outright grants. These people will be eligible for either deferral plan guarantees or the grant under the Canada mortgage renewal plan.

In the past few weeks and months I have met with many individuals and organizations to hear their representations and to seek practical solutions to the mortgage renewal problem. I have met with hundreds of home owners in Ottawa and different parts of the country, including the large delegation which assembled on Parliament Hill, and with my own constituents. I have met also with organizations of builders and lenders and representatives of the real estate industry.

I am appreciative of all these offers of advice. After much serious deliberation, the government has chosen a plan which is precisely targeted to people's needs and which does not put an excessive demand on public resources in a time of economic restraint.

The mortgage renewal aid measures will be given effect through necessary amendments to the National Housing Act which I will put before the House at the first opportunity. I am confident, given the urgency of the situation which the legislation addresses and the concern expressed in this House for the plight of home owners, that it will be dealt with expeditiously by hon. members on all sides.

• (1520)

In the meantime, the Minister of Finance will be reminding the mortgage lenders that the plan is retroactive and will apply to any arrangements they have made with borrowers during the interim. In addition, officials of CMHC will be meeting on Monday with the lenders to discuss procedures and to enlist their co-operation. All of these measures are confined to home owners who are now renewing their mortgages or who will be doing this during the next 12 months.

I would not like to give the impression that mortgage renewals are the only difficulties facing the housing sector. There is a growing awareness of the needs of people who rent their homes and who, in many parts of the country, are having difficulty finding suitable accommodation at an affordable cost. In response to representations concerning this, I am very pleased that the government has made provision in the budget for interest-free loans of $7,500 a unit to assist in the construction of as many as 15,000 additional units. This would be affordable rental accommodation in areas where the shortage is most severe. About 5,000 of these would be available for low-income people through rent supplement programs which, with provincial cost-sharing, provide assistance geared to income.

I would hasten to add that these 15,000 new additional units, with a provision for low-income people, will be in addition to the 25,000 social housing units which will be supported under the popular co-operative programs that serve people of modest and low incomes. In all, when one combines them, 40,000 rental and co-operative units will provide suitable accommodation for people in the low, moderate and middle-income ranges.

In the next few weeks I intend to travel across the country to meet with provincial housing ministers regarding the application of the new rental program I have just described. A number of provincial governments have programs of their own to stimulate rental production, and provinces do participate in our existing non-profit programs. The new national program of interest-free loans is not being put forward to replace what the provinces are now doing. It is intended as an additional impetus to rental construction. It will be necessary for me to discuss the strategies with the housing ministers if we are to deploy the new rental program in the most effective way for all Canadians. At the same time, I intend to encourage the provincial ministers to complement our programs with any provincial initiatives designed to suit regional needs.

While we are concerned about measures to alleviate current problems, such as high interest rates and low vacancy rates, we should not allow ourselves to be distracted from our continuing attack on long-standing problems. I am thinking, for example, of our ongoing efforts to improve the housing conditions of native people and the rural poor. I am happy to be able to say that through our rural and native housing program we have been able to make very substantial improvements in the conditions of these Canadians in recent years, while attempting to assist them to achieve economic and social development. This program has been evaluated with the direct participation of the native people themselves. I hope that I will soon be in a position to propose innovations which will make the program more effective, efficient and equitable for all the people it serves. Improvement in this particular program has a high personal priority for me.

I would like to remind all hon. members that housing for some 400,000 households in Canada, almost 5 per cent of the existing housing stock, is provided in different ways by the national government under programs such as public housing, co-operative and non-profit housing. This includes housing for the elderly and for women raising families alone who could not otherwise afford to obtain suitable accommodation without depriving themselves or their families of other necessities.

There are, however, some limitations to the existing social housing programs of which I speak. Not everyone has access to the limited stock of social housing. Most of the housing provided through this technique is new, and consequently adds to the stock. That is an important advantage. However, the disadvantage is that it also adds to the difficulties of generating a sufficient supply of housing. If we relied only on this technique, it certainly would require a long time and costly expenditure to serve the needs of Canadians.

For these reasons, as many hon. members are aware, I have been turning my attention to additional ways of providing housing for people who are not able to fend for themselves. One approach is the idea of shelter allowances, giving people money to seek out their own accommodation in the market, rather than putting them into special, subsidized units. The idea is to provide assistance to people rather than to buildings. I have raised this idea on a number of public occasions; most recently, at the all-sector housing conference in March of this year. I have raised the idea with the ministers for housing in the provinces at our meeting in June.

There are many aspects to this system which require and are receiving further study, such as the effect of shelter allowances on rents, the question of quality standards, limits on unit prices, and many more. Overriding all other considerations, of course, is the question of cost during a period of serious economic constraint. Nevertheless, I intend to continue discussions with the provincial housing ministers on this subject. It is a matter which I am continuing to discuss with my cabinet colleagues, especially those with responsibility in the area of social programs.

I would like to speak for a moment about Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. CMHC is, of course, the agency through which all of this assistance is delivered. Its staff has a continuing role, not only in implementing government programs, but in helping to select and develop new measures, as we did recently. CMHC will, of course, act in the government's behalf in administering the mortgage renewal plan, as well as many other forms of assistance under the National Housing Act. I think it has been well recognized for some time that CMHC has been doing an excellent job, even though it has had to operate within a legislative and regulatory framework which has often imposed serious restraints on the way in which it does business.

As I have mentioned, I intend shortly to introduce amendments to the National Housing Act to authorize the mortgage renewal plan. At the same time, I will take the opportunity to propose other amendments which will assist first time home buyers by making possible more flexible mortgage instruments, and will assist builders of rental housing by permitting higher loan levels. The mortgage renewal plan and the rental stimulus program that I have talked about today are addressed, of course, to the present problems arising from mortgage interest rates.

There are, as I have indicated, other problems associated with high interest levels. The treatment of these problems requires new mortgage lending techniques to which the present National Housing Act is ill suited. A wider variety of mortgage payment arrangements is called for to answer the needs of first time home owners and of rental entrepreneurs in the future. To insure such mortgages against different risks requires more flexibility than is allowed under the act. More flexibility is required with regard to insurance premiums, mortgage terms, payment schedules and procedures for claim settlement, all of which impinge upon the ability of the corporation to fund and to act. I will have more to say about these on another occasion.

In summary, I would like to commend to the House and to the people of Canada the plan offered by the minister last evening which will assist Canadians to cope with the problems associated with renewing mortgages at high rates of interest. The mortgage plan meets the essential requirements. First, it gives help to those who need it most. It gives people the amount of help they need to get them through the difficult times. It does all of this fairly and without adding to inflationary pressures through excessive and indiscriminate expenditure of public resources.

I would like to remind hon. members and the country that mortgage renewal problems, distressing as they are, are not the only housing issues we have to confront. Tenants have problems, and I will be exploring solutions to those problems in my discussions beginning immediately with provincial housing ministers.

● (1530)

I had made reference to our efforts on behalf of the native people and the rural poor, and, as I have indicated, that program has a high place in my priorities as the minister reporting to this House and the government for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

We are concerned as well with the needs of a large proportion of the population; women raising children alone, the elderly and the handicapped who cannot fend for themselves in the marketplace. We have made important strides in broadening our social housing assistance and making it more acceptable. As a result, for example, of representations made by the provincial ministers at the conference earlier this year, and as a result of the efforts of the handicapped during this year, the corporation has taken steps to make more available to the handicapped increased access to our social programs. These efforts, I am sure, will be reflected not only in improved living conditions for many Canadians but also in an impetus to the housing industry and in the creation of a significant number of new jobs.

In concluding I would like to reiterate my comments on the effect of the measures the government is taking. They will deal effectively and equitably with the problem of mortgage renewals. They will stimulate the production of rental housing, and, when combined with existing social housing programs, they will result in 40,000 rental units being supported by the government next year.

To achieve this, the government has allocated $150 million in direct expenditures next year for these initiatives, and a further $200 million has been allocated in the fiscal framework 1983-84 because of the special guarantee of interest deferral and other housing measures that may be required.

These figures are impressive, particularly given the over-all requirement for fiscal restraint, but they do not by themselves represent the full story. The federal government through its actions will cause a further $1.6 billion in private funds from the private sector to flow to the production of rental housing across Canada next year. This in turn will create jobs and will assist in improving the health of the residential building industry. I am not ashamed to say that this is done under a program which combines not only the government and the private sector, but the national government in co-operation with provincial and local governments and the private sector. They are co-operating in achieving these housing needs for Canadians.

We are all aware as well of the spin-offs from this massive investment; the multiplier effects the industry creates in other areas such as in home furnishings and in the appliance industry, all of which are presently in need of this stimulation.

The task remaining is for the House to translate the very obvious concern, which is taken for granted, and the expression of that concern from all sides of the House during the last few months, into action to assist Canadians who are being affected at this time because of high interest rates.

As I indicated, I will table a bill to amend the National Housing Act. The legislation is important. It will enable the government and Parliament to assist householders in renewing their mortgages through the mortgage renewal plan. It will enable the government and Parliament to assist first-time home buyers through modifications to the mortgage instrument, which, as I have indicated, are not now available in the present legislation. It will enable an additional stimulus to be provided to rental production by allowing CMHC to insure higher loan amounts on rental production. This demonstrates the interface of government with the private sector to the benefit of all Canadians.

I trust and pray that, just as my confidence in the government was vindicated by the government, so too will my confidence in the good sense of all hon. members of this House be vindicated by the speedy passage of this legislation, legislation which, as we all know, is sorely needed by Canadians at this time.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my first words on the amendment on entering this debate are spoken in terms of sorrow because I realize what has happened in these last few weeks. We have had a minister of the Crown, obviously sincere and obviously trying his level best to grapple with the problems of housing, suddenly catching the can and having to take responsibility for fundamental policies of the government which have nothing to do with finding the solution to the real problems in Canada. I am very sorry that a fine, new Member of Parliament should have to undergo this. He wrote off his right to pity. I know, when he stood up and, in his opening remarks today, said: "I praise the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) for doing this to me; I am pulling the spear into my own chest." I do feel deeply sorry for any human being who has to carry the can on this particular isue.

What we are debating here is not just a budget. What we are debating here, in plain, blunt terms, is interest rates. We are suffering in a prison of myths started 40 years ago and carried on today by a small group of monetary and fiscal experts who have learned nothing in the last 40 years and have forgotten nothing. This whole debate hinges on the understanding we as Members of Parliament have of the use of interest rates. In the view of these experts, interest rates represent a tool of monetary policy, when in fact interest rates cause inflation. They look at interest rates as a tool to fight inflation when the truth is that interest rates cause inflation. That has shown up dramatically in the last eight or nine months with the housing industry and people who own homes being in the front lines. It has shown up dramatically in small businesses, and it has shown up in a dramatic way in big business, including great companies like General Motors, Ford, Chrysler, Massey-Ferguson, John Deere and a whole assortment of companies which operate on the technique of credit for production, for inventory and for distribution. The interest rate load has passed the boundary of economics, over the abyss and into the mess we are in today. This puts into perspective what this debate is about. Normally it is the budget. We have listened to our spokesman for the Conservative Party—who is another new member and who is equally sincere and who is trying to do his best to put into words what he felt should have been done in this budget. I think it was a credible effort for the first time he has engaged in the opening part of a budget debate. What he was trying to say, Mr. Speaker, was that the missing ingredient in this budget, during this economic cycle, was the primary objective of developing this country. Developing this country would not cause inflation. If we bring together our unused plant capacity and our unused labour supply with the great supply of cash we have in Canada through our savings programs, these great challenges which face us economically can become great opportunities. That is what the spokesman for the Conservative Party was saying.

● (1540)

The speech by the representative from the New Democratic Party was a demonstration of what a master of words can do in ripping a helpless government apart. The irony of it all is that this is the man who helped get this government into power. He helped to defeat a budget in 1979 which had some of the provisions which should have been in this budget. I could not help but think of the irony of it as I listened to his razor-edged remarks, cutting the heart out of the government members. He was one of the leaders in the movement to force the alliance between the NDP and the Liberals, who only had one objective, to get the Conservatives out of power. The good Lord, in His wisdom, is today dealing with these people in His own way.

This budget can be analysed very simply by asking yourself four or five questions. Did this budget provide a series of tax reductions for the things people need, want and would accept? Would this create a number of jobs which, in turn, would create a greater amount of tax revenue and help the government balance its budget over the next two or three years? Were there any tax reductions in this budget which met that criteria? There were six or seven of them in the Crosbie budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) had so much sport with over the last two years. It is a case of one island guy buzzing another island guy. Was there any proposal in this budget to reduce taxes to get the economy moving and help the Minister of Finance balance his budget over the next couple of years? The answer is, yes, there was one. That one provision is for a reduction of gross taxes on income from that horrible high level of 64 per cent in Ontario and most of the rest of Canada down to 50 per cent. The maximum income tax of an individual in Canada, both provincial and federal, is 50 per cent. That is all the government will now take away from you, instead of the outrageous 64 per cent.

There was an editorial in The Globe and Mail this morning which stated that there are only 50,000 people in this bracket who will benefit, and I think that most of them read The Globe and Mail. Do we in our party say that this provision is bad? The answer is, no, because whether you like this provision or not, these 50,000 people who will benefit quite extensively—they already have a Cadillac and a house which is paid for, so they cannot spend much more—will put their money back in the investment field because they are the type of people who will do this. They are the ones who hopefully will create the jobs, and the record shows that they always do. This party, through the words of every member who speaks, will support this part of the budget and this, of course, is where we differ from the NDP. They want the tax raised higher on these 50,000 people who make $100,000 a year. They are against any person having that kind of income. They believe we should all be down at the same level in an egalitarian society where there is no ownership of property. That was clearly stated by the spokesman for the New Democratic Party.

I repeat that this budget does make one provision for tax reduction. However, if we review the Crosbie budget, we will note that there was a proposal to deduct interest on mortgages, a proposal to deduct property tax for home owners—the renter already has that type of thing. This was proposed in the Crosbie budget, and the Liberals and the New Democratic Party turned it down. The Crosbie budget proposed an energy tax credit wherein any person who made less than $22,000 a year was not taxed at all on energy. This allegiance of Tweedledum and Tweedledee now results in taxing oil and gas and everything else. Gas is up by 36 cents to 46 cents a gallon. That is a measurement of what the present budget shows when compared with the Crosbie budget.

What I am suggesting, following the lead of the spokesman for the Conservative Party, is that there should have been a vast series of tax reductions in the budget, tax reductions for any person who would invest as an individual in ownership of this country, for any person who would invest in pipelines into the north, for any persons investing in a power grid from the Yukon through to the Hamilton River—now called the Churchill—tying up the great energy resources of coal to use thermal heat, the great power grid which made all this energy available across the country. I would like to have seen tax reductions to encourage the development of a system to move hydrogen across the country in a way similar to oil, gas or electricity. There was a task force report from all parties in the House which recommended this as a number one priority. The system of moving hydrogen is much the same as for moving gas except it requires twice the pressure.

I could go on and list a number of projects. We have the prairies which are full of great natural river basins which have been empty for millions of years. We have the facilities now available to store water in those great basins. This water could be transported across the prairies to make industrial development available at a lower cost than in any other country in the world, particularly in the petrochemical industry. I would like to see that water go back to its original channel from the prairies right through to Ontario and right across the northwest of Ontario where is used to run. It can be done. I would like to see a development on the east coast to take advantage of these tremendous iron reserves we have in Labrador and around Ungava. I would like to see a tremendous development in the Hudson Bay area on the Nastapoka Islands and the Belchers, where iron is 70 per cent, tied into the big industrial complex we have around the Great Lakes where there are millions of people. We could produce steel even cheaper than we do today, and our steel is the cheapest in the world.

● (1550)

I can see one project after the other—with the economics all worked out—that could have been started in this budget. We could have put our men to work, and people tell me that would not be a policy of restraint! Whenever you spend money to make money, that does not cause inflation. That is the only way to fight inflation. That money can be spent on potential things or on immediate things.

I have before me a chart covering the years 1953 to 1981, and what it is is the pulse rate of the nation. It shows the pulse beating at different rates for nearly 30 years, and as that pulse rate is beating, we can see the country growing or taking sudden drops. As I look at the last 30 years on this chart I see a drop on the chart as a result of the budget of Walter Harris in 1956. He used the same opening philosophy the minister used last night. I see a drop in 1959 under Donald Fleming. He made his budget presentation from the same seat occupied by the present minister. I remember that budget, and I remember how that policy was changed shortly afterward and how growth increased steadily for nine years without a break. Even when Walter Gordon brought in his budget, that made only a small tremor. Then there was the budget of Benson of 1968. We were going to wrestle inflation to the ground, but that budget sent us right down in one of the steepest drops we have ever had in our economic history. Once the country gathered itself together and fought its way up out of that, along came the 1974 budget of John Turner, after which there was a real drop. That was the time he double taxed by making the taxes of the provinces on the resource industries non-deductible. This country has never quite recovered from that double taxation of the mining and resource industries in the Turner budget of 1974. We have had stagflation ever since. Along with the United States, our country has been struggling to get going. All of a sudden we have this new budget. We are already into a recession and, instead of trying to do what the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), the spokesman for the Conservative Party, was saying, instead of trying to get outselves going, instead of getting up and taking advantage of the fact that there are men and women who need jobs and that there is lots of money available, if the tax rate is right, and instead of taking advantage of these great opportunities, the minister walked in here and repeated the same mistakes Walter Harris made in 1956, Fleming made in 1959, Benson made in 1968 and Turner made in 1974. The minister has turned this country downhill at high speed, with all the human suffering and frustration which will result.

We will get out of it, all right. This country is too strong even for politicians to push it around, but it is an unhappy time for me to go through this.

I say that this budget could be tested by three, four or five questions. I mentioned tax reductions, not just to please voters but to balance the budget by making more money available. That is a potential thing. I mentioned that the Crosbie budget had six or seven, and I will put on the record once again a reference to a special issue of "The Public Interest" in 1980. The article to which I refer is entitled "The Dissolution of the Keynesian Consensus", and it was written by James W. Dean. The article says:

> On December 13, 1979, the government of Canada fell. For just six months the Conservatives had governed with a parliamentary minority, and they were defeated on a vote of no confidence. The issue was their first budget—a budget that rejected Keynesian economic policies, replacing them with radically different recommendations. Unemployment and slow growth were to be fought not by increasing the federal deficit but by reducing it.
>
> This was a turnabout in what the Conservatives themselves had recommended when sitting in opposition just the year before. Their turnabout mirrored that of much of the economics profession throughout the English-speaking world. It was the decade's last dramatic reflection of a dissolving Keynesian consensus. This paper traces how that dissolution came about.

I put that on the record again to show that the intellectuals of the world recognized the significance of the Crosbie budget, even though we in Parliament did not at the time. It was the first budget in the western world that deliberately tried to balance the budget by reducing taxes, and that is what the record will show over the centuries to come. One page of this morning's Globe and Mail was set aside for the federal budget. It says, "Little new spending in development strategy for the eighties." As The Globe and Mail read the development paper—and I read it too—The Globe and Mail does not see any new spending to make money in development in the whole decade to come.

The government had a great opportunity to pick this country up and to get it off this mythology of Keynes whereby the government frightens us with myths and bogey men that do not exist. One of the myths is that deficits are always inflationary. I have heard that for 25 years around here, and I simply say that deficits are not inflationary if the money is spent in productive enterprises. Deficits are not inflationary if the money is spent to make money. Deficits are not inflationary if the capacity of the industrial segment is available. Deficits are not inflationary if labour is available.

Surely the quantative evidence of the last 30 years should be listened to. More embarrassing still is another myth with which the government tries to frighten us, and that is that we have to have high interest rates in Canada so that money will not flow out. What a myth! Hon. members should look at the figures. Using just the number 2 to represent the total figure, in the last decade we sent out roughly $2 a year. What did we do last year after interest rates went up out of sight? Our export of capital went up from 2 to 10. If we were to add "billion" we would not be far out. High interest rates are supposed to draw money in, but the more we have raised interest rates in Canada, the more money has gone out—five times more.

● (1600)

I simply say that this budget fails in almost every test. I have not mentioned the transfer of social costs back to the provinces. Nor have I mentioned the question of indexing of income which is being done for one more year.

I want to conclude by stating those things in the budget that really hurt. I refer in particular to the minister in charge of housing, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) and any resource minister. The final question we should ask ourselves is, where are their precise policies to reduce interest rates on the fiscal side? The answer is just the opposite.

The poor housing policy just announced by the minister is simply putting off the problem of interest rates. They call it deferring it, which means adding it to your debt. Instead of paying it out over 25 or 30 years, it will be paying it out over 35 or 40 years. It is a life sentence. That is what it means.

The answer should have been what was proposed to the minister in the House last spring from this side. We should have applied the same principle of the small business development bond to several fiscal fields. If a person wanted to lend money for housing, the export industry, farming or any other form of activity which is productive, that person should not be charged tax on his income. He could then afford to lend his money to the productive industries at roughly 8 to 10 per cent and not be behind in the game. The government naturally would not allow the fellow who received that money to use his interest payments as deductions. Therefore, it is a fair balance.

That principle could have been applied to housing. Now with interest rates bouncing around 16 and 17 per cent, and they will soon be down to 13 and 14 per cent because the market is forcing them down, not the theorists, a man could borrow the money for half the rate plus one. No army of civil servants would be required. Let the Farm Credit Corporation and Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation be the agencies to handle that requirement. Whatever route you work with, this could have applied to vast segments of our economy where there is a human need as well as an economic need.

These directions for industries related to homes, farms, the export business and small business would be able to make enough profit and expand to produce the jobs which are the big human need in Canada today.

When everyone is making money, the tax collector makes money. He will get back three times over what was put out originally. The tax collector would be the big beneficiary, but everyone would benefit. It would not be a case of one side winning and one side losing, what they call the zero sum society. It would be a modern society of common sense where everybody wins because everybody is participating in the common goal.

These proposals were all made by members on this side last spring. I thought the minister was listening. He spoke favourably of it. I thought the Minister of Agriculture was listening because he went out and talked the same. However, this budget has now cut the throats of these two ministers. They are destroyed. The man who really should be destroyed is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who did not defend those two ministers in front of his own Minister of Finance, making certain that they were protected by carrying out in the budget what was promised to the people before this budget was laid down.

I wish there was another name in the amendment which the Conservative Party has moved. We are getting the guy who has to get the blame, but I think it is the wrong person. I want to conclude by saying in one sentence something I said before. This budget is not only wrong for this time of the cycle in Canada, it is a fraud on the Canadian people.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this important budget debate now being held in the House. First of all, I would like to mention that during the past year, I was involved in two special committees of the House, one on North-South relations and the other on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements. I am glad to see that the government has made a thorough study of the two reports tabled by these two task forces and that both reports received the unanimous approval of all parties in the House, that is, of the parties of the members sitting on these committees, and that the government has accepted the general principles and orientation of the two committees.

[English]

I am happy to see the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) in the chamber this afternoon. He was a very active member of the task force on North-South relations which I had the honour to chair. He was of great help in that process, as were all members of that task force.

I believe we have helped in the process of reform of this place which is so important to influencing government policy and giving a philosophical framework to the government, both in North-South and in fiscal arrangements. That will be very helpful to the government and the country. I mention that because on both issues we have a reaffirmation of the government's commitment, first to North-South relations and the development assistance budget of the government and also in the area of fiscal arrangements.

[Translation]

I was very happy to read in the budget speech made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) last night, that the government is now making concrete proposals on the renewal of fiscal arrangements for the period from 1982 to 1987. I find it gratifying to see the extent to which the minister used the report of the Parliamentary Task Force on Fiscal Arrangements in preparing the federal government's proposals. In fact, it can be said that basically, the federal proposals are in line with our own recommendations. The federal proposal is concerned with three distinct aspects of fiscal arrangements, that is, equalization payments, established programs financing and fiscal rationalization. This is more or less the order used by our task force in its report.

The conceptual framework we used, which may be found in chapter 2 of the report, identifies four basic elements with respect to the future of fiscal arrangements, that is, sharing of tax revenue by the two levels of government, economic and fiscal co-ordination, fiscal equalization and financing of provincial programs that are in the national interest. And here I am thinking more specifically of hospital care, medicare and the Canada Assistance Plan. Although the latter is not one of the programs identified under the EPF program, it is still a very important social program in our country.

To have an overview of the fiscal reality in our federal system, one must situate intergovernmental transfer payments such as equalization and EPF payments within the context of the public finances of each level of government. Since 1957, the federal government has more than quadrupled the fiscal space available to the provinces where personal income tax is concerned through the use of tax point transfers, which has enabled the provinces to finance their expenditures on health and education. The provinces have therefore received a larger share of the country's public revenue, and also more flexibility, because with the tax point system, the province is free to apply or appropriate these public funds as it sees fit. The provinces have become stronger financially compared to the federal government.

From 1959 to 1979, the federal share of public revenue fell from over 58 per cent to less than 46 per cent, while the share of provinces and municipalities rose from 42 per cent to 54 per cent. If one subtracts federal transfer payments and considers them as provincial revenue, one sees that the federal government's share of revenue, which was 52 per cent in 1959, is now less than 34 per cent of what it was in 1979. These figures tell us a great deal, Mr. Speaker, in fact they indicate that from the fiscal point of view, Canada is probably the most decentralized federation in the world, despite the fact that it is said that the federal government, especially under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), has been a centralizing government. Not, however, Mr. Speaker, if we look, at the figures which show that since 1959, the share of total public revenue in Canada spent by the federal government dropped from 52 per cent to 34 per cent.

Therefore, on the basis of those facts a majority of members of the parliamentary task force on tax agreements concluded that it would be unwise to proceed with new transfers of income tax points as suggested by some provinces. Such transfers would indeed reduce the means available to the federal government to make sure that provincial involvement in areas such as health and post-secondary education are consistent with the achievement of major national objectives. Should some tax fields be taken away from the federal government, it would be unable to govern in the interests of all the people. In addition, new transfers of income tax points would reduce the capacity of the federal government to manage the economy and would favour the wealthiest provinces where the value of tax points is higher.

The government proposals to renew tax agreements do not provide for any new transfer of tax points and thus they entirely agree with the conclusions of the task force in connection with the sharing of tax revenues between the two levels of government. It should also be noted that neither the Minister of Finance nor the task force suggest a reduction in the tax fields granted to the provinces in the past two years. For example, tax fields granted to the provinces in 1977 cannot be patriated.

As concerns economic and fiscal co-ordination, the task force recommended that the federal government maintain the tax agreements while still requiring that they be subjected to the three principles outlined by the Minister of Finance in December, 1980. These principles relate to the administrative practicability of tax measures, the uniformity of the direct tax base and the avoidance of fiscal obstacles to the flow of capital between provinces. We also suggested the development of a fiscal behaviour code which, without preventing the federal government from stimulating economic development in have-not regions, would subject all governments in Canada to a certain fiscal discipline. We also suggested the establishment of a federal-provincial committee of officials which would report periodically to the Minister of Finance on the state of the economic union. This committee would look into various matters of fiscal harmonization between the different governments and could consider drafting an economic behaviour code on taxation, spending and economic regulatory processes. The Minister of Finance's proposals on fiscal harmonization are very important, Mr. Speaker, because it is essential to maintain in Canada the principles outlined by the minister himself at the 1980 finance minister's conference. He proposes consultations with all the provinces, including those not included in the tax arrangements, to look into matters of fiscal harmonization and develop corrective mechanisms if need be.

This issue of fiscal harmonization scares many people because it is very complex, Mr. Speaker. But without any fiscal harmonization or co-ordination to ensure that all levels of government in Canada, both federal and provincial, will act likewise when the time comes to collect new taxes or to legislate in this area, there would be a tremendous jungle in Canada. What would happen is that the provinces would compete against each other for taxes and, as a result, someone who did not want to pay any taxes would not pay any anywhere in Canada. I am therefore pleased that the minister has accepted this recommendation of the task force on fiscal arrangements. The members of our task force can only be pleased with the minister's proposals because they are clearly made in the same spirit as our report.

• (1610)

[English]

We analysed very thoroughly the question of fiscal equalization. We made some important recommendations. That topic formed the highlight of our report. It is worth noting that members of this House, or members of a committee of this House from different political parties, are able to speak with one voice on the question of equalization, as this is the issue. Canada could not exist as it exists today without the concept and philosophy of providing an equality of fiscal capacity up to the national average for every province of this country. How could the provinces of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia or my own province of New Brunswick, for example, provide the degree of social services they provide to their citizens without equalization? Without it we would have two or three levels of Canadians. That would be intolerable in this country. We proposed that the program continue as an unconditional transfer of resources to provinces that are below the national average in fiscal capacity per capita. We also said that a program of equalization which would measure the fiscal capacity was the best way to arrive at this objective of equality or of comparable services from one part of the country to the other.

With regard to the treatment of natural resources, we could not make precise recommendations because, at the time we reported, there had not been an oil and gas pricing agreement with Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. However, we recommended that decisions taken in regard to this question should be inspired by certain principles that we considered important. First, the receipts from natural resources should only be included in the equalization formula to the extent that they serve to finance what can be considered normal provincial services; second, that no special category of receipts or benefits from natural resources be excluded from the equalization formula, and that all receipts of this kind be included in the formula that established the entitlement to the have-not provinces; and third, it was important to have some kind of ceiling on the proportion of equalization entitlement to either the gross national product or to some other ceiling to protect the integrity of the federal treasury. It should be noted that many people do not recognize this need. I was struck, when listening to the debate in the House and travelling across the country with the task force, by the extent to which people do not realize that while equalization payments to provinces are calculated on the taxing capacity of all provinces, but influenced mainly by the rich provinces, all payments come out of the federal treasury. It is a unique program because it indicates that automatically, without questions asked and without regard to the moneys coming into the federal treasury, on the basis of the fiscal capacity of provincial governments taking 29 tax fields, the federal treasury should pay this out. It is a unique system. On the question of equalization it indicates that the capacity of the federal treasury at any given time should not be a factor which would deprive the have-not provinces of achieving an average fiscal capacity per capita. It is important to note that. We said it was an important principle. However, while it is pegged to provincial taxes or what happens in the provincial field, there should be some kind of ceiling to protect the federal treasury.

• (1620)

[Translation]

The task force considered that it was normal that the approach selected to deal with revenue from natural resources would result in a substantial reduction in equalization payments now being made on the basis of such revenue and that, as a result, Ontario's eligibility for equalization payments would be postponed for at least a few years. We also recommended abrogating the special provision on personal income, as a result of which Ontario is now excluded from equalization payments.

Those were thus the main recommendations of the task force. They are similar to the proposals of the Minister of Finance, because the minister, while wishing to retain the representative taxation system, proposes to change the present formula by broadening the fiscal capability measure on which it is based, and by setting Ontario's fiscal productivity as the norm for equalization payments. In addition, the Minister of Finance is proposing that municipal and local taxes should all be included in the equalization formula in order to determine the size of the payment to provinces receiving equalization.

[English]

I believe that adopting the Ontario standard as the minister proposed in the budget is equitable and fair. It prevents us from adopting the special discriminatory procedures or positions that we had last year to protect the federal treasury from a rampant increase in equalization payments because of something happening, for example, in the resource field. I believe that adopting the Ontario standard is fair. Considering that the decisions on levels of municipal taxation in Ontario are not in the hands of a single government but in the hands of an array of municipal governments, I believe it will turn out to be very generous for provinces that are recipients of equalization payments.

[Translation]

Concerning established programs financing, we made a number of very elaborate recommendations. These recommendations deal with the terms and conditions of established programs as well as their financing. On the terms and conditions of health programs, the task force recommended that after consulting with the provincial governments, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) establish clear health program conditions based on explicit criteria allowing their implementation to be monitored. We also recommended, in respect of the Minister of National Health and Welfare as well as the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) and any other minister designated by the government, that there be an annual report to Parliament on the state of programs or on what the minister refers to as "national standards".

A comparison of the task force's recommendations in the areas of health care and post-secondary education show a striking similarity. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) proposes that national health care standards be clarified and that an efficient mechanism be set up in consultation with the provinces to ensure that they be adhered to. Concerning post-secondary education, the minister proposes that new arrangements be worked out in consultation with the provinces, and in view of the fact that the minister asked for different treatment in cases where there is no post-secondary education agreement, it can be seen that the minister is getting near to our recommendation to separate the two, and hopefully in the course of these negotiations with the provinces, the Canadian government will show fairness in the areas of health care and post-secondary education in order that we have not only an agreement on the conditions of those programs, particularly on the matter of extra billing by physicians, but also an agreement on post-secondary education national goals and an agreement on the implementation of those programs and the way these terms and conditions will be interpreted in the future, because currently there is not even agreement on the interpretation.

On the issue of established programs financing, especially the federal contribution to health care and post-secondary education programs, and the treatment of part of the financing transfer concerning established programs, the budget proposes that it be abolished in the interest of restraint.

Mr. Speaker, it must be said that it was not quite what the task force recommended, but what did matter to its members was that there be—and this is my own interpretation—no real basic reduction from one year to the next. With respect to the growth of the federal contribution, as well as of the expenditures, that is to say in the programs administered by the provinces we agree that in the future adjustments may be made.

I am glad to see that the government has accepted that recommendation of the task force, namely to maintain the level of financing, because, as the minister said during today's oral questions period, although the elimination of the system of revenue guarantee will cost $914 million to the provinces in 1982-83, we must keep in mind that when the minister proposes to close the loopholes—

[English]

The minister proposed to close the loopholes in the tax expenditure accounts. This will have the effect of increasing the federal tax base or the basic federal tax. All provinces except Quebec use the federal tax base to establish their own provincial income taxes. They are a percentage of the federal tax. While this will cost the provinces $914 million in 1982-83 they will receive, because of the changes, $1,083 million more in 1982-83. They will receive more in this current year, or approximately $47 million. While the net effect will be a loss starting in 1983-84, in the aggregate for the next two fiscal years the provinces will not lose one cent from the elimination of the revenue guarantee.

One must say that the revenue guarantee is a very inequitable form of fiscal transfer. I can see that the revenue guarantee was necessary in 1972 to protect provinces against sudden changes in the federal tax base because of tax reform, but the provinces have had ten years to adapt their provincial tax rates. We must not forget that the revenue guarantee is one point of personal income tax and the rest is cash. It is very inequitable toward poor provinces. It provides more of a guarantee to the rich provinces than to the poor ones. I think the way the government is dealing with this is in the spirit of the task force report. It does not effectively reduce in the aggregate in the next two years the amount of money the provinces will receive from the federal government when we take into account the moneys they will have because of the changes to the federal tax base. It will not be redressed. There will be no $1.5 billion cut in the next two years. I see the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) smile. The only reduction will be $1.9 billion out of total transfers of $104 billion over five years. When one considers the changes to equalization, bringing in the municipal taxes at the Ontario level, I am sure that in the case of the have-not provinces at least, there will be no reduction at all, even when the elimination of the revenue guarantee is considered.

• (1630)

I am waiting for the cash flow figures on the changes to equalization. If we look at the budget document entitled "Fiscal Arrangements in the Eighties" which was tabled last evening by the Minister of Finance we will see on page 45 that the estimates of equalization of payments under the proposed formula will go from $4.5 billion in 1982-83 to over $7 billion by 1986-87. There will be very generous increases, and it is estimated that the average annual rate of growth of equalization payments will be 11.4 per cent.

The elimination of the revenue guarantee, accompanied by an increase in the federal tax base, and the elimination of the tax loopholes that the minister proposed will bring more equity into the system, and the have-not provinces will be protected by an enriched equalization system because their tax capacity will be equalized after bringing in municipal taxes to the Ontario level.

Everyone knows that municipal taxes in Ontario are very high. In Newfoundland there are practically none; in New Brunswick they are very low; in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island they are way below the national average. The result will be that municipal taxes in the poor provinces will be way down compared with the national average, while in Ontario they will be way up. There will be a more generous equalization payment to the have-not provinces.

We must not consider just one proposal of the budget in isolation from all the others. The minister is proposing a more generous, equitable and just equalization system that will protect the poor provinces—I do not like the word poor so I should say the have-not provinces although in some cases they are richer than the others. Quebec and the others will be protected because the municipal taxes in Quebec are a lot lower than they are in Ontario. Quebec decided to structure its finances differently and increase school taxes, so property taxes there are lower than those in Ontario. By doing that, we eliminate a very inequitable form of fiscal transfer that was an automatic, unconditional transfer to the rich provinces as well as to the poor ones. Over the last quarter of a century we have established that the only unconditional payment to the provinces should be the equalization program. That is a different kind of program.

The rich provinces need money but they do not need it at a time when the federal government is in debt and has to pay 20 per cent of its budget for debt charges. The federal government not only has to look after things that come under federal jurisdiction, such as fisheries, defence, international development, foreign affairs, energy and transportation, but it must always keep in mind the dangers of developing what the Minister of Finance called last April "fiscal dualism". This is the case where rich provinces get richer and poorer provinces get poorer. That has to be a concern of the federal Parliament and that is why the elimination of the revenue guarantee, coupled with a very enriched equalization program to the Ontario standard with municipal taxes, will mean we will have a more fair system to protect have-not provinces and thereby have a better federation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, at a time when many feel we are sliding into a deepening recession, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), instead of delivering an equitable budget, has presented much gloss and little substance as a prelude to his potential leadership of the Liberal Party.

Many Canadians may not think they are in for tax increases and they may be thankful for small mercies, but they should be made aware of the fact that the present Liberal government has once again shown little mercy by neglecting the serious economic problems facing Canadians today. This budget is merely a manipulation of wealth and very little else.

Once again we have here a budget which gives the impression that the government does not know what to do about the economy of Canada. Incredible expenditures have allowed pork-barrelling and the socialization of private enterprise. This represents the worst in public spending while it continues to discourage Canadians from investing in the future of this great land, with confidence.

This government that masquerades as a Liberal government is trapped in its own snare. After a decade of depending on Gallup polls for economic decisions and governing by them, it finds itself out of band-aids, as have other socialist regimes throughout the world.

There is no question that our economic problems can only be solved by common sense. The government has failed to do this. Canadians desperately want a definite sense of direction and a policy designed to restore confidence in our economy. We desperately need public policies which will achieve sound economic growth, improved opportunities for employment, and a climate of competitive free enterprise, and which will encourage Canadians to work and invest.

Canada is a country with enormous potential yet the government is failing miserably, in the economic policies put forward in this budget, to maximize the opportunities that face us. Hard-working Canadians have become frustrated with the widening gap between our known potential and the current uncertain economic reality. The federal government's high interest rates and high inflation is ruining individuals, such as farmers, businessmen, and home owners across this land.

There is no question that our priorities must be to reduce inflation and interest rates. The question is whether we should continue to follow the policies of this government which have caused the problems we now have. Because of these policies, we are now experiencing the worst inflation recorded in Canada since the end of wartime price controls. Throughout 1981 inflation has been in double digits, which in turn increased interest rates to unacceptably high levels. This situation discourages potential growth in this country and uncertainty discourages long-term capital projects.

Businessmen and farmers cannot operate under increasing debt repayment schedules. Home owners are losing their homes because of huge mortgage renewal increases. Through no fault of their own, hard-working Canadians face extraordinary circumstances, all because of this and former Liberal policies.

The government is only paying lip service to reducing government deficits and reducing the inflationary pressures in the economy. The past spending policies to which this government is bound prevent it from effectively attacking inflation and high interest rates in an effort to change our destructive economic and social direction.

This trap, which is in evidence today in the demise of provincial government representation will either destroy Canada or the so-called Liberal party. The federal deficit has climbed to over $12 billion in the 1981-82 fiscal year.

Further confiscation and socialization under the catchy term "Canadianization" is undesirable and is wrong for our economy. Increased taxation as a means of improving a deficit caused by mismanagement is the wrong approach. New taxes on top of those imposed under the recent energy agreements will have a negative impact on risk-taking and investment.

Government restraint can be achieved only if genuine efforts are made to control public spending at the federal level if it does not renege on obligations to the provinces and local governments through transfer payment cuts.

● (1640)

It is politically popular to create new expectations for new programs, but people are now realizing that ultimately they pay dearly for these administrative jungles. These programs are expensive, and the money would be better left in the hands of Canadians rather than having Big Brother do it for them. Programs which are introduced must be assessed very carefully to determine if they are affordable now and in the future. The only way to ensure future affordability is to encourage a productive and growing economy which would in turn generate needed financial support.

The reduction of interest rates in the United States will benefit Canadians; but without government action here, a proper climate will not be achieved. Productivity will play an important role in raising our living standards, if given proper incentives. Co-operation in providing programs and incentives to train workers for new opportunities should be given a high priority. If we had trained people for new developments in such sectors as energy production, high technology products, biotechnology and the use of computers, it would greatly add to Canada's economic growth. Duplication and competition in the training of individuals should be avoided, and co-operation with the provinces should be a priority.

There is a need for government to ensure that the personal taxation system is designed to encourage effort, saving and investment. It has to be clear that government supports those people who are willing to devote their efforts and resources to helping Canada reach its potential. We should be neutralizing inequities in the taxation of capital gains, and providing a greater incentive to undertake necessary risk. It is wrong and makes little sense to tax gains which are solely attributable to inflation.

The business community must be given incentives for increased investment without government interference. Foreign investment, capital and expertise are needed for economic development over the next decade. Responsible foreign investment has built this nation and could continue to strengthen it if foreign investors are treated in a fair and forthright manner. Tariffs will continue to fall as a result of the latest GATT arrangements. Competition from low-wage countries and trading blocs is also intensifying. Over-regulation of private enterprise in Canada is just too burdensome. More than ever we need a new national economic strategy to combat inflation and encourage productivity and investment.

The lost time the federal government undertook to reach an energy pricing and revenue-sharing agreement with the oil and gas producing provinces has increased Canada's imports of oil, reduced international confidence in the economy and put downward pressure on the dollar, which is a major cause of double-digit inflation. The inability to deal with strikes such as that of the postal workers and grain handlers has contributed to a lower confidence in the Canadian economy. It is easier for politicians to grant increased social benefits without taxation than to pay as one goes. The fact is that people still pay. It is a well understood fact that the cause of inflation is irresponsible government spending which exceeds the real worth of production and services. The problem is therefore political.

Some 900,000 Canadians need jobs now and for the future. There is a strong need for a comprehensive Canadian industrial strategy in order to make the best use of our abundant supply of resources for the future. We need made-in-Canada solutions to made-in-Canada problems, many which were created by years of indifferent Liberal governments. Canadians need support and encouragement to lift them out of the consumer gloom and away from the negative effects of recession. Canada's potential for success is immense, and the government once again fails to take effective steps to get the Canadian economy moving.

If in fact we are slipping into a recession, as many think we are, then the federal government must stand up to this and not run away from its responsibility, because the same federal government got us into this through years of economic mismanagement. Government spending has been irresponsible, excessive and inflationary. This situation must be curbed so that we do not saddle further generations with unbearable debt built up over the years.

There are many problems here in Canada to be solved before we look for others to take on at the taxpayers' expense. Efforts must be made at home to strengthen the Canadian economy and the Canadian dollar. Before the government gives advice to others, it should prove that it is in a position of credibility by righting the economic wrongs of the Canadian economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Vankoughnet: Canadian taxpayers deserve no less. In the fast paced world, we must keep up if we are to remain competitive. The need for post-secondary education and research and development is imperative now and for a strong future, and the government must ensure their continuing importance through active support and encouragement.

The federal government has taken Canada from the third highest standard of living in the world in 1968, to the thirteenth, in 1980. We have so many raw materials and energy that other countries with higher standards of living import that we wonder why Canada appears to be slipping when we should be near the top. The Canadian public wants answers and a solution, one which does not appear in yet another ineffective housekeeping Liberal budget. Real problems need real solutions. The problems have been known for some time now. Why are we not getting the solutions? The economy certainly needs help. Canadians need fundamental, straightforward, no-nonsense budgets to deal with the difficult times the Liberals have created.

The finance minister is using the huge sums of energy taxes to be collected by the federal government over the next five years to help reduce the inflationary deficit and curb excessive government spending, costing Canadians an average of $1400 per family per year. There is a need to combine long and short-term planning in the framework of a comprehensive industrial strategy for Canada. In the longer run, there is a need for government encouragement and assistance, training programs, research and development, promotion assistance, modernization of Canadian industry and improvement in our transportation systems. The government should help the private sector create new jobs and develop the market in Canadian expertise.

Experience shows that people respond to strong leadership which produces positive action rather than mere words or theories. A positive, enthusiastic attitude and environment results in more effort and more results from the same resources. Other countries have done this with fewer resources.

We in Canada have a great deal of potential; but we must believe in ourselves and follow a positive sense of direction to success. The government must take positive steps to build up the productive side of the economy and instil confidence in the marketplace. This is overdue, especially at this time when recent reports indicate consumer confidence in September of 1981 was at a 20-year low. Commercial bankruptcies were some 16 per cent higher in the first three quarters of 1981 than in the same period last year and 37 per cent higher than the same period two years ago. Farm bankruptcies were 133 per cent higher than in the first nine months of 1979. Inflation has pushed consumer prices in September of 1981 to 12.5 per cent higher than in September of 1980. Transportation costs are up 20.3 per cent. Housing costs are up 13.4 per cent. Fuel oil costs are up almost 55 per cent over the same time last year.

While wages are not keeping pace with inflation, consumers are falling behind. Even with the recent reduction by 1.5 per cent in the Canadian interest rates, they remain high in comparison with historic levels and in comparison with other major industrialized nations. The Canadian prime rate today is at some 18 per cent. Two years ago, the Canadian prime rate was at 14.75 per cent, while ten years ago it was 6.25 per cent. The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate in October of 1981 was 8.3 per cent, the highest level in three years, with a record number of people out of work for the month of October. Last year's federal government deficit was a record $12.7 billion. The gross national debt is some $119 billion, which resulted in the expenditure of almost $11 billion last year just to service the government's debt. This amounts to almost one tax dollar in every four.

● (1650)

The measures announced by the government in its budget do not address the serious problems of high interest rates by taking positive action to combat them. Guaranteeing interest deferrals which are added to the struggling home owner's cost of housing in the long run does little to bring relief to Canadian home owners. This small token of assistance is of little comfort to both those eligible and those across the fine line who are not eligible for the assistance. They are faced by so many other economic hardships that anything other than an honest attempt at total economic encouragement does little to ease their burden. Canadians look for assistance with a view to a better future, not merely a deferral of the present plan with no economic improvement in sight.

The availability and affordability of housing are two serious problems in Canada and are largely the result of the government's high interest rate policy. Canada needs some 220,000 new housing units each year, but with shortfalls last year and predicted over this year and next this could result in a shortage of some 140,000 homes over the three-year period.

High interest rates have effectively ground apartment construction to a halt, resulting in a serious shortfall of rental accommodation in many areas of Canada. Tenants as well as home owners are hard hit by the current high rates of interest.

High mortgage rates are clearly having an impact on the affordability of housing in Canada. Over half a million Canadians will renew their mortgages this year. According to CMHC, 40,000 Canadian families will lose their homes because they cannot afford to renew their mortgages at current rates. The government must address itself to this serious problem facing Canadians.

Canadians may remember the Liberal promises in 1979 and 1980 that energy prices would stay low, and in particular that gasoline prices would rise by less than 14 cents a gallon in 1980. Depending on the location, gasoline prices in 1980 rose by between 22 cents and 29 cents a gallon, far in excess of the promised 14 cents. Since the election, the price of home heating fuel has risen by some 44 cents a gallon. It is estimated that by 1986 gasoline prices will climb to at least 80 cents a litre, or $3.60 a gallon in most provinces. Heating oil is estimated to go to 60 cents a litre, or $2.70 a gallon, and natural gas prices could double to some $10 a thousand cubic feet. So much for Liberal promises of cheaper energy.

The 18-month delay in reaching an energy pricing agreement caused the loss of tens of thousands of jobs and delayed the construction of two needed oil sands plants. The federal government should take measures to ensure the oil industry is working again in an effort to keep jobs and exploration in Canada. As a result of the government's new increase in energy taxes, estimated at some $50 billion over the next five years, Canadians expect the government to direct these funds wisely.

There exists in this country today unacceptably high rates of unemployment, and yet at the same time we hear of serious shortages of certain critical skilled employees in Canada. Together with the strong need for a comprehensive economic and industrial policy for Canada to co-ordinate, plan and modernize its industries for the future, we see inadequate training and industrial policies and a lack of co-ordination among all levels of government and between the public and private sectors. We need a national employment and training plan to co-ordinate efforts to match skilled people to modern trades, and the federal government must contribute time, effort and funding to achieve this very important goal. If we are to keep industry in Canada, we must develop the technology and the training and co-ordinating programs and we must give encouragement to implement them and to modernize our industry for the future. There is a need for a strong effort at all levels to ensure we fill the important job shortages in skilled trades and preserve post-secondary education in Canada.

I have spoken in this House before about the need for a comprehensive industrial strategy for Canada and made specific reference to the need to ensure that the Canadian textile and clothing industry survives and grows so that we do not become dangerously dependent on a wide range of imports.

The federal government announced a new policy for Canada's textile and clothing industry on June 19, 1981, that reinforced investment confidence in this important industry which employs many Canadians directly and indirectly. Investors need confidence through long-term planning and stability to make the large-scale commitments necessary in high capital business today.

The policy as announced supported both assistance in modernizing viable firms in the textile and clothing industries and the provision of new employment in communities most vulnerable to foreign competition in these sectors, as the government intends to allow gradual increases of low-cost imports in the Canadian market.

In light of the October 26, 1981, press release from the Prime Minister's office, associated with the announcement of the members of the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board, it is felt by some members of the textile and clothing industry that the context and thrust of this later release confuses the thrust of the textile policy announced last June 19. The later release indicates that the Government of Canada is committed to the promotion of a freer world trade environment by offering freer market access for foreign textile and clothing products.

The release goes on to indicate that while pursuing this policy the Canadian government fully intends to help affected industries, communities and workers adjust to the reality of a less protected domestic market, and that in order to smooth the transition the government will, among other things, establish a special assistance program.

The Canadian economy needs assistance and support if our industries are to survive and prosper. The government should make every effort to ensure that different sectors of our industries grow and compete, rather than say it does not think they can compete so it will offer them assistance to readjust. This is not the kind of positive attitude required to instil the confidence in the private sector necessary for the commitment to large scale infusions of time, capital and hard work necessary for survival and growth.

The government should see to it that its programs, both in theory and in practice, give Canadian industries support and encouragement when they need it most. Only then, when all is well at home, can the government honestly look elsewhere. We simply cannot afford to let our industries disappear through lack of effort or through intellectual theorizing when other countries in the world are doing their utmost to save their own industries. The federal government must promote Canada just as other countries so strongly promote their own interests. Canada would be in a better position to help others if she were strong herself.

The federal government should promote funds and energy toward a comprehensive industrial policy that promotes, preserves and improves Canadian industry so that Canada and Canadians grow stronger as a nation with a strong economy and all the good things that go along with it.

The federal government recently raised the Farm Credit Corporation's interest rate from 14 per cent to 16.75 per cent, thereby dealing Canadian farmers another heavy blow. There is a problem regarding the lack of adequate funding for the Farm Credit Corporation which has resulted in the Farm Credit Corporation running out of funds. The government must recognize that modern Canadian farming is dependent on credit. The current high levels of interest rates and lack of funding from the Farm Credit Corporation, combined with such soaring input costs as fuel and fertilizers are creating hardships for many farmers.

In conclusion I should like to emphasize that the Canadian people needed and expected a strong budget that would face the current economic problems head on with responsible solutions. Once again, the government did not see fit to provide Canada with such a budget. Just as Liberal governments have disappeared at the provincial level, it does not appear long before that happens federally because the people of Canada cannot and will not stand for such further indifference and neglect from this Liberal government.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 16, 1981

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

AGRICULTURE

APPLICATION OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, whereas in its budget of November 12, 1981, the Liberal government cancelled a law which permitted farmers to sell their farms under agreements of sale and to pay the capital gains tax from future payments as received, and whereas the budget adds substantial taxes on fuel, fertilizers and chemicals, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That this House condemns the government for breaking its 1980 election promise to give farmers immediate relief from capital gains tax and for instead imposing immediate taxes on capital gains, farm fuel, fertilizers and chemicals.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CANADIAN FEDERATION

APPLICATION OF PROVINCIAL STATUS TO TERRITORIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas the constitutional proposals of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), which would virtually entrench colonial status in the north, have so incensed the people of the Territories that the entire Legislative Assembly has found it necessary to travel to Ottawa, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the Prime Minister adopt policies which would allow the Northwest Territories and Yukon to enter confederation as full partners as soon as possible, and that he arrange to meet with the 22 elected representatives who have travelled 3,000 miles to present these issues of such importance to northern Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE MINISTRY

CALL FOR CUTBACKS IN MEMBERSHIP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, given the incredibly stupid decision taken by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to ruin the most cost effective long distance trains in Canada, VIA Rail's Atlantic Limited and the Super Continental, and whereas several of his fellow ministers have shown a corresponding degree of incompetence by their devious mishandling of the Constitution, high interest rates, the housing crisis, high energy costs, and industrial stagnation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan):

That the federal cabinet be subject to an immediate 20 per cent cutback by order of this House requiring the termination of services by laying off Chairman Pierre and his ministers of finance, energy, transport, housing and industry, all of whom are drawing heavy tax subsidies from Canadians in order to finance their own reckless incompetence, and that public hearings need not be held until after these cuts take effect on November 16, 1981.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

SOCIAL SECURITY

PLIGHT OF PEOPLE ON LOW INCOMES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That the government stands condemned for its callous disregard for the plight of pensioners and others on fixed incomes and, further, that this House demands programs to assist those people whose income levels will not provide sufficiently to compensate for the increases in energy, rent, taxes and food costs which will inevitably result from the budget of November 12.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

POLITICAL PARTIES

ADVERTISING ISSUED BY MANITOBA PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Progressive Conservative Party in Manitoba has been distributing literature claiming credit for projects which have been entirely funded by the federal government at no cost to the province. The Manitoba Conservative Party has taken credit for some 59 federal incentive offers involving about $45 million of federal moneys. This amount does not include joint federal-provincial programs the PCs are claiming as their own without reference to the dollar input of the federal government. I move, seconded by the hon. member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield):

That the federal government immediately publish a correct listing of those projects to demonstrate how the Manitoba Conservatives are guilty of publishing misleading and deceptive statements just before an election.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON TAX MEASURES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, since last week's budget will raise direct taxes for Canadians, according to page 72 of the main budget document, by fully 100 per cent by 1985-86, and direct taxes for corporations by almost 300 per cent in the same period of time, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the Minister of Finance retract his misleading statement at page 2 of his budget speech when he said, "There is tax relief or no tax increase in this budget for the vast majority of Canadians".

That statement was wrong.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CANADA POST

SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN RATES FOR VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Alberta Lung Association carries out education and research programs related to lung diseases, and finances this work through a mail service. The proposed increase in postal rates will eat so badly into the donations to it that the whole program might be destroyed. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

• (1410)

That this House strongly recommends that Canada Post provide preferential rates to the Alberta Lung Association and other such health and voluntary organizations so that Christmas Seal efforts and valuable voluntary work may continue.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

RECOGNITION OF ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the hon. member for Provencher, Louis Riel, twice elected to this House of Commons, was hanged 96 years ago today for his stand on aboriginal rights, and in view of the fact that our Fathers of Confederation agreed 114 years ago that aboriginal rights are an absolute federal jurisdiction, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House honour the memory of Louis Riel today and reconfirm the unanimous January 30 all-party support given to section 34, the constitutional recognition and affirmation of the rights of Canada's Indian, Inuit and Metis people.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CONGRATULATIONS ON SUCCESSFUL MANIPULATION OF CANADIAN DESIGNED ARM ABOARD UNITED STATES SPACE SHIP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I rise today under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Over the weekend the second space shuttle landed, following a two-day space flight during which Canada's first major contribution to the space program was successfully tested. I refer to the Canadian government-funded remote manipulator system, better known as the Canadarm. In order that this very important project in international co-operation and space policy receive future support, I propose, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That this House affirm our commitment toward Canadarm as an international joint project of tremendous significance, commend the skill and dedication of those responsible for the design and construction of the space arm, and express the hope that this joint effort involving Canadian expertise will be the first of many such undertakings.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

POLITICAL PARTIES

SHARING OF CREDIT FOR BUDGET CONTENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise today under the provisions of Standing Order 43. More than 25 years ago the then Prime Minister, Mr. St. Laurent, called the CCF, now the NDP, "Liberals in a hurry". The question we ask ourselves today is who is in a hurry to claim the left and who has overtaken whom? I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the Prime Minister and the Leader of the New Democratic Party fold their protective wings around the Minister of Finance so that all may share the credit for the resurrection of the Regina Manifesto in the current budget, and that taxpayers in Canada unite for they have nothing to lose but their shirts.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

IMPACT OF TAX PROVISIONS ON HOUSEHOLDS BELOW POVERTY LINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, the Liberal-NDP budget last Thursday is the most regressive in Canadian history. It is the poor who are being hardest hit. The average householder in Canada will pay over $2,500 in indirect taxes this year, an increase of more than $880 over last year. The poor in Canada cannot afford that massive increase and Canadians must be honestly told what this finance minister has done to them. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House direct the Minister of Finance to provide the Canadian people with an honest statement of the impact of all his taxes on households that fall below the poverty line.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion presented by the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

● (1415)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

IMPACT ON CONSTRUCTION OF RENTAL HOUSING

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): In the absence of the Minister of Finance, Madam Speaker, I will address my question to the acting minister of finance. The minister said last week that his budget was designed to increase employment. The government's answer to unemployment is to create it. Since the budget was introduced last Thursday night, construction has stopped, just ended, on 3,200 rental units worth half a billion dollars, from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Vancouver, throwing 3,400 people out of work. When the Minister of Finance brought in his restrictive budget, was the government aware that these projects would halt, that these jobs would be lost, and that an entire industry would be wiped out?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is concerned about one particular situation that affects homebuilding. If the hon. member would look carefully at the measures taken to counter inflation, she will realize that those measures are the most effective way to revive that particular section of the industry. In fact, if we succeed in bringing down the present rates of inflation which are affecting the economy, the result will be a substantial reduction in interest rates, and hence more room and greater demand for construction; this industrial sector will get back on its feet and the economy will benefit because more jobs will be created as well.

[English]

REQUEST THAT PROVISIONS BE AMENDED

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of State for Finance, who has managed to enunciate what economists call the enema theory of fighting inflation, by flushing out the economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: The minister has not addressed the question which was about specific projects, in specific centres, on which work has stopped and in which people are out of work today. People who were working last Thursday are not working today. The Canadian Institute of Public Real Estate Companies estimates that the number of lost rental units will be in the thousands, at a time when vacancy rates are at the lowest level in five years. Will the Minister of State for Finance consider recommending to the Minister of Finance that he amend his budget proposals affecting the soft costs, so that these projects can now proceed and that these jobs can be saved?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, when referring to rhetoric and the practitioners thereof, one can use all kinds of expressions. The hon. member has used one, and I would like to suggest another; I would say that she is indulging in psittacism, just like her party leader who made a habit of imitating parrots.

Madam Speaker, to get back to the basic principles of the budget, these are to fight inflation, to get interest rates down and thus create more jobs as a result of the ensuing economic revival. The hon. member is referring to several problems which might be caused by certain arrangements concerning obligations to invest in housing. This is a problem the Minister of Finance is well aware of. We shall have an opportunity to look at this more closely during the next few days, and I am sure that if it is necessary to take special measures regarding this particular aspect, the Minister of Finance will consider such measures.

[English]

ANNOUNCEMENT OF STUDY RESULTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance who, in his answer, indicated, at least as I heard it, that the government would consider looking into this aspect to see whether these jobs can be saved. Since these people are now out of work and since all these projects are now on hold, when will the minister be able to tell this House what the results of this extra scrutiny will be?

● (1420)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I feel that there should be time to consider a situation or the consequences of a specific measure before we can say when a more definite answer can be given.

[English]

HOUSING

ACTIONS TO MEET SHORTFALL IN MAJOR METROPOLITAN AREAS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the minister responsible for housing. The minister will know that on last Friday Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation announced that the vacancy rate in all major metropolitan areas of the country had slipped to 1.4 per cent. He will also know that this is critical in some of the larger metropolitan areas such as the city of Toronto where the vacancy rate has gone from 1.7 per cent in 1979 to .3 per cent in 1981, a very critical factor.

Given the fact that the budget eliminated the MURB provision which, by the minister's own admission, resulted in the creation of 20,000 units last year, and that it will be replaced by a subsidization provision which will only allow for the building of 15,000 units, what does the minister propose to do to meet the critical shortfall in major metropolitan areas of the country which, by his dire predictions contained in his own cabinet document, could result and perhaps will result in a black market situation?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, there are two things for which the budget is designed in addressing the problems raised by the hon. member. First, I believe that he overlooked, in the proposition for 15,000 new rental starts to be encouraged by the front-end loading of the $7,500 grant, that those units now under the program can at last be specifically directed to those markets where low vacancy rates exist. Heretofore under the MURB provision, that was a helter-skelter approach. It assisted the industry, it got units constructed, but they were not necessarily in the areas where they were needed. I have been told that many times by hon. members opposite. The advantage of this alternative approach taken in the budget is to address the assistance where it is required, in those markets experiencing the low vacancy rate.

Second, I would remind the hon. member that I answered the first question he raised in this resumed session of Parliament that the corporation had already directed Section 56(1) units, which are a substitute to rental units, non-profit and co-op units, to those markets. We have increased the allocation in the last two years. I gave as an example the city which the hon. member represents where there has been an increase in that type of alternative housing.

MONITORING OF SITUATION IN CITIES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the budget has decreased the supply of co-op social housing by 5,000 units; it has gone from 30,000 to 25,000. The deferred mortgage interest payment situation will not address the problem, and that has been exacerbated by a considerable decline in investor confidence in the market by the elimination of the MURB provision. That has created a critical situation in the country. It will result in a black market situation in major metropolitan areas, the so-called key money situations. The minister has to bear some responsibility in this regard. What steps does he propose to take to monitor the situation in major metropolitan areas to ensure that the black market key money situation which he predicted in his cabinet document which he signed will not in fact take place? We are now approaching the zero vacancy rate which he predicted in his document. The minister seems determined to make his own worst predictions come true.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the first step, as the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation reporting to Parliament, that I will take is to meet with my provincial counterparts, the ministers of housing of all provinces. I requested that on Friday, the morning after the budget. I received confirmation from two ministers. I intend to meet with all of them in the next few weeks to discuss this very issue.

I point out to the hon. member, for example, that the province of Ontario has a comparable plan to assist rental housing by an up-front grant. We obviously have to work with that province in co-operation, to see that both programs achieve the desired element that is required in the plan. I was happy to see, for example, that last week after the budget announcement of plans in this House, and after I had requested that the provinces now consider what aid they would get, the province of Manitoba will pick up some slack and address some of its financial resources to the problem of housing. I will ask the other ministers of housing in the other provinces whether they as well can follow that leadership.

* * *

● (1425)

THE CONSTITUTION

RECOGNITION OF WOMEN'S RIGHTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the minister responsible for the status of women. The minister knows that following certain answers given by the Prime Minister with respect to Clause 28 in the old constitutional resolution, the precise meaning and significance of that clause are unclear. She also knows that there have been discussions taking place, as I understand it, between the federal and provincial officials in recent days. I wonder if she is now in a position to outline to the House the precise meaning of that clause.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I will be happy to answer the question. The precise meaning of the clause as we see it, is that Section 15, where the nonobstante applies, refers to the specific definition of sexual discrimination for a very specific act. In Clause 28 the broad principle is stated, one in which the women of Canada are very much interested and are very positive about. They wish this to remain within the charter, of course. I should like to advise hon. members that we are optimistic at this stage and hope that Clause 28 in the general section will remain intact. We may know by the end of the day.

ASSURANCE SOUGHT ON PRECISE MEANING OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL ACCORD

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, as I understand the minister's answer, the position of the federal government is to maintain the force of Clause 28 as it now is. She has indicated, though, that there is not yet agreement on that, I assume, by all those provinces that have participated in the accord. Since it has been suggested that we may well have a resolution before the House on Thursday of this week, may I ask the minister if she is prepared to assure the House that we will know ahead of that time what the precise meaning of Clause 28 is in terms of an accord that has been reached between the federal government and the provinces?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Yes, Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that hopefully by this evening we will have the precise meaning and the terms of the agreement with the premiers.

EFFECT OF UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION ON ELIMINATION OF DISCRIMINATION

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the minister responsible for the status of women. I am very pleased indeed, as I am sure all members of the House are, by the answer the minister has given that Clause 28, the equality clause, will remain intact, just as it is now.

If I may, I should like to congratulate the minister on opening her office to the representatives of millions of Canadian women who are extremely concerned that Clause 28 be kept intact.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Jewett: We are very glad to join in the applause.

Article 2(a) of the United Nations Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women requires state parties to "undertake to embody the principle of equality of men and women in their national constitutions". My first question was to have been whether the federal government still supports this convention and I take it the answer is yes. May I ask the minister whether it has been brought to the attention of the provinces that a serious violation of this convention would be brought about if Clause 28 were eliminated, overridden, or changed in any way?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Yes, Madam Speaker, that has been a very forceful part of the argument presented to the premiers.

Oral Questions

THE BUDGET

TRANSFER OF SALES TAX FROM MANUFACTURING TO WHOLESALE LEVEL

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance in the absence of the Minister of Finance. We all know that total tax revenues will increase this year by 31 per cent as a result of the budget. What is not clear as a result of the budget is the impact of the shift of the federal sales tax from the manufacturing level to the wholesale level. The government has said it will reduce the rate from 9 per cent to 8 per cent, but many experts in the Consumers' Association of Canada and in the business community claim that this will result in a considerably larger revenue take than has been indicated in the budget.

● (1430)

Is the government trying to sneak in a further revenue increase on top of this 31 per cent increase, a tax increase which would be very, very damaging as far as Canadian consumers are concerned in that it will raise costs and will also be very damaging to the level of unemployment?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question is very interesting. However, I should like to point out to the hon. member that in the preamble to his question which is specifically concerned with the shift of the sales tax from the manufacturing level to the wholesale level, he forgot to point out that at the same time, revenue is being generated by the removal of certain tax preferences, marginal income tax rates have been substantially reduced, and nearly six million Canadians will experience a reduction in marginal income tax rates for next year, which is very important.

As for the effects of the sales tax transfer from the manufacturing to the wholesale level, the hon. member is quite right to express his concerns which I feel are well founded. In fact, the purpose of the Minister of Finance and the government in making this change is not to generate new revenue for the government. The government's objective is to provide for greater equity in the sales tax system, first of all by shifting collection of this tax away from the manufacturing level. This does away with a multitude of problems that had made the levying of the sales tax at this level a veritable nightmare for the Department of National revenue. Second, as far as the amount to which the sales tax is to be applied is concerned, the new approach deals more equitably with, and provides a better balance between, imported goods and the same goods manufactured here in Canada. The objective is therefore not to generate more revenue but to apply the sales tax more equitably.

[English]

REASONS FOR TAX PROVISIONS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I should remind the minister that about ten years ago there were the same concerns as a result of the Benson tax reform. At that time the government said that if the tax reform generated further revenue increases than what it then anticipated, it would give that money back. Hon. members know, I know, and Your Honour knows what happened at that time. There were no tax reductions as a result of that. I am now asking the minister for a commitment on behalf of the government that that will take place.

The Minister of Finance obviously wrote the budget before he got the information concerning the high unemployment figures in October as well as the other very widespread signs of weakness in the economy. Therefore my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Finance is as follows: In this budget, why did the minister ignore the fact that today the economy is in a recession? Why did he increase the tax burden on Canadians by a further $1.4 billion on top of the $1,400 per family per year for the next five years that the energy tax increase will bring to the government?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): I would like to comment briefly on the hon. member's statement, in view of the neutrality that is desired when levying the sales tax at the wholesale rather than at the manufacturing level. I can assure the hon. member that we shall have an opportunity to discuss the matter with the parties concerned at committee hearings, that the hon. member will also have an opportunity to get his points across and that he will realize, in the course of the debate in committee, that the change will indeed provide for a more equitable and objective system. As for the general objectives of the budget with respect to the economy, I think the hon. member will agree that the government's main focus must be on the fight against inflation. The hon. member may recall that 13 months ago, before the Minister of Finance had brought down a budget, a number of members were saying: Listen, we are in a recession, be careful when you prepare your budget because the recession is going to be severe and there will be high unemployment rates. Several months later, the Canadian economy had shown a quite remarkable rate of growth. As every good physician knows, a hasty diagnosis is seldom right.

* * *

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF THE HON. DONALD STEWART, SPEAKER OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Madam Speaker: May I draw the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery of the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories, the Hon. Donald Stewart.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET NORTHWEST TERRITORIES LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY MEMBERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister, maybe I should address my question to the acting prime minister, who might be familiar with the the Prime Minister's schedule. As he will be aware, the entire legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories has come to Ottawa with the specific purpose of meeting with the Prime Minister concerning the Constitution. The Assembly has legitimate fears that the present colonial status in the north will be entrenched as a result of the proposal. I wonder if we could be advised whether a meeting has been put together yet, and at what time and place this meeting might take place.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I reply to the hon. member by telling him that, yes, they did meet with me about 1.30, just prior to the question period.

Mr. Nielsen: His high ambitions know no bounds.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): They will be meeting with me again around six o'clock tonight, for about an hour. Hopefully, I will have something further to report after that.

Mr. Nickerson: My, how things change! Before asking a supplementary question of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I would like to extend to him my heartfelt condolences over certain things which happened in his constituency of Hamilton East over the weekend.

Mr. Jarvis: The Tiger Cats!

An hon. Member: So long, Tigers!

Mr. Nickerson: Perhaps he could try to answer the question as to whether or not a meeting with the Prime Minister could be arranged.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR CREATION OF NEW PROVINCES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): I would also like to ask the minister the following question. When a new proposal is again put before this Parliament, can the minister ensure that the concept will be retained that creation of new provinces out of existing territories, not affecting existing provincial boundaries, lies solely within federal jurisdiction?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member well knows, the accord agreed to between the provinces quite clearly indicates otherwise. That is the Vancouver formula without the compensation aspect to it. It does involve the provinces in consent of the nature the hon. member just identified. That is a situation with which we are faced. I am hearing the concerns of the northerners with respect to it, but I am assuming at this stage that any change in that respect would involve some amendment to the accord. I am not at all sure that we or many hon. members of the House would be prepared to contemplate that at this stage.

* * *

ENERGY CONSERVATION

PROGRAM FOR CONVERSION FROM OIL TO OTHER FORMS OF HEATING

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Collenette: There have been press reports that electricity may become a cheaper form of heating than natural gas. Given this new information, could the minister inform the House whether he has reservations in endorsing the policy of encouraging the conversion of oil heat to natural gas, keeping in mind the incentives for gas conversion contained in the National Energy Program and the recently concluded agreements with the producing provinces?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, under the National Energy Program, the national government has indicated that it was neutral concerning the choice consumers would make between alternative forms of energy other than oil. As a matter of fact we left this to be worked out with the provincial governments. In some provinces the incentives program is open to consumers, both for electricity and gas; in others there are some additional reservations.

I think it is impossible to give an answer which would apply equally across the country because the price of electricity varies from province to province. We have assured that the price for natural gas at the wholesaler level will not exceed about 65 per cent of the price of oil. Therefore, there is no doubt that the price of natural gas will certainly remain very advantageous compared to heating oil. With respect to the outlook on electricity, as far as I know most provincial governments would prefer consumers to opt for natural gas.

Oral Questions

● (1440)

INDUSTRY

SHUTDOWN OF MASSEY-FERGUSON PLANT IN BRANTFORD, ONT.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that a few hours ago Massey-Ferguson announced the shutdown of its North American combines plant in Brantford, throwing another 1,800 employees out of work for a period of several months, in addition to the 700 already on lay-off, and in view of the fact that the main reason for this is market problems, which everyone knows are due to the exorbitant high interest rates that farmers are facing, would the minister tell this House what specific or new measures were contained in the budget last Thursday night that would directly assist companies such as Massey-Ferguson, and more specifically help the thousands of workers who are being thrown out of work because of the budget?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Liberal times are tough times.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the basic thrust of the budget—

Mr. McDermid: Is to put people out of work.

Mr. Gray: —is to reduce the pressure on financial markets of the size of the federal deficit and to aid in the reduction of interest rates, something which has been taking place over the last several months.

Mr. Nielsen: Resign.

Mr. Gray: In fact, the day of the budget there was a drop in the bank rate of a full point and a half. Interest rates right now, I think, are lower than at any time since last December. The budget in its over-all thrust very much reinforces the existing movement toward lower interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: You are a sham.

Mr. Gray: With respect to Massey-Ferguson, the plant in Brantford exports most of its production to the United States and other countries, and the state of those economies is very much a factor in the health of that plant.

The whole farm machinery industry is suffering sales declines.

Mr. McDermid: All industry is.

Mr. Gray: The competitors of Massey-Ferguson have also been laying off employees in their plants outside Canada, and yet Massey-Ferguson at the same time has been able to maintain its market share. The basic activity of the federal government has been to take steps to ensure the continuance of Massey as a viable company, to maintain jobs there and, in spite of these lay-offs, to provide a company to which these workers can come back as sales improve.

Mr. Blackburn: Madam Speaker, I notice that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce did not speak specifically of the farm community. That is where the problem lies. Farmers cannot afford to buy these combines and tractors.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

ABILITY OF FARMERS TO BUY FARM MACHINERY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, if I could get the Minister of Agriculture's attention, my supplementary question is for him.

What is the Minister of Agriculture planning at the present time to give assurance that there will be enough farm implements when demand returns, if it does return in a year's time? I ask this question because there was virtually no assistance in the budget to farmers at all, outside of the drop in the bucket through the FCC, and also because Agriculture Canada is spending thousands of dollars on useless advertisements in newspapers across the country. Why can the government not put some money into the hands of the farmers instead?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member may call the small business development bond and the $50 million for the FCC a drop in the bucket, but by working with the banking institutions in a proper fashion we can provide assistance to many of those farmers in dire need.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member asks what we have done. We have supported Massey-Ferguson because of its importance. It is needed to make sure that the farm implements are there for the most productive farmers in the whole world, the Canadian farmers. We also supported farm implement companies three years ago, I believe, with an interest free loan to the Canadian implement manufacturing organization—Co-op Implements—so that those companies could stay in business.

I would remind the hon. member that those farmers who do not require huge sums of money from the federal government, who are in supply type of a managed system of marketing their produce, are buying machinery, are paying their debts, and doing all those things necessary for a healthy farm operation. When the hon. member talks about agriculture he is making a widesweeping statement that is not quite accurate. Certain sections of the agricultural economy are in difficulty, but way over half of it is very healthy.

VIA RAIL

REQUEST THAT FURTHER CUTBACKS BE DEFERRED

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Now that November 15 has come and 20 per cent of VIA Rail has gone, showing that stubbornness has prevailed over common sense, will the minister now exercise a little political horse sense and assure this House that no further reductions or cuts in VIA passenger service will be made until the House of Commons Standing Committee on Transport is seized with them, or alternatively until the CTC at least can hold a hearing on the fairness of the costing order as well as the whole future of Canada's rail passenger service?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would have said the exact opposite. What has been done proves that common sense has prevailed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: Deception.

Mr. Pepin: In the last four years Canada has had a sort of haphazard elimination of 2,500 miles of railroads. My hon. friend did not see that. Therefore, instead of witnessing the slow decomposition of the system, the government decided to anticipate events and eliminate or reduce services now which would have to be eliminated in the future in order to make the necessary savings to give VIA what it needs to acquire the equipment, and so strengthen itself.

I heard a member say a few minutes ago that we were ruining VIA Rail. On the contrary, we are saving VIA Rail. That is a common sense approach. I realize that it is difficult for hon. members and for the public in general to share that view with me, but I am sure that in due course they will, and they will also realize that what we are doing now is really strengthening VIA and not ruining it.

REQUEST THAT STANDING COMMITTEE BE PERMITTED TO STUDY ANY FUTURE CUTBACKS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, we know that 20 per cent of VIA has gone. November 15 came, and the minister has had his way. My question is in terms of the future since every problem that affected the 20 per cent that was cut is still there. In the rationalization and understanding of the costing order, perhaps even more so, the 80 per cent of VIA that is left is now the 100 per cent of VIA that is there, and if the minister is not worried about the future decomposition of the system, let alone the decomposition of his political party in areas adversely affected by the cuts, will the minister give a simple assurance to this House that we can study the problem in the Standing Committee on Transport so that representatives of the people affected by these changes or future cuts can have some input?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the very purpose of what we have done by the reductions and discontinuance of service is to prevent further—

An hon. Member: Public hearings.

Mr. Pepin: —discontinuances and reductions. Therefore, I can assure hon. members of that. That is the very purpose of the exercise. But I cannot give assurance that in the next four, five or ten years there will be no other reductions of services. That will depend on the use Canadians make of their trains. Nevertheless, I repeat, without being able to give a 100 per cent commitment, that the very purpose of what we have done is to prevent further reductions.

Mr. Nowlan: Fire Benny Benson.

Mr. Pepin: On the subject of the committee, I was keen to explain the matter to the Standing Committee on Transport, but because the committee appeared to want to insist on reporting its recommendations and as a consequence take another working day of the House of Commons, I had to be disagreeable, which is something I do not like to be. Instead of that, I went to the Senate committee, which was more flexible on the subject, and I provided all the information requested of me.

Mr. Nowlan: Who the heck cares about the Senate committee?

An hon. Member: You might as well close the House of Commons committee.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF OIL REFINERY IN EASTPORT, MAINE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the Pittston oil company, which proposes to build a refinery in Eastport, Maine, been granted its clean water report by the environmental protection agency of the United States? If so, does this authorize that company to begin construction of the refinery?

• (1450)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, what the hon. member is asking about are matters concerning United States law, on which we are strictly an observer. I understand there yet may well be legal challenges taken in the United States, and it is not for us to decide what happens as a result of U.S. law.

I can tell the hon. gentleman and the House that we have made the United States government aware, via a note earlier this year, of our serious reservations on environmental grounds of the use of those waters by any oil tankers. That would be a consideration which certainly ought to be taken into account by any U.S. sponsors of a refinery.

NATURE OF REPRESENTATIONS MADE BY GOVERNMENT OF CANADA TO GOVERNMENT OF UNITED STATES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to ask how firm have the representations been from the minister's department to the United States, and what measures is the government prepared to take for the protection of the fishing industry and the environment of the Bay of Fundy. Would he consider tabling the notes or messages which may have been exchanged between his department and that of his counterpart in the United States?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I believe the note has been made available in the United States and I think it perhaps can be made available in Canada, although that is—

An hon. Member: That is nice.

Mr. MacGuigan: It is not the usual practice to table notes between governments, but I believe in this case it may be appropriate to release it and I will look into that question. This is not a matter of having presented the United States government with a formal note stating our position, which we have to reiterate constantly, but we do keep a very close eye on the proceedings in that area.

* * *

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

HOLDING OF POLL ON MANITOBA PROVINCIAL ELECTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. In a November 13 phone-in poll conducted by the CBC program "24 Hours" in Winnipeg, Manitobans were invited to phone in their voting intentions for the upcoming Manitoba election. The CBC advised that preliminary results showed the New Democratic Party marginally ahead. The final results showed that there would be an overwhelming victory for the Conservative Party. However, the final results were not aired. Will the minister responsible for the CBC or the CRTC investigate the reason for the suppression of the final result, and report back to the House on this discriminatory practice?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, quite obviously I will be pleased to bring the hon. member's representations to the attention of the CBC.

An hon. Member: Wait until tomorrow.

* * *

SOCIAL SCIENCE

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED PROGRAM FUNDING

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Communications. Members of the academic and research community are concerned about the inequitable funding treatment accorded the Social Science and Humanities Research Council which deals with studies in political science, the humanities, education, economics, etc. In contrast, the 1981-1982 budget for the Science Research Council received an additional $20 million, and the Medical Research Council received an extra $10 million this year. I would like to ask the minister, since learning more about how we should function as a society should be a high government priority, to tell us whether he intends to press for improved funding this year for the social sciences area so that programs already under way will not be scrapped.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I of course share the hon. member's interest in the Social Science and Humanities Research Council. I would like to point out that the funding for the Council this year was somewhere in the range of $45 million. It did receive an increase of $3.8 million, which is an increase of approximately 9.3 per cent.

It is quite obvious that the Council itself would like to receive a greater amount of funding, as would all the other research councils. The Council has prepared a plan for the next five years which will be submitted to my colleagues in cabinet in the near future.

STATUS OF FIVE-YEAR PLAN

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I notice that the minister did not tell the House whether he intends to press for this additional funding to save ongoing programs. Since he mentioned the five-year plan for the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council which was approved in principle in December of 1979, and which established themes and strategies for Canadian studies into the effects of modern technology on the human condition, I wonder if the minister can tell the House whether this plan is alive and well, or has it been buried somewhere deep down in a dark corner of the social affairs envelope.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, as far as the Canadian studies are concerned, the hon. member knows that the Department of the Secretary of State is running a number of pilot projects with a number of Canadian organizations interested in the promotion of Canadian studies.

As far as the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council is concerned, it has somewhat modified its approach and, at its request, the plan will be resubmitted to cabinet.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

PROVISION RESPECTING MANDATORY RETIREMENT

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. One of my constituents, Captain Ross Stevenson, the Air Canada pilot who obtained an injunction against Air Canada to allow him to work past the mandatory retirement age of 60, is presently awaiting the December 17 appeal hearing by Air Canada and the Canadian Airline Pilots Association. Would the Acting Prime Minister tell this House, in view of the accord signed on November 5 to patriate the Constitution with a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, whether Section 15 of the charter specifically concerning mandatory retirement will come into effect immediately after the Constitution is patriated, or will there be a waiting period, and could he further tell this House whether or not Captain Stevenson will be allowed to work for Air Canada past the age of 60?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I remember looking at this case previously. I have not looked at it recently, but, if my memory serves me well, there was a difference in the retirement ages in the different airlines. This matter is the subject of agreement between the employers and the employees. The aspect of the question having to do with the Constitution escapes me for the moment, but I will look into it and speak with the hon. member on the point.

* * *

WESTERN DEVELOPMENT FUND

COMPENSATION PAYMENTS TO GRAIN GROWERS FOR EMBARGO ON SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who is the chairman of the cabinet committee on western Canadian affairs. It relates to the handling in the budget of the Western Development Fund. The minister will now appreciate that more than 60 per cent of the amount originally indicated for the Western Development Fund, some $2.5 billion, has been put out into never-never land until some time in the 1990s, as opposed to any specific indication as to spending in this decade.

In view of the fact there was some $82 million in compensation for the Russian embargo which was taken out of the Western Development Fund, would the minister tell the House whether he was consulted and whether he approved of that expenditure from this year's estimates for the Western Development Fund, in this year's budget? If so, it seems to me the minister is not doing his job on behalf of western Canadian farmers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, contrary to the assertions made by the hon. member, the commitment made by the government under the Western Development Fund indicates one of the most significant commitments to the modernization of western transportation of any government in the history of this country. We are putting $1.5 billion into the modernization of the western transportation network—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: —plus $400 million allocated specifically to the achievement of economic development of native people. Those two—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Axworthy: Those two objectives constitute one of the most important ways the federal government can help western Canadians achieve their ambition through a diversified economy and deal with some of the most significant economic and social issues in the west. I hope the hon. member will have the good grace to appreciate those efforts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I leave it to the minister's discretion whether he should answer this question, but I am not quite sure that ministers should be allowed to answer questions regarding regional responsibilities. I know it is probably in the cabinet's special title for western affairs. I will leave it to the discretion of the minister, but I will put a caveat on that.

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I should say, with all deference, that the minister is the chairman of the cabinet committee dealing with this responsibility.

Apparently he has not been doing too much work on that responsibility—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —but I will leave it to the people in western Canada to decide about that.

I would like to ask the minister about the kind of treatment western Canada has received with respect to VIA Rail. Notwithstanding his brave statements about the kind of expenditures we are to see with respect to transportation in western Canada, the minister will recall the commitment of the Minister of Finance to consult with the provincial premiers and provincial governments about the expenditure of moneys in western Canada from the Western Development Fund. That was a firm commitment.

• (1500)

Will the minister reassert that commitment that there will be consultations with western governments in order to set priorities with respect to expenditures, whether they be on transport or native housing, or will the government move unilaterally in the same way as the minister's colleague, the Minister of Transport, has moved unilaterally to cut 20 per cent of VIA Rail's passenger service in Canada?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to questions relating to matters concerning western Canada because I think we are taking a number of very important measures in that area. In direct response to the hon. member, I remind him of the statement made by the Prime Minister that the sooner the provincial premiers are prepared to get their own gumption up and to make statements about what they are prepared to support in the way of modernization of the western railway system, the better off we all will be, but they have been hanging in the woods. We have been waiting to hear from them as to what reforms they are prepared to support, and we will work with them on the basis of co-operation and consensus, as we always do.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT IS WAITING FOR ANSWER FOR PROVINCE OF QUEBEC BEFORE NEGOTIATING

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Considering statements made by the Prime Minister of Canada this weekend, when he said that he was prepared to reopen negotiations with Quebec on a number of pre-conditions which he had defined, and considering the fact that the Premier of the PQ government has apparently decided to drop the association formula, does the Government of Canada intend to await Quebec's official reply before starting negotiations with that government with a view to reaching an agreement? Second, is it still possible to recognize the PQ government as a valid or representative government—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry, but constitutional matters are not the responsibility of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

* * *

[English]

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table Reports of the Clerk of Petitions, stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Friday, November 13, 1981, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order which involves the business of the House. As recorded at page 12743 of Hansard for last Friday, the government House leader said, and I quote:

> Furthermore by the beginning of next week—

That is, this week.

> —I shall be able to determine the business for next Thursday and Friday. Finally, the government intends to give notice very shortly of a new resolution on the Constitution, in view of the agreement concluded last week.

In Saturday's issue of The Citizen there appeared a report which seemed to be based on information from the government House leader that the constitutional resolution may well be brought on on Thursday. That was news to me. The government House leader will have heard the Minister of State for Mines today, in answer to a question by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, say that we may very well know by the end of today when the new resolution will be brought on. I wonder if the government House leader would take us into his confidence and inform us whether the new resolution is ready. If it is not, when is it likely to be ready, and when does the government House leader intend to bring it in? Will we be using Thursday and Friday of this week for debate on that new resolution?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I want to give the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) the assurance that as soon as notice of the new resolution is given, I shall send him a copy and I shall not wait until he has been informed through other channels. The same applies to my learned colleague of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). When are we going to give formal notice of the new resolution? Probably at the beginning of this week, and I consider tomorrow as still being the beginning of this week. Are we going to start the debate on the Constitution on Thursday morning? As I pointed out, that is a real possibility, but I cannot confirm this today. I can assure the hon. member that as far as the business of the House for today, tomorrow and Wednesday is concerned, the House knows there will be a debate on the budget, in all probability there will be votes of non-confidence this evening and Wednesday evening, and I shall try to advise the hon. member as soon as possible of the order of business for the days following Wednesday. That is the situation. Once more, I would like to assure my colleagues that as soon as notice of the new resolution is given, either later today or more probably tomorrow, I shall make sure they are sent a copy of the resolution as soon as possible, for their consideration, and we shall then meet in order to try to reach agreement on conditions for a reasonable debate.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) asked a question to the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) concerning the constitutional negotiations in Quebec. I was ready to reply to his question and wanted to assure him that the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was—

Madam Speaker: Order, please! I am very sorry not to have seen the hon. member rise in an attempt to reply to the question. I should probably have seen him, but I was looking at the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to whom the question was directed. I am very sorry, but the hon. parliamentary secretary will probably have another opportunity to ask a question and I shall be very happy to recognize him at that time.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C), 1981-82

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary Estimates (C) with regard to the sums required for the public service of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1982 was presented by the Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Madam Speaker to the House.

[English]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, following the tabling of those Supplementary Estimates (C) I wish to move—

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I believe it is customary to ask the minister introducing the supplementary estimates for his assurance that they are in the usual form.

[Translation]

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the estimates being tabled are in the conventional form.

[English]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I therefore move:

That the Supplementary Estimates (C) 1981-1982, tabled November 16, 1981, be referred to the several Standing Committees of the House as follows:

To the Standing Committee on Agriculture:

Agriculture Votes 5c and 15c

To the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture:

Communications Votes 1c, 5c, 10c, 15c, 10c, 30c, 35c, 50c, 60c, 65c, 70c and 75c

Secretary of State Votes, 1c, 5c, 15c, 25c and 30c

To the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence:

External Affairs Votes, 1c, 5c, 10c, L16c, 25c, 30c, 35c and L40c

To the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs:

Economic Development Vote 1c

Finance Votes, 1c, 2c, 11c, 25c and 30c

Industry, Trade and Commerce Votes 1c, 5c, 10c, L41c, 45c, 55c, 60c and 63c

Privy Council Vote 20c

To the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry:

Environment Votes 1c, 5c, 10c and 20c

Fisheries and Oceans Votes 1c, 5c and 10c

To the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs:

Consumer and Corporate Affairs Votes 1c and 5c

National Health and Welfare Votes 1c, 10c, 15c and 40c

To the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development:

Indian Affairs and Northern Development Votes 1c, 5c, 15c, 20c, 25c, 30c, L51c, 55c, L66c and 68c

To the Standing Committee Justice and Legal Affairs:

Justice Votes 1c, 5c, 10c and 35c

Solicitor General Votes 1c, 5c, 20c and 25c

To the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration:

Employment and Immigration Votes 15c, 10c and 15c

Labour Votes 1c, 10c, 15c and 25c

To the Standing Committee on Management and Members Services:

Parliament Vote 5c

To the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates:

Privy Council Votes 1c and 15c

Science and Technology Votes 1c, 5c, 10c, 15c and 30c

Secretary of State Vote 35c

Supply and Services Vote 5c

Treasury Board Votes 1c, 5c and 15c

Order Paper Questions

To the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works:

Energy, Mines and Resources Votes 1c, 10c, 30c, L51c, 55c, 60c, 65c, 70c and 75c

Public Works Votes 5c, 25c, 40c, 50c and 60c

To the Standing Committee on Regional Development:

Regional Economic Expansion Votes 1c and 10c

To the Standing Committee on Transport:

Transport Votes 35c, 40c, L45c, 71c, 85c and 105c

To the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs:

Veterans Affairs Votes 1c, 5c and 10c

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

● (1510)

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,011, 3,046, 3,048 and 3,163.

[Text]

GUARANTORS FOR PASSPORTS

Question No. 3,011—Mr. Cossitt:

Will the Department of External Affairs be revising the list of those permitted to act as guarantors on passport aplications to include such additional categories as (a) Justices of the Peace (b) Commissioners of Oaths?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): See reply to question No. 3,010 answered November 6, 1981.

FOOD SERVICE CONTRACT

Question No. 3,046—Mr. McKinnon:

Was a food service contract let for $96,793 at Sidney, British Columbia and, if so, (a) for what purpose (b) was it for food and, if so, what amount?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): DSS awarded a contract, on behalf of the Department of National Defence, to Glacier Catering and Bar Services Ltd., in the amount of $96,793. The contract was for the provision of catering services at the cadet camp at Patricia Bay, Sidney, B.C., DND provided the food.

DND PURCHASE FROM ALBERTA LIQUOR CONTROL BOARD

Question No. 3,048—Mr. McKinnon:

Did the Department of National Defence buy rum from the Alberta Liquor Control Board at a cost of $29,400 and, if so, for what purpose?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): DSS awarded a contract, on behalf of the Department of National Defence, to the Alberta Liquor Control Board, for the initial amount of $29,400, plus an additional amount of $1,764, for a total amount of $31,164. The rum was purchased for the Canadian Forces Base Calgary, who issues the rum to military personnel on field exercises, living under canvas, during arduous weather conditions.

CONTRACT WITH REMTEC INC.

Question No. 3,163—Mr. McKinnon:

Did the Department of National Defence place a $20 million contract with Remtec Inc. for aircraft refueller trucks and, if so, how many trucks are being purchased?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes. DSS, on behalf of the Department of National Defence, awarded a contract for the amount of $20 million to Remtec Inc. for 157 aircraft refueller trucks.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Friday, November 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment of Mr. Wilson (p. 12752), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Rae (p. 12756).

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I rise to participate in this budget debate with enthusiasm and with a good deal of satisfaction.

Miss MacDonald: You are the only one in Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: How about hope?

Mr. Johnston: The budget tabled in this House by my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on November 12 was by no means just an ordinary budget. It is not a budget which simply closed off a plethora of tax loopholes in order to provide more tax dollars to the government's treasury and, of course, to the treasuries of those provinces with which we have tax collection agreements. It is a budget which I believe in some respects represents a philosophical turning point in the fiscal policy of the government, a philosophy which I personally have long espoused and one which to a considerable degree inspired me to enter politics in the mid-1970s.

Fiscal policy has long been for me a personal preoccupation. I believe that the fiscal policy of a nation, both on the tax side and on the expenditure side, tells us a great deal about the fundamental values of a particular society. I have long held the belief that our tax system, the one that emerged from so-called tax reform in 1971, has remained replete with inequities, anomalies and complexities, all of which I believe have served to weigh heavily upon the morale of Canadian taxpayers and perhaps to some degree even on the morality of Canadians.

I committed some of my criticisms to writing in a book on tax reform back in 1974 because I was convinced at that time that we were moving in the wrong direction. I believe that tax reform since that time has remained important. It is as important in 1981 as it was in 1971. The budget that was tabled by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, on November 12 is a very important step in that process of tax reform, a step which I hope will be pursued in successive budgets.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, there are many fiscal matters of which I would like to speak this afternoon. While I would wish to make a detailed examination of several aspects of the budget calling for a fundamental reform of our taxation system, I shall make only one rather general but in my opinion extremely important comment.

In my own experience as a tax law specialist and in the experience of my former professional colleagues in Canada and even in the United States, it is very obvious that marginal tax rates over 50 per cent have brought some taxpayers to look for loopholes to protect themselves against what they see as an undue appropriation of their own income. These loopholes have been used as much as possible because of the complexity of our legislation and of the tax burden imposed on our taxpayers. This is a way of thinking which I understand very well, Mr. Speaker, and I spent much of my professional life creating tax shelters or havens.

Mr. Speaker, can you imagine anything less positive than these efforts by professionals to make use of the loopholes in our tax laws? However, with taxation rates over 50 per cent, Canadian taxpayers will inevitably make every effort in this regard. I am convinced that, with a fair and equitable tax system where the rates do not exceed 50 per cent, there will be a significant reduction in the efforts made by taxpayers to evade the law. It is in that spirit that I wrote late in December 1976:

[English]

There is good authority for the view that a taxpayer's resistance to the expropriation of his income by government will increase when the tax rate exceeds 50 per cent. I believe this view has been reinforced through a recent experience in the United States where the highest tax rate on income at the federal level is now 50 per cent. Recently a U.S. tax attorney advised that with the introduction of a maximum 50 per cent rate, many of his clients have abandoned tax avoidance schemes and are reconciled to paying 50 per cent of their earned income to the federal government. Because of this it may well be that more taxes are in fact collected where a 50 per cent maximum rate exists.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is one of the reasons for my satisfaction today and, before completing this secondary point, I should like to emphasize that the review of our tax system, an extremely significant stage of which is represented by this budget, would result in the elimination of those tax shelters and other kinds of loopholes so that our system will finally be simple and fair. This would also spur the innovative spirit of Canadian businessmen and the creation of capital, thus paving the way for an economic plan from which every Canadian would derive major benefits.

[English]

I hold the personal conviction that the taxation system is the single most important element of economic growth. That growth depends upon the successful marriage of capital resources and labour and that marriage can only be brought about by the efforts of our entrepreneurs, our innovators. The tax system must contribute to the formation of capital through appropriate incentives to save. It must be the principal vehicle that brings capital and labour to the resources. The tax system must be perceived as fair and equitable by Canadians and by Canadian workers. Finally, it must contain rewards for the risk-takers, our entrepreneurs who have successfully brought Canada from the wilderness to the forefront of the industrialized countries of the world.

I believe that this budget is in many respects a major step in the direction of satisfying all those objectives. It will contribute to productivity, economic growth, job creation and reduced inflation.

In my concern for fiscal reform, I am also riding another hobbyhorse, which was another factor which convinced me, and I am sure others, to enter the political process. I am referring to the other side of fiscal policy, the expenditure side. I was convinced before I came to this place, and I am even more convinced now that I am here, that our clients, the Canadian taxpayers, are prepared to be generous with their tax dollars provided they see value for their money. When they perceive wasteful expenditures, or if they perceive a lack of controls, or when the Auditor General of this country tells them, as he did in 1976, that their parliamentarians have lost control or are about to lose control of the public purse, then the resistance of taxpayers to taxation is increased.

Mr. Beatty: Have you seen this ad in today's Globe?

Mr. Johnston: They take it upon themselves to exploit every conceivable tax loophole so as to frustrate what they call the insatiable appetite of wasteful big government.

Mr. Beatty: $16,000 for this ad alone in today's Globe.

Mr. Johnston: Unfortunately, that perception of big wasteful government remains the perception of many of my constitutents and it is this same perception, I suggest, which causes Canadians to call for greater government expenditure cuts.

As I shall demonstrate in a few moments, my responsibilities as President of the Treasury Board extend to a wide range of reforms in these areas in terms of the accountability and management of the public service. I have spoken at some length upon these matters in this House in the past. In a moment I shall describe some significant developments since my last report. All must be placed in the context of a firm commitment by this government to accountability and providing taxpayers with value for their money so that the perception which I referred to of wasteful expenditures which developed in the past will be eliminated. I am not asking for elimination of the perception simply on the basis of rhetoric and stated intentions, Mr. Speaker, but only on the basis of performance, which I believe we will be able to demonstrate to the satisfaction of parliamentarians and to the satisfaction of the public. We have not reached our destination, but we are well on the road.

• (1520)

Before I review with the House some of these initiatives and programs, I should like to refer to a specific request which is referred to in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance, as described on page 27 of the document entitled "The Budget in More Detail."

[Translation]

More precisely, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has asked Treasury Board to cut by $100 million the government's annual administrative and general expenses. Mr. Speaker, that is indeed a challenge which I accept with enthusiasm and upon which we have already set our sights. Without overstressing the difficulties and the efforts required to reach that objective, Mr. Speaker, I commit myself not to stop at the $100 million mark should I find ways to save more without jeopardizing the services we are expected to offer to the public. I have already been asked where we shall apply the axe to make such savings. As I said in the past, Mr. Speaker, our policy is not to use an axe but rather a scalpel. What it means is that we will scrutinize specific fields where it is possible to make those savings. By way of example I would simply mention the fields of telecommunications, printing, photocopying, travel expenses and others. We have launched several studies and I am confident that, under the guidance of experts in the secretariat and the office of the Comptroller General, my colleagues in Treasury Board and I will be able to deliver the goods.

[English]

I should like to refer to the progress which the government has been making in reforming the management of the Government of Canada in general. Hon. members will recall that on March 31, 1981, I tabled a progress report to Parliament entitled "Accountable Management". That document outlined the reforms which have been instituted by the government during the past four years and, in particular, set out the government's response to the final report of the Lambert Royal Commission.

Today I am pleased to make a further progress report to the House. In doing so, I shall speak on behalf of my cabinet colleagues and on behalf of Treasury Board, which functions as the principal management area of government.

"Accountable Management" discussed government action in relation to the royal commission's recommendations and proposals under seven broad categories. In reporting on progress today, I shall follow those seven broad categories. They are as follows: The concept of a fiscal plan; second, a discipline on the resource allocation process related to the fiscal plan; third, accountability of government to Parliament; fourth, accountability within government; fifth, accountability and efficiency in the administration of financial systems; sixth, accountability and efficiency in human resource management; and seventh, a continuing strategy for reform.

[Translation]

Honourable members will have noted that in last week's budget, my colleague, the Minister of Finance followed a practice started with last year's budget, namely the introduction in Parliament of a financial plan covering several years. As indicated in the document entitled "Accountable Management" which I just quoted, the 1980 financial plan covered four years instead of five, as was recommended by the Lambert Commission. But in 1981 we have a five-year plan. The publication of this financial plan therefore complies with the first of the two basic recommendations of the Lambert Commission, namely that the government project over several years its profits and expenditures for specific functions. That is a first and essential step towards ensuring parliamentary control over public expenditures and it is the basis upon which we can ensure responsible management within government.

The second basic recommendation of the Lambert Commission was to conduct an in-depth review of the definition and division of responsibilities in public administration so as to provide cabinet with the information it requires to limit public expenditures, and to ensure that departments and organizations follow sound management practices to provide taxpayers with adequate value for their tax dollars.

The policy and expenditure management system described in "Accountable Management" which is being applied for the second year, has an increasing influence on the procedures followed by government in establishing priorities, and arriving at necessary compromises between departments sharing the available resources, to ensure that programs are managed according to a results oriented approach.

[English]

Hon. members will recall, Mr. Speaker, that I recently sought their reaction to the new form of the estimates which has been developed by the Comptroller General. The government intends to proceed with this very important project. Not only will it provide Parliament with financial and program information in a more useful form, but it will also provide the basis for results-oriented management of departmental programs.

The Comptroller General has also proceeded with improvements in systems for the management of financial resources. I shall refer to these systems in greater detail in a moment.

The Lambert report and the report of the Special Committee on Personnel Management and the Merit Principle, the D'Avignon report, both recommended a major realignment of the roles and responsibilities of the central agencies in the management of human resources and proposed a series of reforms in the personnel management function.

In addressing the roles of the central agencies, the government recognizes that the Public Service Commission derives its authority from the Public Service Employment Act while the Treasury Board's authority in the field of personnel management derives from the Financial Administration Act on one hand, and the Public Service Staff Relations Act on the other hand.

A comprehensive review of all aspects of the personnel function in the light of these statutory authorities has resulted in the text of a formal agreement between the Public Service Commission as an agency which is accountable directly to Parliament, and the Treasury Board on behalf of the government. This agreement reviews the whole field of personnel management and identifies those functions over which each agency has exclusive authority, those functions for which each agency has responsibilities which have been delegated from another agency, and finally, those functions for which both agencies have shared interests and responsibilities.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this represents a major advance in resolving the uncertainty on the relative roles in personnel management. This uncertainty has existed in the public service ever since present legislation was enacted. In the functions which are shared between the two agencies, it has been agreed that Treasury Board should have the lead role and that major policy statements should be issued solely in the name of the Treasury Board, with acknowledgement obviously where applicable, that the policy has been developed in consultation with the Public Service Commission. One very practical result of this is that there is to be a single Handbook for Managers on Personnel Management.

● (1530)

A further step is to thoroughly overhaul the personnel Management Manual of the Treasury Board and to incorporate the Staffing Manual of the Public Service Commission so that there will only be one personnel management manual in the public service. The Secretary of the Treasury Board and the Chairman of the Public Service Commission will be jointly communicating details of this agreement to all departments and to all agencies of the public service.

The agreement in question also covers the roles to be played by the central agencies and deputy heads in the administration of the new management category, the creation of which has now been completed. Of course, it is very important to ensure that firm, co-ordinated leadership in career planning for this vital management resource is evident from the outset.

Also hon. members will recall that the Lambert and D'Avignon reports recommended that the whole staffing function be transferred from the Public Service Commission to the Treasury Board. The government is confident that such a drastic measure should not be contemplated at this time because it would cause a disruption for several years in a personnel system which is already heavily burdened by change. The government believes it will be far better to undertake further reforms in the personnel function on the basis of the substantial agreement on roles which has now been reached between the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission.

In addition to this update on accountable management, I should like to report to hon. members on some activities of the Office of the Comptroller General. It is particularly important that I deal with the activities of the Comptroller General during the course of the budget debate because they are fundamental to achieving our primary objective on the expenditure side of fiscal policy; that is to say, value for money, value for our taxpayers' dollars.

[Translation]

To begin with, I should like to refer to IMPAC, which is short for "Improvement in Management Practices and Controls", a major initiative of the Comptroller General designed to make sure that departments conceive, implement and use sound management practices, in other words, to make sure that objectives are defined as clearly as possible, that activities are planned, that the ensuing activities are checked against those planned, and that the results obtained are assessed.

To be effective, the various steps of all sound management practices must be integrated. For instance, good control is based on sound planning and the setting of relevant objectives depends on a clear review of past experiences. From this definition, it is clear that this system is neither a new management theory nor a solution geared to special problems within the civil service, but rather a means of improving management permanently and economically. This approach requires close co-operation between the office of the Comptroller General and departmental managers in order to identify the shortcomings of management practices, conceive an integrated plan of action to correct the identified shortcomings, and implement the plan of action.

[English]

I want to stress the comprehensiveness of the IMPAC approach. In the past it would seem that concerted efforts to strengthen one element of good management tended to occur at the expense of neglecting others. Because IMPAC insists on the integrity of a department's management processes, it is essential to set priorities for improvement and to phase in the required action with a clear view of the whole context.

The scope and complexity of the IMPAC project are formidable. Let me give examples. First, at the moment IMPAC embraces the 31 largest departments and agencies of government which together account for 85 per cent of total government expenditure, excluding debt payments, and 95 per cent of public service employees.

Second, the action plan of a typical department includes dozens of projects involving hundreds of person-months of effort and several million dollars, spread over three to five years.

Third, the action plan addresses problems which are inherently difficult to overcome, for instance, measuring performance in areas where the products are very hard to quantify, such as scientific research or policy formulation.

Another problem is the sheer size and diversity of the operations of many departments. This poses technical obstacles to the installation of management reporting systems in order to meet the information needs of various levels of management without becoming impossibly complicated.

Fourth, and perhaps more importantly, implementing IMPAC depends on changing attitudes and work habits, a process which never occurs easily or quickly.

Finally, comprehensive management improvement requires a sustained act of vision and will. In the dynamic environment of the public service, with frequently changing priorities and personnel, it is challenging to keep a long-term initiative of this importance focused on the real problems of individual departments.

Bearing in mind the nature of IMPAC which I have just described, let me quickly review for the benefit of hon. members of the House what has actually been accomplished in the three years since the Comptroller General launched this initiative. First, there have been surveys of all but two of the 31 departments included in the IMPAC study. They were completed in the spring of 1980. The thirtieth was completed this spring, and the thirty-first is now underway. As I described earlier, comprehensive action plans now exist for 25 departments. They have been endorsed by the Office of the Comptroller General; six more are expected over the next couple of months.

Implementation progress varies widely among departments, as some might expect. In some we are beginning to see much improved management practices. For example, in the Department of Public Works, this means setting up the systems needed to implement revenue dependency which, as hon. members are aware, cabinet approved in principle earlier this year. For the Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission, this means action to reduce over and underpayments of unemployment insurance benefits.

In the few moments which remain I should like to refer to some of the other initiatives. Program evaluation is absolutely fundamental to good, solid management practices. This is well established. Quite recently I issued a guide to program evaluation which was distributed to parliamentarians. Time does not permit me to devote the time to program evaluation that I would like. The same is true of internal audit. It is well advanced, but again the time remaining does not permit me to give hon. members of the House the benefit of a full report on the status of internal audit. I can assure the House that, in keeping with the recommendations which have come forth from the Auditor General and the Lambert commission over the years, we are well advanced.

I have already referred to the reform of the estimates. Of course, Members of Parliament have concrete evidence of that reform through the projects tabled in the House and distributed by me to all members. What all these initiatives have in common is strengthened accountability. Particularly in times of economic hardship governments must set an example by finding ways to do more with less.

Mr. Nielsen: When will you start?

Mr. Johnston: The initiatives I have described today are providing Parliament and the government with the tools needed to do that job.

Mr. Beatty: Convince the taxpayer of that.

Mr. Johnston: In conclusion, the fiscal management of Canada is moving ahead on all fronts.

Mr. McDermid: You cannot even keep a straight face when you say that.

Mr. Johnston: Indeed it is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: I should like a little order, Mr. Speaker. I hope hon. members would like to be educated on the reforms which are taking place. Fiscal management is moving ahead efficiently, creatively, responsibly and, above all, is responsive to the needs of Canadians. My colleagues and I congratulate the Minister of Finance for responding so directly to the plight of those Canadians who are suffering from high interest rates, for the thrust of restraint and deficit reduction, and for the very creative steps toward long overdue tax reform.

● (1540)

On the expenditure, management and accountability side, I am sure that my remarks today on the status of our ambitious government-wide reforms on financial accountability, personnel management and management practices will satisfy members that this government is well on the road to obtaining more value for the taxpayer's dollars.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to take part in this budget debate. I regret the absence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), but I understand that he is unavoidably absent today.

[English]

I regret it in particular because I find it almost impossible to address the budget without some reference to its author, since, unfortunately, I think one of the major deficiencies in the budget reflects the approach that has been taken to this House and to the question of the economy by the Minister of Finance.

What we are dealing with here, Mr. Speaker, is probably the most dishonest budget ever introduced in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Minister of Finance has deliberately cultivated a reputation as a man of cunning, a man who will never give us a straight answer. I think we on this side of the House have to say that has served him well as a minister who did not want to answer questions but, sir, a different standard is expected of a Minister of Finance; that is, a standard of honesty.

The millions of individuals whose private economic decisions make our economy falter or make our economy grow must be able to trust the word of the chief economic spokesman of government. It his word cannot be trusted, then they will delay their economic decisions, whether those are individual decisions to get new training, to seek to buy a new house, to start a business or to make major investment decisions about whether to invest in Canada or elsewhere, whether to start a megaproject or delay it. Sir, where there is no trust there is no economic progress.

While this project has done immense immediate harm to hundreds of thousands of individual Canadians, while it has done harm that is literally irreparable to many of our fellow citizens—many of the people affected by this budget will never get over its impact upon their lives—the deepest damage it does is the damage to Canada's future.

We have become accustomed to Liberal budgets which have failed to build on the creative capacities of our people or our country, and that is bad enough. What is worse about this budget is that it is so tricky, so untrustworthy, so dishonest as to make it impossible for anyone to believe the word or count on the future actions of the Minister of Finance or a government which makes him its principal economic spokesman.

That is not simply the opinion expressed by members of this House; that is the opinion of the stock market. The stock market has already registered its official response. It fell 39 points after the budget came down and now, after investors have had an opportunity to consider the impact of the budget over the weekend, it has fallen another 32 points. That is after people have read the fine print in the budget.

We know that across the country and, indeed, across the world people are sitting down this very day and reading that budget. They are reading the fine print and trying to decide whether to cancel or carry on activities which would have created jobs and growth and which might have created confidence and progress in Canada.

Some of the early decisions have been taken already, in the immediate aftermath of the budget. It is difficult to get current reports on the response to a budget which came down only on Thursday. Naturally, some of those responses have been in the housing field first, the field where there is real urgency to get on with development and construction.

I regret to report to the House that in Winnipeg Mar-West has stopped plans for a 1,500 unit apartment development because of the Liberal budget brought down on Thursday night. In Vancouver, Inter-West has stopped plans for a total of 605 duplex and apartment units because of the budget brought down on Thursday night by the Liberal government. Again in Vancouver, Community Buildings has stopped a total of 261 duplex and apartment units because of the budget brought down by the Liberal government last Thursday night. A total of 460 units in London, Ontario, and 350 in St. John's, Newfoundland have been stopped because of the budget brought down by the Liberal government on Thursday night. In total, in one day the Liberal budget brought down by the Minister of Finance has caused over 3,000 units of housing to be cancelled in this country. Those were units of housing under construction before the budget was brought down; they were under construction even at a time when it was risky to engage in that kind of enterprise. Now, as its latest contribution to the housing crisis in this country, the Liberal government has brought in a budget that has caused 3,000 units that were under construction to be withdrawn from the market available to Canadians.

That is the first wave of decision, Mr. Speaker—a reversal of plans to develop things, to build things, to make this country go. That is the first wave of plans that have been changed as the result of this budget.

Other decisions like that are going to come about; that is as certain as anything we know in this House. In some cases decisions will be reversed because programs that Liberal governments introduced as incentives have been abruptly cut off; in other cases because individuals or enterprises will simply decide that they cannot invest in a country whose government they cannot trust.

As we in this House know, the trustworthiness of this government is already in tatters as a result of its breaking its word on wage and price controls and because it opposed an 18 cents per gallon increase in the price of gasoline and then introduced a 65 cents per gallon increase in the price of gasoline.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: This budget carries deceit a step further. It quite deliberately tries to fool the people of Canada about the basic purposes and impact of the budget.

Let me contrast some of the minister's claims with the truth, Mr. Speaker. He says that the purpose of his tax changes is to "improve the fairness and equity of the system." The truth is that he is providing no new tax credits for those low-income Canadians who pay little or no tax. He is cutting the tax rates only at the top income levels. He is raising taxes for all single workers who earn in excess of $17,000, including the heads of single parent families, and he has smuggled in a bundle of new taxes that hit hardest at the ordinary working man and woman in this country.

He claims that this is a budget of restraint. The truth is that government spending will increase by 22 per cent, that this budget sucks into the federal treasury the highest percentage of annual income since 1946, the first year of reconstruction, and increases government spending on virtually every item except health and post-secondary education.

The minister says that the main thrust of the budget is to fight inflation. The truth is that he plans to collect $4.2 billion more in energy taxes next year, virtually all of which will be inflationary, and his new taxes on employee benefits will guarantee new inflationary wage demands.

He says he has a plan for economic development in the 1980s. The truth is that his plan is just another promise of a couple of studies, a new bureaucracy and a vague commitment to consultation that, at best, will take us back to the sectoral studies of 1977-78, while job destruction proceeds apace in Canada and the megaprojects remain on the drawing boards.

● (1550)

He told the parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements that he intended to cut his obligation to the provinces by only $1.5 billion in transfer payments for health, post-secondary education, social assistance and social services in 1982-83 and 1983-84. The truth is that he was preparing to cut that obligation by $1.9 billion during that period and a further $3.8 billion during the next three years.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) shakes his head, and I can understand why he would shake his head. Canadians across this country are shaking their heads at the deceit of this Liberal budget and the degree to which they have been betrayed by a government which not only had an obligation, but which had also given undertakings to come to the aid of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Again, the Minister of Finance says that since 1973 Canada has been second only to Japan in terms of real growth. The truth is that between 1975 and 1980 we have ranked next to last in growth, despite the fact that we supply a larger share of our own oil needs than any of the six nations with which we are compared. Those are some of the differences between the minister's claims and the truth.

Perhaps the best way to judge this budget which masquerades as tax reform and as help for the ordinary Canadian is to look at exactly who is helped and who is hurt by this budget. The list of those who benefit is very short. The ranks of those who suffer include almost every Canadian.

To start, let us look at who this budget helps. First of all, and most of all, it helps the treasury of the federal government. From March 1, 1981, to March 1, 1983, the federal government will receive—I want hon. members to note this figure—$27.5 billion more on a national accounts basis. There will be an increase in its revenues of 52 per cent over two fiscal years. Therefore, the federal government is the big winner while individual Canadians lose their homes, their businesses, their farms and their hopes. While provinces are forced to cut back on schooling and health care, the federal government is looking after itself, taking money from the people of Canada, raising Ottawa's revenues by 52 per cent over two fiscal years.

Who else benefits? The rich who are on salary benefit. This budget proposes cuts in marginal tax rates for people with high incomes. Therefore, wealthy individuals who get most of their income from salaries will benefit from this budget. The general rule is that Canadians who earn salaries over $40,000 a year are likely to gain from this budget. They are the people who are helped, particularly if their salaries are their principal sources of income. Who else does it help? It helps deputy ministers, indeed. Deputy ministers are among the principal beneficiaries of this particular budget because they are in the category of people who are paid very well and who draw most of their income from salaries. Those are the people who benefit from the budget that was brought down by the Minister of Finance on Thursday. Almost everyone else in the country suffers.

Again, one group which is helped by the budget is the banks and other lending institutions which hold mortgages. They will be directly helped by this budget because they will get the guarantee on the mortgage renewal loans they extend to those home owners whom the government decides happen to be in dire straits. There is another small group which will be helped. It will consist of the new bureaucrats who are hired to decide just who among those home owners, farmers and small-business men in dire straits is eligible for the meagre relief the budget provides. That, by the way, is the only job-creation component I can find in this new budget. It proposes to set up a new group of bureaucrats to decide who in Canada is really in trouble and then distribute meagre pittances of money to those Canadians.

The final category of people who will be helped by this budget consists of the government's old friends, the tax accountants and the tax lawyers. They will do not quite as well as the federal government will, but they will benefit from a budget which causes most Canadians to suffer.

That is the little list, the very short list of people who will benefit from this budget which was brought down in the name of equity. It is an odd kind of equity when the highest paid public servant in Canada receives a tax cut of at least $700 a year while Canadians who are too poor to pay tax get no help at all.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

[Translation]

The other thing for us to do now is to identify the victims. Who are they? First, the Canadians who will lose their job or who will not be hired because the budget does nothing to correct the current recession which is stifling the labour market. The main victims of the loss of job opportunities are young Canadians, people in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec and factory workers. These Canadians are penalized by this Liberal budget. Other victims include every Canadian family that uses heating oil and drives a car. At the end of 1982 they will each have paid at least $900 in indirect taxes to the federal government since the last budget. Also, low income Canadians who have to bear an excessive tax burden are penalized by this Liberal budget, as well as renters who are facing a housing shortage with a potential black market in many urban areas of tremendous rent increases. Because of these increases, the budget discourages rather than promotes the building of rental housing in spite of a shortfall in rental unit construction in the last few years. Canadian renters will be penalized by this Liberal budget. Because the basic tax rate is reduced to $200, every single person in Canada, including single parents, with an income of over $17,000 a year will have to pay more taxes. No assistance will be offered to single people who make under $17,000. Moreover, energy costs for both groups will increase tremendously without any compensation being offered. These Canadians will be penalized by the Liberal budget. In addition, the average worker will see his real income decrease next year. For the fifth year in a row, this Canadian citizen will be penalized by a Liberal budget.

[English]

I want to speak for a moment about the provision as it affects employee benefits, because I think nothing better demonstrates the lack of equity in this fraud of a budget which has the effrontery to call itself a budget of equity. The minister spoke with some passion about closing the loopholes in the tax system. I think it worth noting in passing that what are called loopholes today by a Liberal government were called incentives yesterday by a Liberal government when they were introduced by that party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: However, there is an interesting statistic which exists in the government's own papers, the papers which were not read to this House but which were tabled. I recommend that every Canadian read the papers with some care. Fifty-four per cent of the people who will pay more because of these changes, this so-called closing of the loopholes, earn less than $30,000 a year.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Clark: What is even more shocking is that 22 per cent of the people who will lose money as a result of this Liberal action earn less than $15,000 per year.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Clark: The benefits of which they take advantage are principally the employee benefits on which this government has come crashing down. Let us take a look at those employee benefits. Every worker whose employer contributes to Blue Cross will now have to pay a new Liberal tax on Blue Cross. Every worker whose employer provides a dental insurance plan will now have to pay a new Liberal tax on dental insurance. Every worker whose employer provides subsidized lodging, board or transportation to attract a work-force to remote areas will now have to pay a new Liberal tax on those employee benefits. Every salesman or saleswoman whose company provides a company automobile will now have to pay a new Liberal tax on that company car. Every worker—

Mr. Peterson: What's the matter with that?

Mr. Clark: I am asked by the well-to-do lawyer, the Member of Parliament for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson), what is the matter with people such as travelling salesmen, women selling real estate, where they can sell it in this country, often earning a second income to keep families going, being unable to claim cars provided by their companies as an employee benefit, the only benefit that allows them to work? What is wrong with that is that the Liberal measure will stop these people from working, or will be imposing a new tax upon low-income Canadians. That is what is wrong with that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1600)

Mr. Clark: I can understand why the lawyer member from Willowdale is concerned about this. He is probably one of those who flies by government JetStar across the country either as a parliamentary secretary or as a guest of the government. These are untaxed government JetStars. Indeed, one of the few groups of people who are not subject to tax on employee benefits are ministers of the Crown and parliamentary secretaries who fly back and forth across the country on government JetStars, three at a time into the airport at Winnipeg.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Liberal party thinks it is just fine. We hear a great deal of heckling from the minister of state responsible from time to time for finance and from the government side. They are all for Liberal taxes on Blue Cross, for Liberal taxes on dental care and for Liberal taxes on automobiles used by travelling salesmen in the country. But what they want to protect are cabinet ministers who fly one JetStar at a time to Winnipeg, often for Liberal party purposes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We are not finished with the list of people who are affected by this new Liberal tax on employee benefits. The language of the law is not quite clear in the documents brought down. We will have to wait and see what it is as we get into more debate, but it occurred to me on the basis of what is available in the documents now that every worker whose employer maintains a daycare facility may now be forced to pay a new Liberal tax on daycare in this country.

Miss MacDonald: Shame.

Mr. Clark: It also appears that every worker who is let go from his or her job may now have to pay a new Liberal tax on severance pay as a result of the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance last Thursday night. Those are some of the people who will have to pay.

There are other victims of this budget brought down last Thursday night. There are the small business proprietors who used the Small Business Development Bond to get capital below market rates to expand their enterprises and provide new jobs in Canada. They will now be able to get capital only if their businesses are about to go into bankruptcy. It is no longer a development bond, it is now a small-business survival bond, and a group of bureaucrats, the only new people hired by this government, are going to decide who gets to survive in the small-business community and who is forced by Liberal economic policy to go under.

Among the others who suffer from this budget are the poor who pay no income tax. They will obtain no new benefits from this budget while the burden of indirect energy taxes will continue to rise and health services may deteriorate because of the reductions in established programs financing. Those low-income Canadians across the country are going to be hurt by the budget that was brought down and they will be hurt directly.

Again, the reductions in the established programs financing will also increase pressures for lay-offs at hospitals and post-secondary institutions across the country. People whose jobs are in jeopardy because of this budget brought down on Thursday night are among those who will suffer.

Young people who will not be able to find a job may not be able to attend community colleges or universities because the established programs funding reduction may result in higher tuition fees or in a shutdown of departments or programs in institutions close to where they would attend. Those young Canadians are in need of training so they can help build our future. Those young Canadians will suffer and be hurt because of the budget brought down by this Liberal government last Thursday night.

Farmers will see the energy portion of their costs go up while commodity prices fall and the grossly inadequate financial assistance provided by the budget is available only after farmers are in "financial distress". Therefore, most of the farmers in Canada will suffer as a result of the budget that was brought down.

Home owners who lost their homes or were forced to renew mortgages before September 1 at rates which sharply reduced their standard of living will get no help at all from this government. They, too, are people hurt by the budget that was brought down last Thursday night, despite all of the empty promises made by the minister responsible for housing. Of the 920,000 households renewing mortgages after the cut-off date at sharply higher rates, less than 2 per cent will get any help and they will have to take on additional debt burdens before they get that help.

Let me deal with the most cruel deceit of all in this deceitful budget, namely the minister's claim that it helps those Canadians who are suffering directly from the impact of this government's own high interest rate policy. I think it important that every Canadian home owner, every Canadian small-business man and every Canadian farmer know exactly what this government is doing to them by this budget which increases so dramatically the revenues of the federal government and increases so dramatically the hardship of the ordinary, average Canadian.

Every member of this House knows the dimension of the crisis facing Canadian home owners. We on this side of the House have been raising the matter day after day through questions, through petitions and through demands for action from the government. More than 900,000 of our fellow Canadian citizens are facing mortgage renewal within the next 12 months, a period during which, by the minister responsible for housing's own figures, interest rates will remain at or near their present punitive levels. Even the minister responsible for housing, who by now should be the resigned minister responsible for housing, admits in his own department's documents the following:

> —mortgage interest rates have now reached the point where it cannot be argued that the incidence of hardship of renewal is minimal.

It cannot be argued that that hardship is minimal. That is the minister's own statement. There are 900,000 Canadians facing what the minister admits is more than minimal hardship. And what does the government offer? By its own figures, it proposes programs that at the maximum will affect some 12,500 families.

We have heard a great deal about dire straits, Mr. Speaker. As I travelled across the country through community after community, people kept telling me that their community's name had been changed to "dire straits". The people from Kelowna came to me and told me that Kelowna is an old Indian word for "dire straits". We may not know exactly where "dire straits" is, but we now know the population. The population of "dire straits" is 12,500 people, and that is all. That is the only group of Canadians in danger of losing their homes which this government proposes to help.

At most, one out of every 75 Canadians facing mortgage renewals at these astronomical rates will get any help from this government. One out of 75 is barely a third of the almost 40,000 Canadians which the minister responsible for housing, again in his own documents, admits already have to pay well over 30 per cent of their family income in mortgage payments. Again, if I might, let me quote what the minister said in speaking about these people. He said:

> Their choices are to pay a very large proportion of their income to retain their house, try to sell their home or just walk away and face foreclosures.

This government has sealed the choice for two out of every three of those Canadians. Those Canadians can either sell or walk away from their homes.

But what about that minority which the government says it is going to help meet soaring mortgage costs? For most of them the government, in fact, is providing no help at all. It is saying to them: "You go deeper and longer in debt by adding additional interest costs to your mortgage, and if you then find you cannot carry that kind of debt load, we will bail out the lender." That is exactly what the so-called guarantee program is about. It is not a home assistance program at all; the government has brought in a bank protection plan.

We have all heard the Minister of Finance during the past couple of weeks waging his phoney war of words against the banks. Then he brought in his budget, the budget in which he could have done something about the banks he was criticizing if he had been serious. He did do something; he protected the banks while sentencing thousands of Canadians to the almost certain loss of their homes.

● (1610)

I have just been handed a note, Mr. Speaker, which states that the stock market has gone down today by some 50 points. That is a total drop of 86 points since the MacEachen budget was brought in. That gives us an indication of what the budget has done to the confidence of those people in Canada whose confidence is essential if we are to continue to grow, to provide jobs and to realize the potential of this country.

[Translation]

And now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the situation of renters. Let us see how the government is helping tenants, a group that will become even larger when thousands more Canadians will be obliged to leave their homes and move to apartments. In his own documents the minister responsible for housing says that 105,000 Canadians are obliged to spend more than 30 per cent of their disposable income on housing. One reason is the housing shortage that exists in practically all Canadian cities. According to the government's figures, vacancy rates are at their lowest levels in five years. The government's response is to provide loans for exactly 15,000 new rental units next year. This does not even cover the requirements of our major cities. What about requirements throughout the country? As a result of these loans, the average rent for these units will be about $600 per month. To make matters worse, it seems the Minister of Finance is taking away the MURB program with the other hand. The result will be a reduction in the amount of capital available for the construction of new rental units, far beyond the 15,000 units being offered.

Because of this government and this liberal budget, not more but fewer new rental units will be built next year. It is not exaggeration to say that because of these liberal policies, the very existence of the housing industry in Canada could be threatened. This is a budget that is leaving hundreds of thousands of Canadians in a truly desperate situation. To all Canadians on low or fixed incomes, who are faced with massive increases in energy and housing costs, the budget does not offer a penny's worth of assistance. For all Canadians to whom the Minister responsible for housing said to wait until the budget was brought down before deciding what to do with their homes, the message is now very clear. As the minister said so succinctly: Sell or drop the whole thing. To all small-business men and to farmers whose way of life is being threatened, the budget says: Sink or swim, we are not going to help you.

[English]

For small-business men and farmers on the verge of bankruptcy as a result of this government's high interest rate policy, the story in this budget is sadly the same. The minister pretends to hold out a helping hand. That helping hand, it turns out, doubles into a fist to sock them in the face. The minister pretends to extend the Small Business Development Bond program to unincorporated businesses and farmers. In fact, he has gutted that entire program and virtually cancelled it. He now limits access to the program to those small businesses and farmers which the minister describes as being "in financial difficulty". It is no longer a development program at all. There is no longer access to that program for any farmer or small-business man who is in a position to develop or expand his operation. Access to that program is now available only to those who are bleeding to death financially. It is just the kind of business you would expect the banks to make even subsidized loans to. What this budget offers them is not a development program but a band-aid so that they can go on bleeding. For a measurement of the effectiveness of this program you have only to look at the government's estimate that it will cost the treasury only $20 million in the next two years compared with $200 million now. That means the government anticipates approximately one tenth as many loans under this program as there has been to date.

The impact on agriculture is as severe. There has been a proposal to increase the funding of the Farm Credit Corporation to about one tenth of the amount that our party proposed. We have done a quick calculation as to how many farmers will benefit from those Farm Credit Corporation lending arrangements. How many farmers will benefit by aid and money from the Farm Credit Corporation? The total number of farmers across the country who could benefit from Farm Credit Corportion aid is 225.

The small business development bond, with its strict limitation of aid to people who are already almost out of business and on the verge of bankruptcy, will benefit a pittance of perhaps 350 farmers. That means to the Canadian farming population, to people who keep this a food-producing nation and who have borne the cost and difficulty of trying to compete in inflationary times longer than most of us, that this government, whose green-hatted minister spoke through that green hat so eloquently about help that would be available to them, proposes to extend help to exactly 575 farmers across the country and the rest can go broke.

In addition, farmers could be among those Canadians who will be severely affected by changes in the averaging provisions brought in by this government. Farmers and others respond to incentive in a country like Canada, and do not seek out loopholes.

The minister spoke fiercely of closing loopholes. He spoke about it with all the rhetoric of someone embarking on another crusade. He forgot to mention that most of what he called loopholes were written into Canadian tax law by governments of which he was a member. Those governments called them incentives at that time.

I will not read these into the record today but I have available quotes from the Hon. Edgar Benson, Donald Macdonald and John Turner when they introduced these very loopholes the Minister of Finance is today crusading against. When these architects of Canadian tax loopholes introduced them, they were not called loopholes. They introduced them because they believed they would help Canadians go out and invest in the country, take risks, create jobs and make the country grow.

This House of Commons will have to scrutinize very carefully just what the effect of this part of the budget will be. It is my suspicion that it was designed by people who have an admirable zeal against abuse but an abysmal understanding of how these incentives are used by ordinary Canadians to make the Canadian economy grow and create jobs and opportunites for citizens across our country.

One example of this is the change in the capital cost allowance. This will yield the government, according to its own figures, almost $1 billion in new revenue. When the Hon. John Turner introduced that proposal, of which he was the architect, it was to stimulate Canadian jobs in the Canadian manufacturing industry and to help smaller enterprises across the country get on with the work of making Canada grow.

We know this change in the capital cost allowance will bring a billion dollars to the government in the first year, but we do not know what damage it will do to the economy. Before this Parliament approves the disintegration of that incentive we will want to know what damage it does to the Canadian economy and not just simply the richness it adds to the already fat federal treasury. Other members will want to pursue this question. I simply want to remind the House again that what the government now calls loopholes were very recently called incentives.

This budget hits dental plans and health plans in Canada and it may well hit daycare. It hits incentive to businesses which want to expand in this country. This budget, in the name of the crusade against incentive, may very well cut deeply into the capacity of the nation to grow.

Not only are health and dental plans affected, but this budget seeks to destroy employee share purchase and profit-sharing plans. It seeks to destroy them and undercuts them. What is the logic that causes the government to take a position in the budget against employee share purchase plans and employee profit-sharing plans? It makes it more difficult for Canadians with no pension plans to put money into retirement programs like RRSPs. Why? What is the logic of that in a society like ours? Even for this government of so-called economic nationalists it reduces the incentives for Canadians to invest in Canadian equities. It ends special allowances, at the end of next year, for those Canadians willing to work to develop our north. It makes every Canadian immigrant a second-class citizen when it comes to providing financial help to his or her family. As I indicated, it comes down hard on company automobiles used by all those "rich" Canadians like salesmen and local managers.

• (1620)

Mr. Peterson: You are wrong.

Mr. Clark: The parliamentary secretary tells me I am wrong. I will make a deal with him. If I am right and he is wrong, he can vote with us against his budget.

Mr. Peterson: Will you vote with us if you are wrong?

Mr. Clark: The Minister of Finance was on the television program "Question Period", and he was asked whether we are in a recession. He used a rather technical argument about not having two quarters together to indicate we are not in a recession yet, but he gave everyone to understand that he is working on it just as hard as he can and that he will have us there very quickly. Indeed, this is a recession budget. This is a document which not only pulls the economy down but also pulls down the state of enthusiasm of Canadians about our potential in this country. That is the stark reality of this budget. It was produced at a time when virtually every economic indicator available to the minister—growth rates, unemployment rates, the CPI, inventory and export figures, consumer confidence measurements—told him that our economy already was sliding into serious recession. Even his position of a year ago to do nothing and hope that the Americans would pull us out was no longer sustainable. His own documents forecast poor economic performance south of the border; yet, facing all that evidence, the minister offered nothing at all to make things better and a great deal to make things worse. Canadians are entitled to believe that this minister's real policy is that there is nothing like a good depression to correct economic problems.

As bad as the economic implications of this document might be, in some respects it is even more depressing for what it does to the deep and essential values of our society. Those of us on this side of the House and, I believe, the vast majority of Canadians believe that the ultimate strength of our nation lies in its people and in the energy and enterprise they bring to building their lives and, by building their lives, helping to build the country. Most Canadians live with a faith in individual responsibility and initiative, and they hope that if they are responsible and innovative in their own lives, they will be encouraged and even rewarded for their effort.

This depressing budget offers neither encouragement nor reward. Its only winner is a government which continues to claim more and more for itself. What is so shocking about this is that its message to the people of Canada is almost: "Why bother?" Why should individuals bother? For a young couple, why bother to scrimp and save for a home of their own? This government does not care if they keep or lose that home. If you are a small-business man or a farmer, why bother to put your life savings, your work and your dreams on the line? This government has no real commitment to you. If you are an entrepreneur who wants to build something for yourself and your country, why bother? This government has no direction to offer and no vision of a country in which you can join and be a part.

All those values which have built this country in the past, and in which many Canadians still believe, are shut out of this budget and in many cases are cut off by this budget.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my comments to the backbenchers on the government side. They have a crucial role to play. We on the opposition side can fight the budget and we will do so with all the means at our disposal. However, only the Liberal backbenchers can prevail upon the Minister of Finance to do the only reasonable thing, which is to withdraw this document and substitute for it a budget that is worthy of Canada. I am not speaking glibly in putting this challenge to the members on the opposite side. I am challenging them because, on a matter as important as the constitution, some of these members said they were prepared to defend a principle in which they truly believe. I now say to them that this budget must be changed because of the harm it is doing to Canadians.

I know that many members on the opposite side are aware of the plight of the people we are representing here. They know because they can see what is happening in their own ridings, what Canadians who are trying to hold onto their homes, farms and businesses are going through. They know that Canadians with low incomes and pensions are in great difficulty, and that it will get even worse when they try to cope with rising energy costs and other price increases. They know, because people tell them and because they can see for themselves that Canada urgently needs an economic policy that will help people to get organized and to know where they are going. The government members know perfectly well that none of this is offered in the budget. If they want to join forces with us, with our party and with the party on my left, we can force the minister to change his budget. For Canada's sake, I ask them to join us in this request.

[English]

In his remarks on Thursday night the minister as much as confessed that for the last 18 months this government has been preoccupied with the Constitution and with the question of energy. He intimated, in his view at least, that those problems were over for Canada. In so far as the Constitution is concerned, we certainly hope it will be possible to find a way to resolve that question, and we hope the government will consider realistically some of the impacts its policies are having on energy policy in the country. The minister intimated that for him at least that preoccupation was passed, and he raised our hopes that there might now be a willingness on the part of this government to address the question which the great majority of Canadians believes is the principal question before the country, and that is the question of the Canadian economy, how we can get it growing again, how we can stop Canadians from experiencing personal disaster and how we can stop the country from experiencing national disaster.

In presenting his budget last Thursday night the Minister of Finance had a rare opportunity to provide some leadership to the country. As a result of the energy agreement—the details of which are obviously controversial—the Government of Canada will have massive new revenues of about $55 billion over the next five years. Those revenues would be sufficient to reduce the deficit and provide real aid to those Canadians in need and to build in or maintain incentive to the private sector, which has always been the engine of growth in this country and will continue to be the engine of growth, unless this budget drives entrepreneurs away or drives the entrepreneurial spirit away from those who remain in the country.

Instead of that response to the great opportunity for leadership, what we got was an attempt to fool Canadians. We got a budget which was a trick. It was a dishonest document designed to pretend that there was action and designed to pretend there was reform. But it was in fact a budget which will impose an unbearably hard burden upon countless average Canadians and has as its principal purpose the enrichment of the federal government. This budget sells our country short. We need in Canada now incentive to investment so that those Canadians who want to go out and take risks and make the nation grow will have the encouragement of their government to do so rather than being stopped by that government from doing so.

In a country like ours, the future of which lies in a competitive edge in the world, we desperately need much more investment in research and development. We need help for Canadians who want to go out and find job retraining so that they will have skills which suit the new decade that is developing. We need policies to encourage export promotion. We need policies to encourage the productive side of a country which has always been immensely productive when its government encouraged its people to take advantage of the resources that are here. However, what we need most of all is a sense that the government is facing our economic situation honestly and dealing with it seriously. We have none of that in this budget. It is a document that is inaccurate; it is a document that is inadequate; it is a document that is dishonest; it is a document which should be either withdrawn or changed fundamentally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1630)

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we are here at 4.30 in the afternoon on the second day of the budget debate. We just listened to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark). There are in Canada more than a million unemployed, inflation is running at about 13 per cent, farmers are losing their farms, the stock market is dropping rapidly. And where is the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen)? Where is the cabinet?

Today during question period, I repeat the second day of the budget debate, when members of both opposition parties ought to have had an opportunity to question the Minister of Finance, where was he? Where is he now for this debate? I will tell you. He is five minutes from the House of Commons. He was there at the noon hour. He is having a private briefing with a limited number of reporters instead of being here in the House of Commons to answer questions on the budget and listen to important speeches on this side of this House. Nothing can illustrate the arrogance and indifference to the people of Canada better than the absence of the minister from this crucial part of the debate this afternoon.

Having said that and having heard the budget last Thursday night, in terms of its content, in one sense at least I can understand why the minister is not here. Except for the 45,000 Canadian taxpayers who earn more than $100,000 a year and who will save $5,000 as a result of this budget, this budget is one without help, without heart and without hope for the people of Canada. To put it simply and accurately, as I shall try to develop in my comments this afternoon, this budget guarantees that Canada will not only have a severe but also a prolonged recession in the coming years.

[Translation]

In recent months the unemployed, wage earners, renters, home owners, young and middle-aged, had been hoping that their government would take measures to lighten their burden. But this government is bankrupt of ideas. It operates in a complete vacuum. They blame everybody else except themselves, of course. It is the fault of the Americans, the international situation, the angels and so forth. Everybody is responsible except the Liberals. And yet, other countries have succeeded in setting up original programs which have already paid off. I am thinking of France, for instance. That country does not have the same resources as we do, not by a long shot. And yet, it innovates by adopting grant programs and tax credit legislation for small and medium-sized businesses hiring youth; the state is thus creating jobs for young people. The French model is not necessarily fully compatible with the Canadian situation, but it does show that, through imagination and hard work, it is possible to get out of an economic stalemate.

[English]

Consider the problems and then think of the budget in the context of those very real human problems. First, the standard of living. For the past four years, Canadians have seen wages and salaries lag behind price increases. According to this budget, we are going to have a fifth year in a row of the same experience, a record sequence of years since World War II in which the standard of living of Canadians is going to decline.

Consider unemployment. For over three years, more than a million in real numbers, men and women of all ages who have wanted to work, have been unable to find a job. According to this budget, that situation is going not only to continue in 1982, but will get worse in 1983 and still worse in 1984. The most optimistic forecast found in the budget is that by 1985 we might finally begin to see a decline in the unemployment levels.

I want to stress that this budget is cause for despair, not simply for the unemployed men and women. It is also a matter of despair for all those men and women who are currently employed who feel quite insecure because of the economic forecasts that are in the budget. They may have a job today, but they are appropriately apprehensive that they may lose it tomorrow.

In addition to the people who have lost their jobs or those who think they may, there are the parents of young men and women who this year are about to finish high school or a post-secondary education of some kind and will be looking for jobs. Those parents are very insecure about the prospect of their children being able to get a job in the coming year.

The concern, the insecurity, the despair is real in Canada. As leader of the New Democratic Party, it is entirely justified, I regret to say. One need only read the budget with some care to find that. There is not a single job-creation program in the budget for all of those people who are concerned.

The point is that our Minister of Finance thinks, and I use that term loosely, that Canada needs a recession to beat inflation. He is determined to inflict that recession upon us. He is going to sacrifice the production of goods and services that would be helpful in bringing down the level of prices if products were bring produced as well as provide jobs. He is also sacrificing the dignity that comes from work which is possessed by men and women who have a chance to contribute to the wellbeing of other people in society by their labour.

Quite apart from the lack of economic activity and the effects on human dignity with the perpetuation of this planned unemployment, which is what it is, I want to emphasize in my speech, and suggest some solution to it, that this approach is wrong economically. One might, under very peculiar and regrettable circumstances, allow for the kind of situation I have just described if it were necessary and if it were going to produce beneficial results down the road. I want to argue today that it is a profoundly wrong economic approach.

I would have hoped that after two years of this policy of high inflation rates related directly to high interest rates it would have been sufficient for the Minister of Finance in preparing this budget to come to his senses and change direction. I would have hoped he could have seen what Margaret Thatcher, by pursuing the same policies in England for three years, has inflicted upon the people of Great Britain. I would have hoped that he could see day after day what these policies under President Reagan are doing in the United States, and even that radical journal the Wall Street Journal has called into question recently the financial appropriateness of this approach to the economy.

• (1640)

Imbedded in the heart of the budget is this economic approach that is dependent on high interest rates that leaves unstated, but is there nonetheless, that if American interest rates increase, as a number of the long range forecasters are predicting, as surely as night follows day the Government of Canada, the Liberal government, will allow interest rates in Canada to continue to increase.

Whatever happened in the United Kingdom, United States and, importantly, whatever has happened in Canada as a result of this high interest rate policy has had no bearing on the arid, academic, intellectual approach that is an arid, intellectual approach devoid of thought. It is an approach devoid of actually looking at the experience of what has happened in other countries.

Consider the impact of high interest rates on farmers. I talked to some farmers a short time ago in Saskatchewan. They told me directly how this interest rate policy affects them. Again, I should like to stress that I am not talking about the human impact. That is a fundamental concern because the Liberals like to boast that they are the pragmatic realists, that they are the competent managers of the economy.

I should like to deal with that issue in their terms. I asked the farmers, "Tell me directly what is happening with high interest rates in terms of its impact on you, as an economic unit, if you like." I received the following elementary points that should be of concern to the government. First, they said: "If we have to buy our machinery, whether it is made in Canada or imported from abroad, the high interest rate situation, the carrying charge that we have to pay, is just as bad". Their costs of production rise. Or they said to me: "If we have to carry inventories over the winter", which they do, "we have to pay 20 per cent plus." That also increases their production costs.

More often than not, the farmers of Canada are unable, for a variety of reasons, to pass their cost increases on to the consumers. They have to absorb them directly themselves and, therefore, the farmers' families suffer. But where a farmer can pass the increase on, and no one will blame him for it, the result is higher food prices for Canadian consumers. That is the result of high interest rates for the farming sector.

What has the government done? It has not changed the interest rate policy, and I will return to this point in a minute. It has pretended it is providing a solution for the farmers in difficulty. What is it, Mr. Speaker? In the budget the government will lend an additional $50 million at moderate interest to farmers who are on the brink of bankruptcy; but the Farm Credit Corporation's total lending budget will now represent nearly 2.6 per cent of the debts that Canada's farmers now owe. There will be no way for new farmers to expand or purchase needed equipment. There simply will not be enough money to keep more farmers from bankruptcy. That is the reality of the kind of assistance that the Liberal Party is prepared to provide for our farmers in difficulty.

Again from the point of view of economics alone, consider the small businesses. Before Parliament resumed, I was in Newfoundland where I visited Corner Brook and St. John's and, more particularly, the small community of Baie Verte. I should like to suggest this afternoon that Baie Verte is a microcosm of everything that is happening to the Canadian economy. In that community there are two mines that will close down. This is directly related to the interest rate factor.

The week before I visited Baie Verte I heard that one of the mines was to close because the markets in western Europe experienced a temporary turndown. Under normal circumstances, a mine or any other business can carry its inventory over a period of time until business picks up. It is particularly interesting for this mine because it had increased its productivity by some 50 per cent in the past three years. It had invested new capital in the mine so that it would become more efficient. The ore body was good. However, the markets were down and it was paying, if I recall correctly—I know this is the framework of the loan, anyway—some 25 per cent to the banks. Its line of credit ran out. The banks shut the mine down. Several hundred employees were laid off as a result of high interest rates. These people were laid off from an efficient mine that could have continued to employ people and that could have realized a profit for the owners if a situation existed where there were normal interest rates and had the owners been able to survive another few months.

Approximately two miles up the road was another mine. The day I arrived I heard that it was to shut down. I think it is due to be shut down by Christmas. This mine illustrates a different point. It was not losing money temporarily; in fact, it made a profit of $23 million. I said, "Why would they be closing down if they are making a profit?" I talked with the trade unionists, the mayor of the town, community representatives and the business people responsible for the mine. What did they tell me? They said, "Well, yes, we made $23 million profit, but if we take the $23 million and put it in the bank, we can get a 20 per cent return on that on a long-range investment without taking any risks at all in the marketplace, which we might have to do if we carried on with our mining business."

The situation of that one community is a good illustration of the lay-offs in Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia and elsewhere in Canada. On the one hand you have small businessmen who cannot carry inventory and will be forced into bankruptcy as a result of high interest rates, and on the other hand you have businessmen with capital to invest, but because they are not crazy they think it is more sensible to invest their money in the banks than to create jobs for Canadians. It is time to put an end to this absurd high interest rate policy, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Then we come to the issue of home owners and renters, and that is perhaps the single most important category of people that certainly have been discussed in recent weeks. This group includes every Canadian, it seems to me, as the Liberals know. One is either a home owner or a renter. The government should be able to come to grips with that problem.

What has the budget done for these people? According to a document that we obtained some weeks ago, more than 100,000 Canadians are in serious difficulty in the coming year because they might lose their homes. That figure has moderated somewhat because interest rates and mortgage rates, which the government has allowed to follow market patterns, have decreased a little. However, the reality is that there are thousands, and if not 100,000, something close to it, facing serious difficulty. Why are they in serious difficulty? It is because they have to increase mortgages that are up for renewal.

This past weekend I was in Calgary and Saskatoon. In both those places the average increase in a mortgage renewal comes to $250 to $350 a month. To put it another way, $300 a month is $3,600 a year, and that represents a decline in one's living standard by that amount.

Mr. Cosgrove and the Liberal government say: "Oh well, there have not been many people who have experienced foreclosure". Of course not, Mr. Speaker, because the people of Canada, men and women who have put their life savings into their home, will not go through foreclosure. What they will do is take on an additional job and start to work 50 or 60 hours a week. Or if one partner in a marriage is not working, he or she will go to work. In some cases they have cut back on the kids' clothing budget or cancel vacations. Or as my colleague says, in most cases right now they cannot get another job because another job is not available. What does the budget do for them? The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and we were correct. It will provide assistance for some 2 per cent of the people faced with the terrible situation of losing their homes.

• (1650)

I should like to elaborate on how the government will provide this assistance. Are they doing it through our financial institutions? No, they will do it through loan guarantees provided by taxpayers, but they will only do it after, for example, a family with a mortgage of $50,000 who cannot keep its home defers the mortgage payments and goes more deeply into debt with the bank. Under this scheme, if one has a $50,000 mortgage and accepts the budget's recommendation, after paying for an entire year one will owe more on his house than he owed on the date of his initial payment. The government in its generosity to 2 per cent of the people threatened with losing their homes has forced home owners to become tenants in their own homes or permanent debtors, but has offered a guaranteed profit program for the banks.

Our solution differs from that of the government and the Conservative Party and is very clear in its difference. One group which has done very well with inflation is the banks of Canada. In the first nine months of this year the five major banks have had a profit increase of $1.5 billion. We must remember that 97 per cent of the mortgages in Canada are held by the banks, the trust companies and the insurance industry. As a democratic socialistic party approaching the banking system, in the housing crisis in particular but not restricted to the housing crisis, we say that in a mixed economy the banks can make profits in certain of their activities. It would be ludicrous from an economic point of view to offer a counterargument. Some of our cabinet colleagues across the way can afford a $175 per plate dinner in Toronto to raise money for the Liberal Party. If they or any Canadian wants to borrow money to go on holidays in Florida or elsewhere, to purchase mink coats or to put in swimming pools, let the banks charge them what they want. But when there is a housing crisis in Canada and according to the minister some 100,000 Canadians from coast to coast are threatened, since the banks had a $1.5 billion profit in the first nine months of this year, surely it is time to think about what the Bank Act provided before the Liberals changed it in 1969.

Before 1969 the Bank Act fixed mortgage moneys at 9 per cent. The banks put up mortgage moneys; the ceiling was 9 per cent. Then it was changed. At that time one party in the House opposed the change—the NDP. The then minister of housing, Mr. Paul Hellyer, spoke in the House. I remember very vividly what he said. He said that they wanted to take out of the Bank Act the principle which set the then ceiling of 9 per cent. Also he said that they wanted to introduce what was then called for the first time the roll-over principle for mortgages. There used to be long 20 or 25 year mortgages. Mr. Hellyer for the Liberals said that they wanted to get rid of it and that it was being done for home owners. He said that was in their real interest.

Then he did two things. He took off the 9 per cent mortgage ceiling and allowed the banks and other financial institutions to put out mortgages which were renewable every five years. To those of us on this side who said that that would only guarantee the profits of banks, Mr. Hellyer said that we were wrong and, "There you are, you predictors of gloom and doom." He said that if the government introduced the roll-over principle there would be a great influx of mortgage money, that mortgages would come down and that home owners would benefit.

I should like to indicate what has happened with the roll-over principle. Ever since it was introduced the banks of Canada have been rolling over home owners in the country; that has been the result.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We would say to all Canadian families who have to renew their mortgages at 18.5 per cent and upwards that they ought to be able to renew them during the next six months at the rates they are presently paying. The financial institutions can afford to absorb that. This is my first point. Second, we want to reintroduce the principle of social responsibility into the banking system. A New Democratic Party government would do the following within 24 hours. We would change the Bank Act and make it obligatory for banks to put up mortgage moneys at a level which average Canadian families can afford.

In terms of renters, if anything, the situation for renters in Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal, Halifax or any urban centre will be worse than the situation for home owners next year. What has this imaginative Liberal government done? Has it indicated that there are more than one million unemployed in the lumber and construction industry, in the furniture, refrigerator and stove manufacturing industry, and that we should be doing something to stimulate employment? If the government had even thought that way, the conclusion would be obvious.

The government has announced that it will provide 15,000 additional units—its big increase—over the next two years. This will not even meet the needs of Vancouver, let alone all of Canada. The NDP say that with the present unemployment rate and with the housing crisis faced by human beings who need accommodation, there should be a massive increase in the Canadian housing budget to provide homes and rental accommodations for those who need them. Of course, this would provide jobs for the Canadians who would be building them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Now I should like to deal with the interest rate argument in more detail than it has been dealt with in the past. When I was speaking at my party's convention in Saskatchewan, I was pleased to hear the Premier of that province say publicly that he was in agreement with what we had said about exchange controls. We think they are necessary now. I want to make the argument for them.

Mr. Blenkarn: I want to hear this.

Mr. Broadbent: I hear a member of the Conservative Party saying that he wants to hear the argument. I make the argument for the benefit of people on both sides of the House, and I should like to hear their replies. The Minister of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada, as well as the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) as recently as last June in opposition, have indicated that we must keep raising our interest rate when the American rate is up or we will be in difficulty. We say that there is an answer. We can lower interest rates, but if we stop there those profound economic wizards in the Liberal and Conservative parties are correct that there would probably be an outflow of capital. We think we can go one step further. We do not just restrict ourselves to what social democrats have done around the world; we turn to the United States itself.

In the 1960s President Kennedy had an outflow of capital problem. What did he do? He established a system of controls on the export of capital to protect the American dollar for some time. Then in the 1970s when the well-known radical President Nixon was in charge of the United States, he had a problem as well. I do not think his office had been taken over by Trotskyites. He saw that there was a way to deal with an export of capital problem, so for a brief period of time he put export controls on capital.

• (1700)

We say that when farmers in Canada are going broke, when businessmen are going broke, when Canadians are losing their homes, if it was good enough for the Americans in the 1960s and 1970s to have controls on the export of capital, then it is good enough for Canada in the 1980s and it should be done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I was going to intervene and advise the hon. member that his time had expired. Nevertheless, he may continue if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. members for their indulgence.

[English]

I shall try to conclude quickly, Mr. Speaker.

There is one other point in the budget that I want to deal with before I turn the floor over to a Liberal member who, I hope, will reply to some of the arguments that have been made. This concerns the question of equity.

In his speech to the House and to the people of Canada on Thursday, the Minister of Finance made much of his party's alleged concern with fairness and with equity. I was touched by that. I heard in advance that they were really going to sock it to the rich. Then again, I thought that perhaps the Trotskyites had taken over the Liberal Party.

I listened with a great deal of interest to what was said in the budget about income distribution and tax benefits. Instead of that, we found that what the Liberal Party was doing with its left hand, it was busy undoing with its right hand, which is always much stronger. It closed some loopholes but left many more in place.

When you look at the tables and the charts that accompanied the budget documents you discover the following facts, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the vast majority of Canadians get no tax cuts at all. I repeat, the vast majority get no tax cuts at all. Second, a small number at the bottom of the tax scale get something like $4 per week. We are pleased that they get something but $4 per week is hardly the symbol of a government generous toward its people if you are living in poverty.

At the other end of the economic scale we find that there are 45,000 taxpayers in Canada earning $100,000 or more per year who, with this Liberal budget, will save $5,000 per year in taxes. We say that this is not tax reform, this is typical Liberal chicanery. The government tries to pretend that it is providing justice for all, but instead it is providing additional benefits for upper-income Canadians who need it least.

I will conclude with this observation, Mr. Speaker. What we need now and what we have needed for years is serious tax reform. As long as pensioners in Canada are paying taxes, as long as the working poor in Canada are paying taxes, surely to God it is time that the rich, the banks and the oil companies were paying their fair share.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I was going to have something to say about how the government has abandoned its total commitment to the further Canadianization of our economy and how it has sold out the west and the western development fund, but my time is running out. I shall conclude with the following words, Mr. Speaker. More than ever before Canadians must know that there is one party in this land that remains in their corner, that there is one party that does offer heart and help and hope. I want to say to the Liberals and the Tories that they can take their stand with the banks and we will take our stand with the ordinary people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Deniger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour for me to have an opportunity to take part in the debate on the budget which was tabled last Thursday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the three major themes of this budget cannot be overemphasized: restraint, equity and economic renewal. Indeed, the cornerstone of our government's budgetary policy is that it is vital that we should put an end to inflation if we want to reduce interest rates and tackle our other economic problems. Mr. Speaker, I plan to use the few minutes at my disposal to deal first of all with the immediate effects of the budget on Quebec taxpayers, especially those of the constituency of Laprairie of the cities of Saint-Lambert, Lemoyne, Greenfield Park, Brossard, Laprairie and Candiac, then, to comment on the various options which faced the Minister of Finance, and finally, to discuss the many contradictions in the attitude of the opposition members who addressed this budget, and God knows that we heard quite a few of them this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, voiced by both the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent).

It is important first of all to emphasize that by doing away with a great number of tax rebates, the government will be able to reduce the taxes that are paid by nearly 6 million taxpayers while increasing its revenue sufficiently to reduce the public deficit. For the Quebec taxpayers, in Canada, Mr. Speaker, these savings may be and are achieved in the following manner. First, the income tax rates for individuals whose income exceeds $11,000 will be reduced and the tax burden of individuals with lower incomes will be lightened. Those in the higher-income brackets will be encouraged to save and invest by the setting of a limit of 34 per cent for federal tax rates. The maximum tax rate will therefore be about 50 per cent, Mr. Speaker, depending on the provincial tax rate, rather than about 64 per cent as is now the case. The current tax reduction of 9 per cent will be replaced by a $200 credit granted to all taxpayers. Married taxpayers will be able to claim an additional $200 for a dependent spouse. This means that 620,000 lower income taxpayers will see their tax credit doubled or increased by $400. The indexing system provided by the act will remain the same, which will represent additional rebates of over $3 billion in federal and provincial taxes in 1982. The child tax credit will go from $261 to $293.

Generally speaking, personal income tax provisions for 1982, including the restrictions for preferential rates and indexation, will mean average individual rebates of $310 for nearly 12 million taxpayers, while approximately 795,000 taxpayers, most of whom have higher incomes, will pay more federal taxes. A family of four will now be able to earn up to $15,000 without having to pay any federal income tax. In addition, in view of the lowering of unemployment insurance contributions, the net income of the wage-earning population will increase by $200 million. These tax incentives granted to all taxpayers are obvious and very important, but they mean even more, Mr. Speaker, for the Quebec taxpayer who is unfortunately governed in Quebec by a government known for its rather unhealthy administration.

Nonetheless, Mr. Lévesque and the Parti Québécois won the last election on the slogan of sound administration. Under a provincial Liberal government from 1970 to 1976, the average deficit of the government of Quebec was $451 million. Under the PQ it rose to more than $2 billion between 1976 and 1981. Between 1977 and 1981, the deficit increased 37.4 per cent under the Lévesque government. The total indebtedness of the Quebec public sector went from $8,000 per family to nearly $15,000 in 1980. In 1980-81, provincial spending per capita were $2,700 in Quebec and $1,900 in Ontario. In the area of education alone, Mr. Parizeau recognized that in his 1979-80 budget Quebec was spending $500 more than Ontario per student.

In 1979, Mr. Parizeau discovered a $500 million shortfall in the department of education budget. He never succeeded in explaining that shortfall, and in the Quebec civil service, the remuneration per employee was $19,000 compared to $16,000 in Ontario. Clearly the Quebec taxpayer needs a sound fiscal administration, but he does not get it in Quebec. Quebecers are among the most heavily taxed citizens in America. The Canadian taxpayer with a $10,000 income pays $700 more income tax in Quebec than in Ontario. If he earns $20,000, the difference jumps to $2,000. Personal income tax in Quebec increased from $8.28 per $100 of personal income to nearly $9.50. The PQ government has just converted medicare, the automobile insurance board and Hydro-Quebec into tax collecting agencies. Not to mention the liquor board and all the other types of disguised taxes the government imposed on us Quebecers.

So, Mr. Speaker, I urge the PQ government to enter the federal arena. I invite them to come up with candidates against us. Of course, I wonder how they are going to call that group, whether it will be the Canadian Quebec Party or the Federalist Parti Québécois, but I would urge them to do so because they should be made accountable.

In preparing this budget, our Minister of Finance was faced with the traditional economic dilemma facing every western democracy, namely to balance the demands of society for economic security with its need for economic growth and development. Of course, the answer is in our budget, that is equitable restraint. Over the last few weeks, Mr. Speaker, a number of groups from the municipal, provincial and federal levels, a number of business groups, consumer groups, trade unions, home owners, renters and others suggested various fiscal measures to the minister for inclusion in his budget.

Unfortunately the common denominator of all those groups was indeed to reduce inflation, too often at the expense of all the other groups but not theirs. That is why the government must counter those inflationary demands with restrictive tax measures so as to maintain our anti-inflationary monetarist policy which, for awhile, was our only weapon to come to grips with the ever-escalating rate of inflation. Obviously the recent agreement between Alberta and the central government, and between nine out of ten provinces and the government of Canada with respect to both energy and the constitution will greatly improve the economic climate in Canada. Undoubtedly the fiscal measures introduced by the Minister of Finance in his budget last Thursday will bolster the dollar and lead to a definite lowering of interest rates.

• (1710)

[English]

An excellent example of inconsistent demand came from the ten provincial ministers when they were consulted about this budget last October. The provinces wanted the federal deficit reduced, of course, but none wanted the cuts to affect them. They all recognized that the most important fiscal measure we could take would be to reduce our deficit and our pressures on capital markets in order to fight inflation. But then most of them said that the federal government should not cut any revenue guarantees or transfer payments, should not raise or de-index any federal taxes, and should spend at least $800 million on a new federal subsidy program to protect all farmers, home owners and small-business men from the effects of high interest rates.

If they had the responsibility for balancing these conflicting demands for Canada's general economic progress on the one hand, and their own economic and political security on the other, perhaps they would recognize the desirability of phasing out the 1972 revenue guarantees in order to allow the federal government to reduce the deficit without affecting contributions to health care and post-secondary education. Perhaps they would recognize the need to end tax loopholes for the rich while reserving large cash expenditures on interest rate relief for those who need it most. In other words, they might be forced to make decisions about what is fair and equitable for Canada as a whole, instead of each demanding what is collectively impossible. That is what the Minister of Finance meant when he said that people must change their attitudes if inflation is to be beaten.

[Translation]

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business recently made public its pre-budget review where it stated, and I quote:

—designed to dispel mistrust and uncertainties and to show the new way to follow.

Among other things, Mr. Speaker, the CFIB recommended that the $150,000 ceiling on the deduction granted to small- and medium-sized businesses be raised to $200,000, and that the necessary amount of profits made by a business during all its operational life be increased from $750,000 to $1 million. This was approved. The CFIB asked for new unemployment insurance rules, so the budget provides for lower premiums for both employee and employer. The CFIB requested as well an extension of the Small Business Development Bond program for the expansion of small and medium-sized businesses and a wider field of application so that individual business owners might benefit from it as well. That proposition has been almost totally accepted.

The CFIB also urged the government to reduce federal expenditures and the share of government revenues now earmarked for servicing the debt. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that not only does the government intend to bring the deficit from $11.2 billion down to $9.8 billion in 1981-82 but it is also going to lower our cash requirements to $6.6 billion in 1982-83. We forecast a very sharp decline in our interest rates whose increase must drop from 38 per cent to less than 5 per cent if we are to pay our debt. It is important to recall that in our context of restraint and equity, the major requests of the CFIB have been met, even exceeded, and of course I am referring to the federal sales tax.

[English]

So, Mr. Speaker, do not misunderstand me. I am not criticizing Canada's economic interest groups for trying to protect themselves. Their leaders are elected or appointed to present a particular point of view. Their input into the decision-making process is invaluable; but all too often they make demands that are inconsistent from a social perspective, as if the pursuit of their own interests somehow automatically results in what is best for Canada as a whole.

The worst offenders are clearly the two opposition parties, for they are not supposed to be representative of particular interests. As national parties in a national parliament, they have a responsibility to reconcile conflicting interests and to balance conflicting demands for economic security and economic progress. That they have failed to accept that responsibility is plainly evident from the debate thus far. They are merely echoing the chorus of complaints.

Home owners and renters can be assisted in the long term by policies of fiscal and monetary restraint which will reduce inflation and interest rates.

An hon. Member: You don't see it happening.

Mr. Deniger: What distinguishes our program of restraint from the drastic Conservative approach—

Mr. Blenkarn: If people are restrained, government should stand fast.

Mr. Deniger: —being undertaken in Britain and the United States is our additional emphasis on equity. The $350 million this government is allocating to help home owners and to stimulate construction of rental housing is going to those households with the greatest need, while tax exemptions for capital gains on a taxpayer's residence will be limited to one residence per family so that the cottages and summer homes of the affluent will no longer be subsidized.

● (1720)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Talk about restraint.

Mr. Deniger: Now comes the time to respond to both the NDP leader and the Tories. Let me start with the NDP leader. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) clearly exaggerates when he accuses us of Canadianizing "Reaganomics". I believe the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) was sincere when he said that the greatest problem facing the Canadian people today was economic insecurity. But is that the whole story, and is the only way to deal with it to spend billions more dollars on government guarantees of economic security than we already do? Is that why his leader called a $350 million housing program a "puny response"?

However genuine the New Democratic Party's concern for equity and security is, it is inconsistent with, and undermined by, its $1.5 billion housing program and its artificial reduction of interest rates, which would increase the deficit, devalue the dollar, fuel inflation and discourage capital from investing in this country and providing the jobs are so desperately needed.

This afternoon the Leader of the NDP told us about his great cure for high interest rates. In order to subsidize low interest rates, the NDP has proposed exchange controls to prevent large movements of more than $5 million out of the country. This would damage Canada's international image and jeopardize its economic relations by inviting retaliation. Foreign investors would stay away in droves. It is an example of how controls lead to more controls. Controls are their answer for everything except union wages. The NDP leader has even admitted that his party might consider exchange controls on average Canadians trying to transfer as little as $5,000 out of the country. Even Canadian vacationers would have their freedom of choice curtailed. That does not strike me as being the best way to provide equity and fairness.

[Translation]

The Progressive Conservatives also contradict themselves. Last October 4, Mr. Speaker, their financial critic said, and I quote:

[English]

This coming budget must pick first and foremost as its primary target and almost everything in that budget must be aimed at fighting inflation.

[Translation]

Yet, last Thursday night, the same member suggested that the $50 million set aside for the Farm Credit Corporation was not enough and what was needed was $500 million. Mr. Speaker, if we had those $500 million, we would surely give them out, but as we all know that is over and above the entire DREE budget and is an inflationary amount. The energy tax credit suggested by the hon. member is also an inflationary measure. You will also recall that the mortgage deductibility scheme supported by his party was not only inflationary, it was unfair and restrictive. When the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) speaks of a program that would apply to 220,000 housing units instead of 40,000, that is also inflationary.

The Leader of the Opposition was speaking earlier of other funding needs. He said that we should not have abolished some tax shelters because not only rich Canadians took advantage of them. Naturally, that is costly but still he wanted further tax credit measures, further exemptions and all sorts of tax shelters, even though the latter would have in fact prevented the government from collecting enough money to reduce its deficit and prevented over 6 million Canadian taxpayers from paying lower taxes.

I was keenly interested in the remarks made by some hon. members opposite a while ago when they said that we were the party of the banking interests and that we are in bed with them. And I find it still more surprising when I realize, just as all other hon. members of the House certainly do, that the deputy minister of finance who wrote the budget which caused the downfall of the previous Progressive Conservative administration is now a senior vice president of the Bank of Montreal. I certainly do not understand how hon. members of the Progressive Conservative Party would say all of a sudden that banks are Canada's worst enemies. It is a quite recent discovery. It is a sealed case.

We need only go over the questions which the members of the official opposition have been asking over the past few months to realize that they have no true economic policy and are trying every moment to please everybody. I should have thought, Mr. Speaker, that the experience in power of my hon. Progressive Conservative friends, however brief it was, would have made them understand. I should have thought, Mr. Speaker, that the Crosbie budget would have made them wiser. But no, Mr. Speaker; we need but recall the many economic debates held in this House to realize that their economic policy is as follows: Cut out everything except in my riding, which is utter nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

The problem facing the official opposition is also, to some extent, that which faces our society. Can economic growth and economic security go hand in hand? Professor Thurow of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology has written, and I quote:

[English]

Today, as never before, all policy solutions involve some degree of redistribution of income and wealth. And until we face up to this painful reality and learn as a society to agree on who should bear what costs, economic growth will continue to elude us.

That is the key to economic renewal, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance so eloquently explained. Everyone, from the forester in British Columbia to the Conservative politician in Newfoundland, seems to be in favour of competitive economics for others and protection for themselves. But this is Parliament and this is where the decisions must be taken. The buck stops here. It is no longer acceptable to make demands which are inconsistent. The challenge of government is to provide a balanced program of equity and restraint to ensure that we have both security and growth. And I once again congratulate the minister for meeting that challenge.

[Translation]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that under the present economic circumstances in this country as in the whole world, a budget is the most difficult working paper which a government is called upon to bring down. Due to the pressures brought to bear on a government, a budget introduced under the theme of restraint, equity and economic renewal is to the advantage of all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be speaking today because the budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) represents an expression of confidence in the ultimate strength of the Canadian economy. This budget sets its sights on the future and is laying the groundwork for the massive capital investment we will need in this decade and throughout the next to realize our development potential. The goals of this budget are not short term. The hon. Minister of Finance did not sacrifice long-term economic stability in Canada on the altar of short term political gain.

There can be no mistake. The major thrust of this budget is to meet the challenge of inflation, inflation which unfairly prejudices those on fixed incomes, inflation which erodes savings, inflation which exacerbates wage demands, inflation which decreases our productivity and international competitiveness, inflation which keeps interest rates high and which itself is fuelled by higher interest rates, each feeding voraciously on the other.

• (1730)

The single objective of this budget is to curb inflation and thus bring down interest rates. It does this by taking a large amount out of the budgetary deficit and thus out of the federal government's borrowing requirements. Last year the deficit was $1.5 billion less than had been predicted which, considering the high interest rates that we were required to pay, was welcome news to all Canadians. This year the deficit will be $0.4 billion less than predicted last year. It will decrease steadily in absolute dollar terms in the ensuing years. This means that as a percentage of our gross national product, the deficit will decline from a high of 4.4 per cent last year to 4.0 per cent this year and 2.8 per cent next year.

The leader of the New Democratic Party elaborately indicated to the House our major concerns about interest rates. The majority of his speech concerned the problems created by high interest rates. I had the impression that he was resigned to having high interest rates prevail in this country because he believed that we should artificially force interest rates down and as enormous amounts of money flow out of the country we should stem the tide by imposing exchange controls and stopping it at our border. This approach has been tried in the past. He mentioned that it had been successful in the United States. In fact it did not work in the United States. First they tried the interest equalization tax, then in 1965 they tried the voluntary guidelines approach, and in 1968 they tried the mandatory guidelines approach. They finally had to abandon these measures in 1972. It has been tried in England and has not worked. It was tried in France—

An hon. Member: They are going to do it again.

Mr. Peterson: —and it has not worked. Let us not think there is a magical solution which can bring down interest rates overnight, set up barriers and create a watertight capital market in order to protect us. What the government is doing in this budget is attempting to bring interest rates down by bringing down inflation.

The reduction of the government deficit will have an even more important impact on our financial requirements. The actual amount of money we will have to borrow will decline more rapidly from $10 billion last year to $9.7 billion this year. Next year the reduction will plummet to $6.6 billion. This represents a real reduction from 3.5 per cent to 1.7 per cent of our gross national product. I believe this is a responsible approach to take to deal with the deficit.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, substantial results are made possible thanks to two procedures. The first is a more adequate control of government expenditures. As it was pointed out by a few members, our economy is at a standstill. Consequently, it would be neither wise nor advisable to try to reduce the deficit by chopping drastically at government expenditures. It is essential that the rate of increase of most of our expenditures remain lower than the rate of growth of our economy.

That is why our expenditures will show a slight drop—in line with our economy—from last year's 20 per cent to 19 per cent in 1985-86. One reason why the public debt could not be reduced more substantially this year was the high interest rate which caused an increase in the public debt of $2.3 billion projected for last October. We must fight high interest rates, and we are using this budget and our monetary policy to do so.

The second means of reducing the deficit will be to increase revenue. Before the effects of the energy agreement are felt in two years' time, tax increases provided in the budget will generate additional revenues of $1.4 billion in 1982-83 and $2.1 billion in 1983-84, dropping to $1.2 billion in 1985-86.

[English]

These additional tax revenues are being derived in an important way. Reduced tax rates will apply to individuals with an income in excess of $11,120. Reduced rates plus a continuation of indexing will mean, for example, that a family of four with an income of $15,000 or less will pay no income tax. At the higher end of the scale, the top marginal federal tax rate has been reduced from 43 per cent to 34 per cent. This means that the combined federal and provincial tax rates will fall from the present high of 64 per cent down to 50 per cent, and there will be a reduction of taxes on capital gains from 32 per cent to 25 per cent.

The budget undertakes the first major overhaul of our tax system since 1972 to make up for this lost revenue. This is accomplished by eliminating a number of tax expenditure plans, or loopholes, which generally benefit individuals in higher income brackets. The declared thrust of this overhaul is to create equity or fairness among taxpayers. The result of this is that some taxpayers in a higher bracket who benefited from these expenditure plans will face a net increase in their taxes.

I cannot help but recall some of the remarks made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). I would not have mentioned this had he not returned to this subject twice. He seemed to be quite concerned about the fact—and exercised about it—that the government was ensuring that individuals who used company cars for personal benefit would not get a tax break. He said that we were not penalizing fairly people such a travelling sales persons or real estate sales persons. What we are doing in this area is simply ensuring that that portion of their automobile which is spent for business purposes is not taxable, but if they use their car for pleasure, for example, to go to Florida by car for a vacation, that portion of it will be treated as a taxable benefit. Every other taxpayer has to pay for it. That is all we are doing. As the hon. member says, we are ensuring proper collection procedures in this provision. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition made quite an issue out of that. He said that if I was wrong he would expect me to vote for his amendment on this budget. But he did not have the courage to accept my counter offer that if he was wrong he would vote for our motion on the budget.

An hon. Member: That is great. Tell us about taxing Blue Cross and dental plans.

Mr. Peterson: In the midst of these changes the budget has taken into account the devastating impact high interest rates can have on home owners who are facing the prospect of renewing their mortgages. A temporary system has been created combining guarantees and grants to ensure that home owners who might not otherwise be able to meet increased monthly charges will not be forced to sell their homes. Other measures have been designed to help small businesses and farmers to cope with the present high interest rates which we all agree are too high. For example, I believe our proposals regarding small businesses will bring them benefits amounting to an average of $27.5 million for each of the next two years.

Returning to the subject of interest rates, we must recognize that the help given to home owners, small business and farmers in order to allow them to cope with these high interest rates is only a stop-gap remedy. There can never be a real substitute for reducing inflation and thus reducing interest rates to a reasonable level. We must ensure that the high rates do not again skyrocket.

• (1740)

I think it is important for us to recognize some important facts. Since August there have been ten successive decreases in the bank rate. It has come down from a high of 21.24 per cent to 16.13 per cent last Thursday, a decline of 5.11 percentage points. The prime lending rate has come down from a high of 22.75 per cent to 18 per cent, a drop of 4.75 percentage points. Likewise, the rate on five year mortgages has also declined 4.75 percentage points. I have not heard any approbation from hon. members opposite in this House as these rates have steadily come down. However, as those rates were going up, they criticized us. One would at least have thought that they would have been tempered and even in their distribution of praise and criticism. We recognize that the rates are still too high, which again dramatizes the need for measures which will bring down our rates.

Mr. McDermid: Are you taking credit for their falling?

Mr. Peterson: I hope the hon. member will listen because, if he does, he might understand the full thrust of this budget.

As the Minister of Finance has said—and I echo his words here today—the foremost thrust of this budget is to control inflation and to keep bringing interest rates down. Let us look at the solutions offered by the Tories, who seem to be quite vocal this afternoon—through a rump group listening to the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), the Tory finance critic, one would think that he was in favour of our approach of reducing the deficit and bringing down interest rates, because he said this: "A manor drop in inflation and a major drop in interest rates is what this country needs most."

That was last Thursday. Thus far one would think that the hon. member is a fairly bright fellow. But wait; what he did after that was a complete U-turn. He criticized us by saying, "What we have is a restrictive budget when the reverse was called for." What he seemed to be saying in that last sentence was that he wants the government to enter into new expenditure programs, more government spending and a higher government deficit as a cure for inflation and high interest rates. However, I am not sure. That is what he seemed to be saying, but I am not sure because in another sentence he said that we should have been reducing the deficit even more. The only reasonable explanation for the U-turns and the contradictory statements by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre is that he wrote his response to the budget last September just after he was appointed finance critic. You should have seen the look on his face, Mr. Speaker, when he actually saw our budget documents and realized that our Minister of Finance meant real business in terms of dealing with inflation and high interest rates.

So much for the Tories. In terms of positive alternatives they are as bankrupt as they would make this country if we followed their proposals.

Mr. McDermid: Why don't you go back to Ontario and run your little brother's campaign?

Mr. Peterson: I am delighted about a particular provision in the budget to which I want to devote special attention. This particular provision is the one which deals with charities.

Miss MacDonald: Where is David?

Mr. Peterson: I am glad hon. members support my brother for the leadership of the Liberal Party in Ontario. I know he will do a better job than they.

Mr. Beatty: He is more a Tory than a Grit anyway.

Mr. Peterson: I would like to address some remarks to the House concerning the tax provisions and changes dealing with charities. As hon. members are aware, the present system allows individuals or corporations to deduct up to 20 per cent of their income a year if they donate it to a charity. Any excess over the 20 per cent can be carried forward one year. The government has realized that this has not been adequate financial incentive to help the many individuals in this country who want to help the government assume part of the role of funding worth-while enterprises, so the budget has taken a very forward and far-reaching step and allowed donations in a year in excess of 20 per cent of income to be carried forward for five years. In addition, on death, donations exceeding the 20 per cent can be carried back for one tax year.

These measures are a constructive means to ensure that more of the burden of funding these worth-while and necessary institutions in our society is carried by the private sector. They are a direct encouragement to individuals and corporations to fulfil their responsibility to their fellow human beings in a way that no government institution could ever hope to emulate. I applaud the progressive steps of the Minister of Finance in this area.

In terms of social and economic development, many members of the opposition have said that we have not dealt with the question of development and that we do not have full provisions in the budget. However, if they read the documents tabled along with it, they would realize the commitment of this government to a full program of economic development. Let me give some examples. With respect to science and technology, research and development are at the heart of any industrial renewal. In terms of research and development the government has committed itself, in co-operation with the private sector, to reaching a level of 1.5 per cent of gross national product. To date we are already ahead of our commitment to reaching that goal. We have given over $1.5 billion this year. We have done it in a very constructive way in co-operation with the private sector. There is new funding for microelectronics centres in Vancouver, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Toronto, Sherbrooke and the Atlantic region. There is a new source development fund of $30 million to help Canadian suppliers of high technology goods and services. The Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council has an extra $20 million. There is an extra $27.5 million for application and marketing of Telidon Videotex technology. We have established an industrial opportunities program to co-ordinate existing programs, involving expenditures of $275 million annually. The government's work with Telidon has made it a world leader of which hon. members on all sides of the House are proud. I commend the department for setting up a $12.5 million program involving an office communication systems program. This is done in conjunction with companies such as Mitel. It will help increase white collar productivity, and we know that the number of white collar workers is increasing at a much faster rate than that of any other workers in our economy.

The Corporate Productivity Research Group includes Motel, Skyline Cable, The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and AES. This is an example of drawing together the strength of the private sector and the public sector to go on to new achievements in the fields of microprocessing and microtechnology. I believe microtechnology is important because it presents an incredible opportunity to create the new jobs which are going to be necessary in the future and and the extra productivity and social equity we want so that we can find, for example, more higher paying jobs for women.

In his remarks this afternoon the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said we are not dealing with our economy seriously. He is wrong. The Minister of Finance is dealing with it seriously. The budget represents a long-term approach to reducing inflation and the high interest rates which are the root causes of our economic ills and concerns today. Let me demonstrate what type of confidence has been expressed in this budget. On August 4 the Canadian dollar was worth 80.31 cents U.S. Last Friday, after the budget, it was worth 84.09 cents. At noon today it rose to 84.32 cents. That is an expression of confidence. With a higher dollar we will be able to reduce inflation further, and that will make it possible to reduce interest rates. This was an expression of confidence in the budget by the international community and an expression of confidence in the direction being taken by this budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1750)

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, before getting into the main content of my remarks concerning the budget, I would like to refer to a couple of comments that have been made. It is quite astounding that members opposite are under the misapprehension that the people of Canada are sitting at home, reclining in their easy chairs, watching television as though the greatest thing to ever happen in their lives has happened.

Actually, these people are starting to wake up. They are beginning to put their chairs in a vertical position and are fast arriving at the conclusion that the budget has misrepresented to them the facts as they pertain to the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

The budget brought down last Thursday night is nothing more than a blueprint for economic stagnation. As I proceed through my remarks, I will read into the record what the people in the ridings across Canada, both in the business and agricultural community, and home owners in particular, think about this budget and how it will affect them.

The government has spent a lot of time talking about restraint. In reality, it will be spending $13.1 billion more than it takes in. The people across Canada have reached the conclusion that for the government to have acquired over a period of a decade or more a debt of some hundred billion dollars with an interest payment to exceed $10 billion annually shows that it knows very little and practises absolutely nothing about restraint.

Another point made today regards the equity that appears in this new finance document known as our current budget. This budget is a bit of a sham. There is a lot of cover-up. People are beginning to realize that the higher income groups across Canada—and there are a lot of them as was stated by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) in his speech earlier—are the ones who will benefit from this budget. A lot of people in Canada earn $100,000 a year or more.

What is being done with that group of high-income people? Has the government taken from the rich and given to the poor? It has taken the 64 per cent tax rate of that group and lowered it. It has reduced the tax levied on high income people across this nation. The maximum personal tax that can be charged to that group has been set at 50 per cent.

It must be very difficult for a lot of Liberal Members of Parliament to return home and convince their constituents that this government has taken anything away from the rich. What it has done is to reduce their tax rate from 64 to 50 per cent.

Let us look at the fairness of this budget. A lot of deception can be read into the remarks by the Minister of Finance. This budget clearly and factually increases government revenues by 31 per cent while at the same time it will allow the government to continue to spend 22 per cent more than it did last year. It will be very clear to the people of Canada that the government is up to its old tricks. It is taking figures, juggling them, taking a little away here and a little away there. In reality, it very strongly favours the rich. I do not see much of a penalty imposed on the banks for the interest rates they derive or on high-income people who have had their tax rate reduced from 64 per cent to 50 per cent.

Let us look at what is in this budget for people in dire straits, those who were building up their hopes and expectations that the government was finally going to listen and implement a policy that would mean less of a financial burden in the coming year. What has been done for this group, namely, the home owners, small-business men and farmers?

First I want to deal with the home owners. I can speak with a reasonable amount of exposure to home owners, having been a real estate agent for a number of years. There is no doubt in my mind that the vast majority of Canadians who have scrimped, saved and invested in order to own a piece of Canada are in great jeopardy of losing that. It is not sufficient to tell those people that the government intends to address seriously the problem of high interest rates. This budget does nothing more than subsidize the interest payments of a few hundred Canadians in some of the larger metropolitan areas in order that they will not have to spend more than 30 per cent of their gross income on interest payments for a mortgage.

There is a specific case in the constituency of Peterborough which has created a great deal of anxiety and concern for a home owner. The gentleman has allowed me to read into the record his specific situation. It clearly shows that what the government is offering home owners today is nothing new.

CMHC has followed the policy of advancing part of interest payments to home owners to tide them over a difficult financial period. I wish to refer to a specific case in my constituency.

In 1976, Mr. Tippet, a resident of R.R.2, Warsaw, took out a CMHC mortgage for $32,294. He required some assistance from the government in order to buy a home. CMHC arranged for AHOP assistance, assisted home ownership made easy. They advanced $3,200 to him since 1976 in order that he could reduce his payments.

The interest rate when the mortgage was renewed as recently as three years ago was 11¾ per cent. That is the interest figure I will use. It was lower than that in 1976. He has now added $3,200 to the original $32,294 mortgage and now owes $34,979. CMHC took a second mortgage for the $3,200. Mr. Tippet has to pay $342 a month. He went along with this plan from 1976 to 1981. They told him that the time has come for him to pay back the $3,200. They told him that they would like interest at the rate of 19½ per cent. I realize we are approaching six o'clock. I will complete my story later. We are now up to $34,979.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) had the floor.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, since Mr. Tippett's payments are now up to $566 a month on his mortgage payments, and they exceed 30 per cent of his income, he will be eligible for an interest loan on which there shall be interest charged to this new third mortgage, remembering that he has a first mortgage with CMHC, a second mortgage with AHOP, the assistant home ownership made easy, and now he is eligible under this new budget program for a third mortgage of $3,000.

We now have a constituent in my riding who purchased his home in 1976 with a first mortgage of $31,779, a second mortgage, an AHOP program that is compounded to $3,200, and now a third mortgage of $3,000, for a total of $37,979, as a result of the new budget introduced by the Minister of Finance. That means that in 1982 Mr. Tippett will owe $5,685 more than he did when he bought his home in 1976. He will be obliged to pay back all the Liberal government's interest assistance programs that he has enjoyed for the past five years.

Since I reviewed the mortgage interest situation, perhaps I might read into the record three statements from my constituents who have written me about the high interest rates and how they affect them. The first letter was received and signed by a depressed war veteran on Aylmer Street in Peterborough. Very briefly, he says:

> Enclosed figures of my mortgage rates and so on . . . my last mortgage which was just concluded was at 12¼ per cent and my payment was $330 and now I have just signed a new five-year contract at 20¼ per cent for payments of $413. As a war veteran, I find this almost impossible. Bill, my take-home pay has dropped 75 per cent and I am going to lose my home. See what you can do. Thanks for any help.

I have another letter from Patricia St. Laurent of R.R. No. 4, Peterborough, which reads:

> I am writing to express my great dismay with the present government's handling of the economy, and, in particular, the practice of maintaining high interest rates. In conclusion, I urge you to consider the plight of thousands of Canadians and try to convince the present government to remedy this very destructive situation.

Here is another letter from a single parent, Sylvia M. Munn of Water Street, Peterborough, who says that she for one would like me to bring this to the attention of the minister because, as she says:

> I will lose my home by July if assistance is not received. The terrible mortgage rate is a crime. I am a single parent and I greatly need help and I would appreciate receiving any that might be available.

I am sure she will be very happy to know that the present government, through its very generous mortgage assistance program, intends to compound more debt and add interest to that.

I have another letter from Mr. Bolton of Terrace Road, Peterborough. He says:

> I would like to submit my name to your list of high mortgage rates to be forwarded to the housing minister, Mr. Cosgrove, in Ottawa. My mortgage was renewed at 22 per cent. It was formerly 9.75 per cent. My payment went from $300 to $624, principal and interest, for my mortgage on my home.

Finally, I have a letter here that says:

> We exist on a small income that I am able to bring in as a sales clerk in a store, and along with my husband's veteran's disability pension, we have found it impossible to carry on our existing mortgage at 12 per cent. However, the new mortgage makes it impossible for us. Any help would be very much appreciated.

And so the list goes on. Yesterday the government had the gall to run an advertisement in the Peterborough Examiner which says, "Attention home owners". Any car dealer in Canada would be jailed for running an advertisement such as this one. The advertisement reads:

> If you have more than 5 per cent equity in your home, your lender may be able to defer your interest payments by up to $3,000 for one year.

There is not a car dealer in Canada who could run this advertisement without telling his customers what the interest rate would be, what the payments would be and what the amortization would be. Yet the federal government spends tens of thousands of dollars on hoodwinking the Canadian public into a home ownership plan made easy, when in reality what it does is to compound the interest to the point where the people are forced out of their homes because of their inability to pay. Then it has the gall to put in a $16,000 ad in The Globe and Mail this morning which reads: "Canada, we have a lot to offer each other." This $16,000 was paid by the federal government. What small businessman could not put $16,000 to better advantage than that?

● (2010)

The minister tabled in the House of Commons today the supplementary estimates of the government, which supposedly practices restraint. In the supplementary estimates, hidden under a section of Industry, Trade and Commerce, is $1,200,-000 as a supplementary one dollar estimate. What is the $1,200,000 for? It is to convince the grocers of Canada that they need metric in the retail food sector. This is the kind of nonsense with which the people of Canada are fed up, and the small business community is no exception. The former Liberal member who spoke before me, the hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson), called this a budget of stability. I wonder what kind of stability the budget has? It was a Liberal member opposite who the morning after the budget was brought down stood in the House and said that The Globe and Mail flattered the government on this incentive budget and said that the budget would do much for Canadians.

I think The Globe and Mail finally got around to looking at the budget. I should like to quote from an editorial which appeared in that newspaper on the following day, in rebuttal to the Liberal member who said that The Globe and Mail liked the budget. It reads as follows:

> The minister's own figures show an intended increase in the tax burden of fully 43.1 per cent over the course of this year and next. This $20 billion increase in taxes represents an average tax increase of about $1,700 per person employed. This unprecedented tax hike on top of 12.5 per cent inflation, high double-digit mortgage rates and mounting lay-offs will deliver stinging setbacks to the entire consumer sector which represents about two-thirds of the economy.

This is what The Globe and Mail thinks about it. What does a former Liberal finance minister think of this terrific budget, as reported in the Toronto Star in the section entitled "Insight"? That is a good section in which to put the budget because it took a couple of days for this disastrous budget to sink in. It was a statement by Mr. Eric Kierans. I think everyone on the other side will remember him. He was one of the former finance ministers. The Toronto Star indicated the following:

Eric Kierans is a former federal cabinet minister and professor of economics at McGill University.

Also it indicated that the economic package of the Minister of Finance "comes up empty". As reported in the article, Mr. Kierans said:

The budget as a whole reflects a complete ignorance of, or refusal to deal with, the economic reality of Canada—

This gives us some idea. What does the Canadian business community think of this terrific incentive budget which is supposed to turn the economy around, to reduce inflation and to create employment?

I should like to refer to a letter from Canadian Energy Systems which is located in Peterborough and in Grimsby, Ontario. It reads:

As our Member of Parliament, would you kindly put the fellowing question to the finance minister . . . Do you have a mortgage on your own home . . .

As a small-business man, the only way I can afford these exorbitant interest rates is to raise the price of the goods I sell. Is this not considered by the minister to be inflationary?

I read that letter is answer to the hon. member for Willowdale who said that the budget is a budget of stability. I do not think the business community thinks it is a budget of stability.

I should like to refer to a letter from a retired bank manager, Mr. Douglas Cruthers. He should be somewhat of an expert on financial forecasts and economic programs. His letter reads in part:

Having been a banker for 43 years all I can say is that this . . . is the height of rationalization of the irrational.

All the present policies will accomplish is to rob those who have saved money and put it away to provide for a reasonable standard of living in retirement.

I suggest that the government must soon start to listen to the people of Canada if it is to turn the economy around, to create jobs, to reduce inflation and to strengthen the Canadian dollar.

Now I should like to turn to a letter from rural route No. 11, Peterborough, Ontario, which reads as follows:

My company went bankrupt in 1981 and I have been seeking employment ever since . . . I have worked very hard all my life and now I need some help. I can't get it . . . we live on $30 per week for groceries . . . I have personally lost everything I have worked for, except the love of my family—

The author indicated that he needed some help from the government. I am sure that gentleman does not feel highly about the economic stability of the present Liberal budget.

The main problem with the budget is that it discourages investment. Investment is the lifeblood of business. It creates jobs, it creates expansion, it spurs growth, and it creates profits which in turn create tax revenue that should be spent through a responsible budget. We have not found that responsible budget. The governement has not created the added revenue which it is the first to realize it needs. It cannot create added revenue for the benefit of the country by overtaxing people in a recessionary period. It must somehow or other figure out as a government how it will stimulate the economy, put people back to work, return to free enterprise, get out of the marketplace and stop taking over corporations. We as a government cannot run those corporations as well as the private sector. The more we meddle in the private sector, the more trouble we get into. I am sure everyone in Canada is pleased to own a piece of Air Canada and of Canada Post. I do not know how pleased they are to own Petro-Canada. I do not think anyone in Canada, although they use Petro-Canada service stations, have found that the gas is any cheaper. I do not think they are receiving any added service at Petro-Canada service stations which they did not get from private owners. There is nothing wrong with Canadian ownership, but there is a lot wrong with socialism and public ownership. That is the direction in which the government, with the help of the people to my left, is taking us. It was the people to my left who voted the Conservatives out of office. Now we can look at Manitoba and the other provinces in the west, at the huge deficit and at the fact that we are paying 60 to 80 cents per gallon more than we would have paid under a Conservative government, and say that the NDP and the government together have driven us a little further down the road to a socialist form of government. The budget does nothing to stimulate the economy or to encourage investment. In fact it penalizes people for investing both at a personal and a corporate level.

I should like to take another look at the Toronto Star, which is a favourite paper of members across the House. They love the Toronto Star. Let us see what that newspaper says about the construction industry and how it has been affected by this terrific, incentive budget, as the Liberals call it. The article, entitled, "Budget 'killed' rental construction economist says", appeared in the November 14 issue of the Toronto Star under "Budget Highlights". It was written by Denis Grayhurst, and reads:

Finance Minister Allan MacEachen's budget has effectively killed rental construction across Canada for the next six months at a time when vacancy rates are falling, housing economist Frank Clayton says.

"The budget speech deliberately misled people to believe rental construction was being stimulated," he said.

It continued:

Builders had planned and pre-sold buildings on the old basis, only to find the rules suddenly changed. And the change makes the deal much less attractive to investors.

He predicted that up to 4,000 MURB units planned for this year, but not yet sold, will be abandoned. And nothing will be built next year.

"I don't think they (Ottawa) were fully aware of the implications."

He was referring to the implications of the so-called housing program, the mortgage assistance program, and the rental unit assistance program. It is one of the few remaining areas of personal investment in companies taking a risk. At the personal level, an average Canadian today will not be able to borrow $1,000, put it into a starving company, and declare the interest payments on the loan as a deduction while waiting for a return. In other words, if someone got the idea that they would like to open a little restaurant, a corner confectionary store or a service station and found that they could borrow $1,000, there is no way under this Liberal budget of writing that $1,000 interest off. I know the government does not care about that because the mood on the other side of the House is not one for creating the incentive for people to invest money and take a chance to build a piece of Canada.

• (2020)

The government's program is to deal exclusively with the large corporate conglomerates and gain entrance into profitable areas wherever it can, by expropriation if necessary, and to eliminate the guy in the middle and particularly the guy at the top who is on his own.

The government has the gall to reduce the personal income tax of an individual in Canada from 64 per cent to 50 per cent if he makes $100,000 per year. In press releases the government claims to have taken the money from the rich to give to the poor. That sounds good to the government. In practice it is good, but in reality it is not even in the back of the minds of the government, let alone the front of the budget. The government has reduced the amount of tax to be paid by men and women making $100,000 per year. They will now only have to pay 50 per cent tax, yet the government has the gall to claim that it has taken from the rich.

I think we should look very closely at what is happening to small companies that are having a problem raising cash for working capital today. The government is telling them to go to the Federal Business Development Bank. In my riding in Peterborough Mr. Speaker, the local Federal Business Development Bank approved eight applications out of 101 requests for financing in the last quarter. In Peterborough, eight out of 101 small businesses received a loan at the going rate, not a preferential interest rate. The FBDB is an institution that lends money to businesses as a last resort. The last resort in Peterborough is eight out of 101. That is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. It is not what the Federal Business Development Bank was set up to do. It was set up to give assistance.

The government has reduced the amount of the federal bond issue, which makes money available to small businesses at a preferential rate, from $200 million last year to $20 million this year. It has taken $180 million away from the business community and has reduced the money that is available though the Small Business Development Bond issue to $20 million.

That is what the government thinks of small business, Mr. Speaker, and that is why the small business community is going bankrupt at the rate of 5,000, 6,000 or 8,000 businesses per year. They cannot exist without access to money at a reasonable rate.

The list is endless, Mr. Speaker. I am sure you would let me read two sentences from a letter which I received in my office as it pertains to the farm community. It reads as follows:

> Because of setbacks in the dairy industry early in our life of this mortgage, production cuts and slowdowns, progress in our farm business has been slower than planned, about two years slower . . .
>
> The last alternative is to sell the farm. Not only do I want to keep the farm and farm it, but I can see a worth-while future resulting from our planning and hard work.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise to speak in this debate. I say pride because this is a budget based on Liberal principles—the principles of a fair share for all and the principle of helping first those who need it most.

It is a budget that recognizes realities. It recognizes that inflation is an enemy growing stronger every day, an enemy that must be fought. All of us, individuals, governments and businesses, must do battle against that enemy, but the economically strong will be called upon to bear the greater burden. Conversely, we must take steps to protect and shelter the economically weak.

This budget provides that protection. It recognizes that provinces and individuals at the lower end of the scale must be helped. Let me cite a number of examples.

A family of four will now be able to earn up to $15,000 without paying any federal tax at all. There are a lot of families in that category in Newfoundland and Labrador, Mr. Speaker, and all of them will welcome this budget.

Tax rates will be reduced for all those with taxable incomes over $11,000. The top combined federal-provincial rate in Newfoundland will drop from 67.9 per cent to 53 per cent. That will mean more money in the pockets of the vast majority of people in my province.

The federal tax reduction will be set at $200 for all taxpayers, but married taxpayers will be able to claim an additional $200 for dependent spouses, thus doubling the tax credit for lower income couples. Moreover, indexing of income tax will continue for 1982, bringing further tax reductions and therefore savings.

The child tax credit will rise from $261 to $293 per child. This will be a tremendous help, Mr. Speaker, to the vast majority of families in my riding and throughout the province, and this assistance will continue and increase.

A reduction in unemployment insurance premiums will also increase take home pay and provide further cash assistance.

Home owners in greatest need have not been forgotten in this budget. Some time ago I received a petition from my riding calling on the government to provide help for those people with unbearable mortgage payments. This budget provides $350 million for home owners. It provides a guaranteed repayment of deferred interest to those whose payments would exceed 30 per cent of their household incomes. For those who do not have sufficient equity in their homes to support interest deferral, the government will pay up to 100 per cent of the interest deferred to a maximum of $3,000.

I am particularly pleased that the small business bond will be maintained. this has provided help to many small businesses in my province and across the country by ensuring loans at a lower rate of interest. The bond will now be available to unincorporated businesses as well as farmers and fishermen.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: I would ask the same sort of consideration from my colleagues opposite that we gave them, Mr. Speaker. They have their time allocation. I would ask them to make their points then and be courteous enough to allow me to make mine now. The fat cats over there may think that this is not important for their riding.

We should not underestimate the degree of help this budget will provide in a province like Newfoundland, small businesses, particularly those connected with the fishery, are the backbone of many small rural communities in Newfoundland and Labrador, and this measure will be a break for them by reducing their financing costs by six to eight percentage points.

These measures will be a great help to people all over the province. Indeed, an economist with Touche Ross in St. John's, says this budget will benefit Newfoundlanders more than anybody else in Canada.

These are measures that show that inflation is not being fought on the backs of the needy. These are measures which help first those who need it most. These are measures designed to raise up those at the lower end of the economic scale.

It was the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) who introduced medicare to the House, and Liberal governments throughout the years have had a strong commitment to maintaining high standards in both health care and post-secondary education. This budget reaffirms our commitment. False rumours have been spread all across the country, mostly by the opposition, that federal aid to health and education would be cut.

• (2030)

I received a delegation from the council of the students union at Memorial University in Newfoundland. They pointed out to me the great difficulty the university would have and the students would find themselves in if this were to happen. There was never any intention of cutting funding for health and education. The budget indicates that on the basis of new federal proposals, federal contributions to health care and post-secondary education are estimated to grow from $11.5 billion in 1982-83, to $19 billion in 1986-87, an annual rate of 13.4 per cent. That is the commitment.

For my own province, this story is as follows: in the five years from 1977 to 1981, Newfoundland received, in cash and tax, $850 million for health care and post-secondary education. Over the coming five years, the federal contribution will be $1,450 million, rising from $221 million in 1982-83, to $366 million in 1986-87. I am happy to say to the students and faculty at Memorial and other post-secondary institutions in Newfoundland and all across this country that we know the value of education to this country, and we intend to keep our commitment. However, some way must be found of ensuring that these funds actually go to finance education and health—

Mr. Laniel: That's it. That's the problem.

Mr. Rompkey: —for while federal contributions have been increasing, provincial contributions have been decreasing. The president of Memorial University, in his convocation speech last spring, pointed out that last year there was only an 8.5 per cent increase in the annual grant from the provincial government to the university at a time when government expenditures are increasing by 12 per cent and university costs are rising 15 per cent. He went on to say:

> Another reason why I find the decision of the provincial government so difficult to understand is that it is receiving from Ottawa from the post-secondary portion of EPF more than it in fact spends on the programs approved within that fund. In short, all the dollars spent on the university are federal dollars. I realize that the transfer to the provincial government is unconditional. But the money so transferred was designed to be spent on the programs approved within that fund.

That was a quote from the president of the university in Newfoundland. I think that it is clear from that who is keeping his commitment to education and who is not. However, it will not be enough for the federal government to maintain and increase its support of post-secondary education. In light of what the former president of Memorial has said, ways and means must be found to ensure that those funds actually reach the students for whom they are meant, and are not simply caught up in other priorities of provincial governments. There is no point in allocating funds for education to the provinces if they continue to use this money for other things and, in the meantime, decrease their contributions to education.

In this budget we are proposing that new federal-provincial arrangements be devised for financing education and human resource development by March, 1983. We owe it to students to ensure that dollars earmarked for education go to education and not to something else. Equalization has been a fundamental principle of our federation. This government maintains its commitment to that principle. My own province has always been far too dependent on transfer payments. I think that is a point on which both the federal and provincial governments agree.

The task will be to free Newfoundland from its dependency on transfer payments and to make it self-supporting. If a deal can be made on the offshore, we will have taken a giant step toward that goal. I only wish the negotiations that are going on now had started two years ago, as I and others had urged. If this had happened, we would now be much closer to the creation of real dollars from resource development, and discussions of equalization payments would have been far less important. However, they are still important today, and this budget makes new proposals for federal-provincial transfers.

First of all, let me repeat that there will be no cuts in funding for education and health. There will be a loss to Newfoundland of $19.5 million in the coming year as a result of the discontinuation of the revenue guarantee compensation. However, the province stands to gain $11.7 million as a result of budget tax changes. If we subtract, we get a net loss of $7.8 million. However, all this is separate and apart from equalization payments.

We are proposing an improved equalization formula with a more comprehensive measure of fiscal capacity and an Ontario standard. When all elements—

Mr. Blenkarn: Not a Canadian standard, an Ontario standard! An Upper Canada standard is what you want! Is that right?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, if the—

Mr. Blenkarn: Not the Canadian standard!

Mr. Rompkey: If the hon. member wants to make speeches on subjects which are close to his heart, including native people in this country, let him rise at the appropriate time.

Mr. Blenkarn: I will.

Mr. Rompkey: But all of this is separate and apart from equalization payments. We are proposing an improved equalization formula. When all of the elements of transfer payments are taken into account, including the new equalization formula, the cash flow to Newfoundland will increase by $70 million. For the year 1983-84, the cash flow is expected to increase by over $100 million. That is the real story. The bottom line is that when all forms of transfer payments are taken into account, Newfoundland will gain $70 million over the next year and $100 million the year after.

Newfoundland does not want to exist forever on transfer and equalization grants. We want to be equal partners in confederation, contributing and not taking. The government of Newfoundland has maintained this position, and I concur. That is why we are anxious to get on with megaprojects which can help Newfoundland grow. That is why we are offering 100 per cent of provincial type revenues on the offshore. That is why we created the Lower Churchill Development Corporation and put $200 million aside as our share of the equity in the Lower Churchill project. That is why we are devising ways and means to encourage the building of drill rigs and supply ships in Newfoundland. That is why we are proposing that $178 million per year be spent on transportation to bring the various modes up to standard. We now have $60 million ready to be spent from the ministry of transport budget in Newfoundland on roads, on airstrips and on ferry terminals. However, we cannot spend it because we cannot get an agreement with the province of Newfoundland.

Many economists and boards are forecasting that Newfoundland will lead all of Canada in growth in the coming year, and in view of our great resource potential, I have no doubt that that is true. The best way to develop the economy of Newfoundland would be for both governments jointly to seize opportunities for resource development, rather than continuing dependence on transfer payments.

The Government of Canada stands ready to build a new Newfoundland and Labrador which is not dependent. However, until such time as it is economically independent, we intend to see that it is treated with equity and fairness.

That leads me to measures in this budget which will concern me as Minister of Revenue. Fairness and equity in the tax system require that Canadians of equal incomes pay the same amount of tax and that those with higher incomes pay a greater proportion of their incomes in tax. In the past decade or so, a number of special tax preferences have developed in the tax system which allow some Canadians to reduce their share of the tax burden below what is paid by those on lower incomes. By eliminating many of those tax preferences, we can broaden the tax base and lower the tax rates, generally. Full indexing has been retained for the year 1982, and this ensures that taxpayers will not be pushed into higher tax brackets by the simple fact of inflation. It has helped to maintain the equity of the tax system by preventing the erosion of the real value of the basic tax deductions and exemptions.

The budget proposes, effective January 1, 1982, to repeal the general averaging provision of the Income Tax Act and delete the deduction for the purchase of income-averaging annuity contracts. It also proposes to end opportunities now available for individuals and corporations to defer income tax on capital gains by claiming reserves. A new forward-averaging provision will be made available to individuals, effective—

Mr. Blenkarn: Totally indecent!

Mr. Rompkey: —for the 1982 taxation year. However, it will not be available to corporations or trusts. This provision will permit taxpayers with large increases of income in any year to average the increases out over future years when they anticipate being in a lower tax bracket.

Mr. Blenkarn: Providing they pay interest in advance.

Mr. Rompkey: The replacement of the general averaging and reserve provisions by this new forward-averaging measure will mean that the tax system will contain one averaging mechanism generally available to everyone.

Mr. Blenkarn: It already does.

Mr. Rompkey: The Income Tax Act will also be amended to provide for the full taxation of certain employee benefits previously exempt from tax and to provide new rules for determining the appropriate taxable value of other benefits. The budget proposals in this area also reflect the government's attempt to apply the tax laws to all individuals on a more equitable basis.

● (2040)

The finance minister has indicated that my department should regard as income certain fringe benefits, including transportation passes and subsidized or free board and lodging. As these benefits are not available to all employees, the department will in future require that such benefits be reported on the basis of their fair market value and included as part of the employee's income for tax purposes.

Similarly, the rules concerning low interest loans to employees and shareholders will be tightened up to eliminate the exclusions that were formerly accepted. Those exclusions meant that employees and shareholders could receive, tax free, low interest loans of up to $50,000 on the purchase of homes.

Mr. Blenkarn: What was wrong with that?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Rompkey: I am glad that you rebuked the spokesman for the great corporate interests of this country, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, such tightening of the tax rules creates a system more equitable in terms of taxpayers who are not privy to such arrangements.

The budget also proposed to tighten the rules of the use by an employee of the company's car. The taxation of the benefit that the personal use of the company car provides to the employee is determined as a minimum standby charge. That standby charge is to be increased one-and-a-half times in an effort to bring the value of the benefit more into line with the actual benefit of the car to the employee. However, in cases where the employee feels the value of the benefit exceeds his actual personal use of the car, he will be able to present documentation to the department to justify the lower benefit.

Another fringe benefit that will be taxable is the employer contribution to supplementary health or dental plans. Employer contributions to medical and hospital insurance plans administered by the provinces are currently taxable as income from employment and will now be extended to include contributions to other types of health or dental insurance plans.

The budget has also proposed that termination payments received by employees as of November 12, 1981, be fully taxable. There will no longer be a limit of six months' salary on the amount of the termination payment that is taxable.

On the question of ending one's employment, there is another important change proposed; this one to affect retiring allowances. As of November 12, the maximum amount of such retiring allowances that will qualify for a rollover to a registered retirement savings or registered pension plan will be $3,500 times the number of years of employment, excluding those years that the employee was a member of the employer's registered pension plan.

Business firms will not be permitted to deduct their contributions to a deferred profit-sharing plan that provides benefits to the principal shareholders of the firm.

Mr. Blenkarn: The profit should not be shared?

Mr. Rompkey: Nor will such plans be accepted for registration in future.

Mr. Blenkarn: Don't share the profits.

Mr. Rompkey: I would ask the hon. member with a size eight brain and a size ten mouth to please be quiet.

Mr. Blenkarn: Read on.

Mr. Rompkey: Personal service corporations, established by senior executives and high-income individuals to convert their employment income into business income eligible for small business tax incentives will, in future, be subject to the full corporate income tax rates. In addition, expenses which are not ordinarily deductible by employees will also not be deductible when incurred through such personal service corporations.

Finally, in the area of northern benefits I am pleased to say the remission order has been extended until the end of 1982. This will allow the government time to review the need for and the means of providing alternative forms of assistance to employees working in the north and in isolated posts. However, the tax relief under the remission order will be confined to benefits granted under employer-employee agreements reached before November 13, 1981.

The north is a special area of Canada, resource rich but often isolated and sometimes seen as inhospitable. And yet the future of this country will depend in no small measure on how we develop our northern resources. Those who live to the south must recognize that people in the far north have greater costs and fewer services. Often they feel cut off from the rest of Canada which they refer to as the outside. The extension of the remission order and the plan to replace it with a new policy is a signal to people in the north that they are full partners in confederation and that their special circumstances will be addressed with fairness and equity.

I would like to touch on a few other areas covered by the budget that I know are of concern to many taxpayers. For example, the question of income from properties.

Under the present tax law, investors in rental or commercial developments have been able to obtain an immediate write-off, in full, of so-called soft costs incurred prior to completion of construction. Such soft costs include the interest on money to finance development, land taxes, legal and accounting fees, mortgage fees and other such costs. As of November 12, costs of this type will be capitalized rather than being immediately deductible.

Mr. Blenkarn: That stopped a lot of deals.

Mr. Rompkey: I must also deal with the important issue of principal residence.

Mr. Blenkarn: That will make sure a lot of people won't have homes.

Mr. Rompkey: As you are aware, the Income Tax Act has allowed every person a principal residence free from capital gains tax. The budget proposes that after the 1981 taxation year, a married couple should enjoy the benefit of only one principal residence between them for the purpose of capital gains.

Mr. Blenkarn: They should get a divorce, then they can have two.

Mr. Rompkey: The gains on the second property that have accrued to the end of 1981 will continue to be free of capital gains, but after 1981 will start to accrue capital gains for tax purposes.

Again on the question of capital gains, I want to mention a proposed change to the Income Tax Act that will affect businesses and professionals. After November 12, no capital cost allowance will be allowed on art objects and antiques with the exception, and this is important to note, of initial purchases of the works of living Canadian artists. Until now, art work and antiques bought by business and professional firms could be written off at 20 per cent a year. In fact, such works of art and antiques most often appreciate in value rather than depreciate, and are often personal investments.

The customs and excise branch of my department will also be involved in the administration of certain budget changes. The federal sales tax will be moved from manufacturing to the wholesale level effective July 1, 1981, and the rate will be reduced so that revenue will not be affected. This new structure will remove a number of inequities as well as the present bias against Canadian-produced goods.

Mr. Blenkarn: And diddle the consumer.

Mr. Rompkey: My department will be discussing this matter with those affected in the near future. Revenue Canada will also be involved in administering improvements in the general preferential tariff for developing countries. Its coverage will be extended and rates reduced on a range of products of interest to developing countries. As well, duty free entry will be granted for imported products designed for disabled persons. Is the hon. member against duty free entry of goods for disabled persons? He is against that. Let the record show the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) opposes that.

The main thrust of this budget is the fight against inflation. By bringing inflation down we will bring interest rates down and encourage investment. All across the country are projects waiting to be started. In my own province there are projects connected with offshore oil, the fishery and hydroelectric development which can create thousands of jobs. If the Government of Canada curtails its expenditures and thereby withdraws from the borrowing market, it will leave room for those firms which want to invest in these projects and create these jobs.

This country has a fantastic potential and it is the aim of this government to see that potential realized. But that aim will be difficult, if not impossible to reach, if we fail to lick inflation. And all must fight, each according to his capacity. Obviously, the economically powerful are better able to fight, and this budget issues the marching orders and the weapons for that fight. But each and every Canadian has a responsibility to fight inflation by living within his means and by keeping his own personal expenditures to a manageable limit. The battle against inflation must be won and can be won. But it must be carried on with fairness and equity, giving the rich a greater burden than the poor. That is what this budget does.

• (2050)

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I find it very interesting to follow the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) because it is his department and his responsibility to look after the implications of this budget and he, of all people, should understand them. When he rises in his place and says that he is proud of this budget, I have to feel sorry for him because obviously it does not take much to make him proud. When he talks about Liberal principles, the principle of equity, I believe it is already evident by the reaction of Canadians that the only equity which will be shared as a result of this budget is misery. That is exactly what this budget will cause from one end of the country to the other.

I recently had a conversation with my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright) who told me that a contractor in his riding laid off 40 people this morning as a direct result of this budget. Although the minister talks about projects waiting to start, this was a project already in operation which has been forced to cease operation because of the provisions of this budget. The minister constantly talks about "marching orders". The only marching order issued by this government as a result of the budget is a marching order to go backward economically.

When we talk about an inflationary budget, the government should realize its own responsibility toward some of the things the minister so piously espoused tonight when he suggested that every Canadian must do his part to fight inflation.

The hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) pointed out the callous waste of money being spent on advertising in this country and the ridiculous use of JetStar planes to fly cabinet ministers across the country needlessly. The government should be setting an example for Canadians if we are to fight inflation.

Some hon. Members: Right on!

An hon. Member: That would be un-Liberal!

Mr. Mayer: There are many issues to deal with, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to begin by posing the question of what a budget should be. If I were the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), one of the ways in which I would approach a budget would be to consider what Canada is. It is very similar to a very large corporation. A budget should provide solutions to problems facing Canada, and this is something that this budget does not do. The record of this government for the past 12 years has been disastrous. We can use statistics to prove this until people get very tired of them, but since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been leading the government, the interest rate payments have risen to an amount equal to the total budget for the federal government when he came to power in 1968. That is an explicit example of callous government spending.

When the voters go to the polls, they are in effect hiring a manager for a large corporation. If we view the performance of this government as we would the performance of a manager during the term he is hired, then this government comes up short.

I would like to turn now to the NDP. The reason this government is in power is that almost two years ago the NDP proposed a motion which defeated the Crosbie budget.

An hon. Member: We had an election.

Mr. Rompkey: Just like the one you are going to have tomorrow in Manitoba.

Mr. Mayer: That is right. And I hope some of the people are watching and paying attention to what I am saying. My point is that it was an NDP motion which defeated the Crosbie budget. We have heard the New Democratic Party talk in the last year about getting help for home owners and for people suffering from high mortgage interest costs. I point out to them if the Crosbie budget had been passed, there would have been approximately $1,000 or more available to each home owner in Canada to assist him with his interest payments on his home.

An hon. Member: Subsidize the banks.

Mr. Mayer: This would have been available without the need for the home owner to beg for the money. It is my understanding of the budget that for a home owner to be eligible for the $3,000 provision, he must declare all his debts and be able to lay out his complete financial picture. When the Department of National Revenue decides that the home owner is next to bankruptcy, it will give him the $3,000. Assistance would have been available to a home owner under the Crosbie budget without any questions asked. It would have been a dignified way of redistributing wealth across this country. That is something the New Democratic Party was against. They were also against the energy tax credit which resulted from an 18-cent a gallon excise tax on gas. I do not now hear the NDP talking about the additional $1,400 in revenue this government will derive from the last energy price agreement.

Mr. Rae: That is not true.

An hon. Member: They like high gas prices.

Mr. Rae: Tell the truth.

Mr. Mayer: Are you now in favour of the energy tax credit you voted against two years ago? They are going through a conversion, Mr. Speaker, only it is a selective conversion. They like to forget conveniently some of the things they voted against and be conveniently in favour of some of the things which they realize now may have benefited Canadians.

An hon. Member: How will you vote tonight?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I see you sitting on the edge of your chair paying attention to my every word, but I have a very rude group to my left who are chirping away like a bunch of chipmunks. When we get their attention I hope the truth hurts them and I hope Canadians will realize some of the benefits they would have had under the Crosbie budget if it were not for the chirping chipmunks.

A budget should provide inspiration for the country. It should not be hard to give Canadians a challenge and inspire them to work hard and be productive. Canada has more natural resources per capita than any country in the world. In my area of western Canada, we have more farmland per capita than any country in the world. What we are looking for is ways to be productive. However, this budget does everything possible to discourage production.

The minister spoke about some of the costs which were allowed to be claimed as an expense in the year they were incurred and which will now be capitalized. One of the results of this will be to discourage housing starts and prevent production. This budget discourages production and does not do anything to take advantage of the potential of our country. It provides for the government to take a larger share of Canada's production.

I have seen figures which show the government will take a larger share under this budget than it has at any time since 1946. The Minister of National Revenue talked about that. He was proud of the renewed effort of the government to become more involved in the private economy. The private economy has been the reason for this country's productivity in the past.

The minister also spoke about the small business development bond. The government has destroyed the basic concept of the small business development bond, and the minister admitted as much. He did not call it a development bond, he just called it a small business bond. It will only be available after the end of this year to people in financial difficulty. It is not for development, it is simply there to help people in financial difficulty. It is a survival bond, and I suppose we need everything we can get in order to survive with the kind of ministers we have in this government. We may not even survive the winter as a result of the change in the Small Business Development Bond policy and many other detrimental effects of the budget.

The only beneficial provision dealing with the Small Business Development Bond is that it is extended to unincorporated business. We have suggested that on this side of the House and we are pleased to see it in the budget. It will help the farmers and—

An hon. Member: The fishermen.

Mr. Mayer: I cannot forget them. However, as the hon. member for Peterborough pointed out, it has been cut in half to $20 million. We have all had a chance to make our plea that the small business development bond be expanded to cover unincorporated businesses, for which it was originally intended. About five months ago I had occasion to talk to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. They pointed out to me that from the models they worked with, they arrived at a figure which showed the Small Business Development Bond was the cheapest way of creating jobs in Canada, less expensive than some of the DREE programs.

• (2100)

It seems to me that if the government were really serious about renewal and creating jobs in the economy, it would have taken a better look at the small business development bond and not changed it to the point where it will be ineffectual. It has been changed so that the interest will apply only at rates above 6 per cent. It has been said many times that the government has gutted the small business development bond. That demonstrates that the philosophy of this government is very similar to the philosophy of the New Democratic Party, and that is that everything produced by the private sector or by the individual is the government's and that only by decree and by the generosity of the government it allows people to keep what is rightfully theirs. That is not the way to encourage production or to attack inflation. The best way to attack inflation, as we all should know, is to encourage production and, as I have already said, this budget will discourage production. That is already happening across the country. In fact, if the minister were to be honest and straightforward and if he were to look at the editorials from across the country, he would have to admit that this budget has been questioned and condemned by more newspapers and more people than any other budget presented—in my memory, at least.

Mr. King: Ever.

Mr. Mayer: I point out to the minister that some regulations will have to be changed, and I hope he is ready for the work his department is going to have to do. According to a summary done by one of the chartered accounting firms in Canada:

> The tax changes can only be described as massive; there are 165 resolutions dealing with the Income Tax Act, 3 amendments to the Income Tax Application Rules, 10 changes to the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax act, 17 resolutions dealing with the Excise Tax Act, not to mention the amendments (or perhaps a brand new act) required to shift the level of tax—

It seems to me that the budget falls very short on that score as well.

A budget should be fair to all people. All people should be able to take advantage of its provisions equally, and the provisions should be simple and straightforward. It seems to me that the people who will get the best advantage from this budget are tax accountants and tax lawyers. We have already seen evidence of that. The Income Tax Act is a massive document, and it is a horrendous job for the average person to try to understand it. In fact, I do not think the average person has a hope of understanding it. Therefore, he will have to rely on tax lawyers and tax accountants who will have to be in conversation and correspondence with the minister's department. This will create problems and prevent the country from being as productive as it is capable of being.

Getting to my area of the country, I would like to talk briefly about some of the transportation problems we have there and about the fact that this budget does not deal with those problems at all. In the Speech from the Throne a year and a half ago the Prime Minister promised double tracking. That was laughable. It was mentioned previously in the election campaign of 1980. We thought of it as a joke at that time. It would be double costing, double dealing, double talking—anything but an improvement on the transportation system, which needs to be improved so that all of Canada can take advantage of western Canada's ability to produce and export grain.

Saturday was a very sad day for me. I was in Portage la Prairie and watched the last VIA Rail Super Continental pull out. The Prime Minister's idea of double tracking seems to be to take away half our passenger service. I suppose that is what we have come to expect from the Prime Minister. He promised no wage and price controls and then brought them in. He promised that an 18-cent increase in the price of gasoline would not happen. The price went up 80 cents. We should learn that when he says double track, he means half track. That is exactly what has happened to our rail passenger service in western Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: Half track Prime Minister.

Mr. Mayer: That is a good handle for him. What has happened is an insult to the good people who have dedicated their lives to the railroads of this country and to providing transportation for Canadians from one coast to the other.

To talk about something other than rail passenger movement, the whole area of grain transportation is in a crisis because of our ability to move grain to export position. We have seen no movement at all on the part of the Prime Minister, the minister in the other place responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board or the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to resolve the problem the railroads tell us they are having in relation to earning not enough money from the movement of grain to maintain the kind of service they would like to maintain. We see no movement at all, and it has been said many times before—and needs to be said again—that when it comes to action on the Constitution, it is fine for the Prime Minister to expect that there be unanimity so that he can act on the basis of a consensus, but when it comes to something with which the government should be able to deal on a day to day basis, he expects unanimity among the many producers and producer groups in western Canada on how this very important problem should be resolved. If the government is truly interested in a united country, it should show leadership and provide benefits not only for the part of the country from which I come but for all parts of the country. The government has failed to do this, and that demonstrates again how bankrupt it is.

That reminds me of what crossed my mind when the Minister of National Revenue spoke about renewal. That bunch over there has been there for so long it is totally incapable of renewal, and that is reflected in the budget. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) is shaking his head. I have spoken with him many times, and I would be happy to see him accept many of the suggestions we on this side have made in relation to small businesses and farmers. At least he should investigate some of those suggestions so that we can find out whether we can take advantage of them. I have sent letters to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance suggesting some things which could be done. The Department of Finance prepares answers and sends them back to us. The answers are ridiculous and show no understanding of the problems. There is no indication that the department is looking at our suggestions with a sincere intention to do anything about them.

It is disturbing to return to our constituencies and to talk to some of the younger people in them who are attempting to get started. They want to have property, to own farms and to own homes so that they can take pride in themselves and in their country. After all, that is why this country was settled. This country held out hope to people who came to Canada from all parts of the world and homesteaded property which was not settled. People could own land. However, this government, supported by the New Democratic Party, deliberately follows a high interest rate policy. Because of that, it will be very difficult for many young people who are starting out. I have had conversations with young farmers in my riding who have grown very good crops this year. If sold, those crops will generate several hundred thousand dollars each, but these young people are in very serious trouble because they cannot move their grain.

This brings me back to grain transportation. Producers will not be able to sell as much grain as they would like in order to meet their commitments, and there is a distinct possibility that they will not be around next spring to sow another crop. That is a terrible thing to allow to happen to a young person who is starting out. Many young farmers have been in the business four or five years and are just now getting organized and obtaining machinery. They have two or three crops under their belts. This gave them some experience. They know the kinds of crops to grow and are demonstrating their ability to be productive. However, through no fault of their own—we can clearly lay the blame at the door of the federal government—they are now unable to move the products they produce. They are unable to generate cash and are in very serious trouble and may not be able to farm another year.

Those are the kinds of things which should have been attacked in the budget. There should have been a genuine attack on inflation. We should be getting at inflation from the productive side. We should encourage production around the country. Our socialist friends in the New Democratic Party and in the Liberal Party do not understand that we cannot continue to redistribute wealth unless somebody first generates it. We know from experience that the best method of generating wealth is to give initiative to the individual and to rely on the private sector and not the big government sector. People wonder why Russia is so unproductive. I will tell hon. members the simple reason. I would like the Minister of State for Finance to listen. When a Russian farmer raises a litter of piglets in the middle of winter and it is 40 degrees below zero—and it gets that cold in western Canada—the Russian farmer will not leave his mama and run out to the hog barn and lie with the sow to help save a couple of extra newborn pigs to sell the next summer, because they are the state's pigs. In a private economy the individual farmer has pride because he knows that if he saves a couple of piglets, he will have extra income the next summer. That is a simple lesson, but I do not know whether our two socialist parties will ever learn it. It is a lesson that applies in the small farming industry and the small business industry and it applies to the home owner who takes pride in his dwelling.

The hon. member for Peterborough read letters from young constituents of his who are having trouble hanging on to their homes. The same applies to them. They want to own their homes. They want to have pride in themselves. They want to be part of the country and to be productive, yet this government prevents that by some of the crazy things it does. I think the only election promise hon. members opposite could have fulfilled would have been a promise to do everything possible to throw a monkey wrench into the operation of the country in order to screw up the economy. That is the promise hon. members opposite are fulfilling. In fact, if they had promised that, I do not think they could be doing as good a job as they are doing, as evidenced by what we heard in the budget the other night.

● (2110)

There are many more items to talk about in the budget. We heard on budget night that there would be some assistance to farmers through the Farm Credit Corporation. An additional $45 million will be made available to assist farmers in meeting interest costs when they have financial problems. That is a laughable amount. I want to put it in context so that it can be understood. On average, it amounts to about $160 per farmer right across the country. When you look at the average amount of interest now being paid by farmers, the average farmer pays $7,000, that is right across the country. I get that figure by dividing the total amount of interest being paid across the country by the number of farmers. Admittedly it is a crude way of arriving at it, but it does make the point that the amount of assistance available in the budget to farmers is minimal.

What could have been done to provide some immediate cash flow to grain farmers would have been to raise the cash advances paid to them. Something could have been done with our transportation system so that people would have the chance to earn money rather than borrow more. This government fails to see that in order to attack inflation it must do something besides raising interest rates. If it had any business sense it would know that one of the best ways to attack inflation is to encourage production.

I am a relatively new member of this House. I came here as a result of my constituents favouring me with the majority of votes in 1979, approximately two and a half years ago. In some ways I feel sad. It is not an act of pride to get up in a budget debate and condemn the government that brought down a budget which was not as the Minister of National Revenue said it was. That carries a certain amount of sadness because this is a great country. It has a tremendous potential. Those of us elected to this House have a chance to meet people from different areas of the country. We travel more than we would normally travel in private life.

It is a shame we cannot do a better job of realizing this country's potential. One reason seems to be that we are always fighting each other. I do not think there has been a time in history when we have been so much at war with each other. It is unprecedented that the provinces are taking the federal government to court over the Constitution. Just recently the provinces took the federal government to court over cutbacks in rail service.

Surely the federal government can show some leadership and iron out some of these problems in order that we can again have good will in this country. We should go to work realizing the potential that we have in this country. That is the sad part about this budget.

The Minister of National Revenue could not have looked at the budget papers. I use him as an example in order to try to make the point that we should be straightforward with each other and describe the situation as it is. Over the next five fiscal years, my province will lose $219.4 million in transfer payments. That is on page 55 of the Fiscal Arrangements in the Eighties, part of the budget documents.

The Minister of National Revenue said that would not happen, that there would not be any reductions in transfer payments. Either he has not read the figures or he does not understand them. I find it inexcusable that a minister of the Crown would get up and say that no province is going to lose. I will be happy to have the minister check the record tomorrow.

The minister mentioned that Newfoundland would gain. A minus to me means less. There are five columns, each with a minus. If you total them, it amounts to $219 million over the next five years that Manitoba will lose in transfer payments. Surely there should be a better way to work out things rather than always arguing with each other. That is what makes me sad at having to get up and speak in this budget debate.

I would have liked to make some points in my speech saying that we are very happy with the budget, we can look forward to better times, we have some potential, we have more natural resources per capita than any country in the world, our resources are in demand around the world, we are fixing up our transportation system to take advantage of that, and our native people are happy because they do not feel they have been shortchanged in the bill of rights in the Constitution. However, we cannot say those things, and that makes me sad. This budget will make the whole country the poorer for it.

I hope that those who speak subsequently in this budget debate will take some of these matters into consideration and try to be constructive so that we can realize some of the potential this country has in order that everybody can partake in the wealth that Canadians have from coast to coast.

• (2120)

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, in the course of this debate, I should like to express my views on the budget. Like the vast majority of Canadians, my constituents in the riding of Richmond-Wolfe which I represent in this House are also affected by inflation, unemployment and high interest rates. In my riding, which is semi-agricultural, the economy is highly dependent on agriculture, the asbestos, paper and footwear industries and, of course, on small and medium-sized businesses. In addition to the extremely difficult economic situation which has an impact on the daily lives of my constituents, there are two major problems facing two of the larger communities in my riding: the asbestos industry in Asbestos and the footwear industry in Richmond.

I must say a few words on these two subjects, but before elaborating any further, I should like to put before the House, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, some pertinent data on the subject. First of all, the asbestos market is going through a very difficult period. There are two reasons for the slowdown in this industry, one of which is that the construction industry is stagnating in most asbestos-importing countries. A direct consequence is a substantial drop in orders for producers. Furthermore, the asbestos market is suffering the damaging effects of the very poor reputation this natural resource has acquired. In this respect, the federal government has taken the excellent initiative of organizing a world conference for the purpose of clarifying this issue so that, hopefully, we will once again be able to use this mineral to its full extent, for the greater good of the industry, its workers and the Canadian economy. Until then, I am asking the government to act quickly in order to provide, and provide quickly, concrete assistance to hundreds of workers who have lost their jobs.

There is in fact an excellent program that was announced in this government's previous budget, which provided for a $350 million fund to provide relief to workers who were suddenly without jobs. Asbestos and the workers in the asbestos industry want our attention and above all, they want financial aid. The provincial governement's attitude to workers in this sector has been passive and indifferent. It has spent or will spend more than $100 million during the next few months without creating a single job. I say, with due respect, that our government can and should intervene on behalf of these workers through the fund I just mentioned. The Canadian government should also pursue and intensify its efforts to develop markets for asbestos, an industry that provides very well-paid jobs. Although asbestos is of prime importance to the economy of my riding, since it provides jobs that are much sought after, obviously because of the wages offered workers in the mining industry, another activity sector in my riding that is just as important is the footwear industry.

I agree that the wages are somewhat lower than in the asbestos industry. Nevertheless, this is basically an essential industry. The footwear industry now needs very specific measures to safeguard its market. We have to look ahead and develop a good quota formula. The wish to replace the footwear industry by high technology industries offering higher salaries is certainly worth while, but this could have disastrous results for several constituencies, including my own.

Indeed, the footwear industry is very decentralized and has plants in over 60 constituencies in Canada. Is it realistic to hope for any industry to settle in as many constituencies as that? The reason is very simple; investors usually look for densely populated centres in which to invest. I therefore believe it essential to regulate imports so as to allow manufacturers to produce according to their capacity, which will create thousands of new jobs.

At the present time, this manufacturing sector provides employment for nearly 20,000 Canadian workers divided equally between Ontario and Quebec. Until quite recently, these workers met about 43 per cent of the Canadian demand, while the various companies have the capacity to meet over 60 per cent of the demand. What is extremely interesting is that if the industry were to produce at full capacity, this would automatically result in the creation of thousands of new jobs.

In December 1980, the government renewed the quotas for a year. Presuming that the quotas would be abolished very soon, the importers glutted the Canadian market with imports, taking a large share of the market away from Canadian manufacturers to such an extent that their share is now estimated at 37 per cent and lay-offs now exceed 3,000. In these circumstances, it is a matter of extreme urgency to take aggressive action to protect adequately the Canadian market for the benefit of Canadian footwear producers, and this in the best interests of manufacturers, workers and consumers. A lack of protection for this major manufacturing sector of the Canadian economy would eventually result in the loss of thousands of jobs and the complete disappearance of this sector. And finally, which is also very important, the consumer would be at the mercy of importers.

After these few comments about the two major concerns of my constituency and of hundreds, and even thousands of my constituents, I would like to deal specifically with this budget, which affects and will continue to affect all Canadians including all my constituents. In the weeks preceding the budget speech, the opposition was clamouring for it, probably being convinced that the budget would be in its favour and would enable it to improve its increasingly dull image. The opposition then believed that the budget would reduce the purchasing power of Canadians which had already been eroded by inflation. It perhaps imagined that the government was trapped. In other words, the opposition believed that it would capitalize on the budget. Finally, the Progressive Conservatives saw the budget as a means of scoring a few points with the Canadian voters. But the budget contains nothing of the kind, quite the opposite! The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) understood that it was essential to help the Canadian people who are hard hit by the ill of the century, namely inflation. He certainly could have increased taxes significantly on the one hand and redistributed revenues on the other by creating all sorts of programs. But he did not fall into that trap. On the contrary, he preferred to show confidence in Canadians by reducing significantly the tax burden for 5.8 million taxpayers with a taxable income over $11,120.

Mr. Speaker, who are the true victims of inflation? Which Canadian men and women suffer most from inflation? They are the low wage earners, the middle class, the Canadian men and women who work in mines, in the footwear, the textile, the clothing or the paper industry and agriculture. The great majority of these taxpayers have no way of protecting themselves against inflation even though some collective agreements contain provisions to that effect. These same taxpayers are not able to claim the equivalent of the loss in their purchasing power. They have to hear it without any kind of protection by depriving themselves of things which for a number of them are simply essential. Think of those who sign a two-year collective agreement without a COLA clause. There are many such people in Canada, especially in my constituency, and their reduced tax burden will allow them to cope better with those distressing economic circumstances.

This Liberal government has realized how important it is to set forth clearly and permanently the meaning of two significant concepts: equity and justice. Thus, the budget gives a real meaning to those two important concepts, as evidenced in several sections. I remember rather well the last Progressive Conservative budget. I agree that some aspects of that budget could have seemed rather generous. On the other hand, the reality was very harsh for most of the electorate. The majority had to bear the cost of programs set up for a small minority. The transparency and equity of the budget brought down by the the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) was rather obvious the day following the budget, and in that connection I should like to quote a few headlines in the main French dailies on November 13.

• (2130)

Le Droit: Two targets of budget:

The rich and the provinces will pay

—MacEachen's budget: For 12 million taxpayers, $210 less on average.

Le Devoir: Modest aid to home owners—

MacEachen removes fiscal loopholes.

Business will pay 25 per cent more to treasury.

Journal de Montréal:

—$350 million for home owners

—No tax increases for most taxpayers

—Tax cuts for small and average wage earners

—How the rich get caught

—Ottawa at war with tax evaders.

La Presse:

—MacEachen's budget: Ottawa will make the wealthy and the provinces pay

—End of tax havens

Thus, most Canadians will enjoy quite substantial and significant tax cuts, while the rich and wealthy will he hit by tax increases. Inflation contributes in many cases to make the rich richer and to impoverish dramatically not only small wage earners but also the middle class.

That vast majority of electors who are becoming increasingly vulnerable to hight interest rates and inflation had to be taken into consideration. The fiscal renewal, or Canadian taxation reform, shall in the next few years restore the balance required to allow people to cope with the dramatic effects of inflation, those Canadians who, in many cases, were the favourite targets of the taxers because of their numbers. They can now reckon with that fairness and equity in the way the tax load is distributed.

Some hon. Members: How true! Hear, hear!

Mr. Tardif: Those tax cuts will doubtless be especially welcome to Canadians in Quebec who, in recent months, have been riddled with a lot of indirect or camouflaged taxes, in many cases, hypocritical taxes: I mean, amongst others, the increase in hydro rates, automobile registration costs insurance premiums and various other administrative costs. Contrary to the principle of equity on which this budget is based, Quebecers who already carry the heaviest tax load in Canada, also have to face shocking cost increases in various forms, and that whether or not they can afford to pay.

In my humble opinion, that is the aspect of the budget which is the most outstanding. All the more so that the budget is brought in at a time when the majority of experts agree on the need to reduce the areas of government spending which have direct effects on inflation. Those same economic experts give as much weight to the need to reduce government debts. The November 12 budget clearly meets the need for restraint. The government, on the one hand, will cut its spending from 20.6 per cent of the gross national product in 1981-82, to 19.2 per cent in 1985-86 while, on the other hand, reducing the federal deficit to a considerable extent during the 1982-83 fiscal year. In fact, under the budget, financial needs which represent 3 per cent of the GNP this year, will decrease to 1.7 per cent in 1982-83 and to 1.2 per cent in 1985-1986. In other words, the deficit forecast for 1980-81 was $12.2 billion. In fact, it amounted to $10.1 billion, that is, $2 billion less than expected.

Mr. Parizeau, in Quebec, should perhaps follow the example of the Minister of Finance or seek his advice. For next year, 1981-82, the deficit forecast of a year ago, which was $11 billion, should in fact amount to something like $9.8 billion. Within a few years, if Mr. Parizeau remains Minister of Finance for Quebec, the deficit of the province may very well exceed that of the central government. Of course, such a determination to reduce government spending to that extent, for the good of all, naturally has an impact.

Of course, I should have liked to see more money allocated to new housing starts. I should have appreciated a more generous financial assistance to Canadians who now or in the near future must renew their mortgage. On the other hand, I am fully aware that such measures would have considerably impeded the fight against inflation. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that is the gist of this debate in the House. Should we spend billions of dollars to set up new programs? Should we increase considerably government spending? Should we increase the deficit? Should we increase the tax burden of Canadians to finance part of these expenses? An affirmative reply to these questions would mean a still more dramatic inflation in the near future. The Canadian dollar would take a dive and interest rates would rise and not fall. As a direct result of this policy which appears to be the only one sought after by the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party, the average voter at whom the new budget is aimed, would be literally choked, would become extremely vulnerable and sooner or later absolutely incapable to meet his most basic obligations. On the other hand, a negative reply to these questions is to demonstrate responsibility and maturity, because we have reasons to believe that the rate of inflation will decline very shortly, which means that Canadians will benefit fully from their labour. Hon. members of the Progressive Conservative Party are probably eager to see their housing policy reactivated, together with a program costing several hundred millions, if not billions of dollars to help Canadian home owners who must renew their mortgages. What would they pay these costs with? With western oil? Of course not, since the previous Progressive Conservative administration had sought a lot less than the current Liberal government in the sharing of oil revenues.

An hon. Member: The friends of the companies!

Mr. Tardif: The reply to this question is quite simple. They would have forced the Canadian men and women who will be entitled to tax reductions instead of tax increases under this budget, to pay these costs. Obviously they would want the several millions of Canadian taxpayers who are already in dire straits, to foot the bill, made probably heavier by a higher rate of inflation. This kind of reasoning is an insult to common sense.

As to the New Democratic Party's reaction, I think that it can be described as shameful if not scandalous demagogy. Hon. members of that political formation are truly irresponsible when they deal with financial issues. The fact that nearly 12 million Canadians will benefit from an average reduction of $210 in 1982 will have extremely positive effects on the Canadian economy. This loss in revenues which will exceed $3 billion in 1982 will be offset by tax increases which the government will impose on 795,000 people, corporations included of course. Who are these 795,000 people, Mr. Speaker? They are taxpayers who contribute to a very large extent to the Canadian economy, who very often invest money and head corporations. Usually they are also the ones who create jobs. They have a prime responsibility to discharge on Canada's economic scene. Should this be a reason to alleviate their tax burden, as the Progressive Conservatives would have it? In my view, Mr. Speaker, we should grant them incentives to invest in job-creating industries. We should even enter into partnership with them. We should even supply these job makers with a favourable climate, valuable indications, because otherwise they will lose confidence in the future of Canadian business, and will probably invest where guarantees for success are greater. Although they are part and parcel of Canada's economic future, I believe that in periods of difficulty as the one we are now going through, in this inflationary context that affects the global economy, I believe the haves must assume obligations, responsibilities commensurate with their ability to pay.

Of course they are affected by inflation, but, on the other hand, contrary to most Canadians, they do not support the dire and dramatic consequences of inflation. The MacEachen budget was aimed at restoring a balance that seems to me most fair and equitable in the circumstances. The need for such a balance seems to me all the more obvious that those big interests are faced with a number of opportunities for extending their involvement in the development of our Canadian economy. Indeed, the loopholes that have been plugged were a lot more profitable to the individuals than they were to the Canadian economy. The cost of the estimated tax reductions, to the tune of $3 billion, will be offset partly by increases to be borne by those in the higher income brackets, and partly by additional revenues resulting from recent agreements with the oil producing provinces. Together, these added revenues more than compensate for the $3 billion loss. Therefore, the government may reduce its deficit while helping Canadians beset by problems of inflation and interest rates.

The inflation and high interest rate problem is particularly acute in the case of small businesses, farmers and home owners who must renew their mortgage. The budget answer to that serious problem is the inflation fighting strategy of deficit reduction. However, specific help has been provided to help those groups most in need. The budget includes an envelope of $400 million, $50 million of which will be used to subsidize loans to farmers, the remainder, or $350 million, will help home owners who cannot bear the high mortgage costs and will also be used as an incentive for home building. Also, home owners will be able to obtain a government guarantee for their loans with lending institutions.

With regard to small and medium-sized businesses, which are the major job creators in this country, the budget provides for a one-year extension of the Small Business Development Bond program. The program will also be extended to include not only corporations but also small unincorporated businesses and farmers. Also, loans will be granted only to businesses experiencing financial difficulties. With this much appreciated and sought after program, the cost of financing for those who will take advantage of the program will drop six to eight points. My first reaction to these measures was somewhat mixed as I thought the amounts were not enough to encourage the construction of new housing units. But upon reflection, I realized that because of the government's determination to lower the deficit, combined with an anti-inflation strategy, the upward pressure on the interest rates would somewhat be eased.

To manage, Mr. Speaker, is to plan and to make choices. I for one go along with the decision to fight inflation and higher interest rates rather than to support measures that could worsen an already bad situation.

Before concluding, I would be remiss if I did not say how satisfied I am with the budget of the Minister of Finance with respect to the provisions aimed at helping farmers. Unlike many people who would do away with any form of agricultural assistance, I maintain and will always maintain that we must continue, as we have always done, to give our support to Canadian agriculture, one of the most productive in the world. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Progressive Conservatives and the New Democratic Party would probably have preferred a budget which I would describe as a band-aid or an aspirin. On the contrary, the government, without ignoring the most underprivileged Canadians, has seen fit to come to grips with the real basic causes of the destructive aliment which is inflation. The budget is an outstanding example of the will of the government to put up a strong fight against inflation, the major impediment to the sustained and constant improvement and development of growth, employment and the standard of living.

By drastically reducing its deficit and cash requirements through higher revenues and stricter controls over spending, the government reinforces and consolidates its determination to fight inflation. The direct aftermath of that policy will be to contribute as well to lower the interest rates for the greatest benefit of all Canadians.

• (2140)

[English]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, may I call it 9.45 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) and thank him for calling it 9.45 p.m.

It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 60(6) to interrupt debate and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the subamendment and amendment now before the House.

The question is on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Rae). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Rae) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 123)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Andre
Anguish
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Cardiff
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Coates
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Crouse
Darling Deans
de Jong
Dick
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Fennell
Forrestall
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gass
Gilchrist
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hovdebo
Howie
Huntington Ittinuar
Jarvis
Jewett (Miss)
Kempling
King Korchinski
Kristiansen
Kushner
Lambert
La Salle
Lawrence
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McDermid
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McLean
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Mitges
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Neil
Nickerson
Nielsen
Nowlan
Nystrom
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Rae
Reid (St. Catharines)
Roche
Rose
Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Skelly
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Thomson
Towers
Waddell
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Young—112.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Campbell (Cardigan)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Foster
Fox
Francis
Frith
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau)
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Hudecki
Irwin
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)

Messrs.

Lapointe (Beauce)	McRae	Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
LeBlanc	Munro (Hamilton East)	Rompkey
Leduc	Nicholson (Miss)	Rooney
Lefebvre	Olivier	Rossi
Loiselle	Ostiguy	Roy
Lonsdale	Ouellet	Savard
Lumley	Parent	Schroder
MacBain	Pelletier	Simmons
MacEachen	Penner	Smith
MacGuigan	Pepin	Tardif
Mackasey	Peterson	Tessier
MacLaren	Pinard	Tobin
MacLellan	Portelance	Tousignant
Malépart	Prud'homme	Trudeau
Maltais	Regan	Turner
Marceau	Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)	Veillette
Massé	Roberts	Watson
Masters		Weatherhead
McCauley		Whelan
		Yanakis—144.

● (2215)

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

It being after ten o'clock, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 10.19 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 17, 1981

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE BUDGET

PROVISIONS AFFECTING FARMERS' RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43. The November 12 budget of the government has been a direct attack against farmers in the area of capital gains tax, annuities, and retirement savings plans, bringing to an end for many the only retirement plan they have. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin):

That this House call on the government to reverse this action with regard to farmers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF INCENTIVES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Massey-Ferguson has now essentially closed down its Canadian operation, stating interest rates and the sliding economy as the cause. Surely the government can read the signs. If drastic steps are not taken immediately, and I do not mean a pittance like in the so-called budget, many more agricultural related industries are going to follow Massey-Ferguson. In fact, agriculture itself as we know it in Canada could well be at an end. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That this government immediately take steps to force a massive drop in interest rates and offer agriculture some incentives before it is too late for agriculture-related industry, its workers, and agriculture itself.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

CALL FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, whereas the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has presented a budget which calls for an increase of 22 per cent in government expenditures while at the same time doing absolutely nothing for the poor, the pensioners, and does next to nothing to alleviate the desperate situation facing home owners, small businesses and farmers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House condemns the Minister of Finance for holding out false hopes to Canadians as they waited for the budget to be presented, and that because of the little impact the budget will have in alleviating the serious problems facing farmers, home owners, small businesses and pensioners, that the Minister of Finance do now resign.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TAX EXEMPTIONS FOR NORTHERN RESIDENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, since the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) stated in his budget speech that "I am extending for another year the special tax remission to employees working in the north and isolated posts," and since once again the minister in his speech did not give a full accounting of the truth, in that any collective agreement signed after November 13, 1981, will not be allowed to grant tax-exempt benefits for northern residents in the coming year, and all tax arrangements after January 1, 1983, are cancelled, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House condemn the government for removing tax-exempt benefits for northern residents without providing an alternative, and that this House notes the addition to parliamentary language of the term "a MacEachenism", meaning a half-truth, a statement which has the effect of leaving a false impression, and notes further that this budget literally sparkles with such "MacEachenisms".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

S.O. 43

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I cannot hear what the minister is saying.

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege to state that the hon. member is making a false statement. The full details were laid out in the budget documents tabled in the House at the time of the budget. You are not going to get away with half-truths, "Boy-Bob".

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The minister may raise a question of privilege, but not at this time.

Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in the budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) gutted the Small Business Development Bond. Growing small business offers to Canadians more opportunity for employment than any other economic activity in our country. By allowing small business to borrow on a preferred basis for new capital equipment, we create jobs and stimulate productivity. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That the Minister of State for Small Businesses take his responsibility seriously, negotiate with the Minister of Finance, and reinstate at least for a one-year period the Small Business Development Bond.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

CALL FOR PROGRAM TO ASSIST FARMERS FACING BANKRUPTCY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, figures released yesterday show a 25 per cent increase in farm bankruptcies in the ten-month period beginning January, 1981, over the same period one year ago. The measures taken by the government to extend the Small Business Development Bond to assist unincorporated farmers in financial distress, and the addition of $50 million to the lending capital of the Farm Credit Corporation, again to assist farmers in financial distress, will at best help approximately 250 farmers across the country. Whereas there are over 5,000 farmers across the country on the verge of bankruptcy who need assistance now, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That the Minister of Finance be directed to implement immediately a program to assist those estimated 5,000 farmers across the country who are on the verge of bankruptcy or forced sale.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1410)

THE BUDGET

PROVISION AFFECTING TAX DEDUCTION FOR NON-RESIDENT DEPENDANTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) announced on November 12 in his new budget that taxpayers will no longer be permitted to claim any deductions in respect of their non-resident dependants other than their spouse and children; whereas Canada continues to bring in immigrants and migrant workers to do the hardest and lowest paid work, knowing that many do this in order to assist their parents, brothers, sisters and other needy dependants back home; whereas the minister's proposed law, therefore, discriminates against workers in Canada with dependent relatives overseas and mocks our claim to be a multicultural society; and whereas the minister's accusation of fraud would be more justly directed at high-income-tax-evaders, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

That this House direct the minister to delete the clause that prohibits tax deductions for non-resident dependants other than spouse or children.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REVIEW OF IMPLEMENTATION OF JAMES BAY AGREEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, early last spring the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) undertook a joint review with the Minister of Justice and Attorney General (Mr. Chrétien) to determine whether the spirit and intent of the James Bay Agreement had been breached. In view of the fact that this review is now many months overdue, and because of the great implications that it will have for all future land claims settlements. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development act immediately to table the joint review of the implementation of the James Bay Agreement, and make a special reference to the Standing Committee of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to study the report.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

PENSIONS

CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT'S BUDGETARY POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the government's failure in last week's budget to relieve the financial crisis that most of Canada's senior citizens find themselves in as a result of inadequate retirement income policies, even after the much hyped National Pensions Conference held earlier this year, and in the absence of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House condemn the government for ignoring the needs of senior citizens in last week's budget and for not raising retirement incomes to a level beyond poverty levels.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

INFORMATION CONTAINED IN ADVERTISEMENT ISSUED BY CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I shall refer to a newspaper advertisement headed "Attention Home Owners" placed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, over the name of the minister of housing. It provided details of the budget's housing interest and grant provisions, sent out the day before the budget to a number of newspapers by Vickers and Benson of Montreal. By admission of this agency to my office by telephone a few moments ago they stated that they were desperately trying to cancel the ad a day later by telegrams, after it had arrived camera-ready for printing at newspaper offices, and it actually had already been published in some papers by Friday noon, one of which I have here.

This is an obvious leak of budget material. Would the minister explain this sordid situation to the House of Commons?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I did not place the ad. Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is not under my jurisdiction. If the hon. member wants me to make further inquiries, I would be glad to do so, but I cannot give him the information at the moment.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONDUCT INVESTIGATION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, is the Minister of Finance prepared to conduct a full investigation not only on that, but to have this referred to a parliamentary committee? If it is established that there has been a leak of the budget or of any of the provisions in the budget, is he prepared to stake his office and resign, which is the commendable and usual procedure? Is he prepared to do that?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would be quite happy to make further inquiries. Maybe the hon. member would ask the minister of housing the question and the matter then could be cleared up quickly.

STATEMENTS MADE BY MINISTER RESPONSIBLE FOR CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the minister of housing. He stated, in reply to a question in this House last Tuesday that was asked by the hon. member for Simcoe North, that:

I do not know what will be in the budget on Thursday night.

Later he added:

—as the minister reporting to this House for Canada Mortgage and Housing, I do not know of the contents of the budget affecting housing.

In view of the advertisement which I have just mentioned, will the minister of housing tell the House whether he was misleading the House last Tuesday, and did he indeed know what the provisions were? Is he so weak in cabinet that the housing program was not known to him and was simply thrust into his hands afterwards? Finally, did he play a part in what is an obvious sordid leak in the budget?

• (1415)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I learned generally of the provisions of the budget as they pertain to housing at a briefing of the cabinet by the Minister of Finance on Thursday afternoon. I learned specifically and saw the budget documents a few minutes before they were presented by the Minister of Finance in the House. My officials worked from five o'clock in the afternoon, through the evening, and early the next morning, and produced for my inspection that document which had been worked upon. It was authorized at noon on November 13 as a result of a meeting of the communications cabinet of the Government of Canada, as I say on Friday, November 13.

TIMING OF PREPARATION OF ADVERTISEMENT

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I have a final supplementary question. I do not wish to question the minister's integrity because that is not the honourable thing to do. How can he explain, if this was not authorized until noon on November 13, that it was in the hands of The Recorder and Times of Brockville on the morning of November 13, and prepared by Vickers and Benson in Montreal on November 11, the day before the budget? How can he explain that?

Some hon. Members: Shame! Shame!

Mr. Cossitt: If he wishes, madam Speaker, I can give him later the name of the person in Vickers and Benson who told me this.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. We have had the question.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would be repeating my answer to say that the officials of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation worked on the material after I was made knowledgeable of the material on the afternoon of November 12.

Mr. Nielsen: You are caught.

Mr. Cosgrove: That material was circulated. Approval for the printing and the release of the material was not made until noon on November 13. At that time we advised people who may have had the material on November 13 whether or not it could be printed.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION FROM MINISTER

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. I would caution him that we are dealing with a convention which Madam Speaker identified on November 10, that is the convention whereby a minister resigns if there is a budget leak. But there is another convention which is equally important, if perhaps not more important, that is, that an hon. member resigns if he is found to be misleading the House. I put that caution to the minister, because he assured the House, as reported at page 12690 of Hansard on November 10, of the following:

> I do not know what will be in the budget on Thursday night.

Yet I have an advertisement which was placed in the hands of an advertising agency, Vickers and Benson, on Wednesday, November 11. It is over the authorization of the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and contains clear details of the housing provisions of the budget. Can the minister explain to the House how such an ad over his authority could go out without his knowledge?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would be repeating myself, and I will do it once again—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: I was advised generally of what was in the budget at a briefing by the Minister of Finance on the day of the budget, in the afternoon. I did not know the specifics of that until later in the afternoon, some few moments before the budget was presented by the minister in the House. I had presented, as hon. members will find, advice and recommendations to the government to be prepared to advertise, to be prepared to let the public know of any relief that the minister would grant, any relief that the government would ensure through the budget process. That material was obviously prepared. A number of suggestions were made to the minister; not all of them appeared in the budget. Some of them were prepared in advance, on the option that it would be one of the ones that was adopted by the government.

• (1420)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ACQUISITION OF INFORMATION BY ADVERTISING AGENCY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, that reply coming from even this minister boggles this House. That is stretching coincidence beyond the point of credibility. I want to ask the minister if he can tell the House how Vickers and Benson Ltd. got a copy of the precise details of the minister's housing provisions which were contained in the budget of November 12. How could Vickers and Benson Ltd. have those details on November 11 in order to get them into the hands of the press?

Second, may I ask the minister if, when he became aware of the provisions of the budget early on Thursday, he discussed them with anybody in Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, with anybody in Vickers and Benson Ltd., or with anybody else?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Again, Madam Speaker, I did not now the specifics of the plan that is referred to in the ad the hon. member has before him until a very few moments before the minister read the budget in this House. Later on, and during the presentation by the minister, obviously officials at Canada Mortgage and Housing—and I would guess at this—communicated that that ad probably met the provisions of the budget, but no doubt they were checking.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: Further, I have indicated to the House that it was not until a meeting of the cabinet communications committee of this government at noon on the thirteenth that that ad was authorized to be put out for advertisement in the newspapers the following day.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MINISTER OF STATE FOR INTERNATIONAL COMMERCE OF ROMANIA

Madam Speaker: I wish to call to the attention of the House the presence in our gallery of Mr. Alexandru Margaritescu, who is Minister of State for International Trade of Romania.

* * *

[English]

THE BUDGET

JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is adressed to the Minister of Finance. The minister knows that Canadians will face the largest number of pre-Christmas lay-offs in the history of the country since the Great Depression. He also knows from his own budget that unemployment is going to increase in 1982, 1983 and 1984. Considering that the government has decided to increase its advertising budget by some 50 per cent, up to some $100 million, why could the government not find room in its budget for a single new job-creation program?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there are within the fiscal plans proposed in the budget very substantial expenditures for job creation. The hon. member will realize that there is a Community Employment Program that will be in place this winter and will assist the unemployed. There is a sum of about $300 million available for adjustment programs in this particular winter. If he had looked at the fiscal plan itself, he would have noticed, for example, that this year the expenditures in the budget of the economic development envelope have increased by about 30 per cent. So it is not true, as the hon. member alleges, that no attention has been paid to job creation. Substantial funds will be available this winter to assist the unemployed.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

COST OF LUNCHEON GIVEN FOR JOURNALISTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I would say at the outset that the Minister of Finance knows there is a net reduction in the amount of stimulus going into the economy with this budget, not an increase. He should know that better than anyone else.

My question to the Prime Minister is on a different aspect of the government's alleged concern about the economy. I refer specifically to his urging Canadians to practice restraint. Yesterday the Minister of Finance entertained a dozen journalists, at public expense, at a luxury luncheon costing some $2,000.

● (1425)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Two thousand dollars for one luncheon, I say to the Prime Minister, is the same amount a pensioner would spend all year on his or her food bill.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister does he not think that this extravagance at public expense totally undermines the government's appeal for restraint. If he does agree with that, what does he plan to do about it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am happy to answer that question on behalf of the Prime Minister, first of all because I know the facts. It is obvious that the hon. member does not know the facts; but the facts, as I know them, are quite unacceptable. It is true—

Some hon. Members: You're right!

Mr. Kempling: We agree!

Mr. MacEachen: It is true that yesterday I hosted a luncheon for a number of my colleagues and for a number of journalists.

Some hon. Members: Why?

Mr. MacEachen: I want to give the facts to the hon. member. Unfortunately, I did not select the menu, nor the site.

An hon. Member: Who did?

Mr. MacEachen: I do admit that I am highly embarrassed about the situation as it was much too lavish. When I returned to my office directly after the meal, I issued instructions that the bill be sent to me, because in no way would I ask the taxpayers to foot the bill for a lavish occasion which I had not anticipated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, it is obvious to everyone on this side of the House, and to the people of Canada, that the minister would not be paying that bill if he had not been caught.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: If the government is now going to pay for that luncheon which he should never have had in the first place, to be consistent with this new-found morality in the Liberal Party, will it now pick up the $30,000 tab, the cost to the taxpayers to fly three ministers by jet to Winnipeg?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Will the government do that? Will the Liberal Party do that? More specifically, I would like to ask the Prime Minister, since there is nothing in the budget for the unemployed and not a cent for pensioners, and since we have a hypocritical minister who goes around doing the opposite to what he is preaching, why does the Prime Minister not show just a little integrity for once on this issue, and demand his resignation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I just want to clear up one or two points made by the hon. member. The first is that he has used totally exaggerated cost figures for that luncheon. It was bad enough the way it was.

Mr. Andre: How much did you pay?

Mr. MacEachen: When I get the bill, I will be glad to send a copy to the hon. member with a copy of my personal cheque. However, let me tell the hon. member that there is no question of getting caught, because when I returned to my office I issued instructions immediately that the bill be sent to me. I did not have to wait for his moralizing, or reports in the press. I knew my responsibility the moment I attended that event.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

THE BUDGET

PREPARATION OF CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ADVERTISEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for housing who has indicated to us the date of the authorization of this ad by a committee of cabinet. That is not the date in question. The date in question is the date on which budget information was made available to an advertising agency in advance of the publication of the budget.

● (1430)

Is the minister telling the House of Commons that he authorized CMHC, or that CMHC acted on its own, to prepare several ads setting forth various options of policy that might appear in the budget and that those several ads were set out? Is that what the minister is telling the House? If it is, will the minister tell the House of Commons how many ads were sent by Vickers and Benson on behalf of CMHC to the Brockville Recorder and Times.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the ads to which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition refers set out in very brief form the two points of the mortgage renewal plan.

Mr. Nielsen: How many ads?

Mr. Cosgrove: The first is interest deferral, and the second is a grant provision.

Mr. Nielsen: How many ads?

Mr. Cosgrove: That ad was prepared and authorized on November 13 to appear in the weekend newspapers. I thought it was important that Canadians should know what was proposed in the budget, vis-à-vis assistance to home owners across Canada.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is not correct.

Mr. Cosgrove: I say that because this House has received, and your office, Madam Speaker, has received in the last few weeks petitions containing over 10,000 signatures of Canadians. These people are inquiring about the government's position.

Mr. Nielsen: How many ads?

Mr. Cosgrove: Inasmuch as I personally had to take it upon myself to respond individually to over 11,000 of those people, by writing over 30 hours over the past week—

Mr. Nielsen: How many ads?

Mr. Cosgrove: —when the hon. member did not respond, I felt that was the only way by which we could communicate effectively and immediately to the Canadian public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: How many ads?

NUMBER OF ADVERTISEMENTS ISSUED TO NEWSPAPERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, what the minister is now saying is, first, that he is admitting that the detail in the ad was the precise detail that occurred in the budget. If I understand him correctly, he is also suggesting that the advertisement was prepared after it was received by the Brockville Recorder and Times. That stretches credibility even of this minister to some degree. He did not tell us whether or not other ads were sent to that newspaper or to any other newspaper. That is the question I put. How many other ads were sent by Vickers and Benson, authorized by the minister or by CMHC, to the Brockville Recorder and Times or to any other newspapers? How many ads?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I do not know how many ads.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: Whether there were different ads sent to one of some 140 newspapers across the country on the twelfth or thirteenth of this month, the end of last week, I do not know.

An hon. Member: Squirm.

Mr. Cosgrove: But I repeat once again that the provisions of that ad were reviewed by the cabinet committee on communications on Friday the thirteenth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: A number of suggestions were made regarding changes. None were made. The ad was authorized during that meeting.

RELEASE OF INFORMATION TO ADVERTISING AGENCY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we now know that the breach occurred not simply in one newspaper but, by the minister's own admission, in some 140 newspapers across the country. We do not know whether the contents of the ads were the same in all cases. The House has not yet been informed whether other budget information was released to Vickers and Benson prior to it becoming public to Canadians through the budget presentation, and consequently was a breach of budget practices.

My question is for the Minister of Finance. Who gave the precise details of the budget proposal on housing to Vickers and Benson in time for them to have the advertisement prepared on November 11? Who gave that information? If the minister cannot give me an answer today, will he give us an undertaking that he will come back with details tomorrow and tell us precisely who gave that information, at what precise time, and on whose authorization?

Mr. Nielsen: Gerry Regan.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I already indicated that I do not have the responsibility for advertising, either in that department or in any other. I have no information on the subject. I think the minister to whom questions have been addressed has been answering them very fully. I would recommend that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition ask him for further information.

QUERY RESPECTING DRAFTING OF ADVERTISEMENT

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the minister responsible for housing, and it is very specific. I would like to know whether or not it was Vickers and Benson who drafted the ad. Specifically, who drafted it, on whose instructions, and at what point in time prior to the release of the budget did instructions go to Vickers and Benson that this ad could be released?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would be repeating myself to say that the ad was not authorized until following a meeting of the cabinet committee on communications, Friday, November 13, at approximately 12.30 p.m. After reviewing that ad with suggested changes, authorization then was given for the use of that ad in advertisements the following day, November 14.

TIMING OF RELEASE OF ADVERTISEMENT

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. I point out that the ad actually appeared on the morning of November 13. When was this ad prepared and when was it authorized by the minister or by an official of CMHC to be released to Vickers and Benson?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, my information, once again, is that all of the ads for all of the papers were authorized on Friday, November 13. If the member has information that the ad was published or was released prior to that time, I would like to have the particulars of that, and I would like to have the time to look into the matter.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

GUIDELINES FOR SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of rising farm bankruptcies, an increase of 150 per cent over the last two years, and the need for funding by many farmers, including some dairy and turkey producers along with beef and pork producers, who the minister has admitted are in trouble, could he inform the House what guidelines are being put forward so that bankers and farmers can determine eligibility for the new Small Business Development Bond and that definitions, such as financial distress, can be defined and administered in practical terms?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I understand that all of the district officers from the Farm Credit Corporation are meeting in Ottawa today, tomorrow, and possibly for part of Thursday, to review the program to determine what they can do and to determine how they can work the Small Business Development Bond program with the other lending institutions that are involved. We think they can assist many of these people.

I am surprised at what the hon. member says about dairy farmers. Of the hundreds of letters that I have received, only one or two have come from dairy farmers. These letters generally come from young dairy farmers who bought farms and borrowed money from a lending institution through a floating or demand note. They are finding themselves in great difficulty because of the high interest rates at the present time. Lending money on a floating or a demand note should not have been done in the first place. The banks should have loaned farmers the money in the form of a long-term type of mortgage. We have assisted some farmers under the present Farm Credit program with the funds that were available at that time. I would be glad to review those cases with the hon. member at any time.

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, this side of the House has no problem with the minister's analysis for the requirement for fixed interest rates. That was the point that we were trying to make in the debate on the Bank Act some time ago.

Would the minister define for the House, or commit himself to making a statement later if he does not know the answer now, what distinctions there are between those producers who are eligible for the Small Business Development Bond under the new provisions, and those who would not quite make that category but would, as is implied in the budget, be eligible for assistance under the Farm Credit Corporation additional funding? Could the minister tell us what the distinction is? Which farmers would manage to make the one cut-off, and which would be eligible for further assistance under FCC?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I met the chairman of the FCC yesterday and we are meeting again tomorrow morning. We hope to have criteria that can be outlined. If one reads the budgetary papers they fairly well explain how the Small Business Development Bond is going to work.

Some members have made statements that the small business development bond will not assist many people. Already it is assisting many people even under the proposal that some of the banking institutions made, that the government make it possible for unincorporated farmers to borrow through Small Business Development Bonds, and they were lending in the hope that the government was going to do that. The government has already come through on that proposal and there has already been over $100 million, I am told, loaned to farmers in distress. We will outline the provisions they will have to abide by before the end of the week.

* * *

● (1440)

COMMUNICATIONS

INTERNATIONAL ACCEPTANCE OF CANADIAN POSITION ON SPACING OF AM RADIO CHANNELS

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Given the interest and strong representations by representatives of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters earlier this year regarding international negotiations on the ten-kilohertz spacing of AM radio channels, and given the expressed intent of the government, after consultation with the industry, to press strongly at the international level for the retention of the present ten-kilohertz spacing system, thus avoiding the dramatic effect the change to nine-kilohertz spacing would have on more than 300 Canadian broadcasters, would the minister advise this House of the state of negotiations, the stance that has been taken by Canada, and what the chances of success might be in terms of those negotiations?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, this is a question that has been of considerable interest to all Members of Parliament. I have perhaps received more representations from Members of Parliament on this question than on any other over the past six to ten months. The position taken by the Canadian government, in close consultation with the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, a position endorsed by members on both sides of the House, was that Canada should take the lead in trying to maintain the ten-kilohertz spacing for AM radio stations.

I am delighted to say that the advice I just received from my officials is that the international convention under way in Rio has accepted the Canadian position, and the Canadian position has been able to carry the day over the position of a number of other countries which were supporting the move to nine-kilohertz spacing, a move which would have cost the Canadian broadcasters a great deal of money.

* * *

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON CONSTRUCTION OF RENTAL HOUSING

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday while the minister was hosting his luncheon featuring scallops, filet mignon and endive salad, thousands of Canadians were laid off construction sites, and thousands more will be without homes because of changes in the budget that affect deductibility of soft costs. By polling developers across the country we have identified 13,000 rental units which have been cancelled or are in limbo since the minister brought down his budget. About 8,000 of those rental units are in Vancouver where 1,200 people have been sent home from work sites.

Since the government is blowing away more than $1 billion worth of new construction in return for only $30 million of new revenue in the next four years, will the minister at least postpone the date on which the new measures take effect, from November 12 to January 1, 1982, to allow those projects which are now under construction to go ahead? There are at least 2,500 under construction or ready to break ground. Will he delay the implementation of that budget measure?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I notice that the hon.

member raised this question in the House yesterday and notice was taken of it by the Minister of State for Finance. Since that time the Solicitor General, the Minister of Public Works, the hon. member for Mississauga North and hon. member for Parkdale-High Park have also raised the same question.

I am pleased to answer her today in a positive way and say that I will be proposing in the implementing legislation that a deduction be provided for costs incurred, namely, soft costs, after November 12, 1981, relating to any building providing the installation of footings or any other base support of the building is commenced before the end of this year and that the construction of the building proceeds without delay.

In addition, with respect to interest expensing, Madam Speaker, I will be proposing that interest expenses will be fully deductible on any funds borrowed by the first purchaser of a multiple unit residential building from the builder or developer as the case may be.

I wanted to use these precise words in order to clarify the situation and to ensure that those soft costs related to projects as I have described will be covered, so the projects that have been identified by the hon. member and the members on this side of the House whom I have enumerated, will be dealt with, and proceed. I am grateful to provide that clarification.

* * *

THE BUDGET

RELEASE OF INFORMATION TO ADVERTISING AGENCY

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State as the responsible minister and chairman of the cabinet committee on communications which apparently, according to the minister for housing, was the government vehicle used to release the budgetary information to Vickers and Benson. Will he confirm what has been suggested by his colleague, that in fact that cabinet committee did authorize the release and, more important, will he indicate who communicated the information to Vickers and Benson, precisely on what day, and as close to what time as the minister's recollection will permit was the information released to Vickers and Benson?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I am unable to help my hon. friend in relation to when information was passed to Vickers and Benson because of the fact that this ad came before the cabinet committee on communications in a meeting—

An hon. Member: That's when it was in the newspapers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: It was already in the papers by then.

Mr. Regan: —at a meeting during the noontime period, and this committee had no prior involvement with that ad.

ROLE PLAYED BY CABINET COMMITTEE

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): If that is the case, Madam Speaker, that the cabinet committee was advised of an advertisement that had been placed even before the cabinet committee met, was there no questioning by that committee and no effort to stop the breach of secrecy regarding budgetary information? Did the committee do absolutely nothing once it had been informed that this was the ad that had been sent out to over 140 newspapers? Is that what the Secretary of State would have us believe?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): I appreciate the histrionics of the hon. member, Madam Speaker, but he should—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: —he should well remember that many ads are placed by government that do not go through that particular committee, and if he listened carefully to my words he should also be aware of the fact that that ad came before cabinet committee for approval on Friday, which was after the budget had been delivered, and we were concerned with the question of whether the message in that ad should be quickly put forward at that point to the people.

An hon. Member: It was already out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: It was in the newspapers.

Mr. Regan: In my view it was extremely important that the public have information in relation to that type of help as rapidly as possible.

An hon. Member: They already had it, even before you did.

Mr. Regan: We approved publication thereafter. I am not aware of any publication before it came to our attention.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT ON MOTIONS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I should like to return now to the minister of housing and direct a question to him. I know I will be repeating myself with respect to questions that have been asked by members of our party on this matter, but I would ask him to deny categorically that the information he received in advance with respect to the budget was prematurally given to Vickers and Benson.

The minister has made reference to a number of scenarios prepared by his department. You will recall that he said there were a number of scenarios. In order to get this matter off the floor of the House will he do two things; first, will he undertake to table in this House the different scenarios that had been prepared by the department so that members and the people of Canada can compare them with what exactly appeared in the budget? Second, will he be prepared to make a statement on motions outlining the full investigation and circumstances leading to the premature release of budget information?

● (1450)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would be happy to repeat that I did not know the specifics—even the generalities of the—

Mr. Clark: Who knew?

Mr. Cosgrove: —provisions of the budget respecting housing until the minister briefed the cabinet on the afternoon of the delivery of the budget, on the twelfth. I did not know the specifics until later on, nor did Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, for which I report to Parliament, know the specifics that were in the budget until afterward. Any release of any information was authorized after that time. I am quite surprised that while we have comments of members opposite who complain that the relief offered was not adequate and does not answer people's needs, they now complain and say the government is not even permitted to advertise what they—

An hon. Member: Before the budget was prepared.

Mr. Cosgrove: —what they consider to be inadequate relief.

REQUEST THAT INVESTIGATION BE CONDUCTED

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the point is, and the minister will understand this, that this advertisement was printed on November 13. It had to be in the hands of the printer in advance of the time the budget was brought down.

An hon. Member: The eleventh.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I understand he will want to investigate this whole matter, but I want to know if he will in fact have an investigation carried out. It is a matter of responsibility for the Minister of Finance who has to ensure there are no leaks. It is the Minister of Finance who has to resign if there are any leaks. If the minister responsible for housing is concerned about his own skin, all I want him to do is to investigate the facts within his own department, lay them before Parliament and make a statement on motions. Will he at least do that so we can say that the minister is an honourable gentleman, rather than leave this House with another impression?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the hon. member indicated as he rose to ask the question that he would be repeating a question. I will repeat my answer. I was not aware of the provisions in the budget pertaining to housing until the Minister of Finance released it in this House, or almost simultaneous with that.

An hon. Member: You should have been.

Mr. Cosgrove: Nor was the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation knowledgeable as to what was in the budget, nor were they authorized to release or request publication of any advertisement that had to deal with the budget prior to that time.

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—ANNOUNCEMENT OF HOLDING OF GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[English]

In light of the recent announcement by the government of El Salvador that the election in that country has been set for March 21, will the minister tell the House the view of the Canadian government on the election process?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the announcement by the government of El Salvador of its election is a domestic decision, on which I do not believe we are entitled to comment directly.

I can tell the House that in a meeting, held at the request of the El Salvador ambassador to the United States approximately two weeks ago, I discussed the El Salvador situation fully, and also the proposed election call. I proposed to the ambassador that the El Salvador government should consider having negotiations with the rebel forces, not over the general political situation, which the government refuses to contemplate, but specifically over provisions for a free and fair election without pre-conditions on either side.

I offered the good auspices of our government to the El Salvador government to facilitate such an encounter in any way, to act as a mediator, or to provide Canadian territory or Canadian embassies in Central America as a locus for such talks.

JAMAICA—POLICE RAID ON CUSO OFFICE

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I have a similar question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns an incident which happened in the non-government organization CUSO. CUSO is a non-government organization doing excellent work in many countries around the world. It has particularly good programs in Jamaica, reaching people at the grass roots level and involving many Jamaican nationals in its programs.

Last Thursday there was a police raid on the offices of CUSO in Jamaica, in which a CUSO member of the board was held at gun point while police went through the files of the CUSO office. At the same time the Hon. Iona Campagnolo, while not present in the office, was working in Jamaica for CUSO fund raising. Would the minister tell this House what he and the government have done to protest this serious incident?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have received a full report on the incident. I can confirm that it took place very much as described by the hon. member. Since that incident, the Canadian High Commissioner to Jamaica has spoken with Prime Minister Seaga to express our dismay, and we are now awaiting an early report from the Jamaican government.

CONCERN FOR SAFETY OF CUSO WORKERS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I personally have grave concerns about the safety of people working in the program in Jamaica, namely, Carl McKenzie and Satish Sachdeva, two people from there. Would the minister tell us what he is prepared to ask of Prime Minister Seaga to guarantee the security of CUSO workers in Jamaica, as well as the continuation of these very excellent programs?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think we will have to wait for a reply by the Jamaican government to see what the apparent reason for this raid was, and if circumstances warrant such a request we would certainly be prepared to make that request. We have no reason to believe that the safety of any CUSO workers, either Canadians or non-Canadians, is in any way in peril.

* * *

THE BUDGET

PREPARATION OF CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ADVERTISEMENT

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for housing. The minister has said that the advertisement which has been the subject of discussion in this House was not approved until after a noon cabinet committee meeting held on the thirteenth. Would the Minister tell this House when this ad was written, by whom, and on whose instructions?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I do not have those specifics available at this time.

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF ADVERTISEMENT DISTRIBUTION

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the minister if he knew, at the cabinet meeting on the thirteenth, that the substance of this advertisement which he and others approved was already in the hands of the newspapers. I also ask if the minister will come into the House tomorrow and give exact details in answer to the question I asked previously?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I would be repeating myself—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: —to indicate that at the meeting of the cabinet communications committee held on the thirteenth we reviewed the advertisement as to whether the wording was adequate and reflected the provisions of the budget, and upon deciding that it did and that it could convey the information on the mortgage renewal plan to as many Canadians as quickly as possible the next day, that ad was then authorized and I instructed an official of Canada Mortgage and Housing who was present at the meeting that the ad should go forward and they should by telephone—

An hon. Member: It was already gone.

Mr. Cosgrove: —let the newspapers know that the ad could be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY WHETHER QUEBEC ANSWERED REQUEST FOR NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development, who is responsible for constitutional affairs. I do not know whether he is in the House. If he is not, my question is directed, Madam Speaker, to the Prime Minister of Canada.

Following frequent appeals made by the Minister of Justice to the PQ government of Quebec to reopen negotiations and to negotiate in good faith with a view to reaching an agreement, and also considering very specific offers made by the Prime Minister of Canada this weekend in Quebec, can the Minister of Justice tell us whether the government of Quebec has shown any willingness to negotiate or if there has not been any response as yet to his request for negotiations?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, last week I was in touch with two ministers of the Quebec government, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. I offered to meet them and discuss the proposals made by the Prime Minister on the day the agreement was signed, November 5, when he offered the government of Quebec various alternatives. The answer was that they did not want to talk to me until the resolution had been tabled in the National Assembly, and since then, no one has been in touch with me. We are still willing to talk to the government of Quebec and try to reach an agreement on the three points Mr. Lévesque could not sign on the day of the agreement, but unfortunately, as yet no indication has been given the Canadian government that they want to negotiate.

* * *

● (1500)

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. COSSITT—INFORMATION PROVIDED IN WRITTEN ANSWER ALLEGED FALSE—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) rising on a question of privilege on Wednesday, November 4 last, brought to the attention of the House a matter concerning questions he had asked of the minister, the response he received and the subsequent report of the McDonald commission bearing on the question and answer.

In his question No. 2,332 asked of the government in 1975, there were allegations by Igor Gouzenko that he received no government pension from the time of his defection in 1946 until such pension was instituted by the government of Mr. Diefenbaker in 1962, and the government was asked why it was not provided. The reply by the then solicitor general, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), was in part that "from 1946 to 1962 Mr. Gouzenko was looked after entirely by the Canadian government."

The relevant part of the report of the McDonald commission quotes from this reply given by the government and, after indicating that it reviewed the history of the matter carefully as it was disclosed by the RCMP files, says "it is not true that from 1946 to 1962 Mr. Gouzenko was looked after entirely by the Canadian government." Under these circumstances, the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville alleges that a contempt of the House occurred because, in the reply in 1965, the House was given false information by the government and the hon. member was therefore obstructed in his parliamentary work.

First of all, the hon. member correctly sets out that a contempt committed against one Parliament may be raised and punished in another. With respect to the alleged contempt, it is correct to say that it is a breach of privilege or a contempt of the House to present or cause to be presented to either House, or to a committee of either House, falsified or fabricated documents with intent to deceive such House or committee. That is to say, where the government as represented by one of its ministers, or by an officer of a department or of a government agency, admits that the information given to the House was deliberately false, the House may treat that as a contempt of the House. Such was the case in this House in 1978 in the matter referred to by the hon. member.

The distinction between the situation put forward by the hon. member here, however, is that while the McDonald commission is an emanation of the government, it is not an instrument of the government or government policy. Thus, an admission in the 1978 precedent by a former Commissioner of the RCMP that "very often ministers' letters were not exactly drafted on precise statements of fact" was an admission for purposes of privilege in that case.

In the present case, however, a statement by the royal commission in its report that the government's response to question No. 2,332 in 1975 was not true is not an admission for purposes of privilege. Moreover, the report itself states at pages 341 and 342:

> Our examination of the files has not disclosed that there was any sinister design that may reasonably be attached to the answer given in the House of Commons.

In other words, under the doctrine of ministerial responsibility a minister may be expected to answer to the House for acts of those of his officials; but the government is not responsible for the acts or statements of a royal commission, although the government may take some action following upon the report it receives from the royal commission. Accordingly, I cannot find a prima facie case of privilege in this presentation.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. COSSITT—REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF ORDER PAPER QUESTION—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: Further, on Wednesday, November 4, 1981, the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) raised a point of order, this time concerning the answer to written question No. 3,236 which is recorded in Hansard on November 3, 1981, at page 12450.

The hon. member is aware of Citation 363 of Beauchesne's fifth edition which stipulates that a member may put a question but has no right to insist upon an answer.

Furthermore, the quality of the answer as given is not generally within the responsibility of the Speaker, who should not be asked to pass judgment on the substance of an answer to a question, be it oral or written. In this connection, I would like to quote a sentence of a ruling given by my predecessor, reference to which was made by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville and the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), and which can be found in Hansard of June 19, 1978, at page 6528:

> —since the Chair has not procedural grounds upon which to compel an answer, it is impossible for the Chair to say that an answer given on procedural grounds is not, in fact, an answer.

Therefore, I regret I cannot find that the hon. member has a point of order.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. COSSITT—ALLEGED BREACH BY MINISTER OF BUDGET SECRECY

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I filed notice, which I trust reached you, an hour or so before the House met of my intention to raise a question of privilege, if you would afford me the opportunity, as soon as possible this afternoon.

My question of privilege will be brief. It deals with the subject which I raised during question period concerning an advertisement prepared by Vickers and Benson Ltd. of Montreal and sent out to various newspapers across Canada for publication.

I am alleging that a breach of the privileges of members has occurred here in that at least Vickers and Benson, the employees thereof, and I do not know who else, were privy to information in the budget before members of this House had that information. That is a distinct breach of the privileges of the members of the House of Commons.

The information to which I refer is contained in the advertisement sent out by Vickers and Benson headed "Attention Home Owners". I think the first sentence says it all. It says: "Check if you are eligible"—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think I have a good idea of what the hon. member is trying to put before the House. I remind the hon. member that privilege is not at issue in this particular question. What is at issue is the matter of secrecy of the budget, which is not to be dealt with under privilege. Budget secrecy is merely a convention which the Chair is not in a position to enforce. I suggest that unless the hon. member has something new to raise, he and other hon. members have dealt properly with the matter by asking questions during question period.

I cannot deal with this question under privilege because the matter of secrecy of the budget is a convention which is not enforceable by the Chair. If the hon. member refers to cases in Great Britain, to which he has referred previously in this House, he will recognize with me that the matters were not discussed under privilege but were discussed under other headings and dealt with in the House through questions to ministers. The Chair has no authority whatsoever to enforce a convention.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I will leave the subject you said is taboo and proceed to the latter point I was going to make, which I think is a question of privilege. It was said in this House by the minister responsible for housing, and I will quote from Hansard because it reflects on all our privileges. On November 10, 1981, the minister said:

> I do not know what will be in the budget on Thursday night.

Later he said:

> —I do not know the contents of the budget affecting housing.

It is obvious from what happened in this House today that those are false statements. They are not accurate. The minister was either misleading this House due to incompetence, or intentionally misleading this House. If it was the latter, it is a very serious matter. I think it is certainly a question of privilege for me to raise at this time, that a minister gave this House information which obviously was not correct—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cossitt: —and therefore could have been lying to this House.

Madam Speaker: If the hon. member feels that the minister has intentionally misled this House, he has to say that in those words. The Chair cannot deal with a question in a hypothetical form. The hon. member said "if" the minister has intentionally misled this House, that is a serious matter. I would have to agree with the hon. member that it is a serious matter. We have to be sure that the hon. member is intending to say exactly that, that the minister has misled the House. I am afraid the hon. member is continuing to debate the question which I said does not come under the heading of "Privilege".

• (1510)

Mr. Cossitt: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I want to give notice, depending upon what the minister says tomorrow, that I reserve my right to move a question of privilege and to say that he has misled the House, if that is the case.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members do not have to give notice to such things. If the hon. member feels tomorrow that he has a point to raise, then he can raise it. He does not have to give notice of his point. But if it is a question of privilege, then the hon. member knows that the usual statement and notice is required.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I rise to seek clarification from the Chair with respect to your ruling, Madam Speaker, on the first part of the question raised by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt).

Do I understand correctly that the ruling of the Chair was, in effect, that it is not a breach of privilege of the members of this House if the government released budget information to Vickers and Benson before that information was released to members of this House, as it was, in the budget speech? Is that what the Chair is ruling?

Madam Speaker: No, I was not ruling on that point. I do not have the specifics as to whether or not something was released by the minister before the budget speech was made.

The hon. members are trying to elucidate whether there was a budget leak. I have had no such indication. I would not be the one who would judge whether there was a leak or not. I am saying that if hon. members are discussing a possible budget leak, it cannot be discussed under privilege. Budget leaks have to do with a convention which is not enforceable by the Chair.

Mr. Nielsen: That was the precise point I was seeking to clarify, may it please the Chair. It has always been my understanding of the practices of this House that when information, particularly budget information, is released prior to members of the House of Commons being informed of its contents, that in the past has constituted a very serious breach of members' privileges.

Half way through the Chair's response to my question seeking clarification, I was quite happy because you, Madam

Speaker, were not saying that you would not treat that matter as a breach of individual and collective members' privileges. However, upon hearing the Chair's closing remarks I became rather alarmed. It seems to me that the past practice of this House has long been that individual and collective members' privileges are, indeed, directly affected deleteriously by the release of budget information before that information is released to members of this House.

On that specifically focused point, I would suggest very strongly to the Chair—and certainly the Chair's ruling was not specific on the point—that we would be following past practices, proper practices, if it were to be considered a breach of individual and collective members' privileges were budget information to be released prior to its first being given to members of the House of Commons. That is the whole purpose of a lock-up.

* * *

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. McGRATH—ADVERTISEMENT PLACED BY VICKERS AND BENSON

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I rise on the same point of order, Madam Speaker. First of all, I want to identify myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). Perhaps I can assist the Chair if I were to tell you, Madam Speaker, that I am prepared to lay before the House a substantive motion. My substantive motion is based on a precedent of your predecessor, the Hon. Speaker Jerome, in dealing with a matter which referred to an alleged leak of the budget by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). At that time, Madam Speaker, your predecessor, Speaker Jerome, ruled that there was a prima facie case and the matter was then referred to the Standing Committee of Privileges and Elections, which dealt with the matter at that time. In other words, Madam Speaker, it was the House and not the Chair that determined whether or not there had been a breach of the privileges of this House.

My point of order is based on the information contained in an advertisement which was in the hands of the advertising agency, Vickers and Benson, on November 11, prior to the delivery of the budget in this House. That advertisement contained precise details, word for word, of the budget's references to housing. There is no question about the fact that what appears in the advertisement, which was sent to 150 newspapers across the country by the minister's own admission, is identical to the information that was given to the House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in his budget of November 12. That information was in the hands of the agency on November 11; it was in the hands of the newspapers prior to that information being released to the members of this House, thereby constituting a violation of the privileges of this House.

If the Chair rules that there is a prima facie case of privilege, I am prepared to move, seconded by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie):

That the subject matter of the advertisement which appeared over the authority of the minister responsible for housing and which contains information pertaining to the budget and was released prior to the budget, be referred to the Standing Committee of Privileges and Elections.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Hon. members are arguing a matter about which they tried to seek more clarification during question period. I am not in a position to determine whether there has been a leak of budgetary secrets. If there had been a leak of budgetary secrets, and if that was clearly established, then I do not feel it falls under the heading of privilege. I will not repeat to the House what is the definition of privilege because I have done that often enough. As I listened to the arguments of the hon. member, I do not find there is a prima facie case of privilege. I remind hon. members that if they want to deal with the fact that there was a leak of budgetary secrets, then they would have to deal with it in another way, but not under the heading of privilege.

An hon. Member: What about the precedent?

Mr. McGrath: I am not permitted to question the Chair's ruling in any way and I do not attempt to do that. However, I seek clarification, Madam Speaker. I am faced with the precedent of your distinguished predecessor, because I was involved in the matter concerning the alleged leak by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. In fact, this matter was referred to committee under privilege. Perhaps the Chair could tell me what new avenue I now have open to me in order that I may bring this matter before this House or a committee of this House to determine whether or not there has been a violation of the privileges of the House. All I am asking the Chair to determine is whether or not there is a prima facie case. On the basis of the advertisement I submit to the Chair that there is a prima facie case. If the Chair agrees, then it is up to the House or a committee of the House to determine whether, in fact, the privileges of the House have been violated.

● (1520)

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, there are a number of factors here that should be pointed out. First of all, you have made a ruling where you expressed the opinion quite clearly and simply, that when we refer to secrecy of the budget, it is not a matter of privilege but a political convention over which you have no authority. That should be quite clear, even to those who are shouting on the Conservative side. In addition, Madam Speaker, the member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) referred to the case of the member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). I should like to remind you, if I may, that the facts are not the same. In the case of the member for Kenora-Rainy River, an article was published in The Gazette alleging or insinuating that the member was guilty of breaching the secrecy of the budget. In that case, a motion was presented by the member in question, which is not the case here. The member for Kenora-Rainy River himself said, "My privileges as a member were abused because of a false report published in a newspaper, and I, as the victim of this report, move that the question be considered by the Committee of Privileges and Elections," and that is what happened, with the consequences of which the House is aware.

Now, Madam Speaker, if I may be allowed, since my colleagues on the opposite side seem to be far more interested in indulging in petty politics than in actually referring to parliamentary practice or conventions, the convention which forms the basis of any debate on a breach of budget secrecy is that a member who wants to make a formal charge should rise and charge the person in question, thereby risking his seat. That is the political convention that has always governed the matter of budget secrecy in the House, and it is this type of convention that the members opposite should have the courage to follow if they truly have reason to believe that a parliamentarian has breached the secrecy of the budget.

Madam Speaker, obviously, they lack that fortitude and moreover the facts, namely, the answers given here in the House, clearly show that there has been absolutely no impropriety on the part of parliamentarians.

So what do they want to do? These are innuendoes, but they are not supported by any valid precedents because there are none. I challenge any member, those to my left who were shouting just now—the member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) who was shouting as well—I challenge any one of them to dare rise and make a formal charge, therefore putting his seat in the House in jeopardy and to quote a single precedent justifying a motion for referral to the Committee of Privileges and Elections, on the basis of a breach of budget secrecy.

I repeat, the case of the member for Kenora-Rainy River does not apply to this situation, because he was the victim, he presented the motion himself and his personal privilege was involved. In any case, I do not think there is a single Progressive Conservative member here in the House today who has enough guts—they shout a lot, they hurl abuse, even those who are not in their seats, but there is not a single member who has the courage to rise, to observe the parliamentary or political convention, and say: I accuse a parliamentarian of breaching the secrecy of the budget and I am prepared to stake my seat on it.

Madam Speaker, the House is waiting for a demonstration of bravery. I ask any Progressive Conservative member to be bold enough to rise, to make that formal charge. If the Progressive Conservatives refrain from doing so we shall draw our own conclusions.

Point of Order—Mr. McGrath

[English]

Madam Speaker: That is really the way to deal with this matter. I want to reply to the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), who has offered a precedent in order to enlighten the Chair as to the manner in which this matter should be dealt with. I believe the hon. member referred to the precedent of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). As the minister just said, the precedent was not exactly the kind of situation which was described today. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River himself brought up as a question of privilege an interpretation of some of his actions which had been described in a newspaper. I believe it was dealt with in a committee, the hon. member wanting to have his reputation cleared.

The hon. member asked me what recourse he has if he cannot deal with this matter through a question of privilege. I think he knows the recourse he has. If he feels that there has been a breach of budget secrecy and that he can substantiate this breach with the proper facts, he knows that he can put a substantive motion to the House with a 48-hour notice. That is the proper procedure in order to deal with such a matter.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, are you saying that the motion I have put forward, which I now have in writing, is out of order? If so, I want to say with great respect that I reserve the right to check the precedents in detail on this matter and to raise it again at the first opportunity.

Mr. Pinard: You are free to do what you want, but there has been a ruling.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member may do that. I cannot receive the hon. member's motion because I did not find a prima facie case of privilege. I refer the hon. member to two precedents in Great Britain, one in 1947 with Mr. Dalton and one in 1936 with Mr. Thomas. These two precedents show quite clearly that the matter was dealt with in another manner and not under privilege. The Speaker did not give priority to this discussion by finding privilege. The discussion may take place, but not under the heading of privilege, where priority is given to a certain matter because the Speaker, for reasons which have been given to her by hon. members, finds that there is a prima facie case.

The hon. member may reserve his right to come back on this question or to look at the precedents to enlighten himself as well as the Chair. But for the time being, on the basis of what I have heard today, I am afraid I cannot hear this matter discussed under the heading of privilege.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, there is one further recourse which perhaps missed your attention. It is closely allied with the course followed by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). After today's questions and answers appear in tomorrow's written media, that will give the opportunity to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), the minister responsible for housing, to follow the same honourable course tomorrow which the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River followed on that occasion.

Point of Order—Mr. McGrath

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same subject. I wonder whether you could clarify the nature of your ruling. If it can be established that the minister made a statement to the House to the effect that he did not know the contents of the budget, and subsequent to that there arises a series of events which give rise to the possible inference—not in any sense a personal accusation—that the minister or someone on his staff must have known the contents of the budget in order to place the advertisement in question, I would ask whether this in itself does not raise a matter which should be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, since there is a clear contradiction which could lead to the conclusion that something was amiss with respect to what the House was told, even though it was told inadvertently.

In regard to this matter, I refer Madam Speaker to the question raised by the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) some time ago wherein Mr. Speaker Jerome made a ruling with respect to a minister unintentionally having said something on the basis of information and advice he received from his staff which turned out to be incorrect. There was a ruling by Mr. Speaker Jerome which was overturned by the majority at that time; it was not allowed to proceed. Would Madam Speaker not agree, if there is on the face of it a prima facie conflict between two matters of fact admitted to by the minister, that there needs to be a reference to the committee in order to clarify how it is this matter was brought to the attention of the House in a way that could only produce the wrong effect?

Madam Speaker: In answer to the hon. member's query, I hope I can clarify the situaton by saying that if, subsequent to reading Hansard and the exchanges which took place in the House, some hon. member feels he could make a definite charge—not just an inference, or fishing for some information, or making a vague allegation, but a definite charge with the consequences attached to that process—then yes, the hon. member may bring in a substantive motion which might or might not be debated in the House. That is the procedure.

Mr. Nowlan: That is absolutely wrong.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, all I would say is that it seems to me strange, if I may put it that way, that one of us would have to make an accusation which could be in its consequences very unfair for the individual involved. Not wanting to make those kinds of accusations, we can nevertheless see a discrepancy in terms of what has been said and what has been done, and it needs to be clarified.

• (1530)

Is it the ruling of the Chair that it is required that an individual member necessarily has to accuse another individual member of wilfully misleading before it is deemed a question that is to be referred to the standing committee? That seems to be an unduly harsh requirement.

Madam Speaker: I will read to the hon. member a ruling from Speaker Michener on this particular point. He said that the House should not set in motion its power to try to judge the conduct of a member unless such member is charged with a specific offence. It is further urged that not only must he be charged, but that he must be charged by a member of the House of Commons standing in his place.

So it is not a fishing operation and it is not vague allegations; the hon. member presenting his case would have to make a very specific charge and be prepared to back it up with facts.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, so far as I know the ruling you just referred to pertained to members, and we are all members of this House. The initial complaint referred to a minister of this House. I was not going to get overly involved in this but my privilege has been affected if a minister has, inadvertently or deliberately, caused a budget leak. Madam Speaker, you—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is again dealing with a hypothetical question—"My privilege has been affected if." I have ruled that this is not a question of privilege and should not be discussed under privilege. If hon. members want to pursue this discussion, I have indicated the proper way to do it. I would appreciate it if hon. members would follow that course if they want to.

Mr. Nowlan: The only reason—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I am standing on a question of privilege that arises out of what happened in this House before you spoke.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I stand on a question of privilege in view of what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) said—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is again referring to a question that we have been discussing for half an hour. I have said that it cannot be discussed under—

Mr. Nowlan: You cut me off before I even started, with respect, the same as you did the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt).

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nowlan: Order? She has to have some order.

Madam Speaker: I am willing to listen to hon. members. It is my duty to listen to hon. members and I do. But I ask hon. members, when they are discussing privilege, to let me know in the first two or three sentences what the question of privilege is all about. That is a rule I am going to enforce in this House. If hon. members cannot tell me in the first two or three sentences that they have a privilege, then I suppose the privilege does not exist. It has to be stated in the very beginning what the privilege is; then I hear hon. members. I then have the discretion to decide whether I feel there is a question of privilege or not, and I may interrupt the hon. member at that point or continue hearing him.

If the hon. member feels that I have not listened to him long enough and that he has something very important to tell me, will he please tell me what it is in the first two sentences.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, with respect, when I stand on a question of privilege it has to be something important, especially something like this.

You yourself, in the chair, referred to the Kenora precedent where the member felt himself to be a victim and therefore moved a motion. You distinguished that from my rising on a question of privilege, when I feel victimized by knowing that if the facts of the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) are correct—and I have to say "if" because I do not have the facts, and with respect, Madam Speaker, you cut off the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville before he established the facts. Quite frankly, we will most likely have to wait until tomorrow to see what some of the answers are. With respect, I could not sit idly by with, in effect, your ruling in part, after the President of the Privy Council laid red herrings all over this green chamber by raising this question of "Lay a charge or else suffer your seat."

Your Honour referred to two precedents in England. We all know, unfortunately, that political morality in England in terms of principle is sometimes a little higher than in other chambers. It obviously is within the power of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to do something about this if the facts are correct.

On your own words, with respect, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) felt he was victimized and he raised a motion. I say to you, Madam Speaker, that if another member on this side, and especially the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville, does not present a substantive motion, then if his facts are correct I will present a motion, because I feel just as victimized. In effect, there could very well have been a breach affecting my privilege as a member—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think at this point I can interrupt the hon. member. He is speaking of two different privileges. He is speaking now of a privilege that he might have because he cannot make out in the discussion we have just had whether there has really been a breach of budget secrecy that would affect his privilege. It is all "iffy." Is it or is it not?

Through the discussions that we have just had, can the member establish to me that his privilege has really been breached? That is quite different from the privilege of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River to which we were referring whose actions were interpreted, if my memory serves me correctly, as having breached a secret of the budget. That is quite different and I am afraid there is no equation between the two kinds of privileges.

I have heard the hon. member and I think I have been patient with him. We are not discussing this question under privilege any longer. I have said that it is not a question of privilege and the fact that he is now protesting that I did not listen to him long enough is not a question of privilege either.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, like you, I would not want to see an undesirable precedent find its way into our records. I do not think I heard you give credence to the submission of the government House leader when he stated that the practices of this place were that before a question of privilege could arise, a specific accusation had to be made. I have no quarrel with that part because many Speakers have ruled on it. You went on to say that embodied in that principle, if the charges proved to be unfounded, was that the member making those specific charges forfeited his seat.

Mr. Speaker Jerome and many Speakers before him have ruled that that is not part of our practices. It is not a convention. I personally had cause to go into that question very carefully myself in 1963. That is not part of our practices, Madam Speaker, and I hope I did not hear you say that it was.

Madam Speaker: I did not say that. I just agreed to the first part of the hon. member's intervention. What might happen afterwards, I suppose, is a matter of the personal ethics of the people involved in these incidents. It has nothing to do with the Speaker; it is a matter of personal ethics.

MR. DOMM—ALLEGED BREACH BY MINISTER OF BUDGET SECRECY

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I am interested in gaining from the Chair some clarification on a point of order dealing with the possibility of a leak of information that would prove to be, in my assessment, a very definite breach of privilege.

On November 10, as reported at 12704 of Hansard, when I rose on the question of privilege that we have been discussing today Your Honour did, in essence, according to your response, reserve judgment. I rose in the House on that date and put the following proposition to Your Honour:

> If budget information is being prematurely passed on to certain individuals by the minister, information which Parliament must necessarily be advised of in the first instance by means of the budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), then the law of contempt of Parliament should clearly be cited and my rights as an individual member are surely being circumvented.

● (1540)

I refresh everyone's memory with Your Honour's response to my concern, because that gave me grounds to pursue this matter rather than having to stand up in this House, as the House leader for the government has stated, and lay a charge. Your Honour answered very specifically and said:

> It is quite puzzling to me that most of the facts brought forward in the question of privilege seem to be of a hypothetical nature.

This is hypothetical. No one knows whether the minister did or not. I now suggest, with all due respect, that there is certain information which would lead a great number of us in this House to know that it is no longer hypothetical. It disturbs me no end to feel that I have to stand up in this House, if we can prove, as Your Honour has asked us, that we can remove this matter from hypothetical circumstances to factual circumstances, and charge the minister with what was obviously a leak of confidential information prior to budget time.

I would hate to think that Your Honour is now stating that this is necessary. I would rather assume, after bringing this to a conclusion, that I would be able to pursue these phone call conversations with constituents across Canada by the minister's office, since they clearly indicated to these constituents that what was in the budget was going to save their homes. Now we have a situation where he has communicated that information, not only to constituents of mine and to others, but also to the media. If one is going to tell newspapers across Canada what is in the budget before it is actually announced, then it goes back to my original question of privilege when I said the following:

It is my understanding that a valid question of privilege is a question as to whether the law of contempt of Parliament—

Surely I do not have to rise in my place on a matter of contempt of Parliament and charge a minister. If there is contempt of Parliament, then it is up to Parliament to decide.

That is my intervention and I am pursuing the case. I hope when I come back in with a written question of privilege, which I intend to do, that I do not have to ask for the resignation of the minister responsible for housing but, rather, that I can ask the Speaker to look into the matter by referral to committee to investigate facts and not fiction. Within the next week I propose to bring facts into this House of Commons which clearly indicate that the minister has leaked confidential information, not only to the people of Canada, but to the media as well. What could be more blatantly against convention?

Madam Speaker: Of course, the hon. member is not serious when he is saying that I can allow hon. members to allege certain things against the minister, or allege a breach of budget secrecy and not make a formal charge.

There is a period during the sitting of the House, the question period, where hon. members can ask questions in order to elucidate a situation which they might want to pursue further as a question of privilege or in another fashion. However, a fishing operation cannot take place without a charge.

An hon. Member: Not even for a red herring?

Madam Speaker: An hon. member cannot stand in his place in the House and vaguely accuse another hon. member of something without substantiating it with facts. Therefore, the answer I gave the hon. member remains.

I cannot deal with a question of privilege based only on a hypothetical situation. On the other occasion the hon. member said "If the minister or an official had said such and such to my constituency, then I would have a question of privilege." I cannot rule on hypothetical situations or statements. The hon. member must come into the House and say: "These are the statements and this is the situation." However, when all of this is prefaced by "if", the Chair is not in a position to rule.

If I do find, after the facts have been presented to me, that there is a prima facie case of privilege, then, of course, the hon. member is right. It is up to the House to find if there has been contempt of the House. That matter of contempt of the House is dealt with by the House after the Speaker has found a prima facie case.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. WILSON—BUDGETARY CHANGE RESPECTING INVESTMENTS IN MURBs

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a question of privilege on a related and very specific topic. It concerns the announcement made by the Minister of Finance in his place today to the effect that there will be a significant change—

Mr. Nielsen: A major change.

Mr. Wilson: —a major change in the treatment of investments in MURBs as it was first presented in the budget. This change that he announced while the stock markets were open will have a significant effect on the operations, and possibly the market value, of certain listed companies.

The reason I say it is a related point is that the whole question of budget secrecy and the timing of the release of the budget is of so much importance. The tradition and the convention is there to avoid possible financial or personal gain on the part of individuals receiving this information—

Madam Speaker: Yes, but again, that is a convention. The hon. member is rising on a question of privilege. The stock markets and companies which might be affected by a statement have no privilege in this House. Therefore, the hon. member cannot raise that matter under the heading of a question of privilege. They do not have privilege in this House. The hon. member has privilege in this House. If he tells me that his privilege has been affected by this, although I do not see how it can have been affected, I will hear him.

[Translation]

He did not state his question properly.

[English]

Mr. Wilson: My specific reason for raising it today was to give Your Honour notice as soon as I possibly could after the announcement by the minister. At this point I wish to study the transcript and also the press.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member may study the transcript and he does not have to give me notice. He can do that tomorrow. I am afraid that hon. members are taking the time of the House to give me all sorts of notice which I do not need. If the hon. member has a question of privilege, he should send written notice to my office with a brief statement.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITION

MR. CORBETT—VIA RAIL—CUTBACKS IN PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy Royal): Madam Speaker, I wish to place before the House two petitions containing over 900 names of citizens of the community of Chipman and other regions in New Brunswick protesting the cut-off of passenger train services in that region. Many of these folks will not be visiting with their loved ones over the Christmas holiday this year, compliments of the compassionate and little understood Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin).

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,487, 2,708, 3,064, 3,165, 3,246, 3,252, 3,283 and 3,284.

[Text]

SURVEILLANCE OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 1,487—Mr. Cossitt:

During the past three years, has any security branch or any other branch of the government, directly or indirectly, been responsible for the placing under surveillance, electronically eavesdropping on in any way whatsoever, tapping telephones, using devices to listen to automobile conversations, etc. of any member of the House of Commons and, if so, in each case (a) what was the name of the member and the constituency (b) what was the purpose of such action (c) on what dates, by what means and in what locations was such action taken?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Security Service of Canada is concerned, it is not considered in the national interest to attempt to answer such a question. If such a question were answered in the affirmative, it could provide information about security operations which might prejudice their success or unnecessarily prejudice the reputation of an individual; if in the negative such information could provide comfort or aid to those involved in ongoing violations of national security.

Order Paper Questions

ASSISTANT REGIONAL DIRECTOR, GULF REGION

Question No. 2,708—Mr. Corbett:

1. Was an assistant regional director appointed for the new Gulf region directorate of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and, if so (a) what was his/her name (b) by whom or by which department was he/she previously employed (c) what are his/her qualifications?

2. Was he/she hired through a public service competition, either in-house or public, or by ministerial appointment?

3. What is the job description for the position of assistant regional director?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. Yes. (a) Jean-Eudes Haché, (b) Department of Fisheries and Oceans, (c) Mr. Haché has the following academic qualifications: B.A. (Moncton University), B.Soc.Sc. (Ottawa University), M.A. (Ottawa University).

Employment qualifications: 1968-1972, Prime Minister's Office, regional desk officer, Atlantic provinces, 1972-1974, Veterans Affairs, executive assistant to the minister, 1974-1976, executive assistant to the Minister of State for Fisheries, 1976-1977, policy advisor, resource allocation branch, Fisheries, 1977-1979, manager (eastern Canada) resource allocation branch, Fisheries, 1979-1980, Fisheries and Oceans, senior staff officer, resource utilization, 1980-1981, Fisheries and Oceans, director, resource allocation.

2. Appointed through a public service competition (in-house). The assistant director general is accountable as deputy to the regional director general for the ongoing co-ordination, orchestration and delivery of regional fisheries management and support programs and activities; in order to achieve federal and departmental objectives and satisfy the mandates for the management of the aquatic and marine renewable resources of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

PURCHASE OF AUTOMOBILES FOR CABINET MINISTERS

Question No. 3,064—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What are all the details of the methods used by the government to purchase automobiles for the use of cabinet ministers?

2. Are tenders called and, if not, for what reason?

3. Are tenders invited and, if so, who draws up the list?

4. Is it customary to permit a cabinet minister to purchase a new vehicle from a dealer of his or her choice in his or her constituency or anywhere else?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. All automobiles for the use of cabinet ministers are purchased, on behalf of departments, by DSS from franchised dealers. Depending on the availability of the vehicle requested, bids are solicited by telephone from dealers located in the immediate vicinity of where the automobile will be used. It is customary however, for ministers to choose whether the vehicle is to be purchased in the National Capital Region or in their constituency.

Order Paper Questions

2, 3 and 4. See above.

DND—CONTRACT WITH HANSON-MOHAWK INC.

Question No. 3,165—Mr. McKinnon:

Is the Department of National Defence buying socks from Hanson-Mohawk Inc. under contract number 13GA.2511007 (2GA81-00224) for the amount of $1,107,975 and, if so, how many pairs?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The Department of Supply and Services has awarded a contract on behalf of the Department of National Defence in the amount of $1,107,975 for 671,500 pairs of socks.

LOBBYISTS

Question No. 3,246—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the government aware of an increase in the number of persons or groups acting as lobbyists with members of Parliament on Parliament Hill?

2. Is the government aware that lobbyists in the United States must be registered or licensed and has the government considered or will it be considering establishing a similar system in Canada?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): 1. The government does not maintain statistics on this subject.

2. The government is aware of the system in the United States and has had many suggestions made about possible adaptations for the Canadian context but does not expect to be able to make any proposals in the very near future.

COST OF ANSWERING QUESTION

Question No. 3,252—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is the estimated cost of answering Question No. 3,239 on the Order Paper in the name of the hon. member for Kitchener asking the cost of answering questions by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville regarding use by cabinet ministers of Department of Transport aircraft?

2. Was the question suggested for drafting by a member of the government for inclusion on the Order Paper by the hon. member for Kitchener?

3. Is the government trying to discourage questions from the opposition by emphasizing that it costs a certain amount of money to prepare an answer, rather than emphasizing freedom of information to the Canadian people?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. $125 plus costs of translation and printing of the question and answer in the Order Paper and the Debates.

2. No.

3. The government encourages all of its employees to make available as much information as is consistent with the security of the nation and is amused when Members of Parliament put down questions on the Order Paper to which they have obviously the answers but not the courage to make the information public themselves. The government is not amused, however, by the expense thereby incurred by the public. The government does not regret the discomfort of hon. members who so abuse the system when other more diligent hon. members point out this behaviour.

BEHAVIOUR OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 3,283—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 3,029 which stated in part that the government will not answer questions concerning complaints about public servants (a) did it answer such questions in the past (b) has there been a change in government policy to bring about the present attitude and, if so, on what date was the policy changed and by whose orders?

2. Is the government following a policy of attempting to discourage members of Parliament from using the Order Paper to obtain information where a public servant was allegedly rude and crude with the staff of a Member of Parliament as well as with the Member of Parliament?

3. Is the government now following a policy of permitting bureaucrats to insult Members of Parliament and to deny them information?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1, 2 and 3. The government does not approve of public servants insulting or abusing any person, whether or not this person is a Member of Parliament. As stated in the answer to Question No. 3029, any such abuse, if reported to the minister concerned, will be acted upon. The government does not regard the posing of a question on the Order Paper as a serious route of seeking correction of an unsatisfactory situation involving a citizen and a public servant.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Question No. 3,284—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 3,029 concerning the actions of a public servant by the name of Mr. Ed Webster (a) which department completed the answer to this question (b) was this question ever referred to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and, if so, for what reason was the answer not signed by that minister (c) was the answer signed by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council and, if so (i) under whose authority (ii) what part, if any, did the President of the Privy Council or anyone on his staff play in the preparation of the answer?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): (a), (b), (c)(i) and (ii). The Office of the President of the Privy Council is responsible for co-ordinating the answering of Questions on the Order Paper. In accordance with section 3 of the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, this function is a particular assignment to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. In order to improve the provision of information in response to questions intended to seek information rather than to proselytize or complain, questions in the latter category will continue to be dealt with in the most expeditious manner possible.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Monday, November 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment of Mr. Wilson (p. 12752).

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, the budget which was presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to the country last week was far more notable for the things which it did not do than for the things which it did. I believe that a principal weakness of the budget is that it will do nothing to stimulate the economy or bring down the cost of living. The minister admitted that both unemployment and the cost of living will remain at their present high level or go even higher during the next few years. By failing to stimulate the economy, the budget will do nothing to lift the country out of this serious recession which we are experiencing today and which is predicted to get even worse during the winter months. Economic stimulation is urgently needed.

● (1550)

In planning to stimulate the economy it has become obvious during the last five years that if a government wants businessmen to do something which it believes is necessary for the good of the country, it must not simply hand them a gift in the form of a tax reduction and hope that they will make use of it in the way the government would like them to. What a government must do is to tell businesses what the government wants to accomplish, and it will reward efforts to bring about that aim in proportion to the effort that is made.

What, then, do we want businesses to accomplish in order to get our economy moving at a satisfactory pace? First, we must make our products more attractive in price, quality and design so they will be preferred by Canadians and foreign buyers to the ones they are now buying. No Canadian, or anyone else, is going to buy a Canadian product if they can find a foreign-made product of equal quality and at a lower price, or one of better quality at the same price.

Second, we must sell our products more aggressively in the export market.

Third, we must turn more of our raw materials into finished products here in Canada.

I am convinced that the only practical and effective way to accomplish these three objectives is to develop an incentive strategy which will bring about substantial improvements by increasing productivity, increasing research and development, expanding export trade and processing more of our primary products in this country.

To increase productivity, we must offer incentives which will persuade producers that they will be able to pay for the new plant, machinery and production systems they will need to buy in a reasonably short space of time. This will make it as easy as possible for them to make the usually high expenditures involved.

The kind of incentive I have in mind would be one whereby (a) all capital expenditures may be written off in one year; and (b) a plant would be rewarded in the form of a cash bonus at the end of the year in proportion to its increase in productivity during the year, compared to the base year, the last full year before the plan goes into operation.

This form of incentive has been very effective in increasing productivity in such countries as Japan and West Germany, where spectacular results have been achieved since the end of the Second World War. I am convinced there is no reason why such an incentive would be any less successful in this country today.

Next I would like to deal with the steps which I think should be taken to increase the amount of research and development which is carried on by industry in this country. One of the reasons we have had to rely so heavily on foreign investment in the past is that investment brought with it technology which was produced by research done in the country where the capital originated. To be less reliant on foreign investment, to capture new markets which are looking for new and better designed products and to lower costs and become more competitive, it is obvious that we must carry out a great deal more research and development in this country.

To bring this about, we should allow industry to write off 200 per cent of the cost of current and capital expenditures on research and development in excess of those made in the base year, the last full year before the program is introduced. In addition to writing off the full cost in one year, it will put a considerable cash reward in the pocket of the company undertaking the research.

This kind of program has been successful in significantly increasing the volume of industrial research in countries where it has been introduced. I am convinced it will prove equally effective in Canada.

The third incentive with which I would like to deal is one designed to promote greater sales in the export market. Because of this country's great dependence on the United States market, where 70 per cent of our export sales go, together with the steady move of that country toward protectionism, the development of additional markets has become particularly necessary if we are to increase our volume of exports or even maintain our present level of export sales.

Making sales in other countries depends, to a very large extent, upon doing four things successfully. First, going abroad and making personal contact with potential buyers; second, finding out what is required to meet the competition in those markets; third, returning to Canada and producing a product which can compete successfully; and fourth, displaying the product effectively before potential customers.

The incentive I suggest would allow producers to write off 200 per cent of all expenses connected with making sales trips abroad, displaying their products at foreign trade fairs, and any other expenses incurred in sales promotion in the export market in excess of those made in the base year, the year before the plan goes into operation. Not only would all such expenses be completely written off in the year when they are made, but a considerable cash bonus will accrue to the company for its additional sales promotion activities. The kind of incentive I have mentioned will greatly encourage the kind of activity which is essential if increased sales are to be made.

Another thing which the government should do to help increase the sale of Canadian products abroad is to organize "Fly and Buy" missions whereby the important buyers from the principal foreign markets would be brought to Canada once a year to see Canadian products displayed in giant trade shows in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver, and our heavy machinery in the factories where it is manufactured. Such operations have produced spectacular results where they have been used and have paid for themselves many times over by the additional business generated.

Finally, I would like to discuss the need for this country to process more of our raw materials to their finished state, and what should be done to bring this about. For far too long, we have been shipping out of Canada a much too large proportion of our primary products to be processed to their final stages of production in other countries, which thereby gain the many advantages of employment, taxes and profits which accrue from this further processing. We have in Canada the skilled manpower, managerial skill, cheap power and excellent transportation facilities which are needed for this further processing. It is about time we started doing something about getting more of this work for Canada.

Now, what should and can be done? Forty years ago, the government of Ontario introduced a plan which has been largely responsible for the spectacular expansion of the pulp and paper industry in that province during the intervening years. It required companies to process in the province a far higher proportion of the logs which they cut, a large proportion of which they had been shipping in the raw state to paper mills in the United States.

What has worked so well in the case of the pulp and paper industry in Ontario can work equally well in other primary industries right across the country. It should apply to all raw materials which we ship to other countries for further processing. It can succeed equally well because of the great dependence of other countries on our primary products to feed their manufacturing processes.

It is obvious that a certain proportion of the raw materials we produce must be exported in the raw state, but not nearly the proportion that is the case today. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce should now undertake an intensive study of our primary industries to determine what proportion of the primary products we produce can reasonably be required to be processed to their finished state in this country.

Having decided what proportion of our various primary products should be further processed in Canada, we must produce an incentive sufficiently attractive to persuade those who normally export our raw materials that it will be profitable for them to build the plants necessary to carry out this additional processing in Canada.

It has become painfully obvious that the grants now provided by the Department of Regional and Economic Expansion, although useful, have not proved sufficiently attractive to bring to our areas of slow growth sufficient new industry to reverse the dangerously high rates of unemployment that have persisted in those areas for many years.

I believe that in addition to the DREE grants which are now available to areas of slow growth, we must also make available an additional incentive in the form of a graduated scale of federal taxation which will permit a new plant processing primary products in an area of slow growth to pay no federal taxes in the first full year of operation, and gradually increase its tax payments until it is paying full taxation in the fifteenth year. My conversations with leading businessmen across the country have convinced me that this incentive, added to the present DREE grants for slow growth areas, will prove sufficiently attractive to accomplish what has to be done.

● (1600)

The four incentives which I have outlined will pay for themselves many times over in years ahead in the following ways. First, we can drastically cut the presently far too high expenditure on unemployment insurance, which is more than $4 billion a year, by stimulating the economy and enabling people to find work. The potential in this regard is at least $2 billion of the more than $4 billion a year we are at present paying out in unemployment insurance premiums.

Secondly, we can greatly increase tax revenues because more people will be working and paying income taxes, more commodities will be sold and will be subject to additional commodity taxes, and the increased volume of business will lower unit cost of production and make available more profits to tax.

What we need is an incentive strategy to get the economy moving at a satisfactory pace, and I think I have outlined such a program.

Another serious weakness in the budget is that there is no attempt to ensure that Canadian industries and workers will be able to compete on a fair basis with those in the low wage countries of Africa, Asia and Eastern Europe. Those countries pay wages which are a small fraction of those paid in Canada and other industrialized countries, and they are thus able to pay transportation charges and duty, make a very satisfactory profit and sell their products in Canada at prices considerably below the Canadian cost of production.

What we need are import quotas similar to those imposed by the United States and countries of the European Common Market. Those countries require that 80 per cent of domestic needs be supplied by domestic producers, and thus leave the remaining 20 per cent of the market to be competed for by offshore producers.

In Canada, in almost all cases, the government allows foreign producers to compete for any share of the market which they wish. This means that much of our high unemployment today is the result of the kind of unfair competition which is not tolerated by other industrialized countries.

Several years ago those of us who have footwear producers in our ridings persuaded the government to impose import quotas to enable our producers and workers to compete on a reasonable basis with those low wage imports. These quotas worked very well and our footwear industries were able to survive. Those quotas must be renewed by December 1 or they will expire and the footwear industry in Canada will be in chaos. I have pointed this out to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) very strongly on several occasions during the past few months, but so far he has failed to act. I again very strongly urge him to do so in order that a very important industry, the Canadian footwear industry, can survive.

Probably the greatest weakness of the budget is that it will do nothing to bring down the present high interest rates which are doing so much harm to our householders, our businessmen and our farmers. A great many of these people simply cannot maintain their mortgages or finance the operation of their businesses or their farms at the present very high rates being charged today. The government can and should bring these interest rates down to about 13 per cent, which is very slightly above the rate of inflation, without further delay.

Something which I was glad to learn from the budget was that the minister had listened to those of us who had spoken to him and his advisers regarding the harm which would be done if income taxes were raised, or if the indexing of incomes for income tax purposes was discontinued. By not doing these things he has followed a sensible course.

I feel sure that all Canadians were disappointed to learn that the federal government is cutting back substantially on the contributions it has been making to post-secondary education and health care. Without this federal assistance, university and community college education will be a great deal less available to our young people who need this additional education and training as the need for higher skills becomes more evident each day.

The federal cutbacks in the field of health care will greatly reduce the health services available to our people, and this is something which should not be done at any time.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that this budget, while providing some relief in several fields, has failed to deal effectively with the three main problems facing the country today; unemployment, high interest rates and the cost of living. I strongly urge the minister to start correcting these serious weaknesses without further delay.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in entering this debate I am privileged to follow the very distinguished hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) whom I always admire greatly, even though I may not agree with all of the views just expressed.

I want to say at the outset that congratulations are in order to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), who produced what I think is a very worth-while budget in difficult times.

An hon. Member: That's a good neutral word.

Mr. Regan: It is not a neutral word. Let me make it quite clear that hon. members opposite, in their efforts to assess the budget or talk about it, tend to concentrate on what they can find that can conceivably be negative. I noticed, for instance, that they used the whole question period to talk about a luncheon yesterday or about the time that ads were placed, instead of asking constructive questions about the contents of the budget, or making comments on those measures which are important to the people and the commerce of this country.

Let me point out very quickly that the Minister of Finance, in difficult financial times, not just in Canada but in the United States, in Europe and in other countries of the western world, was able to come in with a budget that had no personal income tax increases. Indeed, it contained cuts for most people in relation to the amount of income tax they pay. There was also the important element of equity. By plugging loopholes the minister was bringing about a result in which all people would be taxed on something certainly closer to the same basis, rather than allowing those who happen to be smart enough to know of loopholes to take advantage of them, with other people not being able to do the same. Therefore, I think these achievements of the minister are important.

Then we have the fact, ignored by the opposition parties, that for the second year in a row the minister has been able to produce a budget which includes a substantial reduction in the deficit. At other times they and many people in this country recognize the importance of Canada moving closer to a balanced budget. That is not very easy to achieve, particularly in such times as these. The minister, in doing that for the second year in a row, is probably the only Minister of Finance in this country for a very, very long time, at least as far as I can remember, who has succeeded in that achievement.

I want also to say that the fact that this budget was brought forward with no cutback in financing for health or education is another very important achievement.

● (1610)

I would like to talk about the question of post-secondary education, which I think is a subject of considerable importance and of interest to many people. Canada is at a stage in its history where fundamental choices must be made with respect to the direction that our colleges and universities are heading. I think we have to stand back and examine what skills and general learning we want our young people, and indeed people of other ages who return to education, to derive from their years at university or community college. The choices of which I have spoken must be made by the colleges and universities themselves as well as by individual students and faculty members. At the governmental level, the Constitution gives primary responsibility for education to the provinces, but I am sure every member of this House will quickly recognize that our colleges and universities are national as well as provincial bodies. They are an asset to the nation as a whole.

For a university to achieve any success at all in achieving its primary purposes, it must be more than provincial in its nature. These universities provide strong links among the regions of Canada and with the international community. For these reasons, as well as its involvement in areas such as research, official languages in education and occupational training, the federal government has for some time played a growing and important role in post-secondary education.

This budget marks an important milestone in support by the federal government of post-secondary education and of human resource development generally. It allows us to get on with the job of strengthening the structure of federal support of post-secondary education and human resource development generally. I include under the term of human resource development, federal support of students and support of the colleges and universities in carrying out their central responsibility for creating and transmitting knowledge and critical capacity across a broad spectrum of disciplines as well as for their professional and more occupationally related programs.

During the past year, there has been intensive discussion on the future of post-secondary education and human resource development in our country. Much of this discussion has centred, of course, around the activities of two very important parliamentary task forces; one on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, the other on Employment Opportunities for the '80s. The reports of these two task forces are based on a wide spectrum of views expressed by individuals and groups from across our country. As well, a number of conferences and studies have explored the financing of post-secondary education in the future.

During this period of consultation and discussion, a growing understanding has emerged throughout Canada that a major review is needed of the ways in which the colleges and universities which are faced with financial uncertainty are to maintain excellence in their core undertaking of creating and disseminating knowledge. Similarly, a review is needed of the way in which Canadians are to be provided with the knowledge, skills and critical capacity that they will need in order to take full advantage of the opportunities which will be offered by Canada in the eighties and the nineties.

The challenges facing the educational and training system are considerable. Demographic change suggests that the participation of young persons in post-secondary education may slow down and decline over the next decade. If that happens, there will be new demands in areas of continuing education and in the retraining of mature persons. Projections indicate that demand for occupational skills will likely change markedly in the 1980s.

This brings me to what I consider a very important point. Many people today feel they should only be concerned about training and education that is directed at a particular trade or skill. I do not believe that is correct. We are told by the experts that technological change occurs at such a rate today that many people who enter the work force may have to be retrained two, three or four times for other occupations during the span of their 40 years of work because of technological change doing away with the opportunities provided in their first or second chosen field.

I believe very firmly that a broadly-based general education for as many of our citizens as possible provides the best base upon which retraining can be undertaken. I contend that those people who have had as much general education as possible, liberal arts education, for example, are better equipped to take retraining in unrelated skills compared to the field they were formerly in.

I am also constantly reminded of the fact that in this century the United States, as a result of its higher per capita number of university graduates than other countries, has been a leader in technological innovation.

I think the value of education can be found in many ways. I believe we would be dead in the water, as we say in shipping, if we allowed general learning to be eroded. That is not to say that there is not much more that needs to be done. Emphasis will have to be placed on research and the training of researchers in the universities if Canada is to have the capacity to meet its research and development targets. Major demands will likely be placed on colleges and universities to produce graduates who are able to operate effectively in both our official languages. In this respect, I do not know of anything more important in relation to employment opportunities.

For example, if you look in the newspapers of any major city in this country—and I am not talking about government employment advertising, I am talking about the private sector—there are more and more cases in which having a command of both official languages will result in obtaining a better chance of employment, and in many instances it is an absolute prerequisite for obtaining a job.

Important challenges still remain for the educational system in the area of Canadian knowledge and understanding. Technology is bringing about significant changes in the nature of education and training itself. Major institutional adjustments will be needed as a result of the blurring of lines of demarcation among education, work, training, culture and communications.

These challenges which we face in the development of our human resources are becoming widely understood. There is an equally widespread confidence, I think, among interested groups and individuals that we can successfully meet these challenges, but there is no tendency to underestimate the problem of doing so. The federal government intends to maintain its financial commitment to human resource development and to strengthen the way that support is provided for that area.

In recent weeks there have been those who questioned the federal government's commitment to post-secondary education. They predicted massive cutbacks in federal spending in this area. Advertisements were circulated and those claims were made before the budget came out. The budget has proved, as I have stated since becoming Secretary of State, that those fears are groundless. In particular, I believe the advertisements by the Conservative Party in campus newspapers did a great disservice to students in colleges and universities by raising such needless fears. I also say, from the point of view of practical politics, that the Conservative Party was shortsighted because they have harmed their credibility on the campus to a considerable degree as a result of the students discovering that these were groundless claims.

• (1620)

The federal strategy for strengthening its support of post-secondary education in the eighties can be stated under three headings. The first heading is strengthening federal programs and policies directed to specific national objectives, particularly in providing Canadians with the knowledges and skills needed to exploit the many opportunities offered by our developing economy, in strengthening support of research, in strengthening programs related to official languages in education and to Canadian knowledge, and in support of students and trainees with respect to accessibility, equity and mobility.

The second heading is maintaining a significant level of federal indirect support of the post-secondary infrastructure through the provinces, the students, and the institutions when this is appropriate, given the nature of the federal role. Such indirect support would be provided in a way that ensures accountability to the Parliament of Canada and that money from federal taxpayers is used in the manner indicated. There have been cases where, unfortunately, this has not occurred. I believe that in the negotiations with reference to the future of post-secondary education and the financing thereof in this country, these are matters that must be strengthened and stressed by the Government of Canada.

The third heading is strengthening the mechanisms for effective decision-making and wider participation.

I wonder if I might now comment on each of the elements of this strategy. The first element I referred to is to strengthen federal support of manpower, social and other specific national objectives.

In his presentation to the Parliamentary Task Force on Federal-Provincial Relations, the then secretary of state began the process of defining specific national objectives. The national objectives that should go with federal participation in the cost of post-secondary education that he identified at that time have been well received and appeared to be a solid base on which to build federal policy and programs in the eighties. I intend in the near future to issue a somewhat revised statement of objectives that takes into account the comments we received on those that had been previously made and which I think will provide for more public input into our approach. I then plan to consult with interested groups and individuals with respect to these revised objectives, with respect to the basic principles that underlie federal policy and programs in support of post-secondary education, and also with respect to other matters relating to the achievement of national objectives in the area of education and human resource development.

In some areas we are already starting the process of strengthening federal programs in support of these national objectives. A federal-provincial task force has already identified ways in which student aid programs need improvement. I will be meeting soon with my provincial counterparts to discuss federal official languages in education programs. Development will continue in these areas along with an over-all review of all federal programs in support of human resource development.

The second element of the strategy is to maintain strong federal support of the post-secondary infrastructure. The achievement of human resource development objectives ultimately rests on strong, autonomous and flexible colleges and universities, on a post-secondary system which itself has the incentives and means to provide opportunity for the development of individual talent and the pursuit of national objectives.

Given our constitutional arrangements, it is primarily the job of the provinces to provide the needed financing of the post-secondary infrastructure. However, the federal government, in the interests of ensuring a high standard of post-secondary education and training across the country, has over a considerable number of years supported and will continue to support that infrastructure.

This support has been delivered via the provinces, and also through direct support to students and, where appropriate, given the nature of the federal role, to post-secondary institutions themselves. With respect to support via the provinces, the government finds considerable merit in the recommendation of the Parliamentary Task Force on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements that the post-secondary and health portions of the established programs financing arrangements be separated into individual programs, and that federal financing earmarked for each program area not be used for other purposes. That not only will result in the intentions of those in this House who vote money in approving budgets being carried out, but it will assure Canadians that dollars intended for education are not being diverted at the provincial level for other purposes.

A review is needed of the amount of federal support that should be provided in this way. Under established programs financing, the federal share of post-secondary infrastructure financing has been rising rapidly. In some provinces the provincial share has been decreasing sharply. We must seriously examine arrangements that have the effect of shifting the burden of infrastructure financing away from the provinces, which have primary responsibility for education, and to the federal government.

If an increasing amount of available federal funds is being used in this manner, correspondingly less can be spent on vital national human resource development programs that can by their very nature only be provided by the federal government. The budget notes that unless satisfactory progress is made by March 31, 1983, in jointly developing better federal-provincial arrangements in the areas of education and human resource development, the government could be forced to freeze future per capita EPF cash transfers for post-secondary education at the 1982-83 level or forced to follow other methods of providing support to post-secondary education. I want to express confidence that it is quite possible for the provinces and the national government together to work out satisfactory answers to these problems so that we can achieve a new agreement and a plan for improving the funding and the very structure of post-secondary education before the deadline of April, 1983.

The final element of the strategy involves taking action at the federal level to work toward more effective decision-making and a wider participation in developing policies relating to post-secondary education and human resource development. As part of this review, the process of policy-making in the area of human resource development has too often suffered from a lack of mechanisms whereby all the relevant interests could be represented. The two parliamentary task force reports that I referred to have addressed the problem of decision-making in this area. The recommendations of these reports will be considered very carefully.

In the immediate future I am undertaking a comprehensive review of federal support of post-secondary education. I plan to consult with provinces, with post-secondary organizations and with student and faculty organizations with a view to establishing a means of allowing all parties to have an input to federal policy in this area and with a view to ensuring that stronger national voices are brought to bear upon decision-making in the field of post-secondary education. I also want to say that we are keenly interested in encouraging a somewhat larger involvement by the private sector in post-secondary decision-making.

I would like to conclude by noting the same concern that has been expressed to me by students and representatives of colleges and universities about the future of the post-secondary education system in our country. They all know that there must be changes, that for the system to be relevant it cannot stand on the status quo now any more than at any time in the past. It is a system that has grown and evolved as our needs as a nation required. There have been cutbacks in post-secondary spending in some provinces and there is evidence of deterioration in some aspects of the post-secondary capacity. The federal government recognizes the difficulties that are being faced and we are determined to help overcome them.

● (1630)

The federal government, the Government of Canada, will not cut back on the budget it devotes to human resource programs. It sees them as a great priority in relation to the future wellbeing and wealth of our nation and our citizens. Indeed, by making changes which ensure that federal funds actually reach the education system, and by encouraging others to maintain an equitable share in financing, federal action could increase the total funding devoted to human resource development in Canada. Further, the federal government is prepared to consider strengthening its programs to aid those students that are faced with legitimate financial difficulties. In times of inflation that can be a special problem.

I also want to note that I am concerned, from a point of view of accessibility, with regional inequities and the fact that there are regions and provinces in Canada which have not been able, for one reason or another, to produce as high a percentage of university graduates or highly skilled people as others. I think that is a problem that needs to be addressed.

I also think that the formula under which money has been distributed has perhaps been unfair to some provinces that have tended to have an influx of students from other areas. Adjustment is inevitable and needed. The post-secondary system must remain flexible to meet the changing needs of the Canadian economy and of society.

All developed countries today are facing important challenges with respect to human resource development, not just Canada. The same type of reassessment and policy review is happening in many countries. At a recent OECD conference, for example, participants discussed common challenges resulting from tightened budgets in post-secondary institutions, from ensuring that the post-secondary education remains responsive to the needs of society, and from the growing demands for continuing education for adults.

In Canada, we are addressing these challenges and opportunities from a special position of strength. Our post-secondary system underwent a remarkable and successful expansion in the 1960s and, despite setbacks in some areas, the system remains basically strong. Canada is a leader in many of the technologies that are changing the nature of education and training. With our abundance of natural resources, the economic benefits of a qualified labour force are especially strong in Canada.

In cultural terms, the benefits of a strong education system are also especially high in Canada, where graduates are able to live and work in a multicultural, bilingual country that has a strong network of social and cultural institutions. The strengthening of Canada as a nation and the enhanced well-being of Canadians depends on the success of our collective approach to human resource development. The federal government is determined to play a strong and responsible role in this collective endeavour. As I have stressed, we are anxious that the provinces also meet their responsibilities.

The message from this budget on education is that the Government of Canada is committed to the improvement of post-secondary education. It places a high priority on post-secondary education and is determined to elicit a similar commitment from the provinces.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit one short question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Let me settle a couple of matters first. The minister had completed the time allotted to him. Therefore, I would have to seek the consent of the House in order to allow a question to be put to him.

There may be an offer to defer to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), who also wants to raise a point of order. Therefore, if I see a nod of agreement from hon. members, maybe we can short circuit the matter and proceed immediately to the President of the Privy Council.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member at this stage, but I think it is important for my colleagues across the floor to know in advance what the business of the House will be for Thursday of this week.

The business for this Thursday will be an allotted day, upon the request of the Conservative Party. If we give notice of the resolution on the Constitution tomorrow—and I hope we will be in a position to do so—then Friday will be the first day of debate on the Constitution. We will know for sure tomorrow. At this point I am in a position to confirm that Thursday will be an allotted day.

Mr. Nielsen: I thank the government House leader for that advice. I should point out to the hon. member, as I am sure he will readily agree, that when I suggested November 19 for an allotted day, that was before we knew that the budget would be introduced on November 12 and that we would be debating the budget. I find it rather surprising that we would not continue with the remaining two days of the budget debate. Is there a reason we will not do that, as opposed to proceeding to an allotted day and interrupting the budget debate at a stage when it only requires two days to complete it?

Mr. Pinard: The explanation is very simple: the last two days of debate on the budget can be postponed until one or two days after December 10. I still have three supply days to allot before December 10. Because of the time restraint I have to allot a day very soon, and I am now doing that. November 19 was the date suggested by my hon. colleague. I understand his suggestion was made a long time ago, but I thought he would welcome this opportunity, since Thursday is a long day and all the Conservative members will be present this week when we have so many non-confidence votes. So I still designate Thursday as an allotted day and I am sure it pleases my hon. friend.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment of Mr. Wilson (p. 12752).

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, will the minister permit one short question with regard to his speech?

Adjournment Motion

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to pose the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thacker: This concerns an issue that is current around the country affecting many Canadians, particularly students, namely, whether or not the government, as a matter of policy, is considering or actively planning a move into the voucher system where government payments would be made directly to students, who would then choose the university they wished to attend. Will the minister clarify for the House what the government policy is with regard to that at this point in time?

Mr. Regan: I thank the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), who has always shown a very keen and sincere interest in post-secondary education, for his pertinent question.

The voucher system is something that has been suggested by a number of groups, individuals and institutions. It has been examined throughout the country. At the present time it is not part of government policy to use the voucher system. I think that it is one of the options that should be examined in the course of the oncoming negotiations between the provinces and the federal government. But I do not think it is a panacea of answers to the problems which exist. From the point of view of all hon. members of the House who would desire that a student recognize what percentage of the funds for his or her education comes from the national taxes of the Government of Canada, it would achieve that.

• (1640)

On the other hand, there are some downsides to it. There is a problem where institutions might almost be bidding against each other for students who carry around such a value to their coffers in their person by way of vouchers. I would say today that there are circumstances which should be examined to see whether it is capable of being improved to overcome the downsides which seem to exist. I have not taken any policy position in favour of or against the voucher system at this point.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis)—Housing—Guidelines used by officials contacting home owners on mortgage renewals. (b) Advice given by officials. (c) Request that minister make statement on motions; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Human Rights—Reported plan to establish civilian internment camps. (b) Terms of Standing Order published in The Canada Gazette; the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—The Environment—Increased grants for construction of municipal sewage treatment systems.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment of Mr. Wilson (p. 12752).

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party and as its housing critic, I join with most Canadians in expressing my deep concern that the Liberal budget has denied the realities of the economic crisis in Canada, has refused to take positive steps, particularly in the area of interest rates and unemployment, and is totally insensitive to the very serious social consequences for workers, for children, for the elderly, for average families and, particularly, for poor Canadians.

Before addressing the question of housing, I want to speak first on behalf of Canada's children. I should like the record of the House to show that the budget deliberately ignored the recommendations of the Commission on the International Year of the Child and of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs which concerned the urgent needs of Canada's children. These recommendations submitted to the House last spring urged immediate federal action and federal leadership to deal with poverty as it affects young children and their families. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) completely ignored this very important and urgent report. Because of this budget omission, millions of Canadian children will continue to be deprived of adequate nutrition, decent shelter and necessary child care. Many are being damaged and abused because their parents simply cannot cope with the continuous stress, insecurity and unemployment which the budget predicts will continue. The plight of native children is a national disgrace. The government continues to ignore situations which would be intolerable even in Third World countries.

The minister said that the budget was concerned with equity. If the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) were here, I think he would say that this is another "MacEachenism", a half-truth. I ask the Minister of Finance whether this neglect of Canada's children is equitable, moral, or even financially feasible? The budget should have contained major reforms to the child tax credit system as a first step toward an adequate guaranteed income. The $3 increase per month in favour of lower-income families, which the minister said is a reform of the child tax credit system, will not even cover the cost of babies' diapers.

Low-income men and women who stay at home to perform parenting roles with young children, especially many single parents, suffer considerable loss of necessary income. We believe they should receive higher tax credits and Canada pension coverage. Also the budget should allow expanded income tax deductions for the cost of daycare for working parents. Federal assistance should be expanded greatly to make good quality daycare services available in every community across the country. Surely this would have been a wise investment in Canada's future generation. Are human resources less important than gas and oil and national defence? We will pay the social cost of this negligence. It will cost far more than prevention would have cost had it been included in the budget.

As the NDP housing critic I want to concentrate on the budget as it affects Canada's serious housing crisis. In preparation for a study of the document, I listed several questions related to housing concerns in Canada. Let us take a look at the answers which are now apparent. First, would there be relief for home owners facing mortgage renewals? We know now that the government offered merely a crumb, and a pretty crummy crumb it is.

Second, would there be help for renters? There was nothing in the budget for renters—no shelter allowances or increases in non-profit housing, which is about the only affordable type of rental shelter.

Third, would the budget stimulate rental construction? We know that MURBs are out now, thank goodness, and that the government offered no-interest loans of $7,500 for some 15,000 rental units over the next two years.

Fourth, would there be increases in RRAP funds for renovations and home repairs? No, there was none.

Fifth, would the government help victims of urea formaldehyde foam insulation? This is a government obligation since a government-sponsored program encouraged the use of this poisonous type of foam. There was no help for UFFI victims.

Sixth, would the CMHC budget be increased, even increased to the amount allocated in 1976? No. It was not.

Seventh, would there be a lowering of interest rates, particularly mortgage interest rates, the major cause of the housing disaster? Of course not.

Eighth, what about no excess profits tax on banks and increases in capital gains tax? Of course there were no taxes on bank profits and capital gains tax remains the same.

Ninth, would there be a reinstatement of the community grants program for land banking which is also urgently needed for affordable housing? This is something about which municipalities were particularly concerned over the past year. No, again. All we have is a token amount in the budget for rental construction; that is all there is which is positive. The budget made no impact at all on Canada's housing crisis.

The minister responsible for CMHC has left the House; one can understand why. He should hang his head in shame, not brag about the budget as he did the other day. He does not make any sense. He has not read the budget, to be bragging about it. He told home owners that this long awaited budget would help solve their mortgage problems. Hon. members will recall that he said it would help some 100,000 people renewing mortgages at over 30 per cent of their incomes. That is just for mortgage, interest and taxes; forget about the high cost of fuel and other household costs. He said that it would help them out of their dire straits and would save their homes for them. He was wrong, very wrong. The government decided to rescue Canadian home owners from the disaster created by high interest rates by imposing on them a certified disaster—the Canada mortgage renewal plan. This is a reincarnation of the old AHOP. We know how disastrous that was. It would put home owners in bondage for their lifetime.

● (1650)

We expected the Minister of Finance to make the banks bleed a little. He certainly did not do that in this budget. It is a bloodbath all right but not for the banks; it is the home owners who will be the blood donors. Bankers are laughing all the way to their banks. Instead of lowering mortgage interest rates, the government will subsidize continuing high mortgage interest rates. That hardly gets at solutions. Instead of requiring the banks to establish an affordable mortgage lending portfolio from their billions of dollars of profits—$1.4 billion in the first three quarters of this year—the government will guarantee mortgage interest deferral plans. This will bring in thousands more dollars to the mortgagors but will keep home owners in debt for the rest of their lives.

The Canada mortgage renewal program in this budget is a program for guaranteed usury, sponsored and encouraged by government. It is no solution at all. The tragedy is that many home owners—and I am sure hon. members know many of them—have no choice but to use the interest deferral scheme. They cannot sell their home without considerable loss, since prices have dropped and there are few buyers. Even if they could sell, where would they live? In most localities there are few rentals available for families, and those that are available have very high rents. There are long waiting lists for co-op housing which the government did nothing to increase in this abominable budget.

I want to illustrate the hopeless situation that a family of four in my riding of Vancouver East finds itself in today. This family has an income of about $30,000. The head of the household came from Calgary to Vancouver East in 1980. He is the principal of a local school and had saved $25,000 for a down payment which he put on a very modest three-bedroom home. He took out a $68,000 mortgage for the balance at 13 per cent and is paying $774 per month. Although that represented a little over 30 per cent of the gross family income, they could manage it. His wife has to remain at home because she has a very small infant to look after. On November 1 this year the family was forced to renew the mortgage at 22 per cent. This shot their mortgage payments up to a phenomenal $1,248 per month, or over 50 per cent of their gross income. I wish the minister was in the House because I think his own mortgage is at 14 per cent.

Because the family had used their savings for the down payment, they have equity in their house and therefore will not qualify for a government grant. Yet even with an income of $30,000 per year, this family will not have enough left in the budget for food with an increased mortgage. They allocate $320 per month for food, and of course they cannot make it on that. They will probably have to arrange to defer interest of $250 per month through this Canada mortgage scheme. They will not get this as a grant because they have equity in the house. This still leaves them with $1,000 to pay, or close to 40 per cent of their income. A year from now they will lose the $250 deferral arrangement and will go to the maximum rate. In addition, the deferral amount will be added to the principal so their debt load will increase rather than decrease.

This mortgage deferral scheme offers nothing to this family, Mr. Speaker, and I am afraid that is pretty typical. Perhaps the rates are not quite as high in some other cases but the penalties will certainly hold true for most hardship cases across the country. Recently this man said he works harder and harder and gets less and less. He thought that he would probably have a better chance buying a lottery ticket.

I should like to quote from a statement by Jack Munroe to the IWA regional convention held recently in Vancouver. He said:

> About 10,000 IWA members from B.C. (8,000 spouses, 18,000 children) have lost their livelihoods as a direct consequence of the staggering interest rates imposed by Canadian and U.S. federal governments. Some have lost their homes, and virtually all are paying hundreds of dollars per month more for their mortgages or rents. For a principal of $50,000—modest in light of B.C. housing prices—renewed September 1, 1980, for one year, the increase alone in interest charges effective this September absorbs $3.20 per hour in pre-tax earnings if the borrower is lucky enough to work full time. Negotiated wage increases are ranging from $1.25 to $1.90 per hour.

The Minister of Finance complained about wage increases. What does he expect when workers have to face this kind of expense? As my hon. friends says, they are working for the banks.

Only $35 million has been allocated for the mortgage deferral grants this year. It is a mere pittance and will not meet the needs of the 40,000 people whom the minister himself said are in danger of losing their homes. Many people will not qualify for the grant even though they cannot afford to live on their incomes. Any way you look at it, Mr. Speaker, it is an inadequate answer to mortgage problems.

We in the NDP do not agree with Liberal budget proposals to deal with the critical mortgage interest problem. Mortgage interest deferment adds to the total debt load of the home owner. As with the AHOP disaster, it is based on a faulty assumption that incomes will go up after a year when, in fact, we know that real incomes for most workers hardly keep pace with inflation. It places no obligation on financial institutions to share the load and, indeed, adds to their long-term profit margin. This is what the minister has tried to do in his budget. While it may lessen monthly mortgage payments temporarily for a few home owners, it merely postpones the agony for another year. The Minister of Finance should not have listened to the banks. This is no real solution; it is a seduction by the banker.

For some months we in the NDP have been saying that the only solution to high mortgage rates for both home owners and landlords is positive government intervention. Mortgage interest rates should be removed from the risks and costs of a fluctuating interest rate policy. Stable, long-term mortgages should be reinstated. We used to have them through CMHC. This should again become a direct function of CMHC.

We have advocated, as my leader repeated yesterday, a freeze to maintain present mortgage interest rates for six months. During this period the government should bring in legislation to reduce interest rates for mortgages to the rate of inflation, at about 13 per cent or 14 per cent. We believe that affordable shelter is an essential commodity, a human necessity, which must not be subject to the exploitation and manipulation of the marketplace. That is the philosophy of both the Conservatives and the Liberals.

We also urge that there be controls on speculation in the housing field and an opportunity for young families to get into modest starter homes at 30 per cent of their incomes. This is a government responsibility and a bank responsibility.

The Minister of Finance talked about equity in tax reforms yet he took no steps in this budget to increase the capital gains tax on housing speculation, nor did he bring in an excess profits tax on banks. The NDP recommends that 100 per cent of the profit derived from the sale of properties which are not the primary residence of a home owner should be taxed. This capital gains tax would discourage the kind of speculation which caused extreme jumps in house prices in markets such as Vancouver. It would also avoid dramatic price slumps and the tragic losses which some people face today when they have to sell their homes at drastically reduced prices. Many people in my city, if they are forced to sell their homes, will lose everything they have paid into them because prices have slumped so much.

● (1700)

I want to briefly speak about housing starts and their relationship to jobs—no news to anyone in this House, I hope. However, the budget ignores the fact completely that there are spin-offs for workers and spin-offs to the economy generally when we have a healthy housing industry. Unfortunately, because of high interest rates, housing starts in Canada are predicted to fall to 135,000 in 1982. We need at least 220,000 simply to keep up with housing needs, let alone make up for the reduced starts in the last few years, the lowest level in recent history. Not only will it leave Canadians desperate for a place to live, but it will also contribute to the present mass unemployment that we have in the lumber and construction industries.

Ten thousand IWA workers are laid off today because of the lack of housing starts in Canada and the U.S. The plywood industry alone can bring thousands of jobs to Canadians if it is expanded for Canadian housing. It is predicted that unemployment will go as high as 100,000 workers laid off and lining up for unemployment insurance benefits at this time next year. Those lay-offs will be directly related to the high interest policy of this government.

The housing programs in this budget will help to build only 15,000 units of rental housing, which will be a mere drop in the bucket. It is good as far as it goes, but a government policy is needed to lower mortgage interest rates so that we can build at least 250,000 new homes. This is the minimum required for Canadians each year.

I would like to quote from a statement given by the Canadian Council on Social Development at a press conference this morning:

> The treatment of low-income people in the budget is a complete disappointment . . . They have ignored the plight of over 500,000 families who pay more than 30 per cent of their gross income for rents.

The most serious housing problems, of course, are in the rental field. We think it is bad for home owners, but it is much worse for tenants. This was confirmed in the minister's CMHC report which he signed and forwarded to the cabinet; yet he has done boom-all about it in trying to persuade the Minister of Finance to put some teeth in this budget. Many tenants pay well over 60 per cent of their incomes on rents, and they have little security of tenure. Over 50 per cent of Canadians will remain tenants all their lives. This is a lifestyle which is now here to stay. High mortgage interest rates have been a major deterrent to rental construction as well as to housing starts. As a result of zero vacancy rates in many of our major cities from coast to coast, rents have skyrocketed and rent controls are ineffective in most cities. I might say that the minister responsible for CMHC favours doing away with rent controls.

What does this budget do to relieve the situation? Does the government introduce plans to lower interest rates? We know that it does not. This would, of course, encourage rental construction, and rental construction where we could be sure there would be adequate rent controls. Does the government increase the budget for non-profit and government-owned housing? Of course it does not. The only solution that we have is this program for low income and moderate-income families. Did it bring back programs to help land banking and to service cheaper land? That was another omission, as I mentioned earlier.

In this budget, the government offers no-interest loans of up to $7,500 per unit to stimulate some 15,000 rental units over the next two years. This hardly meets the demand in Vancouver where we need 20,000 units right now, today, let alone the rental needs for construction across Canada. Government loans should be applied only to rent control housing. It is essential that investors not be allowed to sell off subsidized rental stock as condominiums. This is what was done with MURB construction. Built into that program, we must be sure that the minister is requiring that these remain affordable rental units.

I congratulate the Minister of Finance, who is also not in the House, for at least removing MURB tax write-offs. Once again, he overruled the minister for CMHC, who has been extolling the virtues of MURBs for the last year. He wanted tax write-offs for multiple unit residential buildings. Perhaps we can be modest and say that our continued criticism finally got through, at least to the Minister of Finance.

The government lost $45 million in MURB tax write-offs last year, and it gained very little increase in the stock of affordable rental housing as a result. It is true that it got some luxury apartments, and today in the House we heard that they are the kind which are going up because construction people rush to try and take advantage of MURBs. However, affordable rental accommodation was usually demolished in order to build MURB-type luxury apartments. This was no solution.

There are a number of very positive steps that we in this party feel should have been taken and could have been taken to improve the housing situation if this government only had the will to change its priorities. Most housing developments have spin-offs to create more jobs and reduce lay-offs in our building trades and our forest industry. We have the trees, we have lots of skilled tradesmen and skilled labour, and we have a desperate need for housing. What we lack, of course, is government initiative and long range planning.

The priorities of this government's budget are all wrong. How can the minister justify increased expenditures for defence? I hope hon. members in the House will listen to this. Defence expenditures will increase from $5.9 billion this year to $9.8 billion over the next five years. There is a five-year plan for defence, but there is not even a two-year plan for building. The minister allocates only $350 million for housing compared to $5.9 billion for defence. Why does the minister responsible for CMHC not come into this House with a five-year plan for housing with some teeth in it, such as the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) must have done for his department?

Housing is a social investment; it is not just a welfare program. We are investing in permanent structures for people. It is an essential commodity and a human necessity. Surely Canadians have the right to expect a decent, affordable place to live. Surely our country can afford to invest in housing if we can spend $9.8 billion on defence in one year.

The New Democratic Party will continue to press for the following housing priorities which we believe Canadians need and deserve. First of all, concerning interest rate policy, the government should freeze mortgage renewal rates, not subsidize increases. Legislation should be introduced immediately to require stable, long-term mortgages with interest paid at the rate of inflation. CMHC should get back into the direct lending field and financial institutions should be required under the Bank Act to establish an affordable mortgage lending portfolio.

Second, we need long-range planning. CMHC should, of course, come in with a five-year plan for housing development based on population movements to the areas of growth where we have the greatest housing problems. We have problems across the country in urban centres. It is interesting to note that most of the immigrants also settle in the urban centres which have the lowest available housing and a zero rental vacancy rate.

We should also be thinking of the increasing number of young people, documented in the budget papers, who are forming households and need homes. There should be integrated planning with other government levels. This is absolutely essential. There should not be little trips out to see the different ministers of housing to talk about mortgage referral; there should be real, comprehensive planning which will involve land banking and housing programs for the future.

Concerning land for housing, federal and provincial Crown lands should be assessed, released and serviced for affordable housing developments. We have land. We could trade some of it off, in certain areas, for land banking programs which are absolutely essential. Along with that, we need long-term leasing policies which are desirable to retain affordable housing in the future. This is a social investment; it is not a giveaway.

● (1710)

With respect to native and northern housing, the federal government must assist with infrastructure and servicing costs on Indian reserves and in the remote areas of our country. It must provide adequate funds for new housing and home repairs. Assistance should be given for home repairs, renovations and energy conservation. RRAP funding should have been increased by this budget and the funding spread more widely. However, the money in the home insulation fund for this year should go first for reparation purposes to urea formaldehyde insulation victims. These people should be compensated and given first priority in this year's budget. This assistance could come from the allocation for CHIP or RRAP. As I have already mentioned, rental and co-op housing is another priority of the New Democratic Party which must be adequately financed by CMHC.

Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation financing should be beefed up. The level of financing should return to at least the 1976 amount, which was $1.8 billion. They need to decentralize operations and give practical help to home builders and non-profit developers so they can build and repair affordable housing. We hope the minister responsible for CMHC will somehow develop a conscience and show real leadership when he presents the proposed revisions to the National Housing Act. Palliatives for the minister's real estate friends are not enough. Canada needs and deserves a long-range plan for housing development with policies and a budget to support it. This is the time when the Liberal government must recognize that affordable housing is a social right for all Canadians. This is a mean and regressive budget and Canadians deserve better.

The Budget—Mr. Herbert

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, my remarks on the budget presented in the House last week by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) will concentrate on fiscal transfer payments to provincial and municipal treasuries and also to groups and individuals. Particular emphasis will be placed on the extent to which the province of Quebec and all Quebecois directly benefit from federal funding paid from the taxes of Canadians in all provinces.

First, I have a couple of general observations. The Minister of Finance can certainly be said to be following a policy of moderate fiscal restraint. Faced with the possibility of a downturn in the economy and the obvious need to reduce the government's deficit, it was difficult to introduce new spending programs. To have undertaken an expansionary budget when inflation is so strong would have been irresponsible. Inflation is the key obstacle to achieving sustained improvement in growth, employment and living standards. A reduction in the deficit will relieve some of the pressure on monetary policy and interest rates and will create a climate conducive to lowering inflationary expectations.

Nevertheless, many Canadians are facing real hardship caused by high interest rates, inflation and unemployment. Those hardest hit have been home buyers, farmers and small businesses. Budgetary measures to alleviate hardship have been targeted at these groups.

For most taxpayers the federal tax will be reduced. Those who have been enjoying tax breaks and preferences will no longer be able to escape paying taxes as they have in the past. All Canadians will be treated equally. This is just and fair.

Members of Parliament have been receiving representations from groups expressing their fears that a cut in federal fiscal transfer payments to the provinces would result in cuts in the amounts that the provinces provide for various programs such as hospital and health care, social services and post-secondary education. It has always been my point of view that, even though these programs are administered exclusively by the provincial governments, a major part of the necessary funding should come from the federal treasury. I will be explaining later why I believe in this approach.

However, I saw no logical reason for a continuation of the revenue guarantee payments that were started in 1972 and I expressed this opinion to the Minister of Finance in an open letter in August of this year. The elimination of this payment, now contained in the budget, will reduce spending next year on this item alone by over $800 million.

Let me hasten to add that this does not mean less revenue for the provinces. As a result of the closing of the tax loopholes, the nine provinces which tie their personal tax system to the federal collection will receive additional revenues from personal income tax.

Mr. Jacques Parizeau, the Quebec Minister of Finance, has long maintained that the federal tax loopholes should be closed. If Mr. Parizeau now follows the federal example, with which course of action he is already in agreement, then Quebec's provincial personal tax revenues will also increase, thus counterbalancing the ending of the revenue guarantee payments. While the federal government will realize savings of $915 million in 1982-1983, provincial and territorial revenues will increase by $1,084 million over the same period as a result of tax changes proposed in the budget.

I also suggested in my letter to the Minister of Finance that the present method of calculating equalization payments to the less wealthy provinces be revised. The system is antiquated and inequitable. Now the method is to be changed.

A vast number of programs that are exclusively the responsibility of the provinces are financed by huge federal transfer payments that put tens of billions of dollars into provincial treasuries. In every province, block funding or per capita payments are the cornerstone of support for health care, medicare and hospitals. In the case of post-secondary education, our universities receive well over half the moneys they spend from the transfer of federal funds. In other programs, tens of millions of dollars are transferred to the provinces to provide subsidies for projects ranging from public transportation to financial support for sewer and water works.

The Canadian government has provided three-quarters of the total of government grants for hundreds of municipal projects. For example, in the constituency of Vaudreuil, a large arena at St. Polycarpe and magnificent municipal libraries at Pierrefonds and Ile Bizard have been built thanks to federal funding.

Rent subsidies for low-cost housing are shared by the federal and provincial governments, and in many of these projects the federal government has provided all or most of the financing or has provided a guarantee for the mortgage. In many cases the mortgage was provided at extremely low or subsidized interest terms.

A variety of other programs, for example, contributions for the development of provincial historical sites, have resulted in transfers into provincial treasuries with no requirement that they be detailed in provincial accounts, and accordingly with no accountability and almost no visibility. Federal transfers of funds are certainly not made exclusively into provincial treasuries. Municipalities receive considerable sums from the federal treasury in lieu of taxes. While almost all municipalities have a federal institution, such as a post office, many receive a financial benefit that is certainly far in excess of the cost of any services received in return. This is particularly true in the constituency of Vaudreuil at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, where the magnificent veterans' hospital is located, and at Rigaud, where there is a huge national revenue complex.

While mentioning these federal complexes, we should not forget the direct benefits the local communities derive from this practical decentralization of the federal presence. The number of federal departments represented is certainly not limited to the post office, veterans affairs and national revenue. Again, in Vaudreuil it includes such variety as a fisheries research station, a Parks Canada national historic site and federal offices of other government departments. All contribute directly to municipal revenues, provide employment and help to stimulate the provincial economy.

A great number of other institutions that are considered a provincial responsibility are supported by federal funds, such as municipal and provincial museums, and there are capital cost grants for hospital construction. Subsidies are provided for housing for veterans and for tourist information centres. Funding is made available for the construction of underpasses, such as that at Dorion in my riding where such a tragic accident occurred so many years ago. More recently the underpass has been constructed at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, and funds are now being requested for an underpass at Terrasse Vaudreuil. All this massive federal funding I have mentioned so far is made available across this country on a per capita basis; that is, according to provincial population.

● (1720)

Now I want to turn to those programs that are of special benefit to the province of Quebec. The largest in dollar value is the equalization program, the unconditional transfer of federal taxes into the Quebec provincial treasury that has contributed in this one program alone some 10 per cent of Quebec's revenue this year, or over $1.7 billion. This generous sharing of Canada's wealth is to be enshrined in our new Constitution. Fifty per cent of the moneys distributed under the equalization program go to Quebec. Also, huge sums go into the provincial treasury to support second language instruction. Quebec is again the major beneficiary.

Support for industry as well as provincial works from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concentrated in Quebec as a targeted area for funding. The winter works programs of the Department of Employment and Immigration are also most heavily funded in Quebec, where the levels of unemployment are greater than the national average.

While speaking of unemployment, in large measure accentuated in Quebec by the uncertainties created by talk of separation and problems created or fostered by Bill 101, I would like to underline another benefit of national sharing. While contributions to the unemployment insurance fund on a per capita basis are approximately the same across this country, this is not the case when one looks at the benefits paid out. In 1979, for example, payments per capita in Quebec were over $240 while payments were less than half this figure in Ontario, and only one-quarter or $60 per capita in Alberta. For every $3 contributed in Alberta, only $1 is paid out. In Quebec $3 is paid out for every $2 contributed. One cannot be proud of high unemployment, but Mr. Lévesque should not forget that the unemployed who cannot find jobs because of a lack of investment are receiving benefits that are paid in large measure by contributions from other provinces.

One can argue as to the reasons for the high unemployment in Quebec, but there are other groups of citizens in Quebec who receive a higher level of financial support than the national average. There are more persons receiving more money from the guaranteed income supplement of the old age security program. There are also more widows between 60 and 65 receiving the spouse's allowance. This is an historical characteristic that is financed by federal dollars.

At the other end of the scale, daycare centres, which are financed 50 per cent by the federal government under the Canada Assistance Plan, receive 2.5 times as much per capita in Quebec as their counterparts in the neighbouring province of Ontario.

I want to make reference to two other major support programs of particular benefit to Quebec residents. The first is the federal energy program that subsidizes the imported oil used in the province of Quebec. This ensures that Quebec car, truck and bus drivers pay no more for their gas than is paid in the western oil producing provinces. Likewise, the home owner and apartment dweller can heat their residences with heating oil heavily subsidized by a federal program. This federal financial support is Canadians sharing with Canadians and would certainly not continue in the event that Quebec separated.

Of special benefit to Quebec and to farmers in the constituency of Vaudreuil are the millions of dollars that subsidize the dairy industry, which is the backbone of the Quebec farming community.

All these programs, equalization, language training, energy subsidies, daycare centres, pensions, unemployment benefits, winter works programs, milk subsidies and many others, bring to Quebec residents federal contributions far in excess of any amounts that would be calculated solely on the basis of population.

The federal government has not touched any of these programs that are of special benefit to Quebec, despite the heavy pressure to reduce the deficit by reducing spending. In the past it has been Quebecers who have been able to contribute to the prosperity of our country. In the future it will again be the turn of Quebecers to play the part of big brother and to help those less fortunate. But today, faced with a climate of economic uncertainty that has been fuelled by talk of separation, Quebecers are able to share and participate in the benefits that flow from our federal system of government.

I would like to discuss another of the major benefits of the federal system of government in this great country of ours, the equalization that comes from a national system of tax collection.

Everyone is aware of the higher level of provincial taxation that is applicable in Quebec. A Quebecer, this year, pays on a $15,000 taxable income a marginal tax rate 30 per cent higher than the Ontario resident. The higher the taxable income, the greater is the amount that a Quebecer must pay in provincial income tax. Thus many high salaried Quebecers who have the option available to them have moved to Ontario. Airline pilots are an excellent example. Quebec loses not just the tax difference but the total provincial tax that would have been paid. In addition, of course, the economy suffers from the reduced buying of furnishings, food and services when a high salaried person moves out. Fortunately, the individual who moves to Ontario still pays the same federal tax and the moneys contributed help to pay for the programs that benefit all Quebecers.

The tax base is smaller per capita in Quebec than in Alberta, for example. Because everyone pays federal income tax on the same scale, Albertans, whose average salaries are higher, make a bigger contribution to the federal treasury. However, the distribution of federal funds either treats everyone alike, such as is the case with medicare and post-secondary education funding, or it favours the less wealthy provinces, such as with equalization, unemployment insurance payments, work programs and regional economic expansion funding. Thus a federal system shares not only in the way it spends, but also in the way it collects taxes.

Incidentally, it may be of interest to Quebecers to have the precise figures on the amount of the reduction in federal income tax payable in 1982 attributable to the budgetary measures introduced last week. A family of four persons with one wage earner would pay $425 less on an income of $15,000, $463 less on an income of $20,000, $538 less on $30,000, and the reduction would be $798 in the case of the head of a family of four earning $50,000. In Quebec this year, provincial revenues fall well below provincial expenditures despite a massive input of federal funding. It is not an exaggeration to suggest that if Quebec were not a full partner in sharing Canadian wealth, it would be facing bankruptcy.

• (1730)

Can we not be proud that the provinces that have the least to lose from federal program cuts are so willing to continue to share their good fortune with their fellow Canadians in other parts of the country? These are the same provinces, ruled by Tory governments, that have deplored the federal deficit, but not one provincial spokesman has suggested program cuts that would directly impact the already hard-pressed and less wealthy provinces.

I want to turn, for a few minutes, to the question of what impact the budget will have on the individual. It is true, for example, that a doctor who earns $100,000, using tax shelters to the full, could now be paying $23,000 more in taxes. But it is equally true that the doctor with the same $100,000 income who was not using tax shelters will pay $5,000 less in taxes.

Some 12 million taxpayers will pay less and 800,000 will pay more. Almost all those earning $30,000 or less will pay less income tax as a result of the budgetary measures.

The Minister of Finance has attempted to make far-reaching budgetary reform of the personal tax system. A system which allows persons who earn $100,000 without having to pay a cent of income tax needs a radical overhaul. One columnist wrote, "They skipped, and slipped and slithered and hopped their way through tax loopholes."

I believe in equity, equality and fairness and I applaud the move by the Minister of Finance to end the tax shelters that were mostly of benefit to the high income individuals.

As the details of this budget are discussed, undoubtedly some minor inequities will be found and if past experience is any judge, modifications will be introduced. However, the broad principle of equitable treatment has been established and will be maintained.

While I can understand and be somewhat sympathetic toward the arguments of the members of the New Democratic Party, I have neither understanding nor sympathy for the Tory response. They indicated the continuing inconsistencies in their criticisms when they supported the New Democratic Party subamendment on Monday evening.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Herbert: In summary, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to see the federal deficit reduced but not placed on the backs of the provincial governments. The reduction in government borrowing resulting from a lower deficit will reduce the pressures on interest rates, ease the inflationary pressures and, to some extent, ease the borrowing problems of the business sector. I wanted to see a commitment to continue federal financing for health care, medicare and post-secondary education. I felt particularly that the present activities of our universities were threatened. I wanted to see an end to the revenue guarantee and I wanted a revision to the method of calculation of equalization payments.

The Minister of Finance has chosen an appropriate level of restraint during a difficult period when it would have been easy to loosen the purse strings. I have no hesitation whatsoever in expressing my full approval of the budgetary measures introduced in the House by the Minister of Finance last Thursday evening.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Before I begin my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) who agreed to speak after the dinner recess so I could speak at this time.

Two of the main themes in the budget as laid out by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) were restraint and equity. If restraint and equity, as prescribed in the budget, can be achieved together with the economic development strategy outlined by the Minister of Finance in the document that accompanied the budget, then this will form the basis for economic renewal.

I wish to deal with the first two themes in the context of the fabrications of the official opposition, particularly the fabrications contained yesterday in the speech by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). We know that the central theme of the budget, which is to restrain government expenditures in order to reduce the borrowing of capital, is crucial to the government's strategy. A reduction of government expenditures will assist private sector borrowing by reducing pressure on credit markets and therefore easing interest rates.

The government estimates that the deficit will decrease from $10.1 billion in this fiscal year to $5.5 billion in the fiscal year 1983-84. This is indeed a laudable achievement and one for which I am sure the official opposition would be pleased to take credit if it were the government. The official opposition has been harping away for many years on the need for the government to pare its expenditures and operate in a more businesslike way. The government is doing this but in a way which restores and safeguards equity in the economic system.

In his speech yesterday, the Leader of the Opposition made what I consider to be an incomprehensible assertion: that there is no evidence of restraint on the part of the government and that government expenditures are growing by 22 per cent this year while revenues in the next two years will be up by about 52 per cent. Those assertions are not borne out by fact. These falsehoods expressed by the Leader of the Opposition were compounded when he further stated that the energy taxes this year will be up by $4.2 billion.

I would like to set the record straight. The increase in government expenditures and revenues this year and next reflect, on one hand, an increase in public debt charges and on the other hand, energy revenues. Government expenditure restraint is real and federal financial outlays, excluding public debt charges, are expected to grow by 11.9 per cent in 1981-82 and 11.1 per cent in 1982-83. This is less than the growth of the GNP, and this must be emphasized. Furthermore, compared with last year's budget, the total outlays as a share of the GNP are lower in each year of the fiscal plan to 1983-84. The drop in the share of outlays, excluding public debt charges, is particularly dramatic. It is true that energy revenues do grow $3.7 billion from 1981 to 1983 but not by $4.2 billion as asserted by the Leader of the Opposition. Moreover, it is misleading to suggest that this growth in energy revenue provides a significant reduction in the deficit. In fact, compared with energy revenues in last year's budget, energy revenues are down by $.7 billion in 1981-82 and up $0.9 billion and $1.5 billion in 1981-82 and 1982-83 respectively.

The Leader of the Opposition, who should be pleased that the government is restraining its expenditures, made another false accusation yesterday when he stated that as a share of the GNP, federal revenues are the highest since 1946. Again, this is just not true. Federal revenues on a national accounts basis accounted for 21.9 per cent of the GNP in 1946, and in 1981-82 revenues account for 20.9 per cent of the GNP. In the year 1982-83, they will be 21.2 per cent of the GNP.

A proper way of examining the extent of government activity is on a public accounts basis. Only net petroleum compensation payments and the government contribution to unemployment insurance benefits are recorded as budgetary expenditures to the extent that they are direct subsidies and transfers. Budgetary revenues declined from 18.7 per cent in 1974-75 to 15.7 per cent in 1980-81 as a result of discretionary tax decreases over this period. Over the course of the fiscal plan, revenues will rise to 17.2 per cent of the GNP in 1982-83 and remain at about this level to 1985-86. The burden of taxation is less than it was in the 1974-75 period.

That was a period, it should be remembered, that was marked by lower deficits than they are at present.

● (1740)

Another point that the Leader of the Opposition made yesterday which must be refuted is that essentially this is a recessionary budget. He maintains that because the budget documents show weak growth in the United States. A pre-condition to renewed growth is a sustained permanent reduction in inflation. The strategy of deficit reduction and lowering of inflation and interest rates is intended to be pursued over the medium term.

In the short run, if the economy is somewhat weaker than assumed, the easing of interest rates will proceed more quickly. The pace of deficit reduction will proceed more slowly in response to the slowing of economic activity. I am confident the fiscal position is on track. It would be a mistake to try to fine tune the economy in response to one or two months of economic indicators.

I thought it useful to set forward those facts to refute some of the very questionable, erroneous and misleading assertions made yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition. One should not be surprised that he would twist the facts, read selectively from the budget documents and play on the fears of Canadians because he has been doing this for the last five years. Canadians are on to his game. Hopefully they will not be misled. Nevertheless it is important for those who are led down that path by him that the record be straightened.

I want to deal with the other theme of equity at more length in the context of the housing problem that we have in this country. In the government's programs of the last few years we have seen the Liberal approach, the approach of fairness and equity, being applied to housing contruction. It has been acknowledged by the OECD and other reputable outside analysts that Canadians are remarkably well housed. One has only to travel abroad, to European countries where economic growth is still high, to see that housing conditions there do not compare with those in our country.

I want to deal more particularly with the whole question of who should receive help in terms of mortgage assistance. Who in society should receive help, those who have mortgages on their homes or the renters, or a mix of both?

A lot of wild assertions have been made in this House in the last while that the government was not responding to the crisis being brought about by high interest rates. All of us on this side lament the high interest rates we have seen in August and September. It should be emphasized that these were of a temporary nature. The basic rate, the Bank of Canada rate, has dropped about 5 per cent in the last six weeks. It will drop even further if the measures outlined in this budget come to fruition. Inflation will be lowered and more economic activity will ensue.

I have been somewhat vexed in the last while. I have come to the House of Commons each day. I have heard wild allegations being made by members of the NDP and the Conservative Party about the need to assist those with mortgage renewals. Only four people in my constituency have come to me expressing those fears which the opposition asserts are rampant in the country.

One was a small-business man whom I know very well. Unfortunately he has suffered because of the high interest rates in his mortgage brokerage business. The other was a home owner whom I have known for many years. He admitted that he and his wife did anticipate that rates would not increase, that they were out a little in their calculations, but they were prepared to make the lifestyle adjustments to accommodate the short-term surge in interest rates. Unfortunately, they renewed their mortgage at 22 per cent. As I said to him, when rates come down, if you have an open mortgage you can renegotiate rather than be locked in to these exorbitant rates for three or five years.

The impression is being given by the opposition that those who are renewing mortgages today at 20 and 22 per cent will be locked in and will suffer in the years ahead. Granted, there will be some short-term dislocation. That is the unfairness of the system of mortgage financing in this country. Some people who have had to renew their one, three or five-year mortgage in the last couple of months have really been dealt a heavy blow by the high rates.

The question has to be asked whether it is the government's obligation to subsidize people across the board, to give blanket subsidies for mortgages. Listening to the official opposition and the NDP, one would assume they want everybody in this country subsidized. My question to them is, who will pay for the subsidy? I will tell you where the revenues will come from. They will come from the ordinary taxpayers, many of whom do not have mortgages. Many are retired and their homes are paid for. Many are new Canadians who perhaps tried to pay off their mortgages in a short period of time. These are the people who will be paying for an across-the-board subsidy.

What about the renters? Half of those in my constituency in metropolitan Toronto live in rental accommodation. Would it be fair or just to expect those people from their general tax revenues to subsidize mortgage rates, as proposed by the leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) who advocated the government should subsidize the spread between 15 per cent and the actual mortgage renewal figure? I could not look my constituents in the eye and say to them that is fair, equitable and just.

Who should we subsidize? Who should we help? The government said in the speech from the throne that assistance would be forthcoming. If you read the budget documents, there is no doubt that that promise has been discharged. I have no compunction or hesitation in telling my constituents that we have sheltered those Canadians who are on the verge of losing their homes.

That is what the minister responsible for housing has been saying in the House these past few weeks. He has been pilloried unfairly, unmercifully by the opposition in a callous way. They have been misrepresenting what he has been saying, twisting his answers. That minister has shown more compassion, sensitivity and understanding about the social needs of Canadians than will ever be shown by the likes of those characters on the other side.

That minister has suffered day in and day out. I say, and my colleagues agree, that that minister has shown compassion. He has fought long and hard for assistance for those who are in dire straits. He has delivered in this budget because this budget will help those who are in the direst of circumstances, those who but for this budget would be out on the street. I believe the criticism directed at the minister is totally unjustified and is not one of the most pleasant things I have heard during my time as a Member of Parliament.

● (1750)

Is it the responsibility of the government to subsidize people across the board? Is it the duty of the government to subsidize the needy? Or is it the duty of the government to subsidize everyone irrespective of their lifestyle? Indeed, is it the duty of the government to subsidize lifestyle? I say, no. The Tories always talk about self-reliance and about standing on one's own two feet. There is an obligation that people have today when they enter into the purchase of a home. Surely they have an obligation to look at their own financial situation; how much money they have in the bank; how much is their down payment; how much their repayments will be on a monthly basis. Is it not also their obligation to foresee a downturn in the economy? Recessions are not new. Downturns in economic activity are not new. The people I described earlier, the seniors in my constituency went through the depression and have paid for their homes because they knew the good times could not always last. They knew that the carousel sometimes has to slow down. That is what has happened in the last few years. There are many who did not have the foresight to recognize the realities and uncertainties of life in general.

This government has ruled most of the past twenty years. We have seen some of the most prosperous economic growth in this period. We would like that unbridled economic growth to continue in the future. When we observe other countries we realize that we cannot deliver at the same level that we have been used to in the last twenty years. There has been some levelling off. We must now stop and regroup our economic policies and proceed forward and lay the foundation for economic renewal for the years ahead. That is what this budget addresses.

There is another side to the housing crisis in this country. There are legitimate problems, but the word crisis is used indiscriminately every day in the House. I do not really think Canadians take to heart these hyperboles from the opposition that are littering the carpet of this chamber every day.

Another issue with respect to housing is the amount of rental accommodation available. It is not a problem across the board. It is a problem in selected high growth areas. I should like to refer to the speech the Leader of the Opposition made yesterday. It can be found on page 12795 of Hansard. The Leader of the Opposition made his plaintive lament for renters who, he claims, are injured because of this budget. He was following up on a theme that was started by the member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), in his usual hysterical way, concerning the MURB program.

What did the Tories do for renters in this country when they ruled in 1979, in that hilarious hiatus, that brief fleeting moment, that incalculable interregnum of despair? What did they do for renters? I will tell you what they did, Mr. Speaker. They introduced a mortgage tax deductibility scheme. This would have raked the federal treasury of three or four billion dollars. This would have to be paid for. Who would pay for the three or four billion dollars? It would be the general taxpayer. It would be the revenues from the renters in my constituency that would bankroll an extremely unfair mortgage tax scheme, and that would benefit only those at the upper end of the income scales.

The member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) is leaving the chamber because he cannot face the music. The hon. member was part of that diabolical scheme that, luckily enough, did not see the light of day. The Conservatives are now ridiculing us. It was the Tories who demonstrated their feelings for renters. They care for renters in the same way as they care for everyone: looking after the privileged first and the poor and ordinary Canadians last.

What about their brethren in the province of Ontario who are about to lift the lid on rent controls? They would do so in one callous, uncharitable move. This has been predicted. They are trying to skate around it and not break their election promises. However, they will lift the lid on rent controls. Thousands of people in this country, in our province in particular and in metropolitan Toronto, and perhaps even hundreds in my constituency in York East, will be forced into the street. This is the Conservative philosophy. It does not matter whether one is a provincial or federal Tory. The Conservative philosophy is at least consistent, and that is, "to hell with the weak guy, let him fend for himself and we will look after number one, we will look after the tough people, the strong people".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Collenette: That is why they are now objecting. How about their attitude towards the MURB program? In the last few days hon. members have been complaining about the program. Yesterday the hon. member for St. John's East wept his river of Newfoundland tears and complained bitterly about the MURB program. It has to be remembered that the MURB program has been used by many as an artful tax dodge to erect luxury condominiums in such places as Victoria, Vancouver, Toronto and Ottawa. It is this kind of attitude that is denuding metropolitan Toronto of decent, affordable housing for its citizens. It is forcing the average people of metropolitan Toronto to go out to the suburbs to take what is left over, while all the white painters, all the artsy crowd, all those with money in the bank, all those who can write off everything in their incomes move back downtown into condominiums that cost between $150,000 and $400,000 for a two bedroom unit in a constituency like Rosedale. What does the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) have to say about that? Where has he been in the last couple of days? The hon. member was not present in the House when the budget was introduced. Do you know why he was not here, Mr. Speaker? He could not stomach what the hon. member for St. John's East said about the MURB program. The hon. member knows what these tax dodgers will do. They will drive out affordable accommodation in ridings like his. The member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) is present in the House and is unresponsive in this matter. The hon. member knows that I am speaking the truth with regard to this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Collenette: I should like to tell hon. members more and I am getting wound up. However, I do not want to deny members their dinner period.

Tory economics is Reaganomics, Thatcher economics. We have made tough decisions with regard to this budget, but we have kept the basic social programs, the underpinning of the economic system in this country, intact in tough times. I lament the laying off of people at Massey-Ferguson Industries Limited. But they will be protected because there will be unemployment insurance. Their pensions are indexed, their family benefits are indexed. These are Liberal programs. Those are Liberal economics.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) had the floor. I presume he has finished his remarks, so in his absence I will recognize the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens).

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on the budget I do so with very mixed feelings. Certainly I have had an opportunity to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in his budgetary address to the House. I heard certain ministers add further governmental comment to the budget. I should like to try in a fairly neutral fashion to put the budget into proper perspective. I say that because I was rather startled today to hear the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) say that he felt he should compliment the Minister of Finance on the budget. Presumably it is not just the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) who did not know what was going into the budget up until the time it was virtually delivered. But obviously the Secretary of State, in order to make that comment in the House, has not even listened and certainly has not read what is in the budget. How anyone could possibly say with a straight face, especially someone from the province of Nova Scotia, that he wanted to compliment the Minister of Finance on the budget, I find hard to understand.

The hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) waxed eloquent at the end of his remarks about the evils of MURBs and why he was pleased that they were finally stricken from the record and presumably would not be available in the future. The hon. member for York East spoke of the debate on the budget of the Minister of Finance in October 1980. As the House will recall, that budget renewed MURBs. In fact it was said at that time that in order to help reduce shortages of rental accommodation and to provide a needed stimulus to the construction industry, the tax incentive for multiple unit residential buildings which expired on December 31, 1979, would be reintroduced effective for construction starts after October 28, 1980. Why were we told by the Minister of Finance in October 1980 that a person is a hero if he puts money in the form of a tax shelter investment into certain types of residential accommodation, only to find that on November 12 that same person is suddenly an enemy of the state, that somehow he has been ripping off society and that the minister feels there is a loophole which he must plug? It is something which no longer holds together. The reason I find it most inconsistent for the minister to take that attitude, as well as presumably other ministers and the member for York East, is that we were told on budget night that it was a budget of restraint, of equity and of renewal. I should like to explore why it is equitable to say that tax shelters designed to give Canadians accommodation are evil and that they must be stricken from the record. At the same time the same government wants to preserve tax shelters for the promotion of circuses such as Circus Tivoli. If it is right to have tax shelters to promote circuses, films and related activities, certainly something must be totally wrong with a government that on the other hand indicates it does not want to see rental accommodations for Canadians built under the same tax shelter plan.

As I go through my remarks, I will be able to cite many examples of the lack of restraint in the budget, despite what the minister told us. In fact, there is no equity and no renewal other than whatever hope the minister might have of renewing his own fortunes in the country as a political animal and as a member of a political party. Before getting into that, I should like to make a special comment about a partner in the government's actions who seems to be almost bashful about taking full credit for what the country is going through at the present time. I refer of course to the fact that it is not only Dr. Trudeau who is prescribing this economic medicine; it is Dr. Broadbent. We have two doctors who are in grand alliance, working in virtual conspiracy as far as the Canadian public is concerned. I believe the Canadian public must be told in no uncertain terms that the rump NDP not only triggered the election of this government, but in truth is working hand and glove with the governemnt in giving us economic irresponsibility.

Mr. Pelletier: Stick to your text.

Mr. Stevens: I heard a Liberal member ask why I called them Dr. Trudeau and Dr. Broadbent.

Mr. Pelletier: No. I said, "Stick to your text."

Mr. Stevens: Anyone who comes from my area of Canada, from Newmarket or from York-Peel, knows what doctor stands for. It is a Ph.D. It means piled higher and deeper.

Having said that, I feel it is important to attempt to get some perspective of where in fact Canada has been going in terms of other economies among western nations. I find this area startling. When the present government took power, Canada was third among world nations as far as the gross national product was concerned. In 1968 we stood third in terms of per capita gross national product in Canada; we were topped only by the United States and by Sweden. You will know how much we have slipped when you read in the World Bank atlas that we have dropped to number eight position. How many on the government side are willing to acknowledge that in the last set of statistics issued by the World Bank we have slipped to thirteenth position among world nations? The nations that on a per capita basis have a better GNP than Canada are Switzerland, Luxembourg, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Belgium, Norway, Iceland, Netherlands and France.

• (2010)

An hon. Member: Kuwait.

Mr. Stevens: My prompter on the Liberal side says Kuwait. If he wants to add the oil rich countries, then he will find that we rate nineteenth in the world, not thirteenth. I am glad that at least one Liberal member is aware that not only are we behind the industrialized nations that I have referred to but in fact we are nineteenth if you add the various oil-rich countries of the world.

What is most interesting is not just those figures but the fact that if you start examining the relative gross national product figures on a per capita basis, not just on the average in Canada but with respect to provinces in Canada, you find some startling facts.

I referred, to the Secretary of State who comes from Nova Scotia as, of course, does the Minister of Finance. The next time they have an opportunity in this House, I should like one of them to stand up and explain to his people and to Canadians at large why he is content that Nova Scotia should have a per capita gross national product of about $6,200 compared to the gross national product on average for every person in Greenland of $7,990. Why, for example, do the five eastern provinces of Canada, including Quebec, all have a lower gross national product on a per capita basis than Greenland? Prince Edward Island has less than half the gross national product of Iceland.

Instead of being complacent and, if you like, rhetorical, and simply saying, "We are doing well and somehow or other it is a budget of restraint and equity and renewal," I think it is time that the government came to its senses. It is time it realized that it has taken Canada, a prosperous country and one that had great wealth and great earnings, and relegated it to a position well down on the list of prosperous nations of the world.

Let me touch on something else now, Mr. Speaker. When we compare Canada to other countries, I think it is interesting to note the October issue of the Euromoney Magazine which has an analysis of the 85 larger western countries. For example, it has what it calls the performance of economies between the years 1974 and 1981.

Canada has fallen to number 30 among the 85 countries listed. In the current year we have fallen still further, to number 39 among the 85 countries listed. I suggest to members of the House that it is time we stood up and said to this government. "We have had enough. This does not have to occur in this country, and we want you to give us a budget which will produce the economy to get prosperity renewed in this country."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Not only is our economic performance deteriorating, but we find that our credit in the rest of the world has fallen until we are thirteenth among the nations surveyed. We used to be in the upper bracket, in the top five, and now we are number 13, just ahead of Papua New Guinea. That is the Canadian credit rating for the current year and as far as the Euromoney Magazine is concerned.

Members on the other side may ask why we blame them, but I find that they are very ingenious themselves when it comes to finding somebody to blame. Surely they will pay attention to one of their own members, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray). When he appeared before a committee of this House in October, 1979, he warned that a high interest rate policy would slow down the economy, mean the loss of thousands of jobs, an increase in the cost of living, probably bring the housing and construction industry to a halt with thousands of jobs lost in those sectors, put housing beyond the reach of most middle and lower-income Canadians, hurt small business which depends on bank borrowings to operate, hurt farmers who have the same dependency on bank borrowings and would, therefore, add to the cost of food.

Many of us heard the minister make that statement before the Commons finance committee on October 30, 1979, so hon. members opposite cannot say that they are not aware—because certainly one of their ministers is—of the consequences of the high interest rate policy. The budget shows that absolutely no steps have been taken to relieve the high interest rates, a phenomenon we have been living with in Canada.

In that context, how can a minister stand up with any degree of honesty and tell us that he thinks the Minister of Finance should now be complimented, the same Minister of Finance who pointed out on budget night that he anticipated that the real growth in our economy would be 2.2 per cent in 1982?

Where will that put Canada, Mr. Speaker? It will mean that we no longer hold thirty-ninth place in the list of economic performance of countries in the world; we will be down to number 40. An advance of 2.2 in the real growth of our economy will mean that if the Euromoney Magazine estimate of world economies is correct, Canada will be fortieth, tied with India and coming behind Turkey, Greece, Haiti, New Zealand, Spain, France, Portugal, United States, Austria, Guatemala, Argentina, Yugoslavia, Uruguay, Finland, Cuba, Luxembourg, Ireland, Panama, Venezuela, Brazil, Australia, Japan, Ecuador, Dominican Republic, Colombia, Peru, Phillipines, Chile, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Singapore, Malaysia, Taiwan, Barbados, Paraguay and Nicaragua. Those are the countries that we will be trailing if the estimate of the Minister of Finance of our real growth next year is accurate, based on the Euromoney Magazine line-up of how those economies will grow next year.

• (2020)

I would point out that certain of those economies are anticipated to have a real growth of over 10 per cent next year. Here we have a pitiful Minister of Finance coming in and telling us we should be proud of a 2.2 per cent growth in our economy in the coming year. Having said that, I would like to emphasize that I believe that the continuation of the policy that we see in the minister's budget has not only been tragic for Canada, but has been totally unnecessary as well.

Let me put these figures on the record. The Minister of Finance forecasts that if one wants to take the period from 1981 to 1987, the average real growth in our economy will be 2.7 per cent. If he is correct, again it will mean that since this government took power, not only have we had a steady decrease in the real growth in this country, but that, in addition, the next five or six years will be even worse than any previous five or six years that we have experienced under this government.

The fact is that when we take a look, for example, at the real growth in Canada on average between the years of 1964 and 1969, we find that it was 5.8 per cent. In the next five years, it was 4.6 per cent, and in the last five years, it has slipped to 2.9 per cent. We are now told that in the next five or six years it will be down still lower, at 2.7 per cent. That is why I am suggesting to all hon. members that they owe it to the Canadian public to be a little more candid, to lay it on the line and to admit that the economic policy followed by this government to date has not been working and that it must be stopped and reversed at the earliest possible opportunity.

I realize, having recommended that, that the government's allies to my left, the NDPers, the socialists, headed by the vice-president of Socialists International, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent)—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: —will do all in their power to try to ensure that their partner, the Liberal socialist party of this country, not reverse their trends.

Mr. Deans: How did you vote on our amendment?

Mr. Nielsen: What amendment was that?

Mr. Deans: How did you vote on our amendment? Did you stand up and vote for our amendment last night? Well, for heaven's sake! How could you stand up and vote for an amendment of all these people you don't agree with?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I always notice that when one touches on something that is as dear as the—

Mr. Deans: Like truth?

Mr. Stevens: —partnership relationship between the government and the NDP, it always gets them very rattled.

Mr. Deans: Why did you support us last night, Sir?

Mr. Stevens: What I would be very curious to know—

Mrs. Mitchell: Oh, you were in bed last night.

Mr. Stevens: —is the full plan that the socialists to my left and the socialists—

Mr. Nielsen: To your left.

Mr. Stevens: —the Liberal Party in front of us—have for Canada. For example, if they believe that we should be still more socialized in this country—

Mr. Deans: Ernest Manning would be to your left!

Mr. Stevens: —would they do this for us in the House, Mr. Speaker? Would they tell us where their type of socialism is working to their liking in any country of the world?

Mrs. Mitchell: How about Saskatchewan?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I would be happy—is he asking a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. Is the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have no choice but to recognize the hon. member if he stands, and I have to assume that he is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has asked me a question, and I would be delighted to answer him. I think he could take a look at the province of Saskatchewan—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Deans: —to see where that brand of socialism is working.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I do not think that intervention quite qualifies as a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Point of view, though.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) wants to entertain a question, I suppose he can; otherwise, the floor is his.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, again, of course, the hon. member was not listening to what I said. I asked him to show us any country in the world where socialism is working to his liking.

Mr. Deans: In Saskatchewan, in Canada!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Oh, we now have an admission from the left wing element of this government that we have, in fact, socialism in Canada!

Mr. Deans: In Saskatchewan.

Mr. Stevens: And they are liking it! What I would like to hear—

Mr. Deans: In about half an hour, in Manitoba!

Mrs. Mitchell: Manitoba, tonight!

Mr. Stevens: What I would like to hear them expand on is whether they also like what they see in Poland?

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Stevens: Oh, they do not like that type of socialism in Poland. I see.

An hon. Member: That's communism.

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps it is what Cuba lives with that they like or perhaps their model is England.

Mr. Deans: Do you mean under Maggie Thatcher?

Mr. Stevens: In any event, let me assure Your Honour that the budget now before the House is bringing massive government intervention into your life, into my life—

Mrs. Mitchell: Oh, we wish it were.

Mr. Stevens: —and into the life of every Canadian citizen.

Mr. Deans: That is why you voted for the amendment.

Mr. Stevens: I would suggest to Your Honour that, in so doing, it is not a question of restraint because if one takes a look, one will find that the actual increase in government spending on a national accounts basis is 22 per cent. One will find that personal taxation is jumping up 31 per cent. One will also find that indirect taxation is up over 50 per cent.

Mr. Darling: Another point there, too.

Mr. Stevens: How can a minister of finance pretend that figures such as those to which I have referred, expenditures up 22 per cent, revenue sources jumping 30 per cent, indirect sources jumping over 50 per cent, are somehow equitable and restrained? In short, they are not. I would suggest to Your Honour that we should endorse the motion before us, because I believe it will be tragic for Canada if we allow a situation to continue in this country where, on the same day, one finds stories in the newspapers spelling out that there are industrial lay-offs at plants such as Admiral, where 2,400 employees have been laid off, Massey-Ferguson with a lay-off of 1,700, Budd Canada with a lay-off of 800 automotive workers, International Harvester with 1,200, McDonnell Douglas with 550, de Havilland with 750, Chrysler with 2,100, the Ford plant at Oakville with 3,500, the Pratt & Whitney plant in Montreal with 610, and General Motors at the Ste-Thérèse factory laying off 3,500 people. That is the reality of this government. Those are the kinds of lay-offs with which we are faced in Canada where the total number of people employed in our manufacturing sector fell by 5 per cent in two months. The number of people employed fell by 110,000 in two months alone.

What is the response of the government? We find that the ministers who are responsible for our present economic climate take themselves over to Hull for a lavish lunch, so lavish that it ended up embarrassing the host when he saw the bill; in short, a $100 plate dinner or lunch for those who seem to be totally indifferent to the plight of the thousands of Canadians who are being laid off, such as those to whom I have just referred.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Stevens: Let us put this into perspective—

An hon. Member: Shame on MacEachen!

Mr. Stevens: —because the same budget states that what the government once said it might do with FIRA is being postponed and that somehow it does not want to touch that whole question any more. I would suggest that there is something which must be rectified in this country if we intend to get people back to work, especially in the manufacturing sector. Surely, even this government will acknowledge that there is something which is not equitable, considering the fact that Mitsui, the 39th largest company in Canada, has $1,541 million worth of sales in Canada, and yet it employs only 140 people. To put that into perspective, we find that the 38th largest company in this country, Defasco, does an almost identical amount of business in Canada, and employs 14,100 people.

Can Your Honour tell me why, on the one hand, it is consistent to say that if one wants to open up a manufacturing plant in Canada one must go through a lengthy process of investigation and screening, running the risk of being eventually turned down, but that if, on the other hand, one simply wants to manufacture the items any place else in the world and ship them to Canada, that is free trade? We like that, notwithstanding the fact that very few Canadian jobs result from that activity.

• (2030)

Unless this government starts facing those realities, we will see not just a recession, not just a great depression, but we will see the greatest depression that Canada has ever had. I think it is time that we did our best to bring the government to its senses before it is too late.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, this debate might better be termed a wake. There are some of us at least who have some perception of what discouragement this new tax structure extends to Canada's most ambitious people, whether they are in the work force or self-employed, whether they be earners or producers of jobs. The whole crew in Canada received a discouraging message when it got this budget.

I was rather interested in a document which was leaked not too long ago, and I would like to quote from it. We read that much of our industrial capacity in Canada, no matter where its location, is fast falling behind the rest of the world in improving its productivity.

This morning we had an opportunity to talk to some people who are instrumental in creating jobs in Canada. I am referring, of course, to food processors. I have discussed the subject of our food processors on many occasions in this House. On each occasion I have had to say, regretfully, that if any new investor in this country had money on which he wanted to get a return, the food processing industry would probably be the last industry in Canada he should choose on which to spend his money. The existing processors came in under a climate much more favourable than the climate presently in existence. In this budget, the food processors got an additional kick in the teeth because they conform to the definition of the public servants who made this recommendation and the notation that the industrial capacity no matter where in Canada is fast falling behind the rest of the world in improving its productivity.

In this day and age if you have a 2.5 per cent profit you cannot keep pace with the requirements of modernization and replacement. What happens? The tax rate goes up and depreciation goes down without any incentive whatever extended to this important group of people to conduct the necessary modernization. There are farmers or farm-oriented individuals from Ontario who sit in the government caucus. Surely they must get the message loud and clear that the processing industry will suffer. This industry is vital to people in Ontario as it is vital to the people of New Brunswick. If they do not suffer, the farm producers will. But in every case the consumers will suffer. If ever anything was inflationary with respect to the price of food, it is this government which has removed any encouragement to the food processing industry to improve its capabilities.

I want to warn those same people in Ontario because there will be further GATT negotiations in the next 18 months. If we are as generous to all other countries in the world as we were in the last series of GATT negotiations, the farmer and the processor will suffer seriously from the trade considerations which will be extended to other countries in the world without any reciprocity of other markets for our food producers. That has happened. We removed the duty on red meat coming into Canada, and then had to introduce a bill to regulate the flow of imports. That bill has been considered for quite a period of time, and it is still subject to approval in this House. That is but one example of the steps that we may have to take. If we continue to give away our own market to other people, Third World countries or others, the food processing industry of Canada cannot help but suffer more and, as a result, so too will the farmers of Canada. The disincentive is there in the industry. The employment opportunity may very well decline, or the consumer will pay more, or the farmer will get less. I ask hon. members opposite to read what is in the budget and they will understand what I mean.

I would like to refer to another question raised in the same document. It asks whether in those cases where new policies will require expenditures, we should seek in general to redeploy government spending by discontinuing those programs now focused on our prime objectives, or should we alter the government's fiscal stance by raising taxes? The answer obviously was that we shall raise taxes.

Here is something which the provinces must worry about. The conclusion suggested in the document is that there should be management of the resources development, and industrial reorientation projects will be of considerable and possibly mutual interest to provincial governments. The extent to which a joint planning approach is followed is likely to affect the speed and ease with which we conclude our major new projects. Should we actively endeavour to pursue a co-operative planning effort with maximum federal visibility on delivery—and I emphasize that phrase "maximum federal visibility"—or should we primarily rely on federal spending and prerogative as the means to pursue these policies?

I draw your attention to those remarks, Mr. Speaker because it was only last week that we heard a delayed budget. It was delayed because the premiers of the provinces were meeting with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to discuss the Constitution. The Prime Minister very adeptly avoided bringing in this budget prior to the discussion of the Constitution. Here we have a document which was then in the hands of the government advising the government about resources, which is a provincial field. The question was, should the government go with joint projects and demand the co-operation of the provinces, or should the federal government get the highest visibility it could by going it alone to develop resources, the property of the provinces?

It is incredible, it is bad faith and it is treachery to have demanded that the premiers meet before the introduction of this budget which was going to curtail their future to the degree that it has. Whether you come from Quebec, which disagrees in principle, or whether you come from any other province in Canada which has disagreed in philosophy with the proposals put forward, to find this kind of treachery introduced in the House as a confrontation to those provinces which we represent here is incredible treachery. These are low-level procedures at best.

Mr. Tousignant: Who represents the federal government?

Mr. McCain: Who represents the federal government where? The Prime Minister represented the federal government, and he committed treachery by insisting that this budget come in only after the meeting. When it begins to hurt, you begin to squeak. I do not know how your wheel was greased so that you did not squeak when you were in caucus, but do not squeak now, it is too late. It is out in the open. There is negligence there in your province and mine as evidenced in the budget and the treachery of the budget succeeding the federal-provincial meetings. I think it is rather significant that the provincial first officers wanted to meet on the economy long since, and I would not want to be the finance minister, the minister of health or the minister responsible for education who has to come to me as the provincial minister and discuss finances of this nation after this budget was brought down, and you will hear more about that a little later.

• (2040)

The treacheries have been committed. I never thought we would have traitors to the concept of Canada, but we have and they are here among us.

An hon. Member: On which side?

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, when a member asks a question to which the answer is so obvious he is only asking for deprecatory remarks in response, and I do not choose to address them to him.

This afternoon we heard the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan), the minister from Halifax, discuss the future of education in Canada as this government would like to conduct it. Again I want to refer to resources, one of which is forestry, and I will do so without quoting from the document which was leaked.

In this document prepared for the government forestry is referred to as a renewable resource, and the question is how the Government of Canada could gain the highest possible profile by spending money in the forest industry. The advice of the bureaucrats to the government is, well the trees themselves are provincial property. If we spend money on the trees in the forests, we will not get the profile because they are provincial. But, if perchance we happen to spend some money on education, and that is a mere pittance in terms of the financial response compared to what the forests really need, we would have a profile which would give us the credit we need in the political world. That in effect is what that document said. We find there that the government is advised to play politics with two things at the same time; with the renewable forestry resource and with education with respect to the resource—neglect the resource and get the profile from education. That is a rather ridiculous suggestion when Canada needs the whole deal.

An hon. Member: What is your suggestion?

Mr. McCain: My suggestion is that the government go back to the era of Liberal government when the Government of Canada recognized the need for federal research input and when the Government of Canada put money where its mouth was. It knew that with a depreciating resource it must give some consideration to helping the provinces, such as with regard to the budworm spray. Fifty per cent of the cost of spraying was contributed by that Liberal government, but this government backed away from it completely.

That is what I am talking about and that is what I mean. The Liberal government used to put its money where its mouth was, but now it has things all mixed up with woolly politics. If it is not political, do not spend it; that is what this document said and that is what this budget practises.

In Atlantic Canada we need, for the benefit not only of Atlantic Canada but of all Canada, a forestry complex. This has been discussed and I am not going into the details. It has been discussed by all the Atlantic provinces, it has been discussed by the federal government and it has been shelved by the federal government. To this moment in time there is no money coming forth for the forest rangers' school, which is a joint maritime school. It needs to be renewal and repairs. Has that fallen through too? Are we not going to get any federal input, even in education where the profile is the highest? Do not forget that your Quebec forest is similar to the New Brunswick forest, that the Quebec lumber supply is rapidly approaching the point where capital is being depleted and the government should be concerned about that forest complex as well as the educational and research centre which would help all of eastern Canada, including Quebec, in having a healthier forest industry. Do not play politics with this as the cabinet minister from Halifax has proposed we should do.

Mr. Tousignant: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant) on a point of order.

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, the member who has the floor does not seem to be aware of the strategy for forestry development which has just been released by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). He should find out about things.

[English]

Mr. McCain: The message is not worthy of comment, Mr. Speaker.

We have these needs and these political uses of these needs which I have discussed. Let us go on down the line.

This afternoon the minister suggested that there should be some emphasis on research, that we should adjust and rearrange education. This comes from a member from Atlantic Canada, the area which may virtually claim to be the seat of original education in this nation, where its first schools were formed, where some of the first colleges were formed and where there has been a standard of education which attracts to the University of New Brunswick alone 862 members from west of New Brunswick. For a maritime member, who knows that all other colleges in Atlantic Canada have populations which are pretty much constituted in the same way, to suggest that the Government of Canada should start to manipulate education, is to me an utterly and totally incredible suggestion. He is saying we must plan because we must have certain skills and we have to re-educate. So what is new? Doctors have been saying for 20 years that they virtually have to re-educate themselves by going to seminars, classes, courses or whatever. Lawyers, chartered accountants and other skilled people such as welders, blacksmiths, whatever they may be, have had to re-educate themselves to keep up with technology, so what is new?

Are universities flexible? I submit they are very flexible and able to react to the needs of the day. They were able to react to them after World War II. They expanded their facilities, they improvised and they taught. They continue to expand, and when the demand was more for skills other than college skills they were able to cope, even with a very distinct decline in student population. Now because the technical skills do not seem to be in the same demand, the population in the post-secondary schools and colleges is going up again, and they can cope even if this government reduces its contribution.

What right have we as politicians to suggest to the educators of this land that we know more about their subject matter than they do? What an insult to the educators of this land. Is this for political gain? We have heard statements this afternoon that the provinces are not spending as much on education as the government has issued to them for that purpose. Let me tell you that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) prior to 1979, during the campaign in 1979 and early after the election in 1980, accused the provinces of misappropriating funds in respect of health. She called on the ministers of health in Canada. since then we have not heard a peep from that minister about how the provinces are using their money.

I am now going to make a statement about the province of New Brunswick. The province of New Brunswick not only spent all the money which was eartagged for education within the province, it had to supplement that substantially from its own treasury and it added more in that one field than in any other. This government assured all provinces which would undertake bilingual efforts in education that they need not fear nor want for funds. The province of New Brunswick, unlike any other province in Canada, undertook that program, but then the guidelines were changed and the province had to find its own funds for the most part to conduct the program which the federal government promised to finance. If that is wrong, I challenge the minister from Halifax to tell this House that I am wrong and he can give me the figures to prove it. That is a false and improper accusation against the provinces of Canada.

● (2050)

An hon. member said in the House that I was a provincial member. I deny that categorically. I am a Canadian. I want to see a mechanism for the adjustment of the wealth in Canada so it can be harmoniously distributed, instead of the conflicts we will have if this budget is passed.

During the course of the debate one can be tempted to be deflected from those issues most important to one's constituents. Most of my constituents are interested in the forestry industry, something which I have already discussed. There is nothing but discouragement for those in the forest industry because there has been no indication from the Government of Canada, which receives close to $2 billion in revenue from the forest industry, that it will provide any more money for research or reforestation or any project other than education from which the government will enhance its political profile. This is clearly indicated in the budget document.

Canada's fishermen have been given a false anticipation of what their earning capabilities might be, whether they are processors or active fishermen or workers in the fish plants. They have been encouraged to believe that their incomes would far exceed their expectations. The Government of Canada has a policy which puts no emphasis on the quality of the product. It has refused to help the fisherman upgrade his boat so he could deliver better quality produce. It has refused to put grading standards on fish to encourage better quality. As a result, we have lost markets which should not have been lost. These markets should have grown in the last five years, but now they are gone.

The government has failed to realize that old boats need to be replaced, that young fishermen need a chance to get into the fishing industry. Instead, the government has made regulations which deny the young fisherman, who has to buy a boat to get a licence, the opportunity to do so. Because of the regulations, a young fisherman may find himself with a licence but with a boat that is not safe to sail. Since he has not operated that boat for two years, he cannot get a safe boat to use with his licence. If he does not sail the boat, even in jeopardy of his life, he loses the licence because he has not used the boat to fish for two years and the licence has not been used. That is how the regulation works. I know of about six young fishermen in my constituency who are sailing death traps because of idiotic regulations placed on replacement of boats by our Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc). This is with the blessing of members from Atlantic Canada who should know better.

I wish I could tell a happy story, and I believe it could be much happier if we could get an improved boat replacement program, a proper marketing thrust and leadership instead of misguidance from this government and its Minister of Fisheries and the people in that ministry.

I would like to turn now to the farming structure. The problems in the food processing industry and the fish processing industry are the same. My constituency probably contains the highest level of food processing of any other constituency in Canada. For this reason I am concerned about the health of the food processing industry for both fish and farm produce.

There have been some very hard times in the agricultural industry, and if the member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne) were here he could confirm what I am saying. The inflationary process in the field of potato agriculture is such that since 1971, had I grown an acre of potatoes, planted in May of one year and delivered in April or May of the next year, the interest costs on that acre of potatoes in 1981 would exceed the total cost of the acre of potatoes ten years earlier. That is the impact inflation has had.

Here is a government which is prepared to put up to $300 million into Chrysler—I do not quarrel with that because we need the industry—but is proposing to put only $50 million into a depressed agricultural industry for all of Canada. The government is going to help up to 10,000 people in Ontario and it is going to throw the farmers of Canada to the wolves with $50 million. Relatively speaking, Mr. Speaker, the government should not even go to church with that little cheque for the collection plate when you look at its relative value to the tens of thousands of Canadian farmers, some of whom are destitute.

Furthermore, $5 million of that $50 million will be used to pay interest on what would have been helpful to the farmers in the first place. Therefore, the farmers only get $45 million.

I believe I can say to you, Mr. Speaker, without any challenge, that there are enough farmers in an emergency position in Atlantic Canada that the $45 million would not go halfway around. What does that do for the beef feeders or the pork producers in the rest of Canada? It does nothing. The government says to let Atlantic Canada have it and let the rest of Canada sit around and wait, just to see.

The minister has expressed his problem of the day that he has to consult all his regional directors to determine how he will spread this $45 million among the tens of thousands of farmers who need it. It is of no use for anyone on that side of the House to complain about food costs if they are to let agriculture suffer the fate that has been extended to it by a minister who stays in office while the agricultural industry is abused in its time of need.

Last weekend I was talking to a widow who lives on a fixed income. She expressed how proud she and her husband had been that they had been able to save money and did not have to go on welfare. She was using virtually all of her income to exist in the state of care which she needs, and that proud lady told me that because of this new tax structure her fixed income will not be adequate. She will have to seek help from the public purse. That is the impact, which has been brought about by the change in the income tax structure, on those who live on fixed incomes. My God, Mr. Speaker, has this government no conscience? Did members opposite think, as they approved this budget—if they ever heard of it in their caucus—of what they were doing to the people on fixed incomes, who were relying on interest or dividends to have a decent standard of living? Did they think about the old couples who are paying the full impact of the tax on gas, oil and fuel or the cost of substitution? That may not be important in the rich areas which members opposite represent—metropolitan Canada—but down in Atlantic Canada it means a lot. Yet down there you are going to take just as much from them as you are prepared to take up here. Your conscience must have gone with the budget.

An hon. Member: They do not have a conscience.

Mr. McCain: Consider the plight of the fixed income people. My God, Mr. Speaker, we have heard about the needs of those people from members over there. For 20 years we have heard them say they would improve their old age pensions, they would improve this, that and the other thing. But it is they who are now cutting off some payments to the provinces which are already supporting many of these people who are on welfare because of the total negligence and lack of consideration of this government.

We have talked in this House about the tax structure. Now I would like to point out that the minister from Halifax, knowing Atlantic Canada and its needs, was sort of bragging about the fact that the provincial governments can, if they adjust their taxes in a certain way, collect another $1,400 million from provincial taxpayers. That is on top of the additional take which the federal government plans to get through its adjustment of income taxes and the closing of certain loopholes which they talk about. So provincial and federal taxpayers of this land will pay an extra $3 billion merely as a result of the adjustment in income tax. But the beauty of it, Mr. Speaker, is that the federal government is going to cut its payments to the provinces and will collect more money for itself, while it is the provinces that will be accused of imposing additional taxation. It gives a bad reputation to the provincial governments which are trying to economize, and fattens the purse of the Liberal Party.

• (2100)

My time is growing very short. However, I would like to talk for a minute about industrial strategy. I appeal to this government, as I did when I spoke the other day, to recognize that there are certain assets which we could develop. We could be exercising all incentives to get extra drilling off Sable Island and Hibernia. We could supply all kinds of incentives to get the tar sands into production. Our imports of oil could be reduced by 250,000 barrels a day within a three-year period. We could reduce expenditures today by $10 million a day; $3,650 million a year two or three years down the road, and keep our money at home. We would increase the tax base for the Government of Canada without increasing the rate. We could put 100,000 people to work directly or indirectly on those megaprojects which would generate another billion or so in tax revenues for the Government of Canada. Why punish us? Why deliver disincentives? This is the land of opportunity. We need leadership from this government. When is it going to come? When are we going to supply incentives rather than disincentives?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have now listened to two members of the opposition and I can understand they are frustrated at having to sit on the other side of the House, to listen to the debate on a budget we have brought down, while in fact, they should or would have brought down not only the budget that was defeated but additional budgets, if they had not made the mistakes they did, which are now history.

I should like to start by congratulating the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) for his humanitarian approach, for his insight and courage. He was faced with difficult economic conditions and he has done a good job. The themes he announced in his budget are restrictions, equity and economic renewal, and I intend to review each of these themes in turn and highlight their positive aspects. The opposition has highlighted the negative aspects of each of these themes, and I want to look at the positive side.

[English]

Although we claim that this is a budget that addresses restraint, we hear comments from the opposition that there was no restraint. I call the attention of the House to the facts, the truth. The restraint envisaged by this budget is not only restraint that we face in the future, but restraint that we have already exercised.

I will cite some figures for the House. Yesterday we heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) quoting a series of figures he had pulled out of hats. He did not substantiate them. I will substantiate mine because these figures can be found within the budget papers.

Last year's experience was a decrease in our deficit as measured by the cash requirements. Our projection was $12.2 billion in cash requirements. In effect, we needed $10.1 billion, a reduction of $2 billion in our cash requirement.

In 1982, $11 billion had been projected in cash requirements. We envisage that our cash requirements this year will be in the vicinity of $9.8 billion. For 1982-83, according to the budget papers, we will require $6.6 billion in cash. That is a $4.4 billion cash requirement reduction over what had been prognosticated last year.

Mr. Stevens: You are just taxing more.

Mr. Blais: In effect, we are substantially reducing our cash requirement. The hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) knows that two years ago we came to the House requesting a $14 billion borrowing authority. That was what had been envisaged in terms of our cash requirement as well as our contingency. Let us talk about spending targets.

Mr. Stevens: Up 22 per cent.

Mr. Blais: Spending targets are going to be maintained at a level lower than the GNP.

Mr. Stevens: When?

Mr. Blais: In 1981-82 our expenditures are envisaged as being 20.6 per cent of our GNP. If the hon. member for York-Peel looks at the budgetary documents, he will see that the forecast for 1985-86 is that our spending target will be 19.2 per cent of the GNP.

Let us talk about cash outlays. Excluding the debt charges, our cash outlays will increase in 1981-82 by 11.7 per cent. In 1982-83 our cash outlays will be 11.1 per cent. Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition spoke of an increase in cash outlays as something in the vicinity of 52 per cent as forecast in the budget. I cannot find where he got those figures. One can see the discrepancy between the figures he advanced and the ones I quote.

Our budgetary revenue decreased from 18.7 per cent in 1974-75 to 15.7 per cent in 1980-81 as a result of discretionary tax decreases over this period. Over the course of the fiscal plan, revenues will rise to 17.2 per cent of GNP in 1982-83 and remain at about this level until 1985-86. Thus the burden of taxation is less than in the 1974-75 period, a period of lower deficits than the present period.

Let me address the second point, the aspect of equity in this budget. Undoubtedly that is the aspect that has attracted the most attention because everybody likes to hear the term "loophole", that somehow we are removing loopholes within the tax system. In effect, this is exactly what has happened.

When I congratulated the Minister of Finance earlier in my talk, I addressed the humanity of the man. It is manifest in this budget because in closing the loopholes, we see the Minister of Finance in his small "l" liberal stance, a man who is in search of equity, who is in search of fairness. He has addressed that directly in this budget. I fail to understand why the opposition does not give him that credit. I just cannot understand it. I quote from an article in the Toronto Star dated October 23, 1981, which reads:

> Thousands of rich Canadians don't pay any income tax because of massive loopholes in the tax system, New Democratic finance critic Bob Rae charges.
>
> Poor and middle-income earners already staggered by high interest rates, are forced to shoulder an extra load because they must pick up the tab for the "tax giveaways to Canada's wealthiest individuals and corporations," Rae (Broadview-Greenwood) said.
>
> In 1979 alone, 3,467 people who earned more than $50,000 paid no income tax, he said, which was a 50 per cent increase over 1978.
>
> "Giveaways" allowed 160 Canadians earning more than $200,000 a year to avoid paying any taxes during the same year, he added.
>
> Speaking to reporters yesterday Rae—a candidate for the Ontario NDP leadership—contended that Finance Minister Allan MacEachen must include sweeping tax reforms in his next budget, now expected about Nov. 10.

● (2110)

We did exactly that. We plugged the loopholes. We redistributed the tax burden. Have we heard any sort of congratulations from the hon. members of the opposition? Not a peep, Mr. Speaker; but there has been, I shall point out to you, generally in the population of Canada a great deal of appreciation in terms of the equity that has been built in with regard to the tax system.

There are other tax adjustments. I would like to address those tax adjustments as they will affect my constituency. Based on the estimates of the Department of Finance, the average family savings will be $210. Because of the reduction in the marginal tax break, the 20,564 families in the constituency of Nipissing will save over $4,318,500 next year, which will provide for a positive stimulus for the area. My riding has a large number of small-business men and a large number of farmers throughout northeastern Ontario. They will take advantage of the tax measures that are contained in the budget.

In addition, a matter that has not been identified by the hon. members of the opposition is indexation. Indexation represents $3 billion of direct tax removal or tax credit for individual Canadian taxpayers. The indexation is retained. Personal exemptions, for example, for a family of four will be increased from $7,230, as it was in the past fiscal year, to $8,110, which is nearly $800 more in exemptions as a results of maintaining indexation.

The child tax credit will be increased for each child from $261 to $293 in this budget. In effect, we are talking about substantial assistance to medium and low-income earners.

[Translation]

The third theme of the budget is economic renewal. Contrary to the claims of the opposition, the government has addressed economic development, and I am thinking of the document that was tabled in the House and which bears the title Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s. The opposition members do not want to give this document any consideration—that is very unfortunate, because it contains a wealth of interesting information on the potential of our country. It says that within the next five years, the Government of Canada will spend $42 billion on economic development. In addition, $18.2 billion will be spent on energy development during the same five years, and that does not include all investments that will be made, Mr. Speaker.

After all, Canada is the second largest country in the world and it has splendid potential. Even members of the opposition will agree on that. And when we look at this document, we realize how vast this country's potential is.

[English]

The economic development of Canada in the 1980s indicates that the megaprojects will amount to $440 billion, between now and the end of this century. All members have read the document and are surely impressed. In addition to that it reflects a secondary economic potential, that is in terms of supplying these megaprojects. We will require a full infrastructure of supply industries that will provide additional revenues for Canadians, additional job opportunities and additional economic activity. The third area is the exploitation of high technology and high productivity goods and services.

I should like to address each one of the three areas. First of all, let me deal with the question of resources. All members will agree that Canada has a rich tradition in terms of the exploitation of its resources. Undoubtedly Canada has been living off the dividends of those resources since before confederation. In effect, Canada is a net energy exporter. In 1979 Canada exported $1.8 billion more in energy than we imported. In foodstuffs Canada is a major food exporter. We know this year there has been a bumper crop. The crop of grain in western Canada will surpass 41 million metric tons. In terms of fish, we also know that since 1977, since the 200-mile limit, Canada has become the largest exporter of fish in the world. If I might bend your ear, Mr. Speaker, in terms of value, in 1975 we exported some $426 million worth of fish. In 1980 that figure trebled to $1.2 billion worth of fish exported to the international markets. You can imagine the potential! I am talking about relatively new export potential.

I am from northern Ontario and in northern Ontario mining and forest products are major export commodities. We earn our livelihood with those two basic resources and their exploitation. In those traditional Canadian resources the potential is immense. When we talk about the $440 billion it tends to be a conservative figure, when you consider the immense potential of Canada.

As the population of the world increases and becomes wealthier, as the Third World becomes wealthier, the demand will increase by quantum leaps for all of the commodities I have described. We have just provided federal incentives to develop the northeast coal deposit in British Columbia. We freed some 30 million tonnes of coal a year for the export market as a result of that particular initiative that the federal government has launched in co-operation with the provinces. The list goes on. I could talk to you about potash, asbestos and the other commodities with which we are familiar. All these particular projects will generate investment.

In terms of Canada's manufacturing sector and its industrial development, what is important is the supply industry that will be required in order to service and provide material, equipment and machinery for these projects we are developing.

In the fish industry it means additional shipping; it means commercial development of the shipping industry. In terms of wheat, it means additional development of transportation systems; it means additional investment in the transportation area.

In the two areas with which I am most familiar one can see the potential quite readily. Let us examine the pulp and paper industry and the forest products industry and the mining industry. Unknown to members of this House, 73 per cent of the goods and services supplied to the mining industry, so that they can exploit their resources, are not purchased in Canada. They are of foreign origin. In terms of the pulp and paper industry and the forest industry, which is one of the oldest industries in the country, there is still an immense demand for the service and the supply that can be provided by that industry in the Canadian marketplace. Approximately 49.5 per cent of their requirements are purchased offshore. We can see the tremendous potential.

• (2120)

I should like to talk about the shipbuilding industry. The Canadian Shipbuilding & Shiprepairing Association did a survey of what the requirements would be in Canada in that trade. It ascertained that in the next ten years, before the end of this decade, it would have a potential order book of $33.64 billion. I see the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) smiling; he has a satisfied expression. He is seeing the surge of the shipbuilding industry in his area and he knows its tremendous potential. Canada has the longest coastline in the world. We are developing an international expertise in terms of icebreaking capacity and navigation through ice. We look forward to a very vibrant industry in that area.

I should like to mention as well the rail transportation industry in Canada. All hon. members know that we are fast approaching full capacity on our rail system. Both CP and CN officials will tell us that what they perceive in terms of investment ranges in the billions of dollars. If we start adding shipbuilding, rail, mining supplies and pulp and paper supplies, the amount of money which will be going into the economy in the very near future is immense.

In terms of job creation I should like to give a nice rule of thumb which we use in the Department of Supply and Services. We have calculated that for every million dollars we spend for supply and services in my department, we create 30 direct jobs and 39 indirect jobs in the Canadian economy. If we start doing our sums and start dividing them by millions, we will have the total amount of job creation which will be generated within the economy.

In terms of all investments which will be forthcoming, we have put in place for the first time an office of industrial and regional benefits. Within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, under the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), there will be for the first time an office which will be able to co-ordinate all these activities. First it will be a point of focus for consultation and exchanges between the private sector and the government. As well it will be a point of focus to permit us to maximize the Canadian content of those major investments.

The third area of interest in the economic development paper is the development and exploitation of advanced technology. Last week we were all very proud when we saw the Canada wordmark on the Canadarm which flew with the American shuttle in space. The only outer marking was the Canada wordmark. In effect, the Canada wordmark saluted the world. Canadians were immensely proud because we were there in the leading edge of space technology. That did not just happen yesterday. Back in 1962 when the first Allouette was launched, Canada became the third nation in the world to reach the area beyond the atmosphere.

Mr. Thacker: Thanks to John Diefenbaker.

Mr. Blais: We can talk about the Arrow if the hon. member wants to talk about something for which John Diefenbaker was responsible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: When we are talking about the Canadarm, it is an expression of Canada's potential in the area of high technology. We accept that. I was in France recently and they said how great they were because they had the potential of establishing a satellite telecommunications network for France, that they were one of the first countries in the world to do that. I said, "My God, we have been in the telecommunications game in this country for close to 20 years". We can show the French, we can show the British and we can show the Americans the level of our own technology. We have to take a back seat to no one. Recently I was involved in the Telidon development, again a Canadian piece of technology which is at the leading edge of the videotext industry. Canadians are immensely proud of that. I could go through a whole list ranging from MacDonald-Dettwiler in Vancouver, British Columbia, to Northwest Industries Ltd. in Alberta, to Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg, to de Havilland in Ontario, to Canadair or Pratt & Whitney in Montreal, to Mitel in Buctouche, or to Hermes Electronics in Nova Scotia. Throughout the whole country there is a tremendous high technology potential. Hon. members opposite will ask what I know about it. I know a lot about it because I have contracts with those fellows and I use my $3.2 billion per year to ensure that the capacity is in place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: That capacity is in place. We are able to use it and we are able to develop it. I do not care what the opposition moans and groans, dooms and glooms about. This country has the world by the tail and we know it.

When we consider all the investments which have to be made in the next generation, in the next 20 years, we know that there is no size of any government budget that is able to spend the money to provoke those investments, each and every one of them. There must be an economic state in the country which provides price stability in order to boost investor confidence. The opposition recognizes that hon. members of the opposition have said that we must bring down inflation and interest rates, that we must restrict our spending. We have done that responsibly. We have removed a necessity in the Canadian marketplace. We have made available in the next fiscal year more than $4 billion to private investors in order to bring down the rate of interest, to bring down inflation and to create stability. That is the only way we will be able to take advantage of that immense potential.

There is absolutely no assistance from members of the opposition who cite partial statistics, who try to mislead the House—undoubtedly unintentionally because they do not know what they are doing in the first place—in terms of the arguments they present in order to provoke confrontation. The country does not need confrontation. The country needs co-operation. The government has been aiming at co-operation with the agreement on energy prices which we signed with the three western provinces, and in terms of negotiating a constitutional arrangement which will provide for the first time in our history our own made-in-Canada Constitution, approved by Canadians. This is the sort of fearless leadership we are providing to the people of Canada. This is why I commend the budget to the House and I commend the Minister of Finance for his wisdom and perspicacity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have just listened to a Liberal cabinet minister bragging about the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) at a time when public confidence in the government is at its lowest level in 20 years of our history. I should like to ask the minister where he spends his time.

• (2130)

Is he locked up in his cabinet office and does he not get out in public where he can hear the comments the people are making? I cannot remember a time, in the some 25 years I have been around this institution in one position or another, when a budget has been so universally panned. Economists, pundits, editorialists, labour leaders, the business community large and small, all received it with rage, ridicule or both. It is the business of these groups to analyse this misbegotten offspring of a finance minister's delusion, of course, and to expose its weaknesses.

Their criticism is not surprising. What is surprising is the near-unanimous reaction of hundreds of thousands of Canadians in every part of this great country who have treated this budget with similar anger and scorn—anger at the con job that the Minister of Finance tried to perpetrate on them by pretending to offer them something when he did not. They saw through his dishonesty, his deceit and his cupidity. There was scorn on the part of Canadians for a minister who so underestimated their intelligence that he thought he could get away with his efforts at deception. The Canadian people are not as gullible as the minister's own backbenchers.

How I would love to see the Minister of Finance take that budget into an election campaign. Even his toadying backbenchers, who support it publicly but criticize it privately, would run away from it.

The tragedy of this budget with all its take and no give approach, is that it comes at a time when the country is in the grip of a severe recession. The Minister of Finance and his seatmate are old enough to remember the searing effects of the Great Depression, although the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was isolated from it all by a cocoon of wealth in the higher reaches of Outremont, an isolation he has steadfastly maintained throughout his lifetime. Should they remember the 1930s they will know of the anguish and hardship and worry that haunted people's lives. Today's recession, and we see it all around us, is beginning to resurrect these fears and uncertainties of that earlier era.

Canadians are worried. Canadians are concerned. They wonder if anyone in government has a hand on the helm of this country. The last thing they need at this time of uncertainty and worry is a con job from the Minister of Finance or a thinly disguised tax grab at their dwindling resources.

The minister walked in with a budget that allowed him to grab what he could—$1.4 billion in higher revenues for the federal government—and then ran off to bury his head in the sand in the hope that he could escape the escalating financial storm and would hold that ignominious position until the storm was all over.

The Minister of Finance came in here on budget night and prated about equity. The 1.5 million Canadians living in poverty, almost a week after the budget, are today asking, equity for whom? Certainly it is not for those in the lower income bracket.

In a recent speech in Toronto the Prime Minister eulogized Liberal compassion, but for the more than one million unemployed Canadians forced out of jobs by the government's high interest rate policy, Liberal compassion has a deceptively hollow ring to it. Never once in the speech in Toronto did the Prime Minister deal with unemployment. Surely equity and compassion must be directed first and foremost to alleviating the problems of the neediest in our society, be they the unemployed, pensioners or families about to lose their homes.

Is this what the budget does? Is this what it addresses itself to? Not on your life, Mr. Speaker. It aggravates the problems of those people. It provides neither help nor hope. It condemns millions of Canadians already in straitened circumstances to greater hopelessness and despair. Long gone are the days of the "just society" or, indeed, of social justice.

If you need proof of that Mr. Speaker, just look at the social development envelope. The federal government expenditure on social programs will not keep pace with inflation next year as only $30 billion has been allocated to social affairs. That is, indeed, an 8.9 per cent increase from this year, but inflation is running at 12.9 per cent so, in real terms, social development programs have to undergo a cutback, a decrease of 3.8 per cent. That means a cutback of the programs for the ill, the elderly, the disadvantaged. Programs such as those would be put on the back burner by this government.

Where is the social compassion the Prime Minister spoke of? Where was the minister responsible for social development when the Minister of Finance was carving up and cutting back the social affairs envelope? I have no doubt he was out peddling the Constitution and not paying attention to the social programs of those who vitally need them.

At a time when the country is in the throes of a severe depression, the minister has turned his back on those Canadians least able to help themselves. They are the real victims of this budget.

One of the Liberal backbenchers laughs about that. It is no laughing matter for the people who are ill, elderly or without jobs this winter or who are about to lose their homes. It is no laughing matter for them.

Mr. Nielsen: Thunder Bay-Nipissing.

Miss MacDonald: I am told it is the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters). I suppose in his riding there is no unemployment.

If the minister feels that my comments along this line are biased, let me refer him to another objective source. Earlier today the Canadian Council on Social Development released its analysis of the budget. In a damning indictment headed, "Budget shows loss of direction in social policy", the council excoriated the minister for his lack of planning capability in the social field.

The council had this to say:

> The contradictions inherent in the treatment of social program funding, the inequitable treatment of low-income people, the counselling of distressed home owners to incur higher debts, and the tolerance for increasing unemployment, all indicate a loss of planning capability. It seems to us that Mr. MacEachen has formed his entire budget around the hope that interest rates will decline miraculously over the next couple of months. I don't think we can depend upon either U.S. policies or the Bank of Canada to guide our response to the social and human needs of Canadians.

Later, it had this to say:

> The treatment of low-income people in the budget is a complete disappointment. Not only did the government not return some of the revenues from the extremely regressive energy taxes in the form of a tax credit, but they have ignored the plight of over 500,000 families who pay more than 30 per cent of their gross income for rent.

When that report came down today, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Press covered it and, in moving the story of the council's critical analysis of the budget, used this headline: "Budget Takes From the Wealthy to Give to the Rich." It explained that the budget closed loopholes used by high income taxpayers to avoid taxes in the past. In return, it cuts the tax rates from high income individuals. There is not much commendation there for the Prime Minister's talk of Liberal compassion or the finance minister's vaunted equity. The cold comfort—and it is indeed cold comfort—that the Minister of Finance offers Canadians is that unemployment will get worse before it gets better and that the cost of living will go up before it begins to come down.

• (2140)

Let me first turn to unemployment and the prospect of a long, bitter winter which one million Canadians will face in the coming months. In October, 989,000 Canadians were out of work. Since then, lay-offs have increased dramatically. Tonight, the headline in the paper in my home city of Kingston, the Kingston's Whig-Standard, stated that 4,100 people have been laid off since the budget. Four thousand one hundred more Canadians have lost their jobs since the budget was brought down. The prospects for employment in the weeks and months ahead have certainly not been made any brighter by this budget.

No new job incentives were introduced, despite the 8.3 per cent unemployment rate. That was not considered by the government to be a priority in this budget. The government will spend only $154 million on direct job creation this year as compared with $336 million ten years ago when unemployment was running at six per cent. Already government employment forecasts have proven that the figures in the minister's appended documents the other night are incorrect. They have proven to be incorrect because the budget projected a 7.8 per cent jobless rate for 1982 and 8.3 per cent for the following year.

We have already reached the rate forecast by the budget for 1983. It is already running at 8.3 per cent, and the worst of the winter's jobless figures are still before us. We have 10 per cent unemployment! We have another Liberal backbencher who does not believe that unemployment exists. At the present time it is at 8.3 per cent. Sadly, it may well go to 10 per cent in the months immediately ahead. We have great concern and we greatly care about that figure. I only wish the hon. member opposite would have the same care and concern. What does the Minister of Finance have to say about all of this? What does he say to the thousands who are unemployed? He says that they must wait until inflation comes down. That is cold comfort indeed for individuals who are struggling to feed their families or to keep roofs over their heads.

Unemployment and a stagnant construction industry are very closely linked. It is obvious to just about everyone in this country, except to some hon. members opposite, that we face a severe housing crisis. We need about 220,000 homes each year just to keep up with new family formations. Next year, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation forecasts that the level of housing starts will be 135,000. Last month it was only 104,000. However, that is only 60 per cent of the number needed in this country. That will be a shortfall of some 85,000 homes next year, and at what cost to the economy?

The Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada estimates that such a shortfall in homes would cost the country $4.2 billion. That is what we are talking about in the way of a housing crisis. It also translates into 30,000 fewer jobs in the construction industry alone. Every job in the construction industry, analysts say, translates into three in related industries, and 11 more people out of work throughout the general economy. The housing crisis indeed reaches out like the fingers of a hand and touches every aspect of our economy, particularly lumbering and manufacturing. Thousands of workers in our lumber mills or in firms which manufacture household appliances and furnishings and building supplies are idle, and at what social cost to the nation, both in terms of lost productivity and in terms of higher pay-outs in unemployment insurance benefits?

Last Friday we received the news that Admiral of Canada laid off 2,400 employees. In my own riding of Kingston and the Islands, Du Pont has recently laid off 200 workers. This is a plant which manufactures synthetic fibres for carpets and drapes. Millhaven Fibres, another plant in that riding, has laid off 36 people. Canada Cement has laid off 110 people and Alcan has laid off 102 people. What kind of a winter can they look forward to? Thousands and thousands of Canadians have to face a long, cold winter without work. It will not be the grinch who steals Christmas this year, but it will be the Minister of Finance, with the kind of budget that he has brought down this past week.

Unemployment and a housing crisis are closely linked indeed, and the social costs are very hard to measure. How can we calculate in dollars and cents the human toll which will be exacted? As people are forced to move out of their homes, we might logically expect to see increases in family breakdowns through divorce and separation, and increases in alcoholism and anti-social behaviour, whether that be family-centred violence or crime in the streets. The home, which is the traditional foundation for a strong family life, is under attack. We have seen evidence in the minister's own document that it has been stated and proven to him that people will have to double up and share homes with others. What kinds of strains and tensions will that create in our society?

The home was certainly under attack when the minister responsible for housing attempted to mislead the hundreds of thousands of Canadians facing mortgage renewal. He led them to believe that there would be assistance for them in the budget. He gave them every indication that there would be widespread assistance. Home owners came here on September 15 to protest the high mortgage rates, and he told them to grit their teeth and hang on until the budget. They gritted their teeth and they hung on, at great cost to themselves, until the budget. What did they find when that budget came down? What did the budget offer them? It offered a measly $38 million in assistance to home owners, to be spread out among some 12,500 home owners considered to be in dire straits. Who will choose which ones of the many hundreds of thousands who are in difficulty will be among that select 12,500?

The budget does not begin to meet the needs of the more than 100,000 home owners who will have to spend more than 30 per cent of their income after renewing their mortgages this year. The minister responsible for housing has toyed with the emotions of Canadians, holding out some hope where there was none for them, buying time to save his own job. After today, I doubt that he will be able to do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: What a cruel joke it is to raise people's expectations only to dash them to the ground when it suits one's purposes!

Mr. Laniel: That's what the opposition has been doing for months.

Miss MacDonald: I would like to point out some of the people to whom that hope was held out, and to ask whether they will be included in the select group to which the minister will be doling out meagre assistance. I cite one example of a couple living in the city of Kingston who have a $45,000 mortgage. Previously they paid $424 a month for this mortgage. Now they pay $683 a month. Their monthly net income is $1200. The two people living in this home are an elderly couple over 60 years of age. Their mortgage payments now represent some 57 per cent of their monthly income, whereas previously their mortgage payments represented 35 per cent of it. After paying the mortgage, taxes, heating, etc, they have $18 remaining in their monthly budget for food. Will they be among the 12,500 people to receive the minister's meagre assistance? Will they be among the select few? What about another couple who have a mortgage of $38,000? They used to pay $356 a month in mortgage payments. Now their payments are $635 a month. In this home live a husband and wife, four children and an invalid mother. Are they going to be among those who receive assistance? How will we know? What criteria will the minister use to spread among the people who are so desperately in need? That is the question thousands of Canadians are asking tonight right across the country.

• (2150)

The Minister of Finance has ignored the House of Commons since he brought down the budget. He rarely appears. If the government and the minister will not pay attention to the advice of the opposition, perhaps it will listen to one of its former cabinet ministers. Goodness knows, there are enough former cabinet ministers to fill a whole town in dire straits. To quote the Hon. Eric Kierans, who was the first to leave but not the last, he said:

> The budget as a whole reflects a complete ignorance of, or refusal to deal with the economic reality of Canada—the enormous social and economic costs imposed on 90 per cent of a population living with soaring prices and the deliberate use of high interest rates to restrict production when 8.3 per cent of the work force is unemployed.

I ask what this government offers and what this budget offers to the youth of Canada. Their prospects of employment are bleak indeed in one of the world's richest countries.

Unemployment for young men and women between the ages of 15 and 24 has increased. In a country of such vast potential in both human and natural resources, the government offers them little hope for a better future.

At a time when we should be developing the potential of Canadians through post-secondary education, cutbacks in transfer payments are on the finance minister's menu of restraint.

A federal task force set up by the government warned of severe shortages of highly-skilled workers in Canada today. Government cutbacks now as a result of this budget will undermine the long-term development of a work force essential to our country's economic growth and position in the world community.

We recognize, however, that when it comes to talking about cutbacks, the Minister of Finance has a talent for cosmetic surgery and the budget attempts to mask his real intentions. As hon. members will recall, the minister said on budget night that there would be no cutbacks to post-secondary education or to health and medicare programs. That is just an example of more deception. There will be cutbacks, and there will be long-term cutbacks at that. The minister proposes massive cuts known as the revenue guarantee. He can dismiss it, but I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, "a rose by any other name", because eliminating the revenue guarantee will seriously reduce the funds available for education, for health and for hospital care.

Since 1972 the revenue guarantee has been used to finance these programs. Its elimination directly translates into a reduction of $5.7 billion in transfer payments over the next five years and $915 million in 1982-1983. As hon. members may remember, the all-party parliamentary committee on federal-provincial fiscal relations concluded that the revenue guarantee must be considered part of the health and education package.

Cutting out that huge amount of money will mean that the provinces will likely have to increase taxes or reduce services or both.

The minister talks of equity in his budget. Cutbacks to post-secondary education will be devastating to the lower-income groups. The vibrations from university, students across the country are clear. There are organized lobbies on every campus and student protests on the Hill. Students are up in arms. Their futures are at stake.

At Queen's university this fall, I addressed 500 students, fearful and anxious about their future. The budget confirmed their worst fears. The Minister of Finance has closed the door on thousands of students.

Cutbacks mean that services and facilities will inevitably be cut. Enrolments will fall. Institutions will close. Higher tuition fees will mean higher education only for those who can afford it. Why is the minister at this point undermining Canada's future by denying our youth the opportunity to develop their potential through higher education? He should be paying attention to the students' slogan: "Mind power is Canada's energy," instead of doing all that he can to destroy it.

Not only will thousands of students lose their right to a decent education, but the budget has also ensured that thousands of pensioners will continue to eke out a meagre existence below the poverty line.

Of Canada's elderly, 575,000 live below the poverty line. As the minister responsible for the status of women knows, just over 400,000 of these are women, mostly widows.

Many of these people have worked hard all their lives only to arrive at a time when they see their savings eroded by inflation, their minimal pensions unable to keep up with rising costs. Pensioners spend about 80 per cent of their incomes on four basic necessities; shelter, food, home heating fuel and transportation. And the cost of each of these items goes up faster than the quarterly cost of living to which their pensions are indexed. Thus their pensions buy less and less with every passing month. There is no equity for the pensioners living below the poverty line.

This minister is content to lavish far more attention and money on things such as Mirabel airport than he is on Canada's elderly citizens in need. He is far more prepared to spend $2,000 on a luncheon than he is to worry about the diets of the elderly poor. There is no equity in this budget. There is no fairness. There is no social justice. The minister would be well advised to go back to square one and start all over again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING—GUIDELINES USED BY OFFICIALS CONTACTING HOME OWNERS ON MORTGAGE RENEWALS. (B) ADVICE GIVEN BY OFFICIALS. (C) REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT ON MOTIONS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this adjournment debate to bring to the attention of the House the answers of the minister responsible for housing to the questions which I raised on Tuesday, November 10. At that time I asked the minister responsible for CMHC what guidelines his officials were using when they contacted home owners facing mortgage renewals immediately prior to the budget. The minister responded, to the surprise of everyone in this House, that officials from his office and he personally had responded by telephone in approximately 200 cases. He said that they had been able to obtain deferrals of contracts and contract renewals until after Thursday or Friday of that week. When the minister made that statement he was talking about budget week and budget day.

• (2200)

We submit from this side that the minister had absolutely no business, himself or his officials, telling any Canadian about the details of the budget prior to budget evening. That is the job of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), not members of the minister's staff or other ministers. Our party has been very concerned about budget secrecy and preferential treatment.

Today we had an even greater demonstration and cause for concern. We want to know what the minister's office was telling the institutions involved that would persuade them to hold off mortgage renewals until after the budget. Did the minister's office attempt to secure the same deferral for all home owners who had directly or indirectly contacted his office?

My colleague, the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), has dramatic proof that the minister was very selective about whom he or the members of his office called. That hon. member brought forward 31 names of individuals who had not been contacted by the minister or his staff, although they had been brought to his attention.

We want to know, and that is why we asked the question and ask it again tonight, what criteria the minister's office was using to determine who should get the deferrals and who should not. Was the minister's office just picking names out of a hat? Where were the guidelines drawn from? The minister replied to one of the supplementary questions with the statement that he unequivocally did not know what was in the budget. That was on Tuesday.

It is interesting to note in retrospect that on Tuesday the minister said he did not know what was in the budget; on Thursday evening we found out what is suggested he was told, yet almost instantly after the budget presentation CMHC presented a detailed document outlining the establishment of a centre dealing with mortgage renewals, complete with long-distance phone lines and a manager. Is not the age of high communications wonderful when a minister of the Crown can establish such procedures within two days? It is inconceivable that a minister could state in this House that he did not know what was in the budget when officials from his office were telling people in Delta, B.C., and Oakville, Ontario, not to renew until after the budget when a whole new departmental structure should appear in an instant.

My question to the minister was prompted by evidence which came to our attention from Delta, B.C., where an individual faced with an increase in mortgage interest from 13.75 per cent to 20.25 per cent was called by an official of the minister's office and told that if the renewal did not have to be signed, he should hold off until Friday, after the budget.

The gentleman I spoke to in Halton, Ontario, was also contacted and told that he should delay renewing his mortgage until after the budget. There will be help in the budget for people like him who are having trouble renewing their mortgages, he was told.

We have information which suggests that, although the minister stated he did not know what was in the budget, employees of Vickers and Benson, the Liberal Party's favourite advertising agency, were certainly well informed. This information will come forward as the week unfolds. The minister stated unequivocally that he instructed his officials specifically to make no reference to the budget and to hold out no promise. We can well understand the minister's embarrassment at the revelation on budget night. The so-called assistance in the budget was a cruel joke. It was certainly nothing that anybody would bother to call anybody about. The minister dashed the hopes of Canadian home owners all across this country.

• (2205)

We are not so concerned about the lack of substance in the budget as we are about the process which was followed. We are concerned about over-all budget secrecy. That is a tradition in Canada. We want to know, Mr. Speaker, how much information was revealed to the minister's officials. What did they do with it and how secret did they keep the information which they obviously had? We saw today the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) who is in charge of advertising, cut loose and run. We saw the Minister of Finance, who has left the minister responsible for housing swinging in the wind for months, continue to do so. We were also prompted in our efforts today by an unbelievable exhibition from the government House leader when he suggested that, instead of pursuing our democratic right to raise questions in this House, we should resign. Well, we know how long it takes them to call byelections on certain occasions and we have no intention of following the cheap hysterics of the government House leader.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I invite the minister responsible for housing to rise in his place and do the honourable thing and announce an inquiry to get to the bottom of the leaks of information and the lack of direction given to his officials in his department. I suggest the inquiry could also be broadened to encompass the events of today, so that the true facts could be made available to this House.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Savard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to get back to the comments made by the minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation (Mr. Cosgrove) regarding the question raised by the hon. member on November 10, 1981, on the subject of advice given to home owners whose mortgages had come up for renewal. May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that he kept the promise he made earlier in the House and that he has taken a number of measures to help those who, when their mortgages come up for renewal, are hard put to meet their monthly payments because of interest rates. The minister's staff and the minister himself have answered 366 telephone calls, and the minister has answered 193 letters. In many cases, he was able to get lenders to make alternative arrangements for financing. In other cases, he obtained a deferral of interest payments. Often, Mr. Speaker, members of his staff were able to help home owners to get organized by referring them to ombudsmen appointed by some banks to deal with mortgage renewals.

I also wish to say a few words about the hon. members comments on the secrecy of the budget. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will agree, I am sure, that to people who are in a difficult situation, it was only natural to wait until the budget was brought down to see if it did not contain some form of assistance. As the hon. member knows, help was in fact announced in this budget. The government has established a Canadian mortgage renewal program under which the government undertakes to help Canadians who are in great need. It is also very encouraging, Mr. Speaker, to see that interest rates have fallen during the last few weeks, because there lies the real answer to solving the problems of home owners. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to give the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) the assurance that the government has done and will continue to do everything in its power to help home owners who are in great need.

[English]

HUMAN RIGHTS—REPORTED PLAN TO ESTABLISH CIVILIAN INTERNMENT CAMPS. (B) TERMS OF STANDING ORDER PUBLISHED IN "THE CANADA GAZETTE"

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have always felt that with this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his government, one should not listen to what he says, but should watch what he does. On September 10 of this year the Ottawa Citizen quoted the Prime Minister as saying—and you understand, Mr. Speaker, that the Ottawa Citizen is always very kind to the Prime Minister and quotes him accurately, I am sure—and here I will read what it says:

> The record of intolerance in Pacific Canada, in the decades around the turn of the century, was not a proud one. No more exemplary was the decision taken by the federal government, in the heat and fright of World War II, to evacuate Japanese Canadians inland from coastal communities and to deprive so many of their civil rights.

That is what the Prime Minister said.

● (2210)

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) during the debate on the Constitution, justifying the provision of the charter of rights for Canada on February 17 said in defence of that charter, and I quote from page 7374 of Hansard:

> I want to examine the charter both in terms of what it holds out for tomorrow and also in terms of how it fits into the stream of Canadian history. While our history is one in which we can take pride, it is not without its stains. Some of these were brought out very clearly during the hearing by the joint committee of testimony from representatives of our native people, of the National Association of Japanese-Canadians, Francophone groups outside of Quebec, of Anglophone groups in Quebec, of the National Black Coalition, of women's groups, of the handicapped.
>
> Part of our task is to recognize the injustice of the past, to say "never again shall rights be trampled upon". Part of our task is to ensure that the enormous evolution in our values is reflected in our Constitution. That is what we are doing today. We are building a modern Canada for tomorrow.

That is what the Minister of Justice said on February 17. At the same time in cabinet, and I emphasize that, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and other cabinet ministers were formulating Privy Council Document No. 1305 which was Gazetted on June 10. I quote as follows from that document, Schedule, Part II, under the powers assigned to the Solicitor General:

> 6. Establish, administer and operate civilian internment camps.
>
> 7. Facilitate the selective reduction and transfer of prison populations to provide for the establishment of civilian internment camps.

On the one hand the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice say never again. At the same time they are providing powers for themselves to establish civilian internment camps. "Never again shall rights be trampled upon."

The question arises, if never again, why does the cabinet make provision for civilian internment camps? I think it is safe to say there is a truism about politics. Governments do not make provision for powers they do not plan to use. Does the government plan to use the provisions in this act? Of course it does. The question is who will be the candidates? Who will be in those civilian internment camps?

It is important to note that in 1970 we did not need a war to have wholesale imprisonments. The provisions of this act, which are an addendum to the War Measures Act, are supposedly to be enforced in case of war. However, the Prime Minister has already proved to us that we do not need a war to invoke those provisions.

What will trigger the use of those powers to bring about the civilian internment camp? Why did the Solicitor General when I asked this on October 29 lie to me when I first presented that matter to him?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the hon. member, it is unparliamentary to say that another member has lied. I wonder if the hon. member would reconsider his words on that point.

Mr. Friesen: I respectfully suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the rules of the adjournment debate do not permit that kind of interruption.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The language that the hon. member used is not acceptable at any time in the parliamentary proceedings. I invite the hon. member to rephrase his remarks.

Mr. Friesen: I will rephrase it and ask why does it appear that the minister lied to me when he said "there are no such orders in council"? Either he seemed to be misleading the House or he does not know what is going on in cabinet and does not deserve to be a minister of the Crown.

When I asked the minister in the House why he did that, the Solicitor General replied "the presence of illegals or foreign agents of that foreign power in Canada." Is the Immigration Act not adequate to deal with that? Is the Criminal Code not adequate to deal with that? Is the court system not adequate to deal with that?

● (2215)

The provision in this order in council is for civilian internment camps. That refers to citizens and to landed immigrants who have been denied due process of law and habeas corpus. In the short history of the tenure of the Prime Minister we have had one example where 450 citizens of the province of Quebec were imprisoned without due process of law and without habeas corpus. The present Speaker in the other place said that it was silly to imprison those people because logically they were not harming our country.

I have asked serious questions and I should like to have an answer tonight.

[Translation]

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to answer the question put by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen). I might add that this will also be an opportunity for me to explain what the situation is in cases where the order in council on contingency plans is to be implemented. The first circumstance would be in case of war. The second would be in case of a breakdown in public order preceding the outbreak of a war or in case of terrorist acts. The third circumstance would be an emergency following a disaster resulting from natural causes.

As Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General of Canada, I can say that we would be in charge of the two first situations only, because they come under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Solicitor General. The purpose of this order in council will, in fact, be to prevent occurrences such as those that took place during the last World War, which were mainly due to a lack of staff and of regulations such as the one we would like to have adopted. Mechanisms for enabling the government to meet its responsibilities still have to be worked out; they will be made known shortly and will be the subject of the customary debate.

Mr. Speaker, once more I would like to say that the new measures are primarily aimed at striking a balance between the rights of the individual and national security, and they will become effective only after proclamation before the House. For the information of the House, I would like to add that an additional margin of safety will be provided so that citizens can protect themselves against any abuse of human rights, since this House will soon be asked to pass a motion to entrench a charter of rights in the Constitution of Canada. The individual will therefore have the protection of the charter of rights, and finally, the government's action will be structured as described in the order in council.

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT—INCREASED GRANTS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF MUNICIPAL SEWAGE TREATMENT SYSTEMS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): On October 27 the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) announced a program called "Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement" which will provide some $65 million for municipal infrastructure for sewage treatment plants and associated facilities over the next three years. I want to indicate my appreciation and good feelings toward the minister for announcing this program. It will be of great benefit in my constituency where some $5.6 million will be expended by this program during the next two or three years. The Great Lakes Quality Agreement approved the expenditure to Elliot Lake of some $2.8 million, to the town of Spanish of $1.45 million, to Little Current of $1,263,000 and to Blind River of $42,000. These were new commitments in the case of Spanish and Blind River. In Little Current and Elliot Lake it involved funds that were replacing those provided by the community services contribution program that was terminated at the end of last year. The funding under the program is very much appreciated. However, in the circumstances in the town of Elliott Lake which is rapidly expanding, where they are into a multimillion dollar sewer and water development program, not only to serve the existing town but to serve a new town undergoing construction right now, the amount of funding provided under the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement does not totally cover the commitment we envisaged or planned under the community services contribution program. In fact, there was a shortfall of some $1.236 million from that program. The minister indicated that he hoped to meet with the provincial minister of the environment, Mr. Norton, in the very near future to work out a very suitable arrangement to cover the shortfall. I hope the parliamentary secretary in responding this evening will be able to report further to us on that meeting and the developments from it.

• (2220)

Equally important to that matter is the question of the payment of these funds. I should like the parliamentary secretary to report on that tonight. Under the previous program, the community services contribution program, the municipality would construct the infrastructure, the sewer and water system, and then wait sometimes six months or a year to actually be reimbursed for it. In the days when interest rates were 3, 4, or 5 per cent, that procedure may have been acceptable. But in this day and age when small municipalities are paying up to 20 per cent and more for money to carry massive projects like this one, involving more than $1 million for a year, they are faced with several hundreds of thousands of dollars in interest and carrying charges.

I put the question to the minister in the House on October 27, which happened to be the same day on which the minister announced the program. I asked whether the minister would consider advancing the payments from the federal government under this program as the work progressed which would save municipalities, many of which are strained to capacity attempting to finance major projects, literally hundreds of thousands of dollars. The minister said that he had not had an opportunity to work out the exact details of the program with the provincial government, but that he would certainly take my representations into consideration.

I hope the parliamentary secretary in responding in the House tonight will respond in a positive fashion to that suggestion. It is not only desirable, it is absolutely essential. We are not talking about only three or four municipalities in my constituency. We are talking about literally dozens of them across the province of Ontario, all of which will take advantage of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement during the next three years.

I plead with the minister and the parliamentary secretary to follow the suggestion I made in the House a few days ago and to ensure that no more additional costs are loaded on to these hard-pressed municipalities by requiring them to carry large financial burdens of high interest rates over a period of six months or a year or, in some cases, even longer.

• (2225)

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to thank the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) for raising this issue again tonight and also thank him on behalf of the minister for his words of commendation to the minister both tonight and on October 27 when the minister made the announcement of increased assistance to municipalities for sewage treatment facilities under the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. This federal assistance will enable Ontario to put in place those facilities needed to honour Canada's commitment under the Canada-United States Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement with respect to municipal sewage treatment.

The hon. member raised the question of whether the minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) will consider paying the grants to the municipalities concurrent with the pace of construction, rather than at the end of construction, so as to avoid the municipalities having to finance these grants in the interim period. It is a viewpoint with which we have considerable sympathy. On October 27 the minister undertook to raise that issue with his provincial colleague, Mr. Norton. I am not in the position tonight to say whether that discussion has taken place.

The proposal of the hon. member for Algoma introduces a problem by virtue of the nature of the agreement under which we are funding the cleanup of this municipal pollution. The federal agreement will be with the province of Ontario, not with the municipalities.

Under the Canada-Ontario agreement it is the provincial government which undertakes to fulfil certain of the obligations of the Canada-United States agreement, and hence the implementation of the program lies with the province and the flow of federal grants is through the provincial government.

I would like to indicate that through our agreement with Ontario, the province will ensure the completion of municipal sewage works costing approximately $355 million in support of the international water quality agreement. Canada's share of this amount will be $65 million, which brings to more than $600 million the amount of federal money expended in the cleanup of municipal pollution.

The provincial government will submit to the Government of Canada certified statements of account for eligible expenditures on or about the end of April, July, October and January of each fiscal year. Interim financing charges incurred by the municipality during construction constitute one of the eligible project costs for which assistance under this program is provided.

To the extent that the municipalities are able to present their claims and to the extent that these in turn are presented to Canada in a prompt and efficient manner, financing costs relating to the federal grant contribution will be kept at a minimum.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A motion to adjourn this House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At 10.28 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 18, 1981

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REGULATIONS GOVERNING ALLOWANCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, whereas every Canadian who volunteered for service during World War I and World War II in effect offered his or her life for the country, and every man and woman went where they were directed by the government—the soldier, sailor or airman had no choice of the theatre in which he served—I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That the present regulations of the Department of Veterans Affairs providing veterans allowances only to those who served in an actual theatre of war outside Canada be amended, and that all applications from veterans be considered fairly without reference to where the enlisted person served.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON INSURANCE INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, the recent budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has knocked the foundations out from under Canadians making plans for the lifetime financial security of their families. Last year 85 per cent of Canadian families who bought life insurance policies grossed less than $25,000 in income per year. Now insurance industry figures indicate that the new budget will mean a reduction of 20,000 jobs in the industry across Canada, and up to 4,000 in the Kitchener-Waterloo area alone. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie):

That the Minister of Finance repeat his reversal of yesterday and remove his attack on average Canadians who want to protect themselves for the future, and that he instruct his officials to correct the chaos created in the Canadian insurance industry by the budget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—CALL FOR RELEASE OF DANYLO SHUMUK, UKRAINIAN PATRIOT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my motion concerns the plight of Danylo Shumuk, a 68-year-old Ukrainian patriot who has been imprisoned in the Soviet Union for many years. He is in failing health, and we now learn that he is to be sent into internal exile for the final five years of his imprisonment. Given that Mr. Shumuk has many relatives in Canada who would be glad to receive him, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Guelph (Mr. Schroder):

That this House strongly urges the Soviet authorities to review their intent to send Danylo Shumuk into internal exile, and that because of failing health he be released from prison to join relatives in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

MARINE TRANSPORT

INTERPROVINCIAL FERRY SERVICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity in which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) will be interested. In view of the fact that the federal government is proceeding to abandon its responsibility to link the Atlantic provinces with marine transportation, beginning with a 50 per cent reduction in summer ferry service between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House requests the Minister of Transport to freeze ferry tolls at their present level, order the 21 new vessels CN Marine needs for east coast ferry and coastal services, and rescind the announced cutbacks of ferry service between North Sydney and Argentia.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

PROVISIONS AFFECTING CONSTRUCTION OF HOUSING UNITS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) announced budgetary provisions which will permit the completion of 20,000 residential units, more than 1,000 of which are in my riding of Mississauga North, by providing the exemption of soft costs for sites under construction before January 1, 1982, as well as the deduction from income of the interest on funds borrowed by first-time purchasers of MURBs. I move, seconded by the hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni):

That this House welcomes this new initiative and applauds the minister for responding immediately to Canada's housing need.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1410)

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

USE OF ASBESTOS AS TRACK BALLAST—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Pacific Railway has used asbestos, instead of gravel, to stabilize or ballast some 90 miles of rail line in the eastern townships of Quebec. Given that scientists have determined there is no safe level of exposure to asbestos, a known cancer-causing agent, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That this House calls on the Department of the Environment to launch an immediate investigation into the matter with a view to requiring CPR to remove the asbestos from its rail lines in Quebec in order to protect the health of both the railwaymen affected and the public at large.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

POLITICAL PARTIES

ELECTION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY GOVERNMENT IN MANITOBA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and joyful necessity. Whereas the Manitoba Conservatives campaigned on a platform of economic restraint known as Reaganomics, and whereas the Manitoba Liberals campaigned on a platform of economic restraint known as MacEachenomics, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper):

That this House congratulates the voters of Manitoba for rejecting both and electing a government that offers a positive economic future for ordinary people.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

PROVISIONS AFFECTING CONSTRUCTION OF HOUSING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Kushner (Calgary East): Madam Speaker, on November 16 Calgary City Council was forced to pass a motion unanimously to spend $20,000 on an advertising campaign in eastern Canada advising Canadians of the housing shortage in Calgary. Calgary City Council's motion also urged the federal government to reconsider its decision to abandon the MURB program. Therefore, Madam Speaker, as Canada is now in the midst of a housing crisis of enormous proportions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That this House no longer has confidence in the Minister of Public Works responsible for housing and the Minister of Finance for creating a crisis and disaster situation in housing, for threatening thousands of jobs in construction and other related industries across the country, and that the government reintroduced the MURB and soft-cost allowance program immediately to give urgently needed incentive and hope to people in need of homes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

METRIC CONVERSION

CALL FOR ABANDONMENT OF PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the Wall Street Journal reports that the United States metric board has been told by the Reagan administration to "walk its last kilometre" by March 31, 1982. In the United States highway signs will stay miles per hour, the national weather service will report in degrees Fahrenheit, and retail food stores will continue to deal in pounds and ounces. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling):

That we abandon this forced march to metric and get in line with our major trading partners and thereby save hundreds of millions of dollars by staying with our traditional units of measurement, imperial. It is only by such a course that the government can truly display restraint.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in this deepening recession every assistance must be given to growing small businesses. If small business bonds for new growth were appropriate last February when the minister thought we were in good times, surely this form of interest cost assistance is more appropriate now when clearly the economy is in a tailspin recession. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the Minister of Finance today on motions correct the foolish error he made in his budget and extend the small business development bond for the purchase of new equipment for the full year, 1982, and so give small business some encouragement to expand.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1415)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

ADVICE OFFERED BY CANADIAN FEDERATION OF INDEPENDENT BUSINESS SPOKESMAN

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As I am sure he is painfully aware by now, Mr. John Bulloch, who represents some 62,000 Canadian independent business men and women, had a press conference this morning, at which time he declared war on the minister's budget. He called it the greatest threat to enterprise since the Benson white paper in 1969, and I quote:

Bulloch accused the Department of Finance officials of demonstrating a shocking lack of practical knowledge of the business community and unconscionable ignorance of the functioning of capital markets.

As the tide rolls in as far as adverse comment is concerned and as far as jobs and the budget's impact with respect to investment are concerned, is the minister willing to take Mr. Bulloch's advice and to refer this matter to a standing committee where we can have public hearings on it?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I believe that the hon. member is making the same mistake the president of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business made this morning. Madam Speaker, if members of the opposition want to answer on my behalf, they should form the government. However, since they were defeated over a year ago, they might be better off listening to the answers given by the ministers. Madam Speaker, if the hon. member had taken the trouble to read the budget, he would know that in addition to increasing the annual income limit for small business corporate tax rates from $150,000 to $200,000, in addition to exempting small business from corporate surtax, and to reducing the cost of unemployment insurance premiums for employers and, Madam Speaker, in addition to extending the Small Business Development Bond, measures which will cost the government about $400 million, which means $400 million more in the pockets of Canada's small businesses, the hon. member will realize that his question is totally unfounded, Madam Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speyer: Madam Speaker, that is just an inadequate answer from an inadequate minister.

LIMITATION ON INVESTMENT INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. There are many, many repugnant aspects within the budget, but there are none more repugnant than the notion of limiting the amount of interest which can be deducted with respect to investment. The minister knows, from the studies within his own department, that 90 per cent of new business ventures are financed by loans from friends, neighbours, from relatives, and also from business associates. How can the minister possibly justify this particular action in these circumstances where no one in their right mind will make investments, and which will have such a deleterious effect on jobs?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the Minister of State for Small Businesses has given very important information to the House concerning the value of this budget for small business. It is a major source of development, innovation, and job creation in Canada.

Mr. Wilson: Not any longer.

Mr. Gray: The over-all thrust of the budget is to create a strong climate for growth and job creation. I am surprised my hon. friends have missed this important reality.

CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCE PROVISIONS

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): My final supplementary question, Madam Speaker, is directed to the Minister of Finance, who I hope might respond to this question. The minister will know of the massive tax grabs within this budget, but none are more massive than the $2 billion the government will take over a three-year period as a result of the new limitation on capital cost allowances. It was in 1972 that the capital allowance system with respect to manufacturing was implemented by the Hon. John Turner. One fifth of the jobs in Canada are created in manufacturing. How can the minister justify taking $2 billion from the private sector and transferring it to the public sector?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the necessity to justify that situation does not arise, because that is not what is taking place. If the hon. member had understood the situation he would have known that there is no increase in the total revenue received by the Government of Canada as a result of the change in the capital cost allowance. The total aggregate of tax payable is not increased by one dime. The hon. member does not know that. He ought to understand the budget before he gets up and asks questions.

● (1420)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TAX EXEMPTIONS FOR FOREIGN DOMICILED DEPENDANTS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. Last Thursday in his budget, Canadian taxpayers learned they could no longer deduct support payments to their mums, dads and grandparents overseas. Can the minister please explain to this House how he differentiates between supporting families in Brampton, Georgetown, Toronto and Vancouver and supporting parents in London, Tel Aviv, Athens or Rome?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has drawn attention to the change in the exemptions that can be claimed for dependants abroad. The hon. member may want to examine the facts that have been brought forward by the Department of National Revenue which indicate that a very large abuse exists in such claims and that many claims are put forward for non-existent dependants abroad and that it has been impossible for the Department of National Revenue in any effective way to ensure that these exemptions are not fraudulently based. It was on the advice of the Department of National Revenue that this particular change has been made.

If the hon. member is interested in equity in the tax system—

Mr. McDermid: There is no equity.

Mr. MacEachen: —he should be interested in a conclusion that does not provide particular taxpayers with a way of avoiding personal income tax which is not available to other taxpayers. That is the effect of that particular change.

The hon. member is attempting to draw attention away from the very equitable basis upon which this proposal is made.

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN SYSTEM

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, if there is abuse of the system, why does the government not prosecute those who are abusing the system rather than wiping out the system?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Why would the minister not change the system rather than penalizing people who legitimately support their dependants overseas, many of whom rely on that support to keep life and limb together? Is it not simply a matter of the Minister of Finance grabbing more tax dollars, and of yet another attack by the Liberal government on the family?

Mr. McLean: He has thrown the baby out with the bath water.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there is nothing in the proposal that will prevent individuals from supporting their dependants anywhere in the world. What is attempted in the proposal is to provide an exemption for immediate dependants, namely, spouses and children.

Mr. McDermid: There is no abuse then.

Mr. MacEachen: That seems to be a reasonably manageable situation. But any individual is still free to send any amount of money out of the country to other dependants; in this case it cannot be an exemption as a basis for lowering the tax. That is the difference.

Mr. Clark: That is anti-new Canadian.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW JOB CREATION MEASURE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Every day literally hundreds of Canadians are losing their jobs. Since August alone 50,000 men and women have been laid off. Considering that just yesterday the minister yielded to pressure from the business community to make certain changes in the budget proposals for their benefit, will he today be prepared to announce some new job-creation measure which will bring relief to the more than one million unemployed Canadians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member asked the same question yesterday on job creation, which I answered.

• (1425)

Let me tell the hon. member that the change which was made yesterday was not in response to representations from the business community, but in response to representations made by members on this side of the House and by individuals in the country who were interested in ensuring that rental accommodation programs already in place would not be disturbed and arrested because of the elimination of MURB provisions, so I extended until the end of December the inclusion of particular costs for deductibility in order that all existing programs in the housing field should go ahead.

The hon. member is again distorting the impact of a particular measure that I announced in the House in response to representations from members of the House, the effect of which is to help people seeking apartments in this country, not to help high-income owners of apartment buildings. The hon. member has it all wrong again.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRIAL AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Once again, Madam Speaker, we got no announcement of a significant job-creation program. That was the gist of the minister's answer. I will try another minister who has vaguely expressed concern about unemployment from time to time, and that is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He has cited the great efficacy of the Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program. Considering that this program has been in operation for more than a year and has done almost nothing in terms of providing jobs—in fact in Windsor with a need for some 11,000 new jobs it has provided only 184, and in the area of Sept-Îles with an unemployment rate of 25.4 per cent only 80 new jobs have been created—is the minister at long last prepared to stand up and demand of the Minister of Finance some new job-creation program?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program has over $300 million assigned to it by this government, and in the coming weeks and months I expect to see a much more vigorous use of these funds in order to expand our existing job-creation activities. I again repeat, a basic thrust of this budget, especially the assistance for the small business sector will, in my view, have a major positive effect on job-creation throughout this country because small business is a major source of job creation across Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you for the recorded announcement.

[Translation]

LAY-OFFS IN QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The figures for the various regions of Quebec reflect as well a setback and even a deterioration of economic activities. General Motors announced last week that 3,500 workers will be laid off, Canadian Admiral will close its doors and, thirdly, 610 Pratt & Whitney employees will be given their walking papers. Here is my question: Why is there no new job-creation program in very high unemployment regions such as Quebec?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the leader of the New Democratic Party—it probably slipped his mind—that one of the basic documents tabled by the Minister of Finance on budget night features the government's over-all economic policy guidelines for the 1980s. One of the major points announced by the government in that document is that the integration of the regional dimension in the sectorial policies of the government will become a constant factor in all our policies.

• (1430)

[English]

I am very surprised that the hon. member has not read that document. It says very clearly—

An hon. Member: We read it in five minutes.

Mr. De Bané: —that the question of the development of every region will become central in the decision-making process of this government. We have also announced a strengthening of our capacity not only to bring the information from the regions to the highest levels in Ottawa but also to concentrate on each region.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS OF THE REPUBLIC OF IVORY COAST

Madam Speaker: I wish to draw the attention of the House to the distinguished presence in our gallery of His Excellency Mr. Siméon Aké, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Ivory Coast.

[English]

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MEMBERS OF THE CABINET AND LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Madam Speaker: I would like to draw the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery of Members of the Cabinet and Legislative Council of the Northwest Territories.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

THE BUDGET

ISSUANCE OF ADVERTISEMENT BY CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for housing. Yesterday the minister said that the advertisement containing budget information was, and I quote his exact words:

—not authorized until following a meeting of the cabinet committee on communications, Friday, November 13, at approximately 12.30 p.m.

He went on to say:

After reviewing that ad with suggested changes, authorization then was given for the use of that ad in advertisements the following day, November 14.

That is the end of the quote.

How can the minister stand behind such blatantly inaccurate statements when the advertisement was actually authorized camera-ready for printing, and in the hands of numerous newspapers, before cabinet approval, and how can he say that the cabinet authorized printing of the advertisement for November 14 when, in actual fact, it was ordered and authorized by Vickers and Benson on November 9, three days before the budget, for publication on November 13?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have had the opportunity since responding to the questions yesterday afternoon to speak to officials on this matter. I would confirm that the story reported in The Globe and Mail today, on page 8, does consist of the facts as I understand them. The facts are correct that, first, no publication of any material affecting housing in the budget was printed until after the budget, that is, November 13.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cosgrove: I also confirm that no material pertaining to that advertisement was in the hands of the firm to which the hon. gentleman has just referred. Indeed, their work for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation was to obtain space, which they did.

I would add, finally, that after the budget was deliverd in this House, representatives of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation released an advertisement, which was then taken to the newspapers after the budget was delivered by the Minister of Finance in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TELEGRAM SENT BY ADVERTISING AGENCY

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, the minister with his misinformed tongue is apparently allowing it to run away with his mouth, as usual.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Cossitt: If the jackals will be quiet, I will refer the minister to a telegram sent by Vickers and Benson on the day of the budget, addressed "Urgent to all advertising managers re: CMHC", the wording of which I have here, identifies the advertisement by its actual heading. How does the minister explain the fact that, despite his denial and that of Vickers and Benson, the advertising agency was able to quote from the CMHC advertisement before cabinet approval, which he says was not given until a day later? How does he explain that an official of Vickers and Benson told my office yesterday that they had the CMHC ad material, and I quote the exact words used, "We sent the material out on Wednesday", and Wednesday was the day before the budget? I ask the minister to tell us what was the exact sequence of events.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the last thing I would do in this House, or in my responsibility as a minister of this government, going on my very brief experience, would be to rely on anything quoted by anyone to that member opposite.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cosgrove: The member has taken a telegram which referred to space taken in newspapers across the country to assist Canadians and members of this House to explain the government's proposed plan. It referred to it by one word, "Attention", and that is the only information that Vickers and Benson had, one word. That is how it described the ad.

Mr. Cossitt: Now you are starting to admit something.

Mr. Cosgrove: Now, Madam Speaker, that material was released after the budget. It was sent to newspapers the following morning after question period. I attended a meeting of the communications committee of cabinet because I wanted the advice of my cabinet colleagues as to whether the initiative I had taken to put that material in the hands of newspapers—

An hon. Member: Impossible.

Mr. Cosgrove: —on the weekend was adequate. They said it was, and it was released for large distribution on the weekend.

An hon. Member: How could it have been?

TIMING OF ORDERS PLACED BY ADVERTISING AGENCY

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the minister for housing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Not again.

Mr. Beatty: I can understand their unease after the minister's answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for housing. The House will recall that on numerous occasions, including yesterday, the minister responsible for housing indicated to the House that the first time he became aware of any provisions in the budget relating to housing was just a few minutes before the budget speech was given by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons. If that is the case, why did Vickers and Benson send out orders on the evening of November 9 requesting space to run an advertisement announcing the housing provisions which would be announced in the budget some days later?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, obviously the hon. member has forgotten that I was requested by many members on the opposite side, and I am not sure whether by him in particular—

An hon. Member: You are not sure of anything.

Mr. Cosgrove:—to assist home owners in this difficult time of high interest rates. I worked three months in preparation, advising the government on its preparation for the budget to deal with that very problem. I took the initiative to have Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation prepared to respond as quickly as possible in light of the interest, not only in this House, but across the country, in the problems of high interest rates faced by home owners.

I am really surprised, Madam Speaker, in light of the requests that come from the opposite side—as late as today there was a request by a member for assistance from me to help one of his constituents—

An hon. Member: What are you there for?

Mr. Cosgrove: —that I should be criticized for taking initiatives to help them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROLE OF CABINET COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, you will note that in the minister's hysterical response he did not answer why it was that Vickers and Benson, if he knew nothing about the budget, was reserving space on November 9, well before the budget was brought down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: The minister's whole defence is that, when it comes to housing, nobody tells him anything.

My supplementary question is for the Secretary of State, who is chairman of the cabinet committee on communications. Would the minister tell us why if Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation had already sent the advertisements out—they were printed in some papers on the Friday morning—why was it that the cabinet committee on communications did not even consider the ads until lunch time? Also, why was Vickers and Benson asked to reserve time and space when the government has the Canadian Media Corporation on contract to the tune of some $2,430,000 to do that?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the hon. member, in his lack of understanding of the system, has combined a number of rather unrelated questions. It might take longer than the time given to me to respond in this House, to educate the hon. member. He might be aware, as I indicated yesterday, that ads are often placed without the recommendation of the communications committee, because it is obviously not possible for every ad to come before that committee. What the honourable and distinguished minister, who is doing a good job for the people in battling housing problems in this country, did, was to come to the communications committee to talk about an ongoing program explaining the provision of housing assistance in the coming weeks and, in the course of that, he presented the ad which had been approved the night before and sent out.

● (1440)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: You'd better get your stories straight.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Regan: Despite the howls of glee on the other side, I want to reiterate what I just said, because there obviously is some collective misunderstanding on the benches opposite. What I said was simply that he came to the cabinet communications committee for a discussion of plans for ads in the coming days, and he brought with him an ad, which the hon. member and other hon. members have referred to as appearing in the paper that morning. This was the first connection the cabinet communications committee had with it.

The hon. member then asked a number of other questions which are hard for me to remember. However, he asked why this had not gone through the AMG. Many ads are placed by departments directly. There is a vast number of ads dealing with such matters as recruiting, tenders, and various other subjects.

* * *

[Translation]

IMPACT ON EXPANSION OF SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Small Businesses and Tourism. On the subject of the small business development bond program, a measure that was greatly appreciated by Canadian businessmen during the past year, could the minister tell us, following the budget that has just been brought down and for the benefit of Canadians, especially Canadian businessmen, and for the benefit of the official opposition which seems to have trouble understanding our new budget, could the minister tell us what impact the new budget will have on this measure?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I am happy to inform or rather to reconfirm to the House and especially to Canadian businessmen and women that the small business development bond program has been extended for one year, in fact requested by most members and the majority of associations representing small businesses in this country. In addition, Madam Speaker, the program has been extended to all unincorporated businesses. I remember that many members and especially the member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) repeatedly asked to have the measure extended to unincorporated businesses. Its application has been restricted to businesses in financial difficulty, because that was the original objective of the program which was aimed at giving assistance to those needing it most.

* * *

[English]

EFFECT ON RETIREMENT INCOME OF FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, and it concerns the elimination of annuities for retiring farmers. As the minister knows, when many farmers sell their farms they do not have pensions, and they live off annuities as a form of retirement income.

Let me refer, for example, to the real case of one farmer with three quarter-sections of land. The figures I have, which have been worked out by a Saskatchewan accounting firm, show that if this farmer sold his three quarter-sections of land, under the old rules his taxes would have been $5,000, and under the new rules, after the budget, they will be $72,000.

I would like to ask the minister how he can justify the increase of tax in the year of sale from $5,000 before his budget to $72,000 after his budget. Is this not blatant discrimination against the small farmer?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not think there is anything in the budget which would justify those numbers. If the hon. member would give me the details of the case, I will have them examined in detail and remove, I trust, some of his apprehensions.

The purpose of most of the provisions in the budget is to avoid a deferral of tax for certain taxpayers when such a deferral cannot be enjoyed by the vast majority of taxpayers or tax filers in our system. There have been many transactions up to the present time in which in some cases indefinite deferrals of taxes have been permitted, and those deferrals have not been available to the vast majority of taxpayers who depend on employment income. It is in order to remove these inequities that certain changes have been made so that all taxpayers will be contributing in a similar way. There is absolutely no effort to discriminate against any particular class of taxpayer, but it is impossible for me to judge a particular case, and I will want to get more information.

REQUEST FOR EXEMPTION FOR CERTAIN FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, since most farmers do not have pension plans but rely on the sale of their farms for retirement income, I wonder if the minister might consider a basic exemption for farmers who are in that category—and, indeed, small businessmen—because not only do they lose immensely on taxes in the year of the sale but, according to the accounting firm, a small farmer with three quarters of a section of land would find himself in the years after a sale losing about $6,000 of income annually. Would the minister consider an exemption for farmers who are in that kind of situation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the purpose of the changes which have been included in the budget has been to establish a broad sense of equity in the tax system so that individuals in receipt of investment income or capital gains will be treated on a reasonable basis with taxpayers receiving their incomes from employment. The broad thrust is equity. It is not to add to inequity which may exist in the tax system. For that reason I would be pleased to consider any suggestion that would enhance the equity I am attempting to create within the tax system.

CMHC ADVERTISEMENT—INFORMATION RELATING TO HOUSING PROVISIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for housing, who chose his response very carefully. He indicated that there had been no publication prior to a certain date. As he knows from the exchange yesterday, what is at issue here is not the date of publication but the date of advance release of information contained in the budget. The minister has said that he knew nothing about the contents of the budget on November 10, although Vickers and Benson advertising was reserving space in his name on November 9, the day before he says he knew anything.

An hon. Member: So what?

Mr. Clark: "So what," the Liberals ask. "So what" about the breach of budget secrecy. "So what" about the waste of public taxpayer money.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My question to this "so what" minister of this "so what" government is very precise. Can the minister tell the House of Commons exactly to whom this detailed budget information was given? To what individuals, inside or outside government? When was it given, and on what authorization was this detailed budget information given?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have to say again to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that no material was released from the government to the public or to anyone until after the Minister of Finance had completed his budget speech in this House on budget night. I wish to make that clear. There was no breach of secrecy whatsoever.

As the minister reporting to this House for the CMHC I am discouraged at the thrust of questions such as this one from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. Over the last three weeks the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party have been tripping over one another to release to the public secrets of what they perceived and thought to be a secret document prepared for budget consideration.

• (1450)

QUERY RESPECTING PUROLATOR FIRM

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): The minister's revised position now is that there was no information made available to the public. It will be interesting for the House to know what he defines by the "public" because of their contractual relations with Vickers and Benson, Purolator and others. We would still like to know the exact information and dates on which that detailed budget information was made available outside the bureau of the office of the Minister of Finance. We would like to have that information.

I should like to ask a question about Purolator, the organization which carried this advertisement to some 140 newspapers, by the minister's evidence, across the country. On what precise date and by whose authorization, and by whose foreknowledge, was the information made available to Purolator?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): The preparation of the material in question was undertaken by officials of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation who worked with me, as I have indicated, over the last few months, giving advice to the minister in anticipation that there would be relief offered in the budget to the mortgage renewal situation. Because of that, space was reserved in the newspapers, on my instructions. At eight o'clock on the evening of the budget I indicated that the material, as I understood it, could be released as reflecting the position of the government.

An hon. Member: You did not say that yesterday.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): This statement is contradictory to what the minister said yesterday in the House. Let me ask the Secretary of State of Canada a question regarding Canada Media Corporation to which this government is paying over $2 million to do the job that apparently Vickers and Benson is doing. Why was Vickers and Benson involved in this particular transaction if the Government of Canada has retained Canada Media Corporation at $2 million to do exactly what Vickers and Benson did in this case?

Because there apparently was the issuance of budget information released outside the office of the Minister of Finance prior to its publication in the budget, in the House, on the evening of November 12, by the minister of housing's admission, and in light of the fact there is this controversy about the possible premature release of this information to newspapers across the country, will the minister give this House an undertaking that he will refer this whole question to the appropriate committee of this House so that we can put detailed questions and receive detailed answers as to exactly what went on here, who was told budget information prior to its publication, what was the role of Vickers and Benson and the role of Canada Media Corporation?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I am not sure I can give the hon. member any information that will help him in his witch hunt. I suggest to the hon. member that I may be able to give him a better understanding of the system with which he is concerned. First of all, an advertisement that is placed by a government agency, such as CMHC or Crown corporations, does not usually follow the same procedure as advertisements that are placed by government departments. It would be less likely that CMHC would have occasion to be involved in such a circumstance or the cabinet committee on communications.

In relation to the other part of the question, that might be more properly directed to the minister. I should like to point out to the right hon. member that it is not at all unusual for a minister, who has made representation to the Minister of Finance as to what he hopes to have included in the budget, to make preparations to advertise, in the hope and confidence that the minister will follow his recommendation, but, nevertheless, he is in the position of not knowing, until the budget is introduced or until he is briefed in the hour before the budget is introduced, whether it will or will not be budget material.

Because the minister in question did not have the sealed envelopes delivered until after the budget was introduced in the House, this showed, indeed, that he was not sure whether the information would actually be contained in the budget. It certainly confirms and strengthens the position the minister has put forward.

* * *

[Translation]

REFORM OF PENSION LEGISLATION—INQUIRY RESPECTING MINISTER'S PLANS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In view of the statement in the budget that government tax revenues will not be sufficient to provide for any new social measures, and that substantial cuts are expected because of inflation, what are the minister's plans with respect to pension review?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, first of all I would like to point out, if I may, that the preamble to this question cannot be assigned the slightest credibility. I do not know, and the hon. member has not told me, where he got his information.

Obviously, at this point we cannot launch new programs for social spending. However, we have managed to hold on to indexing of all Canada's social programs.

That being said, I am grateful to the hon. member for giving me an opportunity, and I shall make use of it immediately, to point out that the study on pensions in the private sector in Canada will probably be the most important document on social reform to appear in the eighties.

I have not yet heard the official position of the New Democratic Party on the subject, and we are still waiting to hear the views of the Progressive Conservative Party. On this side, we shall be publishing a green paper, very shortly, which will show Canadians what kind of changes we would like to see and for which we would like their commitment, to help us take measures that will benefit all Canadians.

INCOME TAX CREDITS—MEASURES TO MAKE TAX SYSTEM MORE JUST—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, the minister is actually talking about the whole pension system, since instead of addressing the review of the public sector's system and the Canada Pension Plan, she is referring to a review of the situation in the private sector and corporate pensions, which is indeed a dramatic shift in Liberal policy.

The minister is witnessing substantial cuts in social spending and is aware that the Canadian Council on Social Development has criticized this reactionary measure in the budget. In view of the minister's statements in favour of tax credits to make our tax system more equitable, and considering the fact that the system now being proposed by the Minister of Finance gives more benefits to the rich and less to the poor, how can the minister remain a member of a government that has rejected all her social and fiscal proposals?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): For a very simple reason, Madam Speaker. I have less trouble understanding what I read than the hon. member does. It seems to me he has missed the point entirely, and in any case, I do not think he knows what he is talking about. Regarding his first question on pension, the expression "pension review', has been used for a year and a half because on this side of the House, a study on corporate pension review was started a year and a half ago. When he refers to the review of pensions in the public sector, he should know, and there have been references in Hansard for months, that this government, as soon as the economic situation permits, intends to give first priority to completing the work started and consolidated in July 1980; that is, to bring single persons above the poverty line by supplementing the $420 given in July 1980. I think this is quite clear, and I do not see what his problem is.

* * *

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

RECOGNITION OF WOMEN'S RIGHTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I have a straightforward question that is directed to the Prime Minister, regarding the constitutional proposals. Will the Prime Minister confirm that all of the provinces, except Saskatchewan, have now agreed to the inclusion intact of the equality clause, Section 28, as it was introduced to the House of Commons earlier this year with unanimous approval by all parties of this House?

• (1500)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the negotiations on this particular subject have been going on for several days because it was a matter of clarifying what the premiers intended when they signed the accord. There has been, effectively, disagreement between them as to what particular interpretation should be given to a particular section. I can only say that to this moment it has been impossible to get all nine premiers who signed the accord, on the same wavelength, and to agree to the same text.

Mr. Blackburn: You do not have to worry about Sterling Lyon any more.

Mr. Trudeau: Since we told the provinces that we would be tabling the resolution in its final form today, as a direct answer to the hon. lady's question I must say that there is more than one province which disagrees with the complete restoration of the section as it was. Therefore, in the spirit of the accord, I think we will have to go with a modified version of the text that we had originally proposed, not only in the resolution which has been before the House for a year, but also in the drafting sessions. I do not think it is appropriate to point out any particular province. There has been a great deal of negotiations going on, but obviously there is some lack of unanimity among the provinces as to what was intended in the accord.

* * *

PETITION

TABLING OF REPORT OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the Report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett) and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. McGRATH—ALLEGED BREACH BY MINISTER OF BUDGET SECRECY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege concerns questions raised in the House today and yesterday directed toward the minister responsible for housing, notice of which was given to Your Honour in accordance with the provisions of the Standing Orders.

Sir Erskine May, in his current edition, in Chapter XXX, referred to the importance of budget secrecy. It is a well-known convention, although I would say that it has more than the force of a convention, that budget secrecy is absolutely essential if the government is to enjoy the confidence of the House. It goes beyond that because if we are to subscribe to the convention of budget secrecy, and if others outside the House, outside cabinet, are to be given information before that information is given to the House, then I submit that it is a violation of my privilege as a Member of Parliament. That argument has been made before and it has been entertained by the Chair.

As reported on page 12837 of yesterday's Hansard, Madam Speaker said:

> What is at issue is the matter of secrecy of the budget, which is not to be dealt with under privilege.

I submit with respect that it is a matter of privilege; it is a matter of my privilege. If the budget is released to others outside the House before it is delivered to the House, my privileges as a member of the House have been violated. That is the whole pith and substance of my argument, but it goes beyond that because Madam Speaker said that I have to lay a charge. I do not have to lay a charge. All I have to do is to present to you evidence which in your opinion would constitute a prima facie case. Madam Speaker has to rule whether or not that evidence constitutes a prima facie case of privilege. It is then up to the House or a committee of the House to rule on the matter of substance itself.

I referred to the matter involving the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). I think that is very important and very germane to my case because at that time the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the Leader of the New Democratic Party, was successful in placing before the House an amendment which was in fact accepted by the Chair, by your distinguished predecessor. The hon. member was not asked to lay a charge; he was not asked to stake his seat on it. He merely presented an amendment that contained very serious allegations, which is precisely what I am trying to do. I think the House should be aware of what that amendment said. It read:

> —and that the said member had advance knowledge from official sources of amendments to be proposed to a bill emanating from the said budget and conveyed that knowledge to businessmen.

At that time the Speaker did not immediately ask the hon. member to stake his seat on that charge, because that was a charge. Mr. Speaker merely accepted that motion as an amendment to the motion before the House. It was put to the House and it was agreed to. It so happens that subsequently the committee found that the hon. member was not in fact guilty of betraying budget secrets to a businessman or to anybody else, and he was exonerated. It is conceivable that if this matter is referred to a committee, the minister for housing could very well be exonerated. That would be the end of it and I would not lose my seat. But Parliament will at least have been given an opportunity to examine the evidence, an opportunity which we cannot possibly have within the precise four corners of question period. It is impossible to go into the kind of detail in question period that can be done in the course of a committee hearing. I submit that the evidence is mounting and, notwithstanding the assurance today of the minister of housing whereby he stated categorically that there was not a budget leak, there is mounting evidence that there were persons outside of cabinet, outside the House, who had knowledge of the budget prior to the budget being delivered to the House.

If this matter goes to committee, I would attempt to establish that it is physically and logistically impossible for an advertising agency and for a courier like Purolator to be given the go-ahead and to be given copy for an advertisement on Thursday night at eight o'clock and for that advertisement to appear in papers across the country the next day, Friday. That is physically and logistically impossible. If Your Honour accepts my prima facie case, I would establish that in committee. I have already established it to my satisfaction by checking with Purolator, by checking with the airlines and by checking with various newspapers. Either the minister of housing has been badly misled or, more seriously, the minister is misleading the House. In any event, the House is entitled to determine the facts. That is all we want, an opportunity to determine the facts.

I do not know the origin of the myth that every time a member rises to state that he has evidence indicating a serious wrongdoing by the government, he has to stake his seat on it. That has no basis in historical fact, in my opinion. It is a dangerous myth which has crept into the proceedings of the House which can only serve to restrain further members of the House in appealing to the Chair as the custodian of our rights and privileges. I appeal to Madam Speaker, as the custodian of our rights and privileges, as one who has conferred upon her the mantle of infallibility. We cannot challenge your rulings, and rightly so. But the fact that we cannot challenge your rulings makes it incumbent upon Your Honour to think very carefully before you rule, because your rulings will stand as precedents by your successors and could in fact serve to restrict even further the rights and privileges of members of the House.

I submit that there is evidence. Evidence has been produced during the course of question period both yesterday and today. There is further evidence to be produced. Witnesses should be heard. They should be examined, if necessary, under oath. The minister of housing should be examined. The president of CMHC should be examined by the committee. The president of Vickers and Benson should be examined, the courier should be examined—all these people should be examined so that we can determine the facts. If there was no budget leak, that is well and good but if there was then obviously the convention dictates that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has to resign.

● (1510)

If you find that I have a prima facie case of privilege, I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the advertisement which appeared in the Brockville Recorder and Times, on the morning of November 13 over the authorization of the minister responsible for housing, contains budgetary information which was in the hands of the said Brockville Recorder and Times prior to the reading of the budget in the House on November 12, 1981 and which constitutes a prima facie breach of the privileges of the House and that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I think it is quite important to note that my friend on the other side has referred to Erskine May. The reason he has done that is that there is no reference either in the Standing Orders or in Beauchesne that would suggest that in the event that a budget leak occurs, it constitutes a breach of privilege. There is no precedent for Your Honour to find a prima facie case of privilege on this alleged leak or any other leak, Madam Speaker.

My friend has referred to Erskine May, nineteenth edition, at page 787 where this statement appears: "—budget resolutions . . . which by their nature must be secret until the financial statement is made—." That is the only reference to it. The principle that is spelled out is that this may have become a political convention, it may have become a custom and it may have become a courtesy of the House, but in fact there is no precedent to suggest that this constitutes a breach of privilege.

Before a motion can be treated as privilege I would submit that you, Madam Speaker, must find that a prima facie case of privilege exists.

My friend has used the Reid case as an example. I think it can be distinguished quite clearly from the facts before us at the moment because in that particular case the motion presented by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) claimed that it was his privilege as a member of the House that had been offended by a newspaper report. I think it appeared in the Montreal Gazette.

If we are looking for precedents in the House, that best occurred in 1924 and that was the Porter case. I should like to refer my friend to the Journals of the House of Commons for Thursday, May 22 1924 when a motion was made by Mr. Porter which reads in part as follows:

The Honourable James Murdock, Minister of Labour, did withdraw from the Home Bank at its Ottawa Branch on the 15th day of August, 1923, two days before such bank's failure, thousands of dollars on deposit therein to his credit, using certain information he had received, as such minister—

It goes on to say that he had done this to his advantage. The motion was passed and the matter went to committee, which had the power to call witnesses and make whatever investigation it thought appropriate. The second report of the committee was issued on June 17, 1924, and is reported in part at page 402 of the Journals for that date as follows:

The Committee finds that the Honourable Jas. Murdock did nothing in connection with the withdrawal of such money from the Home Bank contrary to his obligation as a Minister of the Crown, or in derogation of his office and the honour, dignity and traditions of Parliament, and that the charge submitted to this Committee for investigation, so far as it affects the honour of Mr. Murdock, is not only not proved but entirely disproved.

The significant word is "charge", Madam Speaker. I would refer my friend now to Journals for June 27, 1924. Mr. Porter, the member who had made that charge in the House, read a letter to the House which contained the following statement:

I shall therefore place myself without delay in the judgment of the electors of my constituency, the West Riding of Hastings, and ask them to pronounce upon my conduct, upon the one hand, and the conduct of the Minister of Labour and the government and its supporters, on the other.

He resigned his seat. A byelection was held and the member who had made the charge, which the committee rejected after investigating the facts, was not re-elected in the byelection.

If we are looking for a precedent, that one pertains to the facts that are before us today. This is not a place in which we trigger witch-hunts any time someone figures that he wants to put in question the honour, dignity and the reputation of a very honourable minister.

If someone wants to pursue this in committee, then I think he must put up or shut up. We are speaking about reputations and that is a serious thing. If we look to the traditions of this House, we find that there is only one precedent to guide us in this situation and that is the Porter case in 1924 which held that if a member makes a charge and the charge is not substantiated, then he resigns his seat and suffers the consequences.

An hon. Member: Nonsense!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, it is my intention to make a very brief contribution to this matter.

An hon. Member: Make a charge.

Mr. Cossitt: Hon. members opposite seem to have a habit of mumbling, which is not unusual because they are jumpy over what is happening.

I do not intend to go into quotations from various rules which I think support the stand we have taken. Things have been adequately presented by my colleague who spoke a few moments ago. I simply intend to bring forward a very basic point and that is, if a member of this House finds that budget information has been heard outside this House or, rather, is in the possession of people outside this House before this House has it, that is a breach of my privileges, the privileges of everyone in this House.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) pointed out that it is really irrelevant whether the information has been printed, as the minister said; what is relevant is who had possession of it. That is a very serious matter. It becomes more and more obvious all the time that this information was in the hands of persons other than the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and his officials who would be sworn to the usual and expected secrecy. It appears more and more obvious that a very distinct breach of privilege has occurred as the result of what happened.

We have heard two ministers speak today. The minister responsible for housing completely contradicted what he said yesterday. He made one set of statements yesterday and today he said that is not the way it really happened and that it happened in another way. The minister who is chairman of the—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. I just want to remind the hon. member that if he wants to enlighten the Chair on his question of privilege, he would have to deal with the question of privilege and not argue the case. The case can be argued at length once the Chair has found that there is a prima facie case of privilege. At this particular point, however, members have to concentrate on indicating to me where the privilege of a member has been breached. The member was arguing the case, and I know he will want to do that later if I find there is a prima facie case, but not at this point.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, it is not my intention to argue the case. It is my intention simply to state that it is obvious that others, outside this House and other than the Minister of Finance and those surrounding him, had private information on the budget to which they were not entitled and therefore it is a breach of privilege for every member of this House. It must be dealt with in that way as a most serious matter.

I would suggest, with all due respect to the Chair, that if the government and members on all sides of this House are willing to put up or shut up, as someone said, they would be glad to refer this to a committee and have it examined there.

As was pointed out by my colleague from Newfoundland, if it is found that there is no breach of privilege, then the ministers will be very happy. If it is found that there is a case of privilege, then the ministers will be dealt with. Let the chips fall where they may. I think we have every right to expect our privileges to be upheld and that this matter will be thoroughly investigated from top to bottom as soon as possible.

● (1520)

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, this is a matter which is extremely serious, and to find an appropriate way to deal with it is very difficult, as I can appreciate. However, there is a series of conflicting statements which cause at least this hon. member to have serious doubts about what we have before us at the moment. I am concerned that, in fact, if one were to look at all the statements which have been made by the minister since yesterday regarding the matter raised initially by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) and subsequently by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), one could come to the conclusion that there were areas of conflict.

As I understand, the minister has indicated that the information he obtained by virtue of a briefing given to him and to other members of the cabinet by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) was not relayed by him to anyone until after the Minister of Finance rose in the House at eight o'clock. However, there is a statement attributed to the minister responsible for housing which would indicate that his officials began to prepare the ad at five o'clock and that they worked from five o'clock through the night preparing the advertisement.

I would ask Your Honour to consider whether it is a breach of privilege for a minister to advise anyone at all, even his staff who are not sworn to an oath of secrecy, concerning information contained in the budget which has not yet been put before the House of Commons and which could conceivably be of value to private citizens were they apprised of that information in advance of the budget being handed down.

It may well be that Your Honour will find that there is no privilege based on the fact that there is nothing in Erskine May, in Beauchesne or in the rules of the House of Commons to indicate that there is a need or a requirement for budget secrecy. However, the tradition and the convention has always been that no detail of the budget should be revealed by the Minister of Finance or by anyone who had knowledge of it as a result of a briefing to anyone outside of the cabinet in advance of the budget being publicly presented. I suggest that although, in a technical sense, it may be very difficult to find the exact privilege which is being offended, there is no doubt in my mind that if that information was, in fact, given—and certainly the statement of the minister responsible for housing would indicate that it had been given—to people who were not sworn to any oath of secrecy by virtue of their position in the government, then a very serious wrong has occurred. That wrong must be remedied.

I would ask Your Honour to consider whether, in remedying that wrong, it may not be possible to find that there is a privilege which has been historically accepted, namely, the privilege of Members of Parliament to be the first to hear the budgetary proposals of the government before the government makes them available to any other individual in the land.

Madam Speaker: Could the hon. member help the Chair by explaining whether he feels some information has been divulged which would affect the country? I can very well see that if there had been a breach of secrecy of the budget, the country might have been damaged. Perhaps that is one of the reasons we have this convention to which the hon. member has referred. If someone did not follow that convention, I can very well see that the country, the economy, or someone out there might have been damaged by the fact that secrecy had been breached. However, where was the privilege of an hon. member breached in this particular circumstance, if it has occurred at all? In what way has an hon. member been prohibited from functioning as a Member of Parliament in this House? That is exactly the answer I would need. Evidence of this particular situation would help me to find a prima facie case.

Mr. Deans: If I may, I would suggest to the Speaker that perhaps consideration must be given to the rights of an hon. member to have the information made available to him or to her in the House of Commons at least no later than it is available to a private citizen, inasmuch as each individual Member of Parliament has a responsibility to protect the interests of the constituents who have elected that Member of Parliament to sit in the House of Commons. Therefore, each constituent of every hon. member is entitled to believe, and to have held as true, that his Member of Parliament has the information available to give to him at the same time as every other citizen of the land is given that information.

I believe that in fact it is my privilege as a Member of Parliament to be in a position to inform my constituents of matters which can and do affect their day to day lives at the same time as every other hon. member is made aware of that same information; and that if that information is inadvertently or deliberately given to one single individual who can benefit from it to the exclusion of all other individuals whose rights are protected by virtue of electing an hon. member to the House of Commons, that privilege has then been breached.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I wish to refer the Chair to some precedents which I think will be of assistance in coming to a judgment on this very serious and very important question. Perhaps not since this Parliament began has there been a need to exercise such great care as that required in coming to a decision on the question which has now been put before the Chair by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). Because it will arise during the discussion of the precedents I intend to cite, it might be well to refer to the motion that the hon. member for St. John's East read to the House in his closing remarks which reads:

That the advertisement which appeared in the Brockville Recorder and Times on the morning of November 13—

The following are important words with respect to specificity:

—over the authorization of the minister responsible for housing—

That is quite specific. It goes on to state:

—contains budgetary information—

That is quite specific.

—which was in the hands of the said Brockville Recorder and Times prior to the reading of the budget in the House on November 12, 1981.

That is quite specific.

Mr. Cosgrove: No, no. Wrong!

Mr. Nielsen: It may well be wrong. There has been an interjection from the hon. member in the back bench there. I forget his riding.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, it is the minister.

Mr. Blais: It is the minister.

Mr. Nielsen: Was it the minister? Oh, well, it was the minister himself. It may well be wrong, but I will make submissions with respect to the need to be specific. I believe the Chair made a reference to that necessity yesterday. Those specifics are in the motion, and I want to preface my remarks by making that submission to the Chair.

In my submission, I think there might be some confusion developing. Certainly, it seems to be apparent in the mind of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith), and I hope that I might be helpful in clearing up that confusion.

In order to put the matter into proper perspective, may I refer the Chair to Hansard of December 6, 1978, at page 1857, where Mr. Speaker Jerome was ruling on a submission by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) that a contempt of Parliament had occurred as a result of an obstruction of his individual right to perform his responsibility as a Member of Parliament, and hence the collective right of all Members of Parliament. That case revolved around the presentation, in response to a question by that hon. member, of misleading information, to say the very least. Mr. Speaker Jerome on that occasion, in discussing what was a prima facie case had this to day:

● (1530)

May I, once again, reiterate the consequences of that decision.

That is whether or not Mr. Speaker was to find, as he did, a prime facie case. Mr. Speaker continued by saying:

The job that I have in matters of privilege is a preliminary, procedural review of the matter to determine whether in fact it touches the privileges of members of the House of Commons or of the House itself. Having done so, I concluded that the motion put forward by the hon. member must therefore be given immediate priority and taken into consideration by the House at once.

Here follow the rather important words, Madam Speaker. The paragraph concludes:

The House itself makes the decision on whether the motion shall carry, whether it shall be amended, or in any way altered and, in fact, whether there is a contempt. I do not make that decision; the House does.

In another precedent which can be found in Hansard for March 21, 1978, we find at page 3975 Mr. Speaker Jerome dealing with a question of privilege raised by the then hon. member for Nickel Belt, Mr. Rodriguez, no longer a member of the House. That matter had to do with an allegation by one Warren Hart, which allegation had been made in a sworn affidavit relating to electronic surveillance of members' telephones. The member said that act constituted a breach of privilege if true, and Mr. Speaker Jerome had this to say:

In this connection I wish to refer the House to some excellent language contained in the Report of the Select Committee on Parliamentary Privilege dated 1967, in the United Kingdom. I have the reference here and I will table it with my notes today for the benefit of the reporters. The document is dated February 20, 1967, and I call attention to the following passage which appears on page 111:

From this circumstance it might be inferred that the test applied by the Speaker in deciding whether to give precedence over the orders of the day to a complaint of breach of privilege—or rather to the motion which the member who has made the complaint desires to move in reference thereto—is, does the act complained of appear to me at first sight to be a breach of privilege? Rigorously applied, it would mean that no complaint of breach of privilege could ever be entertained unless the Speaker was of the opinion that the act or conduct complained of was a breach of privilege.

I draw attention to the words, "was a breach of privilege", a substantive decision. Mr. Speaker Jerome continued reading from this document dated February 20, 1957 as follows:

The result would be that the House which alone is competent to decide whether a particular act is a breach of privilege—

It is not the responsibility of the Chair. The passage from which Mr. Speaker was quoting concluded as follows:

—would have no opportunity of deciding the question unless the government gave time for its discussion. Borderline cases and arguable ones would be excluded automatically because in such cases the Speaker could not say that he was of opinion that the act or conduct which was the subject of complaint prima facie constituted a breach of privilege.

Mr. Speaker Jerome then said:

I ask hon. members to note the phrase "which alone is competent to decide".

He was referring to the House being competent to decide. Mr. Speaker Jerome continued by saying:

That is the point I wish to stress. To continue quoting:

In my submission the question which the Speaker should ask himself, when he has to decide whether to grant precedence over other public business to a motion which a member who has complained of some act or conduct as constituting a breach of privilege desires to move, should be, not—do I consider that, assuming that the facts are as stated, the act or conduct constitutes a breach of privilege, but could it reasonably be held to be a breach of privilege, or to put it shortly, has the member an arguable point? If the Speaker feels any doubt on the question, he should, in my view, leave it to the House.

That is the position in which I find myself here. In all the circumstances, I hesitate very much to take away on procedural grounds the possibility of reaching a decision on a subject to which the House might wish to address itself.

I might parenthetically say, even those ministers on whom doubts are cast. Mr. Speaker went on to say:

In debating the motion put forward by the hon. member, members of the House might make valuable contributions to the question of whether or not we should treat this kind of electronic interference in some special way. Indeed, if the House decides in its wisdom that the matter should be referred to a committee for consideration, the committee hearing might result in an indication of the proper attitude which should be taken toward the matter.

Therefore, on balance, in the special circumstances which exist here, it is my conclusion that I should resolve my doubt in favour of putting the question to the House at the proper time.

That is what Mr. Speaker did on matters of privilege upon which he had a doubt.

At this point, Madam Speaker, may I submit to you, with great respect, that it is not the function of the Chair to insist upon that degree of evidence which, in criminal trial, would result in a conviction of an accused person. All that is necessary here, in my submission, is that some evidence be submitted upon which the Chair can make a valued judgment as to whether a question of privilege exists, and, if it exists in that very shallow sense of prima facie—and that in effect is what prima facie means—some evidence to warrant and explanation or some evidence in a criminal court that would require a defence, in the absence of which a conviction would be registered. That, I suggest, is the proper meaning to be attached to the words prima facie. All the Chair requires is that some evidence be before it, not a preponderance of evidence. Of course, it has to be privilege, to which I will speak in a moment.

A further precedent is to be found in Hansard dated June 7, 1977, at page 6388. Just to digress for a moment for the edification of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council, and indeed of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) himself who spoke about it yesterday, as did the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), I am speaking of this myth, "Make a charge and put your seat on the line, and if you do not justify the charge, you lose your seat." That is utter nonsense. It has no place in our precedents. It has no place in our practices.

Mr. Smith: Tradition.

Mr. Nielsen: That finding has been upheld by Speaker after Speaker in the House, and by a Speaker for whom I am sure all members in this House have the greatest respect. I am referring, of course, to your predecessor, Mr. Speaker Jerome who interrupted one of your deputies, the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker) who in 1977 was parliamentary secretary to the minister of supply and services. He said in essence exactly what I have just finished saying with respect to this business of putting a member's seat on the line. At page 6388 of Hansard Mr. Speaker Jerome said this:

I might ease the hon. member's mind on that. There is no confusion on that point; that question is clearly settled. The question whether or not a charge has to be laid in order to get a matter before a committee is a totally different question; but there is no precedent at all which supports the thesis that a member, by making such a charge, puts his seat on the line or that he has to put his seat on the line in order to make such a charge.

That should dispose once and for all, of that particular point, at least in this session of Parliament.

The next precedent—and I do hope these precedents will be helpful to you, Madam Speaker—is to be found at page 742 of Votes and Proceedings for July 25, 1975. This is again a ruling by Mr. Speaker Jerome, I believe. I am not quite sure when the change of Speakers took place. This precedent deals with the matter of the specific charge. Indeed, there can be no doubt it seems, on the basis of the precedent, that a specific charge must be laid in order for there to be constituted a question of privilege and, more important, in order that the committee might be focused accurately on the work it has to do if the House should send the question to the committee. To quote very briefly, he said:

● (1540)

I do stress after all that it is in the final analysis a decision of this House which will say whether or not the matter goes to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections where the matters that have been discussed and raised by almost all Members who have participated will be possible.

That involved the question raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). It is interesting to point out that the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) also put forward motions to send that particular matter to the committee, as did the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River.

The hon. member for St. John's East has already pointed out the importance of referring the Chair to the amendment to that motion which was moved by the hon. member for Oshawa, and that amendment too was accepted and included in the reference to the House.

Having referred the Chair to that precedent, may I once again refer the Chair to the specific nature of the motion moved by the hon. member for St. John's East. There are three very clear specifics in that motion: That the advertisement over the authorization of the minister responsible for housing—that is specific number one—contained budgetary information—that is specific number two—and that that information was in the hands of the newspaper prior to the reading of the budget in the House on November 12, 1981—and that is specific number three. Nothing, in my submission, could be more clearly specific, and more closely meet the criteria of which Mr. Speaker Jerome spoke in the precedent last cited.

Let me now bring to your attention another precedent taken from Hansard of April 17, 1978, at page 4549. Again that was a question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on alleged leaks of budget details. Again it was Mr. Speaker Jerome who was in the chair. Again that ruling focused on the need for specifics. I will just quote one short sentence from that ruling of Mr. Speaker Jerome where he said, as reported at page 4549:

General motions of that sort without specific accusations, have been rejected by the Chair. Therefore, even if I were to accept the fact that these precedents place this matter within the area of privilege—

He went on from there. In that case, even if he had found privilege, which he would not have, he found that the motion itself lacked the specific nature he and other Speakers before him had set up as necessary criteria to find a privilege. That, however, is not the case here in my submission, having regard to the three specifics mentioned a moment ago.

The last precedent I wish to cite with respect to the records of this House is in Hansard of December 12, 1979, at page 2283. I ask you, Madam Speaker, to take particular note of the date, because those who now argue against the submission we make on this side were then here. I want to quote a few remarks of some members who now sit over there; one is now the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). He has been here for some time and certainly is interested in justice, impartiality, truth and fairness in this place, and I do not say that in any insincere way. He said, as reported at page 2283:

The confidentiality in which the details of a budget are kept is a constitutional practice which forms an integral part of a parliamentary system. Such practice is based on the principle that no individual, whoever he may be, must know in advance the details of a budget which he could use for personal gain.

He went on at page 2284 to tell us he was at one time minister of finance and he appreciated the difficulties that would be encountered in keeping budget secrecy. He spoke of consulting with the provinces but at the same time ensuring that he maintained that constitutional practice of, as he called it, budget secrecy. He said:

—but I always kept in mind the responsibility which I had in terms of budget secrecy.

On the same page, a little further down in the right hand column, referring to the Minister of Finance and his responsibility, he said:

He is forced to conduct those consultations in order to have a budget document prepared. Sometimes he has to consult with the department and so on. He has the responsibility of making sure that there is absolutely no leak.

At page 2285 he said:

I have absolutely no choice but to raise this fundamental problem of parliamentary democracy. When we have a government that is responsible to this House, the Minister of Finance has to take all the necessary steps to ensure that there is absolutely no leak.

That is a responsibility the present Minister of Justice points out that the Minister of Finance owes to the House. Therefore I emphasize the nature of that opinion of the present Minister of Justice in terms of what the privileges of this House and its members are.

The Minister of Justice said also:

—I realize that the hon. minister has no choice but to reveal to the House what happened. In order to help him to clarify the question of whether there was a leak—

Note the words "whether there was a leak"; there is nothing specific about that. The quotation continues:

—and I think there was a leak—in my judgment he will have to take his responsibility in the best British tradition.

Those are not my words, those are the words of the present Minister of Justice who made a very learned contribution to that question of privilege when it was raised in December 1979. This has not happened here, but what disposed of the question raised on that occasion was the then Minister of Finance rising in his place and saying these words, and I quote from page 2285:

> But just let met say on a factual basis that there has been no budget leak. There was certainly no budget leak for which I am responsible. There was no budget leak from the Department of Finance. There was no leak, period.

That is the crux of the matter and that is what Mr. Speaker Jerome then hung his hat on when he decided that question.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, who is still in the House, made a contribution to that question of privilege as well, and I will just quote one passage from his contribution. He said, as reported at page 2286:

> I think we could have an argument as to whether in point of fact budgetary leaks did take place as alleged by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice, but that would be the job of the standing committee to decide.

That particular member, who has been here and served in a very distinguished capacity for many years in the cabinet and outside, but particularly on the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections and on the committee on rules and procedures, went on to say:

> ● (1550)
>
> What is important is the fact that the hon. member for Saint-Maurice has brought forward some evidence—

Precisely the phrase that describes what a prima facie case is.

> —to indicate that, indeed, a great deal about the budget was well known before the budget was presented to the House of Commons.

These words may be coming back to haunt members such as the member for Kenora-Rainy River and the now Minister of Justice. But I agree with them. They were accurate and they were correct, that budget secrecy is not only a mere convention, it is a constitutional practice, as was so correctly described by the Minister of Justice when he was here. The nature of a prima facie case was so accurately described, the requirements thereof and the criteria thereof, by the member for Kenora-Rainy River.

I do not intend to quote at length from the next and last precedent I wish to cite for the consideration of the Chair. It is a parliamentary paper prepared for the House of Commons Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections in 1975. It provides background information on government secrecy, financial measures and parliamentary secretaries. It is the financial measures portion of the paper to which I wish to refer the Chair, and it is dated August 8, 1975. In reading that paper, Madam Speaker, you will find it clearly indicates that indeed it is a constitutional practice, that there are sound reasons for budgetary secrecy. It goes a long way toward answering the question which the Chair put to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). The paper says:

> The reason for such secrecy is obvious: advance knowledge of fiscal measures could result in financial speculation and the loss of revenue to the government treasury. Illicit profits could be made by those persons with prior knowledge who are not bound by moral or other controls. Today, the budget is not delivered until the stock markets have closed across the country.

The committee cites a book by an ex-minister of finance, Mitchell Sharp, now chairman of the Northern Pipeline agency, where he said:

> Up until 1941, the Canadian practice was to present the budget in the afternoon.

He goes on to say why it is not now presented until after the markets have closed. That paper is important in considering what decision the Chair has to come to here.

I submit that in essence, Madam Speaker, the Chair has before it a case of privilege. Why? To cite the Minister of Justice, "the responsibility owed by the government to the House with respect to maintaining secrecy in budget matters . . ." Those are his words, not mine, that the government owes that responsibility to the House, and hence its members. Those last words are mine, parenthetically. The House is the sum total of us all. Therefore, it is a matter of privilege.

My second point is that there is sufficient evidence before the Chair to constitute a prima facie case. In the words of precedents cited to the Chair in rulings laid down by Mr. Speaker Jerome and his predecessors, "All that is required is some evidence." Well, certainly there is that degree of material before the Chair as to constitute "some evidence," thereby constituting a prima facie case. The next step, therefore, having regard to the specific nature of the motion, is only to decide whether it is sufficiently specific. That is a decision the Chair will have to make, in my respectful submission.

I have twice pointed out three specific allegations that are present in that motion, and certainly it cannot be regarded as general. That element is met in the necessary criteria. The next step, may it please the Chair, is for the House to find now that there is a prima facie case and then to put the motion. The government is free to do what it wants with the motion. If it wants to vote it down, that is fine, and it will probably do that and shorten the whole process. But in my respectful submission there is sufficient evidence for the Chair to put that motion to the House because it is only the House which can decide, with great respect to the Chair, whether or not there has been a breach of privilege.

Again, the Chair does not have to go nearly that far. All the Chair has to do is to find that there is some evidence which justifies the presentation of the motion to the House.

I regret having taken so long, but I thought these matters should be thoroughly exposed because of the important nature of the submission of the hon. member for St. John's East.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I thank all hon. members who have tried to enlighten me in deciding on this particular case. It is obvious from the numerous interventions we have had that it is a matter of very great importance to the members sitting in the House.

I wish to remind hon. members that I am quite aware of my duties with regard to deciding a question of privilege. I also know what my limitations are concerning a decision on a question of privilege.

I know that I must ask hon. members, and probe them in the course of their interventions, to help me to find where privilege has been breached, and that I must only declare that I have found, on the face of it, that there is a privilege. The House is only obliged to determine whether privilege has been breached. I want to reassure hon. members that I am very much aware that that is my duty and that there are limitations to that duty.

The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has given me quite a lengthy series of precedents which would be helpful, I am sure, if I found that we were dealing with privilege. All the precedents he has invoked deal with what happens if the Chair finds a question of privilege to exist. It is very useful that the House be reminded of these precedents once in a while, but I am sure the hon. member will realize that what is important to me is to have this breach of privilege defined so I will know in what way a member of this House has been prohibited from functioning in this House as a member. Has he been free to speak? Has he been molested or threatened or bribed in any way that would prevent him from expressing himself freely in this House on any matter, be it legislation or an occurrence such as we have been discussing today? I do not believe any member has attempted to show me that he has been unable to perform freely and to say what he wanted about this particular case. The decision is somewhat more difficult for the Chair if hon. members do not concentrate on defining exactly what that privilege is and where it has been breached.

In my view, the most important aspect of this problem is that we are not dealing here at all with privilege. I did say that yesterday, and in the course of the day I did reflect upon it and studied the precedents which were invoked and other precedents which had been brought up to me. Certainly the matter of budget secrecy is not dealt with through questions of privilege and there are very important precedents which I will recall to hon. members. There were cases in Great Britain, the ones concerning Mr. Thomas and Mr. Dalton where there was an allegation of breach of secrecy. They were not brought before the House under privilege. Nor were they dealt with under privilege. A committee was set up in one case, and a tribunal was set up in the other. Neither case was brought before the committee which normally deals with matters respecting the privileges of members. In one case there was a special committee which dealt with a particular matter; in another case there was a tribunal. This was necessary because of the special powers which are needed to investigate such cases.

● (1600)

Those two important precedents which I took from the records of the United Kingdom convince me—and, I hope, the House—and give me the authority to say that a breach of budget secrecy cannot be dealt with as a matter of privilege. It might constitute a very important grievance for members. Such action might have a very negative impact on business or on the stock market. It might cause some people to receive revenues which they would not otherwise have been able to obtain. All of these are possible consequences of breaches of budget secrecy, but they have no impact on the privileges of a member. They might do harm—irrevocable in some cases—to persons or institutions, but this has nothing to do with privilege. It has to do with the conduct of a minister in the exercise of his administrative responsibility.

I must repeat that if hon. members feel that the incidents which have been discussed in this House for two days now are reprehensible, that they have to do with the conduct of a minister in the exercise of his administrative responsibility, it is in that respect that a formal charge must be made. That charge must allege that a minister has been derelict in his administrative responsibility, has breached his oath or whatever hon. members might want to allege. That is the way to deal with the matter if members feel that a minister—or a member, for that matter—has been derelict in the exercise of his administrative responsibilities. That is why I indicated yesterday that if hon. members wanted to deal with that, it was not by way of question of privilege but by a formal motion in which a charge would be made.

The hon. member for Yukon says that the kind of charge which is necessary when one wants to cast blame on a minister or a member for his conduct has nothing to do with our precedents. However, I must tell him that there are numerous precedents. In the Pallett case in 1959 Mr. Speaker Michener said quite categorically that a charge would have to be made in the form I have just indicated because it is quite obvious that accusations cannot be spread around or directed at members of this House or ministers without being backed up by proper facts. Otherwise we get into a considerable fishing expedition and allegations not substantiated but which cast doubt on the performance or reputation of a member. That, of course, cannot be allowed because members can sit in this House only if they are considered to be honourable members and the Chair has to protect that reputation of being honourable. The rules exist precisely to assist me in protecting that reputation. If the House consisted of members who were not honourable, then obviously the House could not be honourable.

I must respond to another series of arguments. Members have said that this case is similar to the question of privilege once raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), but I must indicate that I do not think this case is at all similar, even though it does deal with the matter of budget secrecy. Hon. members will recall that the precedent with regard to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River had to do with a motion the hon. member himself proposed. That motion dealt with his privilege, not with the allegation that budget secrecy had been breached. The hon. member felt that his privilege had been affected because he was accused of dishonourable conduct for a member in relation to his responsibility as a member. That is what constituted the question of privilege. He felt that his reputation was at stake and was in question because a newspaper had made an interpretation of something he allegedly had done. He was alleged to have been privy to budget information and to have conveyed that information to businessmen.

Much was made of the amendment which was brought in by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and of the fact that it and the motion had been voted on by the government as well as by the opposition. I suggest hon. members read that case very thoroughly. If they do, they will see that the amendment was brought to clarify the motion. It was somewhat of a rewriting of the motion and was designed to describe more fully the nature of the accusation which might have been studied by the committee if it had been referred to the committee. That was the purpose of the amendment.

What this particular precedent says to us is not that breaching budgetary secrecy is a question of privilege but that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River had a question of privilege because he had been accused by a newspaper of breaching budgetary secrecy and doing something dishonourable in the exercise of his function. That is the important point which has to be considered in this case.

I must repeat that the protection of privilege has to do with the protection of the capacity of hon. members to function as members in this House. If we are dealing with the wrongdoings, conduct or behaviour of a minister or the methods used by a minister of which some hon. members do not approve, that does not constitute a question of privilege, although it might be of great importance to the hon. members concerned. It is difficult for me to deal with such matters as questions of privilege.

I think that is a summing up of the arguments, and I must conclude that I cannot find a prima facie case of privilege. If hon. members want to deal with the matter in another way, there are avenues open to them, and I invite them to follow those avenues, if they feel that they can substantiate whatever allegations they wish to advance.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of clarification. During the course of the debate yesterday and in remarks Your Honour has addressed, particularly in dealing with the laying of a charge, there has been bandied about, not only this time but on numerous occasions in the past, what I think is a pure canard, and that is that he who lays the charge puts his seat in jeopardy. When the charge is laid before a partisan committee, that is total and utter nonsense. That has crept in, perhaps, because of bravado by way of a challenge. There is no substance whatsoever with regard to such a procedure in this House.

• (1610)

Madam Speaker: That has to do with members themselves. I do not find anything contained in the Standing Orders that would allow me to rule that if someone made a formal charge of this nature to the House, and if it is found that the charge is unfounded, then that member would have to resign. Yesterday I did rule that this was a matter of personal ethics. If one feels his credibility has been destroyed by an incident in the House, then he is free to take whatever action he feels justified in taking in the circumstances.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise to clarify a point. The Chair probably used the words in the ruling because of the failure to appreciate the refinements of my argument. At no time did I say in my submission to the Chair that there need not be specific allegations; indeed, I did say the contrary. I pointed out three specifics in arguing my case that were inherent, in my submission, in the motion. At no time did I specifically say that the allegations were not necessary. I agree with the Chair on that point. I have to agree with Your Honour anyway because you made the ruling.

What I did say, and what was referred to by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is that there is no requirement for a member to put his seat on the line if he makes specific allegations. Perhaps that was lost in the beauty of my argument.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member's point is well taken.

MR. SPEYER—ALLEGED MISLEADING ANSWER GIVEN BY MINISTER

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): I have a short but important question of privilege. I am pleased that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is present in the House because my question of privilege relates to a misleading statement made by the minister during question period. I hope it was inadvertent. I shall deal with the matter very briefly.

I asked a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance. The substance of the question was that the federal government over a three-year period would raise $2 billion as a result of the limitation of the capital cost allowance system. As I understood the answer by the Minister of Finance—and I am pleased to see that the minister is present in the House—he said that not one dime will flow to the government.

In the budget that was tabled in this House last Thursday evening, November 12, and the statement which is contained on page 4 of the budget—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member please resume his seat? If the hon. member has a question of privilege, he must talk about the privilege and not continue to discuss the matter which was raised during the course of question period. I believe the hon. member is about to debate the question. The fact that the answer is not satisfactory to the hon. member does not constitute a question of privilege, I must remind him. If the hon. member has a different matter to raise, I will hear him with regard to that.

Mr. Speyer: My question of privilege relates to the misleading answer that was given by the Minister of Finance on the budget papers.

The Chair must give me the opportunity, I say to you, Madam Speaker respectfully, to point out exactly the accuracy of my assertions, and I would be delighted—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is debating the question. I want to caution the hon. member when he says that he has been misled. That has to be qualified. It is a serious allegation to say in the House that a minister has deliberately misled the hon. member. The hon. member did not say it. The first time the hon. member said "inadvertently" and the second time the hon. member did not say "inadvertently", but I am sure that the hon. member did want to say "inadvertently". I want to caution the hon. member because on two occasions I was about to rise to my feet to caution him. That is what I am now doing.

If the hon. member feels that the answer he received is not satisfactory, then the hon. member may ask the question during question period tomorrow or in subsequent days to try to elicit a more satisfactory answer. However, this does not constitute a question of privilege.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that we do have this apparent misstatement on the record, and because the Minister of Finance is present in the House, I wonder if the minister could be given an opportunity to explain why he feels his answer was accurate or not, in keeping with the documents that were filed on budget day.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. No. The minister may have an opportunity at another time but not now.

MR. WRIGHT—NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): I did give notice to the Chair earlier today with regard to my question of privilege. I rise on this question of privilege to question my inability to deal with my constituents relating to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais)—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member resume his seat? I had almost forgotten the notice of the question of privilege that the hon. member provided to me. I must tell the hon. member the notice did not contain the statement that is required by the Standing Orders and, therefore, the hon. member would have to renew that notice and provide the Chair with a statement of the matter he would like to raise as a question of privilege. The hon. member did not do that in his notice. I have to be very straightforward with regard to that point because the Chair must have the opportunity to look into the matter in advance so as to prepare a possible ruling and to cite references that may be necessary for that ruling. It is normal courtesy to provide this information to the Chair and, at any rate, it is required under the Standing Orders.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE BUDGET

NOTICE OF PRESS RELEASE ON MERGERS AND CORPORATE REORGANIZATIONS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as I indicated to the House leaders, I will advise the House that I will be issuing a press release after the stock markets close on the subject of mergers and corporate reorganizations establishing certain transitional rules, as these have been affected by budgetary action. I am giving notice to the House because it is a budgetary matter. I cannot release the details now, until the stock markets close, but I will do that later.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am amazed that the minister would make the same mistake two days in a row. The minister has just made the statement that he will make some announcements with regard to transitional rules on mergers and acquisitions. It is clear to anyone in the marketplace that the company involved is Dome Petroleum Limited with regard to the proposed merger with Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited. It is incredible that the minister would make this statement after he made the same mistake yesterday of announcing while the markets were open that the rules would change with regard to MURB, which caused an increase in the share price of those companies involved with MURB. I think the minister would have learned from his previous mistake. It is incredible for the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), who has been in this House and in this position for a long period of time to make the same mistake twice. I should think the minister would demonstrate better judgment than that.

* * *

PETITIONS

MR. CORBETT—VIA RAIL—RESTORATION OF RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): I present herewith a petition of over 1,400 names to be added to the 19,000 names that I laid upon the table of Canadians who are requesting that passenger rail service in this country be restored.

These people are asking that the government and, in particular, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) not isolate mothers from sons and daughters, husbands from wives, the elderly from comfort and warmth, and exhibit an attitude of kindliness and understanding to replace that of a demented slaughterhouse butcher.

MR. WISE—EFFECTS OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Earlier today I had the opportunity to personally present a list of 250 protest letters to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I now have the very unpleasant task but the responsibility and duty to table in this House a petition signed by 5,786 citizens of the city of St. Thomas, in the county of Elgin, namely my constituency of Elgin. This petition reflects the resentment and the anger of Elgin constituents. I am certain, in turn, it reflects the attitude of Canadians everywhere regarding business failures, loss of family homes, farm bankruptcies and foreclosures which are a direct result of the government's high interest rate policy.

● (1620)

MR. STEVENS—IMPORT QUOTAS ON SHOES AND LEATHER PRODUCTS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of 205 York region residents. These people are gravely concerned about the threat posed by import competition to the leather and shoe industry which is an important source of jobs in the area. They feel action must be taken right away if this industry is to be saved, and that global import quotas, limiting total shoe and leather imports, will keep their jobs in these communities. They urge the Government of Canada to establish and maintain an effective quota system to protect the industry from unfair import competition.

MR. NIELSEN—TAX EXEMPTIONS FOR NORTHERN RESIDENTS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. The purpose of this petition, signed by 250 Yukon workers, is to indicate to the government that the removal of the moratorium on taxation of northern benefits would be devastating.

The nature of the demand is the continuation of the current moratorium on the taxation of northern benefits to block the tax grab of the government; for the government to adopt a permanent policy to exempt from taxation all special allowances paid to workers in northern and remote areas of Canada, including but not limited to, transportation allowances, housing allowances, meal allowances, northern allowances, special vacation benefits and cash allowances; and for the government to meet with the Canadian National Directors of the United Steelworkers of America for the purpose of hearing the said Canadian National Directors of the United Steelworkers of America on behalf of the over 10,000 Canadian steelworkers who work and live in isolated communities.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that in your examination of their petition you will find the petition to be in order, sense the urgency and desperation of their plea, and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion and referral to committee at the earliest possible moment.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,515, 2,633 and 3,257.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

CNR STAFF REDUCTIONS

Question No. 1,515—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is the Canadian National Railway cutting staff in its car and equipment departments and, if so, how many persons will be cut in each province?

2. Are such persons involved in inspection, repair or maintenance of equipment and, if so (a) how many (b) how will current rail safety levels be maintained, let alone upgraded, with less personnel?

3. Was the Minister of Transport in contact with the CNR with respect to the cuts and, if so, what were the results of the discussions?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1. In May and June 1980, through a combination of attrition and lay-offs, a reduction of 511 positions occurred in the number of staff associated with the freight car repair activity.

Province	Reduction of positions
Nova Scotia	1
Prince Edward Island	5
New Brunswick	93
Quebec	158
Ontario	90
Manitoba	131
Saskatchewan	33
	511

At that time the railway was experiencing a significant decrease in rail traffic which resulted in a reduced demand for freight cars. Cars needing repairs and not required to handle the traffic offered were placed into the stored surplus category.

2. The affected positions concerned repairs to freight cars. (a) 511 positions in the freight car repair activity, no positions regarding car inspectors. (b) As car inspector positions were not involved, car inspection activities continued to receive high priority.

3. The Minister of Transport was in contact with the railway, was informed of the underlying causes, and was assured that in taking such action Canadian National would continue to ensure a safe and efficient operation.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Question No. 2,633—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the reply to question No. 2,217 which stated in part "it has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration" (a) on how many occasions was a similar reason given in answers to questions on the Order Paper concerning the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (b) what were the exact words of the first question which gave such an answer, including the full answer to the question and the date of the answer?

2. On what date did the corporation come into existence and how long after that date was this "custom" instituted with regard to the answering of questions?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. (a) and (b) See part 2 below.

2. The corporation came into existence on November 2, 1936. The custom developed from the earliest days of the corporation, and over the 45 years since the corporation's creation, Parliament has not required the CBC to supply, in answering parliamentary questions, certain details of its internal management and administration. The background to this custom is set out in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, answered November 6, 1975.

EXAMINATION OF PROPOSED REGULATIONS

Question No. 3,257—Mr. Beatty:

How many proposed regulations were examined by the Clerk of the Privy Council, as required by section 3 of the Statutory Instruments Act, in (a) 1980 (b) the first six months of 1981 and, for each period, how many proposed regulations were reported by the Clerk of the Privy Council to the regulation-making authority involved on the grounds that they offended against the criterion in (i) section 3(2)(a) (ii) section 3(2)(b) (iii) section 3(2)(c) (iv) section 3(2)(d) of the act?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): 1. (a) 1,023, (b) 609.

2. None.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions mentioned by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I was wondering whether the parliamentary secretary could inform the House as to why the government has declined to answer question No. 2,042 which was placed on the Order Paper on January 29. It is a simple question:

1. What was the total cost of the Prime Minister's December-January world tour?

2. What percentage of the total cost of the trip will be paid by the Canadian taxpayer?

[Translation]

Mr. Yanakis: Madam Speaker, I shall take notice of the hon. member's question and bring it to the attention of the minister.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, I have two questions on the Order Paper which I should like to bring to your attention and that of the parliamentary secretary. I am quite perplexed as to why the House has not received responses. Question No. 2,644 was placed on the Order Paper on June 18 of this year. It asked whether or not the government was intending to issue a stamp in commemoration of the Royal Wedding. In view of the fact that the Royal Wedding took place some months ago, the government should be able to answer the question by now. Perhaps I should reword it to ask whether or not it will commemorate the birth of the firstborn of the Prince of Wales rather than the marriage.

Also I should like to draw to the attention of the parliamentary secretary question No. 1,439 which was placed on the Order Paper on July 11, 1980, some sixteen months ago. There are three parts to it. It reads:

1. What was the government's total advertising budget for the fiscal year 1979-80 and what is the proposed budget for the fiscal year 1980-81?

Both of those fiscal years have come and gone, so the government should be able to answer. It continues:

2. (a) What amount was spent by the government on French language advertising in Quebec during the referendum campaign period (b) to which creative advertising agencies were contracts awarded to produce such advertising (c) what was the value of the contracts signed by the creative agencies (d) were any of the contracts offered for tender?

The referendum was in May 1980; it came and went well over a year ago. The third part of the question is equally easy to answer if the government chose to do so. It reads:

Were government advertising contracts awarded for the fiscal year 1980-81 to the advertising firms (a) Vickers and Benson Ltd. (b) Ronalds-Reynolds & Co. Ltd. (c) BCP Advertising (1978) Ltd. (d) Jean Prévost Inc. and, if so, in each case (i) was the contract publicly tendered (ii) what was its value?

The reason I raise this is that it is particularly germane today. Those four companies joined together to create Canadian Media Corporation which has been on contract by the government for some $2,430,000. We discovered today that the minister responsible for housing has hired Vickers and Benson, one of those four firms, and given it additional work in placing ads, in addition to what was done by Canadian Media Corporation. This is why the House is entitled to some straight answers, and surely before now.

[Translation]

Mr. Yanakis: Madam Speaker, I shall also take notice of the representations of the hon. member and convey to whoever is concerned and a report will be made to the House.

* * *

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Tuesday, November 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment of Mr. Wilson (p. 12752).

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to take part in the debate on the budget that was brought down last week by the Minister of Finance of Canada (Mr. MacEachen). It is important to remember, Madam Speaker, that the primary objective of this budget is to check inflation. Now, why should the government try to check inflation when interest rates are very high and the unemployment rate in Canada is quite substantial as well. Well, our objective is to fight inflation because inflation is what is causing high interest rates and the problems we are experiencing in our economy. To achieve this objective, the budget contains a set of measures that are based on the following three principles: restraint, equity and creating a climate or conditions that are favourable to economic and industrial renewal in our society.

What is in fact the first thrust of the budget? What about restraint? If we really want to fight inflation, an economic disease which could be compared to being grossly overweight, we must reduce our expectations and slow down the rate at which we spend our money. We feel that restraint must be applied by the government to its own spending, and it is being very strict in this respect. In this budget, the government is proposing to substantially reduce the growth rate of its expenditures. As a result, there will be a substantial reduction in the government's deficit during the next few years and also in the government's borrowing requirements on the capital market.

What does a reduction in the growth of government spending mean? In 1981-82, government expenditures showed a growth rate of 16.6 per cent. In 1982-83, this will be reduced to 11.7 per cent, which is less than the inflation rate.

In other words, if we look at the rates of inflation and of increase in government spending, we find that instead of increasing our expenditures as a government, in real terms, in real dollars, we are decreasing our expenditures. And what about the decrease in the deficit? The deficit for 1981-82 is $13.4 billion; the projected deficit for 1982-83 is $10.5 billion. So a reduction in the deficit means a decrease in financial requirements, a very substantial decrease in the government's borrowing requirements, from $9.8 billion, in 1981-82 to $6.6 billion, in 1982-83.

An hon. Member: Good management!

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, earlier a member presented a petition concerning interest rates. By reducing its borrowing requirements by nearly $4 billion, the government will contribute to relieve the pressure on the capital market and thus bring about further substantial decreases in addition to those that occurred during the past months, that is, further substantial decreases in interest rates. There is tangible proof of the government's determination to fight inflation, in its commitment and ability to reduce its expenditures and deficit and to ease the pressure on the money markets by reducing its borrowing requirements.

During the past few days, some hon. members have made proposals, which would mean an increase in government spending. The government is being blamed for not doing enough to help home owners or some industries. It seems to me that members who make these representations should tell us how much money they think these measures would involve, how much assistance in terms of dollars the government would have to give, and where the money would have to come from. Would we get the money by cutting back even more on our spending? If so, let them tell us which programs would be cut back. Perhaps these members would like us to get billions of dollars by cutting off the indexing on family allowances? Would they prefer us to reduce indexing of old age security pensions or of the guaranteed income? This is another indication they should give us when they call for additional measures to assist the Canadian people. They should assess those measures and tell us where the money would come from.

The second thrust of the budget is equity, the great concept of equity. And this concern for equity is not through a substantial reform of some aspects of our taxation system. It is done by withdrawing certain preferences or privileges granted to some taxpayers. It is a progressive measure which especially applies to higher income brackets. Contrary to the Minister of Finance in Quebec who decided yesterday to adopt regressive measures such as taxing beer and gas, the Minister of Finance chose a more progressive position by removing some preferences and privileges in the taxation system. It will be noted, Mr. Speaker, that I did not use the term "tax dodging," since these were quite legal provisions contained in the Income Tax Act, but they were privileges because they allowed some taxpayers in higher income brackets to pay substantially less income tax or still to defer paying the income tax they should have paid immediately.

• (1630)

What will it mean for the average Canadian to remove from the tax system the preferences and loopholes? Well, first of all, we will be able to reduce significantly the marginal tax rates which apply to the taxable income at the end of the year when the time comes to assess the income tax. Therefore, there will be a significant reduction of the marginal tax rates. Also, the abolition of these preferences will allow a more generous federal 9 per cent tax credit. As you may recall, there was a $500 ceiling for the 9 per cent tax credit. From now on, Canadian taxpayers will be able to get a $200 tax credit which may be doubled if the spouse who earns no income does not file an income tax return. Which means that low and average income groups may increase their tax credits from $200 to $400. The third major element which we want to incorporate into our income tax system by eliminating a number of tax preferences is the possibility of escalating the federal income tax tables. Because these three objectives are very important for Canadian taxpayers, Mr. Speaker, I should like to examine what they really mean to them, since we have removed a number of loopholes from our tax system.

For instance, the next time a Quebec taxpayer with three dependants—that is, his wife who has no gainful employment and two children—prepares his income tax return, he will have no tax to pay on his $15,000 income. Another Quebec taxpayer with the same responsibilities and an equal number of dependants, that is, three, and who earns $20,000, taking the escalation into account, will pay $425 less in income tax in 1982, which is extremely important, Mr. Speaker. I could go on and on giving examples that show the combined effect of the income tax table escalation, the marginal tax rate reduction—this rate which applies to taxable incomes—and the increase in income tax credit for low and average-income groups. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is extremely important, to keep these figures in mind.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the House's attention to a number of tables which appear in the budget papers. Hon. members will remember that the budget was tabled together with many budget papers; I suggest that one must have a look at these papers in order to understand the general thrust of the budget. For instance, if one considers the effects or the estimated impact of the tax measures on the income tax to be paid to the federal treasury, taking into account the escalation and the tax cuts, one realizes that lower income groups, that is, those earning up to $15,000, will see their income tax cut by 33.1 per cent, and the higher the tax rate, the lesser the tax cut. That is the example I gave earlier of the difference between progressive and regressive tax measures. A progressive tax measure—

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Joliette on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: Naturally, I find the minister's comments on the benefits for Canadians earning less than $15,000 most interesting. But could he add to that the list of indirect taxes which might come as a surprise for those same people?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member could ask for that information during question period. I recognize the hon. Minister of State.

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, at least I am polite. I regret that the hon. member takes these opportunities—

Mr. La Salle: I was not criticizing!

Mr. Bussières: —perhaps not, but I still regret the fact that the hon. member should take this opportunity to show Canadians that he has not read the budget papers. With his permission—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Joliette on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I did not insult the minister. I simply asked him to add to his comments, which I find very interesting, the indirect taxes which taxpayers must bear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Joliette has already had the opportunity to say what he is now saying. The hon. Minister of State for Finance.

Mr. Bussières: Although I do not have extended years of schooling, I do remember taking a course on how to learn. I recall our teacher saying that the lack of patience was the thing that hindered the learning process the most. So had the hon. member showed a little more patience he would have seen that I was just about to refer to the other benefits provided for in the budget. I will indicate to him that the table I am quoting from is on page 34 of the document "The Budget in More Detail", which I advise him to read—

An hon. Member: Assuming one knows how to read!

Mr. Bussières: Of course, one must know how to and also have the patience to read. He will notice in the table the rates and benefits which were removed for some so that taxes are in fact increased for the higher income Canadians, and that is combined with indexation of tax tables and a reduction in marginal tax rates. That is why I say that these are progressive measures in that they benefit the low or moderate-income Canadians. Obviously, those who earn $75,000, $100,000 or more will have to pay higher taxes. Those who earn between $20,000 and $30,000 will benefit—

• (1640)

[English]

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I too have been following the minister's speech with great interest. He referred to the table and I wonder whether he could clarify one thing. The table to which he referred states that indirect taxation of revenue will contribute 51 per cent more to the federal coffers. Could he explain why this is so?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Hon. members may seek information during question period.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) had an opportunity to speak about the budget yesterday. On this side of the House, members listened very carefully. Unfortunately, we were all disappointed because he said virtually nothing. I would appreciate it if he would allow me to concentrate so that I can inform Canadians of these important budget proposals.

We have seen that these proposals reduce significantly the tax burden of low and middle-income Canadians. I believe that it is extremely important to emphasize this, Mr. Speaker. Today in the House some members mentioned that the president of the Canadian Federation of Small Business had expressed his disappointment at the budget proposals. During the pre-budget meetings chaired by the Minister of Finance, which I attended, we had an opportunity to meet with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and I have here the brief submitted by the Federation on September 14, 1981. The first suggestion to the government, as we can read on page 9 of the document, is, and I quote:

The expenditures of the federal government must be reduced.

Mr. Speaker, the first point I discussed was the government's formal commitment to reduce the rate of increase of its expenditures, deficit and borrowing needs. As we read on, we can see on page 13:

There is increasing concern about the problem of wage demands.

Under the theme "restriction", the Minister of Finance specifically invited all economic agencies to support his action to achieve restriction of spending and fight inflation. On page 14, under the heading "The cost of negligence", the matter of unemployment insurance premiums is dealt with. The budget proposes significant reductions of unemployment insurance premiums for both employee and employer.

The Federation of Independent Business suggested further measures, and yesterday my colleague responsible for small businesses gave a conference in Montreal where he went over the budgetary proposals which specifically concern small and medium businesses. I am convinced that all hon. members will agree that the assistance provided to small and medium businesses will prove a major boost toward job creation and economic recovery. I would like to mention very briefly the extension of the Small Business Development Bond program, which will help small businesses who are experiencing difficulty in coping with the present situation, to come through these hard times.

The second, the increase in—

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister could elaborate on the benefits to this House—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to that second measure to help small business, namely, the increased limit for the low tax rate for small business corporations. There is also in the budget a third important measure—

An hon. Member: You are misleading the people—

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, I hope the honourable member will have an opportunity and especially the courage to rise later on in this budget debate to express his views. In the meantime he will recognize this is a free and democratic country and I should be allowed to express my views. Therefore, the third measure, as I said earlier, is the reduction for employees and employers in unemployment insurance premium rates which are of major importance to small business. And I indicated that the Federation of Independent Business had insisted on this in their representations. Finally, the exemption of small business from the corporate surtax is also extremely important for small and medium businesses.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about industrial renewal and the government proposals to that effect. Hon. members are aware that over the coming years, during the decade of the 1980s, important projects will be undertaken in Canada. Billons of dollars will be invested, particularly in resources. The government wants to create a favourable climate for economic development and a budget document titled "Economic Development" explains the government's development strategy. During the eighties, economic development will be dominated by two realities: the continued development of the resource-based industries and the revitalization of industrial capacity toward specialized international competitiveness.

These two forces will create a new regional dynamics and new growth opportunities within the different areas of the country.

It will be seen in the budget document on economic development that the government wants to ensure that every area—the strategy will allow all departments, as the DREE for instance—to benefit from investments in major resources.

My time is running short but I would be remiss if I were to conclude my remarks without referring to another aspect of the budget, namely the proposal of the Government of Canada with respect to fiscal arrangements between the central government and the provinces. We all know that it is an extremely important subject for the Canadian federation and I would like to mention briefly two of the main aspects of those arrangements. First, the equalization program and, second, what is known as the established programs financing. Under the equalization program, annual and unconditional payments are made to those provinces whose tax revenues are lower than the average and whose ability to finance their public services is lower than the average of the other provinces in Canada. In 1981-82, six provincial governments will receive equalization payments totalling nearly $4 billion. Quebec's share will be $2.1 billion, or slightly more than half the total amount paid this year to the six provinces which are entitled to equalization. The per capita amounts of those equalization payments vary according to the tax revenues of the provinces.

• (1650)

Those per capita amounts range from $765 for Prince Edward Island down to $291 for example in Quebec. Those equalization payments are based on two factors. First, the taxing power of the various provinces, that is, the revenues each province would generate by applying the same tax rates on goods, transactions and income. Second, the equalization standard, that is the taxing power level a province reaches, after being eked out by the equalization payments. The proposals introduced by the Minister of Finance are aimed in the first place at extending provincial taxing power so that it will more adequately reflect their general potential combining wages, natural resources, real estate and other taxable items.

The second aspect deals with the equalization standard. The material dealing with tax arrangements suggests that the standard be set on the basis of tax yields in Ontario rather than on the basis of the average tax yields in all provinces as is the case at present. We know for instance that if we were to extend the taxation capacity without changing the equalization standard, transfer payments would increase to about $10.2 billion in 1982-83, of which $2.6 million would go to Ontario. Obviously, since we must restrain expenditures, the federal government cannot afford to implement such a program and especially to spend that kind of money. This is why we propose to substitute a new Ontario based standard.

Another aspect of fiscal arrangements is the financing of established programs. What is meant by established programs? These are in the areas of health care, hospitalization and financial assistance for post-secondary education. The budget does not propose any financial change in this specific regard. The purpose of such proposals to amend this program is to set a maximum amount per capita to bring about more equity in the financing of the established programs. It has been indicated that the government wanted to reduce its expenditures in the area of transfer payments to the provinces. This cutback will apply to a program which dates back to the tax reform of the seventies.

Following that reform of the Canadian taxation system, and as a result of the changes which were made in the tax system of the seventies and which reduced the amounts of money going to the provinces, what is known as the income guarantee was adopted. This was expressed either in tax points credited to the provinces, or cash payments to the provinces. We are now suggesting to the provinces that the income guarantee be removed from the over-all transfer payments made to them. That proposal follows the changes we have now made in the tax system, changes which I indicated a while ago in dealing with equity, which are known, by the way, either as tax preferences or tax privileges. The removal of these privileges, as we know, Mr. Speaker, will have a direct impact on the income of the residents of the provinces for whom the central government collects taxes, so that those provinces will see their revenue increase automatically as a result of the increases or changes in the new tax tables. Because we are increasing provincial revenues through changes in the taxation system, we are proposing to the provinces the removal of the income guarantee which had resulted from the changes made in the tax system, of the seventies.

Naturally, there is one special case and that is Quebec. This case is special in that, many years ago, its government chose to collect its own taxes and have its own tax system. We are now suggesting to Quebec that a change be made in its tax schedules by doing away with the tax privileges we have removed. Hon. members will remember that, last week, the minister of finance for the province of Quebec published a study in which he said that the federal tax system provided for fiscal preferences and privileges which he condemned. The privileges which the Quebec minister of finance denounced we have now changed, so if he, who is sovereign in the field of tax collection—which is not the case for the ministers of finance of the other provinces since the federal government does the job for them—exercises his sovereignty in that field, the Quebec minister of finance can then increase his own revenue to more than make up for the amount of the guaranteed income provided for by the federal system.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister, but the time allotted to him has expired.

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have been looking forward to addressing you and my colleagues. Just three months ago yesterday, the Spadina voters sent me to this House rather than sending the man the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had chosen. The voters in Spadina indicated they had no confidence in his government, nor do they believe this government is willing to let the people of Spadina or the people in Canada earn an honest day's pay for an honest day's work, which is what people like to do.

Just this weekend people on the street in Spadina told me what they thought of this budget. They told me the budget was superficial, that it was mere tokenism and they believe the rich will go on finding loopholes no matter what. They mainly said there simply was no change and they wanted a change. In fact, they clearly sensed that this budget continues the policy of selling Canada; that is to say, selling the country they have built and putting it into the hands of people who do not care about the people who built it.

• (1700)

These are ordinary people. We have a great variety of ordinary people, working men and working women in Spadina. These are people who are trying to put a roof over the heads of their families, put a table under it and put food on that table. Having learned about it, they are finding this budget very discouraging.

In the land around Spadina we first of all had immigrants from the British Isles who were granted estates so they could control the lower orders as tenants. That did not work out so they turned into land developers during the housing booms in Toronto. They left us a few stately mansions on Beverley Street, Madison Street and places like that. They left us some very good narrow streets in the residential areas which keep the commercial traffic out. Then they went on to greener pastures, moved away elsewhere, but they still like to collect their revenues through the banks and other institutions which have the ear of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), as shown by his budget.

Early in this century the eastern Europeans came to Canada, especially to Spadina. They created the famous Spadina needle trades district. There are many hundreds of small enterprises there that are still making and selling clothing and footwear, but they are threatened by this government. They are threatened not only by this government's hostile attitude to small business, but by the threat of the closing down of the present import quotas which so far have done something to protect them from the unfair competition of the southern United States and other very low wage, anti-union areas.

For example, today I had a telephone call from Mr. Marlen of Topaz Shoes who is already laying off employees because this government does not give him the assurance it will maintain the quota system which has so far protected his industry. He has built it up from 30 employees to 150 employees in three years. Now he is having to lay workers off because of this government's callous attitude toward the small-business men of Spadina and the rest of Canada.

We also have railway workers living in Spadina, some of them working in the Spadina yards. Some of them will not be working; they are facing lay-offs because of the cuts by this government in VIA Rail.

We have a great number of printing, office specialty and other small manufacturing outfits in Spadina, all feeling the threat of this budget, particularly whenever these small-business men have to consider their credit situation or bank loans.

After World War II many of those people moved north and we had more eastern Europeans, Québécois, Newfoundlanders, Cape Bretoners and West Indians moving into Toronto. Italians and Portuguese came in particularly for the 30-year building and manufacturing boom, that boom which ended in 1975 with this government's wage freeze.

When I went to Toronto in 1954 to work in a factory I found Ukrainians, Italians, Newfoundlanders, Ontarians, Québécois, and also I found those people working and living together in Spadina in peace, trying to raise their children, trying to fix their old houses and enjoying the music and the food of their ancestors and their neighbours.

Some of you may know of the Kensington market. That was a creation of the Spadina residential district just west of Spadina Avenue. It serves Jews, Portuguese, Philippinos, Chinese and many other nationalities. We also have the shopping districts along Queen Street, Yonge Street, Bloor Street and College Street, each with its own particular flavour.

Then came the Chinese. After City Hall had wiped out most of downtown Chinatown, the Chinese born in Canada and those emigrating to Canada built a new Chinatown around Dundas and Spadina. You can go up Dundas and along Spadina and find dozens and dozens of new Chinese restaurants. By the time you have eaten in each one of them there are several new ones built. They also have new stores, new offices, new theatres, new social centres and many new small businesses, most of which are also under the gun of the high interest policies of this government, continued by the present budget.

We have the University of Toronto, the biggest university in the Commonwealth. It is an excellent place of learning and research. It has thousands of professors and students and support staff, being one of the biggest employers in the city. Some of them live close by but many of them commute. Two of my daughters started there until they found they could get a better education for their purposes at Laval and at the Université du Québec in Montreal, but they still have warm memories of University College.

These people, from the president right down to the support staff and every student, are dismayed at the cuts being placed on them by the federal government as well as by the Tory provincial government. In spite of the sweet words of the minister, those cuts are continuing. He can juggle around guaranteed revenues and EPF, but the fact is that he is going to give less money and the province will give less. They have students now sitting in the aisles and trying to get into the lectures. I am told there is one lab that is now in the men's washroom. I am not sure whether it alternates day about between the men's and the women's washroom or how they observe equality in the matter. There was last summer, of course, the occasion of a wrestling match in Convocation Hall, about which Toronto people are aware.

Seriously, I have a letter from a graduate of the university who has been unable because of unemployment to repay his loan. He is being chased by a collection agency on behalf of this government. The interest now amounts to 23 per cent of the loan. This is how we discourage students and graduates of our universities. This is reversing what was undertaken in the 1940s and early 1950s when the government had a good program of assisting people to get to university under DVA.

We have many other people in Spadina. We have service workers of all kinds. We have women, many of them Portuguese immigrants—20,000 perhaps in Spadina and nearby—who clean the hospitals and office buildings downtown. We have the professionals who found that downtown Toronto is a livelier place to live than the frozen suburbs. What we have in Spadina is all manner of people earning their living in different ways, and all being threatened by this budget.

Before I outline the problems of the budget I have to acknowledge one other part of Spadina, a part which is not threatened by the budget. We also have in Spadina the banks, the insurance offices, the great financial houses, the head offices of the oil, mineral and paper companies with the commercial dukes and the barons who order this government around and control this country. The Spadina people know those buildings. They helped to build many of them. They are now cleaning them at nights. They work there as secretaries, as messengers and as bank tellers, many of them at minimum wages since most of them so far have been unable to organize unions. Many of them belong to families of which both parents must work. So the rosy picture of tax deductions for people who earn $15,000 does not apply to them. They must have two incomes in order to keep a roof over their head. They are getting no help from this budget for day care, no help of any kind for social services, and no help on family benefits if they fall into unemployment and get cut off by the harsh unemployment rules which are being developed.

• (1710)

Now they must renew the mortgages on their homes. According to the Minister of Finance, some 300,000 Canadians will be renewing their mortgages next year because they did not have a five-year mortgage. In other words, many of these people, certainly many in Spadina, listened to the banks who told them last year to take a mortgage for one year at 12 or 13 per cent because next year the interest rates would go down. Now they have to take another mortgage at twice the rate. The budget offers help to maybe 7,000, according to the minister's figures, out of those 300,000; they will get some relief, up to a maximum of $3,000. For most of these 300,000 people, there is nothing. If they are to pay the mortgage themselves, they must have about an additional $300 a month; and if they go on strike or take legitimate economic action to raise their pay, we will certainly hear from the other side of this House, and maybe from the extreme right of this House, a call for more wage freezes and union busting.

I would like to talk about the banks. The Minister of Finance and the minister responsible for housing have been telling us for several months that these bankers are reasonable. The Minister of Finance tells us that he talks with them every day and that they are compassionate. We read headlines which say how compassionate they are. In fact, the minister has said that he wants them to bleed a little bit.

Then we have the minister's little boy plea in his budget that he wants financial institutions, especially banks, to ensure that ample funds will be available to smaller borrowers at the lowest possible margin of cost. My father told me about bankers. He practised law in Selkirk, and Winnipeg for over half a century. Although he was a Liberal, he was a very fine and decent man.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Heap: These things happen! His clients were mostly low-income and middle-income people and many times he helped a client from his own pocket. He told me about this banker. This banker had had an automobile accident and lost one eye. He bought himself the very best glass eye that money could buy. He believed that nobody could tell the difference. One day a farmer came into the bank and asked for a loan. He did not have much collateral and the banker washed him out. As the farmer turned to leave the banker said, "Wait a minute, I will give you a sporting chance. If you can tell me which of my two eyes is the glass one, I will give you the loan." The farmer looked at him and said "The left eye is the glass eye." The banker said "You have it." and he wrote him out the loan. Then he asked the farmer: "Were you just guessing or did you really know which was the glass eye?" and the farmer replied "I knew. I looked at that left eye and I knew that it had to be the glass eye because I just saw a glimmer of pity in it!"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Heap: These are the bankers into whose hands the Minister of Finance is once again putting the people of Spadina and Canada.

Returning to the budget, I listened carefully to the Minister of Finance and read over his text and some of his budget papers, and it really made me wonder at the things I heard and saw. There is really no tax relief for anybody earning under $25,000. There are a couple of gimmicks but they are cancelled out. Most of the people in Spadina earn well under that $25,000 limit. There is, however, a tax on health plans and on savings plans. Some people in Spadina thought that they should be thrifty and invest in those plans. The minister has told them that that is a mistake.

There is now to be a tax on the money that hard working immigrants in Spadina send to their relatives overseas, with the exception of a spouse and children. For a century this country has invited and even paid the passage of people to come here to do the hard, dirty and low-paying jobs in this country. The only reason many of these people came was that it was the only way they could help their families back home. The government is now telling them that they are trapped here and they can only help their mother or sister or brother if they are here. If they are back home there is no help, as far as the Minister of Finance and his tax laws are concerned.

There is no relief for single parents under the provisions of this budget. We have heard a long, complicated story from members opposite about how someone with a wife and children who is earning $15,000 will pay no tax. It does not help the single parent and there are many in Spadina. There are many cleaning women who work in the hospitals and other buildings who are the sole support of their children. Some 84 per cent of single parents are women and many of them are in Spadina. They receive low pay, about $11,000 on the average, whereas the men earn $18,000. There is no relief for them, no help with further day care and there is no help with further family benefits when they cannot hold a job any longer.

There is no serious relief for home owners. In fact, the interest rates have been kept up and the paltry subsidy arrangement which the Minister of Finance has put forward really only subsidizes the banks, shuts the mouths of their loudest critics and helps the banks keep their interest rates high. The Minister of Finance is subsidizing the banks who now have 48 per cent more profits than they had last year.

There is little help to small business. The federal business development loans have very complicated rules and businessmen in my riding tell me that very few of them are able to qualify.

There are cuts in social services which again are denied by the minister but recognized by everyone else who has examined the budget. The seven-year-old promise by the Prime Minister to provide money for urban transit still goes absolutely unredeemed and Toronto has now had to put its transit fares up by 10.6 per cent with no help coming from the Prime Minister as he promised.

There is no serious job-creation program. There are perhaps 2,400 jobs coming in rural parts of the maritimes and in Ontario where the government wishes to take advantage of low wages and non-union conditions. According to the minister's predictions, unemployment will rise during the next two years and real wages will fall. Yet he is preaching restraint to the poor.

He opened his budget speech with a little sermonette which tells working people not to ask for more money. In effect, what he has said is that anybody who asks for more pay is doing his or her fellow worker out of a job. That is a very cynical and misleading sermon from one who is protecting his buddies, the bankers.

Real wages have been falling behind prices since 1978 and they are projected to fall even further; but the big five in the banks have increased their profits by 228 per cent in ten years and they are up 48 per cent this year. The cost of living goes up and up, the cost of food goes up, but the minister does nothing about it. Canada is exporting more raw food every year and importing more processed food every year. Many people in Spadina like to eat and the food bill goes steadily up.

Farms are disappearing in this country. The farming population 30 years ago was 16.8 per cent of the total population and, as of 1976, it had dropped by two-thirds to 5.1 per cent. Canada is at the point of becoming a country which does not produce enough for its own people to eat. I never thought I would live to see the day when Canada could not feed its own people.

● (1720)

The prices of heating oil and gas are predicted to go up by about $500 to $600 for the average family. That doubly wipes out the tax credit for low-income people about which the minister has talked.

However, what I am most concerned about is what will happen to the hundreds and thousands of people in Spadina who have been earning their living as factory workers and who face being laid off. I am thinking of Tony and Silvio from Italy with whom I worked in a box factory. I am thinking of Joe from Poland. I am thinking of Dave from Newfoundland. I am thinking of a great many others. There were also women in our factory. There was Anna Lisa from Germany. These people were all laid off at the beginning of the year. The box plant which had operated for over half a century was bought by MacMillan Bloedel, which was then bought by Noranda, which was then bought by Brascan. All that high level financial dealing was assisted by the tax write-offs this government created in previous budgets and which this budget continues. The effect of this wheeling and dealing in high finance has been to cause unemployment among the men and women with whom I worked for 18 years. These are middle-aged people with seniority they earned in their plant, and now some of them are out on the street. Some of them have temporary jobs. Some of them are starting in new places. They are middle aged and have no seniority. They have no protection against further lay-offs. This has been promoted by the previous budgets of this government and is continued by the present budget.

The Minister of Finance has no serious program for relocating phased-out workers. There is no serious retraining program. George Brown College has had to cut back its technical courses because the funding from this government has been progressively cut back for several years and is to be cut back further by this budget. There is no decent program of severance pay for workers laid off after years of service.

However, on the other side of the budget there are goodies for the rich. There is no excess profits tax levied against banks. The rate of taxation for people earning $100,000 and over has been reduced from 65 per cent to 50 per cent. That is quite a bonanza. We are told that loopholes are being closed, but income exclusion, which accounts for half the tax evasions, has not been touched. Capital gains have scarcely been touched. Capital gains cost this country half a billion dollars last year. Income exclusions cost the country over $6 billion last year. Almost $7 billion in exclusions which go almost entirely to people earning more than $100,000 a year have not been touched by the minister in spite of his trumpeting about an equity budget and tax reform.

Why do we have this pattern of injustice? I do not agree with those who suggest that the minister was careless, ill-informed, stupid or thoughtless. I think he is a very thoughtful man. I think he has a plan, so I looked at his booklet entitled "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s". There I think I found the explanation for the hard fist he is swinging at workers. The fact is that Canada in the eighties and nineties is a place where this minister apparently does not think we will need workers. He does not think we will need men and women with some maturity, some training, some adaptability or responsibility. He does not think we will need men and women who are willing to work, to acquire skills, to organize in their unions for steady working conditions or to raise their families and build their communities. The minister does not think we need those people. Instead, he wants specialized migrants who will roam around the country and work on the projects his friends, the bankers, have decided they like.

For example, I refer to projects in the north, most of which are for construction, transportation and resource extraction. In the next five years $60 billion—about $1,200 per year from every Canadian man or woman who is working—will be given by this government to finance resource production and bulk shipments. This applies to 42 projects. There will be oil and gas pipelines to bring oil and gas, the minister says, to eastern Canada, but just as likely they will be going to the eastern United States. This transportation will mainly be for shipping Canada out. There will be bulk shipments for the export markets.

Coal shipments will be up 125 per cent, mostly to Japan. Fertilizer shipments will be up 78 per cent. But grain shipments will be up only 38 per cent, and shipments of all other things, including manufactured goods, will be up only 48 per cent. In other words, we are going to kill VIA Rail passenger service for the sake of digging Canada up and shipping it out so that other people can use it.

The arms budget is going up 17 per cent or 18 per cent this year. At that rate that will mean nearly $40 billion in five years, or about $1,600 for every man, woman and child in Canada—for death.

The food industry is being geared to exports, while our prices rise and the farmers quit. Manufacturing is to be slighted. The minister is rejecting protectionism, and that is his phrase. He is carrying on a dialogue with the major Canadian corporations in which he does not mention the unions. He has handed over the textile industry to a set of financiers who have no interest whatsoever in protecting the jobs of textile and shoe workers. The minister has killed the Foreign Investment Review Agency or, at least, chloroformed it. He has said that foreign capital and technology will continue in Canada. In whose interest? What he says in his budget is that the Government of Canada is fully committed to promoting the mobility of resources—money and workers—and that is the clue. The minister wants to remove all protection from those who are not among the strongest. He wants to be able to hand over our natural resources and our labour to the strong so that they can dig Canada up and ship it away.

A few years ago the late John Diefenbaker said that Canada was becoming a banana republic. He was partly right. The trouble is that we are becoming a banana republic, but we will not even have the money to buy the bananas.

We are left asking whom the minister serves. Is it the New York money lenders who dictated these political terms, as they dictated the wage freeze of 1975? In one of his booklets the minister hints that if wage demands go too high we may have to do something about it. It is a very gentle hint, but we will hear more about that in the months to come.

This budget is something the late General McNaughton warned us against 30 years ago when he said we would become hewers of wood and drawers of water. In fact, this budget goes hand in hand with the constitutional package the Prime Minister brought to us two weeks ago, which is an attack on the fundamental rights of Canadians and most blatantly those of women, the French community in Canada and the native peoples. This is a budget for using cheap labour and for using those three groups to undercut the labour of those who are not in those groups. In other words, this budget is a male budget; it is a white budget; it is an anglo budget. It is an affront to the people of Canada, and it should be rejected by this House.

• (1730)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by saying that in my thirteen years as a member of the House of Commons I have never witnessed a situation where a budget has been so universally condemned. I think it is fair to say that this budget takes from the poor to help those in financial distress. I would have hoped that the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) would have attempted to clarify some of the points contained in the budget. For example, I hoped the minister would set out to explain what is meant in the budget by "firms in financial difficulty" and "farmers in financial distress." In the government's defence of the continuation of the Small Business Development Bond, those riders are crucial. As of today, I understand that banks are sending out notices to the effect that the Small Business Development Bond, as of November 12, will not be issued until there is further clarification.

In this budget the government has treated inflation as public enemy number one, yet at the same time it sets out to blame everyone but itself and asks everyone to share in the burden of restoring sanity with regard to inflation. It does not address itself as a major contributor, nor does it address itself as one that can aid in assisting the decline of inflation in this country. The budget was expected to set a new course for economic recovery, economic strategy, if you like, to renew confidence in the business community, to stimulate production and thereby generate wealth. If one examines the document "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s", one would observe that it consists of a recitation of rhetoric and bureaucratic jargon.

Canadians expected this budget to address the very critical issues that face the average Canadian from coast to coast, namely, the problems for home owners of mortgages and high rents, the problems affecting small-business men, which is one of the most important components of Canada's economy, the farmers, the low-income sector, senior citizens, the unemployed, particularly those unemployed as a result of an inadequate housing policy and an inadequate industrial strategy, the construction industry and the manufacturing and oil sectors of our country. In other words, there was nothing in the budget for the average Canadian. It did not really address any of the major problems that face Canadians.

In the name of restraint, this government increases its spending by 22 per cent. In the name of equity and fairness, it squeezes another $1.4 billion out of Canadian wallets; and in the name of economic renewal, it does not do anything. It is not even a clever budget. It is a deceitful budget. Upon close examination of the budget, one will clearly see that it will impose and inflict further hardships upon the average Canadian. It really is a cop-out. In my view, it is a budget which will be destructive, as we examine it in more detail.

Now we have the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) repairing and tinkering. As far as I am concerned, no amount of repairing and tinkering will make this budget an acceptable document. What I recommend to the Minister of Finance is that he withdraw this budget and send it back to the drawing boards—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: —so that he may reassess the precarious state of the country, and then introduce a realistic budget that will address the economic needs of the average Canadian. When one studies this budget and examines the situation that faces the Canadian people from coast to coast, one can only conclude that this government is hopelessly out of touch.

In this country we have a 20-year low in consumer confidence. We are in the midst of a recession, if not a depression. There are approximately one million unemployed; we have crippling interest rates; an inflation rate of 12.7 per cent that will probably rise to 13 per cent within a month or sixty days; staggering gasoline prices that have risen by 75 cents a gallon since the Liberal government assumed office; record heating oil prices, an increase of some 50 cents a gallon since the government assumed office. Federal taxes now imposed by this government exceed two times the 18-cent excise tax that was imposed by the Crosbie budget, and at the same time there is no relief for the home owner, for the low-income earner, for the senior citizen, for the farmer or the small-business man. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, as one who has been associated with the small business and small manufacturing sector in this country, I can tell you that there is no mood of optimism in this country today, no optimism for the productive core of this nation and there is no hope for the unemployed.

The productive capacity of our economy has never been in such peril. Never has the government done so little to stimulate growth in the productive sector. It could be said that this budget constitutes a cynical attack upon the productive core of our economy. Because the government is faced with rampant and largely made-in-Canada inflation, trying desperately to cope with the effects of a largely made-in-Canada high interest rate policy and observing real incomes continue to decline, Canadian workers, farmers and fishermen look to this government for leadership. What do they have? They have a budget that offers no relief but instead will squeeze another 22 per cent increase in direct personal taxes out of their households in the coming year.

What did Canadians expect in regard to the stimulation of growth and development? All we have received in this document entitled "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s" is a litany of government agencies and an additional squeeze of 30 per cent in direct taxes in the coming year.

What about government leadership in the area of restraint? Did the government hold the line or curtail its own spending? No; it has increased its expenditures for the coming year by over 22 per cent. This offers Canadian families and businessmen an extra dose of inflation for the coming year.

What about indirect taxes? For the average worker, hidden taxes have doubled from the day the Minister of Finance assumed his office. When the minister assumed office there were hidden taxes of roughly $100 per worker, per month; that has now doubled to $200 per worker, per month. That is the kind of attack that we have on the workers of this country.

This morning I was advised that in addition to the vicious attack on the employees of VIA Rail, some 1,600 who will lose their jobs, we now find as a result of the budget that the termination benefits cannot be rolled over into RRSPs. Therefore, the retirement benefits will be taxed more heavily than would have been the case. To add insult to injury, these workers who have lost their jobs will now face regressive measures in this budget.

Farmers and small businessmen also will have their retirement plans disrupted as a result of the discontinuance of the income-averaging annuity.

The heartless and cynical government that has introduced this budget, one that is based on a commitment of restraint and yet only restrains the economic well-being of Canadians, will, in essense, take more revenue and spend at record levels itself. It presents a budget that is supposedly based on equity which, in fact, serves only to redistribute the burden and consequences of government mismanagement among the Canadian public and completely off its own shoulders. It presents a budget with an overriding theme of economic renewal which, in effect, is an attack upon our productive core and will only serve to make our productive sector less productive and more dependent upon government.

When one studies this document, one will find, as I said earlier, that it ignores the fundamental responsibility of encouraging growth and development in this country. In order to have national wealth and prosperity, we must have production and growth both on a national basis and on a per capita basis. What we have here is the fundamental difference between real gross national product and perceived gross national product through the growth of government bureaucracies. That is what we see in this document.

The fact of the matter is that the budget will stymie the productive sector because of the advent of further bureaucratic devices which are enunciated in this particular document. It will stymie and inhibit production rather than encourage it. The gross national product that will occur as a result of the initiatives undertaken in this particular document will largely be an illusion.

● (1740)

The document entitled "Economic Development for Canada in 1980s" was predicated upon a recently published task force report entitled "A Report by the Major Projects Task Force on Major Capital Projects in Canada to the Year 2000" that identified a number of potential projects which can and should be developed over the next 20 years. But the document did nothing to outline a suitable framework or a positive economic environment for these things to happen. On page 7 the document reads:

> We must carefully examine our regulatory systems to ensure that the rules are clear and the procedures efficient, so that they guide business enterprise rather than inhibit it.

I interpret this to mean that the government is proposing a scaling down of regulations and bureaucratic obstacles. It should be facilitating rather than obstructing. That is not the spirit and thrust of the document. Therefore, it rejects the report of the Economic Council of Canada which identified the many billions of dollars it is costing the country because of the excessive amount of regulation.

It is important to have stability and certainty. For example, I am certain the construction industry is not very happy with the sudden changes and shifts in policy enunciated in the budget. Neither is the manufacturing industry, which is plagued with lay-offs. The fact of the matter is that at least 20,000 rental units are affected directly. The minister brought in some changes, but upon reflection and closer examination one will find that there are still serious problems as a result of the minister's announcement yesterday. I am sure my colleagues will document that later.

Mr. Huntington: Very, very serious.

Mr. Mazankowski: I hear the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) saying "Very, very serious."

Page 14 of the document indicated the following:

As an initial response to the Report of the Major Projects Task Force, the Government of Canada has established a new Office of Industrial and Regional Benefits.

This is more bureaucracy. What will they do? They will co-ordinate and interact. Page 16 refers to the IOP, the industrial opportunities program, and reads:

To meet the needs of Canadian business in a co-ordinated, effective manner, the Government of Canada will draw together these programs under a new Industrial Opportunities Program (IOP).

This is another mechanism which will necessitate the creation of more jobs for Liberals. At the bottom of page 16 it refers to the establishment of the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board as follows:

The Canadian Industrial Renewal Board is being established to co-ordinate the federal government's industrial adjustment programs in the clothing, textile and footwear sectors.

This is an appointment of some 16 people across the country, all of whom are Liberals, for the purpose of receiving their famous reward. There is only one individual out of the 16 who has had any textile experience. Page 20 refers to the establishment of the Export Trade Development Board. All we have in the document is a proliferation of boards, agencies, advisory councils, Crown corporations and task forces.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being 5.45 p.m. it is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 60(7) to interrupt debate and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the amendment now before the House.

[English]

The question is on the amendment (Mr. Wilson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Wilson), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 124)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Andre
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Cardiff
Carney (Miss)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Coates
Cook
Cooper
Corbett
Cossitt
Crombie
Crosby (Halifax West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Deans
Dick Dinsdale
Domm
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fennell
Forrestall
Fraser
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gamble
Gass
Gilchrist
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hovdebo
Howie
Huntington
Jarvis
Jelinek
Jewett (Miss)
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
King Korchinski
Kristiansen
Kushner
Lambert
La Salle
Lawrence
Lewis
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McDermid
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
McLean
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Mitges
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Neil
Nielsen
Nystrom
Oberle
Ogle
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Rae
Reid (St. Catharines)
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Roche
Rose
Schellenberger
Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Skelly
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Thomson
Towers
Vankoughnet
Wenman
Wilson
Wise
Wright
Young Yurko—120.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Campbell (Cardigan)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Desmarais

Messrs.

Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Foster
Fox
Francis
Frith
Garant
Gauthier
Gendron
Gimaïel
Gingras
Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau)
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Hudecki
Irwin
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Loiselle
Lonsdale
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nicholson (Miss)
Olivier
Ostiguy
Ouellet
Parent
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Regan
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schroder
Simmons
Smith
Tardif
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Trudeau
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Whelan
Yanakis—144.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

It being after six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until tomorrow at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.19 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

END OF VOLUME XI