The Teacher Selected Literature.

Who advised her pupils to strengthen their minds by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, appreciated the truth that bodily health is essential to mental vigor. For persons of delicate and feeble constitution, whether young or old, this medicine is remarkably beneficial. Be sure you get Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring and fall I take a number of bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and am greatly benefited."—Mrs. James H. Eastman, Sonham, Mass.

"Miss Thirza L. Greer, Palmyra, Md., has suffered for the past year of age."

"My daughter, twelve years of age, has suffered for the past year of age."

"General Debility."

"A few weeks since, we began to give her Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Her health has greatly improved."—Mrs. James H. Eastman, Sonham, Mass.

"About a year ago I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for debility and neuralgia resulting from malarial exposure in the army. I was in a very bad condition, but six bottles of the Sarsaparilla, with occasional doses of Ayer's Pills, have greatly improved my health. I am now able to work, and feel that I cannot say too much for your excellent remedies."—F. A. Pinkham, South Monmouth, Me.

"My daughter, sixteen years old, is using Ayer's Sarsaparilla with good effect."—Rev. S. J. Graham, United Brethren Church, Buckhannon, W. Va.

"I suffered from

Nervous Prostration,

with lame back and headache, and have been much benefited by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I am now 69 years of age, and am satisfied that my present health and prolonged life are due to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—J. Moffit, Killington, Conn.

"Mrs. Ann H. Farnsworth, a lady 70 years old, So. Woodstock, Vt., writes: 'After several weeks' suffering from nervous prostration, I began to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken half of it my usual health returned.'" box, and put it into his own safe, without any thought that he had made a transfer. He passed out of the door, and the reader sees the change was completed without a thought from either party.

It was not till Anthony Blake was well in Pittsburgh dealing with the various ones of Tubal Cain who make that city one of the richest and loveliest in the world, that Edith one day ordered the carriage, drove down to the Amiable, took out what she supposed to be her box, and found in it Anthony's Cattle and Opellous bonds, and his hundred dollars.

Of course, Edith knew she had made a mistake, and she instantly supposed, as she usually did, that everything which was wrong was her own fault. This, then, was the first result of her father's training her to business—that she had lost all her own property, and had stolen some other property of vastly more value.

For the girl knew nothing of the worthlessness of the Cattle and Opellous bonds, and it was easy for her to see that, whereas she had left in her box only $30,000 or $40,000 worth of bonds, she had under her hands $250,000 worth of the second issue of that unfortunate road. She did not do what Anthony did, however. She took the whole parcel, $100 and all, and put it back in her little box. She put back the box into her safe, and as she did so she could see the eye of the warder, all of whom, she thought, looked on her with suspicion, as if she were a detected thief.

Anthony, she rushed to her little room, and laid the money down on the table. Her only thought was to tell her father all that had happened, and to confess that she was a fool. Of course this would have been the true thing for her to do; but there was unfortunately a delay. Her father was in Chicago for two days, and when he had all that time to inspire her with other counsel. Now, although she might have done his bidding, she could not make Edith Lane do anything wrong. It was easily in his power to make her do something very foolish. For, as Henry Kingsley says, when the devil cannot achieve his purposes by sending a knife, he does the same by a much easier process, and sends a fool. For, the more she brooded over the matter, the more the poor girl persuaded herself that she had better not, at first, speak to her father. Beside the feeling that she was a fool, and had made a horrible mistake, there was a little shadow which increased and increased as she thought of it, till it at last became a giant Afrite, destroying all her peace. It was the recollection that she had put in her box the six letters which had been intrusted to her by her cousin Evelyn.

Now, this cousin Evelyn had a horrible love passage with Fergus McIntire. I have no right to call it disgraceful, though I am very glad that none of my readers were ever so compromised. It was a very bad business, and Evelyn had been pulled out of it only with great tact and difficulty. All the compromising letters had been brought together, and should have been burned up. Instead of burning them, Evelyn had hidden them, and had begged her to take care of them, and at her second visit to the safe, Edith had put these letters with her bonds. The reader knows what had become of them. Now, this was the only secret which her poor Edith had ever had from her father. She did not want to have these letters brought to light by any investigation which might be made. The poor child instantly fancied the discovery of her box opened by a judge, and these letters of Evelyn's and Fergus' read aloud and printed in all the Sunday newspapers. She cried over it, she wrote a note to Evelyn which she destroyed, she wrote another note which she destroyed also, and finally said to herself that she had rather lose all her own property, which was in the safe, than have any revelation made as to what was in the box. If she could only be sure that whoever she told would keep her secret, she would tell him. In all this, of course, Edith Lane was quite wrong, but as the reader will see, she was in a false position, which she had stumbled into, really from no fault of her own.

Poor Anthony Blake is the person who deserves the most consideration and sympathy from the reader. Anthony Blake spent two or three days in Pittsburgh. He was most hospitably received by old friends whom he had known at the Polytechnic Institute. He saw all the marvels of gas distribution, of glass making, of iron founding, and by Mr. Westinghouse's kindness, he was taken through the wonderful machine works from which the electric apparatus is produced which preserve every year the lives of 1,000,000 people. He saw some of the most beautiful things in this world. He saw some of the Tubal Cains whom he had come to see, he showed to them the plans of his machine, which were very cordially commended; he had one and another suggestion made to him as to the ways of putting it into the market. But it was clear to him, as it had been in Tamworth, that the destruction of the poor is their poverty, and that he was in no way to get any decent return for the very exquisite contrivance which everybody admitted he had in hand, unless he himself could invest $10,000 or $15,000 in the complicated machinery which was necessary for producing it.

CHAPTER IV.

Edith Lane resolved once and again, after her father's return, that she would tell him that she had lost her bonds. But all day he was at his office, and each time, when he returned, she hated to tell him, and so put it off till morning. Each morning he was in haste for his breakfast, and the poor girl put it off again. After the second of these failures she had no more to say. As she came across in the afternoon from an early archery party, she found a note from her father saying that he was called to New York. This was followed by a telegram from New York saying that he was called to London. And so poor Edith was left to her own newly acquired skill in managing her own business, for the next six weeks.

What soon became very clear was that she must have money. Indeed, this is something which generally becomes clear to most people in modern society. Edith first made the mistake, which so many other people make, of thinking that it will do any good to say aloud, "I must have some money." She said this to the looking-glass twice as she dressed herself. But no money came from that. As to housekeeping and wages there was no trouble. The housekeeper had been supplied. But for herself Edith knew there would be trouble very soon.

She at once put herself on short allowance. She did not go into a shop. She passed the most attractive bookstalls, saying: "Lead us not into temptation." She went on foot if she could not ride in her own carriage, by which I mean she never took the people's carriage—the street car. She was even mean enough to put a nickel into the contribution box at church, sitting in the very pew where the deacon was always sure of a $5 bill. But then Edith made an account of this, and solemn
